ated; especially in a farmer's household, coal oil and many other of these articles that I have mentioned are very largely used. The same may be said of iron and steel manufactures, binder twine, barbed wire and so forth. On silks there has been a saving of $63,000. I think it was the ex-Minister of Finance who said, in alluding to silks, that although we had taken off one-third under our preferential tariff of the duties on silks, the effect would be to favour the wealthy. Why, Mr. Speaker, if the prosperity that now prevails in this country continues as we believe it will, it will not only be the wealthy who will wear silks, but you will find that they will be used more and more by people who are not wealthy. In hats, caps and bonnets there was a saving of $52,000; in fancy goods, $32,000; flax, hemp and jute, $35,000; earthenware and china, $41,000; drugs, dyes and chemicals, $21,000.

These reductions I have mentioned on woollens, cottons, silks, hats, caps, and bonnets; flax, hemp and jute; earthenware and china and drugs, dyes and chemicals are reductions on importations under the preferential tariff.

Other reductions could be shown, but these, perhaps, are the chief ones, and if you total them up you will find that they amount to $2,885,000. And who says that is not a material reduction in the rate of duty that the people of this country have to pay? I have a table here of the percentages of reductions, but, I suppose, I need not give that. I suppose the actual results are given, and I need not prolong this, but, perhaps, I may give these figures. These hon. gentlemen talk about the reductions we have made upon certain articles being—I do not know how low they have gone, but, by some of their peculiar processes they have reckoned them as low as 53-100ths of 1 per cent. We listened this afternoon to something of that kind. Let me give the results, as ascertained by actual experience, between the years 1896 and 1899. This shows the average ad valorem rate of duty imposed on certain lines of goods the importation of which into Canada are largely from all countries. The way it is arrived at is by taking the total value of the goods imported and dividing it into the duty in order to find the rate. When I give these reductions, you will notice, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the House will notice, that when I say there is a reduction of 9.32 per cent on books and printed matter, for instance, it is not a reduction of 9.32 per cent, properly speaking, it is not a reduction of 9 per cent on the hundred; it is a reduction of 9 per cent from 26 per cent, which is about equal to 33½ per cent of a reduction, as far as the percentage of reduction is concerned. Bear this in mind, because that is what I mean when I speak of such a reduction. The figures are as follows:

Now, to show what the advantages are from the preferential tariff, I have a table here which I will give to hon. gentlemen, which shows the average ad valorem rate of duty on importations from Great Britain in 1896, and the average ad valorem rate of duty on the importations, under the preferential tariff, from Great Britain in 1899 :

All these items that I have given, when added together, amount to $20,300,137 ; the average rate on these articles under the old tariff was 25·94 per cent, while, under the new tariff, it is 19·81 per cent, or 6·13 per cent of a reduction, which is equal to an average of 19·81 per cent in the taxation of the people of the country. I do not wish to spend more time on this subject. I think that I may fairly claim that I have demonstrated in a fair and candid way to the House, by figures, getting down to detail, which takes it out of these averages, and away from these calculations and percentages, takes it away from all these questions of corn and imports and exports, which, I say, are valuable as rough tests, that we have made material reductions in the taxation of the people.

I want to speak in reference to the increased trade of the country. I do not think I would be making an outrageous claim if I should say that a large part of the increased trade is due to actions that have been taken by this government and parliament. I think there is no one in this country who, looking abroad and seeing the evidences of prosperity on every hand, will not be ready to admit that times are now more prosperous than they ever were before. These hon. gentlemen ask us sometimes: What have you to do with better times? There have been better times in all the countries under the sun, they will tell us. What have you done in reference to them? Well, Sir, times are better. I will tell you one reason why I think they are better. Trade in order to be prosperous must be confident, and there must be confidence prevailing throughout the country. There must be confidence in our public men; there must be knowledge that the affairs of the country are guided by men in whose charge they may be safely entrusted. If in the country there is a government divided against itself; if you find in the cabinet men who cannot pull together; if you find one minister charging another with writing anonymous letters to His Excellency accusing him of dishonourable acts; if you find one member of the government standing up in the name of seven others and declaring that the man they swore to serve under as Prime Minister was virtually incapable of carrying on with any measure of success the government of the country; if you witness scenes like that, handed down to history through the mighty agency of the press, how could the people have confidence in the country or in such a government. Sir, no matter how anxious a Canadian might feel for the prosperity of his country, he must despair of its future, when he saw the leading men of Canada taking up such an inglorious position in the very halls of the legislature. These scenes were witnessed here and the people did not forget them; and when these men were dispossessed of power, confidence was restored, and I believe that was one of the great factors in starting that prosperity which ever since has gone on increasing day after day. One of the hon. gentlemen opposite ventured to shout something across the floor as I was speaking, but it seems to me if I were in his place I would keep very quiet, when things of this kind have to be alluded to in order to answer arguments presented from the opposite side of the House. These gentlemen on the other side have asked us: What have you to do with the prosperity of the country, and I answer them: That the turning out of power of men guilty of the acts I have described, and the return to power of the present government was one of the great factors in our prosperity. This government, when it came to office, recognized that the surest way to secure prosperity for the country was not to handicap its commerce any more than the revenues required, and with due regard to existing industries. This government recognized that if you have a largely increased trade you increase the wealth of the people, you enable them to buy and consume more goods—both the goods of your own manufacture and goods imported from other countries. Has not the result of our policy been that an impetus has been given to every department of trade. I point you to increased imports and I point you to the vastly increased volume of trade that is swelling and expanding to an extent calculated to cheer the heart of every Canadian. On the other hand, I point you to the prophecies of gentlemen opposite that our policy meant throwing men out of work on to the streets, and I point you to the fallacy of that prophecy. I state here to-day, and the manufacturers of this country are ready to confirm it, that never in our history have Canadian factories been so pushed to supply their orders as they have been since the Liberal tariff was introduced in 1897. The people of this country are a people that any country might well be proud of, and all they want is a chance to develop their energies and to manifest their ability and enterprise. What do we want in Canada? We want markets for the products of our people, and we are finding them in large measure in other countries of the world, even for our manufactured goods. Live manufacturers will tell you to-day: We want people in the country, we want consumers for what we make. Sir, the policy of this government is to give them consumers, to populate the country more rapidly than ever in the past, and to put money in the pockets of the people with which to buy goods whether made in Canada or other countries. That is the policy we have endeavoured to follow up, and in reference to our domestic commerce, as well as our foreign trade, every one knows that they never attained anything like the volume they have attained at the present time.

Let me refer to a very remarkable statement made by the ex-Finance Minister, for it shows how hard he was pressed to try and weaken the effect of the budget speech, a speech which I candidly confess I have never heard equalled during the 27 years I have been in this parliament. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) deserves our pity in being compelled to try to answer such a splendid speech as that delivered by the Finance Minister. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) recognized the great increase that has taken place in our trade, and so he sought to minimize it. He recognized that the foreign trade of this country had gone up by millions of dollars since the Liberals came into power, and in trying to explain that away, this was the language he used :

As every financier knows, there is kept up in the old country and in the United States, and to a certain extent in this country, what is known as a barometer of prices from year to year. There is none better on this continent than that kept by Bradstreet. Bradstreet's index of prices is known and relied upon all over this continent. For the last fifty years they have taken the prices of some 96 or 100 staple articles, arranged their system in a series of index numbers, which show the difference in prices from year to year. If you will go to October, 1890, you will find that the index number is 105,993.

I can imagine how anxiously people would hunt up the index number—105,996. He says :

I am not going to take up time explaining the technical construction of this system.

Well, he did not explain it.

I am not going to take up time explaining the technical construction of this system, but will merely give the figures, and any hon. gentleman who wishes to look into it will very soon find out the basis on which the thing is worked.

And then he works it out.

In October, 1890, the index price number was 105,996. In 1895 it had gone down to 71,672, or a drop of 47 per cent. What does that mean? It means that the average value of articles in 1895, taking all classes and kinds, was 47 per cent lower than in 1890. If any one attempts to show, by simply taking the volume in the Trade and Navigation Returns, that the purchasing, producing, the exporting and buying capabilities of this country are so much less in 1895 than in 1890, he will get no idea of the difference at all. He has to take the comparative value; and if he wants to find out what the trade of 1895 was as compared with the trade of 1890, he has to compare the levels of value of each and the difference between the two levels, as shown by Bradstreet's index, is 47 per cent. Suppose we work that out. Taking the exports and imports in 1895, their valuation in Canada was $203,504,332. We now want to find what the value of that 1895 trade would have been according to the prices of 1890. We add 47 per cent, which is $95,645,000, and you have $299,150,000, as the trade of 1895, and that would have been its value had it kept the level of prices attained in 1890. Hon. gentlemen see the point. Some one says: Your trade is diminishing because the books in 1895 show less value than in 1890. I answer him, in the light of this index, by saying: No, the activity, the producing power, the exporting and the buying power of this country, is actually higher than in 1895, measured by its trade, than in 1890, and you get at something like a fair comparison by taking the prices of the different years into account and bringing them down to the same level in each case.

That is to say that if you got this index away back in 1895, you would have many millions more trade than you had. What a great thing. But people will say that the year 1895 has long passed and we did not have that trade at all. It is a serious thing according to the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) that you should have the virus of suspicion introduced into the correctness of figures, but I want to know why the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) did not have the index so that when he, as Minister of Customs, made his entry in the Trade and Navigation Returns, he would have known that according to Bradstreet's index, he should have put down ninety-five millions more. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) applies the same rule in order to reduce the trade of this country. He says :

Suppose we apply that rule to 1895, and then compare with 1899. In 1899 the prices were 17 per cent higher according to the index than in 1895, so that if you would make a fair comparison, you would have to add 17 per cent to the trade figures of 1895, which would give an addition of $34,700,000. And in comparing 1895 with 1899, the imports and exports of 1895, instead of reading $203,000,000, would read $238,000,000. I mention these facts simply to call your attention to this point, that we have not exhausted the subject when we imply take the figures in our books unless we keep in view the varied rates of prices in these goods year after year as our trade history goes along. If we were to apply that $34,000,000 it would reduce the $64,600,000 to about $20,000,000 and still we would have a magnificent addition to our trade.

When the hon. gentleman has to resort to figures of that kind, hon. gentlemen will see that he is very hard driven, indeed. Let me give you the total trade of Canada on the basis of imports and exports :

TOTAL TRADE OF CANADA ON THE BASIS OF IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Total trade in 1898-9.....	$321,661,213
" 1895-6.....	239,025,360
Increase for three years under Liberal government.....	$ 82,635,853 at the rate of 27 millions per annum.
Total trade in 1895-6.....	$239,025,360
" 1877-8.....	172,405,454

Increase during eighteen years of Conservative government..... $ 66,619,906 at the rate of $3,700,000 per annum.

But the hon. gentleman tells us that the total trade of Canada is not what we should measure the prosperity of the country by. He ventured to say, and a remarkable statement it was, that the trade that comes into this country, illustrated by the importation of corn, is of very little moment, except to a few people. Did anybody ever hear a business man, who is conversant with the trade of the country, make light of a transaction of that kind, as illustrated by the corn which is carried in Canadian ships, put through Canadian elevators, transferred from them to the railroads, and shipped at the sea-board, giving employment to Canadians at every point? Did not the government of year, they were $100,000,000, or $21,000,000 less. I would remark to hon. gentlemen, who claim that we have kept the old national policy in force, that these figures show that our tariff is not based on the principle of protection. That cannot be a protective tariff under which the imports increase in such a ratio. This tariff stimulates importations, but the object of a protective tariff is to prevent importation.

Mr. TAYLOR. And manufacture the goods in the country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman cannot argue on both sides. He cannot say that we have retained the national policy and at the same time claim that we are destroying the industries of the country. But, hon. gentlemen opposite are utterly unable to avoid contradicting themselves in their anxiety to find fault with the present tariff. In the one breath, they tell us that it has not reduced the cost of goods one cent or helped Great Britain in the slightest, and in the next breath they tell us that it is ruining the industries of the country. You cannot take up any speech made by any one of those hon. gentlemen without finding in it contradictory statements, each of which destroys the other. Now, I come to another point I wish to make, and I would be glad if the ex-Minister of Finance were present. If he were present I would ask him where he got his figures on which he based the following statement:

Did it all happen because these hon. gentlemen came in? Then, let us see what has happened since. What has happened within six months, up to December 31, 1899. Why, the mining products have gone off by a million dollars, the fisheries have kept about stationary this current year, they are going behind. Agricultural products have dropped by $5,200,000. Here is a short statement which will show the decrease within the last six months:

EXPORTS TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Cattle	$ 7,177,533	$ 5,391,544
Horses	941,193	479,223
Wheat	7,414,273	5,983,282
Cheese	13,458,844	12,112,649
Wood and timber	21,166,303	18,099,249

If the coming of these hon. gentlemen into power, and their remaining in power caused all this great burst of trade, why is it, since they have been firmly seated in power for the three years, that these things have commenced to go down? Is it not far more common sense-like to say that governments may come and governments may go, but, unless legislation and administration are totally bad and pig-headed, in a country like Canada, with its enterprise, its pluck, its general diffusion of knowledge, and its general business activity, these great lines of production will go forward year after year subject to those changes which taken place in trade in every country, by reason of forces within the country or even of forces entirely outside the country, but in either case entirely beyond the power of the government to affect or mitigate.

In these remarks, the hon. gentleman claims that all this great outburst of trade was not due to any action of the government at all, but to forces which it was entirely beyond the power of the government to affect or mitigate. But, shortly before that, in the very same speech, he argued that this increased prosperity was due to governmental action, but not the action of a Liberal government. It was due, he said, to the action of the preceding Conservative government.

Must there not be a period of brooding and preparation and of long sustained course of gestation before the splendid possibilities break out into fulfilment and completion? And it is the glory and the pride of the Liberal-Conservative party that they directed the destinies of this country in that long brooding-time of patient preparation.

That was how he accounted for it in the earlier part of his speech, but he afterwards said that his wise policy of the Tory government had nothing to do with it at all. But, what I would like particularly to ask the hon. gentleman is whether these two columns of figures of exports to Great Britain were not meant to imply a comparison between six months of the current year and six months of last year. The hon. gentleman did not give the years, but I do not see how any other inference could be drawn. He says that they show the decrease within the last six months, and evidently he wanted us to understand that our exports to Great Britain in the last six months had decreased as compared with the same six months of the previous year. Well, the only place where I can find figures to correspond with these is in the Trade and Commerce Returns, and I find that instead of comparing the last six months of 1899 with the corresponding six months of 1898, the hon. gentleman compared them with the corresponding six months of 1897, because the figures agree exactly. But, the six months of 1897 give larger figures than those of 1898, and he consequently used them so as to make a stronger case. If I am correct—and he will have an opportunity of saying whether I do him wrong, and if so I shall be only too glad to make acknowledgment—but if I am correct in my supposition and he has taken it from this table, he has made a great mistake, a mistake he ought not to have made; for this table is plainly headed 'Comparative statement unrevised, of the quantities and values of the principal articles of merchandise imported into Great Britain from Canada during the month of December, and the six months ending December 31st, in the years 1897, 1898 and 1899 respectively—from English returns.' The hon. gentleman knows that the English returns are not correct returns so far as the importations of Canadian products are concerned. You can understand then, Sir, why I wish to have the hon. gentleman here. You can understand that if I am forced to the conclusion that these are the figures he has taken, he has done that which ought not to be done, by mistake, and has given figures which ought not to go to the country. We have here the Trade and Commerce Returns which show 'the classes and values of export trade in the six months ending December 1896 to 1899, of home products.' If he had looked at the table he would have seen that it was not in harmony with the other, which should have been a warning to him against taking these figures. I will read a short extract from the British trade returns which make it clear why their figures are not to be accepted as final on this point. One paragraph says :

A considerable amount of Canadian produce finds its way to the United Kingdom via the ports of the United States in winter, when many Canadian ports are closed by ice. To a limited extent produce from the United States is sent to the United Kingdom via Canadian ports, in the summer. Where, in such cases, the official documents enable a distinction to be drawn between Canadian and United States produce, it is credited to the true country of origin. But in many cases, such a distinction cannot be made, so that in using the statistics it should be remembered that a certain amount of the trade of Canada with this country, especially in winter, is unavoidably included under the heading 'United States.'

That is what every one conversant with trade knows—that, so far as the British returns are concerned, goods shipped from the United States in many cases are credited to the United States, though they are in reality Canadian products. Therefore, if that is the table the hon. gentleman used, he made a grave mistake, and one that is very misleading.

Take the item of cheese, for instance—the hon. gentleman gives in his first column an export of $13,458,844, and in the next $12,112,649. Now, the statement that was prepared by the department for me for the six months ending 31st December, 1898 and 1899 respectively, shows with reference to cheese, that in 1898, we exported to Great Britain $11,823,550 worth, while in the six months for 1899, instead of the export being less, it was $14,384,762. And so with the other items. So, the figures that he has given us tending to prove a reduction are entirely erroneous, as I understand them; and if I am mistaken or if he meant other months than his plain speech would lead one to believe, I should be glad to have him correct me. I have a statement covering the eight months ending the 28th of February, 1899 and 1900, a comparative statement of exports from the Dominion for these years. And this statement shows, that, for the eight months ending February 28th, 1899, the grand total of our exports, produce and non-produce, was $114,692,900, while, for the eight months ending 28th

Mr. PATERSON.

February, 1900, it was $129,158,755. But, I have spent altogether too long on that subject.

I come now—and I will close with that—to deal a little with the question of preferential trade with Great Britain. The line is drawn now, as the hon. baronet (Sir Charles Tupper) told us. This government and this parliament have adopted a preference to Great Britain. That preference has been in force during the past year, giving a reduction of 25 per cent on articles that come within its scope; and, if the Finance Minister's motion is agreed to, that preference will be increased to 33½ per cent after the 1st of July next. The hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has moved an amendment in which he virtually declares, as hon. gentleman on that side declared before, that they are opposed to us giving a preference to British goods coming into this country unless we get a quid pro quo from the old country. Let it not be misunderstood—while the Liberal party stands by the preferential tariff, under which the whole of Canada has reaped immense benefit—while the preference had benefited the English people at the same time, the Conservative party have now committed themselves so that if they obtain power at the next election they will wipe the preference law from the statutes of Canada and give no preference to the mother country. We know where we stand, therefore.

It is claimed that the preference has done no good to Great Britain. If so, how is it that these hon. gentlemen say that by granting it we have put a barrier in their way to securing a preference in the British market by a reduction of our duty. The hon. gentleman read to us his proposition that we would abate the 5 per cent of our duty if Great Britain would put 5 per cent on foreign produce coming into that country and let ours come in free. Well, we have abated more than 5 per cent on many of the leading lines of British manufacture; and they declared it has not done Britain one particle of good. If we have voluntarily remitted 8 or 10 per cent in favour of British goods and it has done no good, what a lever they will have going to Great Britain and asking them to give us a preference of 5 per cent in consideration of the reduction of our duties by 5 per cent. There never was a party in the country in such a ridiculous position, or with such utterly ridiculous arguments as the hon. gentlemen are compelled to use. Let us see whether there is any truth in what they say. I would say that I consider it is exceedingly gratifying to know that the preference granted to Great Britain has resulted in a substantial increase in her exports to Canada. That is one object that the Liberals had in view. I have a statement here showing the imports into Canada from Great Britain for the past ten fiscal years :

1891.....	42,047,526
1892.....	41,348,435
1893.....	43,148,413
1894.....	38,717,267
1895.....	31,131,737
1896.....	32,979,742
1897.....	29,412,188
1899.....	37,060,123

Hon. gentlemen opposite will see that under the Tory administration our imports from Great Britain were going down and down, till, from 1890 to 1897—and hon. gentlemen will remember that the preferential tariff was only in force for two months in 1897, and, therefore, for that purpose you can put in 1897 as under the Conservative tariff, so far as any preference to Great Britain is concerned—the imports from Great Britain dropped from $43,000,000 to $29,000,000. It was a decrease in trade, a trade gradually dying out. Well, if our preferential tariff had done nothing more than arrest the process of decay and decrease, it would have been something in Britain's favour. But is that all we did? No, Sir. In 1898, when the 12½ per cent was on, imports had risen from $29,000,000 to $32,000,000, in 1899, when the full 25 per cent was on it went up to $37,000,000. Now, you will observe from these figures that our imports from Great Britain gradually decreased until, in 1897, they were $14,000,000, or about 30 per cent less than in 1890; while, since 1897, there has been a steady and appreciable increase, and we believe it is due in great part, if not entirely, to the operations of the preferential tariff. Now, let me show that the import trade from Great Britain has increased in the following ratio since we came into power and enacted the preferential tariff. In 1897-8, the first full year when the preference of the one-eighth was in force, the trade increased over the year 1896-7 at the rate of 10 per cent; in 1898-9, when the full preference of one-fourth was in force, over 1897-8 at the rate of 14 per cent; and in 1898-9, over 1896-7, at the rate of 26 per cent.

So, you see that since we came into power British imports have increased 26 per cent, while they steadily decreased from 1890 to 1897, under our Conservative friends, about 30 per cent.

The preferential tariff, however, only applies to dutiable goods, and it is in the importation of such goods that we expect increases as a result of the tariff. Now, let us take the total value of dutiable goods, because we get free goods from Britain as well as from the United States. The total value of dutiable goods from Great Britain, entered for consumption in Canada, for the last three years, was as follows:

1899.....	27,521,508

The increase in 1897-8 over 1896-7 was at the rate of 11½ per cent; in 1898-9 over 1897-8 at the rate of 22 per cent; and in 1898-9 over 1896-7 at the rate of 36 per cent. More than that, from the returns of the trade of the six months ending December 31, 1899, just completed, we find that the imports from Great Britain for that period were in excess of the imports of the same period of the previous year by $3,148,922. And so it goes on.

I have a statement here which illustrates the increases and importations from Great Britain as a result of the preferential tariff, and I call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to it:

Increase, 36 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman include the quantities as well as the values there?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am giving the values.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman is not making it very clear. There is a great addition in values.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will look clear to the hon. gentleman when he sees it in print. I have shown, Sir, that the rate of increase in 1899 over 1898 on importations from Great Britain was 5 per cent greater than it was on goods from the United States. Then, the hon. gentleman made a statement which has been alluded to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, an unaccountable statement, still more unaccountable than the one I have referred to, but which the hon. gentleman corrected himself the next day. But, I am anxious to know how he is going to correct it in his speech, I am anxious to know how it is going out to the country. The hon. gentleman rose the day following and made this explanation:

Before the Notices of Motion are taken up, I want to make a correction in one of the figures I read yesterday, in that multitudinous list, in regard to the rate of duty upon British dutiable goods imported into this country.

In my main notes I had it correctly, but in the slip that was transferred by the page the figure 9 was substituted for 6. It should be 26·62, instead of 29·62, which would make a difference of 3·58 instead of ·58. It is an important change, and I would like to mention it so that the error may be corrected.

It is an important change. It is such a mistake as the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said it seemed impossible for any man to make who had given the subject any thought at all. Knowing that there was 25 per cent of a reduction of duties on importations coming from Great Britain, and knowing the millions of these goods that came in, knowing that the rate was lower and must be lower, to say that it was only ·58 per cent seems an unaccountable mistake to make. He says he had it right in his main notes, but, that, on the slip that the page took to the Hansard instead of it being 26·62 it was 29·62. He should not have slips of that kind around.

Mr. CLANCY. That is something like the hon. gentleman's corn slip.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, the hon. gentleman is wrong; the corn is put down properly. This was not a mistake of a single figure. If it had been that, and if the hon. gentleman wanted to correct it, what I want to know is what he is going to do with his speech. If it were simply that it was printed 29·62 when it should have been 26·62, that might occur with any one, and all the hon. gentleman would have to do, when he corrected the report of his speech in Hansard, would be to change the figure. But, he cannot correct it in that way, because he founded his argument upon it, because the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) lent the strength of his approval to it by calling the attention of the House to it and emphasizing it as did the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart). Is he going to blot out what other people said, is he going to change these arguments, is he permitted to revise Hansard in that way? He said:

Again they are not my own figures, but the figures of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I give them for what they are worth, and I take them to be true. What are they? I have here a list of the dutiable goods imported from Great Britain, and I find that in 1896, the rate of tariff imposed on dutiable goods from Great Britain was 30·20. In 1899 it is 29·62, or just fifty-eight one hundredths of one per cent less than it was in 1896. Again I say that these are not my figures. They are the figures taken from the public table published by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his report.

Mr. HAGGART. With the percentages calculated by him ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, with the percentages calculated by his department and set down by the department, and this is simply a copy of those figures which I have put upon this paper from which I am reading.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And under the operation of the preference.

This was to call the attention of the House to the remarkable fact that this preferential tariff had only reduced the rate on dutiable imports by 58-100ths of 1 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, under the operation of the preference. Now, what is the matter with this preference. Here you have an important policy founded upon a preference. A preference of what ? A preference of 25 per cent of the duty, and it goes into force 12½ per cent first, and then another 12½ per cent, making it 25 per cent and for eleven months of this year 1899, the 25 per cent reduction has been in force. If you were to take 30·20, which was the tariff on dutiable goods in 1896, their full reduction of 25 per cent would be 7·55. They should have had these figures of duty reduced to somewhere near 7·55 per cent, but instead of that they are reduced 58 per cent, or they about swallow the decimal and left the main figures of 7 per cent intact.

How could any man make a mistake like that, when he said there should be 7·55 per cent of a reduction and make it 58, and then rise up in his place and say that a boy took the slip off which contained the figure 29·62 instead of 26·62 ? If it had been a simpler error in the figures, which might easily occur in the case of any man, that would be rectified, but it cannot be rectified with these remarks and interjections of his colleagues and his own explanations. To get his speech right he will have to strike out of it every word upon that subject, because his whole argument applied to those figures. The hon. gentleman said, alluding to the figures in the Trade and Navigation Report, there is nothing so utterly destructive of confidence in the public records as to allow the virus of suspicion or doubt, to enter into them. I say to the hon. gentleman that there is nothing more calculated to introduce the virus of suspicion into the figures which he has given than this correction which he seeks to make. Any man may make mistakes, but there is a mistake that ought to be so obvious, that ought to be so patent that any one would see it. What are the facts ? The average rate of duty collected on dutiable importations from Great Britain in 1896, under the hon. gentlemen, was 30·20 per cent. The average rate on dutiable imports from Great Britain in 1889 was 26·63 per cent. That is the difference. In 1899 the average rate on the importations under the preferential tariff from Great Britain was 22·09 or 8 per cent lower on the goods that came in under the preferential tariff, but, as hon. gentlemen know, all goods do not come under the preferential tariff. Liquors, wines and tobacco are excepted, and there may be some other goods to which the 25 per cent reduction does not apply and the duties upon wines and liquors are higher than they were before. Nevertheless, the average rate on dutiable goods, taking the whole of the importations, was 26·63 per cent, as against 30·20 per cent in 1896, while the average rate under the preferential tariff was 22·09. The average ad valorem rate on the dutiable importations from the United States in 1896 was 26·69. In 1899 it was 26·34. So that the statements of these hon. gentlemen that we were giving such a great advantage to the United States are not borne out. These hon. gentlemen say that our tariff does not favour Great Britain, but that it favours the United States. Let us see. I have a statement here showing the average ad valorem rate of duty on dutiable goods imported for consumption from Great Britain and the United States during the following years :

Mr. CLANCY. Does that include just dutiable goods ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is a statement showing the average ad valorem rate of duty on dutiable goods imported for consumption from Great Britain and the United States, and it is as follows :

Year.	Great Britain.	United States.
1890.....	28·78.....	26·58
1891.....	28·98.....	25·96
1892.....	29·43.....	26·48
1893.....	29·80.....	26·73
1894.....	29·99.....	26·95
1895.....	30·05.....	26·73
1896.....	30·19.....	26·69
1899.....	26·63.....	26·34

So that hon. gentlemen can see that while their rate went up on British goods their rate went down on United States goods, and they will find that the rate, now, that, under them, was 3½ per cent higher on British goods in 1896 than on goods from the United States, under us is, on British goods, 26·63 per cent, and on United States goods, 26·34 per cent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Tory discrimination has been entirely eliminated.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. As my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) says, the Tory discrimination has been entirely eliminated. That is what we said we would do. Now, the trade statistics of this country show that under the operation of the Tory tariff imports from Great Britain decreased while imports from the United States steadily increased. Here are the figures :

	Great Britain.	United States.
1889.....	$42,317,389	$50,537,440
1890.....	43,390,241	52,291,973
1891.....	42,047,526	53,685,657
1892.....	41,348,435	53,137,572
1893.....	43,148,413	58,221,976
1894.....	38,717,267	53,034,100
1895.....	31,131,737	54,634,521
1896.....	32,979,742	58,574,024

I may say that from 1889, the imports from Great Britain fell from $42,000,000 to $32,000,000 in round numbers, while the imports from the United States increased from $50,000,000 to $58,000,000. These gentlemen opposite speak about the fact that the trade from the United States has increased. So it has. But, in what? Has it increased in anything that militates against Great Britain or her trade, or in anything that militates against Canada or the consumers of Canada? No, certainly not. The trade of the United States has gone up by thirty-odd million dollars, but for what reason? Why, because we believe in giving to the manufacturers of this country their raw material, duty free, in order that they can compete with other manufacturers, and in order that the consumer in this country can get the benefit of it, in the reduced price of goods—and he does get the benefit of it. It is not done to favour the United States, but it is done to benefit our own people and our own manufacturers, and it does that. Here is a statement, showing some of the chief free articles which we get almost entirely from the United States, and which we cannot get to advantage or profit from Great Britain, at least for the present.

a position to compete in these articles. Here is a list of dutiable articles that at present Great Britain does not compete closely with the United States in, and which, therefore, cannot be said to be of any great injury to Great Britain :

These are dutiable articles amounting to $13,967,842, which Great Britain cannot compete with the United States in. Therefore, if you take the total dutiable imports from the United States, during the last fiscal year, 1898-9, amounting to $41,471,821, and deduct from them the goods in the statement last quoted, amounting to $13,967,842, it leaves you $30,503,982, as coming from the United States, that you may say, would compete with Great Britain at the present time. The total dutiable importation of goods from Great Britain, deducting wines and spirits, which we do not get in any quantity from the United States, would be $26,903,268, nearly as much as the imports from the United States in the articles in which the two countries compete. The total free importation from the United States, during the last fiscal year, amounted to $48,535,342, but if you deduct $32,132,859, which we cannot expect to get from Great Britain, it leaves the free goods from the United States $16,402,483, while the free importations from Great Britain, during the last fiscal year, amounted to $9,538,615. But, the only fair way in which to compare our import trade from Great Britain and the United States, is to take as the basis of comparison the goods in which the two countries are competitors. The free list in the tariff is framed for our own benefit, and for our own benefit alone—the benefit of our manufacturers and the benefit of our consumers. Now, then here is a list of the goods in which the two countries compete. The first one, 'ales, beer and porter,' should not have been put in here, as it does not come under the preferential tariff, but, however, it has found its way in. The list is as follows :

Now, there is a large list of importations from both countries, in some cases the importations being much larger from one country than the other, and vice versa. The result is that in the importation of these articles in which both countries compete, we take $24,400,000 from Great Britain, and $25,296,340 from the United States. There is a total trade of about $50,000,000 in which Great Britain competes with the United States, and nearly $24,000,000 of that comes under the preferential tariff, comes in at a reduced rate, and as I have said, in cases where the British goods compete heavily with the goods from the United States, then the preferential rate governs the value of goods from the United States, and that is one benefit that the people get from what the Liberal government has done. The ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), in challenging our 33½ per cent preferential rate, said :

What is one of the first effects of this cut of 33½ per cent, made hastily, without discrimination as to articles. It is that it places articles of luxury about the lowest on the list of dutiable goods coming into this country. If the 33½ per cent cut is effective, it lets jewellery in at 20 per cent. It lets manufactures of gold and silver used by rich people in at 20 per cent ; it lets in silks, which are used by the wealthy, at 23½ per cent ; it lets in laces at 23½ per cent ; it lets in pianos at 20 per cent ; it lets in porcelain goods at 20 per cent ; it lets ribbons in at 23½ per cent ; it lets shawls and rugs in at 20 per cent ; it lets in watches at 16½ per cent ; it admits high class worsted goods at 23½ per cent ; velvets at 20 per cent ; Brussels carpets at 23½ per cent ; cottons, gray and white at 16½ per cent, and coloured cottons at 23½ per cent. It is an acknowledged principle in the levying of tariff rates in every country that what we call the luxuries of life, which can be afforded by the rich and not much wanted by the poorer classes of people, shall pay a higher percentage of duty. Under this cut, if it be effective, these articles will be amongst those which pay the least duty, and our farmers and artisans will not derive any benefit compared with that derived by the richer classes.

Another point to be observed is how this is going to affect the industries of this country. So far as I can judge, some of the most important industries of this country will find that the cut operates to such an extent that the tariff affords them little or no protection.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), would have been more honest in his statement, if he had said it admitted all woollen goods, including some articles on which the Conservatives had 50 or 60 per cent with their specific and ad valorem duties, as well as these high-class worsted goods. Here is a statement which I commend to the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), and to the House :

STATEMENT showing the imports for consumption in 1899, of the following articles mentioned in the speech of the Hon. Geo. E. Foster, unrevised Hansard, page 2802.

I would like to know when cottons, gray and white, and coloured cottons were confined to the wealthy people alone. I supposed they were articles found in every household in the Dominion of Canada, and yet he calls them articles of luxury. I would like to know what does he want to clothe the people with. He tells us that we will let in jewellery lower from Great Britain, but of jewellery we imported last year from Great Britain only $39,338 worth. He tells us that we are going to let in gold and silver manufactures from Great Britain, but all we got last year under this head was $51,623 worth. The hon. gentleman says you are going to let in pianos at a lower rate; and what pianos did we get from Great Britain last year? $2,421 worth. And you are going to let in China and porcelain ware, of which we got in last year $66,479 worth. You are going to let in ribbons, and I do not know a lady who will not deck herself with a ribbon, one as well as another. He also speaks of shawls and rugs which are going to come in at the lower rate of duty. You are going to let in watches, and the watches imported last year, which he fears are going to derange the whole fiscal system of this country by coming in at the reduced rate of duty, amounted to $4,169 worth. Then, on worsted goods the reduction applies not only to the high class, but to the low class as well, which in some cases under the combined specific and ad valorem duties of hon. gentlemen opposite had to pay as much as 50 or 60 per cent. The reduction will also apply to cottons, gray and white, and to coloured cottons. These articles surely are not luxuries; but the hon. gentleman is right when he says they will come in under the preferential tariff. I have a table here showing the reductions on a large class of goods with the one-third off; but I shall not use it to-night, because that one-third preference is not yet in effect. I have been dealing with the existing reduction on the products of Great Britain coming into this country, showing the benefit which Great Britain already has; and all I can say is that if this House will sanction the proposition of the hon. Finance Minister, great as has been the reduction in the taxation that the people have saved during the past year, there will be the added benefit that they will secure from the further cut which he proposes shall go into effect on the 1st of July next. Now, Sir, I think that is a benefit not only to Great Britain, but to the Canadian people. I do not put our preferential tariff on the ground alone that it is a benefit to Great Britain. It is a benefit to Great Britain, but it is to be remembered that it is also a benefit to ourselves. If there were no other result from it than the reduction of taxation obtained by the people, then, Sir, it would be a carrying out of the pledge we gave to the people that we would reduce their burden of taxation. While we give that advantage of 25 cents on the dollar to England over every other nation on the earth, and gave it gladly, it is also for our benefit, because the goods we receive from Great Britain come to the consumer at that much lower price. More than that, when Great Britain's competitor sends in similar goods, the consumer gets the benefit of the preferential tariff, while at the same time the revenue gets the advantage of the higher tariff which stands against the foreigner.

But, Sir, I have more than that to say. I am a citizen and an admirer of Great Britain, and while I desire the unity of the empire, there is a bond of trade between us, and the more trade we do with the mother country, the closer will be the ties that will bind us together; and these ties have been wonderfully strengthened by our preferential tariff. Hon. gentlemen opposite may talk as long as they please; but what avails their puny mouthings against this preferential tariff as of no avail to Britain, when the English press, the greatest and mightiest press on the face of the earth, is unanimous in declaring that that was a boon granted to Great Britain, and that it did bind the colonies and the mother country more closely together? Do these hon. gentlemen think that they can make the Canadian people believe what they say, that this preferential tariff is a delusion and a snare and a fraud, in face of the fact that Her Majesty's secretary of State for the Colonies sent to this country his thanks, declaring that it did and would knit together the colonies and the mother country more firmly than ever they have ever been in the past. Why, Sir, the very words of the Colonial Secretary telegraphed to this country congratulating the government on this tariff, were incorporated in a motion that was moved by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Russell), and the Tory party in parliament to a man voted it down; and now they are emphasizing their position somewhat more forcibly and distinctly by the amendment which they have moved. We are glad of it. Now we know that while we stand by the preferential tariff, while we stand by the old land and that which benefits her as well as our own people, we stand opposed by a party who by their acts are now pledged, if they come into power, to repeal that preferential tariff and go back to the old state of things. The people of this country will have to pronounce on that question, and I venture to say that when their verdict is rendered, it will be a verdict such as they have already given in unmistakable terms, as far as we can judge from public utterances which we have listened to, and from private conversations which we have had with the people, that one of the best and wisest policies ever adopted by the Canadian parliament was to give that preferential treatment in our markets to the products of the mother country.

I have said that the reduced duties are for our own benefit, if they were nothing more, if you left Great Britain out of consideration. But, Sir, this preferential tariff has done more for us, as we believed it would. We believe we have got what these hon. gentlemen say we ought to get, and what they say they are going to get by an Act of the British parliament, or else they are going to destroy the preference which we have given to the English people. We have to-day, by virtue of our preferential tariff—there is no doubt about it in my mind—a decided preference in the British market. If it is not a legal preference, it is a preference through the good-will of the British consuming public themselves, who by this preferential tariff had their hearts drawn out towards Canada as they never had before. Why, Sir, if it were nothing more than an advertisement, business men know that as an advertisement it is worth all that we paid. Paid? We paid nothing for it, because in reducing the duties, as I say, we were simply reducing our own burdens. But, Sir, we have had a market in Great Britain to an extent such as we never enjoyed before—a market which is going on increasing, and what has been the result? Wealth to the great agricultural class of this country, which means wealth and prosperity to every man who dwells in it. Who will deny it? I have given you figures most gratifying in their character as to the total export trade of Canada; but, Sir, if it had not been for the British market for our products, I could not have given such gratifying figures. I have given you the total exports to all countries; but let me now give you the quantities of those exports that went to Great Britain alone, influenced, I believe in no slight measure, by the fact that the British heart was touched by the act of the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament. Take the total exports of Canadian and foreign produce from Canada to Great Britain. They are as follows:

of an increase in three years under Liberal administration, or at the rate of $11,000,000 per annum.

In 1877-8, these exports amounted to $45,941,539, which, deducted from $66,690,288 in 1895-6, gives an increase in eighteen years under Tory rule of $20,748,749, as against $32,401,567 in three years under Liberal rule. Or, in other words, the increase in eighteen years, under Conservative administration, was at the rate of little over $1,000,000 per annum, while in the three years of Liberal administration, and under the influence of the preferential tariff, it has been about $11,000,000 per annum.

Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that that includes foreign grain, which simply comes into this country and passes through it. Very well, let us take the exports of Canadian produce only to Great Britain. That export was as follows:

1895-6....	62,718,941

of an increase in three years under this government.

In 1895-6, the last year of the late government, we exported, as I have said, Canadian products to Great Britain, $62,718,941, and in 1877-8, eighteen years ago, we exported $35,861,110, showing an increase in eighteen years, under Conservative rule, of $26,857,831, or at the rate of a million and a half dollars per annum, as compared with an increase of $22,395,614 in three years of Liberal administration, or at the rate of over $7,000,000 per annum.

Take the exports of animals and their products, and agricultural products, the produce of Canada alone, to Great Britain:

1898-9..	$60,052,542

of an increase in three years under Liberal administration. Now, take the figures for 1877-8, eighteen years ago, and they amount to $19,147,608, and comparing them with the figures for 1895-6, we find an increase of $22,926,779 in eighteen years of Tory rule, or at the rate of one and a quarter million dollars per annum, as compared with an increase of $17,978,155 in three years, under Liberal rule, or at the rate of $6,000,000 per annum.

So I might go on with other facts. Take the aggregate trade of Canada with foreign countries, and the following table will show what immense strides we have made between 1896 and 1899:

AGGREGATE Trade of Canada with Foreign Countries.

Countries.	1896.	1899.	Increase, 1899.

Our export trade to Great Britain increased by $32,000,000, compared with a total increase to all other countries of about $5,000,000, including the United States. That shows the effect of the preferential tariff. Under its influence our trade with Great Britain has gone up by leaps and bounds. The people of Canada know to-day that there never was a policy introduced in this House which has had the great success in promoting the prosperity of this country as the policy of the preferential tariff adopted in 1897. Under pressure from this government, the British government abrogated the treaties with Germany and Belgium, and gave us that freedom which we had long desired but could never obtain under Tory rule; and when we gave unsolicited and voluntarily the preference we did to Great Britain against every other nation, that stirred the heart of the British people as nothing we had done had ever stirred it before. The result, as every merchant who visits Great Britain will tell you, is a most marvellous change of feeling on the part of the British people to this country and a most earnest desire to do an increased business with us. That is due to the fact that we gave them this preference in our market, without any bartering or huckstering, in our own interests and the interests of the empire as well, and the visit of our First Minister during the jubilee celebration intensified that good-will by the admiration and respect which his personal qualities aroused among the people on the other side, and which are felt by every man in this country whose opinions are worth anything. And, under these circumstances, and when these feelings are aroused, and when, in our own interest, we wish to reduce the burden of taxation and in the interest of the unity of the empire at the same time propose an additional preference to our British brethren, the Tory party in this House fight against giving the additional preference—and not only that, but give us to understand that they restored to power will wipe that preference off the statute-book, Sir, let them stand by their colours; I stand by the preferential tariff, and I stand by the proposition to make that preference greater than it has been hitherto.

Mr. PRIOR moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

PRAYERS.

THE HUTTON-HUGHES CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I asked the Clerk for a copy of the Hutton-Hughes correspondence, and I find it is in such general demand that the typewriters cannot supply a sufficient number of copies.

It would be well, if there be no objection, that suspension of the rules should be moved so as to permit of its being printed. It is a document of present interest.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Will my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) renew his application to-morrow?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Bill (No. 129)—from the Senate—to incorporate the Canadian Steel Company.—(Mr. Wood.)

OFFICIAL DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE moved:

That the third report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of this House during the present session, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—OFFER OF A CONTINGENT FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before the Orders of the Day, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the papers brought down at my request in regard to the offer by the British Columbia government of a contingent for South Africa. I see from these papers that the British Columbia government wrote to the Secretary of State saying that a hundred men and horses, with complete equipment for the horses, would be sent and transportation paid to Halifax. I also see that the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, telegraphed that that contingent would be gladly accepted by the British government if it was a unit. Then, the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) telegraphed to British Columbia that the province must pay all costs and charges until the men landed in South Africa. The right hon. gentleman also telegraphed a day or two afterwards, that this contingent must be a unit of one hundred and sixty mounted men, as requested by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Then comes a cablegram from Mr. Chamberlain saying:

Please add to my telegram of February 3—

Which refers to the offer of British Columbia.

—the following: 'Her Majesty's government will defray expenses of transport of any further contingent if enough to ship.

This cablegram shows that Her Majesty's government were willing to pay the transport of that contingent to South Africa.

That is the last paper that is brought down in answer to the order for the return. I wish to ask the Prime Minister, whether, after he received that cablegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, he informed the government of British Columbia that if they sent a contingent of 160 men and horses their transportation would be paid by the British government to South Africa? It would seem to me that while British Columbia was willing to send 100 men, and, perhaps, pay their transportation to South Africa; if they had known that transportation would have been paid for them they would have been perfectly willing to send 160 men. I, therefore, ask the Prime Minister whether there is not some further correspondence to be brought down?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). All these applications were referred by me to the Minister of Militia, and I will have to make inquiries.

Mr. PRIOR. Perhaps the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) could inform me.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Copies of all the papers in the department have been placed in that return as far as I know. I will make further inquiry about it.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to speak about returns that have been ordered by the House and not brought down. I shall confine myself to those that I myself moved for and for which an order of the House has issued. A return moved for on the 7th of February with reference to United States vessels being admitted to coasting on the lakes was brought down on the 20th of March; but, as pointed out before, it is altogether incomplete, and is entirely unreliable for the purposes for which I wished it. The supplementary part has not yet been brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In what respect is it incomplete?

Mr. FOSTER. I pointed out at the time, as will be found in Hansard, about March 23rd.

The PRIME MINISTER. Will the hon. gentleman repeat what he said?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I think all that was in the department was brought down.

Mr. FOSTER. There is none of the correspondence which took place between the government and the different boards of trade and other boards, representing the shipping interest. On the same day, the 7th of February, I asked for copies of all correspondence with reference to the traffic arrangements between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway; there is no answer to that. On the 7th of February, I asked for a return with reference to the dates and times of contracts for the Yukon mails now current. No answer has been made to that; and in this connection, I may say that the return I asked for in May, 1898, embodying the same information for that year, has not yet been brought down.

Mr. PRIOR.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I am sure I made the return.

Mr. FOSTER. No. The order of the House was on the 10th of May, 1898. Then, there was an order of the House on February 7, for the names of the clerks in the civil service, who received statutory increases; that has not been brought down. Another order was for contracts for the supply of steel rails. I received a return to that order on March 20; but, as I pointed out a day or two afterwards, it was incomplete, and consequently not available for the comparisons I wanted to make.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to state that he did mention that the return was not complete; and, as I handed it to him, just as I received it from the department, I was not in a position to state that his impression was not correct or was correct. I found on inquiry that he was in error as respects the omission he spoke of, namely, that there was nothing to show on what dates these rails were to be delivered.

Mr. FOSTER. There was something to show when the rails were to be delivered, but what I wanted, was the date when the rails were actually delivered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to ask for that. I do not think the motion called for that.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it did. Then, on the 7th of February, I asked for a return of the Yukon liquor permits; that is not brought down yet. On the same day I asked for the appointments to the staff at Kingston; that has been brought down to-day. On the 14th of February, I asked for the Lemieux papers, and received them on March 15th. I pointed out to the House that they were altogether incomplete.

The PRIME MINISTER. In what respect?

Mr. FOSTER. Correspondence mentioned in the parts brought down is not included. For instance, Mr. Ennis laid his case before the Minister of Justice, and I was anxious to see what stand the Minister of Justice took on this now somewhat famous case. On the 26th of February, I asked for a return with reference to the Hopewell mail contract in Albert County, N.B.; that is not down. On the 14th of February, I asked for a return of the appointments to the official staff of the contingents; that has not been brought down. What was brought down by the Minister of Militia and Defence today, was the Kingston staff corps papers. On the 19th of March, I asked for the papers with reference to the Restigouche Railway, so that I might get at the basis of cost on which the subsidies were paid; I have not received that return. On the 19th of February, I asked for a return with reference to the gold claims in the Yukon—what claims had been given as compensation, so to speak, for those which it was claimed had been lost through the inefficiency or mistakes of officials. On the 19th of March I received an order of the House for the correspondence with reference to the militia canteens; that has not been brought down. On the 19th, I asked for a statement of the living allowances granted to the Yukon officials, which has not been brought down. On the 19th, I asked for details with reference to the Dawson water front, and fines collected in the Yukon; that has not been brought down. On the 19th, I asked for a return of all liquor permits for the Yukon, granted by the government, or by the council of the Yukon. On the 28th of March, I asked for the papers in relation to the retirement of Lieut.-Colonel Domville. On the 28th, I asked for a return of the scrap iron sales or contracts made by the Intercolonial Railway, and a return showing the cost of commissions of investigation. These were ordered on the 28th, and I do not expect them at this early date, but I mention them in the order of the papers. The government will see, that there are many of these which ought to have been brought down long ago, for which there seems to be no valid excuse for a business administration.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I wish to say, with reference to the order for the list of the Yukon permits, that no permits have been issued by the department here. I at once asked for a report from the Yukon council, but there has not been time yet to receive it. I shall be glad to bring it down as soon as it reaches the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Last year we were met by that excuse whenever we asked for information—that the Yukon was so far distant that we could not get it. We have spent money in establishing a quick communication with the Yukon, and I do not think the House ought to be put off with a statement of the interminable land distance between us and the Yukon. There is a means of communication which the government could use to obtain the information for the House without delay.

Mr. DAVIN. In that connection, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman, whether he has placed on the Table, the papers he said he would, in response to a question from me, regarding the agreement between the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the town site trustees along the line?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are here, and I am waiting for a chance to lay them on the Table.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would call the attention of the acting Minister of the Interior to the fact that certain returns ordered by the House are not yet brought down. We have not yet got copies of correspondence between the Department of the Interior and persons in the North-west Territories respecting securities for seed grain indebtedness and claims for patents refused in consequence of such bonded indebtedness. Also copies of advertisements calling for tenders for printing for the North-west Territories government from 1890 to 1899. Also copy of order in council on which the royal commission on the shipment and transportation of grain was issued.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Part of the report is brought down, and the rest is being prepared as fast as possible.

Mr. DAVIN. What is brought down is part of the report which is being printed. But what the House ordered was a copy of the order in council on which the commission was issued and a copy of the letter of the Minister of the Interior to Judge Senkler.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My recollection is I brought that down.

Mr. DAVIN. I will make inquiries. Also copies of all memorials of the town council of Moosejaw to the Interior Department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have made a memo, and will bring down the returns as quick as possible.

GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. BOURASSA moved that the House resolve itself in committee on Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Gaspé Short Line Railway.—(Mr. Lemieux.)

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). If the object of this measure were to promote the interests of the Gaspé district, I would certainly give it my hearty support, but I did oppose it the other day in committee on the ground that it is going to interfere with the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which runs down along the coast. The assurance was given the Railway Committee that there was no intention to interfere in any way with the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, but power was asked to take over that railway, and if the Bill went through it would be the means of putting the Atlantic and Lake Shore on a better footing. Since then I have observed a letter that appeared in a local paper published in the town of Campbellton, to the effect that a meeting of the municipal council of Gaspé and Percé Board of Trade was held in Percé on the 14th March and passed certain resolutions strongly in opposition to this measure. It seems that these people did not want the Gaspé Short Line Company to have any connection whatever with the Atlantic and Lake Superior road, they claim that the only object of this measure was to prevent the building of that piece of road which remains unbuilt from Paspébiac down to Gaspé. I would like some explanation as to the situation on this point before this Bill goes through.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman objects to details, perhaps it would be better to let the Bill stand as the promoter is not here.

Mr. McALISTER. I object to the general principle, but all I ask is an explanation of the true intent of the Bill.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). I gathered at the Railway Committee that the hon. gentleman was perfectly satisfied with the arrangements made for the paying of the debt and everything else.

Mr. McALISTER. I am referring to what has transpired since.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I do not think it is a rule always to be insisted upon, that a man who has taken charge of a Bill and is supposed to understand it thoroughly should necessarily be the man to carry it through its different stages, after it is once launched, but I think it is a fairly good rule to apply, provided the session is not too far advanced, that the father of the Bill shall be here when it is being discussed, and we are not so far advanced that we cannot let this Bill stand over and put it through another day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) mentioned, when this Bill was before the Railway Committee, that he thought there were reasons why, possibly, if it were to pass, the new company incorporated might have a prejudicial effect on the existence or operation of the Atlantic and Lake Superior or what is known as the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. My hon. friend did not offer any serious objection to the Bill passing that committee. He stated the fears that he entertained in the matter, and left it there. But it was very well explained, not only by the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill, but by other hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec, that it was because the Baie des Chaleurs Railway was in the condition in which it now is, and because it was quite certain that the property of that company would be put up to sale and disposed of in a short time, that it was absolutely necessary that the new incorporation should be passed by parliament, so that people who are interested in having that road continue in operation and who have other railway interests in the locality might be in a legal position to bid the property in and put it into operation. And the reasons which were urged by these hon. gentlemen were so clear and cogent that there was not a member of the committee who felt that any serious objection could be raised to the passing of the Bill. Now, it is well known that the condition of the company is a very unsatisfactory one. It is in extremis, from what I can learn, not able to pay its bills or to pay the men who are operating it; and it is now on the eve of being offered at sheriff's sale in the county. Under these circumstances it is easy to see that the interests of the people of that locality are very much involved in having some legislation passed, and passed without delay, so that the enterprise may be taken up, so that it may be in strong financial hands, and the line continued in operation. All the reasons, it seems to me, are in favour of passing the Bill and against any delay. But I do not understand my hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) that the Bill be delayed. He has been communicated with, and he feels it his duty, very properly to mention to the House the objections that have been stated to him; but, beyond that, I do not understand that the hon. gentleman desires to go. It appears to me that no good reason has been shown, nor do I think any will be shown, why we should not take this Bill up and pass it, the same as any other Bill. Nothing will be gained by delay; but I believe that serious difficulties will arise if the matter is allowed to stand.

Mr. BERGERON. Not for three days.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. There are times when the Minister of Railways and Canals is in a great hurry; and there are times when he moves more leisurely. He does not pretend that the delaying of this Bill for a few days is going to make any difference legally or financially in the position that the road would be in compared with its present position. We pass these Bills and they are assented to at the end of the session; and whether we pass them this week or next week they are not assented to and do not go into operation any sooner. The argument is that this concern should be put into strong financial hands. But it does not seem certain that a capital of only $500,000 for taking over the whole line to Paspébiac is assurance that it is going into very strong financial hands. Suppose the road is in extremis, I do not think that anything is to be lost by delay—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is to be gained?

Mr. FOSTER. This is to be gained—that when we pass legislation here, it is the essence of our work that it shall be done openly, that every locality shall have the opportunity, if it is affected, to be heard; and, as my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) has brought to our notice a movement on the part of the Board of Trade of Gaspé in reference to this matter, it would not be unwise to wait until we get representation from that quarter, or at any rate, to wait for a little while to see what does come in. Now, as to this road being in extremis and sold out, the fact of this new company being incorporated, does not make the new concern the possessor of the road. If the road is sold out, every association of capitalists has a right to come in and compete for the purchase of the road. Many companies may seek to acquire it which may be stronger, financially, than this company. The gentlemen who are mentioned here I do not know either personally or as to their financial capacity. The company is evidently a small one. I had not the advantage of being at the committee when the matter was discussed there; but when these Bills come to the House, we who had not the privilege of being in the committee have a right to information concerning them. A certain advantage is given to a small company like this when you pass a charter, covering certain ground which is already, as I understand it, preoccupied by another company which has spent a great deal of its own money and, what is still worse—or is still better, according as you look at it—has spent large amounts of this country's money as well. It has struck me that a good deal of care ought to be exercised when a small company is allowed to get a status in the pre-emption of ground which is already taken by a company which had built a large portion of the line and proposes to build more. Under the circumstances, I think it would be better to allow the matter to mellow for a few days.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I cannot quite understand the point that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) wishes to get at. This question was fully threshed out in the Railway Committee.

Mr. McALISTER. My information is that the people of the county of Gaspé are opposed to it, as are a great many in my own county who are financially interested.

Mr. McMULLEN. That may be a reason why the hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) should offer his personal objection. But public notice has been given that the Bill would be taken up, and it has been before parliament for a considerable time; and if people are opposed to the measure, as the hon. gentleman says, they should have formulated their opposition and got it before the Railway Committee, so that their objections could be fairly considered.

Mr. McALISTER. These are things that have arisen since the Railway Committee sat.

Mr. McMULLEN. Nothing was presented of the kind that the hon. gentleman refers to. And, in the committee, the promoter of the Bill stated that it was desirable that the Bill should be pressed through, as rapidly as possible, in order to get into a position to handle the road if it is brought under the hammer. And, if it is, I think it is highly desirable that this House should give a legalized status to any company that is prepared to handle it. This Bill places the new company in position to take it over, but any other individual or company would be in the same position. If you do not permit them to get into that position you may prevent the road being taken up and handled in the manner called for by the interest of the entire district. If the hon. gentleman has any personal objections, or if he desires to voice the objection of any resident in the county, let him get up and state what it is and let us understand what the opposition amounts to. We had no statement of it before the Railway Committee. The hon. gentleman did not attempt to impress the Railway Committee with any argument to show that the Bill should not become law. When the hon. gentleman keeps the committee and the House in the dark, he can hardly expect that the House will hold its hand. The object of the Bill is simply to give a legal standing to this company.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) say that the people of Gaspé and that district were opposed to the Bill. The evidence before the committee was that the people were almost unanimously in favour of it.

Mr. McALISTER. The hon. member for the county stated that, but I do not think any evidence was given of it. Since then, my information is that the people of Gaspé are opposed to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that I can show my hon. friend that evidence was given before the committee as to the position of the people in the district toward this matter. This point was raised, and the hon. member for the county and the member for the adjoining county supported the Bill very strongly and gave strong reasons why the powers asked for under this Bill should be given, not only to build this road if it were necessary—which is not paralleling the road that has been referred to—but also that power should be given to purchase the other road should it come into the market, as it is supposed it will do in a short time. The member for Bonaventure (Mr. Guité) especially has a very particular grievance against this company. I am told that they only run a train every week or two when it suits them, and they are holding the ground, to the great disadvantage of the people of that district. The object of this Bill, as was stated in committee, is, if possible, to give railway facilities to the people of Gaspé and of that district. It is well known that the people are suffering an outrageous grievance from the way this matter has been managed in the past, and they want to be relieved, and the present Act is meant to relieve them by giving them railway facilities. Personally, as a member of the House, I would be perfectly willing, as I always am, to grant a reasonable delay if any plausible reason can be given for a delay. The Bill was fully discussed in the committee, and important reasons having been given for this legislation, I cannot imagine why there should be a delay at the present time.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). The only possible object of delay would be to favour a lot of parties who were creditors of the road. As the hon. gentleman knows, the franchise of the road cannot be sold by the sheriff, but this empowers a company to take the franchise of the road upon purchasing it and to go on and work it. It is true that under the general Railway Act the courts give them the power of working it for a year; then it is necessary for them to come to parliament and get the right to work the road. The only objection that I can see to the Bill is that some creditors hope, if the franchise remains in the hands of the original corporators, that they would have a better chance of getting paid their indebtedness in full than they would if this Bill passed.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. What is the proposed length of this road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It was stated in the committee that the new line would be 120 or 125 miles long.

Mr. FOSTER. Between what points?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It runs pretty well the length of the peninsula.

Mr. FOSTER. Between what points is it to run?

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From the extreme point of the Gaspé peninsula up 120 or 125 miles.

Mr. TISDALE. To a point on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. If there is not traffic enough to keep up the old road, how will the two roads live?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was stated that no point on this road was within 40 or 50 miles of the old road.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not going to join the old road?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not the way it looks on the map.

Mr. FOSTER. What in the world then do we want of two franchises running parallel from Gaspé out to the Intercolonial Railway.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend is in error, they are not parallel at all. The former Baie des Chaleurs, or the present Canada, Lake Superior and Atlantic Railway, girds the shore from Metapedia to Paspebiac. There is a charter now to extend that railway along the shore to the Gaspé Basin; but this road is intended to leave the Intercolonial Railway north of Causapscaal.

Mr. FOSTER. How far from Paspebiac?

The PRIME MINISTER. I suppose 30 or 40 miles, speaking under correction. My hon. friend is familiar with the locality and knows where Metapedia is. Causapscaal is just about the end of the valley. The road is intended, therefore, to start from Gaspé Basin across the country to a certain point in the York valley and thence to the Gaspé Basin. The point of junction is the same, it is to reach the Gaspé Basin, which is also the terminus of the present road, that is to say, the Atlantic and Lake Superior. But it does not cover the same route at all. I am not very familiar with the geography of the interior of Gaspé, but I have always understood that the interior of the Gaspé peninsula formed by the St. Lawrence and the Baie des Chaleurs, is a valuable country for settlement. It is a well timbered country, particularly with cedar. The road covered by this present charter does not at all rival the Atlantic and Lake Superior, it does not cover the same ground.

Mr. FOSTER. Here we are down in the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure. We have the Intercolonial Railway, and we have already chartered one company to build out to Gaspé which is the objective point, that is to say from a point on the Intercolonial Railway to Gaspé, or towards Gaspé. The road is now built towards Gaspé as far as Paspebiac, which I understand is about 83 miles from Gaspé. We have spent a large amount of money in attempting to get that road built from the Intercolonial Railway down to Paspébiac, and it is built now within about 80 miles of Gaspé. Now, here comes a proposition to charter another road to run from a point on the Intercolonial Railway up to Gaspé by a parallel route, all through virgin soil, a new country. My hon. friend says that it touches a new country. Is the county of Gaspé so teeming with productions that you require another road in addition to a road built now as far as Paspébiac, which has a franchise down to Gaspé with only 80 miles remaining to be built? Is the county of Gaspé in a position to ask now that another road should be built from Gaspé up to the Intercolonial Railway a little to the north of the road, and paralleling it? As sure as the hon. gentleman lives he knows that the charter simply is the stepping stone to the subsidy which is to come afterwards. Here is an instance of the paralleling of roads through a most sparsely settled country which has not been, in comparison, equalled, I think, in all the roads that we have built close by, or parallel to each other.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Have they not petroleum wells there?

Mr. FOSTER. No, neither the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland), nor any other man can tell that there is a petroleum well there that is worth driving a horse and cart to, let alone building a railway to. We do not know that there will be any future for that industry, because, the experiments have not, as yet, as I am informed, demonstrated the fact that petroleum is to be found there in such commercial values as will make it at present a basis for building a line of expensive railway. Why is it that we are paralleling this road from Bonaventure to Gaspé, through a sparsely settled country. Only the fringe of the country is settled by farmers and fishermen, and when you go ten or twelve miles back from the fringe you have nothing but the primeval forest. It is well timbered, but I am informed that the timber is not of the most valuable kind.

The PRIME MINISTER. On the contrary, the timber is valuable.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a poor timber belt.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it is very valuable timber.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is in favour of the policy proposed of paralleling that road from the Intercolonial a little to the north of this present one which we have built from Matapédia down to Paspébiac, and which proposes to go on to Gaspé, inviting a subsidy from this government in order to parallel that. Having the history of the present road before his eyes, the depleting subsidies to meet large expenditures, simply because they had not the capital they should have had when they started, is my right hon. friend prepared to take up these gentlemen—very honourable and very good men they may be, with $500,000 of a capitalization, with these names as a basis for admitting another road, of almost equal length and grant them a charter for a railway to go through the same district, but a little farther to the north and between the two same objective points? The right hon. gentleman is prepared to do it and to do it with a company which has $500,000 of a capital and no more. There is not, so far as I know, one strong financial name amongst them. The hon. gentleman may know them better than I do myself. I am not casting any discredit upon the gentlemen at all in any way, but, it does not seem that they are men of large financial standing. My hon. friend says that he knows some of them, and he says that they are men of financial strength. He said the same thing last year in regard to some of the gentlemen promoting the Edmonton and Yellow Head Pass Railway. He said that the gentleman whose name was at the head of the list was a gentleman of high financial standing. Yet, these gentlemen have sold out their franchise, as I said they would, last year. It seems to me that if this is going to be the policy of these hon. gentlemen, if these charters are going to be put through this House year after year, thus giving an invitation for applications for further subsidies for the paralleling of roads, instead of the discouragement of the paralleling of roads and the husbanding of our capital for needed railway schemes, the hon. gentleman is going back on his past record, and is initiating another call for large subsidies for paralleling roads through territories which are not thickly inhabited or productive.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Chairman, I would wish, for my part, that my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), would give us his whole mind upon this subject, because, without a full declaration on his part, I do not conceive how any one can show such hostility to this Bill unless there are reasons that he has not informed the House of. What is the reason he should throw so many obstacles in the way of the passing of this charter? The present road has been an incubus on the Gaspé peninsula, and if it had not been for that road probably there would not have been any necessity for this charter. It is not so much on account of the new charter that this Bill is desired, but, on account of the power which is granted that this company may acquire the old road and put it upon something like a business basis. What has taken place? I agree with my hon. friend that we have given subsidies more than sufficient, or which should be sufficient, to provide railway facilities for that district to build a road from Paspébiac to Gaspé. And if the subsidies had not been squandered in the most lamentable, I might say in the most criminal manner, the people of Gaspé would have had railway communication. They cannot have that railway communication in the present position of affairs; they cannot have it unless there is a change in the ownership of the present railway. It is not so much for the new charter which is granted that the people of Gaspé are anxious, but they recognize that in this charter there is the germ of the possibility of change so that if the old road is brought under the sheriff's hammer and disposed of it can be acquired by the new company which will put it on a business basis. I do not know the incorporators, I have heard of them, but personally, I have had nothing to do with them. But, if they do nothing more than provide a new management for the old road and apply some business methods to it, it will go a long way towards relieving the people of Gaspé of the incubus which is weighing upon them. This is not paralleling the present road. These roads are in two different parts of the country. The present road is, chiefly serving the shore of the bay.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it operated just now?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not operated just now. It has been suspended for six weeks or so. At all events, if they have resumed operations, it has only been within a few days.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Trains run once in a while.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I do not think that during the present winter they are running trains at all. I have had representations made to me in order to secure relief for the people of Gaspé from the exasperating conditions under which they are labouring. These people are absolutely without railway communication. I have no hesitation in saying, and I do not believe I am stating it too strongly, that there is any possibility of this road being operated so long as it remains under the present management. There must be a total change. The only way that can be brought about is by the road being sold and by a new corporation taking hold of it.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Chairman, I do not want to do anything that would deprive the people of Gaspé of railway facilities, but I do not know how they will be able to get these railway facilities by the proposal as explained by the right hon. Prime Minister. He said that he was surprised to see such opposition offered to this railway. He must remember the Bale des Chaleurs Railway, which does not smell very good in the noses of the politicians of this country. The affairs of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, are at present, if I am not mistaken, presided over by Senator Thibaudeau; and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) is one of the directors and owners of the line. I said, the other day in the committee, and I admit that I might have made these remarks there, that there was no one representing the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway present. We have a recollection, some years ago, of a scheme of this sort which culminated, last year, in the whole of a county coming before parliament and asking to be relieved from the results of the machinations by which they had been deprived of their line of railway. I refer to the people of St. Andrews, in the county of Argenteuil, in reference to whose case a Bill was run through parliament in this way, hardly any one knowing anything about it. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is just as much interested as we are, I hope, in seeing that such a thing is not repeated. My hon. friend insists that this contemplated line and the old line do not run parallel to each other, but if that be the case, how can he pretend that a new company will buy the old company out. If the effect of passing this Bill is to leave the Atlantic and Lake Superior with its terminus at Paspébiac, then the Atlantic and Lake Superior will never be operated and the people of that part of the county will be deprived of a railway. When I was down there in the winter of 1897, the government were operating this road during election time, and they lost a good deal of money by doing so. I quite understood while I was there that the reason the Atlantic and Lake Superior did not pay was because it had no terminus. At that time it ran to Caplin, and though Paspébiac where it ends, now is a larger place, yet it can never pay until it gets to its proper outlet at Gaspé Basin. If we pass this Bill we kill the old line completely, and all its creditors and its investors will lose their money. It is true that the investment is not large, but whatever it be, it will be lost, as will also the subsidies voted to the Atlantic and Lake Superior, both by the Federal and Quebec governments. It seems to me that there might be some other way of forcing these gentlemen connected with the Atlantic and Lake Superior, who are all friends of the government—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not all.

Mr. BERGERON. Most of them. I know my right hon. friend has his finger on one. I know Mr. Armstrong's name is there for something. I remember that last year, when I was insisting that the subsidy should be paid to the Atlantic and Lake Superior, the Prime Minister insisted that it should be paid to 'a company' that would build the road. Hon. gentlemen, perhaps, see something in that now, or, as we say in French, 'le chat est sorti du sac.' Suppose we do grant this charter, my hon. friend does not know whether the old company will come to an arrangement with this company. Anyway, how will the new company float its debentures? Mr. Armstrong is well known in England, and he has been for years there trying to float the Atlantic and Lake Superior debentures. The people of England will say: 'Now, you want to build a parallel road, and there is no inducement for us to invest in it; and if it is not a parallel road, how can it facilitate the bringing of the present Atlantic and Lake Superior road to Gaspé?' This is a piece of legislation which the members of this House do not understand, and we should not pass such a Bill without knowing what the practical result of it will be.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have to reconstruct my argument now because the Prime Minister has shifted ground entirely from the declaration in section 9 of this Bill. He now declares in effect: That it is not the intention of this company to build a railway at all. Are we to pass legislation stating that a railway company shall be incorporated, not for the purpose of building a road, but in order that it may have an entity, so that it may purchase another road which lies to the south of it? The whole argument of the Prime Minister is that he proposes to charter a company to build a railway by a certain route, while he is certain that this company never intends to build by that route or any other.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not say that at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole argument of the hon. gentleman is: That the people living along that present line of road have been cheated out of money which is their due, and have also been deprived of railway communication; both of which I admit are hard on the people. But, even if this road which we now propose to charter is a bona fide undertaking, it will not give the people along the route of the present line any communication, and it does not give them one single cent of their claims against that road, and which are, I believe, just claims. The only way in which these people could be benefited is that this company shall become possessed of the franchise of the present road, and not that it shall build a road to the north. The Prime Minister shakes his head, but can he tell me any other way in which these people along the Baie de Chaleurs will compass either of these objects?

The PRIME MINISTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I put it again as straight as it can be put. This new company asks a charter to build from Gaspé Basin to a point on the Intercolonial Railway, north of the Atlantic and Lake Superior road. Suppose it carries out in good faith the building of that line, in what way will the people living along the Atlantic and Lake Superior road get any better railway accommodation than they have now? This new line will be forty miles to the north of them. In what way will they get a single claim paid that is their due now, by these gentlemen going to work and building an entirely different road? The whole crux of the thing is in section 14, where you give this company the power to buy out or to rent the line which is at present owned by another company. Then, why not expunge section 9 entirely; what is the use of enacting a fraud?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will give the hon. gentleman a reason. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) told us that he was not in the committee when the question came up, and neither was I. I, perhaps, have more knowledge of the geography of the place than the hon. gentleman, because it is in my own province. The hon. gentleman knows that the Gaspé peninsula is largely mountainous. There is a fringe of settlements along the Baie des Chaleurs shore, but three or four miles in the interior, it is mountainous. The present railway as intended cannot be a parallel road.

Mr. FOSTER. You mean the contemplated road?

The PRIME MINISTER. The contemplated road cannot be parallel to the present road, and I am sorry we have not a map of the locality here, because it would show that at once.

Mr. BERGERON. And so am I sorry, because it will show exactly the opposite.

The PRIME MINISTER. The present road skirts the shore and will serve the present settlement. This new railway is intended to start from Gaspé Basin, and runs through the valley of the York River in the interior, and then across the peninsula to the Intercolonial Railway. It cannot be a parallel road, and it cannot serve the same population. It is certainly not a rival road and there may be room for two different roads. The argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) then fails altogether. There are two objects in this charter which we are discussing. One is to charter a railway from Gaspé Basin across the peninsula to the Intercolonial Railway, and the other to acquire the existing railway, and I candidly say that I attach far more importance to the second contemplated scheme than to the first. If it is carried out, as I hope it will, it will give some relief to the people of the Gaspé peninsula, who certainly deserve it. So long as the present railway remains under its present management, I do not see how it is possible that the people of the Gaspé peninsula can have any satisfaction. The existing road to Paspébiac must change hands and have new blood infused into it. I do not want to speak harshly of the present company. I do not want to say things which should not be said unless they are absolutely indispensable for the purposes of the argument. But this, at all events, will be admitted, that the management of the present company has been most unfortunate, and that for twenty years this road has been built and operated in such a way that the people of Gaspé are no more advanced to-day than they were twenty years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Except in the summer season.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not even in the summer season, because I am informed that the men employed on the road have not been paid for many months past, and the road has been allowed to go to decay. I think I am within the mark, when I say that the expenses of the road have not been paid for eighteen months; so that the present company is absolutely insolvent, and something has to be done to come to the relief of those people.

On section 14.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to find out where the creditors of the road are secured.

Mr. TISDALE. There is nothing in the Bill about the creditors.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the vital point.

The PRIME MINISTER. I understand the zeal of my hon. friend now.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend is too suspicious. I did not think he was suspicious until lately, but I am afraid that the company of those on either side of him is spoiling him. It might surprise my hon. friend to be told that until I took my place here this afternoon, I did not know that there was such a Bill in existence, and I have not been written to in regard to it by any one in the world.

The PRIME MINISTER. It has come as a revelation to my hon. friend that there are creditors, then?

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. I have known for seven or eight years, that there have been creditors; but my point is, how you are going to secure these creditors? You do not want these people to be cheated out of their rights. The creditors, I believe, are mostly poor people, whose claims are for labour and material. When we give this company a franchise, we give them a basis for buying out the old company; and I want to know in what way are the claims of the creditors of the road guarded?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In what way does any legislation in this Bill affect the creditors' claims?

Mr. FOSTER. Nothing affects the creditors' claims, and that is the complaint of the creditors. The creditors have been there for several years, and have not been able to get anything; but if the franchise is to be sold, it seems to me that there should be some provision made for the creditors' claims.

Mr. TISDALE. There is nothing said in the Bill about the creditors, one way or the other. This company is simply authorized to purchase; and whatever rights the creditors have are not to be interfered with. The representation made to the committee was that this road was shut up. The government found it necessary under the Railway Act, to stop the running of the road, because it was dangerous to life, and it was advertised for sale by the sheriff. The question before the committee was, shall we leave the road in the position in which it is, or authorize another company to acquire it without disturbing or legislating in regard to any claims that now exist? If we specially interfered to protect the claims of the creditors, we might block the sale of the road.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that we are changing the status of the company. That road, from its junction with the Intercolonial Railway, up to Paspébiac, is built, and what has gone into it is labour and supplies, a large proportion of which can never have been paid. Any company which buys, will get the whole benefit of that. The road is in extremis, and the moment you incorporate a company to build another road, or to operate this one, you make the value of the present road almost nothing. It will have to be sold by the sheriff, and will be bought by this company for a song. By incorporating this Gaspé short line company, you make that line of the Atlantic Superior worth less than it is already.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Just the other way.

Mr. FOSTER. You make it worth more if the new company buy it and run it, but you make it worth less as a thing to sell off-hand. This company would say: If you do not take our terms, we will build this other road.

The PRIME MINISTER. The company cannot purchase that road except through the sheriff, so as to have a clear title. My hon. friend forgets that the road is heavily bonded; and if any purchaser were to acquire the road from the present company, he would assume the bonds, and nobody would do that. The road must be sold by the sheriff.

Mr. FOSTER. What then becomes of the bonds?

The PRIME MINISTER. Under the Quebec law, the proceeds are returned into court, there to be distributed to the creditors according to the order laid down by law. As I understand it, the working men have a privilege extending to six months, and after them comes the other creditors.

Mr. FOSTER. That makes a very poor lookout for the labourers. The amount of money realized will be very small indeed, and when that comes to be distributed among the different creditors, there will be very little for those who have furnished labour and supplies to the road. The bondholders have taken the risk, and, as a rule, are able to stand the loss, but the men who have put their labour and supplies into the road, are not. What is there to prevent our putting in a section, to provide that the first creditors of the road, shall be the men who have put their labour and supplies into it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There is a lien in their favour, under the law up to six months.

Mr. FOSTER. But that rules every one of them out. These labour bills have been running for years, and will be barred by the six months' limit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You would not undertake to amend the law of Quebec, and alter the relative rights of creditors?

Mr. FOSTER. You are about to give a certain franchise, and you can make it a condition of that franchise that the labour and supply bills shall be paid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You will take away from one of the creditors what belongs to him by the provincial law.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are the principal creditors, that we should look after, if not the people who have furnished their labour and supplies?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The provincial law will protect them.

Mr. FOSTER. Within a limit of six months, but those people have been creditors for ten years.

Mr. WOOD. If you defeat this Bill, there will be absolutely nothing for anybody.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not necessary to defeat the Bill, but you can make it a condition that at least the people who furnish labour and supplies, should be paid by the company which buys the road.

The PRIME MINISTER. All these questions were considered before the Railway Committee.

Mr McALISTER. I think not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If we were discussing the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway charter, this discussion would be quite in order, but there is nothing in this Bill interfering with the rights of the creditors of the Atlantic and Lake Superior, either labouring men or bondholders. The hon. gentleman would like to go down and bid on the railway without being handicapped, but he wants to handicap this company to which the people of the locality are anxious these powers should be given. I do not see how we could legislate in the direction the hon. gentleman points out. If we were giving a charter to the Atlantic and Lake Superior road, it might be quite in order to insert this provision, but I do not see how you can insert it in a charter to an entirely different company. But, it is quite clear, that if the people in that district are suffering, owing to the bad management of the existing company, they would be in a better position, if a company financially strong and able to build the road would take hold of it; and that the contractors, or labourers or bondholders cannot be injured. I wish to point out to the committee that there is nothing in this Bill affecting the matters to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) referred.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) is entirely correct in the view he presents; and I think he might have put his proposition very much more strongly. It is correct, as the hon. member for Restigouche has said, that this was not suggested to the Railway Committee at all; and I think it would not have been suggested by my hon. friend from York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), if he were familiar with the law and with the legal difficulties that surround the working out of such a proposition as he has made. From my view, it would be wholly impossible for us to legislate, in this Bill, or even in this parliament, in the direction he suggests. Let us consider for a moment what is proposed by this Bill, and also what the hon. gentleman proposes to supplement it with. All that this Bill does is to say that this company shall have the right to acquire, to become the purchaser—

Mr. BERGERON. In fact, it is made for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to concede that for the moment. It only provides that this company shall have the right to become the purchaser of the property and assets of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company. In point of law, all that that means, is that a number of persons are constituted a corporation with legal power to become the purchasers of this line, to do what any individual could do without having any such parliamentary authority. We are simply allowing a combination of men to purchase as a combination and in their incorporate character what, as I have said, an individual could purchase without any corporate authority, and regardless of whether legislation is passed in this House or not.

Mr. HAGGART. As to that particular point—can an individual buy a franchise? And you empower this company to buy one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If an individual cannot buy a franchise, it would be because the owner could not sell the franchise. I would go further and say that not only can an individual company not buy a franchise, but I would go so far as to say that a franchise cannot be sold under the proceedings in the court. So there is no question of franchise in the Bill. Our legislation does not affect the franchise in the slightest degree or in any particular. Now, instead of our doing anything that is going to prejudice the status and any interest of any creditor of this company, whether the amount due him is a large one or a small one, we are simply multiplying the number of possible purchasers. We are not saying that the company shall sell to this corporation, but simply that this corporation may buy. Now, what the hon. gentleman would propose is that, in a Bill which does not relate to, which does not touch the legal rights of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, but which simply relates to the corporate powers that we propose to confer upon another company, that in such a Bill we should undertake to insert provisions the legal effect of and the object of which shall be to control and regulate the distribution of the assets of that railway company. Do not hon. gentlemen see at once that that would be impracticable, because we could not, in a Bill relating to 'A' company, say how the assets of the 'B' company should be distributed. And it is not only impracticable, but it is unconstitutional, according to my view at this moment. How can we undertake to say that the assets of a defunct company shall be distributed among A, B, C and D otherwise than as already provided by the law of the province of Quebec? It would be entirely beyond our power. We may sympathize with the creditors, as I have no doubt, any hon. gentleman who knows the circumstances of the creditors of this road, will. But, we cannot do anything under this Bill to affect the distribution of the assets of this company. Our legislation would be absolutely a dead letter. All we can do under this Bill is what they ask us to do, to give them power as a corporate body to acquire the assets and property of the Atlantic and Lake Superior road, provided in pursuance of the law and by authority of the law, the assets and property of the Lake Superior road are put up for sale. If that time comes, if that proceeding is taken, as often occurs, we have constituted one more body which can attend that sale and which can bid for the property so disposed of. That is all we are doing.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HAGGART. I must say that I differ entirely from the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) as to our power of legislation in that particular. What are the facts? The company comes here for power to build a line of railway from one place to another. The company is incorporated under this clause of the Act. It is not necessary that it should be incorporated in order to carry out the provisions of clause 14 of this Act. The object of the Bill is clear. We are giving a corporation its entity and making it a railway company, for what purpose? To build a line of road? No, I should judge not; but for the purpose of purchasing this particular line of road. If we give them power to do that, we can give that power upon what conditions we choose. And if we make it conditional that what is due to the labourers by the old company shall be paid by the new company, or if we provide that they pay any other debts, we have a right to make that condition. I think that is clear in law. It has been held to be true in this House, and I have heard Ministers of Justice so declare—that if we have the power to give an entity to a company, we have the power to give that entity upon such conditions and with such limitations as we think proper.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HAGGART. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are two things that must concur before there can be a purchase and sale of that railway—there must be a sale under due authority of law and there must be a purchaser authorized to purchase it. Now, we are not touching the question of sale, and we cannot touch the question of sale—

Mr. HAGGART. I see the point—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not authorizing the sale. We are not saying that the Atlantic and Lake Superior road shall sell its property or on what conditions that property shall be purchased.

Mr. HAGGART. I was going on to deal with that question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are simply clothing with a corporate character a number of individuals to go on and purchase in that corporate character.

Mr. HAGGART. I was going on to deal with that point. We know that in order to the purchase of a railway, there must be the authority to sell, as well as the power in the purchaser to purchase. We are not touching the franchise affecting the selling power. But we are empowering the company to purchase the franchise. What has the sheriff the right to sell? The hon. minister forgets the Railway Act. For the sheriff has the right to sell the franchise to an individual or company, and that individual or company has the right to work the road under the purchase for one year, but then it is necessary for that company or individual to apply to this parliament for the purpose of getting power or to incorporate a new company to work the road. There is the point of danger. The sheriff has the right to sell the franchise, and in giving this company the right to purchase, under this Bill, you do away with the necessity of this purchaser coming back to this parliament for incorporation to work the road. That being so, it gives them the power to cut out what may now be a first claim upon the road. Suppose that a labourer has a first claim on the road for wages or work, one and another party has a judgment against the road and puts the judgment in the sheriff's hands, who may sell the franchise and other property.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is it not the judgment that cuts out, not the purchasers?

