Certainly this whole question involves millions and millions of dollars for the province of Alberta and has involved a great deal each year for the past ten years. This has altered the revenues of that province. I cannot understand why the proceeds from the sale of crown leases and reserves on oil and natural gas lands should be included as a revenue source.

I trust that other members of the house will express their views on this point and I hope the minister will give us a detailed explanation of why this is being done. It is my suggestion to the minister that this is working an injustice on the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and to some extent British Columbia. I do agree that royalties should be considered as revenue because they are obtained over a period of years but I cannot understand the inclusion of bonus considerations on auction sales of crown leases and reserves. I hope we will be given some explanation.

In respect of this bill we are again faced with the five minute to midnight situation. We are being asked to pass this bill because the present agreement expires on March 31. A conference was held in this regard in September and I wonder why the bill was not introduced long before now in order that we could carry out a thorough study of it. The adoption of this bill will determine for several years the division of revenues between the federal government and the provinces, and I think it is almost contemptuous of parliament to ask us to pass it at this late stage. Had it not been for the accidental rising and reporting of progress of the committee in respect of Bill C-190 we would not now be dealing with this bill. Probably we would not have dealt with it until much later this month after we had considered the Bank Act.

I cannot let this opportunity pass without vehemently protesting against the comtemptible attitude the government has shown toward parliament. This action embellishes the image of this minister vis-à-vis that of one of his colleagues who wants one uniform and one rank structure. In my opinion this measure is far more important than Bill C-243. With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish now to let others indicate how dissatisfied we are with the timing of this measure and some of its features.

Mr. Sharp: Do not prejudice the discussion.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this bill has been brought on suddenly before we have had an opportunity to study it in detail. The resolution preceding the bill was only passed the other day and there are a great many details we need before making a complete assessment of the bill. It was my hope that we would be given a more detailed statement by the ministers concerned than we have been given today. Perhaps after we look at the two tables the minister put on the record we may get some further information.

Having regard to the bill before us and the statement of the minister let me raise several objections. The first is that the new equalization formula will equalize grants to provinces to the level of the national average whereas in the past they were equalized to the average of the two top provinces.

Mr. Sharp: In respect of two sources of tax.

Mr. Douglas: Yes, in respect of two sources of taxes. But many of us have argued for a long time that they ought to be equalized to the top province. However, we have settled for an average of the two top provinces. The minister now intends to base the equalization payment on the national average. This will destroy much of the value we estimated would result from the equalization formula.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Let me remind the house that if one reads the Rowell-Sirois report one finds that its whole concept, was that the federal government should collect the three main taxes, income tax, corporation tax and succession duties, and that this pool of tax revenue ought to be divided, after the federal government had taken out its share, among the provinces on the basis of need. This was the fundamental concept. The concept of that report was that payments should be made to the provinces in order to bring them up to a level of services for education, health and welfare that would make for uniformity across Canada. The concept of the Rowell-Sirois report was that a Canadian, irrespective of the geographic area in which he or she might live, was entitled to a certain standard of health, welfare and educational services commensurate with the level of services enjoyed by Canadians in other parts of the country.

Successive governments, of course, have never lived up to this principle of need. What we have done instead is to work out an equalization formula designed to mitigate the worst discrepancies that obtain between the various regions of Canada. I submit that the equalization formula now before the house is certainly not going to eliminate the existing regional disparities. The minister says, of course, that the total amount for equalization grants is larger. That is true; it is higher in total by some $140 million. But I would point out that in connection with the $494 million in equalization payments one province will receive almost half, namely, $235,282,000. I am not complaining about that but it will do little to remove the disparity that exists in some of the other provinces. When one sees that the province of Newfoundland will receive $59.8 million, Prince Edward Island $14 million, Nova Scotia $69 million, New Brunswick $60 million and Manitoba $29 million, one realizes that this formula will do little to enable the people in the have-not provinces to enjoy the same level of services that is enjoyed by people in other parts of the country.

I understand it is the intention to eliminate the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. If those grants are eliminated, of course, the special consideration which was being given to the Atlantic provinces will be removed. I am fearful that the minister is thinking purely in financial and budgetary terms and has lost sight of the original principle of equalization which was to eliminate as far as possible the discrepancies which obtain between the revenue of some parts of Canada and others and their ability to provide their people with adequate services.

I noticed that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said that the provinces should impose the taxes for the money which they want to spend. This, I take it, is the principle upon which the minister is proceeding. That seems logical in theory. The fact is that there are provinces in Canada which do not have the tax base from which revenue can be derived. There are provinces in Canada that, no matter what taxes they impose, cannot possibly of their own accord give to their people a level of services that would in any way be related to the services provided in the wealthier provinces. The whole purpose of equalization was to recognize this fact, to recognize that much of the money collected by the federal government is collected from corporations which are located in certain provinces but make their money in other parts of Canada, and that the money, although it is collected in the wealthier provinces, is not all earned in those wealthier provinces but is earned as a result of the effort of all the people of Canada and by doing business in every part of Canada.

I am fearful that the reducing of the equalization formula to the national average is moving in the wrong direction. For a while it was based on the national average. The provinces felt it was a significant gain to be able to get equalization to the two top provinces, and we hoped that eventually we would get equalization to the top province and thus we would bring the other provinces up to the level of the highest income province in Canada. Now we are taking a retrograde step and going back to the national average.

My second objection to this legislation is that it completely ignores municipal revenue. I think that the government in its equalization formula would have been wiser to have stayed with even the three original sources of revenue that were in the agreement preceding the one now in existence. But if the government is going to take into account all forms of provincial revenue it ought to go one step further and include municipal revenue, because there is a wide variation among the provinces in the division of responsibilities between the respective provinces and their municipalities. Some provinces spend more money to help their municipalities and their school boards, and provide services which in other provinces have to be supplied to a greater extent by the municipalities. I feel that the government has ignored this factor completely, which will further accentuate the discrepancies that are bound to occur between provinces.

My third objection to this legislation is that it is concentrated solely on the revenue side of the equation and takes no account of the variations in the cost of providing services in different parts of Canada. The cost of providing services in some parts of Canada is considerably higher than in other parts of this country. I think the minister, in basing an equalization formula solely on the total average tax yields across Canada, has overlooked this important point.

My fourth objection has to do with the desirability of including all forms of provincial revenue in computing equalization grants. I remind the house that originally equalization was based on the revenues which a province received from three fields of taxation, namely, income tax, corporation tax and succession duties. In arguing the case when the present formula was introduced I for one opposed including revenue from resource development, and I am still opposed to it. I am opposed to including it for two reasons. First, as has already been pointed out, revenue from resource development is a declining asset; it is not a recurring revenue. It is revenue from oil, from minerals of various kinds and from timber, much of which is not renewed. Timber if properly managed can be renewable, but oil, gas and minerals are not renewable assets and as they are used up the revenue will decline. To use this as one of the factors in determining equalization payments seems to me to be most unfair.

The other reason why I do not think revenue from resource development should be included is that the minister is taking into consideration the gross revenue. If a province succeeds in getting revenue from oil, potash, sodium sulphate, copper, lead, zinc, coal or any of the minerals that are mined in a province, that province must spend very large sums of money to bring about that development. It must spend money on geophysical surveys, on exploratory work and on building roads into these areas. Therefore if the minister must include the revenues from resource development in computing the equalization formula, surely it should at least be a net figure and not a gross figure. The result of including not only resource development revenue but all revenue for the province and taking the national average means that we are getting what I think will be a very unfair distribution of revenue to the provinces and I think it will create a great many anomalies and discrepancies.

The minister has mentioned the province of Saskatchewan. He said he is very pleased that Saskatchewan is a "have" province. If he took the trouble to look at the figures he would find that Saskatchewan has been a "have" province for a great many years. Saskatchewan's per capita income has been above the national average for a long time. He would also find that the resource revenue which is coming in now is coming in from potash mines and oil wells most of which were established prior to 1964. So the situation which faces Saskatchewan today is not much different from what it was when the present agreement was signed. The only difference is that, first of all, resource development is now being included, whereas in previous agreements prior to the one now in effect resource development was not included, and I do not think it should be. Second, while Saskatchewan's resource revenue is increasing as potash mines come into production, no account is taken of the fact that the province of Saskatchewan has had to spend very large sums of money in order to get this revenue.

The minister is going to give to Saskatchewan and also to Prince Edward Island, if I remember correctly, a sort of guaranteed equalization grant which will help them to phase out this situation. However, I do not think that is the answer. The fact that Saskatchewan is going to get some $8 million less out of this formula than it got out of previous formulae is not so much because Saskatchewan is a great deal better off financially but because it is dealing with a Minister of Finance who has changed the rules of the game. The formula he is now imposing upon the provinces is one which is designed to work against those provinces which have spent large sums of money in order to get resource development, and no account is being taken of the sums of money which they have spent for that purpose.

I close by saying that I hope that before we get into committee of the whole the Minister of Finance will give us some of the figures which I understand have been compiled by the tax structure committee. I referred to this matter when the resolution was before the house the other day. I want to ask the minister if the tax structure committee made an estimate which showed that, on the basis of an annual increase in the gross national product of some 7 per cent, by 1972 the federal government will have a surplus of $727 million and the municipalities and the provinces will have a deficit of some $2,100 million.

I also want to know whether on the basis of a 6 per cent annual growth in the gross national product the federal government will still have a surplus by 1972 and the provinces and municipalities will have an estimated deficit of $2,100 millions. It is important that we have this information because I think that we in the house have to be concerned about what this agreement will do for the provinces and municipalities. The provinces and municipalities have to provide certain services. They are the only bodies which have the constitutional authority to provide such services as education, health and welfare and municipal services such as water, sewers, etc. If they are not able to provide those services, then irrespective of whether or not the federal government has a surplus the people of Canada will have a low standard of life and young people of Canada will be deprived of educational opportunities and opportunities for good health, adequate hospital facilities and the other things which are required. I think that the minister should give us that information.

This house must be concerned about what this very rigid agreement is going to do to the provinces and the municipalities and to what extent it will limit their capacity to provide the services which they are required to provide. If over the course of the next five years the municipalities and provincial governments have to curtail services, then it means that the people of Canada are going to have a lower standard of living. I say to the minister that with the Carter report having just come out and with the whole question of taxation being considered he might be well advised to look into the possibility of a shorter term for these agreements. I must confess that I am seriously worried about a five-year agreement formulated on the basis of a tax structure that the Carter report has shown to be markedly inequitable. If this agreement is imposed on the provinces for the next five years, the fiscal changes which will be necessary in this country will not benefit them to the extent that they ought.

I see you are going to call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I have completed my remarks. I simply want to ask the minister whether, when we come to the committee stage, he will give us some of the information that has been collected by the tax structure committee.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. It is my duty to inform hon. members that under provisional standing order 39A the following matters will be discussed on the adjournment debate: The hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), R.C.M.P.—Appointment of a unilingual liaison officer at Expo '67.

[English]

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PAYMENTS MADE TO JOHN T. SAYWELL AND/OR JOHN C. RICKER

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents, dated since January 1, 1961, exchanged between the Secretary of State or any agency or department of the government of Canada relating to payments made to John T. Saywell and/or John C. Ricker by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and a list setting out in detail each such payment to each such person.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this motion for the production of papers which has just been read by Your Honour I would point out that I would not have had the temerity to move a motion asking for information from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation having had many years' experience of requesting information, which requests have been met with the bland answer: "We don't give out information. Such information is not in the public interest. Such information is not divulged to parliament". They continue to ask us for money but they do not give us any information.

About two months ago Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, made a statement in connection with what became known as the von Thadden incident, during the course of which he made these remarks:

> This action does not mean that the corporation will abrogate its responsibility in terms of the principle of the right of the Canadian public to information.

There, Mr. Speaker, is a flat statement if there ever was one. Mr. Ouimet said:

> This action does not mean that the corporation will abrogate its responsibility in terms of the principle of the right of the Canadian public to information.

For the past 30 years or even longer the C.B.C. has been telling all questioners: "We cannot give that kind of information. It is not in the public interest. Such information is not divulged." But here is Mr. Ouimet, with big, mouth-filling words, coming down flat footedly on the side of truth and making the statement:

> This action does not mean that the corporation will abrogate its responsibility in terms of the principle of the right of the Canadian public to information.

The information that I want, Mr. Speaker, is how much money has been paid by the C.B.C. to Professor John T. Saywell and/or

John C. Ricker, another teacher in Toronto, by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation year by year for the last five years.

I was strengthened in my expectation that there had been a tremendous volte-face by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as outlined by Mr. Ouimet in his press release of January 16, 1967, because Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), who answers in parliament for the C.B.C. and, as I have pointed out before, in fact does not make any answer but just represents the C.B.C. in the house, in commenting on the von Thadden incident had this to say. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that there was an outcry against the C.B.C. for spending the Canadian public's money bringing this man to this country, and as reported at page 11819 of Hansard the Secretary of State stated:

> But there is the principle of respecting the right of the Canadian people to know what is current in the world—

If there is the principle of respecting the right of the Canadian people to know what is current in the world, I should like to know how much money has been paid to Professor John T. Saywell and John C. Ricker; and I think that I am looking for information to which the public is entitled because it is taxpayers' money that is being put into the pockets of these two gentlemen.

Picking this incident concerning Mr. Saywell and Mr. Ricker as the peg on which to hang my motion, Mr. Speaker, in view of these two flatfooted statements by Mr. Ouimet and the Secretary of State in which I presume we are supposed to place some reliance, even though it may be falsely placed, my interest in ascertaining how much money has been paid to Messrs. Saywell and Ricker has been triggered by the fact that in a book jointly authored by the two of them entitled "Nation and Province" which has been circulated among the schools of Ontario by the Ontario department of education there were some very sharp attacks on the printed word.

I have been engaged in the publishing world for 40 years and have a very high respect for Canadian publishers. Messrs. Saywell and Ricker collected money from the C.B.C. by expressing opinions from time to time, many of which have no doubt come to the attention of hon. members. However, in their book "Nation and Province", under the heading of "Parliament and the Press" they go out of their way to point out that there are some dangerous tendencies in the world of the printed press, one being a dangerous tendency toward centralization. This book was published about eight years ago, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps one reason the federal government is leaning toward decentralization more than ever before is that Messrs. Saywell and Ricker have referred to the dangerous tendency toward centralization.

Let me repeat what I said in this house on February 10. Who says that centralization is dangerous, Mr. Speaker? In the publishing world in Canada more and more publications are joining what are known as the great chains. Those of us who have had experience in the publishing world in Canada cannot see that there is a dangerous tendency in that regard. Many of these publications would not be in existence today had they not sold out to a chain operator, as a result of which they get the economies of mass buying and come under the brilliant management of people who are, without question, first class operators. As a result a publication that singly might have foundered is now able to continue profitably under chain operation.

Messrs. Saywell and Ricker make reference in their book not only to the dangerous tendency toward centralization but also talk about whether people can believe the news which is published in our papers. The interesting thing is that they praise the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. They point out that newspapers may well be reluctant to print news or opinions which could have an adverse effect on advertising interests.

I should like to ask Professor Saywell and Mr. Ricker for their comments with regard to some newspapers I could name that are owned by very large corporation which are among the biggest advertisers in the whole Dominion of Canada. I think in particular of one paper owned and controlled by the largest advertiser in Canada, about which Professor Saywell and Mr. Ricker might tell us you cannot believe a word this publication prints because its ownership rests in the hands of an advertiser. But, Mr. Speaker, this does not automatically make you a liar, or open to criticism, or convict you of being unable to tell the truth. I submit that the statement of Messrs. Saywell and Ricker is absolutely uncalled for.

But having accepted money from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation they go on to make their case on a comparison with private newspapers and private radio stations and on page 60 of their book, "Nation and Province", I find the following:

> The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, owned by the government and the people of Canada, does an admirable job in keeping the public informed on events in parliament; being the servant of public rather than private interests, its news is impartial.

This is quite an interesting statement for these gentlemen to be making. The money they have received from the C.B.C. in the past has of course, never influenced their judgment. They, of course, would be the last people in the world to extend any modicum of thanks to someone who had benefited them in a pecuniary way, such as the C.B.C.

Then we have the attack made by Knowlton Nash of the C.B.C. on August 11 in a C.B.C. broadcast against these nefarious newspaper people. I have in my hand an exact transcript of the comments made by Mr. Knowlton Nash from Washington as supplied to me by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation itself. It does seem to me that the C.B.C. spends much of its time trying to cast reflections on United States' action in Viet Nam. If there is the slightest tittle of information they can pick up that might reflect on United States' action in Viet Nam, the C.B.C. gives it national coverage. In this statement which I hold in my hand, and which is just the way the C.B.C. gave it to me, I find the following:

> Today, one hundred United States servicemen answered a call for blood donors sent out by the hospital in Cam Tho. And teams of American and South Vietnamese doctors and nurses have been sent there to care for the injured civilians.
> In Washington, C.B.C. correspondent Knowlton Nash reports that authorities there are becoming concerned at the "bad press" the United States is receiving in some countries over her actions in Viet Nam.

That was the introduction, and now we have Knowlton Nash, the voice of authority, the voice of righteousness, the voice of correct opinions, saying:

> The United States has been getting increasingly alarmed lately at the somewhat less than enthusiastic support given to U.S. actions in Viet Nam by reporters in Canada, France, the United Kingdom and other countries.

The United States must be greatly upset over the fact that reporters in Canada, France and the United Kingdom do not support them.

> To try to rectify this so-called "bad press" the U.S. information service has come up with a rather traditional press agent approach. It's flying free to Saigon specially selected editors and commentators from other countries... including three Canadian newsmen.
> The U.S. agency says that it does not want to identify the newsmen because it says this might lessen their credibility.

This statement, of course, is being made on the C.B.C. national network by a C.B.C. employee in an effort to discredit the three newsmen who had accepted an invitation to be flown to Viet Nam to see what is going on with their own eyes so they can give an accurate report to the Canadian public. These three newsmen were later identified. I identified them in my remarks on February 10. Toward the end of his statement Mr. Knowlton Nash says:

> The Post says some Canadian newspapers have turned down the free trip preferring, as the C.B.C. has done, to pay their own way for their correspondents.

He refers to the C.B.C., that guardian of the truth in Canada. What about Miss Beryl Fox of the C.B.C., who went to Viet Nam to report on the situation there? The C.B.C. may have paid her way to South Viet Nam, but everybody in this chamber knows that she could not have seen anything in Viet Nam if the United States government had not made transportation available to her throughout the length and breadth of that country. She took advantage of the hospitality of the United States government and toured South Viet Nam. She comes back here and over the C.B.C. comments unfavourably on the attitudes and actions of the United States government in South Viet Nam.

If Mr. Knowlton Nash feels that the gentlemen who accepted the hospitality of the United States government and made visits to Viet Nam cannot be believed because they have accepted this hospitality, then why does he not condemn the Canadian cabinet which invites people to come here to look this country over and form an opinion about what is going on in Canada? I have in my hand a photostat record of people coming to Canada at government expense. By the way, Mr. J. Hourie, editor of the Jerusalem Post, is in the city of Ottawa at the present time at the expense of the Canadian government. If there is something the matter with people accepting expense paid trips across the Pacific Ocean to South Viet Nam, then is there not something the matter with the Canadian government bringing people into this country? Are we trying to influence their judgment? Does this mean that when they go back to their countries the people cannot believe them because they have been influenced by the hospitality of the Canadian government?

I have a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen dated February 25 which reads:

> Erik Blumenfeld, chairman of the West German Bundestag's (Parliament's) Vietnam subcommittee, will speak to the Council of Foreign Relations in New York Tuesday, it was announced Friday.
> He then will visit Montreal and Ottawa at the invitation of the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs.

Is the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs trying to influence this man's judgment? If they are not, why are they bringing him over here? If all these newsmen who visit South Viet Nam at the invitation of the United States government are to have their credibility called into question, then how does it come about that when the Canadian government fly C.B.C. equipment, cameramen and commentators all over this country and in many cases across oceans to distant parts of the world, the C.B.C. does not state, do not believe us; we have been influenced by the munificence of the Canadian government toward the C.B.C? If the C.B.C. believes what Knowlton Nash, a paid employee of that organization, is saying, then why does not the C.B.C. pay its own expenses in sending cameramen and commentators wherever the C.B.C. may desire instead of participating in the generosity of the Canadian government? This is certainly a case of the pot calling the kettle black. It is a two-faced attitude, if I ever saw one, to criticize men who have accepted the munificence of the United States government and then turn around and accept the generosity of the Canadian government.

I also have in my hand a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen dated February 4. Under a three column heading, "VIP Arrangements Under Way", there is mention of the people who are going to visit Canada during centennial year. The article is by Shirley Foley, assistant women's editor. In the article I find such phrases as, "The government's invitations have also included..."; "the provincial and federal governments will collaborate on these outside Ottawa visits in matters of security, hospitality, etc.". Then there is this phrase: "...while the Canadian government will see to their getting about within the country."

There is another article concerning the President of Zambia which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of November 18, 1966. The article states that the President of Zambia arrived in Ottawa after a flight from New York in a transport department Viscount. Later in the article I find this statement:

> On Saturday, he and Mr. Martin will leave by transport department aircraft for the university convocation at Windsor.

Then we have a story in the Montreal Star of November 17, 1966, which states that a Swedish prince is in that city. The article states that the prince flew in aboard a Canadian government Viscount from Ottawa and was taken immediately to the Expo administration building on the site of the 1967 world's fair. If it is irregular and incorrect for newsmen to accept invitations from governments to visit parts of the world where the action is, then why does the Canadian government participate in such nefarious practices by asking people to come over here at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer? Does the Canadian government expect these people to accept our hospitality and then go back and knife the host country in return? This practice has been going on for hundreds of years. People who have been anxious to create a good impression have been willing to pay money to entertain those who might be commenting on the situation.

A less interesting angle of this situation is the search for the truth which the C.B.C. recently undertook when it went to great lengths to interview an 11-year-old girl. She had written a piece of poetry which appeared in a United States magazine. The poem attacked the United States action in Viet Nam. This is a religious publication which printed it. It is a small publication and this was a small contest. I said a little while ago that if the C.B.C. could find some way of attacking the actions of the United States government in South Viet Nam it would go to any lengths to do so. This is a perfect example of that. They send interviewers down to interview a little girl and reproduce this poem. However, the ideas of an 11-year-old girl on the United States government's interference in Viet Nam are not of much importance to the people of Canada. But that does not bother the C.B.C. It is the Canadian taxpayers' money they are squandering, and they are going to give the opinion of an 11-year-old girl on this affair. Why in Heaven's name cannot the C.B.C. spend its money to get the opinions of people who are knowledgeable on the subject instead of interviewing 11-year-old children?

We have three members of this House of Commons who are at this moment touring Taiwan, South Viet Nam, Indonesia and the Malay States at the expense of the governments of those countries. When they return, are we to say to them that their words cannot be believed or taken at face value because they have been influenced by the generosity of their hosts—brainwashed by the host countries? This is what has been said of three newsmen who were attacked and held up to public ridicule by Mr. Knowlton Nash in that broadcast on August 11. I sincerely hope the C.B.C. will produce the information for which I asked so that you and I will be able to judge just how impartial are the opinions of the news commentators of the corporation.

I have a C.B.C. list of more than 80 newspapermen who have been paid to broadcast on C.B.C. programs such as "Pre-view", "Viewpoint" and the six o'clock news. Do you think the C.B.C. uses newsmen because the corporation has a high regard for them? Far from it. Mr. Stanley Burke, the gorgeous anchorman on the C.B.C. national television news, speaking in Toronto on March 2 at a reorganization meeting of the Sigma Delta Chi fraternity, said in the course of comments to a group of newsmen that the primary concern of the new operation was to develop an organization which would enable the C.B.C. to go after its own news rather than rehash news provided through the print media. Burke told us what he thinks of the news provided by the news media. So why do they have these newsmen appearing all the time on C.B.C. radio and television stations if they have such an opinion of the work they are doing? The answer is that they do so in order that these men will be favourably disposed toward the C.B.C. and that, as they write for the papers which employ them, they will make laudatory references to the corporation commending it for its noble work and on the vast undertaking which it is operating.

If anybody was ever paid money to get a favourable opinion it is certainly the newspapermen whose names the C.B.C. has on lists which are interminably long. But why does the C.B.C. turn around and attack Canadian newspapermen of the utmost reputation? Of the three, I have known two of them for many years and I have no hesitation about believing anything they write. When the Secretary of State makes the statement that there is a principle here which involves respect for the right of the Canadian people to know what is going on currently in the world, and when Mr. Alphonse Ouimet in connection with the von Thadden incident passes the remark that the principle of the public's right to information was involved—this was why they were going to bring the German here before they changed their minds—let me say that I too have a right to some information. There is something I want to know and it is: How much has been paid to Messrs. Saywell and Ricker who have made these commendatory statements about the C.B.C.'s service while giving the back of their hand to the established print media which have been in business in this country for over 150 years?

Of course, there is no connection between the money they received and the laudatory things they said about the C.B.C. But I believe that as a matter of record we should know how much was paid to them and then we shall know just how impartial is the judgment of these men. Hon. members may be interested to know that the Ontario Department of Education has withdrawn the book from the schools of Ontario because of the bias shown by one medium of communication against the print media.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): By leave, the hon. member may continue.

Mr. Cowan: I wish to thank the house for giving unanimous consent in this regard. I had almost finished my remarks.

In speaking of impartial news coverage—and I have made reference to the von Thadden incident—I hope I may be allowed to comment on a story which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of yesterday where it was reported that a young man in Rockford, Illinois has been accused of double murder. I know that the C.B.C will be bringing him to Canada to go on the program, "Sunday". He must be a famous man or he would not have shot two boys of 14 or 15. It has just come out that last week he was acquitted of having shot a 15-year-old boy, though he did not kill him. I sincerely hope that when the C.B.C brings this person up here they will provide him with a return ticket because I would not want this fellow, who has just been acquitted of shooting one young lad and who is now charged with the murder of two others, to come here with a one-way ticket and get lost among the draft dodgers who are now residing in this country.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that many of the requests to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for information should be given favourable consideration. I believe that much of the misunderstanding which occurs could be eliminated if we knew just how the corporation operates. Like many other people I have been shocked about some of the things which the C.B.C has done and I regret that it has been so difficult to get information from the corporation.

I am of the opinion that the broadcasting committee should have recommended the disposal by any means possible—retirement, promotion, or what have you—of the old strata in the C.B.C. who we found on investigation serve no function at all. They were a little like the Senators in the other place. After a politician has outworn his usefulness it is nice to have a place in which to put him. The C.B.C. has a large selection of vice presidents who might be placed in that category. Inefficiency at this level is marked, and this may be connected with the reluctance to give information which might shed light on some of the things which happen in the C.B.C.

The hon. member who has moved this motion for the production of correspondence has told us he is not particularly interested in learning the amounts of money paid to these two gentlemen. Frankly, I do not know either one of them. I think the hon. member has probably moved this motion in order to call attention to the unwillingness of top management of the C.B.C to co-operate by complying with very simple requests which do not seem to be unreasonable or even, in some cases, to contain much merit.

The C.B.C in refusing to table this type of document puts on the type of halo that it does not deserve. It is necessary for members of parliament who are particularly interested in the C.B.C to speak out about some of the abuses which the corporation perpetrates or there will be a lot of people who will say, "To hell with the C.B.C."

I am sure those who watched the coverage of the funeral ceremonies yesterday were proud of the job the corporation did on that occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: I think it could not have been done nearly as well by any other agency. Part of the reason they were able to make such a good showing is, no doubt, the range and variety of equipment available as a result of the money placed by parliament at the corporation's disposal.

• (6:30 p.m.)

We have provided the C.B.C. with facilities. That being the case, how is it that with respect to northern Ontario, where sports are very important, the C.B.C. is quite willing, openly and without bias or charge to provide the other networks with full coverage of a national event such as that which took place yesterday, but when C.T.V. buys the coverage rights for sports it will not allow that coverage to be carried by the C.B.C. to areas the C.T.V. cannot cover, on either a gratuity or exchange basis? This means that all those areas beyond the fringe of C.T.V. coverage are prevented from receiving national coverage of events such as—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. The subject which he is discussing now may be very warm and close to his heart but I see no possible link between what he is advancing and the motion before the house. Unfortunately I was not in the chair and privileged to hear the remarks of the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), and so I must assume that with his usual respect for the rules he limited his remarks to the motion before the house. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) knows what the limits are and he should restrict his comments to the very limited point concerning the advisability of tabling certain documents, that is whether certain documents specified in the motion proposed by the hon. member for York-Humber should be tabled or not. Certainly that has nothing to do with C.B.C. coverage in northern Ontario.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am glad you were able to ascertain that from the remarks made by the hon. member. I certainly was not, and I am not in a position to tell you whether these two newspapermen were not covering sports. However, I agree the debate may have extended beyond the terms of the motion and therefore I will return to it.

The motion refers specifically to two members of the press who did some work for the C.B.C. As I say, I am not prepared to state whether or not this was in the field of sports. Obviously Foster Hewitt was not involved, but I am not sure what these men did. However, I do not think the point I was trying to make is unrelated. My point was that no matter what correspondence is sought it is always considered to be privileged.

I only wish you, Mr. Speaker, had the opportunity of listening to the questioning of C.B.C. officials every time we raised matters concerning salaries and stipends paid to people working for that organization. In no case was the information given graciously or gratuitously; it was always obtained by circumvention.

When discussing this motion we must consider something else which has happened in the C.B.C. and which is not to our advantage or in the national interest. I refer to the hiring of newspaper people to do some of the jobs previously done by well known news commentators. We now have on television a new news format, introduced by people like Mr. Saywell and Mr. Ricker, dramatizing the news, leading to particular segments of news being picked out and linked together. Competition being what it is, and the C.T.V. having developed this type of format, the C.B.C. had to follow suit. We no longer see Mr. Cameron broadcasting the news in a matter of fact, factual manner. We see the dramatization of news, and this format eliminates anything that is not dramatic, and leads to the introduction of outside press people.

Because of this it is important that we know how much these people are paid because I think, due to the dramatization of the news, we are being misled in many cases. If public funds are being spent to pay these people, and if thousands of dollars are spent for short excerpts involving outside camera crews in order to dramatize certain aspects of the news, then I think it would be in the interests of the C.B.C. to make such information available and to table the correspondence that is sought in the motion before the house. But if it does table that correspondence it will lead to demands for more correspondence of this sort; everyone will want to know what everyone else, hired on an ad hoc basis, is paid.

This may lead members of parliament to say, when watching news on television, "If he got $20, that is too much." On the other hand if somebody else got $40 they may say it was probably a reasonable amount. We may say that Mr. Lynch is worth $100 an appearance on C.B.C. news and Mr. Saywell worth only $40, at which rate he may be overpaid or underpaid, depending on our own opinions. If the C.B.C. is not willing to give the general public some knowledge about its operations, then it can expect nothing but criticism for hiding behind a smokescreen of civil service bureaucracy, something which is not in the interests of the public. If the C.B.C. is not willing to give this information, then the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) should be prepared to come into this house and give good reason why the information cannot be made available.

I agree that in some cases it may not be proper to provide such information, but when someone does a piece of work in the news field—and obviously newspapermen are well suited to that field—we should have enough information to form a pretty good idea of whether or not we are getting value for our money for the work being done. I am violently opposed to the practice of the C.B.C. having a list of newspapermen and calling on each one in turn to present his viewpoint. This is not in the interests of good broadcasting and is one of the reasons why C.B.C. programming has reached the stage where I am receiving many letters objecting to its news coverage.

At present I am getting many letters objecting to the C.B.C.'s mediocre public affairs program, "Sunday", which obviously is not keeping up with its competition on the other channels. I am surprised when, every time we raise a matter about the C.B.C., there is this hue and cry that it is a sacred cow about which there cannot be any discussion. I think it would do the C.B.C. a lot of good if it were more frank with members of parliament and the public in general. They should pay some attention to suggestions and criticisms. No matter who we are as individuals we will not like everything they do. They might hire Mr. Saywell whom I may like and Mr. Ricker whom I may not like. If, however, we should think that both these gentlemen are unacceptable or that their work is mediocre, we should have some way to indicate our disapproval or, if we approve of them, our approval. I do not think we should be placed in the position of having power to make a decision in these matters, but I do think a great deal more information could be provided by the minister.

It is time we changed the system by which the C.B.C reports to the house through the minister. I believe the minister should have more authority as to what she can demand they produce and what cannot be demanded. I do not see much difference between the situation of the C.B.C. in the production of this type of correspondence, and that of the Canadian National Railways when they are asked to produce correspondence. Very often when an individual member has a request of this nature he takes it to the minister who, in very strong language I presume, refers it to the Canadian National Railways. The minister in turn receives a reply which he then gives in the house to the member who asked the question. This is not what is being done with the C.B.C. It seems to me that this is one of the weaknesses we should try to strengthen.

I should like to see in C.B.C. television the vibrant influence it has always been in radio. This has not been accomplished. One reason is that we pay out too much money for mediocrity to the people we hire. If some of these accounts were produced the public might be in a position to judge whether or not we are paying too much for mediocrity. I think on the other hand we might be surprised also to learn how much we sometimes receive for a very limited payment. It might balance out. I am not suggesting it will be all one way or all the other. I believe that if more information is provided by the C.B.C. the people will be able to get closer to its operations. With the result that the C.B.C. would operate more on our behalf.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish - Guysborough): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? I do not ask this question to imply that I disagree with what the hon. member has said, but simply to ensure that he does not "have it both ways" too easily. He suggested the minister should be fully responsible in the house for the operation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in a manner comparable to that of a minister answering for a department. I am wondering whether he would be willing to go that far. Some people are willing to go so far as to make the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation an integral part of one of the departments of government. Is the hon. member proposing that?

Mr. Peters: No. I am very pleased that that question has been asked. I am absolutely opposed to the C.B.C. becoming a department of government. I used the example of the Minister of Transport reporting on behalf of the Canadian National Railways, because I see a similarity between that operation of a crown corporation and the operation of the C.B.C. as a crown corporation. There is however a vast difference when a question is asked concerning the C.B.C. To my knowledge the minister has never been able to come back with an answer which provides any detail concerning her discussion with the C.B.C. management.

I believe there is correspondence in the possession of the C.B.C. which they do not wish to have presented. When there is a good reason for that position, I think it should be honoured. On the other hand there is much information members might ask questions about, not as to the running of programs but as to how much money is paid for a certain type of program. I would presume that such information is available to ACTRA, and that everyone who participates in the programs, whether in the C.B.C. or in C.T.V., can ascertain the range of rates paid, while we as members of parliament when asking for this kind of information receive a blanket refusal.

I presume the government will talk out this motion, even if it takes two and a half hours, rather than have these particular documents relating to two individuals presented. I think the reason the question has been asked is so that the government can refuse and therefore discredit the operations of the C.B.C. I may be unfair in this, but I think these two particular men are incidental. They should not be. This is a reasonable request which should be conveyed to the C.B.C. by the minister who speaks for the C.B.C., with the suggestion that she sees no objection to these figures being presented and advising them that unless they have a damned good reason they should provide the information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before I allow the parliamentary secretary to ask a question of the hon. member, I should like to bring to his attention the fact that his time has expired. However, by consent a question might be asked and a reply given.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I will make my question very short. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman what he would say if he, as Secretary of State, went to the corporation and put to it the questions embodied in the resolution put forward now by the hon. member, and was told—I am not pretending to quote—that, "Really, this is not your business. We have not been asked in the past to give that type of information and do not intend to give it now". What would the hon. gentleman say beyond certain strong but empty words? How would he propose to go about producing the results he desired?

Mr. Peters: I would think the answer is very simple. I would use those strong words with the corporation. I think we would have a very serious heart to heart discussion about the operations of the C.B.C. and when I came back to parliament I would be quite prepared to say just that; that is, that the corporation told me it was none of my business and that it is none of our business. I believe that if this kind of answer were given firmly to parliament, we would see an end of this business and we would have a very different type of operation in the C.B.C. than we now have. It seems to me that this really is what the C.B.C. is now saying to the minister and the minister, being a lady, is too polite to come back and tell us this. I do not think it is in the interest of the C.B.C. for it to act in this way. I take it from the fact that the minister is not here that her personal argument is not the corporation's argument, and she does not wish to say just that. She does not wish to say they have told her it is none of her business. Because of the fact that there has not been a legitimate answer given at any time to any of these questions I think parliament might as well be told that this is the attitude of the C.B.C. In this way we might have a closer relationship between members of parliament and the minister, in her role as the minister who speaks for the C.B.C.

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, in opposing this motion I do so for a very good reason. Before I come to that, however—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether I was in order in recognizing the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Hymmen). I was not in the chair earlier this evening. I did not realize that the hon. member was speaking after another member of his own party already had taken part in this debate. If the hon. member for Waterloo North will allow me to look in the other direction, I should now like to recognize the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt).

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate your courtesy and that of the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Hymmen). There is very little time left for either of us to make many observations, and perhaps on another occasion that hon. member will have a better opportunity to express his position. I also hope I will have another opportunity to elaborate on this subject at greater length.

In the very few minutes left at my disposal I should like to say that I support the motion of the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan). He has brought out a very important principle which we all must consider carefully. The "I's" were dotted and the "T's" were crossed as a result of the question posed to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart).

What are we to do about these emanations of parliament or, as someone perhaps more aptly called them, these creatures of parliament which refuse to answer questions or give information? I refer not only to the C.B.C. but also to the Civil Service Commission and the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The remarks I intend to make apply equally to the others.

These creatures of parliament as the hon. member for Timiskaming suggested, have almost become sacred cows whose activities cannot be questioned by members of this house. In fact any member who tries to do so is considered "far out" or naughty. These organizations have been very careful through their propaganda to make sure they do not fall under the control of parliament. They are financed by the taxpayers, but apparently no one outside those organizations has any control over them.

While I agree that there must be special limitations in control over these creations, and while I do not have time to go into that aspect of the matter, the situation now is that they are not responsible to the public and not responsible to this house. More and more of these creations are being established and I think hon. members ought to examine very carefully into whether these creatures should be allowed to go off on their own, without any de facto control.

Many people argue that there should not be any political influence in the C.B.C., so as to prevent its becoming a government mouthpiece. I think all hon. members will agree with that theory. We do not want political control and interference from within the C.B.C. itself. However, apparently this is what has happened, particularly in view of the extreme bias shown by this organization in reporting news items. Again I have not sufficient time to go into details and will reserve the right to do so on another occasion.

I suggest the same situation applies in respect of the Civil Service Commission. It has been said that we should not have political interference in the appointment of officials and that we do not want political patronage, but I am sure most hon. members will agree there are all sorts of devices used within the civil service for exactly that purpose. No one who has been around here for any length of time could be ignorant of the fact that there does exist a special kind of patronage within the commission. For example it is curious to find that very often qualifications set up to cover created positions fit to a remarkable degree certain individuals lined up for those positions.

Hon. members must decide sooner or later the degree of control that should be exercised by the house over organizations which have become complete entities unto themselves. I agree there must be some limitation of parliamentary control, but the situation at the moment is highly unsatisfactory.

The hon. member for York-Humber is asking for some simple information which could not possibly prejudice the financial activities of the C.B.C. in competition with the C.T.V., but the corporation has refused to provide that information. I suggest there is no sound reason for such refusal and that the C.B.C. has refused because it is afraid of setting a precedent. This organization does not wish to give information on any subject.

I am reminded of a situation which existed when a former member for Témiscouata, now in the other place, used to ask a former president of the Canadian National Railways how much was being paid for charcoal and fence posts. The president of the railways used to turn purple in the face and tell the hon. member that it was none of his business. But that former member was very shrewd and somehow always managed to get the information.

Unfortunately few of the members of this house have had the opportunity in recent years of examining the spending estimates of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. For some reason or another they have always been brought forward at the end of our discussion on estimates, on the last day of a session or when the time has run out. We have not had the opportunity recently for any examination in the house of C.B.C expenditures. While this organization and its activities have been referred to in certain committees, the great majority of us have not had the opportunity of examining its operations. Whenever we ask questions about its activities, and why they will not give us certain information, we are told by the pipe line or the mouthpiece of that organization in the house, that the disclosure would not be in the public interest. We should like to know why this would not be in the public interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

Pursuant to special order of the house adopted on Friday, March 3, the sitting stands suspended until eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words on the measure before us I want first of all to assure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) that he should not be too quick to take too seriously all the things said by the Premier of Saskatchewan. It is a well known fact that the Premier of Saskatchewan makes some extravagant statements, and during the past two years, in trying to build up an image in our province, throughout Canada and indeed throughout North America he has found occasion to make some claims regarding the situation in the province of Saskatchewan that are exaggerated to say the least. I should also like to refer to the fact that the premier of our province has described the deal that he received at the hands of the Minister of Finance as a dirty deal, in so far as concerns the equalization that would come to my province.

In dealing with the situation with regard to the resource industries in a province I should like to point out that Saskatchewan at the present time is particularly interested in potash, the effects of this industry and the revenues derived therefrom. I believe this resource contributed in some degree to the decision taken by the minister in arriving at the formula, so far as concerns the phasing out of the equalization grants for Saskatchewan. While these industries are desirable for a province and increase the revenue of the country, they are not all gravy as far as the province and municipalities are concerned.

For this reason I wish the minister had taken into consideration the situation of the municipalities in this whole context when the government tried to arrive at a formula for the provinces. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read part of an article which appeared in "The Rural Councillor", a municipal magazine in the province of Saskatchewan. The article deals with the problems concerning the development of potash. This is what appears in volume 2, the issue of March, 1967, of that magazine:

> Fertile Belt, in which is located Esterhazy, the only large residential centre near the mines—

That is, the potash mines.

> —claims that 80 per cent of the miners "either live in our (rural municipality) or drive through it." The R.M. is "building and maintaining roads and not getting any revenue to offset the extra costs involved." This situation prevails in the other two R.M.s. Miners travel for miles in every direction, some crossing two or three municipalities, twice a day. Many farmers and their sons work in the mines and expect good, snow-free roads on which to get to and from work.
> One of its special problems has been overweight trucks hauling crushed rock.

As a result, the traffic counts on these roads has increased. Another feature that has emerged as a result of this development in our province has been the expense of snow removal. The particular municipality referred to in the article which I have read had to have three large graders, which represented a total investment of approximately $100,000, available in the winter for snow removal. This article goes on to indicate that the cost of snow removal might be reduced if the roads were built up to a higher standard. This raises the situation a province faces in regard to the demands from municipalities for assistance in building the roads necessary for resource development. The article goes on to say that some of the roads they have built were used very little, but now are classified as good roads.

The other problem that has faced the provinces and municipalities is the critical lack of housing in potash mining areas in Saskatchewan. The federal government's program is almost totally unsuitable to provide the assistance required, and as a result people are forced to use the roads more than they would normally use them. I wanted to bring that to the attention of the minister, because in light of the resource development which has taken place over the long-term period, when one considers the population of that province in relation to the bill now before us it would almost seem that the government has decided to discriminate against those provinces that are trying to develop the natural resources of our country. This is a very poor policy for the federal government of Canada to be following at a time when the high standard of living which Canadians expect demands a greater development of our resources to sustain the increased costs that have to be met.

This measure incites an opting out mentality that has been one of the earmarks of this government. It has forgotten the old premise of payment on the basis of need, and the need for uniformity across Canada in many of the programs that are being undertaken. I want to say a few words about the need for uniformity across Canada and I hope the minister will listen to me. There is a great deal of talk about national unity in this centennial year. If we cannot give to Canadians in every part of this nation a greater measure of equity we will not be able to achieve as quickly the spirit of unity which I am sure all members of the house would like to see.

I will not say any more on this subject. I just want to remind the minister that sometimes the extravagant statements made by provincial premiers should be taken with a grain of salt. There are many people in Saskatchewan who believe that that is what the minister would be well advised to do.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make in connection with this bill. Similarly to other hon. members on this side of the house I cannot agree with the decision of the government to phase out the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act which was brought in by the Diefenbaker government, and with much success. I am sure it is generally recognized that the technical institutes built by the action of the former government filled a great need and provided an answer to the growing need for technical training to meet the present manpower requirements.

I have a particular interest in the future of technical institutes, the construction cost of which the former government paid from 50 to 75 per cent. There is a very fine technical institute in my city of Moose Jaw and it is filling a great need. It was officially opened by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) who at that time was the minister of labour. The government of which he was a minister paid 50 per cent of the construction costs, and because of the demand for technical training an addition was built, 75 per cent of the construction cost of which was covered by the federal government.

I mention these facts to emphasize the importance of the Moose Jaw technical institute and the need to expand the operations there. The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), as reported at page 13689 of Hansard, speaking about federal help in post-secondary education adjustment payments, said:

> The central concept in this plan is that the fiscal transfers will be calculated in relation to post-secondary operating expenditures only. The federal government considers this the only satisfactory measuring stick of rising education costs, and is prepared to increase its future transfers by the rate of increase in these costs. I must stress, however, that it is the province which determines upon the allocation of these funds, and it will have to do so in the light of both the operating and capital requirements of post-secondary institutions. The funds transferred are calculated in relation to operating expenditures, but are intended for use in both the operating and capital areas.

I want to emphasize the last part of the statement in which the Secretary of State said that the grants are intended for use in both the operating and capital areas.

I see a danger in handing the complete administration of these funds to the provincial government. With a provincial election coming in the very near future and with a $7 million grant in the next fiscal year I believe there is a danger that the provincial government may decide to use this federal grant for the purpose of building another technical institute in some other city. This is what I am concerned about. It is important for the federal government to protect its interests in the institutes it has already helped to build, rather than risk the danger of the money being spent on new buildings not required at this time. It is much more important to make the best use of the technical institute at Moose Jaw and the one in Saskatoon, and to use any additional money on the continuation and expansion of the technical training there which, as I have said before, has met a great demand, and for which I can see a great need in the days ahead.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, there is one other point I should like to put before the Minister of Finance in connection with this bill. In clause 5(3) at page 2 of the bill reference is made to a basic estate tax. As we all know, 75 per cent of this tax is paid to the provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but as he knows, on second reading hon. members should not refer to specific clauses of a bill. I wonder whether the hon. member would not want to make this argument when we reach committee stage.

Mr. Pascoe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I just wanted to clear up one point in regard to estate tax. As I was saying, the federal government collects this tax but pays 75 per cent of it to the provinces. According to the 1966-67 allocation of estate and succession duties the share of estate tax paid to the provincial governments amounts to $2,652,000.

My point is this: I understand that the government of Alberta have stated that they wish to renounce their share of this estate tax, and the government of Saskatchewan have also indicated that they will do the same. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether, if the government of Saskatchewan do renounce their 75 per cent share of the estate tax, the whole of the estate tax will be collected anyway, or what arrangement might be made in this regard. I hope the minister can explain this to my satisfaction at some time.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on second reading of Bill No. C-277, I will not say much since the minister is well aware of what Quebec members think of the equalization payments and particularly of this act entitled:

> An act to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

What strikes me in all that, is the two words before last, "Interim Arrangements", because we are still hoping in Quebec that all those agreements, all the present arrangements, all those meetings with the provinces are of an interim nature only and that Quebec will one day win back what the constitution has guaranteed her since 1867, namely the recovery of her three taxation fields.

Of course, we cannot object now to the small share which is given us because we realize—and I want to point that out, here, to the minister—that the federal government is taking the lion's share and leaving to the provinces the hare's share. It has the cake and when it has taken its share, it remembers the provinces and gives them the crumbs. Every day we find that the federal government cuts largely into that cake, it makes fabulous and exorbitant expenses and even reaches the end of certain quarters with surpluses. And yet, it is always seeking new taxation fields.

This afternoon I listened to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) quote the amounts of equalization payments some provinces would receive. The minister had said before that four provinces would not benefit from equalization because they were too rich. If I were a citizen of those provinces, there would be no advantage for me to commend the minister's words, although the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggested, without saying so specifically, that Quebec enjoys a special status by getting $235 million in equalization payments.

I suggest that what he forgot to mention, or what he did not want to mention, is that Quebec alone has as many people as the other five provinces together. When speaking of equalization, we should not compare Quebec with Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. At this stage, I should like to call the attention of the house to the fact that the population of New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba are probably not much greater than that of the province of Quebec; these provinces will nevertheless receive a total of $215 million, whereas Quebec will get $235 million. One must not forget that although the province of Quebec will receive this amount, it has been taxed according to population, since taxes are always proportionate to population.

When all comes to all—this is why I said a while ago that we are only getting bits and pieces—when we look at the money the federal government takes out of the province of Quebec and the money returned, having picked up billions of dollars in this province, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no reason to jump for joy. However, we could go on talking for hours on end and it would serve no purpose, since talking to the hon. member is like talking to solid rock: he merely smiles. I do not know whether he is laughing at us, or if he always sports such a wide smile. I am under the impression that our speeches are not being heard; however, we are waiting for the government of our province to take action, to demand what belongs to the province as a matter of right.

I should like to state here, in this house, that if the Quebec government wants more autonomy, it must make the first move. It should not wait until Ottawa takes action because every time this happened, Ottawa took advantage of the opportunity to penetrate more deeply into our fields of taxation. It is therefore up to the hon. premier of the province of Quebec, it is up to the Quebec government to make a stand, to demand that the federal government respect its rights and put a stop to this procrastinating. We want him to mind his business here and let us collect our taxes in the province. We are old enough to collect our taxes. It seems to me we would be relieving him of this great burden resting on his shoulders. He says himself it is a tremendous burden and we want to relieve him of it. Let him simply give us the right devolved upon us by the constitution to collect our taxes and we shall administer our own affairs with our taxes.

This year, 75 per cent of succession duties will be returned to the provinces. As for personal and corporate income taxes, I hope that the minister will at least add a certain percentage each year, so that in two or three years, all succession duties and all personal and corporate income taxes will be returned to the provinces. I feel that the federal government and the hon. minister would avoid a big headache if they put a stop to this practice which consists in levying taxes in provinces and then returning their money by means of various payments. The minister says that he is returning the product of the tax to the province. Well, if he is returning the product of the tax, why go to all the trouble of taxing the province in the first place? Why not leave these taxes to the provinces? We simply want to lighten the burden of the hon. Minister of Finance.

If the other provinces want to do otherwise, they are free to do so, but if we want to relieve the federal government a little, if we want to reduce its work and, especially, alleviate the burden of this double administration, often the cause of financial troubles and misunderstandings on the administrative level, I do not see why the government does not accept our suggestion.

For instance, we now have financial assistance for higher education in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, we accept proper federal assistance —that is the only thing we can do—but we are now wondering who should implement federal-provincial agreements in the field of education, whether it should be the province or the federal government.

In my district, there is almost a quarrel over the matter. In the end, everyone wants to do it, but no one does. But those who are entrusted with that education get salaries though. Many a misunderstanding would be done away with if, once and for all, the matter were settled. If the federal government wants to pay 50, 75 or even 80 per cent of those courses, it should pay the amount to the provinces and let them implement those schemes; otherwise, if it wants to implement them alone, let it say so.

Again last week, a group asked me which government was responsible for managing those courses. One claimed it was the provincial government, and another, the federal government. Even I did not know and if I now ask for an explanation, I do so not to find out who is really responsible. I realize today that if the federal government minded its own business and allowed the provinces to handle their own spheres of authority, everything would be much clearer. At least, we would know where we are going with all those new organizations which pop up every day.

Mr. Speaker, we will study this bill clause by clause as well as the motion for third reading in order to try, we, the members from Quebec, to recuperate the highest percentage of all those amounts and to achieve one day what every one in the province of Quebec hopes for, namely to control our three main taxation fields to be able at last to administer our own business. If the provinces which do not get any equalization payments are now considered wealthy, I say that they are provinces which looked after their own business, provinces which have levied charges, royalties on their natural resources, in short, provinces which had the nerve to stand up to financiers and tell them: You will develop our wealth but you will pay us so much. They charged royalties which would enable them to live and that is exactly what is lacking in our own province of Quebec and probably in other provinces too. That is always what happens. We should start by making the financiers pay for a right of way, pay royalties in each province and, possibly, in a few years from now, all provinces will be on the same level, each having average wealth.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, this Bill C-277 called an Act to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with the provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, will elicit from me comments and remarks which may be different from those of most of my colleagues here since they will be based upon several years' experience in municipal affairs.

Naturally, this bill will affect our day-to-day life to a considerable degree, for we are told that the municipalities are creatures of the provinces. We recognize that, of course. But no one who is seriously concerned with public administration today can determine or establish a clear and definite dividing line between the powers of each of the three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal.

And I should like to have it remembered, throughout the remarks I shall make as briefly as possible, that I recognize the principle that the municipalities are legal creatures of the provincial governments. I say legal, because in other aspects, I hold other opinions. From a legal standpoint, they are creatures of the provinces but because of that very fact, they feel the effect of tax agreements between the federal government and the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat in that spirit that I should like to make certain remarks on Bill C-277. I, for one, believe that municipalities have been, for too many years, treated as orphans in the family, as retarded children, although they are one of the levels of government. They are, if you will, the third level of government, prestige-wise, but they are probably at the top level in terms of responsibility, considering that municipal administrations are the nearest to the people.

Always in the same spirit, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a few questions to the minister. I have a feeling that the provinces have been consulted on those interim arrangements and I should like to know to what extent and how much they have agreed to them? Which provinces said: Wait a minute. Well, we accept this, we are ready to enter into such an agreement? Which ones rejected it formally? Which ones accepted part of it? It might be interesting to get an answer from the minister on that point. I am not asking for an answer right now, because I know he will have the opportunity to speak again, but I am under the impression that a great number of my colleagues would like to see his reaction in that respect.

I should now like to revert to what I was saying earlier. If the Fathers of Confederation came back on earth in 1967, they would have many astonishing surprises.

At the time this agreement was concluded, that is what we call the British North America Act, or the confederation pact, the question of municipalities was almost non-existant in this country. The very few existing ones had so few responsibilities that no one gave it any thought. But, in 1967, the problem is quite different.

By leave, I should like to come back in a few minutes to some remarks made in respect of the tax distribution at the three levels of government, each of which has responsibilities of its own, and to quote from a brief submitted to the royal commission on taxation, the Carter commission, whose final report we have just received; this brief was submitted by the Canadian Federation of Mayors, an organization that includes all mayors from the ten Canadian provinces. Since this report has been presented in French and in English, I shall read this text in the language that is before me:

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Though still largely overlooked as a serious subject for study, municipal governments are now carrying some of the most critical responsibilities for public policy. The quality and efficiency of our urban communities where more than 70 per cent of Canadians now live—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that this was written in 1965 and we are now in 1967. The proportion has increased since them.

[English]

—and where 80 per cent or more will live by 1980, depend to a large extent on decisions made by municipal authorities and on the financial and technical assistance received by them from senior governments.

[Translation]

This is where federal-provincial tax arrangements come in.

[English]

Public concern is being focussed more and more intensively on regional and local interests. A new urban-minded generation is becoming more fully aware of its needs and responsibilities. The remarkable surge of provincial activity in most parts of Canada today is in large measure a response to the economic and social demands of urban populations who are expressing their needs with increasing force and clarity.

[Translation]

And if I mention it, Mr. Speaker, and I will mention another with your permission, it is precisely because I will repeat what I said earlier: in all those federal-provincial talks, everyone seems to forget that there is a third level of government which, in the opinion of many well-informed people, is just as important as the others, although it has less prestige, because it is closer to the people and has to face problems which are more vital, more essential in some respects than the others, although I know very well that the three levels of government must work hand in hand. And that is how I will conclude soon.

And with your permission, to buttress up the argument I want to make here about Bill No. C-277, I will quote another extract of that brief submitted by the Canadian Federation of Mayors to the Carter commission, as prepared by Professor David Slater of Queen's University about the problems of municipal financing. It reads as follows:

[English]

—that the municipal finance dilemma was summarized as follows:

Municipal government expenditures have increased more rapidly than the national output, rising from about 4.9 per cent to 8.3 per cent of G.N.P. between 1950 and 1962.

[Translation]

Those are the figures for 1962, but it is a sure thing that in 1967 they were still higher. I regret that I do not have those figures. Since the bill was withdrawn at the last minute this afternoon, I had them in my files, but I did not have time to take out the 1966 figures—

[English]

The revenues raised by municipalities have increased from about 3.5 per cent to about 5 per cent of G.N.P. Despite the proportionately more rapid growth in the revenues raised by municipalities than in the value of the national output, the share of municipal expenditures financed by their own revenue-raising activities has fallen steadily, from nearly 70 per cent in 1950 to about 60 per cent in 1962.

I repeat, and this is my comment, that the figures for 1966 will be even worse. The summary continues:

This growing gap has been filled primarily by increased reliance on transfers from provincial to municipal governments. There has been no trend of increase or decrease in the proportion of municipal expenditures financed by borrowing.

[Translation]

—and it could even be added that municipalities are now in a difficult position as far as loans are concerned.

[English]

Even so, the outstanding municipal debt has increased more rapidly than the national output or the municipal tax base. The strain on municipal finance appears to have inhibited the carrying out of municipal projects, particularly those which are ordinarily financed by the issue of debentures.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is proved by the figures presented in this brief. I see here that the general administrative expenses of the municipalities, in all the provinces of Canada—

I take them all together, and I am not concerned at the moment with a distribution or an analysis which would be beyond the scope of my comments—totalled $303 million in 1933.

In 1953, these expenses reached $1,010 million. In 1961, which is unfortunately the last figure I have—again, Mr. Speaker, I repeat I must apologize, for we were taken by surprise by this bill this afternoon—in 1961, the total expenses of the municipalities in Canada were $2,242 million.

And what were the revenues, Mr. Speaker? It is simple. In 1933, when the municipalities were spending $303 million, their revenues totalled $294 million. Therefore, they had a deficit. They had to depend upon the provinces or the federal government to meet their needs and discharge their responsibilities to the people within their confines.

In 1943, the municipalities' revenues amounted to $348 million, while their expenses were $302 million. Then we had a cruel, inconceivable and unusual period of prosperity called war. Evidently, because in 1953, let us say, things came back to normal, that is they continued to be abnormal, municipalities continued to show a deficit because the federal and provincial governments—as my friend from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) said a moment ago—were monopolizing nearly everything, leaving nothing to local administrators, since the municipalities then had total expenditures of $1,010 million—I refer to 1953—and their revenues amounted to $840 million only.

In 1961, when the expenditures of Canadian municipalities in the ten provinces were $2,242 million their revenues were $1,823 million only, that is they showed a large deficit.

Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what I am driving at. What I want to say here is that, in all these discussions, all these conversations, all these negotiations between the federal and provincial governments, the municipalities are treated like abnormal orphans, like poor children who must be content with the mouthful of bread they are condescendingly given. What is more, they are expected not to be too demanding, as they are not even allowed to participate in the round table dialogues, as they should, in view of their considerable responsibilities toward the taxpayers. Their responsibilities may perhaps even be greater than those of the other governments, may be even more critical, because they live from day to day with the citizens, hear their complaints every day, and must find solutions to those problems, while often having their hands and feet bound by the superior administrations.

If the Fathers of Confederation came back to earth, they would be amazed at how things they knew have changed in 100 years. And they would find it difficult to understand how one can take the liberty of dealing so lightly with the officials of that third level of government known as municipal authorities.

I say that mayors and aldermen are martyrs of the public cause, for they are the ones who hear the repercussions of what is done in the House of Commons and in the provincial legislatures, as the electors do not often have an opportunity of seeing their M.P. or M.L.A. and complain to their aldermen and mayor. And very often they do not understand why municipal administrations do not have the powers they should, why they do not have the finance required to meet the needs of the municipality.

Mr. Speaker, the mayors have been asking for several years to be allowed to participate in the federal-provincial conferences. This request has been made through the Canadian Federation of Mayors, comprising all municipalities in every province. Together, they try to examine the problems of municipalities in the light of the experience of mayors and aldermen of the most important municipalities of the country, with the help of the best economists, the best statisticians, the advice of the most reputable sociologists invited to attend their convention. The members of the federation make this request even if they were only allowed to sit in as observers—the municipalities realize that they are merely provincial bodies—in order to see how their fate is discussed and in order to put forth, occasionally, constructive and intelligent suggestions in order to help certain ministers or premiers upon whose decisions depends the fate of municipalities. These decisions are often the result of haphazard consideration and are often made by people who are not familiar with municipal government.

Some provinces—and I know, because I have toured the ten provinces several times and on many instances I have met municipal heads and administrators—have reduced the role of municipal administration to the so-called rubber stamp, and they are not even given that basic privilege of being asked for their advice about legislation on municipal affairs.

I glanced over the Carter report—of course, I did not have time to read all those things—but I went over it with a curiosity that you will understand after what I have just told you, in order to try and find what could be said in it about the implications of those recommendations on municipal administration.

In my opinion, the Carter report, is a masterpiece, it contains recommendations which are absolutely valid, which will certainly involve a fiscal revolution and will probably create an economic climate that will indirectly assist the municipalities.

But I would have liked to see in that, as in some other documents coming from the provinces of Canada, an awareness that the municipal governments, exist, that they are grouped, provincially, in a union of municipalities and federally grouped in the Canadian federation of mayors, that they are entitled to have a say in the matter and that, in most cases, they have in this third level administration an experience greater than that of most of those who are legislating on a higher level.

Mr. Speaker, to show that I am not imagining such things, I wish to point out that even if the municipalities are provincial creatures, there are, nevertheless, joint fields of authority and of responsibility where the three levels of government must step in.

I should like to enumerate a few, very briefly, and without comments. The three levels of government are trying, of course, to improve the living conditions of their constituents. The elected representatives at the municipal level see their constituents and hear their representations night and a day.

Those who among my colleagues have been mayors or councillors know that it is not unheard of to be awakened in the middle of the night by people reminding them that they are unemployed, that they cannot take advantage of this or that piece of social legislation, that the entrance to their house or yard has not been cleared. They know that is part of the social awareness that the municipal administrator must keep alive twenty-four hours a day.

There is the winter works program which should be financed by the federal government and which, in my opinion, should be amended somewhat, brought up to date to take into account the present situation. There is the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, there is urban renewal which is a tragic problem in a great number of municipalities. There is also the financing of sewer systems, contributions to centennial projects, the retraining of workers, the general control of the economy which results in indirect taxes such as the sales tax and others. There is also unemployment which is precisely the great plague of municipal authorities, because if the federal and the provincial governments fail to take appropriate action to alleviate unemployment, mayors and aldermen are the ones who listen day in and day out to the grievances of the jobless. Taxes of all kinds drain the financial resources of the taxpayers to such an extent that municipal authorities are unable to draw up their budgets.

Mr. Speaker, I could refer to many other things, but I do not want to overtax the patience of the house. In conclusion, I have a simple and practical suggestion to offer the Minister of Finance. I see he is busy with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) and I am not blaming him, because it is always wise to draw near to wealth, whether natural or artificial, but to make sure that the minister understands me—I am aware of his worthy efforts to learn French and I would not want him to be vexed at my procedure but rather to consider it as an effort at understanding on my part—I shall try to make my point in a language which is not my own—

• (9:00 p.m.)

[English]

There are three levels of government in this country, the federal, the provincial and the municipal. Each has its own responsibilities and each must have the means to carry out its responsibilities. I think one thing is missing; that is, municipal governments are not consulted often enough. For years and years they have been asking that they be allowed to attend these conferences between the federal and provincial governments so that they would know what is going on, and so that they would have an opportunity eventually to speak their minds, since they have a very heavy responsibility. I would suggest that we establish in this country the type of intergovernmental advisory commission they have in the United States, which operates for 12 months of the year and which is assisted by a task force—and this is a word I heard this afternoon—of specialized people. This intergovernmental advisory commission, board or whatever you might call it, would be made up of representatives of the federal government, the provinces, and the municipal governments which have their own organization, the Canadian Federation of Mayors.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to insist on this. Most of the time when one speaks of municipalities he is not taken seriously. In the minds of many people these governments are considered secondary, because after all they are composed of mayors and aldermen. The prime ministers and ministers of the provinces control them and sometimes have them elected or defeated. However, they have their responsibilities, and need the financial means to exercise those responsibilities. I think we should bear this in mind when we discuss financial arrangements between federal and provincial governments, because the province is supposed to be the father of the municipalities which, I am sorry to say, is not always so.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): If the Minister of Finance speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the hon. member if he would accept a question.

Mr. Mongrain: Certainly.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to ask the hon. member whether he thinks the philosophy he has just enunciated would be acceptable to the prime minister of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I am happy—

[English]

I am sorry I am not able to say this in English. I wish to say it the way I really feel it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the minister put this question to me because this is precisely the type of question that I would call provocative in the positive, non-pejorative sense of the word. I do not know; the premier of the province of Quebec does not confide in me, since I am an independent member. As a matter of fact, I was even too independent for the former premier of the province of Quebec to confide in me.

But I am well aware of municipal matters, however. I have visited all ten provinces, and during my visits the mayors of all the important cities told me of the problems they faced, and I would also say, in answer to the minister that I do not know what the hon. minister of the province of Quebec thinks, nor do I have any idea of what the ministers of the other provinces think, today. I do know that a few years ago, no one shared my views; nevertheless, I believe I am telling the truth since this is not of my own invention. I have heard all my colleagues, mayors from the ten provinces, make the same statement. I assure you that some of those persons —I was going to use the word "brilliant", but I will refrain from doing so because I note that some of the present hon. members were mayors of their municipality at the time—

[English]

If the minister is interested I could check with the ministers of the province of Quebec. It happens that occasionally I can make a phone call to them.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to delay unduly the second reading of this very important bill. There are, however, one or two principles in it with which I must disagree, and I take this opportunity to make known my disagreement. I am convinced that the proposal in the bill to relate equalization payments to the average of all the provinces of Canada very definitely is a backward step and one which will react unfavourably on the poorer provinces of Canada. I refer particularly to my own province of Prince Edward Island.

At this time I should like to place before the house, before the government and the minister just as succinctly and concisely as I can the situation in which the province of Prince Edward Island finds itself at the present time, in so far as being able to finance its essential services is concerned. I think probably I can exemplify this very clearly first of all by pointing out the debt situation in which Prince Edward Island, the smallest province of Canada, finds itself.

I should like to go back over a three year period, starting March 31, 1963. The direct debt of this province at that time, less of course our sinking funds, was $38,709,000, or $362 per capita. One year later, March 31, 1964, the direct debt had increased from $38,709,000 to $50,059,000, or $468 per capita. As of March 31, 1965, the net direct debt had increased again from $50,059,000 to $56,200,000, or $520 per capita. Finally, as of March 31, 1966, the last fiscal year for which definite figures are available, that debt had increased from $56,200,000 to $62,200,000 or $575 per capita. That, Mr. Speaker, represents an increase in debt for a small province of only 108,000 people over a three-year period of 62 per cent.

For the year ending March 31, 1967—the end of this present fiscal year—it is estimated it will take $4,300,000 to service this debt. This amount of $4,300,000 must come out of our revenues. It is required to pay the interest on what we owe and to establish an adequate sinking fund to meet our provincial debentures when they fall due. I should like to point out that under the proposed agreement in respect of this bill which is before us now our province will receive from the federal government under this arrangement a total of $14 million. It will take 30 per cent of that $14 million simply to pay the interest on and service the present debt.

From these figures I believe it must be obvious that that $14 million certainly will not be enough. If we look at it from another angle, our revenue from provincial sources for the year ending March 31, 1967—this is the revenue we will collect from our own taxpayers—will amount to only $12,500,000. That is the amount our government can collect from its taxpayers. Out of that $12,500,000 we first must take $4,300,000 and set it aside to service our debt. In other words 35 per cent of our provincial revenue must go immediately to service the provincial debt, pay the interest and provide an adequate sinking fund.

It is obvious to anyone who takes a close look at the figures that our province is heavily dependent upon the revenues we hope to receive from Ottawa. Our total estimated revenue to March 31, 1967, is $33,500,000. That is the total amount our government has available to it to run the province, and of that $33,500,000 we will receive $21 million from Ottawa. In other words, 60 per cent of our total revenue will come from Ottawa. Ours is the only province in Canada that receives more from Ottawa than it collects from its own taxpayers. I am only pointing this out to impress upon this government just how heavily a province such as ours is dependent on the federal treasury.

I submit very seriously that we in the province of Prince Edward Island cannot pay more in taxes. That is because our tax potential is extremely low. We have the lowest wage earners in Canada. The average weekly wage in our province is $64 as compared to the Canadian average of $96.53. Our wage earners receive about $32.50 below the national average.

According to the latest figures available the average Canadian makes $5,000 per year. In Prince Edward Island the average is $3,600 per year. We have greater unemployment and underemployment than any other province in Canada. In December of 1966, we see that 5.8 per cent of the labour force in the Atlantic provinces was unemployed, as compared with only 2.4 per cent in Ontario. Taking into account the very low per capita income, I very seriously suggest we do not have the tax potential in our province to provide through our own revenues the essential services to which people are justly entitled.

One might very well ask what are the causes of this low per capita income. I suggest there are several, including the loss of our markets to the south, the increase in tariff barriers against our exports, the opening up of supplies of natural products from other countries and the centralization of industries in close proximity to big population centres. We find it extremely difficult to encourage industry to come to our province. Our geographical isolation is probably another reason our per capita income is so low.

Often we talk about the war on poverty. I suggest that one of the most effective weapons with which successfully to fight this war is a plan whereby we can bring about a more equal distribution of our national wealth. If a plan could be devised to bring about a more equal distribution, then we in our province would benefit and our people would be able to contribute more to the provincial treasury by way of taxes.

National prosperity is not spread equally throughout the provinces and regions of this country, and regional disparities in incomes and opportunities have persisted. I suggest they will continue to persist until we hit upon a more socially equitable policy for distributing income throughout the economy.

For the past 100 years our biggest export from Prince Edward Island has been in the form of brains. Statistics conclusively indicate that our birth rate over the years has far exceeded our death rate, but our population remains at about the 100,000 mark. It has stayed at that point for 50, 75 or 100 years.

You may well ask what has happened to our natural increase. It is syphoned off to other parts of Canada, where the prospects and opportunities of enjoying a higher standard of living are greater than in our own province. I suggest therefore that until such time as effective measures can be devised to bring our incomes at least close to the national average, we must lean heavily on Ottawa in order that we may enjoy the same measure of essential services being enjoyed by other provinces of Canada. Of course as fellow Canadians and citizens of this great country we are entitled to the enjoyment of the same essential services as are enjoyed by the other provinces, in spite of the fact our unfortunate position is such that we cannot possibly provide these from our own revenue. It must not be forgotten that we are citizen of Canada, and that it is not through any fault of ours our incomes are not high enough to provide sufficient tax to enable our government to give us these services.

Any fiscal policy inaugurated between the federal and provincial governments must take into consideration the fiscal ability of a province to maintain a national standard of service. This is the area in which this proposed arrangement falls down drastically. It does not take into consideration the fiscal ability of the province to provide essential services.

Every Canadian from Newfoundland to British Columbia expects, quite rightly, the same quality of services in education, highways, health and welfare, transportation and in other well established government programs. That is all we ask. We do not want to be considered as poor relations in this great confederacy, nor do we ask for any privileges. We do not want any; but we do very vigorously claim a recognition of a right to fiscal equality. We shall never be satisfied until that right is afforded us.

As I mentioned before, ours is one of the provinces with inadequate tax collection potentials and we must have a substantial increase over and above the amount we are to receive under this proposed bill. The provisions of this measure definitely do not go far enough to meet our needs. No arrangement will be satisfactory which does not make it financially possible for our province to provide a reasonable level of provincial services without imposing an abnormal burden of tax, because our people cannot bear that burden of taxation. This is the basic and indispensable minimum requirement of any division of revenues between the heads of government and the measure of relief given to us under the provisions of this bill. An additional $3,500,000 does not come anywhere near meeting this requirement.

We take the position in our province that federal-provincial agreements must seek to attain a balance between the financial capacity and the responsibilities of government, and we therefore must have a formula based on fiscal need.

Fiscal need is the only satisfactory base upon which any formula can be devised. The policy which is incorporated in this bill, that of relating equalization payments to the average per capita revenue of all the provinces of Canada, is very definitely not in accord with the principle of fiscal need and is not satisfactory to us.

Another thing we are disappointed about is that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants—those grants which have meant so much to us in past years—while strictly speaking they are not being abolished, they are losing their identity. I suggest it is not fair to have the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants incorporated in our equalization grants. I am afraid that this is only the thin edge of the wedge. The Atlantic provinces adjustment grants as such will be no more. I realize that the 3½ million we have been receiving each year under the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants is now being incorporated in the $14 million we are about to receive, but it goes in under the heading of equalization. I do not think this is right. I think the identity of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants should have been maintained.

I would suggest three remedial measures that will give us and the other poorer provinces of Canada the relief which we need, the relief to which as a province of this country we are entitled. The first would be a basic payment across the board to those provinces with a low fiscal capacity and a low tax potential. This refers to any province that has a low fiscal capacity—that is, the earning power of its people is not sufficient to allow them to pay taxes to provide the essential services that are required—and a low tax potential. With regard to the provinces which find themselves in this situation, I very seriously suggest that they should first of all receive a basic payment. Second, I suggest that the present equalization payments must be averaged to the highest income province in Canada, and not to the national average. These equalization payments should not be geared to the national average of all the provinces of Canada but rather to the revenue of the highest income province. Third, Mr.

Speaker, I suggest an increase in the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants from the present $35 million to $60 million a year.

These suggested amendments would certainly result in an improvement in the financial arrangements suggested in the present bill and would help our province and other provinces which find themselves in practically the same situation to meet the mounting costs of provincial services, without resorting to an abnormal burden of taxation. I suggest that as a province of Canada this is the minimum to which we are entitled. I very seriously recommend these three remedial measures to the minister before we pass the present bill.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest this evening to the minister's preliminary statement. As usual it was a very reasoned one and one that I know will strike some response in my own province of British Columbia, because we are a province of very reasonable people.

Mr. Herridge: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnston: At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I must confess that we are one of the "have" provinces. Any time a British Columbian begins to talk about his own province it becomes immediately obvious that ours is one of the provinces of this great country that has been particularly blessed. Therefore there is a danger inherent in the sort of lengthy and seemingly complete bill before us this evening, when it is considered with the reasoned statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), that too reasonable people will think our province has really nothing further to ask of any federal government. But I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a delusion.

It is one of our Canadian problems, that too many of the schemes, proposals and arrangements that are put forward for the development of this country become rescue operations, rather than operations designed to assist the provinces that are in a position to go ahead. We in British Columbia feel that there are many areas in which our province has not had the kind of assistance from the federal government that has been given to other provinces. This problem is sometimes concerned with geography.

I might mention that although we are very proud of our history and the fact that Vancouver Island and the mainland formed a political union a long time ago, we realize now it was fiscal folly to do so in the light of what has happened to date. Had our people had sufficient foresight into the development of this country, they would never have united Vancouver Island and the mainland; they would have left Vancouver Island as an individual province. If that had been done, the city of Vancouver would now have no problems in connecting its heart with the north shore, because the federal government would have seen that highways were built; and there would be a project at least under way, if not completed, to build a bridge, causeway or tunnel between the mainland and Vancouver Island. We can see now, with hindsight, that perhaps what seemed such a farsighted view 100 years ago was really something that eventually posed a problem.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would mention our railroad, the Pacific Great Eastern, which because it is a provincially owned railroad has never been on the same sort of financial footing as other railroads in this country. I might tell the house a story about that railroad. I lived in the little village of Lillooet, in the Fraser canyon, for several years and the Pacific Great Eastern Railway ran through that village. We had a very good friend, an immigrant from Germany, who lived in the house beside ours. She did not know the history of British Columbia very well. Her house, like ours, overlooked the railway track, and she watched trains go by every day of the year, month after month. One evening she came over to us, much agitated because something strange had happened that afternoon; A train had gone by and the whole village had risen as one and rushed to the bank overlooking the railway track to watch it pass.

Our neighbour could not understand why this had happened. I explained that it was really very simple. There had been a disastrous series of slides in the Fraser canyon which had completely blocked off the two major railways, the C.P.R. and the C.N.R., from the city of Vancouver, and for the first time in history the Canadian National had run a train over the tracks of the Pacific Great Eastern down to Vancouver, in order to bring freight in, while they were waiting for repairs to be carried out. The little village of Lillooet appreciated the fact that for the first time there had been forced upon that other great railroad recognition of the fact that the Pacific Great Eastern actually existed. I do not think this recognition has as yet reached the federal government. The federal government does not seem to have recognized the special situation which exists in British Columbia.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Does the hon. member know it has been reported recently that Premier Bennett suggested that the province of British Columbia should take over all the railroads in British Columbia?

Mr. Johnston: I think this would probably be an excellent idea. From my observation, only one railway has been extended recently into the undeveloped parts of the province, and there are probably a good many sections of the province that would be overjoyed if the province took over the management of the other lines, as well as the one it now owns. I think the hon. member for Kootenay West may himself have one or two areas in mind which would benefit from such a far-sighted development.

There are other factors involved in the equalization, and in a reasonable approach from both federal and provincial governments. The whole bill is tied to natural resources and the revenue which they produce. I do not wish to dwell on this topic but we know that within a day or so the famous and long awaited supreme court case between the federal and provincial governments concerning the offshore mineral rights in British Columbia will be underway. We can see a reason for that in this bill. The federal provincial fiscal arrangements are tied to natural resources, and the outcome of the legal decision which will be made will be a most important one, not just for British Columbia but for every province in this country which has a sea coast, and for those parts of the country that are not yet provinces but which will be affected by the decision one way or another. The fact that the court case is under way is a salutary reminder, because if the federal policies were always as reasonable as the words of the minister would indicate then another solution would have been found to this problem. It would have been solved by political discussion and not by the legal means which are being utilized at the present time and which in all likelihood will not produce a satisfactory situation in the future.

The minister's statements have been so reasonable that I am sure this is one of the reasons why the people of B.C. have so insistently and consistently believed hon. members on the government side who have either gone out to that province, or have gone home to it and informed the people of British Columbia that large sums of money are waiting in some federal treasury if only the provincial government would ask for them. We have heard this repeatedly. They talk about these funds when there is either a federal or provincial election, and this story has been so common and so current in British Columbia for several years now that it is not surprising that the premier of British Columbia, who is also a reasonable man, has reached the point of sending a telegram to the Minister of Finance asking whether it would be possible to borrow $100 million from the federal government to be used for the development of hydro schemes on the Peace and Columbia rivers. These hydro schemes were about to be undertaken when the federal government increased the sales tax on construction materials to 11 per cent. This measure which affected construction in all provinces in Canada and was perhaps the most inflationary measure brought in by any Canadian government was one that affected particularly British Columbia.

The premier of British Columbia is a reasonable man and I am sure he knew that $100 million would not be forthcoming as rapidly as some people thought it would, but it was one way of solving the nagging question which I have been asked many times myself and that is: "How about these large sums of federal money? What is wrong with the government of British Columbia that it does not go ahead and ask for some of this money? We are told that it is there, why is the request not made?" The request has been made. An hon. member says that it was made so long ago that even the interest on that sum would amount to a considerable sum of money, and I would agree with that.

I have read the statement made by the minister on March 2 in which he referred to this request. Unfortunately I was not present in the house at the time. I am glad to hear that the statement was much more reasonable than the answers which he gave in the house to questions put to him by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I know how concerned that hon. member is over this whole question, and I know of the high regard in which he holds the policies that are carried out by the government of British Columbia.

I do not intend to oppose this bill because I believe that it does improve the situation in British Columbia in several respects. However, I would like to make it very clear that it does not solve a host of problems in British Columbia, simply because our province attracts people from many other areas in Canada. For example many problems arise in providing hospitals for the aged. In this connection we hope that some day the federal government will be able to increase its per capita grants for hospital construction, an increase that has been long awaited and long overdue in our province.

We also have problems in providing education, because of the families which have moved to our province as a result of its booming economy. I would remind hon. members from other provinces in Canada, whose population is more static and who speak about the brain drain, that they can congratulate themselves on the fact that at least they can cope with the educational problems their provinces have, because in British Columbia it is very difficult indeed to cope with all the demands of education at the present time. I know that this bill will improve somewhat the situation in post-secondary education, but I am concerned about the problems that will arise.