Mr. HAGGART. The judgment may cut out the right of the individual to have a prior claim for his labour as long as the franchise remains in the hands of the original company, which cannot be cut out unless as provided by the general Railway Act. The party has always a remedy against that, because he has the right to apply for legislation to be put in the position of the original corporators of the road, and to work it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The sale by a sheriff could not cut out any prior claim to the one under which it was sold.

Mr. HAGGART. The party may have a lien on the road, and may not have a lien on the franchise of the road. The sheriff has a right to sell the franchise under certain conditions, namely, that the party purchasing it has a right of working the road for a year, and must then apply to this House for the purpose of incorporation. The question is, whether this clause of the Act does not give to the purchaser the absolute right to take the franchise at once and work the road. I say that clause 14 does do so, and it may work an injury.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Everything there is subject to the Railway Act.

Mr. HAGGART. No, there is absolute power given to acquire the railway of these other companies, it is independent altogether of the Railway Act. Any one that looks at it would know at once what the object was. You form a railway company, and you might as well give them the right to construct a railway in British Columbia, and the right of purchasing in Gaspé. You give here the company the power of purchasing, and the question is whether it would not put a person who had a lien on the road in a different position as to the franchise purchased by this company, than he would have otherwise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How could that be? How could it deprive the existing lien holder of his right?

Mr. HAGGART. You deprive the old company of the franchise, that is, the right of running what they own. The Railway Act gives the sheriff the power of selling it, and he has the right of working it for a year under that sale, under the franchise of the old company. To deprive them of it absolutely, he requires to come here and get an Act of parliament divesting them of it. This Act is an empowering Act, it gives to the railway company at present constituted the right of purchasing the franchise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If he purchased the franchise voluntarily from the existing railway company, he would have to purchase it subject to such liens as are upon it, and if he purchased under sheriff's sale, the sheriff must necessarily sell subject to such liens as the law gives. As I understand the argument of the hon. gentleman, he says that we should step in and attempt to alter the relative rights of the different creditors on the road as against the existing road. You cannot interfere with it, you have no right to interfere with it. If the sheriff sells under a judgment of A and there is a prior judgment of B, the sale under the execution by A does not deprive the previous lien holder at any rate outside of the province of Quebec, of his rights. He has it in the hands of the purchaser just the same as he has in the hands of the original company, and can enforce them just the same.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says that if a party has a lien against the company that has the franchise, the selling of the franchise and the conveyance of it over to other parties does not deprive the first party of his right against the original company; that is, if a labourer has a lien against a company who are possessed of a franchise and that franchise is sold to another company by the sheriff, the lien of the first party remains still against the franchise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It would unless the provincial statute comes in and says that the sale by the sheriff is to extinguish all rights against the company, and that then the courts should distribute the purchase money amongst the claimants. I am not conversant enough with the Quebec law to know how that may be. If there are three or four claimants against the railway company and the company voluntarily sells, it does not deprive those parties of their claims or liens. If the fourth party in order obtains an execution and sells, he does not, at any rate in the British provinces, cut out the previous lien holders. The purchaser from the fourth party does not acquire greater rights than the fourth party himself had. The previous lien holders have their rights. But if the law of Quebec enables a sale to be made to extinguish all liens and all claims, and declares that the money shall be paid into court, to be distributed by the court, then the court will distribute it in accordance with the rights and liens, and in the order of the rights and liens, so no one can be prejudiced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think that there is anything to prevent this parliament from attaching a condition to the power. The Minister of Railways and Canals has argued that this parliament has not that power, and I understand the Minister of Marine and Fisheries takes the same grounds. I desire to be understood as dissenting from that. If parliament gave power to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company to sell, it could give that power subject to conditions. If parliament gives this company the right to buy, it equally has the power to attach conditions to that right. Therefore, either in the one case or in the other, this parliament has undoubtedly the power to attach the conditions for which the member for York (Mr. Foster) argues. I am not dealing now with the question as to whether these conditions should be attached, but as to the power of this parliament to attach them, of which there can be no doubt.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me, nobody ever questioned that right at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Railways and Canals did.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, you did not appreciate the argument of the Minister of Railways and Canals at all. What he said was this: Here are a certain number of people who have claims or liens on that road in a certain order of priority. You have no right to come in and alter those prior rights or to interfere with the priority of one claimant's right over another. You cannot come in and say that the bonds shall take second place to the wages of the workmen, and that the money which belonged to the bond holders should be given to the workman instead, unless you choose to pass an Act of confiscation. That is what he was arguing.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course you cannot affect the rights of a third person, in so far as they are secured by the provincial law of Quebec. But I understand the Minister of Railways and Canals to go much further than the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and to say that this parliament, because it was not dealing with the right to sell, could not attach a condition. That argument cannot be supported. Parliament has exactly the same right to attach a condition to the powers of purchase as to attach a condition to the powers of sale.

Mr. HAGGART. The right to purchase under this would wipe out all other liens or indebtedness unless they were registered, or unless the purchaser had notice of it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I think we are placing this company in an exceptionally favourable position. If there are creditors whose rights would probably be interfered with, in the province of Quebec, a sheriff's sale removes all liens. If, as I understand, this Baie des Chaleurs, or Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, is going to be sold by the sheriff, it will be sold at an extraordinarily low price, and the chances are that some of the creditors will lose every bit of their claim. But I suppose there is no doubt that we can apply a condition to the right that we are giving this company to acquire these other companies. If I, as an individual, go to the sheriff and acquire these railways mentioned in section 14, I do not acquire all the rights, franchises, powers and privileges of the railway, I merely acquire the properties; and it would be necessary for me afterwards to come to parliament to have renewed in my favour the privileges attaching to the Acts of incorporation of these railways. But, by the mere fact that this company will go to the sheriff's sale and purchase, they will acquire all the advantages of the charters that have been granted to these other companies. Claims, that I admit it is our duty to recognize in this parliament, will be thrown out, and all the privileges of these two companies, at a very low price, will pass to this company. I think that we should look into this matter very carefully.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), to suggest that this clause will enable the new company to purchase and acquire more rights, more property, and a larger interest, than the sheriff is selling, and which he would sell, if this Act had not been proposed?

Mr. MONK. Yes, I understand that from the second part of section 14, unless that section has been amended. The company will have the right to purchase:

All the rights, franchises and privileges conferred upon the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company and the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company by any of their special Acts.

I say that we are giving them a great deal more than I would have, if I were to acquire the property at the sheriff's sale.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he thinks that such a clause, as is contained here, could possibly enable the sheriff to sell more than the law gives him the right to sell?

Mr. MONK. No, but the moment I have the title from the sheriff, this section goes into operation, and gives me all the advantages of the charters existing.

Mr. BERGERON. There is one point which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals does not understand, or does not want to understand. If one bought at the sheriff's sale, the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), said, it wipes out everything.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not a bit of it.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, here we are creating a new man. Here we are making a man, and all we ask is that in making a man, we shall provide for the creditors of the line that shall be sold.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron), mean to alter the manner in which the purchase money shall be distributed by the laws of the province of Quebec?

Mr. BERGERON. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How can you give priority to a class of creditors that the existing law does not give. There is only a certain amount of money that will be paid by the purchasing company, and that has to be divided by the courts of Quebec. Do you propose to alter that condition?

Mr. BERGERON. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How are you going to give to the creditors of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway more than the provincial law gives them, without altering it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), as a lawyer, when you are giving a person the right or privilege of purchasing, no matter how much is purchased, how can you say you are conferring any larger rights, as to what is to be sold, than the seller is legally authorized to dispose of?

Mr. MONK. I think we are under that section. I need not say that if I, as an individual, forming part of a syndicate, went to the sheriff's sale, and acquired that railway, I would not be in the same position as this company under this enactment contained in the second part of section 14, because, I would not succeed to all the rights and privileges of the companies that they get from their Acts. The moment this company acquires the property at the sheriff's sale, it succeeds to the rights that no other individual would possess, if he bought the road.

Mr. BERGERON. We are creating them here.

Mr. MONK. In respect to the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), we can surely protect these creditors to a greater extent than the law of the province of Quebec does. The law of the province of Quebec gives very small privileges in respect to the claims of workingmen. We could do something to protect, to a further extent, the workingmen and others who have equitable claims against the railway, which would be barred altogether under the law of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there is nothing in this section which could possibly transfer to the purchaser under this Bill any greater rights, any other franchises, any other interests, or any property than the law of Quebec authorize the sheriff to sell. It is an utter impossibility for the sheriff to part with any title, or property, or right, other than that which the law of Quebec authorize him to sell at public auction. The purchasers get nothing more than that if they were incorporated a thousand times under this Bill.

Mr. MONK. If I purchased this Baie des Chaleurs Railway, I would not have the right to bond the railway. Will not this company have the right to bond it? Is not that one of the privileges which are conferred on the Baie des Chaleurs, and on the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, which I, as an individual purchaser, would not have. Therefore, this company is placed in an exceptionally advantageous position. The same thing would apply to many other privileges.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my hon. friend is driving away from the question. He is not surely suggesting that the sheriff has any power to sell, the right to the purchaser, to issue bonds?

Mr. MONK. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that this Bill will give to this company any greater bonding powers than we would readily confer upon any individual, or company, that might buy that road and come and ask parliament for bonding powers. Parliament might consider it necessary that the purchasers at the sale of the railway, when incorporated, should have the power to issue bonds in respect to the railway. It would be a very proper power to give them. But, that question is not involved in the one which has been raised here. I maintain that there must necessarily be parliamentary, or legal authority in the first place, for the individual to make the sale, and he can only exercise his power of sale to the extent that the law has empowered him and no more. No man can buy, or acquire any more than the law empowers him to sell. It would be a legal anomaly to suggest that a man could do so. You have the power to sell to the extent which it may be exercised by law, and you have the power to purchase to the extent to which the right is granted.

Mr. HAGGART. Undoubtedly the sheriff has power to sell all the rights, powers and privileges which may be granted to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, and the purchaser, the moment he purchases that property, not only has all the powers, rights and privileges of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, but he has all the powers, rights and privileges of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway besides. Is there any probability that they will be exercised under this Bill, because, we are giving to the purchaser all the privileges, powers, rights and franchises which we have conferred upon the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company and the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. There is no doubt they will have these powers. The sheriff has power to sell, and we can empower the company purchasing the road, to exercise these powers.

The PRIME MINISTER. I appeal to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that there is no need of any law to preserve the right of the creditors if this road is sold by the sheriff. If this road is sold by the sheriff all the assets will be distributed amongst the creditors under the law of the province of Quebec, and therefore, we are fighting an unnecessary battle here. If there is any object in the discussion, it is to preserve the rights of the creditors, and if the road is to be sold, I appeal to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to tell the committee that the proceeds will have to be deposited in court and distributed, and the right of every creditor passed on by the court.

Mr. McALISTER. But some of these debts are prescribed by law.

The PRIME MINISTER. Of course, I can only refer to the legal claims.

Mr. MONK. There is no doubt but that what the Prime Minister says is correct, but my argument is, that under this Bill we are creating a purchaser who will be in a better position than any one else to buy, and you will, therefore, keep others away from the sale and the property will be sacrificed.

Mr. BLAIR.

The PRIME MINISTER. How will you be kept away from the sale?

Mr. MONK. This company will necessarily outbid me, because of the advantages they possess under the second part of section 14, and which advantages I cannot acquire. The only thing I can buy is the road-bed and the rolling stock. But under this Bill these people succeed ipso facto to the valuable privileges of the company, and that great advantage will keep competitors away.

The PRIME MINISTER. On the contrary, my hon. friend knows that as far as the rights of creditors are concerned, the more there are of possible purchasers the more it is to their advantage.

Mr. MONK. Yes, if there is not one privileged purchaser or bidder.

The PRIME MINISTER. The more the competition the better the price, and the better it is for the creditors.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (Montreal, St. Ann's). But the objection to this clause is that it prevents competition. If the public were all on the same footing then there would be competition, but here you are giving this corporation special privileges over every other intending purchaser.

The PRIME MINISTER. What special privilege?

Mr. QUINN. The privilege of having power to run that road immediately they acquire it, and to bond it immediately they acquire it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no bonding in it.

Mr. QUINN. It is quite true as the minister (Mr. Blair) has said, that the sheriff cannot sell more than he possesses, but you are giving this company power to carry on the business of that road and to bond it, although the sheriff has no power to sell that right. That gives the company what I would call an undue preference over all others.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not giving any more than the law gives now.

Mr. QUINN. If this property were sold to an ordinary individual he would have to come to parliament for power to bond the road and to extend it, or carry on any other works, after twelve months. The moment that individual would come to parliament, the creditors would come here and make their claims and justice would be meted out to them. But, you now give this company all this power beforehand, and so the railway will be sold like a pig in a bag. The moment this company acquires the road from the sheriff they can say to the creditors: 'You can go to the mischief, I have authority to operate this road. I need not go to parliament, and I have nothing to do with you at all.' As the hon. member (Mr. Monk) has said, this company has an exceptional advantage in the purchase over all other persons. If an ordinary purchaser got the road, he would have to come here with all the sins of the old company on his shoulders, and ask parliament for relief from the claims held against the old company. This company, if you pass this Bill, does not need to come to parliament again, and so you shut out competition against them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn), seriously suggest that if a man in the exercise of his rights under the existing law, would buy the railway at the sale, and deposit the money in the courts, that he would be liable to be called upon by this parliament to pay more in addition to what he had already paid for that property? I hardly think that is possible.

Mr. QUINN. The individual who would purchase from the sheriff would only purchase what the sheriff had a right to sell, namely the road-bed and the rolling stock, and in order to get power to operate and continue that road he would have to come to this parliament and then this parliament would impose upon him—at least I hope it would—such conditions as would make him pay the liabilities of the old company.

The PRIME MINISTER. How much do you think a man would bid under such circumstances?

Mr. McALISTER. I know the circumstances of this case and they are extreme in their character. There are many poor labouring men who worked on that road from the time it was first started, and these men have not been paid yet. A great number of the merchants along the coast have furnished supplies of all kinds for that road, and these merchants have not yet been paid, although they cannot afford to remain out of their money. I understand the Prime Minister to say that under the laws of the province of Quebec, these creditors are protected, but 90 per cent of these claims are prescribed by the law of the province of Quebec, and if this Bill is passed in its present shape there is no guarantee that their rights will be protected. This parliament would be remiss in its duty if it passes the Bill as it now stands, and particularly section 14, without throwing some safeguards around the rights of the labouring men and the merchants who supplied the material. It is also a fact that as the Bill stands it practically shuts out competition at the sale. This company can bid whatever they like for that road, and other competitors will be at a disadvantage, because they have afterwards to come to parliament to get power to do what this company is empowered to do under this Bill in advance. I ask the House not to pass the Bill without affording some protection to the poor labouring man.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is a policy that has been adopted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) in Nova Scotia in regard to his bridges. For example, when a contractor has entered into a contract with the government to build a bridge and has employed a large number of labouring men, and has failed to pay them, it has been the practice there, and it is one which might very well be followed here, that any person taking over a work of that kind and entering into a new contract with the government is bound as a part of his contract to satisfy the claims for labour that has been expended on the previous contract, so far as they have not been paid. As my hon. friend who last spoke very conclusively pointed out, a company coming here to get legislation to operate this railway must submit to such conditions as parliament sees fit to impose, and it would be well that any such company undertaking to purchase this road should know that one of these conditions would be the payment of the labour which entered into the construction of the road, and which, perhaps, formed the principal element of its cost.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say I do not understand the tenor of the discussion. My hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) seems to be in earnest in looking after the interests of the creditors. In that I appreciate his motive; it is a worthy one; but it is rather hard that this parliament should be asked to legislate not only for the legal creditors, but for those who have no legal right at all. My hon. friend has referred to those whose claims are prescribed or outlawed, and it is carrying things very far when you ask parliament to look after claims which are not legal. I must say I am amazed at the turn the discussion has taken. The hon. member for St. Ann's, Montreal (Mr. Quinn) argues in all seriousness that this Bill is going to shut off competition.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. And he is endorsed by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster). According to the hon. gentleman's contention, no one will bid against this company, because it has a privilege by its act of incorporation, whereas the outside bidder would have to come before this parliament to get his contract ratified, and parliament would impose conditions upon him, compelling him to pay an unknown sum in addition to what he has already paid. How much would a man give for the railway under such circumstances? There is no sense in it, if the ex-Minister of Finance will permit me to say so. With regard to the hon. member from St. Ann's, Montreal, I must say I am surprised at his legal heresy. He forgets that this sale takes place in the province of Quebec, and does he mean to say that the title of the sheriff does not convey to the purchaser all the right of the debtor whose property is sold?

Mr. QUINN. Certainly.

The PRIME MINISTER. And, therefore, according to the law of the province of Quebec, all the rights of this company will be vested in the purchaser. He will have a perfect title, and he will not need to come to this parliament to have his title ratified. But what title would a man have if he purchased and paid some money into the hands of the sheriff, but had not all the rights of the previous owner, and had to come before parliament to get certain other rights?

Mr. MONK. He does not succeed to the statutory rights.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will not set up my legal authority against that of the hon. gentleman; but I have yet to learn that in the province of Quebec a sale by the sheriff does not convey all the rights that belonged to the debtor whose property was sold.

Mr. QUINN. Will the right hon. gentleman allow me to state that so far as the property is concerned, the sheriff has the right to convey to the purchaser all the title in that property that the original holder was possessed of; but I do not admit that in selling the property the sheriff sold the right of the individual to everything he has in the world, or the franchise that it has been granted by this parliament. You sell the property, that is all.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the theory of my hon. friend is right, if the title conveyed to the purchaser does not give him every right which belonged to the former owner, if he has to come to this parliament, and this parliament has a right to place new conditions upon him, how much would he bid for the property?

Mr. QUINN. That is just the position the ordinary purchaser would be in. If you give this company the present charter, another purchaser would say, how can I offer to purchase that property when this company possesses a franchise for the railway, with the power to issue bonds? Consequently, I say, you will destroy competition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not like to hear the hon. gentleman reaffirm a declaration which is opposed to the very words of the Bill. The second subsection of section 14, when properly read, restricts the new company to what it actually acquired at the sale. There is not a particle of additional authority given to it. There is nothing here conferring any power to issue bonds. I am not going to deny that, possibly, if the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company had not exhausted its bonding power at the time of the sale, which it had under the general Railway Act, the new company buying the property would have the power to issue any bonds that the old company had power to issue and had not yet issued. But the company would not have any new power to issue bonds, nor does this Bill confer any such power.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to ask one or two questions. Last year we voted a subsidy for thirty miles of the railway from Caplin to Paspébiac. Was that subsidy paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the line been finished between Caplin and Paspébiac?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so, yet.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood the Premier to say that the line went as far as Paspébiac.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was under construction last year.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it built or not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it is completed.

Mr. FOSTER. It is built within half a mile of it, anyway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not officially informed on the subject.

Mr. BERGERON. It would be very extraordinary to see that work being done on 30 miles of railway subsidized by the government, and the rest of the line, the 100 miles, not being operated. That would look like throwing away money for nothing. Can the hon. gentleman say whether any of the subsidy was paid out of what was voted last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think so.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there any work between Paspébiac and Gaspé?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not heard of any.

Mr. BERGERON. We voted also for 82 miles of railway a subsidy which would have amounted to $250,000 or $260,000. My object in asking these questions, I am sure is clear. My impression is that some gentlemen of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company will join the new company.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is quite mistaken.

Mr. BERGERON. Why was there not any subsidy given to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company last year, on their line between Caplin and Paspébiac.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not completed yet.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend said the line went as far as Paspébiac.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but not entirely completed.

The PRIME MINISTER. The portion of the road from Caplin to Paspébiac is not in such a condition that the subsidy can be paid.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have not yet earned the subsidy, at all events.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that my right hon. friend has no confidence in the present company.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not much.

Mr. BERGERON. And he would have more confidence in the new company, and we are putting the new company in the position of being the only possible bidder for that road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not the only bidder.

Mr. BERGERON. Nobody will bid in the face of all the advantages we are giving this company by the charter before us.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is entirely incorrect.

Mr. BERGERON. The whole object is to get rid of one or two men in the one company and prevent any competition, and transfer all that belongs to the old company to the gentlemen we are incorporating to-day.

Mr. McALISTER. I beg to move that the following clause be added:

The company, upon so acquiring the said railways or any portion thereof, shall forthwith become liable to pay and satisfy the claims of all persons who have heretofore performed, furnished or supplied labour, goods or materials to or for the said Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, or to or for the said Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, or to or for any contractor or sub-contractor for the construction of any portion of either of the said railways; and the claims of all such persons, whenever the same shall have accrued, shall be a first charge and lien upon the said railways so acquired and upon all other property which shall at any time be acquired by the company hereby incorporated.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has not given notice; and according to the rule of the House concerning private Bills, notice of so important amendment should have been given.

Mr. McALISTER. Then I will move this amendment on the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this is a very important clause. The right hon. gentleman gave a knock-down argument in my favour. He appealed to me that if I went down to buy that road in competition with this company, I would make my bid under these conditions. I would first have to pay in order to get the road, and then I would have to come to this House next year and get a franchise to run it. Then I would have this parliament telling me that before I could get the franchise I would have to pay something in addition to what I had paid already. I would thus be debarred entirely from competition against this company, and it goes into the field protected against any possible competition. But even if I were to bid under such adverse conditions, when I came to parliament to ask for a franchise, I would have the Minister of Railways replying: Why, we granted that franchise last year to this other company.

Mr. QUINN. If the position taken by the Minister of Railways is right, what is the use of subsection 2 of clause 14:

2. The company may, with reference to the said railways, or any parts thereof so purchased, as well as all other rights, franchises, powers, privileges and property acquired in connection therewith, exercise, in the name of the company, in addition to all the other rights, franchises, powers and privileges conferred upon the company by the Railway Act and the special Acts relating thereto, all the rights, franchises, powers and privileges conferred upon the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company and the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company by any of their special Acts.

This subsection means, if it means anything, that if this company should purchase this railway, it will not have to come before this House another session to obtain a franchise to run it. But if an ordinary purchaser should purchase this road, he will have to come before this parliament for a franchise. It is evident that the incorporators of this new company believe that if they purchased at sheriff's sale, without this clause, they would only get a title to the road-bed and rails and the other real property, but not to the rights and franchises, and that in order to obtain these they would have to come to this parliament. Therefore, they had this clause inserted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are none so dull as those who do not want to understand. The subsection provides nothing more and nothing less than would be provided by this parliament, if A, B or C were to attend this sale and buy in this railway without having previous statutory authority to do so. They would buy it, and for the time being exercise the powers which the Railway Act would confer upon them. Then they would come to parliament next session, and parliament would give them the powers given by this clause to this company.

Mr. BERGERON. Would parliament do it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Parliament would, because parliament has always done it.

Mr. BERGERON. Without conditions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will not say without adding any conditions, because there might be some conditions which it would be proper to add; but certainly, without any conditions which would add to the cost of the railway to the individual who purchased it. We give an individual the right to purchase with the ordinary rights and powers of running the road for a year, but at the end of that time the ratification of parliament, as it may be called, has to be sought. The individual might say: I paid my money on that understanding, agreeing to give a million dollars, and put up that amount; but now I decline to recognize it as just on the part of parliament to say that the price that I am to pay, shall be a million and a half. I say there is an element of injustice and wrong in that which parliament should not be guilty of. I decline to believe that there are enough men in this House who take such a view as that as to give it the sanction of the House.

Mr. QUINN. I would like the hon. minister to explain where I am in error in the statement I have made. The hon. gentleman says that I do not understand it; but I want to understand it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn), is in error in assuming that there is something in subsection 2, which would not be found in any similar Bill which might be applied for by the purchaser next year.

Mr. QUINN. I say that that is just what would be applied for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, what is the hon. gentleman complaining of?

Mr. QUINN. My objection is that you are giving this power to this company before you know the position the company occupies or will occupy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are not doing now more than you are doing every session. You are authorizing people in advance to purchase railways, and saying that if they do purchase a specified railway, they shall possess all the powers conferred by the Railway Act over the property they have purchased under their special Act. You are doing now, in advance, simply what you would later; that is all, and, to the extent to which you are doing that, to the extent that you are creating corporations authorized to buy, you are increasing the number of possible purchasers and adding to the competition.

Mr. QUINN. We are doing that regularly with solvent railway companies, and we take the precaution of protecting the creditors. But, here, we are dealing with an insolvent company, with a company that has been closed up, a company that is over head and ears in debt, and unfortunately is over head and ears in debt to poor people. We are giving a corporation the power to buy that, and authorizing them to acquire all the franchises and powers of the company before we know that they are going to pay a dollar.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps we could come to some conclusion on this. My hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister), wants to protect the creditors. The amendment he moves cannot be taken at this stage of the Bill. The promoter of the Bill is not here, but he will, no doubt, be here shortly, and, no doubt, the hon. gentleman will have occasion to consult with him. I sympathize with the view of the hon. member (Mr. McAlister), presents and the object he has in view. But, he will admit that he is carrying it very far, when he is looking to cover a debt incurred some fifteen years ago. Giving the widest interpretation, however, outlawed debts certainly cannot be taken into consideration by this parliament. But, the promoter of the Bill will be here soon, and it is now within five minutes of six o'clock, perhaps we could leave this matter over until this evening.

It being six o'clock, the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

(The House resumed in Committee.)

Mr. QUINN. The right hon. leader of the government promised us an explanation from the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I must apologize to the committee for being absent this afternoon during the discussion of my Bill, but I was unavoidably detained through falling to catch the train this morning. I have just read the amendment which has been presented by my hon. friend the member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister). But I desire to consider it more carefully, and to discuss with my hon. friend the question whether the promoters of the Bill can accept it or not. I would, therefore, move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. QUINN. I may explain to my hon. friend that the objection that was expressed in committee was against section 14. One part of the House objects that this section gives the company the right to acquire by any means whatever the property of the Baie des Chaleurs and the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Companies, and then by the very fact of having acquired it, they become possessed of all the franchises and rights of the two companies; whereas, if an ordinary individual, for example, went to a sheriff's sale of this property and bought in the roadbed and what the sheriff would have a right to sell, he would only become possessed of the real property that was sold, and would be obliged to come here within a year and obtain from this parliament the right to run the railway, that is, the rights, and franchises, and privileges owned by the other two companies. Now, we think that is giving too much power to this company, and it is giving this company an advantage over ordinary bidders at the sheriff's sale which, we apprehend, will take place in a short time. That is the point to which my hon. friend ought to address himself in examining the amendment. The intention is to protect as far as possible the creditors. We understand that a large number of workmen and merchants had supplied goods to the original railway company, the Baie des Chaleurs Company, and they have not been paid their claims against the Baie des Chaleurs Company. These claims will amount to nothing if a sheriff's sale takes place; we imagine, at any rate, that the sale will not realize more than sufficient to pay the bondholders, the consequence being that the ordinary creditors would be left out in the cold with nothing. This company then would assume all the rights of the original company and leave the ordinary creditors nothing. We would like to see them protected, and it is for that purpose the amendment is suggested.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

DISBANDMENT OF THE 70TH BATTALION.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Monk) asked :

1. Is it true that the 70th Battalion has been disbanded?
2. When, and for what reasons?
3. What is the nominal strength of the battalion?
4. What was the actual strength at the date of the disbandment?
5. How many officers were there holding first-class certificates?
6. How many officers were there holding second-class certificates?
7. How many officers (combatants) were there holding no certificate?
8. Was the battalion called out for active service during the Fenian raid?
9. How many responded to the call?
10. How many drill sergeants were provided by the government at the last camp of instruction held at Lévis?
11. How many of them were competent to use the French language in giving instruction?
12. Was the battalion provided with instructors able to speak French?
13. Where are the headquarters of the present 70th Battalion?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. By General Order 11, of February, 1900, having become non-effective. 3. The nominal strength was 277 all ranks. 4. The corps drilled five officers and seven non-commissioned officers and men short last annual training, the numbers drilling being twenty officers and 245 non-commissioned officers and men. No subsequent return has been received. 5. Eleven. 6. Four. 7. Four. 8. Yes. 9. 215 all ranks. 10. There were at least 25 instructors provided by the government during the Lévis camp, 1899, for the 10th Infantry Brigade, of which the 70th Battalion formed a part. 11. About eight or ten. 12. Yes, with one instructor during the whole of the camp, and with two for part of it. 13. There is no existing 70th Battalion.

IMPORTATION OF AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS AND MACHINERY.

Mr. SPROULE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What is the value of agricultural implements and agricultural machinery imported into Canada from July 1, 1899, to March 1, 1900, and the duty collected thereon?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). When this question was put the other day, I informed my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that I could not give him the return to the end of March, and he signified his desire to have it to the 31st of December. I shall be glad to give him the information now. It is as follows :

CONTRACT FOR FURNISHING ARN- PRIOR POST OFFICE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Who had the contract for furnishing the interior of the Arnprior post office ?
2. Were tenders called for?
3. How many tenders were received?
4. What was the contract price?
5. How much was the total cost?
6. Was the contract given to the lowest tender?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. J. Wolfe, of Arnprior. 2. Yes, for fittings and retaining wall from two firms. 3. Two. 4. $2,240. 5. $2,240. 6. Tenders being equal, the contract was given to the local man.

CONTRACT FOR ASPHALT SIDEWALK, ARNPRIOR POST OFFICE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Who had the contract for laying the asphalt sidewalk at the Arnprior post office ?
2. Were tenders called for?
3. How many tenders were received?
4. What was the contract price?
5. How much was the total cost?
6. Was the contract given to the lowest tender?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. J. Wolfe, of Arnprior. 2. No. With regard to the remaining questions, the answer is as follows: The chief architect's estimate to construct the sidewalk was $458, as follows :

Mr. PATERSON.

2,200 feet at 20c.....	$440
180 feet curb at 10c.....	18
	$458

The work was offered to Mr. J. Wolfe, who agreed to accept $460, but reported that there was danger of the walk settling, as it slanted two ways. The chief architect, on recommendation of the inspector, decided to build a drain, to be filled with stone and cement, all around walk. This was done by Mr. Wolfe at a cost of $140 additional.

THE RECENT DISTURBANCE IN MONT- REAL.

Mr. MONET (by Mr. Legris) asked :

1. Is the government aware that the Victoria Rifles Battalion was called out during the recent disturbance in Montreal?
2. Were orders to that effect issued by the government or the hon. Minister of Militia?
3. If so, was the government informed that the Riot Act had been read during the said disturbance at Montreal before such call to arms?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The acting district officer commanding reported, on the 3rd of March, that the preceding evening, about 9 p.m., the Montreal drill hall was attacked by a mob, and that fearing a more serious outbreak, he requested officers commanding corps of the city of Montreal to call out their units to guard their several armouries. 2. No, no orders were issued by the government. 3. The government was not informed.

TORONTO DRILL HALL.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Is it the intention of the government to provide a sum in the supplementary estimates for the completion of the Toronto drill shed by providing accommodation for cavalry and artillery?
2. Is it the intention of the government to do any work this year in connection with the Toronto drill shed? If so, what is the nature of the work contemplated?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The matter is under consideration.

EXPENDITURES FOR PUBLIC WORKS IN CHARLEVOIX.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What are the amounts expended for public works in the county of Charlevoix for each of the several years following:

1. From July 1, 1896, to June 30, 1897?
2. From July 1, 1897, to June 30, 1898?
3. From July 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899?
4. From July 1, 1899, to June 30, 1900?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Amounts expended for public works in the county of Charlevoix for each of the following years: 1. Year ended 30th June, 1897, $6,629.15. 2. Year ended 30th June, 1898, $14,306.97. 3. Year ended 30th June, 1899, $15,451.00.

MAIL CARRIER AT MURRAY BAY.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What has been the amount paid to Léon Trudel for carrying the mail from the post office to the wharf at Murray Bay, and vice versa, for each of the years 1897, 1898 and 1899?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). For the year ended 30th June, 1897, $30.90 was paid to L. Trudel for the Murray Bay and wharf service, his contract having commenced on the 18th May, 1897. For the year ended 30th June, 1898, $144.60 was paid; and for the year ended 30th June, 1899, $132.90 was paid. The rate of payment to Mr. Trudel has been 30 cents per trip, which rate was fixed by public tender. The rate prior to the season of 1897 was 50 cents per trip, which was fixed without tender.

DEBT DUE ONTARIO.

Mr. CORBY asked :

1. Is the sum of $2,882,289.52, on which, by the resolution of this House passed in 1884 it was resolved that interest should be paid the province of Ontario at 5 per cent, a debt due to said province which she can draw at any time?

2. Were the corresponding sums on which, by said resolution, interest was to be paid to the other provinces also debts due to them which they can demand and obtain at any time?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The views of the government as to the operation of the Act of 1884, to which the hon. gentleman refers, have already been stated in answer to a question this session. The answer will be found on page 155 of the revised Hansard.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. ROGERS asked :

1. How much money has been paid to date on the construction and right of way of the Trent Valley Canal?

2. How much has been paid for damaged lands to date, and estimated future cost of damaged land caused by construction?

3. What is the estimated cost of completion of said canal?

4. Does the government contemplate the completion of the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. (Mr. Blair). 1. $2,406,019.10. 2. (a) Paid for land and damages to date, $266,388.37. (b) The officers of the department cannot undertake to make an estimate at present. 3. The estimated cost of completion of Trent Valley Canal is $5,000,000. 4. Yes.

EASTERN EXTENSION RAILWAY, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. BELL (Pictou) asked :

1. By whom were the station buildings on the Eastern Extension Railway, in Nova Scotia, painted in the year 1899?

2. Was the work let by tender?

3. What was the cost of the work on the several stations?

4. Has the work been inspected and passed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The station buildings on the Eastern Extension Railway in Nova Scotia were painted in 1899 by Mr. A. H. McDonald, of Mulgrave. 2. The work was let by tender. 3. The cost of the work on the several stations was :

South River.....	$ 8 14
Bayfield Road	55 47
West Merigomish	40 36
Avondale	69 52
Barney's River	80 91
Piedmont	51 12
Heatherton	89 42
James River	68 19
Harbour au Bouche.....	274 21
Tracadie	76 77
Antigonish	234 03

4. The work has been inspected and passed.

VOTERS' LISTS—PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What is the reason why the electoral lists for the districts mentioned in the answer to question No. 36 on the Order paper No. 38, of March 28 instant, have not yet been printed?

2. If printed, why have they not been distributed?

3. At what date or dates were they received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery under the Franchise Act, 1898, section 10?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. All the lists for the province of Quebec have been printed and distributed except ten. Of those Bagot has been printed so far as received; the same remark will apply to Dorchester and to Wright. The other seven are: Beauce, Bonaventure, Chicoutimi and Saguenay, Compton, Laval, Megantic and Vaudreuil. 2. The lists have been printed at the Bureau in the order in which they were received, but since December the Bureau has necessarily given precedence to the printing of reports for the meeting of parliament, and since the House met to parliamentary printing. 3. They were received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, as follows: Argenteuil, October 12, 1899; Beauce, August 25, 1899; Bellechasse, June 17, 1899; Charlevoix, July 28, 1899; Chicoutimi and Saguenay, July 19, 1899; Compton, September 27, 1899; Gaspé, December 4, 1899; Hochelaga, July 24, 1899; Joliette, August 21, 1899; Kamouraska, July 5, 1899; Napierville, July 12, 1899; Laval, July 24, 1899; Maisonneuve, July 24, 1899; Megantic, February 2, 1900; Quebec East, September 18, 1899; Quebec West, August 16, 1899; Quebec Centre, August 16, 1899; Quebec County, August 16, 1899; Richmond and Wolfe, July 19, 1899; Shefford, June 29, 1899; Stanstead, September 27, 1899; St. John's and Iberville, August 15, 1899; Three Rivers and St. Maurice, August 14, 1899; Two Mountains, July 19, 1899; Terrebonne, July 31, 1899.

DISMISSAL OF SEMLIN GOVERNMENT— BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BOSTOCK asked :

1. Has the government received any report from the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia setting forth his reasons for dismissing the Semlin government and calling on the Hon. Joseph Martin to form a government?

2. What length of time has the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia given Mr. Martin in which to complete his cabinet?

3. Is the government aware that none of the gentlemen so far called in by Mr. Martin to join him are members of the legislature?

4. Is the government aware that after the Lieutenant-Governor called upon Mr. Martin to form a government, the members of the legislative assembly passed a vote of want of confidence in Mr. Martin, and that in spite of this, it is reported that no appeal to the country is to be made until the end of May or the beginning of June?

(a) Has the Lieutenant-Governor given his reasons for permitting such a state of things to exist?

(b) If so, do the government consider the reasons given to be good and sufficient?

5. If no report has been received, has the Lieutenant-Governor been asked to report immediately?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The report of the Lieutenant-Governor has not yet been received. He has been asked to make his report, and on the 28th March, the Secretary of State was informed by telegram that the Lieutenant-Governor had mailed his report on that day. The remaining questions cannot, of course, be answered until the report has been received.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY BINDER TWINE.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

Has the government advertised in any of the papers in Manitoba the fact of the farmers being allowed the opportunity of purchasing binder twine, manufactured at Kingston Penitentiary until May 1, or any other date?

If so, in what papers?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes, in the following papers: Eye Witness, Birtle; Free Press, Winnipeg; The Press, Dauphin; Journal, Emerson; Herald, Morden; Herald, McGregor; Press, Neepawa; Liberal, Portage la Prairie; Spectator-Reporter, Rapid City; Loberg, Winnipeg; Farmer's Advocate, Winnipeg.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MOUNTED IN- FANTRY.

Mr. GUILLET asked :

Has the Minister of Militia recommended the establishment of a number of units of mounted infantry in connection with the volunteer militia?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No, but the matter is under consideration.

LOAN COMPANIES.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Is the government aware that a number of loan companies, acting under Dominion authority, are failing to fulfil the representations made by their agents and contained in their advertising literature, to their borrowers, and are extorting from the borrowers large sums in addition to the represented payments?

2. Is it the intention of the government to take any action to prevent these frauds? If so, what action is contemplated?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The government has no knowledge of such a state of affairs as is set forth in the hon. gentleman's question.

THE DREDGE MUDLARK.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Has any complaint been made against the management of the dredge 'Mudlark' during the past year? If so, by whom, and to what effect?

2. Did Mr. Joseph R. Roy, the resident engineer, investigate any such charges? If so, what was the effect of his report?

3. Did he recommend a fuller investigation? If so, was it authorized? If not, why not?

4. Is it the intention of the government to fully inquire into all matters connected with the management and operation of the said dredge during the past three years?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). One Kenneth McInnes was wheelsman on the tug Princess, employed at Nanaimo in connection with the dredge Mudlark, and whilst so employed became insubordinate, refusing to obey the reasonable directions of his superior officer, speaking to him in a violent and profane language, and generally acting in a way to interfere with proper discipline on board the vessel. On the day of his dismissal, he was steering the vessel in the harbour, and although the course was buoyed out, he disregarded the buoys and steered into shoal water over rocks and shallows, striking a reef, though not materially damaging the vessel. He had been operating the vessel in the harbour for over a year and knew quite well of the existence of the reef. In the evening of the day in question, the resident engineer sent for McInnes to receive his explanations, when he refused to come, stating that if the engineer wished to see him, he could come to him. This the resident engineer did, when McInnes stated that he had no explanation to offer for running the vessel out of the channel, and that he anticipated dismissal, and that the resident engineer could come to him to dismiss him, instead of his going to the engineer, and thereupon he addressed violent, abusive and profane language to the resident engineer. Thereupon the resident engineer notified him that his services were dispensed with. Subsequently Mr. McInnes charged the captain of the tug with stealing certain articles from the tug. The resident engineer carefully investigated these charges and found them absolutely without foundation. The resident engineer was informed that McInnes was complaining of unfair treatment in his dismissal, and in regard to the investigation, and anonymous letters to the like effect were published in the local papers and the resident engineer, although he considered he had made a full, exhaustive and just investigation, recommended to the minister that, in view of such charges on the part of McInnes and the anonymous letters, it might be advisable to have a further investigation. But the minister, being satisfied with the fairness and thoroughness of the investigation, saw no good purpose to be served by reopening the matter.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—WIRE FENCING.

Mr. PETTET asked :

1. Where does the government purchase its wire fencing for the Intercolonial Railway?
2. Is the wire purchased by tender?
3. Were the present contractors the lowest tenderers?
4. Were any offers received from Prince Edward County? If so, were they entertained? If not, why not?
5. How many tenders were received? What were the names of the tenderers and the prices?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The course adopted by the government is to call publicly for tenders for the supply of wire fencing for the Intercolonial Railway, and that has been done. The parties to whom the contracts have been awarded were the lowest tenderers, taking into consideration the quality of the fencing and points of delivery. Yes, a tender was received from the Ontario Wire Fencing Company of Picton, Ont. This tender was not entertained because the wire fencing offered was not what was required. Nine tenders were received. Inasmuch as the tenderers have merely been notified that their tenders are accepted, and that they have not yet entered into a contract; it would not be right to make the prices of the various tenders public at the present time.

THE HALIFAX GARRISON.

Mr. PETTET asked :

1. How many officers, and how many non-commissioned officers and men, are the government sending to Halifax for garrison duty?

2. Were any applications for commissions received from the 16th Battalion, Prince Edward county?

3. If so, were any of them appointed? If not, why not?

4. Has the temporary commanding officer, Lt.-Col. Vidal, the sole authority to pass upon the various applications received? If not, who has the authority?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. 29 officers, 47 non-commissioned officers, 928 rank and file, total, 1,004. 2. Yes. 3. No. It was not possible to appoint all applicants. 4. No, but no appointment was made without his recommendation. The Officer Commanding the Militia and the Minister of Militia have the authority in this matter.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE SUPPLIES.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. Were tenders called for during the current fiscal year for North-west mounted police supplies?

2. Were they called for for supplies of tea?

3. If tenders were not called for, why not?

4. At whose suggestion were they not called for?

5. What quantities of tea were bought without tender?

6. Who, if any one, advised Hon. Mr. Sifton in this matter?

7. Did any officer of the department, or the private secretary of the Minister of the Interior communicate with the comptroller on this subject?

8. What did he tell the comptroller to do?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. Yes, for the Yukon, but not for the Territories. 3. It was thought better to purchase as required, limiting the price to 25 cents per lb. 4. The Comptroller North-west mounted police. 5. From sundry persons at various places, about 4,000 lbs. 6, 7, and 8 are questions which the minister thinks he is not called upon to answer.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. DUGAS (by Mr. Monk) asked :

Whether the hon. Prime Minister declared at Drummondville, or elsewhere, in the course of last year, or at any other time since he became Prime Minister, that he or his administration had finally settled the Manitoba school question?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Prime Minister has declared on the floor of this House and elsewhere that the school question had been settled in the only efficient way it could be settled, by removing it from the arena of federal politics and referring it to the legislature of Manitoba, which, in a spirit of conciliation and good-will to the minority, passed important legislation in amendment to the School Act of 1890; and such legislation, like all other legislation, is always subject to amendment and improvement.

SURVEYOR VINCENT.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. Whether one Vincent, in the fall of 1890 or 1891, or about ten years ago, surveyed township 30, range 5, west of 2nd meridian, or part of said township?
2. Whether any doubt was ever cast on the correctness of the survey made by the said Vincent?
3. Whether the survey was not repudiated by the officers of the Interior Department?
4. Whether the land agent at Yorkton was not instructed that the said land was unsurveyed?
5. Whether the agent at Yorkton has not refused a settler or settlers an entry in the said township?
6. Whether the land has not now been set apart for Doukhobor immigrants?
7. Whether the squatting rights of Robert Russell Smith on a squatter section within the township has not been repudiated by the government?
8. Whether the Department of the Interior has not accepted Vincent's survey formerly repudiated?
9. Whether the Minister of the Interior will lay the papers in the premises on the Table?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Yes. 2. No doubt was cast on the correctness of his survey of this township. 3. His survey of this township was not repudiated. 4. No. 5. The department has no knowledge of any such refusal. 6. Yes. 7. No. 8. The answer to this question is covered by the answers to the second and third questions. 9. There is no objection to the papers being brought down if the same are moved for.

PHYSICIAN FOR RAMA RESERVE.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Who is government physician for band of Indians on Rama reserve?
2. What is his salary?
3. Upon whose recommendation was he appointed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Dr. A. R. McDonnell. 2. $150 per annum. 3. Upon the recommendation of the representative of the district.

THE SLOCAN LABOUR TROUBLES.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Has Commissioner Clute yet made his report on the labour troubles in the Slocan district, B.C., which he investigated some months ago? If so, what is the effect of his report?
2. Has Mr. Clute been sent to British Columbia again, under instructions from the government, to further inquire into the said labour troubles?
3. Has he any instructions to enforce the 'Alien Labour Act'?
4. Does the government intend to amend the 'Alien Labour Act' this session, so as to make its enforcement more easy and comprehensive?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand, though I am not quite sure, that the commissioner has made his report, and it will be brought down at an early date. The answers to the other parts of the question will depend upon the report.

MR. PAVINUS CHAMPAGNE.

Mr. POPE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What position does Mr. Pavinus Champagne hold in the Yukon?
2. How long has he held the said position?
3. What is his salary?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. 1. Assistant store-keeper at Bennett. 2. Since March 11, 1899. 3. $3.50 a day.

PAYMASTER ON OTTAWA SLIDES.

Mr. POPE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Who has succeeded Mr. Charles Leduc as paymaster on the government slides at Ottawa?
2. What is the salary of such successor or successors?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No successor has been appointed to Mr. Leduc.

MR. ZONO TRUDEL.

Mr. POPE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What is the position held by Mr. Zono Trudel, and what is his salary?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). He is extra clerk at $2 a day.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—REPORTS OF COLONEL OTTER.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON asked :

1. What arrangement was made with Colonel Otter by the Militia Department or the Minister of Militia for the sending of reports of the doings of the Canadian first contingent in South Africa?
2. Was Colonel Otter instructed to report regularly to the department or to the Minister of Militia by letter or cable?
3. Have any reports been received from Colonel Otter?
4. If so, what are the dates of these reports, and what date were these reports received in Canada by the department or the minister?
5. What are the dates of any cable messages received from Colonel Otter respecting the doings of the first contingent in South Africa?
6. Did Colonel Otter cable the list of casualties of the Canadian contingent in the action of February 18 and 20?
7. If so, on what dates were such cable messages received by the department or the minister?
8. Has Colonel Otter reported to the department, by cable or letter, the names of the men of the Canadian contingent who are incapacitated from active service by illness or otherwise?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Lt.-Col. Otter was ordered to send the following returns : Weekly state ; weekly sick state ; weekly staff diary ; and in case of casualties occurring to write or telegraph particulars of each case. He was also directed to send in a general report on his command, weekly. 2. Yes. 3. Yes. 4.

MIDLAND HARBOUR AND GIN ROCK LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. How many tenders have been received for the erection of range lights at entrance to Midland Harbour and removal of Gin Rock Lighthouse?
2. What were the figures of each of said parties tendering?
3. Has a local inspector for said work been appointed, and if so, who recommended him?
4. What are the qualifications of the party appointed for such purpose?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say : 1. Two. 2. It is not deemed advisable to give the amounts of these tenders, as the lowest tenderer has refused the contract. 3. A local inspector, whose qualifications were deemed satisfactory, was appointed on the assumption that the lowest tenderer would accept, but if the department determines to do the work itself, it will be done under the inspection of our officer, Mr. Noble.

HAWKESTONE DOCK.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. How many tenders have been received for the construction of a dock at Hawkestone, Ont.?

2. At what amounts did the said parties tender?

3. Who is the local inspector for such work, by whom was he recommended, what are his qualifications for such position, and what remuneration is to be paid him?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to say in reply to first question, two. To the remainder of the question, the answer is, that the contract has been awarded to the lowest tenderer. The contract itself has not yet been executed. If the question is renewed after the contract is executed, the information desired will then be furnished.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. Has the present government of Manitoba made a demand on the Federal government for the control of the school lands and funds?
2. Is it the intention of the government to accede to such a request and to introduce during the present session of parliament, legislation to that effect?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government of Manitoba have made no demand on the present government for the control of the school lands and funds, but have asked for a conference on this subject, which the government is willing to grant.

MANITOBA VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

1. When were the voters' lists for the several electoral districts of Manitoba received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery?
2. Which of them are printed?
3. When will the others be printed?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In reply, I beg to say : 1. The lists for Manitoba were received by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 22nd September, 1899. 2. The lists were sent to the Bureau 28th November, 1899. 3. The lists for Brandon and Winnipeg have been printed. The lists for the other districts will be printed as soon as the pressure of parliamentary printing diminishes.

IMPORTS OF AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

What is the value of agricultural implements and agricultural machinery imported into Canada from Great Britain from July 1, 1899, up to March 1, 1900; also the duty collected thereon?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply, I beg to say that : Information in answer to the above cannot be given, as the returns from the ports for the quarter ending March, have not yet been received ; but, for the six months ended 31st December, 1899, the information is as follows :

	Value.	Duty.
Cultivators	$ 30	$ 4 50
Drills, grain and seed.....	27	4 05
Forks, pronged	25	4 68
Harrows	30	6 00

All other agricultural implements, n.e.s.	103	19 31
Total	$7,692	$1,990 20

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

What was the total value of all agricultural implements and agricultural machinery imported into Canada from Great Britain, under the preferential tariff, during the year ending June 30, 1899?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply, I beg to say :

Hoes	$ 141
Knives, edging	6
Lawn mowers.....	207
Potato diggers	58
Scythes and snaths, sickles or reaping hooks	4,943
Spades and shovels, and blanks for same.	9,398
All other agricultural implements, n.e.s....	491
Total	$15,244

IMPORTS OF FARM WAGONS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

What was the total number and total value of all farm wagons imported into Canada from Great Britain, under the preferential tariff, during the year ending June 30, 1899? Also, duty paid on same?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply, I beg to say that: No farm wagons were imported from Great Britain.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

Total number, value and duty on farm wagons imported into Canada from the United States during the year ending June 30, 1899?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1,827 wagons, valued at $78,455. Duty, $19,615.25.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

Like information for period from July 1, 1899, to March 1, 1900, as asked for in questions 1 and 2 separately?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Information in answer to the above cannot be given, as the returns from the ports for the quarter ending March, have not yet been received; but, for the six months ending 31st December, 1899, the information is as follows: No farm wagons were imported from Great Britain. From United States, 547 wagons, valued at $23,176. Duty, $5,790.83.

Mr. PATERSON.

YUKON DISTRICT—ELECTORAL CORRUPTION.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

The Hon. Mr. Kirchhoff has recently, in the Senate, spoken as follows: 'The correspondence alluded to differs from the correspondence I have had with men who are in that country now, and the same correspondence has come into the hands of the hon. gentleman in this House and it leads me to an entirely different view to that expressed in those letters of the heelers and hangers-on who have obtained positions in the Klondike. I have had scores of letters which intimate to me that not one-tenth of all the corruption and all the rascality and all the mismanagement existing in that country has ever filtered through down to this point, that if they ever had an opportunity such as Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper asked for in the House of Commons of giving evidence before a judicial commission, there would have been such an exposure of rascality that neither the Minister of the Interior nor the government could have faced it. We know that the parties who would have given that evidence are afraid, because nearly all of them have interests up there which one turn of the screw would probably deprive them of, and they are afraid to come out and give evidence. . . . At Oak Lake, twenty miles from where I reside, some parties were given a permit. They took in a large quantity of whisky and a number of dance girls, and cleared one hundred thousand dollars. They came back and divided the money with prominent people there. I know an instance in Brandon where a gentleman was given an opportunity of going out there with a permit in advance, when the permits were going to be stopped, and he started two days before they stopped giving the permits. He landed under an assumed name in Dawson with his cargo of liquor, and when he got there he was the only one who was allowed to remain. All the rest of the liquor cargoes in transit were not allowed to be taken in. He came down with his sole consignment and cleared about twenty thousand dollars, and is proud to say so to-day. He is building a block in Brandon which is commonly called the Whisky Block. That is only one instance. There are others who are sharing in the profits. He is to divvy up with others as well, and I know from my own experience that these liquor permits are being issued and sold in Vancouver and Seattle, and the parties are getting a rake-off from those who have the whisky permits. They receive a permit and it is taken away and peddled in the United States cities, and they make their profits out of it. I do not wonder that these people write to the minister that they are fairly well satisfied.'

Is it the intention of the government to inquire into these allegations?

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to inform the hon. gentleman that a reference to what occurred in the other branch of the House, especially during the same session, is not in order. For the hon. gentleman's benefit, I would quote from Peel's decisions, page 73 :

It is a well established rule, and one of obvious convenience, that no reference should be made to words used in the other House of parliament in the same session.

CASUALTIES IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON (by Mr. Clarke) asked :

Col. Otter's report up to February 24 contains the following:

'The night of the 18th or 19th was devoted to collecting the dead and wounded, of whom I cabled you a list on the 19th.'

Was this list cabled on February 19 ever received by the Militia Department or the minister? If so, when?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The list referred to, has not yet been received by the department.

VICTORIA, B.C., MAIL DELIVERY.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Have any petitions or letters been received by the Postmaster General, or his department, from residents of the south-eastern portion of Victoria City, B.C., praying for a daily mail delivery, and for the establishment of a letter-box in that locality?

2. Has the post office inspector in Victoria been asked to report on the matter? If so, has he reported on same, and what is the purport of his report?

3. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to grant the requests of the residents of that important district?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say : 1. A petition was received at the department, asking for letter-carrier delivery and the establishment of a letter-box in the south-eastern portion of the city of Victoria. 2. This question was referred to the Post Office Inspector, who reported that the greater part of the neighbourhood was sparsely settled, but that the service would be a convenience to those resident there, and would entail an increase in cost. 3. A further petition to the same effect, having been received on the 31st ultimo, the matter will be looked into again, to see if present circumstances warrant the increased outlay which the service would involve.

MR. HENRY W. CLARK.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

Was Henry W. Clark an engineer of the dredge 'Canada,' and at what salary? Has he been dismissed, and if so, for what cause? Who now has the position, and at what salary?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The answer to this question, except as to salary, appears in the Hansard reports of the 27th of July, 1899. The salary was $75 a month.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE SUPERINTENDENT.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. When did the position of superintendent of the railway mail service become vacant through the death of the late Alfred Browne?

2. Who has been discharging the duties of the late superintendent since the time of his death?

3. Why has not the position, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Browne, been filled by the appointment of a competent person to discharge the duties of a superintendent of the railway mail service?

4. When do the government purpose filling this vacancy?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to reply : 1. On the 5th February, 1900. 2. Colonel C. J. Macdonald, Post Office Inspector, has been acting as superintendent. 3. Because the Postmaster General has not yet decided as to the officer whom he is prepared to recommend to council for appointment. 4. No doubt the government will fill the vacancy as soon as the recommendation is made.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS.

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams and reports in regard to the dismissal of Mr. E. H. Jones, late postmaster of Kamloops, B.C.—(Mr. Prior.)

Copies of all orders in council, memorandums, reports and statements concerning the sale of timber on the ordnance lands of Point Pelée, in the county of Essex, and present standing of accounts between purchaser and government.—(Mr. Cowan.)

Return showing the amount of the rebate paid on agricultural implements exported from Canada for the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1896, 1897, 1898 and 1899, specifying the amount paid to each firm in each of the above years.—(Mr. Clarke.)

Return for all correspondence, papers, report or reports in connection with the application for the establishment of a post office at Lavalie, in the township of Devlin, Rainy River district.—(Mr. Sproule, by Mr. Taylor.)

VILLE MARIE BANK.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved for :

Copy of the petition or factum presented to the government by the depositors of the Ville Marie Bank, praying for the intervention of the government in respect to the notes of the bank issued illegally, and for a special grant and other purposes.

He said : I have deemed it my duty to call the attention of this House particularly to this petition. It is a petition signed, if I mistake not, by a very large number of people—I think over three thousand of the depositors and interested creditors of the Ville Marie Bank. These people belonged to a particular class, if I may use that expression. A very large majority of them are of the agricultural class in the immediate vicinity of Montreal and of the working class. I do not mean to say that many of the unfortunate depositors of the bank are not people of means; but, to a very exceptional extent, the depositors belonged to the two classes I have just indicated. They are very largely to be found among the working class of the suburbs of Montreal, where that bank had some important branches, and also in the counties immediately around Montreal, where the bank had opened branches for sinister purposes, to which I will refer presently, and where the agents of the bank had succeeded in procuring quite an abnormal quantity of deposits with which the affairs of the bank were carried on. My object is, in reality, twofold—it is to acquaint the House with the very unfortunate condition of these creditors and also the steps they have taken to bring their misfortunes to the knowledge of the government of this country, and in view of the legislation which the government proposes to bring down during the present session, to point out some of the evils in connection with the affairs of the bank that these may be avoided in the future. It has become clear to those who have followed the affairs of the bank since the closing of its doors that, in the future, there must be a change in the law as regards the control of circulation. We have had, in the affairs of this bank, proof that the government of this country does not possess a sufficient control over the circulation of banks; and when I acquaint the House with some of the details with regard to the circulation of the Ville Marie Bank, it will be evident that there is something wanting in our law which it is the duty of the government to remedy. It is also desirable, I believe, in the law which is to be passed by this parliament, that provision should be made for more detailed returns to the government than those which the banks are obliged to furnish at the present time. It would be better still, perhaps, if some provision were made for the inspection, at stated times, of the affairs of banks. I know that it is a very difficult point to meet, I know that, in the first place, banks object strongly to inspection, and it is urged on their behalf that inspection is very difficult. But it seems to be possible for the government to overcome those objections, and to provide at any rate for a sufficient inspection of bank affairs to prevent the renewal in future of such a dreadful disaster as we have to contemplate in the present instance. There is a further point, I think, which is evident when we come to look into the affairs of this unfortunate institution, and it is that there ought to be on the part of the government some control, the law ought to be amended in such a way as to enable the government to exercise a supervision over the opening of branch offices. As we shall see in a few moments, the power which the banks possess of opening branch offices was abused in this case to a degree which is in reality the cause of the great misfortunes which we have to deplore. I have no doubt that if this bank had been obliged to conform to certain reasonable formalities before obtaining the requisite authorization from the government to open a branch office, if inquiries had been made, the bank's operations would have been stopped, or at any rate a large number of these branches which have caused immense loss to the people in Montreal and vicinity, would never have been opened.

I do not wish to detain the House unnecessarily, and I do not think it forms part of my argument to go at great length into a description of the nature of the disaster which the depositors in this bank have suffered. I have stated already that they were people, as a rule, belonging to the poorer classes, belonging to the working classes, belonging to the agricultural classes, a class of people who placed all their savings, in many instances everything they had, in the branch of this bank in the vicinity where they lived. I can tell this House what I know will be corroborated by all the members of this House who come from the district of Montreal, that these calamities are simply impossible to describe. An immense number of people have been utterly ruined by the operations of this bank, people who had placed everything that they had in the bank. It would be taking up the time of this House uselessly to enter into a description of the many cases which, in my own county for instance, where this bank had two branches, have come to my knowledge by the failure of this unfortunate institution.

I think it necessary to state briefly to the House something about the origin of this bank, and how it arrived at the stage to which I wish to call the attention of the House and the government. The bank was organized in 1874, at a time when banks were springing up everywhere, it was organized with a capital of $1,000,000, two issues of stock of $600,000 and $400,000 respectively. There was at that time a great activity in the creation of financial institutions of that kind. I have reason to believe that the promotion of this bank was carried on with undue zeal, and that a very large number of people were induced to take stock in this new bank upon the understanding that considerable advances would be made to them upon it. Many people availed themselves, in the city of Montreal, of this way of canvassing for stock, they took stock to obtain advances and never returned those advances, and, in fact, never paid up the stock for which they had subscribed. Of course it is difficult to trace this back now; but certain it is that in 1881, shortly after the bank was organized, it became necessary to reduce the stock by one-half, and it was reduced to $500,000. But I desire the House to notice that even with this reduction, it seems that at no time did the bank have a set of bona fide stockholders for anything like $500,000, although, apparently, the bank had that capital, mostly paid up. But when we come to examine carefully the statements of the bank we come to the conclusion that there was very little beyond $300,000, or perhaps even less, of bona fide paid up stock of the bank.

Now, Sir, the depositors in this bank have claimed that the fall of this bank has been accompanied by such exceptional circumstances, by circumstances of fraud—because we must give the thing its true name—within the bank and outside the bank, and by circumstances of dereliction of duty on the part of the bank, and brought to the knowledge of the government—I say under these circumstances the depositors have prayed the government to take into consideration all the facts connected with the failure of the bank, and to see whether it is not possible for the government to come to the relief of those depositors, at any rate, to a certain extent. These depositors have represented these facts to the government, and I believe on three or four occasions have come up here in order to personally expose their grievances, and their reasons in support of their petition. It is necessary to call the attention of the House to the peculiar situation of this bank with regard to the government themselves. I will say at once that it would be impossible to maintain the pretension that when a bank becomes insolvent under ordinary circumstances of bank failures, it is the duty of the government to come to the help of the creditors of that bank. But what we do claim is that our circumstances are totally different, we are placed in such an exceptional position with regard to the government, that there is at any rate on the part of the government a duty to look into our claim, to look into every detail, and to see whether our condition is not so exceptional as to command commiseration of the government. At an earlier part of the session I moved for a copy of all the correspondence between the government and the authorities of the bank; and very soon afterwards my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) moved for a tabulated statement of all the circulation, deposits and capital of the bank, according to the statements furnished the government since the 1st of July, 1892. I have these two statements in my hand. One is very voluminous, containing the correspondence of the government with the bank since 1892, which throws a great deal of light upon this question. Any one who takes the trouble carefully to examine this correspondence, beginning in 1892 and coming down to 1899, in fact just before the bank closed its doors, must come to the conclusion that during all those years the Department of Finance—I make no distinction between one administration and another—the government was convinced that this institution was being conducted illegally, that it was violating the law duly brought to its attention by the government, and that there was attending the continued operations of that institution in the district of Montreal great danger to the public. I say that this is the legitimate conclusion at which you arrive if you look through that correspondence with any degree of care. In 1892 the Department of Finance became aware that there was something wrong with the affairs of the bank. I am obliged to indicate how that appears. It appears by a letter, dated the 3rd of March, 1892, and addressed by Mr. Courtney, Deputy Minister of Finance, to the Deputy Minister of Justice at Ottawa. I will read that letter:

Finance Department,
Ottawa, March 3, 1892.

Robert Sedgewick, Esq., Q.C.,
Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to call your attention to section 51 of the Bank Act, under which banks may issue notes for circulation to the extent of their unimpaired paid-up capital, and to say that the Bank Ville Marie has under the provisions of the Act issued notes varying since last July from $330,500 to $470,115. The bank makes return of a subscribed capital of $500,000, and a paid-up capital of $479,250. The difference between the subscribed and paid-up capital appears from the return just received of shareholders of the bank on the 31st December last to be caused by the cancellations of shares on which no payments have been made and in a few cases from the shares not being fully paid up. I find on looking through the return of shareholders, an item as follows: 'Shareholders' stock in suspense $93,000,' all given as paid up; and I also find that there is standing in the name of U. Garand (the cashier) and W. Weir (the president of the bank) in trust, stock to the extent of $135,000. Under section 64 the bank is precluded from lending money on the security of its stock, but under section 65 it has a privileged lien on its shares for debts due it, and may decline to allow the transfer of the shares until the debt is paid, but such stock must be sold within twelve months after the debt becomes payable. I have also to say that thirty shares of this bank were sold on Monday last on the Montreal market at 85. I have therefore to ask whether seeing the position of the bank as evidenced by this quotation and the fact that a great portion of its stock is held in suspense and in trust, the government, under the Act, should take any action in the matter, and if so in what direction. I shall be glad to be generally advised on the subject at your earliest convenience.

I have, &c.,

(Signed) J. M. COURTNEY,
Deputy Minister of Finance.

Here, then, was the attention of the Department of Justice called to a most important matter, the fact that the circulation of the bank exceeded, apparently, from the statement of the bank, and as a matter of fact, no doubt, exceeded the amount of stock really held, bona fide, by the shareholders in violation of the law. If you turn to page 31 of this return, some time after that, on the 29th of July—

Mr. BERGERON. What was the answer to that letter?

Mr. MONK. There was no answer immediately. It seems to have gone on some time before the Deputy Minister of Justice gave an answer, and on the 29th of July, 1892, Mr. Courtney writes to the Deputy Minister of Justice :

Finance Department,
Ottawa, July 29, 1892.

Robt. Sedgewick, Esq., Q.C.,
Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to call your attention to my letter of the 3rd March last in reference to the position of the Bank Ville Marie, in which I asked to be informed whether in view of such position, the government should under the Act take any action in the matter and in what direction. I have not yet received a reply to my letter of the 3rd March and I shall be glad to be advised on the subject at your very earliest convenience.

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. M. COURTNEY,
Deputy Minister of Finance.

On the same day, evidently anxious about this matter, Mr. Courtney wrote to Mr. Weir, president of the bank :

Finance Department, Ottawa,
July, 29, 1892.

W. Weir, Esq.,
President,
La Banque Ville Marie,
Montreal.

Sir,—I have the honour to call your attention to the fact that in the last returns from your bank the subscribed capital is stated at $370,500 in place of $500,000 as in previous returns, and the paid-up capital at $350,000 in place of $479,250.

He calls his attention to the fact that, in his return he says it is $350,000 only.

I beg also to call your attention to section 28 of the Bank Act which provides for reductions of capital stock only on approval of the Treasury Board, and as no such approval has been given, I shall be obliged if you will kindly explain your action in the matter. I shall be glad to hear from you at your earliest convenience.

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. M. COURTNEY,
Deputy Minister of Finance.

Mr. BERGERON. Any answer to that ?

Mr. MONK. Not for some time. But, we find Mr. Weir sending Mr. Courtney a letter containing an account of the general meeting of the shareholders of the bank. It is somewhat lengthy, and I do not wish to take up the time of the House reading it.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the date of it ?

Mr. MONK. It was on the last day of July. This is what the president of the bank writes :

La Banque Ville Marie,
Montreal, August 1, 1892.

J. M. Courtney, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Finance,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your favour of the 29th ultimo, I inclose you herewith a copy of the annual report of this bank, in which reference is made to the reduction of the stock.
Mr. MONK.

I have been suffering for some time from the excessive heat, and as soon as the doctor allows me, will go to the seaside for a couple of weeks, otherwise I would have taken a run to Ottawa and discussed the question with you, when I have no doubt we could have come to an understanding as to whether under the circumstance the sanction of the Treasury Board was required.

He seemed to call in question the necessity of obtaining any sanction for the reduction of the stock.

I may mention that I have discussed the question unofficially with the Hon. Sir John Abbott, who seemed to think that as the stock of the bona fide shareholders was in no way affected by this reduction, the stock cancelled being the property of the bank itself since 1879, it was more a matter of book-keeping than an actual reduction of stock under the meaning of the Act.

Our legal adviser being of the opinion that the cancelled stock could not be used as a basis of circulation it became a question whether to leave it standing in the books of the bank, or to write it off, and having consulted Mr. Hague, of the Merchants' Bank, and several other bankers they are unanimously in favour of the course we have adopted.

The opinion given by our legal adviser was to obtain the approval of the shareholders at our annual meeting, and, should the government require the approval of the Treasury Board to our action, to make the application in the terms of the Banking Act. In any case, I have to ask your indulgence until my health has improved, when I will go to Ottawa and discuss the subject with you.

I am, &c.,
(Signed) W. WEIR,
President.

Mr. QUINN. What date is that ?

Mr. MONK. That was the 1st of August, 1892. From that report, which is somewhat lengthy, it appears that the shareholders had reduced the stock. Very far from having the paid-up capital, as by their return they pretended to have, namely, $479,000; there was over $100,000 which had been confiscated, and stood in the name of the bank, but was in no way an asset of the bank. In order to wipe out that stock, which meant nothing at all, they held this meeting of shareholders, and the stock so held in suspense or trust by the bank, was wiped out and the real stock of the bank was fixed at $350,000. After that, we find a letter from Mr. Courtney, which says :

I am in receipt of your letter of the 1st instant respecting the reduction of the capital stock of your bank. I will make a report upon the subject to the Minister of Finance, but as he is at present absent from Ottawa, I suppose nothing will be done until after his return.

That letter was written in August, 1892. The next letter of some importance, is a letter from the Department of Justice to Mr. Courtney, in answer to his inquiry to which I have referred already. This is the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, dated the 19th September, 1892 :

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of certain correspondence from your department having relation to the present position of the Bank Ville Marie. The papers would seem to disclose the fact that the bank has issued paper beyond the extent authorized by law, and in other respects would appear to be in a somewhat precarious position. In view, however, of the absolute certainty of the exact position of the bank, and of the meaning of some of the words used in the returns, I have to call your attention to section 86 of the Bank Act, and to suggest that a special return be made as therein provided for. The bank should also be called upon to explain in such return the meaning of the phrase 'shareholders' stock in suspense,' as well as to give all particulars of the circumstances under which certain stock is held in trust by the cashier and the president of the bank. I have further to suggest that your department might consider whether, under the circumstances, it is safe or desirable that any Dominion moneys should be allowed to remain on credit in the bank in question.

As a matter of fact, gradually the Dominion deposit was diminished, and the Dominion government moneys were withdrawn, which goes far to confirm what I stated in the beginning, namely, that neither of the governments which succeeded each other since 1892 had much confidence in that institution. On the 21st of September, 1892 (Return, page 44), Mr. Courtney sent this report to the Minister of Finance :

Dear Mr. Foster,—I inclose a memo. respecting the Bank Ville Marie, to which I have to call your early and careful attention. Practically the bank has scarcely any capital, and is trading on its note circulation and deposits. The Montreal 'Gazette' quotes the stock—

Here again the department took the trouble to ascertain the quotations :

The Montreal 'Gazette' quotes the stock as 'buyers 77½, sellers 90.' I think the concern should be closed up.

Yours truly,
J. M. COURTNEY.

This was the note of the Deputy Minister of Finance, accompanying his report. That is to be found on page 45 of the return. I do not wish to take the time of the House in reading that report, but I may indicate that the report upon which the Minister of Finance is called upon to act, does not advise him to close up the bank. It mentions that the amount of stock which the bank up to the present time, appears to hold, is false ; that the bank has not $497,250 of stock, but that from that amount must be deducted over $135,000 of stock which the bank held in suspense, or held in trust, and which should not appear, of course, as being the paid up capital of the bank. This report mentions some other matters of importance. It mentions that the bank had taken upon itself to reduce its stock at a general meeting of the shareholders, at which general meeting, I may say now—because it appears further on—there was not the required number of shareholders or of stock represented. It mentions that the bank had taken upon itself in that peculiar way to reduce its stock, and without obtaining the confirmation of the Treasury Board. Finally, after calling attention to some minor irregularities, which, taken alone, may not be very important, but all together, with the larger ones mentioned in this report, show a state of things which should not exist in any well organized financial institution ; he concludes as follows :

The undersigned, in view of all the circumstances detailed above, begs to recommend that a special return be asked for from the bank under section 86 of the Bank Act, and that in addition to the information suggested by the Deputy Minister of Justice, the bank be asked to give details of the item under the head of assets, 'twenty-one assets not included under the foregoing head,' the amount under this head being for the months of August last, $196,852.60 out of total assets amounting to $1,495,636.05. With reference to the withdrawal of the Dominion government account, amounting to about $19,000, the undersigned recommends that the same be withdrawn and the account closed. He also recommends that the bank be compelled to comply with the provisions of the Bank Act, and ask the Treasury Board for its sanction to reduce the capital stock.

This report was signed by Mr. Courtney, on the 21st September, 1892, and immediately on the back of the report, there is the following memo. by the Minister of Finance :

'Approved. (Signed), G. E. Foster. Draw the balance down gradually to $10,000, and then advise with me.'

That was in 1892 after the department had been informed of this singular state of affairs in the bank and the decision which had been arrived at by the Finance Department, on the advice of the Department of Justice. On the 22nd of September, 1892, the deputy minister writes to the president of the bank :

I have the honour to inform you that I have duly submitted to the Minister of Finance the recent correspondence between ourselves relating to the reduction of capital stock of the Banque Ville Marie, and I am directed to inform you that the Minister of Finance is advised that the reduction of capital must be duly sanctioned by the Treasury Board under section 28 of the Banking Act.

I must ask you to take immediate steps to comply with the Act, inasmuch as there is a time limit imposed in the section above quoted.

Again, on the 22nd of September, the Deputy Minister of Finance writes to the president of the bank :

I am directed by the hon. the Minister of Finance, under section 86 of the Banking Act, to call upon you for the following special returns in connection with the business of the Banque Ville Marie, of which you are the president.

1. Statement showing the origin and the meaning of the sum of $93,900, representing 939 shares designated, 'Stock des actionnaires en suspens,' shown in the list of shareholders in your bank in the return dated January 19, 1892, such return to give dates and the meaning of the phrase.

2. A statement showing the full particulars of 1,350 shares or $135,000, stated in the same return to be held in the names of U. Garand and W. Weir in trust, such statement to give dates.

3. A detailed statement giving full particulars of the sum of $196,852.60, shown in your statement of the 31st ultimo as 'other assets not included under the foregoing heads.'

I shall be glad to be favoured with these returns at your earliest convenience.

Then follow some letters in which these returns are again called for, and on the 24th of September, 1892, the president of the bank writes to the Deputy Minister of Finance :

Inclosed you will find statement of the items forming the sum of $196,852.60, called for in your letter of the 22nd instant.

As your second letter of the same date calls for details respecting the cancellation of part of our stock, and requiring us to take immediate steps to apply to the Treasury Board to ratify such cancellation, I propose to go to Ottawa on Tuesday morning next. If it will be convenient for you to see me on that day, please advise me by telegraph on Monday next, the 26th instant.

And he sent up a statement, which of course, has since been proven to contain many incorrect statements in regard to this item of $196,852.60. He was telegraphed to, to come to Ottawa, and on the 26th of September, he wrote in regard to this large amount of stock held in suspense, but which had previously appeared as bona fide paid up capital stock of this bank :

I am in receipt of your telegram and shall go to Ottawa to-morrow morning. Meantime, I inclose the balance of statements called for in your letter of the 22nd instant. I am bringing fuller details with me; also the legal opinion of our solicitor. The phrase 'stock in suspense' was recommended to the directors of the Banque Jacques Cartier when I was on the board in 1879 by the Hon. Mr. (now Sir John) Abbott as the best way to describe stock reverting to the bank. The bank, I have no doubt, still holds his written opinion. If, after consultation with you and the hon. Minister of Finance, it is still deemed necessary to go before the Treasury Board, I fear we will have to begin anew, as the limit of time has expired, as I had entirely overlooked the three months' limit.

And he sends a statement of the stock held in suspense, which was practically worthless stock confiscated by the bank, and also a statement of the stock held in the names of Weir and Garand, which was stock of the same description, of no practical value. The parties interested seem to have met in Ottawa on the 28th of September, 1892, and reduced their agreement to writing, for we have here, at page 66 of the return, a memorandum as follows :

Mr. Weir will immediately take steps to bring about a reduction of capital to $300,000. He will reduce his circulation at once to that limit. He has promised to get the assets in a shape to satisfy the Treasury Board.

The government balance to be reduced to $5,000, and not to be increased.

As the House will see, on this 28th of September, 1892, it was agreed that the circulation should be reduced to $300,000. If we take this point of circulation alone, without commenting upon the fact that from that date no steps were taken to have this reduction of stock sanctioned by the government, we find the bank singularly at fault all the time. I find that on the 30th of November, 1893, the circulation was $320,000; on the 31st of December, 1893, it was $306,870; on the 31st of August, 1894, it had gone up to $311,000; on the 30th of September of the same year it was up to over $339,000; and it continued varying, but almost at every second or third month to 1894 we find it going beyond the mark which had been absolutely agreed upon between the government and the bank authorities in 1892. To come down to later dates, on the 31st of August, 1897, by the bank's sworn return, the circulation was 335,000; on the 30th of September, 1897, it was $333,000; and on the 31st of October, 1897, it was, according to the bank's own return, over $48,000 beyond what it should have been. 30th November, 1897, $47,000 more circulation than had been agreed upon. On the 31st January, 1898, the limit was passed again. On the 28th February, 1898, they were beyond the limit by over $16,000. On the 31st March, 1898, they were over $29,000 in excess. On the 31st October, 1898, they were $32,000 and more in excess of what had been particularly agreed upon.

I do not wish to go into further details, but from 1892, in respect of its circulation and according to the bank's own sworn returns to the government, almost five times a year, we find the bank at fault and going beyond what had been specially agreed upon with the government as its nominal and proper circulation.

As regards the regularizing or diminution of the stock, nothing seems to have been done at any time. The House will find at page 98 of the report, that not only had the agreement been violated, but that the government knew of its violation, because we have a letter of the 30th October, 1894, in which Mr. Courtney the Deputy Finance Minister notifies the president of the bank that its circulation had increased abnormally, and that this was altogether irregular and must be remedied. Then we find Mr. Weir explaining this irregularity, explaining that he had understood that the circulation might go to $350,000, and promising to see that it was reduced.

There is another letter, on the 3rd November, 1894, in which the Deputy Minister of Finance again calls the attention of the bank to its excessive circulation and also to the irregularity with regard to its stock. The House will find that I am correct in stating that the reduction of stock was never ratified, as it should have been, according to the claim of the government, and according to law, no doubt, by the Treasury Board.

There are other letters signed by the secretary of the Department of Finance, and also letters exchanged between the deputy minister and Mr. Weir, that I do not think it necessary to dilate upon, with regard to other irregularities, and particularly the failure of the bank to keep to its agreement to regularize the stock account and reduce its circulation. But I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that continuously during these years, and right up to the time when the bank closed its doors, it was always dilatory in sending in its statements. The House will find in this return, which throws considerable light upon the relations between the government and this institution, on pages 89, 90, 104, 105, 108 to 118, that it was always necessary for the department to call upon the officers of the bank to send in their monthly statement. Time and again the department had to warn the officers of the bank that unless they conformed with the very elementary directions in the Banking Act, measures would have to be taken to compel them to do so, and they would incur the penalty, and there was always some excuse given by the bank authorities for having failed to send in their returns in due time.

It is impossible to look through that correspondence, begun in 1892, and continued to the time when the bank closed its doors in 1899, without arriving at the conclusion that the officers of both administrations—because it would be unfair to claim that in matters of detail such as these, ministers can be expected to exercise any supervision—were convinced that the bank required careful watching, and that its affairs were in a perilous condition. After the present administration came into power there were additional reasons why the operations of this bank should have been scrutinized with even greater care. In the first place, the stock of the bank was in the hands of a very few men, and men who at no time had very great financial standing. In the next place, also in Montreal, a few doors from the place of business of this bank, another bank, far older and more solid, with far greater capital—a capital of $1,200,000—had failed, and coupled with the failure of that bank, we had the fact that it was due to a very large extent, to large advances made to its directors. I refer to La Banque du Peuple. But there was another which was still more fatal to the existence of the La Banque du Peuple, and that was the fact that surreptitiously, in some of its branch offices, accounts had been opened and large advances made which were never repaid. These two circumstances should have attracted particularly the attention of the Department of Finance to the affairs of La Banque Ville Marie. These facts should have made the government keenly alert to the circumstances of La Banque Ville Marie, a bank which with much smaller capital, opening branches everywhere and failing to comply with the special agreement between it and the government in 1892. Surely these things should have put the government upon its guard and forced the department to exercise a greater degree of vigilance.

But there was something more than the failure of La Banque du Peuple to attract the attention of the government to the smaller institution. As I have already indicated, the Deputy Minister of Finance watched the quotations. He speaks of the matter in 1892. He mentions in a later correspondence what sellers are offering, and very properly the estimates, to a certain extent, the strength of the institution by these quotations from the stock market in Montreal.

But, what has been, since four years, the position of the Bank Ville Marie in the money market of Montreal? It is a well-known fact, and one very easily ascertained by those not already aware of it, that for the last four years, brokers would not take the stock of the bank to sell it. Brokers accept transfer of bank stock to sell it; but they would not touch this stock in that way. And, why? Because, they feared that during the interval for which they would be compelled to hold the stock before selling it, the bank might fail. A broker who was requested to dispose of the stock, would say: I will try to find you a buyer; if I do, you will come here and transfer your stock to him; I will not hold it for a moment. And, what was the situation for four years past, with regard to the clearing house? A most extraordinary state of affairs existed. The clearing house would not take the accepted cheques of the bank for an amount exceeding $10,000. The brokers would not touch the stock, the clearing house would not give the bank credit for more than $10,000 on accepted cheques. There is more than that, which is easily ascertained—generally among the financial men in Montreal, the bank was considered a rotten institution. That explains to us, how it is that the victims of this institution are principally found among the poorer classes. No man who had knowledge of financial affairs in Montreal, no man who was a financier, would place any confidence in that institution. The depositors were country people and workingmen, with very few exceptions. The question seems to me, whether the government should not have known this. It seems to me that it should have known it. It seems to me that it was the duty of the government during all these years, in the first place, to see to the carrying out of the law, to see that the circulation did not exceed what was normal and right, and to see that the question of the stock was put in regular position, according to the interpretation put upon the Banking Act by the Department of Justice. I will go further—I contend that it was the duty of the government, and it is the duty of the government, to know when a bank is in such a situation as I have described the Bank Ville Marie to have been among the financial men of a great centre like Montreal. If Mr. Courtney was performing his duty, when he was watching the returns of the bank, and seeing what the quotations of this stock were in the markets of Montreal, it was distinctly his duty to know what everybody about Montreal knew—that the credit of this bank was gone, and to prevent the bank carrying on further operations, and opening new branches. When we came to Ottawa to bring our complaint to the knowledge of the government, we were asked what the government could do; and if I mistake not, upon one occasion, one of the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches, asked us if it were possible for the government to do anything, even if it had this knowledge that everybody else seems to have possessed. I think there is no doubt, at any rate, that the Attorney-General of Canada could have taken proceedings against the bank for non-observance of the law. There can be no question about that. The bank was in violation of the law, when it exceeded its legal circulation. I do not speak now of the violation that existed in the other statements, but here was a statement which showed the bank to be a violation of the law. It was violating the law when it failed to have its stock regularized by the Treasury Board. The Minister of Justice could have taken proceedings by fieri facias against the bank, to have its charter declared void. Such proceedings have repeatedly been initiated in the province of Quebec. The House will find in La Revue Legale, volume 20, I think, two or three decisions, showing the unquestioned right of the Minister of Justice, acting on behalf of the government, to take proceedings because a financial institution like this was violating the law. There was a case, if I mistake not, relating to the bank in St. Hyacinthe. There is no doubt that the Attorney-General of Canada has a right under our code to take proceedings against any institution, particularly a banking institution, incorporated by Dominion charter, to have that charter declared void, and have the institution deprived of its rights. But, that is not necessary. It is sufficient to look at the correspondence to see that the moment the government brings the slightest pressure to bear on a financial institution, such as this, that institution is ready to obey the mandates of the government. It would have been sufficient. I am perfectly sure, for the government, any time within the past four years, to have called on the officers of this institution to give a special return, for instance, showing what the million dollars and more of current loans, consisted of. That was largely bogus as we know to-day. If the government had called upon them for that information alone, they would have thrown up their hands, and would have ceased opening branches. It would have been sufficient for the government to have told the officers of the bank that, until their position was regularized, they could not open any more branches. They could not have opened these branches, the object of which was, without doubt, to pilfer from the people. But, nothing was done. We know to-day what the state of the assets of the bank was; we know that the institution was rotten from top to bottom. The question naturally arises, how the bank kept up, and this is the saddest part of the story, because we have evidence to-day, that the bank kept up in two or three ways. In the first place, the House will remember, the circulation should not have exceeded $300,000. I speak subject to correction, but I do not think I am mistaken, when I say that, up to the present day, over $515,000 circulation has been redeemed, showing that there was an abnormal circulation, an absolutely fraudulent circulation. That is one of the means, by having over $200,000 illegal circulation, that the bank kept up its operations. Then, the directors speculated. We have in the deposition of the accountant, proof that that was one of the methods adopted to keep the bank going.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé). If my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), will allow me—I do not wish to interrupt him—he probably knows that the deposition of the accountant, Ferdinand Lemieux, was an ex parte deposition?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And the directors were not present, nor were their attorneys, when the deposition was taken.

Mr. MONK. Yes, I know it was an ex parte deposition, but the facts I wish to establish by that deposition are facts about which I think there is very little doubt. For instance, this is one of his statements:

With the consent of the directors, the bank speculated in stocks for a considerable amount, notably in Canadian Pacific Railway, the Dominion Cotton Mills, the Coloured Cotton Company, the Montreal Gas Company, the Toronto Street Railway, and the Duluth Railway. These speculations were made with the view of raising profits to pay dividends.

Then he goes on to state how these speculations were made. I do not wish to weary the House by reading his evidence at length, but I think his deposition is a truthful one, and bears upon its face the aspects of truth. This unfortunate man, the accountant of the bank, has since been condemned. He states how utterly incorrect the returns of the bank were, all through. Of course the government is not to blame for this, but the fact remains that the statements were incorrect. They were prepared at the end of the month in a haphazard kind of a way, they were not proved returns, they were systematically false, and that is an important point. But there was a circulation, and there were the branch offices, and that is what really concerns the members of this House who have been obliged to take an interest in the fate of these depositors. Mr. Lemieux says further :

In the branch offices the deposits were larger than the discounts. The surplus of deposits was sent immediately to the head office. The instructions given to the managers of the branch offices, and this with the knowledge of all the directors, were to receive as many deposits as possible and to pay as little discount as possible. Several managers of the branch offices had received promises from the directors that their salaries would be increased if they could obtain a certain amount of deposits. Had there not been a considerable amount of deposits in the branch offices, the bank would not have been able to continue its operations.

So that here were men, and this I know to be a fact, sent out into the country districts around Montreal, sent into the suburbs of that city, where there are so many workmen, with instructions to collect as much money as possible and do as little business as possible, and as an inducement, they were told their salaries would be increased; if they succeeded in obtaining a considerable quantity of spoils their salaries would be in proportion to those spoils; and the accountant tells us that without the adoption of this system the bank would not have been able to continue its operations.

Well, what was the result of what I cannot call anything else but this system of pilfering innocent, and in many cases ignorant, people, both in the country parts and in the city of Montreal? We find that by this kind of confidence game they got an immense amount of money in places where you would not think it possible that they could get so much. In Maisonneuve, for instance, they opened a branch in 1899; they had $17,000 and they only did $12,000 of business. In 1898 they opened a branch at St. Louis du Mile End, a suburb of Montreal; they had $31,000, and only $4,000 of business; all the rest was sent into Montreal. At Ormstown, they opened a branch in 1898, they had $30,000, and $8,000 of business. In May, 1898, they opened a branch in Chaboillez Square, in the division of my hon. friend the member for St. Ann's division of Montreal (Mr. Quinn). Here they made a tremendous haul. In Chaboillez Square they got $44,500 in deposits, and did business for $4,000, not enough to pay one small employee of the bank. But all this money was sent into the head office. At Marieville a branch was opened in June, 1897; they had $70,000, and $4,000 of business. At Longueuil a branch was opened in 1897; they had $43,000 of deposits, $2,000 of business, and $41,000 was shipped into Montreal. At Chambly a branch was opened in December, 1896; they had $39,000 of deposits, and $9,000 of business. At Papineauville a branch was opened in 1896; they had nearly $70,000 of deposits, and $10,000 of discount. In Nicolet they had nearly $70,000, and $30,000 of discount. At L'Épiphanie they had deposits to the extent of $98,000, and only $16,000 under discount. At Lachine, in my own county, they had nearly $60,000 of deposits and $35,000 of business. At St. Laurent they had $65,000 of deposits, and $37,000 of business.

Now, all these things indicate that the object of opening successively all these branches, particularly within the last four years, was to collect money to keep up the bank and do as little business as possible. You would imagine that a bank having such a large number of branches—because I have not mentioned all the branches—would have a considerable number of depositors in the head office; but they only had $110,000 of deposits in the head office, overdrafts to the extent of $105,000, with current loans to the extent of $900,000 or more, and a very large proportion of these were fictitious.

Now, under these circumstances I submit it is a question whether the government ought not seriously to consider all these circumstances with a view to deciding whether they should not come to the assistance of these people who have been absolutely spoliated, there is no other word. The government has acknowledged it to be its duty to prosecute the offenders. Well, these painful trials have brought out the fact that that institution was radically rotten, that it was rotten from top to bottom; and that not only the directors but the officers did not observe the law. These trials have resulted in the conviction of several individuals. I do not want to recount the evidence at length, but it has become apparent that a large portion of the poorer classes in our district have been robbed. Under these circumstances I think it is the duty of the government to give some ear to the prayer of these depositors, numbering over 3,000, for the government to go more fully into the matter with the view of coming to the assistance of these people, and to some extent at least, to save them from penury. At the present moment there are three men in charge of the affairs of this bank, capable men, reliable men, men in whom the government can place absolute trust; and at very little expense the government could obtain much fuller information from these three liquidators than I have been able to give to the House. I venture to say that if the government will take the trouble to ascertain in greater detail the circumstances of this disastrous failure from these three liquidators, the government will be convinced that it is a case where they ought to interfere. After all, it is not a question of a legal claim. These men have, perhaps, not a claim in law, but the government ought to help these people, who, in a large class suffer from a calamity of this kind. We give to people, suffering from floods, and we build railways for people. I think this government has come to the assistance of the miners in the Cassiar and Stikine districts, and it has come to the assistance of immigrants. It is sometimes the duty of the government to come to the assistance of a large class of people suffering in the way that these people are in this case. I do not know that there is any precedent, but, I believe, that previous to confederation, the government of the province of Upper Canada did, under special circumstances, come to the assistance of a bank in order to help the unfortunate creditors of the bank. I do not know exactly in what way this was done, but, it has been pointed out by many of those interested, and I may here mention that I have not a dollar in this bank, that there is such a case. I have not been able to find out what was done in that case which occurred, I think, in Upper Canada. At any rate, I hope the government will consider this petition, that it will inquire fully into the matter, and, if possible, do something for these people. I think such a case of fraud as this will probably never occur again in the bank annals of Canada, and that it is an exceptional failure. The correspondence which has been brought down here is evidence that there is some responsibility resting upon the government, and under these circumstances, I hope the government will do something to relieve these unfortunate people.

Mr. L. A. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as seconder of the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I concur in the views he has just given expression to, as regards the unfortunate depositors in the Ville Marie Bank. As the government contemplates the revision of the Bank Act, the Bill for which will be submitted in the course of this session, it may be inferred therefrom that there is something wanting in the law which it is the duty of the government to remedy. The government might learn some useful lesson from the failure of that bank, and they should now have their eyes opened as to the necessity of throwing around those institutions, in the future, more efficacious checks and guards than they have done in the past.

We have no government banks here, as they have in France. In France, small depositors put their savings in the government banks, just as they do in Canada ; but the saying 'as safe as the bank' applies with much more force to France than to Canada, as the deposits, in France, are guaranteed by the government.

Mr. MONK.

It is true that the government here have also provided savings banks for the poor people to put in their savings ; but they should place those institutions on a better footing and give a higher rate of interest, so as to induce small depositors to place their money in those banks, when they would enjoy greater security.

In this country, and I refer here more particularly to the province of Quebec, the people trust the government institutions, and although they do not take any stock in paternalism, in state affairs, still they place great reliance upon the co-operation of the government. They were under the impression that these financial institutions were government banks, while they were but private concerns or corporations doing the business of the public. They were all the more justifiable for depending and relying on the co-operation of the government, as the latter controls all the banks and even private concerns, through the machinery of the Banking Act and the monthly returns which have to be furnished by the directors of those institutions. As stated by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, these people were under the impression that their deposits were guaranteed by the government. It was a sad mistake on their part, and they were cruelly disappointed.

But the point I wish to urge is this : that those unfortunate depositors were really deceived and robbed of all their savings, because the government did not exercise a sufficient control over the bank, as they were bound to do under the law.

It has been shown that the returns were incorrect and fraudulent ; that the government knew that the bank was in violation of the law, when it exceeded its legal circulation ; and, since 1882, they never prevented it violating the law.

I think the government ought to come to the aid of these poor people, who have suffered from the failure of the Ville Marie Bank. They have prosecuted the guilty parties, and justice has been done on them ; but the small depositors have not recovered the money which they have lost through the failure of that institution. The government which are now boasting of their millions, could not make a better use of their surplus than by coming to the relief of the unfortunate depositors of the Ville Marie Bank, and giving them some of their overplus. I think that under the circumstances, the saying : Salus populi, lex suprema finds its application here. Fraudulent acts have been perpetrated, and the only way out of the difficulty is to urge upon the government the desirability of coming to the relief of those unfortunate people who have lost everything they had, through the criminal conduct of the bank officials who have conspired to defraud the public and also through the fault of both federal administrations, which were negligent in their duty, failing to exercise a proper control over that institution. The bounden duty of the government is to come to the relief of those unfortunate depositors, who, as stated by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier are largely to be found among the poorer classes of the community, belonging to the working class and to the agricultural class, in the cities and in the rural centres. The fact that the common people and the poor are the chief sufferers from that disastrous failure makes it incumbent upon the government to come to their relief.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, in view of the great distress that has resulted to many people in consequence of the failure of La Banque Ville Marie, one cannot be surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has found it desirable to bring the matter before the House. During the latter part of his observations he urged the claims of the depositors on a ground that was somewhat different from his earlier statements. He said that in the past the government had come to the aid of people who had suffered distress by fire or flood, or other disasters, and upon somewhat similar grounds they might consider it to be their duty to come to the relief of the people who had suffered so much from the failure of this bank. If the question is put upon that ground, far be it from me to offer any opinion as to what action the government will take, or should take in the future, but when the hon. gentleman bases his claim on the contention that the government were negligent in their duty, I am afraid I cannot so readily assent to that as the hon. gentleman is disposed to do. I am inclined to think that we will have to have a clearer conception of the responsibilities of the government. It is necessary to remember that a bank is only a private corporation doing business with the public. True, it is a corporation around which the government throws more than the usual guards and checks, and the public get the benefit of these guards and checks, but, surely, it is not to be assumed that, because an effort is made by the government to throw around banks additional guards and checks of an exceptional character, the government becomes responsible for the whole business. All that the wisdom of this and past governments has been able to do is to require that returns showing the transactions of these banks should be prepared and published. That information is circulated all over the Dominion, and persons who take an interest in such matters get the benefit of it, but, I do not think we should rush to the conclusion that, because the government do this, therefore, it should be held liable in any way. A special effort is made for the protection of the note holders, and there is reason for that, because the banks are permitted to furnish a large amount of the currency of the country. Undoubtedly, the affairs of this bank were conducted for some years in a loose way, and recent revelations have shown, as the hon. gentleman has said, that the bank was a rotten concern. But, we are always wiser after certain facts are brought to our notice than before, and I suppose the hon. gentleman has a very much clearer conception of the rottenness of the bank now than he had twelve or eighteen months ago. He is speaking in the light of revelations of the last few months, which have made us all much wiser than we were before. It is not to be assumed that anybody could have known as fully as we do now what the transactions of the bank were. The circulation is protected by the insurance fund, by the deposits which the various banks make with the government for this purpose. It is well that we should note the fact that no note holder has suffered any loss from the failure of the bank, and that the provisions of the law in that respect were perfectly adequate. Although there was an over issue of the circulation, as it has turned out, an illegal issue of circulation, these notes have all been redeemed when presented, and no note holder has suffered any loss or is likely to suffer any loss. Of course, the consequence of redeeming all these notes out of the general assets of the bank is that it makes the matter so much worse for the unfortunate depositors. I do not see why we should not learn some useful lessons from these failures, and in the revision of the Bank Act, the Bill for which will be submitted in a few days, we may profit to some extent, by such things, but I do not anticipate that it will be found possible that we can, by any legislation, wholly guard against them. If bank cashiers, clerks and directors are going to conspire together to defraud the public, there is no human legislation which will prevent their doing it. The government have provided a safe place for these poor people to put their money, and if they had put their money there, although they would have had a smaller rate of interest, nominally, they would have been secured. It is not to be presumed that the government should be held responsible for a bank that is not a government savings bank. I ask my hon. friend not to assume that, because we now know so much of the rottenness of the bank, everybody could, or did, know it many months ago. Most of the things referred to were in connection with transactions that occurred in 1892, a period when the finances of the Dominion were in the hands of my predecessor, the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), but I would not have it understood that I agree with the view that such events involve any just reflection upon him. Reference has been made to a report from Mr. Courtney recommending that the bank be closed, but, if that report be read in connection with a report made at the same time, it will be found that Mr. Courtney did not contemplate the closing of the bank, because there was no machinery for the closing of the bank. What he did contemplate was that the government should close out its account. That is a fair interpretation, I think, of what Mr. Courtney meant, and it is only fair to state, in regard to my predecessor, that although he did not actually close out the account, he directed that the amount to the credit of the government should be reduced from time to time, and in the end the deposit there was not very much. My hon. friend has read from letters and reports from Mr. Courtney in the earlier portion of the history. I hope he will permit me to place on record another report which I desired Mr. Courtney to make at a more recent date. It is dated the 29th of January, 1900, and it is as follows :

Attention has recently been drawn to the report of the undersigned on the above bank prepared in the fall of 1892, and a question has been raised why the notice of the Minister of Finance was not again brought to the state of the bank immediately before its failure.

There was no doubt whatever of the weak condition of the bank when the report of 1892 was submitted, but according to ordinary methods applied on analysing the returns of the bank its condition had apparently been gradually improving and was much stronger in June, 1899, than in 1892, provided of course that the returns were honestly rendered. Such was the opinion of the public also, for the published quotations of its shares, that stood at 70-73 in 1895, rose to 93 in 1897 and in 1899 remained about 90.

The bank's immediate liabilities (notes, demand deposits, and government deposits) in May, 1892, amounted to $570,585. To meet this, it had immediately available assets of $170,436, or 29 per cent. In 1899, the immediate liabilities amounted to $592,391 and the immediately available assets $408,997, or nearly 80 per cent.

In the same way the deposits by the public after notice, increased between May, 1892, and June, 1899, by $694,098, while the current loans only increased in the same time $369,639, showing that the bank had strengthened itself by the difference.

The assets included under the heading 'Other Assets, decreased from $332,934 to $284,702, showing that the bank succeeded in partly realizing on this class of assets.

Under the circumstances there was no need of calling special attention to the position of the bank, provided that the returns rendered were correct. The returns were the only means the department had of forming any opinion as to its condition.

J. M. COURTNEY,
Deputy Minister of Finance.

January 24, 1900.

I quote that in justice to Mr. Courtney, in order that we may have before the House the reason why he did not deem it necessary to again call the attention of the Minister of

Mr. FIELDING.

Finance to the condition of the bank. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has spoken of the general reputation which this bank had in financial circles, and I have no doubt that what he says in that respect is absolutely correct. But I would ask the hon. gentleman to consider the other side of the question. Suppose that the Minister of Finance on hearing rumours as to the condition of this bank had been the means of causing the bank to be publicly discredited, what would have followed? Undoubtedly the bank would have immediately failed, and we would have been told that the bank might have pulled through, but for the fact that the government discredited it. It is a grave and serious thing, merely because there is current rumour as to the position of a bank—or even if it is information which the officials think well founded, as to the weakness of a bank—it is a very grave step to take for either the Minister of Finance or the deputy minister to give public expression to that opinion in such a way as to bring about the failure of a bank. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) to consider that view of the question as well as the one he presented. There is no objection to my hon. friend's motion, and I shall give due consideration and shall ask my colleagues to do the same, to the request for consideration for those people on other grounds than those of legal obligation.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 3, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I intended to move, in accordance with the notice, that hereafter government business should have precedence on Wednesdays, but I think to-morrow should be left to private members. When I gave this notice of motion, I had reason to believe that an important discussion which has been going on for some time would have been concluded last Wednesday, and that another stage would have been given to several Bills in the hands of private members. That debate has not been concluded, but I hope it will be to-morrow, and that we can advance several Bills a stage and refer them to committees. Therefore, I propose to amend the motion so that it shall read in this way :

That government orders have precedence on Wednesdays, immediately after questions to be put by members, from Wednesday, the 11th inst., inclusive, to the end of the session.

Motion agreed to.

I. C. R. PASSENGER SERVICE.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask for some information from the government. I find in the North Sydney Herald an item with regard to the train service on the Intercolonial Railway, which reads as follows :

It is understood that the new train service is to begin early in April. Besides the present express and accommodation service, there is to be an express train between the Sydneys and Halifax. The present express and accommodation train will arrive and depart the same hours as at present, but there will be an express train leaving Sydney at 11 a.m., and North Sydney at 11.45, for Halifax, stopping only at Grand Narrows, Orangedale and Point Tupper, Antigonish, New Glasgow and Truro. The same express will leave Halifax at the same hour as from Sydney, arriving at Sydney at 10 p.m. This train is to occupy only ten hours between Halifax and Sydney. There can be no doubt that this service will meet with public approval and will be far beyond a night train service. There will be a dining-car service attached to this train, so that there will be no time lost in stopping for meals.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways whether this information is in accordance with the facts. If not, is it his intention to take any steps to improve the passenger train service, which at present is most unsatisfactory? Trains are almost every day behind time, and a great deal of general dissatisfaction exists on the part of the travelling public. I hope the minister is in a position to assure the House that some improvement will take place at once. I might add that if it is not already decided upon to make the change, whatever change is made for the better should be made before the usual time for bringing the summer time-table into effect. The summer time-table is always delayed too long from being put into operation. It is hardly ever put into operation until after the days begin to shorten, which is altogether unreasonable. The summer time-table should be put into effect at the latest in May.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I had not the opportunity of hearing fully what the hon. gentleman has just read ; but I gather in a general way that he is referring to some newspaper statement to the effect that new arrangements are being made as an improvement upon the existing train service between Halifax and Sydney and North Sydney. I cannot speak now with confidence as to the details ; but I can assure the hon. gentleman and the House that the subject has been engaging my very careful consideration, that I have been in the closest communication with the officers of the railway upon the subject, and that we shall be able to make such arrangements as to train service, time and other matters as will be entirely satisfactory to the people who are interested in that particular branch of the Intercolonial service.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WHITE.

Mr. EDWARD G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) : Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I propose to call the attention of the House to certain correspondence laid on the Table yesterday, in connection with the dismissal of Lieutenant-Colonel W. W. White, general commanding officer of the 30th Battalion, Guelph.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Dismissal ?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, he was appointed to a staff course and then his name was struck off. The hon. minister can quibble as he likes, but I consider that this was a dismissal. It was a case that shows, to my mind at all events—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Order.

Mr. PRIOR. I was about to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as this discussion will no doubt lengthen out somewhat, I intend to conclude with the usual motion to adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman is within his rights, but I question, very much, the propriety of bringing up this matter, which is not urgent, and in interrupting an important debate with which the House is anxious to get through. I would suggest to my hon. friend not to delay business, but to let this matter stand until a more opportune time.

Mr. PRIOR. I cannot agree with the right hon. gentleman. I think that this is a matter of the greatest urgency, and one that has been put off now some two or three weeks. The papers were ordered by this House early in the session, and if it had not been for the dilatoriness of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, they would have been down long before this, and the debate would now have been over. The debate on the budget may go on a couple of weeks, and I think that this is a matter of the greatest moment, which should be proceeded with at once.

The correspondence proves to my mind, at all events, that politics enter very largely into the question of appointments made by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, and that a high-handed act of injustice has been done to a very efficient and deserving officer of the militia force of Canada. I think I shall be able to prove to the satisfaction of all right-thinking men that a heavy blow has been struck at the very foundation of our militia system, and I feel that unless some assurance is given by the Minister of Militia and Defence, or the Prime Minister, that a system different from the one now prevailing, or which seems to prevail, in the Militia Department, will be followed in the future with regard to the appointment of officers, in a very short time it will be almost impossible to get any independent, self-respecting man to take a commission in the militia. I trust that hon. members on both sides will give a patient hearing to what I have to say to-day—a better hearing than the militia matters usually get in this House—but, as the correspondence is pretty long, I will get through it as quickly as I can.

Before reading the correspondence, perhaps I had better explain that the staff course was started by the Minister of Militia and Defence at the Royal Military College, at Kingston, for the purpose of training certain officers to fit them for staff appointments. This was an idea welcomed heartily by every member of our militia force, and I may say that General Hutton was the very first officer who had ever seen fit to try and educate our militia up to a higher standard than has been the case in the past. On the 16th January of this year, Major General Hutton wrote to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, as follows :

The names of the following officers whom I propose to send to the Royal Military College for a four months course of instruction in staff duties are submitted for the information of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence :

Lieut.-Col. MacLaren, 13th Battalion.
 Lieut.-Col. Hodgins, R.O.
 Lieut.-Col. Allen Jones, 8th Royal Rifles.
 Lieut.-Col. White, 30th Battalion.
 Lieut.-Col. Roy, D.O.C.
 Lieut.-Col. Vince, Brighton Engineers.
 Major Galloway, 14th Battalion.
 Major Mutton, Q.O.R.
 Major Chinic, R.C.R.I.
 Captain Carpenter, R.C.R.I.
 Captain Crathern, 3rd Montreal Field Battery.
 Captain Sharples, 8th Royal Rifles.
 (Sgd.) E. T. H. HUTTON, Maj. Gen.,
 Commanding Canadian Militia.

On the original of that letter, I find that the names of Colonel White, 30th Battalion, and Colonel Vince, of the Brighton Engineers, are crossed out by the Minister of Militia and Defence, and the words: 'I do not approve of White and Vince,' were placed on that document, and signed 'F. W. Borden, Minister of Militia and Defence.'

Mr. PRIOR.

That letter was referred to the General Officer Commanding. The letter of General Hutton was written on the 16th January, and the minister disapproved of those two names on the 24th January. Next comes a copy of a telegram received by Colonel White from the Chief Staff Officer :

Ottawa, January 16, 1900.

Lieut.-Col. White, Guelph, Ont.,

Are you prepared to take staff course, commences first of February, lasts four months.

Chief Staff Officer.

On the 17th, the day after, Colonel White, being very proud of having been chosen to take part in a course of this kind, replied that he would accept, and wrote asking what the duties would be, what lodgings he would have, what uniform he would wear, &c. He immediately began to make preparations to leave his business, because he is in business, and it is very hard for most men to get away from business for four months. On the 22nd January, a letter was written to him, signed by the Chief Staff Officer, as follows :

To Lieut.-Col. White,

O. C. 30th Battalion, Guelph.

Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of the Major General Commanding, to notify you that you have been selected to undergo a course of instruction in staff duties, under the direction of the Commandant of the Royal Military College, Kingston.

You will be granted an allowance of $2.50 per diem whilst in attendance at the staff course, and transport expenses to and from Kingston. The Officer Commanding Military District No. 1 has been instructed to furnish you with a transport requisition.

You will report yourself to the commandant at the Royal Military College, Kingston, at 10 a.m. on the 1st of February, proximo.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant.

(Sgd.) B. H. VIDAL, Lieut.-Col.,

For Chief Staff Officer.

I may say that Colonel White never asked for the appointment. He was very much surprised when he got it, but the fact of the matter was, that the General Officer Commanding, was fully aware of his qualifications for the position. The general had seen the reports, no doubt, in the Militia Department, sent in by the district officer commanding, and also had personally and critically examined the work done by Colonel White in camp, and also in the manoeuvres that took place in Toronto. It may be asked : Did the General Officer Commanding obtain the endorsement of the Minister of Militia and Defence, before he notified Colonel White, and the other gentlemen that they were to take part in this course ? I may say at once that I do not believe he did; in fact, I know he did not. Nor do I believe it was necessary for him to do so, although I believe the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence said that he expected it. The General Officer, to my mind, and I think in the opinion of every officer of the militia in this House, is the only competent man to say whether an officer is qualified for a high position like that or not. As a rule, the Minister of Militia and Defence is not qualified, although I will not say that of the present Minister of Militia and Defence, because he has served many years on the force. Ordinarily, however, the Minister of Militia and Defence is not qualified to say whether an officer is fit for a certain position or not from his military knowledge. While saying this, I am fully in accord with what the right hon. the First Minister said the other day, in answer to a matter I brought up, concerning General Hutton, namely, that the Minister of Militia and Defence must undoubtedly be the head of the department, and that the General Officer Commanding must consider himself under the minister's orders. But, I do consider also, that the General Officer Commanding should be allowed to pick and choose the best men he can for any position he wants to fill. I do not think there is any more reason why the Minister of Militia and Defence should interfere in cases of discipline or in the choice of men for such positions, than there is for a colonel to interfere when a captain wants to appoint a sergeant to undergo a course, or take charge of a squad. The next thing that Colonel White knew, he received a telegram, dated the 26th of January, from Ottawa:

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 26, 1900.

Lt.-Col. White:

Regretted your nomination staff course cancelled; letter following.

CHIEF STAFF OFFICER.

Of course, Col. White was perfectly staggered when he received this telegram, as he had made all arrangements for leaving his business and going to Kingston for four months. On the 26th of January, the same day, the chief staff officer seems to have written to the district officer commanding of the district in which Col. White was:

(From the Chief Staff Officer to the D. O. C., M. D. No. 1.)

Ottawa, Jan. 26, 1900.

Lt.-Col. White, 30th Battalion:

Sir,—I am directed by the Major General Commanding to instruct you to inform the officer named in the margin that his name has been removed from the list of officers ordered to undergo the staff course at Kingston, owing to his having recently taken an active part in politics by public speaking, which renders it inexpedient to include him in a course for general staff.

I have, the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) HUBERT FOSTER, Col.,
Chief Staff Officer.

On the 27th, the next day, Col. White, of course, wrote inquiring why this letter had been sent him. His letter is as follows:

(From Lt.-Col. White to Chief Staff Officer.)

Guelph, Ont., Jan. 27, 1900.

Sir,—I was very much surprised on receipt of telegram yesterday from you stating that my course at Kingston was cancelled. The letter you mentioned as following, I have not received this p.m.

I have gone to considerable expense and trouble in making business arrangements to allow of my going, and after all this to be peremptorily struck off for no reason that I can in any way account for.

I am sure I have earned it if faithful service counts for anything, and I presume it was Major General Hutton's knowledge of my work that prompted him to select me, and the Minister of Militia to sanction it, as the Militia Order clearly demonstrates. I strongly urge that I shall be allowed to take the course, and that the Militia Order be not cancelled.

I have only mentioned the telegram to one friend. Judging from the many congratulations I have received from all over the province, when they hear of this will be very much annoyed and mortified, as I am myself.

I trust that this can still be arranged.

I have, the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) W. W. WHITE, Lt.-Col.,
Comdg. 30th Wellington Rifles.

I may say that Col. White is not right, with regard to this militia order, in saying that it clearly demonstrated that the Minister of Militia had sanctioned it. It used to be that all Militia Orders had to have the sanction of the minister; but General Hutton started a new series of orders. He had two sets of orders, those which he thought the minister ought to see and which he got him to sanction, and those which he thought it was not necessary for the minister to see. This is one made by General Hutton's own order. It seems to me that it is only natural that Col. White should feel outraged at this behaviour, after he had gone to all the trouble and expense of getting ready to take the course. It seems to me that, even if he did not fill the bill according to the opinion of the Minister of Militia, it would have been far kinder and better in every way to allow him to go on with the course, than to treat him in this manner. On the 29th of January, there is another letter from the chief staff officer to Col. White:

January 29, 1900.

Sir,—I am directed by the Major General Commanding to inform you in reply to your letter of the 27th instant, that the reason that your name has been removed from the list of officers selected for the staff course, is in consequence of its having been represented that you have recently taken a prominent part in politics.

The Major General considers that it is not in the interest of the public service that officers prominently identified with politics should be employed upon the staff, and that in consequence it is inadvisable to specially educate them for such positions.

I have, the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) HUBERT FOSTER, Col.,
Chief Staff Officer.

Lt.-Col. W. W. White, Guelph, Ont.

There is something extraordinary about that letter. It was first signed by Col. Vidal, but that name was scratched out and Col. Hubert Foster's name inserted. I cannot give any reason why that should have been done. Col. Vidal is in the same department. Now, of course, the General Officer Commanding takes the responsibility of saying what he did about politics being the reason for his treatment of Col. White. But I ask any sane man whether he thinks that General Hutton or Col. Fraser would dare to put down such a reason in a letter to an officer if he had not been ordered to do so by the minister, or if it had not been brought to his ears that the minister wished it to be done.

Mr. BERGERON. Authorized.

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, he must have been authorized in some way or other. The idea is, to me, preposterous that a gentleman in that position would have given such a reason as is given here unless the Minister of Militia had authorized him so to do. Why, neither General Hutton nor Col. Foster has anything to do with politics whatever. They know nothing about politics. In the first place, every general we have had has found politics the worst thing he had to wrestle with, and General Hutton, I know, was most anxious to have appointments made without any political influence whatever. Again, the letter says, 'it has been represented that you have taken a prominent part in politics.' Who represented it? Was it the Minister of Militia who represented it to the General Officer Commanding, or was it somebody who represented it to the Minister of Militia? The General Officer Commanding was not in Ottawa at the time, so it could not have been the Minister of Militia who notified the general personally; if he did it, he must have done it either by letter or through the mouth of somebody else. I will never believe that the general did it, as the saying is, off his own bat. The next letter is dated the 29th of January and is from the district officer commanding district No. 1, and is directed to Col. White. It says:

(From D. O. C., M. D. No. 1, London, Ont., to Lt.-Col. W. W. White, Comdg. 30th Battalion, Guelph, Ont.)

London, Ont., January 29, 1900.

Sir,—I am directed by the Major General Commanding to instruct you that your name has been removed from the list of officers ordered to undergo the staff course at Kingston, owing to your having recently taken an active part in politics by public speaking, which renders it inexpedient to include you for a course for general staff.

Mr. PRIOR.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. W. HOLMES, Lt.-Col.,
D. O. C., M. D. No. 1.

Now, that is the first time that 'public speaking' has been mentioned. The only occasion, Col. White says, when he can remember having spoken was at the Fat Stock Show banquet in Guelph, on the 7th of September. He was then called upon to reply to the toast of the army and navy. The reporter of the Globe, the official organ of the Liberal party, was sitting opposite to Col. White. If you will take the trouble to look up the report in the Globe of the banquet, you will find that the reporter does not say anything about Col. White talking politics. And I think that hon. gentlemen on this side, at any rate, will agree with me in saying that if Col. White had given half a chance in that direction, the reporter would have made the point and it would have been in the paper. The reporter does not mention politics, but Col. White says that he drew attention to the unsatisfactory manner in which the French press was talking about the Transvaal war. In speaking about the army and navy, he had a perfect right to do that. That is the only thing he remembers saying. He said nothing about the Minister of Militia or the government or about politics or about the government, but he did draw attention to the way the French press were talking about the Transvaal war. I do not know whether the influence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has anything to do with this insult put upon Col. White, but it is an extraordinary thing that in the Patrie of the 28th of December, an article came out containing this extract:

Only a few days ago a local Tory, Col. White, at a dinner in Guelph, said in his speech that there was in Canada a people as disloyal as the Boers, and that very probably England would very soon have to suppress the French element in Quebec.

That is what the Patrie said, and it looks to me very suspicious, as if it had something to do with the action of the Minister of Militia and Defence in regard to this gentleman. Let me say in the first place that the Patrie was astray altogether. Col. White never made use of such expressions at all. We can refer to dozens of men who were present at the time who will testify that he said nothing of the sort. In regard to his taking any offensive part in politics, I can only say that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) wrote a letter to Col. White stating that he considered him a consistent and an honourable Conservative; and I am told that that hon. gentleman feels rather sore about the way in which Col. White has been treated. Any one who knows the member for North Wel-ington. I think, will say that he would not try to screen Col. White if the latter had been talking treason against the government party. Now, Sir, the next letter I want to read to the House is one that Col. White sent in reply :

Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 29th instant, replying to mine of the 27th instant, in which you state that the reason my name has been removed from the list of officers selected for a staff course is in consequence of its having been represented that I have recently taken a prominent part in politics.

I deeply regret that such representations should have been so decisively acted upon without an opportunity being afforded to me, either directly or indirectly, of answering them. I conscientiously believe that I am blameless of any such charge, for while I am free to admit that I am a Conservative, and have given that party my support, I have not for some years taken any public part in elections, and I have never spoken politically at any public meeting or gathering.

I shall be greatly obliged if you put me in possession of the particulars of such representations, and the names of those making them, and I trust that in only fairness to me and to the selection of my name for the staff course you will do so.

(Signed) W. W. WHITE, Lt.-Col.,
Commanding 30th Battalion.

I think that is a manly letter, such as you would expect from such a man as Col. White. He simply asks for fair-play and justice, asking to be told the names of his accusers. I am told that up to the present moment no answer has been given informing him who made the representations. The next letter was from General Hutton to the Deputy Minister of Militia, dated 31st of January :

To the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Officers for the staff course were selected from among officers with whom I have personally come into contact, and whom I considered would be good officers to attend the course in question; and from among officers recommended by the district officers commanding, on being requested to make nominations.

We see, therefore, that this was no haphazard selection, these officers were chosen by General Hutton from his own knowledge of them, from the fact that he had seen them on duty, and also because they were recommended by the officers who knew them better still, the district officers commanding the districts in which they resided and held their commands. On the 31st of January I find a memorandum for the deputy from the private secretary of the hon. the minister, which is as follows :—

(Memorandum for the Deputy.)

The minister wishes you to inform the Major General that all names of officers proposed for the staff course should be submitted to and approved by the minister before such officers can be allowed to attend the course.

Be good enough to communicate with the Major General Commanding the Militia to this effect.

This was referred to the General Officer Commanding by the deputy minister, and the General Officer Commanding returned it to the deputy minister with the remark :

I shall be happy to comply with the wishes of the hon. minister.

Now, Sir, here is a most extraordinary letter that was written on the 1st of February to Col. White by Col. Foster, the chief staff officer :

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo, I am directed by the Major General Commanding to inform you that your name was removed from the list of officers to undergo the staff course at the Military College, Kingston, by the hon. the minister on the ground that you had of late taken some active part in politics on behalf of the opposition.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) H. FOSTER, Col.

Chief Staff Officer.

There we see that the chief staff officer made the assertion that Col. White's name had been removed by the order of the minister. The general officer avers that it was by the Minister of Militia and Defence, and of course the chief staff officer has to say it is by command of the general. Well, it seems to me there must have been some communication between the Minister of Militia and Defence and the chief staff officer, that he must have been given to understand that that was the wish of the minister. I ask again: Would the General Officer Commanding dare to send out such a statement unless he believed it to be true? Why, Mr. Speaker, that gentleman is an Imperial officer, he is thoroughly independent, and so is Col. Foster. They can both go back to England, one of them has gone back already. Neither of them are beholden to the minister for their salaries or otherwise; and I refuse to believe that General Hutton would have taken upon himself this responsibility unless he had authority for it. One of the greatest sources of strength to the empire in ruling and controlling the troops, both white and native, in conquered countries, and the people they have to deal with, is that a British officer's word is to be implicitly relied upon. That is one of the greatest sources of the strength of the British Empire. Will any hon. gentleman say that General Hutton, a man who has been honoured in the highest degree by Her Majesty by being made an A.D.C. to Her Majesty, would ever be guilty of such an unutterable meanness as that, for reasons of personal spite, he would write such a letter as that unless he was authorized by the Minister of Militia and Defence? Not only so, Sir, but that gentleman has left the country, and it is impossible to walk across to the department and ask him what were the facts of the case. We can only go upon our knowledge of what he, as an Imperial officer, would probably do. He is not here now. But I must say this, that at the time he wrote those letters he did not know that he would not be here at the present time, he had no idea that he was going to leave Canada. Now, that letter also shows, Mr. Speaker, a most extraordinary state of affairs. It says that Col. White has taken part in politics on behalf of the opposition. The only conclusion we can come to is that if he had taken part in politics on behalf of the government, not a word would have been said; but as he happened to be a Conservative, and they think he took part for the opposition, of course he must be bounced. I would ask whether it is right that militia officers should be brow-beaten and coerced into supporting the party. I do not care which party it is, that is in power unless they wish to be treated as Col. White and others have been treated. I think it is a monstrous idea that militia officers should be interfered with at all, unless they are in uniform. The first thing we know, there will be a reign of terror inaugurated in the militia force such as now reigns in the civil service, where half the men in the civil service are afraid to go out of doors to register their votes at an election for fear it will be believed that they are voting against the party in power. It is evidently a case of the wire puller versus efficiency. Now, here is another letter from the Major General Commanding the Militia to the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, dated 2nd of February, 1900:

With reference to your minute of the 31st ultimo, and to the nomination by me of Capt. E. E. F. Taylor, of the Governor General's Foot Guards, to undergo the staff course now commencing at the Royal Military College, I beg to observe, for the consideration of the hon. the minister, that the claims of all military districts have, as far as possible, been considered. It is very difficult, under existing circumstances, to find eligible officers who are suited for employment upon the staff and upon whom the staff course is likely to be profitable. The selections have been made by me from my personal knowledge of the officers themselves and upon the recommendations of officers commanding districts. Capt. Taylor has been very strongly recommended, and from my personal knowledge, he is likely to make a valuable staff officer. There are, moreover, four vacancies, and the money is therefore available for this officer. I recommend him, therefore, and hope that there may be no obstacle placed in the way of my carrying out my proposal.

The minister had put a note there:

Not approved for reasons already given.

(Signed) F. W. B., M. M. & D.

Then the general goes on:

In accordance with the wishes of the hon. minister Lieut.-Colonels White and Vince were removed from the list of officers selected by me for the staff course in consequence of their having taken a prominent part in party politics.

There again he makes the assertion:

I fully concur in the objection raised by the minister on this score that officers who take a prominent part in politics should not be selected for the staff course or for prominent positions on the Canadian general staff except when unavoidable or when it is advisable in the public interests.
Mr. PRIOR.

He qualifies it there:

The two officers in question have been informed accordingly.

(Sgd.) EDW. T. H. HUTTON, M.G.,
Commanding Canadian Militia.

Against that the hon. minister has seen fit to make the following note:

This is not the fact. The reasons as to Lieut.-Col. White are that he is too old, has passed from the active list, and is maimed. As to Lieut.-Col. Vince, he is on the reserve list.

(Sgd.) F. W. B.

On the 3rd of February, there is a letter from Col. White to the hon. Minister of Militia, in which he says:

Guelph, Ont., February 3, 1900.

To Hon. Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

Sir,—Having been selected by Major General Commanding to take staff course on the Royal Military College, Kingston, which selection was approved by you and published in Militia Orders, I cannot understand why you should have removed my name for the reasons stated, viz.: That it had been represented that I had of late taken some active part in politics on behalf of the opposition. I most emphatically deny the charge and from what has been intimated to me here, I believe the respectable Reformers here will also repudiate the charge and demand my reinstatement, but I do not consider that I have any right to put myself under an obligation to them in my demand for justice. Admitting that I have taken an active part in politics, I deny the right of any government to muzzle and control the political opinions of our citizen soldiers. When on duty and in uniform I submit that politics are debarred, and any one so transgressing immediately comes under the Queen's Regulations, Orders, and Militia Act. If this is establishing a precedent—then a very large majority of our officers will be wiped out, and I am free to say that a very large proportion before being restrained in their rights as citizens would resign.

I have no object in making political capital out of this. All I want is justice and to be reinstated in the course at once. I have only told two or three of my personal friends of the particulars, two being prominent Reformers. They are very indignant and would have taken action at once, but I told them in the meantime I was writing you. I cannot think that you, Sir, knowing me and having the interests of the militia of this country at heart as I believe you have, have done this except on gross misrepresentation being made, and undue influence. I therefore call upon you to at once remedy this mistake in the interests of the militia.

(Sgd.) W. W. WHITE, Lieut.-Col.,
Commanding 30th Battalion.

This is the letter of a high-minded man, in my opinion. He is jealous of his rights, as he has a perfect right to be, and he gives an emphatic denial to the statement that he has taken an active part in politics. Surely, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) can be classed amongst the respectable Reformers of that part of the country, and it is possible that the hon. gentleman was one of those that Lieut.-Col. White says showed great indignation. I agree with what Col. White says, and I am sure that every hon. gentleman will agree with him when he says that no government has the right to muzzle the militiamen in the expression of their opinions. The next letter is dated the 3rd of February, and it is from the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence to the Major General Commanding the Militia :

Ottawa, February 3, 1900.

The Major General Commanding the Militia.

I am instructed by the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence to call your attention to the fact that in an official communication written by Colonel Foster, under your instructions to Lieut.-Colonel White, that gentleman was informed that the minister's reason for striking his name from the list of those recommended for the staff course at the Royal Military College was that he had of late taken some active part in politics on behalf of the opposition.

I want the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, King's) to listen to the latter part of this letter :

I am further instructed to inform you that the reason assigned in this letter for the minister's action is entirely erroneous and misleading, and as the minister understands that Colonel Foster reported to you what actually did take place when the minister struck off Lieut.-Colonel White's name, he cannot understand why you should have attributed to him the reason you assigned. The minister then told Colonel Foster that he struck off Lieut.-Colonel White's name because he was obviously unfit for such an appointment, having only recently been retired from the lieut.-colonelcy of the 30th Battalion on account of his length of service, being too old and maimed.

The minister fails to understand why you should suppress his real reasons for the action he took, and substitute for them a different and incorrect one. He instructs me to express his wish that the letter written under your instructions should be withdrawn, and one written to Colonel White informing him of the true reasons for the minister's action.

(Sgd.) L. F. PINAULT, Lt.-Colonel,
Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. QUINN. To whom was that addressed ?

Mr. PRIOR. It is from the Deputy Minister of Militia to the Major General Commanding—General Hutton. The next letter was on the 7th of February, and is as follows :

February 7, 1900.

Sir,—Adverting to previous correspondence in regard to your name being removed from the list of officers selected to undergo the staff college course, I am directed by the Major General Commanding to inform you that the letter in which the reason assigned for the removal of your name was stated to be that 'you had taken an active part in politics on behalf of the opposition,' was sent in error, and is to be considered as withdrawn.

The hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence considered that the course should be restricted to younger men, and in consequence directed the removal of your name.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sd.) HUBERT FOSTER, Col.,
Chief Staff Officer.

To Lieut.-Colonel W. W. White,
Guelph, Ont.

Mr. Speaker, the coon came down. It was sent in error. This was in compliance with the deputy minister's letter to the general instructing him to send that letter to Lieut.-Col. White. I am certain that Major General Hutton would not have sent it if he had not been instructed to do so. The next letter is from the hon. Minister of Militia to Col. White. It is dated the 7th of February, 1900, and is as follows :

Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 3rd inst. and hasten to correct two or three misstatements, unintentional, I am sure, contained therein. I did not approve of the list which was published.

That is correct ; the hon. minister did not.

It was never submitted to me, the General Officer Commanding being under the impression, as he says, that it was unnecessary to do so. Secondly, I did not object to your name being on the list because of your politics. The reasons which I gave were, first, that you were no longer in active command, owing to your having served beyond the time limit. Secondly, you were, I thought, somewhat senior for a course of this kind ; and thirdly, because of the unfortunate fact that you were physically disabled by the loss of a portion of one hand.

These are the reasons which I gave, and they were not limited to your case.

I have much pleasure in saying, that I believe you have been a most efficient and useful officer ; but I recognize the fact that there are scores of young men coming up to whom the course provided at the Royal Military College would be of more advantage, looking at it from the standpoint of the militia than to yourself, as your active work therein has come to an end.

I hope you will be able to agree with me in this view, and believe that I have acted in the matter in what I conceive to be the best interests of the militia force at large.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) W. F. BORDEN.

Lt.-Col. W. W. White,
Guelph, Ont.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that amongst the papers brought down ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it is not. I will have it added. It was omitted.

Mr. PRIOR. I do not know whether it was amongst the papers brought down, but it is amongst the papers given to me, and it is brought in now. It is a copy of the original letter. I think the hon. minister will not deny that he wrote it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, certainly not.

Mr. PRIOR. Let us analyse this letter of the 7th of February a little bit. The hon.

minister says that he did not approve of the list. I agree that he did not approve of it. The next thing he says is :

I did not object to your name being on the list because of your politics.

Of course, when the hon. minister says that he did not object to Col. White's politics, I am bound to accept his statement. At the same time, I must believe what I see and what I read. What can be plainer than the statement of the General Officer Commanding when he stated in his letter that :

Your name was removed from the list of officers. . . . by the hon. the minister on the ground that you had of late taken some active part in politics on behalf of the opposition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) wants to give me the full benefit of the facts. That letter is sent by the direction of the General Officer Commanding.

Mr. PRIOR. Certainly it is ; all the letters are.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I never saw that letter nor heard of it until weeks after it was written.

Mr. PRIOR. I believe the hon. minister ; that may very well be. I do not think that I have stated that he did see it. I will read the letter altogether. It is from Col. Foster to Lieut.-Col. White :

February 1, 1900.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo, I am directed by the Major General Commanding to inform you that your name was removed from the list of officers to undergo the staff course at the Royal Military College, Kingston, by the hon. the minister, on the ground that you had of late taken some active part in politics on behalf of the opposition.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) H. FOSTER, Col.,
Chief Staff Officer.

Lieut.-Col. W. W. White,
Guelph, Ont.

The chief staff officer has undoubtedly no right to send any report out unless by direction of the General Officer Commanding, and when he has that direction, he always states that he writes : 'By direction of the Major General Commanding.' Before I get to the end of this correspondence, hon. gentlemen will see that there was good cause for that.

This question has narrowed itself down to a straight issue of veracity between the Minister of Militia and Defence and the General Officer Commanding. I shall not say much about that, but shall leave it to the House to decide. Hon. gentlemen have heard the letters read, and it is for the country and the House to decide as to which of these gentlemen they can place the most reliance in. The minister also says that Colonel White was a most efficient and useful officer. The minister must have known that, because for many years, Colonel White was in command of one of the best regiments in Canada. But, let us examine into the reasons which the minister gives for the dismissal of Colonel White from the staff course. He first says :

Col. White was no longer in command.

Well, I regret to say that that is not correct, for, as a matter of fact, Colonel White was in command of his regiment at the time he was asked to take part in that staff course.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Will the hon gentleman allow me ? I know that as a military man, and an hon. gentleman, as well as a member of parliament, he does not wish to misrepresent the case in any way. Technically, Colonel White was in command, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior), must know that Colonel White had been notified that his command terminated at a certain date, which was very near at hand. I cannot give the exact date, but it was within a few days of that time, so that Colonel White was practically on the reserved list.

Mr. PRIOR. That is quibbling.

Mr SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PRIOR. Colonel White was actually in command of his regiment.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. More than that, let me add this : Colonel White's term had been extended by me for two years, beyond the time when he should have been retired.

Mr. FOSTER. That was done in many cases.

Mr. PRIOR. It may be that the minister extended his time, but the minister has made the statement that Colonel White was no longer in active command, and that is not correct. The offer was made to Colonel White on the 16th January, and he was not retired until the 3rd of February, as any one can see, by looking at the Militia Orders. And, not only that, but there was another officer on that staff course who had been retired some months before. Colonel Hodgins, lately in command of the Governor General's Foot Guards, was retired from the command of his regiment in October last, and yet not a word was said about that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is he still on the list ?

Mr. PRIOR. He is still on the list, and went on with the course, so that the minister has no ground for argument on that point. The second reason given by the minister, was that Colonel White was too old. It has been said in the newspapers and elsewhere, that Colonel White is sixty years of age, when, as a matter of fact, he is only fifty-five years. He still has five years to serve, before he arrives at the age which they think is the right time to put us on the shelf.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He is fifty-seven years old.

Mr. PRIOR. I have it in Colonel White's own handwriting that he is fifty-five.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have it on the records of the department, that he is fifty-seven. He was born in 1843.

Mr. PRIOR. Colonel White ought to know; he was there when he was born.

Mr. FOSTER. He was born on the 4th October, 1843, according to the records.

Mr. PRIOR. That is what you say, but I have Colonel White's own handwriting for it.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister knows.

Mr. PRIOR. If he does, I have nothing more to say about it. Colonel White may have been born in 1845, but, anyway, he has four years more to serve. I have here the Canada Militia Gazette, which gives an account of Colonel White, and which says:

To Lt.-Col. White is mainly due the good showing of the 30th in the Canadian Military League matches. One year he had twelve teams entered. He is a member of the committee of the D. R. A., and a vice-president of the O. R. A., and chairman of the executive committee, and has never failed to attend the matches of these organizations with a goodly number of men from his battalion. The present efficient state of the 30th Battalion is a monument to the good work done by the retiring officer, who leaves a full complement of officers, nearly all of whom are qualified. He was selected by Major General Hutton to take the staff course at the Royal Military College, Kingston, a fact which clearly shows a recognition of his services.

Mr. McNEILL. Colonel White is ten years younger than Lord Roberts.

Mr. COCHRANE. They would turn Lord Roberts down if he was a Tory.

Mr. PRIOR. Here is a photograph of Colonel White in the Militia Gazette, and you can hardly find anywhere, a more athletic-looking man, whether he be fifty-five or fifty-seven. He is a strong, hearty, active man. Then, again, the officer who succeeded him in command of the regiment is, I am informed, only two years younger than Colonel White.

An hon. MEMBER. He is nothing like physically as strong.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he a Liberal?

Mr. PRIOR. He is a Major Mutrie, M.P.P.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. PRIOR. He is a good supporter of the present government, whether that has anything to do with it or not. Then, there is Colonel McLaren, of the 13th Battalion, who is also on the staff course, and he is only two years younger than Colonel White. And, there is Colonel Vidal, who has gone in command of the Canadian Regiment, to Halifax, and he is fifty-eight years old, and yet the minister thinks he is able to take command of an important station like that. Now, I do not want to say a word against Colonel McLaren, or Major Mutrie or Colonel Vidal, for they are all good men. But, when men of their age are appointed to such positions, it knocks the bottom out of the minister's arguments, that Colonel White is too old.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior), say that Major Mutrie's name was on the list to go on the staff course?

Mr. PRIOR. No, I say he succeeds Colonel White, in the command of his regiment. Any one who knows Colonel White, knows that he is a healthy and active man, good rider, and a good shot, can play baseball, and is, in fact, an athletic man all round. He is in the very prime of life. As my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill), said: What about Lord Roberts, and what about General Buller? Men who are well up to seventy years old, and yet it is thought that they can do pretty good service to the empire at the front.

The third reason given by the minister, was that Colonel White was physically disabled. Well, the only disablement he suffers from, is that he lost a finger or two, in 1869, but since then he has had command of one of the best regiments in Canada. He has carried out all his duties faithfully and energetically to the satisfaction of the district officer commanding, and of the inspecting general officer; he writes a beautiful hand, and, as I say, he shoots and rides well. How many British generals have been disabled much worse than Colonel White? Did they think Nelson was not fit to serve his Queen and country, because he lost an arm? Did they think that Lord Raglan was not fit to command, because he lost an arm? Did they think that Sir Archibald Allison was not able to command, because he also lost an arm? Why, when Sir Archibald Allison was a major, he lost an arm, but he has served his country through all successive ranks up to general for many years afterwards, and yet the Minister of Militia and Defence thinks that Colonel White should be prevented from taking the staff course because he lost two fingers.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I doubt if they sent Sir Archibald Allison to school.

Mr. PRIOR. Why, he has a far higher service than at school. He has been at the head of a brigade since he lost an arm. It appears to me that the reasons the minister gave for retiring Colonel White, are mere subterfuges, and are not the right reasons. Let me see what the minister said when the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) asked a question from the minister the other day, as to his reason for this course. On page 1156 of the Hansard, he said :

Of the officers named in paragraph 3, Lt.-Cols. Vince and Col. White were removed from the list chiefly on account of age, and because they had retired from active command.

Mark you, the minister does not say that was the only reason, but he says that was the chief reason. Now, that opens a world of doubt to my mind, and I think it will to a good many other gentlemen, as to what the real reason was. The last letter I have to read, is a copy of one from Colonel White, sent to the Minister of Militia and Defence, as follows :

Guelph, February 9, 1900.

To the Honourable
The Minister of Militia,
Ottawa.

Sir,—In reply to your letter to me of the 7th instant, I regret that I cannot agree with you in your view or in your statement of facts. It is strange that at this late date reasons are now given for the removal of my name so much at variance with those formerly given to me. Of your reasons, I shall only say, of the first, that at the time of the removal of my name I was in active command; of the second, that several years yet lie before I attain the age limit; and of the third, that the so-called physical disability mentioned by you existed many years prior to my appointment to the command of the battalion, and it is strange that such should now be a bar to a position of which the duties could in no measure exact of that particular member.

The matter is not in any way cleared up to my satisfaction, and I still demand justice and satisfaction.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. W. WHITE, Lt.-Col.

This was not brought down. That is all the correspondence. Mr. Speaker, that I could get, either from the Minister of Militia or from Col. White. There is one thing certain to my mind, that the reasons given were not the only reasons. We can only surmise what the real reasons were; but I think you will see from the correspondence that the General Officer Commanding was away, so that the Minister of Militia could not have spoken to him. But did not the Minister of Militia speak to the chief staff officer? I think you will find in the letter I read some time ago that he says himself that he had spoken to Col. Foster. If he did, did he not give any reasons besides the ones he gave to Col. White? Did he only say that it was because of age or because of lameness that Col. White was retired? I cannot believe that for one moment. I believe he must have said something to Col. Foster—

An hon. MEMBER. About politics?

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, about politics; and I think I can challenge the hon. minister to get up and state that he never said to the chief staff officer that Col. White had been taking part in politics and was therefore not fit. I must accept the minister's statement, I suppose, but I challenge him to get up here and tell the House and the country that he never told Col. Foster anything of that sort. I have seen in the papers some remarks that have been made in another place by the Minister of Justice, and I would like to draw attention to them. He said :

Mr. PRIOR.

I venture to assert that Col. Foster will not say, if he is asked, that he had had any communication whatever with the minister upon the subject.

We see that the minister states himself that Col. Foster had. The Minister of Justice said further :

He was not directed by the minister. He received his instructions from the Major General.

We see that he received his instructions from the minister in the first place, that he sent them to General Hutton in Halifax, and that, then, General Hutton sent his instruction to Col. Foster to write to Col. White. Then, the Minister of Justice says :

It was the Major General who professed to have had this communication with the minister, and the Major General put these words into Col. Foster's mouth for the purpose of communicating them to Mr. White.

The hon. gentleman was wrong when he made these statements. He also stated that Col. White was over sixty years of age and a cripple. I think I have disposed of that pretty fully. He also said :

I venture to say that if a man were not hostile and malignant in his feelings against the minister, even if he had said it, he would not have put such words into a communication to a party to be removed.

Well, Sir, I can only say I think it is pretty contemptible for any minister to get up and accuse a gentleman who is absent of doing it maliciously. On page 364 of Hansard, the hon. acting Minister of the Interior stated :

Well, Sir, I need not leave it to this House, but I leave it to the militia force of Canada, whom I confidently believe will say that never since the Militia Department of Canada was instituted have they found a minister at its head freer from politics and freer from political considerations in administering the department than is the present Minister of Militia.

On page 358 the minister himself stated, when I brought up the matter relating to General Hutton :

As a matter of fact, I think it would be difficult to find a force anywhere where politics in the worst sense of the word has had less to do with such force. I may say this at once, and I challenge contradiction, that so far as the present government is concerned, politics has been excluded from the administration of the militia.

Well, Sir, we heard a good deal last session about the large contracts which had been given in the Militia Department without tenders being called for; and any hon. gentleman who looks at the Auditor General's Report this year will find that thousands and thousands of dollars have been given in the same way to friends of the party in power by that department. It reminds me of a story which Gen. Roberts used to tell about an Afghan who was once captured outside the camp, and who was in such a dirty state that the general thought it necessary for the safety of the camp that he should be washed before he was brought in; and two Tommies were told off to take him in hand and clean him. They stripped him, and applied a good deal of soap and water to him with hard brushes. After working away for a couple of hours, they went to their captain. 'Well,' said the captain, 'what is it, men?' They said, 'We have worked on that Afghan chap till our arms ached, but after scrubbing all that time, we came upon another suit of clothes.' I think that applies to the Minister of Militia. We found out a good deal last session, and tried to scrub him clean but I think we have come upon another suit of clothes this session.

I wish to refer to another matter, that is, a statement made to several parties by a gentleman holding a high position—in fact, a member of the government—that the General Officer Commanding had given politics as a reason for the express purpose of putting the minister and the government in a hole, and that he did it maliciously. I must say, that is a dastardly attempt to blacken the character of an absent man. No gentleman has a right to make such a statement, which I can only characterize as contemptible and utterly unworthy of a man holding the position that hon. gentleman does.

That is all I have to say about this correspondence; but I would say this: If the Minister of Militia, as these letters seem to prove, has been hasty and ill-advised in his action, let him stand up like a man and acknowledge the corn. Let him say at once that he has done wrong, but will never do it any more. Let me remind him of the old proverb, that there is more joy over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety-nine just persons who need no repentance. I for one, and I am sure every other hon. member of this House, will be very glad indeed to hear the truth of this matter, and I hope that although the hon. minister has made a mistake, it will be a lesson to him for the future. I can only say that unless some explanation is given, all confidence in the Militia Department will be lost and demoralization will set in amongst the militia force of Canada. There is not a man in this country who is not a better citizen and a better man all round for joining the militia, be he either young or old, but it must not be expected that because a man dons Her Majesty's uniform and puts himself under the orders of his superior officer and the Minister of Militia, he is to relinquish all right to take part in politics or express his political views. Why, Mr. Speaker, every drone, every loafer, I might say, in Canada enjoys that right. How much more willingly then should it be granted to men who give so much of their time and money to fit themselves to uphold the honour of this country when the occasion offers. In what position would I be, in what position would any member in this House, who is in the militia, be if the hon. minister's dictum were to prevail. How about the hon. member for Victoria, N.S., (Mr. Bethune); how about our well-known friend from King's, N.B., (Mr. Donville), and our hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), and our esteemed friend from London (Mr. Beattie)? What would become of the biggest man in the lot, the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), if we were supposed to sit quietly and never say a word about politics just because we happen to be in the militia force? Let me say that our brave men who have gone to South Africa, and those who volunteered to go and are ready to leave when called upon, have done more to raise Canada to the proud position she now holds in the eyes of the world than all the wire-pulling politicians in this country. I would, therefore, appeal to the hon. Minister of Militia to give us the assurance that in the future merit and efficiency will be the only stepping stones to promotion in the force, and that the voice of the wirepuller and partisan politician will no more be heard within the walls of his department. I would appeal to hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House to try and abstain from interfering in militia matters. If they have to work politics into some department, let them go to some other than the Militia Department. Then, and not until then, shall we have a militia as it should be and as every militiaman wishes it to be, the pride of Canada and of everybody connected with it. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend has taken nearly an hour to wrestle with a subject which should have been disposed of in ten or fifteen minutes, for that certainly was all the time it deserved or required. The hon. gentleman has given another exemplification of the mountain in labour bringing forth a ridiculous mouse. In his desire to show us that he knows something outside of militia matters, my hon. friend ventured to quote from the proverbs, but I can assure the House that he knows as little about the present administration of the militia with reference to politics as he has shown he knows about the proverbs. He told us that the whole militia fabric was in danger, that a severe blow has been administered to the entire force. Why? Simply because the Minister of Militia, in the exercise of his rights and his duty, saw fit to exclude an officer who is fifty-seven years of age, and who is maimed besides, having lost one hand—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE—from attending a staff course at Kingston College, which in England is limited to officers under the age of thirty-five. And that same officer should have been, and would have been, put on the retired list two years ago if it had not been for my own clemency. To such straits has my hon. friend been driven in order to bring a charge against me of having introduced politics into the militia. My hon. friend saw fit to refer to the gallantry of those men and their glorious deeds whom Canada has had the honour of sending to South Africa to defend the empire, and I appeal confidently to what I have done in connection with the sending of these same contingents for proof positive that no political considerations whatever have influenced the department or the government in matters pertaining to the militia of Canada. Let me now come to the facts. I am charged with having removed, for political reasons, Col. White's name from the list of those who were chosen by General Hutton to attend the staff course at Kingston. I repeat what I have committed to writing, and what will be found among the papers laid on the Table; that there is not a single word of truth in the statement that that gentleman's name was removed from the list because of his politics. Here is exactly what happened. General Hutton saw fit to select, without reference to me, a number of gentlemen to be sent to Kingston for a staff course. Well, the sending of those men to Kingston involves a charge upon the public treasury. Whatever views the General Officer Commanding may have with reference to matters of discipline, purely and simply, I do not care, but this I do know, that, as the head of the Militia Department, I am held accountable to parliament and the people for the expenditure of every dollar by that department. Such being the case, and the sending of these men involving the expenditure of public money, it was the first duty of the General Officer Commanding to submit to me the list of those he had selected for my approval. He saw fit not to refer the matter to me, but while I was away he published his general orders in the newspapers, giving a list of the men selected and notifying them to go to Kingston. This he did without asking me whether I approved the list or not.

Mr. PRIOR. You had authorized the expenditure.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, long ago. When I returned Mr. BORDEN (King's).

to Ottawa. I found that list published. I asked to see the list, and it was brought to me; and, in the exercise of what I considered my right and my duty, I struck from the list the names of two men, Col. White and Col. Vince for the reasons which I have stated in the paper which is to be found in the correspondence laid on the Table of the House. I sent for my deputy minister, ran my pen through the two names, giving the reasons which I have given here and that have been given over and over again—age, being on the retired list, and, in the case of Col. White, being maimed. Now, my deputy, I understand, informed the chief staff officer, Col. Foster. I do not know what he said to Col. Foster; I am quite certain, however, that he did not say anything to that officer with reference to these gentlemen's politics; I do not think he knew what their politics were. I certainly did not say one single word, to my deputy with reference to the politics of either gentlemen. Col. Foster, after communicating with Col. Hutton, came in to see me, and I repeated to Col. Foster the reasons which I had given to my deputy; and I never gave Col. Foster any other reasons, officially, for the course I had taken, than the reasons I have stated here; and neither Col. Foster nor any one else had any right to impute to me the reasons which were communicated to Col. White. The reasons which impelled Gen. Hutton and Col. Foster to take the course which they saw fit to take I do not know; but I make the statement here solemnly that I never gave the reasons—the political reasons—with reference to these gentlemen, however much I might be justified by the facts, which I may state before I take my seat, in doing so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it may be wise, in this connection, to disclose to you, Sir, and to the House the condition of things which I discovered to exist—which I accidentally discovered to exist in connection with this very matter. It will hardly be believed that the first intimation I had of the existence of the official letters which have been read here to-day which were sent from my department to Lt.-Col. White—for they had never been submitted and I had never given consent to such letters being written, and had absolutely no knowledge whatever that such a letter was going to be written or had been written—was then my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) came to me with the letter which Col. White had sent to him. That was the first intimation I had that such a letter—

Mr. FOSTER. Which letter does the hon. minister refer to?

Mr. FOSTER. Appointing Col. White?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, the letter notifying Col. White that his name had been stricken off the list of those to take the staff course because he had taken part in politics. The first intimation I had that such a letter had been written was when my hon. friend from North Wellington came and showed me the letter. I was naturally very much surprised and very indignant. I sent my private secretary at once to Col. Foster for a copy of the letter, and informed him that he must come to my office. I was still more astonished when my secretary returned and said: 'Col. Foster informs me that he cannot give you the letter.' 'Then,' I said, 'tell Col. Foster to come here himself.' My secretary answered, 'I suggested that to him, and he told me that he could not come himself.' I asked why, and my secretary replied, 'he says there has been an order issued by the General Officer Commanding, that no member of his staff shall come to the office of the Minister of Militia or show the Minister of Militia any correspondence which has passed out of the military branch without the consent of the commanding officer.' I think it is about time that this House and the country should understand the condition of things that existed in my department.

Mr. FOSTER. The House lost the last part of the hon. minister's sentence. He said that no correspondence was to be sent to the minister without—what?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That no staff officer should come to me at my call without the consent of the general, and that no correspondence emanating from or received by the military branch should be shown to me without the general's consent. And I may add to that, that even after an interview permitted by the general between the staff officers and myself they were to repair immediately to his sanctum and unbosom themselves and tell him all that had taken place. Now, Sir, I think you can understand how it was that this correspondence was going on with Col. White without being submitted to me and without my having the slightest idea what was going on. I have the letters here. I was astounded beyond measure. I asked Col. Foster if he was prepared to give me the order. He said the order was made verbally in the presence of Col. Aylmer and himself. I said: 'Col. Foster, I will give you an opportunity of putting that in writing.' I wrote to Col. Foster and to Col. Aylmer and I have their letters here in which they acknowledged that the condition of things which I have just stated existed. Perhaps I had better read the letters:

Ottawa, February 3, 1900.

My dear Mr. Borden,—In reply to your inquiry of this instant, I may state, as I stated to you personally, and of which I am informed the general, that about a year ago General Hutton told both Col. Foster and myself that we were on no account to approach you, or to communicate with you unless we had his permission, and further, that whenever we did approach you, either on our own account or officially, we were to inform him of all that happened at any interview with you, and further, we were not to sign documents that were to be forwarded to you at any time when the general was here at headquarters.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) M. AYLNER.

The Hon. F. W. Borden, M.D., Minister of Militia,
Ottawa.

This is Col. Foster's letter:

Ottawa, February 3, 1900.

My dear Mr. Borden,—In reply to your letter of this afternoon, I fear I can add nothing to what I told you to-day.

As far as I can remember (after the lapse of nearly a year) about the matter, the facts are that the general informed Col. Aylmer and myself that he did not approve of our interviews with yourself without his knowledge, and said that if sent for by you when he was in the office, we were to come to him and so inform him, and ask his leave before going to you, and also to inform him on our return of what it was you desired to speak to us about.

I cannot tell you at all the date of this conversation, I am afraid, and my recollection of it is naturally somewhat dim now. The fact alone remains clear in my mind, and I acted on it this day without any hesitation.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) HUBERT FOSTER.

Now, when Col. Foster came into my office, he said to me that he was acting under the order of the general in sending these letters. He did not say, and has never yet said, that he would have written these letters himself had he not been instructed to do so. In another place, criticism has been made which would involve the removal from office of Col. Foster for the part which he had taken in this matter. I cannot say at this moment very much upon that point. It is a question certainly that demands consideration; but I am bound to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think, in view of the terrorism which has been inspired in the Military Department by the general, in view of the fact that Col. Foster was an Imperial officer, and that he knew that his very life, in a military sense, and his whole future depended upon the report of General Hutton, I am inclined to take the most lenient view possible of his conduct.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has seen fit to eulogize Col. White. He has read a letter which I wrote Col. White, and which I thought it was only fair to Col. White that I should write. Col. White, I believe, has been a fairly good officer of the militia, so much so that this department, this terrible Grit government, this awful Grit minister, who is prostituting, according to the hon. gentleman, the Department of Militia to his own party ends, this very Grit minister has extended Col. White's term for two years longer than it should have been. Col. White ought to have been satisfied with the treatment he received. Col. White, after he received these letters, came to Ottawa and came to see me, and I regret to say that Col. White lowered himself very much in my estimation by telling me, as he did, that he would be willing to keep this matter quiet provided I would let him quietly return and take his course at Kingston. I told him that whatever else we might do in the Department of Militia, we did not propose to run it quite upon those lines. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman, in connection with Col. White, has referred to the fact that Lord Roberts is nearly seventy years of age. But can the hon. gentleman see any analogy whatever between the two cases? In the first place, Col. White is not General Roberts, and in the next place, there is no question, so far as I know, of General Roberts having to take a staff course at Kingston or anywhere else. We are talking now of the plain question of spending the public money of this country in educating for a staff course men bordering upon sixty years of age, or whether we should not rather select the brightest and best young men of the country who have got thirty or forty years ahead of them in the militia service, whether we should not spend our money upon them so that the country will get back all and more than the money it has invested. The question is whether we should send to the staff course men who are going out of the active command of the militia the next day, men who at the very best cannot spend more than two or three years of their life in the militia service. I am prepared to stand upon the ground that I have taken on this matter; I am not afraid of any adverse criticism in this House or in this country with reference to the stand which I have taken.

The hon. gentleman has said that there was another officer included in the list of those which General Hutton had prepared, of men to be sent for the staff course at Kingston, who was on the reserve list, Col. Hodgins, of Ottawa. That is true. I was aware that Col. Hodgins was on the reserve list; but Col. Hodgins is a young man, certainly not over forty years of age, a man residing in the very heart of the country, near the headquarters staff, a man who, after having taken that course at Kingston, could be utilized at Ottawa if required, or could be sent out to any part of the country to do staff duty; more than that, he is an excellent officer, one of the best in the whole country.

Now, the hon. gentleman has seen fit to introduce that bete noire of himself and many of his friends into this discussion, my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. He sees here some awful conspiracy on the part of the friends of the Minister of Public Works to get this man White taken off the list. Now, Sir, I can assure the hon. gentleman that he can rest perfectly easy. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has no knowledge whatever of this matter, and I doubt very much if he ever heard the name of Col. White.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Now, there is just one more word that I would say. If I had seen fit, as I did not, to search for a political reason for refusing to allow Col. White to take this course, I would have had no difficulty in finding one. It would not be merely a political reason, it would be a reason of a much more extensive import. I find that although Col. White stated in his letter that he never spoke at a public meeting, I have reports of two speeches which he made at two different public meetings within the last six months.

Mr. PRIOR. Political meetings?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, would the hon. gentleman call a banquet of young Conservatives a political meeting? Col. White is reported in the following terms as having spoken on the 29th of November, 1899:

Referring to the Canadian contingent for South Africa, Col. White said:

'The men left Canadian shores amid cheers, but the government seemed unwilling to send a force to the scene of warfare until their hand was forced by the people of Canada. It was a disgrace that the soldiers of Canada should be dumped—'

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. From the Guelph Daily Herald, of November 30.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thought the hon. gentleman was quoting from the Governor General's speech down in Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (reading)—

—it was a disgrace that the soldiers of Canada should be dumped on South African shores to subsist on 25 cents, while the soldiers from other colonies received more than double the amount.

That was one of Col. White's speeches. Then, not satisfied with that effort, I find that on the 12th of December, he spoke again, and I find him thus reported in the Advocate of Guelph, I believe an independent organ. It is headed: 'Annual banquet of the Guelph Fat Stock Club on Thursday evening.'

Mr. FOSTER. Is that a young Liberal club?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman will see that this is a non-partisan society. Col. White was not only prepared to air himself in the congenial atmosphere of a Conservative banquet at Guelph, but he was prepared to introduce politics, or something far worse, into the banquet of the Guelph Fat Stock Club. These are the terms in which he spoke:

Col. White made a smart address, and spoke of the Canadian contingent. He spoke of the Boers in South Africa having been preparing for war for years, and warned the people of Canada that there was in Canada a similar disloyal element, whom we yet might have to suppress in French Quebec.

I can only say that had I known—I did not know it; I have been looking up Col. White's record since all this fuss has been made—had I known and been able to establish the fact, as I believe it to be a fact, that he had given utterance to sentiments of that kind, in a country like this with a mixed population, I should not have hesitated one moment to take the step of asking him to retire from the active service of the Canadian militia.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). I suppose the hon. minister knows that Col. White absolutely denies that he said any such thing?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is true. I do not know anything about the case, but I know that Col. White positively states that no such speech ever was made by him. Of course, being somewhat of a partisan myself, I might consider that a speech was non-partisan. I heard the speech from which the hon. minister has quoted, as published in the Guelph Herald. I heard that speech at the banquet in honour of my hon. friend Mr. Kleopfer. That, of course, was a party affair. I do not remember these sentiments, although they may have been expressed.

Mr. GIBSON. You forgot your address to the Indians.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This I do know, that I never heard a better response on behalf of the Canadian volunteers than Col. White made on that occasion.

Mr. McNEILL. Does the hon. minister say—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. Minister of Militia has the floor.

Mr. McNEILL. Does the hon. minister say what paper he quoted that from? I did not catch the name.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is from the Advocate of Guelph. Of course, if my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) says that he knows it is not true—

The PRIME MINISTER. He does not say that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Now, a single word, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion. I repeat what I have already said that the reasons for removing these names from the list were that these gentlemen, so removed, were on the reserve or retired list, they were too old for the staff course which is limited, in England, to 35 years, and in the case of Col. White, there was the special reason of his being physically unfit.

Mr. MONTAGUE. He is not physically unfit.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well, he was maimed by the loss of a hand.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is he not one of the best shots in Canada?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is another thing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as the administration of the militia is concerned—

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence does not choose to give up the floor, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) has no right to interrupt him.

Mr. McNEILL. I will ask the hon. gentleman to allow me.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. minister has not yielded the floor.

Mr. McNEILL. I would ask the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, If the hon. gentleman who has the floor does not sit down, no other hon. gentleman has the right to interrupt him.

Mr. McNEILL. I have to thank the hon. gentleman for his courtesy, that is all.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am only going to say a word more.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the hon. minister finishes, I would like him to take up the case of Col. Vince.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In the case of Col. Vince I gave exactly the same reasons, except that in Col. Vince's case he was not maimed, but he had been for some time on the reserve list and he had passed the age when, I think, a man can profitably take the staff course. These are the only reasons in Col. Vince's case. If there are political reasons—perhaps there are—I do not know what they are, only this, that I have heard that Col. Vince has been removed from office under the government for undue political interference.

Mr. FOSTER. From what office?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think he was a postmaster.

Mr. FOSTER. You give that as a reason, do you ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, I do not ; not at all. I was not aware of it at the time. One word in conclusion, and it is that I challenge, during the time I have administered the affairs of the Department of the Militia, any one to show that I have been actuated, chiefly, or to any great extent, by political considerations in the administration of that department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Chiefly, or to any great extent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I say without the slightest hesitation if the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) desires to hear it, that, other things being equal, in the selection of officers and in the selection of men, upon whom favours are to be conferred, I am prepared, in every case, to give the preference to the friends of my own political party. For eighteen years, yes, for twenty-five years, in this country, the militia has been administered by Conservative governments, and I have failed yet to find that we were not prepared to take what happened to us kindly and quietly, so much so, that I hazard the statement that, up to 1896, of the officers of the Canadian militia, 90 per cent of them were Conservatives. I am sorry to say that this condition is not very much changed at the present moment. As my hon. friend has made some reference to the Auditor General's Report, I wish to say, in general terms, in reference to the contracts which are made with my department, that, in every case, wherever I can do it fairly and justly, with due regard to the public exchequer, I am prepared to give the preference to my own political friends. I do not think that anybody expects anything different, and if they do, they will expect something which never happened in Canada before. We are governing this country, I suppose, by party. Governments would be fools which did not do justice to their own political friends. I propose to do justice to my own political friends, and I maintain that nothing more than justice has been done to the Liberals of Canada in the administration of the Militia Department up to the present moment.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) one thing. Of course, he is not bound to answer, but, I think, he ought to do it on this occasion. It is to define his position, or rather to define the position which he considers officers—I am not speaking of anything now but officers of the militia, because the question the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) brought up was that—should take. I would like to ask him whether, because they take a part in politics he, for one moment, contends that the department ought in any way to notice it, or to interfere with it. I think it is not unreasonable to ask the minister to define his position because that is the gravamen of the motion, although not the gravamen of all the hon. gentleman seems to say in his conclusion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it is a pretty good answer to appeal to the fact, that although I found perhaps 90 per cent of the officers of the Militia Department Conservatives, that not one single officer has been removed from any commission or position which he held because of politics.

Mr. TISDALE. That is not the question.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is my first answer, and my second answer is, that so far as the militia at large is concerned, I certainly accord to every officer the most absolute freedom to indulge in any political views he wishes, to attend meetings and speak at meetings, to do anything he would do if he did not hold a commission, so long as he conducts himself honourably as a gentleman. I will say, however, that I do think that when men are to be appointed to staff positions such as these in the headquarters staff at Ottawa, or in permanent positions throughout the country, or receive annual salaries from the government; that they are in a different position from the ordinary militia officer, and that those men should exercise due caution with reference to politics. That is my answer.

Mr. THOS. BEATTIE (London). I am somewhat surprised at the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden). It is a new doctrine in my experience, and if carried out it would simply do away with all discipline in our militia force. The minister states that Col. Foster and Col. Aylmer had a perfect right to go to him direct instead of to the general. If I understand the matter aright, the General Officer Commanding is the chief officer of our militia force, and no subordinate officer should be allowed to go to the minister except through him, nor should any document reach the minister except through his hands. In my opinion the general has a right to know every communication that is sent from a junior officer to the Minister of Militia. An officer has no more rights in this respect than a private in the ranks. The rule of discipline is, that if a private in the ranks wishes to communicate with his commanding officer, he first goes to the sergeant with his complaint, then the sergeant goes to the captain, and then the captain to the colonel. That is the proper course, as I understand it, and the same rule should apply to all officers under the general no matter what their rank. The general should be consulted on every document that goes to the Minister of Militia from any member of the force. I may mention that a short time ago, Capt. Carpenter of the Royal Canadian Regiment was ordered to South Africa. Lt.-Col. Vidal sent him a despatch from Ottawa direct instead of sending it to the District Officer Commanding, Col. Holmes, and Col. Holmes called Col. Vidal to task and Col. Vidal very properly apologized for not having sent the communication through the District Officer Commanding. I would not have spoken in this debate were it not for the remarks made about Col. White by the Minister of Justice in the Senate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BEATTIE. Well, remarks made by the Minister of Justice in another place. Now, I have been in many camps with Col. White, and I will say that a better specimen of an officer, a gentleman, and a soldier does not stand in the militia force of Canada to-day. He is a splendid looking man, nearly six feet two inches tall, a good rider and a first-class shot, and although he lost a few of his fingers, that happened many years ago, long before he was a major or a colonel, and it does not in any way impair his usefulness. If Col. Foster wrote the letter he did to Col. White, I consider that he did something that he should be called upon by this House to account publicly for, because if this thing is allowed to go on it will simply ruin our militia force. Col. Foster is a British officer, and he would not dare to write in that manner to any officer in Great Britain. If he did, he knows what the consequence would be. I do not believe that he ever wrote that letter without having some reason for doing so. In justice to Col. White, I believe that every Conservative officer, and every Conservative man in the militia force would be justified in resigning until a satisfactory explanation is made by Col. Foster.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I desire to offer a few remarks upon this question. The first I knew of any difficulty arising between the Department of Militia and Col. White, was when I received a letter from Col. White outlining to me what he considered the injustice to which he was subjected. Col. White was a resident of my riding for thirty years. He discharged the duties of returning officer at one of my elections. He is a very decent, respectable man and always has been. I felt deeply annoyed myself when I got the letter from Col. White, because I confess that I believed that if the contents of his letter were true he was not properly treated. I went to the Militia Department and laid the letter before the minister, and I must say that although I have been in Ottawa and attended parliament for eighteen years. I never in my life saw a man more indignant than was the minister, when he read the contents of that letter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. No doubt he would show indignation to you.

Mr. McMULLEN. That showed very clearly to my mind that the minister never authorized, nor was he responsible for the contents of that letter. The minister immediately sent for Col. Foster, and Col. Foster came to his office, and I was an eye-witness of all that took place. I can state here that every word the minister said with regard to that interview is true. Before I left the office I said to the minister: 'Were I in your position, I would dismiss—the words I used were, I would "bounce"—Col. Foster within twenty-four hours for the action he took with regard to that letter, or else the government would have my resignation.' I then wrote to Col. White with regard to the explanation I had received from the minister. He came down here and I got him an interview with the minister. I am satisfied, from all that I have gathered, that the minister was not at all responsible. Whoever penned that letter or whoever authorized that letter stating that Col. White was not allowed to take the staff course, because he was a political partisan. I am positive the minister was not a party to it, nor was he aware at the time that any such letter was ever written.

It is another proof going to show that Major General Hutton did not leave Canada a moment too soon, for the prosperity and peace and harmony of the Militia Department. From the moment I probed this affair to the bottom, I felt satisfied that General Hutton was not the man for the position he occupied, and from the manner in which the minister has been irritated and worried during the residence of that man here, I do not wonder that he must feel considerable relief in having around him his officers subject to his direction, rather than being hampered by Major General Hutton in the way the minister has described. Col. White is without doubt a very respectable man; he has been a good citizen, and an old resident of the county of Wellington. He discharged his duty as commander of the Wellington battalion, creditably, and I may say that his time was extended for two years on my personal request to the minister. I made the application out of personal regard for Col. White, because, while he is a very strong opponent of mine, he is a very respectable man, and although he did anything and everything he could against me properly, he did not, I believe, do anything against me improperly. He is not a man who would lend himself to anything of that kind. Col. White has proved himself to be a deserving citizen and has taken a prominent part in connection with the militia force of Wellington for many years.