There is a great need for some sort of a federal bureau of education in order to discuss carefully what federal policy will mean in terms of actual schools in the province, to which this legislation will be applied, because it does not take much change in the grants policy to distort the educational picture in a province and to influence the structure of its educational system. Confusion can arise over what is meant by junior matriculation, in view of the fact that some provinces require three years of secondary education before junior matriculation, while others have four years. The whole system of secondary education may well be adjusted in some provinces in order to enable them to benefit to the greatest extent possible from the federal grant.

Finally I would like to say a word about the vexing problem of estate taxes, which has been mentioned already in this debate. The Carter commission had some important things to say about estate taxes. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) was concerned about the fact that there was a five year time limit on this bill. He was afraid that the Carter commission report would run into interference from this bill. I do not think he needs to worry about this because I suspect many more than five years will have passed before any of the major recommendations of the Carter commission are implemented, judging by the present pace of legislation and the progress which we experience in this parliament.

I hope that the government will move to amend the estate tax requirements and not await any general implementation of the Carter commission report. Because I think the time has gone by when businesses in Canada can afford to be disrupted upon the death of the owner. Sometimes deaths are premature and unexpected, and far too often businesses either have to be sold or undergo a complete change of management in order that estate taxes may be paid.

I am sure that any member who sat on the drug costs committee, Mr. Speaker, heard repeated over and over again the story of drug companies which used to be Canadian, but because their owners were getting on in years and no member of the family wished to take over the company and face the prospect of meeting enormous bills for estate taxes, it became necessary to sell these companies. Because of the size of some of the companies the United States was the only place that could put up the capital, and as a result many of the companies appearing before the committee were wholly-owned United States subsidiaries, instead of being Canadian-owned.

Why is this, Mr. Speaker? Books have been written suggesting that the cause of this is United States economic imperialism; but I contend that far too often the cause has been the tax policies of the government of Canada.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, from 1933 until 1956 there was a provincial Liberal government in my native province. From 1935 until 1957 there was a federal Liberal government in Ottawa. During the whole of this period efforts were made by the various Liberal premiers who held office in Halifax to secure recognition by the Liberal government in Ottawa of the very obvious plight of the maritime provinces. Far too often the late and great Angus L. Macdonald came to Ottawa looking for assistance, and went home empty handed. His successor, Henry Hicks, had the same fate in store. If the Liberal government had not been defeated in the general election campaign in 1957 I dare say that Robert Stanfield would have enjoyed no greater success than his predecessors.

However, Mr. Speaker, in 1957 the Diefenbaker administration was elected to office and almost immediately the Atlantic provinces found a government with a national policy as well as a regional policy that recognized the special problems of the Atlantic provinces and tried to do something about them.

When I same to this house in 1957 I was impressed indeed by the work of the late George C. Nowlan, who at that time as minister of national revenue put forward the special problems facing the Atlantic provinces and secured early in 1958 the passage of legislation which provided through the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants the sum of $25 million a year for those Atlantic provinces. This was special recognition, Mr. Speaker. The total sum provided at the time was $100 million spread over a four year period.

As the four year period drew to an end, the Diefenbaker administration did not say to the Atlantic provinces: "Well, you have gotten $100 million more than expected when we were elected to office; we do not feel that you should have more, even though your problems continue to exist and persist". Instead, Mr. Speaker, the Diefenbaker administration passed further legislation in 1962 continuing the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants for a further five year period, and increasing from $25 million to $35 million the yearly amount paid.

We are today debating legislation that will eliminate the special recognition granted to the Atlantic provinces by the Diefenbaker administration. To this I object as strenuously as I can, Mr. Speaker. I ignore and discount the argument that is put forward that it is all going into the pot; that it is going to be part of the scheme of things in the future. What the government is doing now, in effect, is eliminating this special recognition that was afforded to the Atlantic area when the Conservative government took office in 1958, and passed this legislation.

Surely there is money available for the present through the negotiations which have taken place; but this special recognition that was made is no longer acknowledged, and the next time agreements are reached between the federal and provincial governments no thought will be given by the present administration, if it is lucky enough to still be in office at the time, to giving the Atlantic provinces the special recognition they deserve.

[Mr. Coates.]

There is no difference between the problems we face today, Mr. Speaker, and the problems we faced in 1958 when this legislation was passed, except that probably the problems are not as great as they were as a result of the passage of this legislation. But the problems are there. We still have a higher rate of unemployment than any other part of the nation and a lower per capita income than any other part of the nation. As the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid) so ably pointed out in his address, the problems we had at confederation not only still exist but indeed have increased many, manyfold, the most significant increase occurring when a Liberal administration holds office in Ottawa. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, in the maritimes Liberal times are hard times.

The Progressive Conservative party have always urged special recognition of the Atlantic provinces in order to eliminate the disparity existing between that area and the rest of Canada. The Liberal party has continually ignored our problems and endeavoured to treat us in the same manner as any other part of the nation. When Liberal spokesmen go down to that area of Canada they recognize our special problems, but only for the period of time they spend there. As soon as they leave the Atlantic provinces the problems which are in their minds also seem to disappear. It will be a sad day for the Atlantic provinces when the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants go out the window, as they will on passage of this legislation.

The same thing happened to the Atlantic Development Board, Mr. Speaker. Our concept was that the Atlantic Development Board would endeavour to lift up the Atlantic provinces and assist the people there to lift themselves up. As soon as the Liberal party took office, we found the board downgraded. It was no longer the instrument through which we were to go forward, with hundreds of millions of dollars being poured into our area in the hope that the disparity could be eliminated. Instead, we found the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) telling us that the board was for the future. He even put a date on the future of the board, until we forced him to eliminate it. The position of the board in the future would be that of a gap filler, and indeed that has been its position.

I will say this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Stewart: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Coates: No, I do not have the time. I will say this, that the board has effectively done the job this government gave to it, within the confines of the funds made available to it. However, it has not been the kind of board the Progressive Conservative party envisaged when they established it. It has not done the kind of job that we had hoped such a board would do. The sad fact of the matter is that this government seems determined to eliminate from the statute books of this nation any legislation specifically directed toward eliminating the disparities and recognizing the problems facing the Atlantic provinces.

This is the thing that I abhor the most, the fact that this government is unwilling to recognize our specific problems, is unwilling to give us an opportunity to do the things in our part of Canada that will allow us to move forward with the remainder of this nation. Certainly if this legislation is passed in its present form, all the great work that the late George Nowlan did to see that the Atlantic provinces received special recognition is going to go out the window. Unfortunately there is little hope that this will not happen.

One need only look at the difficulties being experienced in the Cape Breton area of my province of Nova Scotia to realize that we have special problems. We are willing to face these problems, and attack them as best we can within the financial resources available to us. However, we do not have the finances to do so, and we do not get much help from this government. We have not received much help during the four years this government has held office. I do not know what the fate of the Atlantic provinces will be in the future if this government persists in eliminating all the good things that were done by the Diefenbaker administration.

I do not know whether this government realizes or cares to realize how serious these problems continue to be. We hear all kinds of excuses made about why this or that has not been done. We do not get the kind of action we deserve, and we do not get the kind of recognition that we need if we are going to close the gap, which is becoming an ever-widening gap between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada. There does not appear to be any legislation on the order paper, or any prospects of legislation, with the exception of the special corporation which is to be set up to deal with the problems of the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia, that is going to help us eliminate the problems that are very much in evidence in our area.

Surely to goodness, the government does not think the Cape Breton corporation, which is to eliminate the coal mining problem, in itself will meet all the problems of the Atlantic provinces. I know that in Cumberland county, as well as many other counties, there is ample evidence to indicate a great deal more must be done. Surely, there is not much evidence for the people of the Atlantic provinces to indicate that anything more will be done, if this government continues to move forward as slowly as it has up to now.

We in the Atlantic provinces are told many wonderful stories at election time, and have been told those stories during the last 100 years. Until the Diefenbaker government was elected in 1957, these were nothing more than stories. They were just pie in the sky. But the pie disappeared the day after the votes were counted. During the seven years the Diefenbaker government held office we got action; we got results and we got legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Coates: May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member still has another two minutes before he can call it ten o'clock. I should like to remind him in passing that we are dealing with Bill No. C-277, and the arguments he is now advancing to the house do not appear to relate very closely to the principle of the bill. This is the reason I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member of the specific principle with which we should be dealing at this time.

Mr. Coates: Nevertheless the principle of the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants is very much involved here, and so far as I am concerned it will not be involved in the future if this legislation passes in its present form. This is the main point on which I am speaking, and I should like to see the legislation before the house altered.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Between the hon. member and the Chair we have now reached ten o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman had concluded his remarks, but if he had I wonder whether we might give this bill second reading and be in committee when next we reach it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Allmand in the chair.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Allmand): Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

• (10:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we propose submitting to the house for its consideration the following items of business: If the evidence is printed in both languages, and distributed, we would take, first, item 63. the house in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-190 to amend the Bank of Canada Act. We would then proceed with items 135, 86, 134, 137 and 136.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—APPOINTMENT OF UNILINGUAL LIAISON OFFICER WITH EXPO '67

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, on the orders of the day, I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) if it were true that a unilingual R.C.M.P. inspector had been appointed liaison officer between the federal police and the security service at Expo and, if so, if the minister would take steps to appoint a bilingual officer to that important post.

I felt prompted to ask that question after reading in the Montreal newspaper La Presse on Wednesday, March 8, a news report that read as follows:

An inspector of the R.C.M.P., unable to speak a single word of French, has been appointed liaison officer between the federal police and the security service of Expo.

Mr. J. A. B. Ryddel, who holds the rank of inspector, was stationed in New Brunswick until his recent appointment to Expo, an appointment which does not seem to please a number of members of the security force of Man and his World.

In the meetings all proceedings are carried out in French only. As Inspector Ryddel does not understand a single word of our language, the higher-ups of the R.C.M.P. had to delegate to him an interpreter who translates for him the words of the security officers.

Mr. Hervé T. Poudrette, who heads the security services at Expo confirmed to La Presse that inspector Ryddel spoke only English but he refused to comment on the situation.

[Mr. Sharp.]

A spokesman for the R.C.M.P. at Montreal headquarters also confirmed that Inspector Ryddel spoke only one language but he also refused to comment.

On the other hand, an Expo official said: you would swear Commissioner G. B. McClellan of the R.C.M.P. tried on purpose to offend French Canadians by sending us this unilingual official.

Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that, $6 or $7 million having been spent on the Laurendeau-Dunton commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, a man who does not speak French should be appointed to an important position in the city of Montreal.

In order to understand or to make himself understood, he needs an interpreter, and the dangers of that are quite clear.

Again, we realize that the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. is not working toward Canadian unity, and his gesture tends to sabotage all efforts toward national unity and peace in Canada.

The Solicitor General of Canada should remove Commissioner McClellan from his post for reasons of incompetence, and also replace by a bilingual official the R.C.M.P. inspector responsible for liaison between the various security bodies of Expo.

[English]

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): On behalf of the Solicitor General I should like to answer the question asked by the hon. member. May I first express my regret that I am unable to give this answer in the other language. With the increase in duties which the force will have to carry out during Expo it has been found necessary to increase, at least for this year, the number of commissioned officers stationed at Montreal to deal with matters arising, not only out of Expo but also from the general increase of federal police work anticipated during that period.

Every commissioned officer stationed in the province of Quebec, until the transfer of this officer, was bilingual. Inspector Riddell, who was a newly commissioned officer, was sent to Montreal for a two-fold purpose; not particularly as a liaison officer with Expo, nor was he designated as such. Rather, he was sent as a general officer in the division to be available for general duties wherever he may be required and where pressure demands extra help. The second purpose of the transfer was in line with the commissioner's endeavour to encourage the study of French by English speaking officers.

The written instructions to the commanding officer at Montreal at the time of the transfer stated that this transfer would afford this officer an opportunity to study French and that he should be encouraged to do so. It is true that this young officer has been attending meetings in regard to Expo and otherwise, but it is to be emphasized that he was being encouraged to learn the French language and he is a young officer with a career ahead of him.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.08 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 10, 1967

The house met at 11 a.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (F), 1966-67

A message from His Excellency the Administrator transmitting supplementary estimates (F) for the financial year ending March 31, 1967, was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF PART 1 OF HAWTHORN-TREMBLAY REPORT

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): At the request of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and in his absence, I am tabling today copies of part 1 of a report entitled "A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada" generally known as the Hawthorn-Tremblay report.

This is the first of two parts of the study which was commissioned by the government in 1963. I am informed that the second part will not be submitted by the authors for some time yet. Part 1 is being translated into French but the translation is not yet available. However, in view of the current speculation and concern among both Indians and others it is considered to be in the public interest to make part 1 available at this time.

The minister has hoped to have his detailed comments ready at the time the document was made public, but his study is not yet completed and a substantive statement will not be available for one or two months.

FISHERIES

SEALS—PROPOSED DISCUSSIONS TO PREVENT EXTINCTION OF HERDS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries regarding a matter on which he has shown a commendable concern. I refer to the senseless slaughter of harp seals.

Is the minister in agreement with the views expressed by an outstanding Canadian conservationist, Mike Cramond, that unless a stoppage is put to this slaughter, within five years at the present rate of reduction—there were 3.5 million seals ten years ago and there are only 750,000 now—the seal population will be wiped out?

In view of the fact that Canada receives only about 10 per cent of the actual pelts that are secured in the harvest yet receives all the opprobrium connected with the slaughter, would the minister be prepared to communicate with the U.S.S.R., Sweden, Norway and those countries that reap the largest benefit materially, with the aim of putting an end to this slaughter? No matter what the minister has done, commendable though it has been, everywhere across the nation there has been a universal demand in this regard. Canada is getting a black eye from something which brings little return to this nation.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I would probably agree with the right hon. gentleman that Canada is getting a black eye from what is happening in the seal hunt, but as I have said before and I want to repeat, this is a result of irresponsible representations made by people who have nothing in mind but the complete abolition of this operation.

With regard to conservation measures, I want to assure the right hon. member that the conservation measures adopted covering such things as the length of the season and the quota which was established in 1964 are sufficient to provide adequate protection. Last year a million and a quarter adult seals were spotted on the ice pans in the gulf of St. Lawrence and hundreds of thousands more were spotted on the front, so there are no signs whatsoever that the seal herds are being depleted.

With regard to the international operation, I am sure the right hon. member knows we have succeeded in having control of the seal hunt on the front, that is, on the high seas east of Newfoundland, being accepted under the protocol of ICNAF, the international convention on the northwest Atlantic fisheries. Further, with regard to the methods used in killing the seals, I am sure the right hon.

member will agree that all possible measures have been introduced and are being implemented to the letter of the law. I have been pleased to hear in recent days from responsible representatitves of the S.P.C.A.—unfortunately not all of them can be so classed—to the effect that these measures are being fully implemented and fully controlled by officers of the department.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for that statement. I now ask him will he communicate with these other nations that are benefiting materially and overwhelmingly while Canada's name suffers, with a view to greatly reducing the present scale of the slaughter and ultimately ending this practice for Canada's benefit?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I also wish to inform the right hon. member that we have been in communication with the countries to which reference has been made. We had a meeting in Copenhagen last fall at which this matter was discussed. We are trying to control the killing not only in Canadian waters but, as I have said, we have succeeded in bringing it under the protocol and control of ICNAF. This matter will be further discussed at an ICNAF meeting which will take place in Boston next June.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary and relative question.

[Translation]

A news report from Îles-de-la-Madeleine advises us that posters on seal hunt regulations were sent in English only, even though 99 per cent of the population is French speaking.

Could the minister see to it that French posters are sent to the Îles-de-la-Madeleine?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Fisheries usually sends out regulations posters in both languages, in French and in English. It may be that, in this case, only English posters were sent, due to the error of one of our employees. I can assure the hon. member that my attention was called to the incident and that the employee responsible for this will be asked to replace those posters by French ones.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those of us who are not as closely associated with this matter as others may I ask the minister to put on the record the value per pelt and the total receipts from the seal hunt. I have heard it is about $11 per pelt for a total value of $1,889,000 for 170,000 pelts harvested by Canadians.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might do this on another occasion, I do not think it should be done at question time.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member does not feel that we should go on to another subject. If time permits I shall be pleased to revert to the question he would like to ask.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, the point is I received this morning a petition from the students of a Montreal school.

I should only like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he has received a petition from the students of the Peace Centennial school asking that the gulf of St. Lawrence be made into a seal sanctuary?

[English]

COMMUNICATIONS

SUGGESTED RESERVATION OF SPACE FOR CANADIAN SATELLITES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister regarding the science secretariat's report, commonly referred to as the Chapman report which suggests the establishment of a national space agency and urges an agreement which would reserve to Canada space for communications satellites. In view of the fact that apparently there are only some 10 such spaces left and Canada will need three by 1980, unless Canada moves quickly we may have to rent communications satellite services from other countries.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister what minister is being charged with this matter and whether any representations are being made by the Canadian government to the United States government to work out an international agreement to reserve certain space areas to Canada for communications satellites.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only is this a matter of importance and urgency as my hon. friend points out, but the report already has been given consideration by the cabinet and referred to the science council. I have asked the science council to report back as quickly as possible. When this report is received we hope to be able to take some action. The Minister of Transport is the minister directly concerned, but I also am keeping in close contact with the matter because it also comes within my jurisdiction.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that if the United States continues to put communications satellites into space Canada will be completely shut out of the area, are any representations being made to the government of the United States with a view to reserving space for Canadian communications satellites?

Mr. Pearson: This is a matter which will have to be included in the considerations. We will have to work out with the United States mutually agreeable arrangements. This is one of the matters with which we will have to deal.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the new governor general is about to be appointed, is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether he will recommend the appointment of someone as perfectly bilingual as General Vanier was?

An hon. Member: That will not be easy.

[English]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of external affairs. Is it the intention of the minister to utilize in some capacity in external affairs the self recognized expertise of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) in order to shore up the minister's shaky position?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question contains allegations and as such is not in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—STEPS TO SAFEGUARD CANADIAN INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the ominous reports coming from Nigeria setting March 31 as the deadline for dissolution of that union, is the government taking any steps to safeguard Canadian interests should that union be dissolved at that time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Recently we had a talk in Ottawa with the new high commissioner for that country in Canada. This general matter was discussed with him, and we have taken certain steps.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCENTIVES TO ENCOURAGE CANADIAN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. What consideration is the government giving to the introduction of incentives to persuade Canadians to invest more of their savings in Canadian development?

SHIPPING

HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SHIPWRECK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport of which I gave the hon. gentleman notice. Is he now in a position to report on the inquiry by his department into the recent marine tragedy near the mouth of Halifax harbour?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could not give more than an interim report, as the investigation is not yet complete. I hope to have something more definite to communicate at a very early date.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I directed a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour in the absence of that minister. The minister has been unable to be in attendance since, and I am wondering whether the parliamentary secretary is now in a position to reply. May I remind him that the first part of my question was:

—what progress the minister has made in drafting the appropriate regulations and in appointing the board or boards of arbitration to deal with the dispute between the railways and those unions which rejected the terms submitted by Mr. Goldenberg as mediator.

The parliamentary secretary may not be in a position to answer, but if he can I should be grateful.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the progress being made in relation to these regulations is considered by the department to be quite satisfactory, and that some of the recommendations implied in the question by the hon. member last Friday are being taken into consideration.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked the parliamentary secretary a question rather than to have him to interpret what I said. I made no recommendations last Friday. I asked whether in drafting the regulations the department intended to deal with the terms of the award. I made no recommendations, and I would thank the hon. member if he did not put words in my mouth.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF STORM DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. In light of the recent series of severe winter storms along the east coast, particularly in the areas of Halifax, Lunenburg and Guysboro counties, I am wondering whether he would have his departmental engineers in that particular district conduct a review of storm damage to ascertain whether there has been any serious damage that might stand in the way of normal spring fishing operations.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to take the hon. member's suggestion under consideration and give the matter immediate attention.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF REGULATIONS UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is he now in a position to give us some idea how soon the regulations under the Canada Assistance Act will be approved by at least some of the provinces, in order that many needy people can obtain assistance under this act which was passed last July?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the regulations have been approved by the governor in council and have been published in the Canada Gazette. The agreements with the provinces pursuant to the act have been forwarded for signature, and it is now a matter for the provincial governments to come to an agreement and sign the documents. This is the next step, and I hope it will be completed very soon.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us whether any of the provincial governments have as yet signed these agreements, and could he give us any forecast as to how soon he might expect some signatures on these agreements?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hope all the provinces will sign very soon. I do not think I have yet received a returned, signed agreement from any of the provinces.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STATUS OF DISPUTE BETWEEN UPI AND WIRE SERVICE GUILD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I had a question I wanted to ask the Minister of Labour, but in his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary will take it as notice. I want to know whether he can say what is the situation in the dispute between United Press International and the wire service guild. I am receiving letters to the effect that this dispute may lead to a picketing of the parliament buildings because UPI has facilities here. Can he clarify this situation?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in February of last year the wire service guild was certified to begin negotiations with UPI. These negotiations deteriorated and the services of a conciliation officer were requested in March. This was granted. Then both parties asked for the services of a conciliation board. The board in turn tabled a report in October which contained no recommendations other than that the parties continue negotiation. Finally, in February of this year the guild requested and obtained permission from the minister to take action against the UPI for alleged violation of the I.R.D.I.A., section 46, which stated in effect that UPI allegedly changed working conditions before a collective agreement had been reached. That was in February, and that is precisely how the matter stands at the moment.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SELECTION OF REPRESENTATIVES FOR COMMEMORATION OF VIMY RIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I should like to ask whether he has completed the government's guest list, and have all the invitations been forwarded to those veterans who are going to participate in the pilgrimage to Vimy?

Hon. Robert Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that the list has been completed. I believe we are still receiving recommendations from various units throughout the country. We are trying to complete it as quickly as possible, and the letters go out immediately as soon as the names come in.

FINANCE

PROPOSED FURTHER COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF BANK ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question about the bank legislation. I do so because of the uncertainty as to whether we will be proceeding with the debate today, and the matter is urgent. Has the minister received representations from one of the chartered banks requesting that proposed clause 72 of the bank bill be referred back to the standing committee for further review and representations; and if so, will the minister move immediately that the subject matter be referred to the standing committee on finance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the president of the Royal Bank sent a letter to the chairman of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, but not to me. I have received, as the hon. gentleman knows, a letter from him making this suggestion. I have examined into this matter and do not feel it will be necessary to have any hearings on it; and I believe it would interfere with the progress of the bill through the house if the committee were to be sitting while the house was sitting on the same legislation. I believe I can explain to the satisfaction of hon. members the misunderstanding that arose. Certainly the government has no intention of changing the proposal that is contained in the bill.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—CONTRACT FOR DEMOLITION OF OLD PRINTING BUREAU

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works.

It deals with the demolition of the former building of the printing bureau. Could the minister tell us why no contractor from Hull has been asked to tender for that demolition work?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, at ten o'clock this evening.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DISTRIBUTION OF HAWTHORN-TREMBLAY REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry in his capacity as reporter for the Queen's Printer, and ask the hon. gentleman whether he would consider making the report "A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada", prepared by Professor Hawthorn and tabled today by the Minister of Veteran Affairs, available gratis to all the Indian bands in Canada so they would have an opportunity to see at first hand and without cost to themselves the implications of the some 91 recommendations covering various aspects of Indian activities.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for this lies with my colleague the Secretary of State. I am sure she has heard the representations and will act on them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONTINUATION IN PARLIAMENT OF LEADER OF OPPOSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition in his capacity as one of the first officers in the house. It relates closely to the business of the house. According to a recent press report the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) won a primary. I wish to ask the right hon. Leader of the Opposition whether it is his intention to continue to serve in parliament under the leadership of Heward Grafftey after September 9, 1967.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Choquette: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY U.S. OFFICER RESPECTING CANADIAN TROOPS AT YPRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Although the United States army officer concerned has apologized for the statement he made in a United States magazine—and I am sure the minister sincerely appreciates this excellent apology—that allied troops fled in the face of the German gas attack at Ypres on April 23, 1915, and in view of the concern this has caused Canadian veterans who took part in that action, for the sake of the record would the minister obtain the facts concerning this battle and place them on the record of this house in a brief paragraph at the first opportunity?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I have read the apology of Colonel Fair and I would agree that it is certainly an apology which we should accept. It was expressed in a gentlemanly manner.

I do not think I can do any better on this occasion than quote Sir John French, the British commander in chief, who wrote in his dispatch on the battle:

> In spite of the danger to which they were exposed the Canadians held their ground with a magnificent display of tenacity and courage; it is not too much to say that the bearing and conduct of these splendid troops averted a disaster which might have been attended with the most serious consequences.

I place this on the record in the belief that this certainly meets the needs of the occasion.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FURTHER INFORMATION ON DISTRIBUTION OF COLOUR TELEVISION SETS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask her whether the C.B.C. has advised her that no further answer would be given regarding the identity of the 107 persons who have received the beneficence of the free use of colour television sets. Does the C.B.C. intend to give an answer? I need that information from the minister before further action can be taken.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows I transmit the answers which are given to me by the C.B.C. I have not had any further information transmitted to me since the C.B.C. provided the answer which was given in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister ask for an unequivocal answer, if that is possible, from those who run the C.B.C. as to whether this information will be given rather than the expunged record which we received? At the same time will she also find out from the C.B.C.—and let us have an answer to both these questions possibly on Monday—whether the C.B.C. requires regular reports on the quality of C.B.C. television programs from those who are supplied these colour television sets, in the light of the explanation that these sets were supplied to 107 persons, unnamed with the exception of three, for the specific purpose of monitoring programs?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, of course I will convey that question to the C.B.C.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WATSON (CHÂTEAUGUAY-HUNTINGDON-LAPRAIRIE)—PRESS REPORTS ON USE OF INDIAN LANDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of privilege relating to the Hawthorn report which was tabled this morning, since it affects my position with regard to my constitutents in Caughnawaga.

Last week reports were circulating in the news media across Canada that the Hawthorn report recommended the removal of Indians from reserves in various areas of Canada, and more particularly the removal of Indians from the Caughnawaga reserve in my constituency, with the land to be used for various industries and apartment buildings. These reports in the news media were then followed by a question in the house put by the hon. member for Skeena, in which he asked whether there was a report recommending that the Caughnawaga Indian reserve be leased to a trust company for development and that the Iroquois people of Caughnawaga be moved elsewhere. He then stated:

> If such a recommendation has been made will the minister reject it as preposterous, monstrous and completely contrary to our concept of human rights?

The member for Skeena then added.

> With all due respect I agree with the second part of your ruling, but this question involves a matter which is of immediate importance affecting the human rights of a number of Canadian citizens who are liable to be moved from their home lands. I think the minister should be given an opportunity to answer.

As soon as the Hawthorn report was tabled this morning I contacted the Indian affairs branch of the department and I asked them where the reference to Caughnawaga appeared in the report. I have been given that reference, and I would like to read it to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the matter to which the hon. member now refers is of great importance to him and to many others, but he must realize that he rose on a question of privilege. I will therefore ask him to state his point of privilege as quickly as possible.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege involves my position as a member and the position of other members of this house. The Caughnawaga people took these reports at their face value and as a result demonstrations which threaten to block several highways leading to Montreal have been scheduled for tomorrow. I would like to clear the air.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member now says he wishes to read part of a report on a question of privilege. To my mind this is not a question of privilege at all. I do not see how the point he has raised can be a question of privilege by any stretch of the imagination. It may be that hon. members would want to hear the representations of the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie regarding the state of Indians on this particular reservation, but I suggest this cannot be done under the guise of a question of privilege.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): In view of the fact that there appears to have been a leak of this report I feel it is a question of privilege affecting members of this house, and since this is the first opportunity we have had to clear the air on this matter and since it is urgent I would respectfully ask to be allowed to put this on the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter may be extremely urgent and it may be important to put certain information on the record, but certainly it cannot be done by way of a question of privilege.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the point of order just raised. There is nothing more important than that our Indian population, and most particularly the Indians of the reserve to which the hon. gentleman has referred, should see justice done. I suggest that the hon. member be given the opportunity to state the case, because the people on the Caughnawaga reserve are being treated in a way that none of us can justify.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I have already made my decision that there is no prima facie case of privilege. However, if there is unanimous agreement among hon. members that the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie be allowed to make a statement at this time, which is obviously a very unusual procedure, I certainly will not stand in the way since hon. members are masters of their own procedures.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I will simply read from page 192 of the Hawthorn report:

> In some cases, bands may refuse to lease reserve land that would contribute materially to their revenue where they fear that an influx of outside business or industrial interests may cause disruption in the community and threaten their survival as a distinct cultural entity. Such has been the reaction, for instance, among the Caughnawaga and Six Nations. While such reactions may be uneconomic in the orthodox sense, they seem justified in terms of human goals and satisfactions. Economic development, after all, is merely a means for fulfilling the goals that a people deem important, and if cultural survival is a prior value of a band's members, they should be given every assistance to use their economic assets to that end.

This, sir, is completely the reverse of the press reports on the Hawthorn report which have been appearing during the past week.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE DISSOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Is it a fact that as a result of the great decrease in car sales and the number of unemployed people, the United States-Canada automobile agreement is in danger of falling apart and that certain car manufacturers have asked to be released from certain requirements?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I can say quite categorically, Mr. Speaker, that in spite of the down-turn of the market there is no danger of the agreement falling apart.

Mr. Starr: You are sticking with it, regardless of how many people lose their jobs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or how many more get jobs.

Mr. Starr: Where?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Windsor.

Mr. Hales: Has the minister received an answer to his request to the car manufacturers that the prices of cars to Canadians should be reduced in line with United States prices?

Mr. Drury: We have dealt with this particular question quite frequently. I have pointed out on earlier occasions that progressively since the inception of the pact manufacturers' prices to dealers have declined relative to similar prices in the United States. This trend, I trust, will continue.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him what was the gist of his reply to a letter Mr. George Burt wrote him—Mr. Burt is from Windsor—on March 7, in which he made reference to the Prime Minister's reply in the house on March 2. Mr. Burt alleges the Prime Minister misled the house by not giving the full text of the report of the Economic Council of Canada, and charged the Prime Minister with keeping the truth of the matter from the House of Commons and the Canadian public.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be giving very careful consideration to my hon. friend's question.

NICKEL—REPORTED DEVELOPMENT OF BLACK MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) asked me about the position of Canadian users of nickel in view of what he referred to as "inflated prices". The Department of Trade and Commerce has been advised by the producers that Canadian users of nickel have been assured of receiving, at producers' prices, at least as much nickel as they consumed in 1966 if they require it. In these circumstances users should not find their competitive position in world markets adversely affected.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF STUDENTS FROM THE UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): May I direct the attention of the house, and especially of the Prime Minister who is an alumnus of the University of Vermont, to the presence in the gallery of the students and faculty of the Canadian studies division of that excellent and ecumenical institution of learning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON ISLAND—CRASH TRAINING PROGRAM FOR UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he is in a position today to reply to a question I posed on March 2, which in his absence was directed to the right hon. Prime Minister, with reference to launching a crash program of training to assist the unemployed steel workers and others who are unemployed on Cape Breton Island?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I think I can answer that question on Monday.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON FINANCIAL POSITION OF OSHAWA FINANCE CO.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has he anything to report on the financial condition of Oshawa Acceptance, which unlike the Prudential Finance is a federally incorporated company?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, I have no report to make to the house. There is at the present time no legislation on our statute books relating to such companies, and it is for this reason, or more accurately this is one of the reasons I am calling a conference of the provinces and the federal government to repair what I consider to be a serious omission.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED REDUCTION IN CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN ANTI-SUBMARINE OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister able to give any assurance to the United States authorities, as well as to the Canadian people, that Canada will play its full part in anti-submarine warfare operations instead of withdrawing from that role and relying solely on the United States for the protection of Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question is falsely based; there have been no suggestions of withdrawal, and my hon. friend knows quite well that that assurance could be given in all good faith.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware of the alarm in Washington concerning reports that Canada is reducing her commitment with regard to anti-submarine warfare operations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am aware that there is alarm existing in the mind of my hon. friend.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

APPOINTMENT OF UNILINGUAL LIAISON OFFICER WITH EXPO '67

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the hon. Solicitor General of Canada. However, in his absence I could perhaps put it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the equivocal answer given last night by the parliamentary secretary to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Beer) with regard to Inspector Ryddel of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us what are the exact functions of this inspector of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Expo '67? Is he actually a liaison officer between the R.C.M.P. and the Expo '67 security service?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be put on the order paper.

RESEARCH

INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT FOR HEART PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the assistance given by the government in recent weeks to research projects, one in Montreal and one in British Columbia, is there any program currently under consideration for the support of the heart research project as a result of the Gundy report in Toronto?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall have to look into that question and discuss it with the minister.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED INCREASED USE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. On February 13, February 20 and February 24 the house was assured that the question of the greater use of the maintenance facilities of the Air Canada base at Winnipeg would be discussed with the management of Air Canada. My question is, was this done and has the minister any progress to report to the house?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As a matter of fact, although I recognize it is a hazardous thing to do in replying to the hon. gentleman, I must say my recollection was that I undertook to make certain observations known to Air Canada. This has been done and up to the moment I personally have had no observations from them with respect to these representations.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DENIAL TO OLD AGE PENSIONERS OF PROVINCIAL SUPPLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that the British Columbia government is blaming the federal government for a situation in which some old age pensioners in British Columbia are being denied the former $30 a month supplementary allowance given by British Columbia? If so, would he clarify this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the question as asked can be put at this time.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 9, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-277, to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Richard in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 17—Failure to file return.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the committee has been going very fast and I may or may not be in order in speaking on this clause. My colleague the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is out of the chamber for a moment, but the other day he asked the minister whether he would supply certain information and I am wondering whether the minister will do so now. I do not have Hansard before me, but the question related to some comparative figures as between the new plan and the old one, as I recall it, particularly in regard to education and the like.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the committee has been proceeding very quickly and perhaps I owe it to the committee, notwithstanding the fact that some of these clauses have been approved, to provide two or three answers asked for when the house was considering the bill on second reading.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam raised questions concerning the level of equalization, the distribution of equalization payments, the exclusion of municipal revenues and the inclusion of natural resource revenues in the calculations. Perhaps I might be permitted to give some brief answers to these questions.

If the committee were disposed to equalize all provincial revenues to the level of the top province rather than use the national average basis, the cost would be $2,530 million. On this ground alone I think the committee will agree that at the present time this would not be a desirable redistribution of revenues, considering the level of federal taxes that would have to be imposed in order to effect such redistribution.

Mr. Lewis: That is compared with what, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Sharp: That compares with $500 million odd included in the tables I placed on the record yesterday when we were on second reading. The various methods of equalizing revenues were very carefully considered, and we came to the conclusion that the change from equalizing the two revenue sources as had been the practice under previous equalization arrangements to equalizing all provincial revenues was a fundamental change of enormous value to all the provinces. Indeed, the additional cost of effecting this change was in the order of hundreds of millions of dollars. It also had the effect of making for a much more equitable distribution of federal assistance.

We looked at the possibility of equalizing to a higher level, but as I have already said the cost was quite unrealistic. To equalize all provincial revenues to the top province would result in a cost to the federal government—that is, a transfer from the federal treasury, or from the taxpayers looked at federally to the taxpayers looked at provincially—in excess of $2.5 billion.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question at that point. The minister has attempted to answer by using the process of reductio ad absurdum. I do not think anybody suggested that the total revenues be equalized to the top province. Under the present agreement two sources of revenue are equalized to the average of the two top provinces. What I was suggesting yesterday was that instead of bringing those two sources of revenue down to the national average, the equalization should be based on raising the equalization formula to the top province in respect to these two sources of revenue, using the same formula the minister is using now except that it be equated to the top province rather than to the national average.

I feel that going back to the national average is a retrograde step. We did use the national average method at one time, and it went up to the average of the two top provinces. The minister is now going back to the average of all the provinces. I should like to ask the minister what it would cost the federal government to make this transfer if, based on these two sources of revenue, all of the provinces were equalized to the top province.

Mr. Sharp: What the hon. gentleman is suggesting, Mr. Chairman, is that we should revert to the present situation; that is to say, we should continue the present practice of equalizing the two sources of revenue up to the top two provinces. After examining this the government came to the conclusion that this was not an equitable way of equalizing the positions of the provinces. Indeed, one has only to look at the results to realize that the combination of equalizing to the two top provinces on those two sources of taxation and paying the Atlantic provinces grants is not an equitable way of dealing with the situation.

The effect of the change we are now proposing to equalize all provincial revenues is to give more money to the maritime provinces than they received under the Atlantic provinces grants, as well as to effect a very substantial improvement in the position of Quebec, which obviously had received the short end of the stick under the rather hodgepodge arrangements that had been in effect. So I would defend the present proposal most vigorously as being very much superior in its results to the plan we had in effect which equalized the two sources of revenues to the top two provinces.

I can see no logic, of course, in equalizing two of these sources of revenue to the top two provinces and the other sources of revenue to the national average. That would not make any sense whatever. I suggest to the committee that what we have done now in substituting objective tests based upon the existing rates of tax of all the provinces, applied to their existing tax bases, is to take a very forward looking step.

• (12 noon)

Hereafter the amount of equalization payments will be determined by the growth in the general tax base. It will reflect also the changing decisions which the provinces make about their own rates of taxation. All this is taken into account. The new formula looks very complicated, and it is, but it has great virtues which I have indicated; namely, it is objective, and the results are determined by developments in the economy and the taxes imposed by the provinces themselves. It is a system which operates automatically and objectively without the federal government having to interpose judgments as to relative needs. The payments are based upon objective tests which I would recommend as being very equitable.

Mr. Douglas: The only way of knowing how equitable they are is to look at the figures. The minister has given us a comparison; he placed the figures on record in Hansard yesterday. It is not a very good comparison, because the hon. gentleman has taken figures showing the equalization payments in the present fiscal year and compared them with the payments which will be made during the next fiscal year under the proposed arrangements.

This comparison, I suggest, is misleading in the first place. Surely if he is making comparisons he ought to make a comparison between the results of the present arrangements for this fiscal year and what the benefit to the provinces would have been if this formula were applied in the present fiscal year. Or he ought to have taken the next fiscal year and compared the results under the present formula with those which would be obtained under the arrangements now proposed. The minister has given us figures which I do not believe are really comparable.

Even on the basis of his own figures, on the basis of the total payments to the provinces it is significant that the change would mean an increase in payments to Newfoundland of $29.2 million while Prince Edward Island, which has a very limited tax base and extremely limited development resources, with little prospect of getting revenue from resource development, would receive an additional $3.5 million. If one looks at the figures the minister has given us on the basis of per capita payments, the increase for Newfoundland is $55.25 while for Prince Edward Island it is only $29.78.

Mr. Sharp: Taking all the proposed transfers it is $45 per capita.

Mr. Douglas: I was taking the amounts tabled here.

Mr. Sharp: I gave two tables yesterday.

Mr. Douglas: Yes, but we are talking now about the equalization payments. In all the experience I have had with tax sharing arrangements I cannot remember a time when Prince Edward Island did not have the highest per capita benefits derived from this redistribution of tax revenue. Now, for the first time, Prince Edward Island will drop to second place under this tax sharing proposal.

I am not arguing that Newfoundland is getting too much, but it seems to me there is something wrong about a formula which gives Newfoundland a return per capita of $129.90 while giving Prince Edward Island $127.02. It seems to me that the formula is not producing the equity which the minister says it was designed to produce.

Mr. Sharp: May I answer the first question asked by the hon. member. I cannot give a comparison between the two formulae for the fiscal year 1967-68, but I can do so for the year 1966-67 on the same basis. I provided this comparison to the tax structure committee in September, 1966 and it is to be found at page 17 of the report. These figures may have been slightly changed, indeed they have been, but the changes are so small as to be insignificant.

Under the present arrangements for the year 1966-67, equalization payments on the basis of the earlier calculation would amount to $353 million. They are down in the new tables as $354 million, a slight correction. Had the proposed arrangements been applied to the same year the cost would have been $491.5 million. That is a direct comparison.

Mr. Lewis: I think the minister gave an earlier table on the new basis for the year 1966-67 and put it on record at page 13687 of Hansard. The total shown there is, I think, $494 million.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Sharp: Yes. I think we are both looking at the same figures. I had forgotten I had placed the same figures on the record in Hansard. They were based on an earlier calculation, but in any case the totals are approximately $350 million in 1966-67 and $490 million under the new arrangements had those arrangements applied in that year.

May I add one further comment on the changes. One of the great difficulties when shifting from an inferior to a superior method of calculating equalization is that the change is bound to have different results when one looks at the position of the various provinces. Indeed, every time the basis has been changed there have been pleas that there should be the same percentage improvement in the position of everyone. Otherwise someone is thought to be getting the short end of the stick.

In fact if one takes the whole of the proposed arrangements, including the fiscal transfers relating to the new education offer, the province of Prince Edward Island is still the largest per capita recipient. On the basis of equalization alone, per capita payments to Prince Edward Island rise from $97 to $127, as the hon. member has pointed out. It is true that Newfoundland, which apparently was not as well looked after as it should have been, will benefit by an increase in the per capita grant from $74 to nearly $130, but the fact that Prince Edward Island is now second is really a tribute to the progress of P.E.I. and certainly should not be a reason for criticism. It is, I suppose, the outcome of somewhat better performance in economic terms.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a different point. I appreciate that the proposal does not deal with this point at all, although the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam drew attention to it yesterday. To me it has great importance. In passing I may say that the minister recommended his new proposal highly, and one of the reasons he gave was that it obviated the necessity for the federal government to make any judgment. I can only say, in view of some judgments we have experienced, that this is certainly a recommendation for the proposal. But seriously, Mr. Chairman, the minister says this proposal is objective because it sort of automatically takes into consideration certain statistical factors which occur.

From that point of view it is objective, but a much more important basis for reallocation of funds is the question of need in the provinces. I appreciate that that, of course, is reflected to some extent in the provincial tax structure, but not necessarily so. You may easily have a provincial régime that does not meet need and does not impose taxes which it ought to have imposed in order to meet certain social needs. The result is that it will keep its level of revenue low and get more out of this arrangement. Whether that is a good thing for Canada is a different story, but my major aim in speaking—and this is not in criticism of the minister—is to ask whether this was considered at all, or whether any studies are being initiated to deal with it.

The major problem I see in all these proposals is that municipal revenues and taxes are ignored. When you had a comparison at one time of only three sources of revenue and gave them the weight for equalization purposes, and later only two sources of revenue, you were of course in a sense being arbitrarily selective as to the basis of your comparison. But the moment you go to all the sources of revenue in a province and submit them to a national average, I respectfully suggest you are not dealing with the whole problem when you do not include in that consideration the needs of the municipalities and the revenues which they have to raise.

I repeat that if you take only a few sources of revenue you are making an arbitrary decision and the rest is not counted; but the moment you try to erect a structure on a basis which pretends to include, and is intended to include the total revenues of each of the provinces, geared to the total average of all the provinces for the purposes of equalization to bring everybody up to that average, then if you ignore the increased cost of welfare, education and all the other activities which the municipalities have to perform you are ignoring a very important part of the taxes raised in this country.

I am particularly concerned about that, as I am sure are all other members, because as the result of our constitutional arrangements and for other reasons the municipalities are limited almost entirely to perhaps the worst kind of tax, the tax on the home owner, which is unrelated to need, which is ungraduated, and which in most cases is a very great hardship on the lower income people.

I do not know if the minister and his advisers have considered whether it is possible to take municipal revenues into account and get the municipal picture as part of the total picture we are comparing. If they have not, I would like to ask whether some studies will be made in that direction. I do not think I misunderstand the situation in Canada in this case, and I do think it is an important matter about which to be concerned.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member for York South that the government did look very carefully at alternatives including the equalization of municipal revenues as well as provincial revenues. For the information of the committee, the cost of averaging all municipal revenues on the same formula that we use to equalize provincial revenues would be approximately an additional $200 million for the year 1966-67, which was the year to which we applied our formula.

However, we decided, at least for the time being, that this would be going a very long way, apart altogether from the additional revenues we would have to raise for this purpose, because in fact the provinces themselves do not equalize the positions of their municipalities. For the federal government to move ahead of the provinces in this respect seems to me to be of rather doubtful wisdom. The time may come when the principle of the equalization of municipal revenues should be considered, but I should think it would be for the provinces to take much greater initiative in this direction before the federal government did so.

Mr. Lewis: If that is the reason then I could not protest more strongly. Each time there is a desirable national goal, desirable from every social consideration, the federal government takes refuge, when it can, by saying "It would be too bad if we went ahead of the provinces." Why is it too bad? In a federal country what is the purpose of a federal authority if not to give some leadership to the country? If we are merely the sum of ten provinces then we do not need all this elaborate stuff that we have got in the federal government and federal parliament. We should take the responsibility of giving leadership, of indicating a road which is desirable to follow.

Because the minister has more staff at his beck and call than I have, he knows more than I do about this subject, but the fact is that some equalization does take place in some of the provinces, and the fact is that inequality of municipal burdens is one of the most difficult problems in Canada today. The undesirability and the inequity of most municipal taxes are one of the most serious problems facing the ordinary people of Canada. From the figures I have seen in recent years it is clear that the cost of primary and secondary education is a problem as acute for the municipalities as is post-secondary education for the provinces and the federal government. Merely to say that because the provinces are not equalizing municipal revenues and taxes when we should not take any step in that direction simply does not impress me at all. It seems to me to be a complete abdication of leadership in an area where leadership is sorely needed.

Mr. Pepin: It might impress some of your supporters in Quebec.

Mr. Lewis: I did not hear the minister's remark.

Mr. Pepin: The fact that the federal government is not interfering in municipal affairs might impress some people, like your supporters in Quebec.

Mr. Lewis: Not only is the latter part of the minister's remark inaccurate, but may I put something to him in a way which I hope will not too greatly offend him.

• (12:20 p.m.)

When I was bringing up my children, before they become 18, when they would be independent, one of the things I always said to them was that they ought to learn to listen with their ears instead of their prejudices. The minister ought to learn that too, because I did not for one moment suggest that he should interfere in municipal affairs. I did not for one moment suggest that the federal government should take any steps which would in any way invade the municipal government area. I asked the minister whether they took into account municipal revenues, and his answer was that it would cost $200 million more, which I suggest is not a very serious problem in the context in which we are discussing it. Then he went on to say that the provinces must take the lead in equalizing municipal revenues before the federal government steps in.

I am not asking the minister to produce this tomorrow; he does not do things in that way. I suggest that the Minister of Finance meet the various provincial governments and discuss with them a method to equalize municipal finances, or do something to assist in this situation. The minister must have known that was what I had in mind.

I am neither suggesting an amendment to this bill nor asking that the minister bring one in. I merely suggest that the way to do this is for the federal and provincial governments to take a very careful, concerted look at this painful problem of municipal need and municipal taxation across the country, as well as the requirement for the federal government to give some leadership in stimulating the provincial governments to take steps to remove some of the unbearable burden which the small home owner now carries and make possible a greater equality of social service and treatment for these people across Canada.

In the municipalities and similar smaller jurisdictions occur a great many of the things which affect the daily lives of the people. This is the level of government which is responsible for it. It is for this reason that I have raised the matter. I quite accept the fact that the minister could not give an answer to that kind of difficult problem at the snap of a finger. If I became a little strong in my wording it was because I am personally fed up to the teeth with the tendency on the part of this government to refuse to take any leadership in matters which require urgent and constant responsibility at this level of government.

Mr. Sharp: May I say a word in an effort to reduce the temperature of my hon. friend from York South?

Mr. Lewis: I do not know that you should.

Mr. Sharp: The effect of the equalization proposals we have placed before the house is to help the provinces which want to help their municipalities. If the provinces wish to transfer part of the responsibility from the municipal to the provincial taxpayer, we will equalize that source of revenue. Therefore I say to the hon. member that perhaps he has misunderstood the purpose of the proposal we have put forward.

May I add one other thing. Even if we were to include municipal revenues, the effect would not be to help the municipalities in any province which had a standard of tax capacity higher than the average. It would not help the municipalities of Ontario. They still would not receive any equalization payments from the federal government, because they still would be in a better fiscal position in relation to the provinces and municipalities elsewhere. The same would be true of British Columbia. This proposal is only a means of redistributing the revenues so as to bring the tax revenues of the poorer provinces up to a national average so that rates of taxation higher than normal do not have to be applied by them in order to raise the necessary revenues to produce a reasonable standard of services.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate the fact that provinces like Ontario and British Columbia would not likely benefit any more than they do now, but would it not follow that the other provinces which are in dire need of added revenue, because of their tax capacities certainly would receive more money? If there is an additional amount of $200 million someone must get that money. So this $200 million obviously would go to those provinces and in turn to their municipalities for the general improvement of their social and educational services.

I believe I understood what the minister said when he stated that if the provinces were to take over more of the municipal costs and thereby increase their taxes there would be a certain situation. I am not quite sure, however, that the situation would help the have-not provinces. If they increased their share of municipal costs and their tax revenues the result would be that they would receive less equalization and not more. If a have-not province which now receives an equalization grant were to take over some of the expenses of the municipalities and increase its tax level to deal with this, then of course its equalization grant would drop rather than increase.

Mr. Sharp: It would go up. This is a very important point. Perhaps I ought to underline it again. The great virtue of the new system of equalization payments being introduced now is that it will be objective and automatic. It will take into account the taxes imposed by the provinces and the taxable capacity of each of the provinces in relation to the whole country. Therefore if the provinces as a whole, or any of them, decide to raise the present level of taxation this would affect the national average and would result in more being paid to the provinces which imposed taxes additional to what they are raising from their own taxpayers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to continue this much further—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. Unless the hon. member for York South wishes to ask only a short question, the hon. member for Kamloops wishes to speak and I think he should be given the opportunity.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for York South wishes to complete a certain point I would be glad to wait.

Mr. Lewis: I am grateful to the hon. member. This is not the first time the minister has made mathematical assertions which with the greatest of respect I suggest have no validity. The minister knows perfectly well that if Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island should raise their provincial taxes as a result of taking over municipal costs, the effect on the national average would be almost nil. When you have a small community with a small revenue, what effect would that have on the national average? A province like Ontario, Quebec, or at least British Columbia or Alberta, would have to be involved in order that the national average would be affected in any degree which would be of value to anybody. If we have in mind the four Atlantic provinces which have a relatively small revenue in relation to the total on which the national average is based, obviously an increase which would fall within their reach would have almost no effect on the national average. I suggest that the minister's answer on this point just does not hold water.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister what discussions if any have been held and what discussions are contemplated with the provinces with a view to assisting the provinces to relieve the municipalities from the increasing burden of taxation for education. The provinces get assistance under this bill in respect of the cost of post-secondary education; and what I should like to know is whether, if a province assumes an increasing or extra share of the cost, thereby relieving the municipalities of that amount, it will get higher assistance from the federal government. Because surely this would encourage the provinces to take over that burden, and I feel strongly that the only way we are going to get an ultimate settlement in respect of the cost of education—the only way we are going to get the level of education brought within the means of our people—is through this kind of assistance. The more this cost is loaded directly on the municipal taxpayer, the property owner, the less able is this country to provide the kind of educational program this country increasingly needs.

Will the minister indicate what discussions have been held or are contemplated with the provinces with a view to working out a system under which, if a province assumes an extra cost in relation to education thereby relieving the municipalities, the province will be assisted by the federal government or the national treasury in order that we will in effect have a national solution to a national problem?

Mr. Sharp: To the extent that we are transferring to the provinces increasing sources of revenue, as the tables I have distributed show, between 1966-67 and 1967-68 we are making available to the provinces in one way or another something like $375 million more. These revenues are distributed in various ways. Some provinces get more than others, but to that extent we are putting the provinces in a better position to discharge their responsibilities generally and thereby putting them in a better position to take on other responsibilities or to finance them.

Let me point this out, and it relates to the point made by the hon. member for York South whose comments I think were fair in relation to what I said, and I did not mean in any way to mislead the house. If, for example, other provinces were to follow the New Brunswick lead in taking over responsibilities for education this would result in very substantial increases in equalization payments to all provinces. For example, if some of the larger provinces followed New Brunswick's lead there would be a very substantial effects upon the level of equalization payments.

Mr. Douglas: In the meantime, unfortunately New Brunswick would suffer from that.

Mr. Sharp: No, it would not suffer. It has acted in the interest of the taxpayers of New Brunswick and I think it made a sound decision. To the extent that other provinces follow that lead the transfer of revenues from the federal government to the provinces will increase to the benefit of New Brunswick and the other provinces.

Mr. Fulton: It is a well understood principle, I suppose, that ministers of finance do not normally encourage provinces to follow policies which will result in the minister on behalf of Canada passing out more money to them. But I hope this minister will vary that rule because I feel strongly, and I think this feeling is generally shared, that we need a nation-wide effort to find a solution to this increasingly acute problem of bearing the costs of education.

So let me come back to my question. To what extent have there been discussions or has any plan been made to hold discussions with the provinces to encourage them to follow the general pattern that has been mentioned of assuming more of the cost of education, thereby relieving the municipalities, so that ultimately we can have the resources of this nation, through the federal government, placed behind provincial efforts to bring about the equitable distribution of the burden of education costs? Are such discussions contemplated?

Mr. Sharp: I cannot say that we have any specific discussions in mind along those lines, but I am confident that at the next meeting of the tax structure committee the implications of the equalization proposals now under discussion will be well understood by the provinces. We now have a plan in effect that is both objective and, it seems to me, tends to support the right kind of development in our tax structure.

Mr. Nowlan: Is there any objection to the suggestion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam relating to the production of a comparison between the present and the proposed fiscal arrangements for this year, rather than the two years together which certainly gives a false comparison? Is there any objection to that production?

I should like to ask another question relating to the national problem of sharing tax revenues between the federal and provincial governments. This whole process has created a fundamental and persistent constitutional problem. Perhaps the minister would give us some interpretation of these objective tests without getting into great detail in respect of the equalization formula.

After 90 years the Atlantic area achieved the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants. It is my understanding that as a result of the proposals before us these grants will disappear under the over-all equalization formula. Am I right in stating that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants will no longer be a fact of fiscal life in Canada, and have the special needs and responsibilities of the Atlantic area, which does not have the tax capacity of other areas in Canada, been taken into consideration in respect of the objective tests that have been discussed?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was not in the house when I gave the tax structure committee figures for the year 1966-67, which is the same year of comparison. The table I placed in Hansard on March 2 appears at pages 13686 and 13687. The exact comparisons the hon. gentleman is asking for appear at the bottom of that table in respect of provinces as well as on a national basis.

At the bottom of the table on page 13687 in numbered lines 10 and 11 there is the comparison the hon. gentleman wants. It shows, for example, an increase in the year 1966-67 from $354 million, which would be the yield under the present arrangements, to $494 million under the proposed arrangements if applied to the same year. In other words, in applying the proposals to the same year the increase would be roughly $140 million. Let me put this another way. If the provinces had this choice last year they would have selected the new arrangements because they would have been advantageous to all of them collectively to the extent of $140 million.

Let me draw attention to the figures in respect of the province of Nova Scotia in which the hon. gentleman is most interested. The increase would have been from $50 million to $69 million. I can assure the hon. member that all of the Atlantic provinces with the exception of Prince Edward Island, which chose the other alternative, would prefer the present equalization arrangement to a continuation of the Atlantic provinces grants.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I could follow that up. I thank the minister for pointing out this comparison. I appreciate that under the proposed formula there will be more money, but what does concern me is this. Ten years ago there was such a thing as an Atlantic adjustment grant. That legislation was put into effect in recognition of certain special circumstances relating to limited tax capacity.

Under the proposed equalization formula, even though more money will be available for the next year is the principle of special consideration being wiped out?

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I would point to clause 9 of the bill wherein a guarantee is given, which I think will perhaps satisfy the hon. member, that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants, although they have been superseded by superior arrangements, are still embedded in the bill and provide a sort of guarantee.

Mr. Nowlan: I have one last question, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that clause 9 contains the floor and base for the individual Atlantic provinces. Nova Scotia is dealt with there. Is that base calculated on the basis of the present Atlantic provinces adjustment grants?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman, these figures are the present Atlantic provinces adjustment grants.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as a member from British Columbia, and in an effort to be helpful, I should like to ask the minister a question. The minister knows that our premier has repeatedly told us that our province is completely debt free. I assume the premier has informed the minister of that fact, and we are proud of it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? How can it be that a province in such a very strong financial position should have asked me for a $100 million loan?

Mr. Herridge: That is just the point I was coming to, Mr. Chairman. I want to ask the minister this question. It is apparently obvious now that the government of British Columbia will be short by about $100 million with respect to building the projects under the Columbia river treaty. They will be short this amount of money after taking into consideration what they have received from the United States government for this purpose. The premier of British Columbia has asked for a loan of $100 million in this connection. My question is: Under the circumstances, what should the premier of British Columbia do? How should he approach this question to receive favourable consideration of his request from the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the modesty of my hon. friend. I thought that his championing of the cause of the premier of that province would certainly guarantee as much success as is possible.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, the minister made a remark about the possible change in the financial status of British Columbia that would prompt the premier to request a loan of $100 million. I wonder whether there is any change in the financial position of the federal government, because after stating that several hundred million dollars were available just for the asking the Minister of Finance has now rejected the request of the premier of British Columbia for this loan.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member had read my reply to the premier of British Columbia he would have seen that I asked only that British Columbia act as all other provinces have in putting forward a well substantiated claim setting out the particular circumstances that would justify the federal government breaking with tradition and financing provincial hydro developments in this country. In respect of all other provinces, when requests have been made they have come about as the result of long, detailed negotiation in which the provinces concerned have placed before the federal government a detailed statement of why they needed the money. I said to the premier of British Columbia the other day, in replying to his wire, that the federal government would be very happy to deal with the province of British Columbia as it has dealt with all other provinces in which special arrangements have been made.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, the minister has pointed out the way in which he says the provinces should go about seeking loans of this type. I wonder whether the minister would hold a seminar for the Liberal members from British Columbia in order to explain thoroughly to them that this is the way to go about obtaining such a loan?

Mr. Sharp: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the seminar should not be conducted by the Social Credit members from British Columbia. I think it would only confuse the issue still more.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot of these snide remarks from the Minister of Finance in the last few days. I should like to ask him whether he has any understanding at all of what Social Credit stands for and, if he has, would he indicate it to the committee? I think it might possibly clarify the situation.

Miss LaMarsh: Who has any such understanding?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying for most of my adult life to understand Social Credit, I have not succeeded very well. But what has puzzled me even more is how anyone could accept these doctrines.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I think ridicule is the weapon of the ignorant. The Minister of Finance has stated that Social Credit principles and philosophy are completely "out" as far as his ideas are concerned, but he now acknowledges that he does not know anything about them. A number of years ago a resolution was passed in the United States which called for the implementation of Social Credit, and I think the minister would do well to read the records and the evidence given at that time.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, before this brief debate terminates I wish to make known that it is the intention of the hon. member for Kootenay West to participate in the debate on the Bank of Canada amendment bill. At that time I am going to deal with some aspects of Social Credit in respect of which I fully support my colleagues to the left.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I think we have been led astray a little from the point originally raised. The Minister of Finance led us away from the point by starting this dissertation on Social Credit. As I understand it, the question of this $100 million loan really has nothing to do with Social Credit principles or philosophy—

Miss LaMarsh: Or the bill.

Mr. Barnett: —unless, of course, we are going to be social by handing over $100 million without any questions being asked. It seems to me that the really relevant question raised by hon. members to my left was the one about the holding of a seminar. My suggestion, for the benefit of other hon. members from British Columbia who are displaying an interest in this question, would be that the Minister of Finance sponsor a seminar in Ottawa to which he would invite the members of the cabinet of British Columbia in order to acquaint them with some of the fundamentals in discussing serious financial questions, without any suggestion that the seminar have as one of the items for discussion what is philosophically referred to here as Social Credit.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, since we are bandying about the question of this $100 million loan, I wonder whether I might ask the Social Credit members from the province of Quebec whether that province has repaid the $100 million that the province of British Columbia was kind enough to lend them a year or two ago?

An hon. Member: They have paid the interest.

Mr. Cowan: They have repaid British Columbia under the equalization payments, but I am not certain whether the debt has yet been repaid. I think this points out that the Liberal government of Mr. Lesage understood Social Credit at the time and knew where to get $100 million.

Mr. Fawcett: Mr. Chairman, we appreciate the co-operation of the Minister of Finance in answering some of the questions raised yesterday. I should like to refer in particular to the question raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West and also the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. It concerns the determination of revenue sources as set forth in clause 8 (d) (xi) which reads as follows:

• (12:50 p.m.)

(xi) sales of Crown leases and reservations on oil and natural gas lands,

Both hon. members pointed out that these are capital assets and should not be taken into account in determining revenue sources. In the majority of cases they are a type of asset that cannot be replaced. I would ask the Minister of Finance to answer that question for us.

Mr. Sharp: I am happy to do so, Mr. Chairman. In dealing with natural resource revenues the federal government has simply accepted the practice of the provinces. Under the formula the federal government has undertaken to equalize the provincial revenues as reported in their public accounts. All provinces treat their natural resource revenues as current revenues and the federal government proposes to equalize all current provincial revenues. Also the revenues equalized will be the current net general revenues of the provinces, and the federal government will follow provincial practice. Provincial services are financed by revenues the provinces derive from different sources. It is not so much the source of the revenue which is important for financing provincial services but the amount of revenue at the disposal of provincial governments.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we may call it one o'clock and after lunch proceed with item 86?

Mr. Sharp: I was going to make the same suggestion, Mr. Speaker. It is possible that we may be able to proceed with the Bank of Canada Act after the luncheon adjournment. The missing documentation in French has been provided and I am hopeful that we may be able to proceed at that time. If not, we will call one of the other items already announced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Pursuant to the order made on Friday, March 3, this sitting stands suspended until two o'clock this afternoon.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR REGULATION OF PRIVATE PLANS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-221, respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In moving second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in explanation of the background and contents since it is a bill which did not require a resolution prior to being given first reading on July 7 and was not subject to any detailed explanation at that time.

Hon. members will recall that the former minister of finance announced the government's intention to introduce legislation of this nature when speaking in the House of Commons on December 18, 1964. At that time legislation relating to the portability and solvency of private pension plans applicable to employment under provincial jurisdiction had already come into force in the province of Ontario. In October of that year an interprovincial conference on uniform pension legislation was convened with the object of developing a model act which could be approved by provincial authorities and submitted to their legislatures in the hope that there might be uniformity of conditions to which pension plans in employment under provincial jurisdiction across the country would be subject.

This government then decided that as soon as there was the widest measure of agreement as to the approach to be taken by the provinces to this problem as it applied to employment under provincial jurisdiction, the federal government, as a measure of co-operation with the provinces, would introduce similar legislation applicable to employment in works, undertakings and businesses under the jurisdiction of parliament. Since then the legislatures of the provinces of Quebec and Alberta have passed similar legislation and it is now in force. The legislatures of the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have recently introduced such legislation. Certain other provinces have expressed their interest in similar legislation, so that the introduction of this bill at this time is in accordance with the intent expressed in 1964.

The bill before the house is based on the model act which was developed at the conference on uniform pension legislation at which federal officials were present. There are, of course, a number of changes necessitated by the slightly different role of the federal government. On the other hand, since the bill covers any works, undertakings or businesses of a local or private nature in the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories, the role of the federal government in this regard will be similar to that of the provincial governments, in dealing with pension plans in employment under provincial jurisdiction. I should add that this inclusion of the pension plans in these territories was made at the request of the territorial governments concerned.

The administration of this legislation will be handled on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) by the Department of Insurance, which will have responsibility for the registration and continuing review of the pension plans which are subject to the bill once it becomes law. In accordance with the approach followed in the model act to which I referred, the standards for registration are spelled out in the bill but the detailed provisions dealing with the handling of pension funds have been left to regulation.

The qualification date to which many of the provisions in this bill are related is defined as the first of January, 1967. This date was included when it was hoped that this bill might have been passed well in advance of that date. Therefore in order to give the administrators of the pension plans affected by it enough time in which to amend their pension plans, when the relevant clause is reached at the committee stage the government plans to move that the definition of the qualification date be amended to read October 1, 1967 instead of January 1, 1967.

The bill contains registration provisions requiring the employers to whom it applies to file their existing plans and any amendments to them with the Superintendent of Insurance. The same requirements apply to new pension plans as they may be developed.

In this connection I would like to make it clear that the bill contains no provisions requiring that a pension plan be introduced where none exists now, or which prevent a plan from being terminated. Neither does the bill require that all employees of an employer must be members of the plan. However, it does require that a plan must meet the requirements of the legislation so long as the plan remains in force.

In the case of termination or winding-up of a pension plan, there are provisions dealing with the application of all pension fund moneys in order to provide deferred or immediate pensions for both former and present members of the plan in accordance with their respective entitlements.

The standards for registration require that these pension plans must provide for the so-called "locking-in" of certain contributions made after the proposed qualification date of October 1, 1967. This will mean that any member of the pension plan who has attained the age of 45 and who has been in the service of the employer for a continuous period of ten years, or has been a member of the plan for ten years, shall be entitled under the plan upon retirement or termination of his service to a deferred or immediate annuity, depending on whether or not he has reached retirement age. This annuity must be related to at least his service under the plan after the qualification date. These "locking-in" requirements do not apply to contributions for service before the qualification date or to voluntary additional contributions.

There is nothing to prevent a plan from having the "locking-in" provisions apply from an earlier age or in respect of service for less than ten years. Limited payments of lump sum amounts is also permitted in cases where the monthly pension under the plan would be less than $10. In addition, a plan may provide for payment of a lump sum not exceeding 25 per cent of the commuted value of the deferred annuity benefit. This may be paid upon or after the termination of service of a member of the plan before he attains the retirement age under that plan.

There is nothing to prevent a plan from providing for the payment of reduced or increased annuities because of early or deferred commencement of payment. Reduction in the amount of an annuity before it commences is also permitted in order to provide for survivor benefits, for example. Variation in the amount of the annuity in order to take account of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act, the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan is also permitted. These plans must meet the funding and solvency requirements to be set out in the regulations as well as meet the requirements for investment fund moneys. These requirements are also to be prescribed by regulation.

In view of the keen interest which has been evidenced and the indication of the acceptability which was given of the policy behind this legislation, particularly when the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, 1966 was before the special joint committee on the public service of Canada, I feel certain that the provisions of this bill will commend themselves to hon. members.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. As the parliamentary secretary has outlined, this bill was given first reading on July 7, 1966. At that time the minister gave a very brief explanation which really did not give us any information whatever. Today the parliamentary secretary has given some further details, but I think it is obvious that we will have to question him when we reach committee stage.

The parliamentary secretary intimated that this legislation is similar to that passed by the provinces of Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, and that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are included in the over-all picture. The parliamentary secretary outlined several requirements of the legislation and also mentioned a few of the things which would not be requirements under the act. I am wondering whether the clauses of this bill and the requirements under the bill have been discussed with and approved by any employee groups. For instance, as I understand the bill the Canada Pension Plan is to be co-ordinated with certain other plans, or this may take place. Have any employee groups objected to this particular provision?

I understand that provision is also made for portability, and that is a good thing. I think we will have to wait and see what further information we can get when we discuss the individual clauses of the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I well remember the occasion on December 18, 1964, well over two years ago, when the then minister of finance, now head of a committee that has a certain task force under it, announced that there would be federal legislation providing for the protection of pensions coming within federal jurisdiction. We welcomed that announcement. As the record will show, we have asked repeatedly for the implementation of that commitment. We are sorry it has taken so long for it to be implemented but we are pleased that the legislation is now before us.

Let me say at the outset that this is the kind of legislation which can lead to misunderstanding and confusion. I would hope that the public relations services which seem to be available to the government in respect of some other matters might be used with respect to this measure.

The first type of confusion which arises quite easily concerns the kind of coverage the bill provides. Whenever a reference is made to matters coming under federal jurisdiction, particularly if those matters relate to employees, many people get the notion that we are talking about employees of the government. I hope it can be made clear that this is not the case with respect to the legislation before us. This legislation concerns itself with employees who come under the federal labour code—employees who work on the railways, in communications, banks and so on. In other words, they work mainly for employers outside the government but they are in the kinds of labour which are regarded as coming under federal jurisdiction. To put it in another way, this bill will cover employees who are within the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and the Canada Labour (Safety) Code as well as the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. This is a confusion which in the nature of things is bound to continue, I suppose, but I hope that at least we can get things straight here in this house.

The other source of confusion in legislation of this kind is demonstrated by the fact that already workers who are affected by it are divided in their opinions about it. Some feel that this is simply legislation which locks in their pension contributions and denies them access to money that they may have regarded in the past as though it were money in the bank. Other employees realize that because many private pension plans have had tricks played with them—some, indeed, have not been able to pay the pensions they were supposed to pay—what this legislation does is to protect the rights of employees in their own pension plans. That makes it good legislation. Indeed, one of the reasons we have pressed for this legislation and one of the reasons we need it is precisely because the history of pension plans in this country demonstrates the necessity for protection of this kind for the workers.

In this same area of confusion there will be some uncertainty in the minds of workers as to what this legislation does. Many workers will think that once this legislation is in effect they will all have pension plans and that such plans will be protected by law. This, of course, is not the case. All this bill does is to ensure that if an employer who comes under the jurisdiction I have mentioned has established a pension plan, or if hereafter he brings one into being, it must meet the standards set up under this legislation.

It is my hope that in the course of time we may go further and get Canada pension legislation which will make it mandatory that every worker in this country who works for an employer, however that may be described, must have the benefit of a pension plan. As I say, the government seems to have a public relations service available to it for some of its legislation. I hope it will make use of this service in the case of the present legislation and see that our people understand what it provides and to whom it applies.

I have pointed out that this legislation provides protection for the rights of workers in pension plans. I think reference should be made in particular to the dissatisfaction which has been felt by employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway over the way in which their pension plans have been handled through the years. This is a long story and I will not go into any great detail at this time. But I well remember the results of the 1919 strike in Winnipeg. Employees who had been working for the C.P.R. up to that time but who were involved in the general strike in Winnipeg lost all the pension rights they had acquired with the company prior to that time.

For many years retired C.P.R. employees suffered because there was no protection for them at that time. Of course, the C.P.R. would point out that the plan then in effect was a different plan, that it was a non-contributory plan and was not the same as the plan which came into effect in 1937. But even since the bringing into being by the C.P.R. of a contributory pension plan there have been many occasions for dissatisfaction on the part of the employees. Conditions of the plan have been changed from time to time, presumably by a committee, but the men have the feeling the changes have been made by the C.P.R. itself. More recently, after the Canada Pension Plan came into being the C.P.R. employees seem to have had considerable difficulty obtaining adjustments in the relationship between the C.P.R. pension plan and the Canada Pension Plan and putting the two on a basis which would meet the desires and needs of the employees themselves.

Again, there is considerable concern on the part of C.P.R. employees as to what is done with the moneys in the company's pension fund. Canadian Pacific is a company with many holdings including Canadian Pacific Investments and it is generally understood that some of the money in that pension fund is at the disposal of Canadian Pacific Investments regardless of whether or not the employees agree to this use being made of their money.

Recently, as a result of the changes brought about by the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan, the C.P.R. has changed its mind two or three times as to whether its employees must or need not be members of the company's plan. This has created a great deal of uncertainty and the employees have complained about this kind of thing. They seem to have no recourse, however, beyond the complaints they make to the company itself. The way in which the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is set up makes it difficult, if not impossible, to get the pension arrangements of the C.P.R. made the subject of collective bargaining.

I could go into more detail but I do not intend to do so. I cite these things merely to indicate that the time has come when in the interests of the employees the state should step in and lay down standards for the pension plans of private employers so that the rights of employees may be protected. As I understand it, that is the principle behind this legislation.

For a number of years there was a move or at least an attempt to do something in this direction under the aegis of the income tax law. For a number of years plans were regarded as approved if they met certain conditions. But then the time came when some constitutional experts doubted the validity of these income tax arrangements and so the blue book on pension plans, which was the bible a few years ago, was thrown away. Hence, for a number of years we have had the situation that there was no norm or standard that applied to pension plans of workers under federal jurisdiction.

Meantime, of course, we have had new régime with respect to federal-provincial relations. There are more discussions between the federal authority and the provincial authorities regarding all kinds of matters, and so a couple of years ago or more the conference was held to which the parliamentary secretary referred, with the provinces on one side and the federal government on the other. I for one am pleased that a decision was made to produce a general pattern that both the provinces and the federal government would endeavour to follow in setting up this kind of legislation. We can go into the actual details a little more when we reach some of the clauses of the bill dealing, as they do, with the precise standards to be laid down as well as the standards to be provided by regulation later, but in the meantime I think it is good that we have this kind of legislation before us.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that it is looking away into the future to suggest one or two things I have in mind, but I have discovered in my life in parliament that things which one thought might take forever to come about manage to come about if one stays around here long enough. I hope that some day we will see legislation in this field which will not only lay down the conditions that employers must meet if they have pension plans but will require pension plans to be part of a contract of employment. I think the day has come when pension arrangements, both private and public, should be universal so that all people will have the benefit and protection of these arrangements.

The other element which I hope some day will be in legislation of this kind relates to a matter with which we are at long last coming to grips, the problem that pensions have of trying to live throughout their pension period of the fixed pension that they receive at the time or retirement. Many a pension plan which, while the employee is working, seems to him to provide him with a good pension and at the time of retirement seems to provide him with a reasonable amount on which to live, is discovered later, because of the rising cost of living and the rising standard of living, to be of greatly reduced value. In fact, many a person who thought he had a pension good for life, later finds himself in dire circumstances because of these changes that take place.

We have recognized this problem to a slight extent in the provision we have written into the Old Age Security Act and also into the Canada Pension Plan under which, starting in 1968, there can be a slight escalation of pensions in accordance with rises in the cost of living. I regret that the index used for that purpose is the cost of living index rather than the wage index or some index that would measure our productivity much better, but at least the principle has been accepted in these two pieces of legislation that a pension as fixed at the time of retirement does not necessarily have to stay at that level for the balance of one's life.

We are wrestling with this same problem in relation to our own retired employees, our superannuated civil servants. This matter has been referred to the special joint committee on the public service of Canada and because it is before a committee I will not discuss it here. I merely express the hope that the very useful discussions taking place in that committee will result in a recommendation to the house that these people are entitled to an adjustment in their pensions even though they are in retirement. What I am coming to, Mr. Speaker, is that I think the day will come when we have to write that kind of provision into this kind of legislation. We will have to say that all pension plans, if they are going to be registered and meet the conditions laid down by the state, must have built-in provisions for escalation.

History would suggest that the cost of living is going to continue to go up and one hopes that the standard of living will continue to rise. I read a very interesting speech, a copy of which was sent to all of us, made a few days ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), in which he played the role of a prophet or the son of a prophet and made predictions as to what life was going to be like in Canada in the year 2000. He was careful to say that he found it easier to predict what was going to happen in the year 2000 than to predict what would happen next year. However, in that interesting speech he suggested that the average income per family in the year 2000 would probably be about $15,000. We also said a few other things such as the part that people would be working an average work week of about 28 hours, and so on.

The point I am making is that it is a fact of history, and I suggest a fact of the future that living costs and living standards will continue to rise, and I do not think we shall have really coped with the problem of pensions until we recognize that fact and build it into our pension legislation. Pensions to be adequate to meet the purposes of the pensions should have in them built-in provisions to allow them to escalate after a person retires, so that he will not only be able to meet the increases in the cost of living that take place afterwards but will also be able to share in the higher standard of living the affluent society achieves in the years after he has concluded his work life. I recognize that it is perhaps a little futuristic to ask for this kind of provision in legislation that does not even require all employers who come under federal labour jurisdiction to have pension plans, but these are things we have got to work toward.

Before going into details when we get into committee of the whole, I want to express our welcome for this legislation. I hope a real effort will be made to let workers who come under federal jurisdiction know what this legislation is all about, what it provides, and the benefits and the protection that it makes available to them. I hope that the standards which will be laid down by regulation will be effective and worthwhile and that it will be made clear where the funds must be put, that companies just cannot transfer them from one fund to another in pursuit of their own affairs but that the pension moneys must be funded in such a way that they are guaranteed.

I also hope the day will come when we write into this kind of legislation the requirement that a pension plan must be provided by an employer who has a certain number of employees, and that pension plans must have built-in escalation provisions so that persons who go on pension will be able to meet the cost of living in their retirement years and also avail themselves of the increased standard of living an affluent society achieves because of their contribution toward it in the years that they were working.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motion for second reading of Bill No. C-221 entitled:

An act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

First of all, I wish to congratulate the parliamentary secretary to the hon. minister (Mr. Chrétien) for having, so to speak, skipped the notice of resolution. I hope he will continue to do so and will henceforth move second reading of bills. It would spare us useless discussions.

I want to be brief and say merely that we accept this bill. It pleases us because we see it as the happy results of federal-provincial conferences. It shows that when governments want to agree, want to discuss intelligently, it is always possible to find a solution to problems with a view to improving the lot of the worker. This is an example of co-operation and we must commend the government of our province for discussing and accepting the proposals contained in a plan for the benefit of provincial and federal employees.

There is also the question of contributions, and I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary—I do not know if this is mentioned in the bill—to tell us if contributions are going to be compulsory or voluntary, and if the employee will be left free to accept or reject this insurance scheme. We are faced at present with group and private insurance schemes, a government pension plan and the latest organized pension plan; if we make this contribution compulsory, we will force the employee to pay two, three, four and even five insurance premiums. Of course, he will derive greater benefits at age 65, but I feel that we must keep in mind the fact that the worker has a family to raise and must live to be 65 years of age before he can take advantage of these benefits. I am under the impression that most of the workers will accept $200, $300, or even $400 when they reach 65 years of age, if they are allowed to keep most of their salary until then in order to provide for the needs of their family.

Mr. Speaker, I note that the list under "included employment" in this plan includes navigation and railways. In this regard, the government will certainly get the support of many railway workers. In the last few years, I have concerned myself with the problems of railway workers as far as insurance is concerned. In my opinion, a program of this type should have been offered to them a long time ago to help them out of the stagnation in which they now find themselves.

The prime concern of foreign companies in this country is to take over the dues of railway workers without giving them anything in return. I have mentioned this previously in this house. I have spoken on behalf of those railway workers who were revolted because those plans enabled foreign companies to take away millions and billions of dollars out of their salaries without guaranteeing them anything in return. Even if it were only to compete with those companies' plans, our workers would be happy about that. If that bill does what it intends to do, it will be quite an achievement already.

Now, we hope that all the workers who contribute at the present time to plans set up by foreign companies in Canada will take advantage of what this new plan offers them. I think that participation therein will be voluntary, but contributions will be compulsory. I invite all railroad workers to join that plan. They will be treated more fairly in the future.

That plan is sponsored by the government and it will certainly be supervised by members of the government. I think that if we do not succeed in giving a little more justice to our workers through plans such as this one, an organized pension plan, they will remain a prey to foreign insurance companies and will have to sacrifice their salaries to try to get a little protection.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to extend the debate any longer, but I want to say just a word about administration. As pointed out by the parliamentary secretary to the minister, the administration will be in the hands of the insurance department and again that is a wise decision. We only hope that this plan will reach its objective and that our workers throughout Canada will benefit from what it has to offer.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

10 March 1967

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 10th March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR REGULATION OF PRIVATE PLANS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-221, respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Richard in the chair.

• (2:50 p.m.)

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have a proposed amendment to this clause. Because of an obvious delay we must change the qualification date from January 1, 1967 to October 1, 1967. The proposed amendment is:

That Bill C-221 be amended by striking out lines 18 and 19 on page 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(n) 'qualification date' means the 1st day of October, 1967";

I should like to ask the Postmaster General to move that amendment.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I believe the effect of this change is obvious but perhaps the parliamentary secretary would help to make it clear on the record. Usually we talk about effective dates and that sort of thing but in this case we are talking about a qualification date. It is easy to understand why this date must now be October 1, 1967. Is it clear, however, that this legislation will not lock in any pension contributions made prior to October 1, 1967?

Mr. Chrétien: That is so, yes.

Mr. Knowles: Is it also clear that in respect of all pension plans to which this legislation applies, contributions made after October 1, 1967, will be locked in but only in relation to employees with ten years' service with the same employer and of age 45 or older?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes. The hon. member has a good understanding of this clause. Contributions will be locked in after that date in respect of employees with ten years or more service who are age 45 or over.

Mr. Knowles: The parliamentary secretary made it clear in his earlier remarks, as I think the bill itself does, that this will not prevent a pension plan from being designed to give even better benefits or protection to employees.

Mr. Chrétien: No, this bill will not prevent the employees or employers from changing their pension plan if they want to. This is designed only to prevent any lessening in the benefits of plans which qualify under the law. This was possible in the past. We want to protect the employees and to spell out that protection in the law.

Mr. Knowles: Is this legislation generally of a piece with the legislation of those provinces which have already passed similar bills, namely, Ontario, Quebec and Alberta?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, according to my understanding it is the same. The only difference is the qualification date of this bill. However, the framework and the wording are almost the same. The result will be equal for employees whether they come under the provincial or federal law.

Mr. Knowles: Will the parliamentary secretary indicate what clause of the bill would be appropriate for a discussion in respect of portability, to which he made reference in his statement? I cannot find that word anywhere in the bill.

Mr. Chrétien: If the hon. member will read the first paragraph of clause 10 on page 8 I am sure he will realize that portability exists by implication.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps we should discuss this on clause 10.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 3—"Included employment" defined.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, clause 3 is that part of the bill which makes it clear what employees are covered by this legislation. Subclause 1 in particular spells out the kinds of work that are covered and subclause 2 deals with the exception regarding government employees. What is to be the situation in respect of employees of the crown so far as this legislation is concerned?

Mr. Chrétien: There is a provision in the public service legislation which covers all the employees by the authority of the governor in council. They will be covered by regulation.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, the fact that government employees are not covered by this legislation is not to their disadvantage because the pension protection they have under federal law is even better. Is that right?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I think that is right. Even though they are not covered directly they are covered by other legislation which is even better. In any event, the governor in council has the power to act if necessary.

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would clarify the situation a little more in respect of the position of employees of the crown. I think a better understanding should be placed on the record of just how they fit into the picture and what the intention of the government is in relation to them under the authority given to the governor in council.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, some of these employees are covered by subclause 1, so there is no problem in that regard. Employees of crown corporations will be covered and will be obliged to amend their own pension plans in order to come within the provisions of this legislation. They will then be protected because their pensions will be amended in accordance with this provision. Actually most of the pension plans have such a provision at this time.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I had particular reference to subclause 3 (a) which provides as follows:

> The governor in council may make regulations excepting from included employment
> (a) employment by an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada;

I interpret that provision to cover a crown corporation as being an agent of Her Majesty. Is it the general intent of the government that employees of crown corporations shall have the same rights as employees of other incorporations under federal jurisdiction, or will this power of the governor in council be used in such a way as to ensure that employees of crown corporations have adequate pension plans?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we want all such employees to be covered completely. They are covered by the Public Service Superannuation Act. The intention of the government is very clear, namely, that we want all these employees to be covered completely. They will now be in a better position than they are under the present law.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance if the fact of holding an employment mentioned in clause 3 requires the employee to pay a head tax or to contribute to the pension fund. In other words, is he free to choose the pension scheme to which he wants to belong?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this legislation does not require employees to choose a pension fund or another. This legislation is designed to protect those who have already contributed to a pension plan. So, when a worker has contributed for a certain number of years and has reached the age of 45 years, from that time on, the employer is required to hold in reserve the pension of the worker until the time he has reached the pensionable age.

To protect the funds set aside by a company for the employee's pension, even if the worker leaves the employment of such an employer, the employer shall build up a reserve under the control of the Superintendent of Insurance so that it will be added to the employee's pension when he retires.

This in no way changes his status as far as a crown corporation or any other civil corporation under federal jurisdiction is concerned.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Agreements, etc., respecting administration.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the parliamentary secretary and I seemed to agree to defer a discussion on portability to clause 10. I wonder whether there should not be some discussion on this matter under clause 5.

Mr. Chrétien: As the hon. member wishes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles: I think it would be useful to have an explanation of what is intended by virtue of clause 5. It seems to provide for the establishment in Canada of an associaiion of pension commissions. I take it that this means a getting together of federal and provincial bodies that are supervising pensions. I should like to know what relation this has to the guaranteeing of pension portability.

I quite appreciate what the parliamentary secretary said about clause 10 which we shall reach later, namely, that there is an implication that because an employee gains a certain right which is guaranteed to him by law he can therefore move from one job to another and perhaps collect three or four pensions in the course of a lifetime. When we talk about portability, that is one definition of it. But we also have in mind the possibility of an employee going from one job to another and taking with him or having transferred the funds of one pension plan to the funds of another so that he builds up his pension in that way. Can the parliamentary secretary comment on this aspect of the matter?

Mr. Chrétien: I did not catch the last question, Mr. Chairman, because a page boy asked me another question.

Mr. Knowles: I must commend the parliamentary secretary on his popularity. I said that portability could be achieved by a person building up two or three pension plans in the course of his life. What about the possibility of taking his credits from one employer to another? Is that covered in this bill?

Mr. Chrétien: I must tell the hon. member that portability is not covered by subclause (a) of clause 5. The hon. member will find that this is dealt with in subclause (c). Under subclause (c), if a man has accumulated pension funds with different employers these funds may be paid into an agency which will deal with the funds the man has accumulated.

Mr. Knowles: I have one more question on this point, Mr. Chairman, and my colleague behind me has some others. If an employee works for a time for an employer who comes under the provisions of this bill because the work is federal in character and then moves to employment that is provincial in character, do the agreements envisaged in this legislation provide for this protection being carried from one area to the other?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman. There is constant discussion in this respect. This provision has been designed to protect the rights of employees who work under federal or provincial jurisdiction. It does not matter whether an employee works under federal jurisdiction for a time and then works under provincial jurisdiction; he will have the same rights because the provincial and federal laws are the same. He will not lose anything and will receive his pension in the same manner, even if for some period of his life he has worked under the two different jurisdictions. There is no difficulty here, in my view.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary referred to subclause (c) of clause 5, which provides:

> The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may
> (c) designate an agency for the purposes, among others, of receiving, holding and disbursing pension benefit credits under this act.

I think it would be useful if the parliamentary secretary could spell out to us in a little more detail just what this agency is going to be. On the face of it, after reading this provision it seems to me it is an agency to be established by the authority of the federal minister. On the other hand, if one reads the earlier subclauses of clause 5, which provide for entering into agreements with the provinces, one is led to ask whether this agency will in fact be jointly operated by the federal and provincial governments and whether it has anything to do with the reference to an association of pension commissions in subclause (a).

In this connection a related question comes to my mind. Could this provision operate, for example, between the federal government and a single provincial government, or is there any requirement in the mind of the federal government that a certain number of provinces have to enact complementary legislation before anything will be done? Can the parliamentary secretary expand upon the nature of this agency and the relationship of its operations between the federal and provincial authorities?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chrétien: The relationship between the federal and provincial authorities consists in an agreement among the provinces to pass a similar law covering employees. It is clear that there will be constant negotiations between the federal and the provincial governments on these matters because a man may work for several years in British Columbia, later go to Quebec to work, and then start to work for the federal government. In such cases, as stated in subclause (c) the government can:

> designate an agency for the purposes, among others, of receiving, holding and disbursing pension benefit credits under this act.

This law will apply to every province. Negotiations will take place and it is understood that there will be constant discussion and collaboration between the provinces and the federal government on that matter. I cannot see any difficulty. I think that the whole range of possibilities has been covered.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have followed the explanation of the parliamentary secretary as far as it goes but he has still not given us any elucidation of what is meant by an agency. Is this to be an office set up by a department of the federal government? Is it to be a joint federal-provincial operation with its own secretariate, such as, shall we say, the council of resource ministers, or could it mean that some private trust company will be designated as an agency? Can the parliamentary secretary tell us what this agency will be?

Mr. Chrétien: I cannot give a definition of the agency because we do not know yet what agency will be chosen. It is possible that if many problems arise a federal agency will be established for that purpose or an agency controlled either by the federal government or the provinces. There is also a possibility that an agency such as a private trust company will be used. We do not know yet. The minister is given the power to designate such an agency but we do not know yet what it will be. The decision will be made in co-operation with the provinces.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to put one more question to the parliamentary secretary. Reference has been made by my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre to the locking in of benefits of an employee at the age of 45 after ten years of employment. It has already been stated that provision will be made for the transfer of employment under federal jurisdiction to employment in provincial jurisdiction without loss of benefits. Can we have an explanation of what the situation will be of an employee with less than ten years' benefit? I would point out the importance of this question in the construction field where employees may move quite frequently from employment under federal jurisdiction to employment under provincial jurisdiction. Will it be possible under this agency to be designated for contributions covering a shorter period than ten years to be pooled and deposited with the agency so that the pension rights of an individual in that category of employment may accumulate?

Mr. Chrétien: Under this legislation nothing prevents a man from accumulating his pension. This law applies to employees who are 45 years of age or over and who have worked for a period of ten years. It does not cover those who have worked less than ten years or are less than 45 years of age.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 10—Provisions respecting vesting, locking-in, etc.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the standards which a plan must meet are simply those set out in clauses 10 and 11. Clause 10 is also the clause to which the parliamentary secretary initially referred us for discussion of the question of portability. He asked me to rely on the implication that is in the bill. I think I understand the implication but I am still worried about a certain case. Let us consider an employee who works for nine years for an employer covered by this legislation, then works another nine years under a different employer covered by this legislation, after which the process is repeated for another nine years under another employer. At the end he will have been employed for 27 years, all of it under employers who are covered by this legislation. Will he be protected by this legislation?

Mr. Chrétien: In such a case the employee will have the right to collect the money of his pension after nine years of service and he will not be covered further. However, if he leaves the money in the fund and goes to another employment he will be covered.

Mr. Knowles: Do I understand that he will be protected by the legislation if he leaves the money in the fund and that he will get the pension on a deferred basis or on some other basis?

Mr. Chrétien: He will not be forced to leave the money in the fund but will be able to collect it if he wants to. If he leaves the money in the fund he will be covered after the initial nine years.

Mr. Knowles: So that if he leaves at the end of nine years he will not be forced to leave the money in the fund, but if he does leave it there, is the company required to pay him a pension at a later date?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, if it is in the plan. It will be locked in after ten years.

Mr. Knowles: The parliamentary secretary says "if it is in the plan". May I suggest that one of the deficiencies in the legislation is that the standards it lays down do not go quite far enough.

Mr. Chrétien: The same problem always arises. We present good legislation and we are quite used to the fact that hon. members opposite find that it does not go far enough.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend likes to joke. However, may I come back to the case I outlined? The government says this is good legislation and I agree. If an employee works for nine years for each of three separate employers, all of them covered by this legislation, the parliamentary secretary says that he will get the benefit of the three nine-year periods of employment in terms of a pension only if it is in the plan. There is nothing in the legislation which requires him to get the benefit. He gets the benefit of law only if he is employed for the full ten years.

Mr. Chrétien: If you read subclause 2 you will see that an employee is permitted to keep any money that is coming to him and then go to work for an employer for another two or three years. Then he will be covered. There is a possibility he is covered by subclause 2.

Mr. Knowles: Is not the parliamentary secretary only saying that a plan may provide far more than the legislation requires? The requirements of this legislation do not protect an employee who has worked only nine years, even though he may have worked for that period for three successive employers.

Mr. Chrétien: If he did not take the money with him he would be protected but we cannot force him to leave the money in the pension fund. After ten years the money will be locked in the fund. If he left the money there and went to work for another employer the money would be in the fund. He would be covered by the law a year after that because he would have worked ten years then.

Mr. Knowles: Does the parliamentary secretary mean that the employee may work for nine years and then go to work for another employer for a year or more and then he would have the ten years required under this law? I wish it meant that, but I do not think that is the language.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think I went a bit too far. I mentioned earlier that when a man moved from one industry to another industry he was covered by some plan and he would be protected by the law. However, if he worked for another nine years with another company he would not be protected.

Mr. Knowles: Well, I hope some day we will get this legislation improved in this particular respect.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask one or two questions somewhat related to those asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If I understand the situation correctly as the parliamentary secretary has outlined it, under the standards that are proposed, at the end of ten years an employee's pension rights are locked in the plan. Neither he nor the employing company can unlock them and the employee has a right to that pension. I think I followed him further that the employee who leaves after nine years is given the right to leave his contributions in the fund.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes. These cases are often covered by the pension plan the company has, to protect the employees. The intention of this law is to protect those who have been working more than ten years. The pension will then be locked in forever. Even if the employees or the employer want to change it, there will be no possibility. This law does not protect those who work less than ten years. Employees in this situation can do what they want by collective bargaining or any other means, but this law will not apply to them. There is nothing to prevent a private pension plan covering them in any way if there is agreement between the employees and employer.

Mr. Barnett: Under the standards that are set up, if a man left at the end of nine years, to use the period used by the hon. member, an employer would be permitted to say: Here is your share of your contributions up to this point and you have to take it with you; you have no further rights under the plan.

Mr. Chrétien: You are right.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask a further question with reference to the agency mentioned in clause 5? This provides a place where the funds can be put. Suppose an employee was in the situation outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and was employed by a company which had a plan but the company decided it did not want to be bothered with keeping his contributions when he left. Suppose the employee wanted to build up his pension right. Would he be able to take this lump sum and deposit it with the agency so he would have a cumulative pension right?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I think it is the intention of clause 5 to provide for employees a place where they will be able to maintain their right to a pension. The minister will have the power to designate the agency in order to maintain the pension for this employee. Suppose a man worked nine years for a company and when he moved the employer gave him back his money. I think the employee will be able to give the money he has received to that agency. In fact this law covers those who have worked for a period of ten years. If an employee has not worked for ten years he is not covered by the law, and I must admit that.

Mr. Barnett: Unless the particular plan sets a higher standard than the minimum standard set by law.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Provisions respecting funding and investment of moneys.

Mr. Knowles: Clause 11, Mr. Chairman, amongst other things calls for the funding of all moneys that are in pension plans. Let me put the question I have in mind in precise terms. I referred earlier to the C.P.R. pension fund and to some questions that were asked about where that money has been put. I take it from my reading of clause 11 that this provision cannot be made to apply to any money that is already in the C.P.R. pension fund but that money which is put into it after October 1, 1967, will come under the provisions of clause 11 and will have to be funded in accordance with the regulations to be laid down by the government. Is that correct?

Mr. Chrétien: I understand that the hon. member is not correct. As I see the law it is that after October 1, 1967, funds adequate to provide for the payment of all pension payments and other benefits required to be paid under the directions of the plan will be covered. I believe, therefore, that moneys in the C.P.R. pension fund right now will be covered by the law in addition to money received after October 1.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: That is clause 11 (b), which reads:

—for investment of pension fund moneys in such securities and obligations as are prescribed by the regulations;

Let me use as an example the C.P.R. Does that mean that the superintendent of insurance has authority to examine the securities and obligations that company now has and to recommend changes in their investments in terms of these regulations?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes. I am given to understand that the superintendent of insurance will have the right to look into the investment of the C.P.R. in relation to the pension plan. If the superintendent is not satisfied with the security of that investment he will make a recommendation and force them to make a change. That is the way we understand the situation. This bill is designed to protect the rights of the employees and the money that they have put into the pension plan, and the superintendent of insurance will have the right to make recommendations if he is not satisfied with the kind of investment that is made.

Mr. Douglas: Since there is this prescription as to what type of securities and obligations may be used for investing pension funds, has the parliamentary secretary any idea what the regulations are likely to stipulate? It seems to me that this is very important. We are passing legislation giving wide discretionary power to the governor in council to make regulations which will stipulate what type of securities and obligations pension funds may invest in. Is it the intention of the government that those regulations should definitely state that an employer cannot invest his pension funds in securities of the company owned by the employer? In the case of the C.P.R. the illustration is not likely to be applicable, but an employer could use pension funds to purchase debentures of his own company and if that company went bankrupt those debentures would be valueless, in which case the pension fund would be virtually non-existent.

Mr. Chrétien: I cannot say exactly what the regulations will be, Mr. Chairman, but I think the same standard will apply to these investments as applies to investments of life insurance companies in Canada. There are regulations governing investments of life insurance companies so as to protect the holders of life insurance policies, and identical or similar regulations will be drafted to protect pension funds.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to urge that when the government is drafting these regulations serious consideration be given to stipulating in the regulations that an employer may not use the pension funds to invest in securities of his own company. In other words, an employer cannot take pension funds in return for an I.O.U. and use the money for his own company's industrial expansion. He may do so in perfectly good faith, but it seems to me that an employee is entitled to much greater protection than that. This would be particularly true of an employer who owns a relatively small company.

Mr. Chrétien: I will transmit the views of the hon. member to the minister, but he may be assured that the government will make itself responsible to ensure that investment of these funds will be protected. Certainly the situation described by the hon. member will receive consideration and everything will be done to protect funds. As I understand the point made by the hon. member, he is suggesting it is possible that an employer might invest in his own company and that such investment might not be a secure one, and I can assure him the regulations will provide for such a situation. I can tell him the matter will be studied very carefully.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question related to this problem. Is it possible under this legislation for a company to handle, entirely as a matter of internal management, the investment of pension funds, or will it be required to turn over such moneys to a pension trust administration which will be independent of the operating management of the company?

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Chairman. The law is designed to permit companies to do what they want in the matter of investments, though the investments will be under the supervision of the superintendent of insurance. Therefore, if an investment is not adjudged to be a good one by the superintendent of insurance he will not permit it but will force employers to invest their moneys elsewhere. So there is no problem at all. There will be supervision and the money will be invested in safe securities.

Mr. Pugh: I should like to raise one further matter, Mr. Chairman. Would the parliamentary secretary care to indicate what are the regulations now in effect with respect to trust funds and pension plans, particularly pension plans? Is there any federal legislation—I think the matter would be cleared up if there were—which could be used as a guide line here?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I did not mention investments by pension plans; I mentioned life insurance companies. There are regulations in respect of life insurance company investments but there is no federal legislation that I know of at the present time in respect of pension plans. To a certain extent pension plans now will be protected under the terms of this bill.

Mr. Pugh: Is the hon. member prepared to say that the same regulations which apply to life insurance companies will apply to pension plans and that the regulations will be no more restrictive or no more free as they relate to this form of investment?

Mr. Chrétien: The regulations will be almost the same as those in respect of life insurance company investments. I am afraid I cannot give any further clarification.

Mr. Pugh: In other words, the existing regulations in respect of investments by life insurance companies may well become the guide lines in respect of private investment under the plan?

Mr. Chrétien: They may be a guide line but they will in no way be mandatory. The pension plan can invest its funds in any way it wants.

Clauses 12 and 13 agreed to.

On clause 14—Notice of objection.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have a question which arises from the terms of clause 14 in that part of the bill headed "Objections and Appeals". The clause has to do with objections which may be made by an employer to actions of the superintendent in regard to recognition or non-recognition of a plan or the revoking of registration. The question I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary is, what provision is made to enable a member of a plan to raise any objection to the manner in which the plan has been operating? I would refer to clause 11 (c) which sets out the terms and conditions of the plan along with an explanation of the rights of members, and so on. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us how an individual member of a group plan who has reason for dissatisfaction can take action to protect his rights when he believes they are being contravened?

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chrétien: I think such cases should be brought to the attention of the superintendent of insurance. If something has been done which is not lawful he will be glad to investigate the situation and force the employer concerned to make the necessary changes. This is the duty of the superintendent of insurance and up to now, as far as I know, no one has complained about the way in which he conducts his investigations. I am sure he will be ready to act if there is a well-founded complaint by any employee.

Mr. Barnett: The parliamentary secretary is suggesting that if an individual member of a plan feels dissatisfied the course of action open to him is to address a communication directly to the superintendent of insurance asking for an investigation.

Mr. Chrétien: That is what I mean.

On clause 21—Regulations.

Mr. Knowles: Can the parliamentary secretary tell us by what date the regulations under this act will be promulgated? Perhaps I could put the question in a somewhat different form. Will they be available to those concerned some time in advance of October 1, 1967?

Mr. Chrétien: Oh, yes. I think these regulations will be ready within a month. Certainly they will be distributed to all those who are concerned before October 1. They will be ready in a month or perhaps two months from now.

Mr. Knowles: I am glad to hear that. I am sure the parliamentary secretary will not mind if I smile when he says "Oh, yes" so easily. After all, the former minister of finance announced on December 18, 1964, that we would have this legislation before us shortly.

Mr. Chrétien: This legislation has been on the order paper for a long time but there were some problems, as the hon. member knows. We have such a good legislative program that it is difficult to establish priorities.

Mr. Knowles: That is not the way I heard it.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DIRECTION OF MONETARY POLICY, CASH RESERVES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 9, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Richard in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I recall that I was the last person recognized yesterday before a question of privilege was raised. I appreciate the opportunity of saying at this time what I was unable to say yesterday.

I should like to refer to three things in this bill which please me in a way. One thing the bill does is spell out once again very clearly the responsibility of the federal government for regulating the monetary policy of the nation. This is something which needs to be reiterated throughout this country at all levels of government. We have been going through a period of tight money and are still doing so. It is too often assumed that situations of this kind come about accidentally. It is not sufficiently realized that a direction can be given which will result in tight money at times and that another direction can be given which will ease the money supply. Every time we enter a period of tight money we pay for it. We pay for it years later in terms of development which has been unrealized, particularly in the public field, in the hospitals and schools which were not built because of the tight money situation.

Decisions made at the federal level extend to the provinces. Often I have met people in British Columbia who wonder why development has been slowed down and why the province does not do something to speed it up. One cannot repeat too often that monetary policy is a jealously guarded preserve of the federal authority. One thing this bill does is to make this proposition very clear. Now we cannot even foist the blame upon the governor of the Bank of Canada. It has become obvious that he acts under the direction of the federal minister of finance. So it is clear that it is the government's duty to formulate monetary policy.

In this connection I quote from a maritime publication rather than from a British Columbia publication. I refer to the Fundy Fisherman of May 25, 1966, which carried an editorial dealing with the whole question of monetary policy and tight money. It said:

> The government's duty is to govern—not to abdicate the power of government to the power of money.
> The government's duty is to make certain that money is available for essential services, for housing, hospitals, schools, wharves, bridges, highways, etc.
> The government's duty is to make certain that the productive industries of the land have the money and credit to expand to provide employment and to provide goods for trade. The products of the mine, the farm, the forest, and the sea, provide the wealth of Canadians, and the employment for Canadians as they pass through the several stages to consumption.

I think this quotation points up the idea I have in mind and that is put forward so clearly in this bill.

The other point in the bill about which I have waited some time to speak is the reference to the International Monetary Fund and the fact that the Bank of Canada is the agency through which we have contact with the International Monetary Fund. I recall the bill that was introduced almost a year ago when a decision was made to increase the Canadian contribution to the International Monetary Fund. I recall sitting in the house on the afternoon that bill was suddenly introduced with no advance warning to this party. The Conservative spokesman, the hon. member for Edmonton West, said that his party had nothing to contribute on the bill and the N.D.P. spokesman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, said that his party had nothing to say on it either. As it happened, I was the only Social Credit member in the chamber, and I am afraid I was struck speechless at the thought that the parties which like to consider themselves the major opposition parties had nothing to say about a bill as significant as one to increase the Canadian contribution to the International Monetary Fund. And so the bill went through all stages that afternoon in record time.

Later I checked the speeches made in the house in 1946 and 1947 by Social Credit members at the time that the Bretton Woods agreement was under discussion and the International Monetary Fund was being established. They made very interesting reading because many things said at that time have since proven to be prophetic. The International Monetary Fund has not been the cure-all for the international problems of the world. From abroad we hear a great deal about the need to reform the International Monetary Fund. An article some months ago in the Economist by Norman Macrae was critical of the International Monetary Fund and of the role it plays, along with other lending agencies, in providing assistance to underdeveloped countries.

The greatest problem of assistance to underdeveloped countries is always the one of the interest rate on the money that is lent to them, and the fact that by the time they have used the funds lent to them they are poorer than ever because they have to meet the interest payments, and because of the restrictions originally placed on aid. Certainly the International Monetary Fund is involved in this.

Even stranger was the recent report in the Toronto Globe and Mail regarding the United Arab Republic being behind in its payments to the International Monetary Fund. I quote the article:

> The United Arab Republic has not paid an $8 million debt overdue to the International Monetary Fund, a spokesman for the 103-nation organization said yesterday.
> The matter is under discussion with the government of President Gamal Abdel Nasser, the spokesman said.
> He refused to speculate on whether the lack of payment was due to a shortage of Egyption funds or other reasons, or to discuss further details of the debt. In all, it is understood the U.A.R. owes more than $100 million in the fund.

Yet we know, Mr. Chairman, that the United Arab Republic has for some years been carrying on a miserable little war in another country in the Arabian peninsula, a war which has been accelerating lately and has taken on an ominous aspect in the means of conducting it. I have sat in this house week after week expecting hon. members particularly from the New Democratic Party, who so often rise to their feet on the question of Viet Nam, to ask something about this particularly miserable little war where one country is clearly involved in the internal problems of another, but they have said nothing about it.

It was with some concern a week or so ago that I read an article in the Globe and Mail which suggested that the International Monetary Fund is in effect assisting in the financing of this war.

We Canadians are part of that fund, and we seem to adopt two postures toward it. When our government feels it is time to initiate a policy of tight money we are told that we float like a chip on the sea of international finance, that money is tight all around and that we can really do little about it except go along with the situation as it is. But at other times we take great pride in being a member of the "Big Ten", as they are called, and from that one would assume we had some international financial power in today's world.

I agree most heartily with the remarks made yesterday by the hon member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, made very briefly in his usual gentle manner, suggesting that the International Monetary Fund through its Canadian representative could provide us with a little more information as to what is actually going on in the monetary and financial field. We know that there is much speculation and that plans are under foot to initiate new methods of coping with the shortage of liquidity in today's world. These plans can affect this country greatly. We know there is a major conflict between countries which would like to return to the gold standard and those that would like to break farther away from it. There are completely opposite directions in which this country can go in that regard.

I think too that most Canadians are becoming increasingly disturbed by the suggestion that an increase in the price of gold is inevitable, that in effect a devaluation of the American dollar is inevitable, and that the methods being suggested to cope with the problems will not be sufficient or will not be sufficiently attractive to prevent a return to the older method of financing in the international field. This comes at a time when Canada's gold industry is almost at its last gasp. I am sure most hon. members have received information on their desks during the last few weeks regarding this industry and the low state to which it has fallen. This comes also at a time when the entire western world is increasingly dependent upon the gold of South Africa, and it happens just at a time when South Africa is becoming more and more isolated from the rest of the world, at a time when a scheme is actively under way to involve the United Nations in the disruption of that country.

In view of all this I found it strange some months ago that hon. members could pass a bill dealing directly with the International Monetary Fund and have nothing to say about it. I find it strange now that hon. members are prepared to pass a bill dealing indirectly with the International Monetary Fund and have so little to say about it.

If it is true, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands says, that the Department of Finance, the government or the Bank of Canada has a stable of brilliant young economists who are working in the field of international finance, I would hope they would tell us what sort of direction we can expect this country to take in this regard.

Finally, a feature about this bill which pleases me is the removal of any restrictions on the material from which money can be made in this country. I find this a delightful part of the bill. Up until now the Bank of Canada has been limited to the buying and selling of gold, silver, nickel, copper, bronze and a few other well known metallic materials, but it seems that this bill would give the bank the power to use almost anything else it might wish to use, to coin money. I would hope that this would allow the Bank of Canada to move into materials which are exotic and valueless in themselves, so that the Canadian people might become convinced at last that there is no intrinsic value in the material itself which goes into money.

I am afraid that the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs was led partly astray by the representations made by the Canadian Bankers Association, which persisted in talking about money as a commodity, in the hope that we would all finally decide that it was a commodity, so that if there is an increase in prices of materials such as nickel, copper, or wheat—which has not gone up yet, but might—it would be only natural to assume that the price of money would have to go up as well. I think this is a dangerous over-simplification of the whole idea of money and one which needs constantly to be challenged.

Money is a means of exchange; it is not in itself a commodity. It has one purpose; that is, it is a means of distribution for the production of which we are now capable. This is the great problem which faces the world today. It does not have the liquidity to move the production of which it is capable and therefore must turn to war, defence spending, moon shots, supersonic flights and a host of other things to dispose of the surplus production, rather than see that it is used for the benefit of the people for whom it should be used.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question. I listened with great interest to his speech. I was not clear as to just what would be his policy concerning the very serious dilemma faced by the world today in the study of international liquidity. When he talked about the dilemma there was much with which I agree, but I was not sure which choice he thought we should make.

Mr. Johnston: I appreciate the question. I believe this is the first time the minister has addressed a question to me, and I do not know whether I should accept it as a compliment. I realize that the responsibility for this decision at the present time is his, not mine. I would hope however that he would make a decision on the side of using the credit of people, in the sense of using the worth of the human being as the measure, and not the value of a metal such as gold. I think any move toward the gold standard is a mistake. This is something which Social Crediters always have feared and have disapproved of. We believe a move in the other direction is the one which should be taken.

At the International Labour Conference at Geneva it was obvious to me the major problem is that over and over again in today's world the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. It is that dilemma which must be tackled. I would hope the minister would be of the same mind as this party is.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make any general remarks with regard to Bill No. C-190 at this stage, since the bill has been discussed in detail before the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I do wish however to make two suggestions to the minister, one procedural and the other general. The procedural suggestion is that in respect of one section of this bill the subject matter thereof should be referred back to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for further consideration to enable the committee to hear representations and then report back to the house. At the same time I think a certain portion of Bill No. C-222, the proposed act respecting banks and banking, should be referred to the committee for the same purpose and in the same way.

The portions I have in mind deal with the fixing of the cash reserves which the chartered banks are required to maintain with the Bank of Canada. Therefore the portion of Bill No. C-190 which I suggest should be referred back to the committee is subclause 5 of clause 9. This subclause is found starting at page 5 of the bill. This is a subclause which gives the Bank of Canada power to fix the percentage of the deposit liabilities in the chartered banks payable in Canadian currency which the banks are required by subsection 3 of section 72 of the Bank Act to maintain as average secondary reserve during any month.

The reason I suggest that this portion of Bill No. C-190, together with the subject matter of clause 72 of Bill No. C-222, be referred back to the committee is that an important misunderstanding has arisen in the course of the committee's consideration of these related provisions. This important misunderstanding can be summarized as follows. The proposed new law—I am speaking now of both bills read together—as initially introduced in this house and then referred to the standing committee provides for a new method of maintaining or controlling the reserves which the chartered banks are required to maintain with the Bank of Canada. Hitherto those reserves had to be maintained at a certain percentage of the deposits with the chartered banks.

Previously the percentage required to be maintained with the Bank of Canada had to be calculated monthly. Under the new legislation it is proposed that the percentage of the actual amount to be maintained as cash reserves be calculated twice monthly, and that a severe penalty be imposed upon the chartered banks if they do not maintain the correct percentage with the Bank of Canada. If these things must be calculated twice monthly and an adjustment made on that basis, it will be appreciated that this involves a more delicate and perhaps more difficult operation than if the requirements were a monthly event. In other words, it imposes a greater burden and an appreciably greater difficulty than the monthly averaging system.

We had considerable discussion about this matter in the standing committee and I urged upon the minister and the governor of the Bank of Canada that, first, they should consider maintaining the monthly averaging system and, second, if they did not accept that point of view or submission, instead of putting the bank in the position where an error in calculation in the twice monthly averaging system would subject them to severe penalty, they should allow the banks to adjust for the second period or each subsequent period for any deficiency of a previous period. That provision in operation would have the effect of keeping the averaging correct in the overall situation for each month, which is highly desirable, without subjecting the banks to penalties.

I do not know whether the officials or the minister would accept either of those points of view, because before the matter was concluded and before it was necessary to bring it to a head and obtain a decision the minister had an amendment introduced to the committee affecting the whole of clause 72 of Bill C-222, and the new clause was accepted at the time of its introduction.

It was explained by Mr. Elderkin, who had just retired as inspector general of banks and had undertaken to appear before the committee to explain the results of the amendments as they were introduced. I will read his evidence as given to the committee in a moment, but I want to summarize it now because I want the committee to appreciate its importance.

He said that the Bank of Canada had decided it was not necessary to put the banks on a twice monthly averaging system and that they should maintain a monthly averaging system. He also suggested that the Bank of Canada would be given the power to move to a twice monthly averaging system if the exigencies of monetary conditions demanded that, and that the twice monthly averaging requirements laid down by the Bank of Canada could be abandoned and the banks could be allowed to revert to the monthly averaging system without the necessity of further legislation.

Mr. Clermont: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I may be allowed to conclude my observations, at which time I will be pleased to deal with the questions.

At this point I think I should read the evidence given by Mr. Elderkin as found in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, volume 48 at page 3323. The amendment introduced by the government had been placed before the committee and Mr. Elderkin gave this explanation:

> We have a very important amendment here and I think I should bring it particularly to the attention of the committee. In clause 72, as it appears in the bill, subclause 1 provided for a cash reserve based on a split month; in other words a period during the first fifteen days of the month and then a period of the remaining days in the month. The Bank of Canada, after further consideration of this, decided that they would prefer to go back to what is the present practice, namely, to have the cash reserve based on the period of the full month; but they wish to reserve the right to place it on a twice monthly averaging period if, at some time in the future, monetary conditions appear to require it and, therefore, your first amendment to subclause 1 brings it back to the average of the month instead of the average of the two periods. Then there is a new subclause 3 which gives the Bank of Canada the power to require a twice monthly averaging if a month's notice is given and published in the Canada Gazette, and mailed to all the banks. It also provides that at any time after such advice has been given, the Bank of Canada may withdraw the requirement. That is, as I say, quite an important administrative difference and I thought I would like to explain to you the effect of the four amendments to clause 72.

I am sure everyone will appreciate that this is an important administrative difference. The government introduced to the standing committee an amendment to its own proposed bill which had the effect, as explained by Mr. Elderkin—and it is consistent with the wording of the amendment now before the committee—of continuing in any event for a year, the monthly averaging system as the general practice. It provided a stand-by power in a "notwithstanding" subclause that the Bank of Canada, if it felt conditions warranted it, could require the banks to go on a twice monthly averaging system. In other words, the position was entirely reversed as compared to the result which would have followed the initial draft of the legislation. The initial draft put them automatically and permanently on a twice monthly averaging system, with no provision for returning to the monthly system.

The new amendment continues the monthly system, with the provision that the Bank of Canada may put them on a twice monthly system if it feels such procedure advisable, but might also withdraw and revert to a monthly system, I assume, when monetary conditions have returned to normal. Speaking for myself, and I am sure for other members of the committee, on the basis of that explanation as to that important difference we accepted the amendment as meeting our objections, therefore rendering it unnecessary to force the point we previously had under discussion.

I am advised that the banks similarly felt that the situation was clarified and entirely acceptable. Therefore they felt they need not continue or make further representation in respect of this clause. It went through on that basis, with a minimum of discussion as to the amendment itself, to the satisfaction of the banks as interested parties, and members of the committee who feel this requirement was unduly onerous.

The fact has been drawn to our attention that the governor of the Bank of Canada wrote a letter which was received by chartered banks on March 2, putting an entirely different interpretation on this amendment to clause 72, and expressing an entirely different intention as to how they would operate this cash reserve averaging system. The letter makes it clear that it is the intention of the governor of the Bank of Canada to operate this in a way opposite to the way which was explained by Mr. Elderkin.

Perhaps at this point I should read the letter which I am advised was addressed by Mr. Rasminsky to all chartered banks. This information is contained in a telegram from the chairman and president of the Royal Bank of Canada to the chairman of our standing committee. In this telegram, Mr. McLaughlin quotes the letter from the governor of the Bank of Canada to chartered banks as follows:

> You will no doubt know that the House of Commons committee on finance, trade and economic affairs accepted a government amendment to the proposed Bank Act dealing with the twice monthly averaging period.

• (4:20 p.m.)

> I am attaching hereto a copy of the relevant section as it appears in the bill reported to parliament.

The letter from Mr. Rasminsky continues:

> In asking the government to introduce this amendment I had two considerations in mind, (1) that it would be desirable to complete the transition to the new method of calculating cash reserves—

In the copy before me there then appear the letters "I.M.E." I do not know what that means. However, the letter continues:

> —the 12 per cent to 4 per cent formula before introducing the twice monthly averaging period—

My understanding of that portion of the letter is that it would be desirable to complete the transition to the new method of calculating cash reserves from the 12 per cent to 4 per cent formula before introducing a twice monthly averaging period. The letter continues:

—and (2) that in the event, which I consider extremely unlikely, that the twice monthly averaging period presented unexpectedly serious problems, it would be desirable to be able to revert to the monthly averaging period without having to seek new legislation.

The letter then continues, and this is the important part:

To avoid any misunderstanding, I am writing now to inform you that it is my intention to go to a twice monthly averaging period 12 months after the new act comes into force.

That is the end of the letter as quoted in the Telex from the president of the Royal Bank of Canada. The Telex to the chairman of the committee from Mr. McLaughlin continues as follows, and it is important to have this on the record also:

While this is within the letter of the section as amended you—

That is the chairman of the committee.

—will no doubt recall that when the subject was introduced before your committee by the former inspector general of banks it was proposed as a stand-by power which would be used by the Bank of Canada in unusual circumstances and not as a normal method of operation.

That is to say, in accordance with the extract from Mr. Elderkin's evidence which I read a few moments ago, Mr. McLaughlin is pointing out that when the amendment was introduced in the committee it was represented by Mr. Elderkin that the twice monthly averaging provision, which was contained in a "notwithstanding" clause, was regarded and would be used as a stand-by power only to be brought into operation if monetary conditions changed and the exigencies of a particular circumstance required it, but that the normal practice would be to have a monthly averaging period as had been the case for many years past. The telegram from Mr. McLaughlin continues:

As the action which the governor now proposes is so contrary to the spirit of the section if there is another opportunity to do so we would like to have representatives of the banks appear before your committee again to review the matter.

In other words, all this particular telegram suggests is that the committee should be reconvened and an opportunity given to the representatives of the banks to discuss the clause as amended in the committee and to discuss the statement of intention by the governor of the Bank of Canada as outlined in the letter to the chartered banks from which I have just quoted.

[Mr. Fulton.]

I must say that it seems to me in all seriousness that the request of the bank is justified, reasonable and should be acceded to, because it is clear from a reading of the wording of the amendment and from a reading of the evidence given by Mr. Elderkin that it was represented very clearly to the committee, I am sure in perfectly good faith, and was therefore represented to the banks, that so far as the averaging system was concerned in connection with the maintenance of cash reserves, it would continue as a matter of routine on a monthly basis, and all that was being asked for were stand-by powers to put it on a twice monthly basis if an emergency situation justified it, and it would revert to a monthly basis after the emergency situation which had given rise to that requirement had passed.

I think the banks are told by the Governor of the Bank of Canada in the letter I have quoted that precisely the reverse is the situation, that it is his intention after a year to require that the banks go on the twice monthly system, that that will become the rule for the future and that only occasionally—he does not even say he will do it occasionally, but one assumes that it is a power that will rarely be used—will it be put on a monthly system. So the situation is entirely the reverse of the understanding given in the committee.

I for one would certainly have pressed the point I made in the earlier proceedings of the committee before the amendment was introduced, and would have suggested an amendment in the committee, had we been given to understand at the time the amendment was before us that it would operate and was intended to operate in the way in which the Governor of the Bank of Canada now says. I am quite sure the representatives of the banks who were then before the committee would have asked for and would have been allowed the opportunity to present their point of view and their objections to the proposed methods of operation and the reasons therefor.

Whether or not I be right in my impression and suggestion as to how this situation should operate—and I think I am; the minister may think the other way—under our method of proceeding we should not come to conclusions and enact legislation without the opportunity for discussion, and understanding all its effects and intent. It may be that even after such discussion the view I represent will not prevail, but at least we will have had a full opportunity of placing the case before the minister, and hearing the minister's case, as to why it is desired to operate in this way. We have not had that opportunity to the present time because discussion was forestalled by the explanation given when the amendment was introduced.

As to the method of procedure, I appreciate that it would be unacceptable to the government, because of the timetable and the timing situation that now faces us, to refer the bill back to the committee because we have to get it through the house. I have strong criticism of the government in this connection because it is their responsibility; but this is the situation we are in and the welfare of the banking system and financial institutions of this country require that we now reach a decision. So I am not suggesting that the bill be referred back, or even that the clause be referred back to the committee. I am suggesting that the subject matter of the relevant section in the Bank of Canada Act and the relevant section in the Bank Act be referred to the committee for consideration, so they may hear representations and may then again report to the house.

This would not take the bill or any portion thereof out of the jurisdiction of this committee of the whole. It could be proceeded with without delay. The only other objection I can see the minister making—and he referred to it this morning—is that it would be difficult for hon. members to sit in committee of the whole on the bill, if they were sitting in the standing committee considering the subject matter of these two sections as I have suggested. But I think that difficulty can be resolved very simply. It should not take us very long to complete our reconsideration and the hearing of evidence on these two very isolated sections. The principle is clear. I would think we could dispose of this matter in two sittings. The committee might well sit at eleven o'clock in the morning one day and eleven o'clock in the morning another day when the house does not meet until 2.30 in the afternoon.

I am quite sure that even with the greatest optimism the minister does not think he will get his legislation through the house in less than two days. Therefore we will not have prejudiced the consideration of the legislation in committee of the whole. We would have completed our reconsideration of the subject matter of these two sections in the standing committee and could then report back to the house and incorporate that report in the overall consideration of the bill, without prejudice to the progress of this legislation through committee of the whole and third reading in the house.

I therefore urge the minister very strongly to introduce without delay on Monday morning a motion having the effect of referring the subject matters of these two clauses back to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

When the minister replies to my suggestions I would also like him to deal with the effect of the amended section 72 in the Bank Act and the related clause in the Bank of Canada Act, and to tell us which statement of intention represents government policy. I do not wish to embarrass the officials, they are both excellent men with excellent records of service to parliament and to the country. But the fact is that they have given diametrically opposite explanations of the way in which this section will work. Perhaps the minister can reconcile them. He is even more ingenious than I give him credit for, but perhaps in giving his explanation he will remove some of the real concern that I have.

I think I have taken enough time of the committee at this stage, and I would appreciate it if the minister would deal with the matter now.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, two separate questions have been raised by the hon. member for Kamloops. One of them relates to clause 9 (5) of the bill that is now before us, the clause which deals with secondary reserves. Then he has raised a question quite legitimately I believe in connection with clause 72 of the bill that will amend the Bank Act, the clause which deals with the determination of cash balances.

I submit in the first place that these two matters are not sufficiently closely related to have to be considered together. Later I will explain why clause 9 (5) is in its present form and the purpose of that subclause. But first let me deal with the obvious conflict between the testimony given by Mr. Elderkin and the letter written by the governor of the Bank of Canada to the general manager of each of the chartered banks. This matter was brought to my attention just the other day; I had not been aware of this conflict previously. There is no doubt that there is a genuine conflict of presentation. The governor of the Bank of Canada in proposing this change in the determination of cash reserves had originally proposed, and this had been included in Bill

C-222 as it went to the committee, a twice monthly averaging period. When that clause was discussed with the governor of the bank when he first appeared before the committee no questions were raised. At that time the proposal was for twice monthly averaging.

Mr. Fulton: May I offer what I think is a correction? I raised this matter with the governor of the Bank of Canada at the first opportunity. As the minister will remember, he appeared before the committee once and then had to go abroad for a trip. I did not raise it with him on his first appearance but I would like it to be quite clear that I raised it at the first opportunity in the committee.

Mr. Sharp: I accept that explanation. I am not trying to score points here; I am simply trying to clarify the situation as it appears to me. The governor of the Bank of Canada then suggested to me that because of the particular problems involved in making the transition from the present method of determining cash reserves to the proposed method, the bank would be willing to accept an option which would enable it to revert for any period to monthly averaging if, for some reason not foreseen by the bank, this should prove to be desirable. If the option were to be available, the bank would propose to retain monthly averaging during the transition period when the minimum cash ratio is being shifted from a uniform 8 per cent rate to the split rates of 4 and 12 per cent provided in the new act, and, as the hon. member for Kamloops has pointed out, the banks have been so informed.

The particular form of the amendment that is now before the committee, and that was before the standing committee of the house, was determined by technical considerations of legal drafting relating to the retention of monthly averaging in the transition period. When Mr. Elderkin appeared before the committee on February 15, 1967 I regret to say that, perhaps because he misunderstood the position of the bank, he misrepresented the purpose of the amendment. In writing to the general managers of the chartered banks the governor of the Bank of Canada put forward the purpose of the amendment as he had proposed it. Therefore I can only say to the hon. member for Kamloops that Mr. Elderkin did misunderstand the purpose of the amendment and regrets very much that he misled the committee as to the way in which the Bank of Canada intended to use this clause. There was never any misunderstanding in the mind of the Bank of Canada about it. I would like to join with the hon. member for Kamloops in paying tribute to Mr. Elderkin because this is the only mistake that he made in his long appearance before the committee.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Fulton: I agree.

Mr. Sharp: He is aware of this and he is not quite sure how the misunderstanding arose.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Will the minister permit a question? I presume he has seen the full text of Mr. Rasminsky's letter to the banks. I presume that the letter specified, as is set out in the clause, the number of months in which the twice monthly average is to apply. Is that correct?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. Perhaps I might put the letter on the record so that the committee will understand the situation fully. I have here only a copy of it. I am not quite sure of the dates on which it was transmitted to the various general managers, but it has been sent to the general manager of each of the chartered banks. It reads as follows:

> You will no doubt know that the House of Commons committee on finance, trade and economic affairs accepted a government amendment to the proposed Bank Act dealing with the twice monthly averaging period. I am attaching hereto a copy of the relevant section as it appears in the bill reported to parliament.
> In asking the government to introduce this amendment I had two considerations in mind: (1) that it would be desirable to complete the transition to the new method of calculating cash reserves, i.e. the 12 per cent-4 per cent formula, before introducing the twice monthly averaging period, and (2) that in the event, which I consider extremely unlikely, that the twice monthly averaging period presented unexpectedly serious problems, it would be desirable to be able to revert to the monthly averaging period without having to seek new legislation.
> • (4:40 p.m.)
> To avoid any misunderstanding, I am writing now to inform you that it is my intention to go to a twice monthly averaging period twelve months after the new act comes into force.

Now, as the committee will see, that represents a very different position from the position set before the house committee by Mr. Elderkin.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But it is a requirement that the Bank of Canada shall specify in advance and give each chartered bank written notice of its action specifying the month for which it will be effective.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure my hon. friend will agree with this, when I say this is not law as yet, and all the governor of the Bank of Canada has done has been, for the convenience of managers, to say that if this does become law this is the way in which he intends to operate. When this bill does become law, then of course he will comply with the requirements of its terms. This is simply a statement of his intention so that the managers of the chartered banks will be aware of it in plenty of time.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister says "aware in plenty of time", but are they aware of whether it is going to be a permanent, continually ranging innovation or whether there is a specific period that the bill calls for?

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the hon. member that the governor of the bank will certainly comply with the bill when it becomes law. He is talking about the intention of the government in introducing the amendment, and he is talking about the committee having accepted this proposal. He said, "to avoid any misunderstanding", and he had in mind I believe Mr. Elderkin's explanation to the committee, which must have confused the bankers. He set before them his intention when this bill becomes law and he will of course comply exactly with its requirements.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not wish to attack the governor or Mr. Elderkin, but it does seem to me Mr. Elderkin's explanation was more in consonance with the bill than the governor's letter. While he has given the banks notice of the date on which he is going to impose this, he has not told them for how many months he is proposing it. It seems to me if he were going to give them a warning he should have given them a warning about the whole of his actions.

Mr. Sharp: That may be so, Mr. Chairman, but I am sure Mr. Rasminsky did not want to anticipate, any more than he has now. I believe his purpose was to clear up the misunderstanding that arose from Mr. Elderkin's statement in which the contrary, in a sense, was suggested by Mr. Elderkin. I am sure that is the purpose the governor had in writing, because he begins his third paragraph with the words, "to avoid any misunderstanding".

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the minister's explanation and I accept without any reservation that the conflict between the testimony of the two officials was entirely inadvertent. I certainly agree that was the only mistake Mr. Elderkin made in his presentation during the consideration of a long, complicated piece of legislation, and many complicated amendments. I have no criticism to offer on that score. However, I think the minister will appreciate, and I certainly appreciate his frankness in admitting it, that the effect of the interpretation or explanation given by Mr. Elderkin was to disarm those who are interested in this matter, from a contrary point of view, that is to say the banks on the one hand who do not want to be placed on a twice monthly averaging system, and the members of the committee on the other who feel that no sufficient case was made for placing the banks on a twice monthly averaging system.

We were in a position where an amendment was introduced into the committee which was entirely consistent with Mr. Elderkin's explanation because the first subclause provided that the bank shall maintain a cash reserve, and the second subparagraph reads:

> Notwithstanding subsection (1), upon the coming into force of this act, the cash reserve percentage shall be—

Then, there is a reference to 8 per cent of one thing and 8 per cent of something else. If you go right down to subclause (2), you will find no reference to a twice monthly basis. It is not until you get to subclause 3 that you find the following:

> Notwithstanding subsection 1, the cash reserve to be maintained by the bank pursuant to subsection 1 in any month following the twelfth month after the coming into force of this act shall, if so required by the Bank of Canada, be not less on the average during each of the two separate periods comprised of the first fifteen days of that month and the remaining days of that month—

It is not until you get to subclause 3 that you find this "notwithstanding" provision. It is therefore consistent with Mr. Elderkin's explanation that what is being taken here, as it were, are stand-by powers to bring in a twice monthly system if the exigencies of the monetary system require it, but normally it will be on a monthly basis. I am not saying the section does not permit the operation outlined in the letter of intent from the governor of the Bank of Canada. It does, although in my submission it is more consistent with Mr. Elderkin's explanation than it is with the method of operation intended to be followed by the governor. However, I am not basing my case at the moment on that.

What I am saying is that because, when the committee accepted the amendment, discussion was thereby terminated, that was done on the basis of Mr. Elderkin's explanation and because at least a substantial number of the members of the committee were in agreement with that explanation. They felt that this was the proper way to operate. In the light of that situation, there was no further discussion on the effect of the section now set out by Mr. Rasminsky.

So, I come back to my point. I wish the minister had said that Mr. Rasminsky was going to modify his intention because I think that would be the better way. The minister has implied, if he has not said directly, that the method of operation outlined by the governor of the Bank of Canada in his letter is authorized, if you like, by the section as amended, and that this is the course that will be followed. In other words, I take it from what the minister said there was no question of modifying the expression of intent contained in Mr. Rasminsky's letter. Therefore, sir, we are in a position, with the purest of motives if you like, where the members of the committee were misled on the basis of a misunderstanding introduced in their minds when the amendement was accepted without further discussion.

Therefore, sir, I press the minister again to relieve the effect of that innocently caused misunderstanding, but nevertheless a misunderstanding, and to place us back in the position where we should have been had we had a clear interpretation, namely in a position to discuss the amendment on its merits and hear representations from those concerned on the effect of the amendment. This can be done quite simply by referring the subject matter of the two portions of the two bills back to the committee.

If the minister thinks we do not need to refer this portion of Bill No. C-190, I would not press that point. I think at least we should get assurance that the subject matter of clause 72 of Bill No. C-222 will be referred back to the standing committee. Then, we could let the matter go on the basis of a misunderstanding. It seems to me then that the banks, who after all have a responsibility and a very important role to play in the country, as well as the members of the committee, will feel that their consent to an important, and in a literal sense radical change, was obtained on the basis of a misunderstanding, if the minister does not consent to this course.

[Mr. Fulton.]

When the fact of the innocent misinterpretation was drawn to the minister's attention, instead of following the course which would put the parties back where they were before the minister put himself into the position of being accused of taking advantage of that misunderstanding. I know the minister would not want to do that, and therefore I hope that he will accept my proposal for a reference back.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I complete this discussion briefly. The form of the amendment that was placed before the committee by Mr. Elderkin was determined by technical considerations of legal drafting relating to the retention of the monthly averaging in the transitional period when the minimum cash reserve was switching from the present 8 per cent to the split rates of 4 and 12 per cent. That was the intention, and that is why one precedes the other.

I am sure the hon. member for Kamloops would agree that the government would not have placed before the house in the first instance a bill which gave no alternative at all, but simply required a twice monthly averaging, if the government had intended this to be only a stand-by provision. That was the first proposal made by the government.

On the substance of the matter, Mr. Chairman, may I say that this question has been very thoroughly discussed with the bankers by the Bank of Canada. The bankers do not like it. There is no testimony they are going to give, if I may say so, that is going to change their dislike for it.

I believe—and I hope the committee will agree with me—that this is a desirable improvement in the control of monetary policy. Indeed, it may come as some surprise to the committee—though perhaps not—to know that in the United Kingdom cash reserves are determined daily and in New York weekly. It is because of this long monthly averaging period that there is some unpredictability as to the effects of the actions of the Bank of Canada upon the money market. One cannot tell at which stage of the averaging period any particular bank is, with the result that the other banks do not know what effect may be exercised upon monetary conditions by the attempt of that bank to restore its average position either up or down.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, the averaging period is too long for the purpose of giving adequate control and predictability to monetary policy, and so I do urge upon the committee that we should not receive further evidence.

May I return for a moment to the original point that I was making, which was to suggest that we can discuss the merits of subclause 5 of clause 9 without any relation to the cash reserves required under the Bank Act. In conclusion, I say only this, that I think the hon. member for Kamloops had every justification in raising the matter. It was a case of some misunderstanding, where the committee was led to believe that the clause was for a purpose other than that which was intended.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss the merits here; I will do that when we get to the relevant clauses. However, I do intend to press my point that the proper course would be to refer the subject matter of these clauses back to the committee. Unfortunately I cannot make a motion to this effect at this stage; again I suppose I will have to wait until we reach the specific clauses.

However, in pressing my point I feel bound to express a degree of sharpness of criticism of the minister which hitherto I had carefully avoided. I wanted to see, when we had exposed the fact of the misunderstanding, whether the minister would adopt what I think is a reasonable course. I regret that he has not adopted that course, and I must say that in giving an apparent reason for that refusal the minister has exhibited an arbitrariness of attitude which I find amazing and quite inconsonant with the spirit whch should be shown in considering this type of important legislation.

In effect, Mr. Chairman, what the minister said was that because he had discussed the matter with his officials and because he was satisfied that what was contained in this new clause was a good innovation, it was not necessary to hear further representations, or even desirable to hear further representations. Therefore, the hon. gentleman did not think it would be proper to call these witnesses back before the committee, even though a misunderstanding had been created by the evidence which had been given by one of his officials, on the basis of which the clause was accepted. In other words the minister is saying: "My mind is closed. Don't bother me with the facts, my mind is made up. I don't want to hear any more representations. I do not even want the members of the committee to hear the other point of view because it might influence their decision".

Why on earth should we as members of parliament not take advantage of what the committees system was designed for, namely the hearing of the evidence of experts as to important legislation having far reaching and permanent effects? Notwithstanding the responsibilities and the prestige of the Minister of Finance, I suggest to him that he would do well to bear in mind that there are other experts in the field besides the minister and his own officials.

Mr. Sharp: One of them is speaking now. I would be very happy to listen to any representation he would care to make.

Mr. Fulton: That is of course, Mr. Chairman, an absurd and almost arrogant attitude to take. I do not pose as an expert. I have not even had the benefit of hearing the evidence of these expert witnesses.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Kamloops is discussing a provision of an entirely different bill. I would not have interrupted him had I not strongly disagreed with the report he has given of what happened in the committee. The representatives of the chartered banks did discuss this matter at great length. Whether or not the hon. member was there I do not know, but they certainly discussed before the committee the whole question of bimonthly averaging. Even the representative of the Royal Bank of Canada discussed this question when he was on the stand, though quite unconvincingly as far as I am concerned.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELECTRONIC LISTENING DEVICES

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-45 to amend the Criminal Code (wire tapping, electronic eavesdropping, etc.).

He said: The subject matter of this bill is something which is of wide public interest and concern. Perhaps this concern is still not wide enough. I certainly feel that the concern is not wide enough in this house on the subject of the invasion of privacy.

As hon. members know, there are several private members bills on the order paper dealing with wire tapping and electronic eavesdropping. My bill, No. C-45, like the one which was debated recently, was filed before the commencement of this parliament in an attempt to ensure that the question of the invasion of privacy by electronic eavesdropping would be examined by this house and in the hope that there would be a public investigation into the extent of electronic eavesdropping in Canada today.

Bill No. C-45 now under discussion is I believe the first bill to suggest the outlawing of electronic eavesdropping as such. The bill previously discussed did deal with wire tapping. There is, however, a much wider field for the invasion of privacy by electronic means today. This bill would outlaw wire tapping as well as all other forms of electronic eavesdropping except in cases where it is approved by a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction who has been satisfied of its necessity by information under oath, in advance of the use of this investigative tool.

I am sure no sponsor of a bill such as this would suggest that law enforcement authorities should be deprived altogether of the most modern and powerful means which may be put at their disposal for the prevention of crime and the bringing of wrongdoers to justice. What this bill does suggest is that electronic eavesdropping and wire tapping are so drastic in their nature and go so deeply to the heart of our freedoms that this method should not be used in the absence of the strongest control and justification.

The police authorities themselves recognize the serious dangers inherent in present practices involving electronic eavesdropping. The chairman of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission, Magistrate Charles Bick, complained recently that wire tapping has become "one of the most despicable invasions into the right of privacy" and that "no one on a government level where change could be made seemed interested in any degree".

This is a serious charge by a police official, implying that the means of electronic eavesdropping available to police are much too readily available generally. It brought to our attention the fact that these methods are open not only to the police but to private investigators and to ordinary citizens.

There is in fact no federal or provincial law in Canada which prohibits electronic eavesdropping. It is difficult to read a daily newspaper or a current periodical without being aware that our right to privacy is in grave danger at the hands of people who would use electronic eavesdropping devices improperly.

I understand that recently the Attorney-General of Ontario said in the provincial legislature that he knew of no agency in Canada which would tell a subscriber for a fee whether or not his telephone was being tapped. It would seem to me that the attorney general of Ontario may have been closing his eyes to the existence of several hundred private investigators who are licensed in the province, and who make no secret of the fact that these facilities are available to their own clients. He could not have seen the reams of literature which are available to those who are interested in purchasing electronic surveillance equipment.

I have a number of catalogues here which are reminiscent of catalogues put out by Eaton's or Simpsons-Sears from which any member of this house or, for that matter, any person in Canada as well as in the United States can purchase the most exotic selection of electronic listening devices. Perhaps I can refer to a few of them to indicate how sophisticated they are.

Here is a "briefcase undercover automatic tape recorder". The recorder can be used outside the briefcase and with the aid of an automatic telephone tap device which can be purchased as an accessory, telephone conversations can be recorded secretly and automatically: only $195. Then there is the "police professional listening-in device." I may say there is no indication here that it is available only to police. In fact it is generally available. The catalogue says:

> This unit is for listening in on conversations away from where the conversation is taking place. With the super-sensitive microphone planted in the room, the operator can be as far away as 1,000 feet in another room, floor or even in another building. Whispers can be heard with the super-sensitive microphone as far as 12 feet away, $119.

Another unit, a smaller edition of the same thing, costs $45. Then customers are offered a "pocket model listening-in device, battery operated," said to be ideal for listening in on conversations away from where the conversation is taking place: only $39.

Then the reader is offered a "wall contact listening-in unit" which the catalogue describes as follows:

> The battery operated unit will enable you to listen to conversations through walls, etc. No need to run wires to "bug" a room, simply place the unit against the wall and the conversation will be heard through the super-sensitive earphones that are provided.

This, Mr. Speaker, is available for $69 if you would like to send in your order to Criminal Research Products Inc., in Pennsylvannia. I have other catalogues here advertising other similar exotic devices and some of the names of these devices are almost as exotic as the devices themselves. For instance there is the Tiny Tattler FM voice transmitter, only half the size of an L&M cigarette pack; there is the Little Sentry, only one-sixth as large as a cigarette package, and there is the Tiny Tim FM voice transmitter. These are all readily available not only to Americans but to Canadians, not only to police but to private citizens.

The technology of snooping has developed to such a degree that really the future of snooping is unlimited under our law, or rather our lack of law. I understand solid state transmitters can now be made about the size of a postage stamp, and not much thicker. Eventually they will need no outside power source because they will be able to draw power from the electrical energy which is put out by regular broadcasting stations. Some of the new laser beams and sonics will be fully adapted to snooping. So, Mr. Speaker, we are certainly entering, if we have not already entered, an era of electronic anarchy.

I know that the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) has told the house, and some spokesmen for my own party have said in previous debate on this subject, that we should wait, that we should not investigate this field at the moment because it is undoubtedly being considered by the Royal Commission On Security. I cannot accept that suggestion. Quite possibly this would be a valid subject for consideration by that royal commission, but for all we know it may be months or years before that commission reports. In the meantime this "despicable invasion into the right of privacy," as it is described by the chairman of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission, persists and grows more serious day by day.

I see no reason why this bill, and perhaps the other bills which are on the order paper dealing with the whole question of invasion of privacy by wire tapping and electronic eavesdropping, could not be referred to a committee, possibly the committee on justice and legal affairs, on the express understanding that it not delve into the security aspects of this problem at the present time. It seems to me an abdication of the responsibility of this parliament to watch the development of this very serious intrusion into one of the basic rights of the citizens of a democracy without at least conducting an investigation into its extent here in Canada.

For the past year such an investigation has been going on in the United States senate, and hon. members will be aware that the President of the United States has asked congress to pass a bill outlawing wire tapping and electronic eavesdropping entirely, except in investigations into matters of national security. Personally I am not sure that we should go that far. I am not sure that we should be even as restrictive as I have suggested in my bill. It may well be, as other hon. members have suggested on other occasions, that there are more minor offences where this means of detection and investigation should be permitted to the police. But, Mr. Speaker, it is incontrovertible that this is a serious problem for our society, that it is something which parliament surely must investigate in the hope that some remedial measures will be undertaken just as soon as possible. Surely we cannot afford to wait for the report of a commission which has only just started to sit.

Parliament lately has been too often accused of being very energetic and resolute in throwing itself into tackling the problems of the past. Here is a problem of the present which is so basic to our democratic concepts that it threatens to destroy them if we in parliament do not tackle the problem soon. I appeal to hon. members, and most particularly to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) and the Solicitor General, who unfortunately are not in the chamber, and to their colleagues in the government, to recognize this threat to our individual freedoms—to recognize it by asking this house to have the subject matter of these bills referred to a committee so that there may be an opportunity for the public as well as for hon. members to familiarize themselves with the nature of this most insidious problem, before it has proceeded to the point where all of us will regret we have neglected our duty on this most modern form of intrusion into the rights of Canadian citizens.

Criminal Code Amendment

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) stated on February 24 last that the question of wire tapping was the concern of a number of people as far back as 1924, when many modern devices had not been invented, still it remained for the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Pennell), who is now our Solicitor General, to initiate some concrete proposals with respect to the subject. He originally introduced Bill C-103 in 1964, and we saw it again on the order paper as Bill C-72 in 1965. This is essentially the same bill as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) introduced as Bill C-33 in this session.

Bill C-33, as you know, Mr. Speaker, was debated during private members' hour just two weeks ago. The bill we presently have at hand, No. C-45, introduced by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury), is essentially the same bill as the original one introduced by the Solicitor General, save that it does incorporate some very definite improvements. It covers all private communications that are intercepted by, I presume, any mechancial or electronic, or possibly even natural device or instrument, whereas Bill C-33 dealt only with wilful interception, by means of an instrument, of any telephone or telegraph communications.

Personally I like Bill C-45 very much better and am all in favour of the principle that its sponsor seeks to have adopted. But I do not think the sponsor himself really anticipates that his bill will be passed in its present form, as there are many legal and technical niceties to be taken care of and considered before a really workable statute can be enacted by parliament.

I feel that a further amendment should be made to the Criminal Code to define the words "private communication" and to define the words "intended receiver" in particular. It seems to me that the ordinary meaning of these words should be explained and in some measure perhaps both enlarged and restricted. For instance, a secondary sender in certain circumstances might be an intended receiver and yet have no business recording a private communication.

I agree with the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Honey) who spoke in the debate on Bill No. C-33 on February 24 last, when he said that a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction should not be the only judicial officer to whom an application could be made under the proposed new section 429A of the Criminal Code. I feel definitely that law enforcement officers and others entitled to make applications such as are proposed should not have to travel unnecessary miles, put in the required time and pay the necessary expenses to wait upon a superior court judge.

I believe a better amendment to the Criminal Code would be one which would provide the following words at the commencement of proposed section 429A:

> a judge of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or of a court of criminal jurisdiction".

A court of criminal jurisdiction is already defined in this way under the interpretation section of the Criminal Code, which is section 2(10) thereof:

> (a) a court of general or quarter sessions of the peace, when presided over by a superior court judge or a county or district court judge, or in the cities of Montreal and Quebec, by a municipal judge of the city, as the case may be, or a judge of the sessions of the peace,
> (b) a magistrate or judge acting under Part XVI, and
> (c) in the province of New Brunswick, the county court;

I believe that the inclusion of the words "court of criminal jurisdiction" would improve the proposed amendment. I know from practice in the province of Ontario, as does the hon. member for Durham, that it would be far more practical to make an application, along the lines proposed, to a county court judge.

I should like to point out to members of the house that a search warrant can be obtained by any peace officer on application to a lowly justice of the peace. A search warrant allows an invasion of a person's privacy which is equally as devastating or perhaps more devastating than a wire tap.

In looking further at the proposed addition of section 429A to the Criminal Code I feel that although the right of all individuals to private communication should not be interfered with lightly, the requirement that an applicant must produce to the judge "reasonable grounds to believe that evidence of an indictable offence punishable by imprisonment of ten years or more may be obtained by the interception and so on" does not sufficiently cover the field of the more serious crimes. Personally I do not feel that the wording "ten years" is the right wording there. I would reduce the period to five years.

In England the test is any serious crime which would likely bring three years imprisonment. I would suggest that in Canada the ten year provision should be reduced to at least five years, so that then the section could be employed to obtain evidence in relation to such criminal activities as unlawful military drilling, unlawful possession of bombs, grenades or explosive weapons, the carrying of offensive weapons for dangerous purposes, the breach of trust by a public officer, prison breaks and fraudulent stock market transactions.

Mr. Speaker, I could not possibly disagree with the principle of this bill. In fact I wholeheatedly support the general principle. I should like to see this bill evolve and become law, as I believe would most hon. members in this house, but I want to see the best possible bill after most thorough consideration. I hope that the discussion on this and similar bills will be considered by the Royal Commission on Security, which likely will be dealing with this whole problem when it delves into the entire question of security in Canada.

I do not think it would be wise for the government to finalize a bill to deal with wire tapping and electronic eavesdropping until such time as the report of the Royal Commission on Security has been tabled. On the other hand, I hope this report will not be delayed too long because all our communications and every individual in this modern era in effect are threatened by a modern electronic sword of Damocles. Wire tapping and electronic eavesdropping certainly should be controlled and the public should be informed concerning just what can and cannot be done by the authorities and others in the field. It is imperative also that regulations as to the use of a telephone by prisoners in police stations, jails and other places of incarceration should be made, understood and enforced. If lines are bugged, should the regulations be posted in all institutions? Similarly, should fair warning also be given in such institutions that letters are likely to be opened and inspected?

A couple of weeks ago the hon. member from Durham advised the house that there is no authority in Canada to open letters. There is no authority under the Post Office Act of Canada, but under the regulations of the Penitentiary Act, there is a discretionary power vested in those who are in charge of federal institutions to open incoming and outgoing mail. Therefore, there are many problems in connection with an enactment of this kind to be considered.

Should there be some exceptions in Bill C-45, in addition to the exception concerning a judicial order? Should the general prohibition be further qualified by some stipulation in favour of jails and police stations? What about people who listen in on party lines? Is there a danger that they might run afoul of a measure such as this? Is the old time country sport of listening in to be rewarded in the future by a jail sentence? I submit that this would be a harsh law in this country, even at this late date. There still are many party lines in use throughout the countryside. I am sure that prosecution of a person who listened in on a party line would create quite a problem, if initiated under a statute such as this.

Possibly there should be an exception in favour of those who listen in on party lines, or perhaps the penalty should not be so severe in such cases. Should there be an exception in respect of wartime threat or should there be special measures drafted only upon the outbreak of war?

What about our customs and excise officers? Should there be an exception in their favour? In England the customs and excise officers simply apply to the secretary of state and get permission to open letters and, I understand, to go somewhat further in the tactics they employ, which involve interventions in individual privacy. What about our own security service, the R.C.MP.? Should they or should they not have some special powers set out in an enactment of this kind?

Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Department of Justice has received a number of recommendations on wire tapping and electronic eavesdropping. The deputy attorney general of British Columbia has forwarded a resolution of the Vancouver city council in favour of a Criminal Code amendment to restrain wire tapping.

By resolution dated October 26, 1964, the council of the corporation of the city of Toronto indicated that it is —categorically opposed to the unrestricted use, whether in the process of law enforcement or otherwise, of any kind of mechanical or electronic device for intercepting or overhearing words spoken in conversation by one person to another and not intended to be heard by the person using such device—

They expressed the belief that —the use of such devices is an offence against an individual's right to privacy, and as such should be forbidden under all circumstances except where a superior court judge otherwise orders for the purposes of criminal investigation in extreme cases.

The Bell Telephone Company of Canada, by letter dated February 14, 1966, has urged, in effect, that the government sponsor legislation in relation to wire tapping and has offered its co-operation in studying the subject. Also, the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, at their 1965 annual meeting, proposed that > —in the interests of the crime victim, or the potential crime victim, that we require federal legislation to authorize the police to tap, oversee or superintend telephone messages and or telephone conversation to get evidence, information or intent of criminal activity, by order of a justice and that it be an offence to tap or supervise telephone conversation unless such order has been obtained.

It may be of interest to note also that the national conference on the prevention of crime, consisting of members of the bench, bar and university faculties, came to the following conclusion in regard to wire tapping and the use of electronic devices, as expressed in the final release from the conference dated June 3, 1965:

> There was a general feeling that the law should control the use of wire tapping and concern was expressed at the implications which technological advances in electronic eavesdropping may involve so far as the citizen's right of privacy is concerned. A wide measure of support was exhibited among the conference participants for the control by legislation of wire tapping, it being felt that specified procedures should be worked out whereby the courts could govern the resort to wire tapping by law enforcement agencies and that this should only be permitted in the detection of certain types of crimes.

The matter of wire tapping was also considered at the conference of attorneys general on organized crime held in Ottawa on January 6 and 7, 1966.

The attorney general of Saskatchewan advised that legislation in relation to wire tapping has already been prepared in that province and that the government intends to proceed with the legislation at this present session of the legislature. He left open, however, the possibility of federal legislation as a preferable solution.

A number of provinces expressed themselves as being in favour of wire tapping legislation, these being Quebec, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Alberta and Newfoundland. Two provinces expressed doubt about the proposal. Nova Scotia doubted its desirability and questioned also whether the matter might not preferably be left to provincial legislation.

The attorney general of British Columbia emphasized that wire tapping is only one part of a larger problem, that of the use of electronic techniques generally, and suggested that the real need is for a broader study of the various new and sophisticated techniques of surveillance that have been developed in recent years, and for means of resolving the difficulties surrounding the admissibility of such information in evidence. A number of provinces emphasized the importance, in any event, of providing stringent safeguards in any legislation.

Some of the questions that receive attention in Bills C-33 and C-45 were the subject of a study in the United Kingdom by the committee of privy councillors appointed to inquire into the interception of communications. Three privy councillors were appointed, commonly known as the "Birkett committee"— > —to consider and report upon the exercise by the Secretary of State of the executive power to intercept communications and, in particular, under what authority, to what extent and for what purposes this power has been exercised and to what use information so obtained has been put; and to recommend whether, how and subject to what safeguards, this power should be exercised and in what circumstances information obtained by such means should be properly used or disclosed—

The committee reported in October, 1957. The main conclusions of their report are set out in paragraph 8, which reads as follows:

> We set out our conclusions and recommendations at length in the pages that follow. The gist of our report may be thus summarized:—
> (1) The origin of the power to intercept communications can only be surmised, but the power has been exercised from very early times; and has been recognized—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words at this time because I am very much interested in the principles of this and other related bills dealing with this very important question. Let me congratulate the youthful and handsome member on the government side for his interest and his concern in and his introduction of this bill. Let me also refer him to Bill No. C-273 which I introduced in the house. A reading of that bill might broaden his knowledge of the difficult problems surrounding this subject.

Some reference was made to my first knowledge of wire tapping. I gained my first knowledge of this matter in 1920 when the Western Federation of Miners of Silverton and Sandon were on strike. They discovered that the mine manager had the wires tapped between these two villages, some 30 miles apart, and was listening to the conversations of the union executives. Two men I knew well contacted two miners who came from Cape Breton, and from that point on the conversations were all carried out in Gaelic. The mine managers were completely confused and the strike was successful.

My second contact with wire tapping was in connection with the tapping of wires that were intended to relay advance information with respect to race track meets, and things of that sort, by persons interested in betting professionally. I have been interested in this subject for a long time, but my interest has been heightened recently by the tapping of the executive meeting place of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada. No doubt hon. members have read about this in the newspapers and have followed the course of this investigation. As soon as this matter was made public the premier of British Columbia appointed a commission of inquiry and Mr. Justice Sargent was appointed to undertake this work. After a considerable number of meetings, which were reported in some detail in the press, Mr. Justice Sargent said he intended to play the tapes that had been authorized to be taken by Mr. Pat O'Neal, former secretary of the B.C. Federation of Labour, so they could be reported by the press and recorded by the C.B.C.

It happened that these tapes were of an executive meeting, but after the executive meeting was over there was recorded on the tapes private conversations with regard to the men's intentions in connection with the building of a house, purchase of property, and things of that sort. They protested very vigorously against the action that was contemplated in respect of the tapes and appealed to Mr. Justice J. O. Wilson of the Supreme Court of British Columbia against this practice. Mr. Justice Wilson listened to the appeal and his judgment was in favour of the union, namely that it was improper and unfair to play tapes in public of an executive meeting of a union, or other conversations carried on at the time the executive members were meeting in this hotel. He disallowed the inquiry on those grounds. Shortly afterwards the attorney general of British Columbia reconstituted the commission of inquiry, and Mr. Justice Sargent is carrying it on.

The president of the union has refused to answer certain questions on the basis that our Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) instructed Mr. Justice Sargent that no questions were to be asked of Mr. Pat O'Neal with respect to his associations with the R.C.M.P. as an undercover agent prior to the incident surrounding the bugging of the hotel. Mr. Orville Braaten, who is now president of the union, refused to answer questions on that basis, and the union has again appealed to a justice of the supreme court for a decision on this matter. That appeal is now proceeding. In this connection I wish to quote from the Vancouver Sun of February 24, page 7. This article is headed, "Lawyer Attacks Bugging Probe. Supreme Court Hearing Set for Six-Point Assault," and says:

> A six-point legal assault on the royal commission on invasion of privacy will be launched Monday in B.C. Supreme Court by the lawyer representing jailed union leader Orville Braaten.

I might say that this union leader who refused to answer certain questions, based on a former decision, was led from the court in handcuffs and taken in that way to the jail. Anyone would think he was a Hoffa, or something of that sort, instead of a very responsible citizen who is a member of the N.D.P. and has run as an N.D.P. candidate. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, that is the treatment he received. This article continues:

> Mary Southin, lawyer for the president of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada, gave notice of her intention in Supreme Court on Thursday.

I have been in repeated contact with the executive officers of the union since this hearing was undertaken. The article continues:

> Commissioner R. A. Sargent committed Braaten for contempt after he refused Wednesday to answer certain questions about a dispute between his union and the rival International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers.
> The 48-year old union leader was to appear today at the inquiry to be asked if he wishes to purge his contempt.
> In a scheduled court appearance Monday, Miss Southin will seek a declaration that section 11 of the Public Inquiries Act is ultra vires of the legislature of B.C.

I read the Public Inquiries Act in the statutes of British Columbia and am of the same opinion as Miss Southin, namely that it is ultra vires of the provincial jurisdiction. The articles goes on to say:

> This section was used by the government to authorize the Sargent commission to delve into the bugging of the PPWC convention by a private detective hired by international organizer Pat O'Neal.
> She will also ask for a declaration that the order in council passed January 3, 1967, recommending

Sargent be appointed commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act, is not authorized under the act.

Miss Southin also seeks a declaration restraining Sargent from inquiring into why members of the PPWC left the international to form the Canadian union, and whether their leaving "was justified morally, philosophically or legally."

She will also seek injunctions restraining Sargent from acting as commissioner, from committing any person to jail for contempt, from making any inquiry or finding in connection with the union rift.

If Braaten does not purge his contempt today, Miss Southin will also ask Monday for a writ of habeas corpus hearing for him. She will also seek to have bail set in his case.

She was given leave Wednesday night by Mr. Justice Peter Seaton to bypass the usual six clear days required for service of any action against the attorney general.

That action is proceeding at the present time. I wish to deal with the stir this has caused in the legislature of British Columbia, because I am one of those who is convinced that the only way this matter can be properly dealt with is by an amendment to the Criminal Code of Canada. I am inclined to agree with the opinion of the Solicitor General that we should not act hastily in this regard and should do everything we can to make sure that we enact the type of legislation that is required to cover this whole field. We should wait for the findings of the Royal Commission on Security, which is sitting at the present time, before reaching any conclusion in this respect. Legislation may be introduced in the meantime, but I think that before we finally adopt legislation that is intended to cover all aspects of this question we should give careful consideration to all that is involved in it.

I should like to read from an article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of February 24. It is headed, "Abandon Bugging Inquiry, Opposition Chiefs Demand", and says:

The leaders of B.C.'s two opposition parties launched new attacks on the royal commission on eavesdropping Thursday night, demanding immediate suspension of the probe and introduction of laws to protect individual privacy.

Both N.D.P. opposition leader Robert Strachan and Liberal leader Ray Perrault said in statements issued outside the legislature that the inquiry is unnecessary because there is already ample evidence that electronic bugging is widespread.

Perrault charged that the commission was politically motivated.

And Strachan, who claimed the probe is off the track, anyway, said the Social Credit government is pressing on with the inquiry "for strange purposes of an unknown nature."

[Mr. Herridge.]

"No royal commission is needed to show that electronic devices are being used to invade the privacy of the individual," said Perrault, adding:

"A look at page 122 of the city of Vancouver telephone directory (yellow pages) and page 86 of the Victoria telephone directory shows that no royal commission is needed to prove that government licensed and bonded detective agencies are using devices for 'listening and recording' and for detecting 'telephone taps and room bugs.' "

Perrault was referring to display advertisements in the phone books.

Among the several ads is one which offers midget telephone tape recording and secret electronic equipment.

The Liberal leader said the probe was politically motivated because when a private bill on privacy was introduced in the legislature in 1965 no action was taken.

Again last year, when bugging devices were found to be in use in the Victoria police station, nothing was done, he said.

Perrault said the government showed no interest in invasion of privavy until last fall, when two unions became involved.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The irresistible conclusion is that this Social Credit government became vitally concerned when they saw that a political advantage might be derived.

The Liberal leader said the inquiry should be suspended.

But, if the government insists on continuing the probe, it should suspend the licences of private detectives who are advertising the use of bugging devices until the commission has ended its inquiry.

The detectives should also be called before the commission.

Strachan said "the commission has gone off the the rails" and is really engaged in trying the people involved in an inter-union dispute.

And the result is that the man who was hurt in the bugging incident is now behind bars.

"This is ridiculous and must be stopped. It does not deserve the confidence of his government which established it nor of anyone else.

Any action less than the termination of the commission can only be viewed a sa continued effort by the Social Credit government to use Her Majesty's prerogative in a royal commission for some strange purposes of an unknown nature."