Mr. TISDALE. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to offer any extended remarks on this matter, but there were some things in the minister's reply, which I could have wished he had either left unsaid, or expressed differently. I have not the pleasure of knowing Colonel White personally; I do not know that I ever saw him; but the records show that he stands as high as any other colonel in the militia of Canada. The hon. minister speaks of extending the time of Colonel White's command of the battalion, as a matter of clemency on his part. If he did that as a matter of clemency, he had no right to do it. The Minister of Militia and Defence has no right to extend clemency to a gentleman in command of a battalion, who is not fit in every way to hold such an important position.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. May I say one word? My hon. friend is not aware of the fact—because the regulation was passed since he was in office—that there is a special regulation and order, dealing with this question which limits the term of office to five years, and which says that when an officer is specially recommended by the district officer commanding, and approved by the General Officer Commanding, the term may be extended for three years longer.

Mr. TISDALE. I am quite aware of the regulation, though I thought the extension could be made for five years. Is the minister prepared to say that there are no commanding officers in command of battalions to-day, who have remained in command more than three years after the expiration of their term?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No. Since I came into office, a retrospective order was passed applying to colonels who had been in office for twenty or thirty years; and that order has been carried out. I think, in every single case. But, of course, in the meantime, there were many colonels who had acted as such for twenty or twenty-five years.

Mr. TISDALE. I am not complaining, but unless matters have changed very recently, there are some colonels still in command of battalions, in whose cases, the three years' limit and the age limit have expired. However, the argument is the same. If the man was not fit to command the battalion, his time ought not to have been extended. If it was extended, to whom was the compliment paid? The position I take, is that the compliment is to the department, when men will volunteer to serve in the ranks or to take the command of battalions for the defence of the country. Who makes the sacrifices, who educates them, who pays their expenses during the time of their education, who pays their loss of time, who buys their uniform, who compensates them for their loss of occupation, whether they are in the rank and file, or among the officers? Therefore, I object to its being held out as a matter of clemency that the time was extended to a gentleman who was both physically and mentally fit; and his friends have good reason to feel indignant at the treatment he received, no matter whose fault it was. The hon. minister, in his concluding remarks, said that Colonel White had lowered himself when he came to him privately and said, 'Now, if you will allow me to finish my course, I will say nothing about it.' I should be very sorry if we had a Minister of Militia and Defence in Canada who felt that a colonel of a battalion, who thought he was being badly used, was humiliating himself if he went privately to the head of the department—because the minister will not gainsay that Colonel White, who has served his country so long, was not a worthy officer and a gentleman—and said, 'Now, do not subject me to this indignity, and I will drop the matter, and there will be no public talk about it.' I know how I would feel as an officer, at finding that the Major General and the department, whether with the minister's consent or not, had published my name in a list sent all over the Dominion as unfit, when, as the facts show, Colonel White stood second to no other man as an officer, and was still physically fit and able to serve beyond the time limit. I say that Colonel White comes out of the matter better than the Department of Militia and Defence. I regret that the minister, in his concluding remarks, thought it necessary to cast these two reflections upon him; and if the hon. gentleman himself does not regret them, I am sorry for the militia of this country. He said that as to officers, or as to contracts, things being equal, he would prefer his friends.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not object so much to the hon. gentleman saying that in regard to contracts, because to a certain extent we all concede that. But, I do regret his saying it in regard to officers, whose positions bring them no profit nor political influence, but, in the British army and I hope also in the colonial militia, are held only on the ground of efficiency. When our brave men return from South Africa, a minister who can withstand his party will have a great opportunity to weed the force of all politics, by giving the appointments at his disposal to the men who have most distinguished themselves on the field.

The hon. gentleman says that 90 per cent of the officers are Conservatives. So much more to the honour and patriotism of the Conservative party. I went into the militia long ago, at the time of the Trent difficulty, and remained in the force eighteen or twenty years, and I never heard in my regiment or any other of any political favour in the appointment of militia officers. I am not speaking of the staff.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend, as an old militiaman, knows that the appointments in the different corps rest entirely with the commanding officers. Nobody ever thinks of interfering with these, and I was not speaking of the ordinary officers of militia at all. What I referred to was the appointments which come directly under me, such as appointments at headquarters. But as regards captains and lieutenants and subalterns, they are all chosen by the officer commanding the battalion.

Mr. TISDALE. I am glad to have the hon. gentleman's explanation, because the hon. gentleman's expression was most unfortunate. He said that 90 per cent of the officers—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was speaking only of certain officers.

Mr. TISDALE. He made no limitation, and I am very glad to have his correction, because otherwise he would have been misunderstood. As to the contracts, I remember when he cancelled some which I thought were good ones. In all cases the late government insisted upon tenders, but there were certain firms well and favourably known as being the most competent to furnish the articles required, and from those firms tenders were invited.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Was there a single Liberal firm asked to tender?

Mr. TISDALE. There were two or three Liberal firms, but the great majority were Conservatives. But, the hon. gentleman makes the bold avowal that he is prepared only to give contracts to his political friends, and that avowal is calculated to strengthen the impression that we are on the eve of a general election.

Mr. GIBSON. Everything else being equal.

Mr. TISDALE. He said nothing about other things being equal.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I not only said that, but I said also, 'and with due regard to the public interest.'

Mr. TISDALE. But who is to decide? Last session we tried to obtain a promise that no contracts should be let without public competition, but we were voted down. Why did the hon. gentleman refer to the public meetings at which Col. White spoke, if politics had nothing to do with the matter? If they had not, then it did not matter whether Col. White had spoken at public meetings or how often he had spoken. The hon. gentleman has told us that in England no man above thirty-five years of age can take a staff course. But has the hon. gentleman adopted that rule?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman knows that the Queen's regulations should be enforced when we have men of our own.

Mr. TISDALE. But the hon. gentleman has not acted on that regulation. If he had, not one of the officers in the list had the right to take the course. While I think he is wise in that in not trying to apply the thirty five year regulation to the Canadian militia, I think he is unwise to try to apply it to Col. White's case. We do not have a very great number desiring to qualify in a military sense, nor do we have many military schools; therefore, I think, we should keep the staff course open without restriction of age. Col. White is as well fitted for this course as many men of forty years of age. The minister was not happy or logical or consistent in the course he has taken, seeing that no age limit has been established. Does he mean to say that he will allow no retired officer to take this course? If not, then retired officers must be judged, in this respect, upon their merits. One of the greatest difficulties of our militia system is in not having fixed rules. This fact is illustrated in the present case. Matters are pretty well left to the sweet will and pleasure of the minister, leaving the militia in a very uncertain state.

Now, one word with regard to the matter between the minister and the general. I have said that there are no fixed rules; and I confess it is pretty hard to make a rule as to where the authority of the general ends and where the authority of the minister begins, if there is a cleavage between them. I do not see very well how we can remedy that, because we all agree that the minister must be responsible to parliament, and we must all agree that, if we are going to have a general of efficiency take the position, we must leave matters of military discipline to him. Now, I cannot conceive how a state of affairs such as the minister spoke of here to-day, need arise, which would make necessary the steps the general thought necessary to take as to the means of communication between himself and the minister. If you apply military rules, the argument of my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) is unanswerable; if you apply mixed rules, such a state of affairs should not exist. If the minister and the general could not agree better than they seem to have done in this case, they should have taken some way to settle it and save this scandal—because it is a scandal, which ever was to blame, that such a state of affairs should exist. It is no wonder that complaints are arising when such a state of affairs existed between the general and the minister. We never have had and probably never shall have such a knowledge of the facts as will enable us to judge between the two. General Hutton has been attacked, but he has not been dismissed. There was no investigation which would enable the public to learn the facts. All I can say is that I think that the minister and the general should be able to come to such an understanding that such a state of affairs could not exist.

Mr. RICHARD TYRWHITT (South Simcoe). I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said in defence of my friend Col. White; but, as his friend, having known him for the past twenty years, I deem it my duty to say a word in his behalf. My attention was first drawn to this matter by seeing the unkind things that were said of him in the other chamber and in the public press. I saw a gentleman who had served Her Majesty for twenty-five years described as a cripple and as being over sixty years of age—so described by a gentleman who should certainly know better if he is fit to occupy the position he has in the government. We might retort upon that gentleman by saying that he was rejected by the electors of Bothwell, and has been rewarded by his party by being pitchforked into the other chamber and into a position for which he was utterly unfit. Now, the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) has been alluded to a number of times as a gentleman who has been in the militia for some thirty or thirty-five years, and it has been suggested that, owing to his service he should be qualified to judge as to the requirements of a man in the combatant ranks of the militia. I myself have had some experience, and my experience has been that men holding staff appointments, such as those of surgeon and paymaster simply hold their appointments without any military qualifications whatever. It is not necessary for them to pass any examinations to acquire these positions, consequently I do not consider them fit to judge as to the abilities of combatant officers. Now, I would like to emphasize the point so well taken by my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) and say a word in defence of the late commander of the militia, General Hutton. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says that it is a good thing for the country that he has left it. I do not consider the hon. member for North Wellington a judge as to the capacity of any general; and I think that if the generals sent to us are to be insulted by members of parliament having no knowledge whatever of their profession, it will not be very long before gentlemen holding these high positions in the British army will decline to give their services to this country. I consider that General Hutton was perfectly justified in refusing to allow his subordinates to correspond with the Minister of Militia. General Hutton recognized that he had a man to deal with without military instincts. Had the Minister of Militia known his duty, he would have corresponded with that particular branch through the general who was in charge of that branch. He would have sent his secretary to the general and asked his permission to allow the junior officers of his department to visit him or to have certain conversation with him. I think the general was perfectly right; the position he took was a military one and one that could be defended anywhere. I think the Minister of Militia, in objecting to it simply showed his want of knowledge of the savoir faire between officers holding high rank in the militia. We know, that in civil life, if a gentleman wanted to see the servant of his friend, he would naturally correspond with his friend first; he would advise his friend that he proposed speaking to his servant on a certain subject. We know that would be the case in civil life and we know that it would apply more particularly in military life.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say, if my hon. friend (Mr. Tyrwhitt) will permit me, that, though I do not know very much about military matters and have not the instincts he refers to, I have taken some pains to inquire as to the customs of the War Office in England; and I find that it is the custom for the Secretary of State for War to send for any one of the heads of the departments without reference to the commander-in-chief.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Now, we all recognize that it is a debatable subject, the propriety of making a five-year limit for an officer commanding a regiment; and in many cases the regiment will suffer more than the commanding officer from the change. Those of us who have commanded regiments for years, are aware that it involves us in a bill of expense, and there is a good deal of annoyance connected with the fulfilment of our duties. I am also of the opinion that the efficiency of an officer should be judged from the character of the regiment that he leaves behind him in the force. I may mention that an incentive to efficiency has been given to the officers commanding battalions in the Second Military District, by the offer of a cup annually, by the late Colonel Gzowski, to the most efficient rural battalion in the district. I would like also to say in regard to politics in the militia, that we always find a great difficulty in procuring officers, and when we seek for an officer for our battalion, we do not inquire into his politics, we only inquire into his fitness. Speaking from my own experience, we are often called upon to assist young men in equipping themselves for the positions that we are prepared to offer them. I will repeat what has been said by a number of officers during the recent discussion, that politics are seldom or never mentioned in the militia, certainly not in a campaign. I am of the opinion that when an officer dons his uniform, he is subject to the Queen's Regulations for the militia of Canada, and to the articles of war, which regulations rightly forbid him to take any part in politics. For that reason, I have refused to allow my men, on a number of occasions, to take part in political processions of any kind.

Now, with regard to this course at Kingston, we are told that the officers are to receive $2.50 a day during the time they give to this particular course. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the sacrifice entailed on the men in Colonel White's position, who has an office in town, where he does a large law business. He has to give up his business in order to acquire military knowledge, and all he gets from the Militia Department in return for this sacrifice, is $2.50 a day. As to the age limit, I would not like to feel that I was obliged to retire when I reached that limit. I do not feel that I am too old to serve the country yet. I am of the opinion that many men of my age can stand as much or more hardship, than young fellows of twenty. With regard to Colonel White's case, I think it would be far more honest for the Minister of Militia and Defence to admit, at once, that he was actuated more by what he saw in this Liberal paper, published in the town of Guelph, than by any other reasons. I can understand that our friend, Colonel White, having taken off his uniform, had a strong Conservative bias, and so have a good many other men in the militia. I think, Sir, that it is much to the credit of the Conservative party, that so many of them have given their services to the country in the militia. I repeat again that Conservatives have had no special inducements offered them to join the service, but there is something in the make up of a Conservative, which leads him to volunteer in the military service, and that explains the preponderance of men of that political belief in the Canadian militia.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) I stated before six o'clock that I did not intend to take up much time, and I may state now that I will take up less time because I find that the hon. Minister of Militia is not present, and some of my remarks I would rather make when the minister is here. There will be another opportunity when we can take up the question and discuss it as well, and in this special sense I think I shall reserve most of my remarks until that time. But, there are one or two things that I wish to say even though the hon. Minister of Militia has not been able to be present, because, it follows directly in the line of the remarks that the hon. gentleman made this afternoon. He made two divisions in his defence, if you may call it his defence, in reference to the striking off of these two gentlemen from the list. Now, the strange thing that struck me, and I think it would strike any hon. member of the House, who listened to the papers being read or who had read the papers, was how it would be possible for two officers who are neither politicians nor, in the exercise of their military duties heretofore, which have been long and arduous, have had anything to do with party politics, how these gentlemen, entirely disassociated from our party politics, could give, as a reason to Col. White and Col. Vince, for their not being allowed to take the course of staff instruction that they had interfered in party politics by addressing public meetings. It seems almost inconceivable, and to me, it is utterly inconceivable, that these gentlemen, could, either, or both of them, have invented the excuse for taking off the names of two gentlemen whose names were placed there, because they were fit, in every respect, for taking the staff instruction—how they could have invented the excuse of politics for striking off those men. It seems to me to be utterly inconceivable, unless, in some way or other, through some representations or other, it had been made to appear to them that there was a repugnance in the ministerial mind to these gentlemen being allowed to take the staff course because they were Conservatives and had taken part, by public speaking, in public meetings. Every one knows, who knows the British system of military administration, that political parties do not count in it, that partisanship of this kind does not have any place in a purely military administration; and these two gentlemen are, both of them, fresh from the military administration of the British army. Consequently, it would be something foreign to these gentlemen to give as a reason for taking off capable men, the reason that was given in these letters, namely, that they had interfered in politics by speaking at public meetings.

Now, the hon. minister says that that was not the reason at all, but, that these two men were struck off for two good reasons. Well, the minister does not state that he did not have an objection to these gentlemen because they were Conservatives, and, as was alleged, had taken part in public meetings. He says that he did not mention this reason officially to Col. Foster, and I think there is a wide distinction, probably, to be drawn there, and the inference is, that, although he did not make it the official reason which he placed upon the memorandum, yet, he did cause his opinion to be expressed that these men were not agreeable to him because they were Conservatives and because they had taken part in public meetings. But, he says that there were two sufficient reasons why these gentlemen's names were struck off. We will see how far they go. In the first place, he says that they were over age. That was a very strong reason, in the hon. minister's mind. He says that in England thirty-five is the maximum age limit. He does not state that he has made good the rule here that obtains in England that the maximum age limit shall be thirty-five years, but, he says, this is the rule in England, that it is laid down by the Queen's Regulations, and that these men were over that age limit. Now, I asked the minister, the other day, to give me the dates at which each one of these gentlemen was born. He brought the answer down, and I have it before me in Hansard. What results from an analysis of the answer of the hon. minister? Why, this, Sir, that there is not a single gentleman here that he has been pleased to appoint to take that staff course of instruction who does not pass the thirty-five year limit—not a single one. Here is Mr. Stacey. I will just give their names. I do not know whether they are colonels, or lieutenants, or generals:

Name.	Born.	Age.
Mr. Stacey.....	1858	41
" Hodgins.....	1851	48
" Roy.....	1859	40
" Jones.....	1860	39
" McLaren.....	1847	52
" Galloway.....	1851	48
" Mutton.....	1852	47
" Chine.....	1858	41

Now, Mr. White was born in 1843, he is fifty-six years of age; Mr. Vince was born in 1848, and he is fifty-one years of age. What becomes of the minister's rule, and what becomes of the minister's reason? One-half of his reason is no reason at all, the reason he gave us, namely, that the age limit had to be looked to, as thirty-five years. Yet, all of those he has appointed to the staff course are more than thirty-five years of age; some of them run up to fifty, and one is fifty-two years of age. The minister's reason, then, is not a good reason. Whether it was one of the real reasons or not he has not lived up to his own rule, and he has not made his appointments within the limit of age which he set down as being necessary, and because these two gentlemen, who were struck off the list, exceeded that limit of age, he gives it as a reason why they were not appointed. So much with reference to that. The minister also said that it was not intended to put a retired man on and both Col. Vince and Col. White were retired—or Col. White was about to be retired. Again that argument falls to the ground, because Col. Hodgins was retired in October, 1899, and yet he was recommended for the staff course and his name was not struck out by the minister. Therefore, the minister's reasons are no reasons at all, and as one analyses he finds what poor reasons they are, and is led to the conviction that they are not the real reasons why Col. White and Col. Vince have been struck off the list. Now, as to their fitness for the position. I know more about Col. Vince than I do about Col. White, and I know there is not an officer in the maritime provinces—I will not except any officer there—who is more intelligent, more capable, more thoroughly informed and more scientifically master of his military business than is Col. Vince. There is not a military man who knows him but will bear out my opinion in that respect. The general knew him and he was selected by the general because of his fitness. The military instinct and military spirit of Col. Vince comes to him by inheritance, and he has made a study of military matters; more than a study for he has made almost a hobby of it, and he has been during his whole connection with the militia force—especially with the Brighton engineers, which he brought to a condition of perfection—he has been most proficient and is one of the most capable and energetic officers that you can find in the province of New Brunswick or in the maritime provinces. Where does the unfitness appear, in the case of Col. Vince? The Minister of Militia and Defence dared not, and I am convinced that he will not, challenge the fitness of Col. Vince in any respect whatever. With reference to Col. White, his case is better known to the members from Ontario, and I believe that nothing the minister has said will take away from the impression which has been produced in the House, that Col. White is not only an able officer, but that he is an active and efficient officer as well. I must say that it was a cruel thing to have blurted out in the papers and in this House this afternoon that Col. White was not put upon the list because he was maimed. From 1869, he has had the same disadvantage to contend with, and it has never interfered with his thorough efficiency in his office, and it was at least a gratuitous thing to bring in when there was an attempt made to get a reason as to why he was not appointed.

Now, Sir, the minister shows that the political reason did enter into it? Why? Because he read letters to try and convince the House that Col. White had taken part in political meetings. What was the necessity of reading these extracts at all, if there was not in the minister's mind a desire to impress the House that he might get the support of this House in having struck out Col. White's name because Col. White had spoken at public meetings. What was the whole substance of that charge? After thoroughly scraping up everything he could get, the minister (Mr. Borden) found that Col. White had spoken twice—once at a fat stock show, and the other at a banquet—at a time when the militia feeling was running high—and where he spoke to the toast of the army and navy. There was another statement made which, in Col. White's own words, as read by my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) was denied. That was, that he had gratuitously insulted the whole French people in a speech he made in Guelph. Col. White denies it. There is no proof brought to the contrary, except the mere reading of a newspaper extract, and I will take Col. White's denial, as from a man and a soldier, sufficient against the mere reading of a newspaper paragraph, read without any assertion by the minister that he had investigated the matter and found that it really represented what Col. White said. The extracts read this afternoon had no force whatever. As a soldier and as a militiaman, Col. White stated that he thought it was a shame that Canadian militiamen should be dumped on the shores of Africa, and be forced afterwards to make their way on a payment of only 25 cents a day. Who does not believe now that it was a shame? The government themselves believed it was a shame, and they were so far ashamed of the shameful thing they attempted to do, that they came down to this House and proposed to pay our Canadian soldiers the difference between Canadian rates of pay and Imperial rates, which brought their pay to from 50 to 75 cents a day. Because a militiaman said that, it surely was no reason why he should be struck off the list.

Now, Sir, so far as Col. Vince is concerned, the defence of the minister is just as weak in connection with political interference. In the Dominion elections of 1896, Col. Vince was postmaster in the city of Woodstock, N.B. Col. Vince took no part, good, bad or indifferent in the whole canvass of 1896, and he would not do it even to the matter of writing a letter or of sending out a list or anything of the kind. He voted, I believe; I hope he did, I think he did, and he had a right to vote. So far as interference in the Dominion elections is concerned, Col. Vince started with the idea that he was a government official and that he would not interfere, and it cannot be proved that he did take the least part in that election. A few months ago there was a local election in the province of New Brunswick, but Col. Vince was no longer an official of the Dominion government, so far as the postmastership was concerned. He has been dismissed. What for? Simply because he was a Liberal-Conservative; and the Liberal paper in the town of Woodstock, when Col. Vince went out of office, was good enough to say that they never had had a postmaster in that town who did the work so well and who was so thoroughly agreeable, to all the people as was Col. Vince. Why was he dismissed? Simply because Mr. Blair and his supporters had made a promise to Mr. Smith, who was a supporter in the provincial legislature, that he should have the postmastership, and Mr. Smith pressed for his reward, and it was withstood as long as possible, because the people were against it, until at last the debt had to be paid, and Mr. Vince had to be dispossessed of his office. There was not a thing against him in the way of political partisanship or in any other way. The minister (Mr. Borden) towards the end of his remarks, made the statement that a militiaman had a perfect right to speak what he thought, on a public platform or otherwise. Col. Vince, when told that he had been debarred from going to Kingston to take the staff course because he had taken an active part in elections, wrote a very good answer, which I am going to read to the House:

Woodstock, N.B., Jan. 31, 1900.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th inst., informing me 'that my name had been removed from the list of officers ordered to undergo the staff course at Kingston, owing to my having recently taken an active part in politics by public speaking, which rendered it inexpedient to include me in a course for general staff.'

I have the honour, in reply to request that you will be pleased to forward to the Major General Commanding the following statement, which I have the honour to respectfully submit for his consideration; that the rule or recognized usage of Her Majesty's service is that laid down in Regulations and Orders, 1898, part 1, paragraph 215:

1. Officers, non-commissioned officers and men are forbidden to institute or take part in meetings, demonstrations or processions for party or political purposes, in barracks, quarters or camp, or in uniform, at any time or place,—and

2. That conversely, any officer of the active militia or reserve of officers, not in receipt of pay or attending a course of instruction, can take whatever part in politics any subject of Her Majesty's may—be a candidate for parliament, or speak at public meetings, &c. In support of above, I have the honour to refer to the fact that on the 9th inst., after Rear Admiral Lord Charles Beresford (lately M.P. for the city of York, England) has been appointed second in command of the Mediterranean squadron, and the night before he joined the Naval Signalling School, in the victory at Portsmouth (preparatory to taking up his post as second in command of the Mediterranean squadron), he made a speech in which he criticized both the military and naval administration (vide the 'Times' weekly edition, Jan. 12, 1900, pages 17 and 29, third column).

I have the honour to respectfully state that in addressing public meetings previous to an election for the legislature of New Brunswick, held on January 12, 1900, I had not the intention of violating or transgressing, nor do I believe that I did violate or transgress, any rule or usage of Her Majesty's service.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) D. McL. VINCE, Lt.-Col.,

Reserve of Officers.

I have never heard that the Minister of War at home or the British government disciplined Lord Beresford because of his very thorough and caustic criticisms upon the military and naval system of Great Britain. There is just one other remark which I wish to make, and that is with reference to the last statement made by the minister—the statement that he was now opening up the Militia Department to the spoils system, just as every other department in this government has been opened to that system. I do not care what has been said with reference to the other departments, I do not believe there is a sane man who desires the best interests of this country in a military point of view, who desires to see the militia interests kept where they ought to be and promoted as they ought to be, who will not be sorry that the Minister of Militia took occasion to make that public declaration after having made the statement that 90 per cent of the officers were now Conservatives. So far as he was concerned, he said—and he turned round to his supporters—that other things being equal he was going to favour his own party friends and his own party supporters in the matter of contracts and appointments of officers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. And I am sorry to see that there are gentlemen on that side of the House who are willing to applaud the opening up of the militia system of our country to all the tricks—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Tricks belong to you.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I was going to make a remark with reference to my hon. friend, but my heart is too full, and I will not do it—to open up the militia system of this country to all the tricks, to all the side influences, to all the pulling of political wires, to all that is meant by introducing the patronage system into the militia department. Under that same minister, who is not tonight in his place, I believe the militia system of this country has been plunged into a mire of political patronage to which it never descended before, and I believe that is the general impression throughout the country. We never before had a Minister of Militia who had the audacity to stand up and declare openly and above board that he intended to use that department just as, for instance, the Public Works Department has been used, to favour his party supporters, and he has done that. We shall have occasion a little later on, when we come to the estimates of the Militia Department, to go over some of these points. What does it mean that you are going to favour your own friends? It means this, that you invite your friends in every part of this Dominion to stick their noses into the militia appointments whenever they are to be made, and use them for party purposes. No minister with a proper sense of the interests of that department would bring trouble upon himself by thus inviting from every part of this country the intervention of politics in the disposal of the offices in the militia. The hon. gentleman says that he was impelled to interfere with that list—why? Because it involved the expenditure of money, and he says; 'I am responsible to this parliament for the expenditure of money.' So he is, but there is as clear a line as there possibly can be between these two things. It is the minister's business to determine the policy, to say whether the staff course shall be given, how many it shall consist of, and how much money he has at his disposal for the purpose; and I have no doubt that before a single name was put on that list, that policy was settled between the general and the minister. The next thing is the selection of the men who shall take the course. What is the purpose of that course? It is to get the best men and make them still better by giving them the course. What for? For any political advantage to be gained anywhere? No, Sir; but from a purely militia point of view, in order that you may have the best officers equipped in the best manner, and that these officers so equipped may exercise their gifts for the benefit and improvement of the militia system of the country. Who is the best man to do that? I have not a single doubt in my own mind as to who is the man. The best man to do that is the general in command, who has been for many years conversant with the affairs of the militia as his business, who has visited every district, who has reviewed every force, who knows every permanent officer in the Dominion, who has examined them and watched them on parade, and who can put his hand in a moment on the best officers. Why should he not? He is not hampered by anything. When he is looking for a good man, he is not compelled to ask how the appointment is going to affect the Conservative or Liberal party. He will not ask whether it will give the Minister of Militia and Defence a vote in his constituency or take one from him. He has not to conciliate the favour of a whip or a prominent party man, but is there, as the general in command, to judge what men are best qualified, in the interests of the militia to take that course, and afterwards to work for the benefit of the force. The General Commanding does that, and then the minister runs his pen through the names of two of those whom the general has selected, Colonels White and Vince, two as capable men as were on the list. To my mind, the only fault the minister had with them, was that they were Liberal-Conservatives, and, as such, had taken some part in public affairs. All the context shows that. Either the minister went too far or did not go far enough. He went on to show the condition of things into which the militia affairs in this country had fallen at headquarters, by saying that there was great friction between the general and himself but he neglected to give us any idea of the causes producing this condition.

Evidently there were precedent causes. The hon. minister says he wanted subordinate officers in the general's office, under command of that officer, to consult with him, and he wanted them to do that without the general's knowledge.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). He did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. Without the general's knowledge, and I will prove it, because he read afterwards two letters to fortify his position. What was the position taken by the general? He said to these subordinate officers: When I am present, I do not want you to be carrying on work without my knowledge with the minister; let it be done through me when I am here; but when I am not here, it may be a different thing. Both these letters have these words, 'when the general is here.'

Mr. McMULLEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I took the words down. The hon. gentleman does not know. It is his duty to stand up for the minister, no matter what the minister does. His whole duty nowadays is to tag after the coat-tails of ministers, to hold them up when they are passing through the mire, and to clean them whenever they are dirty, and he does it as faithfully as when on this side, he conceived it to be his duty to find fault with everything the Liberal-Conservative government did. Now it is his duty to swallow all his previous professions, and tag after the ministers, and stand by everything they do. Hansard will show to-morrow whether I or he am right, but I have a distinct recollection that the general's order to his officers, was that when he was present, business should be done through him. What does all that mean? It means that some things were going on before, which he knew nothing about. There must have been a history which it would be very instructive for this House to know. It would be interesting to know how things came to be in such a condition, that General Hutton had to interdict the carrying on of business, under his own nose, through his subordinates by the minister, when the general was here at the seat of government, in command of his department. I do not know anything about military etiquette, but I do think that when the general was here, in charge of his office, and the minister wanted to know anything, there was only one proper way for him to get the information, and that was through the general. What would the hon. minister think if the Premier, when he wanted information concerning the Militia Department, were to ignore the hon. gentleman entirely, and get it from the minister's subordinates, without saying a word to the minister himself? The minister would, no doubt, protest. The case is still stronger, because there is not the same intimate connection between the general and the minister, as between the minister and his leader. But, what had been taking place? Had the minister, for months before, over and over, practically ignored the general? Had he been treating him as though he were an office boy or messenger, as though he had no status or rights at all? Strange things have been spoken of in this respect, and it is too bad we have not both sides of the case. Unfortunately, we never shall. But, the whole matter points to this, that if there is one rock we ought to avoid with reference to our militia system, it is the rock of party politics. We ought to have in some way, a clear understanding between the minister and the general commanding, and a clear definition of the rights and privileges of each. That may be difficult to get, but there ought to be some clear lines laid down which would define, as far as would be necessary, for the reasonable carrying on of business, the sphere of duty of each. The minister is responsible to parliament and the people, and he must have a certain voice in the direction of military matters, but on the other hand, a political minister is the last man in the world who ought to have the management of the appointments of officers, and that more essential work, which affects the whole militia system, and which can be best carried out by a man who is educated to it, and who has no party exigencies to serve.

Let us hope that the declaration of the minister, that he is going to dispense patronage on the spoils system, will not be carried out. Let us hope that the minister is as thoroughly ashamed of having made that statement, as he appeared to have been, when he tried to qualify it afterwards, in response to criticisms from this side. It will be a great pity if the least intimation were to be given to party politicians, that all they had to do was to call on the Minister of Militia and Defence, and he would divide amongst them the spoils of that department, in the share of appointments.

Mr. McMULLEN. He did not say so.

Mr. FOSTER. If he did not, he went so close to it, that you could not put any other construction on what he did say. That, at least, was the impression made upon my mind. And, we know that in the matter of contracts, the hon. minister gives them, as far as possible, to his own party friends.

Mr. WOOD. Is the Sanford Company of Hamilton, which makes all the clothing for the militia, a friend of the government?

Mr. FOSTER. There are times when even a Grit government must go to a good Conservative firm in order to get things that they cannot get elsewhere. But, if there is any possibility of getting them elsewhere, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) knows, they are got elsewhere.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I would not have risen to say a word in answer to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster's) remarks but for what I consider the extremely unjust charges he brought against the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), towards the conclusion of his speech. The hon. gentleman said that he did not intend to discuss the question before the House, and he kept his promise most faithfully, for he did not discuss the question in any sense or in any way, but indulged in a large number of excessively violent and—as I think he will himself agree when he comes to reflect upon them—unfair charges against the Minister of Militia. He said that the present Minister of Militia had plunged the department into a depth of political degradation never before known—

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Those are the hon. gentleman's words as I took them down.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) seems to be utterly incapable of taking down words as stated. I used the word 'patronage,' but not 'degradation.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not use the word 'patronage.' He said that the minister had plunged the department into a depth of political degradation, or some word to that effect—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Just say—'or words to that effect.'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it was political degradation or something equivalent in the matter of patronage.

Mr. FOSTER. You hang on to that, then—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman is ashamed of it—as he ought to be—I have no more to say. But I will appeal to the judgment of this House and to the country if there has ever been a Minister of Militia, who, under the trying circumstances which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) has had to face, has carried out the true system which should apply to the militia more fairly, honourably or honestly than has my hon. friend. He has eliminated party politics from it altogether; and the best evidence of that is that with respect to the contingents which have gone to South Africa with the exception of one or two of the most bitter and most irreconcilable Tory newspapers in the country, the newspaper press is unanimous in declaring that the Minister's choice has been a fair, honest, good, reasonable choice, irrespective of politics. They all declare that in these matters his conduct has been above reproach. In fact, the only people who are objecting are members of the Liberal party, who complain that the friends of the government do not get fair-play. What does that show? Certainly, that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has not allowed political influence to control him in his appointments. But, if he thought he was ever going to get any thanks for that he was never more mistaken in his life. If he eliminated politics altogether and governed the Militia Department, as I believe he has, on motives altogether beyond and higher than political ones, he would not receive the slightest vestige of thanks from hon. gentlemen on the other side. But the hon. gentleman is not looking for thanks. The facts speak for themselves, and have spoken louder than words; and, in every province in this Dominion the opinion has been formed and exists to-day that the Militia Department, so far as the sending of the contingents to Africa is concerned, has acted in a manner entirely beyond politics, in a matter which prevented politics from being considered in any appointment.

As I say, the hon. gentleman has not discussed the question, faithfully, fulfilling the promise that he made. Still, he introduced one or two rather important points concerning which I wish to say a word before the debate closes. He spoke of the general's position in this country, and seemed to think, though he did not say so in so many words, that his desire was that the general should hold a position superior to the minister in many points. I will venture to say that neither this House or any other House of parliament in Canada will ever subscribe to any such doctrine. The Minister of Militia is responsible and must continue to be responsible for the administration of that department, not only with regard to the letting of contracts, but with regard to all appointments made in the department. The general commanding the militia must, of necessity be, as he is, merely a subordinate officer to the Minister of Militia, appointed by the government of Canada under our statute, not holding any power from the Imperial government, but holding his powers entirely by virtue of his appointment by the Canadian government as a subordinate officer to the Minister of Militia under our statute. Let that be understood, to begin with. As such subordinate officer, he is responsible to his minister and chief; and he has no more right to assume superior powers or superior authority than has my deputy in the Department of Marine and Fisheries to assume powers superior to me. I do take and must take the advice of my deputy in many cases, and the Minister of Militia must, perforce, take the advice of the general in most technical matters. But, when he takes that advice, he is responsible for it to this parliament and to the people; and it would be intolerable that generals should come here imagining that they had either superior power or extraneous power to the power belonging to and solely residing in the Minister of Militia. The general is a subordinate officer; he must take his powers from the Minister of Militia; and the moment he attempts to go beyond his proper functions and powers and to assume to exercise powers at variance to the wishes of the minister or in opposition to the wishes of the minister, that moment his usefulness is gone. That might as well be understood first as last. As I say, the Minister of Militia, in all matters of discipline, in all matters of a technical character always has taken and always will take, to a very large extent, the advice of the general commanding. But when he takes that advice he is responsible to parliament for his actions, just like any other minister who takes the advice of his deputy or any other technical officer in his department. It is the minister, not the general, who is responsible. The general is simply an officer of the department, nothing more and nothing less. The popular idea, current among the militia, that the general holds some Imperial appointment is mere moonshine. He holds no Imperial appointment, he holds an appointment in the Militia Department, subordinate to the minister; and if he attempts to exercise any powers without the consent of the minister he exceeds his rights. There should be no mistake about that, and there is no mistake about it so far as the present Minister of Militia is concerned. There was a mistake in that respect on the part of the general and also on the part of his predecessors. Hon. gentlemen opposite know, no one knows better than the late Minister of Militia (Mr. Tisdale), that it was almost impossible to carry on militia affairs in this country because the generals assumed that they did not hold a subordinate position, but some position which rendered them independent of the Minister of Militia. That is not so, and I think it is pretty well understood now, if for the first time.

My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) says he thinks the general should be the man to recommend the appointments. That may be so, but it is not the law or the constitution now; and for my part, I do not agree with him in the view he expresses. The general is not the best man to recommend appointments. In many cases, he has the knowledge better than the minister can possibly have, and, just as in the case of technical officers of other departments, his recommendations would receive proper respect and proper weight, as they should. But to imagine that he should have the right to make appointments over the minister is to subvert the whole constitution of the department and even of the country. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) went on to say that the minister attempted to show that there was an age limit and that Col. White being beyond the age limit could not be appointed. I do not think the hon. gentleman was fair to the minister. The minister stated, that, so far as the Queen's Regulations were concerned, there was an age limit which applied to England, but had not been enforced here, though it might be in the future. What he did say was that Col. White was removed from the list of those who were to go forward to the college course because he had been retired from the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 30th Battalion on account of his length of service.

and being too old, besides being maimed. That was the reason why his name was struck off, and that was a sufficient reason. I do not think any honest man could have listened to the plain, unvarnished tale told by the Minister of Militia and Defence this afternoon without being convinced that his conduct from first to last was such as to deserve commendation and not reproof. It is true that one of the officers of his department, acting under the direction of the general, had given a reason for the removal of that name, which was not the true reason, but when the Minister of Militia and Defence discovered that an improper reason had been given, he caused it to be corrected, and Col. White was informed of the true reason why his name was removed, namely, that he was not eligible for the appointment, having only recently been retired from the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 30th Battalion. Then, there is nothing more to be said about that. Does anybody imagine that having been retired from that lieutenant-colonelcy he should again be appointed to take the special staff course at the Royal Military College? I do not profess to have a technical knowledge of militia matters, and I will not discuss that matter any further, but prima facie the reason seems to me to be conclusive and satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not in Col. Hodgins' case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was not aware that the papers before us state that Col. Hodgins was in the same position. But the Minister of Militia and Defence explained Col. Hodgins' case very fully. Now, the hon. gentleman says that there necessarily must have been some politics at the bottom of this, else why did the Minister of Militia and Defence quote certain speeches which were alleged to have been made by Col. White, showing a partisan spirit on the part of that officer? Well, the Minister of Militia and Defence was frank enough to state that at the time he erased Col. White's name from the list of those who were to have this staff education, he did not know those speeches had been made at all. He merely quoted them in reply to some remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) that Col. White was absolutely free from political bias; he merely quoted them to show that if that gentleman was possessed of the ideas which the newspapers attributed to him, he was unfit to hold a staff appointment. I think there is no man on either side of the House but will concede that if that report was true, he was unfit to hold a staff appointment. Be that as it may, I merely remark, in the absence of the Minister of Militia and Defence, that he expressly stated he did not know at the time that Lieut-Col. White had given utterance to these statements at all.

Mr. BEATTIE. Is the hon. gentleman aware that he was not retired, that he was placed on the reserve list and liable to be called out for active service at any moment?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am reading the official letter from Lieut.-Col. Pineault, Deputy Minister of Militia, in which he says that he (White) was only recently retired from the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 30th Battalion on account of his length of service.

Mr. BEATTIE. He was on the reserve list, liable to be called out for active service at any moment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not understand the technical distinction the hon. gentleman makes, but the language of this official despatch is perfectly plain, that having been retired from the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 30th Battalion, he was not considered fit to receive this special college course, and I think everybody will admit the reasons stated by the Minister of Militia and Defence are sufficient. The facts have been thoroughly well threshed out. I listened carefully to the statement made by the Minister of Militia and Defence, and I listened very carefully to the statement made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster); and when I heard that he was not prepared to discuss the question, alleging as the reason the absence of the Minister of Militia and Defence, I was satisfied that the answer of the minister was so crushing that no reply could be given to it.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I must say that I have been a good deal amused at some of the statements that have been made by the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies), and, perhaps, no statement he has made has amused me more than the one he made as he resumed his seat. I was surprised to hear him say that my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Foster) said he was not going to discuss the question. The minister himself gives as a reason why these gentlemen's names were removed:

Lieut.-Colonels Vince and White were removed from the list chiefly on account of age, and because they had retired from active command.

Now, with regard to the point the hon. gentleman made as to Col. White having been retired and, therefore, not being eligible to be placed upon this list, I think we may accept as pretty correct the view on such a point of the general commanding, General Hutton, who had his name placed on that list, ought to know whether he was in such a position with reference to the service as that his name could not properly be placed on the list. The mere fact that General Hutton had his name placed upon the list sufficiently disposes of the argument with regard to his having been retired and, therefore, not being eligible. The hon. gentleman says that the question has not been discussed by my hon. friend the member for York. Well, I think the hon. gentleman himself is very glad to take advantage of the supposed statement of the member for York in order not to discuss the question. My hon. friend, however, made no such statement. He simply said he would not discuss it fully at present. What is the question? It is whether Lieut.-Col. White's name was struck off this list for the reason assigned in the letter which has been read in this House to-day, namely, that he had taken part in politics. That is the whole question. That is the question this House wants to have decided, and that is the question the people of this country want to have decided. My hon. friend from York discussed that question so fully that it is not necessary for me to repeat his arguments. But, I may remind the hon. gentleman who said that it was not discussed at all, that my hon. friend beside me made this remark, that it was a very unlikely thing that two gentlemen, Col. Foster and General Hutton, who have nothing in the wide world to do with our politics, who take no interest in our politics, should assign as a reason that Col. White's name was struck off the list that he had interfered in our politics. That they should assign that as a reason without that reason having been suggested to them from any quarter whatever, is scarcely credible. Now, there is no person with ordinary common sense who will accept that statement for a moment, or who will imagine that either of these gentlemen would make a statement of that kind unless it had been suggested to them from some quarter. Now, what was that quarter? The statement is made by these officers that the suggestion came from the minister. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not ventured to deal with that matter at all.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I left it to the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. McNEILL. But my hon. friend did not leave it to the Minister of Militia and Defence, he got up and made this statement with regard to the question, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not ventured at all to deal with this aspect of it though that is the question the House wants to have decided. Now, the hon. gentleman, in order to lead the House to believe that no politics can enter into the consideration of the Minister of Militia and Defence with reference to matters of this kind, refers to the contingents, and he says that the officers who were sent to South Africa were appointed irrespective altogether of party considerations. That may be so, but that is not the question which we are discussing. The question we are discussing now is with regard to Col. White, and we want to know how it was that these Imperial officers made these statements. Why should they make these statements? What does the hon. minister himself say in regard to it? I got up to ask the hon. minister, and as he is not in the House now, I cannot repeat the question. He would not allow me to ask him the question when he was concluding that portion of his speech, and when I thought it was becoming and fitting to ask him the question, in case he should not be here at a later period of the discussion. The question I wanted to ask him, was whether or not, he referred, when speaking of this matter, to Colonel Foster, to any political reason, any party reason, for the removal of this officer's name from the list. Now, he has not ventured to say, in this House, at all, that he was not guided, in any degree, by party considerations in this matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He stated so distinctly in his speech this afternoon.

Mr. McNEILL. I venture to say that he did not state so in his speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, yes.

Mr. McNEILL. I venture to say that he did not say so. He did say that he had made no official statement of that kind, and the mere fact of his using that qualifying term, that he had made no official declaration of that kind, implied that he had made a declaration of that kind, which was not official. But, it was official, evidently, in the view of the officer who wrote the letter. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland), should try to remember, that he is not now the chief whip of the opposition, but that he is a cabinet minister, and he ought to have the responsibility of a cabinet minister, in the statements he makes in this House, if it is possible for him so soon to forget his old role. I was just saying to my hon. friend, who interrupted me, a moment ago, by a statement which is absolutely incorrect, that it would be well, I think, if I may be pardoned for making a suggestion to him, that he should remember that he is now a cabinet minister, that he is not the chief whip of the opposition, and that he should consider the statements which he makes in this House are such as a cabinet minister ought to make.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill), allow me? I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had endeavoured to ask a question in regard to that point, and that he had not the opportunity of getting an answer. Then, he went on to state that the minister had not said that he was not influenced by party reasons, and I, thinking that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill), wanted to know what the hon. minister had said informed the hon. gentleman that the hon. minister had said that he was not influenced by party reasons.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman said, that the hon. minister had distinctly said that he did not make any reference to party considerations—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought you wanted to know the truth.

Mr. McNEILL—in speaking to Colonel Foster, and I simply wish to correct the hon. gentleman, and to tell him that he is entirely mistaken in the statement he has made, and I have given him my reason for saying that he is mistaken. I really do not think that it is necessary to prolong this discussion, because there is now little or nothing to discuss.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. There is no defence whatever, none whatever. There is no minister, as some one says here, but, irrespective of that, there is no defence. The minister has not ventured to say in the House that he was not influenced by party considerations, he has not ventured to say, that he did not refer to party considerations when speaking to Colonel Foster. He says that he did not say it officially, and that implies that he said it unofficially. Therefore, the question, in point of fact, is settled, so far as this matter is concerned, and I do not wish further to prolong the discussion.

But, I will say another thing in regard to this matter, and I say it, Mr. Speaker, being quite aware, that, in what I say, I shall probably be misrepresented. I find that any one who ventures to say one word of the nature which I am about to say, is liable to have what he says twisted and misrepresented in the gravest manner. Nevertheless, I intend not to be prevented from expressing just what I feel on this and on all occasions, on any question, no matter what it may be, and I hope that when I do express myself, I shall never say anything that I shall be ashamed of repeating, although I do not like to have it misrepresented. It seems to me that Colonel White has also been misrepresented in a gross manner. Col. White has distinctly stated here, or, it has been distinctly stated here in a letter from Colonel White, himself, that he made no such statement, as it has been alleged that he did make in regard to our French Canadian friends. That statement was read by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence to-day, which, if I remember it correctly, was to the effect that Colonel White had said that it would be necessary to teach our French Canadian friends a lesson, or that it might be necessary, or something of that kind. Colonel White absolutely denies that he made any such statement. But, it is not at all surprising to me, that the charge has been levelled against him, because, I find that these charges have been levelled apparently, in the most unscrupulous manner, against any one who has ventured to say that he regretted that there should be, in some quarters in the province of Quebec, an unwillingness to see Canada take part in the South African struggle. Any one who has ventured to say anything of that kind, has been misrepresented and has been accused of making use of gross language in regard to our French Canadian friends. I wish to say, as I have said before, that I am quite satisfied the best element in the province of Quebec do not sympathize with these views. I am quite satisfied that the majority of our friends in the province of Quebec are thoroughly attached to British institutions, but, I do say, that there are people in the province of Quebec, who have been carrying on a very improper propaganda there, and I am sorry, to know, that these people are to be found in that province. As I said before, I should like to see the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and his friends, doing their utmost to prevent that propaganda being carried on there. These statements, I know, are liable to be misrepresented, and very probably they will be. Nevertheless, I wish to repeat them, and I wish to say further, that I regret very much to find that there are three hon. members of this House, supporters of the right hon. gentleman, one of them, I believe, a special personal friend of his, who are carrying on a propaganda of that kind in the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Question, question.

Mr. McNEILL. That is the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. McNEILL. I say it is. I am speaking of the accusation that has been brought by Colonel White, and I say, that, I am satisfied that if Colonel White spoke at all, in reference to this matter, he spoke in the sense in which I am speaking now, and that he made use of no such expressions as have been attributed to him in the press.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). How do you know?

Mr. McNEILL. Col. White stated so himself in a letter which has been read in this House, and that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). What reason would the Tory press have to misrepresent him?

Mr. COCHRANE. It was not the Tory press, and you know it.

Mr. McNEILL. It does not matter what the press was; we have the statement here from an honourable man and an officer in the militia of the highest standing, and I think the members of this House will take that statement before an anonymous statement in the newspapers. Now, I do not wish to prolong the discussion—

Mr. McNEILL.

Mr. COWAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. Unless my hon. friend wishes to hear a little more on the subject.

Mr. COWAN. That is the best thing you said to-night.

Mr. McNEILL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman thinks it is, for I have no doubt that what I have been saying is not very pleasant to my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I would not take up the time of the House even for a few minutes in this debate, were it not for a remark made by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior). Without mentioning my name, he left it to be understood that I had used language in regard to this matter to my friend Col. White when he was in Ottawa, and also to others, and for fear that my silence might be misunderstood I wish to quote the remark to which he referred, and to which he took such strong exception. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) says that I said 'I knew that General Hutton had no authority from the minister to give any such reason as he did for Col. White's removal from the list, and that Col. Hutton did it maliciously for the express purpose of injuring the minister and the government.' I do not remember the conversation with Col. White, but if Col. White says those were the words I used, I am perfectly willing to accept them. If I could find stronger language to condemn the conduct of General Hutton with regard to this one particular transaction, I would like to use it. If I had any doubt at that time about General Hutton's conduct that doubt has been removed by the debate to-day. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) had the slightest case against the minister (Mr. Borden) it would not have been necessary for him to take more than an hour discussing irrelevant issues; and neither would have it been necessary for the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) to speak as long as he did, and to put words in the mouth of the Minister of Militia that he never used. My hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie), says that Col. Foster ought to be brought before the Bar of this House.

Mr. BEATTIE. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was inclined to hold that opinion at first, but having looked into the whole matter carefully and I think judiciously, I have come to the conclusion that Col. Foster had to carry out the orders of Major General Hutton, and that he probably was not in a position—as was ably explained by the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden)—to defend himself. A great deal of leniency and consideration has to be extended to Col. Foster in the unfortunate position in which he was placed. It is clear beyond doubt that General Hutton never had any conversation directly or indirectly on this matter with the Minister of Militia when he issued the instructions to Col. Foster to write that letter to Col. White. Under these circumstances how could the minister be responsible for the letter?

Mr. BEATTIE. Col. Foster is responsible until he tells who gave him the instructions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Col. Foster is not responsible, because he says on the face of the letter that he was directed by the Major General Commanding to inform Col. White. I know of my own knowledge that for days after Col. White received that letter, the Minister of Militia never knew that such a thing as politics was suggested in the matter, or, that such a letter was sent. The major general was not here at the time, and if you look at the correspondence you will see that the very first suggestion of politics in connection with this matter came from General Hutton.

Mr. PRIOR. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) allow me to ask him a question? Does he not think that Major General Hutton was informed from Ottawa that that was the opinion of the minister?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think so.

Mr. PRIOR. Well, I know it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If you look at the correspondence you will find the suggestion was from Major General Hutton.

Mr. PRIOR. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to be fair with regard to this matter; both with regard to Col. White and to General Hutton. I am prepared to accept the word of Col. White, who has been for years a personal friend of mine and with whom I have been associated in the militia. I accept Col. White's statement not only with regard to himself, but with regard to what he says were the words I used to him. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was not so fair with the minister, because he is not prepared to accept his statement, and in this case the facts are so clear that notwithstanding all the ability of the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), he has been unable to make a single charge against the Minister of Militia.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are you talking about now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am stating my reasons to the House for the opinions I hold. The whole correspondence shows that Major General Hutton never appreciated the position he held with respect to the Minister of Militia and to the people of this country. There seems to be an erroneous impression prevailing here as to the position of the Major General Commanding. I am surprised at the stand taken by the ex-Finance Minister and his colleagues, who, themselves, have told us that they appealed to the home government to have the three previous major generals recalled for their lack of appreciation of the position they held in this country and of their duty to the minister and to the government responsible to the people. I agree with my hon. friend Sir Louis Davies, that the people of Canada will never consent to the idea that a man appointed to a position in the department by order in council is superior to the government of the country elected by the people.

Mr. BEATTIE. Col. Foster has stated in his letter that Col. White's name was removed from the list of the staff course because of political reasons. Does Col. Foster state that General Hutton instructed him to add that to his letter? That is what we want to get at. Nobody blames the Minister of Militia, but we want to know who instructed Col. Foster to add that to his letter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to read the letter, he will see for himself, and there cannot be any dispute about it. Here is one letter addressed to Col. White by Col. Foster:

Adverting to previous correspondence in regard to your name being removed from the list of officers selected to attend the staff college course, I am directed by the Major General Commanding to inform you that the letter in which the reason assigned for the removal of your name was stated to be that 'you had taken an active part in politics on behalf of the opposition' was sent in error, and is to be considered as withdrawn.

That point is clear, and if there is any misunderstanding, it ought to be made clear. I want to give my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) the reasons why I think Gen. Hutton acted as he did.

Mr. PRIOR. Will you read the letter of the 3rd of February from the deputy minister?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is very strange, if my hon. friend had a case at all against the minister, that he did not raise some point that would give some weight to the charge he has brought. I say that the defence made by the minister was so frank and so clear that no ordinary fair-minded person in this country will fail to see that this was part of the scheme of Gen. Hutton to injure the minister by representing that he was acting from party motives. I am not going to waste the time of the House on the subject. I am prepared to leave it to the officers, the Conservative officers, of the militia of Canada.

Mr. PRIOR. There are no others.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are not many others for the reason that during the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, as my hon. friend knows, a Liberal officer could not be promoted. I can give him the names, if he wants them, of men of the highest character and capability as militia officers who were kept down and never had an opportunity of being promoted because of their politics.

Mr. BEATTIE. How did the present adjutant general obtain his position? He was appointed deputy adjutant general by a Conservative government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman knows nothing about it. The gentlemen he refers to is one of the most efficient officers of the militia; but he was kept at London at a low salary, notwithstanding the efforts of Sir John Carling, then representative of London, whose letters are on file in the department, and the only answer given was, 'We will not let this man be promoted, notwithstanding his efficiency and the length of his service, because he is a Liberal.'

Mr. BEATTIE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. His statement is not correct. Col. Aylmer was brigade major, and received the same salary as others; but when the office was abolished, he was brought down to Ottawa by a Conservative government and made deputy adjutant general.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will not take anything back. I know what I am talking about. I do not think it is well to bring up the names of these gentlemen, but my hon. friend is not familiar with the case, and I see some hon. gentlemen opposite holding down their heads when he makes the statement he does, because they know the history of the case of Col. Aylmer.

Mr. BEATTIE. He was a very good officer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was a good officer, but he could not obtain promotion, and he was brought down here and put in an inferior position to the one he was entitled to. The hon. member for Victoria referred to the fact that 90 per cent of the officers holding positions under the late government were Conservatives. No better proof could be given that a Liberal had no chance for appointment or promotion under the late government. However, let me return to the letter directed to Col. White which, when he showed it to me, gave rise to the language which I used:

I am directed by the Major General Commanding to instruct you to inform the officer named in the margin that his name has been removed from the list of officers ordered to undergo the staff course at Kingston, owing to his having recently taken an active part in politics by public speaking, which renders it inexpedient to include him in a course for general staff.

Now, my hon. friend knows who gave the instructions. This is signed by Col. Foster.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. BEATTIE. That is exactly where I wanted to place it. That is all I want to know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is the letter which Col. White showed to me.

Mr. MACLEAN. The Minister of Militia was responsible.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman tries to make a point of the fact that the Minister of Militia was responsible for Col. Foster and General Hutton.

Mr. PRIOR. So he was.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But how could he be responsible for a man who committed an act without his knowledge? He showed his responsibility by removing him from office; what better responsibility could he have? Instead of being criticised for what he has done, I say that he deserves credit from the people of this country for acting in the brave and straightforward manner he did when he found General Hutton acting in this way; and it is only a sample of the insubordination, intriguing and underhand work of which he was guilty against the head of the department. I am prepared to leave it to the militia of this country if the present Minister of Militia has not administered that department in a fair and impartial manner, so far as politics is concerned. The list of officers promoted, the list of men appointed to office, the list of officers given important and prominent positions in the contingents that have gone to South Africa, will show that the minister was actuated by a single desire to do his duty in the best interests of the militia force and of the country at large. And with regard to this particular matter, I simply take this opportunity of saying that I did use that language and stronger language; and it is a most unfortunate thing that a man holding the high position which General Hutton did in this country should have been guilty of trying to injure the minister, the government and the militia force by sending a letter without the authority of the minister, for which he knew the minister would be held responsible, and for which Col. White held him responsible; and I think that this House and this country will consider that I was perfectly justified in using the language I did, and even stronger language, with regard to any official of any department who would act in such an improper and underhanded manner.

Mr. McNEILL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Spoken.

Mr. McNEILL. I allowed my hon. friend to interrupt me when I was speaking and to finish what he had to say, and I now wish to call his attention to one matter. He has not read the letter of February 3, addressed by the Deputy Minister of Militia to the Major General Commanding. In this letter my hon. friend will see that the deputy minister distinctly states how this information came to the general :

I am instructed to inform you that the reason assigned for the minister's action in this letter is entirely erroneous and misleading, and as the minister understands that Col. Foster reported to you what actually did take place when the minister struck off Lieut.-Col. White's name, he cannot understand why you should have attributed to him the reason you assign.

The hon. minister told this House that he struck off Col. White's name because he was obviously unfit for such an appointment, having only recently been retired from the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 30th Battalion, on account of his length of service, being too old, and also being maimed. My hon. friend will perhaps explain.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The letter which the hon. gentleman has read only strengthens my case. What passed between General Hutton and Col. Foster, of course, we do not know, but we do know that General Hutton did instruct Col. Foster to send the letter which he wrote to Col. White, and he did so without the knowledge and sanction of the minister.

Mr. M. J. F. QUINN (Montreal, St. Ann's). It is unfortunate for the government and the Minister of Militia, and also for the volunteers of Canada that such a condition of affairs should exist in the militia as has been exposed by my hon. friend from Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior). What is the case as it presents itself for the first time to this House? Col. White, an old and valued officer of the militia, after years of service, finds himself deprived of a course at the military college in Kingston for some reason or another, which is explained to him in a letter from the Militia Department. Col. White takes the letter sent him as containing the real reason why he was dismissed, and it discloses, in the most formal manner possible, the fact that the reason was he had taken an active part in party politics. When the matter is brought before the House, what does the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) say? Although he claims to be the head of his department, although he claims to be the superior of the General Commanding the forces, he disclaims any responsibility for the letter written, and gives a reason totally different from that assigned in the letter. But, unfortunately, the hon. minister came in with his explanation altogether too late. He allowed too long a time to elapse before he discovered this new reason, which he gives as the real one, for refusing to allow Col. White to take a course at the Kingston college. It will be well to remember that General Hutton, who is accused of all this wrong-doing, is not a man who is at all interested in the party politics of this country. On the contrary, he is an Imperial officer, and as such, altogether removed from the suspicion of party affiliation. The hon. minister says that in England only men under thirty-five years of age are allowed to take the course at the military college, and he complains that this Imperial officer, General Hutton, who is imbued with the Imperial spirit, if any man in this country is, did, without consulting him, choose a man fifty-seven years old to take this course. It is very extraordinary that the hon. gentleman should only have discovered this some time after the selection had been made, and should have struck off the list of those chosen by the general only the names of Col. White and another colonel as being disqualified on account of age. It seems to me that to characterize this reason given by the minister properly would be to call it simply a subterfuge, simply a means of getting out of a difficult position in which he is placed, not by the Major General, but by himself.

There can be no doubt that General Hutton considered Col. White worthy of the distinction of being appointed to a staff course in the Kingston college, nor can there be any doubt that his name was struck off the list by the minister himself. The only point on which there can be a discussion is why his name was struck off. We have the statement of General Hutton and Col. Foster why the name was struck off, namely, because Col. White had interfered in politics, and we have the declaration of the minister that he had struck the name off, not because of politics, but for other reasons. And yet, at the same time, we find this same minister armed cap-a-pie with proofs that Col. White had made political speeches before his name was struck off the list. If ever there was a strong case of circumstantial evidence against the minister it is the one he has given us on his own showing. We have the vidence of two witnesses, General Hutton and Col. Foster, that White's name was truck off because of politics, and we have the minister himself bringing us proofs that Col. White had taken part in politics.

The Minister sought to defend himself by disclosing what he declared to be a most astounding state of affairs. He exclaimed: Will you believe it, the Major General Commanding had issued orders to the officers in his department that they were not to communicate with me except on special instructions from him? That they were not to show me any written document coming from that department until they had received permission to do so. And, would you believe it, I found this condition—that when they did communicate with me, they were obliged to go back to the general commanding, and report what had transpired between them and myself. Well, en passant, anybody would say that it was a most unfortunate thing for the Minister of Militia and Defence that when inquiry was made in the House at the time that General Hutton was on the soil of Canada, and able to refute these charges, the minister's answer to this House, was not frank and open. It was an unfortunate thing for the minister that he kept these things concealed in his own bosom until General Hutton was about three thousand miles away, before he declared to this House what it had the right to know, this insubordination, as he terms it, of General Hutton. But, when he introduces the proof, how far he falls short of establishing the accusation he made against General Hutton. What is the substance of all the orders given by General Hutton to his subordinates? Simply: If you are sent for by the minister, report to me; if any document is asked for from this department, report to me; and, after you have had an interview with the minister, come and tell me. I put it to mercantile gentlemen in this House, and to the heads of respectable firms, in professional or business life, if the head of one of their departments were asked for by anybody to give any of the transactions that passed through that department, would they not exact from the head of that department, that he should report to them what had transpired? Most undoubtedly. But, the minister goes farther. Not satisfied with this, he casts an imputation upon Colonel Foster. He says: I can understand why it is that Colonel Foster was obliged to obey the behests of General Hutton, because General Hutton is his superior officer in the Imperial army; if Colonel Foster does not obey the behests of General Hutton, he cannot hope for promotion in that army. What a degrading thing to say of an Imperial officer. When the speech of the Minister of Militia and Defence is flashed over the wires throughout Canada, what respect can remain in the mind of any Canadian officer for an Imperial officer in Canada, when we find that these officers are prepared to sell their honour for a little advancement in the Imperial service in deference to the Major General commanding in Canada. I think, Sir, it is beneath the dignity of the Minister of Militia and Defence; I think it is a gross libel upon Imperial officers, to make such an imputation, either against the colonel or against Major Hutton.

Mr. Speaker, this is the way in which it strikes me, and I regret to say, from comments I have heard—I am not a military man myself, but I number among my best and most ardent friends, some of the ablest military men in the Dominion of Canada—the views I have expressed in this matter, are the ideas which fill the hearts of the military men, certainly of my district, who all regret that the name of an officer, of a man thoroughly posted in his business, of a man who has done much for the militia of Canada, should be dragged in the mire of politics by the Minister of Militia and Defence, as has been done in this case.

Motion (Mr. Prior) to adjourn, negatived.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 130) from the Senate, respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—(Mr. Edwards.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of this session almost down to the present moment, this has looked very much like a war session. We have had war in all its various phases discussed in this House. We thought that, perhaps, the Committee on Ways and Means was an important committee, and its deliberations and its conclusions of some weight; but, this afternoon and this evening it was felt that the question of war was still the predominant one. However, we have got back to the budget debate, even if it is not of so much interest to the House and the country as the military questions which from time to time engage our attention.

We have listened to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and they have all proclaimed what we know very well—that this country is quite prosperous. They have not had any hesitation in ascribing that prosperity, not only to the great Liberal party, not to the people of the country, but specially and particularly to the ministers of the Crown. If the sunshine and rains cause the grass to grow in Quebec or Ontario, they claim that they did it. If we have an extraordinary crop of wheat in Manitoba, it is not due to Providence, but to the Grit cabinet. If silver and gold mines are discovered and developed in the Kootenay country, it is the handiwork of these same gentlemen. If the Yukon gold mines are discovered, these gentlemen are the discoverers. I do not know whether they would go back and claim to be the discoverers of this continent of America; still, as they claim everything in sight, they may claim that also. I see now that they are claiming credit for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for the opening and development of the North-west. Our good friend, the First Minister, told us some time ago, that as soon as they came into power, he conceived that the transportation problem was of the greatest importance, and he immediately set to work to dig a 14-foot canal that he would have started and finished inside of two years. And, so it goes on. The Minister of Customs the other evening excelled all the other ministers—

An hon. MEMBER. In noise.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, in noise, in pounding his desk; and when he could not convince us by the force of his arguments, I think he was trying to frighten us into an approval of the course he was taking. With many of his sentiments when he started out, I think many on this of the House could agree, and we said: Why, these are splendid sentiments, surely that is a nice man. If he and his party have done all those things he has told us of, we should consider a long time before we decide to oppose those gentlemen; on the contrary, we should decide to support them if all the good things he said about the Liberal party and the Liberal government are true. For instance, he started out with telling us about the census. He said with regard to the increased population of the country: We have brought our thousands and our tens of thousands of new settlers into this country, we have made the people flock in from every direction. Well, I began to think that perhaps nobody came to Canada until the Liberal party came into power. Then he gave the proof. He said: Take the years 1896 and 1899, and take the settlers' effects brought into Canada in both those years. He said further that in the absence of taking the census, the truest way we can judge of the influx of immigrants into the country is by the imports of settlers' effects. So he took those two years of 1896 and 1899, and stated that in 1896, the last year of Conservative rule, there were $2,188,975 of settlers' effects imported; whereas in the last year of the Liberal rule, 1899, there were $2,805,586 of settlers' effects imported, which, he said, showed an increase of 27 per cent. I thought that was a wonderful thing, because from his previous remarks you would have supposed that before they came into power there were no settlers at all coming into Canada, and yet he said they had only increased by 27 per cent. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Customs professes that he is nothing if not a lover of fair-play, and that in the numerous tabulations he gave us he was presenting nothing but facts to the House and the country. But I submit to this House whether it would not have been fairer for the Minister of Customs to take the years 1897, 1898 and 1899, during which they had complete control, and compare them with the three previous years, in regard to the importation of settlers' effects. I submit that that would have been fairer than simply to pick out one year which happened to be the very best Grit year, and to compare it with a Conservative year which was the very worst year in our history. I say it would have been fairer to have taken 1894, 1895 and 1896 of the Tories, and 1897, 1898 and 1899 of the Liberals, and to see how the comparison would work out. Now, suppose you take those last three years of the Conservative government, and we find that the imports of settlers' effects were as follows: 1894, $3,322,499; 1895, $2,540,681; 1896, $2,188,975. Making a total of $8,052,145, or $2,684,048 per annum. Now, take the three years of Liberal rule, when they said that thousands and tens of thousands were pouring into this country. And, Mr. Speaker, you will bear this in mind, that they cannot say that business did not commence in the Immigration Department the very moment they came into power, because they had not been here five minutes until the army of immigration agents walked in too. We are told there are 500 immigration agents, that 500 men are hard at work, forcing, coaxing and driving settlers from all parts of the world into this country. No, I make a little mistake, there were not quite 500, because we know that Mr. W. T. R. Preston, notorious in the West Elgin election and other elections, was not appointed three years ago, and we know that Mr. Chappelle, the friend of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), was only appointed at a recent date. So you must take these two away from the 500, and it leaves 498 immigration agents hard at work bringing settlers into the country. Well, Sir, what did they do? The average importations of settlers' effects for the last three years of Conservative rule, and the worst three years of Conservative rule, so far as the prosperity of the country was concerned, was $2,684,048. But under Liberal rule, in 1897, 1898 and 1899, the figures were $2,233,730, $2,828,675 and $2,805,586 respectively, making a total of $7,867,991, or $2,622,664 per year under Liberal rule, as against $2,684,048 per year under Conservative rule, or an actual decrease of $184,154 in those three years, or $61,384 a year. That is the result, and yet the Minister of Customs tells us that he is nothing if not fair, and honest, and upright, and that we have a just and righteous government. He presents a statement to this House which, while it is true as to the actual figures, is as total a misrepresentation of the true state of affairs of the country as could possibly be presented. I say that instead of there being an increase of 28 per cent there is a reduction of 2½ per cent under Liberal rule. Those three great and prosperous years of Liberal rule, when they had their hundreds of immigration agents bringing settlers into this country, such as Doukhobors, Galicians and other foreigners, show a decrease of 2½ per cent. Of the total imports of settlers' effects, $142,000 were those of Doukhobors who, I have no hesitation in saying, are not a desirable class of settlers for this country, are not going to increase its material prosperity, its patriotism, its nationality, or help to build up the country.

Now, Sir, I wish to mention another matter of very great importance. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), when speaking in this House the other day, stated that the government, in order to present a better showing of the incidence of taxation in this country, had included the importations on Indian corn, amounting to about 16,000,000 bushels, which were simply in transit, and passed through this country, valued at $6,360,000, and had added that to the imports for home consumption. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance stated that, when the calculation was being made as to the incidence of taxation upon the people of Canada, he had added to the imports for home consumption, this $6,360,000 worth of corn, thus misrepresenting the imports of this country. The hon. Minister of Customs gets up to reply, and what has he told us? Just read what the hon. gentleman says; he refuses to meet the question. He never meets it in the whole of his statement, he simply sails around and around it, never meeting the charge made by the hon. ex-Minister of Finance, and the charge is that the figures of the Department of Customs are juggled that they are misrepresented when $6,300,000 worth of corn is added to the imports of this country entered for consumption, which is not consumed in this country, in order to increase the trade showing of the country and to make the figures upon which the incidence of taxation are founded more favourable to the Liberal party. What happens? A cargo of corn comes from the city of Duluth, or the city of Chicago, it passes through the lakes, through the Welland Canal, down the St. Lawrence, in an American ship, it is transhipped at Montreal into a British vessel or into a vessel of any other country, and it goes to the old country. The hon. Minister of Customs takes that cargo of corn that never was under the control of a Canadian vessel or a Canadian railway, and he places the millions of dollars worth of corn in such vessels in the column of imports entered for home consumption and consumed in Canada. He knows that this is not consumed in Canada; he knows that it all goes through. He himself stated that it goes through. In the years 1894, 1895 and 1896, what do we find? Millions of dollars worth of corn went through the same process exactly, but it was not included in the imports entered for home consumption. These cargoes were put where they properly belong, in transit, simply passing through the country, or, at the most, as imports, but not entered for home consumption and no percentage was figured upon them. But, this was for the purpose of figuring out the percentages. The hon. minister says that these percentages are a rough and ready method of calculation. He did not say that last year; he elaborated that claim last year, he went all over the country making speeches, and he took that as the true way of finding out the incidence of taxation. He furnished, the other day, the hon. Minister of Finance with many figures so that the Minister of Finance could demonstrate to the House that the incidence of taxation was 2.02 per cent less in 1899 than in 1896. I shall point out the utter fallacy of that statement in a few moments. In 1895, in 1896, and in all of these years previously, this corn came through this country in just the same way that is in transit which was true, and in no single instance was a bushel of that corn entered for home consumption, or classified as imports so as to make the calculation come out suitably to the Minister of Customs. The hon. Minister of Customs said, the other day, that it does great good to the trade of the country; that when you open that up, you will have to open some other things up, and that you will have to take in everything else. He struck coin and bullion from the statement he gave last year, and from the statement that he gave to the hon. Minister of Finance this year. I might say further that when a cargo of corn came from Duluth or Chicago around by the lakes, or came over to Midland, or to Parry Sound and went down the Parry Sound Railway through Ottawa to Montreal, wheat came in the same way. Why did they not include wheat as well as corn? If one should be included, why not the other? They went through the same class of operations in Canada, and so far as the handling is concerned, so far as being entitled to be classed in the entries for home consumption wheat was exactly on the same basis as corn. There were 7,000,000 bushels of wheat sent through last year in this way, but that is not included, although the 16,000,000 bushels of corn is included. Why have the hon. gentlemen done this? Because they wanted to demonstrate that the percentage of taxation was less in 1899 than in 1896. We will take their own figures, we will take the figures presented in the report of the hon. Minister of Customs. I shall prove that the statement that the hon. Minister of Customs placed in the hands of the hon. Minister of Finance, showing that there was a decrease of 2.02 per cent in the taxation in 1899 as compared with 1896 was totally inaccurate.

I shall commence with 1895, because we had a new tariff in 1894. The Foster tariff of 1894 came into force in the first month of the fiscal year of 1895. There are three columns, one a table of imports which includes everything in transit that passes through. That is largely an academic matter, and one that does not demonstrate fully and clearly the trade or business of the country. The other shows imports for home consumption, and the imports for home consumption are divided into two classes, dutiable and free. You may take the dutiable class, but that does not represent the incidence of taxation, because, as in the case of Great Britain, where the taxes are confined to a few articles, if you calculated it upon that basis you would find that Great Britain was the most highly taxed country in the world. You must take the dutiable and free imports, entered for home consumption, put them together, and if you take the dutiable and free goods, the imports entered for home consumption, and divide them into the revenue, it gives the percentage of taxation. It gives, in 1895, 16.99 per cent; it gives in 1896, 18.28 per cent, and the average of these two years is 17.63½ per cent. These gentlemen opposite tell us that in 1897 and 1898, the preferential tariff had not full fruition, and that 1899 was the only full year of the operation of what they call their preferential tariff. Well, that is true. We find, according to their own figures, that 16.70 was the rate of taxation, but I am not going to accept these figures and I will tell the House why. I shall deduct from that importation of $154,000,000 worth, the $6,360,000 worth of corn, that never had a particle of right to be there and which was placed there, as I conceive, to perpetrate a fraud upon the country. Not only does it misrepresent the volume of our trade, but I believe it was put there for the purpose of making the showing all the more in their favour, and so it must properly be struck out. There is not a man in the country who can justify the retention of these figures in the returns, and if we deduct them we find that instead of it being 16.70 we have to add 66-100ths to it, which makes it 17.36. These figures are different from those of the Minister of Customs for both years, because for both years he said that he would deduct the coin and bullion. He told us that bullion did not belong to trade and commerce; but I would like to ask the minister (Mr. Paterson) what is bullion? He gives no answer. Well, I will tell him. Worcester's dictionary says that bullion is 'gold or silver in the bar or lump; uncoined gold or silver.'

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps he thought it was leather.

Mr. WALLACE. No, I do not think so. But bullion has as good a right to be on the list of articles imported into this country as cotton or leather or any raw material. Look at the minister's fine gold chain and watch. What are they made from? Why, bullion is the raw material which goes into their manufacture. Look at the beautiful ring glistening on his finger there, and as every jeweller knows, it is made from bullion. And yet, Mr. Speaker, he strikes out coin and bullion, because by striking out coin and bullion it reduces the percentage 38-100ths of a cent in his favour. Let me tell the minister that coin, bullion and specie are included in the British Trade and Navigation Returns, which I have here, and coin and bullion run through every page of our Trade and Navigation Returns and are an integral portion of the commerce of the country. Bullion has as much right to be in the returns as any product which the Minister of Customs can name, but by striking out coin and bullion for the years 1896 and 1899 he makes a difference of 38-100ths per cent in the incidents of taxation in order to suit his purpose. I say we should retain these two items of coin and bullion. We strike out the corn, which has no right to be there, and we have this as the result, that in 1895 and 1896, the average of taxation was 17.63½ per cent, and in 1899—taking the revised figures which the minister gave us, which are $92,000 less than the figures given in the Customs Returns, which favours them again—we have 17.36 as the taxation for 1899, (the very best year of the Liberal regime) and we have an average of 17.63 for the two years of the Conservative government under the Foster tariff. That is to say, we have 27½ cents per $100 difference in the imposition of taxation upon the people between the tariff of 1895 and 1896, and the tariff of 1899. Now, Sir, they claim 2.02 per cent difference between 1896 and 1899. The Minister of Customs, when explaining this to an audience in Winnipeg, or some place in Manitoba, dealt with it in a remarkable way. He was taking the figures of Mr. Foster in the last parliament and taking his returns as correct, and these returns were honest and fair, not like the returns of this year or last year, and the Minister of Customs said:

Mr. Foster's figures for purposes of comparison. These showed that the average rate of taxation of all goods entered was 18.28 per cent under the Conservative government, while under the present government last year it was 16.57, or, that there was a reduction of 1.71, or, in other words, about 1¾ cents. That was not a reduction of 1¾ cents on a hundred or $1, but 1¾ of 18¼. It was a reduction of between 9 and 10 per cent of all goods coming into the country. If a man whose salary is $1,000 receives only $900, he would consider it a big reduction, or a farmer who had sold wheat at 60 cents only received 54 cents, he would consider it a substantial reduction.

He wanted to impress upon the people of Manitoba that the reduction the Liberals made in the taxes of the country was as the difference between $1,000 and $900. I have shown, and I challenge gentlemen opposite to contradict me, that the figures between the average of 1895 and 1896, and of 1899—the best year the Liberals ever have had or maybe that they ever will have—was 27½ cents per $100. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) told the people that if importations were made to the value of $1,000 it was only like paying $900 under the Liberal tariff. Let us see now how he was all wrong in that. Under the Liberal tariff of 1899, on $1,000 of importation there would be a duty of $173.60, or a total cost of $1,173.60. Under the Liberal-Conservative tariff of 1895-6, there would be a duty of $176.35, making the total cost $1,176.35. Now, subtracting the cost under the Liberal tariff of $1,173.60 from the cost under the Conservative tariff of $1,176.35, you have a saving in a thousand dollar purchase of $2.75, instead of the $100 that the Minister of Customs tried to make the people of Winnipeg believe was the saving. Let us work it out in another way. Suppose a lady buys a dozen pocket handkerchiefs which cost $2 where they were bought, and she imports them into Canada. That 27½ cents per $100, which is a little more than a quarter of a cent on a dollar, would be about half a cent on the $2 purchase of the dozen pocket handkerchiefs, and the lady would make a gain of ½ cent under the new tariff as compared with the old. You may calculate it in all classes of goods the same way, and you will find out the fallacies of these gentlemen who have been going through the country saying that they have reduced taxation so largely. These gentlemen have been going through the country claiming that they have reduced taxation. The Minister of Customs said the other night: 'We have saved you $2,600,000 this year; we saved you $2,600,000 last year; over $5,000,000 in the last two years.' Why, Mr. Speaker, they have not saved one-sixth of that sum. They have juggled with the tariff; in many places they have spoiled it; they have cut down the duty on iron in some places and substituted an increased bounty, which is the most direct and positive form of protection that has ever been devised by man; and the figures to-day are almost identical with what they were in 1895 and 1896, the difference being about a quarter of a cent on each one dollar of imports into this country from all parts of the world. Yet the Minister of Customs said the other night, 'We have reduced the taxes on this, on that, and on the other.' Why, Mr. Speaker, if he had stopped to consider for a moment he would have seen that they have increased the taxes on sugar alone to the amount of $730,000, and on coal oil to the amount of over $500,000. The hon. gentleman claims that they have decreased the taxes on coal oil to the amount of $85,000. Before I sit down, I shall prove that they have increased the taxes on coal oil between $570,000 and $600,000. Instead of reducing the taxation, which they fairly might have done in the face of the increased prosperity of the country, they have kept it at almost the same figure, and they have increased the burdens that the people have to bear. We were told by the Minister of Finance the other day that the increase in customs receipts from 1895-6 to 1899 was $8,350,000. If you take the population of Canada at 5,000,000 that would be $1.57 each. If you take the population at 5,300,000, it would be about $1.50 each, or an increased taxation of $7.50 on each family in the country. These are some of the blessings vouchsafed to us by this Liberal government. These gentlemen are never tired of telling what they have done for the people of Canada. They say, 'We have reduced the tariff, we have reduced the expenditure, we have reduced everything.' I have a speech delivered by Mr. Mulock, the Postmaster General, in Goderich on the 11th of February, 1899, as reported in the Globe, in which he said:

Out of 440 articles in the customs tariff, 200 had been placed on the free list, and on 107 the tariff had been reduced, so much so, as in some cases almost to wipe it out.

Now, I have gone over the articles which these hon. gentlemen have placed on the free list. I think the Minister of Customs the other night said that there were twenty-one articles; I could only make up nineteen; but we will not quarrel about the difference, and will say twenty-one. The Postmaster General says that 200 have been placed on the free list and that on 107 the tariff was almost wiped out, so that they are practically free. The Globe newspaper from day to day claims that the great prosperity of the country is due to the Liberal tariff, wiping out the duties on raw materials of manufactures and the necessaries of life for the people. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs tell us the same; but I will give the Minister of Trade and Commerce the credit of saying that he says nothing about it. I think he is too conscientious to make a statement of that kind, which I do not think has very much basis of fact. In the speech delivered the other night by the Minister of Customs he elaborates this idea. He says: 'We have made goods free in every direction; those that were dutiable before, the raw material for manufactures, became free, and this accounts for the great prosperity of the country.' Listen to what he said:

We believe in giving to the manufacturers of this country their raw material duty free in order that they can compete with other manufacturers, and in order that the consumer in this country can get the benefit of it in the reduced price of goods, and he does get the benefit of it.

Then he gives a list of the chief free articles, including coal and coke. He says:

This is a statement showing the chief free articles which we get almost entirely from the United States, and which we cannot get to advantage or profit from Great Britain, at least at present.

Then he tells us the good things which the Liberal party have done since they came into power. He gives the free importations of coal and coke from the United States at $6,848,000, raw cotton at $3,110,000, fruits, green, at $557,000, flax seed at $1,062,000—all raw materials. I do not know that bananas are raw material for any particular manufacture, but we will let them go. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of the Canadian Customs Tariff of 1894, with an index, which was in effect in 1895-6. This is the Foster tariff. In item 548, I see coal anthracite and coal dust free. In item 550, coke free. Thus these very two articles, which the hon. gentleman was claiming credit for having made free, were free before his government came into office. They had been free for years before the Liberals came into power, and the amount is $6,846,000. He said that they had given free raw materials, but in that they only have continued what the Conservative party had done. But they promised to make bituminous coal free, but did not dare do it.

Now, we come to the item of raw cotton, $3,110,000 worth imported into this country. But, I turn to this same tariff of 1894, and on the same page, I see raw cotton, item 561, free of duty. The very articles those gentlemen claim to have made free of duty, were free of duty before they came into office.

The next item of raw material is fruits, green, item 589. These are not the raw material of any particular manufacture, but the interesting fact is that the items of fruit green, that are free to-day, are the same that were free in 1894.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). What page of my speech is the hon. gentleman quoting from, because I do not think he is quoting it correctly?

Mr. WALLACE. I am quoting from page 3075.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman charges me with having said that we had made those goods free, and that they were not free before. I did not say that.

Mr. WALLACE. What the hon. gentleman said, was this:

The trade of the United States has gone up by thirty odd million dollars, but for what reason? Why, because we believe in giving to the manufacturers of this country their raw material duty free, in order that they can compete with other manufacturers, and in order that the consumer in this country can get the benefit of it in the reduced price of goods—and he does get the benefit of it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The statement from which the hon. gentleman is quoting, is given by me in my speech, as:

Statement showing the chief free articles which we get almost entirely from the United States, and which we cannot get, at any rate to advantage or profit, from Great Britain, at least, at present.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman, after saying that he believed in giving the manufacturers their raw material duty free, went on to give a list of the articles that were free. His evident intention was that the people of this country should understand—what else could they understand?—that these articles were made free by the Liberal party and were dutiable before. He cites among these articles, flax seed, $1,062,753, but if you turn to the tariff of 1894, item 688, you will find that flax seed was duty free before these gentlemen came into power at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Who said it was not?

Mr. WALLACE. Every line of the hon. gentleman's speech was intended to impress us with the idea that he had made those articles free, in order that the manufacturers should have their raw materials free. But, we had made them free before these gentlemen came into power. They simply continued our policy, not because they like it, but because they dare not change it. Then I come to tobacco, raw, excise purposes, $1,878,725, but turn to item 717, of Mr. Foster's tariff of 1894, and you find there tobacco manufactured for excise purposes, under condition of inland revenue was free of duty. The only change ever made in that was made in the tariff of 1897, of hon. gentlemen opposite, when they put 14 cents additional for stemmed tobacco, and 10 cents additional for unstemmed. Then they found they had made a mistake, and transferred it to the Inland Revenue Department, but the tax still remains.

Then, I come to the next item, rubber, crude, $1,606,151. Turn to item 679 of Mr. Foster's tariff, and you will find there rubber, crude, free.

Then I come to lumber in this table, amounting to $2,899,864, but in item 736 and 745 of Mr. Foster's tariff, there is a long list of the articles of free lumber, and so far as I can remember they are the same items that are free to-day. Coin is free, and it always was. Ores are also free, and were free in Mr. Foster's tariff, as you will find by turning to item 653.

Now the hon. gentleman said:

There are $32,132,859 worth of these articles that are free. Free for what purpose? Free to benefit our own people, free to benefit our manufacturers, free to enable them to compete with others and free to give to Canadian consumers their goods at a cheaper price.

Did the hon. gentleman tell the people of Canada that it was the Conservative party who made these items free? A more dishonest statement never was made by a public man. It was made for a purpose. It is repeated, and the Grit orators will take that up, and say: Look at what we have made free; there is Mr. Paterson's speech in the House of Commons, which has never been contradicted, and it gives these articles as being made free by the Liberal government.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. You will not see that in the speech.

Mr. WALLACE. Every line of the speech indicates it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is misquoting entirely.

Mr. WALLACE. I will ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson), if he will say that in his speech the statement was made that every one of these articles were made free by the Liberal-Conservative party.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It says, 'statement showing the chief free articles that we get almost entirely from the United States'—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) was asking me what it was.

Mr. WALLACE. I have read it twice in this House, and yet the hon. minister is not satisfied.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. I have read it twice, and Hansard will show it. Now, what did these hon. gentlemen make free? Here are the articles they made free, and I will say that with the exception of Indian corn and barbed wire and binder twine, which I shall refer to by themselves later on, the articles they have made free in their tariff are so utterly insignificant as not to deserve any consideration, that is as far as money value is concerned. The items they made free were:

- 472. Life-boats, &c.
- 479. Artificial limbs.
- 516. Duck for belting and hose, canvas for bicycle tires.
- 597. Steel for surgical trusses.
- 600. Steel for axle bars.
- 601. Steel spirals for railways.
- 602. Steel for augers and knives.
- 603. Galvanized iron wire.
- 588. Cream separators.

Then the hon. gentleman says: 'We have put cream separators on the free list. I would like to ask him why cream separators come in free of duty while there is a duty on biscuit? Give us the reason. Cream separators are made in this country. But while cream separators come in free of duty, cream sodas can only come in at a duty of 25 per cent. Why? Is it because the Minister of Customs is particularly interested in cream sodas and is not interested in cream separators.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Kloepper), is interested in cream separators.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that is one of the unfair things in the tariff. Under our tariff, we made the steel bowl for the separator free. These bowls were not made in Canada, and I am told that they were not then made in any country outside of Denmark. They were a raw material, as it were, for the manufacturer in this country and we admitted them free. Now, not only is the bowl admitted free, but the whole separator is admitted free, and in this way the government have crushed a Canadian industry as far as they could do it. On what ground? Why should they protect one industry and not another. No logical reason has ever been offered to the House why that should be done.

- 469. Fashion plates.
- 471. Donations of books for charitable purposes.
- 526. Rape seed and mushroom spawn.
- 553. Sewing machine attachments.
- 595. Furniture castors.
- 604. Stereotypes for papers.
- 617. Brass trimmings for bedsteads.
- 464. Certain classes of books.

There is the whole list made free by the Liberals when they came into power. I have here the list of articles made free by the Conservatives in 1894, and I am going to read at least a portion of it to the House. I think it should be on record as it has never been placed on record before. We had a huge free list even before 1894. Yet in that year we cut down the tariff and made many articles free that were dutiable before. I would like to call attention to these things and compare them with what the Liberals did in 1897:

Here are 189 articles in all that were made free by the Conservative government in 1894 in addition to the enormous free list that we had then, particularly in raw materials for manufactures, to enable us to increase our manufacturing industries. What more did we do? We made important reductions, and I am going to read a few of them:

Mr. McCarthy stated in the House last session that the rates on cotton fabrics averaged 41 per cent, to-day it cannot be higher than 30 per cent, and mostly 22½ and 25 per cent.

Sugar allowed free entry, formerly 14 Dutch standard, now 16 Dutch standard.

On woollen cloths, tweeds, coatings, overcoatings, the rate is reduced on the poor man and increased on the rich man.

Rate formerly, 10 cts. per lb. and 20 per cent; rate now 5 cts. per lb. and 25 per cent.

The above also applies to woollen ready made clothing.

Rate formerly, 10 cts. per lb. and 25 per cent; rate now 5 cts. per lb. and 30 per cent.

I must apologize to the House for taking up so much time in reading these figures, but I want to put on record what has never been put on record before in this House, that is, the reductions we made in the tariff in 1894 as compared with the small amount of reductions which they made in 1897. I say that in this matter it is we who have reduced the tariff rate in this country, it is we who have studied the interests of the people of this country, and those hon. gentlemen want to appropriate for themselves what we have done. There could be no more flagrant instance of it than that speech made here the other night by the Minister of Customs, and the speech made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) in various places, and the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), in fact, by the speeches made by all the gentlemen on the other side of the House, except the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who sticks to his guns with more tenacity than those other gentlemen.

I said a moment ago that I would show that on this question of coal oil the government have done a greater injury to the people, ten times over, than they could repair by making a reduction of one cent per gallon on oil. The Minister of Customs, the other night, claimed that there was a profit to the people of this country of $85,000, meaning that 8,500,000 gallons were imported, though I see there were over 9,000,000 gallons imported. He said that a cent a gallon on this quantity meant a saving to the people of $85,000 a year. Now, Mr. Speaker, I deny that. They reduced the tariff one cent per gallon, from six to five cents. At the same time they gave facilities to the Standard Oil Company, who came down here, whose agents were around these buildings, who dictated the tariff that the government were to put on, and who made no secret about it either—I know that from my personal knowledge. They, in fact, dictated the tariff governing the tankage powers in vessels and extending it on cars. The virtual effect of it was immediately to hand over the control of the Canadian oil interests to the Standard Oil Company. Why, Sir, did we not see, the other day, in the investigation before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, how completely they are controlling the business of this country? Both the great railway companies, that ought to have strength and power enough to resist them, have been brought down, have had to yield to the demands of those pirates coming over from the other side of the line. I have a paper in my hand called the American, dated February 12, 1898. It gives a history of this Standard Oil Company, what we already know in a general way of its doings and history in this country:

They have not, indeed, accomplished the impossible, but they have found something better than the alchemist's equation, something more potent in the accumulation of wealth without labour than the possession of the philosopher's stone. The alchemists sought to turn base metal into gold and failed; the unscrupulous men who organized the Standard Oil Company sought to turn dishonesty into gold, and they succeeded. They have not, indeed, discovered the undiscoverable art of making something out of nothing, but they have succeeded in getting property without creating it, in enjoying wealth without earning it.

Starting with nothing twenty-five years ago, the Standard Oil Trust has to-day a capital of nearly $100,000,000, with a market value of over four times as much, and upon which dividends are paid of something like $20,000,000 a year. And these dividends represent far from the earnings of the trust, far from the sum of money that is exacted from the users of oil and divided yearly among the few who use this trust to prey upon the community, divided among the holders of trust certificates and the leeches who draw tribute from the trust, for the trust that sucks millions from the community has its numerous suckers.

Here then we have a property, if we call it such—rather an organization, a concentration of influences—with an acknowledged earning power of $20,000,000 a year, a property or bundle of indescribable but irresistible influences whose earnings are undoubtedly two or three times as much, and all this created out of nothing of value, the creation not of labour productively employed, but the reward of the labour of dishonesty.

Now, Sir, this organization has come over here, this organization has been hand in glove with the government from the moment it arrived. They have dictated to the government what they should do, as they have dictated to the railways. Their actions have been brought before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and yet, the government have not had time to investigate the case, they have not had time to come to a conclusion and to say that the people of this country, through their representatives, through their ministry, through their members of parliament, are not going to permit a foreign band of robbers to come in here and throttle the business of this country, to dictate to the railroads, to take possession of all the refineries in Canada. And what have they done? They stated a year ago that they were not increasing the price of oil. I have here a statement of the wholesale prices of oil in the city of Toronto, taken from the books of the firms of Wallace Bros., of which I am a member, for the past year:

That is an increase on both of these Canadian oils of 3 cents per gallon. As to American oils any hon. gentleman can see by reading the evidence given before the Railway Committee that it is an impossibility for any honest company to compete with them in importing oils into this country, and they own all the refineries. They give the dealers such prices as they please, and they have been pleased, in their modesty, to increase the price 3 cents per gallon. There were 9,363,000 gallons imported into Canada last year. It is estimated by the Department of Inland Revenue that there are between 10,500,000 and 11,000,000 gallons of our native oil produced in this country per annum. They have not the exact figures, but this is their estimate. Add that to the 9,500,000 and you have over 20,000,000 gallons, and at 3 cents per gallon it just makes $600,000. That $600,000 these men are imposing on the people of this country, and they could make it $1,200,000 just as easily. All they have to do is to say that this is our price. It has gone up 3 cents a gallon. At the present time they are supposed to be making $50,000 monthly more than their regular profits, that is $600,000 a year. These robbers! And the government, instead of fighting these men and saying that we are going to control the business of this country, have not the power, apparently, or the courage to do it. At any rate, they have not done it up to the present.

Mr. TAYLOR. They would squeal on them, because they gave $200,000 to their election campaign fund.

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps they are expecting some other favours in the next elections. These are the facts, and yet the hon. Minister of Customs gets up and tells us that they have saved the country $85,000 in all. He says: We have saved the country a cent a gallon. He has not shown that the government have reduced the price of oil one cent or one-quarter of a cent a gallon. But they have increased it to the extent that I have mentioned. The price is taken from actual transactions in oil bought from the agent of the Queen City Oil Company, which is the Standard Oil Company. That is the wholesale price. Another matter, and I consider it a matter of great importance, is that the hon. Minister of Customs, the other night, quoted a long list of agricultural implements in regard to which he said: Our duty is so much; the duty when the Liberal-Conservatives were in power was so much, and we have saved so much to this country. I am going to make use of that table for another purpose. I have a list here of the agricultural implements that we imported into this country in 1896 and of those that we imported in 1899. I may say that nearly every one of these duties was imposed under our own Conservative tariff, which we reduced from 35 to 20 per cent. I think, that, in respect to many of these articles, we made a mistake, but, at any rate, we took this ground: We said we are a protectionist government, we believe in protection; if experience demonstrates that we have placed too low a duty upon these articles we will increase the duty so as to protect the Canadian manufacturer against the American manufacturer, or the outside manufacturer. What do we find? The importations of agricultural implements were as follows:

Mr. WALLACE.

	1896.	1899.
Binding attachments	$ 3,766	$ 32,756
Cultivators	21,371	17,954
Drills, grain seed	40,243	64,683
Farm, road or field rollers.....		160
Forks, pronged	6,408	10,968
Harrows	18,729	53,739
Harvesters, self-binding and without binders	130,780	664,610
Hay tedders		4,652
Hoes	1,052	2,979
Horse rakes	13,533	69,043
Knives, hay or straw.....	7	104
Lawn mowers	977	6,338
Manure spreaders		140
Mowing machines	72,338	348,735
Ploughs	51,670	192,158
Post-hole diggers		195
Potato diggers		249
Rakes, n.e.s.	983	4,920
Reapers	2,330	25,066
Scythes and snaths, sickles or reaping hooks	22,430	29,328
Spades and shovels and blanks.	24,115	18,288
Weeders		56,856
All other agricultural implements, n.e.s.	35,135	21,294
Total	$445,917	$1,625,215

In 1896 the total importations of agricultural implements was $445,917 and in 1899 they amounted to $1,625,215, or nearly four times as much. The point I make is not the point made out by the hon Minister of Customs.

Mr. TAYLOR. In 1899 it was $1,600,000.

Mr. WALLACE. In 1896 the importation was $445,917 of agricultural implements into Canada, and in 1899 it was $1,625,215, or a difference of $1,179,298 being the excess of the importation in 1899 over 1896. I would have a tariff that would result in all these implements being made in this country. They say: We must have McCormick binders and reapers. Very well, let them come into Canada and make them.

Mr. BERGERON. Do the farmers buy them cheaper?

Mr. WALLACE. No, Sir, under the 35 per cent tariff the Ontario farmer—I am not speaking of the North-west farmer because the conditions there were different—got the cheapest binder that could be got in the world. I had the statements made by the McCormick Company; and the Ontario farmer bought the cheapest binder in the world under a 35 per cent tariff and under the 20 per cent tariff the price remained the same. Our policy, so far as I am concerned, at any rate, would be to make the whole of this $1,625,000 worth of agricultural implements right here in Canada. We know how to make agricultural implements. We have been brought up in Canada to the business, and we can do it skilfully and well. I have a circular of the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost) and I know that he is a man who is responsible for his statements, which says that the binders manufactured by his firm are not exceeded by the binders of any other country in the world. We can have them as good as they can be made in the world and have them made in Canada; we can have 1,625 men making these implements here, give the benefit to our own people and build up our own industries. The hon. Minister of Customs has deluged the House with figures without any meaning, or, if they have any meaning, it is a misleading one, and it is one that does not do justice to the country, or to the minister himself. Take another article. Take the article of biscuits. The Minister of Customs, (Mr. Pater-son) they say, has a very warm interest in biscuits, and I am told that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has a somewhat more indirect interest in the same trade. Do you find that the importations of biscuits has increased four-fold. Not at all. There has been a watchful eye over that branch of Canadian industry. The importation of biscuits in 1896 amounted to $41,022 worth, and in 1899 they amounted to $38,085, or a decrease of about $3,000.

Mr. BERGERON. More biscuits made in Canada?

Mr. WALLACE. More biscuits made in Canada and less imported. The Minister of Customs has pointed us to the great benefits of preferential trade with Great Britain. But, how does that affect biscuits? We brought in 540,000 pounds of biscuits in 1899, from all countries at a cost of $38,000, and the saving by the preferential tariff was just $576.89. More than that, the duty paid on the English biscuits that came under the preferential tariff was 2.127 cents per pound, but the duty paid on the other biscuits that did not come under the preferential tariff, was only 1.65 cents a pound. That is the way it worked out. Oh, it showed that there was a careful, watchful man at the head of the Customs Department, and that he was looking after the interests of 'No. 1,' which is the greatest of all numbers, I am told.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What you are saying now, shows about your size.

Mr. WALLACE. It shows about my size, does it? Well, it does not show anything very creditable to the Minister of Customs.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It shows a reduced rate from Great Britain, apparently.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister of Customs has taken good care, that while he permits cream separators to come in free, so as to destroy the Canadian industry, he has no intention of doing that in the case of the industry in which he is interested. The small part of the business is, that a man should be guilty of that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The tariff is lower than it was.

Mr. WALLACE. The tariff is the same as it was when they came in, and higher than it was in 1894.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Are biscuits cheaper?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are a fair price.

Mr. WALLACE. More than that, the Minister of Customs was not satisfied with the protection that the Conservative tariff gave him, and so he had to form a combine to keep up the price. He was a member of the combine himself, and I challenge him to get up and deny it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace), look at this placard of the Woodbridge Fair, which was printed in the United States? Did he ever see it before? I show it to the House now, as a specimen, and there is his name on it.

Mr. WALLACE. I must protest against the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), parading his portrait before this House, without being asked.

Mr. McMULLEN. He is a great man to talk about protecting industries, when he gets this placard printed in the United States.

Mr. WALLACE. I will tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen), the history of that photograph of himself. We were getting out a bill for the greatest of all country fairs, the Woodbridge Fair, and the Toronto lithographers, quoted the price at $39, for the quantity we required. We got samples from two or three places, and we laid them down on the floor, and an American concern from Cincinnati, I think, sent in their samples, and we compared them, and we found that by paying 50 per cent duty, and freight and other charges, we could buy them cheaper in the United States. Here is the only example I have every known or heard of where the national policy, and the policy of protection has not worked out fairly well.

Mr. ELLIS. There are lots of them.

Mr. WALLACE. The price the Americans asked for the three or four hundred bills we required, was $12, the duty was $6, and the freight $1.50, which made $19.50, and the cheapest we could buy them in Canada for, was $39. We paid the duty on them, and these gentlemen opposite do not object to that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But, you do.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not object to paying the duty on goods, so long as they are not goods we can manufacture in Canada. I say that we can make agricultural implements here, because we are in the business.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why did you not get your bills here ?

Mr. WALLACE. Because we bought them for $19.50, when the Toronto lithographers would charge $39.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Oh, how unpatriotic.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why did you not get them to leave your name off ?

Mr. WALLACE. I am not ashamed of my name, but I admit that I do not care to have it under the portrait of the hon. member for North Wellington. However, these are things you must put up with, sometimes in a lifetime.

Mr. BERGERON. Come back to biscuits. That is interesting.

Mr. WALLACE. I have demonstrated tonight that the duty in 1889 was precisely the same as the duty in 1895 and 1896, with the exception of 27½ cents per $100. The Minister of Customs would lead one to think that the Liberal government were saving millions of dollars to the people of the country. Well, I have pointed out that in the matter of coal oil, they have imposed a tax upon the people of Canada of $600,000 a year, by their course in connection with the Standard Oil Company. I can point out now, that in 1896, the duty on 257,000,000 pounds of sugar, was $1,338,000, and that in 1899, on 269,000,000 pounds of sugar, we paid $1,932,000 duty, or $793,594 more than before, but of course there was more sugar. However, here is what occurred : If you take the same amount of sugar imported in 1896, with the 1896 tariff, as we imported in 1899, with the tariff now existing, we would have saved $731,900 by the Conservative tariff. The duty upon sugar is a tax upon the people, upon the poor people, more especially, as it is an article not produced in the country. That was put on by the Conservative government, because we wanted to raise more revenue. A tax upon tea is also a tax upon the people, because tea is not produced in this country. Now, Mr. speaker, there are some other matters which I wish to refer to, but as I want to get along as rapidly as possible, I shall have to leave the consideration of them for another occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Adjourn.

Mr. WALLACE. If the right hon. First Minister will not object, I will move that the debate be now adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will not object.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. WALLACE.

SAN JOSE SCALE ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher) moved second reading of Bill (No. 126) to amend the San José Scale Act. He said : I would like to ask the attention of the House for a moment or two, even at this late hour. My excuse for doing so is that it is understood that the other branch of parliament will adjourn till after Easter, and it is important in the public interest that this Bill should be passed very shortly. I may explain that I have introduced this amendment in consequence of a pretty general demand for greater facilities for the importation of nursery stock. Hon. members will remember that the original San José Scale Act absolutely prohibited the importation of nursery stock from the United States in consequence of the very great prevalence of this insect pest in that country, a pest which at that time was not known to exist to any appreciable extent in Canada, and which we wished to keep out. I do not wish by this amendment to injure in any way our nursery or forest trees in Canada, and the amendment is only for the purpose of making such provision as may safely be carried out. There is a method by which nursery stock can be rendered perfectly safe, that is, by fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas in a closed chamber or box ; and the object of this Bill is to enable the government to establish ports very much in the same way as cattle ports were established in days past for the quarantining of cattle. At these ports the fumigating plant will be erected and a man put in charge to receive and fumigate nursery stock coming in to this country. The cost of this will be comparatively small, while it will afford relief to a large number of people who, in consequence especially of the destruction of the peach orchards in the province of Ontario last year, and in consequence of the very great demand in Canada during the last two seasons for nursery stock, cannot to-day obtain in this country the stock they require for planting purposes. At the same time, there are a large number of people in the country who are desirous of importing some species of ornamental plants and shrubs and some fruit trees which are not generally to be found amongst the nurserymen of this country. We think this relief can be given to these people with perfect safety, otherwise I would not suggest this modification of the original San José Scale Act. I would be very glad to answer any question in regard to the matter which hon. gentlemen wish to put to me.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how many trees were destroyed last year by order of the government ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This Government did not destroy any trees at all. In the province of Ontario the local legislature passed an Act by which inspectors of the local government were empowered to destroy trees found to be affected with the San José Scale, and a considerable number were destroyed. I could not give the hon. gentleman even an approximate statement of the number.

Mr. WALLACE. I think 41,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I knew it was several thousands, but I did not suppose it was as high as that. The local government in Ontario have modified their Act, and are proposing now to treat the trees affected with the scale with hydrocyanic acid gas by a method which is supposed to be effective. It is doubtful whether it is effective in every case, but the loss of trees has been so great in the attempt to eradicate the scale that the local legislature have modified their Act and made arrangements for treating the trees instead of destroying them. This method of fumigating, if done effectively, is regarded by the entomologists as a perfect preventive of the spread of the disease.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it the intention of the minister to establish a number of ports of entry, or only a few?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My proposal is to name about six ports along the United States frontier—one in the maritime provinces, one in Quebec, two in Ontario, one in Manitoba and one in British Columbia. I thought that number would fairly serve the public requirements. In Ontario I would try to have one on the Niagara frontier, at the most convenient point for importation purposes, and one on the Detroit River which would serve people importing from Michigan and the west. The right to import into Manitoba is largely asked for by the Manitoba people. They say that they can bring stock from Minnesota and Dakota which seems to be more suitable for their climate than trees grown in the southern parts of the eastern provinces. The people in the maritime provinces say again that they can import to greater advantage from the New England nurseries than they can purchase from the Ontario nurseries. The proposal is to name these ports and to provide the regulations under which the stock imported shall be fumigated. The expenditure will be slight, in the way of putting up a building. It has been found in the experience of fumigating under the Ontario Act that a building costing under $100 will serve the purpose except where very large quantities require to be fumigated.

Mr. WALLACE. How will you perform the manual labour of unpacking the cases and packing them up again?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That would have to be done by men accustomed to the work.

Mr. WALLACE. It is quite a technical work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I propose to put in charge of each of these stations, during the period of importation allowed, men who are thoroughly acquainted with nursery work. The period of importation would probably be only a month or six weeks in the spring, and something like two months in the fall. These are the only periods of the year in which nursery stock is imported.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where are the worst affected districts of the United States?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The scale originated in California. Among the eastern states, I think Maryland and New Jersey are the worst; but it has spread through most of the eastern states. The middle states, such as Indiana, Ohio and Michigan, are also affected. There are very few states free from it, with the exception of Dakota and some others of the western states. Nearly all of the stock from the United States, which we import largely, comes from states in which this scale exists.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do for the eradicating of the scale that exists in Canada?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall not undertake that work. The only part of Canada in which the scale is known to exist is the province of Ontario, and the local authorities there are dealing with its eradication. I am only trying to prevent, through the action of this parliament, any importation of further scale. I think, if I might be allowed to move the House into committee, it would be more convenient to go into details then.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee thereon.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the total cost?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Probably $2,500 to $3,000 per year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You will not need the employees for more than two months in the year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From three to four months in the year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will you take them from other branches?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, we need an expert in the handling of nursery stock, accustomed to packing and unpacking, and these would employ ordinary labour when found necessary. At some of the ports it is not likely any large quantities will be imported, but in Ontario this spring and fall there may be a good many car-loads of nursery stock brought in, and they ought to be handled as quickly as possible, and the person in charge of the station be authorized to employ such labour as is needed.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman know that the Ontario government are employing a large staff to go through the different townships of western Ontario and make inquiries concerning this scale?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have just the same means of information as the hon. gentleman, but Mr. Fletcher, the entomologist of the Experimental Farm, was recently in Niagara peninsula, meeting some people employed by the Ontario government and a number of nurserymen there, and I waited until that meeting was over and I had information of the proceedings before introducing this Bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where is this system in operation?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In a large number of nurseries in the United States, in California very largely, and at all the nurseries in Ontario, where, under the provincial Act, all nursery stock has to be fumigated before being shipped. By reason of that precaution, I am satisfied that the spread of the scale has been to a large extent prevented. There is no question as to the efficiency of properly conducted fumigation, and as to the facility with which this work can be done, if properly informed men have charge of it.

Mr. GUILLET. What ports do you propose to use?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not named the ports. One ought to be on the Niagara frontier, and one on the Detroit River frontier.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Windsor and Niagara Falls, I presume.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Probably, and I propose to have one in Quebec, probably St. John, where a number of railways converge, and it would be convenient for distribution.

Mr. GUILLET. There has been a very large importation of nursery stock from Rochester, particularly across the lake, and it would be a great inconvenience to that central district between Toronto and Kingston if distributing points were established there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will bear the suggestion in mind and look into it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Take the Trade and Navigation Returns and find out the ports where the largest quantity of nursery products come in.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. INGRAM. Has the hon. gentleman received complaints from farmers of some officials employed by the Ontario government, who ordered trees to be destroyed for scale when, as a matter of fact, the trees were not troubled with the disease at all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No such statement has ever been presented to me, and it is not likely they would, because I have no control over these officials.

Mr. INGRAM. You have heard, I suppose, of these complaints?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have seen the reports in the newspapers.

Bill reported; read the third time and passed.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 4, 1900.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BASIC SLAG FERTILIZER.

Mr. DOMVILLE (by Mr. Gibson) asked:

1. Is the government aware that basic slag, Thomas' phosphate powder, is being used very largely in Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Germany and throughout the continent of Europe as a fertilizer?

2. Is this fertilizer imported into Canada and used by the farmer? Is the government aware that it is produced by the extraction of phosphoric acid from iron ore in process of smelting?

3. Is it true, as stated before the Agricultural Committee on Wednesday, that the consumption of Thomas' phosphate powder, or basic slag, has grown from fifty tons in 1883 to 1,500,000 tons in 1899?

4. How does the Fertilizer Act passed in 1890 affect the importation and sale of this fertilizer in Canada?

5. Clause 7, subsection 2, chap. 24, 53 Victoria, reads: 'No fertilizer shall be sold or offered or exposed for sale unless it contains at least 8 per cent of available phosphoric acid, or 4 per cent of ammonia or its equivalent in nitrogen or nitric acid; or when both phosphoric acid and ammonia are present, at least 5 per cent of available phosphoric acid and 2 per cent of ammonia or its equivalent in nitrogen or nitric acid.'

6. Is this analysis determined by the chief analyst of the Department of Inland Revenue, or by whom?

(a) What system has he adopted to test the Thomas phosphate powder or basic slag?
 (b) Has he used the citrate of ammonia solution which he usually employs in testing the available phosphoric acid in superphosphates which have been made by mixing raw mineral phosphates with sulphuric acid?
 (c) In testing has he taken into consideration the basic nature of Thomas' phosphate powder and first neutralized the free lime?

Germany.

Prof. Dr. Wagner, Privy Councillor, director of agricultural experimental station of the Grand Duchy of Hesse.

Darmstadt, September 29, 1899.

The analysis of the sample received from you on September 25, has given the following result:

Thomas' Phosphate Powder.	PHOSPHORIC ACID.
	Citric Soluble.	Total.
	p. c.	p. c.
Analysis of part sample (a)	14.98	16.41
Analysis of part sample (c).....	14.85	16.34
Average.....	14.92	16.38

(d) Prof. Wagner, D. Ph., Privy Councillor of the Imperial Agricultural Research Station of Darmstadt, Germany, has ascertained a method which can easily be adopted by all laboratories in order to determine the solubility of the phosphoric acid in basic slag; his method is now recognized in all European countries as fully reliable. Has the chief analyst adopted this system? If not, why not?

(e) Is not the Wagner system recognized and adopted by—

7. Did the Department of Inland Revenue instruct one of their officials to draw samples of Albert Thomas' phosphate powder, to be submitted, under government seal, to chemists in Great Britain, France and Germany, in order to determine the amount of soluble phosphoric acid in Albert Thomas' phosphate powder, and were not the following certificates of analysis or copies, forwarded to the department:

Result of Analysis

Of a sample of Thomas' phosphate powder sent by Messrs. the Chemical Works (late H. & E. Albert).

Marked, 'Inland Revenue, 17,663, St. John, N.B., July 15, 1899.' Sample sold as Thomas' phosphate powder. Officer's signature, John C. Ferguson.
 Sealed, 'Food, Dominion of Canada.'

Percentage of phosphoric acid dissolved by 2 per cent solution of citric acid (Wagner's method) 14·44
 Total phosphoric acid 16·47
 (Sgd.) AUGUS. VOELCKER.

8. Did not John C. Ferguson, of the Inland Revenue Department, when drawing the samples which were forwarded under by the department to Europe for analysis, as stated in the preceding question, send a portion of the same sample under seal to the chief analyst at Ottawa for his analysis?

9. Did the chief analyst give the following analysis of the sample referred to in question 8:

	Moisture.	Reverted.	Insoluble.	Total.
	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.
No. 17661.....	0·14	7·16	5·44	12·60
No. 17662.....	0·18	4·75	7·85	12·60
No. 17663.....	0·14	6·72	6·40	13·12

There is reason for concluding that some of the phosphorus contained in these samples of Thomas' phosphate powder is in the state of phosphide. Apart from this consideration, it will be evident that the percentage of available (reverted) phosphoric acid is below that required by article 7, paragraph 3, of the Fertilizers Act.

I have no doubt that when the report of the analysis of these samples made by the manufacturers comes to hand it will show larger percentages available (reverted to citrate soluble) phosphoric acid. This will be owing to the adoption by them of the method of analysis

Moisture.	PHOSPHORIC ACID.		Total.
	Reverted.	Insoluble.
per cent.	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.
0·14	7·16	5·44	12·60
0·18	4·75	7·85	12·60
0·14	6·72	6·40	13·12

10. Is it not true that these three samples, as analysed, were drawn out of the same sample? If so, why the discrepancy of 2·41 in the analysis of the one sample subdivided into three tests?

11. What method of analysis was adopted by the chief analyst in determining his analysis, as referred to in previous paragraph?

12. In the report of the chief analyst of the Inland Revenue Department, analysis No. 17640 of the Thomas' phosphate powder he gives nitrogen—total including that of nitric acid or ammonia, if present, 16, and total calculated as ammonia 20 and 1·38 potash, and that No. 18923 gives nitrogen, including that of nitric acid or ammonia, if present, 1·81, and total calculated as ammonia 2·19 and potash 14. Under what system of analysis did he find ammonia and potash present in the percentages named by him?

13. Are there any authorities in the possession of the chief analyst, or known to exist, which indicate that it is possible to find ammonia and potash present in Thomas' phosphate powder at all?

14. Did Thomas Macfarlane, chief analyst, make the following report to the department:

(Copy.)
 Laboratory of the Inland Revenue Dept.,
 Ottawa, September 15, 1899.

E. Miall, Esq.,
 Commissioner of Inland Revenue.

Sir,—I return herewith file No. 30,772, and have to report that the samples referred to in Messrs. Wallace and Fraser's letter of the 1st instant, have been analysed in this laboratory, with the following results:

	Moisture.	Reverted.	Insoluble.	Total.
	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.
No. 17661.....	0·14	7·16	5·44	12·60
No. 17662.....	0·18	4·75	7·85	12·60
No. 17663.....	0·14	6·72	6·40	13·12

referred to in one of the pamphlets sent, and which is fully described in the Chemiker Zeitung of 1894, p. 1153.

I do not, however, consider it possible that the public analysts of Canada, or the chemists in this laboratory, can adopt this method, for the following reasons:

1. The fertilizers offered for sale in Canada are largely manufactured in the United States, and for many years past the official methods of analysis adopted there have been used in Canada, so that comparisons as to the relative value of fertilizers can readily be made. It would lead to much confusion and hostile animadversion if we were to attempt to change this practice.

2. It would be manifestly unfair to allow any manufacturer to prescribe the method to be used for analysing his goods.

3. It is not possible for this branch, in selecting its methods of analysis, to consider statements regarding the agricultural effects of the various fertilizers.

I trust, therefore, that the department will continue to maintain the position taken in May last, that the sale of Thomas' phosphate powder as now found in the Canadian market is illegal, and will insist upon the addition, by the manufacturer or agent, of 2 per cent of ammonia to the article, so that contravention of the provisions of the Fertilizers Act may be avoided. As has been repeatedly stated, it must contain, when sold as at present, 8 per cent of available phosphoric acid at least; when, however, both phosphoric acid and ammonia are present, the lowest limits are 5 per cent of the former and 2 of the latter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) THOMAS MACFARLANE,
Chief Analyst.

15. If so, did the department insist on 2 per cent ammonia being added to the Thomas phosphate slag, as recommended in the last paragraph of the report? If not, why not, and does the department intend to carry out the recommendation in the future?

16. In paragraph 1, the chief analyst refers to the methods used in the United States for analysing, and reports against using any other method. Is the department aware that this system is adapted to the analysis of superphosphates and mixed fertilizer, and does not in any way determine the availability of phosphoric acid in the Thomas phosphate or basic slag?

17. He states that it would lead to much confusion to adopt any other system than that used by him now. What would be the confusion?

18. Is analysis intended to determine actual constituent parts of what may be analyzed for the benefit of the public at large, or to be optional with the chief analyst to determine to give just such analysis as he thinks and by any process he may elect to use?

19. Has the chief analyst the means at his disposal to make correct analysis? If not, will he be furnished with such scientific instruments as may be necessary?

20. Does the department intend to adopt the latest scientific methods of treating and analysing, or continue to be bound by old and obsolete systems?

21. If so, what redress will be furnished to the public against any arbitrary analysis of the chief analyst?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). In reply I beg to say: 1. The department is aware that the article in question is used largely as a fertilizer. 2. (a) To a limited extent. (b) No; it is produced in the process of separating phosphorus from pig iron. 3. It is possibly true. 4. The Fertilizers Act forbids the sale of ground basic slag, or Thomas' phosphate powder. 5. Clause 7, subsection 2, causes it to be condemned by the district analysts as 'adulterated under the Act.' 6. This analysis is usually made by the district analysts, and in the case of appeal, by the chief analyst, or his assistants; (a) The same system is used for other fertilizers; (b) Citrate of ammonia solution is used for determining the available phosphoric acid; (c) No; (d) No, because the methods of analysis adopted by the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists of the United States have heretofore been in use and given satisfaction; (e) Possibly, but the system has not been adopted by the Society of Public Analysts in England, nor by any association in Europe, similar to that of the United States official chemists. 7. Yes. 8. Yes. 9. Yes; the analyses were made by Mr. A. L. Turchot, second assistant. 10. The analyses were not repeated, as the chief variation was in the available phosphoric acid, and attributable to the use of different methods of analysis. 11. The method adopted by Mr. Turchot was that mentioned under 6 (d). 12. The analysis of sample No. 17,640 was made in the laboratory of Dr. M. Fiset, public analyst, Quebec, and was, no doubt, made under the system mentioned under 6 (d). 13. No; but, nevertheless, the analysis in question may be quite correct. 14. Yes. 15. No; owing to objections made by the importers. 16. No. 17. The adoption of citric acid as a solvent in the case of one fertilizer only, would require explanation to other manufacturers and the agricultural public. The former would certainly object, and demand the application of the new method of analysis to their products, while the farmers would be unable to understand why two different systems should be applied, and become confused in attempting to distinguish between citrate soluble and citric soluble phosphoric acid. 18. The analysis of a sample is intended for the benefit of the public at large and to determine actual percentages present of fertilizing constituents. 19. Yes. 20. The department cannot alter its system at the instance of any special manufacturer, but it is ready to adopt the latest and best scientific methods approved by the Society of Public Analysts in England, or recommended by any such body as the Royal Agricultural Society in England. It is also prepared to adopt that system which the authorities of the Dominion experimental farms recognize as giving results corresponding most closely with those obtained in actual agricultural practice. 21. The answer to the preceding question shows that the department is not bound by old and obsolete systems of analysis, at the same time it does not admit that the analysis by the chief analyst can be justly qualified as arbitrary.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TIDAL SURVEY.

Mr. PRIOR asked:

1. Has not $1,200 been placed in the estimates for the purpose of extending the tidal survey in British Columbia?

2. If so, is this sum to be expended in establishing additional self-recording tide gauges on the British Columbia coast, or is it to be used in assisting the British Hydrographic Office to publish Canadian tide tables from data already taken, some of which are believed to be meagre and unreliable?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Out of this year's tidal vote it is proposed to devote about $1,200 to the reduction of tidal observations already obtained from the two gauges maintained by the Public Works Department, at Victoria and the mouth of the Fraser River. (See page 1702 of Hansard). 2. It is not considered necessary at present to establish any additional gauges as the records already existing give thoroughly reliable data for four years past, which have not yet been made available as a basis for accurate tide tables. On the results from the Victoria or Esquimalt gauge the tables for the whole Strait of Juan de Fuca will be based; those of the Fraser River gauge will give a determination for the Gulf of Georgia. The data obtained from these two stations are complete and reliable. Such tide tables as are now in use are based on United States observations at Port Townsend, which do not well apply to British Columbia waters. The tide tables when worked out will be published by this department. I am not aware that the British Hydrographic Office publishes any tide tables.

ST. PETER'S HARBOUR, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's) asked :

1. Are any repairs to be made of the St. Peter's Harbour breakwater, P.E.I., this year? If so, what do they consist of?
2. Are tenders to be called for said work and materials? If not, why?
3. Has any party been authorized to purchase timber or other material for said work, and what are the prices of said material?
4. If contract is already let, to whom, and what is the amount thereof?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes. Renewing and strengthening the outer end of the work. 2. No tenders are to be called. The nature and extent of the work does not warrant the calling for tenders. 3. The resident engineer has been authorized to purchase timber and other materials required for the work. The prices to be paid for same are the usual market prices of the locality. 4. No contract has been let. The cost is estimated to be about $500.

COMPOSITION OF QUEBEC COURTS.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

Who are the judges who have sat in the Court of Appeal for the province of Quebec since 1880?

Who is the judge who has presided in the Criminal Court in Montreal and Quebec since 1880?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to observe to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron), that I do not understand the purport of his question. 'Who are the judges who have sat in the Court of Appeal for the province of Quebec since 1880?' Do I understand him to wish to have the names of all the judges who have sat in the different terms?

Mr. BERGERON. I want the names of the judges who have composed the Court of Appeals since 1880; and, as to question 2, who are the judges who have presided at the different terms in Quebec and Montreal since 1880.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let the question stand.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

MAJOR BLISS—DEPARTURE FROM DAWSON.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

What is the date of the departure of Major Bliss from Dawson City?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The orders directing Major Bliss to report at headquarters were received at Dawson, January 13, 1900. Major Bliss was, at the time, at Seikirk, which station he left for Ottawa on January 27, 1900.

ASSISTANCE TO BAIT FREEZING COMPANIES.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. What arrangements have been made by the government to assist bait freezing companies?
2. Does the government propose to contribute towards the cost of the buildings? If so, on what conditions?
3. Is it proposed to offer companies a bonus? If so, for how many years and on what basis?
4. Did the Department of Marine and Fisheries furnish printed instructions as to the nature of the proposal? If so, what were they, and when were they issued?
5. How much has been expended on the proposed scheme since June 30 last?
6. How much for salaries or remuneration to government agents; to whom paid, and the amount paid to each?
7. How much, if any, was expended in the purchase of material; to whom paid and the amount to each? Were tenders called for?
8. (a) How many of those bait freezers has the government assisted, and how many are to be in operation in the coming fishing season; (b) their location, and assistance given to each?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. The arrangements made by the government to assist sea fishermen in the establishment of 'bait freezers' are set forth in the three bulletins published by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and distributed among the fishermen, and already fully explained by lecture at public meetings of fishermen at certain points in some of the maritime provinces. If moved for they will be brought down. This answers also Nos. 2, 3 and 4. 5. $5,355.24. 6. Dr. A. Kendall appointed inspector at a monthly salary. Mr. Peter McFarlane transferred from Department of Agriculture. Dr. Kendall received $200 on account, P. McFarlane $333.32. 7. Amount expended $2,777.54, divided as follows :

Fennel & Chandler.....	$ 231 38
Standard Paint Company....	1,646 16
J. K. MacDonald.....	57 00
Black Bros.	260 14
A. Kirk & Co.	3 30
C. B. Widden & Son.....	57 39
J. F. McDonald.....	332 39

As the shareholders were entitled to contribute their share of the cost in labour and material, the system of tender was impracticable under such special conditions, and the department provided inspectors to insure proper construction. (a) The only one so far reported as completed ; but, as explained in the bulletins above referred to, every freezer when complete will be assisted to the extent of 50 per cent of the cost thereof, and quite a number of them are approaching completion, when they will be entitled to the assistance. Up to the present time it is reported to the department that twenty-eight localities have been visited for purposes of organization, and fourteen associations formed. Ten of these associations consider they may be able to store ice for this season's operations. (b) At Ballantyne's Cove (the only freezer reported completed at this time), $861.04. It would be impossible to designate other locations at present owing to a want of knowledge of the particular localities where it has been practicable to store ice, in view of the ice famine in the maritime provinces this year.

TOBACCO DUTY COLLECTED IN 1899.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

What was the total amount of duty collected on tobacco for the year 1899? How much of this amount is due to the additional duty imposed in the session of 1897?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The answer I shall give has reference to the Customs Department alone. No doubt the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) will answer for his department. So far as the Customs Department is concerned, the amount of customs duty collected on tobacco and manufactures of, during the fiscal year 1899, is as follows :

Cigarettes	$ 24,646 54
Cigars	240,962 41
Tobacco, cut	49,830 17
Snuff.....	3,156 13
Other manufactures of tobacco.....	47,753 98
Samples, unstemmed	1,208 90
Total	$367,558 13

Of this amount the following amounts are due to the additional duty imposed in the session of 1897, viz. :

Cigarettes	$ 6,923 29
Cigars	65,264 91
Tobacco, cut	2,241 47
Snuff	742 71
Other manufactures of tobacco	10,286 53
Total	$83,458 91

There was a decrease in the customs duty collected on samples, unstemmed, amounting to $1,769.50. Deducting this from the total last given, leaves a net increase in duty of $83,689.41.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERIES.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries send an agent to British Columbia lately to inquire into fishery matters in that province?

2. If so, has he made a report on the same?
3. Will said report, if made, be published and distributed during the present session?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. An officer of the department was sent to British Columbia in 1899, and among other things inquired into certain fishery matters there. 2. Yes ; he has reported to the department. 3. The report being of a departmental nature it is not intended that it be published for distribution.

POST OFFICE ACCOMMODATION AT SYDNEY.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked:

Has the attention of the Postmaster General been called to the insufficient accommodation of the Sydney post office, and the inconvenience caused to the public by reason of the fact that the postmaster, for want of proper facilities and equipment in the office, is unable to give the public prompt nor satisfactory service?

If so, is it the intention of the Postmaster General to take measures at an early day with a view to improving this important service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). My attention has been called to the fact that there has been a great increase in the prosperity of Sydney within the last year, and that consequently, the facilities of the post office there have been taxed. I have no doubt that the department will endeavour to meet all the reasonable requirements of the community in that place in regard to post office accommodation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How soon ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is another question.

I.C.R.—CAPE BRETON DIVISION.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked:

Has the Minister of Railways been advised of an existing great dissatisfaction with the service given the public by the Intercolonial Railway on the Cape Breton division, and that owing to defective and insufficiently heavy rails the track is unsafe, and in consequence accidents and derailling of trains are almost of daily occurrence?

And that owing to insufficient and inferior rolling stock, and insufficient station and siding accommodation, the road for months past did not handle half the business offered to it?

And that it takes several days, sometimes weeks, for shippers to get cars to load freight on, and after getting cars and loading them, they are left on sidings several days, sometimes a week and longer, and that in consequence the public, including shippers and consigners, are subjected to serious loss and inconvenience.

Is it the intention of the minister to take immediate steps to improve the whole or any part of the service?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I deprecate such a statement as contained in the hon. member's question, that the railway is unsafe for public traffic. I do not think that such a statement should be publicly made in this way. The only special complaint I have had as regards the service given to the public by the Intercolonial Railway in Cape Breton, is with respect to the express train running into North Sydney. While I do not admit, that, owing to defective and insufficiently heavy rails, accidents are almost of daily occurrence, at the same time, I feel the absolute necessity of replacing the 56-pound rails by heavier rails, owing to the increasing heavy traffic. I admit that the rolling stock is insufficient to handle the heavy traffic now offering, and that increased siding accommodation is necessary to facilitate the conduct of the traffic. I am not aware of such delays, as are mentioned, as taking place in loading cars and moving them. I am hoping to obtain a sufficient appropriation to enable me to have this section of the Intercolonial Railway laid with heavier rails, and I am arranging for an increase in the freight cars, stock and motive power on the road, as well as further siding accommodation, with a view of improving the traffic service.

I. C. R.—ACCOMMODATION AT SYDNEY.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked:

1. Has the attention of the Minister of Railways been called to a letter published in the 'Daily Record,' Sydney, C.B., which reads as follows:

Freight Badly Handled.

To the Editor of the 'Record':

Sir,—It is high time that some one raise the very general complaint as to the absurd way in which the freight traffic is handled at Sydney station. It is all very well to say the road should be re-called, that there should be more cars, more engines, more sidings, &c., but so far no one has had courage to expose the slow, bungling and stupid way in which freight is handled after it arrives in the yard. Who is to blame for this? There is also a lack of courtesy on the part of certain of the officials of the Intercolonial Railway who have to do with freight, which is very exasperating to patrons. Every merchant in Sydney is complaining, but apparently no one cares to speak out; but I venture, even anonymously, to call attention to this, and believe Superintendent Campbell will look into it.

MERCHANT.

2. If so, what does the hon. minister propose doing to improve the service, if anything, and how soon?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. My attention has not been called to the letter published in the Daily Record, before this notice was given. 2. Feeling that the large traffic which has recently developed on the Cape Breton division cannot be handled satisfactorily, with the present facilities, I am arranging for an improvement of the service.

Mr. BLAIR.

RESIDENT ENGINEER IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Before you leave the questions, I would like to be allowed to correct an answer I made on Wednesday last to a question by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior). He asked whether Mr. Roy, the resident engineer in British Columbia, had been removed, and I then mentioned that he was temporarily removed. My attention was called to that answer by a member of the House, and on consultation with the deputy, I found he had misunderstood the question. Mr. Roy, the late resident engineer, I find, has been permanently removed from New Westminster, to the department here. But, the deputy considers that, although in his capacity as engineer and secretary here, Mr. Roy has still more or less to do with engineering work in British Columbia, still so far as residence is concerned, he has ceased to be a resident engineer in New Westminster.

THE BEET-ROOT SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence during the year 1899 between the government of Canada and all parties asking for the encouragement of the beet-root sugar industry in Canada, together with copies of any reports made at any time by parties selected by the government of Canada for that purpose.

He said: In making this motion, I want to say a few words on the subject with which it deals. Last year the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), placed a motion upon the Notice paper, and in discussing that motion, made a speech full of valuable information in regard to this subject. He asked at that time that a bonus be given for the production of beet-root sugar, and that free machinery be allowed for its manufacture. When the subject was under discussion, some of the hon. members supporting the government, made the suggestion that while they were not willing to support the proposition of the hon. member for East Grey off-hand, they thought it a subject of sufficient importance to engage the careful attention of the Department of Agriculture, and that the department should collect every information with regard to this industry, which could be of value, that they should take the lead in making experiments in various parts of Canada. I am informed that such a course has not been taken by the government, that while they have refused the request of certain deputations to give assistance to the industry, and that since that debate no step has been taken to collect information in order that the government might act upon the subject understandingly, as I believe they have not acted.

When the discussion of this subject was first introduced into the United States, the government of that country took great pains to collect information, to make experiments, in fact, to place the resources of the government at the disposal of the farmers of that country, and of those who were promoting the industry. That it seems to me was a good example to follow. In one year, at the beginning of the movement, the government of the United States made experiments in Arizona, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio, Washington, Wisconsin, Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, New York, Pennsylvania, Dakota, Utah and Wyoming. Not only did they cause experiments to be made in those states, but in the same year, I am informed, they employed no less than 22,000 farmers to make experiments in various portions of the country to test every variety of soil and every kind of climate, with a view to see whether the industry could be made a success in the United States. In experimental stages there is always a question as to whether this, or any industry, will be a success in the country. I take it that there is no difference of opinion in this House as to the duty of governments and as to the duty of this parliament to extend a helping hand to any branch of agriculture which may be shown to have a fair chance of success. We are told in some of the press, I notice to-day, that the question of beet-root sugar is only dealt with by faddists, that, in short, it is simply a fad, the work of agitators who have no real or substantial groundwork of facts upon which to urge the adoption of their contention. Well, Sir, the government have had evidence during the past year that it is a subject in which not only those who may be offensively termed faddists, are interested, but that it is a subject in which a great many of the agriculturists of Canada are interested. It is a subject, too, in which some of the most substantial business men of the country are, to-day, taking the very greatest possible interest with a view to the establishment of this industry within the bounds of the Dominion of Canada. We are told, I see in some of the papers, that the question of beet-root sugar is only a theory all over the world, that this question as to whether it is practicable to produce sugar from beets is only a question of theory even at the present time. I need not say to the House that the gentleman who wrote such a statement as that is in absurd ignorance of the true facts of the case. I need scarcely point out to hon. gentlemen, that, at the present time, in Great Britain, nine-tenths of the sugar which is being consumed in that country is derived from beets. In 1896 and 1897 the world's production of sugar was as follows: Cane sugar, 2,432,000 tons; beet-root sugar, 4,773,000, showing, that, as between beet-root sugar and cane sugar, the output has been double in the production of sugar from beets that which it was in the production of sugar from cane. I see by the statistics that during the last fifty years, and this shows well the growth of the beet-root sugar industry in various parts of the world, from 1848 to 1898 the production of cane sugar has increased one and three-fifths times, while the production of beet-root sugar has increased not less than twenty-two times. These are facts which certainly speak of the importance of the industry, and show it to be one of the great industries of the world at the present time.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Since what year did the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. MONTAGUE. From 1848 to 1898, according to the statistics I have.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The increase, I mean.

Mr. MONTAGUE. From 1848 to 1898, the growth in one case being one and three-fifths times, and in the other case twenty-two times. It is the desire, I suppose, of the Canadian people, to produce everything possible that we consume, ourselves, in order that our people may be employed profitably. We are now refining almost every pound of sugar which we use, we are proud of that fact, and I am sure that there are none prouder of it than the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), now he is in power, though he and his friends opposed the system under which that was brought about. But, while we are refining the sugar which we use, we are importing from other countries the raw material from which that refined article is made. We never can produce it from cane. That production, of course, as the hon. gentlemen know, belongs to another climate. But, I understand that the bulk of the sugar that we use is beet-root sugar. I speak subject to correction upon this point, because the facts were not investigated by myself, but I am told that the sugar which we consume in Ontario is no less than 85 per cent beet-root sugar. Last year, I am told, that we brought in $4,500,000 worth of sugar, that of that $1,500,000 was cane sugar and $3,000,000 was beet-root sugar. It is a question for us to consider, it is a question for this parliament to consider and a question for the Canadian people to consider whether we shall make an effort to produce that raw material to the extent of $3,000,000, instead of sending our money to other portions of the world to buy that article which we bring in here, in a raw state, and refine by Canadian hands and which is used by the Canadian people. If we can do it, if we can do it upon a paying basis, if we can do it to the advantage of our agriculturists, hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House ought to be found agreeing to the proposition that we should assist the beet-root sugar industry of this country as much as we possibly can. I have said, that, of her whole consumption of sugar, England uses nine-tenths of beet-root sugar. Where does she get that from? She gets it from France, from Germany, from Austro-Hungary, and from the Netherlands, and in all of these countries the beet-root industry now is in an exceedingly flourishing condition, and it was placed upon its feet and made a flourishing industry by the assistance, and sometimes very extensive assistance, of the governments of these various countries. Take France, for instance, in 1898 and 1899, by reason of the bonus which had been given there, by reason of the governmental assistance given to the industry in various ways, there were 344 beetroot sugar factories in France. They used 6,105,620 tons of beets, and for the raising of these beets there were profitably used no less than 500,000 acres of French soil. In Germany in 1897-8 there were 402 factories using 13,698,000 tons of beets, there being used, to raise these beets, no less than 1,080,256 acres of land. That land was profitably used and the money went into the hands of the agriculturists of France and of Germany instead of going to the planters of the tropics, from whom, under other circumstances, the raw material of sugar would have been required to have been taken. Now, the question is, can the same results, or, to a certain extent, can such a result be achieved in Canada. The hon. member for East Grey, in his speech last year, dealt with a phase of the subject which he knows much better than I do, so that I shall not attempt to refer to it at length, and that is in answer to the question as to whether the climate and soil of Canada are such as to make the industry a success in this country. If hon. gentlemen will turn their attention to the report of Mr. True, who is the director of the experimental stations in the United States, they will find this statement:

Broadly stated, it may be said that soil of a character that will produce profitably a crop of wheat, potatoes, or Indian corn, will produce, under proper cultivation, a good crop of sugar beets.

No one will deny, for a moment, that, in Canada, we have just that soil, in almost every province, which would produce profitably a crop of wheat, potatoes or Indian corn. Just the other day I noticed, in one of the trade journals, that Dr. Wiley, chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, in discussing this subject, went so far as to say that Canada, rather than the United States, was in the proper beet-root sugar belt of this North American continent. We have had experiments made in Canada which, as hon. gentlemen know, have been very promising indeed. These experiments, in regard to which I shall not go into detail, show, I am told, that our soil produces, perhaps a quarter more than European soils of these beets, their yield being about 12 tons per acre on the average, while the Canadian experiments show that our soil produces about 15 tons per acre. Very many individual tests were made, to which I shall not refer in detail. Thirty-one tests were made in Ontario, and the average, I am told, was 18½ tons per acre—the average of the Agricultural College was 19 tons per acre, while the average in California, where the industry has grown to be a very great success, is only 15 tons per acre, according to the report of the United States Agricultural Department. The amount of saccharine matter or sugar content in these is about the same, the reports say, in Canadian beets as in the beets of the United States, or of Europe. Last year, the Minister of Agriculture, in speaking on the subject, told us that he was opposed to assisting this industry, and he gave his reasons, which I shall deal with, as I presume it is the influence of the minister (Mr. Fisher) which has prevented the government—and I feel very unwisely—extending to this industry a greater measure of consideration than has been extended to it in the budget recently brought down. The Minister of Agriculture told us last year, that the industry had been tried in Canada and had proved a failure. Well, I do not think there is any division of opinion upon that question. Undoubtedly, he was speaking from the book when he made that statement. But, I would call his attention to the fact that at that time the cultivation of beets was little understood in the section in which it was tried. The machinery, perhaps, was not as up to date as the machinery of the present day, and I am told by those who know something about that part of the country, that it was exceedingly difficult to get the farmers to take such an interest in it as to guarantee its success. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) was told last year that the plants which were in operation at Farnham and Berthier are, with many improvements made, at the present time being successfully operated in one portion or another of the United States. It is being successfully operated in these sections of the United States and much to the advantage of the farmers there, who have confidence in the industry, and where they take the greatest pains to produce a quantity and quality of beets which guarantees success.

There have been other industries that were at one time a failure in Canada, and yet, they are to-day a success. One swallow does not make a summer, and neither does one failure prove that an industry will not eventually succeed. There are hon. gentlemen in this House by the dozen who remember in the old days when the making of agricultural implements was a failure in Canada, and yet, to-day that industry is one of the great businesses which Canada has. I remember, too, when the refining of sugar was a failure in Canada, and almost every refinery was closed up. I remember when 95 pounds of sugar out of every 100 pounds consumed was imported from other countries, and now, I think the minister (Mr. Fisher) will bear me out in the statement, that out of every 100 pounds of sugar consumed in Canada 95 pounds are refined here. I merely mention this to show that an industry may be a failure under certain conditions, and that under other certain conditions it may prove to be a magnificent success, and of the greatest possible advantage to the people of the country. The beet-root sugar industry was a great failure in the United States from 1830 to 1888. Dozens of attempts were made to establish the industry during that period, and I am told that only one factory remains now of the many which were started in these years. Well, in 1888 and 1889, the business began to be established again in the United States. A bounty was given by the federal government, and in some places, for particular reasons, a bounty was given by the states, and so, the beet sugar industry has become one of the great branches of agriculture in very many states of the American union. Taking the reports as to the growth of the beet-root sugar industry in the United States, from 1888 to 1900, we find that the following quantities of beet-root sugar were produced for the years mentioned :

Year.	Tons.
1887-8.....	255
1889.....	1,910
1890.....	2,600
1891.....	2,800
1892.....	5,359
1893.....	12,091
1894.....	20,453
1895.....	20,443
1896.....	30,900
1897.....	40,000
1898.....	41,340
1899.....	50,000
1900.....	119,000

I have been told, though I have had no opportunity of proving the correctness of the estimate, that Willock & Grey's estimate for 1900 is that 119,000 tons of beet-root sugar will be produced in the United States during the year. At all events, in the year 1899, they produced 50,000 tons, as compared with 255 tons eleven years ago.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is that production all aided by bounty ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will deal with that question in a moment. It was aided by bounty up to a certain stage, and I do not think that the hon. gentleman will be able to show that the industry has ever been successfully started in any country without a bounty having first been given to it. These beet sugar factories are scattered all over the United States : In Minnesota, 1 ; in Nebraska, 3 ; New Mexico, 1 ; New York, 2 ; Wisconsin, 1 ; Utah, 2 ; Washington, 1 ; California, 8 ; Illinois, 1 ; Colorado, 1, or, all told, thirty factories, having a daily possible output of 19,000 tons. This year there are eighteen new factories going up : In Colorado, 1 ; in California, 1 ; in Illinois, 2 ; in Iowa, 2 ; in Washington, 1 ; in Massachusetts, 1 ; in Ohio, 1 ; in Minnesota, 1 ; in New York, 2 ; in Wisconsin, 1 ; in New Mexico, 1 ; in South Dakota, 1, and in Indiana, 1.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Have you any figures as to whether any of them failed during the last few years ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have not the figures, but I do not think they have. Now, it will be seen from this, that from being a failure, some years ago, this industry has, undoubtedly, been made a success in the United States. If the minister (Mr. Fisher) looks at the official agricultural reports of the United States he will find that the whole spirit of the reports is that this has become a great industry among the farmers of the United States. It is safe to say that that industry has been established in the United States by two influences. First, the activity of the government in going abroad for information, making experiments, and lending their encouragement ; and second, by the assistance which has been given in the shape of bounties from the federal government, as well as bounties in certain cases from the state governments as well. The next objection the Minister of Agriculture had was, as reported on page 4845 of Hansard of last session :

It is impossible to find a single country on earth where the industry is running without getting a bounty from the government.

If the hon. gentleman had said that it was impossible to find a country where the industry had started without a bounty, I would agree with him ; but he made his statement, I am sure, without having the facts of the case before him. It would be a most formidable objection if the fact was as stated by the hon. minister, that in no country on earth was the beet-root sugar industry running and prospering without the bounty being continued. The hon. gentleman will know that I am not dealing with this question in a party sense, and I am only quoting the hon. gentleman's expression in order to give the facts in reply. Just let us see how that statement applies to the United States at the present time. There has not been in the United States, I am told, any federal bounty since 1894, though in some states there are state bounties.

In the state of California, up to 1894, there was a federal bounty ; but there has been no bounty in that state since, either federal or state. What has been the result ? There have been no failures, and, since the bounty was withdrawn, five new factories have been built, and one new factory is now being built. In 1896, I am told, the factories consumed 293,000 tons of beets in the production of sugar; and in 1899, they consumed 305,000 tons; not a great increase, but sufficient to show that the industry is continuing without the bounties.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Have the new factories started without any bounty at all, or do they have it for a term of years?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The bounty ceased in 1894, as regards the old factories, and it was not given to the new factories; in other words, there is no bounty. But the point is this, that the industry has been established and been brought to such a point of success that the farmers had confidence in it, and were prepared to grow beets for the consumption of those factories; and instead of failure ensuing when the bounty was withdrawn, the industry was so well established that more factories were planted. But, the hon. gentleman, will not, I am sure, take the view that the industry was or can fairly be expected to be established without a bounty at the beginning. I do not know of any country or section of country, where the industry has been started without some bounty to give confidence to those investing their money in it, and to those who employ their land to raise the beets. The state of Nebraska had a bounty up to 1895, but since that year, there has been none. Two factories have been running very successfully. One factory was built last year. In 1896, one factory used 30,100 tons of beets, in 1897, 38,000 tons, and in 1900, the estimate is that it will use 45,000 tons; and it employs 3,000 acres of land for the exclusive purpose of raising beets for the sugar production. The second factory, in 1896, used 50,000 tons, and in 1897 and 1898, the same quantity, and it employed 3,000 acres for raising beets. So that the total area of land employed in Nebraska for raising sugar-beets, is something like 6,000. No bounty is given, but the industry was established by a bounty given previously. In Utah, very much the same condition of affairs exists. In 1896, one factory in that state, used 45,000 tons of beets, and in 1899, 50,000 tons, and employed 3,000 acres of land. Another factory, in 1898, used 40,000 tons of beets, which are produced on 2,500 acres of land. These facts, which I am assured, are absolutely correct, surely give an answer which the Minister of Agriculture should very carefully heed before repeating the statement he made last year, that in no country in the world could it be shown, that the industry was running successfully without the aid of a large bounty from the government.

The beet-root sugar industry, I am certain, will some of these days be established in Canada. I believe it is one of those new branches of agriculture which will help to bring prosperity to our farmers. I believe it is an industry that will pay, and I believe it was the duty of the government first to inquire most carefully into all the facts, employing the machinery of their department to make experiments and to collect information in regard to the subject, and then, I believe they would have been justified upon the information so obtained, in giving a bonus for the production of beet-root sugar in this country. It may be said that will take a large sum of money out of the public treasury. My reply is that it could have been given for a limited period. My reply is that we are in growing times; we are in the full tide of prosperity; we have a full treasury, raised of course by taxation—I may have another opportunity of going into that. But, in these times, the government can deal with no subject of more importance than any industry which will diversify Canadian agriculture, and give an additional means of profitable use of agricultural land in the Dominion of Canada, thereby increasing the prosperity of our agricultural classes. I am sorry the government did not go into this matter before they brought down their budget. I am told that capital in large amounts is ready to be put into the industry, by people who thoroughly understand the business, who have made it a success elsewhere, and who are confident that they can make it a success in Canada, if the encouragement which has been given elsewhere at the beginning of the industry be given here. And, if such is the case, I think, it is a subject which ought to receive the most careful, active and sympathetic consideration of the Department of Agriculture and the government of the day.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) that it would be advisable for the government to make an investigation as far as lies in their power with regard to the beet-root sugar industry and to place the result before the public. Such an investigation would reveal to my hon. friend from Haldimand, and the public at large that no necessity exists for the granting of a bounty for the production of beet-root sugar in Canada. It is true, as the hon. gentleman informed the House, that this industry in various countries has been aided by export bounties and other bounties of various kinds to a great extent. It is true that the business of making beet-root sugar obtained its footing in France and Germany, through the expenditure on the part of the governments of those two countries, especially the government of Germany, of a very large sum, and it is very doubtful whether the interests of the public at large were served by this lavish expenditure for the purpose of promoting the interests of a particular class, and a particular industry. It is true that an industry may be a failure at first, as was the case, I believe, with the industry in Canada, and that changed conditions and increased knowledge of the proper methods of carrying on the business may in the end lead to success being achieved where failure was first scored. I believe the latter would be the case in Canada if we embarked in this business. The hon. gentleman informs the House, and gives statistics to back up his assertion, that the production of beet-root sugar has been engaged in on an extensive scale in various states of the union, in all of which it was first promoted by bounties, and that in all these states, with one exception—the name of the state he does not give—these bounties are at present discontinued. It is perhaps true that the business would not have been developed to its present extent without the payment at the outset of bounties, but the people of the United States are now in possession of information that shows there is no necessity to pay bounties any longer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I am told that I was incorrect in my statement, and that in a number of states the bounties still exist. But in the states to which I referred the bounties do not continue.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am unable to say whether the hon. gentleman is right or wrong. I took his statement, as first made, that the bounties have been withdrawn in the case of all the states but one. In connection with the production of beet-root sugar, I happen to have come into contact with persons interested in this industry, persons in one or two localities in the United States—one especially, and that a locality where the conditions of soil and climate are almost identical with those in the province of Ontario and Quebec. I refer to the state of Michigan. The legislature of Michigan, some two or three years ago, passed a law granting a bounty of 1 cent per pound on beet-root sugar produced in that state. The development of the business was so rapid that it became evident, within twelve months, that the result of the bounty payments would be to impoverish if not bankrupt the state, and the law was repealed, except as applied to factories already established, which had been established under conditions that did not leave the government at liberty to withdraw the bounty. Notwithstanding the repeal of the law and notwithstanding the fact that the business had not been in existence three years in that state, the erection of factories went on at an accelerated pace. Last year some four or five immense establishments were constructed, and one of them, which I visited, has a capacity of 4,000,000 pounds per annum.

It is a good thing to come from the abstract to the concrete, and from speculation to actual facts. These factories paid at the outset $4 per ton for beet, but that price has been increased this season to $4.50 per ton. I am intimately acquainted with a number of the stockholders in these factories, and have been able to ascertain what the character of their operations is, what is the cost of their raw material, and what the output from that raw material amounts to. The price of beets last year was $4 per ton, and this year it is $4.50 per ton. The production of sugar from a ton of beet is from 200 to 235 pounds, and in addition there are by-products, of same value, such as molasses, and the pulp from the beet, while it is fresh, is a food for cattle. What is the result? Suppose we had a factory established in Canada to-day which paid $4.50 per ton for beets, and was selling its sugar at market quotations. I sent down to Bate & Co. to know what sugar was worth to-day, and I find it is worth $4.62 per hundred. Beets at $4.50 per ton would produce 200 to 225 pounds of sugar, besides the by-products. This sugar, at the present price, would be worth $9.25 for the 200 pounds, and 220 pounds would be worth $10.16. At the lowest figure, the raw material costing $4.50 would be worth $9.25, besides whatever value might apply to the molasses and the pulp.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does a ton of beets give that quantity of refined sugar, 99 per cent?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, these prices are based on the product of refined sugar. The factories refine their sugar and the product of a ton of beets is 200 to 225 pounds refined, besides the molasses and pulp.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that granulated sugar?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, refined, first quality. The cost of producing that sugar, as near as I have been able to ascertain, is $1 to $1.25 per ton—say, $1.50. A ton of beets cost $4.50, the cost of producing the sugar is $1.50, which makes $6, and the value of the sugar produced is $9.25, or a profit of $3.25 upon an investment of $6 in cost of material and labour. Well, the result of this business is that there is an enormous rush in various parts of the United States to engage in the beet-root sugar business without reference to the bounty; and the business standing solely upon its own bottom as a business speculation, men are investing millions of dollars, putting up new factories with a capacity of two or three thousand tons of sugar per annum, and making out of these factories, from all the indications, enormous profits—profits of from thirty to forty per cent upon the capital invested. It is needless to talk of promoting an industry of that kind by bounties. It will never be done in the United States again, and it is not necessary to do it here; for, to my personal knowledge, many of the men engaged in that business of building beet-root sugar factories, are looking to Canada as a field of operations. They desire that we shall pass a law granting a bounty. If we do so, it will make the business so much more profitable; if we do not, they will build the factories anyway. The time is near at hand when the business will be developed in this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is making a complete answer to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. CHARLTON. Perhaps so; but I think I have established the premise that I laid down, that a bounty is unnecessary. I am quite in favour of the government meeting the views of my hon. friend (Mr. Montague), so far as to make a thorough investigation of this matter. It may be well enough to appoint a commission to visit some of these establishments in the various states, to ascertain, as nearly as they can, the condition of the trade, the profit made, the prices of labour, the cost of producing the raw material, and the return per ton of beets in sugar. If this investigation is made, and if the information is obtained correctly, the fact will be demonstrated that the government of Canada is not called upon to promote this business by paying bounties, but that all that is necessary is to make capitalists acquainted with the inducements that the business offers in its present condition.

Mr. McNEILL. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), when was the bounty repealed in Michigan?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it was repealed the first year it went into operation.

Mr. McNEILL. What year was that?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it is three or four years since the law was put on the statute-book of that state. I am speaking from memory. But, one year after it went into operation, it became clear that the state would be swamped by the development that would take place, and the law was repealed so far as could be. Of course, the condition of the law made it applicable to the factories then built, and the legislature could not repudiate that; but even those factories are waiting for the payment of their bounties, and are not likely to receive them.

Mr. McNEILL. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) to say that the law was repealed about three years ago?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it was about three years ago. I am speaking from knowledge of this question gained from men engaged in the business who have approached me with a proposition to invest in this business in that country and in Canada. The information I have obtained in that way, which, I believe, is absolutely correct, is that, paying not more than $5 per ton for beets, and with the present prices of sugar, the profits made from the production of beet-root sugar are enormous; and the business is of a character likely to prove more attractive to capitalists than any other line of manufacturing business that can be engaged in in Canada. So, give us the information, let the facts be laid before the people and the capitalists of this country, and the result will be the establishment of this industry without depleting the treasury of Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). True to his natural instincts, I was going to say, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has given the House another evidence of his desire to aid the people of Canada in the establishment of any new industry likely to be of value to them. He starts out with the bold statement that beet-root sugar factories can be, and undoubtedly will be, established in Canada without the aid of a bounty or other means beyond that given by the government of allowing the machinery to be brought in free. It will be natural to inquire upon what information the hon. gentleman bases his judgment. As we followed him through his succeeding arguments in support of his contention, it must have been apparent to any one who has given the most casual attention to the subject, that the hon. gentleman was talking on a line of which he knew very little. He went on, shortly after that, to say that a bounty had been given in different states of the United States for the purpose of establishing this industry, but, after a little while, it was found, as he said, that the production of the sugar would be so great, that if a bounty were paid, it would financially swamp the state, and, as in the case of the state of Michigan, the bounty was, therefore, done away with. Now, is that a fact? If it were a fact, it might be an argument carrying some weight. But, it is the reverse of a fact; because the law exists in the state of Michigan, where the bounty was given, the same as when the original Act was passed. It is true that a little trouble has arisen between the beet-root sugar manufacturers and the state with regard to the payment of the bounty, and that point is in abeyance; but the law remains the same as it was passed, and, at the present time, the men engaged in the industry are claiming the bounty and expect to get it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) that he is mistaken. The law does not remain the same as it was passed. It does not apply as regard all factories established after the date of its repeal, and only remains in regard to factories in operation before the repeal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not that what I say? I say it remains in force to-day the same as ever in regard to factories constituted under the law and—

Mr. CAMPBELL. But not as regards new factories.

Mr. SPROULE. That is another thing entirely. I did not say anything about new factories. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) intimates that a bounty is not paid in the United States. Let me give him the states that are paying a bounty. The state of Michigan pays a bounty of one cent a pound, and nine factories which commenced operations under that law are claiming that bounty. Minnesota pays one cent a pound; Nebraska, from 1890 to 1895, one cent a pound, and afterwards $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a pound; New Mexico, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a pound and exemption from taxation; New York, one cent; Oregon, one cent a pound—that is, the Bill is before the legislature, and one factory is started; New Jersey, the Bill vetoed, the proposition being to pay one cent a pound; Wisconsin, exemption from taxation; Utah, one cent a pound for the first two seasons. But Utah has abandoned the bounty. During the time the bounty was in operation, several factories started under it. Washington pays one cent a pound. In California, the federal government paid a bounty, which was afterwards repealed. Eight factories started under that bounty. The total number of factories operating in the United States is thirty, having a total daily capacity of about 19,000 tons of beets. Now, these are the states in which the law provides that a bounty may be paid. And is being paid to-day, with the exception of the state of Michigan, where a number of factories are operating under the law under which they started, and claim the bounty and expect to get it. Well, then, that did away with the hon. gentleman's contention that factories will be started in every portion of the country, though a bounty may not be given. He follows that up by saying that in his judgment the government ought to make some inquiry to satisfy themselves whether the sugar beet could be successfully grown in Canada, whether the manufacture of beet-root sugar could be carried on successfully in Canada, and he intimates that there might be some species of commission or inquiry on the subject. Well, the hon. gentleman had a taste of a commission last year, and I have no doubt he found it so agreeable that he would gladly embark on another enterprise of the kind the coming summer. But seeing the success which attended the efforts of the hon. gentleman and his friends last year on their jaunt to Washington, I do not think the country will be disposed to appoint another commission at a similar expense and composed of the same parties to inquire into this subject, trusting to the chances of obtaining as fruitful results as attended the last commission to Washington.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I intended to deal with this question on a motion which I have on the paper, in a different way, but as I am not likely to reach it the present session, and as, the budget speech having already been made, we are not likely to influence the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) or the government to change their minds and give a bounty, therefore, I propose to say on the present motion what I intended to say on my motion. One of the questions raised by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), I think, was that we could not manufacture beet sugar to compete with the manufacture of cane sugar, and that past experience has proven that beet sugar could not be manufactured at as low a price as cane sugar, and therefore was unlikely to be successful. I have before me what I take from a return of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, showing the cost of the manufacture of cane sugar in different countries:

	Per ton.
Java	8	12	6
Sandwich Islands	8	4	4
Queensland	8	15	0
Egypt	9	10	11
Barbados	9	15	0
Trinidad	10	19	11
Demerara	12	18	10
French Antilles	14	6	9
*Robisdorf, Germany	9	6	3

*For manufacturing beet sugar.

So that, of all the places that I have given where cane sugar is being manufactured, there are only three where they manufacture cane sugar cheaper than beet sugar is manufactured in Germany to-day.

Mr. ELLIS. Would my hon. friend give us the figures at which sugar is produced in Java, for instance.

Mr. SPROULE. Beet sugar is being largely produced in Java to-day. My information from the returns is that in every one of those countries they are producing beet sugar to-day.

Mr. ELLIS. I asked if the hon. gentleman can give us the figures at which cane sugar is produced in the Island of Java, or any other of those eastern islands from which sugar is imported so largely. The market price of sugar to-day is fixed by sugar which is produced in eastern lands, not by sugar coming from the West Indies at all. Therefore, all his figures are not useful for purposes of comparison.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the hon. member wants to know the cost of cane sugar in Java. It is £8 12s. 6d. per ton. In the Sandwich Islands the cost is £8 4s. 4d. I have given the cost in several other countries to put alongside the figures of the cost of beet sugar. Now, then, with regard to the prospect of beet sugar supplanting cane sugar. I find that between 1883 and 1894 the production of beet sugar increased from 1,783,200 tons to 3,840,256 tons; so, there was an increase in that time of 2,057,000 tons. Taking the output of cane sugar in that time, it has increased from 2,016,084 tons to 3,437,774 tons, or an increase of 1,421,690 tons. That shows clearly that beet sugar is supplanting cane sugar in every country in the world. I have another return which bears on the subject, and which affords additional strength to the contention which I have made, that beets are to-day largely grown and sugar therefrom manufactured in countries where heretofore nothing but cane sugar was produced. I will take the countries from which cane sugar comes entirely or principally :

Production of Cane Sugar Last Year.

Country.	Tons.
Java	722,000
Cuba	400,000
Hawaiian Islands.....	275,000
Brazil	175,000
Mauritius	150,000
Australia	140,000
Louisiana	132,000
All other countries.....	868,000

Total 2,862,000

Now, I take the countries producing beet sugar :

Production Last Year.

Country.	Tons.
Germany	1,780,000
Austria	1,120,000
France	960,000
Russia	885,000
Belgium	290,000
Holland	170,000
All other countries.....	275,000

Which is more than twice as much as the production of cane sugar in 1899, which was only 2,862,000 tons. When you compare these figures with the products of a few years ago, the output of beet sugar is more than twice as much as the output of cane sugar in the various countries where it is being produced. It seems to me that is a strong argument in favour of the contention we make that beet-root sugar is being grown in many countries to-day where a few years ago it was not manufactured and where nothing but cane sugar was produced.

Now, the hon. member for North Norfolk says that we will have these factories established in Canada without a bounty. Well, I reason this way. All the information that we have up to the present time, justifies us in saying, that, in all human probability, not for, at least a great length of time in the future, will we have any of these factories established in Canada unless they get aid by way of a bounty, or something of that nature. We have many states of the union where the climatic conditions, the soil and other requirements are suited to the production of the sugar beet, and the manufacture of beet sugar, in which they pay bounties. Therefore, no one who wishes to embark in the enterprise, will be likely to establish a factory in Canada when he can go across the line into the state of New York and get a cent a pound for every pound of manufactured, or granulated sugar that he turns out of his factory, and where the beets can be grown as well as here. I do not think that I would wish to invest my money in a factory in any part of Canada where I would get no assistance whatever if I could employ the same money to establish a factory on the other side of the line and get a cent a pound for every pound of granulated sugar I turned out. There are fourteen states in which they are paying bounties to-day. While these states, lying so closely to our country, and with the climatic conditions and soil so much like ours, are willing to give that assistance, it is not likely that we will induce capitalists here to embark in that enterprise unless the same assistance is given to them. Why is it that these parties who desire to start in this line, want a bounty? The contention is made by some persons, and I heard it advanced a short time ago by a gentleman who is opposed to giving a bounty, that, if you start to give these bounties they must continue for ever. It is said that they are pap fed institutions, and that they will come back and come back again and ask that the bounty shall be renewed. I have one of the strongest reasons for saying that this is not likely to be the case, because I have the assurance of parties who propose to invest their money in this line that they do not desire nor ask that the bounty shall be given beyond, five years, and they are willing that during a portion of that time it shall be a diminishing bounty. For instance, it is proposed that it shall be one cent a pound for the first year, three-quarters of a cent a pound for the second year, half a cent a pound for the third year, a quarter of a cent a pound for the fourth year, a quarter of a cent a pound for the fifth year, and after that it shall be dropped. They say: We require a bounty because we are introducing a new industry into the country, and the farmers who must raise the beets are not very familiar with the enterprise which they will take up. There are comparatively few experts in the country engaged in that line to-day. There is very much to be learned, and we would have to educate the farmer so that he may get the best results from his labour, the largest yield from his soil. It will be necessary to send around instructors amongst them during the first few years to show them first, how to prepare the ground, secondly, to inform them as to the right kind of seed to put into the soil, thirdly, to show them how to weed out the plants, to cultivate them, to take care of them until they are raised, and afterwards how to dress these beets and to care for them until they are delivered at the factory. To do this it will require the expenditure of some money. For instance, a firm which proposes, in the event of the government giving a bounty such as they are asking for to start a factory, state: We will send around from sixteen to twenty men who will go around every few weeks during the season and instruct the farmers in the cultivation of the sugar beet. We will pay the expense of these men ourselves. They are men who are already educated in this line, and they may fairly be regarded as experts. We will distribute the seed to the farmers free, take all the beets that they produce, and hand them over to the factory within a radius of sixty miles if they are delivered at a railway station or delivered at any harbour where there is navigation between the place where the factory is established and the locality where the beets are raised. We will take all these beets without regard to the percentage of sugar they contain, and pay, at least, $4 a ton for them. We will also pay the transportation charges on these beets to the factory either by rail or by water. To do that it requires considerable money, and we say that it is not reasonable to expect that the right kind of beets will be raised for a few years, at first or beets which will produce as large a percentage of sugar as those which will be raised afterwards. They will not be as well suited for the manufacture of sugar at first as they will be afterwards when the farmers become experts in this line. During the time that this instruction is going on we require to have some aid because, otherwise, our profits would be so small that we would not be justified in embarking in the enterprise. But, after a time, when we get the farmers educated so that they can raise beets as well in this country as they can in Germany, or France, or in other countries where they have done it for years, when they have become experts in the business, we will be able to do without a bounty, it will not be needed and we believe the returns in the way of profits will be as much after the bounty stops as during the time when the bounty is given. That is the way they reason it out, and it seems to me it is a very logical reason for asking a bounty and a very fair one, because, we cannot expect any farmer in Canada, who has not been engaged in this line, to understand it at the outset. He must learn to grow sugar beets the same as he must learn to raise any of the other products of his farm, and he must be placed in a position that he will get the largest yield per acre, that he will obtain the largest percentage of sugar, and that he will take care to do everything which will enable him to lay the beets down at the factory in such a way as that they will produce the most valuable return, not only to himself but to the factory. I regret exceedingly that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), when he made his budget speech, did not see fit to announce that he was prepared to pay that bounty. I think that, if he had done so, it would have resulted in starting up several important establishments in Canada which certainly would be valuable to the country by producing an article that we use very largely and which would be most valuable to the agriculturists of the country, more valuable to them than to any other class in Canada. It would enable them to employ their labour in a line which would return them a larger profit than any other line in which they are engaged to-day. It would give them back a large proportion of the money made out of the beet-root sugar industry. Because, when I tell the House that 60 per cent of the money that is made out of the production of beet-root sugar, goes to the farmers who raise the beets, they will understand how important it is to the agricultural classes of the country. Sixty dollars out of every one hundred dollars that is made out of that line goes back to the farmers and makes them richer to that extent. It would give them profitable employment at home in a line in which they are not engaged at the present time. As I spoke at some length on this question last year, I do not intend to go over the same ground to any great extent, and I shall say what remains to be said very briefly. The hon. member for North Norfolk intimated, that, while beets might be profitably raised in Canada, it was only yet an experiment, and that there was no evidence to clearly prove that it could be done. I can only say that the experiments which have been made, and which have extended over eight or ten years, and which have been several hundred in number have justified the conclusion that the climatic conditions and the soil of Canada are suitable to the cultivation of the sugar beet. There is no doubt of that whatever because, wherever it has been tried we have the strongest ground for saying that the cultivation of the sugar beet has been shown to be a great success. I say that in view of the experiments which have been made and which have continued for several years. I shall now give the result of a few experiments which have been made, in order to prove the correctness of my statement. In Dunnville (where my hon. friend Mr. Montague resides), in experimenting whether the soil was suitable, they had a yield of 48 tons of beet-root to the acre. That was not a small plot, as in the experimental farms, but it was on a plot of half an acre, which is a fair test. In Deseronto, they had 37.4 tons to the acre; in Goderich, 11 tons to the acre; in Hastings, 21 tons per acre; in Oshawa, one-third of an acre yielded at the rate of 15 tons per acre. Another experiment in Oshawa, gave 14½ tons per acre; another 14½ tons per acre; another 12 tons per acre; another 18 tons per acre; and another 15·6 tons per acre. In Harwood, one experiment gave 12 tons, and another 12 tons; in Plainville the yield was 13·2 tons per acre; and in Peterborough, one experiment gave 14 tons; and another experiment 14½ tons per acre. On the Ontario Experimental Farm at Guelph, one plot yielded 19·2 tons, and as it was a full acre, it was a very fair test; another experiment yielded 20·6 tons; another 16·90 tons; another 20·7 tons, and another 20 tons per acre. In Walkerville, the experiment yielded 21·3 tons per acre, and the average in Ontario was 18·2 tons per acre. Now that would be regarded in France, Germany or Belgium as an unprecedented yield, because their average yield is from 11½ to 13½ tons. The yield per acre on the Ontario Experimental Farm was the high average of 19·7 tons per acre, as compared with an average of 18·2 tons per acre throughout Ontario. These experiments were made in almost every portion of the province of Ontario, and if I had time I could go to the province of Quebec and show similar results for the experiments there. These returns show that the climatic conditions and the soil are in every respect suitable for this industry in the Dominion, and that being so, and it being possible for the farmers to engage in this industry, why should we not give them some assistance? The Minister of Agriculture said last year: Oh, but if the farmers of Canada give the same labour to the production of many other crops which they raise, the return will be quite as good to them. Well, I do not think so, and I will tell you the reason why.

ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS.

A Message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker,—

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of your Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate Chamber;

And having returned,

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act to provide for the expenses of the Canadian volunteers serving Her Majesty in South Africa.

An Act to amend the San José Scale Act.

THE BEET-ROOT SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, when the message was received by this House that His Excellency the Governor General required our presence in the Senate Chamber, and I was interrupted in this interesting discussion, at least to me, I thought that possibly that sudden demand might mean that the Governor General had decided to dissolve this House and appeal to the country; but I contented myself with the belief that neither the leader of the government nor his colleagues would consent to such a thing at the present time, because their apprehension of defeat are such that they will hold on here to the last possible moment; so that I would have an opportunity of continuing this debate a little further. I was about to make a comparison of the profit derived by the farmer as between raising beets and raising other crops; and that comparison, I think, will show conclusively that the former would be a very profitable line of production. At the present time, the market price of most cereals which the farmer has to sell is moderately low. How much would a farmer realize an acre from the raising of wheat, after paying for the labour, the seed, the threshing and the marketing of the grain? Twenty bushels to the acre would be a fair average crop, and if this were sold at 70 cents a bushel, which is about 10 cents a bushel above this year's price, he would realize $14 an acre. Allowing $1 an acre for straw, his total return would be $15 an acre. If he were raising oats, the average yield would be about 36 bushels to the acre, and a fair price, according to what oats sold for during the present season, would be 25 cents a bushel. This would give him $9 an acre, with about $1.50 for straw, making his total return $10.50 an acre. If raising pease, he would probably have a yield of 25 bushels to the acre, which, at the market price of 60 cents a bushel, would bring him a return of $15 an acre. Barley would give him an average yield of about 36 bushels an acre, which, at 40 cents a bushel, would give him a return of about $14.40, with probably $1 for straw, which would make $15.40. Hay, with an average yield of two tons to the acre, and sold at $8 a ton, would give him $16 an acre, though at the present time hay is selling in my part of the country at about $6 a ton, and the average yield is below two tons. Thus he would receive for wheat $15 an acre; for oats, $10.50; for pease, $15; for barley, $15.40; for hay, $16. Out of this he has to pay for seed, cultivating the ground, threshing, marketing, and everything else. If he raises sugar beets, taking the average yield in Ontario by the return I have given at 18 tons to the acre, or even at the low average of 15 tons to the acre, and sells them at $4 a ton, which is considered a low average price, he would have $60 an acre.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has my hon. friend the figures showing a comparison of the cost of labour?

Mr. SPROULE. I have the labour with regard to beets, but not with regard to the others. The average cost of labour in raising beets is about $35 an acre. I may be met with the statement that the labour of growing wheat costs very much less than the labour of raising beets. That is true, but the return from the beets is correspondingly greater. In the case of wheat, it costs at least $15 an acre for seed, cultivating the ground, harvesting, threshing and bringing the grain to market; but the whole return for labour, profit and everything, is only $15 an acre. But in the case of the sugar beet, while the cost is $35 an acre for seed, cultivating the ground, and marketing the product within a reasonable distance, the net profit to the farmer is $25 an acre. Therefore, it must be clear that the farmer receives a much larger return for his labour than he does in the other line. I may say that this estimate covers the cost of labour, seed, manure and a fair rent for the land, whereas the estimate with regard to the raising of grain includes only the cost of seed, labour, threshing and marketing. Another reason why the production of the sugar beet would be much more valuable to the farmer is, that he would get a return in the by-product of the beets, which is valuable as a food for his cattle. Several tests have been made on feeding cattle on the pulp after the sugar is taken out, and the very lowest estimate of the value of the pulp puts it at $8 a ton.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. member inform us how long that pulp is suitable for food after being ground? Does it sour and prove unsuitable after a certain length of time?

Mr. SPROULE. No, it can be kept for an indefinite length of time. When put in a silo, it cements itself on the top and shuts out the air, and in that way it can be kept for years the same as ensilage. In saying this, I am speaking from personal experience of some ensilage that stood for a year and a half. If you remove about four inches from the top, the rest is as good as when it was put in.

Mr. CHARLTON. One other question, if my hon. friend will permit me. What percentage of pulp to the ton is turned out?

Mr. SPROULE. I forget the amount just now. Dry pulp and wet pulp are two different things. If it is dry, it will keep much longer. I think something like 68 per cent of the whole would be returned in the shape of pulp.

Mr. CHARLTON. That would contain a considerable portion of water, I suppose?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes. The pulp is returned to the farmers free as long as the bounty is paid. They are allowed to take it away in any way they like. Where it is sold, the highest price asked for it is a dollar a ton.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman seems to be so well informed on the question that there is one other point on which I would like to have information if he can give it; that is, whether frozen beets can be used for sugar, and whether pulp from frozen beets would be good for cattle food?

Mr. SPROULE. Beets which are frozen and kept continuously frozen would be as valuable in the spring as they were in the fall; but if frozen and then thawed out, they would be spoiled for the manufacture of sugar. With regard to the pulp, the information which I have is that after the frost is taken out, it is left in a condition in which it will keep. I saw only one authority, however, in regard to that particular phase of the question. With regard to the quality of the beets, there are two elements which make the root valuable. The first is the percentage of sugar, and the next the purity. We have a large enough yield per acre in Canada to make the raising of beets profitable to the farmer, and the next question is: Do these beets contain a sufficient percentage of sugar to make the manufacture profitable? I contend that they do. I have here the result of 117 experiments, made principally in the province of Ontario, and the average percentage of sugar in the beet is 13.58 per cent. When I tell this House that the beets manufactured in Germany contain but from 11½ to 12½ per cent of sugar, the House will understand that the percentage in Canadian beets is high enough to make it profitable for manufacturing into sugar.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How many pounds of sugar would they give to the ton?

Mr. SPROULE. The beets which yielded the highest percentage of sugar would yield about 230 pounds of sugar to the ton, but the highest we have got yet, I think, would reach somewhere about 190 pounds per ton.

Mr. TALBOT. Long or short tons?

Mr. SPROULE. A ton of 2,000 pounds.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What is the percentage of saccharine matter? Would it give a sugar of 70 per cent, polariscopic test?

Mr. SPROULE. I did not go into that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is a very important point.

Mr. SPROULE. The percentage would be higher in California, where they are operating successfully factories to-day, the average percentage of sugar is only 14.38 per cent, while in Ontario the average is 13.54, and California is regarded as one of the best districts for raising beets. The coefficient of purity there is 83.70, and in Canada, 79.72. When the coefficient of purity reaches 80 per cent, it is regarded as very good, and anything in that neighbourhood would be considered sufficiently pure to guarantee satisfactory results. In Kansas, the average percentage of sugar is only 10·85, and factories are being operated there successfully, and the coefficient of purity is but 72·74 against 79·32 in Canada. In Nebraska, where factories are also successfully operated, the percentage is 12·75 and 58·30 is the coefficient of purity, the lowest I have seen yet. Take Wisconsin, there the percentage of sugar is 14·31. In Michigan, several tests gave a percentage of 12·04, but I believe that further examination raised that to 13½. In Indiana, the percentage is 11·76. In France, the large beet yields from 10·91 to 12·94, and yet, France is one of the countries where the largest quantities of beet sugar are being manufactured to-day. The small beet there yields from 15·50 to 18·60. Comparing the province of Ontario with all these countries, that province gives a very favourable showing as regards the percentage of sugar and the purity of the beets, and, in my judgment, that showing leaves no doubt that this country is suitable for this industry. I have here a list of the percentages from different states :

	Percentage of sugar.
Alabama	8·5
Arkansas	7·1
California	14·6
Colorado	13·7
Connecticut	10·3
Delaware	11·3
Georgia	5·8
Idaho	12·0
Illinois	10·2
Indiana	10·1
Indian Territory	9·6
Ohio	11·4
Kansas	10·3
Maryland	10·4
Massachusetts	12·0
Michigan	13·2
Minnesota	12·7
Montana	11·2
Nebraska	12·8
Nevada	18·5
New Hampshire	13·5
New Jersey	11·1
New Mexico	12·8
New York	12·6
North Carolina	6·5

Against these averages I set the result of the tests in Ontario, which show 13·58, with a purity far above many of these. It is, therefore, evident to my mind that we can engage successfully in this business.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to give us the cost of extracting sugar from the beet per ton.

Mr. SPROULE. I could not give that. I never went into that calculation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman will see that that is a very important factor. He has demonstrated, taking his figures as correct, that there would be a very profitable market for the farmers.

Mr. SPROULE.

But, we would require to know what it would cost to extract the sugar from the beet, so as to be in a position to know whether a bounty was required or not, and also to test the figures of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). If a ton of beets will give 190 to 232 pounds of sugar, we know what that sugar will bring in the market, but what we require to know is the cost of extracting the sugar from the beet, together with the price paid for the beet.

Mr. SPROULE. The only information I have is the experience of Germany, where it costs £9 6s. 3d. a ton.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). That, I think, is the cost of a ton of sugar, but what we want is the cost of producing a ton of sugar.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a ton of sugar ; I am not talking of a ton of beets.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was asking the cost of producing the sugar. What would it cost to take a ton of beets and extract the saccharine matter ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have not got that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It would be very desirable to have it, as it has a very important bearing on the question whether the business requires a bounty to make it profitable.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that it would be valuable. I have not at hand at the moment the figures the hon. gentleman refers to, but, I have no doubt, I can find them later. I have here some figures that I intended to mention. In one factory in California, they have 1,100 head of lambs which made a gain of 10 pounds each in 21 days. They intend to prepare the lambs for market entirely on a ration of alfalfa and pulp. They are feeding 1,100 head of cattle as well, but, of course, the result of that test is different entirely from that of the lambs.

I do not wish to take up all the time, as there are other hon. gentlemen who wish to speak. In my judgment, the government would do a very wise thing if they gave a bounty on the output of these factories as a means of inducing capitalists to establish this manufacture. There were three different firms looking into this matter during the last three years, and one or two companies have been partially organized, one being in the county of Grey. I believe it was taken over lately by some people about Warton. Now, I joined the deputation from that factory to interview the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs on this question. The request presented was that machinery not manufactured in Canada, and suitable for such a factory, should be admitted free of duty. But, they did not ask a bounty, and I believe that the gentlemen said they did not want a bounty, that they could get on without it, and had as-insurance from a gentleman acquainted with this industry that he was prepared to come in and invest his money and establish a factory without the aid of a bounty. They added that they had applied to the local government, and had every reason to expect a bounty from them. Since that time, while they have not been definitely refused, I understand it has been intimated that the government are not prepared to give a bounty. I have said elsewhere, and I repeat here, that that deputation made a great mistake, because, in my judgment, they could not get any man or company to come in and build a factory without assistance. Though the statement was made in my presence, before the minister, that a firm were prepared to start the business, I have since learned that the promoters of the factory have had correspondence with Mr. G. H. McMullen, of Watertown, New York, the gentleman who was supposed to be ready to start this factory, and the propositions they made were not entertained by that gentleman, for a moment. And, why? Because there was no bounty given, and because they had only a few thousand dollars of stock. Speaking from memory, I think, they had only \$20,000 or \$25,000 subscribed, and they wished some one to come in and raise the rest of the capital, if the machinery was to come in free, and take the chances of getting a bounty from the local government. Mr. McMullen replied, I believe, that he was engaged at one factory at Watertown, and one at Rome, New York, and could start half a dozen more, under the bounty of 1 cent a pound, which New York paid. He said: Why should I come over to Canada and invest my money, where no assistance is given, and educate the people there, as I am doing in New York? So, he would not entertain the proposition for a moment. Two men were here last year, who held the same opinion, one being from Germany and one from Scotland. These gentlemen were here two years in succession. They looked into the matter and saw what the prospects were, and what the chances were of raising the beets. Looking over the ground, they came to the conclusion that the climate and soil were absolutely suitable for raising the beets, but that they would not engage in the industry without a bounty. They asked that the government should give 1 cent a pound for the first year, $\frac{2}{3}$ cent a pound for the second year, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a pound for the third year, and $\frac{1}{4}$ cent for the fourth and fifth years, and agreed, if this were done, to invest their money and establish as many factories in Canada as were necessary to make all the sugar used in the country. But they got no satisfaction, so they abandoned the enterprise and went home. The same is true of Mr. G. H. McMullen, so far as I know. My last information, is that he and his associates would not start a factory under any consideration unless with assistance from the government.

This industry being so valuable to the farmers and so suitable to the country, and the assistance required being so small, I think the government ought to come to the rescue and give the assistance necessary. We know that beets are being raised, and sugar manufactured in Canada to-day. My hon. friend (Mr. McGregor), sent four or five tons of beets from Essex to the factory in Detroit, from which sugar was made, samples of which were shown in this House. The beets were found to have a large percentage of sugar, and the sugar is as good as any we have in the country. A small bounty granted for only a short time, would establish this industry. Some hon. gentlemen opposite say they are against the principle of bounties. But, they give bounties on iron. Why should they give a bounty to the party who invests his money in iron manufacture, and not to the party who desires to engage in the manufacture of beet sugar. The principle is the same, and by paying these bounties on iron, these hon. gentlemen admit the principle. There is more reason why a bounty should be given on this industry than in the iron industry, because the money that is paid out for the carrying on of the manufacture of iron, does not reach or benefit nearly so many people as would the money spent in carrying on the manufacture of beet-root sugar. The money spent in carrying on the manufacture of beet-root sugar would go to the agricultural classes who represent so large a percentage of the producers of the country. Sixty per cent of the money spent in the production of sugar would go back to the farmer. But, the government are not desirous of helping the farmers, as will be evident, if they do not give this assistance. I believe the day will come when they will see their error. If they should be driven from power, as I believe they will be, at the next election, the Conservative party will jump at the chance to aid this industry; and hon. gentlemen opposite will regret for the rest of their lives, that they did not adopt this proposed measure which would be of such benefit to the farmers of the country.

Mr. ALEX. McNEILL (North Bruce). I do not wish to take up more than a minute or so, as the subject has already been so fully discussed, and as it is almost six o'clock. But, as the Warton factory has been spoken of, and as I have the honour to come from that neighbourhood, I think it but right that I should say a word or two. Now, I think that the history of the Warton factory argues strongly in favour of the granting of a bounty. The gentlemen who desire to establish the industry there, started out with the idea that if they could only get their machinery free of duty, they would not require a bounty. That was their strong belief; but the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), know that when a deputation came down here which I accompanied, we found that they had applied to the Ontario government for a bounty, showing they had altered their views in that regard. This affords strong presumption of the necessity of a bonus for this industry. Now, I think the discussion here to-day has come upon us as a surprise. Heretofore we have had to discuss this question from the standpoint that it was impossible to establish this industry in Canada at all, even with a bounty, that the money would be simply thrown away, that the farmers would be induced to enter upon an undertaking which would prove unsuccessful, and that those who invested their money in that industry would lose it. The Minister of Agriculture has referred to the experience of Quebec, and has held strong opinions in regard to it; but to-day we have from the government benches a statement from an hon. gentleman that he has given a great deal of consideration to the matter, and he thinks that, far from its being impossible to establish the industry here successfully with a bounty, it will be so profitable an industry that no bounty will be required. Now, I think that the truth is generally found between the two extremes, the one extreme being that it cannot be established at all with a bounty, and the other extreme being that it does not require a bounty because it would be too profitable, and the natural conclusion we must come to is that the bounty ought to be given. That is the intermediate position, the compromise between two extremes. I think it would be an unfortunate thing for the government to refuse to give this industry financial support because an hon. gentleman who represents so frequently in this House the views of our friends on the other side of the line, thinks that this is going to be a successful industry.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman will permit me to say that I do not often lose faith in the British Empire and call for a consultation in the House of Commons to save it from destruction.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not know that that is quite germane to the subject under discussion. I think an hon. member is bound to take the statement of another hon. member and not to impugn his veracity. The hon. gentleman has made that statement before in the House, and I said plainly that he had entirely misrepresented or misapprehended all that I had said. I said I believed the result of the struggle in which we were involved would be of great benefit in consolidating the British Empire, and that I agreed with Conan Doyle that a monument ought to be erected to Mr. Kruger for his services to that end. I do not think, therefore, that an hon. gentleman who has been so long a member of this House should so far transgress the rules of common decency between members of this House as to question my plain declaration in that regard. However, I am delighted to have proof from the speeches that have been delivered in this House by the hon. member for Michigan—I beg his pardon, the hon. member for North Norfolk—whom we have regarded so often as representing the interests of the United States, that an entente cordiale now exists between this country and the United States.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am afraid that you are introducing vinegar into the discussion.

Mr. McNEILL. Well, does not vinegar often proceed from the fermentation of sugar? Now, Mr. Speaker, referring to the subject under discussion, I will only say that I do not think it would be a very wise thing on the part of the government to allow a suggestion that this was likely to be a very successful industry in Canada to prevent them from giving it that support which in every other country in which beet-root sugar has been manufactured successfully has been granted in the shape of a bounty by the government. I agree with what has been so well said by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that there is an almost constant expense in connection with this matter, in the education of the farmers for some years, to enable them to supply the factories with the beets that are required. I would urge upon the government that it is not yet too late this session to do something, although the budget speech has been delivered. I think last session it was subsequent to the delivery of the budget speech that we had the introduction of a bounty on iron; and I hope this year we may find that the government will take this matter into their favourable consideration and decide to grant a bounty. It is known that I am not a very warm supporter of the government, I often have a good deal of fault to find with them; but I must say that the Minister of Finance has received the deputations which I have had the pleasure of attending on this subject, with the greatest possible courtesy. I think he has shown an open mind with regard to this matter, and so has the Minister of Customs. I do not know whether the mind of the Minister of Agriculture is at all changed, I hope it is, and that he is coming around in our direction.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, it is quite open.

Mr. McNEILL. I am glad to hear that, because it is a change in the right direction. I would strongly urge upon the government to grant a bounty to help this industry, which I think will prove a source of wide-reaching benefit to the people of this country.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

COMOX AND CAPE SCOTT RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Comox and Cape Scott Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 8,

Mr. A. MORRISON (New Westminster). Mr. Chairman, inadvertently, there has been an omission of a few words in this section by the solicitors who drafted the Bill, and I would ask the leave of the committee to have these words inserted. After the word 'in.' in the third line, and before the word 'Comox.' I wish to have the following words inserted: 'Wellington district, thence northerly to a point.' The section will then read as follows:

The company may lay out, construct and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches from a point in Wellington district, thence northerly to a point in Comox district.

With the permission of the committee, I ask that these words be inserted. It is merely a clerical amendment, and I think there should be no objection to their being inserted.

Mr. W. W. B. McINNES (Vancouver). Mr. Chairman, I would point out that the parties who are making this application are practically the parties who control the E. and N. charter, and the E. and N. charter already gives the parties controlling it power to build to Comox, so that there is no necessity for obtaining additional power to build from Wellington to Comox. My hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) has not given the usual notice, and consequently, the amendment would be out of order.

Mr. MORRISON. I am quite aware that this amendment cannot be made unless the hon. gentleman (Mr. McInnes) consents. The parties who have charge of this Bill have not given notice, deeming it unnecessary, in a matter of minor importance such as this. I am in the hands of the committee. Certainly, unless the hon. gentleman consents, the matter will have to stand. I would ask him, in order to expedite this Bill, and in view of the fact that there is no material difference in having these words inserted, to withdraw his objection. It would simply be expediting the work of the committee.

Mr. McINNES. My hon. friend can give notice of his amendment, and it can be taken up on the third reading of the Bill next Friday evening. There is practically no time lost at all by necessitating him giving notice.

The CHAIRMAN. We cannot amend the clause unless by consent.

Mr. MORRISON. We wish to have it amended. The Bill had better be allowed to stand. The clause passing without that amendment is not what is wanted.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall I report progress and ask leave to sit again?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes. I beg to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

THE GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Gaspé Short Line Railway Company.—(Mr. Lemieux.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. JOHN McALISTER (Restigouche). Mr. Chairman, I gave notice the other day that I would move, on the third reading of this Bill, or in the committee, that the following clause be added. I beg to move it now:

3. The company upon so acquiring the said railways or any portion thereof, shall forthwith become liable to pay and satisfy the claims of all persons who have heretofore performed, furnished or supplied labour, goods or materials to or for the said Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company or to or for the said Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, or to or for any contractor or sub-contractor for the construction of any portion of either of the said railways, and the claims of all such persons whenever the same shall have accrued, shall be a first charge and lien upon the said railways so acquired, and upon all other property which shall at any time be acquired by the company hereby incorporated.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). Permit me to say that my hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) was in error when he stated on Monday last, that the present Bill was opposed by the electors of the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure. I wish to state that I have received a number of petitions signed, not only by hundreds but by thousands of the electors of my county, favouring the construction of the railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin.

Mr. McALISTER. From Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. McALISTER. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Restigouche Telephone, published at Campbellton, has reported the resolution of the municipal councils and of the board of trade favouring such construction of the railway, and, besides, two of the directors of the company are members of the board of trade of Gaspé. But, that is not the object of the present amendment, and, therefore, I must say that the amendment presented by my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) cannot be accepted as it now reads by the promoters of the Bill. It goes too far. It saddles the directors of the company with obligations which really cannot be imposed upon any individual nor upon any company acquiring this railway. I may state that the directors of the company are prepared to meet my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) half way, and they have agreed to substitute for the amendment now before the Chair, the following :

The company upon so acquiring the said railway shall forthwith become liable to pay and satisfy the claims of all persons who have heretofore performed, furnished and supplied labour, goods or material to or for the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company in connection with the operating of its railway.

This is a very extraordinary obligation to impose upon a company, or upon an individual who would buy a railway or any other property from the sheriff. However, as I have said, in order to meet my hon. friend half way, we are ready to adopt the amendment which I have read. I must say that already the Railway Committee have imposed very heavy obligations upon this company. For instance, an amendment was added in the committee to clause 14, by which the present company will be obliged—

Mr. McALISTER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) allow me to ask him a question? Is what he means by 'operating' there in the amendment, the debts that have been incurred since the road began to run? It does not seem to cover the debts incurred in the construction at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will say to my hon. friend that, to my mind, his amendment is unjust.

Mr. McALISTER. The hon. gentleman did not answer my question. My question was, is this amendment confined to the debts which have been contracted since the road commenced?

Mr. LEMIEUX. This would cover about twenty years.

Mr. McALISTER. Does the remark refer to the amendment you proposed?

Mr. FOSTER. What does the word 'operating' mean?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The operating of the railway, I suppose, is the running of the railway, and the company shall be bound to pay these debts.

Mr. McALISTER. It does not refer to the construction at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) represents a large number of labourers in his county who worked on the construction of the road. Well, he is protected by an Act passed in the year 1891, intituled 'An Act respecting the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company.' The labourers belonging to his county have worked under Mr. McFarlane's contract, and there is a clause in the Act of 1891 in which it is said :

That the said claim and charge has had and shall have priority over all mortgages, hypothecs, charges and incumbrances whatsoever, created by the company before or after the passing of this Act for any purpose whatsoever upon the said part of the railway or upon the said lands, tracks, buildings, materials, rolling stock or other property, movable or immovable, to the said part appurtenant, and no registration in any manner whatever shall be necessary in order to provide such priority.

Therefore, my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) is protected by that clause.

Mr. McALISTER. Does that afford any more protection to these creditors than the judgment against the company by McFarlane? Does not McFarlane's judgment cover all that this section of the Act provides for?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was informed this afternoon by Mr. Barwick, one of the directors of the company, who represents the Bank of Ontario, that all the creditors who have worked under Mr. McFarlane's contract, shall be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, and he has further informed my hon. friend that if some of them have failed to file their claims with the assignee, Mr. Riddell, the hon. gentleman (Mr. McAlister) can take Mr. Barwick's word that they will be allowed to file their claims now. But, according to the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) the directors who would acquire the Baie des Chaleurs Railway would have to pay nearly half a million dollars of the debts of the present company. That is neither fair nor just, and I think that the amendment which I now move to substitute for his, would cover all the conditions.

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). It seems to me that the position is this: If the company which is seeking incorporation now, has the right to purchase this railway with all its privileges, franchises, &c., it takes all the assets that the Baie des Chaleurs Railway has. It seems to me to be just that it should at the same time incur those obligations which are existing to-day. I would not go so far as to say that any obligations which have been prescribed should be included in the Bill so as to make them payable, for I think it would be going rather far for this House to legislate so as to change the law in order to allow as privileged claims on this road, claims which really have no existence whatever. There are certain claims arising out of the construction of the road, and which have come into existence lately, which should be protected. We know that the road from Metapedia to New Richmond and even further, has been built for a long while, and that those who have worked upon the road have either been paid by the different commissioners who have been appointed, or, if they have not been paid, it is probably because they were negligent and did not file their claims in time, or were guilty of some disqualification which is imputable only to themselves. But, those workmen who have worked at a low rate during the time within which their claims could not be prescribed by law seem to me to deserve the same protection from this House. They would not be protected if this Bill went into operation without adding to section 14 such an amendment as my hon. friend proposed. Another difficulty is this: Is the law we are now passing going to override the law of the province of Quebec? Are the privileges and liens that exist under the Civil Code of the province of Quebec going to be wiped out by this legislation?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). That is the effect of the amendment.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think so. I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the amendment of the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) protects not only those who furnished material and labour for the operation of the road, but those who worked upon the construction of the road, and whose claims probably deserve more recognition from this House than any others. The Civil Code of the province of Quebec gives the labourers on this railway, whether for operating it or constructing it, a lien, which it seems to me will be wiped out by section 14, if it remains as it is. Article 2009, paragraph 9, of the Civil Code, says. Are privileged claims upon immovable property the following:

9. Servants' wages and those of employees of railway companies engaged in manual labour under the same restrictions as funeral expenses.

That is, they have to be registered within a certain time, and it has to be shown that the movables belonging to the company are not sufficient to pay the claims. If my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) wants to protect those who have worked on the construction of the railway, he should go a step further and add the word construction to his amendment after the word operation. That would remove all difficulties. I am not interested in this Bill further than that I have received a number of letters from persons who have claims upon it, and it is in their interest that I ask my hon. friend from Gaspé to do that justice to those people who have worked on the construction of the road which he is ready to do to those who have operated the railway.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It seems to me that the Bill is not very clearly understood. Here is a railway which is absolutely bankrupt, in the hands of a corporation which has been in possession of it since 1872, which corporation has received during that time $972,000 of the moneys of the Dominion of Canada and the province of Quebec. A great part of these moneys have never been used in the construction of the railway, but have been appropriated for the purposes which it is not necessary now to discuss. This work, so substantially aided by both governments, is in such a position that it is absolutely closed up and unworkable. The company which seeks this Act of incorporation comes here and asks us to give it power to acquire that road when it goes to sale under the judgment now obtained against it for some $180,000. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), says it would be improper to allow the franchise to go over to the new company without also transferring the obligations of the old company. That is perfectly right under ordinary circumstances; but that is not what we are dealing with here. We are giving this company the right to purchase the railway at a sheriff's sale.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not stated in section 14.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It necessarily means a sheriff's sale.

Mr. BERGERON. If it is not sold at a sheriff's sale, what is the use of the Bill?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If it is not sold at a sheriff's sale the use of the Bill is to give the company the right to acquire the railway, and they cannot acquire it by voluntary sale without taking the liabilities. That is a simple principle of law which is not arguable.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think it is.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Do you mean to say that a man can acquire a going concern and take its assets without assuming its liabilities towards bondholders and other privileged creditors?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman deny that that can be done by an Act of parliament? The question is whether it is not done by this section.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is quite obvious to any one who reads the section that it is not done. It was never intended that if this corporation acquired this road, it should not take over the debts due to the labourers and others, and that can be made clear. But by the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Restigouche you are endeavouring to saddle on this new corporation not only the debts of the Baie des Chaleurs, but those of the Atlantic and Lake Superior as well.

Mr. McALISTER. Are they not the same road?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. The Atlantic and Lake Superior Company is a company to construct a railway from the Atlantic to Lake Superior. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Gaspé provides for paying all the claims of the labourers.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It does not cover all the debts of the Lake Superior and Atlantic Company, but simply those incurred by the Baie des Chaleurs Company. It seems to me that it only applies to that portion of the Lake Superior and Atlantic Railway which is called the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. If that is not so, the amendment should be made clear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is quite clear that it applies to both railways, if my hon. friend will read the section carefully. The position taken by my hon. friend from Gaspé is this. He says: I am willing that this corporation should become liable, upon acquiring the railway, or any portion thereof, to satisfy the claims of all persons who have heretofore performed, furnished or supplied labour, goods or materials, to or for the said Baie des Chaleurs Company in connection with the working of its railway. What more does my hon. friend want? The only claim for construction against the railway company, is the claim of McFarlane, and that is secured by the Act of 1891. But, my hon. friend knows well that this corporation will not have the exclusive right of buying in the defunct railway. Any individual can buy it in against this corporation, and what would be his position? He would simply deposit the money in court, which would then be available for distribution among the creditors, according to their rights. You are, therefore, hampering this corporation, by saddling and encumbering it with an obligation which you do not impose on a private individual. That seems to be the whole position.

Mr. BERGERON. He was not here.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. True, I was not here, but perhaps I can see the point and will endeavour to explain it. What these hon. gentlemen pretend, is that any individual who would buy the road, would have to come back to this parliament for the purpose of getting an Act of incorporation to enable him to work it, and then parliament would saddle him with other liabilities. That is to say, after a man has purchased the property from the sheriff, this parliament would saddle him with liabilities which he did not assume when he made the purchase. By virtue of what authority would this parliament do that? By the legislation of 1891, this corporation has been saddled with the obligation, in case it purchases this road, of paying $190,000 to the McFarlane estate for work done on the road. We are now going further and imposing upon it the burden of paying unknown liabilities to all those who have been, for the last few years, working in connection with the operation of either road. You are putting on this corporation an unforeseen liability which will make it absolutely impossible for it to purchase the road.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend contradicts himself. He says, in the first place, that there is no use putting in the amendment, because, under the law, anybody who purchased the road, has to assume the liabilities under section 14.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Except at sheriff's sale.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not see, even if sold at sheriff's sale, that he would be in anywise bound, reading the Bill as I do now, to pay the liabilities upon the road. I cannot see anything in our law which would compel him to. But, it seems to me that the section as it reads, simply empowers, whether at sheriff's sale, or otherwise, this company to purchase the privileges of the road, and the company can take that road without the existing liabilities upon it, except those created by law, and which have been registered against it. There will be no other liability—no liabilities to those who have worked in the construction of the road at all, except they have registered their claims within the delay provided by law. If the Bill passes, as drafted, these liabilities will be wiped out. My hon. friend says this Bill is to enable the new company to purchase at sheriff's sale. But, if a sheriff's sale can take place, the Bill is not necessary. It is evidently, however, for the purpose of enabling these people to purchase the road at sheriff's sale, and then dispensing them from the necessity of coming back to this House, according to the Railway Act, to be incorporated and get the privilege from this parliament of operating the road. If that is the object of the Bill, let us know it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course it is.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But, I humbly submit that if it is to allow these people to purchase at sheriff's sale, the Bill will not give that right, because the sheriff in the province of Quebec cannot sell a railway, as a going concern, if that road is not entirely within the province of Quebec. Under the decisions of the courts a sheriff can only sell a railway in the province of Quebec as a going concern, provided it is limited to that province; but if it is under a Dominion charter and extends beyond the limits of the province, its sale is subject to such conditions that practically it cannot be purchased at sheriff's sale. An opposition made by an interested party would prevent the sheriff from selling it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This road is entirely within the province of Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is not. The road is now sold to the Lake Superior and Atlantic Railway, and has been owned by it for five or six years past. Therefore, it is a road which extends beyond the province of Quebec, and under the judgment in Redfield and township Wickham.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The last case is Grey and the Manitoba and North-west Railway.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under these decisions, such a road as this cannot be sold at sheriff's sale as a going concern, and this Bill would, therefore, be inoperative. If, as my hon. friend says, these rights are protected, why is it that my hon. friend from Gaspé proposes the amendment he did?

Mr. LEMIEUX. To meet you half way in a friendly way.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But, my hon. friend does not go far enough. No reason has been shown why, if he wants to protect those who have worked at the road in its operation, he should not be equally willing to protect those workmen who have worked in its construction between Metapedia and Caplin? My hon. friend knows that that portion of the road between Caplin and Paspébaic has been built within a very short time, and I am informed that the workmen are not paid, and that their claims are not prescribed. Why would my hon. friend not put in his amendment something to cover the claims of these men? No reason has been given why he should not do that. My hon. friend says that the statute of 1891, protects them because their claim is the first lien on the road. That is all well and good for those who have implicit faith in Mr. McFarlane or Mr. Barwick, but many are not willing to take their word. In the face of this section of the Bill, which wipes out their claim altogether, they say: We are not willing to take the risk of either McFarlane or Barwick, not paying, and we want something in this Bill which will guarantee our rights. In simple justice, we should protect the rights of these people.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend has evidently not looked into the legislation which governs this corporation, or he would not have said what he did about the sheriff's sale. Section 2, of 57-58 Victoria, chapter 62, which provides for the ratification of the purchase by the Atlantic and Lake Superior of the Baie des Chaleurs Railways, says:

Nothing in this Act shall be held to relieve any of the said companies from any of their debts or liabilities, nor shall affect the rights or priorities of the holders of the bonds or debentures of the companies, as such, with respect to the assets and property of the companies, which rights and priorities shall continue; nor shall in anywise affect any suit or proceeding now pending either by or against any of the said companies, or any judgment existing, which may be prosecuted, continued, or completed and enforced as if this Act had not been passed.

It was intended to enforce a judgment, if obtained by McFarlane in a case which was pending at the time this Act was passed, so there can be no doubt that, under that judgment, we have the right to bring that road to sale, so the case of Gray and the Manitoba and North-west has absolutely no application. The hon. gentleman says his object is to protect the labourer. But he is not protecting the labourer when he seeks to fix upon this company liability for debt incurred fifteen or twenty years ago. If he wishes to protect the labourer, I offer him this suggestion. Let the amendment read:

The company, upon so acquiring the said railway or any portion thereof, shall forthwith become liable to pay and satisfy the claims of any persons who have heretofore performed, furnished or supplied—

Taking the words of the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAllister):

—labour, goods or material to or for the said Baie des Chaleurs Railway in connection with the working or construction of this railway.

Mr. McALISTER. Suppose you put 'construction' ahead of 'operating.' It does not make much difference but will put them in their natural order. Make it 'construction' or 'working.'

Mr. FOSTER. It would be better not to rush the matter through until we see if the point desired is covered or not. If it is covered, as contended by the Solicitor General, what is the objection of putting 'construction' before 'working'?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) point out why it should be otherwise.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) If the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is of opinion that it is really covered, he cannot object; if there is any doubt at all about it, his contention that it is covered has no effect. On either ground, I cannot see why there should be objections to putting in 'construction and.' I am not a lawyer and I cannot argue this out from a lawyer's standpoint, but I cannot understand the proposition under which the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) stands, when he says he is ready to meet my hon. friend from Restigouche half way. He wants to cut off half the labour that has gone into the road. He says he is willing to pay for the labour going into the operating of the road, and asks that this should be considered as meeting us half way. I do not think that at all. We are making a dividing line between two bodies of labourers exactly of the same kind. The labouring man who goes in and gives his labour towards the construction of the road has as good a right to his wages as the man who goes in after the locomotive and cars are running and ballasts the line or rearranges the sleepers or does any other work necessary to continue the running of the road. There is no difference in kind between these two. And, if one kind of labour is to be provided for why not the other? The words put in by my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) makes no distinction between these classes of labour. It gives the man who labours on construction the same right of redress as the man who labours on the road when it is running. But there are two or three peculiar things about this whole matter with respect to which I cannot understand the position of the hon. member for Gaspé. He says he has petitions, and, I think statement from the board of trade, asking that a company be chartered to build a road between Gaspé and Paspébiac. But if he looks at this legislation that is proposed he will find that it does not give the right to build between Gaspé and Paspébiac.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will allow me, there is an amendment made in the Railway Committee which provides that when the company shall have acquired the railway of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company and begun the operation of the road, it shall construct the remaining portion of the railway, that is between Paspébiac and Gaspé Basin, beginning within one year and completing the construction within three years.

Mr. FOSTER. Construction of what portion of the line?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The shore line.

Mr. FOSTER. Between what points?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Between Paspébiac and New Carlisle or Gaspé Basin.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not in section 9 of the Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX. An amendment was made in the Railway Committee, which appears as subsection 3 of section 14, and reads:

When the company acquires the railway of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, then and only then, work shall be commenced on the uncompleted portion of the said railway within one year, and to be completed within three years of the passing of this Act.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to make provision that when this company which is now being chartered shall have acquired the railroad, the right to acquire which is given in section 14, it shall go on and build an additional line, carrying the present road from Paspébiac to Gaspé. There is one peculiar thing which strikes me in the first place in regard to this whole legislation, and that is that we are enacting through legislation which was not asked for in the petition—that is, you have entirely shifted the ground from the application which was made and advertised, and with which the promoters came to the committee. What was asked for by the promoters in the advertisements? The only notice I find that they have given is this:

Notice is hereby given that application will be made to the parliament of Canada at the next session thereof for an Act to incorporate a company with all necessary powers to construct, operate and maintain a line of railway from a point at or near Gaspé Basin, in the county of Gaspé, and thence in a westerly direction through the counties of Gaspé and Rimouski, in the province of Quebec, to a point connecting it with the Intercolonial Railway at or near Causapsal, in the said county of Rimouski, with power to connect with and enter into running arrangements over any and all railways situate within a distance of three miles from any portion of said railway.

Now, I think it is a well understood principle that the notice and petition should embrace the object of the legislation, and that the legislation should keep within what is asked for by the petition and in the notice. What are the facts? You are not in this Act giving the legislation which was asked for in the petition and which was advertised; consequently you have given no notice to the public at all, you have given no notice to the counties interested in it, you have set out nothing with reference to the real legislation which you are passing here now. For the real legislation you are attempting to pass is not to build a line from Gaspé through the counties of Gaspé and Rimouski to a point on the Intercolonial Railway, but you are legislating here to give that company power to buy out a road, not a single notice of which, not a single line with reference to which, is mentioned in the notice or in the application made by the promoters of the Bill. It seems to me that proceeding in this way, in completely changing the grounds given in the notice, the Railway Committee has hardly done what it should have done. It is possible that the whole of Gaspé and Rimouski may be entirely in favour of what is asked for in that petition, and it may be possible that a large portion of those counties is not in favour of this. What is the use of setting forth the petition and advertising what you are asking for unless you keep somewhere near the notice set out in the petition? But, as the right hon. gentleman who leads the government said last night, the object of this legislation is not to have another road built from Gaspé north, running through those two counties to a point on the Intercolonial Railway. What this legislation is for is to create an entity which can take advantage of the sheriff's hammer and buy out this road which is already built to a certain extent up to Paspébiac.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Which is bankrupt.

Mr. FOSTER. No matter whether it is bankrupt or not. The question is whether it is a fair method of procedure. If the promoters had given notice of what they wanted the legislation for, then all parties would have been advertised of that, and they could have come to the committee knowing exactly what was proposed and prepared to state their objections. But you say to the whole country that what you are going to do in the Railway Committee is to discuss the question whether the road shall be built from Gaspé through the counties of Gaspé and Rimouski to a point on the Intercolonial Railway, and then you go into that committee-room and pass legislation which is not for that purpose at all, but is expressly stated to be for the simple purpose of buying out a railway from 30 to 40 miles distant from the line you have applied for, and to do that is the sole object of the creation of the company. It seems to me this is not giving notice to the public. It seems to me there is a proper and fair grievance to complain of.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Armstrong's grievance.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has no right to insinuate as to whose grievance it is; he has no right to say in this argument whether it is one man's grievance or another's. Supposing it is Mr. Armstrong's grievance, supposing it is the bondholder's grievance who have put their money into the construction of that road, suppose it is the labourers' grievance who have put their work into it, the hon. gentleman cannot get away from the rights of the case by trying to make it a personal matter. I am sure that he would not try to do that, that was a little remark made aside. But take Mr. Armstrong or anybody else, they have gone to work under contracts with this government, they have got charter rights, they have built up to Paspébiac under the charter of this road, they have got subsidies voted for a railway extension from Paspébiac to the north, and the bondholders who have put their money into that certainly have some rights. But coming down to the kernel of the whole thing, is it not right that the labour which went into that, whether in the construction or in the operation of the road, that that labour and those supplies should be provided for, and if you are going to create a company, they should be put in a favourable position. Because it is impossible for any one to compete with them, the only struggle will be between the present company to keep its charter rights, and this company which you are now putting into operation and giving a standing to. No third party has any chance. You are going to pass over to them not only the right to the rolling stock and to the road bed, but the right to operate the road as well. Any third party who would attempt to buy that would have to do so in the face of the fact that there is an organization which has given to it rights, and any third party coming in has got to take his chances.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It seems to me peculiar that when all parties are agreed upon the amendment, we should have this long speech with reference to the rights of labour, that after all these long years during which over $500,000 of public money has gone into this road, very little regard was had for the labourer whose grievances now receive so much attention. The suggestion which I made to the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), was accepted by him before the member for York (Mr. Foster) addressed the committee at all. I cannot understand why this long speech has been made under the circumstances; because after all, there never was any desire to distinguish between the labour which had contributed either to the construction or to the operation of the road. We thought the words we had in the amendment were sufficient to cover the rights of labour. It was impossible for us to accept the amendment proposed by the member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) because it covered a road which was not in issue here at all.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has missed something by not being here when the other part of the discussion went on. The other night it took us an hour to convince hon. gentlemen opposite that there ought to be anything in this Bill to protect the labourer. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) himself declared it would be unconstitutional to put it in. The hon. gentleman can read the argument in the Hansard for himself; and if he will attend to his business and come once in a while to this House, he would know better what is going on, and would not be so positive in his statements when he comes to speak at the tail-end of a discussion. The hon. gentleman gets up now and says that he always intended to protect the labourer, but members of the government who are stronger than he is have argued for hours that it was unconstitutional to have anything like that put in. He says he made no distinction between labour. Did not the hon. member for Gaspé make a distinction between the classes of labour? The hon. gentleman is willing that they should pay only for the labour that went into the operation of the road. Now, then this Solon gets up and declares that they are not making any distinction between. I would advise my hon. friend to attend the sessions of the House more closely before he undertakes to correct other members.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Although I was not here the other night, I think I have a better knowledge of what went on than the hon. gentleman has, because the right hon. Prime Minister suggested, that, in view of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Restigouche to protect the creditors, the matter should be allowed to remain over in order that the point might be considered. That is the stand taken by the Prime Minister to the knowledge of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), who came here and misstated his position deliberately.

Mr. FOSTER. Here we have the spectacle of a Minister of Justice, legal, judicious, cool, careful that every basis that he lays down is irrefragible, that there is no ground for change in it, rising and declaring that I have misstated a fact because the Prime Minister, after we had forced him, after hours of discussion to do so, declares that we will let it lie over and look into it.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. Although he and the hon. Minister of Railways, and I think the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and others, had declared that it was absurd and unconstitutional.

The PRIME MINISTER. I never said a word of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Now the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick), with a small subterfuge that poorly represents justice in this House, takes the admission that was wrung from the right hon. Prime Minister, after hours of discussion, that the matter should lie over, as proof positive that all the preceding discussion did not amount to anything. The preceding discussion was just exactly the leaven which leavened the lump.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am within the knowledge of the House when I say that I did not say a word against the constitutionality, or the legality, or the propriety of having these creditors paid. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) has just given a clue as to where this proposition comes from. The hon. gentleman stated, a moment ago, that this is a fight between the new company and the old company.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have the hon. gentleman taking the part of this old company, which is bankrupt, which does not want to be deprived of that property which it has so much abused.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot allow the right hon. gentleman to misrepresent me in that small kind of way. It is unworthy of the right hon. Prime Minister to do so. The right hon. gentleman goes farther than the hon. member for Gaspé, and the hon. member for Gaspé was ashamed of the statement that he made.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Ashamed of the statement?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, rather, after he had made it, because he knew it was not a fair thing to try to make it appear that when I was arguing for a principle I was arguing for a person's private interest. But the Prime Minister goes still further, and tries to make it appear that my argument should not have any force because I am, as he says, championing a bankrupt company. That is not the ground of my argument at all. Neither can the hon. gentleman get away from the position he took the other night very flatly in contradiction of the position taken by the hon. Solicitor General, and from which he was driven by the arguments from this side of the House.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), a moment ago, stated deliberately that the Prime Minister had opposed this amendment on the ground that it was unconstitutional. Let us set this question at rest once and for all. Here is what the Prime Minister said:

Perhaps we could come to some conclusion on this. My hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) wants to protect the creditors. The amendment he moves cannot be taken at this stage of the Bill. The promoter of the Bill is not here, but he will, no doubt, be here shortly, and, no doubt, the hon. gentleman will have occasion to consult with him. I sympathize with the view of the hon. member (Mr. McAlister) presents and the object he has in view.

This is raising the constitutionality of the question. There is the question of fact settled.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not quite settled because that statement of sympathy was made. I do not know how many minutes, but, I will venture to say it was made an hour, or more, after the discussion began. The last thing that was done was the moving of the amendment by the hon. member for Restigouche. The whole discussion had passed before that amendment came up. I understand my hon. friend to be willing to amend the resolution by adding the words 'construction and,' so that it settles that part of the question.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Time, time.

(The hour for private Bills having expired, the committee rose.)

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE SHIPMENT AND TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND laid on the Table:

Return, in part, to an order of the House, dated March 19, 1900, for a copy of the report and evidence taken by the royal commission on the shipment and transportation of grain.

He said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin), who is so much interested in this return, that the evidence is very voluminous, that it is now being prepared and will be laid on the Table of the House just as soon as a copy of it can be made.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) has not brought down a copy of the letter of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to Judge Senkler, or of the order in council on which the commission was issued. These were read on each occasion that the commission met in a new place, and I do not think they have been brought down.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did the hon. gentleman inquire? I am almost certain they were brought down.

Mr. DAVIN. I inquired.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If not, I will inquire into it again and give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) the information to-morrow.

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION TO THE SEABOARD.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bennett:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is advisable to take a definite line of action with regard to the question of transportation of the grain and other commodities of the North-west Territories, Manitoba and the United States, with a view of centreing the same to the greatest possible extent in Canadian channels.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I desire, to-night, to occupy the attention of the House for a few moments in connection with the discussion upon this question of transportation from the interior to the seaboard. The question of cheap transportation is one that has occupied the attention of the public to a large extent for the last two or three years. It is proper, in the consideration of this question to give attention to a factor in the problem which is likely to exercise a controlling influence. That, Sir, is the improvement of facilities on railways for performing cheaply the work of transporting grain and other freight from the interior to the seaboard. Those familiar with railway transportation are aware that from time to time very great changes and very great improvements are taking place in this direction. I can remember when railroads were laid with iron rails upon the old chair couplings, and when the cost of transportation by rail was, perhaps, ten times greater than it is at present. Great improvements have been made since then; the fish-plate joint; the continuous line of rail, the substitution of the steel rail for the iron rail; improvement in rolling stock, the increase in hauling power; until now it is a doubtful thing whether transportation by water can do any more than hold its own in competition with transportation by rail. The next move in improving railway facilities will be the introduction of the 100-pound rail and the building of freight cars with a capacity of 50 tons each. We will see railways—upon a comparatively good line—transporting in one train the cargo of an ordinary grain vessel. Cars carrying 1,700 bushels to the car, and a freight train of forty cars of that capacity means 68,000 bushels to the train, or the cargo of a large-size vessel passing through a canal with a depth of 14 feet.

We have lately embarked in the scheme of enlarging our own canals upon the St. Lawrence, and we are about to provide a continuous line of water navigation fourteen feet deep from the upper lakes to the seaboard. The cheapening of freight which will result from this improvement in our canal system will unquestionably be immediately met by the American railways, and so, the result of our canal improvements will be, not so much to draw ship business to our own seaports as to lower the rates of freight from the west to the seaboard, for the benefit largely of American farmers in the western states. The larger portion of the grain moved from the west to the seaboard comes from Chicago and other American points, and if we have introduced the system of improving our canals which will cheapen the freight upon this great amount of grain, it would, if the cheapened rates were not met by the American railways, bring that grain to Montreal. But the meeting of this reduction of rates by the American lines will simply leave the business relatively in the condition which it occupies at the present time. It is asserted, and I believe with truth, that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway are capable of placing all the grain in Montreal at low rates of freight, that tonnage can be found for its transport from Montreal to the old country. The difficulty, which is felt even now, is not so much the inability of our railway lines to place grain in Montreal at a low rate of freight as the impossibility of obtaining tonnage from Montreal to British ports. The Canada Atlantic and other Canadian lines, during the past season transported the following enormous quantities of grain:

Western Grain, via Lake and Rail Ports,
Season of 1899.

	Bushels.
Depot Harbour, via C. A. R.....	13,693,781
Midland, via G. T. R.....	6,815,303
Owen Sound, via C. P. R.....	2,620,177
Goderich, via G. T. R.....	865,132
Collingwood, ".....	236,292
Sarnia, ".....	3,416,856
Kingston, ".....(about)	6,434,793
Prescott, ".....	1,591,258

Of this grain there was carried for export from Montreal the following:

Western Grain for Export from Montreal,
Season of 1899.

	Bushels.
Depot Harbour, via C. A. R.....	11,100,000
Midland, "	3,500,000
Owen Sound, "	1,500,000
Kingston, "	4,500,000
Prescott, "	1,100,000

Shipped by all Canadian routes from Chicago 19,606,599
Of which the Parry Sound route carried 8,833,269

Now, the Parry Sound line, in 1898, transported grain from Chicago or Duluth to Montreal for 3½ cents a bushel. The cost of transportation upon this road last year was somewhat higher, for the reason that there was a scarcity of freight cars and a scarcity of tonnage upon the upper lakes, and freights were abnormally high, mainly in consequence of the great demand for vessels for the ore trade, which was unusually active, and which absorbed the greater part of the lake tonnage. Under ordinary conditions the Canada Atlantic Railway could place grain from either Chicago or Duluth in Montreal for within four cents per bushel.

Mr. POWELL. Is that railway freight ?

Mr. CHARLTON. That is the freight by lake and by railway. The railway freight from Depot Harbour to Montreal would be a fraction below two cents per bushel.

There is a proposition at the present moment to enlarge the Erie Canal. The maximum amount of grain arriving in New York is 136,000,000 bushels in a year, and of that amount the Erie Canal carries about 4 per cent, the New York Central about 36 per cent, and the other railways the balance. There is a proposition to enlarge the Erie Canal at an expense of $60,000,000 to give a depth of from ten to twelve feet of water. That proposition involves the expenditure of $60,000,000, and calculating about $600,000 a year for the cost of canal management, it would result in an annual charge of $3,000,000 for the purpose of cheapening grain freight rates, and basing that upon the 136,000,000 bushels per annum which is the maximum that New York received from the west, then the interest upon this investment amounts to 2 3-10ths cents per bushel, or about enough to carry grain from Depot Harbour to Montreal or from Chicago or Duluth to Depot Harbour.

This illustrates the part that railways are playing in the modern transportation problem, and it illustrates in the case of the Erie Canal the uselessness of attempting to put that canal upon the basis of competing with the railway system, or of doing anything whatever, except, possibly, to regulate the freights by acting as a check on the increasing of those rates by railway corporations. We have invested large sums in our St. Lawrence Canal system, it is probably wise we did so—but, before taking up any other canal projects, it is time now, I imagine to allow the effect of these enlargements of the St. Lawrence canals to become clearly demonstrated, and to see what is to be the result in the very near future of the introduction of the 100-pound rail and the 50-ton car, and the other improvements in the transportation by rail, which are certain to reduce the cost to a very low figure. Take a train of forty cars, and on the Canada Atlantic Railway, which is now being equipped with 50-ton cars, from Depot Harbour to Madawaska, twenty-three cars to a train carrying 37,500 bushels, can be hauled by one locomotive, and from Madawaska to Montreal, forty cars carrying 68,700 bushels. From Ottawa to Montreal, a still heavier load could be carried. The Canada Atlantic road, with this equipment, carrying in one train as much grain as a vessel would carry on such a canal as the Ottawa Valley Canal, with fourteen feet of water—the Canada Atlantic road, with a train of that capacity, capable of carrying that grain from Depot Harbour to Montreal for 2 cents a bushel, and from Chicago or Duluth to Montreal for 3½ cents a bushel, leaves nothing to be desired, and leaves nothing that can be possibly attained in the shape of securing cheaper transportation. I desire to place before the House these views, which I have received from headquarters, the owner of the Canada Atlantic Railway, himself, as to the capacity of that road and as to the cost of transportation. He tells me that the capacity of that road, if it could get an outlet for its traffic, if there were tonnage to take its grain at Montreal, is 50,000,000 bushels a year, which is a larger quantity than Montreal receives. With these possibilities and capabilities of transportation, I hold that it is prudent and advisable for us now to stay our hands in the matter of investments in canals, and to be content for the present, with the system which we propose to inaugurate between Lake Erie and Montreal, and wait until we see definitely whether the public interest requires the investment of any more money in canals.

Mr. POWELL. Has the hon. gentleman the rates by rail from Buffalo to New York ?

Mr. CHARLTON. The rates from Buffalo to New York vary. They are sometimes as low as 2½ cents or 3 cents a bushel. In the winter they are higher.

Mr. McCLEARY. The rates have never been lower from Buffalo to New York than 3½ cents until this year, when it was proposed to make them 3 cents.

Mr. CHARLTON. The railway transportation problem in the United States will not be affected so much by the rates from Buffalo to New York, as from points in the west, where the grain is received by the railways to New York. The grain is received in the west by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway, the Chicago and North-western, or some other railway, and taken to Chicago; it is there placed in an elevator and sent by lake to Buffalo, where it is again placed in an elevator; and it is then transported by canal or railway to New York. Or it may be sent direct from Chicago to New York by rail. The methods of shipment have undergone a revolution in the last few years, and now cars of large capacity receive the grain direct from the farmers' hands in the west, and it is carried to New York by rail without breaking bulk, or with only one or two transshipments; and this is probably to be the method in the future by which the great bulk of the grain of the west will reach the seaboard. There are various seaports contending for this business—Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, but the chief points at the present time are Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York. In addition to these, probably a great business will be built up at Newport News, a magnificent port south of the Chesapeake Bay, on the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway. The business of investing great sums of money in canals for the shipping of the products of the west to the seaboard, has seen its day, and in my belief, it is unnecessary to invest any more money in this class of works for the settlement of the transportation problem. These are the points which I wished to place before the public in regard to this matter. We are, of course, deeply interested in the subject. Canada desires to secure as large a portion of this trade for her own seaports as possible, and the question with us is, what is the best method to be adopted for the purpose of securing this trade. I hold that we have in our own railway lines which reach the waters of the upper lakes and the north-west, all the facilities and means necessary for solving this problem, and securing the realization of our desires in this respect. Whether the building of the St. Lawrence canals was a mistake or not, and whether or not a heavy expenditure was necessary at Port Colborne, I think, we have gone as far in that direction as we are warranted or justified in doing, until we have more reliable data as to the effect of these improvements in railways and these reductions in the cost of transportation by the railways of Canada and the United States.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, when I moved the resolution standing in my name, I ventured to express the hope that a discussion might arise upon it, and, I think, the House can be congratulated that it has not been disappointed. Still, I think, the subject was of such importance as to well warrant the discussion that has taken place. I listened most carefully the other night to the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), and I am sure the country will breathe a great deal easier after that speech, because he laid it down once and for ever, that all the wildcat schemes that have been engrossing the attention of the public, particularly in the province of Ontario, are to be set aside, and not to be considered. During the last year, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), has from time to time, at different places, according to the tastes of the audiences he addressed, catered to what they might desire. At the town of Collingwood he announced that the policy of the government was to spend untold millions in constructing a line of railway from Toronto to a point on the Georgian Bay, which he insinuated would be at the town of Collingwood. He gladdened the hearts of the people of North Bay, by saying that this government proposed to spend millions in opening a line of navigation from Lake Nipissing by the French River to the Georgian Bay, by which the golden grain of the west would be carried. Not to be outdone by the Minister of Public Works, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), on a recent occasion led the people of Collingwood to believe that this railway between Collingwood and Toronto, might possibly be undertaken at a very early day. But, if there was at any time any idea in the mind of the Minister of Public Works, that either of these projects was to be undertaken, had he been here the other night, his hopes would have been shattered, when he heard the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that these schemes had nothing to commend them, and were not to be viewed by this government with any favour. Speaking on this question, the Minister of Railways and Canals said:

Possibly those gentlemen who hold this view may be right, but I do not think they are, and I do not think a case can be made out.

The reference was to the making use of a mixed line of railway and water communication. Later on the minister went out of his way, I thought, to give the Booth system a black eye, by insinuating that that railway had been struggling to carry grain from a point on the Georgian Bay, at Parry Sound to Montreal, but that it had been rather a failure than a success; and he pinned his faith to the view that there was only one system to be taken up for many years to come, that was the St. Lawrence Canal system. If that is to be the policy of the government, I am sure it will be hailed by the whole Dominion with a great deal of pleasure. But, the trouble is that the government do not know their own minds on this question. The Minister of Public Works asserts that the proper system for the carrying of grain from the west is by the construction of a line of railway from Collingwood to Toronto. Then, a few weeks later, he announced that the former line of policy had been abandoned, and that grain is to be transported by the French River, and then down by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the port of Montreal.

But there is another gentleman, powerful in the cabinet, who had a strong view a year ago on this question. On a notable occasion he announced that the policy of the government was fixed and determined, and from the position he occupied, his statement excited a good deal of attention and comment. That statement was one made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals himself. He announced in Halifax that the policy of the government must and should be, not to rely on the St. Lawrence Canal system at all, but to purchase the Booth line of railway and carry by rail grain from the Georgian Bay right through to Montreal. He pointed out most emphatically that the purchase of this line would give an uninterrupted rail carriage from Georgian Bay right through to Montreal, and that in the winter season the grain could be shipped from Halifax and St. John. But, the other night, the hon. minister abandoned that position, and the country will breathe easier on knowing that he has done so, though it will still have to wrestle with the Minister of Public Works on these two propositions. Whether the fact that the Minister of Public Works was not in his place emboldened the Minister of Railways and Canals to take a fling at the proposition laid down by the Minister of Public Works, I know not, but it is to be hoped that the government are going to stand by the proposition stated by the Minister of Railways and Canals the other night, and that there will be no further question as to the policy of the government being in favour of the carriage of grain by way of the St. Lawrence Canal system.

It will be a revelation to the people of the city of Toronto and the town of Collingwood to learn that the Minister of Public Works was merely romancing, and the government has not the faintest idea of constructing or assisting that line of railway.

Then for the people of North Bay and that portion of country, who have been led by the Minister of Public Works to believe that that system is to be adopted, they too will have to view that minister simply as a boaster or romancer and to conclude, in the face of the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals made here the other night, that both of those propositions are to be laid aside.

This motion has excited a great deal of discussion, chiefly as to the question of how the St. Lawrence Canal system is to be utilized from this time forward, and in that connection a great deal of time was taken by the Minister of Railways and Canals with regard to the large expenditure to be made at Port Colborne. He differs with the statement made by the Minister of Public Works, and we will see whether or not that large sum of $5,000,000 was to be expended on that port. Later on, when the estimates are down, we will see whether or not the large sum is to be expended, but in the meantime I would suggest that the various ministers should endeavour, when within the council walls, to reconcile their conflicting opinions and present a united front when they appear before the House. We had the Minister of Railways and Canals stating that there must be a very large expenditure of money at Port Colborne, and in the early part of the debate the Minister of Public Works stated that there could be no good work at all accomplished at Port Colborne until a depth of 22 feet of water was found there to accommodate the largest class of vessels, and then we had the hon. member for West Quebec (Mr. Dobell), who is also a member of the cabinet, brushing aside entirely the opinion of his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, and telling the House that the day of 22-foot vessels had gone by, and that smaller vessels would be the rule. Be that as it may, it is to be hoped that the different members of the cabinet, may be able to adjust their differences in the future before coming to the House.

With the consolation that there has been a very lengthened discussion on this question, one that will be fraught with considerable good, and furthermore having had a declaration from the Minister of Railways and Canals, speaking for the government, that there was to be no expenditure made in connection with a line of railway between Toronto and Collingwood, and having had the statement of the Minister of Public Works as to the improvement of French River and the carriage of grain from French River down to Montreal, the country will breathe easier, and after the discussion that has taken place, I would, with the consent of the House, ask to withdraw the motion.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before this motion is withdrawn, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word or two. The late government, at very great expense to the country, practically completed, before leaving office, the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. In connection with that canal they purchased on the Canadian side a property for a wharf, at which all vessels could stop. This year I had occasion to visit that part of the country, and when at Owen Sound I asked for a ticket for the Soo. They asked me for which side, the American or Canadian, and I said the Canadian. To my surprise, when we arrived at the Soo, the Canadian Pacific Railway steamer called at the American side, and the Canadian passengers were transferred to a small ferry boat and run over to the Canadian side, and I found on inquiry that no steamer of any draft of water passing through the Welland Canal loaded, could call at the Canadian side. Such steamers had to moor at the American side, and at the time I mention, owing to a sunken vessel having blocked the channel, there were about 200 boats tied up at the American side. All these boats had to tie up on that side and purchase their supplies there, so that not a dollar was spent by them on the Canadian side, and this was due to the fact that the present government have not built the wharf, which it was the policy of the late government to construct. If we had taken that $750,000, which was voted to build a wharf in the province of Quebec, where there is no water, and used it to build a wharf on the Canadian side of the Sault Ste. Marie, at which the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers and other boats, whether loaded or light, could call, our country would get the benefit of all the expenditure which is now distributed among American traders. Owing to the failure of this government, which pretends to have made all our canals, and to be giving every facility for transportation of grain, to spend a dollar towards bringing trade to the growing town of Sault Ste. Marie, our American neighbours are getting all the profit, and every man in that town feels that it has been neglected. The late government had made provision for extending the wharf and deepening the harbour so that these boats might have a port of call on the Canadian side, and it is a shame and a disgrace that our Canadian boats, coming from Collingwood or Owen Sound to Fort William, should have to stop at the American side instead of at a Canadian port and there land freight and passengers. Freight has now to be landed on the American side and brought over to the Canadian side in small steamers. I hope that the government will take hold of this matter and see that our trade is given the facilities it should enjoy.

Mr. W. GIBSON (Lincoln and Niagara). If the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Taylor), had placed the matter fairly and squarely before the House, he would have admitted that the reason why steamers call at the American instead of at the Canadian side, is because the late government imposed a duty of 60 cents a ton on coal under its national policy. For that reason, the Canadian Pacific Railway boats have, ever since they began running on the upper lakes done all their business on the American shore, simply to evade the Canadian customs duty on coal.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can they come in on the Canadian side laden?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, they can land at the Canadian side.

Mr. TAYLOR. Laden, and drawing fourteen feet of water?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes. They can land and go through the Canadian Sault, which has also nineteen feet on the mitre sills, the same as the American locks. And I would say for the credit of those who had charge of the Canadian lock, that the work done by the late government there will compare favourably with that done upon the American lock. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) knows, perhaps, more about the reason of the Canadian Pacific Railway boats running upon the American side than I do, knows that it has always been the case that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company takes advantage, and very properly, of the opportunity of sending their boats on the American side of the river for the very purpose of evading the Canadian customs duty on the large amount of coal which the steamers require between Owen Sound and Lake Superior ports. It is not any act of this government, but the act of the late government, of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) was an ardent supporter, that drove the traffic of the Canadian Pacific boats from the Canadian to the American shore.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John City). Before the question is put, I would like to make one observation. I have listened with great attention to this debate and have followed every speaker. Yet, I cannot say that I have any better information or any fuller knowledge of the question than when the debate began. The proposition submitted by the hon. mover (Mr. Bennett) himself seemed to be a very fair proposition; but, in presenting it to the House, and since, he has mixed it up with political questions, with matters affecting the government and party, so that one is left in doubt as to what the object of the resolution really was. If the hon. gentleman's object was to get a statement of opinion of what was best to be done with regard to a matter of this kind, how the policy of the country should be shaped, I think he has failed in that. Most of the gentlemen who have spoken on the question seem to have considered the matter from the point of view of their own locality. Some advocated a particular harbour, others a particular canal. I think the impression left on my mind is rather a pessimistic one with regard to canals. And I am astounded when I think of the dangers that beset the country, for instance, with reference to the diminution of water in the lakes. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) quite scared me by his statement of what would happen by reason of the Chicago canal. Another gentleman, I think a gentleman from Prince Edward Island, thought that the waters in the St. Lawrence were lowering, and another gentleman thought the port of Montreal must come to an end and business be done from Quebec. So, if you follow the whole matter through, you will find such variety of opinion, such lack of definiteness of opinion, upon the question by hon. gentlemen who have spoken, that, I think, the government cannot gain from the discussion any idea of doing better than what has been already proposed thus far. I was particularly struck, however, with what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), said with respect to the effect of railways upon the transportation question. There is no doubt whatever the railroads are taking very largely the place of waterways; but there are not sufficient facts to justify the government in staying its hand with regard to the great waterways of the country, so far as the works now in hand are concerned; but there are facts, I think, to justify the government in not going on with other great canal works which are projected and which are constantly put before us in a variety of ways here. The fact that the Erie Canal has ceased to be a carrier of wheat, for lately there has been no wheat carried by the Erie Canal to New York, is a matter which should arrest our attention. The fact that wheat is finding, through the railways, so many ports of departure from the United States, is another matter that should affect our consideration of the question. If I were disposed to follow the course which so many hon. gentlemen have followed in discussing the export of grain from the country, I would say that it was beyond doubt that the grain-shipping port of Canada would be the port of St. John. I am very modest over questions of that kind, but the fact that a little while ago there was no grain shipped from St. John, while two years ago two million bushels were exported, last year three million bushels, and this year there will be over four million bushels, seems to prove that hon. gentlemen in discussing this question have entirely overlooked the real Canadian route for grain from the west.

However, I only rose to say that my mind was left in a mystified condition with regard to the subject. I think, however, that the government has received no information from this discussion to justify it in changing its course or in doing anything different from what it has proposed to the House.

Mr. HENRY A. POWELL (Westmoreland). I just have a word or two to say, mainly in support of the views expressed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The question of railway transportation is one to which I have given some attention for a few years. So far as the best information I can gather goes, the idea that canal transportation is cheaper than rail transportation must be regarded as a matter of tradition.

Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. McCLEARY. Oh, oh.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, I say it must be regarded as a matter of tradition. We have actually reached this stage with reference to transportation—that, at least in the great majority of cases, where the railway grades are at all favourable and the curvatures are slight, the railway is the more economical method of transportation. Now, just in the line of the remark of the hon. member for North Norfolk, I may say that last summer, or the summer before, when the question of large cars was considered by the railway management of the New York Central and other lines, this conclusion was reached by experts—that in 50 cents a ton on wheat and other cheap freights from the city of Buffalo to the city of New York, there was a living profit. That is considerably less than the rate mentioned by the hon. member for North Norfolk. He said two or three cents a bushel, but that would be $1\frac{3}{4}$ cents a bushel. So far as the Erie Canal is concerned, and the deepening of that canal, let us remember that the Erie Canal is a state work, that the competition of the Erie Canal is asked to counteract combinations between the New York Central, the Erie, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Pennsylvania and other great roads carrying the grain from the west to the seaboard.

Mr. McCLEARY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) allow me to ask him his authority for saying that grain can be carried from Buffalo to New York for $1\frac{3}{4}$ cents a bushel?

Mr. POWELL. I state this, that the year before last grain was actually carried from Buffalo to New York for 80 cents a ton, and experts on the leading lines controlling the western traffic from the great wheat fields of the west to the entrepôts on the Atlantic coast, gave their opinion that with cars of 40 or 50 tons there was living profit at 60 cents per ton.

Mr. McCLEARY. Are you giving that as your own opinion?

Mr. POWELL. No, I am giving the opinion of experts, gentlemen who are familiar with the freight traffic on these lines, themselves superintendents or managers of freight traffic.

Mr. McCLEARY. They differ entirely from those who entered into arrangements for this coming year, and who fixed the rate at 3 cents.

Mr. POWELL. They may fix the rate at 3 cents, but if they were able they would fix it at 5 cents. Now, the great object of widening and deepening the Erie Canal is to afford competition. If the hon. gentleman from Welland (Mr. McCleary) will consult the transportation statistics of the world, he will find that the only real competition that exists is between water and railroads. If he will look at the cost of transportation from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific coast he will find that the chief element in the cost of transportation exists where there is no water transportation at all. It seems as if the ultimate standard is water communication; where you have water communication you have competition. Now, the broadening and deepening of the Erie Canal as a state work is not undertaken for the sole purpose of carrying grain cheaper than a railway can carry grain. These statesmen of New York who are advocating this move do it with this view, that railways generally form a combination to keep up the prices of transportation, and these gentlemen desire that there should be open to the public those water means of transportation which are the only real competitor a railway has.

While I am on this subject, I may say that in my judgment the time will come very shortly when not only will the opening up, the deepening and widening of old canals and new canals be entirely abandoned, but the time will come within a few years when we will see a lot of these great public works undertaken by the Dominion of Canada, and which we feel so proud of to-day, will be actually abandoned and will fall into disuse. The question before the House in transportation matters lies rather in the direction of devising some wholesome check over the construction and operation of railways, if the ingenuity of the government or of individual members of the House is equal to the task of formulating some such rule or principle. The object is to exercise over railroads such a strict oversight that justice will be done to the people for whom these railway corporations are really trustees. The difficulty has been, and is, to maintain that control. Schemes to exercise this control have been thought out by men across the water, have been thought out in England, have been thought out in France, in Italy, in Germany. But no scheme has yet succeeded in producing the results that were desired. In England, for instance, there is no question that to-day one of the great difficulties England has to meet in competition arises from the enormous freight rates, not passenger rates, on railways that the producers of England have to pay. A very large and respectable minority in two or three commissions that were issued in England to inquire into this question, placed that circumstance as one of the leading factors in the relative decline of British commerce with foreign countries. Germany saw this, and as part of her great national policy Bismarck devised a scheme of taking over all railroads of private companies and making them state lines. The result there has been satisfactory. Of course, the answer will be made that Germany is simply a bureaucracy, and schemes could be adopted there which could not be put into operation in a country like ours.

Again, I would say that this railway problem is one that sooner or later will become very pressing in the economic life of this country. It may not be known to hon. gentlemen in the House generally, that at the time Mr. Gladstone was one of the under secretaries for the colonies he introduced into the British parliament a railway Bill which looked to the expropriation of all railroads by the government when certain conditions had been fulfilled. So imbued with the importance of this idea was Mr. Gladstone that he placed himself in communication with a number of colonial governments, with the old government of Canada, with the government of Prince Edward Island, with the government of Nova Scotia, with the government of New Brunswick and with the government of Australia, to all of whom he sent a communication suggesting that in incorporating railway companies they should introduce in each charter some statutory provision that the government could take over the liens under certain circumstances and on certain conditions. This was in accordance with the principle always acted upon in England that the railway company was simply a trustee for the people.

Now, I think the time has come in Canada when we should begin to consider this question. Our railway system has become a vast one. I may say that our railway system ranks ninth among the railway systems of the world, which is a very respectable rank. The United States stands first, and in the long list Canada comes ninth. This being the case, and the question of transportation facilities having become so important, the time has come when any government which controls this parliament should give the matter its very serious consideration. Any one who passes, for instance, from here to Montreal will be impressed with the absurdity, on the part, not of the present government, but of former governments, in their railway legislation. From St. Anne on to the city of Montreal you find two railroads running side by side, both constructed at an enormous cost, owing to the fact that the fundamental principle, which is the only true principle, was ignored in previous railway legislation. These two roads are allowed to run side by side, and the cost of management of these two railways, the proportionate cost of the interest on the construction of these two railways, and all incidental expenses, have to be paid by the freight traffic and by the passenger traffic of this country. The same thing is seen in the province of Ontario, notably between the city of London and the town of Windsor. The same thing is observed all over the country. What we want is some vigorous policy on the part of the government to control the construction of railways. I am not blaming this government, because they are simply following in the steps of their predecessors; but what we need is some well defined principle underlying our railway legislation so that hereafter the traffic of the country shall not be compelled to pay for the support of what are really unnecessary lines.

Let me now pass on to another idea. A great deal of opposition is offered in the Railway Committee and on the floor of this House to the acquisition by the large companies, like the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, of smaller lines. Particularly does this opposition come from hon. gentlemen who represent constituencies in Manitoba and the west generally. Now, there are disagreeable features connected with the consolidation of railway companies. In some cases there are resultant evils that I do not question, but this I do say, that the progress of railway transportation on this continent, and on every other continent, has been measured by the amount of consolidation of railway systems that has taken place. Take France, for instance; to so great an extent has the process of consolidation gone on, that, to-day, all the railways of France are practically in the hands of six large companies, and six alone. I could name the companies of England, the Great Northern, the North-western, the Great Western, the South-eastern, and other lines, that, to-day, are consolidations of what were once, in some cases, one hundred, or two hundred companies. Our own Canadian Pacific Railway is a consolidation of what were originally about twenty-five original lines, and the Grand Trunk Railway is about the same. The New York Central, is a consolidation of an immense number of lines, and the same is true of the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, and other great railway systems in the United States. The point I am making is that every consolidation has been, not so much with the object of grasping and exercising monopolistic powers, but the object to serve the interests of both the railway and its consolidation has been to better the customers of the railways and every consolidation has resulted directly in this, that it has decreased the cost of transportation. To-day, the fact that the wheat-fields of the west have been brought into competition with the wheat-fields of Europe, and the wheat-fields of England, is due entirely to the circumstance that a large number of small companies have been wiped out of existence by the process of consolidation, and our friends in the west who are looking to the transportation of grain must see that every small independent railway line, which has its independent board of directors, and all the expense incidental to a separate corporate existence, is an incubus on the country and a detriment, so far as economic progress is concerned, and that sooner or later, these little individual companies must be wiped out or eaten up by the larger companies. To have our railway system from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the north to the south, in such a position that there will be no duplication of rates, but one single rate over the whole system, should be the great object of our legislation. In working out that object, it is necessary for us to guard the interests of the people who furnish the freight for the railways, or to guard the interests of the country, and that can only be done by constituting, in some way, a body of gentlemen, who shall control transportation, whose jurisdiction shall be exercised, and who shall deal with any complaints of railway companies exercising monopolistic powers and playing the part of the tyrants of trade in this country. I believe that we shall still have a consolidation of the whole railway system of this country, either in the hands of one or two large companies, or of the government of the people, and that as a concomitant of that consolidation, there shall be perfect immunity from any tyrannical power on the part of railway directors or companies.

To return to the matter of the canal system, which has been chiefly considered in the discussion, my individual opinion, which is not worth much, so far as my own experience is concerned, but which is the result of considerable digging and delving into this matter, is that so far as the present prospect is concerned, the days of canal systems in this country and in every other country, save under exceptional circumstances, are numbered. If any hon. gentleman has any question about that, I would direct his attention to the greatest of the ship canals that has been constructed of late, the Manchester Ship Canal, and I would point out to him, that, notwithstanding the great hopes that the people of the country were led to form of it, and the effect of it upon the economic system of the country, that canal is not worth consideration as an economic factor in the industrial system of Great Britain. It has failed, entirely, to accomplish the object designed for it. It is there; let us hope that it will not be quite so bad in the future, that it will be remembered only as a monument of refined stupidity. I think that we should turn our attention more and more to the construction of railways, and less and less to the construction of canals. So far as this particular harbour is concerned, there can be no great object in deepening it to 20 feet, when our canal system is only a 14-foot system. It would be a great thing, of course, if our ocean liners could come inland, go into the heart of the country, discharge their cargoes, and, having discharged, could take their return freights, without any transshipment at Montreal, and proceed immediately to the marts of the world. But this would involve this country in such an enormous debt that our children and our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren would never see the liquidation of it, and it would, of itself be such a charge on the revenues of the country, for all time to come, that it would be nothing less than folly for us to attempt.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I think, that, possibly, the representatives of the lower provinces in this House have acted wisely in not taking part in this debate, at an earlier stage. To my mind, it seems not to be well, that a matter of such great importance should be allowed to pass without some expression of opinion from those who live in the lower provinces, although they have not such a direct interest in the question as some other hon. gentlemen who have taken part in the discussion. I have tried to follow this discussion as closely as possible, and I have derived some advantage from it. It is noticeable that a great deal of attention has been given to the government, and that a great many of the speakers have talked to the government or at the government, in connection with this canal system. I do not know that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), is a competent authority to decide the fate of the canals. He has come to a conclusion, and decided this question in his own mind, but, I have arrived at an entirely different opinion, and I am quite convinced that railway carriage will never be able to compete with a thoroughly organized system of water carriage. It has never done so in the past, it is not doing so to-day, and I do not think that any evidence has been furnished in the course of this debate to indicate that it will do so in the future. At the same time there is the fact, that, of late years, a great gain in transportation facilities has been made by the railways, and not by the canals. The enormous capital invested in the railways, the ability of their management, the consolidation of roads, and the adaptation of modern systems of carrying grain, have brought railway transportation to a point which, twenty years ago, would have been looked upon as entirely hopeless. I recollect discussing this matter with a prominent railway promoter about twenty years ago, he then intimated that a great revolution would be accomplished in railway transportation through exactly the system that has been adopted, through better grading, heavier rails, larger cars, and more powerful locomotives. We have seen an enormous gain made by the railways in this direction. But, the question is: Have the railways a prospect of continuing to make this gain in future or will they attain to a higher perfection? Some people think not, and others tell me that they have such a prospect before them. It is claimed that they have come to the point at which it would be exceedingly difficult to cut down the cost of moving freight. There is no feature of railway construction in which there has been more improvement made than in the adoption of the heavy rail. I am told by competent railway authorities, that in the opinion of some good judges, the rail has now become to such a weight that it is almost too heavy, and that there is a question in the mind of railway engineers as to whether or not the extreme weight of the rail is an improvement, or whether the weight has not been excessive. Improvement may be possible in another direction in future, and we may see larger railway cars and more powerful locomotives adopted. The freight rates may be reduced on railways, but does it not seem clear that with the same amount of energy and ability, to secure the trade for the canal, that of necessity the waterway freight must surpass anything that can be carried over a railway? The enormous bulk that can be moved by water, the ease with which a canal can be maintained, the comparatively small expense of operating it as compared with a railway; all these things are entirely in favour of the canal. Competent witnesses who have appeared before the Deep Waterway Commission and the Senate Committee gave it as their opinion that there was actually no rivalry between the canal and the railway, but that on the contrary the fact that a canal ran parallel to a railway rather benefited the railway, because it brought a low class of freight which could not be moved by the railway, and the transportation of this freight necessarily increased population and developed business. It was the opinion of these gentlemen that the canal was the best friend of the railways. If that be the case, and it is probable that it is, I do not think it is wise to anticipate that the day may come when our canals shall fall into desuetude, and that the expenditure we have made in the past will be looked upon by generations to come as an unwise expenditure on our part. I believe that the Canadian canal system, deepened to fourteen feet, is the greatest line of conveyance for freight we have on the continent of America, or are likely to have for years to come. Although in the United States they are talking about deepening their canals, and although some even advocate a 20-foot channel to connect the Atlantic with the great lakes, the general opinion is that such a scheme is too great for even the United States, and that even though it were accomplished it is very questionable if it would result in any advantage whatever. I believe that with the Canadian 14-foot canal system we have a means of conveyance of heavy freight from the lakes to the seaboard which is unrivalled to-day, and will not be rivalled for years to come. Those in favour of the 20-foot channel in the United States argue that the great ocean steamers would use such a channel, if it were in existence. On the other hand it is contended that the limit has been reached in the size of vessels that can properly navigate through an artificial channel. The delay, and the stoppage of the traffic, and the other inconveniences that would result from such a large boat passing through a canal, is pointed to, and it is contended that vessels of moderate size can best be engaged in this inland navigation. Probably our 14-foot canal system is the very best we can have. I do not think it would be easy to convince me that it would be wise to deepen the canals more than 14 feet, for I think that is the most we can hope for in Canada.