Strachan said that if there are inter-union problems that require investigating, they should be referred immediately to the select standing committee on labour at the current session of the legislature.

I agree with the criticisms of the leader of the opposition in the provincial legislature, Mr. Strachan, and I agree with the criticisms voiced by Mr. Perrault dealing with this matter, although I am still of the opinion that the only way in which it can be dealt with effectively is through an amendment to our Criminal Code.

This whole question has been the cause of a great deal of concern among the labour movement in British Columbia, regardless of which side of the engagement they were on. They feel it has been to the detriment of the trade union movement, rather than to find out the facts related to any particular set of circumstances. I do trust that the government is giving this matter very serious consideration and that the legislation will be prepared and introduced at the first possible opportunity.

Mr. McIlraith: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker? There is a request to revert to motions for the purpose of permitting the Minister of National Revenue to table the final supplementary estimates, and for the purpose of permitting the Minister of Finance to make a short announcement.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent the hour appointed for the consideration of private members business is now completed.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (G) 1966-67

A message from His Excellency the Administrator transmitting supplementary estimates (G) for the financial year ending March 31, 1967 was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson, (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board), and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Mr. Benson moved that the message of His Excellency together with the estimates presented this day be referred to the committee of supply.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before you put the question may I ask the minister to tell us when he expects to table the main estimates for the forthcoming year?

Mr. Benson: On Monday next, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX ACT AMENDMENT

STATEMENT OF INTENTION TO REMOVE REFUNDABLE TAX ON BUSINESS PROFITS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief announcement of government policy to precede giving notice of the introduction of a bill.

Royal Assent

In December when introducing the supplementary budget I said that in a few months time we would be in a much better position to appraise the economic outlook for 1967. I went on to state as an example that we would not hesitate to bring before parliament at short notice a measure to end the refundable tax on business profits.

The information reaching us in recent weeks has led the government to believe that although general business prospects are favourable, last year's very rapid rate of increase in business capital expenditure is not likely to continue this year. Consequently we feel this refundable tax, the purpose of which was to apply a temporary restraint on business capital spending, is no longer appropriate.

I shall therefore be giving formal notice on Monday of the introduction of a bill to amend Part II D of the Income Tax Act to terminate the period over which this tax is payable at the end of this month, rather than at the end of October. I shall of course be making a detailed statement on the matter when that short and simple bill comes up for second reading, which I hope will be within a few days.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we propose to submit to the house for its consideration the following items on today's order paper: item 63; then, 74, if the necessary evidence is printed and distributed as I expect it will be; then items 134, 136, 137 and 119.

• (6:00 p.m.)

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy to His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:10 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy to His Excellency the Administrator had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

An Act to incorporate The North West Life Assurance Company of Canada.

Royal Assent

An Act to provide for the payment of a retiring annuity to the Governor General of Canada.

An Act to provide for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation.

An Act to provide for the revision of certain salaries fixed by statute.

An Act to provide general incentives to industry for the expansion of scientific research and development in Canada and to effect certain related amendments to the Income Tax Act.

An Act to amend the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act.

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act.

It being 17 minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 13, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FANE—INABILITY TO OBTAIN REPORT ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. It concerns the statement made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs when tabling part I of the Hawthorn-Tremblay report "A Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada" on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Shortly after that report was tabled in the house on Friday the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie (Mr. Watson) spoke on a point of privilege which Your Honour suggested was not a point of privilege, but he was allowed to continue speaking because of the agreement of all members who were in the house at that time. His point of privilege had to do with reports appearing in newspapers throughout Canada for a week before the royal commission report was tabled. Apparently the hon. member obtained a copy of the report immediately it was tabled, and read from it.

My question of privilege is that representing the constituency of Vegreville in Alberta, I represent the Saddle Lake Indian reserve which has some 2,000 residents. I have not had a copy of the report delivered to me yet. I have not seen a copy of it, and my question of privilege requires four answers.

First, I want to know how the newspapers got copies of this secret document which was not supposed to be available to anybody until it was tabled in the House of Commons. I also suggest that tabling one copy of a report in the house is not sufficient for the immediate requirements of 265 members of the house.

I want to know why copies of the report of this royal commission have not been delivered to members of the house. At the time I left my office this afternoon at 2.30 a copy of the report had neither been delivered to my office nor was there one in my mail box. I also want to know when hon. members will receive copies of the report so we can discuss the matters in it concerning the various Indian reserves.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that members who were interested in obtaining copies of this report have received them and if these copies have not been delivered to all members I can only take the matter in hand and suggest to the department that this be done immediately. I apologize that this has not been done before now, but my understanding is that the report is available.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1967-68

A message from His Excellency the Administrator transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1968, was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and French of the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 referred to in the message from His Excellency.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF EXTRADITION TREATY BETWEEN CANADA AND ISRAEL

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in French and English of the extradition agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the state of Israel.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—STATEMENT RESPECTING TOLLS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement concerning the question of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. On January 9 I tabled the report on St. Lawrence seaway tolls prepared by the St. Lawrence seaway authority. I had previously indicated that the proposals in that report and in the parallel report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation of the United States would be the subject of negotiation with the United States government, and that no action on seaway tolls would be taken prior to an announcement in this house.

Discussions with the United States have now taken place, and I am glad to announce that agreement has been reached on the toll arrangements which will apply to the Montreal-lake Ontario section of the seaway for the next four navigation seasons. Both seaway entities proposed that the level of tolls be increased by 10 per cent and that toll revenues be divided in the ratio 72 per cent for Canada and 28 per cent for the United States in place of the previous 71/29 ratio. The United States government has not been willing to accept the proposed increase in tolls at this time, but in recognition of the relatively greater operating deficiency incurred by Canada has agreed to an improved division of tolls revenue in the ratio 73/27 in Canada's favour for the next four seasons.

In all the circumstances and in the interests of preserving the joint arrangements we have entered into with the United States for the operation of the seaway, which are of considerable practical advantage to Canada and to all seaway users, the Canadian government has accepted the foregoing which means that the present level of tolls on the Montreal-St. Lawrence section of the seaway will continue through 1970.

It will be recalled that the report of the St. Lawrence seaway authority recommends the adoption by Canada of a per lockage fee for the Welland canal, to be phased in over a period of five years, and that the suspension of the present tolls on the Welland should remain in effect during this period. In the view of the government, such a fee is justified as a contribution toward the recovery of operation and maintenance costs on the Welland canal, which in 1966 amounted to $9 million. It has therefore decided to implement this proposal.

The lockage fees which will rise progressively from $20 per lock for the current navigation season to $100 in the 1971 navigation season will make a significant contribution, although they will not cover these costs which are at present borne entirely by the Canadian taxpayer. The impact of these fees on transportation costs will be negligible and will not affect in any significant way either traffic growth on the Welland or the cost to Canadians of the goods moved via the seaway.

Canada has done much in the past several years to improve our services to the shipping industry at the Welland canal. A considerable investment, over $50 million, has been made for new facilities. New techniques of traffic control have been introduced to assist ship movements in the canal. More modern systems and procedures have been adopted to further improve service. As a result the average time required for a ship to transit the canal has been significantly lowered with consequent savings of a very considerable magnitude to the users of the canal. Such savings should do much to offset the contribution which these users are now being asked to make to the annual costs of operating and maintaining the Welland.

In addition to the substantial expenditures involved in our present modernization program which I have referred to, there is a $100 million project now under way which will permit the canal to by-pass the city of Welland. The new alignment which will replace a narrow twisting section of the canal with a straight stretch of some 8½ miles will greatly improve navigation and speed up transit times through that section of the waterway. There is, moreover, the real possibility that very large expenditures may have to be embarked upon within the next decade to increase the capacity of the Welland so that the canal will be able to handle the growth in traffic anticipated over the next few years.

Finally, I should point out that the Welland canal, although entirely within Canada and built and operated by Canadians, is open to all ships of the world. To continue to ask the Canadian taxpayer to be the sole provider, in circumstances where more than 50 per cent of the cargo moving through the Welland is of non-Canadian origin, is difficult to justify. Those who profit most directly, the users, will now quite rightly be asked to bear a share of the financial burden involved in providing the services which they benefit from.

I might add that two important modifications have been made in the per lockage fee which are designed to mitigate the impact of the per lockage fee on certain classes of ships using the Welland canal facilities. These modifications will permit a 50 per cent reduction in the total lockage fee for ships making only a partial transit of the canal, and will also permit a 50 per cent reduction in the total fee for ships in ballast.

As a result of these changes in the original proposal the per lockage fee will be substantially less than it would otherwise have been for ships in these two categories.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting for some time for information on this matter, and I may say at the outset that it comes none too soon for those who have to plan for the season.

This is a very detailed statement and we will have to give it great consideration, particularly because there is more sectionalization than before. I think this points up the necessity of referring this entire matter to the transportation committee for study, in light of the costs and revenues and the plans originally set up when the seaway was instituted. I cannot say that we are in agreement with the changes because I do not know enough about them at the moment. Let me say, however, as one from the maritimes, that we still feel the seaway should bear a greater share of its costs, as it was constituted to do.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EXTEND EXISTING LEGISLATION

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-279, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this bill is to deal with the provisions of the current act which will expire in midyear; therefore it is necessary to amend the act to perpetuate the provisions thereof.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COUNCIL, ADVISORY BOARDS, COMMITTEES, ETC.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a Canada manpower and immigration council, of advisory boards and of regional and local manpower committees; to provide also for the appointment of the members thereof, their remuneration, allowances and other expenses; and to provide further that all expenditures for the purpose of the act shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament therefor.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DISPOSITION OF ALEXANDRA BRIDGE, OTTAWA

Question No. 2,002—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Have the studies undertaken on the Alexandra bridge, for the purpose of determining whether it should be demolished, been completed?

2. If so, what were the results of that survey?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Surveys to determine the condition of the bridge have been substantially completed.

2. The surveys indicate that the piers are sound, but that, because there has been corrosion of certain steel members of the bridge, the continuation of the load restrictions that have been in effect for some time is warranted. The consultants will soon provide a report listing the necessary repairs.

CHIEF OF MANAGEMENT SERVICES SECTION, INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 2,431—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who is the chief of the financial and management services section in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. How long has he held the position?

3. What are his academic qualifications?

4. What is his previous experience in working with Indians either in the department or elsewhere?

5. What are his duties and responsibilities and to whom does he report?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The position of the chief of the financial and management services was not established as such. The revised organization of the Indian affairs branch provided instead for a branch financial services adviser. The incumbent of this position is Mr. Jean-Marie Thibault.

2. Since January 1, 1966.

3. (a) Columbia University, N.Y., M.B.A.; (b) École des Hautes Études Commerciales, L. Sc. Com.; (c) Member of Institute of Chartered Accountants.

4. Since joining the Indian affairs branch more than a year ago, Mr. Thibault had numerous occasions to meet the Indian people, to discuss their problems and to study various projects designed by the branch to improve the living standards of the Indians in Canada.

5. His duties and responsibilities are: Under the branch director, to provide financial advisory services to senior branch officials; to be responsible for the overall direction of financial management within the branch; to review and analyse program budgets at the branch level including the co-ordination of submissions to treasury board; to be responsible for the accounting services of the branch. Mr. Thibault reports to the director of Indian Affairs.

FEDERAL CONTRACTS WITH TRANSOL, INC., QUEBEC

Question No. 2,465—Mr. Ricard:

1. Does Transol, Inc., 500 Grande Allée East, Quebec city, hold contracts from any federal department or from any crown corporation in addition to the mail box collection contract in Quebec city and suburbs and the transport contracts for the Canadian National Railways?

2. If so, what are the details of these contracts, the names of bidders, the amounts of the tenders for each, and the length of said contracts?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by all the departments and crown corporations as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

FEDERAL CONTRACTS WITH SONAREX LTD., QUEBEC

Question No. 2,466—Mr. Ricard:

1. Does Sonarex Ltd., 500 Grande Allée East, Quebec city, hold any contracts from any federal department or any crown corporation?

2. If so, what are the details of these contracts, the names of bidders, the amounts of the tenders for each, and the length of said contracts?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Public Works as follows: 1. Yes.

2. Sonarex Ltd. is carrying out an appraisal of six houses in Quebec city which may be required for government purposes. For this type of work there are no tender calls, but a submission of a fee estimate, which in this case is $808.85. There is no set time limit but a stipulation is that the work must be done promptly.

C.N.R. CONTRACTS WITH TRANSOL LTD., QUEBEC

Question No. 2,467—Mr. Ricard:

1. Does Transol Ltd., 500 Grande Allée East, Quebec city, hold any transportation contracts on behalf of the Canadian National Railways?

2. If so, what contracts does it hold?

[Mr. Laing.]

3. Were tenders called in each?

4. If so, what are the names of the tenderers and the amount of each tender?

5. How long have these contracts been in existence and for how many years will they remain in force?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Yes.

2, 3 and 5. A list of eligible carriers was obtained from the Quebec transportation board and those carriers were invited to submit bids for the over the highway cartage services between Lévis, Quebec and L'Isletville and Rivière-du-Loup and L'Isletville, serving intermediate points. Transol Inc. submitted the lowest tender and contracts dated October 9, 1963, were entered into with that firm for an unspecified period of time, subject to termination by either party on 30 days' written notice.

In addition, the railway on occasion requires extra vehicles to handle the delivery of carload freight locally in Quebec city and on such occasions it utilizes the services of Transol Inc. as well as those of other cartage companies, depending upon the availability of trucks.

4. It is not the practice of the company to disclose names of firms or persons submitting tenders nor to disclose information respecting proposals received.

EDUCATIONAL SUPERVISION CHIEF, INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 2,475—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who is the chief of the educational supervision division of the education directorate of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. How long has he held the position?

3. What are his academic qualifications?

4. What is his previous experience in working with Indians either in the department or elsewhere?

5. What are his duties and responsibilities and to whom does he report?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Mr. Leslie George Postille Waller.

2. Since April 1, 1956.

3. Academic qualifications, (a) Alberta University, B.A.; (b) Alberta University, M.A.; (c) Alberta University, Professional teacher's certificate; (d) Alberta University, B. Ed.

4. Mr. Waller held the position of regional inspector of Indian schools in the Alberta region from 1951 to 1956; during that period he had close contact with Indian children, their parents and band councils.

5. His duties and responsibilities are: Under direction responsible for the supervision of a field staff of school administrators and specialists; direction of the joint school capital program; analyses of data in the fields of school administration and curriculum for the purpose of policy making; supervision of the teacher's registry and statistical sections; serves as consultant in federal-provincial negotiations on Indian education. Mr. Waller reports to the director of education.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INCOME FIGURES, QUEBEC CONSTITUENCIES

Question No. 2,483—Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski):

1. What were the unemployment figures for the past five years in the following constituencies: Rimouski, Matapédia-Matane, Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata?

2. What is the income growth index over the past five years for these constituencies?

3. What is the income growth index over the past five years for these constituencies, as compared to the national average?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and National Revenue as follows: 1. Unemployment figures are not available for electoral districts.

Annual averages of unplaced applicants on file in the Canada manpower centres in the Gaspe are shown below for each of the past five years.

Causapscal	1,884	1,862	1,728	1,489	1,327
Matane	2,352	2,274	1,724	1,724	1,701
Rimouski	3,570	3,226	2,707	2,510	2,504
Rivière-du-Loup	4,031	4,016	3,534	3,362	3,273

The area served by the Causapscal Canada manpower centre includes most of the county of Matapedia, as well as four townships in the county of Bonaventure. The Matane centre serves most of the county of Matane and part of Gaspe North. The Rimouski centre serves all of the county of Rimouski and small parts of the counties of Matane and Matapedia. The area served by the Rivière-du-Loup Canada manpower centre consists of the county of Témiscouata (this census county includes the provincial county of Rivière-du-Loup) and the county of Kamouraska.

2 and 3. Statistics relating to incomes of individuals as reported on tax returns are not maintained on the basis of electoral constituencies.

The taxation division of the Department of National Revenue publishes annually a book known as "Taxation Statistics" which provides aggregates of income figures compiled from tax returns for counties or census division as well as for Canada as a whole.

REPAYMENT OF NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 2,485—Mr. Godin:

How many years will it take the government of Canada to reimburse the debts it has been accumulating since 1867?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The government of Canada's outstanding debt represents the cumulative total of all government cash deficits less surpluses since 1867. The deficits have been financed through the sale of cash securities while surpluses have been used to reduce the total of securities outstanding. Changes in debt for any period of time, assuming a constant cash balance, represent the difference between government cash receipts and expenditures of all kinds and are, therefore, the consequence of the government's fiscal operations. Since these fiscal operations have a very important effect upon Canada's economy, fiscal policy must take into account prevailing economic circumstances and the probable consequences of any action taken. It is not possible to predict when economic circumstances would make it appropriate for fiscal policy to aim at achieving cash surpluses. It is, therefore, not possible to forecast whether or to what extent the government would consider it appropriate to reduce or eliminate all its outstanding debt.

CHANGEOVER TO CANADA MANPOWER SERVICES

Question No. 2,489—Mr. Irvine:

1. What was the total cost of changing the national employment services over to Canada manpower services?

2. Of this amount, how much was expended in (a) alterations in buildings, including signs (b) letterhead stationery etc. (c) advertising (d) other?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Public Works as follows: 1. $583,371.87.

2. (a) $508,867.84; (b) $43,532.90; (c) $23,319.93; (d) $7,651.20.

Questions

*WINTER WORKS PROJECTS, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 2,490—Mr. Irvine:

What is the total amount of projects approved under the winter works program during the current season in the city of London, Ontario?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The answer to the question is as follows. During the current municipal winter works incentive program, 21 projects have been approved for the city of London, Ontario. The total cost of these projects is estimated to be $4,367,443 with the estimated federal government incentive payment amounting to $509,375.

STRENGTH OF ARMY UNITS

Question No. 2,499—Mr. Harkness:

1. As at December 31, 1966, what was the strength of (a) each of the armoured regiments (b) each of the artillery regiments (c) each of the infantry battalions (d) each of the engineer squadrons (e) each of the signal companies or squadrons?

2. In each of the above cases, what is the war establishment of these units?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. It has not been considered to be in the public interest to divulge war establishments of military units, nor is it departmental policy to release individual unit strengths. However, as of December 31, 1966, there were (a) four armoured corps regiments with a total strength of 1,979; (b) four artillery regiments with a total strength of 2,266; (c) 13 infantry battalions with a total strength of 8,709; (d) four engineer squadrons with a total strength of 962; and (e) a signals regiment and brigade signal squadrons with a total strength of 1,176.

REPRINTS OF DEFENCE MINISTER'S SPEECH

Question No. 2,501—Mr. Harkness:

1. How many reprints on smooth paper were produced of the speech made by the Minister of National Defence on moving second reading of Bill C-243?

2. What was the distribution of the copies of this speech?

3. What was the cost and to what vote was it charged?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. 45,240.

2. About 29,500 copies were sent to units of the regular and reserve force for distribution to personnel. 8,070 copies were distributed to news media, including service newspapers, military writers, other government departments, foreign military establishments, veterans associations and interested individuals.

C.N.R. STATION, MONCTON, N.B.

Question No. 2,513—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the Canadian National Railways to enlarge and improve the facilities available to passengers using the C.N.R. station at Moncton, N.B.?

2. On what date was the station at Moncton opened to the public, and have many complaints been received by the management of the Canadian National Railways regarding the facilities in existence at the present time?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Yes, but plans for an extension to the Moncton station are being deferred until a proposal to relocate the main railway line through the city has been fully investigated.

2. November 3, 1963. Representations to enlarge have been received.

*ANDRÉ SIMARD—EMPLOYMENT BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 2,526—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1966, have any representations been made to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding employment for one André Simard and, if so, what is the name, occupation (if known), and address of each person who made such representations, the employment asked for, and the details of any reply?

2. Is the said André Simard currently employed by the government of Canada and, if so, in what capacity, for what term, and at what salary?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Civil Service Commission as follows: 1. A representation has been received, but the details are of a privileged nature. The reply advised that the candidate was not successful in the particular competition.

2. No.

REPRINTS OF SPEECH BY DEFENCE MINISTER

Question No. 2,565—Mr. McCleave:

1. Who ordered the printing and publication of "Address on The Canadian Forces Reorganization Act, the Hon. Paul Hellyer, Minister of National Defence. On moving second reading of Bill C-243 in the House of Commons December 7, 1966"?

2. Who printed the said publication?
3. Who edited the speech before publication?
4. Why were interjections of various hon. members not included in said publication?
5. How many copies were printed, and where were they distributed?
6. What is the estimated cost of printing and distribution?
7. What was the purpose of printing such publication?
8. Did those responsible consider the alternative of distributing copies of Hansard of that day?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Minister of National Defence.

2. The Queen's Printer.

3 and 4. The publication contains the speech prepared for delivery by the minister with the addition of a number of illustrations. There are minor variations from the speech as recorded in Hansard. No editing of the speech was done before publication.

5. 45,240. About 29,500 copies were sent to units of the regular and reserve force for distribution to personnel. 8,070 copies were distributed to news media, including service newspapers, military writers, other government departments, foreign military establishments, veterans associations and interested individuals.

6. Printing, $5,397.92; distribution was made through service facilities.

7. To provide members of the armed forces and others interested in Bill C-243 with a convenient reference document of the background and explanatory material given by the minister in support of the bill.

8. Yes.

RECRUITING DRIVE, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT

Question No. 2,571—Mr. Hales:

Is there a recruiting drive to hire 500 university graduates for the Department of Manpower and Immigration and, if so (a) how many people has the department hired to interview these graduates (b) how many students have been interviewed for these positions (c) how many graduate students has the department hired to date (d) did these students write civil service examinations and, if so, by whom were these examinations (i) set, and (ii) conducted (e) who made the final selection and under what circumstances—the department or the Civil Service Commission (f) for what positions in the department were these graduates hired?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Civil Service Commission as follows: Yes.

(a) None; (b) 1,589 as of February 6, 1967; (c) 10 as of February 6, 1967; (d) Under delegated authority from the Civil Service Commission, pursuant to section 39 of the Civil Service Act, departmental officers conducted the interviews in (b) above to ascertain whether or not candidates possessed the qualifications prescribed by the Civil Service Commission under section 33 of the act. No written examination was used. (e) The department, under delegated authority from the Civil Service Commission under section 39 of the Civil Service Act. (f) As manpower counsellor trainees at the various Canada manpower centres across Canada.

CANADIAN INVESTMENT BY FIRST NATIONAL CITY BANK

Question No. 2,574—Mr. Reid:

Does the First National City Bank of New York have any investments in Canada in the financial field at present other than the Mercantile Bank and, if so (a) what are the names of the companies it has invested in and what is the extent of their investment in these companies (b) what is the nature and extent of the business of these companies in which the First National City Bank of New York has an interest (c) do these institutions raise money in the Canadian market and, if so, how much have they raised during the last seven years, by year, and to what use are these funds put?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): (a), (b) and (c): The only known investment of the First National City Bank of New York in Canada, other than the Mercantile Bank, is the International Trust Company, formerly the Mercantile Trust Company. This is a Quebec incorporation and reports of the inspector of trust companies for that province show that it had the following amounts of assets and liabilities in company funds and guaranteed funds:

As at Dec. 31	Company funds	Guaranteed funds	Total
1960	$ 181,967	$ —	$ 181,967
1961	605,152	105,984	711,136
1962	625,335	1,827,656	2,452,991
1963	760,227	485,824	1,246,051
1964	1,270,174	7,902,988	9,173,162
1965	2,329,900	21,004,770	23,334,670

It is believed that nearly all the amount in guaranteed funds was borrowed from the public. The distribution of assets in guaranteed funds was as follows:

As at Dec. 31	Cash in banks	Stocks	Bonds and Debentures	Loans against securities	Mortgages
1960	$ —	$ —	$ —	$ —	$ —
1961	104,375	—	—	—	—
1962	825,035	—	298,020	—	602,477
1963	263,022	—	—	—	222,803
1964	74,987	—	5,074,030	750,966	2,003,005

PRESERVATION OF TOTEM POLES, UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 2,576—Mr. Prittie:

1. Has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development been informed that a number of irreplaceable totem poles at the University of British Columbia are rotting because of lack of a museum in which to preserve them?

2. Has the University of British Columbia requested the department for financial assistance to construct a museum for the preservation of these totem poles?

3. If the answer to part 2 is yes, what reply did the department make to the University of British Columbia?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The department has been informed that a number of totem poles are at the University of British Columbia. However, I am informed that these poles are not rotting as they have been treated with a wood preservative and are adequately protected from the elements by suitable coverings.

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

*VISIT OF U.S. NUCLEAR SUBMARINE TO ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Question No. 2,583—Mr. Crouse:

1. Did a United States nuclear submarine visit St. John's, Newfoundland, on February 6, 1967?

2. If so, was permission given by Canadian authorities for this landing?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

EFFECT OF CHAIN STORE BUYING PRACTICES

Question No. 2,598—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture ever studied the impact of chain store buying practices on the small food processors and producers groups?

[Mr. Sharp.]

2. If so, what were the findings?

3. If not, would the department consider such an investigation?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture):

1. No.

2. N/A.

3. Yes.

EFFECT OF CHAIN STORE BUYING PRACTICES

Question No. 2,602—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Has the Department of Industry ever studied the impact of chain store buying practises on the small food processors and producers groups?

2. If so, what were the findings?

3. If not, would the department consider such an investigation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry):

1. No.

2. Does not apply.

3. Since this matter has already been studied by the royal commission on price spreads and the combines investigation branch, the Department of Industry does not believe that an additional study is warranted at this time.

DISPOSITION OF PART OF FORT OSBORNE BARRACKS, WINNIPEG

Question No. 2,608—Mr. Sherman:

What are the present plans of the Department of National Defence with respect to the future of the old section of Fort Osborne barracks in Winnipeg, and (a) does the department intend to sell these facilities (b) if so, what date is envisioned for the sale (c) how will the sales procedure be carried out?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): The old section of Fort Osborne barracks in Winnipeg will be used by the Pan American Games Association during the summer of 1967. No decision has been taken on the future use of this property.

INFANT MORTALITY RATES

Question No. 2,616—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What was the infant mortality rate in Canada for each of the past ten years among (a) Indians (b) Eskimos (c) other Canadians?

2. What are the reasons for any differences which might exist between the three groups?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Infant mortality per 1000 live births

Year	(a) Indian	(b) Eskimo	(c) All Canadians
1956	96	238	32
1957	85	228	31
1958	86	235	30
1959	75	206	28
1960	79	210	27
1961	76	211	27
1962	75	194	28
1963	70	157	26
1964	62	94	25
1965	Not available	95	24

Data on Indian infant mortality for 1965 are not yet complete but present indications are that the downward trend has continued in 1965 and in 1966, preliminary figures suggesting the rates may now be around 60. Although still two and a half times the national infant mortality rate, Indian infant mortality has been reduced in the past decade by 36 per cent to less than two-thirds of what it was in 1956.

Eskimo infant mortality, originally fairly consistently some seven to eight times the comparable national rate has, since 1961, been reduced by 61 per cent to 39 per cent of what it was in 1956 and is now less than four times the current national rate.

In the same period the national infant mortality rate has declined by 23 per cent to 77 per cent of what it was in 1956. The decline in both Indian and Eskimo infant mortality has, therefore, been more rapid, in the case of the Eskimos almost three times as rapid.

2. The Indian infant mortality rate is high compared to the rate for all Canadians largely due to the fact that some 25 per cent to 30 per cent of pregnant Indian women still do not take advantage of available medical services and a further 30 per cent only report late in pregnancy and reap relatively little benefit. The infant mortality rate amongst children of Indian mothers who do make adequate use of the services available to them is around 30 per 1000 live births or very little in excess of the national rate. Some 12 per cent of Indian mothers, usually older women, still seem to prefer to be delivered in their own homes by untrained native midwives and the infant mortality amongst the children of these mothers is around 17 per cent as against 3 per cent among women making proper use of available medical and nursing care.

The reasons for the continuing higher infant mortality amongst Eskimos, the total number of actual deaths involved in 1965 being 50 deaths of children under one year of age out of 524 born that year, are mainly associated with the special hardships inherent in their traditional way of life to which Eskimos expose their children. The principal causes of Eskimo infant mortality are outstandingly pneumonia and accidents. The severity of the climate, the types of dwellings they use, ignorance of safe domestic hygiene and good feeding practices, often inability to apply what knowledge they have when travelling or camping for lack of facilities, all play a part. Remoteness and inaccessibility frequently feature as contributory factors, resulting in delay in getting medical aid. This affects some Indian groups also but to a lesser extent than Eskimos where climatic conditions more often complicate communication and transport difficulties. Some Indians and Eskimos, also, still show some reluctance in seeking medical aid promptly, tending to delay until the situation is critical before calling for help.

WAR ON POVERTY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,617—Mr. Peters:

1. What is the total amount of federal funds that have been spent, as of December 31, 1966, on all the programs comprising the government's "war on poverty" since its inception?

2. How do these expenditures break down by major program categories?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. and 2. While a large number of continuing programs form a part of the federal anti-poverty and opportunity program, there were seven major programs between April 1965 and December 31, 1966: (a) Expanded ARDA programs, $33,006,577. (b) Area development agency: grants for industry, $1,000,000. (c) Manpower programs: (i) Manpower mobility program, $1,000,000; (ii) Technical and vocational training agreement, $275,575,386; (iii) Older workers program vocational rehabilitation, $1,713,000; Total manpower, $278,288,386. (d) Canada Assistance Plan: Claims not yet received from provinces: projected per year, $85,000,000. (e) Department of Fisheries: Centralization program for families in outlying areas, $480,000. (f) Company of Young Canadians: July 1966 to December 1966, approximately, $600,000. (g) Health resources fund: July 1966 to December 1966, no firm commitments: projected in first year, $20,000,000.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ZOO IN CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 2,625—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have any representations been made to the government and/or the national capital commission for financial or other assistance in the establishment of a zoo in the national capital region?

2. If so, what has been the nature of such representations?

3. What consideration has been or is being given to them?

4. When may a decision be anticipated?

5. Has the national capital commission suggested any site for such zoo?

6. If so, where is such site located?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. The Ottawa Board of Trade proposed the establishment of a zoo in the Ottawa area. Envisioned was a zoological garden located on a 200 acre site, partially on city of Ottawa property and partially in the green belt, in the vicinity of Green creek, north of the Queensway.

3. The centennial administrator, to whom the proposal was referred by the then minister of transport, reviewed it in consultation with the N.C.C. He concluded that this was not an appropriate centennial project. However, the chairman of the N.C.C. considered that a joint committee might be an avenue for the consideration of the proposal for the consideration of the proposal for the establishment of a zoo.

4. The idea is not under active examination at this time.

5 and 6. It was thought by the N.C.C. that suitable land might be available in either the green belt or the Gatineau park.

COMPLETION OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

Question No. 2,626—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many miles of roads have not been completed in each province under the roads to resources program?

2. What is the estimated cost which would be involved in completing these programs in each province?

3. What plans does the federal government have to complete these roads?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1.

Total by provinces*

Province	Estimated total mileage of project	Mileage approved	Mileage completed	Mileage incomplete	Federal share contributed to the program	Unexpended Balance of federal share
Alberta	407.65	326.48	326.48	81.17	$ 7,420,984.04	$ 79,015.94

* March 1, 1967.

2. No current estimates have been made of cost of completing road mileages in excess of funds available under the terms of the agreements with each province.

3. The government fully intends to complete its contractual obligations under the roads to resources program.

[Mr. Matheson.]

LÉVIS, QUE. POSTMASTER

Question No. 2,628—Mr. Caouette:

1. How long is it since Mr. L. P. Sirois retired as postmaster of Lévis?
2. What was the result of the competition organized to find a replacement for him?
3. Will a new competition be held?
4. Who has taken over the position in the meantime and how many months has he been in charge?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. June 30, 1966.

2. Mr. J. H. Gélinas, Postmaster, Cap-de-la-Madeleine was selected as a replacement.

3. No.

4. Mr. J. D. A. Fradette has been Acting Postmaster since June 30, 1966.

RADAR STATION, SAINT-SYLVESTRE, QUE.

Question No. 2,640—Mr. Caouette:

Regarding the radar station in Saint-Sylvestre (Lotbinière), which is no longer in operation (a) what was the cost of construction (b) when was it finished (c) for how many years was it in operation (d) when did it cease operating, and for what reason (e) by whom and to whom was it sold (f) for what amount?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production as follows: (a) $13,200,000 (Canada's share $1,740,000); (b) 1954; (c) Ten years; (d) 1964, as it became redundant due to increased coverage of other radar sites; (e) By Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to Domaine St. Sylvestre Inc., Victoriaville, Que.; (f) $120,030.

IMPORTS OF SEMI-FINISHED TEXTILES

Question No. 2,643—Mr. Allard:

1. Did Canadian textile companies import semi-finished products such as yellow cotton, in 1966 and in 1967 and, if so (a) are these unfinished textile products spun and woven abroad and subsequently bleached and printed in Canadian textile industries and then sold as Canadian products (b) what countries send these semi-finished textile products, and which Canadian textile companies promote such imports?

2. Are these semi-finished textile products part of voluntary self-imposed quotas accepted by Japan, Hong Kong and other countries which have accepted voluntary quotas with regard to Canada?

3. Do these semi-finished textile products enter Canada as raw materials and as such, are they subject to low Canadian duty rates?

4. What was the quantity and the overall value of semi-finished textile imports as compared with all textile imports into Canada, for the years 1965 and 1966?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. (a) (b) A variety of types of textile products at varying stages of manufacture are imported by Canadian textile companies for further processing in Canada. These include greige woven cotton fabrics which are bleached, printed or otherwise finished in Canada. Many countries export partly-processed textile products to Canada for further manufacture, but because of the statistical problem, (explained below in answer to question 4) it is not possible to identify the particular countries or the particular Canadian companies involved.

2. The limits applied by a number of countries on their exports of certain textile products to Canada generally do not exempt partly processed products which are intended for further manufacture in Canada.

3. The rates of duty for textile products generally increase with the degree of processing, although there are a few exceptions. Thus partly processed products generally bear lower rates of duty than fully processed goods.

4. The value of all textile imports in 1965 was $581,880,000. The 1966 figure is not yet available. It is not possible to divide this figure between semi-finished and fully finished products. This is because no distinction is made in DBS import statistics between greige fabrics imported for use as such and those imported for further processing. For some types of textile products both partly finished and fully finished products are grouped together in the statistics.

ARDA REPORT ON EASTERN NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 2,644—Mr. MacEwan:

Has the report of the joint task force of ARDA on the nine eastern counties of Nova Scotia been completed, and (a) if so, has it been submitted to the government (b) if not, when is it expected that this report will be completed?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): (a) The report by the joint task force of ARDA on the nine eastern counties of Nova Scotia has not been completed. (b) It has not been submitted to the government. (c) It is expected that this report will be completed and submitted to the government by March 15.

*DISMISSALS OF CIVIL SERVANTS FOR CAUSE

Question No. 2,647—Mr. Winkler:

How many civil servants have been dismissed for cause in the last year for which statistics are readily available?

Questions

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Civil Service Commission, which covers all employees under the Civil Service Act: 159 employees for the year 1966, and 453 employees were rejected during probation.

FEED GRAIN SUBSIDY, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 2,658—Mr. Fairweather:

What amount of money did the government of Canada pay in the way of subsidy or any other assistance for feed grain coming into the province of New Brunswick for each of the years 1965 and 1966?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Transportation assistance on feed grains shipped to the province of New Brunswick in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 amounted to $1,118,529.31, and in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966 amounted to $1,156,724.12. During these two years the government of Canada also paid winter storage charges on grains. Due to the loss of identity of the grain on conversion to animal feeds it is not possible to give an accurate provincial expenditure. It is estimated feed grains and feeds shipped to New Brunswick were assisted under this program by $31,746 in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 and $33,503 in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

PRODUCTION OF FILM ON SEAL HUNT

Question No. 2,665—Mr. MacRae:

Did the government co-operate in the making of the films which were taken by the officials of the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals during the 1966 seal hunt in the gulf of St. Lawrence and, if so, did the government approve of the said films as being an authentic record of sealing operations in 1966?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The Department of Fisheries provided aerial transportation for a number of officials representing humane and conservation organizations to visit the area of the seal hunt in the gulf of St. Lawrence in 1966. Some, if not all, of these officials on their own initiative took still and/or moving films of scenes at the hunt, using their own equipment. None of this photographic material was submitted to the department for verification of authenticity.

MANPOWER RETRAINING PROGRAM, ST. JEROME, QUE.

Question No. 2,667—Mr. Godin:

1. Under the manpower retraining program, to which province and to what kind of employment are the unemployed workers of the shoe manufacturing industry, particularly those from St. Jérôme, Quebec, being sent?

2. What was the number of unemployed persons registered in this community as at December 31, 1966?

3. Of this number, how many have since found employment?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Unemployed workers from the shoe manufacturing industry at St. Jérôme have been referred to employment at General Motors, Ste. Thérèse, and at Canadair, Montreal, in the main. To date, no such workers have been referred outside the province of Quebec.

2. 1,489 men and 664 women.

3. The Canada Manpower Centre has placed 347 persons in the period between December 31, 1966, and February 24, 1967. The total number who have found employment on their own initiative is not known, but 89 of those who lost their employment in the shoe manufacturing industry are reported to be in permanent employment.

LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

Question No. 2,668—Mr. Godin:

When will the livestock feed board (Bill C-218) come into operation, and will the farmers in the regions concerned benefit through a decrease in the price of grain?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): As was stated in the house on February 9th it is expected that appointments to the Canadian livestock feed board will be made before March 15. It is not expected there will be any immediate effect on the price of feed grains when this board is appointed. This board will, within the powers provided by the Livestock Feed Assistance Act, take steps to ensure the objects are attained within a reasonable period of time.

ESTATE TAX, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 2,670—Mr. Pascoe:

1. What was the total amount paid in Saskatchewan in estate tax for the year 1966, and how was this amount shared by the federal and provincial governments?

2. Has the government entered into an agreement with the government of Saskatchewan to eliminate the collecting of this tax in that province and, if so, when will the necessary legislation be introduced in this house?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. The amount shared by the federal and provincial governments is the amount of estate tax assessed, allocated on the basis of property which was situated in the province of Saskatchewan. For the fiscal year 1965-66 this amount was $3,206,000 of which 75 per cent would go to the provincial government and 25 per cent to the federal government.

2. No.

NATIONAL REVENUE OFFICE, CHATHAM, ONT.

Question No. 2,671—Mr. Danforth:

Has a decision been reached by the Department of National Revenue to open up a new office in Chatham, Ontario, to deal with taxation and if so (a) what is the number of employees contemplated for the staff (b) what procedures will be followed to obtain the necessary office space (c) will space be available in present offices leased or rented by the government or will additional office facilities be procured?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): The Department of National Revenue, taxation division, has no plans to open up a new office in Chatham, Ontario.

"CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE" RESPECTING OLD AGE SUPPLEMENT

Question No. 2,672—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the meaning of "Capital Cost Allowance" as set-out as an example of a deduction that can be made against rents received insofar as the guaranteed income supplement is concerned and which is more particularly described as item 7, on page 10, of the guaranteed income supplement folder distributed to recipients of old age security?

2. Can an applicant for the old age supplement use a deduction from rents received, property tax, insurance and capital cost allowance?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Capital cost allowance referred to in section 7 on page 10 of the guaranteed income supplement booklet is a term found in the Income Tax Act and regulations. It is an amount which may be deducted in computing income in lieu of depreciation. Section 11(1)(a) is the authorizing section of the Income Tax Act and parts XI and XVII of the regulations set out the amounts which may be deducted.

2. Yes.

*APPLICATIONS FOR OLD AGE SECURITY SUPPLEMENT

Question No. 2,679—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many persons, by province, as of this date, have been notified that their applications for the supplementary payment under the recent amendments to the Old Age Security Act, of $30 per month, have been approved?

2. How many applications for the supplement have been received, by province, as of this date?

3. In how many cases have the applicants been informed that their applications have been turned down as being unqualified because they have means or income which denies them the said payment?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. None. It is not planned to send any notification prior to the issuance of the cheques. Those who applied for $30 and whose applications have been approved in time for the payment to be included in the March old age security cheque will receive a cheque for $165 at the end of March. Those eligible for the $30 supplement who do not receive an adjustment in the March cheque will receive a payment of $195 in the April cheque issue.

2. At the close of business on February 27, 1967 the following applications had been received:

Newfoundland	17,619
Prince Edward Island	6,407
Nova Scotia	32,305
New Brunswick	21,903
Quebec	142,474
Ontario	158,100
Manitoba	40,352
Saskatchewan	30,277
Alberta (including Yukon the Northwest Territories)	38,875
British Columbia	68,695
Total	557,007

3. No information is available at this time. However, as the work of checking, making determination of eligibility and notifying applicants proceeds in the weeks ahead data will be available.

*REGULOTIONS UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 2,687—Mr. Smith:

1. Have any regulations under the provisions of section 9 of the Canada Assistance Plan been made?

2. If so, what are those regulations?

3. If not, when is it expected that regulations will be made and published?

4. What provinces have entered into agreements with the government of Canada under the provisions of section 4 of the Canada Assistance Plan?

Questions

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. The Canada Assistance Plan regulations were made by order in council P.C. 1967-143 of January 26, 1967, and were published in the Canada Gazette on February 8, 1967.

3. See answer 2 above.

4. Agreements under the Canada Assistance Plan were sent to the provinces during the week of February 20 for consideration and signature; replies are expected within a few days.

TRAVEL BUREAU OFFICES ABROAD

Question No. 2,690—Mr. Isabelle:

In what countries does the Canadian Government Travel Bureau maintain offices?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): At the end of the fiscal year 1965-66, the travel bureau had offices located in London, England; Paris, France; Frankfurt, Germany; Mexico City, Mexico; Tokyo, Japan; Sydney, Australia and Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

In the United States of America, offices of the travel bureau are located in the following cities—New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Minneapolis, Chicago, Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Washington, Seattle, Denver, Philadelphia, Rochester, Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

In 1967, the bureau proposes to open a new office in Copenhagen, Denmark, and one in Rome, Italy.

[English]

LANGUAGES OF TRAVEL BUREAU LITERATURE

Question No. 2,691—Mr. Orange:

Does the Canadian Government Travel Bureau or any other agency of the government produce and distribute tourist literature in languages other than English and French?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Canadian Government Travel Bureau continues to increase its production of travel literature in languages other than English and French. A good start has been made in producing travel literature in German and Japanese, and more publications will be available this year in these languages as well as Dutch, Spanish, Italian, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and Finnish.

RETIREMENT AGES OF ARMED FORCES OFFICERS

Question No. 2,692—Mr. Hales:

1. What is the normal compulsory retirement age for officers of the rank of commander, R.C.N., lieutenant-colonel, army, and wing commander, R.C.A.F.?

2. Are any officers of that rank and above that age still drawing full service pay and if so (a) what is the name, rank, pay and allowances, and post of each (b) are such officers singled out for special treatment in regard to continuous service pay and, if so, for what reasons?

3. Is such over-age employment taken into account in calculating the pension of these officers?

4. What is the estimated retirement date of each, and on that basis, what is the estimated pension each will draw?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence):

1.	Commander	Lieut. Colonel	Wing Commander
Officers other than medical instructors and chaplains	50	Officers other than Chaplains 51	Officers on flying list 49
Medical and instructor officers....	51	Chaplains 55	Non-flying list .. 51
Chaplains	55		Chaplains 55

2. No.

3. Pensionable service is based upon full time paid service and any officer employed beyond his compulsory retirement age would be allowed to have such service taken into account.

4. Not applicable.

[Mr. Smith.]

REPORT ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY

Question No. 2,700—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. By whom was O. J. McCulloch commissioned or requested to prepare a report on the design for the Northumberland strait crossing?

2. Was a copy of his report sent by the government of Prince Edward Island to any department of the government of Canada?

3. Does Mr. McCulloch in this report propose that a level causeway could be constructed at a cost of approximately $60,000,000?

4. Does Mr. McCulloch in his report express doubt that the bridge and tunnel approaches of the presently projected crossing could withstand the extremely severe ice conditions which prevail in the Northumberland straits?

5. Is Mr. McCulloch's report currently under study by the Department of Public Works and are alterations in the projected design under contemplation?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Mr. O. J. McCulloch was not commissioned or requested to prepare a report on the design of the Northumberland strait crossing by any department or agency of the government of Canada.

2. No, but Mr. McCulloch sent a commentary to the Department of Public Works in July, 1966. A revised version was received from him on February 6, 1967.

3. Yes. However, the estimate of $60 million does not cover damage to property resulting from changes in tidal elevations that would result if a solid crossing were to be constructed.

4. Yes.

5. Yes. Studies completed to date do not indicate any need for changes in the design.

FILING OF CONFIDENTIAL CENSUS REPORTS

Question No. 2,704—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is consideration being given by the Department of Trade and Commerce to a later date for filing of confidential census reports covered by retail forms numbered 01, 03 and 07 which require by law a filing within three weeks of their receipt by merchants, with a threat of penalties for non-compliance?

2. So that small firms will be in a position to provide the information specified; will the department give consideration to extending the filing date to April 30, the same date required by the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics is constantly striving to produce more statistical data as quickly as possible. In this respect, the bureau continually seeks to improve and simplify its methods of gathering information and providing accurate and up-to-date information. In order to do this, D.B.S. is dependent on the co-operation of respondents in getting the information to the bureau at the earliest practical date.

The 1966 census of retail and service business, which is conducted at five year intervals, is a large undertaking involving over 200,000 retailers and service business operators. The 1966 questionnaires are much shorter and easier to complete than the 1961 forms.

However, if any firm requests an extension of time due to unusual circumstances, it will be given consideration.

TELEVISION

CREATION BY ESTIMATE OF CORPORATION TO PROVIDE EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the supplementary estimate of the Secretary of State providing authorization for the setting up of a corporation and for the minister to make payments to provide broadcasting facilities for educational purposes. In view of the fact that it is rather unusual to create a corporation by a supplementary estimate, and considering the delicate position of education and the fact that the exclusive authority over education rests with the provinces, would not the Acting Prime Minister, in his best parliamentary manner, direct that this question come before the house in the form of a bill so that discussion can take place thereon, rather than circumvent parliament in connection with this information through the instrumentality of a supplementary estimate?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my right hon. friend that there is no intention on the part of the minister or the government of circumventing parliament in any way. The right hon. gentleman is, of course, correct in saying that the normal process is through a bill. However, there are precedents for the use of an estimate. This device has legislative consequence, to implement the purpose the government has in mind.

One of the difficulties in the present situation is that in spite of the progress that has been made legislatively, we have not been able to implement the full legislative program of the government. It is for this reason that it has been found necessary to resort to this particular method, which I repeat is a legislative method, to achieve the purpose the government has in mind. For the moment, I would suggest that this response be left at that. If there is any further consideration that can be given to this matter, perhaps later I might report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the minister, in view of the fact he admits this is a short-cut and not the normal process, and since in a matter affecting education arguments such as that are not very effectual—so it will take a long time to pass legislation of this kind, will he not do more than he has done already and, with his wide knowledge of parliament and its rights—enjoin his colleagues to preserve those rights so that a corporation be not set up by subterfuge in this manner?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can only say that the adjectives my hon. friend has employed are not warranted in the circumstances. The government is not employing any subterfuge. The government is not interested in bypassing parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, it is doing it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All my hon. friend has done is to indicate that we propose to take a legislative step in a manner that is not generally adopted, but for which there are precedents. I cannot put my finger on them, but I am sure that during the time the right hon. gentleman was prime minister his government introduced legislation in this form. In any event, my right hon. friend may be assured that the government has given careful consideration to all points of view on this matter. He may be assured that we, no less than he, are anxious to preserve all the privileges and obligations of this free parliament.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I wonder if I could direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Will the government give consideration to introducing this measure by way of the C.B.C., which is set up at the moment to do educational broadcasting? I realize one of the difficulties facing the government is that they are awaiting the report of the committee on educational television, but could they not give this work to the C.B.C. pending a final decision?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The item in question does not propose to set up a corporation which would deal with programming for educational television, which of course is within the constitutional responsibility of the provinces. This is to be a corporation which will create facilities for the rental of time to provincial agencies of one kind or another. The reason the government decided to introduce it by way of a supplementary item instead of by way of a bill, which would have to pass through all stages, is that this should properly be part of the Broadcasting Act which is not expected, by reason of the committee not having yet reported, to be presented during this session of parliament.

The proposal to legislate by means of an item in the estimates is not intended to be a final solution. It is proposed that subsequently there will be a piece of legislation, and it certainly was my intention, and the government's, that a very full explanation would be given when the item was called in an attempt to live up to an undertaking, particularly to the province of Alberta which is desirous of getting on with educational television in 1967. If this does not meet the wish of parliament, however, and it would prefer to require the province of Alberta to wait until 1968, of course the item can be withdrawn, and at such time as there is legislative time available a bill can be brought forward. It was hoped all hon. members would appreciate the importance of creating facilities in order that the provinces might get on the air, particularly in the rather remote sections. This was an attempt to co-operate with the provinces.

Mr. Fairweather: The minister still has not answered why the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation cannot fulfil this function.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RESEARCH

INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT FOR HARP PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, who was designated by the Prime Minister on Friday to look after the communications satellite program. Has his attention been drawn to the fact that the McGill University space research institute is running out of money for its high altitude research program, generally referred to as HARP, and that the income from the federal government is to end on June 30? I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact some 20 per cent of the staff have already been laid off. In view of the Chapman report concerning the urgency of Canada getting into the satellite communication field, is the government giving any consideration to continuing its financial assistance to McGill University for HARP?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think perhaps I should clarify the matter. The HARP program is not concerned with communications at all. It is a research program and is engaged in research activities. The support that has been given to this project has been given through my colleague the Minister of Industry, and I believe any questions would be more properly directed to him.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that HARP is not designed to deal with satellites but to put satellites into orbit, and in view of the fact the Chapman report says it is most urgent that Canada get into this field if it is not to lose its position, may I ask the minister if any consideration is being given to continuing financial assistance to the HARP program at McGill University.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): There is in the Chapman report a lengthy analysis of the HARP program itself, but the conclusion of that report is not such as to encourage me to recommend continuing financial support in view of other demands on research funds.

EDUCATION

ENCOURAGEMENT OF EXCHANGES BETWEEN FRENCH SPEAKING UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Saturday night, he made this statement before the officers of the Junior Chamber of Commerce:

> The Canadian government will contribute $50,000 to partly or wholly French speaking universities.

Could the minister tell us whether Canadian universities interested in spreading or teaching French will benefit by this contribution?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this grant of $50,000 will go toward the establishment of a private organization known as the A.U.P.E.L.F., that is the Association des universités partiellement ou entièrement de langue française. The objective of this organization, made up of representatives of universities of several countries, is to foster the exchange of teachers and students among all French speaking countries.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the minister be in a position to tell us whether the same principle for the promotion of exchanges among the various French speaking countries could be applied to Canadian provinces interested in such exchanges or in spreading the knowledge of both languages in Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, not through that organization, but the same principle could be applied to promote the exchange of students between the various provinces.

NATURAL GAS

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN TARGET DATE FOR COMPLETION OF NEW LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of recent developments in the United States before the federal power commission in connection with the application of Trans-Canada for the approval of the Great Lakes project, has there been any revision of the timetable or target date both with respect to hearings and the delivery of additional gas to eastern Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the federal power commission has decided to skip what is called the presiding examiner's report and deal with the matter directly. On April 24, I think it is, the commission will be seized of the situation, and it is expected that a decision will follow shortly after that.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister been assured by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines that there is still sufficient time to build the additional facilities required to deliver gas to eastern Canada to meet the anticipated additional requirements for next winter?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the objective is to make sure that additional quantities of gas will be delivered next winter in eastern Canada. However, it very much depends upon whether you are an optimist when you try to assess if the decision of the federal power commission will be in time to realize this objective. As the situation stands now it is hoped that a decision will be given in late April or early or late May, depending on your degree of optimism or pessimism.

If this is the case, Mr. Speaker, then the company might have enough time to build the Great Lakes project next summer. If it should not be so, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines has been advised by the government that it should have an alternative project ready in time to be put before the National Energy Board.

Mr. Olson: A further supplementary question. Is the alternative project to which the minister refers the twinning of the northern Ontario route?

Mr. Pepin: When I refer to the alternative project, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to that.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any recent evidence to show that there is a possibility of delay occurring through appeals following the decision of the F.P.C.?

Mr. Pepin: I cannot understand the question. Would the hon. member repeat it?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): At one stage, Mr. Speaker, it was intimated that even when the decision of the federal power commission is handed down there could still be considerable delay because of appeals being taken to the Supreme Court, and so forth. Has the minister any information in this regard?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker. When the federal power commission makes a decision I would think Trans-Canada Pipe Lines and the Great Lakes project could proceed without further delays, if the decision is favourable.

EXPO '67

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING REQUESTS FOR ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister investigating complaints that Logexpo is not answering mail inquiries for accommodation at Expo '67.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there might have been minor grounds for some complaints. I think Logexpo was waiting until it had found accommodation before replying to letters received, but this procedure has now been changed and it is acknowledging letters when they are received.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question. Can the minister assure us, then, that all inquiries that are being received by mail, particularly those from outside of Canada, will be acknowledged promptly if not acted upon immediately?

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PRICE UNDER INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I will address it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the announcement today by the Minister of Transport of the increase in tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, a step which will reflect on the cost of delivery of grain from western Canada, will the minister advise this house what steps have been taken by the Canadian government to increase the price of wheat under the international wheat agreement?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I will be pleased to bring this question to the attention of the minister, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

SALE IN CANADA OF GOODS CONFISCATED IN CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the government intend taking any action to outlaw the entry into Canada of goods confiscated in Cuba and sold at auction in Montreal?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall have to take that as notice, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO U.S. PERMISSION TO DELAY UNIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question. Has the minister communicated with Washington to ask his mentor, Mr. McNamara, if the proposed unification of the Canadian forces may be postponed?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend is not putting this question forward with too much seriousness; therefore I hesitate to reply. I am also sure that the United States appreciates the wonderful co-operation which has existed between our two countries over the past years, and anticipates that nothing will detract from that co-operation in the years ahead.

FINANCE

U.S. ORDER RESPECTING INSPECTION OF BANKS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further question of the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Canadian government received any reply from the government of the United States to the protest regarding the ruling by the federal reserve board that that board can inspect banks operating in other countries, including Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Not as yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this one of the subjects that will be discussed during the Prime Minister's social visit to Washington later this month?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A reply will be given in the normal course of events, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister. I should like to know whether any plans have been consummated for the holding of the meeting of Canadian ministers and secretaries of the United States which is customary at this time of year.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has been in touch with the government of the United States and it has been proposed that the next Canada-United States ministerial meeting be held in June on Expo territory. Both governments have accepted this in principle and we are now trying to work out a date. I hope the meeting will be some time toward the middle of June.

Mr. Hamilton: A supplementary question having to do with the agenda of this meeting. I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister would give the house the assurance that either he or the Prime Minister will consult with the chairman of the legislative group which has been meeting with its United States counterparts in 1965 and 1966. It was apparent from the last discussions which were held in Washington that there was no consultation between the legislative branch and the executive branch. Therefore I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would take it upon himself to consult with the chairman of the Canadian side at least to the end that the subject matters discussed by the legislative branch will be brought forward for discussion by the executive branch.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FURTHER INFORMATION ON DISTRIBUTION OF COLOUR TELEVISION SETS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the right hon. Leader of the Opposition made some remarks and inquiries in respect to the provision by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of colour television sets. I have been able to get some information which I should now like to give both him and the house.

The C.B.C. has advised me that it had not provided the specific names of staff members occupying positions to which colour sets have been assigned because of an understanding over the years that it is not the intent of parliament to require crown corporations to make public information which is basically related to their internal administration and management.

While the corporation has always replied freely to parliamentary questions on matters of C.B.C. policy, it has from time to time sought the indulgence of parliament in not providing information of a detailed operational nature. In the view of the corporation the question with respect to the colour television sets came within this category. If the corporation is in error in this interpretation of intent and is so advised by parliament, then the names will be provided. The C.B.C. cannot and will not refuse any information requested by parliament, and this applies to the present instance. While the corporation is in the hands of parliament, it respectfully suggests that a continuation of past policy and practice in principle is essential to the most efficient operational needs of the corporation in all their aspects.

The corporation does not require regular reports from occupants of those positions assigned colour T.V. sets, but requires them to be conversant with either or both the programming and technical aspects of its colour programming. Because colour television is new the discussion and assessment of the colour performance is carried out by C.B.C. staff on a continuing and near daily basis rather than at periodic intervals. It is also part of most program and technical meetings.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES ON MORTGAGE LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a question for the Minister of Labour in his capacity as the minister responsible for housing. In view of the steady worsening of the housing crisis in Canada, and reports that starts in the first two months of this year were reduced by 38½ per cent as compared with the first two months of last year, can the minister inform the house whether he is considering reducing the interest rate on N.H.A. loans and enabling such loans to be made directly to prospective home owners as well as to construction companies?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): While it is true that housing starts were down during the months of January and February, I think it is safe to say that our experience of the last four weeks illustrates the wisdom of changing the rate to 7¼ per cent, since I understand that we have had more applications from approved lenders in the last four weeks or so than in the entire six months before the increase in the interest rate took place; that is, while the old rate was in effect. When the new rate became effective there was a certain element of flexibility attached to it. It is tied to the yield on bonds issued by the federal government. We see no necessity for further change at this time.

I personally am very encouraged about the reports which have been received on the number of loan applications accepted by approved lenders in the last three or four weeks. It has been exceptionally high, certainly not in line with the figures for January and February, because those were tied in with loan applications made last fall when the old rate was in force.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister, who is rather easily encouraged, I think, whether he or the government is considering any new policies at all relating to the housing program. If so, when can this house expect the announcement of such new policies, unless the minister is satisfied with everything about his policies as they are?

Mr. Nicholson: With all due respect, in spite of the hon. member's sarcasm, I wish to make it clear that neither the minister nor the government is satisfied with the number of housing starts, and the matter of what further action should be taken is constantly under review.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

The hon. minister has just said that the increase in the interest rate was an incentive for the building of new dwellings in Canada. Does the hon. minister agree that the building problem in Canada would be solved, as he says, by increasing the interest rate from 7¼ per cent to 20 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is an argument rather than a question.

[English]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the general interest in increasing housing starts throughout Canada, would the hon. gentleman recommend to his colleagues on the treasury benches the removal at once of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): A further supplementary to the Minister of Labour, based on the fact that applications are now being received from people who wish to borrow money directly from C.M.H.C., which money will not be available until April 1. In view of the decline in housing starts, would the minister inquire whether these loans could not be made available as of now rather than as of April 1?

Mr. Nicholson: We have already had some discussion in the house today about the importance of coming to parliament in connection with certain matters. We are beginning a new fiscal year on April 1, and this is why we have advanced the date for the making of application without waiting until the next fiscal year. The funds will come out of next year's estimates.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the minister assure the house that any person who would otherwise qualify but who cannot get a loan through an approved lender will be able to get a direct loan from C.M.H.C?

Mr. Nicholson: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any such assurance. I can give the assurance, however, that applications received both from builders and from individuals who wish to build their own homes will receive prompt consideration provided the applicants are reasonably good risks and satisfy the other conditions which come into the loan picture.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PENSION INCREASE BE EXTENDED TO DEPENDANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the delay in the tabling of the Woods committee report and the continuing hardship experienced by recipients of veterans pensions, will the minister reconsider his previous decision and extend the recent 15 per cent increase to dependants as well?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): First, the delay in adjusting the pensions of veterans is not because of the Woods report; it is awaiting the report of another nature from another group in my department which is dealing specifically with pension rates. I can assure the hon. member and the house that if the report does not come to hand in the fairly near future we shall perhaps have to consider making some adjustment in pension rates in the interim period. I am hoping the report will be to hand in time for this to be avoided, and for an adjustment to be made consistent with some logical basis.

Mr. Patterson: Does this contemplated revision include dependants as well as the recipients?

Mr. Teillet: All aspects of pension rates are being considered in this study.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION OF FARM LABOUR FOR SEEDING SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the department under consideration any special program designed to satisfy the demand for farm labour during the seeding season which is coming up?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I believe that in line with the new division of responsibilities announced in December, 1965 by the Prime Minister, this is a question which more directly concerns my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. However, I will be glad to take the matter up with him. One thing that the Minister of Labour has done, in line with requests from members of all parties in the house, has been to promote a change in the regulations governing unemployment insurance, in the hope that this may improve the situation with regard to the availability of more farm labour.

[Later:]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour supplementary to one that was raised earlier. In view of the fact that the unemployment insurance regulations prohibit the employment of relatives in the farm industry, is the minister receiving complaints in regard to this matter and is he contemplating any change in this restriction?

Mr. Nicholson: As you might expect, Mr. Speaker, we have had a few complaints but they are not appreciable in number. The matter has been under study but I do not anticipate any change in policy at this time.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he inform the house that as usual we may expect an announcement of the 1967 dairy policy on or before the 31st of this month and, if so, will it include a 5, 6 or 7 cent increase in the price of manufactured milk to producers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A similar question was asked on at least one occasion last week.

Mr. Winkler: The situation is becoming very critical, Mr. Speaker, and I think the hon. gentleman, with his interest in agriculture, could probably answer the question.

GRAIN

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE SALE OR LEASE OF ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the Minister of Transport whether there is any basis for the suggestion in the press regarding his visit to Quebec that the grain elevator in the port of Quebec is to be sold. If so, under what conditions is it to be sold, and are tenders to be called?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): If by "Quebec" the right hon. gentleman means the city of Quebec, let me say I have not visited that city for a very long time. I did happen to be in Montreal over the week end.

As to the question of the grain elevator, I think I explained to the house some time ago that the National Harbours Board was entertaining applications for either the lease or the sale of the elevator under certain conditions, and I believe certain propositions have been received.

If Your Honour would permit me, I should like to repeat the assurance I gave earlier that all agencies of the federal government interested in the transport or sale of wheat will be consulted before any final action is taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the Minister of Transport suggest that additional elevators will be built by private firms? I ask that question because it seems strange, bearing in mind the tremendous amounts of wheat which have to be stored, that the government should be considering, through the harbours board or otherwise, disposing of facilities which are certainly much required.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know anything about any plans of private firms to build additional elevators. I certainly made no statement about them. So far as the elevator at Quebec is concerned, the only circumstance under which the government would consider agreeing to any proposal from the harbours board to dispose of this elevator, either by sale or lease, would be in order to increase the throughput of grain through that elevator. If that would not be the consequence then we would not want to do it.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question follows an earlier question I put on this matter. Has the minister had conversations with the Quebec minister of agriculture, who sent a wire asking that he be consulted before any action was taken on the matter of this elevator?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not actually had any conversations. I did have some correspondence with the minister of agriculture of Quebec and I conveyed to him the same message I have conveyed to this house, namely, that all those departments of the government of Canada that were interested would be consulted before any action was taken and we would, of course, pay the most careful attention to any representations that were made by anyone concerned. Since I communicated with him, to the best of my knowledge I have received no further representations myself although the harbours board may have.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that the assurances the minister is giving with regard to the sale or possible rental of this elevator are not satisfactory to those interested, can the minister say in black and white whether he is going to permit or refuse the rental or sale of this elevator?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I could not say in black and white what would be done about a hypothetical proposition that I have not seen, but I think I can assure the hon. gentleman that no sale or lease of that elevator is going to take place unless it is the belief of the government that it will contribute to the national interest, to the interest of the consumers of domestic grain in the province of Quebec, and to facilitating the export of our grain.

Mr. Ricard: We are not satisfied with that.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): As a supplementary question I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can say that it is government policy to encourage the sale or lease by the National Harbours Board of these facilities.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I could put it this way, sir. It is the policy of the government to take every practical and sensible step to see that the maximum use is made of these facilities because, as the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, our exports are growing, our grain traffic is growing and we have to make the best possible use of the limited facilities we have.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to ask one question in that connection. Surely the minister does not suggest that private interests taking over this elevator could assure a greater put-through, which I think was the expression he used.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Throughput.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Throughput. I put it the wrong way, end to.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the same thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But surely the minister does not suggest that private interests operating this elevator would be able to do a better job than the government?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is quite probable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had a number of supplementary questions on this subject and I suggest to hon. members that we might go on to another matter.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the hon. Miss Secretary of State. Has the minister received any representations from the Minister of Agriculture for the improvement of C.B.C. programs in accordance with his suggestions to the national banquet of the curling association when he was guest speaker about a week ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, The hon. member knows he cannot ask about communications between members of the cabinet.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR UNINTERRUPTED PRESENTATION OF NATIONAL NEWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

For the past two or three evenings the broadcasting of the national news has been interrupted to give the local news of Ottawa. Could we have at least on the French network the same service as on the English network, that is the entire broadcast of the national news in the evening and the local news, if any, afterwards?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES FOR NEXT FISCAL YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister say whether we will be dealing with any of the estimates he tabled today in this session or will we deal with all of them in the next session of parliament?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on the presumption that this session will be ended very quickly I would hope they would be dealt with in the next session.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister whether the government will be seeking interim supply before the Easter recess?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it would be my hope that we would get interim supply so we would have supply before the Easter recess as it probably will extend into April.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DISTRIBUTION OF HAWTHORN-TREMBLAY REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the Secretary of State an opportunity to demonstrate whether the confidence which was expressed in her by the Minister of Industry last Friday is well founded. He informed my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena, that she had heard the representations and would act on them and make available to Indian bands across the country copies of the Hawthorn-Tremblay interim report—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that according to the rules he has to ask a question. A question should not be prefaced with a speech, however long.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether she has acted upon that request and will in fact make copies of the report available to Indian bands across the country without cost so they may study it?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would think normally this would lie within the responsibility of my seatmate, but do I take it that my hon. friend is asking a question about printing?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, perhaps if I might—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member and the minister might get together after we call orders of the day and decide whether or not they have a question.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DIRECTION OF MONETARY POLICY, CASH RESERVES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, March 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday clause 1 was being discussed.

On clause 1—

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some remarks at this stage of consideration, in committee, of Bill No. C-190, for the good reason I was not on the committee because we were entitled to only one representative, according to the proportional representation.

Obviously, I could have made those remarks on motion for second reading as others did; however, I have chosen to wait for the results of the work of the committee.

This will allow us, after going through previous studies, to make a more realistic comparison of the work done.

This is the third decennial revision since the establishment of the Bank of Canada, and we find that nothing has been changed in the essence; in its endless repetition history reminds us of the hands of a clock.

Nothing has been changed, either in the procedure applicable to special and standing committees, or in the way witnesses are called before the standing committee; it has changed even less as far as evidence is concerned, except for the more ruthless way of dismissing embarrassing witnesses.

As a matter of fact, most witnesses are carefully selected in advance by a steering committee which must take a vote. The briefs themselves are appraised in advance by that select committee before being read by the standing committee. As a result, with a few exceptions, the only documents to be submitted to the standing committee are those suitable to the financiers, that is, which are in accordance with the present financial system.

In that connection, a member of the committee to whom I was pointing out such unfairness answered me that, under the rules, the steering committee was fully empowered to decide not to discuss such or such a question or not to submit such or such brief to the standing committee. And he further added: Yes, but any brief not discussed or read in committee appears in the proceedings as an appendix:

What is the use of putting it into the report if it has not been considered? It is as if a question was filed in the archives without first having been studied at all.

Mr. Gray: May I ask the hon. member a question? Did he say that some papers had been brushed aside by the steering committee on finance, trade and economic affairs? If he has said that, he is mistaken.

Mr. Gauthier: I said that some briefs which have not been discussed in committee should appear in the report. But you will not allow such reports to be introduced and discussed in the committee.

Mr. Gray: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure my hon. colleague that when the briefs which were only included in the record, it was because those who presented them stated that they did not wish to appear before the committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would have the chairman of the committee note that the briefs I have mentioned have been discussed by the steering committee and that it was probably decided to discard them, and not to submit them, and I shall simply mention that the brief of the hon. memer for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) has probably been forgotten or set aside and will appear only in the report of the committee. But I believe it has not been thoroughly discussed in committee. This is what I would have the chairman of the committee note.

Mr. Gray: I should like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac was fully entitled to appear before the committee and to present his report. He was present often enough at the sittings to ask questions and to take part in the discussion. It was his own decision not to appear before the committee. And I think you should complain to your colleague from Compton-Frontenac on this score.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee, I think, is saying that the member for Compton-Frontenac was not entitled to present a brief to the committee because he was sitting on the committee. Is my interpretation correct?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, you will certainly allow me to answer this question. The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac had a right to sit in the committee as a regular member, to present his brief and to answer the questions that would have been asked of him about the recommendations in his brief. I want to assure the members of this committee of the whole that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac very often attended our meetings and that he worked considerably on matters in which our committee was interested.

Mr. Gauthier: I know that the member for Compton-Frontenac fulfilled his duties quite satisfactorily in the committee, but I also know that he prepared a brief which has been discussed. I am talking about the attendance, the discussion or the permission to ask questions of the witnesses, because I shall have something to say about this later.

• (3:50 p.m.)

But this brief was never presented to the standing committee, because it was decided, I think, in the special committee, that there was not sufficient time to submit it to the standing committee. They simply decided to table it.

As far as I know, that is what happened concerning this report.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, provided that questions and discussions will not take up all my time.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member should check with the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, because if he had wanted to be heard as a witness by the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, he could have testified. However, the member for Compton-Frontenac, who is here near me, did not insist to be heard.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what I discussed with the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac. Please note that he lives with me, since we share the same apartment.

The hon. member says that he did not insist?

Mr. Clermont: He did not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gauthier: I think there was no need for him to insist, Mr. Chairman, because it was a matter of tabling his report. If the committee is to be impartial, it should table this report like any other, and that is precisely why I raise the point.

In my opinion, this is the very basis of all financial dictatorship to which we are more and more subservient every day in our economic structure; furthermore, we find a second control, that is the one exercised upon those who question the witnesses and who have the favour of the special committee. Indeed, when some members of the standing committee who are known as opposed to the government group question the witnesses, a well directed artillery was put into action with a view to annihilating the evidence as much as possible. We have proof of this, and here it is. I will simply mention the most recent case which, to my mind, is the most subtle one.

In this respect, I ask the house to refer to page 125 of the provisional report that was handed to us concerning volume 49 which had not already been translated into French when motion for second reading of the bill was put —and here I wish to thank the members of the bureau for translations who have brought forward the French copies of the true proceedings—when the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, representing the Ralliement créditiste was questioning Mr. Rasminsky.

The other day I did not have those memoranda before me to start the discussion, and that is precisely why I wish, Mr. Chairman, to tell this house that I wanted to have the proof in order to point out what was happening in the committee.

After a great many sneaky detours to keep the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac from questioning Mr. Rasminsky, the chairman of the committee, realizing that he could not do otherwise, finally agreed to recognize him in the following terms, as recorded in the report:

> You may start your questioning and if the members of the committee and myself, as chairman, think you are out of order, we can resume this discussion in due course.

And a second fiddle, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) added:

> Perhaps we could simply advise Mr. Rasminsky to answer more concisely than before.

Mr. Chairman, as recorded at page 125(2) of these reports, it is there very plainly in the verbatim notes I have just read, but what do we find in the printed report? This is the reason why I do want to put the record straight at this stage.

For instance, instead of reporting the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency as saying:

> Perhaps we could simply advise Mr. Rasminsky to answer more concisely than before.

the report distributed to us says:

> We want to let Mr. Rasminsky know that it is not necessary for him to repeat what he has already said.

Mr. Chairman, in plain words instead of legal jargon, that means that Mr. Rasminsky does not have to answer the questions put to him by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac. I can assure you that such speech, from the mouth of a member who may think of himself as a genius in monetary matters, because he has studied law, are likely to deter a business operator like the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac.

In fact, if one reads impartially the questions asked by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, one notes that they are as timely and sensible as any asked by any other member.

I was getting a while ago to other remarks made by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency. Having failed to understand clearly a question put by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, Mr. Rasminsky said quite simply:

> I do not understand the question.

Once again, to make fun of the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, the hon. member for Québec-Montmorency said to Mr. Rasminsky:

> You do not have to understand.

Mr. Chairman, all those questions do something to us and when we read the evidence and see such things happening, I assure you that we are right to be ashamed sometimes.

The supremacy of the government is proclaimed in Bill No. C-190. Finally, in the proposed amendment it is said that the government will hold supreme authority over the Bank of Canada. Under the new amendment, the Bank of Canada will have to pay interest but it is not told how to act with our capital which it gives so generously to foreigners. It is asked to pay interest on foreign capital it holds in deposit, but it is not told what to do about the amounts it just gives to foreigners. Finally, all this is only a giant smoke screen to create even more confusion among the people about our monetary system and the governor of the Bank of Canada was chosen because he is an expert at confusing people.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, in this regard, since we are speaking of confusion, I am not the one who claims that the present government, as did former governments, endeavours to muddle up our monetary system in order to annoy everyone.

I should like to quote a few lines of one of the best of our outstanding members of the press gallery, Amédée Gaudreault:

> When the high priest of our Canadian monetary system Mr. Louis Rasminsky comments publicly, two or three times a year, on the state of our Canadian economy, a goodly part of his statements savours of parables. Some people—who wrote the text—find it all very clear, while others, amongst the experts I have consulted, give hesitant and diverse interpretations of the thoughts of the governor of the Bank of Canada.
> Thus, Tuesday, before the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, did Mr. Rasminsky advocate or not credit restrictions? Speaking in French, he expressed himself with elegance, calling it, for instance a "policy of more selective credit". He stated that, since 1961, the Canadian money supply has increased steadily by 8 per cent annually, and that "in the last 12 months, it has increased even more rapidly than during the three preceding years."
> The speaker, however, recognized that it was impossible to control interest rates in the last year "including those in the field of mortgages", . . .

In not being able to control them, perhaps the parties concerned were following the advice of the minister who, when speaking of interest rates, earlier, said that the increase in those rates had promoted construction.

Mr. Chairman, I think statements of that sort are completely contradictory and can only further confuse the people.

I wonder what is the reason for those attempts to create confusion. They are probably meant to baffle the enemy, in this case the people.

Indeed, the people must not know that our national bank plays second fiddle while all publicity media are used to tell them that the Bank of Canada has absolute control. The country must not know, either, that under the present system, the more it produces, the more it increases the national debt. The people must not glimpse the possibility of a monetary reform, for this would be the end of the golden age of the trusts which feed our government leaders so well.

As long as a government elected by the people does not decide to undertake financial reform on a humanitarian level, we will always remain in the orbit of high finance without any hope of breaking free.

We maintain once again that in 1967 the people will be sacrificed to the financial circles because until now, no government has had the courage to bring the financial world to heel for the people's benefit.

We understand quite well why the minister and his supporters are acting this way; it is because they have been elected by the financiers to whom they owe a debt of gratitude for their political life.

Therefore, I address myself to all those who will read the House of Commons Debates to tell them that only the people, through their vote freely given, can bring about a radical change in this perpetual debt system and bring to light the true accounting practices of the country.

Since I am not an expert on the matter, although, for a number of years I have made an effort to try and distinguish right from wrong in that phony system, in that carefully set up myth, and so as not to be called conceited, I now want to take a few minutes to quote some statements from knowledgeable people who came and testified during the last review in 1954 and who all wondered, namely with regard to the Bank of Canada: What is the Bank of Canada? What should it be? And to get a clearer picture, you can read in the 1954 proceedings, the excerpts that I have chosen, in order to hear the experts, and to try and get out of those data a few ideas for change.

If we ask ourselves what is the Bank of Canada, we will find a disguised definition in the Act itself, where it says:

> Whereas it is desirable to establish a central bank in Canada to regulate credits and currency in the best interest of the economic life of the nation, etc.—

And that is how the people came to believe: Finally, a central bank, a bank for the people will control those private companies which are the chartered banks. The Canadian people believed that.

Imagine, for instance, that I own a company in which I control only 6.6 per cent of the shares; can I seriously pretend to exercise an absolute control over that company? Unless words have lost their true meaning, you will answer me that it is absurd. However, that is what the the government would like us to believe as far as the Bank of Canada is concerned.

I do believe that honest practitioners would find it somewhat difficult to give a definition of the Bank of Canada, in order to emphasize the meaning sought by the financiers and their accomplices, the ministers of the crown.

Some compare it to a clock and Mr. Towers, a former governor of the Bank of Canada, stated, as recorded on page 32 of the 1956 committee report:

> The policy of the Bank of Canada can but influence the conditions, how could I put it? It may tend to make borrowing easier and less costly, or more difficult and more expensive.

Therefore, according to Mr. Towers, the Bank of Canada makes its control conditional upon indebtedness only. That is the very basis of our monetary system.

And it is precisely owing to that control over indebtedness that the Bank of Canada has unlimited powers to provide the chartered banks with the oportunity of getting into debt the whole country and its inhabitants. The Bank of Canada is therefore an indebtedness agency.

And, once more, I base my statement on what Mr. Towers said. As shown on page 138 of the same report, Mr. MacDonald asked him whether at the present time that power was curbed and Mr. Towers stated magnanimously that the resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada would be the only curb.

But then what are the special powers of chartered banks? They will only have to maintain an average of 6.6 per cent of their deposits in the Bank of Canada during any month of the year. I stated that it was an average, because if the term seems to be unimportant in itself, practically it has some serious consequences.

In fact, I believe that it is not wrong to say that most of the time, the reserve of chartered banks will be lower than the average standards.

Can you imagine that? When chartered banks lend you $100 for example, they will only have $6.60 in the Bank of Canada. They create out of thin air, with the stroke of a pen, the amount of $93.40 which they do not have. But they will charge you 8 and even 9 per cent, since the ceiling has been abolished, on your $100 loan.

In brief, the $6.60 will produce $8 and $9 at the end of the year, and that with the help of the Bank of Canada.

No wonder foreign financiers own 80 per cent of Canada. Finally, if we persist in keeping such a ridiculous system, in ten years or less, financiers, owing to chartered banks, will own 100 per cent of this country. A striking proof of such progress may be found in the speech delivered on February 16, 1967, by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin). Here is what he said, as can be seen on page 13124:

> True, the financiers are getting more and more prosperous but Canadians have never paid so many taxes.

Let us no longer try and persuade the public that our monetary system is the soundest of all on account of the presence of the Bank of Canada, the government's sentinel. Those who are not unduly impressed by the billions of dollars imposed by the old parties are becoming rapidly aware that this so-called sentinel is nothing but a dummy. A firm grasp of facts may be had by listening to the wishes expressed by hon. Mr. Macnaughton, former speaker of the House of Commons, at the time he was a member of the committee on banking and commerce, in 1954:

> Now and forever, I believe, it seems that if we succeeded in—

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity of taking part briefly in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-190, an act to amend the Bank of Canada Act. The points I wish to raise this afternoon do, or should fall within the jurisdiction of the Bank of Canada. First of all I would like to refer to the speech of my colleague, the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, who raised a number of pertinent questions on Friday and placed before the committee in a very capable manner some of the main issues that confront the country with regard to the Bank of Canada and its policy.

This afternoon I wish to mention, first of all, one of the matters which he raised, namely, the monetary policy of this country. I would also like to deal briefly with something which I believe should be considered as a function of the Bank of Canada, the provision of adequate public capital to meet the need of governments at all levels to provide services to the people. Finally, I would like to refer to the national debt and the continuing cost of servicing our national debt.

First of all let me deal with the question of monetary policy. Sometimes it may be a little difficult to separate monetary policy from fiscal policy, but I call attention to a question and answer found in a booklet entitled "Money Facts". It was presented to the subcommittee on domestic finance of the committee on banking and currency of the House of Representatives, 88th congress, second session, on September 21, 1964. Question number 133 is: "What is monetary policy?" This is the answer:

> Monetary policy deals with the operating instructions of the managers of our money factory. Monetary policy is what fits money into the structure of the economy. In specific terms it consists of the decisions the money managers make about the quantity of money, the price of money, and the availability of money ... In the broadest sense, monetary policy can be thought of as manipulation of the money supply in the pursuit of broad economic goals.