The feature that strikes me as a representative of that part of Canada that has contributed and is contributing to the enormous cost of this waterway, is the fact that through some fault, either in the government or the business men of the upper provinces, for whose convenience our canal system was made—they have not, and are not using that water route so that the enormous investment Canada has made is practically wasted. It is asserted by some people that our Canadian canal system has cost the people of Canada $70,000,000. Now, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has told us that our rate of interest charges is 3·14 per cent, and therefore—apart from the cost of maintenance and operation—the interest charge which has to be borne by the people of this country on that enormous canal outlay is $2,198,000 a year. Do we find that this canal system, perfected at such an enormous cost, is making Montreal the great shipping port of the American continent—as it is of course the great shipping port of Canada. Is it diverting to Montreal that enormous trade from the west, which should go through the best natural channel. I am sorry to say that I believe it is not. We find from the last year returns of the Montreal Board of Trade, that the export of grain from the port of Montreal actually decreased last season by 8,521,121 bushels. Not only is this canal system not serving its purpose in making Montreal the great port of the continent, but it is an actual fact as will be seen from those figures that other lines of transportation—which are not so interesting to us because they have not cost us any money—are diverting the trade from Montreal. We find here that Montreal has lost in one year more than one-fifth of its export of grain.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman should take into account the fact that the whole quantity of grain shipped from all American ports was fifty millions bushels less last year than the year before. There was in fact not so much grain to go forward.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). There is certainly something in that argument. The port of New York has also lost in its transportation of grain last year, but other ports have held their own.

Mr. ELLIS. No.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Or not lost nearly so much. The city of Montreal last year lost 20 per cent of its export grain trade. Now, let us take this enormous expenditure on our canal system which was made practically for the benefit of the city of Montreal, and taking the grain exported from Montreal last year we find that the interest alone on that expenditure would amount to 7 cents a bushel; on grain that was carried there from the west for 3½ cents a bushel. In view of these facts, is it not evident that our vast expenditure on the canals is exceedingly unprofitable under present circumstances. Is it not evident that it has been a most unfortunate transaction for Canada to have spent so much money in that direction? My hon. friend from Toronto told us the other night that when the people of New York talked about deepening their canals, the railways were carrying wheat from Buffalo to New York for 2½ cents a bushel, and that the interest on the cost of deepening the Erie Canal, would also represent a charge of 2½ cents a bushel. Actually the railways were carrying wheat from Buffalo to New York at a cost which would represent per bushel the interest on the outlay necessary to deepen the canals. He made a strong argument in favour of neglecting our canal system, and in favour of the railways doing all this transport in the future. I do not believe, however, that it is a conclusive argument. I believe that we can carry wheat over this canal system at such a rate as will make 2½ cents a bushel seem large. How is that to be done? If one thing has been made clear by this discussion it is that the reason which makes our canal system ineffective and inoperative is that at the port of Montreal and on the St. Lawrence River below Montreal there are no facilities for doing the business. It is useless to go on spending any more money while the defect is at Montreal. You can take nothing out of a bottle that is corked, and practically the whole St. Lawrence system is bottled up at Montreal. If you deepened all the canals so that they would admit the largest vessels on the lakes, you would not be benefited a particle, because no matter how much grain is carried on the lakes, it cannot get an exit at Montreal. The whole difficulty is there, and this fact will come out clearly to any person who reads the debate that has taken place in this House. That debate has been ably and forcibly conducted; but the very thing pointed out by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) has been evident, that most of the speeches have been made by persons who had certain projects to advance and local interests to serve—routes by Midland, by Parry Sound, by North Bay, by Collingwood, by Toronto. Every one of these different schemes has been brought before the House forcibly and effectively, and the net result of the whole discussion has been to show that between them there is no extraordinary difference in point of distance—such a difference as is continually overlooked by railways in making their rates. A railway thinks nothing of a haul of 200 miles more by one route than by another. All these schemes are good, but they are all rendered abortive by the want of facilities at Montreal. The terminal advantages there are insufficient, the St. Lawrence navigation below Montreal is defective and dangerous, and a high rate of insurance is charged on vessels going to the sea, particularly in the fall. The hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) gave us particulars, evidently accumulated with great care and diligence, showing the number of cars lying unloaded and cumbering the tracks, of no service either to the railways or the public, for the want of shipping facilities at the port of Montreal. I believe it will be impossible to make Montreal a port capable of accommodating the greatest ocean carriers. Vessels of 18,000 or 20,000 tons I do not think will ever come to Montreal. That class of vessels must be catered to at Quebec, where a vigorous and healthy public sentiment and a strong effort on the part of the people themselves, will secure to that port the advantages which the length of its open season and its deep navigation naturally give it, and which can never be taken from it. But, apart from that, it seems to me perfectly clear that if Canada is to derive the advantage which it should derive from the enormous expenditure which we have made on our canals, we must not leave the system where it is, but go on and complete it. In my opinion money should be spent, but it should not be spent at Port Colborne. The first expenditure should be made at Montreal. That port should be made so secure and so good that steamers would come there looking for freights, and would be earnestly calling for more grain. At the present time it is not so. The point of congestion is at Montreal. The canals and railways can pour into Montreal more grain than it can take, and it seems to me perfectly clear that an expenditure should be made there by the city, the province, or the government, or perhaps by the three conjointly, which would make Montreal a great shipping port, one that would rival the greatest ports on this side of the Atlantic. In order to do that, great docks should be constructed, not in the city or on the wharfs in front of the city, but at some point outside where land is cheap and where ample room could be obtained, and where elevators could be located without interfering with the development of the city. That city requires for its comparatively small local river trade and the convenience of its merchants, all the space it has now; and I believe that Canada will not achieve that success as a great grain exporting country which it has the right to look for until we see Montreal supplied with a great system of docks rivalling those of Liverpool, London, or Glasgow, at some point to the east of the city. I am perfectly clear in my mind that every energy of Canada should be devoted to the developing and perfecting of the port of Montreal. Without that we are paralyzing to a great extent the enormous export trade not only of our own country, but of a large part of the United States as well, which should be carried on at that port. I believe that good business requires that we should not stop with the expenditures which we have made on our canals, but that we should add to them, and that in the meantime that addition should be concentrated upon the port of Montreal.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). At this late hour, I will not take up the time of the House by going as fully into this question as I had intended to do, but will take another opportunity to speak upon the question, as it affects the North-west. But as I sat and listened to the lucid, clear, logical speech of my hon. and learned friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) I could not but be impressed with the proposition he laid down, that water is the great means of reducing freight rates on railways, and his other proposition, that transportation by water would soon be obsolete. It is difficult to refute a proposition put in such a way, but coming from the west, I could not help wondering where we were to get the competing influence that the canals give the farmer from Buffalo to New York, or from the more eastern ports of Canada to Montreal. If waterways are things of the past, as my hon. friend contends, and if the inevitable tendency is to railway consolidation, and if, in which I agree with him, the waste that comes of duplicating lines is a thing to be avoided, we are led irrefragably to this conclusion that the government must assume charge of the railways. If railways are destined to fall into one or two hands, the colossal power which they will then possess will be so appalling that the only refuge of liberty will be in the government taking charge of them. The bugbear always presented, when it is proposed that the government should own the railways, is that the government could not manage them profitably, and that they would be a source of corruption. I do not think that conclusion is at all inevitable, because we find that in Australia the government management of railways is not a failure. Nor is it in Hungary, and there is an easy means of getting rid of the bugbear so much dreaded. It is feared that under government management, members of parliament and other influential persons would insist on the minister employing men who are either unfit or unnecessary, and, consequently, the management could not fail to be extravagant. But, that danger could be very easily got rid of by placing the management of the government railways in the hands of a commission independent of the administration, and responsible only to parliament. By thus making it independent of political parties, you would get rid of the danger of waste and extravagance and corruption which frightens those who otherwise would welcome the idea of government ownership.

My hon. friend told us that wheat has been carried for 80 cents per ton from Buffalo to New York, and the hon. member for Toronto, at an earlier period in the discussion, gave, I think, lower figures, but, 4 cents per 100 pounds is low enough. Now, 4 cents a hundred makes the teeth of the North-west farmer water. How are we to get rates so reduced in the North-west Territories as will enable us to feel that we have obtained a rate that suits the demands of justice and is consonant with our rights as citizens? If freight can be carried for 80 cents a ton from Buffalo to New York, then the freight rates now charged in the North-west Territories are altogether too high. I admit that the population of the North-west is not at present large enough, and that the traffic is probably not large enough to warrant us in expecting that a railway could carry grain profitably at 80 cents per ton the distance from Buffalo to New York, but it is perfectly clear that if 80 cents per ton from Buffalo to New York pays with the traffic there, we in the North-west have not by any means reached the reduction which justice demands.

The hon. Minister of Railways says he is always ready to restrain corporations and come to the help of the people, but, as the Farmers' Sun says, we do not find him doing it. The Farmers' Sun of April 4 contains an article entitled 'Mr. Blair's Willingness,' which refers to the debate that took place on the motion of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), and gives an instance where, in its opinion, the Minister of Railways should have stepped in to help the exporter but failed to do so. On a previous occasion, that same paper had another article headed 'Mr. Blair's Willingness,' and again pointed out where Mr. Blair failed. Again, the same paper, devoted to the interests of the farmers of Canada, commented in the strongest manner on the utter helplessness of the government in the matter of regulating freight rates—a helplessness arising not from want of power, but from want of will: The hon. member quoted from that paper:

'What does it avail,' said Mr. A. F. McLaren, M.P., at the recent meeting of the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association, 'for the government to assist the farmers by means of institutes and educational exhibitions in the matters of production when the railways are allowed to take all the profit from them in the form of extortionate freight rates?' In an interview published in our last issue, Mr. Boulter, of Picton, pointed out the market that the North-west offered for our apples if reasonable freight rates could be secured. Mr. Jas. Pringle, of Stratford, in a recent letter to the press, states that while the rate on grain from Chicago to New York was 8 cents per hundred pounds, the rate from Stratford to Montreal, one-half the distance, was 12½ cents, and from Stratford to Portland 15½ cents. Yet while the Ontario farmer pays these high rates to the seaboard, the Canada Atlantic road carries American grain from Parry Sound to Montreal, a distance of 585 miles, through an almost barren country, at 5 cents per cwt. This road, though built largely with our money, carries American grain to Montreal at less than half the price the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific railways charge for carrying the grain of the western Ontario farmers to the same place!

We have a transportation question. Our public men claim that its settlement depends on the construction of new lines and the donating of more money to railway promoters. But what is really required is not the building of new lines, but the regulation of the lines that we now have.

Sir, a year or so ago, I pointed out, when dealing with this question, that competition of railways must necessarily be elusive and delusive. There are not the conditions in regard to railways that are implied by the very word 'competition.' I have here the rates that are charged by the railways in Manitoba, as well as the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Some of these railways were brought in, as professed by Mr. Greenway, to give railway competition. And what do I find? I find they charge more than the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have here a comparison of the rates on wheat, car-loads, via the Canadian Pacific Railway to Fort William, via the Northern Pacific Railway to Duluth and via the Great Northern Railway to Duluth. These rates are quite suggestive:

So that the very railways that were introduced for the purpose of competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway are charging higher than the Canadian Pacific Railway are charging in Manitoba to-day. And the government is doing nothing whatever. The government claims that it did something by the Crow's Nest Pass Railway arrangement, and boasts with the effrontery with which they assert that the high protection tariff is a revenue tariff as if they done something new; but the history of the reductions that were made by the Canadian Pacific Railway prior to the Crow's Nest, all show that during the existence of the Conservative government, the Conservative members, bringing pressure upon Sir William Van Horne and his colleagues in the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway, effected regularly, at recurrent periods of about three years, greater reductions than were obtained by giving millions of dollars, as was done in the Crow's Nest Pass deal. Now, I have here what was done. I referred to it a few evenings ago, but it will bear to be referred to again, because it shows how completely delusive—I will not use a stronger word, but if those who boast of what was done in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass deal really know the facts, a very strong word would be justified in speaking of the view of what they have done for the people that is pressed upon the public—are the claims of reduction of rate by reason of that deal. In 1886, we exported from Manitoba and the North-west Territories only about 4,000,000 bushels of wheat, for which the Canadian Pacific Railway charged an average of 30 cents per hundred to haul it out. I take Brandon rate as the average rate. It must be remembered that the Canadian Pacific Railway had to have the same road-bed, stations and offices then as now. Now they require more rolling stock and a few more servants. Yet, though at that time, the freight and traffic was small compared with subsequent years, we felt that 30 cents per hundred pounds was altogether too high, and we came down here and communicated with Sir John Macdonald and represented to him that the government should point out to the Canadian Pacific Railway that the western farmer could not stand such a rate, and we went before the Governor in Council. And I myself laid down the obvious principle that as population increased and the railway got more freight to haul, rates must be lowered. The North-west got representation in 1887. I called my colleagues in the representation of the great country west of Lake Superior, and we asked the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, then Mr., now Sir William, Van Horne, to meet us, and we discussed the freight rates. Senator Perley was at that time a member of this House, and as a farmer and also a representative he took an interest in this question. The members from British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories met, and I was made secretary, and, as secretary and as member for West Assiniboia, I devoted myself to this question, studying freight tables, comparing rates and distances, about the dryest job in some respects that a man ever tackled. And the result was that at the very first go-off, we got rates lowered from 30 cents to 24 cents per hundred. In 1887, the Canadian Pacific Railway hauled out of the west 10,500,000 bushels, receiving for doing so $1,512,000, instead of $1,890,000, which they would have received on the rates of the previous year, or $378,000 in the pockets of the farmers. And we paid nothing for it. I laid down at that time these two principles—that a railway in that new country was bound to reduce its rates in the ratio of increase of freight and population, and that there should be a triennial revision until the rates represented the cost of hauling and a reasonable profit added thereto, under conditions of full employment for plant and men. In 1888, we had a poorer crop, and only 4,000,000 bushels were hauled out. The year 1889 was another partial failure, the outhaul being 4,301,000 bushels. Strong representations were again made to the government; we went before the Governor in Council; and representations were made to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we got the average rate reduced in 1890 from 24 cents to 22 cents. In 1890, the western export on the Canadian Pacific Railway was 10,489,000 bushels, which, at 22 cents per hundred pounds, represented $1,384,548, instead of $1,510,236, or a saving to the farmer of $125,668. And we paid nothing for it.

The next year we freighted on the Canadian Pacific Railway 10,996,000 bushels, and in 1892 11,556,000, paying to the company respectively $1,451,472 and $1,525,392. But I felt that 22 cents was still too high, and I went before the Governor in Council, and I communicated with Sir William Van Horne, whom I have always found ready to listen to any representations I have felt bound to make. At this time I pressed strongly on the attention of Sir William Van Horne that there should be a division of rates, and I received from him the following letter, dated the 10th of April, 1892 :

April 20, 1892.

Dear Mr. Davin,—I have your note of the 16th.

The 'Globe' statement to the effect that we carry wheat from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the seaboard for less than from Winnipeg to the seaboard is true, but it is not true that this works a discrimination against Winnipeg.

It is not wheat but flour that we carry from Minneapolis, but the flour rate is based on the wheat rate; so it amounts to practically the same thing. There is very little relation between the rates from Winnipeg and from Minneapolis to the seaboard. Winnipeg is 1,428 miles from Montreal—Minneapolis only 1,119. If you will take the rate from a point 309 miles beyond Minneapolis so as to make the distance the same as from Winnipeg, you will be able to make a more just comparison; and a perfectly just comparison will be to take the rates from Gretna and from Neche, on the two sides of the international boundary, to the seaboard. You will find them precisely the same.

The following is a proper comparison:

The distance from Gretna to Montreal via Winnipeg and the Canadian Pacific Railway is 1,498 miles; the distance from Neche to Montreal via Minneapolis and Sault Ste. Marie is 1,524 miles, and the rates are the same.

The distance from Gretna to Boston via Winnipeg and the Canadian Pacific Railway is 1,838 miles; the distance from Neche to Boston via Minneapolis and the shortest line east is 1,864 miles, and the rates are the same.

The distance from Gretna to New York via Winnipeg and the Canadian Pacific Railway is 1,775 miles, and from Neche to New York via Minneapolis and the shortest line east is 1,738 miles and the rates are the same.

Where does the discrimination appear?

In comparing the wheat shipments of the farmers of southern Manitoba with those of their neighbours immediately across the line in Dakota and Minnesota it should be remembered that the wheat of the latter, when it reaches the Minneapolis mills, is more than 400 miles on its way to the seaboard.

These frequently repeated statements in the newspapers about our discrimination in favour of Minneapolis as against Winnipeg are either due to ignorance on the part of the writers of the geographical position of the two cities, or they are calculated to mislead people in the east who are not acquainted with the geography in question, and who are more likely to accept the statements as correct than to test their correctness by careful examination of maps and figures.

But wheat shipments do not originate in Winnipeg any more than they do in Minneapolis. In both cases they come from farther west, and anybody who is disposed to be fair to us will extend the comparison to Brandon, Qu'Appelle, Regina, Calgary, Prince Albert and Edmonton, where it will be found very greatly in our favour.

As to our rates generally, I will say that our average earnings per ton of freight per mile over our entire system are almost precisely the same as on the eastern trunk lines, including the great coal carriers, and the great volume of business on these trunk lines is through freight, which is carried at notoriously low rates. Our rates will compare favourably with those of any railway in America or in any other part of the world.

Yours very truly,

W. C. VAN HORNE.

Notwithstanding the strong position taken there by Mr., now Sir William Van Horne, we pressed the matter on him so strongly and so persistently that the result was that the Canadian Pacific Railway reduced its rate for the next year by 3 cents to 19 cents. In the year 1893, 11,214,000 bushels were hauled out, paying the railway $1,278,396, $201,852 less than would have been paid under the rate of the previous year. This was done at the end of the second triennial period, and done at once, and we paid nothing for it—and we got reductions in other staples as well. In July, 1894, I went before the Railway Committee to press this matter on their attention, and also discriminations. In 1894 the outhaul of wheat was 13,588,000 bushels; 1895, 23,467,000. Now, in accordance with the two principles I had laid down there should have been a further reduction in 1896. Population and freights had increased; the financial position and profits of the Canadian Pacific Railway were all that could be desired; the export of wheat alone had doubled in two years. It was the end of the first triennial period, and had the government remained in power we should have got the 3 cents reduction. What occurred? There was a change of government. But we had the hon. member for Queen's and Sunbury Minister of Railways; we had the hon. member for Brandon Minister of the Interior. It is true we had the right hon. gentleman Prime Minister, and he had in 1894 at Moosejaw denounced 19 cents per 100 lbs., and the Canadian Pacific Railway freight rates generally as oppressive and promised the moment he got in to reduce them. What was done? Nearly two triennial periods at the same rate were allowed to complete themselves—a thing which had never occurred before. In 1896, when the 3 cents reduction should have been made according to precedent and principle, there was no reduction. No reduction in 1897. In those two years we exported 38,420,000 bushels, paying the Canadian Pacific Railway $4,379,890, or $691,560 more than would have been paid by the western farmers had the reduction of 3 cents been made as it should have been in 1896. But we had a government in power which has a tender spot in its heart for the great moneyed interests, and they said: 'We will not require you to make the 3 cents reduction now; we will give you three years to do it; make a one and a half-cent reduction two years from now and another one and a half-cent three years from now, and we will give you some millions for doing it. In 1898, the outhaul was 23,000,000 bushels which 17½ cents made $2,415,000, or $217,000 more than would have been paid had the reduction of 3 cents been made at the proper time. Last year, which was the beginning of a third triennial period, saw the reduction made which should have been made the beginning of the second triennial. And they boast of this! Last year 26,000,000 bushels were hauled out, nearly 15,000,000 more than the year when the rate was reduced by 3 cents six years before, or an increase of over 140 per cent, while the reduction in freight rates is only 3 cents, and millions paid for it—$468,000 less than would have been paid at 19 cents. But bear in mind the reduction should have been made in 1896; that, therefore, for 1896 and 1897, $691,560, and for 1898, $217,000 were paid which should not have been paid by the farmer, making $908,560. Thus, by means of the adroit arrangement of Mr. Sifton the Canadian Pacific Railway in the period 1896-9 inclusive, gets $440,560 more than on precedent and principle they should have got. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and others in the North-west sent their paid emissaries through the county to tell the farmers what blessings they conferred on them by getting the Canadian Pacific Railway at the end of three years to make a reduction which should have been made three years earlier, and paying them millions for doing this. This they boast of on all sides.

The Sun, which I have quoted before, is worth quoting in this regard:

The Canadian Pacific Railway directors announce that they have carried forward as a surplus $2,203,847. If our readers will refer to page 10 of the Public Accounts of the Dominion for the past fiscal year, they will find that during that period the Canadian Pacific Railway received from the Dominion government in donations for the Crow's Nest line alone $2,322,500, or $118,653 more than the surplus carried forward. Who would not pay 6 per cent dividends and announce surpluses up in the millions under such happy conditions?

The debate on this question, and the facts that I have brought forward impress upon my mind clearly the proposition, with which I started, that we will have to face this question of transportation. We will have to face it, to use the language of my hon. and learned friend, with a definite object and aim in view, and it seems to me, we must have a large object, a large aim and large measures. I believe that the only way of dealing with that question is to recognize the fact that the same principle that was applied to the post should be applied to transportation. If that be done, and the government take hold of the question on those lines we may look for success. The principle of the penny post may be applied to railways, and, Mr. Speaker, bold as the proposition is, it will be found to be justified on examination. The expense incident to the mere length of haul is so small in comparison with the other necessary charges that on true principles it would not be counted as a serious factor, whereas at present it is the base on which rates are calculated; the cost of transportation and not the value to the person hiring the common carrier should be the base. We can apply the principle of the penny post to transportation, and annihilate the disability that at present exists in the case of our farmers who grow grain in the centre of this continent. We can actually destroy the great disability of distance, and instead of having freight and passengers carried at so much from point to point, we can have it done on the principle of the penny post. The cost of running a train it is computed is from twenty-four to thirty cents a mile. Even if it remain in the hands of corporations, and they would apply the principle of the penny post, the result would be such an extension of the traffic, that the profit to the line, by the extension of the traffic would be such as to entirely justify such a tremendous revolution in our railway system. I hope, however, that the government will not wait for the completion of any such large scheme as that before taking steps, such as we took prior to 1896, to carry out the promise that was made in 1894, in Moosejaw, by the right hon. Prime Minister, that if he got into power the terrible oppression, as he characterized it, of the freight rates would be swept away.

Motion (Mr. Bennett) withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 5, 1900.

PRAYERS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford) moved :

That Bill (No. 95) respecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company be withdrawn, and that the fees paid thereon, and on Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Kettle River Valley Railway Company, be refunded, less the cost of printing and translation, in accordance with the recommendations contained in the ninth report of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE SHIPMENT AND TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford) moved :

That returns 81 and 81a, the report and evidence of the royal commission on the shipment and transportation of grain and the appointment of the said committee, be printed forthwith and that rule 95 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said : A large number of the members of the House, as well as a large number of people throughout the country are very much interested in this report, and I think it is in the interest of the members of this House, as well as of the people, that this report should be printed as quickly as possible. The chairman of the Printing Committee informs me that, on account of the adjournment of the Senate, the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing will not be able to meet for two or three weeks. If the printing of this report is not to be delayed, it is necessary that we should take action. I do not know what the view of the House will be with regard to the evidence, but that will have to be considered later when I am able to bring the evidence before the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DAVIN.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 132) to amend the Railway Act. He said : The sections of the Bill are limited in number, and do not cover a great deal of ground. The first provides for the exemption of street railways and electric railways under certain conditions from the operation of some of the clauses of the General Railway Act. The second clause is similar in purport to a clause contained in the Bill introduced last year, and provides that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council may, on application and on being satisfied that certain conditions exist, require a railway company that has received aid from the Dominion government or from any provincial government to locate a station or stations at points at which, in the judgment of the committee such stations ought to be placed. Another division of this clause provides for making regulations to insure uniformity in the rules as respects all railways under the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. It is deemed necessary that some such provision as that should be made in order to insure uniformity in these rules. They are known as the rules which govern the workmen and those engaged in operating the line.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the wording of that section the same as the section of last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think very nearly so. We may perhaps, have improved it a little ; but it contains precisely the same principle, and if there is any difference that difference is very slight and is designed to still further perfect the clause. The third section, with the subclauses, provides, in certain eventualities, for the sequestration of railways. These are, in effect, all the conditions that are contained in the Bill.

Mr. INGRAM. Would the hon. minister object to reading that section ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection :

Whenever a company constructing or operating a line of railway which is situate wholly within the limits of one province, and with respect to which, or any part of which, the government of such province has previously granted and paid a subsidy to such company or any other company, fails to comply with the requirements of its charter as regards the commencement or completion of its works within the times therein specified, or fails, for a longer period than ten days, to continue in an efficient manner the running, operating or working of its railway, or any part thereof, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of such province, upon the report of the Railway Committee of the Executive Council thereof, may, at any time (even though the company is incorporated by the parliament of Canada, or the railway is authorized within the legislative authority of such parliament), authorize the Commissioner of Public Works of such province or other proper officer therein, to cause the railway, the road-bed, and all the rolling stock and equipment thereof, to be sequestered or sold.

It appears that there is a railway company which has been in the receipt of aid from one of the provinces, which has operated a part of its line, but which does not choose to operate the remainder of its line, and the non-operation of which is a great detriment to that section of the community. The object is to enable some tribunal to deal with such a condition of things, and to insist, by the exercise of the pressure which an authority of this kind will confer on the tribunal, upon its being operated. It operates a part of its line profitably already.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the Bill deal chiefly only with the regulations?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We rely upon the provisions of the Provincial Act to work these things out. There are two following subclauses which I will read:

2. All proceedings to be had after the granting of authority for sequestration or sale, as provided by this section, whether concerning or incidental to the appointment of the sequesteror, the duties, rights or powers of the sequesteror, the operation or sale of the railway, the distribution or the application of the proceeds of such sale, or otherwise, shall be in accordance, as nearly as may be, with the procedure in similar matters in force in such province with respect to the sequestration or sale of railways within the legislative authority of the legislature of such province.

3. This section shall have force and effect only with respect to such companies as are designated from time to time by proclamation of the Governor General; and it shall cease to have effect with respect to any such company on and after a day to be mentioned by proclamation of the Governor General.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill, if it is his intention to send it to the Railway Committee?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the intention.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, as I only heard casually the brief statement he has made—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is only the first reading.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is true, but so far as I am able to judge, it introduces a number of very important changes and clothes the government of the day with a degree of power in relation to railway enterprises, that is not now the law. I think it would be well, the measure being of such importance, that the Railway Committee should have an opportunity of examining it, and if the hon. gentleman has no objection to that course, I think he will be consulting the convenience of the House by sending it to the Railway Committee. It is one of those complicated questions concerning which the House would like to have the views of a committee, containing so large a number of members of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is only the first reading, and I would not like to commit myself at this moment to an opinion either pro or con on the line of the hon. gentleman's suggestion. But I will be glad to consider it, and when we come to the second reading, I will give him an answer.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ELECTION LAW AMENDMENTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 133) to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members to the House of Commons. He said: As indicated by the title, the object of the Bill is to consolidate and amend the law relating to the election of members to the House of Commons. The consolidation and the amendments that I propose have become in large part necessary as a result of the passing of a Franchise Act in 1898. As hon. gentlemen will remember, by that Act, we adopted the provincial franchises, the provincial lists and the provincial polling divisions. As a consequence there are many provisions of the old election law which will disappear. In addition, there are one or two amendments of slight importance, and some which I have borrowed from the Bill introduced by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram). The only amendments of prime importance are those that have reference to the North-west Territories. The intention is, if this Bill becomes law, to repeal the whole of chapter 7, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, which has reference to the election of members to the House of Commons from the North-west Territories, with the exception of sections 2 and 3. Sections 2 and 3 are those which relate to the defining and determining of the boundaries of the constituencies in the North-west Territories. As a result, therefore, of the repeal of that portion of the Act, we will have in the North-west Territories, the same conditions as exist in the other provinces, that is to say, we will have the same franchise and the same voters. In the North-west Territories, for provincial purposes, there are no election lists, and we will, therefore, have in the North-west the same conditions as now exist with reference to voters in the province of Prince Edward Island. These amendments with reference to the North-west Territories, I think, are the only ones which will seriously engage the attention of the House, and by this amendment we will save a large sum which is now expended in connection with the printing of the lists for the Northwest Territories. In addition to these amendments, I may remark, that we intend introducing a new form of ballot, and the attention of the House will be specially directed to that form.

Mr. FOSTER. A machine ballot ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may say to our hon. friends opposite, that, bearing in mind what happened previous to 1896, I have endeavoured as far as possible to keep temptations away from them. and, I think, they will find the Act framed largely in that sense.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the change in the ballot in the direction of having it numbered ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). I would invite the attention of the Solicitor General and of the government to the Bill that is upon the Order paper, as No. 35. Of course there is hardly any hope of that being reached, in fact, it is hardly probable that any private member will be able to carry through a public Bill, unless he has the assistance of the government. Now, this Bill suggests legislation in a way of doing away with the ballot altogether, and such a system of voting as will be more likely to ensure accuracy and prevent fraud in the way of forging ballots, and avoid errors arising from the marking or spoiling of ballots, in fact, doing away with a great many things that have been complained of within the last few years. I merely wish to say that inasmuch as that Bill was introduced last session, but not reached, and has been introduced again this session, and is not likely to be reached, and as it is, in my opinion, a matter of the greatest possible importance, to ensure accuracy in voting and convenience to the voters, I certainly think that this is a good time for the government to introduce some such thing as provided for by my Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the hon. Solicitor General, that, when the Bill is printed, the sections from which the Consolidated Act is taken should be indicated, and the amendments should also be indicated by italics, or in some other convenient manner.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I beg to say, in answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) that, before each section, which amends the existing law, there is an asterisk and any new matter is in brackets. Then, we have the references showing where each section is taken from, and the sections which I have taken from the Bill of the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) are also indicated.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—EXPORT OF COMMODITIES TO SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. McMILLAN asked :

1. How many horses, how many tons of hay, what quantities of food and manufactured goods (all being the products of Canada), have been exported from Canada to South Africa since the outbreak of the war?

2. What is the value of such exports?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Mr. Speaker, I am unable to give the hon. member (Mr. McMillan) the full information he seeks, and as I shall not be able to have it for a length of time, I shall ask him to accept the following answer as a partial one at any rate. The department informs me that the complete information in reply to this question cannot be given until the returns for the quarter ending March 31 have been received and compiled—but for the three months ended December 31, the exports to South Africa were as follows : Hay and straw, 715 tons, valued at $5,244 ; beans, oats and pease, 7,100 bushels, valued at $4,326 ; and manufactured goods, $20,438. There were no horses exported to South Africa during the above quarter. Statements received from St. John and Halifax, the principal exporting points subsequent to December 31, show that between that date and March 21 there were exported to South Africa 1,810 horses ; 8,348 tons of hay ; $67,659 of articles of food ; and $140,490 of manufactured goods. (Quantities of food and manufactured articles, being so dissimilar, could only be given by an itemized statement). In addition to the above, the Department of Agriculture reports that 3,654 tons of hay, 2,286 bags of flour and 2,788 cases of corned beef were shipped by that department to Boston for export to South Africa.

COURT OF APPEAL AND CRIMINAL COURT JUDGES, QUEBEC.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

Who are the judges who have sat in the Court of Appeal for the province of Quebec since 1880?

Who is the judge who has presided in the Criminal Court in Montreal and Quebec since 1880?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have been informed by the Department of Justice that they have not the information which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) asks, but they have written to Quebec to obtain it. The question will have to stand for a few days.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the right hon. gentleman, when it comes, give it to me ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have written to Quebec.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

DUTY COLLECTED ON TOBACCO.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. What was the total amount of duty collected on tobacco for the year 1899?

2. How much of this amount is due to the additional duty imposed in the session of 1897?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I gave the answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) yesterday in so far as the Department of Customs is concerned. To-day the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), unfortunately is not well, and he has left the following answer in my hands for the Department of Inland Revenue : 1. For fiscal year ended June 30, 1899 :

Tobacco	$3,014.951 93
Cigars.....	768.496 74
Cigarettes.....	302.341 24

Total..... $4,086.289 91

2. $1,067,656.40, being the duty collected on imported raw leaf tobacco.

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA.

Mr. MORIN asked :

What is the number of immigrants from Europe brought into Canada for each of the years 1897, 1898 and 1899?

What is the total cost of the immigration service of Canada for each of the years 1897, 1898 and 1899?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The number of immigrants from Europe brought into Canada in 1897, was 19,304 (out of a total of 20,016 immigrants, 712 of whom came from the United States); in 1898, 22,781 (out of a total of 31,900 immigrants, 9,119 of whom came from the United States); and in 1899, 32,598 (out of a total of 44,543 immigrants, 11,945 of whom came from the United States). The total expenditure for immigration during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1897, was $127,438.14; the total expenditure for immigration during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898, was $261,194.90; the total expenditure for immigration during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, was $255,878.88.

PAYMENT OF DEPUTY RETURNING OFFICER AT SASKATCHEWAN LANDING.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Whether the government is aware that the deputy returning officer at Saskatchewan Landing, in the taking of the plebiscite in September, 1898, has not yet been paid?

Is the fault with the department at Ottawa or with the returning officer?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The Auditor General states that he is unable to furnish the answer unless he knows either the name of the deputy returning officer or the number of the poll, as the accounts do not show where the various polls were held.

YUKON TERRITORY—PAYMENT OF DOG DRIVERS.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Whether James Williamson was engaged at Prince Albert on September 5, 1897, by Supt. Gagnon to go to the Yukon as a dog driver at $30 per month and $10 extra if service is satisfactory, and also to have his transport to and from the Yukon paid?

2. Whether, having served two years and wishing to leave, and having applied to Major Steele for his transport home, as promised, Major Steele told him to remain in police barracks until transport, &c., be arranged?

3. Whether Williamson did not do this for six weeks, getting free rations, but no pay?

4. Whether, earning nothing, and Major Steele still putting him off, he left for home, paying his own way out?

5. Whether Maxime Fidler was not engaged at Prince Albert at the same time (Sept., 1897) and at the end of one year left and had his transport paid to Prince Albert?

6. Whether two other men, named Whitford and Beatty, were not given transport to Vancouver?

7. Is it the intention of the government to pay James Williamson the amount of his transport from the Yukon to Prince Albert?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. James Williamson was engaged on September 6, 1897, for one year at $30 per month, and a bonus of $10 per month if satisfactory. The engagement did not provide for return expenses from the Yukon. He was continued in employment at Dawson, at $40 per month, until the 22nd May, 1899, when he left of his own accord. Later on he was employed at Tagish. 2, 3, 4. The government have no knowledge of the circumstances referred to in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4. 5. Maxime Fidler was engaged at Prince Albert about the same time as Williamson. No entry can be found of his return expenses having been paid from the police appropriation. 6. Whitford and Beatty were engaged on the same terms as the other dog drivers, and were not paid transport expenses back from the Yukon. 7. No.

LIGHT KEEPER AND WHARFINGER AT ARISAIG, N.S.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) asked :

1. Who is the keeper of the lighthouse at Arisaig, N.S.?

2. What is his salary?

3. Is he paid by the year, or how otherwise?

4. Who is the wharfinger at Arisaig?

5. When did he last make any returns, and for what period?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Hugh R. McAdam. 2. $60 per annum. 3. Paid quarterly. 4. Hugh R. McAdam, appointed about January 1, 1899. 5. Has not made any returns. Has been asked for explanations.

FISHING BOUNTY CHEQUES.

Mr. GANONG (by Mr. McAlister) asked :

Have the cheques for fishery bounties, now due, been forwarded for distribution? If so, who distributed them, and in what manner?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The fishing bounty cheques for the year 1899, excepting those for Saguenay County and the Magdalen Islands, and a few claims upon which further information is required, have been forwarded for distribution, which is done personally by the fishery officers appointed for that purpose as formerly.

POSTAGE PAID ON NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. CARROLL asked :

What amount has been paid for postage, according to section 3 of 61 Vic., chap. 20, during the calendar year 1899, by the following papers:

'Family Herald.'
Montreal 'Herald' (daily and weekly).
Montreal 'Witness'	"	"
'La Presse,' Montreal.	"	"
'La Patrie,'	"	"
Montreal 'Star'	"	"
'Le Courrier du Canada,' Quebec.
'Le Soleil,'	"	"
'L'Evenement.	"	"
'Le Cultivateur'

What has been, for said calendar year, the total revenue derived from postage on newspapers in the Dominion?

Has the attention of the government been called to the fact that such postal tax bears heavily on the newspapers already taxed for every particle of material they use?

Is it the intention of the government, in view of the growing surpluses accruing to the exchequer, and of the modicity of the total revenue taken from this source, to amend the Postal Act so as to reduce or suppress the postage on newspapers?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The first part of the question asks for information that is regarded as of a confidential character. To the second part of the question the answer is: That the gross revenue from newspapers for the calendar year ending 31st of December last, was $70,432.82. The third part of the question appears to be open to the objection of containing an allegation of fact. The answer to the fourth part of the question is, that it is not the intention of the government to propose an amendment in the direction indicated.

DEPUTY POSTMASTER OF TORONTO.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the government determined to superannuate Mr. John Carruthers, deputy postmaster of Toronto?

2. If so, from what day is his superannuation to date, and what will be the amount of his superannuation allowance?

3. Who will be Mr. Carruthers' successor as deputy postmaster of Toronto? When will he enter upon his duties, and what salary will he receive?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The time has not arrived yet for the government to give an announcement with regard to the matter referred to in this question.

FRANKING PRIVILEGES OF THE LEGISLATURES.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

What is the extent of the franking privileges granted to the provinces of the Dominion, and to the legislatures of such provinces?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Under the provisions of the Post Office Act, 49 Victoria, chapter 35, section 42, subsection 7: 'Petitions and addresses to the provincial legislatures of any of the provinces of Canada, or to any branch thereof, and also votes and proceedings and other papers printed by order of any such legislatures or any branch thereof, may be sent free of Canada postage under such regulations as the Postmaster General prescribes.' The post office regulations as contained in the official Postal Guide grant exemption from postage within Canada to the following classes of mail matter also :

15. Periodical bulletins, circulars, schedules and reports prepared by and issued from the provincial government departments in connection with agricultural, industrial and sanitary matters, as well as returns made to the provincial governments in relation to such matters on schedules furnished by them; forms used by clergymen, medical men and others, when making returns of marriages, births and deaths, contagious diseases reports addressed to the Provincial Board of Health, Montreal, and meteorological reports addressed to the Dominion Observatory at Toronto.

MR. PETER CURRIE.

Mr. McCLEARY asked :

1. Has Mr. Peter Currie been appointed to a position on the Geological staff?
2. If so, what are his duties?
3. What salary does he receive?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Mr. Peter Currie has not been appointed to a position on the Geological staff.

ADJOURNMENT FOR EASTER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday next it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 17th instant.

Motion agreed to.

RETURN LAID ON THE TABLE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I might be allowed to say, Mr. Speaker, that one special return to which my attention has been called two or three times lately, was laid on the Table on the 26th of March last.

FREIGHT DELAYS ON THE I.C.R.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry from the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair). A number of communications have been received by me from the maritime provinces complaining of an alleged shortage of cars, or mismanagement in the use of cars on the Intercolonial Railway. One of these complaints is from a leading merchant of the maritime provinces who each and every year in order to suit his business has had a very large number of cars placed at his disposal on the Intercolonial Railway. This gentleman writes to me :

I would like you to ask what regulations exist for the discharge of lumber on the Intercolonial, and for a statement of the number of cars under load at this port and Halifax, and how long said cars have been under load. The trouble to get cars from the Intercolonial Railway for some time has been very great, and it is owing to the fact that shippers are allowed to keep cars under load just as long as they so desire, without fine or power to compel their discharge. The thing is tying up the trade of the road, and the poorer class of men cannot get a car. I have called Mr. Blair's attention to it on March 19, but have not heard from him, but it would be a piece of useful legislation to have the Intercolonial Railway people compelled to make some reasonable regulation for the benefit of its customers.

In the Journal of Commerce, Montreal, on the 30th of March last, the complaint is stated somewhat more forcibly than in this letter. It is as follows :

Complaints are rife of freights being so long delayed between Halifax and this city. Cases of merchandise landed from the 'Sardinian' at Halifax nearly one month ago are still creeping along at snail pace on their way to Montreal. Instead of consignments for the city being delivered in bulk, they are sent in small batches, at wide intervals. A bullock team from Halifax could have carried goods more quickly than has been done this winter by the Intercolonial Railway. One reason for granting aid towards extending the government line direct from Halifax to Montreal was the greater expedition with which freight would be delivered here. Slow freight service on the Intercolonial is an old complaint. Merchants desirous of getting goods from England as rapidly as business required have, for years, been compelled to have them shipped via New York or Portland.

I do not know, personally, how much truth, or if there is any truth in these complaints, but they have been considered worthy of remark by our leading commercial journal and are also vouched for by gentlemen whom I know to be very honourable and who have no political leanings sufficiently strong to induce them to enter unnecessary complaints, but who are complaining simply because they are suffering in their business from the system of handling cars on the Intercolonial Railway. If there are not enough cars, the minister should ask the House for a grant to immediately stock the Intercolonial Railway with sufficient rolling stock of the description required for the transportation of lumber. It is a very important matter for the maritime provinces, as the hon. minister well knows, and if he has sufficient rolling stock to provide ample accommodation for the traffic, he had better see that his officials make a disposition of it that will be more in accordance with the requirements of the patrons of the line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There is no doubt a very great deal of complaint with respect to the time made by our freight trains and the transport of goods from one point to another on the Intercolonial Railway. I have myself been in frequent receipt of complaints on this score. I have realized, as fully as I think any minister could, the importance and necessity of making provision for removing any possible grounds for these complaints. I would not assume, however, and I think the House would be in error in assuming, that it would be possible to so manage the Intercolonial Railway that there would be no complaints on that score. Where business is very prosperous, and where the amount of tonnage involved is very considerable, such complaints are made with respect to all railways. All railway managers have the same trouble. Where an unexpected and rapid increase in the amount of traffic takes place, the railroads are often caught without a sufficient number of freight cars, and without a sufficient quantity of rolling stock generally. We are in that position. I have been endeavouring to increase the rolling stock. I have made what I did not consider, I admit, as full provision as I should have liked, but I have endeavoured to make provision for a considerable increase in the traffic. But, my expectations with regard to that increase have been very considerably exceeded, and we are in the position to-day of not having either enough cars or enough locomotives. I do not think there is as much as the hon. gentleman imagines in the complaint of one of the correspondents, that the cars are allowed to remain loaded for an undue period. There will always be some delays on that account; there will always be some difficulty in having the consignees of these freights discharge the cars promptly; there has always been and there always will be that difficulty, which I presume arises with respect to all railways. We have regulations which we endeavour to enforce as vigorously as possible. It is in our power to impose fines or penalties if the number of the delay days is exceeded, and we do it, I think, as a general rule, as much as railways generally do. The main trouble is that we have not enough cars or locomotives. Our trains are now hauled by light locomotives, which cannot haul as large trains as would be desirable. In many sections the freight is unavoidably delayed for these reasons. I have asked parliament, in the main estimates, for a grant to enable me still more efficiently to equip the road, and I am not sure that my figures are not much below the mark, and that I may not have to ask for a further vote in the supplementary estimates. However, my desire is to place the road in as efficient a shape as possible, and to do the best for the patrons of the road that can be done under the circumstances.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). I am very glad the hon. member has brought this question before the House. The minister yesterday made an answer to some questions put by myself which was in a measure satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman going to make a motion?

Mr. McDOUGALL. If I am not in order, Mr. Speaker, I shall put myself in order by concluding with a motion. This question is, to my mind, too important a one to be delayed; and it should be brought before the House as fully as possible, if that will have the effect of moving the minister to a little more activity than he has shown in the past. The answer given by the minister yesterday to my questions was to the effect that he was made aware of some complaints with regard to the position of the road and the hauling into North Sydney of the express train; but he said he had no complaints with regard to some of the other cases mentioned. Now, I want to remind him that early in the season the Board of Trade at Sydney called his attention to the defective service that the Intercolonial Railway was giving to the public in the Island of Cape Breton, and particularly in the town of Sydney; and I think the information which the hon. minister had in his own possession with regard to the demands on the service of the road in the interests of shippers and of the public generally, should have moved him to action months ago, instead of waiting until he could get an appropriation from this House which would not be available till the 1st of July next. The appropriation he is asking for in the main estimates now before the House will not be available till after that date—for expenditure not until after July 1—and from the information which I have, the great inconvenience and loss caused to the public on the eastern sections of the Intercolonial Railway, by reason of the inefficient service given by that railway, would have justified the minister in coming before parliament on the first day that it met, and asking parliament to give him the means to equip that road in such a manner that it could meet the demands of the public. As far back as July last, people went to the management of the Intercolonial Railway and represented that they wanted a service equal to several thousand cars a month. They have not been able to get such a service—why? Because the minister has not taken the necessary steps to provide the railway with sufficient engines and flat cars to remove the freight which has been offered. The result is that every branch of business in the eastern portion of this Dominion, which depends on the service of the Intercolonial Railway, is paralyzed. Business people lose, not simply hundreds, but thousands of dollars because they cannot get that service from the road which they ought to get. It is now six or seven months since a great deal of this business was offered to the road; and surely that should have been sufficient time for the hon. minister to prepare himself for this business. Having particular reference to my own constituency, where a very great industry is being put into operation, an industry in which every man, woman and child in that part of the country is interested, and as well, I might say, every man, woman and child in most of the provinces of this Dominion—because, I take it, that that industry is going to distribute a large amount of money all over Canada—we should not by any want of action on our part delay the progress of that industry or prevent it getting into manufacturing operation at the earliest possible date. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) read complaints with respect to the leaving of loaded cars in the possession of consignees for unreasonable length of time. My complaint is that the cars are left loaded not only at the points of destination, but at the points of departure. In my own section of the country, week after week the cars have remained loaded without being removed from the sidings for want of engine power and siding and yard room; and thus, we can see how it is that the management cannot furnish cars as quickly as they are required. In this case the fault is with the management of the road; and that is owing to the fact that those parts of the road are not sufficiently equipped with sidings and station accommodations. The business of the road blocks up the line from day to day in such a way that at times we cannot move a car for a week. Is that the fault of the management or of the people who are charged with carrying on the operations of the road? I say not. It is the fault of the head of the service, who does not wish to provide the proper accommodations, equipment and facilities for carrying on the business. Take the town of Sydney, where this great industry is being carried on to-day, we have not got in that town yard room, sidings or station room for one-quarter of the business offering. Why should that be the case when the people of that town, at a time when it was in comparative poverty, gave to the Intercolonial Railway and to the people of Canada a free gift of land and free right of way into the town in order to enable the government to provide the necessary facilities for the proper operation of the road. To-day the Intercolonial Railway authorities complain that they have not got ground room enough to enable them to increase the yard and siding accommodation. I say they have. They have enough ground room to provide twice over for the business they are now properly prepared for. One of the great disadvantages arising from the default of the government to provide sufficient yard room is that when an engine has to move a car, it must spend two or three hours shunting back and forth other cars before it can get at the car it wants to move. The company, which is carrying on this great industry in that town to-day, was blamed, I understand, at times for not moving the cars on to their works, but I know that when those people send their engine into the Intercolonial Railway yard to take away their cars, that engine had to wait several hours before it could get at them. What I am stating with regard to the station facilities in the town of Sydney, I can state with regard to almost every other station where business of importance is done on that eastern division. The hon. minister could not have been without information of this state of things months ago. He himself and his government gave their support to a measure of this House to encourage the building up of that industry in the town of Sydney, and he surely must have known that the business those people were undertaking would give his railway a great deal of work, and apart from the business created locally by reason of this industry, there is an enormous amount of traffic offered to the road from the United States. As my hon. friend from Westmoreland has said, the sending of goods from Halifax to Montreal is delayed over this line. So is all other traffic.

I could detain this House for hours, giving particulars of the great disadvantages from which we suffer, but do not propose to do so. I hope that the hon. minister will take warning and lose no more time in asking parliament to provide such means as will make that road more efficient and enable it to carry on business more expeditiously. To-day, for the want of satisfactory equipment, it costs the road twice as much to do its business as it should. I have seen work that should be done in four hours taking two days, to the loss of the people trying to do business over the road, as well as to the road, owing to inefficient equipment. I hope that the hon. minister will take the earliest opportunity to obtain proper car and engine service. I do not propose to say anything further on the subject at present, but I must again express the hope that the hon. minister will not lose any more time in giving some satisfaction to the people who do business on the line. I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). I rise to endorse every word that has fallen from my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), in connection with what I must deliberately call the mismanagement of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not care who is responsible, whether the superintendent or the general manager at Moncton, or the Minister of Railways, but time and time again has this matter been brought to the notice of the hon. minister without the slightest effect. He is apparently inclined to treat this matter very lightly. Last September he came down to Sydney, accompanied by some of his supporters, and there was interviewed by a deputation from the town of Sydney and the Sydney Board of Trade. These gentlemen laid before him the congested condition of the road. The condition of the yard at Sydney was brought to his notice, and he promised to remedy that condition, but so far has done nothing. Mr. Wells, the chief engineer of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company accompanied that deputation and informed the hon. gentleman that his company alone would require for their own accommodation a thousand cars per month from the 1st of September last until the following autumn. That would mean a great deal to any system—40 cars a day, or 1,000 cars a month taken over that road by that one company alone. When we consider the additional business provided by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and kindred industries, we cannot fail to come to the conclusion that the road is in a terrible condition. The House will be astonished to learn that not a single car or engine has been supplied since the additional traffic has arisen. The hon. minister replies that he has no cars or locomotives, but that he was in hopes that very soon he would be in a position to supply the present needs.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In part.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes, I would like to know upon what principle he can lie so quietly by and treat this great question with indifference, although he has the exchequer of the country at his back. When he found that the road was going to be congested with the incoming business, why did he not immediately set to work and provide the requisite cars and locomotives. I cannot understand it for the life of me, and the minister will find it difficult to explain.

Thus far, I have spoken of the freight department of the road. I wish now to say a few words in connection with the passenger train arrangements. Early in the session, I brought to the notice of the minister—and it was hardly necessary for me to do so, because it had been brought to his notice before—the great dissatisfaction that exists in the eastern part of Nova Scotia, in fact, all over that province, with the extraordinary system that prevails in running the express trains. Sydney is the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway road. But, from North Sydney Junction, there is a branch running to North Sydney. When the road was first operated, a branch train ran from the junction into North Sydney, and the main train kept on to the terminus at Sydney. But, it was afterwards decided to make the whole train run to North Sydney, thence back to North Sydney Junction, and on to the terminus at Sydney. That system is still continued. It was not so bad when the business of the road was light; but, as the business has developed and travel has increased, it has become unsatisfactory to the great travelling public going to the terminus of the road. Let hon. gentlemen take the map and consider the state of things. The express train running from the Strait of Canso to the terminus at Sydney reaches North Sydney Junction, and then must run on to North Sydney, six miles away. The locomotive meets it there and draws it back to North Sydney Junction, and then it runs around to the terminus at Sydney—that is, the whole train, passenger cars, mail cars, parlour cars, and all. The consequence is, as the minister will understand, there is great delay, sometimes an hour, and sometimes even as much as two hours, depending entirely on the business to be done at North Sydney. On the nights when the steamer running between the west coast of Newfoundland and North Sydney, comes in, the delay is all the greater. Passengers bound for Sydney, after spending, it may be, the whole day in the train, are obliged to undergo all this delay before reaching their destination. I would ask the hon. minister when that condition of affairs is to be remedied; for I know for a fact, and I think the minister will agree with me, that strong representations were made to him, while in Sydney, against that arrangement. The minister will bear me out in saying that he has in his possession strong remonstrances from the board of trade, from the mayor, from every influential business man in the town of Sydney, against this state of affairs. I asked him early in the session, when he purposed remedying this state of affairs, and if there were remonstrances against it. He admitted that there were remonstrances, and that representations had been made against this condition of affairs; but he said:

I am asked to subscribe to the statement that the travelling public are now being subject to annoyance and delay, an admission which I cannot possibly make. Such is not the case.

Now, I would like to know from the minister, how he could come to the conclusion that there is no inconvenience or delay caused by running the whole train six miles on a branch line, and detaining it there for such a length of time as is necessary to do the business, and thence back to the junction? Is it not manifest that there is delay there? And, if there is delay, there must be inconvenience. I draw the attention of the government to this matter in no spirit of anger, but with the hope that the necessary change will be made so as to meet the wishes of the travelling public. I put it to any hon. gentleman in this House, if he were taking his passage from the city of Ottawa for Sydney, and were subjected to such a delay, would not he be indignant and ask why this state of affairs should be tolerated at this point. The hon. minister knows that from Campbellton to Dalhousie, there is a branch road of four or five miles. It would be as reasonable to take the express train on its way to Halifax over this branch into Dalhousie, and then run it back to send it on its course, as to make this detour from North Sydney Junction to North Sydney and back, before proceeding to Sydney. In the same way, there is a branch from Stellarton to Pictou. Why does not the hon. minister run trains to Pictou and back, instead of running them direct through? I am not advocating any plan that would deprive the interesting and enterprising town of North Sydney of one jot or tittle of its present conveniences. I would not stand on this floor or anywhere else and advocate any such course as that. I say, the town of North Sydney is entitled to every convenience, and it has every claim on the department for any and every railway convenience it can or does enjoy; but it seems to me I have only to bring this matter to the notice of the House, to show hon. members, and, I hope, to impress the minister, at long last, with the absurdity of the course he is pursuing in this regard.

One point more, and I shall finish. I desire to say a word concerning the connecting of the trains from Montreal, and those running east. By the time-table, which I have in my hand, issued by the Intercolonial Railway, the train leaves the city of Montreal at 11.30 in the day, and reaches Truro, N.S., at 12.40 the following day. But passengers for points east of Truro, must remain at Truro for about twenty-two hours, until the train comes next day from Halifax to Truro to take them away. Now, why should this be the case? Why should not the minister so arrange matters that the time of the arrival of the train from Montreal at Truro should synchronize with the arrival of the train from Halifax at the same point, so that the passengers coming by the Montreal train could be picked up and carried down east? But, at the present time passengers coming by the eastern trains from Montreal, Quebec, St. John, Amherst and intermediate points must remain at Truro for twenty-two hours until the train comes from Halifax the next day. The train from the east passes Truro a little over two hours before the train from Montreal arrives at Truro, and, consequently, the passengers have to remain there nearly twenty-four hours.

That is evidently an absurd arrangement. I bring this matter to the notice of the minister in the hope that he will at once bring about a reform of the grievance of which we complain. I am glad this discussion has arisen, because it has enabled me to put these views before the House with the hope that the government, being put in possession of the facts by some one having personal cognizance of them, will at once take steps to give the public better accommodation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am not at all sorry that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) and the hon. gentleman who preceded him, have brought up this subject. Perhaps I might suggest that there is a direction in which both of these hon. gentlemen might do a great deal of useful missionary work by approaching some of the newspapers and some of their colleagues on the other side of the House, and endeavouring to convince them that the appropriations which have been asked for and which have been condemned in such unmeasured terms by financial critics of the government on the other side of the House, were not after all as large as they ought to have been. I would advise the hon. gentleman and his friends opposite to go to work as speedily as possible in that direction. The hon. gentleman is very indignant against the government and he has withdrawn his confidence from the railway administration. Now, Sir, precisely the same condition of things with regard to trains at Sydney and North Sydney is existing to-day as has existed for the last eight or ten years. But, the hon. gentleman has no excuse to offer, he finds no ground upon which an explanation can be offered of existing circumstances in the fact that the arrangements now going on are simply a continuation of the arrangements that have always existed. It may be true that the people of Sydney have not been treated, in connection with the train which runs up to North Sydney, with the consideration to which their importance entitles them. Well, the hon. gentleman had it in his power to present his complaints in that regard with a great deal of force, for many years; but, he did not do it, he had confidence in those who made these arrangements and who continued them, and I have not learned that he took a great deal of trouble to bring about better arrangements. If he did, and failed, he cannot, of course, seriously complain of this government for doing no more than his own political friends. The hon. gentleman fails altogether to recognize the fact that the management of the Intercolonial Railway by the present Minister of Railways and Canals has to be carried on under circumstances altogether different from those heretofore existing. The Intercolonial Railway was not equipped for doing the amount of business which it had to do under a less prosperous state of affairs.

An hon. MEMBER. This is a growing time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to acknowledge that this is a growing time, and so far as this government is responsible for the enormous increase in the prosperity of the country, I acknowledge that the hon. gentleman has a right to blame us because we have not done anything to extend the railway accommodation. The hon. gentleman will always find me willing to admit any responsibility with which I may fairly be charged.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the hours at Sydney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, you cannot regulate the running of trains covering 1,400 or 1,500 miles, as to their arrival and departure at every point over the entire length, so as to suit every section of the people. You have to take into consideration the needs and conditions of the various sections. The hon. gentleman asks why we do not get down to Truro earlier than we do. Well, the hon. gentleman does not know the reason, he is not familiar with the circumstances, and, therefore, he thinks we are to blame. He thinks we can name one hour just as well as another. But we cannot do so. Passengers leaving here (Ottawa) in the morning want to go down east making close and quick connections, and as a consequence, our train has to leave at a particular hour in order to make the morning connections. But, there are other difficulties in the way of making our express trains leave Montreal at night. We had to change the time for a while during the winter season, we either had to make that change or put on a ferry at Quebec, which would have been a very expensive business, and which we did not feel justified in doing by the extent of the traffic. Feeling that the expense would be more than we were justified in incurring, we made the next best arrangement that we could, which was to have morning connection with Ottawa and the western trains. Now, I want to say to the hon. gentleman that I have not treated the Board of Trade of Sydney with any lack of consideration, I have not treated the representations which those gentlemen made to me with disregard. On the contrary, I felt that there was much force in what they said, and I felt it would be right and proper that many of their requests, not all, should be acceded to. When did that interview take place, and when were these views presented? Last fall. Now, does the hon. gentleman imagine that it is possible for me to put my hand into the exchequer and to expend a number of thousands of dollars at my own sweet will, or even that it is possible for the government to do so? That would be quite possible for a private corporation, for a railway company who have always immediate control of their financial arrangements; they can make expenditures at any time which a government cannot do. But, I want to know what would have been the character of the criticisms passed upon the railway administration if we had spent a considerable sum in excess of the vote that parliament had given us, or even if we had applied for a Governor General's warrant for the purpose? My hon. friend himself would have condemned us in unmeasured terms. I do not think we could have got the money which would have enabled us to do more than we have done. We had to wait till the next, that is the present session of parliament. We did not ask last year for all that we should have liked to get, because this is a pretty large country, and we have to meet demands from all directions, from every section of the people. We have to regulate our requests for money from parliament according to the demands made upon us of all sorts and from all quarters. We are going to ask parliament this year for a substantial sum in order that we may better equip the Intercolonial Railway, and do what we think is necessary in the public interest, what we think is reasonably necessary in the interest of the localities the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and others throughout the entire service. Until we get the appropriation we cannot spend money. I think that ought to be abundantly clear to hon. gentlemen opposite. I have not lost a day. I have not lost an hour in connection with this matter. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that we should suspend all other business on the first day of the session and put a sum in the estimates for this purpose? If we did that I do not think that we would meet with any remarkable degree of success. When the hon. gentleman suggests that these things should be done promptly, he only voices a portion of the sentiments of the House. There are other hon. gentlemen in this House, and a large majority of the members of the House have questions engaging their attention which they think are just as important, and which they think call for speedy treatment just as much as the one that this hon. gentleman has brought up. We must not consider that our demand is the only one to be dealt with, and that it only needs consideration, but, we must have a regard for the general needs of the country. I do not think that I am open to the charge of being at all insensible to the urgent importance of very great improvement in the Intercolonial service. I am well satisfied, that, on the Island of Cape Breton, and in fact between Sydney and Truro it would be necessary that we should at once re-rail the road with heavier rails. Certainly Cape Bre-ton ought to be re-raild with heavier rails at once. I am of that opinion, and it has been forced upon me very much since the enormous increase in the traffic that has taken place, but, that great increase in the traffic did not occur until recently. There was not the evidence that the traffic would be so greatly enhanced at the last session of parliament, and if I had made the request to parliament for such a sum as I felt would be required then to be spent to do the work, although hon. gentlemen themselves may think it ought to have been asked for, I do not think that parliament would have considered the request a reasonable one, or that a sufficient case had been made out. There is a feeling in the House, and there is a feeling in some sections of the country against any very liberal expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. I do not think that any one imagined that the growth of the business would have been as considerable as it has been, and I think that only the actual facts which have been stated, very truly, by the hon. gentleman opposite, would have convinced parliament that any such large sums were really required to be expended upon the railway service. I can assure the hon. gentlemen, both of them, that I am sensible that a great deal requires to be done that has not been done on the Intercolonial Railway. I am proceeding with as much despatch in that direction as I think I can convince parliament will be prudent under the circumstances, and if my hon. friends will direct their energies towards enlightening their own friends in the House on the importance of this question I shall do what I can to enlighten and instruct my friends upon this side of the House in respect to it.

Mr. ANDREW B. INGRAM (East Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I have been enlightened somewhat on this question since this discussion has arisen this afternoon, and I cannot see why it requires any great expenditure to meet the wishes of the people who are complaining. I find here that there is a short branch line running to North Sydney from the main line running to Sydney, a distance of about six miles. At present there is an engine located at North Sydney which draws the train from the junction of the main line into North Sydney. All the additional expense that is necessary to meet the wishes of these gentlemen is simply that which would be involved in supplying additional coaches to carry the passengers from North Sydney to the main line in order that they may make connections with trains passing up and down the main line. Therefore, there is no expenditure at all necessary to meet the wishes of the people there. I find, that, at Sydney, in the last six months, they have paid $128,257.43 in freight and passenger charges, and that, at North Sydney, they have paid $34,669.50. In order to meet the convenience of the people of North Sydney this is really all that is necessary for the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to do. Therefore, as I stated before, there is no expenditure worth speaking of in connection with all that is necessary to meet their wishes. If the rest of the management of the Intercolonial Railway is like the management of this portion of it, I can understand why hon. gentlemen on this side of the House should complain of the way in which the road is being managed.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to enter into the details that have been brought up in the discussion, but, I simply wish to say that I am quite surprised at the harsh criticisms which have been made by some hon. members on the other side of the House of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals because, as everybody knows, the Intercolonial Railway was organized by Tory governments, it has been controlled by Tory governments for years, and it is still continued under the control of the Tory organization. Therefore, if complaint should be made, I think it should be made of some of the officials of the Tory persuasion, who are still at the head of it. I believe that when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals gets hold of the organization of the Intercolonial Railway, and brings to its administration the business ability that he is known to be possessed of, the Intercolonial will be subjected to the reform that it needs. But, until that is done I think the criticisms should rather come from hon. members on this side of the House, because they have certainly more complaint against the administration of the Intercolonial Railway than have hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting if the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) would let us know which side of the House he is on. We have had some recent indications that he was disposed to criticise, very sharply, hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. I am afraid that he will have to reform very much before he will be particularly welcomed here, and I do not think that is at all likely, considering the leadership he is following. This is a very grave and a very important question that has been brought to the attention of the House. I do not know any question that, it is more necessary, should receive attention at the hands of the House. I understand that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) took the ground of admitting that he is altogether at fault, and of admitting the truth of the statements made that the public business of the country has been interfered with and prevented from having that scope and verge that are desirable in the interest of the country. I understand the hon. gentleman to cry peccavi and to say—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot answer for the correctness of the hon. gentleman's understanding.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) did not cry peccavi?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can say is that I have misunderstood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I admitted that we were responsible in large part, for the present enormous improvement, in the general business of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend will want some better shelter than that before he will be able to justify himself in view of the admissions he has made, in the presence of the House, to-day, that he has altogether failed in the discharge of the duties of the high, the responsible and the important position that he holds as the Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. gentleman says that he is willing to assume responsibility for the great improvement in the trade and business of the country. Well, Sir, if so he is still the more to blame, inasmuch as he has not provided, in his department, for meeting that increased trade. I do not propose to discuss with him who is responsible, but, when he had before him the most obvious evidence as to the great importance of providing facilities in connection with the great industry that was provided for in this House at the last session, and which he had before him for two years, the hon. gentleman was in the most complete ignorance of what that would demand at his hands. More than a year ago I pointed out to the minister the immense importance it was that the government should adopt that policy in reference to the immense iron and steel industry now being started in Sydney. I pointed the minister to the great demand it would make on his department and the additional revenue that would be derived by the government in consequence. He cannot plead now that he was ignorant of it, because it was all told to him nearly two years ago. The deplorable condition of the business of that great enterprise, is the consequence of the minister's failure to do his duty and ask parliament for the necessary rolling stock that would enable him to grapple with this increased business. The minister (Mr. Blair) has to admit that he has entirely failed to discharge his duty. Why have we a Minister of Railways and why does the country employ a large staff of officers, except for the purpose of doing that which a railway management should do, and which the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway do, namely, having a man at their head who is able to anticipate what will be the demands upon the road so as to conduct the business of the country in the interests of the road, as well as in the interests of the people. It is the people of Canada who own the Intercolonial Railway, and therefore the minister is bound to do everything possible to make that road remunerative. One of the first qualities required in a Minister of Railways is that he shall have ability to gauge what the demand shall be so as to turn it to profitable account. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has given away his whole case and he stands to-day denuded of any excuse, except that he had not money enough. Whose fault is that? He has come before us with some very extraordinary demands and only on one occasion—and that certainly was very different from this—has he met with any difficulty. The House has voted him every dollar he has asked, and if the Intercolonial Railway is not in a condition to do the business of the country he, above all others, is responsible. The apologetic tone that he has adopted is, of course, calculated to take off the sharp edge of criticism, but I do not think it in the interests of the country that such a miserable plea as he has put forward in vindication of his utter failure to discharge his duties as a minister should be accepted by this House—I am quite sure it will not be accepted by the people of this country. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) wanted to purchase the Drummond County Railway and to make a deal in that transaction, he was quite ready to ask us for $7,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount has got up to $7,000,000 now, has it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount has got down from $7,000,000 to $6,000,000, because the Senate refused to give him the $7,000,000 and he went back and made a better bargain with the same men at a saving of $1,000,000 to the people of Canada. I give that as an instance to show that the minister was not thinking about the business of the country, but thinking rather about how he can best manipulate his party interests. If he believed a word of what the Minister of Finance said with reference to that great enterprise in Cape Breton, he would have realized that there would be an enormous demand made on the Intercolonial Railway. The gentlemen connected with that enterprise find themselves to a considerable extent paralyzed in their business after their great expenditure of capital, and that in consequence of the utter failure of the Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) knows that every dollar of surplus he can claim was not made on the Drummond County Railway—where a loss was incurred as could be abundantly established if we could get the facts—but made in the province of Nova Scotia and in the county of Cape Breton, where he leaves the rolling stock of the railway in such a condition as that it cannot meet the emergency. He stands to-day convicted out of his own mouth, of having totally misapprehended the duties and responsibilities of his position. He deserves the censure of every honourable and intelligent man for failing to discharge his plain and obvious duty to parliament and to the country.

Mr. ANGUS McLENNAN (Inverness). I agree with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) that the service on the Intercolonial Railway, which was adequate during the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite, is quite inadequate to-day. Indeed, I have personal knowledge of the fact that when the Conservatives were in power, the equipment of the Intercolonial Railway was more than ample to cope with the traffic then existing. To demonstrate the suddenness with which this increased traffic on the Intercolonial Railway has come, and to demonstrate the reasonableness of the statement of the minister (Mr. Blair), that the increased service was necessarily unforeseen, I shall quote the customs duties collected at the town of Sydney for the last three or four years and for the first six months of the present financial year. The customs receipts collected at Sydney are as follows:

1897.... ..	12,000
1898.... ..	11,000
1899	10,000

And for the half year of the present financial year, $82,883. So that if it continues for the next half of the year the customs collected at Sydney will be over $165,000, as compared with $10,000 the previous year. With regard to the pains taken by the present head of the department to see that the increased traffic on the Intercolonial Railway is provided for, I may say that the most important point on the eastern section of the Intercolonial Railway that needs to be looked after is the crossing at the Strait of Canso, and it is well known that for weeks past the Railway Department has had competent engineers inspecting and making a complete survey of the various favourable points on both sides of the Strait of Canso, in order to select a suitable and improved crossing. It has been found that like very many other features in the locating of the Intercolonial Railway, that the point of crossing at the Strait of Canso is thoroughly unfit for the increased traffic that is now carried on the road. This is only in keeping with the other points which I have indicated. With regard to the trains running into the town of North Sydney, I take it that the hon. gentlemen representing the county of Cape Breton are in sympathy with the protests of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) in view of the fact that they have offered no protest against the severe criticisms which that hon. gentleman offered against the management of the Intercolonial Railway for permitting the trains to run into that very important and progressive town. To show the importance of the town of North Sydney as compared with the town of Sydney before the present 'boom,' let us look at the comparative amounts of customs duties collected in the two towns in the last three years :

	Sydney.	North Sydney.
1896.....	$11,000	$13,000
1887.....	12,000	13,000
1898.....	11,000	14,000

And yet the hon. member for Richmond, simply because he resides in Sydney, and because the stopping of the train running into North Sydney would enable him to reach his home twenty minutes sooner, desires to deprive that important and progressive town of the train accommodation which it has had since the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that a very important line of steamships, running between the Island of Cape Breton and Newfoundland, has its terminus at North Sydney, where it connects with the Intercolonial Railway; and if North Sydney were deprived of its present train accommodation, this very important line of steamships would be deprived of proper connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and, therefore, the continent. A line of steamships running between the Island of St. Pierre, and carrying the French mails also connects with the Intercolonial Railway at North Sydney; and if that connection were also taken away, the passengers, mails and baggage would be detached from the ordinary train of the Intercolonial Railway, and side-tracked, so to speak, and have to be transferred from one train to another at North Sydney Junction. This would not be tolerated for a moment by the people most interested in the eastern portion of the Intercolonial Railway. The large and important county of Inverness, which I have the honour to represent, and the neighbouring county of Victoria, as is well known, supply North Sydney with the great bulk of the farm products consumed in that thriving town; and I, for my part, would therefore strongly object to that point being deprived of proper train accommodation, which would practically be the case if the main train were obliged to proceed to Sydney and side-track its North Sydney passengers, leaving them to be carried to North Sydney by an engine and solitary car. The town of North Sydney, with its trade and with its lines of steam communication with Newfoundland and St. Pierre, is far too important to be side-tracked in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Richmond, and, for my part, as I have just said, I would protest against anything of the kind. I must again express my surprise that the hon. members for the county of Cape Breton, who should be interested in the prosperity of the town of North Sydney, did not utter a word of protest against the proposal of the hon. member for Richmond. From my personal knowledge of the working of the Intercolonial Railway, ever since these large works have been established in and around the town of Sydney, the head of the department has been straining every nerve to prepare for the opening of the working season, for putting the track into proper condition. Necessary improvements have been in course of preparation for a number of weeks past, and when the working season opens, I have no doubt whatever that that portion of the Intercolonial Railway will be in first-class condition, and in keeping with the great and improved trade of the country.

Mr. W. C. EDWARDS (Russell). Mr. Speaker, I was not in the House when this question was introduced; but I understand that the debate is based substantially on a complaint that the car supply on the Intercolonial Railway is inadequate to the demands of the traffic. Well, I do not know that in that respect, the Intercolonial Railway is very different from the other railways in North America. I do not think there is one railway company in North America which has been able to build cars fast enough to supply the demands of the increased trade. You would not, I suppose, expect the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any subordinate of his, in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, to have greater perception of the needs of traffic, than the clever men who manage the very important railways of other parts of North America, as well as Canada. We certainly have at the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, just as able railway managers as are to be found in the world; and yet for the past year, the supply of cars on these railways has been utterly inadequate to the demands of traffic. The great difficulty last summer was that the companies were not able to build cars fast enough. We did not suppose for one moment that that difficulty would continue throughout the winter, but it has. Within the last two weeks, a car was asked for by my own company from one of the great railways of this country. The freight had been taken to the station and kept there for weeks, and, at last, it had to be taken away, and sent by other means, as we could not get a car. I do not think any railway manager nor any business man in the country ever supposed that there would be such a demand for cars as there has been. I know nothing of the conditions in the maritime provinces in this respect; but I am stating what I do know to be the conditions in this part of Canada, and throughout the rest of North America.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). Mr. Speaker, I am very glad, indeed, that complaints have come from the other side of the House of matters connected with the management of the Intercolonial Railway. I come from a part of the country which is considerably interested in the management of the Intercolonial, which is the only railway that traverses my county. It is really amusing to hear these complaints from the other side. These gentlemen know very well that during all the time of their administration the Intercolonial Railway was a political, and I might go further and say it was a party railway, administered on those lines, and I am sure there is no reason for these hon. gentlemen to find fault if this government has not made a complete change. I am glad that these complaints are brought before the House to-day, and I hope that the hon. Minister of Railways will give them his serious consideration, and that before long there will be a thorough change in the general management of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton. That management is simply disgraceful. I was glad to hear a moment ago hon. gentlemen opposite comparing the management of the Intercolonial Railway with that of the Grand Trunk Railway. It is not very long since the Grand Trunk Railway became a model railway, only since the last change in the general management; and it is high time a change should be made in the actual management of the road, and some one put in control who understands his business.

CANADIAN OFFICERS IN IMPERIAL SERVICE.

Mr. RICHARD TYRWHITT (South Simcoe). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to the fact that Militia Order No. 72, referring to the Canadian officers entering the Imperial service, has been cancelled by Militia Order No. 76 of 2nd inst. It is currently reported that some difficulty regarding conditions of offer made by the War Office has arisen. A great deal of interest is taken in this matter in the militia force, and consequently I would like to inquire whether the hon. minister is in a position to announce the reasons which have led to this change.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). It is true that an order was promulgated and has been withdrawn, because there was some slight misunderstanding at the time it was promulgated as to the terms under which commissions were granted. The question is now the subject of correspondence between this government and the Imperial government, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not press for further information. It would be impossible for me to give any more information than I am giving now.

Mr. EDWARDS.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

The House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to Her Majesty, and the motion of Sir Charles Tupper in amendment thereto.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). When I had the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of addressing the House on Tuesday, I was referring in my remarks to a point of very great importance connected with the administration of the financial and commercial affairs of this Dominion. I had alluded to the fact that in the speeches addressed to this House, and made throughout the country as well, the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite concerning the increase of prosperity, and more especially the increase of population, were not fair criticisms, and were not fair comparisons between the condition of affairs under the present government and the late government. For instance, I pointed to the fact that when the hon. Minister of Customs made a comparison between the imports of settlers' effects into Canada—which he said, and said correctly, was the best method we had to-day of gauging the influx of immigrants—he compared the year 1896 with the year 1899. I pointed out that it would have been more just and equitable if he had taken the whole three years of the Liberal party, 1897, 1898 and 1899, and compared that period with the last three years of the Conservative party, 1894, 1895 and 1896. Instead of taking the very best year of the Liberal party and the very worst of the Conservative party, it would have been more equitable and fair to take the last three years of each. If he had done that, instead of the 28 per cent increase in 1899 over 1896, he would have discovered that there was a large increase in the three Conservative years over the three Liberal years. By the figures I gave, I proved that in the last three years of Conservative rule the importations of settlers' effects amounted to $8,052,000, while in the three following years of Liberal rule they only amounted to $7,867,900, or $184,100 less than in the three preceding years. Therefore, instead of this government bringing in tens of thousands of people, with the 500 immigration agents they have engaged, the imports of settlers' effects were actually less during the three years of Liberal rule, which they are boasting were years of unbounded prosperity.

Then I pointed out the other fact, and an important fact, raised by the Minister of Finance, that in estimating the incidence of taxation, the best method of ascertaining the burdens of the people was to take the importations for home consumption and the revenue of the country and divide the one into the other, and you would find the percentage of the imposition of tax or the burden laid on the people. The hon. Minister of Customs says that it is only a rough and ready method, but the hon. Minister of Finance got the figures from him this year, and after elaborating them in great detail, he told us there was a saving of 2·02 per cent. But when you come to examine the records, when you take from the importations of home consumption this $6,360,000 worth of corn that these gentlemen improperly and unfairly, and without anything to guide them in the past, added to the imports for home consumption, although they were simply goods in transit from the United States passing through to Great Britain and other countries—when you deduct those and retain the coin and bullion, you find that comparing 1899 with the last two years of Conservative regime, instead of having 2·02 per cent of reduction, it dwindled down to 27-100th of 1 per cent per dollar of decrease in the taxation upon the people. Why, that is an infinitesimal sum. It is a quarter of a cent in round figures on a dollar's worth of imports.

I take those two years 1895 and 1896, because we had inaugurated a new tariff in 1894, which began with the beginning of the fiscal year of 1895. I omit 1897 and 1898 because these hon. gentlemen say that 1897 was largely under our tariff, and so it was. And they say that the preferential tariff did not have its full effect until 1899, and that is true. So, we are taking their best year, 1899, and comparing it with the last two years under the Conservative tariff, and we find that 17·36 is the rate of taxation under the tariff of 1899, and 17·63½ under that of 1895-6. So, instead of the boasts of the Minister of Customs that they were saving $2,600,000 in the taxes imposed on the people, and in two years had saved over $5,000,000, being true, there was not an atom of accuracy in that statement. It was barely one-seventh of the amount the hon. gentleman stated—that is, 27-100 part of one cent on the dollar of imports. These gentlemen, in presenting their financial statements to this country, are bound to present fair statements of the case to the people. I also referred to the fact that they had been parading through this country as the men who have reduced the taxation, and more than that, they have abolished taxes on hundreds of articles, making goods free, as the Minister of Customs told us the other night. He told us that they had made these goods free so that the manufacturers might have free raw material, and so, have an opportunity to compete against the manufacturers of other countries, and the consumers of the country cheaper goods. But what do we find? I will read the hon. gentleman's words again.

Why, because we believe in giving to the manufacturers of this country their raw material duty free, in order that they can compete with other manufacturers, and in order that the consumer in this country can get the benefit of it in the reduced price of goods—and he does get the benefit of it.

And he says: Here is a statement showing some of the chief articles made free of duty. And he made statements of imports amounting to $32,000,000. Why, every dollar's worth of these imports that he quoted were of goods made free by the Conservative party and not by the Liberal party at all:

Coal and coke.....	$ 6,846,030
Binder twine and articles for manufac- ture thereof	886,604
Raw cotton	3,110,497
Fruits, green	557,462
Indian corn	8,966,890
Flax-seed	1,062,753
Tobacco, raw, excise purposes.....	1,878,725
Rubber, crude	1,606,151
Lumber	2,899,864
Coin	4,201,396
Ores	116,487
	$32,132,859

We had made every one of these articles free before the Liberals came into power. But, I have the whole list of articles they made free, twenty-four articles; and if you take out three of them, barbed wire, binder twine and Indian corn, you will find that they are of the most insignificant character commercially, that their value, taking the whole list, which I will not read, is very small. But, let us take these three important articles, beginning with Indian corn. We have the evidence of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who is a sturdy supporter of the policy of the Liberal party, that it was a great mistake to take the duty off Indian corn. It competes with our coarse grains. But there is another point. These gentlemen told us that they were advocates of reciprocity, that they were going to have a reciprocity made with the United States. They spent six months, more or less, in attempting to negotiate a reciprocity treaty, and they failed, and no wonder, because they had thrown away the weapons they had used. They made corn free before they went there. We made the proposal to the people of the United States: If you will let our barley into the United States free, we will let your corn free into Canada. There was mutual advantage. But, these gentlemen threw away the weapon with which they had been provided, and when they went, they had nothing to offer for reciprocity—just as they are doing to-day in regard to England. We propose in our resolution, to which I shall refer later, that we shall have reciprocal trade relations. England is willing; but these gentlemen say: No; out of the kindness of our hearts, as we are rich people, we will make you a present of two millions of dollars a year, taking the duties off goods you send us; and we do not want anything in return; we are free traders and we refuse to ask you to in any way agree to a policy of protection which would benefit the colonies and build up the dominions of Her Majesty in every quarter of the globe. So, I say these gentlemen have not been able to demonstrate what they have stated in a general way, they have not been able to give any ground for the boastings of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs. Take up the Toronto Globe, day after day, and you will find that they say: We have made raw materials free; we have taken the duties off many articles. I say the list of articles they have made free is insignificant commercially, and does not justify the boast they have made. I read the other night the two lists of articles, those that we made free in 1894, though we had an enormous free list before, and the list of articles for general consumption on which we had largely reduced the duty, and, as I pointed out, perhaps we reduced them too much for a protective government. But, we always made this proviso—that if experience demonstrated that the duty is cut down to too low a figure, we are bound as protectionists to increase it to such a rate as will give protection to Canadian manufacturers. Take the case of agricultural implements. In 1896, our imports on agricultural implements were $446,000, and in 1899 they were $1,625,000, or $1,179,000 more than in 1896. I said: These goods should be made at home; we are capable of making them, and it is to our interest that they should be manufactured here in Canada; and if a man wants a McCormick reaper, or an American implement of any kind, then, as we have done by our tariff in other manufactures, it should be made to the interest of these manufacturers and that they should be compelled to come over here and give our people the benefit of manufacturing these goods here and giving employment to Canadian labour, thus retaining the advantage for ourselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I pointed out further, that in the case of the Standard Oil Company, they said they had saved $85,000. I pointed out that we imported last year 9,360,000 gallons, and that we produced, in this country, an estimated quantity of 10,500,000 gallons of oil, making, in round figures, 20,000,000 gallons. I also pointed out from copies of invoices which I produced, that within the past few months they have increased the prices 3 cents per gallon on every kind of Canadian oil, and the same on imported oils. Why, Sir, on the 20,000,000 gallons, that makes a loss to the people of Canada, and a gain to the Standard Oil Company, of $600,000 per annum, or $50,000 monthly. Mr. Speaker, that Standard Oil Company has robbed and plundered the people of the United States, and it has come over here and taken the railroad companies by the throat. It has taken the government by the throat, too, and has dictated the policy that the government should have in regard to coal oil, and the duty placed upon coal oil, and more important still, the regulations which govern the handling and importation of coal oil. The disclosures made before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council show the complete hold they have upon the great railway corporations of this country. And, what have the government done since these disclosures? The investigations started a long time ago. The charges were made by merchants in Montreal and in Hamilton. And where is the government? The government have not moved their hand yet to remedy these grievances. If they have not the power, parliament is in session to-day and willing to give them the power to control large, and grasping, and robbing corporations like the Standard Oil Company of the United States. But the people of Canada are not protected in this regard.