I suggest that the term "manipulation" should be interpreted in the best possible light because I believe it can be very properly used in this connection. The answer I have quoted points out that in a broader sense monetary policy can be considered to be a manipulation of the money supply in the pursuit of broad economic goals. I think this emphasizes the importance of the consideration of monetary policy.

Many times we are concerned about other factors and other issues. In fact I received a letter yesterday from an individual calling attention to the fact that the committee, in much of its work, dealt with issues that were on the circumference of the problem and failed to take cognizance of and deal with the very heart and core of our monetary policy. Therefore I believe we should recognize the fact that monetary policy should be dealt with in a very specific and detailed manner because until we do so we are not going to find an adequate solution to the problems that confront us in our country. This points up the importance of monetary policy and that it should be attended to.

The body responsible for monetary policy has been questioned in times past. Some who have served as minister of finance in this country have indicated that the government is not responsible for monetary policy, that this matter should be left strictly to the Bank of Canada and to the governor of the Bank of Canada. We have seen the conflicts that have arisen because of this confusion. There have been times when it seemed as though government policy approved by parliament was moving in one direction while the policy of the Bank of Canada was trying to take us in another. I suggest that this is a completely unsatisfactory situation because there should be harmony between the policies adopted by the parliament and the policies that are carried out by the Bank of Canada. Therefore it is a matter of satisfaction to note that in the bill the clear statement is made that monetary policy must be carried out by the Minister of Finance and the Bank of Canada but that in case of conflict, directives may be issued by the minister and must be observed.

The government has established its jurisdiction but the main question is whether it is prepared to assume and discharge its responsibility or whether it will continue to follow monetary policies which in the past have failed to meet the requirements of our nation. A challenge is presented to the government because the government, having made clear that it is responsible for monetary policy, will have to take the responsibility if the results are not satisfactory. On the other hand, if the policies are effective and accomplish their desired objectives a measure of credit and approval will be given to the government which implements those policies.

I should like to deal also with the representations that we in the Social Credit party have made time and time again regarding the necessity for establishing as a branch or arm of the Bank of Canada what we have termed a municipal development bank. I notice that on various occasions it has been referred to in other terms but we appreciate the fact that sometimes it has been referred to as the municipal development bank. I do not think there is any need for us to argue the necessity for urgent consideration of the needs of municipalities in providing facilities which in turn will provide services to the people over whom they have jurisdiction. I refer particularly to such institutions as hospitals, schools and other municipal capital projects which are not profit-making ventures. They exist solely to provide services to the people. I believe, therefore, that they should be set apart from other projects and enterprises whose main objective is to make a profit, although services may be provided as well.

We recognize the fact that a number of attempts have been made to meet this situation in the past. First of all, the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act was passed in 1938. Unfortunately this piece of legislation was short-lived. In fact, in 1957 the late Mr. Irwin, who was a member of the Social Credit party, asked these questions as recorded on page 389 of Hansard for October 24, 1957:

1. Has section 8 of chapter 180, R.S. Canada, 1952, Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, been invoked?

2. If so, on what date?

3. How many applications have been received from municipalities under this act since 1940?

4. How many applications prior to 1940?

The answers to those questions were given by Hon. Donald M. Fleming, then minister of finance:

1. The power of the governor in council under section 8 of chapter 183, R.S. Canada, 1952, to fix and determine a date after which no loans should be made any municipality under the act, has not been invoked.

2. See answer to No. 1.

3. As loans were discontinued after December 31, 1940, no applications have since been entertained.

We note how short-lived this legislation was. The act was passed in 1938 but was discontinued after December 31, 1940.

4. 143 applications were received, of which 110 were approved for loans.

This simply shows that even back in 1938 some attempt was made to provide assistance to municipalities. As I have pointed out, it did not last very long. All the applications that were made were not approved. We find that later the Municipal Development and Loan Fund was established. I suppose it was established as the result of an election campaign promise. We were really expecting something wonderful to happen from the implementation of that promise. However, we discovered that the fund, rather than having as an objective the assistance of municipalities, was mainly to provide job opportunities. Nevertheless, some worth-while results were achieved and it was a matter of extreme regret on the part of the municipalities that this plan was discontinued. It could have coninued to fulfil very important functions and could have had tremendously beneficial results for the municipalities and the people. For some reason or other the government felt the plan should be discontinued and therefore this legislation as well was dropped.

In view of the fact that the municipalities are providing services to the people and facilities in the form of hospitals, schools and other projects, we had insisted they should have access to capital at the cost of administration or at very low interest rates. I do not believe any valid argument can be voiced against this proposition. Considerable amounts of money are lent to countries abroad, and we are not complaining about that. The government is lending millions and millions of dollars to other countries without interest. Yet we find our municipalities trying to keep up with the demands for educational and health facilities and having to go out and borrow money at fantastic rates of interest.

I do not believe this is right. I do not believe it is proper. I do not believe it is just. We submit to the Minister of Finance once again, therefore, that a branch of the Bank of Canada be established, call it a municipal development bank or whatever you like, that will provide money for these capital social projects at the cost of administration or, if there must be an interest rate, the interest should be turned back into the consolidated revenue fund. Capital must be provided in order that our municipalities will be able to keep pace with the increasing demand for these facilities in their areas.

I believe such a program would have beneficial results. If capital at cost or a reasonable interest rate were provided, it would save the taxpayers of this country a great deal. Instead of paying twice the value of the project in accumulated interest the municipalities would be able to double the facilities that are provided. If a building were going to cost $1 million rather than paying over $2 million for it on the basis of amortization over a period of years a municipality could provide two such institutions at the same cost. In addition, such a program would release private capital for national development.

I believe this would have a beneficial effect upon our economy as well. There is a great deal of talk about the lack of adequate capital for investment and development. I submit that if municipal and other governments were taken out of the borrowing field, much of this capital would be available for productive enterprises and for the further development of our country. I have the feeling that this would tend to reduce interest rates and the capital available would be more than adequate to meet the needs of our people.

There is one other matter with which I should like to deal briefly. I refer to the national debt. We do not worry too much about the national debt, I suppose, as long as we can keep the ship sailing and as long as the people receive fairly good services. I am sure that the government is not concerned at all about the national debt. I should like to refer to a document entitled, "In Growing Debt We Trust", which was prepared by Wilfrid C. Krug, Canada Building, Windsor, Ontario. I believe this gentleman is a business consultant. This statement is made about the national debt on page 9:

> The Canadian government has used its newly acquired power over money to create a fantastic unpayable interest-bearing debt and, in recent years, has refunded the debt at much higher interest rates and extended the maturity date up to 30 years making the debt a $900 million annual burden to the taxpayer.

Of course the amount would be higher than that now because this document was prepared in 1961. I continue with the article:

• (4:30 p.m.)

> This terrific debt and its impact on society is bound to stimulate fresh and deeper investigation and lead to a higher stage of organization in the realm of money. When the Canadian people once know, as a result of the revolutionary changes in monetary matters, that it is now unnecessary for the government to pay $900 million interest on its own credit, they will demand monetary reforms. Indeed, with the power over monetary matters which the government possesses, no government in a true democracy has any moral right to bind its people for one minute longer than it holds office. It has no moral right to impose its will on the future generation compelling it to pay 5½ per cent interest on non-callable bonds for the next 30 years.

The article then goes on with this statement:

> If the government financed needed deficits and retired its maturing debt through the central bank, this would bring us back to pre-world war I days when there was practically no government debt.

In his presentation Mr. Krug referred to an interest charge of $900 million on the national debt. According to the summary of the estimates which have just been tabled this afternoon I notice that the interest on the public debt amounts to $1,273,906,400. So the figure has increased from the $900 million referred to by Mr. Krug to over $1,273 million. And I suppose the end is not yet, Mr. Chairman, because we will continue to face this problem until parliament and this government act, and act decisively, to make some fundamental changes in monetary policy to meet the needs of the present day.

There is reference in this booklet to another proposal which has been put forward by Social Credit for quite a number of years, namely, the progressive transfer of our national debt to the Bank of Canada. I believe I have previously made reference to an advertisement in a newspaper on November 28, 1966 in regard to the issue of $500 million of non-callable government of Canada bonds. The advertisement stated that the Bank of Canada had already agreed to acquire a minimum of $35 million of these 5½ per cent bonds which are due January 15, 1968. I suggest that if the Bank of Canada can assume a few million dollars of our national debt it can certainly go further and assume all of our national debt through a progressive transfer.

If I may deal with one other aspect of this problem I should like to make reference to another statement by Mr. Krug in the booklet "In Growing Debt We Trust". On page 6 there is reference to the three methods of financing deficits. First of all, the government can print $1 billion worth of bonds and sell them to non-banking groups. Second, the government can borrow the money from the private banks. Third, the government can borrow the $1 billion from the Bank of Canada which is owned by the people. This method of financing does not create an interest burden because the profits of the Bank of Canada are turned over to the government.

I am not going to say anything further on the issues I have raised today, but I believe they are very important and bear repeating. First of all, there is the question of monetary policy. Second, we must consider the provision of capital to the level that governments need to take care of their social capital requirements. Third, we should take care of our national debt by transferring it to the Bank of Canada and liquidating it, thus saving the taxpayers over $1,273 million. I believe that the people of Canada would prefer to invest in the development of this country rather than in our national debt. If this policy were followed, Mr. Chairman, and our national debt transferred to the Bank of Canada and eliminated, then our people would invest in the development of our country and we would see tremendous advances right across the nation.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the measure before us is a unique reminder of another parliament and of another prime minister, the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett who, leading the government of his day, placed upon the statute books the Bank of Canada Act. The action that his government took was designed to strengthen the hand of the federal government and its control over monetary policy within the nation. The result was to provide parliament with a new weapon to influence financial and economic conditions. That government, led by Calgary's most noted son, wanted to preserve the heritage and resources of Canada for Canadians. It wanted to make sure that the future of this country would not be left to chance or whim.

I recall the origin of that legislation. I recall how it was labelled by some as so much nonsense and heresy. That image has now largely faded, but today we are faced with a Prime Minister and a government which, by their actions during their term of office and by the deeds they have committed, have placed this nation in the economic jungle of an entirely new era.

One need only consider for a moment the economic conditions prevailing with the nation today to realize the ground that has been lost under the present administration led by the Prime Minister. One might well ask the question: Where has he led us? The answer to that question is written in privation, hardship and opportunity denied. Indeed, the monetary, fiscal and taxation policies of this government have led to the greatest period of labour unrest that this nation has ever witnessed. The result of these policies has been evidenced as well by the steadily increasing cost of production and the lack of that productivity which is essential to the welfare of all our people. Not only that, sir, but there has been increase after increase in the cost of living, increases taking place consecutively from month to month and year to year. Canadians now have the highest cost of living in the entire history of the nation. All Canadians have had to pay a fearful price because of the role played by this government. In addition, taxes have increased beyond anything visualized even a few years ago.

Why have these things occurred if not as a result of the callous, careless abandonment of sound economic policies on the part of the Prime Minister and his ministers opposite, who like to plead innocent? But events from day to day tell a different story. We have tight money in this country today, the highest interest rates in our history and the highest cost of living. The Minister of Finance smiles when these things are mentioned as tough they do not work hardship on the people of this country.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member whether he has noticed a very rapid drop in interest rates in the last few weeks or whether he is still thinking about the situation as it was some months ago?

Mr. Nasserden: Even today, in the House of Commons, one of the minister's colleagues in answer to a question intimated that the increase in the cost of C.M.H.C. loans brought about by the government was something to brag about. It is an indication of the attitude taken by hon. members opposite as they try to come to grips with the problems which face the economy today. I hesitate to believe that ministers opposite are so ignorant as to fail to realize the impact their policies have had upon our economy and upon the future prospects of this nation.

Incidentally, I hope the minister is not taking this too hard, but I see he has left the chamber. I thought he could take it better than that. But there are other ministers present and I say to them that Canadians will have to pay a colossal price for this carelessness. Future generations will pay and pay and pay because of the failure of the government to follow sound economic policies suitable for this day and age. This government, led by the Prime Minister, has set in motion a sinister, creeping phenomenon which could be described as a disease capable of weakening and eventually paralysing productivity in this nation. It might even threaten the identity of Canada itself.

Our industrial potential cannot help but be retarded and a large part of the Canadian heritage is bound to be lost for future generations. The government made decisions. The government set out on a deliberate course designed to bring about rising interest rates. It succeeded in those efforts. Despite what the Minister of Finance said a few moments ago, interest rates were never higher than they are today. The government opposite ignored the warnings of the opposition. It ignored warnings from its own ranks. It created a crisis with regard to housing in this country.

I say the blame for all this rests upon the shoulders of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is they who are responsible for the tight money situation which has bedevilled the housing picture from one end of Canada to the other. The Minister of Finance does not like to hear these things. I was about to say that he had left the chamber while I was discussing them in order to show his contempt.

Mr. Winters: He had other reasons.

Mr. Nasserden: Even though the minister does not like to hear these things, they are part of the heritage he is giving to Canadians, and the time which was consumed in the Liberal caucus in order to subdue the more enlightened members of that caucus in connection with interest rates has had a serious and inescapable effect on the money markets of our nation.

The opposition parties were ready to deal with these problems. But the Prime Minister wanted to point with pride to the pansies around him and declared that no division of opinion existed in his party. Canadians had to wait while this domestic quarrel within the Liberal caucus resolved itself. Thus it was that the economic situation in Canada worsened. Tight money and rising interest rates are part and parcel of the consequences of actions taken by the government. The government made a further decision which again was a delaying manoeuvre to cover up the cowardice of the administration in the field of consumer loan controls and legislation. Here again, the determination of priorities is revealed as one of the prime weaknesses of the government led by the present Prime Minister.

The Bank of Canada Act reminds us all that monetary control is the responsibility of the government, a responsibility which it cannot shirk if the best use is to to be made of the resources of our nation and if the greatest possible development is to take place. The hon. member who has lately resumed his seat expressed the opinion that the conditions which now prevail will continue to prevail and perhaps get even worse unless parliament acts and acts decisively. I say to him and to his group: Why does he not act decisively together with the other members of his party? Time and time again they have assisted a government that is guilty of the errors which have brought about high interest rates, tight money and rising living costs.

Mr. Patterson: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Nasserden: As soon as I have finished I will be glad to answer any question which the hon. member wishes to ask.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nasserden: On the other hand, I would be glad to answer the question now.

Mr. Patterson: I was about to ask the hon. member whether he does not recall the time when the same group maintained in office a government of which he was a supporter. We supported that government in the interest of stability until the people had an opportunity of assessing the work which was being done and the people decided that his government was not doing the job.

Mr. Nasserden: I welcome that question. At that time, when he and his friends supported those who now comprise the official opposition, we did not have the high interest rates which prevail today. There was no tight money situation such as exists today. We did not face the high cost of living that we face today. We did not have a crisis on housing such as exists today.

Mr. Cashin: You just had unemployment.

Mr. Nasserden: The hon. member and the group he represents have given support to a government which perpetrated these crimes against the Canadian people.

Mr. Patterson: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he remembers the time when this party voted for an amendment submitted by the official opposition, an amendment which, if carried, would have defeated the government because it was a vote on the budget. But so many of his hon. friends were out of the house that the amendment was defeated.

Mr. Nasserden: I do not remember anything of the sort.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cashin: You were not here.

Mr. Nasserden: Everyone in this country knows that time and time again members of that party have looked across the chamber and counted the members to see whether or not the government would be defeated.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Patterson: That is not true.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, don't you think that reveals something in regard to the sincerity of these hon. gentlemen when they talk about the monetary policy of the government and the responsibility of parliament? How can parliament act decisively if a certain group in this house reneges on its responsibilities in the manner that it has done so many times during the last three years? People across the country have come to believe that the Social Credit party is even more liberal than the Liberals themselves, and it is a sorry day for Canada when we consider that fact.

I had not expected to be drawn into this byplay this afternoon. I wanted to draw attention to the fact that the government's monetary policy has been lacking in that decisiveness and purpose which are so essential if this nation is to prosper and if the heritage to be handed down to future generations is to be what we would like it to be. I wanted to bring attention to those shortcomings of the government that we on this side of the house see and to express the hope that even now it is not too late for the ministers to mend some of their ways and change the course which they set out upon so carelessly and so wantonly ever since they first took office.

When we think of monetary and taxation policies and the double-barrelled effect they have on the economy, we cannot help but condemn the government in the strongest possible terms not only because of the things it did not do but because of the deliberate decisions it took which have resulted in the conditions I have described this afternoon. It is a noted fact that ministers have been warned time and again, not only by the opposition in parliament but by many great trade organizations across the country, by businessmen and business institutions, but they have turned a deaf ear to all pleas and have continued on their way carelessly, wantonly, irresponsibly, frittering away part of that heritage which should be the right of Canadians when one considers the tremendous wealth of our country and the tremendous opportunities that are ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the speech made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley and I must say that on this issue the hon. member for Fraser Valley and the hon. member for Kootenay West are two hearts that beat as one.

Mr. Korchinski: Lonely hearts.

Mr. Herridge: I take this opportunity to speak this afternoon because I want to take advantage of Social Credit principles. I know the hon. gentleman will send out hundreds of copies of today's Hansard in which my speech will be included, at no cost to me.

Mr. Knowles: On a debt free basis.

Mr. Herridge: Quite correct. This bill, Mr. Chairman, seems to include amendments that provide for the improved administration of the Bank of Canada. However, in my opinion it completely fails to get to the heart of the question, which is to give the Bank of Canada authority to provide the social capital required by the federal, provincial and municipal governments for the building of hospitals, universities, schools and other publicly owned projects about which we talk at such great length in this house.

I think clause 6 of the bill provides the major amendment to the Bank of Canada Act. The explanatory note says of it:

> This amendment defines the relationship between the government and the bank in regard to monetary policy. It makes clear that there is a process of continuous consultation between the government and the bank in this regard and provides a procedure whereby, in the event of a disagreement between the government and the bank, the government may issue a directive to the bank as to the monetary policy that it is to follow. The amendment also eliminates the power the governor now has to veto any action or decision of the board of directors or the executive committee.

The responsibility of the government for monetary policy having been established, that is why some of us at this end of the chamber are appealing to the Minister of Finance this afternoon to deal with the heart of the matter and provide for the issuing of funds by the Bank of Canada.

I was very disturbed the other evening to hear a report on television that we borrow approximately $900 million a year from United States sources, which credit is entirely based on their knowledge of our natural resources, industrial equipment, our capacity to produce, and our integrity and willingness to repay the loans in question. I speak with a great deal of conviction on this question because I am rather conservative in finance. I was brought up to waste not and want not, and never to buy anything unless I had the cash to pay for it. I believe that two and two make four in finance, and I believe this is one field in which we can establish that Canada is a sovereign state. All we are asking is that Canada become a sovereign nation by giving the Bank of Canada the right to issue the capital for the social investments I have mentioned.

It may interest the Minister of Finance to know that the provincial convention of the British Columbia Liberal party unanimously adopted a resolution in 1932 urging not only the issuance of currency and credit by the Bank of Canada but also the nationalization of the banks of Canada. That resolution was sponsored by the late Senator Gerry McGeeer and the late Right Hon. Ian McKenzie. I sat in that convention beside those two gentlemen and they were very active in getting the resolution adopted, a resolution which was actually more radical by far than what we propose this afternoon.

During the provincial election of 1933 the late Senator McGeer published a pamphlet entitled, "The Conquest of Poverty Through the Reform of the Banking System," which was distributed wholesale in British Columbia. It urged the reform of the banking system and indicated that these were the views of the Liberal party at that time. This, Mr. Chairman, is a story which has been told repeatedly in this house in other parliaments and also in the legislatures. President Lincoln, during one of his campaigns, recognized the fact that governments are controlled by those people who have the right to issue money. Thomas Jefferson, who was the first Secretary of State of the United States, once said:

I was duped ... by Secretary of Treasury (Hamilton) and was made a tool for the forwarding of his schemes, not then sufficiently understood by me ... The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the government to whom it rightfully belongs.

That is what we are arguing this afternoon. I remember that a former prime minister of Great Britain, Mr. Gladstone, also recognized this fact. I remember that on one occasion, Mr. Woodsworth, speaking in this house on February 22, 1934, as recorded at page 834 of Hansard for that date, had this to say:

I would urge today that the power of finance in Canada is almost supreme. I think I am not going too far to say that in practice it is greater than that of the government. In recent years some of us have been almost shocked when we learned that the army and the military clique in Japan had never been brought under the control of the parliament of that country. Well, I take it that in Canada the financial powers have never been brought under parliamentary control. Even as far back as the time of Mr. Gladstone I find that there was a dawning recognition of the tremendous power of the banks.

Reading from Morley's Life of Gladstone I find a statement from Mr. Gladstone:

"From the time I took office as Chancellor of the Exchequer I began to learn that the state held, in the face of the bank and the city, an essentially false position as to finance. The hinge of the whole situation was this: The government itself was not to be a substantive power in matters of finance, but was to leave the money power supreme and unquestioned. In the conditions of that situation I was reluctant to acquiesce, and I began to fight against it by financial self-assertion from the first ... I was tenaciously opposed by the governor and the deputy governor of the bank"—

• (5:00 p.m.)

That is the Bank of England.

—"who had seats in parliament, and I had the city for an antagonist on almost every occasion."

[Mr. Herridge.]

On the next page Mr. Woodsworth went on to say:

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that unless some body, either the newly appointed bank—

The Bank of Canada.

—or the government, itself exercises what is here termed sovereign authority, we are not going to secure the full control of credit, and are not going to be able to control price levels. I think that nothing short of that is going to help us in a material way to solve our present difficulties.

For many years in this house the late William Irving made speeches which clearly indicated the international control over the banking system of the world, largely by European and United States banks. On June 27, 1938, as found on page 4271 of Hansard, Mr. M. J. Coldwell made some comments during a discussion of a bill to amend the Bank of Canada Act. These quotations indicate that for years and years, according to Mr. Woodsworth's speeches and the speeches of other progressive members of this house, this party had advocated the very policy which has been advocated this afternoon. This is what Mr. Coldwell said:

This measure can be of great practical importance. It depends on how the new Bank of Canada functions and to what extent it is made an instrument of public policy. I should like to think that just as in Sweden, New Zealand and other countries where the central bank is under national ownership and control, the Bank of Canada will play an important part in preventing booms on the upswing and deflationary depressions on the downswing. I believe that a central bank publicly owned and properly operated can do much in these directions.

During Mr. Coldwell's speech Mr. R. Reid, who was the Liberal member for New Westminster at that time, expressed his endorsation of this principle. That was during the days when the Liberal party in British Columbia was all for nationalization of the banks. Mr. Coldwell went on to indicate how progressive members of this house had since 1924 urged the establishment of a nationally owned central bank which would be responsible for the issuing of money.

I also find that when speaking in this house on March 13, 1944, the present member for Winnipeg North Centre endorsed the same principle. At that time he was speaking about the social capital that would be required after the war was ended for the building of various public projects for the federal government, the provincial governments and the municipalities. This is what he had to say:

First, there is the fact that the bill gives the Industrial Development Bank—

The Industrial Development Bank, of course, is an agency of the Bank of Canada.

—or shall I say, the industrial development wicket of the Bank of Canada, no power of issue. To my way of thinking, as other hon. members who have spoken have pointed out, that is a serious shortcoming.

Secondly, I would point out that the amount of money to be provided under the terms of this bill for industrial development is hopelessly inadequate to meet the problem which it proposes to attack, namely, that of sufficient assistance in post-war production—to maintain a high level of economic activity, a high level of industrial production.

Since that time members of this party have continually supported this principle and have urged the government to take action along these lines. I will summarize my remarks. I approve of the remarks made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. I will not repeat some of the material he presented to the house during his excellent speech. I do not always call his speeches excellent but this time I quite agree with every word he said.

If the Bank of Canada is given the right to issue the capital required for social investment by federal, provincial or municipal governments, if the Industrial Development Bank is given the same right through the Bank of Canada for the provision of capital for smaller industries, if the private banks of Canada continue to fill the short-term financial needs of corporations, companies and individuals and if, underlying that, the credit unions provide the capital for investment in consumer goods, in my opinion we will have established the sovereign right of Canadians to control their social capital requirements. We will have established Canada definitely as a sovereign state, we will have established the value of our resources, industrial and other developments, and we will have provided a sound credit foundation for the purchase of consumer goods.

In my opinion, if we could get the minister to agree to the policies expressed this afternoon, we would have a sound banking system. I know the minister is an honourable gentleman and as I look at him it seems to me that he is almost persuaded by the remarks made by speakers this afternoon. I had intended to say more at this time, but obviously there is no necessity. In concluding my brief remarks on this subject I should like to ask the minister to tell us why the Bank of Canada and the Industrial Development Bank cannot be banks of issue to provide the social development capital which is necessary for public projects in this country for federal, provincial and municipal governments. Before this debate terminates I should like the minister to give his opinion in respect of the representations which have been made to him this afternoon, because we believe this is the basis which will enable us to place our financial system in this country on a sound footing, provide for the development of hospitals, schools, roads, universities, and even provide the minister with an opportunity to pay to Premier Bennett of British Columbia the $100 million he is seeking to make up for the deficit in the building of the dams on the Columbia river.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to say a few words this afternoon on the banking system, the Bank of Canada, its aims, its principles, its achievements and the prerogatives it should make use of.

The Bank of Canada is only playing half its role. The Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) and most hon. members do absolutely nothing and let things drift, they do not want to straighten out the abnormal economic situation which now prevails throughout the country.

The Bank of Canada Act is the greatest piece of legislation, one concerning which the highest authorities must make use of their powers. The Bank of Canada does not play its part and nobody in the house is concerned about it, except the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), whom I wish to congratulate, and the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) and also those who understand the meaning and the duties of a national bank. And now, Mr. Chairman, this is the point I want to make.

We can see very few members in the house. In fact, we are talking before empty seats whereas the legislation in question has indescribable importance.

The house is ready to let everything go. as in the past. Private institutions have been entrusted with such controls and sovereignty as belong to the state. The sovereignty that should rest with the Minister of Finance was given to private establishments, and people do not give a tinker's dam.

When the Minister of Finance needs money to conduct the nation's business, he has to go on bended knees to the private finance companies to whom we have surrendered our sovereignty. Such is the responsibility of every member of this house.

We would have a great deal to say. We could speak for hours on end about the improvements which could be made in the Bank of Canada. But some Canadians elected by the people and answerable to them do not care at all about the population. As a matter of fact, they submit to a few financiers who control the finances of our country at the expense of the people. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to define the nature of the Bank of Canada and its responsibilities; I want to bare all this before parliament, before the Canadian people and members of this house who seem more or less interested in dealing with the most urgent problems facing a country.

Mr. Chairman, the Bank of Canada was established under the act of 1934 by the Canadian parliament, with a view to controlling credit and currency in the best interests of the Canadian economy. That is not what it is doing. That is not the responsibility entrusted to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General. He is not the one to carry out the responsibility which is supposed to be his and this parliament, which is nevertheless sovereign, does not entrust him with it.

Members of parliament are shirking their responsibilities. Now, I am telling you, before this parliament, before this house, before the French Canadian nation, that one of these days they will have to assume them. That is why they were elected. Again I say that this is one of the greatest responsibilities they have to exercise in this parliament, yet they refuse to do so.

What I am saying is very important, because I am speaking of the very purpose for which the Bank of Canada was created.

Can the minister define money, credit, the economic life, the nation? Four words: credit, money, economic life and nation. Four words to remember when discussing the Bank of Canada Act and the chartered banks and near banks act.

We have asked a lot of questions to the finance, trade and economic affairs committee, but 99 per cent of the answers given were evasive and were not directly related to the questions asked. They are afraid to tell the nation the facts; they do not want the Canadian people to know the financial situation; they do not want to come out and say what are the rules behind this financial system; they do not want to explain to the people what is finance, what is wrong with the economic system and the things which should be rectified in this system.

The Minister of Finance himself may be afraid to answer. As a matter of fact, in answering questions, he beats around the bush as much as he can. I have heard him in the committee, Mr. Chairman.

What is a nation? A definition can be given. The Bank of Canada is responsible to the nation. All corporations, whether banking, industrial or commercial, financial or agricultural, religious, university or college, municipal, provincial or federal, all are responsible to the nation.

These bodies have a right to live, not only to incur debts, to tax the people, imposing tax upon tax until the situation is untenable. These bodies have the right to live, and each individual also has the right to live.

One must mingle with all the different classes of society in order to see that our society is badly organized, and that the extremities of our economic body are diseased because the bloodstream of our economic structure does not reach all the limbs. And therein lies our duty: to see to it that the bloodstream of our economic structure reaches all spheres of society and all areas of the economy. The blood pumped by the economic body which is the Bank of Canada must reach all the limbs of our society, so that the Canadians may live adequately and honourably in a country overflowing with riches. But we are evading our responsibilities.

Is not the nation made up of all the human beings in the country? What do people across the world mean when they speak of Canada, Mr. Chairman? Do they mean its population or the land itself, its natural resources or its inhabitants? Private and public institutions succeed each other. Are they not merely the instruments of administration, of production of goods and services, of material or intellectual assets or possessions belonging to the individuals who make up the nation?

Are not money and credit instruments of exchange, of trade, serving economic life and representing the value of the goods and services exchanged between the individuals of whom the nation is composed?

If we started by assessing the situation, the words we use when considering and discussing our legislative reforms, we might have a better chance to arrive at more encouraging, more positive and progressive results.

Why not determine exactly what currency is, so that we might know where we are going with that. What is credit? Why not issue some? And why not create currency, which is so necessary to the economic life of the country, which has the power to create and manage credit? It is the duty of the Minister of Finance and of the hon. members to place the currency in the hands of institutions which need it to develop the country.

Let us say that, at a certain moment in our economic life, we put $5,000 in circulation. Those $5,000 constitute Canadian currency, if they are deposited in the branch of a chartered bank. But, they are no longer Canadian currency if they are put in the branch of a trust company or a credit union. They are not Canadian currency any more. A loan of money made by a chartered bank represents a tax increase on Canadian currency, on the whole economic life of the nation. A loan of money granted by a Caisse populaire or by a finance company represents only a transfer of funds between two corporations.

Everything is so thoroughly mixed up, confused and complicated that the economists and the bankers themselves no longer understand anything at all. They no longer will take the risk of defining the words: money, credit, nation, Canadian currency, money supply, total money or credit supply in Canada. Questions were asked in committee and the Minister of Finance and all the members of the committee know that questions were asked to find out the nature of money, of currency in circulation, what constitutes the money supply and so forth.

If one is to understand the monetary system well, one must understand that. And it is so complicated a matter that it is almost incomprehensible.

First of all, there is what university scholars call small coinage: cents, nickels, dimes, quarters and fifty-cent pieces. That is the metal money of which, all told, there is almost $300 milion worth in circulation across Canada. Then we have the Bank of Canada notes in denominations of one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred and one thousand dollar bills. They bear the signature of the governor of the Bank of Canada. They represent approximately $2,700 million.

There, then, is all the visible money in Canada: $300 million in metal coins and $2,700 millions in notes, for a grand total of $3 billion in legal money issued by the Bank of Canada in circulation throughout Canada. Now, when we speak of the Canadian money in circulation, we claim it amounts to $21 billion. Where do those $18 billion come from. I put that question to the Minister of Finance. In addition to the $3 billion in real, metal and paper money. This is where scholars and economists start mumbling and each of them has a different story.

Who, then, created the $18 billion of Canadian money supply, if we have, in fact, only $3 billion in money coined by the government and supplied by the Bank of Canada? There again, economists mumble, and to realize it, you only have to re-read the many excerpts of their official evidence given before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, as recorded in some 20 reports of proceedings distributed to each member and each minister.

The Bank of Canada has been in operation for 30 years. It is time to put some order in our monetary system. They do not yet know what is credit, what is the money supply, what is Canadian money or who prints the $18 billion in excess of the $3 billion that can be seen.

I am not saying that does not make sense, I am only saying that we do not know what we should know. Why is the money deposited with a trust company, a finance company or a credit union not included in the money supply? That is another mystery that could not be solved in committee. Evasive answers only were given. And yet, we were there to enlighten the people, to put before them the results of the monetary systems as they are. And such information was denied us.

Therefore what is the purpose of the Bank of Canada? Why do the banks have the power to create billions of dollars worth of deposits on bills or bonds? Why does not the government give them the power at least to create enough so that our provinces and all our public institutions would not have to go to foreign countries to get funds?

That is the important matter that should be examined and that I would like you to see and settle it once and for all.

Take for instance companies, municipalities or provinces. Why are those guarantees sufficient when foreigners lend us money on our own credit? Why are those credits good for securing foreign currency? Why are they not good enough to enable the government to capitalize sufficiently, with these same credits, to finance those same agencies?

This is a big question that was never understood, that neither the Grits nor the Tories ever accepted to settle in this parliament. No one in this parliament ever accepted to settle or to attempt to solve this matter. Some day it will have to be dealt with.

This maze of credit money, financing, and company shares gives rise to a lot of questions. There are so many weird intricacies about the various kinds of reserves, with different rates. with reserve bases being used as guarantees for all sorts of savings, with various basic rates for reserves to insure the circulation of currency, of chartered banks accounting system.

And this mystery will still remain, in spite of all the efforts of a few honest members to obtain some explanations on those basic matters of our economic life, on our monetary and financial systems, on our system of currency and credit, on our banking, business and government systems; on our system of currency and credit, share capital and bonds; on our system of taxation and cheque circulation; on our system of income, expenditure and profits among individuals, families, companies and institutions.

This could be quite simple, if we took the trouble, Mr. Chairman. The matter would be quickly settled once it had been decided to administer the Canadian nation for the benefit of its people, of 20,400,000 human beings, rather than for a few institutions or corporations which control the economy of Canada, because they have been granted the right to exercise such control.

So we must add that one of the objectives of the Bank of Canada is to look after the question of money, credit and even capital, in the best interests of our economic life. The bank will have to see to it that it will never be necessary, from now on, for the provinces and municipalities to go to foreign countries to borrow, by way of issuing bonds at a high interest rate and on a long-term basis, to finance Canadian institutions.

The Bank of Canada, on the guarantee of our natural resources and Canadian labour, should be able to facilitate all issues of capital in the form of bonds that foreign banks are willing to issue on any kind of guarantee.

If we were looking after our own business, we would be able to guarantee all those goods and services the population needs so badly and we could thus remain masters in our own home, without giving up everything to strangers.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Why should Canada not be in a position to produce its own capital, as it is capable of producing its goods, especially as far as municipal and provincial services are concerned? The Bank of Canada should issue all the money needed for the progressive administration of our municipalities, provinces and school boards.

• (5:30 p.m.)

There is no need, Mr. Chairman, to go to New York, Paris or elsewhere in order to create new bonds guaranteed by our resources and our people capable of producing and of paying taxes for the repayment and interests or administration costs.

Such is the aim, Mr. Chairman, of a resolution I shall move in due time before this Parliament, with the support of a colleague.

Thus, the Bank of Canada will finance provinces and municipalities and it will be a right and an obligation on the part of chartered banks to finance individuals and private enterprise, according to the present system.

We do not intend to deprive the chartered banks of any of the existing methods, but the duty of the existing chartered banks lies in the financing of private enterprise. On the other hand, it is up to the state, to the government, in brief to the hon. members to see to it that the Bank of Canada should finance other people's property. In so doing we would be improving the lot of the Canadian nation.

I already said, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat it, that it is not power we are seeking, but monetary reforms. We know that the few people who have at least had the benefit of catching a glimpse of our financial system, who have some idea of what the Bank of Canada stands for and of what it can do for people and for this nation, are calling upon the Bank of Canada to act are demanding a reform of our statutes, are asking for the necessary amendments so that the Bank of Canada may regain control of its money and its credit in order to finance all our public institutions as well as the future ones which will have to be developed.

If the Canadian people are able to produce, the Minister of Finance, with parliament's permission, is certainly able to take steps to finance the present production, even the future production of this country. We are certainly able, Mr. Chairman, to eliminate in a few years the dreadful public debt that is crushing the people and obligating a nation to pay ever increasing taxes which they find revolting. Mr. Chairman, it is those taxes that the people find sickening.

In fact, one needs only to look at what is happening to see how much the people are disgusted.

If, across Canada, there are so many endless strikes—one strike follows another and one is not settled that ten others break out—this is due to dissatisfaction. Nobody tries to solve the economic problem.

Mr. Chairman, at each federal-provincial conference it seems that the provincial premiers claim as strongly as possible money from the Minister of Finance, as well as action; in brief, they are asking for the necessary capital to finance their respective provinces. However, no one demands monetary reform, because this is not deemed proper. If the Minister of Finance has not taken such steps it is because, to his mind, it is better to maintain the status quo, to let the debt go on snowballing and Canada getting poorer and poorer. As Canadians develop their country, we allow those institutions to enter to their credit the assets of the citizens, that is the assets of the country and put the country and its population on the liability side. Here are responsibilities we have not been able to assume.

Monetary capital is only the expression of the economic capital itself. Money and credit are only words meaning goods and services that citizens barter. Why should we lack tokens and symbols, when we possess in fact plenty of goods?

Why should we reach the acme of ignorance and ignominy and ask other countries for the authority to create in our stead the capital we require? Yet, such is the current situation. The Minister of Finance may find this funny but it will not be quite as funny, when the revolution is here and he is asked whether he has taken his responsibilities.

If our country has reached its centennial, hence its majority, and if it now has a literate population of over 20 million, there is no valid reason for us to remain dependent on neighbouring or far-off countries simply to create our monetary capital. Mr. Chairman, we have our accountants, our bankers, our Canadian ministers, in short, our own parliament, who are capable of determining the economic, monetary or administrative symbols of all the private or public wealth our country is capable of producing. Are Canadians unable to produce, Mr. Chairman, in pursuing their daily tasks, whether they are material, intellectual, spiritual, or if you prefer, cultural activities? Is the government unable to control the Canadian economy, so that each citizen can normally enjoy a pleasant life and a reasonable standard of living which the country can afford?

One can hardly say, Mr. Chairman, that there is a lack of production in Canada. It will reach $62 billion in 1967. Perhaps $38 or $39 billion worth of goods will be sold, but $20 odd billion worth of goods will remain in warehouses and on shelves, unsold, because available means will not have been taken, because the government will not bring about the necessary reforms in the Bank of Canada, because they do not want to take the necessary steps so that the Bank of Canada can distribute the goods and services that the people of Canada are asking for, goods and services which have been produced to meet the needs of the Canadian people. I think it is a crime that goods should be allowed to remain like this in warehouses. I think it is also a crime that some people should be jobless and drawing social welfare allowances and unemployment insurance benefits which, in fact, are paid at the expense of the working man.

To give to the unemployed, the working man is robbed, and it is a crime, Mr. Chairman, to tolerate such a state of affairs in a country where the economic situation could be adjusted so easily.

I could go on and point out many other things, Mr. Chairman, but I will close with these few words.

The role which a central bank should play inside and outside Canada, Mr. Chairman, is this.

If the Bank of Canada fulfilled its duty, if it discharged its responsibilities, we would not be ashamed, humiliated and accordingly burdened with a drop of our Canadian dollar below its par value of 100 cents per dollar. We would not be faced with 7 and 8 cents cuts such as we witness today.

Let the Bank of Canada play its part fully, concerning foreign countries, private banks, the federal government and the provincial government; then, no more will be asked, everyone will be satisfied and the private banks will find it easier to play their own part, according to the economic needs of private individuals and private institutions.

Mr. Chairman, the Bank of Canada is 33 years old. For 33 years it experimented, searching for balance, for its own purpose in the changing pattern of economic life in Canada among the nations of the world.

It is a positive role that the Bank of Canada will be called upon to play in the future, within as well as outside Canada.

Therefore, we must take advantage of this decennial revision of the Bank Act, the act concerning the near banks and the act of the Bank of Canada, because upon them revolves the whole economic life of the nation and that of all the Canadian institutions as well as the economic life of each and every one of its 20,400,000 citizens in the 4,800,000 families or homes in Canada.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, in Canada there are 20,400,000 people or 4,800,000 families consisting of two or several people. There are 400,000 institutions of all kinds of which 80,000 limited companies, 800 large companies or corporations which are listed on the stock exchange, eight chartered banks—we shall have ten in a short while—and only one Bank of Canada which must control and reduce the credit of the nation, which must give—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time is expired. I recognize now the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, today we are studying amendments to the Bank of Canada Act.

The Bank of Canada might be called the brain that directs the whole economy in this country, that should direct the monetary resources toward all areas across the country, at all levels of activity, and see to it, from an economic standpoint, that the country may expand and progress. Is this the case today?

Mr. Chairman, whenever we consider the changes to be made to the Bank of Canada—the computer of our economy as a whole and of its development—the first question that comes to mind is how those in charge of our monetary system look at its management and orientation. Knowing that when all is said and done, it is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) who—and the more so under the new legislation—controls our monetary system in general, that he can give orders to the governor of the Bank of Canada and thus influence our economy, we wonder how the Minister of Finance reacts or thinks in relation to our monetary system.

As recorded in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, page 2998, I directed to the Minister of Finance the following question:

[Mr. Latulippe.]

If you have authority over the volume of money supply, on what do you base your decisions to set the money supply at a given level?

Please note the importance of the question, Mr. Chairman, since I had earlier asked the minister who had authority over the volume of money supply, that is, how much money there should be in circulation in Canada. Well, since it is the minister who has the authority to decide how much money will be put in circulation in Canada, I asked him:

—on what do you base your decisions to set the money supply at a given level?

And what did the minister answer? Something out of this world. Mr. Chairman, the hon. members of this house should be overwhelmed with admiration at the minister's guilelessness, because his answer was really out of this world. As a matter of fact, this is what he replied, as recorded in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, on page 2998:

When a Governor of the Bank of England, Lord Norman, was once asked that question by J. M. Keynes, he said:

"I do it by feel and flair."

Indeed. So, I asked the Minister of Finance the following question:

—on what do you base your decisions to set the money supply at a given level?

I say to the Minister of Finance: You are responsible for determining how much money will be put in circulation in Canada, and the minister agrees to that. And then, I asked him:

On what do you base your decisions to set the money supply at a given level?

And in reply the minister quotes the answer given by Lord Norman, Governor of the Bank of England:

"I do it by feel and flair."

If I have any feeling of love for my fellow citizens, I will see to it that a greater money supply is put in circulation so that they will be able to buy what is being produced.

That is one feeling. Therefore, if he gets up in bad humour one morning, with a feeling of hatred, for even the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General may have different moods, according to his feelings, well, he will withdraw the money from circulation to create hardship for his fellow citizens, and this according to his feelings. Such feelings may be of varying degrees.

But according to his feelings the minister decides how much money will be put in circulation in Canada. The minister also says "by flair". So then we must have a minister with flair.

I should like to know how the right hon. prime minister proceeds when he has to appoint a Minister of Finance. What kind of tests must the hon. minister undergo in order to prove whether he has flair or not? For the money supply in circulation in Canada increases according to the minister's flair, whether he is keen-scented or not.

The minister admitted that himself; I am coming back to the question I asked him on page 2998 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 43 of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs:

—on what do you base your decisions to set the money supply at a given level?

Here is what the hon. minister answered:

When a Governor of the Bank of England, Lord Norman, was once asked that question by J. M. Keynes, he said:

"I do it by feel and flair".

The minister said that, not I. One must have flair, be shrewd, be far-seeing, in order to decide how much money will circulate in Canada.

Industries may produce, but that is of no account, it is not the minister's flair. Numerous workers may be working, that is of no account, it is the feeling of the minister that counts. In March or in April, when flowers begin to bloom, feelings are better then, so the money supply is being increased. Comes autumn and the yellowing of grass and the money supply is decreased because all that may influence the feelings of the Minister of Finance. That scientists and technicians find new production methods is not important. It is the flair of the minister that counts. His flair.

Mr. Chairman, where can we go with our monetary system if our Minister of Finance has decided to rely on his flair and feel?

An hon. Member: What if he has no flair?

Mr. Grégoire: Somebody is asking me: what if he has no flair? Well, if he has no flair, we will sail on the rough waters of our economic system like a rudderless ship.

Mr. Chairman, the answer given by the Minister of Finance shows that our economic system has no scientific basis, as it should. Instead, it is based on chance, on flair, on feel. It has no scientific basis and its only purpose is nothing less than to satisfy the hunger for profits of a group of big bankers who become richer because they know that the Minister of Finance, the present incumbent or the others, has no flair or feel. This is the reason why our economic system is drifting along because our system is unscientific, unrealistic and does not take into account the technological development and progress but relies on the minister's insight and feelings.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, you will agree that something must be done about it. Do you think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is the only one to have such opinions?

I should like to quote, in the first place, another answer of the Minister of Finance when I asked him insistently as shown on page 2999 of the same booklet and I quote:

Mr. Sharp, I am not talking about a budget which is a forecast of what is to come, but I am talking about the volume of money. I wonder if you take into consideration when you make your forecast the actual situation in Canada; I mean the total goods and services available which is, in fact, what is behind the money supply. Does it become a question of judgment or a question of statistics?

Then, the Minister of Finance replied:

Every time the Bank of Canada operates in the money market in its day to day transactions, it is having to make a judgment not only about the quantity of money and credit available now, but it has to make a judgment on whether the existing situation is going to be sufficiently encouraging or discouraging, as the case may be,—

Again, the point in case is simply chance, Mr. Chairman, —to influence the course of events in the future.

After all, the most important decisions that are made affecting the volume of business and the level of employment, are the decisions that are made in the business sector as to the volume of capital investment.

And the Minister of Finance completed his reply as follows:

Each of these considerations has to be taken into account in every decision which is made either in the monetary field or in the fiscal field. I only wish, Mr. Grégoire, that I had a computer that could take all these factors into account and then could come out with an answer, not only about the present but about the future. I can guarantee you that the Minister of Finance would stay in power forever and whatever government he belonged to could go to the people with an unblemished record.

The Minister of Finance tells us that if he had a computer, he would no longer have to go by flair and take his feelings into account. He could use scientific data, accumulate them in the computer and receive an answer on present and future measures which would enable him to report to the people with an impeccable file.

For my part, I say to the minister that if he needs a computer, an electronic machine to complement or at least replace his feelings, this flair, I am willing to move an amendment to this Bank Act to allow him to buy an electronic computer to which he can then feed the required scientific data to obtain an adequate reply. It would be well worth it, because as things now stand, he says he follows his feelings and relies on his flair. With a computer he could go about it scientifically.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it would be worth it. I feel it may even be imperative that the Minister of Finance get a computer. Our economy can then be based not on haphazard or sentimental data, but on scientific data.

Mr. Chairman, on study of Section 1 of the bill to amend the Bank of Canada Act, I should like to limit myself to general considerations and reserve specific remarks for the detailed study section by section.

I asked the minister another question—

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Might I pose one first, Mr. Chairman? Might I ask whether the hon. member for Lapointe would comment upon the statement I made during our very interesting exchange in the committee when I said that Social Credit, if I may say so, seemed to me a sophisticated form of inflationary finance put forward most skilfully by people like the hon. member for Lapointe?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I consider that interjection as a compliment, since the minister mentioned our ability in putting forward our doctrines, but it did not really require much ability, so simple it was to show and prove that the manner in which the Minister of Finance judges and appraises a monetary system is not normal.

When the minister tells us that he lets his feeling govern his actions, one does not have to be very smart to prove that it is not the right method of appraising the economic and monetary system.

On the other hand, when the minister says that he needs a computer, that is much more important. I feel one should be made available to the minister and it does not require much ability either to have everybody agree on that point, since the minister says he needs a computer in order to establish the monetary system on a scientific basis rather than on an emotional basis.

Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chrétien: If you will read out the whole sentence in which he referred to feel and flair, I think he concluded by saying that it was judgment. And this is not what the hon. member is showing at the present time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it would be necessary then, if there is a mistake in the report or in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence—

Mr. Chrétien: Read further after "flair". You will see that he refers to judgment.

Mr. Grégoire: I will read out the sentence once more and if there is a mistake in it, well, the minister can tell us and we will correct it. And I quote, from page 2998, Mr. Sharp's sentence:

> When a Governor of the Bank of England, Lord Norman, was once asked that question by J. M. Keynes, he said, "I do it by feel and flair" and I do think that to some extent that it remains a question of judgment.

And I read further on in the same paragraph:

> There is no mathematical formula by which the money supply can be regulated.

No mathematical formula. And he quotes Lord Norman, who says: "I do it by feel and flair", but the Minister of Finance is not sure. He only thinks—"I do think"—that to some extent, but no more than to some extent, it remains a question of judgment. But only up to a point and no more, while the governor of the Bank of England says totally and completely by feel and flair.

The question of judgment is only to some extent, it is not certain—"I do think"—but only to some extent. And this supports what I was saying a while ago, that is that the minister operates by feel and flair. And if he needs a computer, we are ready to vote one to the Department of Finance, so that we may have a scientific monetary system instead of a sentimental monetary system such as we now have.

I shall resume my remarks which were interrupted by the brilliant parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). When I see the Minister of Finance applauding, I wonder why he is applauding. Is it because his parliamentary secretary must have appealed to his feelings also? Because I think there can be two teams: one for the feelings and another for the flair.

Mr. Chairman, I asked another question of the Minister of Finance:

> Mr. Sharp, I am not asking you questions about the future. We will discuss this afterwards. I am asking you questions about the after-effects of the reports. Do you feel that actually in Canada the money supply is sufficient for the expansion of Canada? Answer: Shall I put it this way? I believe that during the term I have been in office the money supply has been sometimes more than adequate for the purpose. I have not—

And it is the Minister of Finance who is speaking:

> —not been concerned about a deficiency of money and credit. Maybe in the future I will be, but up until now I have not been.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Labour rose and said: We have no money to build houses. The Minister of Finance answered him: I have never been concerned as yet, by the lack of money. Well, people are not building houses, but it is not for want of money, because this has never been of any concern to him.

The provincial governments must borrow. They have to borrow from the United States, but the Minister of Finance is not concerned with the lack of money, of course. Of course not. The 11 per cent sales tax on building materials will be raised to 12 per cent; he imposed a tax of 11 per cent, which climbed to 12 per cent, but he is not concerned about a lack of money. I must admit here that I had not entirely grasped the minister's answer when he said that he was not at all concerned about a lack of money because I was so flabbergasted.

There is unemployment in Canada. People are deprived of the necessities of life, housing is slowing down, everyone has to borrow in order to buy, or to buy on finance, but the minister is not concerned about a lack of money. Not at all. I was so surprised that I asked the minister to repeat his answer. He had not been concerned about what? And he replied:

> I have not been concerned about a deficiency of money and credit. I may be concerned about that in the future but during my year or so in office I have not been concerned about that problem.

Not concerned about the lack of money. I see members from all parts of the country. Go to your ridings and tell the people that there is no problem, that the Minister of Finance is not concerned about the lack of money.

There are hon. members from Quebec here. Quebec says: We do not have enough money to develop adequately our education system. And Quebec is asking for more fiscal revenue. Quebec says to Ottawa: Give us back our fiscal revenue. Then the Minister of Finance says: We cannot do that.

But when the time comes to study the Bank of Canada Act, he says:

> I am not concerned about a deficiency of money.

That, Mr. Chairman, should be sent in writing to all provincial ministers of finance who should all come to Ottawa next week to tell him: You are not concerned about a deficiency of money, therefore give us back the fiscal resources, give us back the taxes. If you do not need any money, we do. And the provincial governments tell the Minister of Finance that they are concerned about a need for money to build roads, schools, hospitals, to carry out public works and develop natural resources.

You, members of this house, go and ask municipalities whether they are concerned about the lack of money and tell them: There is no problem, because the Minister of Finance said that he was not concerned about a deficiency of money. Perhaps in the future, but at present, there is no lack of money. Go and tell that to your school boards, your municipalities, your constituents. What will they say about the Minister of Finance? And the unemployed, what will they say about him?

Mr. Chrétien: In all fairness, the hon. member might read the other paragraph of the answer.

Mr. Grégoire: I can read the whole proceedings, if you like. What I quoted was the first answer of the minister. I asked him to repeat it, and he said:

> I have not been concerned about a deficiency of money and credit. I may be concerned about that in the future but during my year or so in office, I have not been concerned about that problem.

That is all he said then, that is the end of his answer.

Mr. Chrétien: But read what he said in reply to the next question.

Mr. Grégoire: I shall now refer to another question. But do not say that I did not quote his whole answer, because I quoted it completely. When the minister had finished, I put a further question to him. Be honest.

> And to what do you compare your satisfaction? Is it to actual production of Canada, the actual goods produced in Canada?

And the Minister of Finance answered:

It is the pressure upon our resources which arises from demands upon them.

Notice that, it is delightful. I am glad that he does not lack for money, because the demand on our monetary resources is heavy.

In other words, I have felt that economy required, for stability, some restraint—

Delightful. If you want to stabilize the economy, you place restraint on it. The population is increasing, our scientists find new techniques of production, so the economy has to be developed. Therefore let us stop trying to stabilize and let us take steps to expand for a while. But, no, the economy must be stablized.

You know what a stable man is? When he stands up, push him, you will make him fall. When he sits down, push him, you will make him fall; when he is on his knees, push him, you will make him fall; but when he lies down on the ground, whether you push him or not, he will not fall anymore, he is stable. As for you, you want to stabilize the economy, to curb it by "a few restrictions". And he continues:

—otherwise governments and private industries and consumers were going to demand more than could be physically produced at the time.

Obviously, the money supply should not be increased to the point of exceeding production. But this is not the case in the field of housing, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) knows it, as do also the Minister of Finance and all the members in this house. Lack of money is restraining production. But increase housing credit, and you will see our employed building houses.

Today, to stabilize the economy, we restrict production by withdrawing some of the money in circulation so that the people cannot buy the goods produced. We should do the opposite. We should allow the people to produce as much as they can and then give them the credit they need to buy what they have produced. Is that clear? We must promote economic growth instead of restricting the economy and trying to stabilize it in a country where expansion and progress are in full swing. The government wants to check this progress. Why do they want to stabilize the country? Here we have a young country eager to develop, and the Minister of Finance, who claims to have the authority over the monetary system, wants to stabilize and control it.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

The Minister of Finance said:

I know that... in this year of unprecedented prosperity and expansion—

Yes, I am going to say this in any county and to any of our unemployed. Believe me, this is what the Minister of Finance said: This is a year of unprecedented prosperity and expansion. I ask the Minister of Finance to say this in my county, to the unemployed in my region. He would soon be back here. Go and say to the Quebec farmers that this is a period of unprecedented prosperity and expansion.

I am ready to tour the Saint-Maurice-Laflèche riding with the parliamentary secretary and say to the unemployed, the workers, the farmers and the businessmen there: Gentlemen, the minister has said that unprecedented prosperity and expansion are taking place.

Mr. Chrétien: In the past three years, the number of unemployed in the county of Saint-Maurice-Laflèche has diminished by 3 per cent.

Mr. Grégoire: How many are there in Quebec, Mr. Chairman? According to the latest report we have received, there were more in January this year than in January last year. The number of unemployed in January this year has increased compared with last year. The welfare organizations which take care of those who cannot be considered as unemployed find that the number of cases helped has increased compared with last year.

Mr. Chrétien: Give us the difference between 1963 and 1966. Talk about the time the Conservatives were in power.

Mr. Grégoire: We shall talk about it. Unfortunately, I did not bring the statistical report on unemployment, but I can speak twice or even three times on this question. I know there is another member who wishes to speak. In the meantime, I shall go and get the figures and show them to your face. I have them in my office. I cannot bring all my data with me but I shall show them to you to your face, to the face of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, that the number of unemployed in January this year, according to the latest report we have received for January-February has increased compared to January-February last year. It has increased, in spite of this being a year of unprecedented prosperity and expansion.

An hon. Member: And the collective debts have also increased.

Mr. Grégoire: Yes and the collective debts have also increased. And let the minister come and refute this. The minister continued:

I know that there are still or have been in this year of unprecedented prosperity and expansion, some unused resources.

Well, there have been some unused resources. All our unemployed manpower, that is an unused resource. That was not used.

But those resources have not been available in the places where they could be used. So that is why I say during the year that I have been in office, I have not been troubled about a deficiency of money and credit.

One of the places where those resources have been unused is surely in the construction industry which is one of the main areas of the economy of a country. The resources have not been used in that area. But it does not matter, in spite of all that, he says that there has been no deficiency of money and that he has not been troubled about that.

There are other fantastic questions in this issue. Unfortunately, in that committee, all the questions we wanted to ask could not be put and we have not been given the scope we wanted.

• (6:10 p.m.)

I was not a member myself of the committee and when I wanted to carry the matter further, I did put the following question to the Minister of Finance:

—Mr. Sharp, when, you yourself, or the Bank of Canada decides to increase the money supply which is done almost every year how do you proceed to increase that money supply?

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that I asked the Minister of Finance how he proceeds to increase the money supply. But the minister would not answer. He then turned to the chairman of the committee—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Order. I regret I have to advise the hon. member that his time is up.

Mr. Grégoire: I shall continue later, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, in considering Bill C-190 after all the time which was spent on it in the standing committee, of which I was not a member, it seems to me the amendments contain very little except for steps to correct a few weaknesses which have become evident, apart from the clause which deals which the authority to be vested in the Minister of Finance and the government to issue a directive to the governor of the Bank of Canada in the event that there is a conflict of opinion on what future monetary policy should be.

A recommendation to that effect was contained in the report of the Porter royal commission on banking and finance. At the time that report was made public we in this party commended the people who prepared it because for too long we had heard ministers of finance deny in this house that they and their governments could assume full responsibility for monetary policy. I do not suggest that the present minister made such a statement but it is a fact that in 1961 the then minister, the hon. Donald Fleming, said he could not assume responsibility for monetary policy. He went on to say that he was almost astounded by what he found in the statute books at the time that he had a conflict with the then governor, Mr. James Coyne.

On that occasion I sat in the gallery and listened to him say that the events which took place sent him scurrying to the statutes to find out where such authority finally rested. He said he was astounded and amazed, and I think he was disappointed, when he finally discovered that the governor of the bank was the final authority on monetary policy. But now a government directly responsible to parliament is going to assume full responsibility for the direction that monetary policies take, and we in this party give our full support to that amendment.

Surely the purpose of the Bank of Canada is to adjust monetary policies from time to time to make them appropriate for current economic conditions. This purpose must be achieved in anticipation. In other words, the Bank of Canada, the Minister of Finance and all those who are directing monetary policies must constantly look ahead because those policies must be established in advance of immediate requirements. The effectiveness of a monetary policy does not take place immediately.

Predictions cannot always be accurate. We do not expect that. But for too long the legislation establishing the Bank of Canada and providing it with its authority has been leading Canada into an undesirable situation. This afternoon much argument was advanced by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, the hon. member for Kootenay West and other hon. members that the Bank of Canada ought to be a bank of issue, at least to the federal government during those times when it is desirable to have an expansion in the money supply. Members of the Social Credit party have been advocating this step for 25 to 30 years in this house and there is good reason why we continue to advocate it. The reason is very simple. We believe that the money required for capital expenditure at the federal and other levels of government should be provided at low interest rates and by an institution that is owned and controlled by the people of the country.

The second but equally important reason for our advocating this is that the earnings of the Bank of Canada must be turned back into the consolidated revenue fund. I have before me the 1964 annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada. At page 45 of that report there appears the Bank of Canada statement of income and expenses. Total income of the bank in 1963 was $127,851,000. There were total operating expenses of $10 million, and after depreciation and other items had been taken into account $116,386,000 was left as net income which was paid to the Receiver General of Canada to be placed in the consolidated revenue fund. In 1964 this amount increased to $128,237,000 and in 1965 the operations of the Bank of Canada produced a net income of $143 million payable to the Receiver General of Canada.

The more bonds the Bank of Canada holds, whether they be government bonds or other kinds, and the more assets it has, the more will be the net income transferable to the consolidated revenue fund. To me this seems relatively simple to understand because when this money comes into the federal treasury it provides funds for all of the expenses of the federal government. It is equally easy to understand that the Bank of Canada is an institution owned by the people of Canada. All its shares are held by the Minister of Finance in the name of the people of Canada.

For hospitals, schools, federal government buildings and all the other capital projects mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, we contend that the original capital ought to come from the Bank of Canada. Such projects are non-profit or not immediately profit producing. If they were financed by the Bank of Canada we would only have to pay for them once. We would not have to pay their cost over and over again in the high interest charges imposed during debt amortization.

At this stage in our development it cannot be said that this kind of policy is ridiculous and that we who advocate it do not understand the financial and monetary system of the country. I have before me three advertisements, and I could produce more, showing that in fact the Bank of Canada does buy federal government bonds. Some 15 or 20 years ago we were ridiculed for suggesting that this could and should be done. Now, to a degree, it is being done. For example, one of these advertisements appeared in a daily newspaper of April 1, 1965. The advertisement states:

> Issue of $175,000,000 non-callable government of Canada bonds.

Then there is this paragraph:

> Bank of Canada has already agreed to acquire a minimum of $75,000,000 of the new bonds.

There it is, Mr. Chairman. They are doing it. I have another advertisement which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of June 14, 1965. This one reads:

> Issue of $325,000,000 non-callable government of Canada bonds dated July 1, 1965.

Then there is the following paragraph:

> Bank of Canada has already agreed to acquire a minimum of $75,000,000 of the new bonds open as to maturity.

I should also like to read from an advertisement referred to by the hon. member for Fraser Valley a few minutes ago. The date of issue of the bonds in this advertisement is December 15, 1966. It reads:

> Issue of $500,000,000 (or thereabouts) non-callable government of Canada bonds.

This advertisement appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of November 28, 1966. One paragraph reads as follows:

> Bank of Canada has already agreed to acquire a minimum of $35,000,000 of the 5½ per cent bonds due January 15, 1968, a minimum of $175,000,000 of the 5¾ per cent bonds due December 15, 1970, and a minimum of $40,000,000 of the new 5¾ per cent bonds due September 1, 1992.

There are different maturity dates, but of this issue on December 15, 1966, the Bank of Canada agreed to acquire $250 million of these bonds, or 50 per cent.

If I am correct and I have not seeen all these advertisements—this is the largest amount the Bank of Canada has agreed to acquire in advance of an issue. We commend the government for this action. We commend the Bank of Canada for buying up this public debt. No longer is it a question of whether they can or cannot do it. They are doing it. When the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary say that it is foolish for us to advocate that the Bank of Canada should buy these government bonds they are flying in the face of what is actually being done. Therefore we urge the Minister of Finance not only to continue but to accelerate this kind of policy.

We would hope that eventually, over a period of perhaps 25 years—it may take that long for all these issues to mature—all the public debt will be transferred to the Bank of Canada. Once that has happened it will not make much difference to me whether the rate of interest is 1½ per cent, 1 per cent or 2 per cent, which some hon. members have suggested would be the cost of carrying the debt. It might even be 5 per cent. It does not make much difference what the rate is because the money is being paid back to the people again through transfer to the Minister of Finance and the consolidated revenue fund. In my view it is not a very bad situation in so far as the whole country is concerned if we are taking the money out of one pocket and putting it into the other.

An hon. Member: Within Canada.

Mr. Olson: Yes, the hon. member says, within Canada. That is also important. If the Bank of Canada is to provide the capital requirements of the federal government and, through the federal government, of the other levels of government, it is absolutely essential that the Minister of Finance must act in a sound and responsible way in so far as how much expansion should take place at any given time is concerned. No one denies that. So far as I am concerned I am not sure there need be a more rapid expansion of the money supply than there is today.

I believe that this Minister of Finance and his successors will act in this way. I also believe the governor of the Bank of Canada will act in this way. We do not want one-way inflation. We are not asking for an enormous expansion of the money supply that would dilute the value of all the money in existence today but we also know there is a continuing expansion of the money supply in the country, which is the correct action to take. So long as our economy is expanding obviously it will take more money in toto to do the job that this means of exchange is called upon to do within the economy.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I commend the minister and his immediate predecessor for the steps they have taken because they certainly are an improvement over what was done many years ago. As a matter of fact, when Hon. Donald Fleming was minister of finance I believe he also took some action along this line, or at least a purchase of some bonds of the government of Canada was made when he was minister of finance.

I think there should be a very distinct separation of capital expenditure and what might be termed operating expenditure in so far as the federal treasury is concerned. I believe that the receipts in the treasury every year other than borrowings should be sufficient to meet the expenditures. I believe we should face up to the fact that in any year we must have revenue from taxation and other sources sufficient to meet all the demands which the people of Canada make for which members of this parliament authorize expenditure. There need not be any delay in making expenditures for whatever good reason in excess of what we are willing to tax our people. I suggest that this is the proper attitude to take in respect of what might generally be called operating expenditures. They include such things as payments to civil servants, old age pensions, family allowance payments, and so on.

Then there is a need for some capital expenditure. This could be in the form of new public buildings, wharves and even expenditures in respect of the seaway authority, and I believe this would be a legitimate place for the Bank of Canada to supply funds. In this way we would not be paying interest in perpetuity on these assets which the resources and labour of Canadians have already built.

These are important basic matters. There is no mention in this bill of any intention to accelerate the program of transferring the public debt to the Bank of Canada. I believe there ought to be. I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. members for Fraser Valley, Kootenay West and others who have advocated this. I should like the minister to answer this question. If there is an increase in the money supply—and he knows this is going on all the time—is it any more inflationary to have it provided by the Bank of Canada than by the chartered banks in the country? Is it any more inflationary to have this increase in the money supply provided by the Bank of Canada than by imported capital?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I answer the question? The answer is yes.

Mr. Olson: The minister will have to give a detailed explanation of the reason. I realize that unfortunately there has been some need for the importation of capital to meet our international balance of payments from time to time. I am not suggesting that the Bank of Canada has any means other than by importations of capital to meet this situation satisfactorily, but I am speaking of the economic and financial system within the country. I should like the minister to elaborate, when he speaks, as to why the $100 million provided by the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance to cover various expenditures would be any more inflationary than an authorization for provision of this money by the chartered banks. I cannot understand why that would be any more severe.

As I said a few minutes ago, we must have a Minister of Finance and a governor of the Bank of Canada who will act in a responsible and sound manner in order that we have a supply of money. There is no question about that.

Mr. Sharp: In order to clarify this point, so that I understand what the hon. member is saying, let me ask him whether he is suggesting that the Bank of Canada should have increased its assets by more than $200 million per year, which has been the average increase during the last five years, and that if it had, that would not have been more inflationary?

Mr. Olson: I am not suggesting that at all. I fully agree that the Bank of Canada quite properly increased its assets, as the minister said, by about $200 million per year for the last five years.

What I am suggesting to the Minister of Finance, as he well knows, is that there has been a greater increase than $200 million per year in the money supply. He also knows very well that his extra increase in the money supply was provided by the chartered banks as a result of increased deposits. What I am suggesting is that the extra money over and above the $200 million could have come from the Bank of Canada, and this would not have been any more inflationary so far as the total economic and financial system is concerned.

This party has been advocating for 25 or 30 years that the Bank of Canada should acquire as much of the national debt as possible. We appreciate that a great deal has been done in this regard as a result of the $250 million that went out, I presume, on December 15, 1966. From that day forward the interest will be paid to the Bank of Canada and ultimately that interest will find its way into the consolidated revenue of this country. I am sure the minister agrees with that statement. Far more of this should be done in respect of capital expenditures for public works projects of various kinds at the federal, provincial and municipal levels.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, did I understand the hon. member to say at one point that the Bank of Canada should assume the entire debt of Canada? Perhaps he modified that a little bit later. I am very interested in this suggestion because I have lent a modest amount to the government of Canada. What is the hon. member suggesting should be done with my investment in the federal administration of Canada?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I thought I made it perfectly clear that it would take a number of years, perhaps 25, to transfer the public debt of Canada to the Bank of Canada. I mention that figure because the suggestion bears some relationship to the bond issues by the government of Canada. In my view these are firm contracts that the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada must honour. For that reason there is no possibility of transferring that indebtedness until those bonds mature and all the terms are met so far as the individuals who own them are concerned.

I am not particularly concerned about the bonds which are fairly well spread throughout the Canadian population, and I refer to Canada savings bonds, because obviously the interest goes out to a great number of people across the country and represents purchasing power.

As I say, I am not particularly concerned about Canada savings bonds, although I realize they represent a fairly large part of the total indebtedness of the Canadian government. What I did suggest was that perhaps even these bonds could be diminished to some extent over a period of time. In case the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is concerned, let me suggest that there is no question at all in my mind as to whether or not Canada savings bonds and other government bonds are firm contracts which must be honoured. Payments must be made and the interest must be paid. We do not advocate that this or any other government should welsh on these contracts.

In closing let me suggest to the minister that he continue to expand the policy that was commenced a few years ago, having in mind that eventually, 10, 15 or 20 years from now, the total indebtedness of the federal government, with the exception of perhaps Canada savings bonds, will be transferred to the Bank of Canada.

There is another useful purpose for these bonds which is somewhat different from the use of ordinary government bonds. There may be certain economic activities in the country which would make it desirable to float a fairly large government savings bond issue. This might be desirable to drain off some purchasing power, or to slow down or take the heat off the economy. Such an issue of bonds may serve that useful purpose for some time in the future.

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: I find myself trying to agree with the hon. membr, but I should like to ask him whether he is advocating that the federal government budgeting be divided into current and capital categories, with current requirements being met by a comparable increase in revenue by way of taxation, and capital requirements being met by the Bank of Canada picking up government securities? I cannot really visualize the effectiveness of that, because people with funds to lend would be restricted to buying bonds on the private market. Would this not tend to cause tremendous cost push influence?

Mr. Olson: It is apparent that the hon. member has comprehended fairly accurately what I was trying to say. There would naturally be a long transitional period before the Minister of Finance could request the Bank of Canada to look after all capital expenditures. I have no fear of a cost-push influence developing in the private market if all private funds had to be invested there. One of the things which has caused interest rates to go up—and this could have been avoided—relates to the government going back to the private money market time and time again for large issues of money. This could have been avoided because the interest on these private funds would have found some place in the private market for the expansion of the industry and commerce. I cannot conceive of any long period of time in Canada when there would be more private funds available than the private market was willing and ready to use for the benefit of the whole country.

Surely it would be advantageous, even today, for those people who are trying to borrow money in the private money market, if there was no competition from the federal government in that market.

So, again, the answer to the hon. member's question is that he understood what I am trying to say. Obviously it could not be done suddenly, but over a long period of time I think it would be beneficial. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to one other matter about which I am concerned. This has been mentioned before. The estimates that have been placed before this house today, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Medicine Hat that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I will not take up any more of the time of the committee because it would take probably five or ten minutes to deal with this matter. I will take advantage of another opportunity to put forward this point.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, when I spoke a while ago I only had time to explain one point which I would now like to summarize: at the present time, our Minister of Finance sees in our monetary system a matter of flair, a matter of judgment, and not a scientific matter, a scientific problem, something scientific.

He may say: That depends on flair, on feelings but he is not quite sure; perhaps to a certain extent it can be a matter of judgment. At any rate, that is not sure, for I believe that, up to a point, it is a matter of judgment, but assuredly not one for flair and feelings.

We say, Mr. Chairman, that our monetary system must be organized scientifically, realistically, to match mathematically the possibilities and wealth of the country with the possibilities of the people for availing themselves of the wealth and production of Canada.

Among others, Mr. Chairman, I asked the following question of the Minister of Finance. It can be found on page 3000 of No. 43 of the report, in the penultimate paragraph, and I quote:

> How can you be satisfied with the amount of money in circulation when they do not have enough money to buy what they have worked for and they still have to borrow when they are producing?

In other words, I was asking the minister why it is that, with all kinds of goods already produced, the people should still have to borrow to purchase them?

This is the reply I received from the minister:

Mr. Chairman, the whole of our society is built on the foundation of credit. I am not at all happy that there is as much consumer credit in existence as there is, but every transaction in production nowadays involves some credit. Our system would not work very well if this were not so and I am, therefore, not concerned that there is a great volume of credit being used. This is, I think, normal. It is healthy and, indeed, unless there continues to be a rising volume of bank credit, then we would have good reason to be concerned about the future of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, this answer involves many things. The minister finds that healthy; he refers to the increase of the credit load of banks. He says it is logical that our society should be based on such a system, which he finds normal, and he wants this bank credit to continue to increase.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw a parallel with another answer by the Minister of Finance, this time to the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe), as reported at page 3012 of the same report:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one.

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that in his first answer the Minister of Finance thought that this credit increase was normal and healthy.

In his reply to the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, the minister explained how credit was created and he told us:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans. The proceeds are left on deposit with the banks. They become part of the money supply. That is one way in which they are created. It is a familiar method.

The process of credit creation, I repeat it, because it is very important. It is the minister's answer as found on page 3012 of Minutes of Proceedings No. 43 and I repeat it:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans.

The method used to create credit is simple: the banks make loans and when they do they create credit.

And I continue:

The proceeds are left on deposit with the banks. They become part of the money supply. That is one way in which they are created.

Thus credit is created. The chartered banks create credit. To create means to make something out of nothing.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

That explanation has never changed; otherwise it is manufacturing. But to create is to make something out of nothing. The Minister of Finance admits that the chartered banks can create credit, as shown in the text on page 3012 in an answer which cannot be clearer:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans.

It is as clear as daylight, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I draw attention to both the English and French versions of the proceedings. I know my hon. friend wants to be fair to me, as I was so fair to him in these comments that I made In French I said:

That is one way in which it is created.

[English]

In English I said:

That is one way in which they are created.

Mr. Grégoire: Would the minister repeat that, please?

Mr. Sharp: "That is one way in which they are created."

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I think that the meaning is almost the same. This is one way to create it.

[English]

"This is one way to create it."

Mr. Sharp: My hon. friend implied that I said that was the only way.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, if I return to the minister's statement and read it again, this is what I find:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one.

The process of credit creation is a familiar one.

The banks make loans.

That is how credit is created. Therefore, the banks create credit.

The minister answered elsewhere:

Our system would not work very well if this were not so and I am, therefore, not concerned that there is a great volume of credit being used.

The banks create credit. They are the ones to benefit from the credit created, and the minister tells us that "our system would not work very well if this were not so", if there were not a great volume of credit.

I deplore the fact that there is so much credit, because when one has to borrow from the bank creating the credit to purchase goods, it then makes all the difference in the world, as far as the people and the federal government are concerned. As a matter of fact, when you have to borrow from the very banks that create credit, you pay a high rate of interest, and as banks are creating the credit, the system is working to their advantage, for the more money they lend the more money they make.

Consequently, if the minister, who has the authority to do so, were to organize a system whereby the Bank of Canada would create credit, neither by instinct nor on the flair of the minister, but in a scientific way, based on possibilities and on Canada's production, on the work done by Canadian citizens, then the individual would not have to go to finance companies or banks, which create credit, to purchase everything he has already produced. The Bank of Canada would then create credit and it would be beneficial to the whole country, to all Canadians. But as the minister is against the Bank of Canada creating credit, I say there must either be a complete lack of knowledge of what is going on in our monetary system or there is some amalgamation or participation with the chartered banks to exploit the people.

As reported on page 3030 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 44, dated Tuesday, February 7, I directed the following question to the minister:

If the Bank of Canada was creating that money instead of the chartered banks, would not the government of Canada then, and all other public governments, be entitled to borrow directly from the Bank of Canada—

Please note, Mr. Chairman, that I said "the government of Canada and all other public governments". I am not including individuals or private enterprises. I said:

—the government of Canada then, and all other public governments, be entitled to borrow directly from the Bank of Canada on a debt free system instead of going to the chartered banks to borrow the money the chartered banks are creating?

Yet, the Minister of Finance had stated the day before:

In my opinion, Mr. Grégoire, that would not be good public policy. I would consider it a very inferior type of system and one that would not serve the public as well as the present system of banking.

But, Mr. Chairman, who does the present system serve? It serves the big bankers, the big capitalists. The Minister said so as evidenced by an answer he gave to a question put by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, which I quoted earlier:

The system used to create credit is well known. Banks grant loans.

That is the way credit is created. Whenever the federal government needs money, it goes and borrows from the chartered banks, the banks lend it money, thus creating credit and money.

We ask the minister. Why could the Bank of Canada not lend the funds instead of the chartered banks, no more no less, but the same amount? Why could it not be the Bank of Canada which would create credit instead of the chartered banks? That is what the chartered banks are doing at the present time.

The Minister of Finance answers:

In my opinion, Mr. Grégoire, it would not be a good policy.

Indeed, a good policy is one which makes the banks rich; to try and prevent the people from Quebec from paying as much in taxes, to make them pay only interest, no, that is not a good policy.

The good policy is: enrich the banks.

Why? I would like to know why the government—I mean any of our governments since 1934—has been so anxious to enrich the chartered banks by leaving with them the exclusive privilege of creating money?

At one time, I have asked the Minister of Finance the following question, which appears at page 3030:

Can the trust companies and the savings banks do the same kind of operations?

In other words, can they create money too? To that, the minister answered:

I doubt it very much.

He doubts it very much, but he knows very well that it is not so.

Chartered banks are the only institutions in Canada that have the exclusive power and the privilege to create credit in debt form.

And the minister agrees with that. The system used to create credit is very well known, the banks make loans; that is the system for credit creation.

The Minister of Finance agrees that savings banks cannot do it. Credit unions cannot do it; the Bank of Canada is unable to do it; not even himself or the government can do it. Only the chartered banks have the right to create credit.

And when I ask the hon. minister: Why would the Bank of Canada not do this? When they would have created the credit, they would lend it, say, to the federal government to build post offices; to the provinces to build hospitals, colleges, without interest. Oh no—that is not good—nothing doing.

I ask the minister, what is binding the government to the chartered banks? That would be a good question. What is binding your government to the chartered banks? Can you give a real answer? Why do you grant the chartered banks the most potent privilege in the world, the one to create credit, while you would not want the Bank of Canada to exercise the same right, the same privilege that could be used to erect buildings that will be useful to the whole population, to build hospitals, schools, bridges, roads, public works.

Mr. Chairman, it is seven o'clock. I am giving the minister the dinner hour to answer this question. I shall ask it again, Mr. Minister. I see you are busy with your deputy minister, I do not know with whom. But before we adjourn, Mr. Minister, I am giving you until eight o'clock. I hope that you will reply to this question: Why is your government not ready to give the Bank of Canada that privilege which you give the chartered banks so that the Bank of Canada may lend without interest to the institutions that will be doing so much good to the people of Quebec, our hospitals, our colleges, our universities?

Mr. Minister, you have one hour to prepare an answer for us. Why could the Bank of Canada not have the same privilege which the chartered banks have now? Until eight o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Chairman: It is my duty pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), public buildings—demolition of former printing bureau; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), old age assistance—British Columbia —denial to old age pensioners of provincial supplement.

The committee will resume its sitting at eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, when the house adjourned at seven o'clock I had directed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and I had asked him to reply after supper. I see him coming in, Mr. Chairman. Then, I should like to ask him the question once again and give him an opportunity to answer it. This is the question and it arises from replies given by the Minister of Finance before the finance, trade and economic affairs committee.

On page 3012 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 43, the Minister of Finance replied this way to a question of mine:

> The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans.

This is the minister's first answer.

When I asked him if he was satisfied with the volume of money supply in Canada, he answered:

> Our system would not work very well if this were not so, and I am, therefore, not concerned that there is a great volume of credit being used.

Therefore, the minister is satisfied that the people have to borrow a great deal. And he added:

> This is, I think, normal. It is healthy and, indeed, unless there continues to be a rising volume of bank credit, then we would have good reasons to be concerned about the future of Canada.

But when credit increases, it is because the banks have created money, and the minister admitted it in his first answer which I quoted a moment ago:

> The system used for creating credit is well known. The banks make loans.

In what proportion do the banks make loans? The answer is on page 3029 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 44, where the minister says:

> Mr. Sharp: When the Bank of Canada puts cash into the hands of the banks, they are under great pressure to find some means of increasing their liabilities, so I hope that when the bank is increasing the money supply, the banks respond by making more loans and otherwise increasing the volume of money and demand in the economy. This is the purpose. Similarly, when the Bank of Canada contracts the money supply, the banks then have to withdraw in order to retain a legal ratio between their cash and their liabilities.
> Mr. Grégoire: In a proportion of 12 to 1?
> Mr. Sharp: Yes. The banks have their own ideas of what is the proper proportion; the law specifies the minimum.

Mr. Grégoire: Then the law specifies the proportion of 12 to 1?

Mr. Sharp: A minimum proportion.

So, the minister concedes, in answer to the first question, that in making loans banks are creating credit. The answer to the second question is that whenever banks create credit, they need but one dollar in order to create $12.50. The answer to the third question, which can be found on page 3000 of No. 43 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, is that the minister is happy to see that there is not much money in circulation and that the people have to borrow from the chartered banks and finance companies; banks are then creating a credit of $12.50 whereas they have but one dollar, even with nothing, and are earning big interests and large profits by lending money that does not exist.

On the basis of those three answers from the hon. minister, I should like to ask him: What is binding this government, as previous governments were also bound, to chartered banks in such a way as to grant them the exclusive privilege of getting rich at the expense of the Canadian people?

Why does not the Minister of Finance want to change such a system, as he said so clearly in answer to a question I put to him, when he stated that it was the best system in his opinion and that there was no need for another one?

Well, what is the minister waiting for in order to amend this legislation and entrust the Bank of Canada with the privilege of creating credit instead of leaving it into the hands of the chartered banks? Why is the minister so keen about leaving such a privilege into the hands of the chartered banks? What links does the Minister of Finance have with the chartered banks? What ties has the government with those chartered banks? How can the chartered banks have a stranglehold on the government and hinder the Minister of Finance from passing legislation of benefit to the Canadian people rather than to the chartered banks?

This is the question I was asking before the adjournment of the house at seven o'clock tonight, and I would like the Minister of Finance to give me an accurate reply, because my question is based on three statements which are reproduced in the proceedings and evidence of the committee, and were made in reply to my query. I would therefore ask the minister to answer this very definite question.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) allow me a question before he gets a reply to his?

Mr. Grégoire: Certainly.

Mr. Chrétien: Would the hon. member explain to the house why it is that for instance, while the Minister of Finance has repeatedly claimed that he would like to see more competition in the field of banking, many banks setting up business in Canada, why it is that credit unions, whose business is akin to banking, should not have been interested in obtaining charters, as their request would obviously have been looked upon with favour by the present government?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that question relates to mine in any way. Only this afternoon I quoted a question of mine and the reply the minister gave me, both of which can be found on page 3030 of No. 44 of the report. I quote:

Mr. Grégoire: Can the trust companies and the savings banks do the same kind of operations?

Mr. Sharp: I doubt it very much.

The minister doubts it very much. Well, we do not doubt it. The minister knows full well that the credit unions cannot create credit by loaning money. Credit unions loan what they have while chartered banks can create credit.

Mr. Chrétien: Why do they refuse to become banks? We have suggested to them that they become banks but they are not interested. If it is so advantageous, why do they not become chartered banks?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have not discussed the matter with the interested parties, that is credit union officials, but I have always heard that credit unions are co-operative undertakings and not business or commercial banks. They are co-operative companies whose purpose is to channel the savings of their depositors toward specific goals. The credit unions operate with Quebec charters and not federal charters, and therein lies the difference. Were they to ask for federal charters, they would have to stop being co-operative companies governed by co-operative rules, in order to submit to the rules provided for the chartered banks, and that is not at all why they were founded. There are all kinds of banking institutions. Credit unions were not founded to deal in commercial or banking operations but rather to become co-operative companies. Moreover, each credit union is autonomous while the large chartered banks all have ties with a central office.

As for the question of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, I shall be glad to inquire from the officials of the "caisses populaires" and to let him know the answer before consideration of the bill concerning the Bank of Canada. But I believe that the question of the parliamentary secretary is intended only to get attention away from this, while my own question was very precise.

Even if the "caisses populaires" held a federal charter, the question would be the same and I ask again the Minister of Finance: Why leave to private institutions the responsibility of creating credit and of getting interest from it, when the Bank of Canada could create the same credit and lend it with no interest, for public development, meaning the development of such public services as roads, bridges, schools, universities, colleges, post offices, etc? That is what we want. We want the Bank of Canada to create the yearly increases in credit now created by chartered banks. We do not want this to be left in the hands of private institutions for we do not believe it is the responsibility of private institutions—whether they are called "caisses populaires" or otherwise—to make Canada's credit bear fruit, for that credit is generated by the work and the production of the Canadian people as a whole and not by the work of a banking institution.

That is why I ask the Minister of Finance to tell us why the government does not legislate to permit the Bank of Canada to create credit in behalf of the people, Canadian people, instead of leaving that privilege in the hands of private institutions, which use it in their own private interests.

I do hope that the Minister of Finance will answer this question.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, both during the committee and recently I have been doing my best to explain to the hon. member for Lapointe how the present monetary system works. As I said during the committee, Mr. Chairman, though of course I benefited greatly from my discussions with the hon. member, I have apparently not progressed very far with his education.

May I try to answer as simply as I can the question put by the hon. member. There is no particular magic in the sytem of financial institutions that we have in this country. They exist throughout the world and they operate on very much the same principles everywhere. If I may say again to my hon. friend, they exist notwithstanding the blandishments of Social Credit theory. Indeed, nowhere in the world do I know of any country that has succumbed to the allurements put before us by my hon. friend.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Russia.

Mr. Sharp: No, not even in the Soviet union has the Social Credit system been accepted, and neither has it in any free country that I know of.

I made a number of statements in the committee which when I look at them, I only regret because they have given my hon. friend an opportunity to make another speech; but on the whole I still defend them as being reasonable. Although it is true that one way in which credit is created in the banking system is the one I have described, it is still nevertheless the fact that banks, like any institution, must borrow in order to lend. A bank borrows in various ways. It borrows to provide resources to people like the members of this parliament who from time to time I am sure go to a bank to borrow money. In order to provide those resources the banks have to pay interest on the deposits, or on a large part of them. Even where they do not pay interest a certain cost is involved in providing the resources to the borrower.

Let me say this to my hon. friend the hon. member for Lapointe. When a bank lends money the borrower may obtain a loan which he deposits in the bank, but this is only the first step. In order to retain that deposit the bank must persuade the depositor to maintain his deposit with the bank. After all, if my hon. friend from Lapointe goes to a bank and borrows money he does not leave it on deposit, but uses it. People who have money might like to deposit it in a bank, but they will do so only providing the bank gives them some return on it. So that these are not costless deposits.

If the hon. member were to look at the financial return of any chartered bank he would see on one side the assets and on the other side the liabilities. Then there will be a balancing item to cover the capital and the surplus. It would certainly be a new system—and perhaps this is what the hon. member is thinking about—if the banks were able to handle this process on a costless basis, as the hon. members seems to suggest they can.

The present financial system is nothing very unusual, and there is no particular magic about it. I suggest—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the minister would like to impute to me words I never said. I never said that banks should not charge interest in return for money lent. If banks lend money to individuals, they charge an interest rate. But if they create new money this is where I do not think interest is logical or realistic. I suggested that new money created by the Bank of Canada should not carry interest. Money in the accounts of credit unions, savings banks or the chartered banks should demand interest, but any new money representing an increase in the money supply in any one year should not carry interest and should be created by the Bank of Canada. I should not like the Minister of Finance to put into my mouth words that I did not say.

Mr. Sharp: I am quite happy to accept the words the hon. gentleman has just uttered, Mr. Chairman. All I said was that the deposits which appear on one side of a balance sheet as liabilities of a chartered bank cost the bank something either in the form of interest on the deposits or servicing of the deposits. There is no costless system under which a bank can operate; otherwise they would be much more profitable institutions than they are. I suggest that the hon. member is really misleading the committee when he suggests that there is some magic way in which the banks create something out of nothing. That is simply not so.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has not been very precise nor very convincing in his reply to the question put by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). He said that he found it quite difficult to educate the hon. member for Lapointe but the Minister of Finance did not attempt to educate those who advocate social credit in Canada, because it is precisely by studying in detail the system endorsed by the Minister of Finance and by those who came before him that we came to the conclusion that social credit offers a solution to the problem the Minister of Finance is unable to solve at the present time.

The minister says that social credit exists nowhere. This does not mean that social credit is wrong, and it does not disprove the fact that the financial system in which the minister flounders still remains a monkey system, an unrealistic system, a system which is not based on facts, a system which penalizes the Canadian worker, the Canadian people.

The Minister of Finance gives his fatherly and favourable blessing to a system which I would call "cannibalistic".

Mr. Chairman, it is easy for the minister to say that everyone is familiar with the process, but I think that he is not so sure himself that he knows it in depth, and he proves it when he says that anyone who wants to lend money must first borrow it.

Has the minister ever seen a chartered bank borrow money? Has he ever seen a chartered bank lend its savings deposits? Has he forgotten what Mr. Graham Towers, former president of the Bank of Canada, said in 1939: "The chartered bank does not have the right to lend its deposits."

Now one must really know why the Bank of Canada was created in 1934 and to what purpose. The Minister of Finance probably never read this but here is what it says at page 1054 of the 1966 Canada Year Book:

> The Bank of Canada is Canada's central bank. It was incorporated under the Bank of Canada Act in 1934 and commenced operations on March 11, 1935.

A Conservative government was in office then. It is under a Conservative administration that the Bank of Canada was created. This was in 1935, 32, or 33 years ago.

> The Act of Parliament which established the central bank charged it with the responsibility for regulating "credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation", and conferred on it certain specific powers for discharging this responsibility.
> Through the exercise of these powers, the Bank of Canada determines broadly the combined total of the basic forms of Canadian money held by the community—currency outside banks plus deposit balances in chartered bank accounts.
> By virtue of the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act, which enable the central bank to increase or decrease the total amount of cash reserves available to the chartered banks as a group—

Available to the people, to chartered banks.

> —the Bank of Canada is able to determine broadly the over-all level of the total assets and deposit liabilities of the group, and hence of the combined total of currency and bank deposits.

Mr. Chairman, here on page 1055 of the Canada Year Book, we find the following concerning the Bank of Canada:

> The chief method by which the Bank of Canada can affect the level of cash reserves of the chartered banks and through them the total of chartered bank deposits, is by purchases and sales of government securities.

My deposits, not those of the Minister of Finance, not the money or deposits of the Canadian people.

> —is by purchases and sales of government securities. Payment by the central bank for the securities it purchases in the market adds to the cash reserves of the chartered banks as a group—

Which means that if the central government, if the Minister of Finance issues a million-dollar bond, it adds to that immediately.

If the Bank of Canada buys these bonds, this increases the reserves of all the Canadian chartered banks. So they are allowed to created $12,500,000 for each million in bonds. Where do those $12 million come from? From whom do the chartered banks borrow these $12 million? From nobody at all, but they are allowed to put into circulation $12 million and a half of new credits and this does not affect the deposits of the customers, but that is authorized by the government issuing one million in bonds. That is the way it is.

Mr. Chairman, when paying for the securities which it buys on the market, the Bank of Canada adds to the reserve of all the chartered banks and allows them to increase their assets and their deposit liabilities.

On the other hand, when paying to the bank the securities which they sell, the chartered banks reduce their reserves and must reduce also their assets and their deposit liabilities.

Such is the economic cycle which is announced to us seriously from time to time. When the Bank of Canada buys government bonds or securities, thereby allowing chartered banks to expand credit in Canada, the standard of living is improved and a new stimulus is applied to the Canadian economy. When the Bank of Canada decides to sell securities to the government, credit then becomes tighter. That is the explanation of those economic and financial cycles.

And, Mr. Chairman, what do we say to the Minister of Finance? Series of bankruptcies stem directly from that system. We suggest that the Minister of Finance amend the Bank of Canada Act, and we would be ready to pass such a piece of legislation. Parliament is fully empowered to pass the required amendments so as to put the Bank of Canada at the service of the country, rather than at the service of the chartered banks, and to prevent the Bank of Canada from being hog-tied to the Canadian banking system. Even though the minister says that this system is the most appropriate for us, he knows that this system is not in keeping with the present needs of Canada. All departments are short of credit and money, be it the Departments of Labour, National Defence, National Health and Welfare, they all claim: we need money.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Grégoire: May I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Grégoire: Is the hon. member aware that the hon. Minister of Finance said before a committee on February 6, last:

> I was not concerned about a shortage of money or credit; perhaps I will be in the future, but until now it never worried me.

Has the hon. member heard of this statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance?

Mr. Caouette: I knew about it because the hon. member referred to this answer earlier, although it is entirely false since the hon. member himself keeps saying and repeating, when we ask for increases, for instance, in the field of old age security, or family allowances: we do not make money, we have only two means at our disposal, in the government. There is no magic formula. Indeed. The only way lies in borrowing and taxation. That is all the Canadian government as such can do.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister knows only too well that nothing prevents parliament from amending the Bank of Canada Act to enable it to finance public undertakings without interest, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) stated earlier. The hon. minister knows that it is even our duty to do this. Nothing stands in the way, or rather, yes, something prevents it; pressure from the financial world prevents it.

But the minister is aware that we could use the Bank of Canada to make financially possible the development of the public sector either in the federal, provincial, municipal or school areas. The minister is aware of this.

And let the private sector continue to seek financing from the present sources, from the chartered banks. We have no objection to this. But why ask and require the governments at various levels—federal, provincial, municipal and school, to pay twice to produce something, to build something, to achieve something and leave the control in the hands of a few individuals?

Mr. Chairman, we are not asking the minister to nationalize the banking system, no. We ask that full and complete use of the services of the Bank of Canada be resorted to, through mobilization and through usage, so that it may enable our school boards for instance, to get out of the financial mess in which they are now, for the provinces to secure credit, instead of forcing them to go on bended knees to New York or to Belgium to obtain funds to develop their provinces and to ask Washington for permission to build a road in the province of Quebec or in the province of Ontario to build power dams in our province, to go and get funds in Belgium or France and to compel the province of Quebec or any other Canadian province to do likewise, while we have the required technicians, engineers and all that in Canada.

We are unable to have a monetary system make it possible for us to finance the public sector which concerns all the people and ourselves. The Minister of Finance does not say a word about that, he is as good at mathematics this year as he was last year or three years ago. There are only two ways for him to find money—loans or taxes. Before taxing he must borrow—and the minister, of course, agrees with that. And when enough taxes have been levied and there is till a lack of funds, one has to resort to loans, one takes on new debts and taxes are collected under a new form as it was recently done for old age security. Taxes are doubled from $120 or $122 to $240. That is the Minister of Finance's system. And when we tell him that we are living in a financial world which can be dubbed a world of lunatics and that we are administered by the most prominent among them, we are called demagogues. This is what we are told when we say to the minister that he should assume his responsibilities and not amend the monetary system as he is now doing.

We have had typically Liberal or Conservative monetary reforms. Sure. We once had very small five-cent coins. A monetary reform was undertaken and nickel five-cent coins were issued. That was a monetary reform. At one time, we had small twenty-five-cent bills. They were replaced by twenty-five-cent pieces. Another monetary reform.

However, this did not increase the amount of money in circulation. Nothing was changed. And the situation remains the same.

A former Liberal Canadian prime minister, William Lyon Mackenzie King, said in August 1935, before the general elections and after the Bank of Canada Act was passed and implemented in that year, that as long as the government and parliament did not regain control of the amount of money put into circulation and the credit issued in Canada, it was futile and useless to believe in a sound democracy. It was a waste of time. Those were the words of Mr. King, former spiritual father of the present Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has completely forgotten this fact, but we remember it, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Trudeau: Does he not think that the people would not make an effort to buy government bonds with their savings if the government did not pay interest?

Mr. Caouette: This has nothing to do with the question. Let the government have recourse to issues of bonds bought by the Bank of Canada. Why should the Bank of Canada not be the one allowed to multiply this sum by 12.5?

Mr. Trudeau: The people are the ones who pay. Would they do so if they knew they would get no interest?

Mr. Caouette: Instead of paying the government or financing the government, the people would finance the establishment of new industries, for example in the province of Quebec, which is said to be underdeveloped, and perhaps also in other provinces. Instead of letting the central government benefit by these savings, let us use them to encourage the people to invest their savings in the establishment of new industries and the development of natural resources in the province. That would be logical and we would agree to such a thing.

Mr. Trudeau: I believe that the hon. member has not quite understood. Would the public lend money, in the public sector or elsewhere, if no interest were paid?

Mr. Caouette: No, indeed not. I agree with the hon. member on that point. If the hon. member lends me $10 and I pay him back $10.50, that is quite normal. But if chartered banks are authorized, under the act, to create $12 million for every million of bonds issued by the government and to charge interest, in that case, we are against that interest and the currency created.

When one lends something to someone who does not have it, and the latter refunds one with interest, it is quite normal. We are not against interest on that which exists, no, but we are against interest on created credit; and interest is precisely the nightmare of the government.

This year, Mr. Chairman, we shall pay over $1,215 million in interest on the government debt only, which has never been anything but a simple national debt. The interest on the national debt will amount to $1,215 million this year. Why has the federal government not used that money? The situation is very clear. The proof is that the national debt amounts to $26 billion and the total money in circulation in the country does not even reach $20 billion at the present time.

This year the amount of $1,274 million will be appropriated for the federal government debt charges only, apart from the debts of the provinces, municipalities and school boards. Now the amount of $1,274 million represents in interest alone, more than one ninth of the total national budget. The budget will reach what amount? About $9 billion?

Mr. Trudeau: But to whom is this interest paid? I would very much like to know.

Mr. Caouette: To those who have created Canada's debt, that is to the chartered banks. For the information of the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau), I shall say this: each time a Canadian boy, a Canadian worker buys Government bonds, 85 per cent of such bonds go into the hands of the Canadian chartered banks as collateral for loans granted by the same banks. Where is the control of the Canadian debt? Into the hands of the chartered banks of Canada and not into those of the Bank of Canada. We owe nothing to the Bank of Canada, and yet, it is our own institution, however, we are of course indebted to the Canadian and American banking systems.

Mr. Chairman, all this is to say that we are in possession of all the required means—and

I am calling on the Liberals as well as on the Conservatives—

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. gentleman a question. I am sure he wishes to be factually correct.

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Sharp: I wonder whether he had referred to the figures before he gave his estimate of 85 per cent of the public debt being in the hands of the chartered banks, because I have here the latest summary for February 1967 of the Bank of Canada. I am referring to pages 107 and 108, and it shows that out of the total of $21,290 million outstanding, $4,116 million is in the hands of the chartered banks.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Precisely. That is what the the hon. minister knows indirectly. That is the amount controlled by the chartered banks which granted loans to the minister directly.

However, I myself have seen businessmen from Montreal deposit $1,700,000 of the central government bonds in the Canadian National Bank in Montreal as a collateral to secure a bank credit. Does this mean that the bonds belong to the borrower or the chartered bank? And the minister knows this.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: The borrower.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: That is right. That part is controlled by chartered banks, and is not included in the $4 billion just mentioned by the minister. That is a different matter.

I mean to say that all those people who bought up to 85 per cent of bonds were forced to deposit them as a guarantee in chartered banks—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) those bonds are not listed under the liabilities of the bank but are kept in reserve simply as collateral; they do not appear under the liabilities of the bank or on its balance sheet.

Mr. Trudeau: What about the bank's balance sheet?

Mr. Caouette: It does not figure in there.

Mr. Chrétien: Instead of keeping their bonds in a drawer at home, they hand them over to the banker.

Mr. Caouette: More than that, at one time, those people were told: "Listen, we will buy, because we will not lend you any more on bonds you have deposited here as collateral —that was when tight money was introduced three years ago—however, we are prepared, for instance, to purchase your bonds, but instead of paying $1,700,000—we will pay $1,100,000. At that time, Canada bonds were not selling at par, but at a lower price than paid by those who had purchased government bonds. The banks which were controlling then control now. And when I say that Canadians generally had to hand over their government bonds to chartered banks as collateral, this is a fact; the bonds are there and the banks can at any time tell the borrower: "We are keeping your bonds because your credit is no longer acceptable to us".

People can have their credit cut off overnight or within ten minutes. That is how the present banking system works.

At the banking committee, I heard bankers, bank vice presidents and general managers say that they had but one purpose: to help the Canadian nation, those in the lower income bracket, and that if they were allowed to raise the rate of interest they would be in a better position to help those with low income, I say that is not the way to help them, to serve the common interest of the Canadian people or of Canada.

Hours on end are spent discussing trifling matters, but the financial system seems of no concern and is of course not considered worth studying so that it could be amended and brought up to date. That is a fact, but should a member bring up the matter of a scandal in this house—Rivard's escape, the Gerda Munsinger affair, and similar things—and the reporters section up there will be filled to capacity, because it would be considered an important matter; but when the economic blood of a nation, the control of a nation is in the hands of money and credit handlers, that is not important, it is normal to carry on with the present system and follow the same beaten tracks.

Mr. Chairman, large newspapers are controlled by that financial group. They cannot even say what they think, but only what is dictated to them by the financiers, and that is why the press is not only poisoning the public at large and the ordinary working man, but also university students. The financiers have but one objective and that is to make money and try to control and crush anyone who does not conform to the present financial system.

Mr. Chairman, the Créditistes are right in calling for amendments. The amendments passed this year will last ten years, for the renewal of the banks' charter will be for a ten-year period. Are we going to give ten more years of power to those who control money and credit? Are we going to entrust them again with that weapon which is represented by finance, that weapon which was condemned not only here in Canada but even in the United States, by former American presidents I have already quoted in this house, who said: "Our enemies are not the armies, no, but the financiers".

Here in Canada who are our real enemies? The Americans? No. The fact that the English do not speak French and the French do not speak English? No. Our enemies in Canada, and those who are sowing discord and taking advantage of divisions and misunderstandings, are precisely the financiers, who are not people of a particular language. Their monetary system has no religion either, the dollars are even colorless and especially heartless.

An hon. Member: You should try and convince the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire).

Mr. Caouette: We must leave to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) the responsibility of his actions. He is the one that answers for his actions. We are democrats, in that sense at least.

Mr. Grégoire: I can answer for my actions, while it is impossible for the parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Finance to answer for his.

Mr. Caouette: Let us simply demand, and we need not demand, we have only to adopt laws, to tell the bankers: "You can do this, but you cannot do that." There is nothing easier than to tell the Bank of Canada: "You are going to finance the public sector." Then, any new credit will be created by the Bank of Canada to serve the public sector.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The chartered banks will not have the right to multiply that credit 12.5 times. On the other hand, in the private sector, they should keep the rights they now have by depositing with the Bank of Canada so that we can have some control on our monetary system. There is no need to nationalize anything for that. It is enough to use our best judgment to put that finance at the service of the Canadian citizens and not of parliament.

But parliament has to pass the act. And Mr. Graham Towers said that parliament has full power to adopt amendments, to amend the Bank Act to make the Bank of Canada more flexible, not to put it at the service of the chartered banks but at the service of the Canadian citizens—in order to regulate credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation and to improve the economic development of the nation by maintaining Canada's economic growth. That is why the Bank of Canada was created. Our debts can be paid in the same way they were made.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member a question. I suppose that you will find it objective and that I suppose that the hon. member for Villeneuve has studied the system in operation in Europe, in the Netherlands especially. It is called municipal credit. Does not the hon. member for Villeneuve feel that it would be a practical and workable stage toward the monetary reform he advocates since it has been working for at least a hundred years?

Mr. Caouette: I thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) for his question. As a matter of fact, I think that a municipal development bank or a municipal or school credit bank would greatly help, provided that bank were the Bank of Canada and not the chartered banks. Because, precisely, municipalities and school boards fall in the public sector. This is the case in certain countries, such as the Netherlands. Yes, for this system of municipal credit exists. But is it controlled by the central bank of those countries or is it in the hands of chartered banks instead of in the hands of the central bank? We could do exactly the same as we do with the Industrial Development Bank, which is now a branch of the Bank of Canada.

The present Minister of Finance may not be minister of finance ten years hence. But while he is, in view of his great knowledge of the present financial system and in view of the fact that he looks like a good guy, and that he gives the impression that he understands easily, I suggest he should bring in some concrete amendments which would make it possible to use Bank of Canada interest-free credit for the public sector and would make the chartered banks serve the private sector as they have always done in this country.

[Mr. Caouette.]

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, when I was speaking earlier this evening I suggested to the Minister of Finance that the Bank of Canada should purchase a greater amount of the bond issues of the government of Canada. I am sure the minister agrees with me because certainly his policy has been that the Bank of Canada purchase at least part of the bond issues floated from time to time. As I pointed out in respect of the $500 million issue of December 15, 1966, the Bank of Canada agreed to acquire a minimum of $35 million of one type, $175 million of another type and $40 million of the third type, and I use the word "type" in the sense of maturity date. There was an agreement to purchase $250 million of this issue. In other words the Bank of Canada agreed to pick up 50 per cent of the total. Therefore there seems to be some degree of agreement between the Minister of Finance, his government and the Bank of Canada.

It is important that this policy be extended because we are not even holding our own so far as debt charges are concerned. The new book on estimates placed before the house today indicates an item for public debt charges at page 140 in respect of interest and annual amortization of bond discount premiums and commissions in the amount of $1,270,939,500. This represents an increase of $88,488,000 over the previous fiscal year. The increase in net earnings of the Bank of Canada transferred to the consolidated revenue fund between 1964 and 1965 was only $15 million. For this reason we are deeply concerned about this amount of public debt to be carried by the Bank of Canada and we suggested that it should be increased. The Bank of Canada should be purchasing a greater percentage of these new issues.

The $1,270,939,500 required for the ensuing fiscal year is about one half of the personal income taxes paid in this country. This is far too much. Yet, as I pointed out in response to some questions, we as a nation must honour all the bonds which have been issued as they mature. This is the area in which the Bank of Canada should be involved to a greater extent.

We have all heard a great deal of discussion and disagreement about how the money supply is increased. The minister has acknowledged that the Bank of Canada has been responsible for increasing the money supply to the extent of about $200 million per year for the last five years. That does not represent the total amount of the increase.

I have in front of me a quotation from the Winnipeg Free Press. Actually this is a digest of quotations from that newspaper during the last few days of October, and November of 1961. These quotations refer to one of the techniques used by the Bank of Canada to increase the money supply. I understand the minister is from Winnipeg and that he and members of his party have a high regard for this newspaper. Perhaps he can find some measure of agreement with the assertions that have been made in these articles. They refer to a period of inflation, because at the time there was a series of federal government deficits. Let me quote from the article as follows:

> The easiest way to explain the Bank of Canada's technique for expanding the money supply is to give an example.
> The Bank is the agent of the government. The government in the present year is spending $980 millions more than it receives in revenue from taxation. The government, therefore, must raise money by selling bonds and thus be able to pay its bills.

The article then states:

> In the illustration—the government needs $250 millions, is afraid to take a chance on the open market and so increases the money supply.
> The Bank of Canada puts in an order with financial houses to buy any given amount of government bonds—say $20 millions worth. The bond houses go on the open market and buy these bonds. They present themselves to the Bank of Canada the next morning and say "Here are the bonds you ordered. You owe us $20 millions."
> The Bank of Canada accepts the bonds and pays for them with a cheque ... deposit it in the chartered banks. And the chartered banks can do but one thing with a Bank of Canada cheque. They present themselves before the teller's wicket in the Bank of Canada and deposit it in their account. The chartered banks are to the Bank of Canada what the mass of people are to the chartered banks—customers.

The article then states:

> Under the Bank Act, the chartered banks are required to hold cash or Bank of Canada deposits equal to 8 per cent of their own deposits from the public. This means that once the $20 millions is deposited with the Bank of Canada, the chartered banks can expand their own deposits by 12½ times this amount—or by $250 millions.
> The money supply is thus expanded by $250 millions by the stroke of a pen.

A few moments ago the minister said the chartered banks could not create anything out of nothing. In other words the only way they can increase their loans is by increasing their deposits. That is the first step, but once they have their increase in their deposits with the Bank of Canada under this fractional reserve system they are in fact allowed to increase loans by 12½ times the amount of the increase in the reserves at that time.

The article then continues as follows:

> So it follows, the banks use the $250 millions of new money to buy the $250 million bond issue which the government promptly issues. The government's accounts with the banks go up by this amount.
> What has happened is that the chartered banks have increased their deposits by $250 millions—the increase going into the government's accounts. The government can write cheques for $250 millions and the money is thus dispersed all over the country—to contractors, manufacturers, civil servants, old age pensioners, and so on.

I agree essentially with what is contained in that article regarding the techniques used to increase the money supply. It is not always the Bank of Canada making an additional issue of Canadian government bonds that increases the money supply; the chartered banks of this country increasing their deposits with the Bank of Canada, as they are authorized to do, has the same effect. It is a fact that the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks have this authority to increase the money supply.

We are concerned about the municipalities in this country and their capital requirements. A proposal was put before us several years ago by a former minister of finance by way of the municipal loan and development fund. This program gave the municipalities loans of something like $400 million over a stated period of time. These loans were designed to create work. Because of the forgiveness clauses incorporated into the loans, they were almost debt free. In some cases I understand the effective interest rate will be only about 2 per cent, after taking into consideration the forgiveness clause. This is another precedent in this direction; I am not saying it is the same thing, but it is what we need in so far as capital requirements are concerned.

Earlier today some hon. members were wondering what will happen to all our private savings if ultimately the federal government does not float bond issues from time to time. I suggest that if the private savings in this country which are held by individuals, corporations and groups such as life insurance companies, trust companies, and so on, were available on the private money market for such things as house building and the expansion of industrial and commercial concerns, no one would need worry that there will be more private funds available than beneficial uses for such funds. I suggest that today exactly the opposite is the case. There are insufficient private funds available to take care of the demands for housing and expanding our industrial base. I suggest, also, that this is proven by the enormous amount of foreign capital that pours into Canada year by year. If it were not for the private funds of individual Canadians going into government bonds, there would be only one other place for them to go, and that would be into the equity of Canadian industry. I think it would be desirable for a situation to be created whereby Canadians would be encouraged to place their savings in the industrial and commercial enterprises of this country.

One of the serious problems that Canada faces today, and which will be even more serious in the future, is that so much of our industry and development is achieved as a result of foreign capital, and the ownership lies with those investing the money, and the interest and dividends that accrue from that development go to the investing country. This is one of the things that is causing difficulty in our international balance of payments situation, because the interest and dividends that accrue from this investment go out of this country.

In my opinion there is no problem at all in finding a place for the private funds of Canadians with respect to such things as housing, industry and commerce within our whole economic and financial system.

Apparently it is only a matter of degree, because the minister agrees that the Bank of Canada should continue to buy the bonds that are issued by the federal government which are required from time to time to take care of maturing issues. The degree should be higher; the amount the Bank of Canada buys should be greater, because we are not holding our own. The increase in net earnings to the Bank of Canada between 1964 and 1965 was up by only $15 million. The situation is better than it has been, but it is not sufficient to reverse the trend in the annual increases in interest required to service the national debt. I hope that very soon we will reach the stage where the earnings derived by the Bank of Canada from holding this public debt will be greater than the increase required to service the debt, so that we will gradually start to move back again to a better financial position.

I have before me a table. It is the table for 1963, not the latest in this regard. It deals with federal, provincial and municipal governments revenue, expenditures and debt. This table is to be found at page 11 of a document entitled "Consolidated Public Finance, Federal, Provincial and Municipal Governments Revenue, Expenditure and Debt," issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Item No. 21 on page 11 of this document is headed "Debt charges excluding debt retirement." During 1963 the federal government's provision for these debt charges was $822 million, for the provincial governments it was $122 million, and for the municipalities $200 million. The federal government's requirements for servicing the public debt since that year have gone up substantially; in fact, by over $200 million.

The requirements of the municipalities for debt service charges has gone up even more. Therefore this municipal development fund is becoming an urgent matter, one so urgent that municipalities are continually seeking assistance from the provinces, and the provinces in turn are seeking assistance from the federal government. They are asking for more and more money, particularly to meet their debt service charges.

I hope the minister will take these representations seriously and will try to make some adjustment so that we may reverse this trend, not only in absolute but in relative terms with respect to the total revenue, and the fact that the money of the taxpayers of this country is simply being used to meet the servicing of our public debt.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would say that I do not despair because nothing is being done. The quotations I have read indicate that some progress is being made in this area. We suggest that this progress should be accelerated so that the taxpayers of Canada may look forward to the day in the not too distant future when we will begin decreasing the public debt charges of this country that are such an enormous load upon all levels of government today.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. However, before I ask it I should like to express my surprise and disappointment at the extent of the disagreement that now apparently divides the Liberal, Créditiste and Social Credit parties. I remember the day when they were glad to join together to vote for an amendment in support of funny money.

An hon. Member: Debt free money.

Mr. Nasserden: Yes, debt free money. Are we to conclude today that that honeymoon is over? I should like to ask the minister whether it is true that he has lost confidence in the Social Credit party, after witnessing the action of the hon. member for Red Deer, the leader of the Social Credit party, who has admitted that he and his colleagues are unable to cope with the financial problems of their party.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance and other hon. members have been treated to Social Credit theories for the last three hours, and I thought I could possibly direct our attention back to the amendments contained in Bill C-190. My colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands set forth the position of the New Democratic Party with regard to the amendments contained in this bill. I will deal with a few of the gaps that were left.

He indicated our support for the amendments, the main one being contained in clause 6, which deals with section 14 of the act. This defines the relationship between the Bank of Canada and the government with regard to the responsibility for monetary policy.

According to the explanatory notes to the bill, there is a process of continuous consultation between the government and the bank in this regard, and a procedure is provided whereby, in case of disagreement between the government and the Bank of Canada, the government may issue a directive to the bank as to the monetary policy it is to follow. The amendment also eliminates the power the governor now has to veto any action or decision of the board of directors or the executive committee. This amendment by and large follows the recommendation set out at page 543 of the Porter commission report. It states:

> We believe that central bank independence within the context of government responsibility for monetary policy can best be assured by a dual system of responsibility under which the bank formulates monetary policy and executes it from day to day but under which the government must accept full and continuing responsibility for the policy being followed, although not in the normal course for the details of its execution. The Bank of Canada Act should be amended to make this clear and to provide the Minister of Finance with the right to issue a directive to the bank if the government disapproves of its policy. We believe that this procedure of government direction of the bank's policy should be used only as a last resort and after extensive and conscientious attempts to reach agreement have failed. If such a situation ever arose, its seriousness would call for highly formal procedures designed to focus full and intelligent public discussion on the matter under dispute. We therefore recommend that any directive take the form of an order-in-council to ensure that it receives cabinet consideration; that it be as specific as possible in its terms, making it clear that the government feels the bank has been too restrictive or too expansive in its policy, pointing out in a closely reasoned way how its actions have conflicted with national economic policies, and indicating what steps—including possibly a change in bank rate, market yields, or the cash reserves of the banking system—the government wishes carried out; that it be published with the briefest of delays, say within 15 days of issue; that it be accompanied by a statement from the governor setting out his opinion of the matter; and that it should automatically lapse after 30 days so that it would not become in effect a continuing directive.

The government's amendment to the Bank of Canada Act largely carries out the recommendation of the Porter commission, except that the 30 day period has been amended to "a specified period". This is probably a better arrangement than the one which the Porter commission supported, and yet it still carries out the spirit of the recommendation. Some flexibility should be allowed when a directive is issued so that the consequences of the directive may flow for an anticipated period of either 30 days or longer. Whether a maximum period should be specified is a matter of concern and we would appreciate hearing from the Minister of Finance on this matter.

If the government has the ultimate responsibility for monetary policy, then parliament must have some way of examining it and seeing how it is being carried out. Monetary policy is more than an administrative matter. It has a strong bearing on the economic climate in Canada. All Canadians are affected by its workings. Parliament at the present time has no opportunity to examine this matter in a regular way.

The Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada recommended that three documents should automatically be referred to a standing committee of the house for examination, to help determine the economic policy of the nation. The three documents were: first, the annual review of the Economic Council; second, the white paper on the outlook for private and public investment in Canada; and third, the budget white paper. We in the New Democratic Party would add a fourth document, namely the annual report of the Bank of Canada. This would give members of the house a chance to examine the governor and to inform themselves on the conduct of our monetary policy.

Last Friday the hon. member for Kamloops suggested that clause 9 (5) of this bill and section 72 of the Bank Act be referred back to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for further representations and study because of the letter of intent issued by the governor of the Bank of Canada to change from a monthly averaging of cash ratios to a twice monthly averaging period 12 months after the act comes into force. We in the New Democratic Party do not agree with the hon. member for Kamloops. Full representations were made before the standing committee, and nothing more could be added. Any further persuasion can be supplied during the present debate by hon. members supporting the monthly averaging, when the particular clause comes up for debate.

Finally I would like to underline again the suggestion made by my colleague concerning the fact that the Bank of Canada publishes its economic studies in the same way as does the U.S. Federal Board of Reserve. I am not suggesting studies on internal matters, but there must be many studies that could be carried out in this matter. In his appearance before the committee the governor suggested that this might be started. It cannot be started too soon.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse the remarks that have been made by my colleagues, the hon. members for Medicine Hat and Fraser Valley, and also those remarks of the members of the Ralliement Créditistes who have participated with considerable effect in this debate. I might also mention the hon. member for Kootenay West who has expressed some sentiments in this debate not too far from our hearts.

We are very much aware in Canada today of the need for capital to be distributed among the people, and not to be increasingly concentrated in a few hands. Anyone who is in agriculture today knows that his income will no longer depend on the strength of his back but will depend almost entirely on the amount of capital that he can amass, obtain or borrow in order to finance the automation and mechanization of his farm. The government has realized to some extent the need to control the money supply; but, for example, they have concentrated far too much on the housing industry rather than on dealing with the basic problem. For several years the policy of the government has been to allow a small cycle of boom and bust in the housing industry as one of the means of influencing the monetary system in this country.

If you talk to people from the housing industry you will find that their main plea is for sustained financing for that industry, so that they will not be constantly pushed out of business by the fluctuations of the government's policies in this respect. Just the other day the minister's colleague, the Minister of Labour, spoke in Vancouver regarding that industry. The headline on the article in the newspaper is, "Most Private Housing for Middle Class, Labour Minister Says". The article also mentions the need for public housing for a group of people that it has been traditionally assumed could finance their own housing. One would wish the Minister of Labour, as well as the Minister of Finance, would look at the basic problem rather than at some of the tinkering that can be done in an attempt to improve the situation. The Minister of Labour must know, after talking to people in the housing industry, that public housing is the most expensive of all forms of housing that is constructed in this country at the present time. The real cost of housing is not the lumber or the cement but the financing of the money that is necessary for it. It is this problem of financing the debts that are involved in the construction of housing, hospitals, schools and for the development of this country that is one of the greatest problems facing us today.

My colleagues have spoken ably on the question of a municipal development bank, so I shall not spend too much time in that area. However, I feel we still have a need to educate the people of Canada to the significance of the government's monetary policy. We had a wondrous example during the meetings of the finance committee when we heard representatives from the Bankers Association attempt to over-simplify the entire structure of the monetary system. I referred to this last Friday in mentioning the attempt to equate money with all the other commodities with which we are familiar. It was a deliberate attempt to mislead the people of Canada as to the meaning of money, and its place in the economy today. Economists who read that series of reports must squirm as they read these over-simplifications attempted by the bankers, apparently in some hope the people of Canada would be taken in by them and would place the problem of the monetary supply somewhere other than squarely at the feet of the government in power today.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat has spoken about the role of the Bank of Canada in accepting part of the responsibility for the national debt and therefore, in effect, increasing the money supply in the country. I know the governor of the Bank of Canada has said he would rather see the money borrowed from the United States than produced this way by the Bank of Canada, but we in this party feel there is a much greater role for the Bank of Canada to play in monetary policy and in the monetary supply in Canada.

I was happy this evening when the Minister of Finance extended the debate into the international sphere when he said that no country in the world had elected a Social Credit government so far. He of course knows why. One of the reasons is that the policies advocated by Social Credit as far back as 1935 have been adopted in part by many governments throughout the world, including the government we have in Canada today. Our argument is that governments could go further in adopting some of the policies advocated by Social Credit, and in many cases the partial adoption of these policies has convinced the public that nothing further is needed.

As we move into the technological age we in Social Credit can see that we have not gone far enough, and that a more wholehearted acceptance of our policies will become necessary as we go along. The bill before us of course is related to the problem of international finance, and that problem relates directly to the monetary supply of a country as well.

I should like to refer to an article in the "New Republic" for September 25, 1965 by Nathaniel McKitterick, entitled, "Closed Shop for Monetary Reform". This article contains some suggestions to the leaders of the world with regard to monetary policy and their relationship to the bankers union, which effectively controls monetary policy at the international level. The article reads:

> The Bankers Union is in a bind because its jurisdiction over money—or more precisely over the maintenance of confidence in money—is threatened. And good members of the Bankers Union, like good trade unionists, regard their first duty to be protection of their jurisdiction against intrusion by outsiders.
> The threat to the bankers' jurisdiction comes, not from another union, but from responsible political leaders—that is, politicians responsible to the voters for their offices.

I am sure the Minister of Finance must have quivered slightly as he heard the returns from the recent election in France, where the political leadership of that country has adopted monetary policies more orthodox than anything seen in this world for some time, and where the voters of that country have administered a severe setback to that political leadership. The article continues:

> Now, the Bankers Union fears, and with good cause, that responsible leaders may want to reduce the role of gold as an international medium of control in favour of discretionary policies, implemented through the international monetary system, to sustain increasing flows of goods and capital among countries.

We have been asking for this type of greater discretionary policy on the part of this government in relation to the monetary supply of this country. The same policy holds good at the international level as well. This evening we have heard various attempts to ridicule the policies put forward by Social Credit speakers. We might be a little more concerned about that ridicule if it were not a fact that the present international monetary system and monetary thinking, in itself, does not bear examination.

The article continues:

> In this scientific age the sound of otherwise intelligent and responsible men rallying the country to the defence of gold at $35 an ounce (which is the inescapable meaning of a "defence of the dollar" under the present system and in present circumstances) has more in common with a Pawnee rain dance than with stalwart statesmanship.

This has been one of the problems facing the world, that there is no logic in the monetary system that has been built up by accident in the past. Social Credit has been attempting for many years to educate the public to that fact. We have suggested that there are reasonable, logical and sound policies that can be adopted which can get us out of this cycle of boom and bust that we have experienced, and will continue to experience if bold and imaginative measures are not taken.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a few minutes to ask again the same question I directed to the Minister of Finance, because I believe he has not answered the question I put to him; maybe he did not understand its meaning.

The Minister of Finance has seen fit to reply to my question mostly in respect of interests that must be paid to the individual investor. In this connection, I would say that I quite agree with him: if a Canadian citizen, or a Canadian company, lends their money to another individual, then I see nothing wrong with an interest on this loan. If in our present system an individual grants a loan of $100 to the federal government to purchase a federal government bond, then it is money that the individual had already which he loans to the federal government. It is normal that savings should bear a profit, that is interest.

A moment ago, I heard the member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) ask the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) if he thought that the Canadian citizen, who lends money to the federal government, say $100 for a savings bond, should receive interest? To this I would answer yes. Otherwise, would the individual lend money to the federal government? Surely not, and that is exactly the problem.

We would like the Bank of Canada to finance public development of the country instead of the Canadians themselves, so that the Canadians, when making savings available for investment, would place them in the development of our natural resources, our secondary industries, and not invest as they now do in the debt of the country. They would rather invest their savings in the development of Canada.

However, it would be necessary for the public sector to dispose of another source of money, and in our opinion, this source should be the Bank of Canada.

According to the minister, the government can only find money from two sources, either through taxation or by borrowing and if it borrows money by issuing bonds, it has to pay back interest. Well, I say to the minister that there is another source of revenue, the new credit created every year and representing this country's development.

The new credit created every year by the banks. We saw this afternoon that the Minister of Finance agreed that credit is created by chartered banks when they make loans. What does that mean and how much does it represent per year? I should like to refer to statistics from the Bank of Canada Statistical Review. The figures I shall quote are taken from the October 1966 issue. The minister may have a more recent edition than mine, but I think this one will suit the purpose I have in mind.

Let us refer, for instance, to page 661 of the October 1966 issue. In the minister's edition, it would be at the very beginning, on page 3 or 4 of the statistical review, or rather on page 4, right after the Bank of Canada reports and before the chartered banks reports. The title is Chartered Banks Monthly Series. It is at the very beginning of the Bank of Canada statistical review.

One finds, for instance, that in 1964 the money supply reached $15,598 million, made up of the cash reserves of chartered banks, $1,263 million, and deposits in Canadian dollars, $15,598 million or on the whole, an average coefficient of 8.1 per cent in cash reserves.

The following year, the same money supply was increased to $17,186 million. That means, then, that during the course of the year, $2,588 million of credit was created, since the money supply for the previous year was $15,598 million. The next year, it was $17,186 million—so there was then an increase, in that single year 1964-1965, of $1,588 million. All this credit was created by the chartered banks of Canada.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Well, what we would like, is that such a difference, such an increase, such an extension of credit be created by the Bank of Canada rather than by the chartered banks. Those $15,598 million are in circulation, that is a fact; they are in the area of the chartered banks; that sum may be loaned by the banks and bear interest; we are quite ready to admit it.

The following year, when credit is expanded by $1,588 million, such an increase should be created by the Bank of Canada and not by the chartered banks. Not necessarily the entire $17,186 million of 1965, but simply the $1,588 million which should be created by the Bank of Canada to be added to the $15,598 million which was in existence the previous year.

It is the increase and only the increase we would have created by the Bank of Canada and have such increase interest free, because when the chartered banks create it, at the time the chartered banks create such a increase, they will not be required to pay interest to anybody. They lend and the people to whom they lend have to pay the interest. On such an increase, the chartered banks will not be required to pay interest to anyone. It is new money they have created and not money held on deposit, on which they are not required to pay interest to anyone and it is that increase which in 1965 represented compared to 1964, the sum of $1,588 million which could have been created by the Bank of Canada and loaned without interest for the public sector.

Now, let us consider the other year. In September 1966, the last month for which I have statistics, the money supply had increased then to $18,855 million. At the same time, the year before, it stood at $17,186 million. In 1966, that money supply of $17,186 million could be lent by the chartered banks, on interest. This money is already on the market. But since the money supply, at least by September 1966, had increased to $1,869 million and reached $18,855 million, this new increase, corresponding to the development of the country, should be created by the Bank of Canada and lent interest-free to municipalities, school boards and the provinces.

The following year, the money will have reached $18,855 million, and again the increase in the money supply, not that which is already in circulation at the beginning of the year, but that which is produced during the year, and which is being created at the present time by the chartered banks, should be created by the Bank of Canada and lent interest-free, in the public sector.

What would be the result of this in concrete terms? To take a concrete example, suppose there is an increase of $1,669 million, as happened last year—what happens under the present system? The chartered banks are the ones who create the credit—I have no need to prove that, since the hon. Minister of Finance admitted it in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs—which is raised by $1,669 million, representing merely the increase and not the part existing already.

Thus the chartered banks create this credit of $1,669 million. They lend it to the federal government, the provincial government, municipalities, or school boards. The banks do not pay interest when they create and lend this sum. However, they charge 6 per cent interest when they lend the money to a government or an individual. The latter return the deposit to the banks, who pay them 3 per cent interest. And this is how one proceeds under the present system.

If there was a system such as the one which we are advocating, the Bank of Canada would create the increase, the credit of $1,669 million which makes up the annual increase over the previous year. The Bank of Canada would grant interest-free loans to Quebec City, Toronto or Winnipeg either for the construction of hospitals, roads or bridges and, I repeat, they would be interest-free loans.

If for instance an amount of $10 million were allocated for the construction of a hospital, this construction would entail the payment of wages and the purchase of materials. Then, those who would receive the wages, those who were paid for building materials would obtain that money and deposit it in the bank, as it is usually done, and the bank would pay them 3 per cent interest and afterwards would lend it again in the private sector at 6 per cent interest.

The difference is that the money in circulation would have entered interest free into the public sector to develop public investments and would come back afterwards in the private sector.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The difference also is that the bank would have the money on deposit before lending it while at the present time, it lends the money without having it on deposit. It has nothing at all; it lends at a 6 per cent interest charge and its loan is again deposited in the chartered banks system at 3 per cent interest.

Under a system such as the one which we are advocating, when some new credit is created, it is created by the Bank of Canada and lent interest free to finance public undertakings and I insist on the word public—such as the construction of bridges, highways, colleges, hospitals, sewers, waterworks, etc.

Those who receive that money afterwards, as wages or as payment for their material, deposit it in the chartered banks, and receive 3 per cent. Then, these banks lend ceive 3 per cent. Then, these banks again lend this money to the private sector at 6 man, is that all public sectors have taken advantage of interest-free loans for public projects instead of private works. If one wants to know what it can mean at any given time, well, the member for Villeneuve spoke about it a while ago, when he said that if this had existed in Canada in the last 50 years, the $1,274 million required to pay interest on today's debt could be used to administer the country. What does this represent? The combined total of family allowances and old age pensions.

Municipalities having to pay interests representing 30, 35 and 45 per cent of their budget would have 30, 35 and 45 per cent more at their disposal in their budget to carry out work projects. And there lies the difference between the existing system and the one we are advocating.

Mr. Caouette: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Caouette: Does the hon. member not think that when he says, for instance, that banks are paying a 3 per cent interest, that it is only on savings accounts? Banks do not pay 3 per cent on current accounts. Now, current accounts are far more numerous and far larger than savings accounts. Then, does not the hon. member think that savings accounts earning a 3 per cent interest constitute in turn a new reserve for the chartered banks under the system of the Minister of Finance and that such a new reserve allows them to multiply again by twelve and a half the amount they can lend through the use of such savings accounts as reserves in the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve when he says that chartered banks do not always pay interest on current accounts, and that on savings accounts, they pay 3 per cent, on the lowest amount deposited during the month.

If a depositor keeps $1,000 in his savings account for a month, and that at the end of that month, he has only $200 left for one, two or three days, it is only the lowest amount that will bear interest.

Mr. Caouette: That is probably why the Minister of Finance has no savings account.

Mr. Grégoire: Not only that, but the federal government maintains,—and I would like to be able to give the correct figure, I could provide it tomorrow, because it is scandalous,—deposits that amount to approximately $300 million.

Mr. Tremblay: No, it is $100 million.

Mr. Grégoire: It would be $100 million according to the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane. I am quite ready to accept that for tonight. However, I will check that answer in the proceedings of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs; anyway, the government keeps, generally speaking and on the average, deposits of the order of $100 million on which the chartered banks do not pay any interest. There are at least $100 million deposited in chartered banks accounts by the federal government, by the Minister of Finance, and on which no interest is paid. The interest would represent $3 million—

Mr. Tremblay: Would the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Certainly.

Mr. Tremblay: In the statement he made a moment ago concerning the amount that could be created by the Bank of Canada instead of by the chartered banks, he probably forgot the effect that this reserve could create by the issuing of new money by the Bank of Canada, issuing which would absorb yearly $1,669 million in Canada government bonds and which would enable the chartered banks to create considerable inflation.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the day when only the Bank of Canada has the right to create credit, the chartered banks will no longer be able to multiply by 12.5 the money, like the reserves, as they do now. Then, the chartered banks will cease to be in a position to contribute to the increase of credit and will not be able to create inflation. Now, it is claimed that the Bank of Canada can absorb part of those $1,669 million. How can it? In 30 years of existence, it has accumulated only three billion dollars' worth of bonds. That is, about $100 million a year. That is nothing compared to the $1,669 million of credit created outright by the chartered banks in 1965. There is the difference. As the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) said, the cash reserves must be taken into account. But let us not forget that in 1966, in September 1966, the money supply was $18,850 million. That means reserves of $1,650 million that is 8.08 or 8.1 per cent. This would mean that the chartered banks, with $1,524 million, were allowed to create, over the years, the sum of $18,858 million, which represents the present debt of Canada.

If we have a debt now in Canada, it is reflected, virtually cent for cent, in the creation of credit carried on over the years by the chartered banks. The day we take this privilege to create credit away from the chartered banks, we will have put a stop to Canada's indebtedness because the government will have found a new source of revenue other than taxes and loans, since it, rather than the chartered banks, will create credit, neither more, nor less, but let us say exactly the same amount per year than the chartered banks create.

It is not a matter of putting the money press to work but of doing exactly what the chartered banks are doing, what the Bank of Canada will have to do after getting the authorization of parliament to give back to the Canadian people a real degree of control over credit. Then all the public bodies in Canada would have benefited in 1965 from an interest-free credit increase of $1,669 million.

Mr. Chairman, there is a difference. And that is the question I put earlier to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General. And he answered me by asking me: Do you think the chartered banks should charge interest? I say yes. But on the money they already have on deposit and not on the money they create. That is the difference. Not on the increase in credit which is created by the chartered banks. That is what I am against, Mr. Chairman. The increase in credit, in the money in circulation in Canada does not belong to the chartered banks but to the Canadian people as a whole. If the chartered banks can increase credit it is because the people of Canada have worked hard to produce more; that increase in production is represented by an increase in credit.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: Am I to understand that the hon. member for Lapointe thinks chartered banks have a definite role to play and that he does not object to it? He seems to say that the creation of credit allows the banks to use unjustifiable practices with regard to interest. If that is the case, how does he explain the fact that money invested in banks gives about the same return as money invested in industry?

Mr. Grégoire: Yes, of course; money invested in banks gives an even greater return than money invested in industry or in any other field. To ascertain it, if the hon. member for Mount Royal disagrees, he need only see how a Bank of Montreal or a Royal Bank share bought 20 years ago has tripled in value today. Even then, the return on it is still 8 or 9 per cent, but on three times the sum actually invested; no other industry gives such dividends today.

The member for Mount Royal should examine the figures I have been given and he will see the light. But I made no comparison between the yield of bank securities and industrial securities. Where I find the role of the banks justified is where they have the privilege of creating credit and to lend it with interest, while the new credit represents the growth of the country and this is something which does not belong to the banks.

Mr. Chrétien: I have a question for the hon. member. I think the committee would be agreeable to facilitate matters for the hon. member to obtain, if he so wishes, a bank charter in his own name, and then we would see how well he would do.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I am being egged into political partisanship and chicanery when I am trying to express ideas. If that is the only way the parliamentary secretary can reply to the ideas that are being put forward, it means that he has no argument to counter what is being suggested. And if the hon. Minister of Finance cannot reply himself but has his parliamentary secretary give such answers, it is not worth much, Mr. Chairman. If the Minister of Finance has another question it is up to him to put it.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a similar question. Why is there such great difficulty in financing new banks in this country if they are as profitable as suggested by the hon. member?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not see that it is so difficult to establish a new bank in Canada. I do not see that it is so difficult. Let the minister tell me what the problems are.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: May I remind the hon. gentleman of the testimony that we heard from the Bank of Western Canada, which seems to be having some difficulty in marketing its shares.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the difficulties of the Bank of Western Canada were not due to the lack of funds, but to the fact that too many people wanted to borrow. One had to refuse some of them, as the hon. Minister of Finance knows. Our chief difficulty was that the whole group of British International Finance wanted to borrow from the Bank of Western Canada while the bank authorities did not want to grant them loans. That was the main trouble. It had nothing to do with the banking operations, as the Minister of Finance knows very well. It was only an internal difficulty, and this is what the minister answered to the committee of finance, trade and economic affairs.

But when one tries to discuss and to bring arguments to the minister, he cannot answer. Let the minister answer the arguments I put forward a while ago. Then I will ask the following question:

Why not let the Bank of Canada create the new credit which represents the money supply increase, new credit which will be used to finance public works, instead of letting the chartered banks create such new credit which they lend with interest to individuals?

Why would it not be up to the Bank of Canada to create such new credit, namely the yearly increase, not what already existed formerly, as I was saying a while ago, but the yearly increase in credit? Why would it not be up to the Bank of Canada to create it and to lend it without interest to different public bodies, be they federal, provincial, municipal or educational, and that money would inevitably return in the banking system and then, the banking system would be able to lend it again with interest; we would accept that. But at the time that new credit is created, why would it not be up to the Bank of Canada to lend it without interest?

Could the minister tell me, could he answer such a precise question, not by evading the point, not by beating around the bush, but by replying directly? Are there any objections to that? Does the minister see any serious objections to the fact that the yearly credit increase would be loaned without interest, to the public, by the Bank of Canada? Could the minister answer that question?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman, very great difficulty indeed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, one can tell the minister does not know quite what to say. He says, "Yes, I see many difficulties there indeed." But which difficulties? Can the people of Canada be content with that? The minister admits openly—and he admitted it in his reply to a question of mine—that banks loan 12½ times their cash reserves, while admitting in the same breath, "There is a lot of credit and that is normal; it is healthy and beneficial to chartered banks." The minister accepts that, but can the Canadian people accept that? The minister says, "Yes, I can see many difficulties there." But which difficulties? The Bank of Canada Act is reviewed every decade. In this case, it has not been reviewed in 12 years. I will not be content with answers such as that one. Let the minister tell us what difficulties there are. That is what we demand of the minister, that he tell us what difficulties he sees.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I may say so once again, I consider that such action would be very detrimental to the interest of the people of Canada because it would be very inflationary, and all of these arguments being presented by the hon. member for Lapointe are simply a camouflage for one of the oldest practices in the world, which is the practice governments have indulged in in the past, and I hope will not indulge in in the future, and that is printing money for the purposes of meeting government expenditures.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall put the question again to the minister, but this time I ask him to be honest. Without minting a single coin—let the minister listen well—without increasing the money supply more than the chartered banks did, not by a penny more than the banks did in the past, the latter did it for $1,588 million in 1965, $1,669 million in 1966, but without doing it for a single penny more, if the Bank of Canada were to do it instead of the chartered banks, and without doing it for a penny more, that would not be inflationary. Perhaps the minister could answer that one. If the Bank of Canada were to do it for not a penny more than the chartered banks did in the past, would that become inflationary just because the Bank of Canada would be involved? If the Bank of Canada did it for not a single penny more, provided, of course, the chartered banks no longer had the right to multiply that by 12?

Naturally, I insist on saying this to the minister: provided the chartered banks no longer had the right to multiply that by 12. But if the Bank of Canada created the same amount as the chartered banks, without multiplying, without having to multiply by 12 like the chartered banks, would that become inflationary? I give notice of that to the minister, so that he can think about it.

An hon. Member: Mr. Chairman—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, does the house leader intend to announce the same order of business that he announced on Friday?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Monteith: May I assume at this time it is definite that the Bank of Canada Act will be followed by the Bank Act?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. I would hope we would make good progress tomorrow.

Mr. Monteith: I trust that you will not have to give the same message tomorrow night at ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—OTTAWA—CONTRACT FOR DEMOLITION OF OLD PRINTING BUREAU

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the matter I intend to raise tonight—I am happy to see that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) is present—concerns the contract awarded for the demolition of the old printing bureau, a matter uppermost in the minds of the people of Hull and the area.

As a matter of fact, the president of Thibault Lumber stated to Le Droit, on Wednesday, March 8, that the federal government, the Department of Public Works in particular, was in fact making a gift of $50,000 to the firm of Cohen & Cohen to which the contract for the demolition of that building was awarded.

Now, following publication of this statement of Mr. Thibault, who incidentally is president of a Hull business specializing in building demolition for 35 years, the Minister of Public Works said to the representative of Le Droit of Ottawa:

> Those who had time and competence were invited to bid.

This means that the other contractors within the area and without did not have the time and mainly that were non competent. Those who were invited to bid for a contract of some $100,000—the contract was awarded to Cohen & Cohen for $92,777—without any public call for tenders, through the newspapers, were: Hugh Grant Limited, of Ottawa, $99,000; Teperman and Sons Ltd., Ottawa, $102,420; Greenspoon Bros. Ltd., Toronto, $115,000; Palmer Levitan Ltd., Hull, $117,200 and Hurdman Bros Ltd, Ottawa, $119,750.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to tell us if some French Canadian contractors could not have been asked to submit tenders at that time? What would have been the reaction of the English speaking contractors if the minister had asked French speaking contractors only to submit tenders for the wrecking of the old printing bureau?

I think that this is a clear case of discrimination. There is something else. It has been rumoured in the area that someone in Toronto was asked to submit a tender. Were people in Montreal asked? Were companies in Hull asked to submit tenders for the wrecking of the old printing bureau? No.

Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Thibault claims that he could have done the wrecking for $50,000, that is far less than what the government is now paying, people begin to wonder. Have public funds been fooled around with to play politics? Are the contractors concerned personal friends of the Minister of Public Works? Did the companies agree that the firm of Cohen & Cohen should be awarded the contract for $50,000 or $40,000 more than others could have done the work for? Would there be in this a possible gift to the electoral funds of the Liberal party of the Minister of Public Works? Would the companies not have agreed among themselves, for instance to take $4,000 or $5,000 each and let Cohen & Cohen get the contract for the demolition of the national printing bureau?

Mr. Speaker, I believe there is some discrimination in that case. When we see in other newspapers during the same period that is on March 3—another here on February 24—that for trifles the Department of Public Works is calling for tenders amounting to $2,000 or $3,000 and those calls for tenders have appeared in the Progrès de Hull on two occasions: tenders for the removal of ashes and refuse at the testing laboratory of the Department of Public Works to empty trash cans—one wonders what is going on.

To install chemical extinguishers in the Hunter building, tenders have been called, but to demolish a building for an amount of $92,777, the minister answers:

> We then checked the financial stability of each one of those companies.

Does this mean that only these six companies are financially stable? The minister is fully aware of the fact that if he had used the press or a public channel to call for tenders for the demolition of the old printing bureau, perhaps 15 or 20 contractors would have tendered for the contract. For my part, I do not discriminate against anyone; I do not care whether one is English speaking, French speaking, a Jew, a Ukranian, it makes no difference, the party submitting the lowest tender must do the work, unless he is insolvent. It does not take three weeks to find out whether a contractor is solvent or not, as the minister knows; his officers have only to phone the bank manager, who knows about the solvency of contractor Thibault or Filiou or of any other contractor in our area.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Speaker, when the minister says that only those who could offer financial guarantees were invited to tender, he does not help our small contractors in Hull or the average contractors in our area or in the city of Montreal or in other places in Canada, and he knows it.

Therefore, I say that there was some political intrigue in the awarding of this contract for the pulling down of the old printing bureau. And the minister went on to say:

—the government could not allow itself to wait while a contractor was looking for funds.

He can learn tomorrow of my financial standing by calling the manager of my bank and asking whether my business is profitable or not, whether I am stable enough financially to operate such a business. And as regards a firm such as the Thibault Company, I do not mean that the Thibault Company should have been awarded the contract, but that the Thibault Company, should have had an opportunity to tender as much as the others.

Such is the unfairness of the Department of Public Works, in that some Canadians and other companies have been prevented from submitting a tender under the pretext that time was short and the work had to be done so hastily.

We know for a fact that anyone of those contractors could have demolished the old printing bureau as it can now be demolished and at a lower price than the government is going to pay, out of the taxes of the Canadian people. Let the minister give us some explanation now and tell us why were not all Canadian contractors allowed to submit tenders?

• (10:10 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised an interesting plea on behalf of a man in Hull. The facts about this contract are rather simple, and information is available to the public and to anyone in the industry who is interested in it. It is interesting that the man the hon. member speaks about did not come near the department to seek to bid on this matter although he knew, as did all the trade, that the building was coming down.

Public tenders were invited from six firms in the wrecking business who are doing work in this area and all of them bid on the job. I believe the names of the six firms were correctly given. One of them is in Hull, four are in or have branch offices in Ottawa and one is in the western Ontario area. I think the bids and a knowledge of the industry will show that they are certainly not friendly to each other; they are highly competitive. As for suggesting that they are friends of mine, with the exception of two firms I do not think I know any of them; they are merely names in the business.

The situation was that the old printing bureau, which is a rather substantial building, was built very close to one of the few roads connecting Ottawa and Hull, and therefore it can only be wrecked in a certain manner and not by the simple, easy method of what is called ball and chain wrecking. It has to be knocked down and the site cleared and made ready for parking for the centennial show "Son et Lumière" that will be put on starting in the middle of May this year. This is part of getting that project ready. To have advertised the tenders in the newspapers in the ordinary way could have been done, but it would have delayed proceedings somewhat more than three weeks, from 23, to 28 or 29 days.

Mr. Caouette: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry the hon. member interrupts. I did him the courtesy of listening to his remarks and not interrupting. Perhaps it is not too much to expect that courtesy from him in return.

We had to bear in mind the safety measures that will be enforced, which involve certain technical aspects of demolishing this building. We also had to bear in mind the time limit involved. The departmental officials picked the firms most likely to be equipped and able to provide the necessary financial bonding quickly, and invited them to bid. The six firms bid in a range from $92,000 to $119,000, and the contract was immediately awarded to the lowest bid.

Mr. Caouette: That is not an answer.

Mr. McIlraith: It is an answer. I am sorry the hon. member does not understand the answer. I should like to refer to the hon. member's remarks about the ethnic origin of the people bidding. The firms in this business were invited to bid, and no questions whatever were asked about their ethnic origin; and I hope that in this parliament no questions will be asked about the ethnic origin of any person bidding on a Canadian contract. I am very much disappointed in the fact that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has seen fit to interject this note into the matter.

I received this morning a report from a local meeting on political matters in another city adjacent to this. It indicated that the hon. member would raise this point, and why he would. If there is any political background in this matter, it is in the hon. member's ambitions with respect to some elections he expects in the near future.

Mr. Grégoire: That is not an acceptable answer. This is patronage.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE—BRITISH COLUMBIA—DENIAL TO OLD AGE PENSIONERS OF PROVINCIAL SUPPLEMENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I tried to draw to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) the situation in British Columbia where very large numbers of old age pensioners are being denied the full benefit of the $30 supplementary allowance which has been established recently. This evening I wish to read a form which is being sent out to old age security pensioners who also receive the present provincial government supplementary allowance, which amounts to a maximum of $30. This form is being received throughout British Columbia and it reads as follows:

To: present recipients of supplementary social allowance to their old age security pension, February 20, 1967:

1. In the month you receive a retroactive payment of the federal government guaranteed income supplement, your provincial government will also pay the provincial portion of the supplementary social allowance you received heretofore.

2. In subsequent months, the amount of the provincial government supplementary social allowance to which you will be entitled will be based on your actual needs in accordance with the information shown on your file. If further information is required, you will be contacted either by mail or by a social worker.

3. It is regretted that this review has to be made, but it is due to the fact that the federal government would not agree to exempt the guaranteed income supplement when determining entitlement to supplementary social allowance.

4. Receipt of the guaranteed income supplement, however, will not affect your health services and the medical card you presently hold will continue to be valid unless you are notified to the contrary.

I would point out that the over-all effect of these principles will mean that thousands of both single and married pensioners will not receive the full benefit of the new $30 federal allowance. What the federal government gives them on the one hand will be taken away by the provincial government on the other.

We find that the federal and the provincial governments are blaming each other. Undoubtedly both are correct in doing so. However, the initial responsibility must rest with Ottawa for a number of reasons. Last fall there was a situation where the old age pension was very far from meeting the needs of the old age pensioners, and obviously something had to be done. The government had been warned by many agencies, including the committee on aging, a year ago last January, that the very least that was necessary for a decent income for a single person living on old age pension was $138. All the government needed to do was to make an across the board increase under the old age security legislation of 1951 with no questions asked and no strings attached, and of course it would take back in income tax what was not needed. It was not a case of giving to millionaires; it was a simple giving out to those people who needed it and taking back in the regular form of income tax from people who did not need it. However at that time the government was anxious to prove itself guiltless of imposing a means test. It used fancy language of all kinds and it prostituted the term "guaranteed income" which, it had no business using.

The government was so anxious to prove itself guiltless of a means test that it established very complicated means test regulations. I have been going through them and I do not see for the life of me how old people can be expected to understand how to work out those things by themselves. Most of their neighbours and friends, to say nothing of some of their members of parliament, would be hard put to it to explain all the complications to the elderly people.

• (10:20 p.m.)

In addition to making these elaborate means test regulations, the federal government failed to do what it should have done, and what was vitally necessary, that is to hold talks with the provinces to make sure that the provincial supplement would not be diminished when the federal supplement was given. Some of us drew this to the attention of the government at the time. I pointed out that it was most essential to know that the provincial supplement would not be withdrawn. At the time, we had no satisfactory reply from the federal government. The federal government took no care to see to it, when it gave the supplement, that it was geared to the real income needs of the elderly people.

In addition to that, of course, the mini-budget added to the discomfort of elderly people by shortening up their living allowance even more by the addition of 1 per cent to the sales tax, raising it to 12 per cent. This bore very heavily on most of the things these people need. I want to say that as a result of all this thousands of pensioners in British Columbia, single and married, are not receiving and will not receive the full benefit of the new $30 federal allowance.

I want to know what action this federal government proposes to take to see to it this situation is rectified. I do not know whether the same situation exists in the other provinces, but I do know that it exists in British Columbia. I know the problem is the result of the federal government's failure to see to it by seeking agreement with the government of British Columbia that such would not be the case. I believe the federal government should not permit itself, nor should it be allowed to permit these elderly people to be kicked like footballs back and forth between the two governments. There should be something done now, to clarify and rectify the situation. I ask what that action is going to be.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on what the government of British Columbia may be saying about the federal government in relation to supplementary allowances. I am, however, happy to be able to clarify the situation.

The payment to old age security pensioners of the guaranteed income supplement is intended to ensure that all old age pensioners will be guaranteed a minimum income of $105 a month. Where provinces have been paying supplementary allowances, the cost of which has been shared by the federal government, the need for such payments will be substantially reduced with a consequent saving to provincial treasuries. It has been made clear to all provinces, Mr. Speaker, that where the combined old age security and guaranteed income supplement are insufficient to meet the need of pensioners, the federal government will continue to be prepared to share with the provinces in the costs of additional supplementary allowances based on need. There is no ceiling on the level of federal contribution for this purpose, it being left to the provinces to determine the amount of the supplementary allowances it wishes to pay.

I might note, Mr. Speaker, that in determining the need for supplementation, it will be apparent to members that the payments by way of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement should be taken into account. I might add also that, through the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government is now able to share, for the first time, in the costs of health care and welfare services. The provision of federal contributions to these services will enable the provinces to provide these important services without incurring the burdensome costs that they would otherwise face.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT—ALLEGED IRREGULARITY IN DEFENCE ESTIMATES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects the members of this house and parliament generally. Briefly the question is as follows. Yesterday the President of Treasury Board tabled the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Reference to pages 308 and following, dealing with the Department of National Defence, will disclose what I submit is a gross irregularity having regard to the law as it stands today and, in particular, to the National Defence Act and the Financial Administration Act.

I would say in support of my contention that these estimates in connection with the Department of National Defence are contrary to existing law as provided in section 15 of the National Defence Act, which reads as follows:

> The Canadian forces are the naval, army and air force of Her Majesty raised by Canada and consist of three services, namely, the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Reference to vote 15 of the estimates as they appear at page 316 of the blue book will show that these estimates are based on the premise of a single unified service, something which is not founded in law today. For this reason the estimates are improperly set out, and as a consequence parliament will be asked to vote money and supply in a manner contrary to the existing law.

I say this without prejudice to the determination which may be made by this house at some time in the future, and I do not say that this house will have to consider all these estimates before the passage of Bill C-243. However, by the end of this month the government will come forward with a request for interim supply and will be asking this house to provide one twelfth or more of next year's supply on the basis of the estimates now put forward.

I put it to Your Honour that the passage of estimates based on a single unified service would be contrary to the National Defence Act, and contrary also to sections 24 to 26 of the Financial Administration Act both in letter and in spirit. Section 24 reads as follows:

> Subject to the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1951, no payments shall be made out of the consolidated revenue fund without the authority of parliament.

Section 25 reads:

> All estimates of expenditures submitted to parliament shall be for the services coming in course of payment during the fiscal year.

Parliament cannot act outside the law and today, as we are facing these estimates, the law provides that there shall be three services. The National Defence Act has not been amended, and I therefore maintain that these estimates as presented, bearing in mind the necessity of the government asking for interim supply by the end of March, constitute an abuse of the privileges of this house.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Therefore I move:

> That the book of estimates for the fiscal year 1967-68, as presented, be withdrawn and revised to show proposed expenditures for the Department of National Defence in conformity with existing law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member for Edmonton West knows, it is the duty of the Chair in the first instance to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. The matter which the hon. member is now submitting for the attention and consideration of the Chair is of considerable substance. Let me suggest to the hon. member and others who support his cause that perhaps we should hear arguments as to whether there is a question of privilege, after which the Chair may be given an opportunity to reflect on the matter before making a judgment.

I submit that perhaps it would not be proper in respect of such a serious matter for the Chair to render an immediate decision. It is my feeling that it would be helpful to hear arguments and precedents which hon. members may wish to submit for the guidance of the Chair. In my view that should be done before we proceed with other matters.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I submit that here there is an open and shut case of privilege. It is quite clear from an examination of the estimates presented in previous years that provision in each case was made for the expenditures of the navy, the army and the air force. Certainly the house is entitled to a full disclosure of the sums to be spent for each of those services. This is the first time the estimates have been presented without any mention whatsoever of the three services. I suggest, therefore, they were prepared in this form on the basis of the hope of the Minister of National Defence of getting from this parliament the authority to create a single unified force.

That authority has not been granted, and the bill in respect of this unified force is still before the standing committee for consideration. It has not been reported back for consideration by the house. Under those circumstances the estimates should have been presented in the form in which they have been presented for many years past. This would enable members of the house to determine the amounts being voted for each of the separate services as provided for by the National Defence Act.

On looking back at the estimates of the Department of National Defence for the year ending in 1966 we find that vote 15 provided for the operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment for the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army, and the Royal Canadian Air Force. The amounts involved were then listed, first for the navy, then the army and then the air force.

In looking at the estimates for the past fiscal year which ends in 1967 we find that the vote has been changed to some extent. In this case vote 15 is worded in this way:

> Operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment and development for the Canadian forces—

I noted this difference last year but paid little attention to it because the unification bill had not been introduced, and because following that description there were listed the expenditures for the navy, the army and the air force in detail, just as they had been listed for previous years. These details are to be found in the blue book on estimates at page 268 and following for the fiscal year ending in 1967.

I would take it that what the Minister of National Defence did last year was take a nibble at this business, and instead of the nomenclature of the vote being as it had been previously, to provide funds for the Royal Canadian Navy, the army and the air force, that nomenclature was changed to provide for the expenditures required for the Canadian forces. However, as I say, I paid little attention to that because the expenditures for each of the forces were still detailed in the way in which they always had been.

But this year we find a complete change. Not only is the name of the vote changed from what it had been, but in the estimates which were presented to us yesterday there is no mention whatever of the navy, army or air force; and there is no means, by going over the estimates, of determining how much money is to be spent for each of these three services, which exist by law. As a result there is no means by which one can compare the expenditures proposed for this year with the expenditures of last year and previous years. Thus I think the estimates as presented quite palpably do not give the members of the house a true picture on the basis of which we are being asked to vote funds. Therefore they should be withdrawn and submitted in a proper form in accordance with the law as it stands.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am supporting the question of privilege and the motion that has been based on it. It is quite obvious that this is a really serious matter and is another indication of the methods by which the present government is attempting to evade parliamentary responsibilities and attempting to prevent parliament from maintaining its control over the voting of money in this house. We had an earlier experience of this type of thing when we were dealing with interim supply last fall. We discovered that the government had altered the terminology in one of the sections dealing with the Department of Finance and had placed into a contingency fund millions of dollars, whereas in other years they had been satisfied with a million or two. As I say, we discovered that last fall.

This, of course, put us on the alert as to what is happening in the year 1967, and immediately we discover another attempt to circumvent the will of parliament by altering the terminology in the estimates and the headings in the book of estimates, contrary to the law of the land. It is becoming a bit of a trial, watching day by day what the government is up to with regard to parliament. I am not normally very suspicious—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: —but I am being compelled to adopt an inquisitive attitude with regard to things that are happening in parliament, and with some justification. Surely we are entitled to have the government act within the law; or is this an unusual request? We will let the pundits work out that one. But other people have to act within the law, and my opinion is that the government should also.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Although the government has been anticipating an alteration in the National Defence Act, that change has not yet become operative. The unification bill was passed over, our opposition last fall and now is being studied by the committee. It has to come back to the house and be dealt with here in committee of the whole and on third reading. In the interval it may be substantially altered; who knows? Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister, if left in charge for a month rather than a week, would have this bill withdrawn and use his sound common sense with regard to the operation of parliament. This is the uncertain situation with which we are faced; the unification bill has not yet been passed, yet the estimates have been prepared as if this bill had been passed.

From my experience on the government side these estimates are started in the late summer; they go through a tortuous process; they are subjected to examination by the Treasury Board, finally are approved by the cabinet, and the blue book is printed and presented to the house. It is a long process, presented to the house. It is a long process, diligence was shown on the other side of the house these estimates were prepared in the normal manner and therefore this new terminology must have been used last summer or in the early fall, even before the unification bill appeared on the order paper.

In this situation we in the House of Commons are unable to determine whether the amount of money required is adequate for the purposes intended, as we have no means of making a comparison with other years. We do not know whether the Canadian navy is going to be supported as it was in other years, or whether its funds will be depleted and it will be virtually wiped out of existence, which we suspect may happen. We do not know whether the air force is going to be sustained as it was in the past. Here in the estimates everything is lumped together. How can the house make a sensible decision with regard to the amount of money requested unless the estimates are divided, as they have been in the past, in accordance with the law of the land? This is what makes this a really serious matter of privilege.

The minister, in his speech on December 7, informed us that some sections of the act might not be proclaimed immediately after the bill is passed. We have been told by the chief of the defence staff that the proclamation of the bill will wait until he has authorized the minister to have it proclaimed. So there is great uncertainty as to whether the bill will be proclaimed this year even if it is passed by the house in its present form.

I submit that these estimates are based on supposition. If you follow the argument a little further, sir, you may be inclined to think other departments intending to bring in some change in their organization might do what the Department of National Defence has done, that is introduce changes in their estimates for the next year based on the expectation that some alteration in the act pertaining to their department may take place. This opens the way to substantial alterations in the financial control of this country as normally exercised by the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I would not object if Your Honour took a little time to think this over because it is a matter of major importance to the house, and it is possible that in the course of your contemplation the Acting Prime Minister will see that something should be done and will effect the necessary changes. Perhaps Your Honour will not have to make a decision on this matter, because with such an experienced person heading the government at the present time I am sure this question can be settled without a major debate in the House of Commons.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this alleged breach of privilege I would like to say first of all that the form used in the blue book this year is not contrary to the National Defence Act in its present form. I should like to say it has nothing to do with unification of the armed forces or the bill now being considered by the committee on defence. I should like to state also that the wording of the vote this year is exactly the same as it was last year.

In support of that statement I should like to read the two votes. I am reading from last year's book, 1967, page 265, the vote for defence services, vote 15:

Operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment and development for the Canadian forces and $1,750,000 for grants to the town of Oromocto.

This vote was for the fiscal year which will end at the end of this month. Now the vote which is requested in this year's book, 1968, as recorded on page 308 under the same heading, "defence services" and the same vote No. 15, reads as follows:

Operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment and development for the Canadian forces and $1,850,000 for grants to the town of Oromocto.

Mr. Speaker, with the single exception of the amount of money involved in grants to the town of Oromocto and a subsequent bracketed admonition, "details page 316", the two votes are absolutely identical. The only difference—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say where the Royal Canadian Navy is?

Mr. Hellyer: The only difference is in respect of the details. This, I think, is not only logical but essential. The details for the fiscal year commencing April 1 next are based on the integrated forces as they are presently administered. It is not possible to segregate by services all the costs involved in operating the services in the year ahead, notwithstanding the fact that they are still three legal entities, the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

If I may, I should like to give some examples of that in respect of maritime command. As hon. gentlemen are aware, Mr. Speaker, maritime command consists of elements of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Mr. Lambert: It always did.

Mr. Hellyer: The information which is really pertinent to parliament in making up its collective mind in respect of the expenditures for the year ahead is information concerning expenditures related to that particular function of maritime command.

Mr. Lambert: It was split last year.

Mr. Hellyer: The situation is similar in so far as other commands are concerned, Mr. Speaker. For example, the way training command has been organized during the course of last year it would be physically impossible, without entailing administrative costs which would be ridiculously high and cumbersome and certainly not in the public interest, to maintain records on a single service basis because training command is organized to provide basic training, individual training, including flight training to wing standard for the men and women of the three armed forces, the navy, army and air force.