Then, with regard to sugar in this country. I pointed out that these men who are boasting that they have $5,000,000 or more of a surplus, and that next year they propose to have $7,500,000, I pointed out that this surplus represents so much taxes. There are some taxes that are a burden upon the people, such are taxes on an article not produced in this country. We put a tax on sugar that had been free for a long time, but owing to our financial necessities, we had to put a duty upon it. We might fairly ask that the government should abolish that duty to-day. They do not do so, but instead they have increased the duty on sugar. Under the tariff of 1896, as compared with the tariff of to-day, they have increased the tax on the people of Canada by the amount of $731,000. Then, with regard to agricultural implements. I pointed out that they have had these goods made in the United States, and some other countries, but principally in the United States, for the benefit of the American mechanic, the American citizen, and the American manufacturer. I pointed out still further, the other day, that these gentlemen, when they have interests of their own, look after them very carefully. In respect to biscuits, for instance, we find that instead of there being an increased importation, there has been a decrease, showing that they have been carefully looking after their interests.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we have a good deal of prosperity in this country, and the whole of the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite are a chorus of jubilation over our large imports, over our large exports, over our increase of business. Now there is one very important factor in regard to our increased prosperity, that I would like to mention. When we were in power, from 1878 to 1896, we had nearly one-half the population of Canada continually decrying the country, running down the country, threatening that if they came into power they would destroy this robber tariff of protection. To-day what do we find? The Liberal party in power, the Conservative opposition, loyal to the interests of the country, no member of the opposition decrying the country, no member of the opposition but is willing to say a good word for it, willing to help on the policy of protection, the policy of assistance to our industries, and to assist in building up the country. Yet, Sir, the very opposite was the case when we were in power. We had nearly one-half the population antagonizing the policy of the government, and antagonizing the best interests of the country. To-day we have a united people, everybody praising up the country, everybody assisting in its development. We are rejoiced to know this country is prospering, because we are as much interested in it as hon. gentlemen opposite. We have as much money invested in commercial corporations as they have, and we have as much interest to see that these are prosperous; we are as much interested in seeing the country go ahead as they are. Therefore, this is one of the great factors to-day in the country's prosperity for which these gentlemen claim all the credit.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another important matter we must consider, and which the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) ought to have considered, because he has all the material at his hand for that purpose. He has told us that our imports have very largely increased. But, Mr. Speaker, he might have told us, though he did not tell us, whether that increase is due to the larger quantity of goods or to the higher value. He has not told us that prices have gone up, that instead of an article costing $1. in many cases it costs $2, so that if the imports of that article have doubled in value they have not doubled in quantity. The minister had all the means of information at his hand, but he has not given that information to us. Now, Sir, I will give you some figures referring to that point, and, I think, they are of great importance as showing that although the imports of the country have increased the quantity in many instances has not increased, but simply the values. I have in my hand the Monthly Summary of the Commerce and Finances of the United States, dated June, 1899. There is here a list of the wholesale prices of the leading articles at different periods, and it has been made with the greatest care, and is official and accurate. For instance, when they come to coke, they quote the prices at the ovens in the Connellsville region, in tons of 2,000 pounds. When they come to pig-iron, they give the prices for cash at Pittsburg and at Birmingham, Alabama. I will just quote two periods, showing the rise of prices in the United States, August 3, 1898, and July 26, 1899, just about a year later. For instance, in Bessemer pig, the prices on August 3, 1898, were $10.25 and $10.35; and the prices on July 26, 1899, were $20.75, exactly double in value. Then take Bessemer pig, per long ton, as it is produced at the Southern, No. 2 foundry, at Birmingham, Alabama. At Birmingham, Ala., the price on August 3, 1898, was $7.25 per long ton, and on July 26, 1899, it had increased to $15 and to $15.50. Then, take steel. The prices of steel bars on the corresponding dates, per 100 pounds, were 95 cents to $1, and $2 to $2.25 respectively. They more than doubled their value in twelve months. Steel billets were quoted at $14.75 per ton at the earlier period and at $33 to $34 for the later period. The same article more than doubled in value. Steel rails were quoted at $17.50 to $18 per ton, and the latest quotation, July 12, 1899, gives the price as $30 per ton, not quite double in value. So, I say that the hon. Minister of Customs, with all that information in his hands, did not inform us, as he should have done, what part of the increase in the importations was due to increased prices and not to increased importations. Although there may have been an increase in the quantities in many things, we should have known what proportion of the increased importation was due to increased quantities, and what proportion was due to increased prices. We find that all these articles, which are bought by, and which enter into the consumption of the farmers and the mechanics, have increased in price and that the farmers, the mechanics and the people have to pay the increased prices of these raw materials. Then, we ask: What about the articles that we have to sell? Have they increased in price in the same proportion? I have a list here of the prices of the articles that we have to sell, and I find that there is no corresponding increase in the prices of these articles. We will take wheat. No. 2 red winter wheat sold, on August 4, 1898, at 72 cents and 73½ cents per bushel, while on July 27, 1899, it sold at 75½ and 76½ cents. Oats, on the same dates, brought 27½ cents to 28 cents and 28½ cents, respectively, remaining at the same prices. Lard, per 100 lbs., sold at $5.50, and it went up to $5.60. Mess pork, $9.75 to $10 and $9.50 to $10 per barrel. We find that those who have had to pay increased prices for the raw materials to which I have previously referred have received no corresponding benefit in regard to the prices of the articles that they have to sell. It may be said that the prices of farm products have fluctuated. But, if, to-day, there may be a high price for butter, to-morrow, butter may be down. I am quoting these figures of the prime products of the farmer to show that the farmer is not receiving an increased price, as a general rule, for the products he has to sell. Now, we will take family beef. Last year the price was $10.50 per barrel and the highest was $11. On July 27, 1899, the lowest price was $9.50, and the highest, $10.50. Coming back to these articles in the line of metals, take pig-iron warrants; the price was $6.62½ per ton in the former period and $14 per ton in the latter period. Lake copper was 11.50 cents per pound in the former period, and it increased to 18.50 cents per pound in the latter period. Lead increased from 3.93½ cents per pound to 4.53 cents; spelter (zinc) from 4.55 cents per pound to 6.10 cents; tin plates, Bessemer steel, I.C., 14x20 per box, 100 lbs., from $3.85 to $4.62½. All these articles that we do not produce in the country, or produce to limited extent, which we need for our own manufactures are increased in value in this country, while the productions of the country have not been increased. I am not blaming the government if the prices of these products have gone up, I am not blaming the government if they have not been able to do what they were boasting of being able to do in saying that when the Liberals came into power the prices of products had increased. But, I say that these hon. gentlemen, when boasting of the great prosperity of the country, should take note of these facts and learn that the prosperity that they are boasting of is not of such a favourable character as they would have us believe. More than that, these enormous receipts and these still more enormous expenditures are proceeded with to-day on the basis and on the supposition that there is to be an era of continued prosperity. I think, Sir, as I shall have occasion to show, before I sit down, that, in this matter, they are making a great mistake in not paying attention to the warning afforded by the experience of the past. Hon. gentlemen have been utterly oblivious of any considerations for the future. The money is coming in, and the money is going out, and they must spend and squander and scatter it in every direction.

There are one or two matters that I was going to refer to in regard to the prices of articles used by the farmers of the country, which I omitted to do, and, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will go back to them now. I said, that, in the case of binder twine, these hon. gentlemen had made a great boast that they had made binder twine free. The Conservative party had put the duty on binder twine down to the lowest figure, almost, of any manufactured articles, 12½ per cent. The present government made it free after an interval. Well, then they said: We have made binder twine free, and in this way great benefits have been conferred on the people. If the Canadian farmer had received the full benefit of the duty under the tariff it would only have been from ½ to 6-8 or ¼ of a cent per pound. Binder twine was imported at from 5 cents to 6 cents per pound. It was made here and sold at from 5 cents to 6 cents per pound. We find, Mr. Speaker, that last year, the binder twine made by the government was sold for 4 cents or 5 cents per pound and that this year the price was 7 cents per pound.

Mr. WOOD. Seven and a half cents.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. Last year or this year?

Mr. WOOD. Last year.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that, this year, the sales were made at from 6 cents to 7 cents a pound. But, what had the farmer to pay? The farmer had to pay from 12 cents to 13 cents and 14 cents a pound. I know, of my own personal knowledge that the farmers of Ontario had to pay that price. The men who sold it to them and who got it from the government got their own enormous and unjustifiable profit from it, and the people derived no advantage. But on the contrary they were robbed. When it is said that binder twine should be cheaper than when there was a duty upon it, hon. gentlemen say: Oh, but there was a war in Manila, and that accounted for the rise in the price. They destroyed the manufacturing industries of Canada by their policy. They handed over the control of the products of the Ontario prison and of the Kingston penitentiary to the same crowd of chaps, Hobbs, of London, Bate, of Ottawa, and these other men who control the price in Canada and who made an arrangement with the manufacturers of the United States, for a consideration, no doubt, by which these men should not come into Canada and interfere with their trade and their price. There was a combination in the United States, and that combination arranged and fixed the prices. The same arrangement was made in Canada and the prices were fixed here so that the Canadian consumer had to pay more for his binder twine than under a protective duty. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that there was a war in Manila, and that the prices of the raw material went up. I have from this same book a report of the prices of manila and sisal and jute. I have taken the price for the manilla in the month of January, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898, and I find that the price of manila was—I do not quote the prices of the others, but they are relatively the same—the price of manila in the month of January for these years was as follows:

1894	5½c. to 5½c.
1895	4½c. to 4½c.
1896	4½c.
1897	4½c.
1898	4½c.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). What was it in 1899?

Mr. WALLACE. The war was over in 1899.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, it was not. What was it in 1899, please?

Mr. WALLACE. This report does not give 1899.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is very essential.

Mr. TAYLOR. In 1899, it was 5½ cents.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). You cannot show that by any report you have.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was laid down at Kingston Penitentiary for that, according to the report of the Auditor General.

Mr. WALLACE. I knew it did not vary much, because I have here the price for a portion of the year. I have here a statement taken from the Auditor General's Report by the hon. gentleman from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), and according to it the total cost was $39,984, and the average cost per pound was 5½ cents, delivered in Kingston.

Mr. McMULLEN. And bought the years before.

Mr. TAYLOR. Bought last June.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, it was not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). That is not the raw material from which was manufactured the twine that has been sold at from 10 to 14 cents a pound.

Mr. WALLACE. I can tell the hon. gentleman, that in 1898, when the highest prices were paid for binder twine in this country, that every pound of that raw material out of which that twine was made was purchased before the war started, and, therefore, was not and could not be influenced in a single particle by the war in the Philippines. The hon. gentleman need not pretend that the price in 1898 could in any degree be affected by that. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that the course of the government in making these articles free of duty was one that was directly contradictory to the best interests of the people of Canada.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock, I was referring to the fact that the expenditure and the receipts were both abnormally large—that the government were spending with a reckless hand as if the era of good times would never cease. In my opinion the government are criminally reckless and extravagant. They know that during those times when the revenue is large, they should economize and restrict not only their capital expenditure, but their current expenditures. But instead of that, we find them going on increasing their expenditures in every direction, in direct violation of the pledges that they had made to the people in their convention in 1893, and in opposition to the best interests of the country. They had pledged themselves to reduce the public expenditure. They held up their hands in holy horror when they said: 'This wicked Tory government is expending from $36,000,000 to $38,000,000 per annum in the current expenditure and $3,000,000 or $4,000, 000 on capital account.' As the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) very tersely put it, the people were being 'bled white.' It was an expenditure, he said, that was utterly unjustifiable. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said: 'If we do not economize and reduce the expenditure by millions, and if we do not reduce the public indebtedness within three years, then, gentlemen, put us out.' The three years are up, and I presume that we will take his advice and put them out at the very first opportunity we can get.

Mr. WOOD. You would like to, I know, but you cannot do it.

Mr. WALLACE. We would like to, but we are patriotic enough to desire to let the present government remain in office if they are doing their duty by the country, but we realize that they have violated every pledge they made at the convention of 1893. What did they say about the public expenditure? Have we not got on record the speeches, the declarations, the resolutions that were passed at that convention, and the resolutions that were not passed but proposed in this House, and supported by every member of the Liberal party?

Let any gentleman take up the estimates and the supplementary estimates, and the further supplementary estimates of last year, and the railway resolution and the bridge resolutions, and the subsidies voted for various things, and he will find an expenditure that never has been equalled. Of course, the year when the contract was let for building the transcontinental railway, there was a big enterprise entered into, but taking the ordinary current expenditure, what do we find? Take the main estimates for 1899-1900 of those gentlemen who were declaring everywhere a consolidated revenue expenditure of $38,000,000 was extravagant, and $36,000,000 too much. Senator Mills said they could reduce it by $4,000,000 and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said they could reduce it by $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, and other hon. members pledged themselves to reduce it in every direction. Well, what do we find? We find that the estimates voted for the current year were $46,286,550, that the supplementary estimates were $5,497,000, and the further supplementaries, $12,451, making a total in these alone of $51,796,000. But, that was not all, or nearly all. Here is an expenditure voted by parliament exceeding anything ever voted before. In addition to that there was one year's grant to the city of Ottawa for beautifying and adorning that city, of $60,000, the Drummond County Railway purchase, $1,600,000 and the amount voted for the construction of the Quebec bridge and other bridges, $1,230,000.

Mr. WOOD. Which has never been paid.

Mr. WALLACE. Did the hon. gentleman expect it would not be paid when it was voted?

Mr. WOOD. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, he had better keep quiet and talk about something he does know something about. As the hon. gentleman does not know anything about it, I will tell him something about it, and I am sure he will be delighted to have a little information. Either these enterprises which were subsidized were going on or the government knew that they would not go on, and were simply bamboozling the people. You can take either horn of the dilemma you choose. If the government voted the money expecting the work would go on, then they were responsible for that undertaking. If, on the other hand, it was done just for the purpose of bluff, then, I say the government is still more open to censure.

But, there were railways to be built. A few years ago the government adopted the plan of giving a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the assistance of railroads whose construction was approved of. Some people think that that is too much. The circumstances that would have justified this subsidy seven or eight or ten years ago, in the opinion of many people, would not justify it to-day, because we have done pretty well in every province towards the construction of railways. The opinion is beginning to prevail—you see it in Manitoba and the North-west and everywhere—that railroads should be treated as commercial undertakings, and be justified as such before their construction is entered upon. Yet, in the face of that opinion, we find this government doing what? Doubling the amount of subsidy given for the construction of railways. Formerly the subsidy was $3,200, and they doubled that amount. Some people say: Oh, but the price of steel rails has gone up. Well, Mr. Speaker, the price of steel rails had not gone up when the government adopted this policy. On the contrary, the price was lower than it had ever been in the history of the world. It was down to $17.50 and $18 per ton when the government adopted this policy of doubling the amount of subsidy for the railways. I say that that was a reprehensible and altogether unnecessary policy. I say that it left open the door for the government to improperly manipulate these matters. They give a railway $3,200 per mile, with the option, under certain conditions, of doubling that amount or increasing it by some further amount up to double the amount, certain conditions being required which the government could easily obtain. What did the government do? Last session, in addition to the 51½ million dollars expenditure on consolidated revenue, and nearly $2,000,000 additional for the

Mr. WALLACE.

Drummond County and so forth, and a million and a quarter for the Quebec and other bridges, they voted 220 miles of railway subsidy at $6,400 per mile, making $1,400,000, and 1,428 miles at $3,200, making $4,569,000, or a total railway subsidy of $5,977,000.

In addition to that, in the case of these 1,428 miles of railway, for which they gave a subsidy of $3,200 per mile, they provided that they might double the subsidy under certain conditions, so that they assumed a further responsibility of $4,569,000. This is not all. They voted to the Grand Trunk Railway for ninety-nine years $140,000 per year, which at 3 per cent represents a capital of $4,660,000. They gave a contribution to the Pacific cable, or offered it; but, as that is a guarantee, and in my opinion, quite a commendable one, I will not censure them for it. I do not think it would require any payment to be made, or, if a payment were made for the first year or so, it would be a small amount. What do these figures come to? Sixty millions of dollars. These pledges made directly, that may or may not become payments, represented $60,800,000. And this is the party that, when in opposition condemned the expenditure of thirty-eight millions and three or four millions, or thirty-six millions and three or four millions—say forty or forty-two millions including both capital account and consolidated revenue account during the average years of Conservative rule. So, I say these gentlemen who came into power, violated every pledge they had made, and the Minister of Customs said: You are not to be bound by what is said outside, no matter how great may be the individual who said it, but you are only to be bound by resolutions passed solemnly in convention. Take their resolutions as passed in convention. I have the report of their convention here. The resolutions passed condemn the government of that day and pledge the party now in power to reduce both the annual expenditure and the expenditure on capital account; and, instead of that, they have enormously increased both, without the necessities of the country requiring that to be done. I just call attention, in passing, to the extraordinary morality involved in the statements of the Minister of Customs. If, as he says, we are not to form our judgment of the party by the statements of individuals no matter how eminent, what do these men mean by going over the country and making statements as to their policy? We are to pay no attention, according to that hon. gentleman, to individual opinions, because the party is not bound in any way by the statements of individuals. I say, Mr. Speaker, that is bad morality, it is bad policy, and it is generally demoralizing to the community.

Take another example of their extravagance, which they parade as a sample of their excellent management. They say:

Look at the Yukon, we spent large sums of money in governing the Yukon and have governed it without costing the country a dollar. Well, Mr. Speaker, I contend that the customs revenue of the Yukon is as much public money of the people of the Dominion as the customs revenue collected in the city of Toronto, or the city of Montreal or any other centre. I contend that the same is true of the post office departments of the Yukon and of the receipts from all sources of Dominion revenue. Yet they tell us that in one year, 1898-9, the revenue of the Yukon was $1,753,000, and the expenditure $1,674,000. Just consider that, Mr. Speaker—the government of the Yukon country cost $1,674,000 last year. I am told they have not built a mile of road for it. And we know they have not. There are too many witnesses on this subject for us to doubt that there never was a portion of Canada so utterly misgoverned as the Yukon country. I have no doubt that if the government of British Columbia, accustomed as it is to dealing with mining matters, had had control of the government of the Yukon, they would have governed it infinitely better for one-tenth of the money that was expended by this government. Just consider for a moment—$1,674,000, for the government of how many people? Say 16,742. That would be a cost of $100 per head. But, suppose there are twice that many—and there are not—that would be $50 per head for governing the people. Now make a comparison. We have in Manitoba and the North-west Territories an empire in extent, reaching from near the Lake of the Woods to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, more than a thousand miles from east to west and hundreds of miles from north to south—an empire, as I have said, and the basis of our hopes for a great future for Canada. We have two governments there, the government of Manitoba and the government of the North-west Territories. We have at least 350,000 people, it is estimated, within those boundaries. The government of Manitoba expended, in round numbers $700,000, and that of the Territories $300,000. That is about $1,000,000 expenditure for 350,000 people. And what do they do for that? They have their legislatures, they have their educational departments, with public and other schools, they have their public works, they have the administration of justice, they make roads, they have to deal with immigration, they have to open up and improve this great empire—and they do it all for about $1,000,000 for 350,000 people. Well, take, on the other hand, this little crowd in the Yukon—mostly foreigners, by the way—and call them 16,000 in number, though I do not believe there are that many; or say even 32,000. If there are 16,000, it takes $100 a head to govern them, against about $3 per head for the North-west Territories. And for this expenditure of $1.

674,000, what did the government do? We know that they have refused to permit an investigation, though there never was a more definite statement made in this parliament of wrong-doing by a minister and every one of the crowd. We know that new disclosures are being made from day to day. And, in the face of that, in the face of the extravagance we know, the corruption which has been charged and which has been proved, we find these men refuse an investigation, though they come here and boast of the economical management of the Yukon country because, as they say, it has not cost the country a dollar. Why, Mr. Speaker, such a statement so utterly misleading and wide of the mark never was made in parliament, I say, Sir, that the government are reprehensible in not governing that country more economically, in not governing it with greater discretion, and in refusing to permit the investigation which was demanded. It is true, they had further schemes of rascality. It is true that in the face of the pledge that they made in this little red book at their convention in 1893, that the public lands were to be kept for the people, that none of them were to be given to railroads or corporations, still, without the knowledge of parliament, without the consent of parliament, without the sanction of law, without obeying those rules laid down by the statutes of the country, that they should submit to public tender the construction of the Yukon Railway, a railway to begin nowhere and ending nowhere, but a wheel barrow tramway without any objective point or any starting point, to be built contrary to law, observing none of the conditions required by law, letting nobody know that the government intended to build that road, giving nobody an opportunity of tendering for the contract, violating, I say, every rule that parliament had established—they undertook to build that road in violation of the pledge they made, that the public lands were to be kept for the settler, and they proposed to hand over 3,750,000 acres of land to Mackenzie & Mann, for the construction of that road. They said it would not cost the people of the country a dollar. They handed over to those gentlemen valuable lands, so valuable that they considered them worth $10 per acre, which would make the 3,750,000 acres of land worth $37,000,000. We do not value them at that price; but it just shows what they considered to be the value of land in that country. We opposed handing over to railroad companies lands in the North-west that would be of no value whatever, without the construction of railroads, lands that would be valued at only $1 or $2 an acre. But here they were going to hand over 3,750,000 acres worth $10 an acre, to a company, violating that resolution which they themselves had adopted, that not an acre of land was to be given away in this country, except to the actual settler.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other matters. I have read in one of the speeches, what an hon. gentleman said about the advantages of the construction of the Crow's Nest Railway. One of the ministers also said that this was one of the greatest schemes ever concocted for making money, and that the government would be reprehensible if they did not undertake it. In the first place, they paid $2,000,000 more than the former government had agreed to get the road built for. In the next place, the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, have both said that $750,000 a year had been received in revenue from the construction of that road. Well, I hunted up the evidence, so far as I could, and what do I find? In 1897, before the road was built, the customs revenue was $380,273 in those ports of entry that may be fairly said to be tributary to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. In 1899, when the railway was built, the customs revenue was $377,309, or $3,000 less than it was in 1897, before the road was built. Now I would like some of those hon. gentlemen to explain where they get that $750,000. They will not get one-tenth of it, or one-twentieth of it. There is another point in connection with the building of this Crow's Nest Pass Railway. It is a well-known fact that not the men who built the road, but an intermediary power got the principal benefits from its construction. The Premier of British Columbia, the Hon. Joseph Martin, made a statement within a few days, that if they had not perpetrated that deal, as he called it, they could have run British Columbia for 50 years without taxation, but simply with the proceeds of the subsidies given to those intermediaries. That is the statement of the responsible Premier of the province of British Columbia, that if this Crow's Nest Pass deal had not gone through, they could have run the province of British Columbia without taxation for 50 years. Now, I just submit that statement, without endorsing it. If Mr. Martin is wrong, if he has exaggerated, and I do not believe he has exaggerated a particle, what a state of affairs it discloses? It is not the men, not the corporation who built the road and got $2,000,000 more for building it then they asked, who reaped the benefit, but the benefit was reaped by some other parties, intermediary parties, who are the bosses of the machine of the Liberal party, men who, I presume, are supplying the money when money is wanted for the wrongful, and improper, and corrupt purposes, and are able to shell out when requested—these are the men who reap the benefit in the construction of that road. That is the statement made by the Premier of British Columbia, that those men are getting that advantage, and not the people of British Columbia, not the people of the Dominion of Canada; it is those intermediaries who got this franchise, and who are to-day rolling in wealth. A minister of the Crown said that it was estimated that the value of that land, through which the road was passing, was $30,000,000 or $40,000,000. I have no doubt that the value of the concessions to these intermediaries was what the Minister of Customs said it was, $30,000,000, or $40,000,000. But the people of Canada have not got the benefit, the railway company that built it, has not got the benefit, the people of British Columbia have not got the benefit of it either.

Now, there is another matter to which I wish briefly to refer, and which is, in my opinion, one of the most important questions before the people of Canada to-day, that is the question of preferential trade. The lines dividing the two political parties are clear and decisive on that question, and I presume that is the important question in our politics now. The position of the Conservative party is clearly laid down in the resolution which was moved by the leader of the opposition the other day, and which we have now under consideration. The Minister of Customs, in alluding to it in his speech, the other day, I think was very unfair, and I will tell him why. He has misrepresented the attitude of the Conservative party on that question. There is no necessity for misrepresentation, we desire to fight fair, we desire to have the issue plainly and clearly understood, as between the two political parties, and we are prepared to take the consequences, as, I think, we ought to do. Now, what does the Minister of Customs say? I have quotations where he says the same thing in his speech at three different times:

The Conservative party have now committed themselves, so that if they obtain power at the next election they will wipe the preference law from the statutes of Canada, and give no preference to the mother country. We know where we stand therefore.

Now, the resolution moved by the leader of the opposition, is as follows:

This House is of opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in and commerce between these countries, and would thus promote and maintain the unity of the empire; and that no measure of preference which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered as final or satisfactory.

That resolution meets, at any rate, with my cordial approbation as one representative of the people in parliament. The hon. Minister of Customs says:

The Tory party in this House fight against giving the additional preference—and not only that, but give us to understand that if they are restored to power, will wipe that preference off the statute-book. Sir, let them stand by their colours.

We intend to, and we do not intend to permit ourselves to be misrepresented. I was reading, yesterday, a speech delivered by

Mr. Chamberlain in the British House of Commons on a resolution that was moved stating that it was desirable, in the interest of the empire, that the colonies should be admitted to some representation in parliament. I think, in that regard, there is a dividing line between the two parties. We read that a member of the government is over in the old country, that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) is making arrangements for such representation in the Imperial parliament. We can well believe that it is so, knowing as we do, the magnificent cheek, if we may call it by that name, of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Sir Charles Tupper made a speech last Saturday evening, in Quebec, and Mr. Chamberlain made a speech, the day before yesterday in the House of Commons, in London, and both of these speeches are remarkable for the similarity of the sentiments they expressed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes. What does Mr. Chamberlain say? He says:

It is absurd to suppose that self-governing colonies, like Canada, would sacrifice their independence for the sake of a single vote in the House of Commons. We are not going to interfere in the domestic affairs of the colonies. Nor are they going to interfere in ours.

That is the programme laid down by Sir Charles Tupper in Quebec.

I have never advocated, as has been reported, the formation of an Imperial Zollverein, but I have pointed out that, if there were to be any kind of fiscal arrangement with the colonies, I believed the only form that would meet with the slightest favour would be an Imperial Zollverein, in which there would be free trade between the portions of the empire and duties as against strangers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE (reading)—

At any rate, the suggestion must originate with the colonies. There is no suggestion from ourselves. The present resolution is premature, is necessarily academic, and might be mischievous.

With which I entirely agree.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. And the resolution was then withdrawn. Now, Sir, Mr. Chamberlain made another speech, some time ago, in which he took exactly the same ground. I do not think that his views, so far as I can see, have undergone any change, but, I believe that he has held to the same opinion that he expressed several years ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. I have here a copy of a speech taken from the Toronto Globe of the 9th of April, 1898. It is just two years ago since this speech was delivered. The Globe says:

The recent speech of the Secretary of State for the Colonies before the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce was one of the most important speeches that Mr. Chamberlain has ever delivered.

What does he say in that speech? It is quite lengthy and I will just read a few extracts. He says:

There is another duty which, I think, is incumbent upon the British government, and that is to draw closer our colonies to the sister nations of our race across the seas, and to seek in our own family the strength and support which we shall never find from foreign nations.

Events have very fully justified that prophetic statement. He says still further:

Our policy is to bind the colonies closer to us by all means in our power, and if not now, yet to pave the way for a future union which will be closer than anything that is now practicable. We shall not attempt—that would be foolish—we shall not attempt to put pressure upon our colonists to go one step further than they themselves desire to go. It is not for us to take the initiative. We would rather follow the lead; but what I think already accomplished is to convince them that wherever they live, however far their home may be from the centre and from the motherland, we, at any rate, are prepared to meet them more than half way in any approach which they make to us, in any desire which they may express for their closer union; and, gentlemen, it will come, if not in our day, then in that of our successors.

He says still further:

In what form I know not—it would be foolish to attempt to predict. It may be in the shape of commercial union—of the Imperial Zollverein, which I do not think to be so absurd as do some political economists; it may be in the shape of some Imperial council, which will represent the federation of the British races, and which has been advocated by men as different in other respects as the late Mr. Forster, Lord Rosebery and Lord Salisbury.

But, further, and I think this is a very important declaration:

But, in whatever way it may be presented to us, we shall not be deterred either by the economic pedantries or the selfishness which is a virtue with some politicians, from giving favourable consideration to any proposals which our brethren across the seas may make to us.

The initiative must come from the colonies, and they are not going to be guided by any economic pedantries. Proceeding, he says:

In such a consideration I do not believe the English people will keep a strict account of profit and loss—that they will seek to be assured of a present pecuniary gain in return for so much concessions on their part. No; I think they will look, and look wisely, rather to a future time when we shall find our reward; and that the splendid isolation with which our foreign critics sometimes taunt us will be transformed into a close reliance of the British race, and when the sons of Britain throughout the world shall stand shoulder to shoulder to defend our mutual interests and our common rights.

He had a prophetic vision two years ago, and we could have realized that these prophedies would have turned out true within these two years?

Meanwhile, let us rejoice in all the evidence that we received of the growth and prosperity of our colonies; let us sympathize with them in their distress; let us show that we regard them as part of ourselves—that the sea only separates us, as the highway separates us from our nearest neighbours.

I have endeavoured to speak to you, and perhaps to indicate and suggest even more than I stated, about the policy which we think it right to pursue in reference to our colonial system, and to the attacks which are being made upon it. We have, as I have said before, to hold our own. Our policy may be called a new departure, but we hope to deal with new circumstances. If we are to defend our trade, which is attacked from so many quarters, and in so many ways, we must give up the old policy of apathy and indifference for one of initiative and resolution. Markets are closed to us, sometimes by hostile tariffs, sometimes by hostile commercial occupation. Our markets are threatened, even our own territories are regarded apparently with jealous eyes; and if we are to meet the danger we can only do so by opening new markets and defending those that we still retain. And we shall do this, and at the same time we shall seek to maintain solidarity between all parts of the empire. We shall try to earn the confidence of our colonial fellow-subjects by making their interests our own. It may be that now we have come to their assistance, but may not the time come when we shall call for theirs.

What is the meaning and what is the whole trend of that statement made by the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain. He says: Make your propositions, we will make no offer to you, you take the initiative, say what you want and we will not be bound by any economic pedantries nor any of the doctrines that have been held inviolate in the past. In the face of that, we say that we would desire to have preferential trade with Great Britain, but these gentlemen opposite say: Oh, we are so rich that we will make a present of $2,000,000 (that is what they tell us the amount is) to Great Britain. And to whom is that present made? Is it made to the British government? No, it is made to the British manufacturer or the British commercial man. If these gentlemen opposite are so wealthy and so generous, why did they haggle a few days ago about $200,000 or perhaps less, towards the payment of our Canadian volunteers instead of throwing that burden upon the Imperial government? Not as a matter of policy, but as a matter of doing the fair thing, this Canadian government should have paid the 25 cents a day to our brave volunteers, the payment of which they imposed upon the Imperial government. They did that, but at the same time they say they can afford to make a present of $2,000,000 a year to the manufacturers and commercial men of Great Britain without getting anything in return. Sir, in that regard, the government have not proceeded upon lines which commend themselves to the people. For my part, I believe that Mr. Joseph Chamberlain was right, when he said: That we should come together and have preferential trade with the colonies—the dominions of the empire—and draw closer together. These gentlemen opposite now say: Oh, we are the loyal party in Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Conservative party in this Dominion is under the necessity of making a money payment to prove their loyalty. The Conservatives of Canada have always been loyal; they are loyal to-day. They are loyal to the empire and they are loyal to that part of the empire in which we live, the Dominion of Canada, which goes without saying, is just as much a part of the British Empire as any other portion of it. We are for British interests, the interests of the great people to which we belong, and to these we are as loyal as the people of any other portion of the empire can possibly be. Here is language that was indulged in by one of these gentlemen opposite:

Now, we know that while we stand by the preferential tariff, we stand by the old land, and if it benefits her as well as our own people we stand opposed by a party who by their acts are now pledged, if they come into power, to repeal the preferential tariff and go back to the old state of things.

So, the Liberal party in this House tell us they are standing by the old land. Well, Sir, it is a new thing for them. It was not always thus. Let us go back to the year 1891 and what was the policy of the Liberal party then? Was it to stand by the old land? No. In 1891, they told us that their policy was to make a treaty with the United States, a commercial union treaty, that was going to give to the United States advantages which were not to be given to Great Britain. They told us they were going to have commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity with the United States; but that Great Britain was not to participate in it. On the other hand, Sir, the policy of the Conservative party in Canada has always been that in whatever treaty we make, the foundation stone and the underlying principle in it must be that Great Britain shall have any advantages under it that were to be given to any other nation. That has always been the policy of the Conservative party.

Mr. McMULLEN. They talked that way and voted the other way.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like some one to tell me when we ever voted the other way. I say that these gentlemen opposite were sailing pretty close to treason and that they were in touch with those men who were plotting the commercial ruin of Canada and the annexation of Canada by hook or by crook to the United States. That is what the Liberals were doing a few years ago. I see our smiling friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) across there. Do we not remember when he was not particularly loyal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When was that?

Mr. WOOD. Who burned the parliament buildings, eh?

Mr. CHARLTON. Who drew up the annexation manifesto?

Mr. WOOD. What Minister of Finance bought property in Portland when he thought they were going to have annexation? Do you forget these things?

Mr. WALLACE. The gentleman who makes all this money out of binder twine, I am told, had better keep quiet. We farmers are not going to be bled 100 per cent on binder twine, and let the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) have the full benefit of that without him knowing it.

Mr. WOOD. The member for Hamilton does not sell a pound of binder twine.

Mr. WALLACE. His firm sold it last year.

Mr. WOOD. Not a pound.

Mr. WALLACE. I have the proof of it that your firm did.

Mr. WOOD. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) that my firm did not buy a pound of binder twine last year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. They got it for nothing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. WALLACE. They got it for pretty nearly nothing.

Mr. WOOD. I wish we did.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Hamilton made a statement in the House last year that his firm dealt in binder twine, and he may make a different statement this year if he likes.

Mr. COWAN. It was the year before last.

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, yes. I was speaking of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), and I was pointing out that those gentlemen who are to-day prating of their loyalty—and I am a little suspicious of it, I must say, in view of the course they took in 1891, when they were prating and practising commercial union; unrestricted reciprocity. I was saying: What about our smiling friend the Minister of Finance; and I have a little speech here that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) made a few years ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Read it; it ought to be good.

Mr. WALLACE. I will read it to accommodate the hon. gentleman. The report says:

Mr. Fielding continued to say: The interests of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia are alike in this matter.

This was when he was advocating the secession of Nova Scotia from the Dominion.

All these provinces have been sacrificed to the confederation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No doubt about that.

Mr. WALLACE. No doubt about it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly not.

Mr. WALLACE. The Finance Minister continued to say:

I trust this question of separation from Canada will be brought up by independent members in both provinces and fairly discussed. Bad as is the position of the two provinces in the union, it will become worse if Nova Scotia secedes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Hear, hear.

Mr. WALLACE. Mark you, this was not at the time of confederation when the question was put up for consideration and when a man might take one side or the other, but this was nearly twenty years after confederation had been accomplished:

Maritime interests will be weaker than ever at Ottawa, and there will be little chance for the New Brunswickers and the Islanders to obtain justice.

'These other cormorants in Quebec and Ontario would gobble them up and make the province of Prince Edward Island pay the whole duties for the Dominion of Canada.' He continued:

They will have everything to gain by joining Nova Scotia, and I am satisfied if the movement be taken up with vigour in our sister provinces, the demand for separation from Canada will be made, not by Nova Scotia alone, but by the three maritime provinces. But if New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are content to occupy their present position, or the weaker one which they would occupy after the withdrawal of Nova Scotia,—

Do you see, he had it all arranged that Nova Scotia was to get right out.

—they must be permitted, of course, to take their own way. We shall take our way, and demand for Nova Scotia alone separation from the Dominion, though we would much prefer joint action, because we have always felt that the provinces down by the sea have a unity of interest, and that in co-operation we might bring about results which would go far to make the people of our country prosperous. I believe the people of Nova Scotia will, at the approaching elections, throw off the yoke of Toryism, and that in our province particularly we shall have a grand victory for Liberalism and repeal.

But they did not. I would not have called attention to this but for the fact that within a year I have heard the Minister of Finance say that he stood to-day by the position he took then. If that is true, then, on the slightest provocation, when he is not holding the position he holds to-day, or some such position, he will demand that this confederation be smashed into fragments to suit his ambitions or his desires. I believe there never was a confederation of peoples which showed such satisfactory results as our Dominion of Canada, which was consummated without the shedding of a single drop of blood.

Mr. MILLS. You have not told the half of that story.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no doubt I have not told the half of it, but there is that half which, I think, he should be ashamed of.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). He does not think so.

Mr. McMULLEN. He must have got his show bills printed in the United States.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, with a photograph of the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) on them. And these gentlemen get up and preach to the loyal Conservative party of this country about their loyalty. They might well turn round and preach a little to themselves, and repent in sackcloth and ashes for a time before attempting to lecture the Conservative party of Canada.

Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the British people will never consent for a moment to consider the question of protection; yet, Lord Salisbury tells us in a speech which was quoted by Sir Charles Tupper the other evening, that he does not consider that a preferential tariff with the colonies would mean protection. But, suppose it did. To hear these hon. gentlemen talk, you would imagine that there is no customs tariff in Great Britain at all, and that if a tariff were put upon an article in England, it would be a violation of the British constitution. But, what are the facts? I have in my hand a list of the imports into Great Britain, and a statement of the customs taxation upon those imports, for there is a customs tax in Great Britain as well as in Canada. Large as our taxes were last year from customs duties, Great Britain collected four times as much. On coffee, currants and raisins, spirits, foreign and colonial, tea, tobacco and snuff, wine, other imported articles, and miscellaneous, Great Britain and Ireland collected last year, £21,530,000 sterling, or nearly $105,000,000.

Mr. WOOD. Any imports from Canada?

Mr. WALLACE. It is not germane to the question where they come from.

Mr. McNEILL. Whisky, likely.

Mr. WALLACE. If the member for Hamilton wishes to make any interruptions or observations, I wish he would make some that are pertinent to the question.

Mr. WOOD. I am simply asking a plain question of the hon. member.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the hon. gentleman to sit down.

Mr. WOOD. I think I have a perfect right, if the hon. gentleman will allow me—

Mr. SPEAKER. Unless the hon. gentleman who is speaking gives the hon. member the floor, he has no right to interrupt him.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not give the hon. gentleman the floor, because he has been abusing the privilege by diverting the discussion away from the question. I think we shall have to let him wait until his turn comes, and then he can speak as long as he likes. The imports of coffee, currants, raisins and tea into Great Britain last year paid $22,280,000 of customs taxation, and tobacco, snuff, wine, spirits and so on, paid the balance. Many of these things I consider to be necessaries of life. There are other articles besides bread which are universally consumed and which are considered necessaries of life. Tea or coffee is used in every household of the Dominion of Canada, and is considered a necessary. Suppose some of the taxes which Great Britain imposes on the necessaries of life were imposed on some other necessaries of life; I would like to know what additional burden would be placed upon the people of Great Britain. In my opinion, none at all, because if you are paying $22,000,000 on the necessaries that you consume, it does not make much difference to you as a consumer whether you pay that on tea or on beef or on wheat.

Mr. McNEILL. You might put it on seal-skins, which are not very necessary.

Mr. WALLACE. I say that if you put it on necessaries, it does not make any difference so far as you are concerned as a consumer, which of them you put it on. Suppose that instead of putting it on tea, you put it on wheat and beef. Last year, there was imported into Great Britain 65,000,000 cwts. of wheat, and 21,000,000 cwts. of flour of wheat, equivalent to a total of 177,000,000 bushels of wheat. Suppose Great Britain imposed a protective duty of five cents a bushel on all the wheat imported except that from British possessions, and allowed that to go in free. A tax of five cents a bushel on 177,000,000 bushels would amount to $8,865,000. In my opinion, it would not be half of that; but we will suppose it would be half. The British imports of beef and cattle last year were as follows: Fresh beef, 3,100,000 cwts.; salted, 200,000 cwts.; total, 3,300,000 cwts., or 370,000,000 lbs. of beef. If you estimate cattle at 1,400 pounds live weight, which is about the average of cattle exported, that would represent 264,285 head. Of live cattle imported into Great Britain—ox and bulls, cows and calves—there were 569,000. Add that to the 264,285—

000, and you have a total of 966,000 imported into Great Britain last year. Supposing Great Britain put on a duty of $4 per head, that would mean a tax of $3,864,000. Add to this the $8,865,000 on wheat, and you will have a tax on the British people of $12,729,000, or just a shade over one-half the tax on coffee, currants and tea. Take part of the duty off tea, coffee, currants and raisins and put it on those other necessaries of life, and there will be no additional tax on the British people. There would be an increased importation each year from the dominions of the empire, and the tax will be one of which the colonist would get the full benefit. Suppose the colonist gets the benefit, the result will be as I say. Suppose he gets 5 cents more than the American, he gets 2½ cents more than what he gets to-day and the American gets 2½ cents less, and the tax on the British people would only be one-half the amount I have stated. It will only be a transfer of a tax from one article of necessity to another, to which the British people would not object. Take the duty on tea, it bears most inequitably on the people. Eight cents per pound means a duty of 50 per cent on the poor man's tea, which does not cost more than 16 cents at the place of production, but on the rich man's tea, which costs 60 cents, it is only a duty of 13 or 14 per cent.

Five cents per bushel on wheat would mean 23 cents on the product of a barrel of flour. That would mean 66 four-pound loaves, and one-third of one cent on each loaf, or six two-pound loaves would give one cent. The additional tax would be one-half penny on six two-pound loaves. I do not believe for a moment that Great Britain would refuse such a rearrangement of the tax.

Then we will take the cattle. There would be a tax on the cattle of about one-third of a cent per pound or thereabouts. But consider for a moment what would be the effect on this country and the various colonies of the British Empire if a differential tax of this kind were imposed in favour of the British possessions. Great Britain, we know, has not a friend in the world except in her own possessions. The United States Senate passed a resolution approving of the course of the Boers and hostile to Great Britain. Every nation in Europe, though preserving neutrality, is hostile to Great Britain. They are jealous of her power, jealous of her greatness, jealous of her wealth and her free institutions. She can only look for assistance to her own possessions scattered over the four quarters of the globe. She does not need assistance from the other powers, and she has not a particle of sympathy from them. She has been pursuing that free trade policy in the past which she now sees is a mistake. It has had the effect of sending her people out to build up other nations, and she can see to-day that the true policy is to send her surplus people to her own possessions to build up in every quarter of the globe a great colonial empire. Canada, Australia, and all her possessions are standing by her to-day, making the nations of the earth understand that if they quarrel with Great Britain, they quarrel with that belt of provinces and dominions world-wide, and have to account with them as well as Great Britain. It is in Great Britain's interest, therefore, to make some sacrifice, if sacrifices be necessary, but I contend that they are not.

I have given to the House an economical programme which can be defended anywhere and everywhere. What effect can it have in the Dominion? The right hon. First Minister in London, in 1896, portrayed the advantages and benefits to the Dominion of Canada of a preference in the English market, and he did not overstate the case. Why, if we had 5 cents a bushel preference over the United States, and if we had $4 preference for every bullock we send across the Atlantic, the hon. Minister of the Interior could in one hour's notice dispense with the services of his 500 immigration agents. This preference alone would be a most important factor in the building up of Canada and be worth more than a thousand immigration agents. The most intelligent, enterprising and desirable class of settlers would then flow from all parts of the world to this country, which enjoyed such a great preference in the greatest market of the world. It would build up our Dominion as nothing else could. We should devote our energies to carry out some such programme, and that is what this side of the House are proposing in the resolution. It would benefit Great Britain as I pointed out, because it would be practically no burden upon her; but, even if it were so, we would have that belt of empire surrounding the globe, whose people would be ready to spring to her assistance if necessary in time of danger, ready to hold up her hands and to carry her flag to the four corners of the earth and keep it there. That is the programme for the people of Canada, that is the programme that the Conservative party are going to stand by and are going to carry to victory.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I have listened for nearly four hours to-day and on a previous day to the utterances of my hon. friend the member for West York (Mr. Wallace); and I shall take the liberty to-night of dealing with that portion of the question which has formed the burden of his utterance in this House, which he assures us is the most important part of his speech and forms the programme of the Conservative party for the coming election. After I have dealt with that question, I may, perhaps have something to say on the other points made by the hon. gentleman. But the hour is late and I consider this question of preferential trade, as he himself considers it, the most important question before the House and before the country.

An hon. MEMBER. And short speeches.

Mr. CHARLTON. The principle of short speeches seems to be honoured rather in the breach than in the observance; and I am not committed to the principle myself, and shall probably speak as long as I please.

Mr. MILLS. Like Liberal promises.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made no promises, but merely asked the reference to a committee to have their deliverance on rules and procedure submitted to the House. The doctrine or promise of preferential trade between Great Britain and the various provinces is a very captivating one, and no issue can appeal more forcibly and powerfully to the wishes of the great mass of the agricultural population of Canada than this. If my hon. friend from West York or any member of the opposition can persuade me that the opposition party, if entrusted with power, can secure a preferential tariff with Great Britain and the re-enactment, practically of the corn laws in favour of Canada and other colonies, I will cross the floor of this House without delay and without compunction of conscience.

Mr. MILLS. I do not believe a word of it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Liberal party of this country, the Liberal farmers of this country, the Liberal citizens of this country, are as anxious to secure preferential trade relations with Great Britain as any other portion of the community. But the government finds the responsibility of office resting upon it. They are unable to make promises to the people or advance positions on platforms that they are unable to carry out. An opposition has a freer hand. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and my hon. friend from West York can promise the people that they can obtain this thing or that; and, if they can get the people to believe them, and, in consequence of that confidence placed in them, they can secure power, then they can inform the people as to the difficulties that confront them and as to the impossibility, to their great regret, of carrying out their pledges and implementing the promises they made.

Now, Sir, I propose to look into this question of preferential trade a little. I submit again that I am in favour of this policy, if I can be made to believe that it is a practicable one. If I can be made to believe that there is the remotest probability of being able to secure preferential relations with Great Britain, and inducing British artisans, the British operative and the British labourer to submit to a tax upon their food for our benefit, I am in favour of it.

Mr. CHARLTON.

I can remember, when a boy, the agitation that existed in this country upon the repeal of the corn laws. Canada lost, when those laws were repealed, a great advantage over other food-producing countries trading with England, and the result of that repeal was that great demonstration of Tory loyalty, the annexation manifesto of 1849. I repeat, we would welcome the enactment by the English parliament of preferential duties in our favour. But that we can secure that is, in my belief, a very remote probability, and, in fact, I consider it as, under the present circumstances at least, entirely impossible. Now, it strikes me that the leader of the opposition, dealing with this matter, is hardly fair, that he does not present the case with the candour that one would expect from a gentleman of his character as leader of a great party. I think he seeks, perhaps unconsciously, to cast aspersions and suspicions on the party in power, which he himself must realize are not warranted and are calculated to deceive the country. Now, I notice in a speech made by this hon. gentleman at Quebec two or three days ago he led the audience he was addressing to believe that an offer had been made of preferential trade relations, that the Premier of this country, when he visited England, was so remiss in his duty that he failed to seize the golden opportunity, in fact failed to accept an offer made by the British authorities to give us preferential trade relations. Nothing, as I shall show in a moment, could be further from the truth. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) must have been aware that this statement that he made was entirely destitute of foundation. He said in that speech:

And he did what I charged him in the House of Commons yesterday with doing.

Referring to Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

He betrayed Canadian interests in this matter. Yet he went to London at a most favourable time to have achieved something for Canada, at a time when the heart of the empire was open to her colonies. Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain were willing and were anxious to deal liberally with the colonies; 'in no huckstering spirit,' were their words. Who killed the great opportunity? Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The Imperial government was anxious to meet them and make liberal arrangements. All the Premiers of Australia and South Africa were ready—all but Mr. Reid, of New South Wales, who has recently been defeated. Sir W. Laurier alone declined to enter into any arrangement.

Now, we are led to infer from this language that such an arrangement was proposed, but Sir Wilfrid Laurier declined to enter into the arrangement. Sir Wilfrid Laurier knows, as every gentleman knows who will take the pains to examine into this matter, that no such proposition was made and that no probability existed at that time of the making of such an arrangement. My hon. friend from West York read us extracts from various speeches made by Mr. Chamberlain, Lord Salisbury and other gentlemen, and he drew the inference from these speeches that we had but to initiate negotiations for preferential trade relations, and these negotiations could easily be consummated. Now, in the light of these assertions with regard to the character of these speeches that have been made, we have a statement, which these various assertions has called forth from Mr. Chamberlain, made on the 3rd day of April, and made evidently for the express purpose of setting at rest these statements and confronting these men who are trading upon these assertions, with the proof that their assertions were entirely destitute of foundation on the third of the present month of April.

Mr. Thomas Charles Hedderwick, M.P., moved that, in the opinion of the House, it was desirable, in the interests of the empire, that the colonies should be admitted to some representation in parliament.

Now, Mr. Chamberlain, in speaking on that resolution, went out of his way to make a statement which was not relevant to the resolution, he made it for the express purpose, when the opportunity was offered him to do so, of setting at rest these false assumptions and false assertions that are made by the opposition, and upon which they intend to trade as their political capital in the coming contest. What was Mr. Chamberlain's statement?

We are not going to interfere in the domestic affairs of the colonies. Nor are they going to interfere in ours. I have never advocated, as has been reported, the formation of an Imperial Zollverein, but I have pointed out that, if there were to be any kind of fiscal arrangement with the colonies, I believe the only form that would meet the slightest favour would be an Imperial Zollverein, in which there would be free trade between the portions of the empire and duties as against strangers. At any rate, the suggestion must originate with the colonies. There is no suggestion from ourselves. The present resolution is premature, is necessarily academic, and might be mischievous.

Now, what does he mean by a Zollverein founded upon free trade? He means that we should meet England, which admits our products free of duty, with the same treatment, that we should admit British goods upon 71 per cent of which we collected last year a duty of $7,328,000, into Canada free of duty. Is my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace), is the leader of the opposition, prepared to go to the country standing upon a platform which advocates the arrangement of a Zollverein with England, that will break down all tariff barriers and admit all British goods into Canada free of duty? It is possible that it can be secured upon these terms.

Mr. WALLACE. Read our resolution.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will read it in a few moments. It is possible it can be secured upon these terms, but these gentlemen will not admit that they are in favour of it, and if they were to go to the country with such a proposition, they would be defeated out of sight. And so they will attempt to trade upon the assertion that they are able to secure from England preferential duties and the admission of our natural products into the English markets on terms more favourable than those accorded to any other nation. Well, Sir, Mr. Chamberlain's statement which I have read, gives a direct rebuttal to that statement; it is an explicit, unmistakable rebuttal to the statement made by the hon. gentleman to-night, to the statement made by the leader of the opposition, to the position that evidently is to form the platform of the parties in the coming election. Now, what is the resolution my hon. friend refers to?

Mr. MONTAGUE. You have hardly stated the whole scope of the Zollverein Mr. Chamberlain proposes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does it not include free admission of British goods into the Canadian market? That is one of the essential requisites; and if the Conservative party is prepared to admit British goods into the Canadian market free of duty, they are prepared to meet Mr. Chamberlain's conditions, as to the formation of a Zollverein, and nothing short of that will do it. Now, the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, formulated a resolution the other day, which is very general in its terms, an admirable resolution to go to the country to talk about, as it can be made to mean almost anything before a proper audience. The resolution is as follows:

This House is of opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in and commerce between these countries, and would thus promote and maintain the unity of the empire; and that no measure of preference which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered as final or satisfactory.

That is, unless we can get access to the British market on preferential terms for our products, we are not to consider any settlement of this trade question final or satisfactory, we are not to consider the present preferential tariff as final or satisfactory. Nothing but a re-enactment, in effect of the corn laws, nothing but the adoption of a policy which Mr. Chamberlain explicitly tells us is out of the question, nothing but that is to be considered according to the terms of this resolution, final or satisfactory.

Mr. McNEILL. Does Mr. Chamberlain say the government will not adopt anything of that kind?

Mr. CHARLTON. You had better read his statement. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to deal with this question briefly, and I shall look at it first of all from the standpoint of Imperial interests; then I shall look at it from the standpoint of Great Britain's interest; then I will inquire whether the demand which this resolution formulates, and which is to be the rallying cry of the Conservative party in the next election, is a reasonable demand; then I shall inquire whether the present preference to Great Britain, contained in our tariff, is beneficial to us and warranted by trade conditions, and I shall have a little to say with regard to the trade relations between this country and the United States, in their bearing upon the propriety of the partial removal of the impositions upon British goods through the preferential tariff. Now, Sir, the colonies are, no doubt, drawing closer to England, that is an evident fact. The bond of sympathy and union between the colonies and Great Britain is growing stronger. This bond is one not of coercion, not of positive enactment in law, but it is a bond of sympathy, a purely voluntary action, and motion, and passion on the part of each, which draws the colonies and England together. Now, in view of the condition of things that exists at present, in face of the fact that broader feelings, and sympathies, and aspirations prevail in the various parts of the British Empire, I ask whether we should not avoid very carefully, making unreasonable demands. We had better look at this question very carefully, we had better look at the matter of asking from England preferential treatment and taxing the food of her operatives for our benefit, in the light of determining in our minds whether this is a reasonable demand. It is not in our interest, looking at it from the most sordid and business standpoint, to impair the strength of Great Britain. If it can be shown, as it can undoubtedly be shown clearly, that the adoption of the policy the hon. gentleman asks for, would impair the prosperity and strength of Great Britain, why, we would be asking, even if we could obtain it, something actually not in our own interest. I repeat that we do not want to impair the greatness, the prosperity and the strength of the British Empire, we do not want to weaken our best customer, we do not want to reduce her ability to buy, but we want to be governed by considerations of British interests, as well as Canadian interests.

Now, we may ask the question at this point: Are we entitled to preferential duties? Is the demand proposed a reasonable one? Can we show any reason for granting it? I shall look at the question from the reasonable standpoint, that while I would be glad if we could get it, while I would look upon it as a boon, if we could secure it, I say we are not entitled to it, that under the circumstances of the case, the demand is an impudent one, and cannot fail to be considered otherwise than as a demand not founded in reason, as a demand which cannot be acceded to.

Now, I propose to deal, briefly, with the question of our trade relations with Great Britain, and the relative importance of our trade with the empire, as compared with the trade of other British possessions, and as compared with the trade of the whole commercial world. I think that the statistics of this question will impress the mind of any candid thinker and observer with the fact that our dealings with England are, relatively, so small, that we are relatively, as compared with the rest of the world, so insignificant a customer that it is not in England's interest to pay special attention to our interest, if that attention is expected to be secured at the cost of her relations and interests with the great mass of the nationalities and states with which she trades. I have taken the statement that I have compiled from the last trade returns issued by the Statesmen's Year Book, which is a standard authority, and I have, when dealing with the question converted sterling into dollars and cents, taking the pound sterling as $5, which is accurate enough for the purpose. In the year 1897, according to the Statesmen's Year Book, the exports of Great Britain to all British possessions, were $403,375,000, and her exports to foreign countries were $767,723,000. The total was $1,171,098,000. This shows that all the exports of England to foreign countries were, in round numbers, almost double the exports of England to all British possessions in that year. Now, the exports to all British possessions, excluding Canada and Australia, were $269,439,000, the exports to Australia were $106,554,000, and the exports to Canada, according to their returns, amounted to the comparatively trifling and insignificant sum of $27,380,000. Reducing this statement to percentages, Canada's percentage of Britain's total exports was 24-10 per cent, or, in other words, we received 24-10 per cent of the goods that England supplied to all the world. Compared with England's foreign export, not her total export, but her foreign exports, Canada received 36-10 per cent as much as England's exports to foreign countries, and Canada's percentage of British exports to British possessions was 68-10 per cent. This is a very small trade relatively, less than 21-2 per cent of her exports to the world, only one mill in excess of 31-2 per cent of her exports to foreign countries, 68-10 per cent of her exports to British possessions, and yet, we stand up with this comparatively insignificant portion of British trade, and with sublime impudence, ask England to tax herself for the benefit of this little Oliver Twist that is continually calling for more.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) what he makes the proportion sent to the colonies?

Mr. CHARLTON. I make the proportion sent to all the British possessions, including Canada—

Mr. MONTAGUE. About 32 per cent, is it not?

Mr. CHARLTON. Six and eight-tenths per cent. That is our proportion of the trade of England with the British possessions.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. What is Canada's proportion of all the trade of England?

Mr. CHARLTON. Canada's proportion of all of export trade is 24-10 per cent.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the proportion that goes to all the colonies?

Mr. CHARLTON. All the colonies received $403,000,000. England exported to foreign countries $767,000,000, and to the world $1,171,000,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is quite a different showing.

Mr. CHARLTON. England imports from Canada in this year $97,694,000.

Mr. WALLACE. What percentage?

Mr. CHARLTON. I will give the percentage if you will follow me and hear what I have to say. England exports to Canada $27,380,000. We had a balance of trade against England of $70,314,000, so that Great Britain's imports from Canada were 71½ per cent greater than her exports to Canada, or she bought three and a half times more of Canada than she sold. We bought from England one pound's worth and sold three pounds and ten shillings' worth. This is a great balance in our favour, and she gives us the British market without a single impost or duty upon the three and a half times the volume of trade we sold to her compared with what we bought, and yet, certain individuals think they have very good ground for saying that we want more favours. The imports into Great Britain from foreign countries, in that year, were $1,785,000,000, and the imports from British possessions were $470,094,000, or, in other words, England imported from British possessions about one-quarter as much as from the rest of the world. The total of her importations was $2,255,000,000, while her imports from Canada amounted to $97,674,000.

Mr. McNEILL. What were the exports?

Mr. CHARLTON. I have been dealing with the exports, and I passed from that question some time ago. I can go back to it again in about half an hour.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is not going to speak another half hour.

Mr. CHARLTON. Oh, yes; I have only fairly commenced and I will not finish in an hour and a half. The percentage of Canada's portion of British imports was 5½ per cent, Canada's percentage of British imports from British possessions was 20 8-10 per cent, and her percentage of British imports from all countries was 4 3-10 per cent. Here is a statement which shows that we have 4 3-10 per cent of England's total import trade, and 3 6-10 per cent of England's total foreign export trade. Yet, we are swelling around here with the idea that we are an important customer of England, and that we have conferred such great favours upon that empire by comparison with other portions of the world, because we sell her three and a half times more than we buy from her.

Still further, there are those who think it is a modest thing to say to John Bull: Just put a tax on your foods and make goods a little higher for us and a little higher, of course, for your own people who buy them. The total trade of Canada with Great Britain in this year was $125,025,000, and Canada's percentage of the total trade, compared with England's total foreign trade, exports and imports, was 5 per cent; Canada's percentage of the total trade of England, exports and imports, with British possessions was 14 4-10, and Canada's proportion of England's total export and import trade with all the world was 3 7-10 per cent. I was astonished, myself, when I went through these figures and compiled this statement and found how relatively insignificant our transactions with England are, either as a customer for her produce, or a source of supply for what she needs, and I realize what infinite impudence was embodied in the demand that England, for this paltry inconsiderable amount of trade should cripple her resources, hamper her manufacturers and increase the prices of food for her artisans to gratify us with a little higher prices. Why, as I said before, we would like it, but we know it is most unreasonable to ask for it.

These figures give the present basis for the formation of an opinion upon this question, and as an advocate of fair-play, as a believer of Imperial interests with a desire to recognize the benefits we receive from England, and with a desire to avoid asking that which is unreasonable; I say that the resolution propounded by the leader of the opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) looking to the belief that the people of Canada can be imposed upon by the assertion made in that resolution; that preferential trade can be secured from England; I say that that is one of the baldest pieces of political clap trap that has ever been perpetrated in this country.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman had better settle that with his leader.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) permit me to ask him what he thinks of the declaration of his chief, the Prime Minister in London, Ont., in June, 1896?

Mr. CHARLTON. What was that declaration according to the belief of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague)?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The right hon. gentleman then said that he was in favour of a preferential trade between Great Britain and the colonies; that it was the policy to which he was pledged; that it was a policy of immense possibilities.

Mr. CHARLTON. Exactly, I say the same thing. I say to-night I am in favour of it; I say to-night if England would grant this we would accept it with the greatest thankfulness, but I say it is unreasonable to expect it. I do not believe we can get it, and I would not consider it honest to go to the people of this country and hold out to them the inducement that we can get this if they support this and put us in power.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is just what the Prime Minister did.

Mr. McNEILL. The right hon. gentleman said that in his opinion it could be obtained.

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been kept from the floor for some days, and have only been able to speak now at nearly midnight, and I must decline to recognize these interruptions in future.

Mr. WALLACE. Might I ask one question of the hon. gentleman?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WALLACE. I tried to follow his figures closely, but I did not catch the figures of the total trade between Great Britain and Great Britain's possessions.

Mr. CHARLTON. What trade—export or import?

Mr. WALLACE. Both.

Mr. CHARLTON. The trade with Great Britain's possessions in exports was $403,375,000. The imports from Great Britain's possessions were $470,094,000.

Mr. WALLACE. That is over $900,000,000?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, and that $900,000,000 total, trade exports and imports between Great Britain and her possessions, was of a total import trade of $2,255,000,000, and a total export trade of $1,171,000,000, or a total of in round numbers $3,400,000,000; $900,000,000, of which was total export and import trade with British possessions.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman looks at page 58 of the Statistical Abstract of Great Britain he will find that he is hundreds of millions of dollars astray.

Mr. CHARLTON. My figures are made up from the Statesmen's Year Book of 1897, and these figures are calculations open to the hon. gentleman's investigation, and I have no time to analyse them across the floor with him to-night. Now, then Mr. Speaker, I shall ask again the privilege of being allowed to speak without interruption. I have not interrupted any other speaker, and I wish to make my statement without that interruption.

Then, Sir, to recapitulate this as our friends do not seem to seize upon the salient points readily: Canada received 36-10ths per cent as much as Great Britain exported to all foreign countries. She had 36-10ths per cent of Great Britain's foreign export trade. Canada received 68-10ths of Great Britain's exports to British possessions. We had a balance of trade against England that year of $70,314,000. We bought of Great Britain that year 28½ per cent as much as we sold her, only—$27,380,000 sold by her to us against $97,694,000 exported to her, and so we sold her, three and a half times as much as we bought from her.

Great Britain's imports from us, were only 5½ per cent of the amount of her foreign imports. They were 208-10ths of her total imports from all the British possessions, and they were 43-10ths per cent of her total imports. These are the classifications by percentage of our trade with England, of her export and imports in the year 1897.

Now, Sir, England has continued her policy of preference to Canada. In 1898, she bought of us $104,998,000 worth free of duty. We sold to her that year $32,500,000, of which $22,969,000, or 69 per cent of the whole was dutiable. In 1899 she bought of Canada $99,091,000, entirely free of duty—not a cent of burden upon it—and she sold to Canada $37,060,000, of which $27,521,000, or 71 per cent of the entire amount of her imports was dutiable. Now, here is a contrast—vast purchases from us compared with our purchases from her—entering her markets free—relatively insignificant purchasers from her—and purchases which were dutiable to the extent of from 69 to 71 per cent of the whole volume of that trade.

I would ask if this was not fair enough treatment? I would ask if we have any reason to ask anything better than this? I would ask if it would be reasonable in the face of the condition of trade as it exists between Canada and England to-day—with perfect free trade on one side and burdensome duties on the other—with large purchases by her and small purchases by us—I would ask if it is not unreasonable in the highest degree to ask that the conditions shall be made more burdensome to England or more favourable to ourselves than they are at present. Then, Sir, England makes other sacrifices for us. Ever since the conquest of Canada she has afforded to Canada the protection of her army, the protection of her navy, the protection of her diplomatic corps, the protection of her consular corps. All these advantages that cost money to a great power we have shared in, and have had free of charge from England. It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that viewing the case in all its bearings, that we ought to be ashamed of the promulgation of such a policy as has been laid down by the leader of the opposition.

Now, there are reasons that must have weight in England.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not wish to be interrupted again. It is a very easy thing for the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) to stand up in this House and make a tariff for England. It is quite a nice occupation, and if we were allowed to exercise our judgment as to what England could stand and what she could not stand, and what we could take out of her, we could get along very nicely. But it happens that English statesmen have some opinions about these matters themselves, and there are certain circumstances that have a bearing on the case that we might not understand as easily as English public men do. Now, we must bear in mind that England is one of a number of commercial nations, and that she has very great and powerful rivals, and that the rivalry that exists in her commercial transactions with the world is growing greater every year. She has a great commercial and manufacturing rival in Germany. She has a great rival in France, and she has a greater rival perhaps than either of these nations in the United States. The American manufacturing industries have been making very astounding progress indeed lately. The exports of manufactures from that country in 1898 amounted in round numbers to $300,000,000, and in 1899 these exports were $400,000,000. We have noticed—those of us who have any interest in watching the progress of this rivalry—we have noticed that the American iron and steel industry has fairly distanced England in competition. There was a case in which a bridge was to be built over the Athara River in Nubia on the road to Khartoum, and the material was wanted quickly. The American ironmasters took that order and filled it, and had the material on the ground within three months from the time the order was taken; and, moreover, they took the order at about 60 per cent of the price of the lowest English bid, which required eight months more time to fill the order. The Americans also took an order in Burmah, amounting to about a million dollars. They have taken orders in London itself. The manufacturing rivalry between England and the United States, as well as between England and Germany, and between England and France is keen and intense; and England's very life depends upon the maintenance of her position as a great manufacturing and commercial power. If she loses this, her greatness is gone. In this respect, England cannot afford at our dictation to put on fetters or clogs in the race. She cannot afford to put a tax on her food or on the raw materials which are so essential to her production cheaply of manufactures. It is unreasonable and absurd to expect or ask it; and this resolution which has been formulated, gravely affirming that it would be in our interest and in the interest of the British Empire for England to tax her food and her raw materials and thus increase the difficulties that surround her in this keen competition with great commercial and manufacturing rivals—it is the height of absurdity to suppose that such a resolution can be dealt with seriously by intelligent and well-informed men. England's environment would not permit of the imposition of preferential duties. Her relations with other commercial powers are of such a character that the introduction of such a policy would be fatal to her interests. It would invite retaliation. It would not only invite, but it would secure retaliation. England would invite disaster that would surely fall upon her if this unreasonable demand were granted to a country which takes about 5 per cent of her exports and sends about 3½ per cent of her imports, and which would be asking for these preferential duties for the purpose of taxing the food of 40,000,000 people in England for the benefit of 5,000,000 producers in Canada. We have seen something of the result in the United States. The members of the Joint High Commission met at every turn that feeling of animosity that existed in the United States in consequence of the adoption of the preferential duties of 12½ per cent to be increased to 25 per cent; and the adoption of anything like the Corn Laws to the exclusion or the hampering of the trade of the mother country in food-stuffs for the benefit of Canada and the other British colonies, would be sure to lead to retaliatory action of a very unpleasant character. That, England would not invite; it would be a simple act of fatuity on her part to invite it. Therefore, I say, although I reaffirm the statement that I would like it very well if England would do something to increase our prosperity at her own expense, if she saw her way to do so, the demand for preferential duties under all the circumstances of the case is unreasonable and positively disloyal—so unreasonable and so likely to prove detrimental to England's interests that, as loyal citizens we ought to be content with enough. We ought to be content with the generous treatment which we receive, which gives to us three times the market which we give to Great Britain, and gives it free to us, while we tax British imports into this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And gives it free to everybody else.

Mr. CHARLTON. In asking this preferential treatment we would be simply asking an unearned favour. We have not earned such a favour; we have done nothing to earn it. We would be taking a step which if our movement were successful, would cripple the motherland. And if we ask for this boon we must ask for it upon the terms that Mr. Chamberlain's statement foreshadows—upon the condition that we treat English imports as they treat ours, and admit them to this country free of duty. I repeat, if our hon. friends on the other side will adopt that policy, there will be some sense in it. If they say, we propose to suggest to England that we shall admit all English imports into this country free of duty as they admit ours, on condition that they will go a step further than they have done and impose preferential duties in our favour on the food products of all foreign countries, even then the advantages would be on our side, even then we would be receiving from England more than we gave; but short of that it is useless and senseless to talk seriously about securing preferential duties upon foodstuffs in favour of Canada.

There is another feature of this case which is of some importance to England—that her desire is that her relations with the United States should be of a friendly character. Latterly the importance of maintaining such relations has become greater than ever before, and the adoption of the policy which the resolution of my hon. friend calls for would have an inevitable tendency to strain the relations between these two countries, and put an end to that feeling of cordiality and good-will which fortunately has existed for the last one or two years. Nothing connected with the question is of greater importance, or has a more intimate bearing upon the propriety of Canada pressing for preferential treatment from the mother country. In view of all this, I have arrived at the conclusion that the resolution which has been presented to the House by the hon. leader of the opposition is one which is calculated to work mischief. It is a resolution which, if the action of the hon. gentleman is taken in good faith by the people, will deceive the people. It is a resolution which can never bear fruit unless the mover of the resolution and its supporters are prepared to go further than the resolution indicates. It is a resolution which can never bear fruit unless the course which Mr. Chamberlain indicates in his speech, the free admission of English goods into Canada, is adopted. Under all these circumstances, I deprecate the placing of that issue before the people. I deprecate the making of a paramount issue in an election a claim which the promulgators of the resolution must know is foundationless, and, whether they know it or not, cannot be carried into effect.

I propose, next, to inquire whether the preference which we grant to Great Britain is warranted or not, in the public interest. I have heard my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) and others attack that preference on the ground that we have given it without receiving a quid pro quo—without getting any preference in return. We have done nothing of the kind. We have no preference to get from England in the removal of duties because there are no duties against us in England. We have simply said to England: As you admit our products free of duty, we will be a little decent, and reduce the duties which we exact from you. We will reduce them 12½ per cent the first year and 25 per cent the second year. This is really an admission that the free admission of our products into England required some modification of our tariff, and the inference would be a fair one that to treat them fairly we should remove the whole duty.

The method of making tariff reduction this way has another advantage. The Liberal party had promised a reduction of tariff rates. It was found that the reduction of duties upon American imports would not be advisable—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Why?

Mr. CHARLTON. Because they do not deserve it, because their competition is one that we have a perfect right to tax as far as we can, and so, instead of making a horizontal reduction all round, it was a proper thing to lighten the burden of our best customer, our own mother, and at the same time reduce the burden on our own people. The reduction is one that is highly appreciated by the consumers of this country.

Mr. McNEILL. You took the duty off corn.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman is pleased with that, it is all right.

Mr. McNEILL. But I am not.

Mr. CHARLTON. England is placed at great disadvantage in her competition with the American manufacturers. We are contiguous to the United States, and can call up by telephone the merchant we wish to purchase from and order a small or large quantity, and the goods can be laid down in two or three days. But in ordering from England, the expense of sending the order is considerable and the outlay very large, so that the advantages in favour of the American manufacturers, other things being equal, are very great. It was therefore perfectly proper to give the English manufacturer some preferential treatment in our markets. It was a proper thing for two reasons. The Americans give us no free entry into their markets, whereas England gives us a free entry for everything; and in view of the disadvantages which the English manufacturers have to contend against, it was a perfectly equitable and proper arrangement to give the preference we did. This preference was necessary to equalize the conditions between these two countries competing for the supply of the Canadian market.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When did you come to that conclusion?

Mr. CHARLTON. Some years ago. I am coming more strongly to that conclusion every year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us of any speech in which he ever advocated that?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am now about to give the hon. gentleman some cogent reasons for arriving at that conclusion. Notwithstanding the preference enjoyed by Great Britain of 12½ per cent the first year and 25 per cent the next, the ratio of increase of United States trade with Canada is greater than the ratio of British trade. The figures I am about to quote are important, and I commend them to the attention of the House. I am comparing 1896 with 1897. In 1896, we imported from Great Britain to the extent of $32,979,000 and in 1897 to the extent of $29,412,000, or a decrease of $3,567,000 or 10·80 per cent. The same year we imported from the United States $58,754,000 worth of goods and in 1897 $61,649,000, or an increase of $3,975,000, or 5·20 per cent. Thus comparing 1896 and 1897, our imports from Great Britain fell off 10 per cent, and our imports from the United States increased 5 per cent. Taking the period of 1898, under the 12½ per cent preference, there was an increase of imports from Great Britain of $3,088,000 or 15 per cent, and from the United States, $17,056,000 or 29 per cent.

Between 1898 and 1899, when there was a preference of 25 per cent, the comparison shows an increase of imports from Great Britain amounting to $5,559,000 or 17 per cent and of imports from the United States of $14,301,000 or 18·17 per cent. Thus the increase in the United States trade was 1 per cent greater than that of the British trade, despite the preference of 25 per cent.

These facts point irresistibly to the conclusion that if we are to give England a chance to maintain her position in our markets, it is necessary to give her a preference.

In the imports of manufactures for consumption, the comparison is just as striking. It will surprise my hon. friends, no doubt, when I tell them that last year we imported from the United States $17,000,000 worth more manufactures than from Great Britain and $12,000,000 worth more manufactures than the actual amount of our total exports to that country. These figures, in my opinion, furnish reasons for refusing to lower the duties on American imports and for giving England, our best customer, preferential treatment to the extent we do.

From 1898 to 1899, the increase of imports of manufactures for consumption from Great Britain amounted to $4,665,000 or 17·32 per cent, and from the United States $7,983,000 or 19·63 per cent. We had a balance of trade against England last year, notwithstanding this preference of 25 per cent, of $62,000,000, and in our trade with the United States, although nominally we exported $45,133,000 worth, yet we may deduct from that the amount of bullion, $4,000,000 and the amount of short return $4,557,000, which I have always protested against as absurd for we smuggle more goods in that way one year with another than we export of goods that are not duly entered at our custom houses. That leaves us an actual net export of $36,563,000 and gives a balance against us of $56,444,000. These are reasons so far as they go.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How much is the trade against us?

Mr. CHARLTON. Making these deductions of bullion and short returns, it is 56½ millions in round numbers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What reason do you give for that?

Mr. CHARLTON. Because their treatment to us is illiberal and our treatment of them too liberal. The case is fortified still further by the condition of trade between the two countries in agricultural products. We used to export to the United States under reciprocity a large amount of farm products, and we would sell a large quantity still because our markets are nearer the great centres of population than the western states, and then we have peculiar advantages for the sale of garden produce and poultry if there were no duties. But, while we bought of the United States $48,000,000 of manufactures, and probably $30,000,000 of that amount were consumed by the agricultural population of Canada, what amount of agricultural products were permitted to export to that country. We sold to them of agricultural products $1,374,000 worth, and we sold to them $4,678,000 worth of animals and their products.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And how much barley?

Mr. CHARLTON. I have not the details here, but probably next to nothing. The total export of our farm products, including animals, were $6,002,000. What—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what the relative quantity that we sold them—

Mr. CHARLTON. When I get through, I will stand up ready to be catechised. While we exported to the United States that amount of farm products, Canada, which is an agricultural country and which one would say, at first blush, could hardly offer a market for agricultural products from the United States, bought no less than $18,686,000 worth of agricultural products and $5,762,000 of animals and their products, or a total of $24,470,000, being an excess of our imports over our exports to that country of $18,451,000, or four times as much bought from them as we sold to them. Or, if you eliminate tobacco leaf, raw cotton, bananas and tropical fruits, we still bought $12,862,000 in excess of our exports to that country. We sold to Great Britain, of farm products, $60,051,000 worth, as against $6,002,000 worth to the United States, or $10 worth sold to Great Britain for every dollar's worth sent to the United States. Under all the circumstances, the policy adopted by Canada of refusing to make tariff reductions on American imports, in the face of the unfair treatment we received from that country and determining to make our preference apply to Great Britain was a sound principle and one to which we may adhere with propriety. And we may go further than we have done in my opinion, in the condition of things existing, we had better go further in two directions—raise the duty on American imports and lower it on British imports. Now, in this condition of trade that existed between these two countries, which is so unfair in its operation to us, which places us with the balance of trade of $56,000,000 of trade against us of last year and permits us to sell only one-quarter of the agricultural products to the United States that we buy of them, which places us so that we were their customers to the extent of $93,000,000, while we really exported to them only $36,000,000 of our products, we have the fact demonstrated that Canada with her five millions of people is a better customer to the United States than the 55,000,000 of people in Mexico, the Central American States, South America, and the West Indies. Yet, in the face of that fact, which American economists admit, that we buy more goods and are a better customer than the fifty-five millions of inhabitants of America, south of the United States, they pursue a policy towards us such as I have been descanting upon for the last quarter of an hour. And I reaffirm that this condition of trade between these two countries is the most powerful reason that could be assigned for the justification of the policy that the government of Canada pursues in granting preferential treatment to Great Britain, for the purpose of giving a benefit to our natural customer who takes so enormously of our products, taking ten times as much as the United States does, who treats us so fairly and gives us free admission to her markets instead of excluding us by prohibitory duties as the United States do—I say that these facts furnish the reason and justification for the preferential tariff policy that is a feature of the Liberal policy of Canada. Now, Sir, if our hon. friends on the other side come into power, we have almost their pledge that they will sweep this policy away, that they will remove this 33½ per cent preference, leaving England that buys three times as much from us as we buy from her, that does not tax us a dollar on the vast volume of her imports of our products, that stands uncomplainingly the imposition of our taxes on 65 to 75 per cent of her imports here. I say these gentlemen would sweep away this preference and would go back to the old condition of things, placing the United States and Great Britain upon the same footing, thus restoring the disparity of trade, and restoring the advantage that the United States has all along enjoyed, and partly enjoys to-day notwithstanding the preference. Now, in looking at the American duties, we find that they average 49½ per cent on the dutiable list. They average 24·48 per cent of the entire imports of the country. Our own duties are, in round numbers, half that amount on the dutiable goods and on the total imports. There is another reason for the adoption of the preferential trade policy which this country has adopted with reference to Great Britain. Everything in connection with the trade policy of the United States, everything in connection with the treatment we receive at the hands of the United States, points to a selfish, narrow and unfriendly policy; and it would have been absurd to have made tariff reductions in conformity with the pledges of the Liberal party of a horizontal character to the benefit of the United States in the same degree as to the benefit of England. I repeat that the policy adopted by this country of making that preference apply only to Great Britain is a policy that should receive the commendation and approval of every loyal Canadian citizen.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the hon. gentleman, when did that narrow policy begin?

Mr. CHARLTON. About the time of the deluge. For the reasons, I have given, Sir, I am very suspicious of the policy enunciated by hon. gentlemen opposite in this resolution, which was conceived in sinful intention to deceive the people and brought forth with the iniquitous design to make it a success—and its success can only result from deception, from presenting to the people false statements and false issues. If the people understand this question, they will understand that the promulgation of such a policy, of such a demand for preferential treatment from England, is a piece of impudence which is simply sublime. The resolution which has been moved cannot be amended. But, if it could be amended, I would offer the amendment I hold in my hand as an amendment that would put the case before the people in its true light, would state the case as the facts exist, and would be calculated to dissipate the bad intentions and deceptive designs of the resolution which is now before the House. I should move this amendment to the resolution, if I could; and I will read it so that you may know what my intentions would be, and may judge me by my intentions—

Mr. CLANCY. How long will you stand by it?

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, long enough to have it put through. The motion would be this, and I trust it will meet with the approval of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy):

That this House recognizes the fact that Great Britain gives free admission into her markets to all products of Canada, while Canada imposes heavy duties upon two-thirds of her importations from Great Britain; that Great Britain buys Canadian products to nearly three times the amount of her sales to Canada; that Great Britain gives to Canada the protection afforded by her army and navy and the good offices of her diplomatic and consular service free of cost; that while preferential duties upon food products in favour of the colonies would be acceptable and advantageous to Canada, and would be in accord with our desires, nevertheless the House recognizes that the keen competition now existing between Great Britain and other manufacturing and commercial powers, may render untaxed food and raw materials necessary to Great Britain for the successful maintenance of that competition; and that so long as Canada furnishes not more than 5 per cent of the total foreign and colonial trade of Great Britain, it is probable that a preferential tariff upon food products in favour of Canada will not in the present or in the early future be in accord with the requirements of Imperial interests, or within the bounds of reasonable request; and that Canada may properly be content for the present with the enjoyment of the trade advantages which are afforded to her by Great Britain, and which are denied to her by all other commercial powers, and with that voluntary, but valuable preference which is enjoyed by Canada in her trade relations with Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker, that resolution would truthfully present the condition of things as they exist, that resolution would recognize our obligations to England. It asserts that we would be glad to get this preferential treatment if it could be accorded to us, but it recognizes that the request for this preferential treatment, under the circumstances, could not be justified on reasonable grounds. It recognizes the fact that we do already enjoy a substantial preference in our trade with England, we enjoy the good-will of that country, and other things being equal, our products will be bought by her in preference to those from other countries, because England desires to promote and to increase her consumption of our products, desires to do this even although we have not taken as much in return of her products as we might have done. Under all these circumstances, this resolution, if it were competent to me to move it as an amendment, would more truthfully and fully embrace the conditions as they exist to-day than that political clap-trap resolution that is now before the House, which is calculated to deceive the country, by leading the people to believe that it asks for something that is attainable, when the fact is that the express declaration of the British authorities and the condition of things as they exist in the trade between the two countries, render it certain that not only it will not be granted, in England's interest, but that no circumstances exist that renders it reasonable for us to ask for any such concession.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.