In so far as materiel command is concerned, precisely the same problem arises. Although materiel command still has under its jurisdiction the three separate supply systems, during the interval and until a single supply system can be developed which will eliminate some duplication or triplication, which will permit the consolidation of bases and which will permit considerable savings and at the same time the implementation of a more effective logistic system for our armed forces, it is impossible to segregate in materiel command the costs which are attributable to the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will only be a moment or two.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to be fair to the minister because other hon. members who have taken part in this debate on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West were given considerable latitude, and certainly the minister is entitled to the same consideration. However, from listening to hon. members, and particularly to the arguments advanced by the minister and by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I have the impression that this line of reasoning is of the kind which would be advanced more reasonably if the Chair recognized that there was a question of privilege and a motion were submitted to the house.

It seems to me that would be the time when arguments in support of or in opposition to a proposed motion should be advanced by hon. members. The very limited point of concern to the Chair at the moment is whether there is a question of privilege. No doubt many of the points advanced by hon. members might be quite relevant if this matter were before the house, whether by way of consideration of the estimate itself or the estimates in general or by substantive motion. But the one point the Chair has to consider now and on which I will reflect later on is whether there is a question of privilege here.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, that was really the point to which I was addressing myself, but in the process I had to explain that during the course of the last year the organization of Canada's forces has been changed. Whereas previously the supply system, for example, had been organized on the basis of the three individual services, it is now combined under one command which has the responsibility for supplying the three services. Similarly, Mr. Speaker, where previously each service administered its own training, there is now one single training command which provides service to the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is essential that the cost of that command be recorded on a single unit basis rather than on a tri-service basis.

In view of your suggestion in this respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. If I recall correctly there was some suggestion in the public accounts committee that a change be effected in the method of reporting proposed expenditures and of breaking them down in order to give members of parliament a more meaningful appreciation of how this money was being spent. The real object of changing the details in this year's book—that is, for the fiscal year commencing April 1—is to give members of parliament a more meaningful appreciation of how vote 15 is being expended.

For example, the change has been made to show whether the money under that vote is being taken up, or what proportion of the vote is being used, by the maritime function, the mobile command function, the air defence function and the various other functions all of which are included in the single vote 15.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, though I speak from memory, I think there was a suggestion in the public accounts committee that the department of defence should undertake this kind of breakdown and make it available to members of parliament for their study in order to permit members to have a better appreciation of what is involved by way of defence expenditures, and in order to assist them in making up their minds as to the relative priority of various functions being performed by Canada's defence services.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it is perfectly fair to say that this is in no way anticipating the unification bill. This new method is not related in any respect whatever to the unification bill; it is only an attempt to give parliament more meaningful information. Not only is it not attempting to circumvent the will of parliament; on the contrary it is implementing an instruction of parliament to change the form of the details in such manner as to make them more comprehensible to members studying the proposed expenditures, and to make it possible for them to have a more realistic discussion of the relative merits of the expenditures being made in the years that lie ahead.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is only a reflection of the organization of the forces at the present time as permitted by the law passed by parliament in 1964. In my opinion it does not raise any question of privilege whatever, and therefore I respectfully suggest that there is in fact no question of privilege here.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the alleged question of privilege before us concerns the form in which estimates were presented to this house in the blue book tabled yesterday. I suggest to Your Honour that there may have been some change here from the previous practice; therefore I cannot accept the argument of the minister that only the details have been changed. Surely the details contained in the blue book are an integral part of the estimates and of the form of the estimates. I should like to refer to a citation to be found at page 736 of May's 17th edition:

> In accordance with the royal direction, estimates are annually laid before the House of Commons, stating the specific grants of money which will, during the current year, be required for the navy, the army, the air force, the civil departments, and the ministry of defence.

Then on the next page, under the heading "Form of the estimates", there is this statement to be found:

> As the Sovereign is responsible for the presentation of the estimates of the public expenditure, the Crown, acting through its ministers, controls, subject to the requirements of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act, 1866, the form in which the estimates are presented.

Then under paragraph (c) there is the statement that under established usage, however, important changes in the customary form of the estimates should not be made without the previous approval of the public accounts committee. I am not sure whether the public accounts committee have considered the form of the estimates of the Department of National Defence and in fact have approved these changes. Then paragraph (d) reads as follows:

> —acting on behalf of the House of Commons; and, in deference to this principle, official alterations in the estimates are restricted to such rearrangements as involve no question of principle.

If the changes do in fact involve a question of principle so far as the organization of the armed forces is concerned—a question that, as Your Honour knows, is now before a standing committee of this house—then I suggest there is in fact a rearrangement that is prohibited by the precedents. I suppose that when we get to the point where this house is asked to vote interim supply on these estimates we are going to be faced with a problem, Mr. Speaker. I think that was one of the points made by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

However, Mr. Speaker, until we do get to that stage I suggest that there is no question of privilege; because as I read the motion moved yesterday by the President of the Treasury Board it was a motion that these estimates be placed before this house. It was not a motion to deal with the estimates. According to page 13875 of Hansard the President of the Treasury Board said:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and French of the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968—

That is not a motion putting these estimates before the house for consideration. None of them has been entered at this point, so I therefore suggest there can be no question of privilege at this point. The estimates have simply been tabled in the house.

So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that while there may be a question of privilege when we are asked to approve either part or all of these estimates and it is found that the form has been rearranged, I do suggest to Your Honour that at this point there is not. In addition, Mr. Speaker, when we reach the stage where we require interim supply, if this occurs before the consideration of the armed services act now before the committee is completed, it may then be necessary for the Minister of Defence or somebody to withdraw the estimates of the department of defence and substitute therefor estimates in a form that does in fact comply with the previous practice.

In my submission, Mr. Speaker, we have not reached that stage yet. As of this date, therefore, I see no question of privilege.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I think the matter is as plain as this. Yesterday the President of the Treasury Board tabled the estimates of the various departments of government for this house to peruse, so that the members may be ready to discuss them on a future occasion. The minister presented the estimates in the way estimates are supposed to be tabled, showing what money each department will need in the ensuing year under conditions established or set up in that department, according to what parliament may approve. Estimates are governed by the constitutions of departments.

The estimates for the Department of National Defence were not tabled in this way. They were not tabled according to the constitutional set-up of the Department of National Defence as it now exists.

Mr. Hellyer: Quite the contrary.

Mr. Hales: The constitution of the department may be changed later, after this house has debated the point. The point is that these estimates are tabled on the basis of what the new department will be under unification.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. member is three years out of date.

Mr. Hales: The estimates, therefore, for this particular department were not tabled in their proper form. As a result I say that the minister has tabled a wrong set of estimates for this department.

It is quite true that the public accounts committee recommended that the various votes be as clear and concise as possible while giving all the information that it is possible to give, that members of the house may vote intelligently on the expenditures listed under each vote. I cannot refer to these votes in detail, but taking a quick glance at the new estimates of the Department of National Defence one sees that no figures for personnel are given, as were given in the previous year. Details are not given, under headings of votes, though these details were given last year. So it is clear that the estimates are not tabled in the form recommended by the public accounts committee.

I say the government has asked this house to study a set of estimates which do not conform with the constitution of the Department of National Defence. If this house is to study these estimates at a later date they must be put in the form they appeared in previous years, until such time as parliament passes or rejects the unification bill.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house should recall what the hon. member for Medicine Hat said in the concluding part of his observations, that all that has happened with regard to this matter thus far is the tabling of the book of estimates. No action has been taken by the government to implement these estimates; the government has not yet asked parliament to accept the recommendations contained in these estimates.

There has been no change in the votes. It is often the practice, of course, for changes to be made in details. In the particular matter being discussed there has been no change whatsoever in the vote. The only legal effect that could result from any action by parliament would be a vote by this house on a proposed item designated as one of the items to be voted on in the Department of National Defence.

My hon. friend the member for Medicine Hat I think was in error when he said the practice was to first give the public accounts committee an opportunity of passing on the estimates before this house is called on to deal with them.

Mr. Olson: I said the form of the estimates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I see. I was about to observe that that is not our practice. The House of Commons in the United Kingdom follows that procedure; we do not. There is no motion to deal with the estimates; all that has happened is that they have been tabled.

The question before you, Mr. Speaker, is not whether the argument of the hon. members for Winnipeg South Centre and Edmonton West is to be accepted on the facts as stated. As Your Honour said, the question before the Speaker is a simple one; is the matter raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West a question of privilege? The Minister of National Defence has said that it is not, and I think he is supported by the observations made in Beauchesne, to be found in the fourth edition at page 99. Subsection (3) of citation 109 says:

> It is declared to be a breach of privilege for a member, or any other person, to publish the evidence taken before a select committee, until it has been reported to the house.

I am not raising a question of privilege on what has happened today, but I might well have done so on the basis of this interpretation. It is not open to any member of this house to publish or to utter any evidence placed before a parliamentary committee until that committee has made a report to this house. Referring directly to the question of privilege and turning to page 102 of Beauchesne—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friends laugh, but it is not open to any member of this house at any time to raise any question about any proceeding in any committee, or to refer to any evidence before that committee, until a report has been made to the house. Citation 113 of Beauchesne says:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

That has not been done, as Your Honour observed a few moments ago. There are privileges involving the house as well as individual hon. members. Beauchesne lists wilful disobedience to orders and rules of parliament in the exercise of its constitutional functions, insults and obstructions during debate. These are breaches of the privileges of the house. Such matters are not before Your Honour. Continuing reading from citation 113 of Beauchesne the following statement appears:

> But a dispute—

This, I argue, is relevant:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

What do we have today? We have had nothing more than an allegation as to facts presented by the hon. members for Edmonton West, Winnipeg South Centre—

An hon. Member: And Calgary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I beg your pardon. The hon. member for Calgary North has also spoken. What was said did not involve a question of privilege. Those hon. members presented an argument based on a different interpretation of facts. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no prima facie case of privilege. In fact no case of privilege whatsoever has been established. We have merely had a disputation between two hon. members about a set of alleged facts not yet before this house for its approval. The argument has been in terms of the decision which parliament ultimately must make on the recommendation put forward by the government with respect to the blue book of estimates.

For those reasons and for the reasons brought forward in citation 113 of Beauchesne's fourth edition I submit that the only question before us is whether there is a question of privilege, and clearly this is not a question of privilege.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the house has listened to the words of wisdom of the dean of the house, and it was of interest that included in his presentation was a spanking of the Minister of National Defence. He pointed out that it was very wrong for anyone to refer to evidence in a committee until that committee had reported. This was the very thing that had been done by the Minister of National Defence; and if the debate so far has been effectual in any way it has certainly been so with the contribution of the Acting Prime Minister in putting the Minister of National Defence in his proper place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: Explain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is just another example of the flagrant manner in which this minister defies parliament with the passage of the days. I have seen examples of it multiplying, the attitude of the minister being that after all ministers have a right to unalloyed arrogance.

Mr. McIlraith: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about leaders of the opposition?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman used to be over here. He qualified fully. It is the arrogance of a minister endeavouring to trample on the rights of parliament.

It is said that this book of estimates really means nothing. If it does not mean anything, for what reason was it presented? It is now before the House of Commons and we will be asked, when a motion is made for interim supply and the vote on it takes place, to grant that supply on the basis of the estimates in the book that is now before us.

What has taken place here is very clear. In 1966-67, as one reads the defence estimates, one finds references to various elements in the defence forces such as Royal Canadian Navy, Royal Canadian Naval Reserve, Royal Canadian Sea Cadets, and so on. I realize that under this government "royal" has become a dirty word.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I repeat it; "royal" has become a dirty word.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Can we have order, please?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The truth hurts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, if it has not, why is it being removed? Every possible vestige of our royal connection is being removed by this government, and it is now done in the estimates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, you said a moment ago that in view of the statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Edmonton West you would allow a certain latitude. For that reason you allowed the Minister of National Defence to reply to certain statements that were made.

I can only assume from that observation that there has been enough discussion of matters that are not properly before the house, and I submit to Your Honour with the greatest respect that the only issue now is whether this is a question of privilege. If that ruling is not made now I suggest the right hon. gentleman will go on introducing irrelevancies, creating confusion, instead of addressing himself to the only question before the house. I feel it is surely not too much to ask the right hon. gentleman who, along with whoever is acting head of the government in this house is an officer of the house, to recognize that we both have a responsibility—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to see that the rules are observed; and my right hon. friend knows that the only question now before the house is whether this is a question of privilege, and nothing else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to recognize that the Leader of the Opposition has the right to make observations on the question of privilege, and I am sure he will limit his consideration to the question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I always like to sit at the feet of Gamaliel, but when it comes to his views on rules, disregard of the rules has generally been his course through the years.

Before I was interrupted in that very improper manner I was referring to the estimates as they were in 1966-67, and was pointing out that alterations, significant ones, have taken place. My hon. friends opposite object strenuously to any suggestion that "royal" has become anathema—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the reason, then, for its omission from the estimates? What reason can be given?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It may well be that the right hon. gentleman has a second question of privilege, but my understanding of the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West is that it is not related to the grievance to which the Leader of the Opposition refers at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the greatest deference, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West referred to the complete change in so far as the estimates are concerned, and I am referring in particular to one change that to me is very significant. Why this change; why this alteration? What parliament is being subjected to is an attitude of mind on the part of the Minister of National Defence. He believes he can trample on the rights of members and force down the throat of this house his peculiar idea of unification of the forces. That is what it means and nothing else.

This is simply a means whereby he would gratify his desire to do that which parliament has not yet decided. He places before us estimates having no reference to the regular rules upon which estimates are founded and prepared, and the hon. member for Wellington South has said there has been no recommendation for any change that has been passed by the house.

That being so, is parliament simply to become a puppet in the hands of the minister? Is he to be privileged to produce the kind of estimates that he desires to gratify his own particular ego? Sir, if ever there was a breach of privilege this is clearly one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly this speech is one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This parliament did not authorize—

Mr. Pickersgill: Talk about egoes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I bow with deference to that perpendicular "I" over there. This matter, sir, is just another example. The minister says the reason for it is to help parliament understand, and that it would cost money to follow the usual course. For a government that is going to spend $1,200,000,000 more this coming year to worry about the cost of a few dollars to produce a fair and proper book of estimates is the most specious argument that could ever be advanced. The Minister of National Defence is asking parliament to accept a mish-mash rather than the estimates that have been accepted through the years. He is trying to anticipate what parliament is going to do, and get his way before parliament has the right finally to determine the question. We cannot permit parliament to knuckle under to Caesar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I can present my submissions to Your Honour very briefly. I understand the hon. member for Edmonton West to have based his question of privilege on the proposition that the estimates as presented to the house prejudge the decision of this house on the unification bill. If this were the case, a question of privilege might arise. But in my submission it is not the case.

As the Minister of National Defence pointed out, this form of presenting the estimates is perfectly appropriate whether or not the unification bill is passed. What has happened is that the estimated expenditures have been grouped under the different roles and commands which were set up under the legislation of 1964. In my view this method of presenting the estimates is an improvement over the previous method and in no way prejudges our determination of the unification issue. In fact, in the defence committee some of the members, including myself, suggested it would be a clearer and more satisfactory way of presenting the facts to the house. This being the case I suggest there is no question of privilege, that the question raised is without substance, and that we need not be detained with it any longer.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Rosthern feels he can contribute something substantial in connection with the question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: —he has every right to do so.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, after some of the ill-defined statements which have come from across the way, any member of the house might feel he had something to contribute to this debate.

I will be very brief. I wish to refer to citation 106 of Beauchesne, to be found on page 96, since I would like Your Honour to take it into consideration when you are determining whether or not there is a valid question of privilege before us. Paragraph 1 reads as follows:

> Although either House may expound the law of Parliament, and indicate its own privileges, it is agreed that no new privileges can be created. In 1704, the Lords communicated a resolution to the Commons at a conference, "That neither House of Parliament have power, by any vote or declaration, to create to themselves new privileges, not warranted by the known laws and customs of Parliament".

The way in which these estimates have been drawn up this year represents a departure from one of the customs of parliament.

Paragraph 2 says:

> The dignity and independence of the two Houses are in great measure preserved by keeping their privileges indefinite. If all the privileges of Parliament were set down and ascertained, and no privilege to be allowed but what was so defined and determined, it were easy for the executive power to devise some new case, not within the line of privilege, and under pretence thereof, to harass any refractory member and violate the freedom of Parliament.

That is exactly that the minister is trying to do. He is trying to violate one of the freedoms of parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should mention to the hon. member that I meant to say "something additional", not "something substantial". It was, if the hon. member for Macleod will allow me to use a Latin expression a lapsus linguae.

HATE LITERATURE

APPOINTMENT OF HOUSE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly-Rouville) moved:

> That the following members be appointed to represent the house on the special joint committee on the question raised by the resolution concerning hate literature, namely:—Messrs. Baldwin, Forest, Gauthier, Klein, Leboe, Lewis, Mandziuk, Mongrain, Nasserden, Reid, Tolmie and Walker.
> That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours thereof.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FINANCE

TARIFF BOARD REPORT ON MACHINERY FOR FRESH FRUIT AND VEGETABLES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that I have tabled today copies in English and in French of a report by the Tariff Board on reference 137 which covers machinery and equipment for fresh fruit or fresh vegetables. I have tabled also a transcript of the evidence presented at the public hearings held by the board.

I can assure hon. members that the board's recommendations will be considered carefully by the government. Interested parties who may wish to comment on this report should do so promptly.

PUBLIC SERVICE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF GLASSCO COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In the light of the warning by the governor of the Bank of Canada that the Canadian economy is being overloaded, and in view of the astronomical and runaway federal spending indicated in the estimates for 1967-1968, will the Prime Minister report to parliament in the very near future as to the steps the government is taking now to implement the Glassco recommendations to eliminate government waste inasmuch as Canadians are wondering whether the world of waste under this government is to go on unchecked?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a great many of the recommendations of the Glassco commission have, of course, been implemented, some by the right hon. gentleman but more by the present administration. The government is giving consideration to further ways in which the implementation of these recommendations can take place. I should like to point out, however, with regard to the right hon. gentleman's observations, that the expenditures which are reflected in the estimates before the house are estimates based upon decisions made by this free parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A world of waste.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING CUBAN TERRORIST ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has his attention been drawn to a statement made in Miami by Felipe Rivero, who claims to be the co-ordinator of the Cuban nationalist movement, admitting the responsibility of his organization for the bombing of the Cuban embassy in Ottawa last October and for the bombing of an auction room in Montreal last Saturday, as well as threatening that persons who visit Expo are liable to be in danger if they enter the Cuban pavilion? Have any representations been made to the United States government with reference to this organization which has sought refuge in the United States and is apparently using that sanctuary as a base for terrorist activities against a friendly neighbour.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement attributed to someone in Miami. I am aware, of course, of the incident which took place in Montreal on March 11 and of another incident last fall. I can say that the government is concerned about the recent bombing in Montreal for which Cuban exiles have claimed responsibility. At the present time an investigation in which the R.C.M.P. is co-operating is under way. With regard to the question of further threats, the government is well aware of this danger and we are taking appropriate steps in co-operation with the police forces in an attempt to prevent further incidents of this kind.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Acting Prime Minister. While we all appreciate the fact that the United States has given sanctuary to exiles and refugees, does the minister not think that representations should be made to that government asking it to curb the activities of this group which, by their own admission, are going to indulge in terrorist activities in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my feeling that the question asked is argumentative.

Mr. Douglas: I did not intend it to be argumentative, Mr. Speaker. If Your Honour thinks it is I shall simply rephrase the question and ask the Acting Prime Minister whether or not he intends to make any representations to the government of the United States asking it to curb the activities of this organization so far as Canada is concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, discussions are taking place with the United States.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RECOMMENDATION BY O.E.C.D. RESPECTING WAGES AND PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government is aware that the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, of which Canada is a member, yesterday issued a statement urging Canada to take steps to control the rise in wages and prices, and whether there were any suggestions as to how Canada should take these steps.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the government has been made aware of this report through its representative at the O.E.C.D. and this matter is the subject of careful consideration as outlined the other day by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Olson: I have a supplementary question. Would the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance indicate whether the report contained any suggestions as to how Canada should achieve this objective?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that is a proper question.

GRAIN

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE SALE OR LEASE OF ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Would he give us every assurance that the operation of the grain elevators in Quebec city will remain under the authority and ownership of the National Harbours Board?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any such undertaking. I can give the hon. gentleman the undertaking that the elevator will remain under the jurisdiction of the board of grain commissioners as a public elevator.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S. CONCERN RESPECTING CANADIAN ANTI-SUBMARINE CAPABILITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Does the presence in Ottawa today of so many senior officers of the United States navy indicate the grave and understandable concern of the United States regarding the increasing inability of the Canadian navy to carry out its continental anti-submarine defence responsibilities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that the question is not acceptable in that form.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INCOME SUPPLEMENT—GRATUITY TO RETIRED N.S. COAL MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. I sent him notice, albeit short, when I came into the house. For the purpose of clarification will the minister advise whether the small gratuity received by retired Nova Scotia coal miners from the Dominion Coal Company and its subsidiaries will be considered as income in calculating the amount that will be payable under the guaranteed income supplement?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the amount of the guaranteed income supplement is a subject for determination by the Department of National Health and Welfare. I will take the hon. member's question as notice and supply him with an answer this afternoon.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the Department of National Health and Welfare has advised me that this is the responsibility of the Department of National Revenue I hope the minister will be able to provide an answer.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF HARBOUR COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has any knowledge of a bill introduced by the government of British Columbia yesterday in the legislature seeking to set up a provincial harbour commission to engage in operating, maintaining and developing harbours, particularly in the lower mainland? If so, will the minister consider that bill in relation to the injury it could cause to the potential development of northern ports?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making representations and suggestions to the minister, and I do not think this is a proper question.

Mr. Howard: I did not intend to do that, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I could simply ask the minister whether he has any knowledge of such a bill being introduced and what steps he is taking in this regard.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I learned through the press and as the result of a report I received from the port manager of the port of Vancouver that a bill with 36 clauses purporting to set up a B.C. harbours board was introduced yesterday in the British Columbia legislature by the attorney general. I have also been made aware of certain allegations by the attorney general which bear no relation so far as I can discern to the facts. He has apparently suggested that the B.C. government must take this action because the federal government is not carrying out its responsibility in the port of Vancouver. That statement is untrue and I resent it very much. There are certain functions provincial governments have to perform under the constitution which should occupy the full time of provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should comment ex post facto that both the question and answer appear to be out of order. Let me suggest to hon. members that questions relating to provincial legislation should not be asked at this time. If hon. members adopt the custom or get into the habit of referring from day to day to legislation introduced in provincial parliaments this might take up most of the time allotted for questions. I recognize the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Howard: May I be permitted to ask one small supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have recognized the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

TROIS-RIVIÈRES—PROTESTS RESPECTING INCREASE IN SEAWAY TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport and I assure him that this is not the kind of question that will raise blood pressure.

Can the minister advise the house whether he received this morning a telegram from the directors of the national harbours at Trois-Rivières, objecting to any increase in tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway or in the Welland canal, and mentioning also that the Trois-Rivières city council last night passed a unanimous resolution asking the minister to do something to prevent such toll increases?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, just before coming into the house I made some inquiries, but up to that point no such telegram had reached my office.

POLLUTION

REQUEST FOR REPLY TO TELEGRAM OF CALGARY ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not expect the Acting Prime Minister will be able to make an immediate reply to my question but it is an urgent one and requires some answer very soon. Mr. Cronkite, chairman of the Calgary Fish and Game Association, sent a telegram to the Prime Minister last week asking for a declaration by the government of Canada on the subject of pollution. Since the meeting of the association takes place tomorrow, will the Acting Prime Minister make sure that a reply is sent?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into this matter.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer given yesterday by the Minister of Labour in repect of Canada's current housing crisis, I should like to ask him whether the government intends to take action before the end of the current session in order to give some hope to many Canadians who right now are looking for decent housing facilities.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question as to what should be done and when in the housing field is under constant review by the government. We have already taken many progressive steps which now are having beneficial results. When we decide on further steps an announcement will be made at that time.

Mr. Grafftey: I have a supplementary question. In view of the urgency of the situation and the necessity of taking immediate action, can the minister inform the house now that his cross-country symposiums and study sessions are to be brought to an end?

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. member had been following the newspapers he would know they have been concluded.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance which is not based on a newspaper or any other report but on a statement made by the governor of the Bank of Canada concerning the drop in Canadian housing starts. Will the minister now consider removing the sales tax on building materials?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's remarks regarding the newspaper reports, can he now inform the house what have been the results of the symposiums, and when we can expect definite action, in view of the present crisis?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a ministerial statement and this cannot be done on questions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DECREASE IN AMOUNT OF FOREIGN AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am wondering how the minister reconciles the decrease in the over-all foreign aid program, as disclosed in the estimates, with the following statement of the Prime Minister recorded in Hansard of January 23, page 12096:

> We aim to reach a total of 1 per cent of the national income within a short period of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question as asked is argumentative in nature.

[Later:]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, although I fail to see how my request for reconciliation of the estimates with the Prime Minister's statement can be classified as argumentative I will try again by addressing myself to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask him whether next year's estimates disclose an over-all reduction in foreign aid.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, they do not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Royal, if I interpret his question correctly, is asking for information which is available to him in the same way as it is to other hon. members, and therefore the question is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house why the estimates disclose an over-all reduction in foreign aid?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I said in answer to that question that there is not. The statistical story which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail is an inaccurate one. Our aid appropriations have been significantly increased in recent years and they have increased in this centennial year. In summary, if the special, non-recurring items are excluded, there is a net increase in aid appropriations of $42.70 million. These figures refer to aid only and do not include ECIC (Section 21-A) credit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier today we were prohibited from discussing the estimates for the coming year. We were told that we could not discuss them until they are referred to parliament for study. Now the Acting Prime Minister is commenting on the book of estimates.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Royal should have borne in mind the representation or suggestion now made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member for Royal that the question, even as asked the third time, was still out of order. I am sure I should not have allowed it. However, having done so I suppose the Acting Prime Minister was entitled to reply to it. The point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is well taken and I suggest that perhaps this would be a good time to call orders of the day.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I make one further point? I do not think it is fair for the hon. gentleman to suspect his own colleague who has asked the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PRICE UNDER INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I addressed a question to the Minister of Agriculture, who happened to be absent from the house and his parliamentary secretary said he would take the question as notice. My question had to do with the announcement yesterday by the Minister of Transport that there would be an increase in the tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway which would be reflected in the cost of producing wheat. I ask the minister whether he has done anything under the international wheat agreement to increase the price of wheat to the producer.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe the subject matter of the question comes more directly under the responsibilities of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I can assure the hon. member that our representatives at Geneva are working actively and forcibly to see to it that the western wheat farmers get a fair shake in any new world wheat agreement.

An hon. Member: It is about time.

[Later:]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence perhaps another minister would answer it. The minister has returned from Geneva where he was engaged in the renegotiation of the international wheat agreement. Can the house be informed what progress has been made in increasing the price of wheat?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and several other colleagues are out of the house at the moment on matters that are of importance. This is why they had to leave. We have had a long question period and they had to keep a very important appointment. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will deal with this question tomorrow, and I think my hon. friend may be very happy with the very able way in which the minister carried out his assignment in Europe the other day.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. It is a question of great concern to many people and is of national importance. In view of the growing fraudulent bankruptcy racket in Canada and the statement made by Commissioner McClellan of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that the underworld is on the verge of controlling all sections of our economy, has the government given consideration to the request made by the Canadian Lumbermen's Association and other organizations for a royal commission to investigate all aspects of bankruptcy in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question concerns my department and notice of it was referred to me by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Cardin).

Without necessarily accepting to its full extent the assertion made in the first part of the question, I must say that all representations, all recommendations are under constant study by the minister as well as by his officials and special advisers.

In that respect, I must remind the house that a three-member committee has been appointed and that it is now carrying out an active study of the economic, social and legal aspects of the Bankruptcy Act.

I am confident that as soon as I get that report I will be in a position to make all the recommendations I deem appropriate or to refer all committee recommendations, if I feel that is necessary.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It is a question of grave national importance. Could the Acting Prime Minister tell the house whether the appointment of a governor general will await the return from western Canada of the president of the Quebec Liberal Federation, who is already reported as saying that Canadians should begin questioning the usefulness of the post of governor general and has promised to enlarge on that thesis during his western tour?

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister in a position to announce when the board of arbitration will be set up to deal with the two groups of striking railway employees?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I cannot announce anything definite today, Mr. Speaker. I can state, however, that the work on the regulations is well advanced and, as I have already advised the bargaining committee of some of the railway unions concerned, I hope to announce appointment of the board of arbitrators and table the required regulations on or about Monday next, certainly not later than Tuesday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

HALIFAX—REQUEST OF DOCKYARD COUNCIL RESPECTING PAY RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence, or if he is unable to answer it perhaps it might better be directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In any event, I should like to ask either of them what action has been taken to meet the request of the dockyard trades and labour council in Halifax for one rate for labourers employed in the maritimes area by the Department of National Defence as opposed to the four rates in effect at the present time, which indeed is a discriminatory situation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is of a rather detailed nature and I suggest to the hon. member that it should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR FURTHER INFORMATION ON DISTRIBUTION OF COLOUR TELEVISION SETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. As we are aware, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation spent over $80,000 for 107 colour television sets, and on this morning's news it was announced that the officials of the C.B.C. were so arrogant as to inform the public that they had no intention of revealing the names of the people who had received these television sets.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has to ask a question, not make a statement.

Mr. Smallwood: This is just a preface to my question, Mr. Speaker. I am coming to the question now.

Mr. Speaker: The rules indicate that the hon. member cannot have a preface to his question.

Mr. Smallwood: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he will introduce legislation to compel the C.B.C. to reveal to the public the names of the 90 people who received colour television sets so that the taxpayers will know how their money has been wasted by the C.B.C. I ask that legislation be introduced to compel the C.B.C. to reveal these names, because they have refused to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL OF FEED GRAIN BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Is he in a position to give us the names of the members of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): No, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped to make a statement tomorrow, but there will a delay of a week to ten days.

Mr. Ricard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since cattle breeders consider this matter as very urgent, when will the minister be in a position to make that information public?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, as I have already said in my answer, within the next ten days.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF DAIRY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up some understandable confusion in the industry, may I pose this question to the Minister of Agriculture. The government has indicated that a statement on the dairy policy for this year will be made prior to April 1. Will this policy be enunciated by the Minister of Agriculture or by the new National Dairy Commission?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): There will be a statement made in the house, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FROM PROVINCIAL PREMIERS FOR NATIONAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Has he received from any of the provincial premiers, the premier of Manitoba in particular, any request for the convening of a national conference on farm prices, costs and income?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago we received a request from the premier of Manitoba for the convening of a national farm conference but I think its object was broader than was indicated by the hon. member.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate to the house what course of action the government is taking with respect to that request?

EGGS—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the information contained in parliamentary return No. 2696 tabled in the house yesterday, which indicates that imports of eggs have increased by 250 per cent during the past year, can the minister tell us what action the government proposes to take with regard to this unhealthy situation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a ministerial statement. This is certainly not a question which can be asked now.

[Later:]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question to the Acting Prime Minister? In the light of the situation revealed by this return, will the government bring the operations under the stabilization board before the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I cannot make an omelet without breaking eggs, but I will refer that question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Nasserden: Surely the Acting Prime Minister could indicate whether the government would consider bringing the operations under the stabilization board with regard to eggs before the parliamentary committee?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already done so.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the Minister of Agriculture indicate what the situation is at present?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand the ham is on the other side of the house; we have the eggs.

An hon. Member: Let the minister look at himself.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DISTRIBUTION OF HAWTHORN-TREMBLAY REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he order the distribution to members of parliament of part 1 of the Hawthorn-Tremblay report which was tabled in the house last Friday? So far I have not received a copy.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry about this. I understand that the hon. member attempted to get a copy yesterday. He could have secured one by telephoning my office. However, today a general distribution was made to all members of parliament.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The other day I addressed a question to the Minister of Industry—I did not know at the time that it was addressed to the wrong minister—about the distribution free of charge of a copy of the Hawthorn-Tremblay report to each of the Indian bands in order that they may have access to it as well. Is the minister in a position to make any comment about that?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, except to say that I think it is important and should be done.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED ABANDONMENT OF SERVICE IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, who I believe reports to the house for Air Canada. Can he inform us whether the Air Transport Board has received an application from Air Canada to abandon all service in Saskatchewan?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is the faintest likelihood of this having happened, but I suppose I should go through the motions of inquiring.

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is looking into the question of air service in Saskatchewan, would he inquire whether and when Regina and Saskatoon will get jet service?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to do that.

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR SAFETY INSPECTION OF STEEL HULLED TOWBOATS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct another question to the Minister of Transport. I am certain this one will evoke a less volatile answer than the last one did, and I am sure it is in order. Last Thursday I asked him about a communication he may have received from the Canadian Merchant Service Guild relating to towboats on the Pacific coast. Is the minister in a position to reply now?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I have a very carefully worded reply somewhere and I have had it in the house for two or three days. I was looking for it just when the hon. gentleman asked his question but I do not think I have it with me today. Since the subject is very technical I think it would be wise for me to stick to my text.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DIRECTION OF MONETARY POLICY, CASH RESERVES, ETC.

The house resumed from Monday, March 13, consideration in committee of Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday clause 1 of the bill was being discussed and the hon. member for Lapointe had completed his speech in the time allotted to him.

On clause 1.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I had not finished my allotted time; quite the opposite, I was just starting. I had finished part of my remarks when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) rose to speak for a few minutes. Not being satisfied with the remarks of the Minister of Finance, I rose again, that is I was properly recognized again after listening to a statement of fifteen or twenty lines by the Minister of Finance. So I started over again and I had barely been speaking three or four minutes when the sitting was adjourned last night.

That is why I believe that on starting over again today—

[English]

The Chairman: I recognize the statement made by the hon. member for Lapointe, but I am sure he will recognize the fact that the statement made by the Minister of Finance was in answer to a question. The hon. member had completed his 30 minutes at that time. I would be pleased to listen to the hon. member again after somebody else has made a contribution.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. If you will kindly refer to Hansard for yesterday Monday, March 13, 1967, on page 13946, you will find that my time was up. The Minister of Finance then rose and gave some explanations. Afterwards, I rose again, being the only one to do so after the explanations from the Minister of Finance, and I was recognized by the chairman of the committee; so, I started to deliver my statement. However, only three or four minutes had elapsed when I called it ten o'clock, because I thought that I could continue today with the same statement I had started last night at the end of the sitting.

Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Chairman, the rules state that when we study a bill in committee of the whole, the member who has the floor at ten o'clock is entitled to continue the day after, as is the case when the house is sitting, with the Speaker in the chair. Furthermore, the rules of this house also state that when we are considering a bill in committee of the whole, we have the right to speak as many times as we wish; of course, our time is limited, but if another member takes the floor after one of our statements, we are allowed to speak again. So, I humbly submit to Your Honour that this is exactly what happened yesterday, and that is the reason why, at the end of the sitting, I called it 10 o'clock.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. The Chair is not at all willing to accept the argument now being presented by the hon. member for Lapointe. I have before me Hansard for yesterday and the indication is that the minister was asked a question by the hon. member which the minister answered. At that time the hon. member for Lapointe had used the time allotted to him. As I said before, the Chair will again recognize the hon. member for Lapointe when some other member of the committee has made a contribution. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Three Rivers.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. With all due respect, may I point out that you have identified me as the member for Three Rivers whereas the known designation of my constituency is Trois-Rivières.

[English]

The Chairman: The Chair apologizes to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Mongrain: I hope I did not hurt the feelings of the Chair, and I apologize if I did.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I cannot let the study of Bill No. C-190, an act amending the Bank of Canada Act, go on without pursuing a little further the matter I discussed the other day, at which time I mentioned that when we speak of finance or the banking system, it is absolutely necessary to refer to the situation of the Canadian municipalities which represent one of the three important levels of government and which are treated most of the time as poor relations, and which do not have the means to carry out their responsibilities to the people.

As briefly as possible, this afternoon, I should like to show further four main points. Canadian municipalities at the present time operate in a frightful state of stagnation, they have to assume their responsibilities in a sort of strait-jacket, and it is a nightmare for the mayors and the aldermen—whatever they are called, depending on the province—to try and balance their budget and meet the requirements of their constituents. Not later than this morning, I learned that my own municipality, like a great number of other Canadian municipalities at this time of the year, had to raise its property tax, which it had managed to avoid through some sort of miracle for several years.

Second, I should like to pinpoint one of the causes of the financial mess in which the municipalities find themselves in regard to such investments and capitalization as they are forced to make in order to meet pressing requirements.

They experience those financial difficulties because, first of all, they do not have sufficient sources of income to meet the cost of their loans; second, they are at a disadvantage in the bond market, in the loan market because the federal government borrows at privileged rates, followed by the provinces whose rates are advantageous. The municipalities come third and must borrow at higher rates.

Mr. Chairman, this new bank act should, therefore, provide the greatest possible measure of compensation for the difficulties experienced by the municipalities, because their responsibilities are growing in direct relation to the phenomenal development of our country.

Third—and with this I draw my submission to a close—I should like to propose a solution to the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp), a solution which I originally intended to move immediately as an amendment. But I should like, first of all, to explain my point of view which is that of all the mayors in Canada.

This I know full well because much of what I have to say this afternoon is based on the surveys made in the last 25 years by "Mr. Municipality" himself the late George Mooney, executive secretary of the Canadian Mayors Federation, on the recommendations sent to me by its administrative secretary, Mr. Lawless, as well as on the briefs this federation which is in close contact with the provincial unions of municipalities, has published and submitted to the provincial government in recent years.

To support my argument, Mr. Chairman, let me mention the "Crédit communal" as it exists in Belgium since 1860. Similar systems can be found in Scandinavian countries, but I shall limit myself to Belgian organization. It might give the hon. Minister of Finance an idea of what could be done here in Canada, with certain adaptations.

I am not forgetting all through my remarks, that we must not lose sight of the constitutional responsibility of the provinces as regards the municipalities, although I do not agree that we should keep on calling the municipalities the creatures of the provinces. In my opinion, the municipalities represent the first level of government, since they are the closest to the people and they must face up to perhaps more urgent, more utilitarian needs than the federal and provincial governments. However, constitutional considerations must still be kept in mind.

I am not forgetting either that a sort of overall priority classification should be established with regard to the fiscal needs of the municipalities. When I refer to fiscal needs, I mean those for capitalization purposes, in co-operation always—and that has been the weak point of the governments in the past—with the authorized spokesmen of the municipalities who are the elected members to the Board of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and those who, in their province, are elected to the executive of the unions of municipalities.

As I say, that was not done enough in the past, and I am not blaming one government more than any other, because on several occasions, I had the opportunity of taking part in representations made to governments headed by members of the two largest parties here. As a matter of fact, I attended such meetings as the spokesman for the mayors of Canada and, this year, I was in attendance as a member of parliament—if I may say so, I was on the other side of the fence—and I feel I must conclude that, for all practical purposes, the Canadian mayors' representations do not amount to anything more than a social call on the federal parliament, nothing much ever comes out of them except perhaps—one must be honest—a few decisions, like the winter works program and some other projects which were implemented over the last few years.

However, the situation is now so serious that over-all policies must be conceived and established; this would necessitate an important amendment to the Bank Act or perhaps a new piece of legislation related to the Bank Act.

I am not forgetting—and this is my fourth point—that this fund whose establishment I am recommending should be some sort of a perpetual revolving fund for municipalities, with no final date, no time limit—as in the case of works financed by the government in the past few years—and offering privileged rates.

Mr. Chairman, in my speech of March 9 last, I quoted figures to show that municipalities have been assuming more and more responsibilities while their revenues have not kept the same pace; on the other hand, revenues of the federal and provincial governments have been going up all the time, but their responsibilities have not increased in the same proportion.

At that time, I did not have the latest figures, since I rose at the very last moment. However, this afternoon, I would like to sum up rather briefly the figures that I gathered in the 1965 statistics and which are valid for until the beginning of 1966.

Mr. Chairman, they show that 42.7 per cent of all government expenses in Canada are actually borne by the municipalities, while the federal government takes on only 34 per cent of them and the provinces, 23.3 per cent. On the other hand, as far as capital investments and capital costs are concerned—I am speaking of what must be borrowed specifically for capital expenditures—the percentage amounts to nearly 40.6 for the municipalities, 17 for the federal government, and 42.2 for the provinces. I shall not repeat the figures I mentioned the other day. Besides, they can be found on page 13808 of Hansard for March 9. They show that municipal revenues are not proportionate.

That is understandable, Mr. Chairman. School expansion is phenomenal and the number of hospitals increases following the adoption of legislation pertaining to hospital insurance or health insurance. The roads which have to be built in the towns to connect with the highways the federal government provides, the public utilities, slum clearance, urban renewal, parks and playgrounds, water sewage plants, recreation grounds, urban transportation, unemployment which constitutes a certain obligation, even at the municipal level, grade crossings that municipalities have to finance at least in part when they should be financed by the railways, all that entails heavy expenses. All those things prove, beyond any doubt, that as Canada develops, municipalities should develop also and borrowing facilities should be expanded to enable the municipalities to shoulder their responsibilities and meet the needs of their citizens; however, the reverse is happening.

So, our municipal councils, which now operate within the limits of their budgets, have to limit their capital investments to a point which is harmful, which paralyzes the expansion of the country and which gives rise to unemployment in certain cases.

Now, if there was any consistency, if there was any consultation between the three levels, a comprehensive policy could be arrived at, which would enable this third level—or first level, in my view—to fulfil its responsibilities with the result that it would relieve the provincial and federal governments of some duties.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a great many quotations I could read out in support of my argument. For many years, those things have been advocated. I have excerpts from briefs of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and quotations I could draw, for instance, from the special report of a Senate committee, called the Manpower and Unemployment Committee, which said in a June, 1961, report:

• (4:20 p.m.)

[English]

The scale of capital financing required in the future for municipal works is so large that a new measure of responsibility is required in the raising of such funds on the part of the provincial and federal governments. Here, perhaps, is the basis on which a solution to the other problems of better planning and the development of better machinery for co-operation might also be sought.

[Translation]

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that I do not claim nothing has been done, and I would not want my remarks to be considered as a criticism of any government we have had in the last 10 or 12 years. I would like it to be understood that I am now putting forward—at least, I am trying to—constructive remarks that could be helpful to all levels of government. Indeed, I feel that, to date, everything that could be done under the circumstances has probably been done. But I suggest that the problems have become so acute that it is essential to put forward drastic and comprehensive solutions. And let us not simply fill gaps, as we had to do in the past. I will not read all those quotations to the house. I have one here, for instance, an excerpt from the Globe and Mail, which said not so long ago:

[English]

Municipalities provide many services from which national wealth flows ... If these services cannot be provided—

[Translation]

Because, for instance, they cannot afford to finance them. The comment is mine.

[English]

—if the municipalities are starved of current funds or of long-term capital, the flow will be checked and all three levels of government will be poorer.

[Translation]

Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a suggestion to the minister or rather tell him that the government should probably consider the introduction of parallel legislation to the Bank Act or an amendment to that legislation. It is not for me to tell him how to proceed. I easily agree that in the financial field, he is much more qualified than I am. But as for municipal finances, I was one of those who had to put up with the situation for a number of years. I think I would be remiss in my duty as a member of parliament if I did not strongly emphasize the fact that that level of government does not have the proper tools to discharge its responsibilities.

I would like to illustrate my explanation to the minister by summing up briefly the operation of what is called the Crédit communal belge, the Crédit Communal of Belgium. Similar organizations exist everywhere in Europe, in the Netherlands, in Germany, in Norway. I believe that we would probably be best advised to follow the Belgian formula although, admittedly, we would have to adjust it to our requirements. I would still like to summarize its operation so that those of my colleagues who are not familiar with what was done over there may understand, with the help of supporting evidence, where lies the cure of the evils of this first level of government.

[English]

The Crédit Communal of Belgium was founded in 1860. Prior to that time small municipalities were experiencing great difficulty in obtaining loans for municipal improvements. As a rule, the only source available to them with the private banks and financial institutions and, on occasion, private individuals. It seems we are a century behind in this regard. Under these circumstances municipal loans were obtained under rather onerous conditions. Only the larger cities were able to issue their own securities and obtain capital funds at reasonable rates.

As a result, the greater part of the 2,600 communes of Belgium, as they are called over there, found it virtually impossible to obtain loans for their required municipal improvements.

Toward the middle of the last century several studies were made in an endeavour to solve the problem. The matter was taken in hand by the national government and the then minister of finance sumarized the alternatives as follows. First, either the national government would have to intervene and provide loan funds direct to municipalities which would mean some loss of municipal autonomy inasmuch as the state would be responsible for the municipal loans or, second, a private institution might be established whose function would be to raise loans for municipalities with any profit from its operations accruing to the shareholders of the company. The minister made it clear that what he had in mind was the creation of an institution or private company which would operate within well established business and financial methods.

Out of this background there emerged the idea of creating a company whose shareholders would be the borrowing local authorities, with the annual profits being distributed among them without any intervention from the government. It was on this basis that the Crédit Communal was founded. It began without any capital, the first subscriptions to its capital shares being part of the first loans made on behalf of municipal governments.

From the beginning the Crédit Communal has had all the characteristics of a cooperative society. However, inasmuch as Belgian law in 1860 ignored such a form of association, the Crédit Communal was founded as a limited liability company for a duration of 99 years. This is still the case, although the statute rules of the company are somewhat different from private limited liability companies.

The Crédit Communal was the first cooperative association of local governments in the world. Economists such as Bernard Lavergne, a Frenchman, have assigned to this historic event the same importance as is ascribed to the creation of the first consumer co-operative society, The Equitable Pioneers of Rochdale.

The most important problem which the Crédit Communal had to surmount at its inception was the matter of the guarantee of municipal loans. This was solved as follows: In 1860 some of the local taxes prevailing in the cities and towns of Belgium were abolished. These were replaced by a central fund, fonde communal, which was derived from state imposed taxes and distributed each year among the municipalities. It was agreed that the communes would be allowed to turn over to the Crédit Communal their part of the state collected taxes as a guarantee for the loans concluded by the Crédit Communal. Even today the contributions provided by the state authorities to local authorities are the principal warrant for the capital funds which local authorities borrow from the Crédit Communal.

As indicated, the Crédit Communal is owned by the local authorities, their share capital consisting of part of the consolidated long-term loans which the Crédit Communal has made to local authorities. These loans are repayable by equal annuities. Originally, 5 per cent of the amount of any consolidated loan represented a subscription to the share capital of the Crédit Communal by the borrowing municipality. In 1911 the share subscription of the municipalities was reduced to one-tenth. Since 1949, when the practice of making consolidated loans was abolished, no further capital subscription has been required of local governments.

The management of the company consists of a general assembly which is composed of all the municipal shareholders represented either by their mayor, alderman, or a local councillor. A board of directors appointed by the general assembly administers the company and in turn appoints a supervisory committee for the general oversight of all the operations of the company, including the loans made to local authorities. The board of directors consists of nine members elected for six years. The Crédit Communal now makes loans to provinces, municipalities, joint boards of local authorities and to some other local organizations such as public assistance boards.

The Crédit Communal issues the following types of credits: First, long-term credits. Under this heading come consolidated loans. This type of loan credit has now been abandoned. Under it the loan requirements of several municipalities were grouped and consolidated in one loan issue. The amounts obtained therefrom by each of the several municipalities were repayable in annuities, including interest and capital. Originally consolidated loans were granted for up to 60 years. Subsequently their duration was reduced to 30 years. The interest conditions did not change during the duration of the loan.

As indicated, the capital required was obtained by long-term issues and distributed between the cities which had requested a loan. The rate fixed for the duration of the loan included all the issue and administration costs. As this kind of capital borrowing was only possible when the Credit Communal could issue bonds of at least 30 years, the consolidated loans were abandoned after the second world war when it became impossible to issue bonds in Belgium for more than five years, and in exceptional cases ten years.

Second, they also grant non-consolidated loans. Since 1948 the loans granted by the Crédit Communal to local authorities are repayable by annual amounts with a variable rate of interest. The rate is fixed twice a year, in June and in December. It is impossible to fix the rate for the whole duration of the loan as the capital funds are now provided by issues of short and medium term bonds—one, two, three, five and ten years—which at their expiration have to be replaced by new bonds, the rate of which may differ considerably from the old ones. It therefore follows that local authorities, when concluding such loans, do not know at the time the loan is concluded what the rate will be over its duration. As a rule, it has always been lower than the public market rates. This is due principally to the co-operative character of the company. As pointed out, there is no subscription of share capital required from the local authority when non-consolidated loans are concluded.

From 1948 to 1953 the long-term loans of the Crédit Communal ranged from 20 to 30 years. In 1953 the maximum duration was reduced to 20 years inasmuch as at that time the issue of long-term bonds was not readily acceptable in the money market. They also issue medium term loans. These loans range from five to ten years and exceptionally for 15 years. The procedure in obtaining the loan is the same as for non-consolidated long-term credit.

A third kind of loan is made by way of short-term credits for extraordinary expenses. Loans under this heading would cover the borrowing needs of local authorities for unforeseen expenses of an obligatory character. In most instances, the national government makes contributions toward such requirements of from 30 per cent to 60 per cent. However, as these grants are not always paid promptly the Crédit Communal discounts the promised amounts normally for a three year period and, in exceptional cases, for five years.

Another kind of short-term loan is for current ordinary expenses. In Belgium the state collects certain local taxes which are handed over to the Crédit Communal to guarantee the annual service costs of municipal loans. There is frequently a delay, however, in turning the amounts over to the Crédit Communal. As a consequence, municipal governments require interim credit pending the payment of such taxes. For this purpose, the estimated credit balance—which is not necessary to cover interest and repayment costs of the loans granted to the municipality—can be discounted to enable the communes to pay their currect expenses.

Finally, in some instances, loans are made directly to other public bodies, but I will not go into those.

What are the financial assets of the Crédit Communal? As I have already said, long-term bonds formerly were issued for terms of from 30 to 60 years. With these proceeds long-term loans were granted. Included in such loan obligations was a 5 per cent capital subscription to the shares of the Crédit Communal. At the end of the second world war the issuance of long-term bonds was abolished, but the municipal share capital still remains an asset of the company. I have mentioned that before.

The Crédit Communal also operates savings departments. Deposits in savings accounts are callable on demand. Another source of the deposit assets of the Crédit Communal is that it acts as the banker for local authorities and other local public bodies. Funds of these bodies remain on deposit for varying times and, as indicated, a good portion of them is earmarked to cover the capital and interest cost repayments of any loan made to these bodies. Just imagine the amount of money that would be available for us here in terms of what is invested by municipalities in banks, Mr. Chairman.

In addition to state collected municipal taxes local authorities also collect direct taxes and other revenues. These local taxes and revenues are deposited with the Crédit Communal. In recent years the Crédit Communal has been afforded wide banking powers and can, in effect, provide full banking and loan facilities on behalf of local authorities, including savings deposits and the issuance of short-term, medium and long-term loans.

Just to give a more complete example of what the situation is, during the first three months of 1963—here, Mr. Chairman, if you do not mind, I shall revert to French—

[Translation]

In the first three months of 1966, the Belgian Crédit Communal loaned 7,151 million francs to its municipalities; if you divide that amount by five, you will have some idea of its value in Canadian money. Out of that amount—that is for the expenses concerning ordinary loans—there were also longer-term capital grants of 1,196 million francs, which would represent a total of 8,347 million francs. By dividing the whole amount by five, we would obviously get some idea of its meaning for a country much smaller than Canada.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, perhaps too long already, I will say this: When dealing with financial questions and with matters as important as the Bank Act, which will be in force for at least ten years, we should not forget that municipalities are facing tremendous problems, that they are ill represented in the discussion on legislation, since most of the time the distribution of electoral areas in the provinces is not done on a fair basis. Urban municipalities are poorly represented and have greater needs than rural municipalities, since the federal government even compels municipalities to pay taxes on materials they buy, while the federal and provincial governments are exempted from that. And double taxation is levied on the citizens.

Third, the municipalities are handicapped when it comes to getting funds and paying them back because the federal government takes its share first and then the provincial government does the same, and if there is anything left the municipalities will get it, but otherwise they do without it.

And fourth, the municipalities are handicapped with regard to their borrowing possibilities and indirectly their burden gets heavier each year as the country develops thanks to the efforts made by our governments to ensure prosperity throughout the country. So they must prepare new housing sectors, provide sewer systems and water mains, new roads, new parks new schools, new hospitals.

Of course, they get generous contributions from the governments, but I say that they do not solve their problems to the extent that the responsibilities of the municipalities have increased in the last few years. A drastic and comprehensive solution must therefore be found.

What I find most reprehensible is that the municipalities have no say in the matter. They are treated like poor children, orphans, and they are forced to accept the crumbs of the wealthy. They should be consulted, allowed to take part in the discussions between the federal and provincial governments about tax sharing, at least as observers to know what is going on. And when they submit well researched briefs, as they have been doing for over 25 years, to the governments concerned, partisan considerations should be forgotten—it is not done enough in the provinces, although the federal government does it—and the municipalities should be listened to and taken seriously.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a couple of brief questions about the report issued yesterday by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. I am rather alarmed that such a report should have been made by an organization of which a number of countries are members, including Canada.

Has the O.E.C.D. asked the Canadian government to take steps to adjust its monetary policy through the Bank of Canada in order to provide some additional control over the rise in wages and prices? Apparently in last year's review of the Canadian economy the O.E.C.D. experts advised Ottawa to establish some wage and price guidelines. I do not know if this was done and I would like the minister to advise what steps Canada has taken. Were these steps taken through monetary and fiscal policy, and did the O.E.C.D. make even more severe suggestions to the Canadian government with respect to achieving control over wages and prices? It seems to me that this is something which should be discussed when we are considering the Bank of Canada because it is one of the instruments which in the past has been used to exercise some measure of control over prices and wages.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member rightly says, Canada is a member of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and participates with other member countries in trying to achieve the objectives we hold in common, principally a steady expansion of output.

The committee will recall that some years ago the O.E.C.D. fixed targets for member countries. I am very happy to say that in general these targets have been exceeded, and certainly they have been exceeded here in Canada. We have in fact achieved a larger increase in output than was thought reasonable a few years ago. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the International Monetary Fund and other international agencies have, however, drawn attention to the tendency for demand to outstrip production and have pointed, I think quite rightly, to the grave dangers that exist if we try to do too much too quickly.

As I recall the references to Canada in the report of this organization, they pointed to the desirability of having adequate fiscal and monetary measures and in particular endorsed what I have said on a number of occasions and what has been said by other international organizations, that there should be less reliance on monetary policy and more on fiscal policy. Looking back over the history of the last few years I think it can be said of practically all of the major industrial countries of the world that governments have not been prepared to use fiscal policy as they should have. On the other hand, I believe the record of performance in this respect has been improving in most of the countries of which I am aware.

The O.E.C.D. in addition, however, has been concerned about the question of whether fiscal and monetary policy in itself is adequate to provide the desirable degree of stability along with expansion. In other words, is fiscal and monetary policy adequate to ensure expansion without inflation? I have asked this question myself. Indeed, on a number of occasions, both in this house and outside it, I have spoken about the more general question: Should there be supplementation to fiscal and monetary policy such as guide lines, guide posts, income policies, or wage and price ceilings?

We put this question to the Economic Council of Canada and, as hon. members may recall, the answer we got from the council was in the negative, namely, that the kind of policies I have been describing are not likely to be very effective. On the other hand, the governor of the Bank of Canada in a speech he made recently in Rome did point to the importance of mobilizing public opinion in support of the general objective of expansion without inflation. I regret I do not have his words in front of me. Therefore, while not adopting any of these devices or mechanisms such as an incomes policy or guide lines, or guide posts—certainly not wage ceilings—I have nevertheless pointed out the importance of finding some way of mobilizing public opinion among employers, employees and consumers in support of the general objectives which the community has in common. The O.E.C.D., if I may say so, seems to have come down on the side of Mr. Rasminsky rather than on the side of the Economic Council.

Mr. Olson: I should like the minister to tell us whether recommendations of this kind are made to other countries urging them to impose additional controls. I think the words are "take steps to control the rising wages and prices". The minister told us that the organization was concerned about whether or not fiscal and monetary policy was sufficient. What other steps does the council in its wisdom suggest that countries such as Canada ought to take? Is this a general statement without any suggestion as to specific ways and means of achieving the objective desired? If the Economic Council rejects some of the other suggestions which have been made and if the O.E.C.D. continues to urge Canada to take certain steps, surely there must be some substance attached to the proposals.

Mr. Sharp: May I answer the first question? The O.E.C.D. gives advice to all its member countries. This is one of the most useful of the international forums which have been developed for the discussion of mutual problems. I remember that my parliamentary secretary went to a meeting of this organization about a year ago and he said he was astonished at the frankness with which members spoke to one another. I can assure the committee that advice is given to all members freely and frankly. It is a great step forward in the development of international institutions that we can have reports placed before us as the result of an independent group looking at our situation and giving us the benefit of its advice and views.

As I understand the recommendation of the O.E.C.D. it is not too specific. The organization does not attempt to be precise about the nature of the steps which should be taken by any country to deal with its domestic affairs. It believes it can be more useful if the observations made are general rather than specific, since specific suggestions might be rejected on the ground that the organization is not sufficiently familiar with local conditions to know what best to do. What I believe they have in mind are measures to supplement financial and monetary policy such as those which have been taken in the United States, in the United Kingdom and in Europe in an attempt to bring public opinion to bear, on a voluntary basis, upon the determination of wages and prices.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. Would hon. members please resume their seats? I have been watching the proceedings and I must confess that some of the questions are short but the answers are rather long. I wonder whether the hon. member for Medicine Hat intends to proceed with his own remarks or whether he would have any objection if other hon. members were to enter the debate.

Mr. Olson: I simply want to ask the minister whether it would be possible to have a copy of the report which was made by the O.E.C.D. to the Canadian government.

Mr. Sharp: I will be very happy to provide it.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I should like to rise on a question of privilege.

I just realized that I misled the committee of the whole earlier when I quoted figures in Belgian francs and converted them in Canadian currency. Since I do not wish to mislead the committee of the whole, I want to make a correction. I said that one should divide Belgian francs by 5 in order to convert the amount in French francs. My colleague from Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) who is more of an expert than I am in financial matters, tells me that one should divide by 50. Of course, I am making this correction quite readily, so as not to mislead the committee of the whole.

If you allow me, Mr. Chairman, to pursue this question of privilege, I must confess that my natural verbosity played a trick on me. I had one more sentence to say and I wanted to ask the minister—

[English]

I wanted to ask the minister to comment on his attitude toward providing in this banking legislation or in parallel legislation something which would take care of the financial problems of the municipalities.

Mr. Sharp: I recognize that some of the municipalities have difficulty in raising money for their various capital projects. A few years ago this parliament passed financial legislation which was of some help in this connection, but it was intended as a means of promoting employment. It served its purpose and has now expired. I would think it would be very difficult for the federal government to establish an institution for the specific purpose of financing the subsidiary bodies of provinces.

When I was listening to the hon. member giving his very interesting speech about the Belgian experience it occurred to me that it would be quite possible for any province to establish such an institution for the benefit of its own municipalities, though I did wonder who would be in charge of the queue when the municipalities lined up to take advantage of the facilities. I doubt that it would be in accord with the constitutional tradition of this country for the federal government to establish a bank which dealt with municipalities. An institution of that kind would certainly not be able to function without the permission of the provinces and this being so I think it would be better for the provinces to act directly. Perhaps some day we may contemplate an organization for this purpose in conjunction with the provinces, but surely not an institution which dealt directly with municipalities.

Mr. Mongrain: Does the minister not think this might well be the subject of discussion with the provinces when meetings are held to discuss financial matters? Such a system could not operate without the help of the federal government.

Mr. Sharp: From time to time the provinces do raise questions of this kind. I do not remember the matter being raised at the last meetings I attended and this, I believe, is evidence that the provinces doubt very much that the federal government should intervene in the manner suggested.

Mr. Olson: Was the municipal development and loan fund not handled in exactly the same way? It had to be channeled through the provinces, and some of them set up municipal finance corporations which in fact distributed money to various municipalities on application.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, let me just add this. Those were not banks but sources of funds voted by this parliament to finance certain municipal works. This parliament can at any time follow that course. I thought my friend the hon. member for Trois-Rivières was referring to a new kind of institution and it was that institution about which I was casting some doubts.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, when the house rose last night I was just putting a question to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp). I was asking him whether he would object to having the Bank of Canada instead of the chartered banks create new credit representing the economic growth of the country. And the minister replied: "Yes, Mr. Chairman, very great difficulty indeed."

Needless to say, Mr. Chairman, that we were not satisfied with this reply. We wanted a more detailed and more substantial reply and we wanted the minister to tell us what prevented the Bank of Canada instead of the chartered banks, from creating the new credit representing economic growth.

If you will recall, Mr. Chairman, I was very careful to explain yesterday, to specify what we meant by creating credit and what the Bank of Canada would have to create, that is, the amount which is representative of the economic growth for the year and which the chartered banks lend at the present time.

Then, after insisting for a more detailed reply than this from the minister, he finally gave us the following answer, according to Hansard dated March 13, 1967, page 13946, and I quote:

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I may say so once again, I consider that such action would be very detrimental to the interest of the people of Canada because it would be very inflationary, and all of these arguments being presented by the hon. member for Lapointe are simply a camouflage for one of the oldest practices in the world, which is the practice governments have indulged in in the past, and I hope will not indulge in in the future, and that is printing money for the purposes of meeting government expenditures.

[Translation]

If I may say so once more, Mr. Chairman, it is not we but the minister who does not understand, because he still thinks that we want the Bank of Canada to create credit by printing bank notes. As the Minister of Finance could have seen by looking at page 13944, I did specify that it was not a question of printing bank notes. In fact, as may be seen from the right hand column on page 13944, around the middle of the page, this is what I said:

It is not a matter of putting the money press to work but of doing exactly what the chartered banks are doing, what the Bank of Canada will have to do after getting the authorization from parliament to give back to the Canadian people a real degree of control over credit.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, before the Minister of Finance answered me, it is not a matter of printing money but of doing exactly what the chartered banks are doing now: creating credit not by printing money but by raising the figures in circulation which represent credit money.

Why does the Minister of Finance bring up again this idea of printing money, following the example of some clowns in the Liberal party—of the Yvon Dupuis type—who said that the Créditistes want to print money and who threw a bunch of dollars in the air? The Minister of Finance is using the very same tactics as these former buffoons in the Liberal party, saying that Social Credit wants to print money and denouncing us for it when it is not true.

Mr. Chairman, in order to show that the minister is being dishonest at the present time, I should like to repeat what I said before, and I quote:

It is not a matter of putting the money press to work but of doing exactly what the chartered banks are doing.

The chartered banks are not printing money; they are creating credit, and the minister has acknowledged this.

Why does the minister then bring up again this question of printing money? Is he being sincere? Does he want to have an intelligent discussion with us or does he not? He tells us he has understood nothing. Well, Mr. Chairman, in that case he will never understand. Incidentally, if he persists in being so insincere, he will not get away with it.

He was listening closely yesterday when I said that it was not a matter of putting the money press to work but of doing what chartered banks are doing, and that is to create credit.

I will once again put the question to the minister, but I must first explain. It is not a question of printing bills, Mr. Chairman; I said it yesterday and I say it again today. It is a question of creating credit, just like chartered banks do at the present time. When they do, they do not print one single dollar; they need only multiply by 12, on paper that is, their cash reserves supplied by the Bank of Canada. The Minister of Finance said that this would be inflationary. Mr. Chairman, here again, I would like a straight answer from the minister, because he has circumvented the point. I have put the question to the minister, but he confined himself to generalities. He said that if the Bank of Canada were to create credit instead of the chartered banks that would cause difficulties. Speaking in a general way, he said it would give rise to many difficulties. We insisted on getting more details and, suddenly, the minister came up with this, and I quote again:

—that such action would be very detrimental to the interest of the people of Canada because it would be very inflationary—

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to be more specific on this point. Let us define the problem. I trust the Minister of Finance will not speak again of putting the money press to work, for we now say to him—and I feel the matter is clear enough—that it is not a question of printing bills, but one of creating credit, just as the chartered banks are doing at the present time. The minister tells us it would lead to inflation. I therefore ask him, had the Bank of Canada instead of the chartered banks, created, in 1966, $1,669 million in credit, as, by the way, the chartered banks did in 1965, would this have placed a single cent more in circulation in Canada. Would there be a single dollar's worth of credit more in circulation in Canada, if that amount had been provided by the Bank of Canada rather than by the chartered banks? There would not have been one extra cent. Obviously, as I said last night, if the Bank of Canada were to create credit, then the chartred banks should no longer have the authority and privilege to do so. Chartered banks should no longer have the power and privilege to multiply their monetary reserve by twelve. They should no longer have that privilege, because if both the Bank of Canada and chartered banks created credit, I agree with the minister that, there would be some confusion.

We are asking to transfer the creation of credit from the chartered banks to the Bank of Canada; the chartered banks would lose that right and the Bank of Canada alone would have it; the chartered banks would no longer be entitled to multiply by 12.5 their reserve in hand and the Bank of Canada alone would have the right to create new credit. If during a year, the Bank of Canada instead of chartered banks creates some credit amounting to $1,669 million will that increase the money supply by a single cent? No, because instead of having been created by the chartered banks, credit will have been created by the Bank of Canada. And this will not increase the money supply, the money circulation or the credit by one single cent, whether it comes from the chartered banks or the Bank of Canada.

I have here one glass and two jugs of water, one belonging to the Bank of Canada and the other to the chartered banks. Whether I fill the glass with water from the Bank of Canada or water from the chartered banks, I will still have the same amount of water in the glass. Well, the situation is exactly the same in the monetary field, whether the new credit comes from the chartered banks or from the Bank of Canada. If the Bank of Canada were to put into circulation or create the same amount that would be created by the chartered banks, that would not cause inflation nor increase further the credit in circulation nor the money supply.

The government refuses squarely to print a single bank note; it merely wishes to create new credit. It will not allow it, it wants to leave to the chartered banks, as before, the privilege of creating credit. Let that privilege be granted exclusively to the Bank of Canada. Would it not be advantageous for the whole country to have the Bank of Canada create new credit instead of the chartered banks?

Mr. Chairman, with that explanation, with that specific qualification I have just given again to the minister, could he answer my question? After the last explanation to the effect that it is not necessary to use the money press, that the chartered banks did not use it, the fact still remains that, in 1965, they created $1,669 million of new credit, as can be seen in the annual Statistical Summary of the Bank of Canada. Then, what would prevent the Bank of Canada from assuming that credit function, instead of the chartered banks?

As I said yesterday, the chartered banks create the new credit. The minister said so himself in an answer which I have quoted on many instances and which I quote again. As stated on page 3012 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 43 of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, he said:

> The system used to create credit is well known. The banks grant loans.

Therefore, when the banks lend money they create credit; it is as simple as that. The minister summarized it in a clear sentence, and I congratulate him for having so well defined the creation of credit, as he did in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

Well, if chartered banks are now creating credit, granting loans with interest and accepting deposits on which afterwards they have to pay some interest, then could the Bank of Canada instead of chartered banks not create that credit, make interest-free loans to public bodies, municipalities and school boards, for the construction of roads, bridges, schools, etc. Then, individuals would receive wages or would be paid for materials with money lent interest-free by the Bank of Canada, and they would deposit that money in chartered banks, obtain a 3 per cent interest in return, and the chartered banks could lend it to other people.

This is the system which we are advocating and I am asking the Minister of Finance—since we assure him that we are not interested in the issue of new dollar bills, but merely in the creation of the same percentage of credit now issued by chartered banks to have a permanent money supply, since the economy of the country is expanding—why he objects to entrusting the creation of credit now issued by chartered banks with the Bank of Canada for the benefit of public development in Canada?

I believe that, as a result of those explanations, the minister should be in a position to answer my question more fully than he did last evening. It seems to me, with the data and explanations which we are submitting to him, that he should be ready to give us a reply in that respect.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I was reviewing the remarks made by my colleague the Minister without Portfolio when he introduced the Bank Act in 1965 and did something that I regret I did not do at the beginning, that is, give a dissertation on Social Credit theory.

Mr. More: He voted for it.

Mr. Sharp: However, Mr. Chairman, I was reviewing with great interest his remarks on that occasion when he dealt in a general way with some of the questions—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister on what date the Minister without Portfolio made those remarks, because I should like to ask for a copy of Hansard for that date?

Mr. Sharp: I certainly suggest that the hon. member for Lapointe should read those remarks and digest them over and over again. If after a time they begin to penetrate I think my colleague the former minister of finance will have made a great contribution to the discussions in this house and to the enlightenment of our Social Credit friends. The former minister of finance, in the course of—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I again ask the minister to give us the date?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I will be very happy to do so. I refer to Hansard of June 14, 1965, beginning at page 2373 and continuing to about page 2376 where there is an excellent and very sympathetic discussion of the errors of Social Credit. However, Mr. Chairman, I shall not put these remarks on record again but shall attempt to deal with the specific questions—

Mr. More: That was just before he voted for Social Credit theories.

Mr. Sharp: —which the hon. gentleman put to me last night and again today. Perhaps I ought to begin by saying that most of the suggestions that have been made from the Social Credit corner of the house are not—

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, may I remind the minister that the hon. member for Lapointe is not a member of the Social Credit party.

An hon. Member: He is a separatist.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member for Lapointe and the other Social Crediters—shall I put it that way. These proposals, which as I say were discussed at some length by my colleague the Minister without Portfolio a couple of years ago when a similar act was under discussion, are really not needed in order to enable the Bank of Canada to carry out its monetary policy function of having an influence on the over-all credit situation in Canada. Nothing that I have heard during this debate has led me to believe that the Bank of Canada has inadequate powers in this respect.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Views may differ from time to time. I have heard some views expressed here that the government has not followed monetary policies that were entirely suitable to conditions. I have also heard some criticisms of the governor of the Bank of Canada. This is natural. As I have said in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Lapointe when we were in committee, which he has quoted on a number of occasions, I believe that these are questions of judgment. Of course he has quoted a much more illustrious man than I, namely a former governor of the Bank of England who put it in terms of feelings and flair. I refer to simple words like judgment. I am very interested to see that my hon. friend has given even greater prominence to that very famous governor of the Bank of England. However, I am quite content to say I believe that in these matters a certain amount of judgment is involved.

Bank of Canada Act

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, for I have before me the answer given by the Minister of Finance to my question:

On what do you base your decisions to set the money supply at a given level?

Here is the reply of the Minister of Finance, and I quote:

When a governor of the Bank of England, Lord Norman, was once asked that question by J. M. Keynes, he said: "I do it by feel and flair", and I believe that this is still a matter of judgment, up to a certain point.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it was not I who insisted on feel and flair, but the minister. In fact, he says that this is a matter of judgment up to a certain point only, and not entirely, but he made no qualification when he repeated the words of the governor of the Bank of England, and I quote:

"I do it by feel and flair".

The minister did not set any restriction regarding this field, but he did establish one concerning the matter of judgment, and I want this specifically put on record.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy with that. If the hon. member wants to quibble about these words I am sure it is not going to impress anyone other than the two of us. There are much greater issues involved in this debate.

Last night the hon. member for Lapointe drew attention to the recent increases in the deposits of the chartered banks. I believe he referred to the increase of about $2 billion in 1965, and he asked why financing made available through the chartered banks on this scale could not have been made available more cheaply through the Bank of Canada. I gather this was the general purport of the question which he put to me. If this had involved a further increase in the outstanding amount of the present Bank of Canada liabilities, it would have involved a very serious inflationary danger. That is why I said the following last night in reply to the question put by the hon. member for Lapointe:

I consider that such action would be very detrimental to the interest of the people of Canada because it would be very inflationary, and all of these arguments being presented by the hon. member for Lapointe are simply a camouflage for one of the oldest practices in the world, which is the practice governments have indulged in in the past, and I hope will not indulge in in the future, and that is printing money for the purposes of meeting government expenditures.

[Mr. Sharp.]

For the Bank of Canada in its present form as a central bank to issue $2 billion worth of Bank of Canada notes or make deposits in the Bank of Canada available to the public generally would be very inflationary indeed. I will be perfectly fair to my hon. friend from Lapointe and add that alternatively, and this is what the hon. member has in mind, we might have some system which would have involved the Bank of Canada having $2 billion of public deposits on its books as well as having $2 billion of additional assets in the form of securities and business and personal loans. In other words, the Bank of Canada would have been like any other bank. Apparently this is what he is talking about. Under these circumstances the bank simply does not have the facilities to service the deposits or loans of the public.

Mr. Grégoire: Perhaps the minister would allow me to clarify the first part of my question right away.

[Translation]

In our minds, when the Bank of Canada creates those $2 billion that the chartered banks actually created in 1965 by increasing the money supply, there is no question that it should create this new credit in order to make loans to the general public. We are for the Bank of Canada creating this new credit in the same manner as chartered banks are doing at present, but instead of making loans to the public, it would grant them without interest to public bodies, that is, to the provinces, municipalities, school boards or the federal government. It would grant those loans without interest to the municipalities which would repay them over a given period.

So, I would like to correct this immediately in the remarks of the Minister of Finance. There is no question of the Bank of Canada lending to the general public, but solely to public bodies, for instance municipalities, school boards, provinces or even the federal government, to construct public buildings and such public bodies would reimburse the Bank of Canada at the rate of depreciation of the buildings constructed or built through loans by the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this correction was necessary before the Minister of Finance continued.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I had no objective other than that explained by the hon. member for Lapointe, and I am discussing it in his terms. I accept his conditions. As I said, the Bank of Canada has no facilities at the present time for taking deposits, for accepting deposits on such a large scale, it is because it has no facilities for servicing them. It could not accept cheques and it could not carry out banking business on the scale envisaged by the hon. member. If it did have these facilities, then of course it would be just like any other bank and the cost of doing business would be exactly the same as that borne by any other bank. There would be no difference then between the Bank of Canada and any chartered bank and it would not be cost-free money. The bank would have to pay interest because no one would leave money with the Bank of Canada without obtaining interest. If the Bank of Canada wanted to keep money on deposit it would have to pay interest or alternatively some law would have to be passed which would require money to be kept in the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Grégoire: Will the minister permit a question? Why should the Bank of Canada accept deposits? That is not its objective or goal. There would be no need for the Bank of Canada to accept deposits from the general public. Its purpose would be to lend money to provinces, municipalities and school boards, not to individuals. It would not be its role to accept deposits from the public. Far from that. When the Bank of Canada received repayments of these loans it would then lend these moneys again.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member must have it one way or the other. If he is going to have the Bank of Canada performing the services of an ordinary bank, then the balance sheet must balance. On one side would be the liabilities and on the other side the assets. When it places at the disposal of municipalities and provinces $2 billion of loans, there are equal liabilities. Under the circumstances what would the municipalities and provinces use for money if not deposits in the Bank of Canada? Unless we go back to the first case which I said was so inflationary and which I am sure is what the hon. gentleman has in mind, namely the issuance of Bank of Canada bills which then become a cash basis for the chartered banks to expand their liabilities.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Kootenay West on a point of order.

Mr. Herridge: I think the hon. member for Lapointe is imposing upon the minister's time and also upon other members of the house. I know the minister is just dying to reply to the sound proposals put forward by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the hon. member for Kootenay West, and I think it is only right he should be allowed to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, is—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) still has a few minutes at his disposal and when he is through with his statement, another member will have the floor.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think that the gap between ideas is getting narrower, at least, the misunderstanding can obviously be reduced.

The question that remains obscure, Mr. Chairman, is the following, if I understand the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) well. The minister is asking how the Bank of Canada could, for instance, make interest-free loans to municipalities, if it does not first have deposits?

Mr. Chairman, I wish to tell him that that is exactly what the chartered banks are doing now. They make loans, even before they get deposits. I ask the minister to bear that in mind. That is how credit is created. The chartered banks make loans before they get deposits. And I can quote three or four testimonies in that connection. The minister said:

> —The system used for creating credit is well known. The banks make loans. The monies are deposited with the banks.

So, when the chartered banks make loans, they create credit, and it is only after that—because the banks do not have the necessary deposits—that those loans are left with the banks as deposits.

Mr. Chairman, I have another testimony to that effect. It is a booklet published by the Royal Bank of Canada—that is surely not a sacred institution—more specifically by the department of economic research of the Royal Bank of Canada. That booklet is entitled: "Economic Trends and Problems, June 1966".

On page 6, one reads:

> Currency is an unproductive asset for the chartered banks.

Any excess of currency represents a lack of earnings for the chartered banks. When they have cash reserves in excess of 8 per cent, they have a surplus of money which entails a lack of gains. And the booklet goes on to say:

> Consequently, the banks waste no time in using their excess of cash to make loans or to buy bonds, thus restoring the original deposit level.

So, to increase deposits the chartered banks make loans or buy bonds. Therefore, what I have just said is confirmed not only by the minister's answers but by the pamphlet issued by one of the most important chartered banks in Canada.

When the chartered banks make loans and create credit, they do not then have the required deposits. Those come in time, not too long after, but after the loan is made. This fact has also been admitted, Mr. Chairman, and I will find the reference in the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence. We received 30 copies of these, 10 in a jiffy, and that is why I could not find everything since we have started consideration of this bill. However, the president of the Royal Bank himself has admitted that loans precede deposits, that banks make loans before they receive the required deposits and that it is only when the loan is made that the money involved is deposited and the balance is restored.

Therefore, if chartered banks can do it, lend money without having the deposits, I ask the minister why the Bank of Canada could not do the same? Lend some money, when that money or credit represent an increase in the growth of the economy of the country. Why could not the Bank of Canada do what the chartered banks are doing, even if it does not have deposits, as it is the case at the present time for the chartered banks? And this happens each time the Bank of Canada increases its cash reserves in circulation in Canada. And these reserves, when they are directed to the chartered banks, make it possible for them to make loans that are then deposited anew in the whole of the banking system.

The argument of the hon. minister seems to be that without deposits, the Bank of Canada could not lend money. The hon. minister should look at what is now happening in the monetary system. He will notice that lending money without deposits is precisely what the chartered banks do nowadays. The Bank of Canada would do exactly the same. However, the Bank of Canada would lend this new, yearly credit for the development of Canada, whereas the chartered banks do it to involve the country in debt.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

I feel that is a good enough reason for the minister to look into the matter a little deeper and to let the Bank of Canada do exactly what the chartered banks are now doing.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have once again the opportunity of discussing social, economic and banking matters.

We know that the purpose of the economic activities of a nation is to produce as much as possible with as little effort as possible, to enable every citizen to benefit from the progress of science and everything that exists in Canada. Does our economy give each individual what he is entitled to? I put the question to all the hon. members. Does production in Canada achieve its goal? I ask the question once more. The answer is up to you.

I could tell you that under our existing financial system each individual does not get what he is entitled to. The present system does not distribute prdouction on the basis of Canadian units, of human beings. And yet we have a considerable production, despite credit restrictions.

The Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) said on several occasions that the world knows of no other system than the one we have; it is a nonsensical, debt-making system leading to loss-sales, credit restrictions, inflation, deflation, war, as well as to the most heinous atrocities, in every country of the world. That is what the minister wants to uphold by his false, diabolical, antisocial, unnatural, antichristian inhuman system.

Such is the system that you, members of parliament, advocate. And yet you represent the Canadian people. You were elected to put some kind of order in finance, in the nation's economy so that the economic activity can reach its objective.

But we have an old, diabolic, inhuman, antisocial system which is worthless, which does not satisfy the people, which gets them into debt, which brings upon them the worst recession, wars and all kinds of atrocities. And that is what you respect. That is what you want to save. You find that funny, but when you are called upon to account for your mandate, the work you did to remedy the present economic situation, you might not find that as funny then.

I would not want to hurt anyone, Mr. Chairman, but we know that it does not work. We know that something is wrong, that the present system does not work, that it gets the workers, the people, the school boards, the provincial governments, the federal government and the whole nation into debt. We are compelled to tax the people and to ask them to tighten their belt.

Our dollar is only worth 40 cents, we find that funny. We find it sound and natural for the governments to sell bonds. The federal government and the provincial governments, at all levels, try to get hold of some money, the blood which runs through the economy, and they leave very little money to finance development. Everything is taken away. When the government puts $10 in circulation, it takes $20 back. Then, we are always in the red.

When banks create credit, when they lend us money, they do not lend us the interest on it. We have to reimburse the capital with the interest. Our system stands up as long as the number of loans increases. The interest is not lent to us, and we are required to reimburse more than the amount put in circulation. But we find that logical. The hon. members opposite find that amusing. They find that logical.

One day, they will have to admit that those who explain the present system are right. If you do not understand what we are advocating, it is because you fail to understand the present system. We are not explaining anything other than the present system. It is that system which we are bringing before you in an attempt to make you understand it. This is what you have never understood and that you still do not understand.

You think that because it has been called social credit, it is utopian and foolish. Well, it is the present system, nothing else. Instead of being called social credit, it could be called the present system.

It is the current system that is being explained to you and that is absolutely all. It is the present system which should be improved and for which solutions are sought to improve the economic lot of each individual and of every level of government. And it can be improved, too.

I do not wish to condemn the present system as a whole for it has some good points. But this does not make it any less blameworthy. There are great and good things in the present system and we must preserve all that. But any useless part should be revamped. Several adjustments should be made and the financial and economic system of the nation should be kept abreast of the scientific progress accomplished not only in Canada but in the world. Financial systems have made great strides, but our own has never been revised; it is as old as Adam and is no longer serving its original purpose.

This does not mean that it is not a basically sound system, but its foundations, the structures which support it are too old and are practically falling apart.

Therefore, the foundations and the structures will have to be reinforced. That is what we must do. We do not despise the system; we do not sweep aside all that was done in the past and all the structures erected in the past. These structures had their uses for a time.

This financial system has not changed; it is old as the hills. It must change. We must introduce the improvements necessary to adopt it to our modern economic structure. That is all we ask. The hon. members opposite find that funny. But they are now laughing in fact at their own system and at themselves. If I am sometimes inclined to laugh with them and at them, it is because they do not want to change their system.

Mr. Chairman, the Bank of Canada is now 33 years old. It was founded in 1934. It has acquired some experience and it has served its apprenticeship. It has now reached its maturity. It must assume all its responsibilities before the community, before all foreign countries and all Canadians, over 20 million of them. It must do so for all Canadian institutions, for our 800,000 dwellings. And each individual, each family, each institution requires money to meet its own needs. The monetary unit is the Canadian dollar printed by the Bank of Canada and bearing the signature of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, each individual, family and institution in our country needs the Bank of Canada for self-management. And according to the commonly accepted formula for management one needs a sufficient income, one must provide for the essential expenses and leave room for some profit, for a surplus in the reserves, savings and accrued capital. We are in favour of all that. There is nothing we would like to change in the whole matter. Everyone is entitled to make a living, those who handle capital, those who deal in business, need capital, reserves, improvements, accumulated capital. We are all for it; we do not want to change that.

If that holds true, Mr. Chairman, for every individual, every family, every institution or company, for every corporation or co-operative group, for every municipality, for every province, for every credit union, it also holds true for the Bank of Canada. I feel that if we wanted it, if the hon. Minister of Finance were willing, we could improve our pitiful economic situation, which must be reformed, readjusted, to match the normal evolution and the scientific progress of our country.

The Bank of Canada, Mr. Chairman, is the creature of parliament. It has a special mission to fulfil in the Canadian national economy and that mission was assigned to it by the parliament of Canada.

I shall not discuss again the various aspects, or the origin of money, these matters have been debated at length. I want to speak of the general responsibilities of parliament, of each appointed member of that parliament, of the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, since he has the highest responsibility in the land. It is with him, on his shoulders, that this high responsibilty rests.

Mr. Chairman, what is this parliament of Canada? It is we, each member, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, the member for Compton-Frontenac and the members for all the other electoral districts in Canada. That is parliament. We represent the nation, the individuals, the families. A few are ministers, indeed 26 among us are ministers and constitute the government of Canada. And the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General is the one who is responsible for the administration and mission entrusted to the Bank of Canada.

If a single person in Canada lacks any of the necessities of life, for want of money, that person is entitled to complain to his M.P., to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, to the Bank of Canada, but especially to the minister and each of the 265 members who are responsible for the economic activities across Canada.

And protests can be heard all day long. You cannot go out without hearing protests on every side. Every public organization, all that constitutes our economy, its structure, has complaints to make, each one of which concerns financial matters.

Can you find anything that is not a matter of finance. When the provincial ministers are gathering here in Ottawa, with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), what do they intend to discuss here in Ottawa? What are they looking for in Ottawa? What do they want to get from Ottawa? They do not come here to discuss civil engineering questions, transportation or production matters or questions pertaining to some private organizations. No, they come here to get money, for otherwise they have everything, they have engineers, and everything they need to build this country, they have professors, carpenters to build schools. But they have no money.

The hon. Minister of Finance claims there is no shortage of that, that it is not difficult to find money. How is it, if you have no trouble finding this nation's economic blood, so as to give every province what it needs, to give every person what is required to live a decent life in this country abounding in wealth, what about your responsibilities? I wish to insist on that since we share those responsibilities. The economy of this nation depends on us.

Mr. Chairman, in the committee I have spoken to the greatest bank president of all. In the committee, I even addressed one of the greatest American financiers. I also spoke to university professors, to the most outstanding economists and administration experts, to presidents of the largest banks and bankers' associations, to accountants and stock-brokers. I also addressed the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, and the Minister of Finance. The questions I asked in the committee were not funny, but fundamental questions. I tried to learn about the origin of the dollar, its present rate, I wanted to know who created and circulated it, how many times it circulated in a year, who controlled the money supplies, and whatever you like. I asked questions on all those points and got uninteresting and vague answers. A few of them were specific, but most were vague.

And then, Mr. Chairman, someone was constantly interjecting to say: the hon. member is out of order. The hon. member should know he is beside the point. Your questions are fine, searching, emotional, but you should wait until later to ask them. I was always put off until later. There are a great many questions I did not ask because the chairman prevented me from doing so.

Mr. Grégoire: That is true.

Mr. Latulippe: Therefore, we could not perform our duty. The committee chairman did not assume his responsibilities either, with all due respect, because I could have lost my temper more than I did. But I was respectful to him and I even neglected to publish a brief I tabled, it was actually one of the first briefs to be tabled, and it was not published.

I asked members who sat on the executive or steering committee, if you prefer, and I saw that my brief had been scratched from the list. I asked the members of the steering committee to appear as witness, because I felt I was able to discuss the brief I had tabled, and felt capable of answering questions that might be put to me. And I was told: "When the opportunity occurs, you will be asked to appear. When we run out of—

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege. I wish to give the members of the committee of the whole the assurance that no one prevented the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) from appearing before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs as a witness. He himself told the committee that he was withdrawing his initial request to appear as witness, and if he is not satisfied now it is his own fault.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. Gray: He was very often present at the committee sittings as a regular member and he asked questions. All the questions that were in order were accepted. But it is the hon. member's responsibility, just as it is any other committee member's, to conform to the rules. At that time, he accepted quite pleasantly, the rulings of the Chair and of the other committee members. I would not like the record of the committee of the whole to report erroneous statements such as those the hon. member has just uttered, and if other members of the committee are in the house at this time, I feel they will agree with me that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac was perfectly free, as were all other members of the committee, to work in committee and to appear as witness, if he so wished, at the proper time.

Mr. Grégoire: On the question of privilege of the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray), sir, I also had some grievances to submit with regard to the attitude of the chairman of the committee, who, I think, did not preside over the business in an impartial way, who, on many occasions, prevented us from putting questions and who, to put it briefly, managed to take the floor much more often than all the other committee members, and I shall make it a point to submit evidence of this a little later on.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on this question of privilege. I think that no committee of finance, trade and economic affairs ever sat as we did this year. Indeed since last October, we held 110 sittings, including 90 on the Bank Act. All hon. members had an opportunity to put the questions they wanted, but in the committee, as in the house, there is a rule which prohibits repetitions ad infinitum such as those now being served on us here in this house.

Of course, I do not know what objective is sought by those who persist in always putting the same questions. There may be differences of opinion, but the rules do not permit repetition and the chairman of the committee, then, made an excellent job, as can be confirmed by the members who sat on that committee. As far as the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac is concerned, he was called upon to give evidence, but he declined the invitation; that is why we did not discuss his brief.

I think the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) and the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) can testify to this.

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I want to take a few moments to corroborate completely everything the hon. member for Essex West has said. The one criticism I would make of the hon. member as chairman of that committee is that he was altogether too considerate of members of the committee who had no consideration for their fellow members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): With regard to the hon. member who complained that he was not allowed to present his brief, I have a distinct recollection of the hon. member being asked by the steering committee whether he wished to present his brief himself. He told us he did not wish to present it and was satisfied merely to deposit it. We should take great care to see that statements of the kind which have been made do not go unchallenged on the record.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the steering committee I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands concerning the brief which the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac had prepared. I would simply like to add that so far as I could see any hon. member who attended the committee, whether as a regular member of the committee or otherwise, was given every opportunity to be heard.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I see that several people agree to say that I refused to appear, but I will tell you that it is completely false, because when the list was full, and after I had said that I wanted to appear on that committee, my name was put back on the list and I was told that I would be notified when the time came. However, I was not. I did not insist on appearing either because I expected to be called at any time, but I was never called. That is why I say that they did not want to study my brief.

I had insisted on having my name put back on the list so that I might appear, but I was told that I would be heard when there was an opening and the time was right. But that time never came. Therefore, I never agreed not to appear and I can swear it here. I never said that I did not want to appear. I never said that. For the information of those who say otherwise, I say flatly that they could not be more wrong. I never told lies and I am not here to tell lies. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us change the subject. That matter is past and forgotten.

However, I asked one thing of the committee chairman and he gladly granted my request. I wanted my brief to appear at least in the Minutes of Proceedings; it appeared in No. 53, the last one. It has already been circulated and put at the disposal of the members of the committee when consideration of the Bank of Canada Act began. I am grateful to the chairman for having my brief printed and I am satisfied in that respect.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that I felt some embarrassment and concern at finding myself alone quite often to defend my point of view. Those documents are now before the public. You can read them, study them, and anyone at all can judge them and appreciate or reject them. But they are there before the people, and none has the right to ignore them when it is a question of making laws, of revising the Bank of Canada Act and legislation concerning the Canadian chartered banks, or when the other Canadian finance companies, the credit unions or all the other near banks are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, at this occasion, carrying out my official mandate in the eyes of my electorate and of the whole Canadian people, I was conscious of doing quite simply my duty as a member of Parliament, and I still intend to do all I possibly can in this house. I am here before you because I am a representative of the people. I said several times to one of the members of the committee and even to the chairman that I represent the people of Canada, of my riding and my province even more than those concerned with high finance. I also represent the world of high finance, but I was elected and delegated by the people of Canada, who have needs and want improvements, who want to live and have a right to live. I defended those who elected me to office, at the same time respecting the law and the rules which I certainly do not intend to break, for I do not want to destroy anything, nor to humiliate anyone. And so, I want to be respectful of all that has been done but, while trying to be as human as possible, I want to respect and keep what has been well done.

I also want to commend all those who did their job. They deserve congratulations, they should be commended, because our predecessors accomplished good things and have not made too many blunders. A lot of good things have been accomplished, as evidenced by the economy which has finally picked up, across Canada.

But certain things have to be corrected. Let the economy roll along, but efforts should be made, however, to lower public debts, to relieve the people, not tax them to the hilt, in short, stop the public debt from increasing to such the extent that people go bankrupt. At the present time, the federal government is on the brink of bankruptcy, as well as provincial governments, municipal governments and school boards, and individuals go bankrupt, but nobody cares. In the province of Quebec, there has never been so many bankruptcies under the present system, and the same thing must be happening in the other provinces.

And some will say that there is no room for improvement, they will try to ridicule those who are speaking up, who want to improve the situation, who want to reform the economic system to stop the wave of bankruptcies, to stop debts from sky-rocketing, taxes from soaring high; high taxes are threatening to crush the people and rouse them to revolt. I think we are on the verge of revolution, and if hon. members do not see it coming, I do. That is why I speak about it in this house, that is why I am making a heartfelt appeal so that everybody may realize that something must be done to start improving this disquieting economic situation. That is the only reason why I mention this, for I bear no grudge against anyone. I believe that we are all the same, in the sense that we are all elected by the people and we all mean well. However, we do nothing, while we must talk it over to accomplish anything, admit the facts, in short sit down and discuss the problems. If you allow the same problems to remain without any change, and if you do not want to change them, if you will not make any improvement and laugh at those who are trying to make improvements, what do you expect to change?

If you do not remedy the situation, you will see it get worse, you will see human weakness, rancour, misery which leads to enmity, because people are ridiculed, because life is too miserable and it is too hard to benefit from science and progress, in short, because it is too hard to fulfil the duty as a citizen.

Mr. Chairman, no one should ever forget that each human being, even if only an infant, is much more important than any economic system in the world, and of even greater consequence in terms of reorganization and improvement of our economy, our financial situation, the circulation of our money, and all the various sectors of our economic activities.

All the Minister of Finance says is that we will have to organize taxation and use the means that our taxation system makes available to us, that is, tax the people who are already burdened, unable to live. Levy new taxes; is that what you want Mr. Minister? Is that your solution to the problems? If you have no other solution than that, at least be good enough to listen to those who offer you some; give them a try at least. If they produce nothing, if they do not work, you will always be able to change them.

But you have no solution to offer to improve present economic conditions in the country. You have no solution, you keep on applying the old methods, you will only maintain bodies of the past which are of no use to the people, to the country and to foreign countries. It is impossible to find financial means to enable the citizens to live decently. And if war were declared tomorrow morning, the minister would find millions and billions of dollars. Yet, when the old age pension was increased, we had to have new taxes immediately because we had no money, because we could not find the funds to finance the cost of the $280 million increase in old age pensions.

New taxes were levied in order to collect $400 million. However, $280 million only were needed, but since the minister is interested in all kinds of fields, he took that opportunity to increase the taxes and to further burden the citizens who cannot pay such taxes.

In the municipality where I live, at the present time, 74 properties have been sold for school taxes. Yet, there are those who say that there are no financial problems in Canada. It is the same everywhere, throughout the country. There are no problems to settle. Those who mention them are not listened to.

It should be realized that the situation is more serious than one cares to admit. I know that those who always sat on padded arm chairs, who always drew a salary of $20,000 to $40,000, are not aware of the troubled situation which prevails in Canada. They know nothing of the problems faced by the families, the farmers, the municipalities. Especially when everything has always gone well at home, when one has always been well treated.

• (6:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, in rising now I feel that I should apologize because I am afraid I am imposing on the committee. But when my time ran out this afternoon I still had a conclusion to draw. I addressed a few questions to the minister. He gave me some answers and these prompt some comments from me. I will make my observations very brief.

Last night the minister answered a suggestion by the hon. member for Villeneuve by saying, "This has never been done before". I thought I had explained to the minister this afternoon a formula which has been operating for more than a century to help ease the financial situation of municipalities. In answer to some of my questions the minister said this was a provincial responsibility. I admit this. In fact, I admitted it at the beginning of my remarks. The minister told us also that the provinces had already discussed proposals along these lines and that some of them appear to object in that they would not, of course, welcome interference by the federal government. This, too, I admit.

Nevertheless, I believe that if the minister would consider my suggestion carefully he would conclude that objections from the provinces would be unlikely. It is simply a question of the federal government incorporating in this banking legislation or in parallel legislation authorization which would enable the provinces to set up co-operative municipal banks. Those provinces which are not interested would simply leave this authority to one side. Others, where the municipalities were able to convince their legislatures of the usefulness of the measure, would be permitted to set up such a bank. Such an institution along the lines of the Crédit Communal de Belgique—here it could be called a municipal bank or something like that—would considerably lower the interest charges faced by the municipalities and help with their budget difficulties.

The minister told us in his answer that he knew there were some municipalities which face financial problems in connection with their capital projects. I have to tell him that more than 95 per cent of all the municipalities of Canada are faced with this difficulty. This is why I am less prone to apologize for my intervention now, even if I may seem to impose upon my colleagues in this chamber.

I happen to be familiar with this situation. All over this country there are friends of mine who are mayors and members of city councils. We have studied these problems for years and years and they are still begging me to be their spokesman in this house and to tell my colleagues that Canadian municipalities are really facing a difficult situation, one whose solution should be given a very high priority. I am not suggesting that the minister can deal with this matter this afternoon or this evening. But I am insisting that we should not now pass a law which would bind us in such a way that nothing can be done along the lines I have suggested for the next ten years.

The minister should consult with the authorized spokesmen of the municipalities, the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Reeves and the Union of Municipalities, in an effort to find a suitable formula. Let us take the time also to place a suitable provision in the bill and then advise the provinces that here is a solution which has been discussed. It would be natural for representatives of the provincial legislatures to attend these discussions also. Then those provinces which wish to take advantage of the new facilities would do so and the others would simply leave them aside. I think this would be an easy solution.

The minister said also that the government had done certain things which had achieved their purpose in the lessening of unemployment, for instance. I have to differ with him. I do not think there are many difficulties which have been settled once and for all. The measures he had in mind were piecemeal and though they helped considerably they were still piecemeal measures. There is no global legislation to ease the financial situation of the municipalities. This is a problem which should be given top priority, and drastic action is needed.

I am ready to co-operate with the minister in passing this legislation as quickly as possible as long as there is a guarantee that it will not bind the government for another ten years during which the municipalities will be told that under the present banking laws nothing can be done for them. It is essential that the door should be left open.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the present Minister of Finance was quoting a while ago the speech delivered by the former minister of finance, the present Member of the Administration, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), on June 14, 1965, in which he was criticizing the Social Credit philosophy.

Mr. Chairman, in order to understand a little the circumstances in which that speech was delivered—at that time, the hon. minister was presenting a motion for second reading of Bill No. C-102, on banks and banking. We were discussing the motion for second reading of the bill and we know that, at that stage, each of the members may speak once but he cannot reply, let us say to the minister introducing the bill. Moreover, according to another section of the rules, whenever the member introducing a bill rises at a given moment to give an answer to those who asked questions, the debate is then automatically concluded.

Besides, when the former minister of finance, the present member for Davenport, delivered that speech—I regret his absence in the house at this time since I intend to deal with that speech, and I had advised the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), hoping that the hon. member for Davenport would be present—he knew quite well that nobody in the house could reply because he was then concluding the debate—under the standing orders—following the motion on second reading of Bill No. C-102 concerning banks and banking.

He delivered this speech on Social Credit theories knowing quite well that, according to standing orders, nobody could answer him, the debate being concluded, and that, in short, under the standing orders, no member could rise and refute that speech.

Here are some excerpts from that speech which I would like to comment.

First of all, the Minister without Portfolio, the former minister of finance, starts out from principles which are not really social credit principles. The leitmotiv, the argument used over and over again in that speech of the former minister of finance—which can be found at page 2373 of Hansard for June 14, 1965—the ever-recurring idea is this: the Social Crediters want an inordinate increase in the money supply.

Well, then, Mr. Chairman, objection must be taken immediately to what the former minister of finance wants to include in a theory, when that is not in it at all.

• (6:20 p.m.)

The point, Mr. Chairman, is not to increase the money supply beyond measure, far from it. What Social Crediters propose is to increase the money supply at the same pace—neither faster nor slower—as, Canadian citizens and Canadian industries are able to increase the Canadian output.

If there is a large increase in Canadian production, there has to be a corresponding increase in the money supply, because the money supply enables Canadian citizens to buy what they produce.

If, on the other hand, production does not increase, or if it decreases, then it is obvious that the money supply cannot increase either; indeed, it must be reduced at the same rate as production decreases. Therefore, we can realize that this is far from the allegations of the former minister of finance, the present member for Toronto-Davenport and Member of the Administration, when he said we wanted to increase the money supply out of all proportions.

The minister said, at one time, and I quote:

> The other chief danger arising from excessive expenditures associated with an excessive increase in the money supply—

Mr. Chairman, that phrase "excessive increase in the money supply" is used continuously in the speech of the former minister of finance.

Therefore, it is easy to see that the whole statement of the former minister of finance is based on false premises because the Créditistes have never advocated an excessive increase in the money supply. Criticism of a system is always easier after one has inaccurately described it. But if one begins by understanding the exact meaning of Social Credit, criticism becomes more difficult. In fact I have never met anyone yet who could criticize it by stating exactly what is Social Credit. Those people tried to ridicule it rather than understand it.

Mr. Chairman, the former minister of finance, who is now Minister without Portfolio, also stated:

> We must recognize that inflation is fundamentally unfair.

Because he had said previously:

> I do not believe that the proponents of Social Credit feel that price increases and inflation constitute a serious danger.

And he said that Social Credit would create inflation. He said especially, and I am still quoting from his speech:

> If the money supply increases unduly, it will lead to price and cost increases and to balance of payments difficulties. If such increases in the money supply and consequent increases in the pressure of expenditures in the economy should persist, we can expect that ultimately it will lead to inflation and, in a country such as ours, to an exchange crisis.

The former minister of finance was waving the spectre of inflation when talking about the Social Crediters.

Well, Mr. Chairman, have we not inflation, today? Is it because of the Social Crediters' theories which are applied. Not at all. They are laughed at. But we are in the midst of inflation, as big an inflation as Canada as never known since the Liberal government came to power. The Social Crediters are not responsible for the present inflation, and still we are smack in the middle of it. What is the cause of inflation? The present government, by continuously increasing taxes, brings about price increases and when prices increase, the workers naturally ask for higher wages and when wages increase, prices increase. But the primary cause, the true cause of price increases and of the inflation now being felt in Canada is the increased taxes which have been continuously rising since the present government has been in power. That is the cause of inflation. If we are in a period of inflation brought about by a government of which the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) is a member he claims: "The Créditistes will bring on inflation." But his own government has brought it about and it continues to worsen. Is there any logic in the criticism of the hon. member for Davenport? None at all, since he is one of the men responsible for the inflation we are now undergoing. And he would blame it on the Créditistes while he has brought it about himself. And he claims:

The other chief danger—

because there are two chief dangers the former minister of finance used to see in the Créditiste theories.

The other chief danger arising from excessive expenditure associated with an excessive increase in the money supply is the effect on the balance of payments.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the Créditistes are not currently in power and applying their theories to Canada. The government is a Liberal one.

Let us look at what that government has done in regard to unfavourable balance of payments of our country.

I have here the latest edition we have received of the Canada Statistical Review, dated February 1967, and on page 70, we shall see what is the balance of payments after three years under a Liberal administration, when during part of that period, the former minister of finance, now Member of the Administration, the hon. member for Davenport, was in office.

In 1965, when the minister made that statement, he had been minister of finance for two years already, what was the Canadian balance of payments? Did it show a surplus? Indeed not. It showed a deficit of $1,083 million at the very time when the former minister of finance was telling us that Social Credit was going to be a danger to our balance of payments.

Are the Canadian citizens to blame? No, Mr. Chairman, because if they had had their say in the matter our balance of payments would have been favourable, since two factors must be considered with regard to the balance of payments: the commodities accounts, that is exports and imports, and the invisible accounts, that is the inflow and outflow of money.

Let us examine the commodities accounts. We worked hard, we produced enough and we exported more than we imported. If one looks only at the commodities account, imports and exports, that is the work done by the people to produce, put on the market goods which are not too expensive, that represents a balance, a surplus of $118 million in the balance of payments. Thus, the Canadian people must not be blamed for the unfavourable balance of payments which showed a total deficit of $1,083 million, in view of the fact that in foreign trade, exports and imports alone, we had a surplus of $118 million.

But then we come to the invisible accounts, the capital inflow and outflow, because our governments are forced to borrow in New York, London or Belgium, all over the world, because the Bank of Canada does not fulfil its duty, and does not hold sufficient credit to provide for the development of the country. There we see that we have a deficit. So we borrow elsewhere, pay interest rates on foreign loans and end up with a deficit of $1,201 million.

Was a Social Crediter responsible for that? No. The Minister of Finance was in office at the time. He was the one responsible for this deficit in the balance of payments, but he still had the nerve to say: it would be dangerous to accept the Social Credit theories; our balance of payments could be seriously threatened. But it was worse than a threat; at the time the danger not only existed but we showed an unfavourable balance of payments totalling $1,083 million with a deficit of $1,201 million only because our Bank of Canada was not assuming its responsibilities, and our municipal and provincial goverments were forced to borrow in the United States, England and sometimes all over the world.

Mr. Chairman, it takes quite a bit of nerve to blame Social Credit theories for the two plagues, the two great calamities of that period, which still exist today, namely an endless inflation and an unfavourable balance of payments unprecedented in our history.

Nevertheless, the former minister of finance said there was no fault or mistake to be found in the monetary system we have today. In fact, he said: I am convinced of the necessity of influencing the money supply to help our economy reach its full potential, at a given time, and to enable it as well to reach a high and constant growth rate.

According to the minister, the handling of money supplies and the regular growth rate were adequate at the time. He felt that that was good and he flattered himself that the expansion was very satisfactory in 1965. Yet, we now realize that the monetary and economic policies implemented by the former minister of finance have led to inflation—of which he is responsible—and restrictions in many fields, in short, they are the cause of the increased unemployment we are now experiencing.

Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to criticize the Social Credit theories, to say that they are nonsensical, that their application would lead us to inflation and create problems in our balance of payments, but we realize that our present monetary system has all those flaws, even though a Liberal government is now in power. We live under this faulty monetary system and the government does nothing to change it and to put an end to the situation.

Mr. Chairman, it is time we found solutions to the problem. It is time to establish a system which will allow the Canadian people to benefit from the wealth of the nation and be prosperous in such a prosperous country.

The subject we have been dealing with, and which I myself had the opportunity of dealing with on several occasions, is that we should like credit to be created by the Bank of Canada rather than by the chartered banks. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the answer we have received from the Minister of Finance has been far from adequate; he tried to evade the problem instead of giving an answer. He charged us with statements which we had not made, but he still did not answer our questions, far from it.

In any event, the people will read his answers and decide which one of us is right. The minister wants to leave control of the monetary system in the hands of the chartered banks, or rather leave the control of the creation of credit—or, I might say, the operation itself—in the hands of the chartered banks, whereas we want it given to the Bank of Canada.

There is another very important point, Mr. Chairman. On what basis does the government decide how much money should be in circulation?

For a long time, we were told that money was based on gold. There are even members in this house who travelled across the province of Quebec, saying: Social Credit is a lot of nonsense; money is based on gold and cannot be based on production. Money is based on gold. So many people told us that. Perhaps 75 per cent of the present members imagine that money is based on gold. The Parliamentary Secretary will say no, because he has heard the replies of the governor of the Bank of Canada on this subject.

Page 997 of No. 19 of the Minutes of Proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for 1966 gives a few questions I put to the governor of the Bank of Canada. And I quote:

> Mr. Rasminsky, I would like to ask you what is the reserve in bullion behind Bank of Canada notes?
> Mr. Rasminsky: Nothing at all, Mr. Grégoire. The Bank of Canada has no bullion, no gold.
>
> Mr. Grégoire: There is no gold reserve behind Bank of Canada money?
> Mr. Rasminsky: No, Mr. Grégoire.

May I point out that the matter was very simple; but we had been told so often that money was based on gold that I still hesitated. I continue:

> Mr. Grégoire: It is true, then, to say that Canadian money is not based on gold?
> Mr. Rasminsky: Yes.

Three times in a row, I was told that money was not based on gold. A little further on I asked Mr. Rasminsky, and I quote:

> I would like you to say that ten times in a row. I had heard it said in Canada that our money was based on gold. So there is no gold reserve whatever behind Bank of Canada bank notes?

• (6:40 p.m.)

I put another question to Mr. Rasminsky. Here it is:

> But Canadian money is not based on gold?
> Mr. Rasminsky: No, sir.

Is it clear enough, Mr. Chairman? Canadian money is no longer based on gold. We have known it for a long time.

In that case Canadian money is based on what? On faith and credit, I will be told. Well, if money is based on faith and not on gold and if you want to increase the money supply, you have only to get Canadian people together and ask them to shout very loud: We have faith, over and over again, and then increase the money supply. Is that how the money supply is increased? Is it done by saying that money is based on faith and by asking all the people to shout together: We have faith in the dollar, let us put it on a pedestal, let us kneel before it and say: We have faith. If money is based on faith rather than gold, I feel that if there is more faith there should be more money.

We are told that money is based on faith. In my opinion, it is somewhat like the minister's answer. I am ready to believe that the minister is not too happy about the way he answered my question and I quote:

—feel and flair—

Maybe a little judgment, to a certain extent, but not too much, because one must not rely too much on the judgment of the Minister of Finance. He stated flatly: I do it by feel and flair and to a certain extent—not too much but some—it remains a question of judgment. But it is mostly feel.

When one asks on what money is based, one is told: On faith. What kind of monetary system is that, Mr. Chairman? Quite an unusual system based on faith, feel, flair and maybe on a little judgment.

Mr. Chairman, Canada should give itself a scientific monetary system, based on reality, on what it represents. In philosophy, Mr. Chairman, smoke is a sign and fire is the significatum. Therefore, if that is applied to money, the sign is the dollar but the significatum is the production. What is the real value of both? It is not the sign, but the significatum. It is the significatum which is the real value, the dollar; money is only a sign which represents, according to the philosophical terms I used earlier, the real value of the country, the real wealth, our production, our ability to produce, our real title. The dollar is only a symbol.

Mr. Chairman, when it comes to evaluating the temperature, the significatum is the temperature; the mercury in the thermometer is only the sign, and the mercury is there only to represent the degree of heat or cold whereas the real value of the temperature is the cold or the heat. The mercury is only a sign which represents the significatum.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if I confine myself to monetary system, our real value, that is the significatum, must be the country's wealth, our output, and the sign must be the dollar, the money supply. However, the sign must give an exact and adequate representation of the significatum. The sign must be a true reproduction of the significatum; otherwise, the sign is broken and diverted from its true role. For instance, if the temperature is—let us say—90 degrees and the thermometer indicates only 8 degrees, it will be said that it is out of order, that it is broken and does not represent the true and exact temperature outside, since it is actually 90 degrees, as evidenced by three or four other thermometers, but the other one is broken for it says only 15 degrees. Therefore, the thermometer must be changed.

Similarly, in the monetary system, Canada has a considerable output or wealth. Every last one of us says that Canada is a rich and prosperous country with its oil wells, its wheat production, its ore, its iron, asbestos, copper and nickel mines, its forests that supply lumber throughout Canada and pulp and paper throughout the world, with its tremendous sources of electric power. We have a rich and prosperous country. But because the sign is lacking, the sign which must give a true and adequate representation of the country's wealth, the Canadian citizens are not as prosperous as the country.

Canada is a prosperous country. But because the sign is inadequate, because our monetary system, which is the sign, does not adequately represent the country's riches and prosperity, because that monetary system is like a thermometer that is out of order. As a result, the sign, that is, the dollar, is preventing production from reaching Canadian homes and the Canadian people. The result is a simple one: it can be said that our population is poverty-stricken in a land of plenty.

Our country is one of the richest in the world. But, nevertheless, there are at present, in the province of Quebec alone, 114,000 unemployed who live on meagre unemployment insurance benefits and as many persons in receipt of welfare allowances who do not live, but merely exist with the small weekly or monthly benefits they receive. This is taking place in a so-called prosperous country where the Canadian people are unable to share as they should in the national prosperity, wealth and development.

Mr. Chairman, this points to a deficiency. If our monetary system, which is the sign of our prosperity, is a failure, if it does not represent more adequately the country's wealth and prosperity, it is then up to parliament and to this committee of the whole to study the Bank Act, the Bank of Canada Act, which is the sinew of our monetary system. It behooves us to change this monetary system, to gear it to modern times, to the country's wealth, to the Canadian people, so that this wealth may reach Canadian homes and the Canadian citizens.

This is what is lacking today. Why? In spite of our enormous production, of our tremendous wealth, the fact remains that the sign of that national wealth and prosperity is inadequate since it does not enable the Canadian people to avail themselves of the country's wealth.

Well, then, I say it is up to all of us to consider in depth this Bank of Canada Act which is the main sinew of our economic life, to amend it and change it so that the Canadian people may benefit more from the prosperity of the country.

Some claim that we are infringing upon their privileges by speaking too long. Mr. Chairman, I will say this to those people. We have had the Bank of Canada Act under consideration for two days only. It had not been before parliament in 12 years and the Bank of Canada controls the whole monetary system and the whole life of the country. It is the main sinew of our monetary system and of our whole economic life. Yet, some people find that two days is too long even though some hon. members found means to talk for three months on the Canadian flag. Let no one tell me that two, three or four days, or even two weeks is too long for the members who are present here to analyse the amendments to the Bank of Canada Act.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, and I mean unfortunately, I realize there are not enough members elected by the people in this house who are really concerned with the amendments to the Bank of Canada Act. I realize that there are not enough who would study our monetary system and toil over the amendments required to improve the Bank of Canada. Unfortunately, I realize that the Minister of Finance is too steeped in or imbued with the prejudices of the traditional, conservative and orthodox economic system to be in a position to find the solutions to our present economic problems.

Mr. Chairman, time has come to bring about drastic changes to our economic and monetary system if we want Canada to make advances, if we want the Canadian citizens to share in the wealth of Canada, because at the present time—it is a sad thing to say—foreign investors benefit and share much more than the Canadian citizens in the gains derived from the development of our natural resources. Foreign investors get more profit out of our natural wealth than our Canadian citizens. Our Canadian citizens work in the woods, in the mine pits while foreign investors reap the benefits. Why? Because we are told that we do not have enough capital to invest in the development of our country. Canada will never really control its economy until the day when it sets up the necessary institutions which will bring in the capital required for the development of our country. Until then we shall keep on trying to administer with the minister's flair and feellings, with a little judgment if necessary, but the economy of our country will not make progress that way. What is needed is a scientific and rational system.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult to see a quorum in this house, and I must talk in front of at least 21 members. Actually, I see two, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16—16, Mr. Chairman. In my opinion, this is not a sufficient number to deal with such an important matter as the structure of the Bank of Canada; consequently, I would ask for an adjournment until eight o'clock, if we cannot have a quorum.

[English]

The Chairman: Perhaps I should read to the hon. member the standing order relating to the quorum. Standing order No. 3 reads as follows:

> The presence of at least twenty members of the house, including Mr. Speaker, shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the house for the exercise of its powers.

The Speaker referred to in the standing order would, of course, include the chairman in the case of committee of the whole. The next paragraph reads:

> Whenever Mr. Speaker adjourns the house for want of a quorum, the time of the adjournment, and the names of the members then present, shall be inserted in the Journal.

Perhaps I should also read, for the hon. member's benefit, citation 60 from Beauchesne, page 48:

> Any member may direct the Speaker's attention to the fact that there is not a quorum present. The Speaker will proceed at once to count the house, and if there are not twenty members present, including himself, the Clerk will take down the names, and the Speaker will then adjourn the house without question first put until the usual hour on the next sitting day.

Further on in citation 60, I find this:

When committees of the whole, supply or ways and means are compelled to rise for want of a quorum, they neither report progress nor ask leave to sit again.

I would, therefore, ask the Clerk Assistant to count the house.

On the count being made, 20 members were declared to be present.

The Chairman: I have been advised there are 20 members present and the committee is properly constituted.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, this is exactly what I wanted, 20 members at least. There is one member leaving, so we remain 19.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I feel that questions of such importance as those concerning chartered banks and especially the Bank of Canada, which is our national bank, the bank of the people, should interest at least 50 per cent of the members. I can assure you that if the citizens of Canada were in the galleries this afternoon they would be stunned by the unconcern of the hon. members for such essential matters.

Mr. Chairman, when we consider that we are dealing with the very essence of our economical life and we have difficulty in finding 20 members responsible enough to try and settle the problems which affect us so closely, we wonder where we are going.

Mr. Chairman, in my speech of yesterday I mentioned that the control exercised by the Bank of Canada was more on secondary matters than on the monetary question, as it was meant to have us believe, that the bank was more anxious to prevent from speaking, through the use of occult forces, those who care for monetary reform in Canada, than to control effectively our monetary system; and I gave supporting evidence to that effect. Those which I read in the house were trustworthy since most witnesses were technicians or former governors of the Bank of Canada who appeared before the committee in 1954.

I will sum up Bill No. C-190, Mr. Chairman, by asking: What do we find in it? Only trifles, superficial amendments, in short: no substantial amendment. We study a small bill, the national bank bill that has 20 articles, and to discuss these articles, there are hardly 20 members in the house who look like they are sleeping in their seats and who seem to be saying: When will we at last be through. How do you like that, Mr. Chairman.

Yesterday afternoon I felt new hope when I heard the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) giving such clear information, and above all, asking the minister some questions—

[English]

The Chairman: It being seven o'clock, and pursuant to an order of the house made on March 3, this sitting is suspended for one hour.

Before leaving the chair, may I read the questions to be considered at the adjournment tonight? They are, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain); transport—Trois-Rivières, P.Q.—representations against an increase in fees on the St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland canal; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard); dominion-provincial relations—British Columbia—proposed establishment of harbour commission.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, it affords me pleasure, after taking a good meal, to proceed with the few remarks I wish to make this evening. I hope that the minister, as well as his parliamentary secretary, have regained their strength, in order, at least, to listen very patiently to what we have to say about the Bank of Canada.

As I was saying before supper, our hopes were renewed last night when we saw the house listen quietly to the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and we really hoped at the end of the day that some would understand something about our claims and the cause we are defending. But lo and behold, through some magical power, I suppose, a financial wind swept over that quiet assembly; everything changed and members of the government returned to their old ways and showed as much ignorance as ever.

However, Mr. Chairman, I believe such discussions were useful since, first of all, we succeeded in having the minister express his opinions at various times, but not always.

And this will be published in the record. What we are saying today is not so much for this committee but for the record and for those who read it and who want to know what is going on in this house.

We succeeded in having the minister admit that chartered banks actually create money, that they receive deposits from the Bank of Canada, that cost absolutely nothing to them, deposits which they have a right to multiply twelve times and a half and to lend at 8 and 9 per cent.

We wish the government would attribute certain members four, five or six members, small banks like that, which would not be expensive. I believe it would be profitable to multiply them so as not to always grant such a little group the privilege of taking hold of this country's wealth and of impoverishing the rest of this country. But what would be still better and what we are longing for is that the Bank of Canada plays its part. We do not want to upset anything in the financial system; we simply want every organization to play its part.

The Bank of Canada, which is the bank of the Canadian people, should deal with the general public, and the private banks, that is the chartered banks, the credit unions and so on, should operate in the private sector. I think this is perfectly logical, whereas the system we have today is totally illogical. I am surprised to see that people who consider themselves intelligent do not understand this problem or, if they do, refuse to say so—for I am certain that the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary are intelligent enough to understand it. They know very well that if the Bank of Canada were to take over the present functions of the chartered banks with regard to the creation of credit, there would be no more inflation than is created now by the chartered banks with the same means. They are fully aware of that. Only, the minister cannot speak up because, as I said yesterday and tonight before supper, he is prevented by some occult power from being himself and from saying what he thinks, as are also all the other people involved in the present financial system.

I was rather surprised, four years ago, to hear the director of a chartered bank who was also a member of parliament tell me, as I was having a discussion with him: "My friend, do you think we do not know what you are saying in the House of Commons? Do you think we are not aware of all this? And you are 100 per cent right". That is what he told me. I asked him: "Why do you not let the Bank of Canada undertake such operations?" He said: "My friend, I would like to keep my head on my shoulders". That was a serious thing to say. And that is where I saw the power of international finance, which controls not only our country but most of the nations of the world.

We are glad that the Minister of Finance and Receiver General told us several important truths. He had to hide some from us, for he was not in a position to tell us everything. But he should not say, for example, that he is here to look after the interests of the people, when he is here to look after the interests of the trusts. Let him no try to sell us such stories.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday I mentioned some evidence which was put before the finance committee in 1954. Ever since the beginning we have talked a great deal about the present review, the third since the creation of the Bank of Canada.

I was just reading over some most interesting passages, although an attempt was made to hide them from the public at large; they might also prove interesting for the members of the house, but since they seem to be deaf to all truth, I will now put them on record for the benefit of the people.

I was just referring to the words of a former speaker of the House of Commons here, hon. Mr. Macnaughton, who said:

> It seems that now, and always, I believe, if we succeeded in controlling credit by changing for instance the cash reserve of chartered banks, we could eventually stabilize our economy and generalize a monetary system which might improve while expanding—

I am convinced that what Mr. Macnaughton had in mind when he said this, was to increase gradually the chartered banks' reserve to bring them to save 100 per cent of liquid assets instead of the usual 8 per cent they accepted at the time on a deposit. Today we are down to an average of 6.6 per cent. I believe that Mr. Macnaughton gave most valuable advice to the committee in an endeavour to improve gradually the control that the Bank of Canada must exert over our whole monetary system.

After such a straightforward statement, can you deny that the only way to control a company, for instance, is to own at least 51 per cent of its shares? On the other hand, is it not ridiculous to talk about control when you hold only 8 or 6.6 per cent?

So Mr. Macnaughton hoped that the Bank of Canada would slowly recover monetary control. I believe that is clearly logical. That is why we claim that we can gain control of banks through the Bank of Canada when we own 100 per cent of the new credits which are the exclusive property of the chartered banks.

The day is yet to come, I think, when the government, through the Bank of Canada, will cease to control only the insignificant reserves of those who control the blood of the nation and will force chartered banks to have larger deposits than the 10 per cent required each year.

Then the banks, as well as caisses populaires and other near-banks, will only be authorized to lend to the extent of their actual assets and not on the basis of fictitious accounts. I would refer those who still think we are talking through our hats, to page 158 of that same report, where they will find the answers of Mr. Towers to Mr. Cannon and the proof that bankers do get favours from the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Cannon:

Q.—I understand that to make money more readily available you buy government bonds?

A.—Yes.

Q.—I see by your balance sheet dated December 31, 1953 that, apart from government bonds and fixed capital, your assets are only about $90 million?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Supposing that in order to reach a certain objective you had to buy for more than $90 million worth of government bonds, how would you go about paying the amount in excess of $90 million which you would not have and which you had to pay immediately?

A.—In answering this question I might invite the criticism of Mr. Low on the one side and Mr. Macdonnell on the other, for we would pay the additional government bonds by crediting the amount in our books, namely to the deposit account of chartered banks. Whether or not we purchase the bonds from the banks is immaterial, this procedure can be repeated indefinitely.

Q.—Indefinitely. I thought so, but in an emergency would you not simply make a new issue of money? I suppose you would only have to make a book entry and then pay the bonds, thereby increasing the amount of money in circulation?

A.—Any book entry increasing chartered banks' deposits actually constitutes a new money issue.

Q.—That is creating money, is it not?

A.—Yes.

Is that plain enough, Mr. Chairman? Creating money with one stroke of the pen. You see how easy it is for chartered banks to obtain money. Should they lack any, the Bank of Canada will even be so generous as to make deposits for them. Then, the chartered banks will only have to multiply the said deposit, which did not cost them a penny, to lend the whole amount to the people. It is as simple as that.

But, it is precisely that operation that the financiers have always withheld from the people. And Mr. Cannon continues:

Q.—During your testimony, you said that there is no limit to the amount of money which can be issued at any time?

A.—That is right.

Where is the control of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Chairman? Do you not think that it would be a good thing to set a limit? Here it is the chairman of the committee, mind you —it is the chairman of the committee who comes to the rescue of the governor of the Bank of Canada, short of arguments. Besides, the same thing occurs all through those inquiries, when the big shots are in danger, when the representatives of the people attempt to know more about the limits set by big finance. Listen to the last answer of the chairman of that time.

• (8:20 p.m.)

We already have fully discussed that matter.

That is the real shield of the present financial myth. The truth must not be revealed. Therefore, what is the part played by that chairman? I ask you. Is he not there to guarantee the freedom to both parties or to provide only the security of the big financiers? It is for you to decide. As for me, I have only read the evidence. It is strange anyway. And the saddest part of it is that these actions from the chairman occur on many occasions. For example, on page 128, when Mr. Tucker was questioning Mr. Towers:

Mr. Towers, you still hesitate at this time to tell us whether it was wise or not on the part of the federal government in the early thirties to deliberately let the deficits accumulate to make up for the purchasing power which was no more in the hands of the people?

Mr. Towers: I do not think I can possibly give you a straight answer because I have too many reservations to make.

Imagine that. "I have too many reservations to make," he said.

That is one of the interesting questions to the solution of which the representatives of the government should devote themselves. That is it. We are paid to do a job, when we are not able to do that job anymore we shift the responsibility to the government, to the members. It is so easy, so simple. A member is always ready to bear with everything, so we pass it on to the members.

And the chairman interjected in those terms:

Why not leave the task to the historians?

That is the final and clever answer from a committee chairman. That is a very intelligent retort for a committee chairman. It is the instruction to transfer everything to history, to hide everything behind the curtain of ignorance.

Which moved Mr. Pouliot, now a senator, to say as shown on page 93 of the report:

I realize that high finance is not within the grasp of the people. We can neither see nor understand it and I would be most interested in obtaining information on the staff of your bank. I would like to know the salary of Mr. Brooks, your doorman? I asked Mr. King and Mr. Abbott and they told me it was not proper to ask such questions.

And the joke goes on, Mr. Chairman. Behind each director lurks an occult force that continues to haunt parliament.

The people responsible for the Bank of Canada, the chartered banks, the Department of Finance, have their secret sessions just like in the times of emperors, and they sit at the same table as the great world financiers.

Sometimes, tips are passed on, sometimes a danger will be forecast and even the Bank of Canada will supply arms to fight the enemy No. 1, the people. Then, it will be decided to take away or give them something more, according to the whims of the financiers. This is called inflation or deflation.

Has anything changed today after 13 years, the last inquiry into the banks dating back to 1954? Not in the least. As for the inquiry, the present chairman seems to have received the same orders as the chairman in 1954 to protect big finance. It seems the briefs which most favour our present financial system are the ones that are discussed. Witnesses are called before the committee who favour the status quo, while those who are hostile to it are almost systematically kept away.

A few are accepted, merely to confirm the rule. I do not know whether the chairman does all this willingly, but on reading the proceedings one gets the feeling that he is somewhat like St. Paul who said: "For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do".

And the victim, the people, continue to be sacrificed on the altar of the golden calf, big finance. The astounding thing about it, is that we always find in our midst, more and more high priests of big finance to offer the holocaust without uttering a word. A foreboding of this occult course probably moved His Holiness Pope Pius XII to say that those who control money and credit, control the blood of the nation, and that without their permission, no one has the right to live.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to read statements of people who are not socreds. I also want to point out that I could quote, for hours on end, people who, although they do not look upon social credit with favour, still advocate financial reform. For instance, I could name Rev. Father Lévesque, one of the great French Canadians, who said:

If you would not have communism nor socialism, then set social credit against them. It alone has the means to check those two perverse movements.

Today, we no longer hear of Father Lévesque. He was banished to Africa. That is how I was able—I know the family very well—once again to see first hand that real strength which can neither be seen nor felt, but which stands there watching the interests of big finance. It is a royalty which, it seems, it is very dangerous to attack.

As for us, it may be that we have more gall than the others, but we attack that royalty which is high finance, for we think that if we do not destroy that myth, tomorrow the people will be destroyed. We are here to save the life of the people, Mr. Chairman. I feel all the members should realize that the time has come for the Canadian people to deal with its business seriously, and to see to it that those various organizations fulfil the role for which they were created.

When one considers the Bank of Canada Act, its definition, the first duty it must perform, one finds that this role has been well determined: to control currency and credit 100 per cent. What has caused it to abandon its role? The power of financiers who have bought the representatives at a good price to stop it from doing its duty.

Mr. Chairman, if someone will listen to us once more, we just want the Bank of Canada to create, on behalf of Canada, on behalf of Canadians, new credit and to cease giving for nothing our yearly surpluses to the chartered banks which are private institutions. I do not despise them, far from it, but they have their duties and I say that they are not playing their role at this time. As a matter of fact, they are taking over the role that belongs to the Bank of Canada, and it is imperative that the Bank of Canada should control credit and particularly put it at the service of Canadians and stop the practice of borrowing our own credit.

Bank of Canada Act

• (8:30 p.m.)

Someone was asking me the other day: But, sir, what are we going to do to get rid of those debts that accumulate from year to year?

And I answered: "My dear friend, with the system we have, there is only one way. That is to stop producing, because as soon as we produce, as soon as we have surpluses, we have a new debt the next day. To stop getting into debts, we must stop producing."

Mr. Chairman the more we produce, the more debts we will have. Because it is essentially the basis of our present system, because the Bank of Canada is a debt agency, that has been made quite clear in every report.

Mr. Chairman, I still would have a number of reports to quote, such as, for an example, Hon. Lucien Maynard's brief which is reported on page 318 of the proceedings and evidence of the standing committee of 1954. Hon. Mr. Maynard submitted a marvellous brief in which he gave some definitions, some examples, an historic outline of the banks within our financial system. In the second part of his brief he referred to the faults of our financial system. He also referred to the accumulation of debts as a defect, and he compared our financial system to a poker game.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, it would have been more interesting for all members if they had read these reports once, twice and even ten times, to understand at last the ridicule of our present financial system.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have but one question to ask of the Minister of Finance. Up to this point, I have had the opportunity to give some explanation of our ideas on credit creation. I should now like to leave this area. I have put my questions in this regard and I think I have given the long and short of my views. We have the answers of the Minister of Finance recorded in Hansard. We will now let the Canadian public be the judge both of the value of the arguments with regard to credit creation and of the minister's answers. The public will be the judge and will decide who, in these discussions, brought forward useful arguments and suggested amendments to the Bank of Canada Act so that the Canadian people may profit by its monetary system.

The question I should like to put tonight deals with another thing. I have begun to touch upon the subject this afternoon. I refer to the money supply in circulation, to the volume. As clearly stated by the minister, it is obvious that it is the Bank of Canada which decides what the money supply will be. If the Bank of Canada issues $1,000 in cash, it means that there will be $100 worth of money supply, once the chartered banks have proceeded to the creation of credit. If the Bank of Canada wishes to bring that $100 down to $50, all it has to do is to withdraw $4 from Canada's money supply. On the other hand, should it want to increase the money supply to $150, it will simply add $8 in cash, and then the money supply will jump to $150.

What I would like to know from the minister is this: How does the Bank of Canada proceed to determine what the volume of the money supply should be? On what criterion did the Bank of Canada base itself in 1960, for example, when it enacted that the money supply would be about $12 billion, that it would be $15 billion in 1964, $17,186 million in 1965 and that, at the end of September, 1966, the money supply would be $18,155 million? At least there is an increase. It is not a round figure increase when you add $800 million at a time, or $1 billion, no, that is different from month to month, that can increase by $197 million.

What I would like to know is this: What are the criteria upon which the Bank of Canada bases itself to increase that money supply? Are there any criteria? What are those criteria which are dictated to the Bank of Canada and by which the latter determines, at a given time, the volume of the money supply?

One who receives the monthly reports of the Bank of Canada knows that the money supply fluctuates continuously, from week to week, and that every week, the Bank of Canada buys or sells bonds to keep the money supply in constant fluctuation.

Tonight, I should like to ask the minister the following question: What are the precise criteria the Bank of Canada uses to determine what will be, on a given day, the volume of the money supply in Canada?

I hope that the minister will be able to answer that question immediately.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I shall do my best to reply to these questions of the hon. member for Lapointe whose curiosity is insatiable. May I reply by quoting, first, the statements made by the governor of the Bank of Canada to the royal commission on banking and finance, the Porter commission, in which he put forward the standards he was trying to maintain for the economic and financial welfare of the nation? They are—

• (8:40 p.m.)

—sustained economic growth at high levels of employment and efficiency, internal price stability and the maintenance of a sound external financial position, an equitable sharing of economic benefits and burdens and the maintenance of a high degree of economic freedom.

Those were the general objectives of the governor of the Bank of Canada in implementing monetary policy. If the hon. gentleman's curiosity is not satisfied by that very general statement perhaps I should refer him to the annual report of the governor to me for 1966, which was tabled in this house. In that report he will see a discussion beginning at page 4 and continuing for several pages in which he gives a detailed account of the considerations he had in mind in determining the volume of cash reserves of the bank, and how generally he operated in the market to influence the volume of money. He will find there an exercise, as I referred to it previously, of judgment.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, if I am not mistaken, the hon. minister quoted an answer, rather a brief presented by the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, and in that answer, as far as I can recall, although I may not have heard everything, all the criteria set by Mr. Rasminsky, the minister told me that the Bank of Canada puts in circulation the necessary currency to increase the money supply in such a way as to ensure the economic growth of Canada and to provide for adequate employment. Are those, more or less, the two criteria mentioned by the minister?

Mr. Tremblay: Price stability and exchange stability.

Mr. Grégoire: Then, there would be four criteria which the governor of the Bank of Canada would use as a basis to increase the money supply, to reduce it or to keep it at a given whatever, say level X, and those four criteria would be the following: to ensure economic growth, to keep up employment at a reasonable level, to maintain price stability and to keep up exchange stability.

It is therefore obvious that the Governor of the Bank of Canada has failed all along the line.

First of all, he is far from having maintained price stability. We are experiencing an inflationary period as never before, nobody can deny it. The Governor of the Bank of Canada claims to be maintaining the money supply at the proper level to ensure price stability, and throughout Canada, people complain about inflation. No later than today, the governor of the Bank of Canada complained in the press about inflation and the lack of price stability. Well, if I take my stand on that criterium, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance have missed the boat.

What is this reasonable level of employment that they strive to maintain? There are 114,000 unemployed only in the province of Quebec. That is some reasonable level of employment. Once again the criteria of the governor of the Bank of Canada have proved a complete failure.

The minister says that just enough money is being provided to maintain a reasonable level of employment. Just enough, eh? In Quebec, 114,000 jobless. Is the minister satisfied? I think he has left. It was becoming embarrassing to realize that their whole policy is turning out to be a complete washout. Our minister is in a quandary because he left when he heard: maintain the economic growth. Well, in his article published today, the governor says that the economic growth must be controlled. He is no longer trying to maintain it.

I quoted yesterday an answer given by the Minister of Finance, as reported on page 3000 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 43 of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. He said then:

Mr. Sharp: It is the pressure upon our resources which arises from demands upon them.

I had asked him:

And to what do you compare your satisfaction?

At seeing there is enough money at present.

Is it to actual production of Canada, the actual goods produced in Canada?

And the minister replied:

It is the pressure upon our resources which arises from demands upon them. In other words, I have felt that economy required, for stability, some restraint.

Therefore, the minister is advocating and preaching restraint. I have here the article in question. It also appeared in La Presse.

Bank of Canada Act

On Tuesday, March 14, 1967, it made headlines in Le Droit:

Rasminsky: prices and costs have risen too sharply in 1966.

Mr. Chairman, this underlines the very failure of the policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The volume of the money supply is maintained and increased just enough to maintain price stability.

Now, prices lack stability.

And the Governor of the Bank of Canada says so himself:

Prices and costs have risen too sharply.

Now, with regard to that criterion, the Governor of the Bank of Canada sure muffed it.

Second criterion: maintain reasonable employment. Try and tell that to our unemployed in the district of Lotbinière, in the district of Saint-Maurice-Laflèche, in the district of Matapédia-Matane; in that area there are even more unemployed than elsewhere.

Try and tell that to the governor: a reasonable money supply is needed to maintain reasonable employment. Try and tell the unemployed that they are reasonably employed. Will they think you are being reasonable about it?

An hon. Member: It is getting better.

Mr. Grégoire: It is a matter of reducing unemployment, they go live elsewhere. Unemployment then decreases in the Matapédia-Matane district.

Mr. Choquette: One thing is true: with Social Credit, we would have total ruin.

Mr. Grégoire: Total ruin. The expression of demagoguery. We already have total ruin at the present time. And now to cover up, to hide their incompetence, they want to cast the blame on those who are guiltless.

Third criterion: maintain the stability of exchange. Are they really stable when one realizes that in 1966 we had a deficit of $1,201 million in our balance of payments? To maintain the stability of exchange, to ensure economic growth. The Governor of the Bank of Canada, maintains that an adequate volume of money supply is sufficient to ensure reasonable economic growth. Take a look at the field of housing. See the sensational reduction of housing starts. Is that reasonable economic growth? When it is said for instance, that Quebec is unable to build a steel industry for lack of money. But the Governor of the Bank of Canada says that the money supply is sufficient, that its volume has increased sufficiently to maintain adequate growth. Look at the number of areas where economic growth is far removed from our wealth and our natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, I say it and proclaim it. If those are the four criteria on which the Governor of the Bank of Canada bases himself to determine what volume of money supply will be in circulation, well then, inevitably and obviously, the monetary policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada is a monumental failure. And if the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada is prepared to support him in spite of everything, I would then say that something is wrong. I would say that the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada is not truly acting in a scientific way, but according to his feel and his flair, as he said yesterday, and he is proving to us that he has no flair.

I read in La Presse a statement of the Governor of the Bank of Canada:

Canada is seriously threatened by inflationary pressures.

What is he going to do with the volume of the money supply?

Mr. Rasminsky said that the increase in production costs and consumer prices may well price Canada out of competition with the United States and thus represents a threat of new problems for the country.

Is that what is called the stability of exchange? And the governor, who has the authority and the means to maintain the stability of exchange, has just more or less recognized the monumental failure of his policy since he recognizes it in the statement he has recently published.

And he adds:

The summit reached by costs and prices in the last two years of great activity in the Canadian economy demands reflection.

Now here is one asking us to effect, and the other wants feel and flair. This one asks that we reflect. Well, the Minister of Finance and Receiver General said it. So any complaints on demagoguery should be directed to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps I misinterpret his words—

Mr. Choquette: Indeed, you do.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), says that I am misconstruing his words. I shall repeat them. I know it hurts every time we quote statements of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General. I shall quote them again for the benefit of the hon. member for Lotbinière who might not have been here at the time.

I quote again from No. 43, page 2998, of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs—

Mr. Chrétien: That is the fifth time he repeats it.

Mr. Grégoire:

Mr. Grégoire: If you have the control over the volume of the monetary supply, upon what do you base your decisions to set the monetary supply at a given level?

Hon. Mr. Sharp: When a governor of the Bank of England, Lord Norman, was once asked that question by J. M. Keynes he said: "I do it by feel and flair"—

The minister said that, not I and he adds:
—and I believe that a certain extent—

—not far, "up to a certain extent"—
—it remains a matter of judgment.

And the minister adds:

There is no mathematical formula by which the money supply can be regulated.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the fundamental flaw of the present monetary system. That is the fundamental mistake of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and the government who do not want to see in an economic system something scientific but want to see in it something sentimental, something that depends on flair.

Mr. Chairman, we saw this afternoon—and I quoted statements from the governor of the Bank of Canada or the government has not a money is not based on bullion and that the Bank of Canada of the government has not a single ounce of gold to guarantee the Canadian dollars. What must be the main standard of the governor of the Bank of Canada when he decides the volume of the money supply?

I am going to tell it to the parliamentary secretary to the minister so that he might answer this because the minister has left. I see that he has realized that the answer he gave earlier was far from adequate and has left the house rather quickly. I regret it because the discussion was becoming interesting. But I will mention it to the parliamentary secretary to the minister and he might be able to give an answer. On what must the volume of the money supply be based? It is a purely scientific operation.

According to statistics which can easily be analysed, each time that the Bank of Canada puts in circulation $2 in cash, one dollar remains in circulation either in the cash registers of stores or in the pockets of the Canadian citizens and the other goes into the vaults of the chartered banks or in their coffers to be used as cash reserve.

Therefore, out of $2 put in circulation by the Bank of Canada, one remains in circulation and the other is used as cash reserve. There are statistics to prove this.

Every time there is a dollar in cash reserves in the coffers or drawers of the chartered banks, these banks can multiply that dollar by 12.5, which gives a money supply of $12.50. This is for each and every dollar.

If we continue to analyze the statistics and examine the cheques exchanged in private offices and the payments made in cash, we realize that each dollar in the money supply, meaning the total credit cash reserves, circulates 25 times in one year.

Each one of these dollars in the money supply, even if it circulates 25 times in one year, represents only $2.50 in purchasing power. To return to my original example, if the Bank of Canada puts $2 into circulation, one of them will go into cash reserves and become $12.50 in money supply, and if you add the other dollar, which remains a part of the cash in circulation, it brings the total to $13.50. These $13.50, after circulating 25 times, will represent a purchasing power of 2.5 times that, which comes to about $33.

Therefore every $2 put into circulation by the Bank of Canada will, during the course of one year, represent $33 in purchasing power, or just about. This may be calculated from the statistics available in the course of a month. Every month, we receive a booklet called the Canadian Statistical Review which gives the volume of production for the previous month.

Each month, the production for that month should be calculated, as is done now. If the goods and services produced amount to $33, the Bank of Canada should see to it that $2 in cash are put into circulation. If one dollar is already in circulation, the Bank of Canada should add another, so that all production might buy itself through a corresponding purchasing power. If production increases by $33 in the course of a month, the Bank of Canada must take care to put another $2 in circulation which, circulating at a fixed speed, will eventually produce $33 in purchasing power—that is, a purchasing power equal to the increase in production during the previous month.

Should there be a drop in production, the Bank of Canada would have to reduce its legal money reserves in the same way it increased them. Then, Mr. Chairman, you have a scientific system, based on statistics, not a system based on mere judgment, on flair or feeling. The government get statistics every month through its Canadian Statistics Bulletin. I have had for some time the February 1967 issue. When the figures are available it will only be a matter of figuring out scientifically, mathematically, what was the total Canadian production for that month, how much money has been put in circulation at what rate to obtain what purchasing power, how much cash was needed, as I explained earlier, and of having accountants to maintain a constant balance between the purchasing power and the production, on the Canadian market, in goods and services.

Mr. Chairman, that is scientific, that is mathematical, that is taking into account the real Canadian values, the fact that a monetary system must be something scientific and not something left to chance. The minister said to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs that he would perhaps need an electronic computer. I am all for it. If it is necessary to provide the government with a computer to enable them to get all the necessary data on the monthly production of goods and services that would take into account the rate at which money circulates, the purchasing power of the dollar circulating in Canada, all well and good because then it would be possible to provide this computer with statistical data and every month the government would know precisely, accurately, mathematically and scientifically what is the money supply required in Canada?

Mr. Chairman, that is scientific, that is mathematical, that is not imaginary; that is based on facts, since the real purpose of money is to enable one to buy what is being produced and money must be related to production.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

I regret that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was not able to listen to this description of the technical method that we would have suggested to him. He has returned to his seat. I have suggested a rigorously scientific method to control the money supply in Canada, but in any event, since it was the last of the two questions that I had to ask the Minister of Finance, perhaps his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Chrétien) could comment for him on my few suggestions as to the purely scientific method that is required for the government to determine its money supply.

I would then ask the parliamentary secretary to the minister if he could somehow indicate what the government thinks about the method we have just suggested.

Mr. Chrétien: I will merely tell the hon. member that we are actually going to buy a computer to unravel the six speeches which he made.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, we see that the Department of Finance is running short of answers and arguments to reply in such a manner. I will not press the point. I will get some copies of Hansard and will show them to the people of Quebec. I will tell them: This is the speech I delivered in a very cool manner on a scientific method to determine the volume of the money supply. Would you like to know what the Department of Finance answered through the authorized channel of the parliamentary secretary? There is the answer. And it will be up to the people to judge the seriousness of the answers given by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I think that this is another proof that the government is not at all interested in obtaining suggestions. The Canada Bank Act is revised every ten years. It has not been revised for the past 12 years. We are making suggestions to the government and this is how the parliamentary secretary answers. I think it is disgraceful for a man in his position and I find it even embarrassing for the parliamentary secretary to have answered in such a way.

I will not insist because I will leave it to the people of Quebec to judge the value and quality of the answers given by the parliamentary secretary on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised to find that with such an interesting subject as that of the organization of the Bank of Canada, an institution which is intended to find a way to accommodate the Canadian citizens by making available to them the wealth produced by them in their own country, the participation in the discussion seems limited to a certain group of members. However, I draw some satisfaction out of this situation since it will enable me to express my views on the matter.

By the way, I do not forget that ever since I became a member of this house I saw debates last for one month and even a month and a half on matters which were sometimes trivial and contributed to cast a shadow on our members' reputation. And still, almost the whole team was ready to clarify its position on the Munsinger case, for instance, and many others.

When you contemplate a means to tax people, then you have a good turn-up for discussion. But when you are looking for a system which would enable Canadians to enjoy a decent way of life, members who are ready to take part in the debate are much less numerous.

It surprises me that after so many years of study and after thousands of opportunities to realize that the real source of most of the problems is a financial one, we now seem to urge the passing of a bill, which, in my opinion, does not constitute a very constructive contribution since it provides for few changes with this exception that it allows for a greater control of the financial system over the economic activities of the country.

It is reasonable to believe that the monetary system of a country should be a public service operated in the public interest. It is inconceivable that one or two private enterprises can control the amount of money in circulation. Under our ill-organized system, the only way to increase the amount of money in circulation is for a bank to make a loan to the government or to an industry by making a simple entry in the credit account of the borrower. But such loans are not in the least based on the country's increased production.

When the government borrows in order to purchase weapons to keep wars going in various countries in which they should not be interested at all, to purchase, for instance, nuclear arms, that does not increase one bit the amount of goods on the market. The only increase is in the means of destruction; however, it brings more money into circulation because of the credit created by lending banks. Every day we see men and young men offer their services to increase the country's production. The amount of money in circulation is not in keeping with production.

In our modern economy, you need more and more money because of the great discrepancy between labour and money, so there is a surplus of production. Fewer people are earning money because of scientific processes and automation increasing production while the number of salaried workers decreases. Money is necessary to ensure the distribution of goods, but the amount in circulation is not proportionate to the amount of goods on the market. Men produce things, and with the help of machines they produce a lot of things. But only a few men, the bankers, are authorized to create money. The money they create is not proportionate to the things men produce. The makers and destroyers of money, the bankers, control governments, sometimes prevent government representatives from speaking up.

Everything is there, except money, to ensure the prosperity of the country, but the government, who ought to promote prosperity, does not do anything about it.

When abundance goes to waste in the face of crying needs, merely for lack of money, the government seems paralyzed and unable to act. Why? The self-same government intervenes to give orders to the taxpayers or the civil servants; but it does not intervene to give orders to those who must produce money and who bring hardship to the whole population by so ill-advisedly performing their duties. There are powerful men who use their power rather strangely and harmfully. Pope Pius XI could well write:

> They hold so close in their hands the life of the economic organism that without their consent no one can breathe.

It is not that there is a lack of difficult things to accomplish, or that the citizens are afraid to fail. We have reached heights in the field of useful production and we can increase production four-fold if needs be. Our forefathers, generation after generation, have always bequeathed to us a greater Canada, better settled, more productive. Farms, yards, plants of all kinds serve production in such abundance that our businessmen's major problem is finding markets in every continent to dispose of our goods. And all along, brains coming from our institutions of learning continuously create new means of increasing production with less and less labour. Every possible means is used to furnish everything needed to live.

Yet, we are faced with a situation where a sizeable percentage of our families find it very difficult to buy food, clothing, lodging and pay for health care. Our learned politicians, at least those who believe they are learned, are not even able to find the means of distributing the abundance that exists and that could be distributed if all citizens had the privilege of working instead of having to go through unemployment periods as a result of an unbalanced system.

The livelihood of the majority of individuals and families today depends on a salary, and the salary depends on employment. It is obvious that as soon as employment ceases, the salary ceases too. The individuals as well as the families find themselves faced with hardship through no fault of their own. Undeserved misery, according to Pius XI, fearfully hard and cruel economic life.

I think that we do not pay enough attention to the real value of things. If there were only banks in the country, banks everywhere, but no farms; bankers but no labourers or farmers, safes in the bank vaults, but not a single bag of flour or potatoes, not a pound of meat, cheese or butter—nobody could live in this country even with banks, it would be impossible to stay here without any food to eat.

Faith in our country, that is the real credit of a nation, comes from those who contribute one way or the other to the production of goods; from those who work, who teach, who create, who raise families and render services.

The base of credit, which is the real value of money, is the production of the country and those are all the factors who contribute to maintain or increase production.

Those factors are found in organized society, in the means of production but not in the banks.

All members of a society, considering the organization of life in society, enable us to receive from others and to give to others; therefore, the real credit of a country is an eminently social credit.

[Mr. Dionne.]

Besides, it is on that same credit the provinces and nations have been accustomed to sign debentures which they ask bankers to transform into credit money.

Unfortunately, as soon as banks have transformed that credit into credit money, for governments or for industrialists, bankers look upon it as if it were their own. They lend it and keep the debentures, the borrowers' promissory notes as a guarantee, giving them the right to take hold of the very basis of credit, the means of production, should the borrowers not repay the bankers, with profit, the credit the producers have built, but which the banker has only put into circulation.

We feel this is prostituting the credit of this country and turning it into a debt which burdens our economy.

How is it that the government orders through its legislation, to the officials of the income tax, to deduct from the worker's salary this or that amount and that it does not seem to be able to order a few holders of bank charters to create credit in accordance with the actual wealth? How is it that the government of this country continues to yield to the requirements of the financial system; a government supposed to lead, has become the flunkey of private interests.

I think it quite fitting and proper to quote here a part mentioned in the "Quadragesimo Anno" Encyclical by the highest doctrinal authority on earth.

• 9:20 p.m.

Pope Pius XI wrote the following under the subtitle "Free competition followed by economic dictatorship":

> In the first place, then, it is patent that in our days not only is wealth accumulated, but immense power and despotic economic domination is concentrated in the hands of a few, and that those few are frequently not the owners, but only the trustees and directors of invested funds, who administer them at their good pleasure.
> This power becomes particularly irresistible when exercised by those who, because they hold and control money, are able also to govern credit and determine its allotment, for that reason supplying so to speak, the life-blood to the entire economic body—

It is interesting, no doubt, to find out that certain demonstrations occur on the anniversary of encyclicals; nevertheless, I think the important thing is to put into practice the recommendations included in them.

If politicians who are well paid out of the people's taxes are satisfied with following the courses prepared in advance by their masters, the financiers, without taking into account the hardship in this country, without seeking to understand the reasons warranting a change in distribution, they will have to bear the responsibility of their carelessness in the face of abuse of all sorts, and questionable contracts, which give rise to bitterness, envy, and desperate actions.

Some politicians will tell you: but this financial power is international and we could get ourselves into trouble on the national level if we change our financial system.

It is not necessary to wait until the whole wide world is ready to get rid of it. When a whole family is sick, everyone in it does not have to wait to seek a cure until all the others are ready to recover at the same time.

There is no reason why a country set upon reforming its financial system should not do so immediately on its own

Nothing prevents a country which so desires to balance the purchasing power of the people with the domestic production or with imports from other countries in exchange for our surpluses.

And nothing prevents a country from setting up a more adequate system to distribute the wealth by combining the dividends to all its citizens with the salaries of the producers to make up the total purchasing power.

International trade would not be affected in any way, except for the better. In fact, goods and not money go from one country to another. Social Credit does not close or open the door to them.

Under a creditist system, the goods which come in, imports, are considered as incoming wealth. The goods which go out, exports, are outgoing wealth undoubtedly to get something else in return.

Therefore, a creditist system does not tend at all to erect tariff walls against products offered by foreign countries. And that would facilitate trade relations between nations.

Today, we fear that the wealth which comes in may cause hardship to our people, and leave them unemployed, because the present system distributes the purchasing power only to the producing employees. Social Credit does not limit in that way the purchasing power to employment; it bases it on the whole production offered, from wherever it may come. Therefore, Social Credit is not afraid of the leisure time due either to foreign production, or to automated production. Leisure time is a boon; it is free time which one can devote to activities of his own choice. Free activities enrich life much more than subservience to an assembly line, where the worker carries out orders without really knowing for whose benefit or for what purpose.

The only thing a country may lack to establish a sensible economy, is the decision to do so by the government with the power to legislate.

We could give abundant examples of the results of this debt money system, the construction of public buildings, bridges, roads, which have been paid for three times, due to the loan mechanics provided by the present banking system. Costly wars in men and materials which were won and which we had to keep on paying for years later, all this is quite illogical.

An understanding mayor of a city in our province, faced with the perpetual indebtedness system, not long ago, gave a full summary of what had happened on the occasion of an issue of bonds worth $573,500.

The town first had to pay $17,211.60 in brokers' fees, then $2,051.15 for the printing of the bonds to which were added the legal fees. Furthermore, the discount amounted to $17,000. For the first portion of that loan, in the amount of $486,000, we will have to pay, on top of that sum a total amount of $494,157.50 in interest. In 40 years, that financing for which the city received less than $475,000 in real securities, will have cost $980,157.50.

Interests and costs more than double the price of the loan. The city will have to pay interests on the amount of the loan, and not only on the money it receives, but even on the money it does not receive, that is on the brokers' share, the bankers' discount, etc. The same goes for the school board loans.

The Bank of Canada should initiate such a service in view of reducing by a half the costs of the municipal loans. This would be one of the main methods to relieve the taxpayers and help the municipalities and school boards to balance their budgets.

If the Bank of Canada were really a bank for the Canadians, at the municipal, educational, provincial and federal levels, Canadians from all parts of the country would not have to pay $900,000 to get $450,000, on the occasion of a municipal loan.

Surely, the difference does not profit to those who toil toward the development of the country. I believe that the minister of Finance and all the Canadians aware of their responsibilities should try to understand the difficulties which arise from this topsy-turvy system and find a practical solution.

• (9:30 p.m.)

We, the Créditistes, make our own suggestions. If the government or a number of members do not seem in agreement with such suggestions, at least, they could find means reasonably effective to try and tidy up the present chaos.

Mr. Isabelle: After his eloquent address, I would like to put a question to the hon. member. He has just made an extraordinary speech. How is it that after all your statements, Time magazine, in 1965, happened to call you "Funny money boys"?

Mr. Dionne: I shall answer the hon. member who has just this question. Personally, I do not need Time magazine, "money" here and "money" there, to prove my use of common sense, of logic. There are as many commodities as needed, they come in huge quantities, but there are no means to distribute them.

The politicians, and the one who has just spoken to me, agree that there are many products of all kinds, that this production could be increased and they do not have the brains to find a way to distribute them. It is unfortunate but such things are obvious.

Mr. Latulippe: On a question of privilege. In reply to the hon. member who has read in Time magazine about funny money, I would tell him that he is rather a funny monkey to repeat the same thing. I would tell him that he has never known what a monetary system is, I would tell him that he lives in a monkey system, a crazy system and that he is one of the most remarkable—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. That was not a question of privilege. The hon. member for Chapleau has the floor.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at length on Bill No. C-190. I would rather ask the Minister of Finance and Receiver General a question.

I do not intend to repeat everything that has been said. My colleague of the Ralliement Créditiste have set forth the monetary reforms we advocate. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has also submitted to the minister and the committee the principles of Social Credit, and in the past day or two, we have done our utmost to make the minister, the committee and the Canadian people understand the defects of the present monetary system and the solutions we advocate.

The information I am asking him this evening, stems from the main estimates tabled recently by the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson). I find therein that in 1967-68, the public debt charges will cost us $1,275,906,400. Such are the debt charges we will have to pay in 1967-68.

We have to pay this amount because our debt is in excess of $19 billion, according to the summary report of public accounts for March 31, 1966. It costs us some $1,200 million in interest on that debt.

Then, Mr. Chairman, to explain my point, to have it better understood, I shall use a statement made at the banking and commerce committee, in 1954, by the attorney general of Alberta, Hon. Lucien Maynard. One finds that statement or part of it on page 338 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the committee for 1954.

I quote:

> Defects of the banking system.
> After this sketchy review of the evolution of banking principles and the history of the bank in Canada—

As you can see, Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that consideration is given to the banking system. Every ten years, the Bank of Canada Act is brought before the house; it is examined and people present briefs to the members of a committee made up of members of the house. The act is reviewed. but, and, this is noticeable, very little is done.

I continue with the quotation.

> ...it is now possible to draw some specific conclusions. One of them, with which I will deal, brings home what, to me, seems to be the main defect or the weak point of the Canadian banking system. I do not mean to imply that it is found only in our banking system. It is an integral part of the banking principles and operations of every country in the world, including the United States, Great Britain, France, etc. However, I shall confine my remarks to the situation in Canada because the committee was asked to examine the Canadian banking legislation and its effects on the economy of the country.
> The chief disadvantage or weak point of the Canadian banking system arises from the effect it has of piling on the shoulders of the Canadian citizens a constantly increasing load of debt that can never be paid off.

As I have previously explained, the first charters originally gave the banks the power to issue notes to the extent of three times the cash on hand. You will recall that the banks were required to remit in kind all the notes issued. Some banks succeeded in doing this and they are still operating. Others failed because they were not able to meet this condition. You will find on pages 782 and 783 of the proceedings of this committee a table showing what happened to the 110 chartered banks that have operated or were incorporated since confederation.

Only eleven are still in business.

There are now eight and there will soon be ten, because two new bank charters have been granted.

I will read further:

Profits made by banks are especially the result of interest charged on loans. At the beginning, profits were small, simply because loans were based on the figure of fiduciary circulation, restricted itself to three times the share capital paid in addition to the bank cash deposits. Nowadays however, profits are higher, because banks are free to grant some loans under the form of bank credit up to 20 times the amount of legal tender on deposit. In fact, they seldom exceed the ratio of 10 to 1.

Mr. Chairman, a few years ago, during one of the first federal-provincial conference, that is in 1942, a former Conservative leader, who was then premier of Manitoba, Hon. John Bracken, stated at that conference that the present tax source was unbalanced.

As for the interest which I mentioned earlier, it must be understood that the Canadian workers will pay taxes to provide the necessary money for the interest on the national debt.

And this is what led John Bracken to declare in 1942:

The unbalanced tax system transfers the income of comparatively low-wage earners to those who have comparatively higher incomes. The proceeds of indirect taxes collected by the federal government are mostly used to pay the interest on the national debt—

• (9:40 p.m.)

I would like to ask the minister how he intends to reimburse the present debt of Canada. Only a few days ago, my colleague, the member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), put on the order paper question No. 2,485, which was answered on March 13, last, as shown on page 13879 of Hansard.

How many years will it take the government of Canada to reimburse the debts it has been accumulating since 1867?

Here is the reply given by Minister of Finance:

The government of Canada's outstanding debt represents the cumulative total of all government cash deficits less surpluses since 1867. The deficits have been financed through the sale of cash securities while surpluses have been used to reduce the total of securities outstanding. Changes in debt for any period of time, assuming a constant cash balance, represent the difference between government cash receipts and expenditures of all kinds and are, therefore, the consequence of the government's fiscal operations. Since these fiscal operations have a very important effect upon Canada's economy, fiscal policy must take into account prevailing economic circumstances and the probable consequences of any action taken.

That is only part of the minister's answer. At this point, I would like to ask him who determines what the prevailing economic circumstances are in Canada. And I quote the end of his answer on that occasion:

It is not possible to predict when economic circumstances would make it appropriate for fiscal policy to aim at achieving cash surpluses. It is, therefore, not possible to forecast whether or to what extent the government would consider it appropriate to reduce or eliminate all its outstanding debt.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems that the minister does not know how and when we will be able to repay this debt which now costs us over $1,200 million per year.

I am very much concerned about the answer given by the minister, Mr. Chairman, and I will put again the question to him. When and how will he manage to pay that debt, so that the Canadian taxpayer, the Canadian worker, will not have to pay that interest which goes directly to those who hold claims on Canada's debt and who are not farmers or workers or settlers, but who are well off and few in numbers.

I hope the minister will come up with a satisfactory answer. If he does not want to accept the Social Credit policy, let him find another one, at least, let him get us out of the economic mess we are in.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief comments on this very important bill. Tonight, we have heard hon. members speak very seriously of the role of the Bank of Canada and make some most appropriate suggestions to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

But, for my part, I should like to remind the minister that thousands of Canadians understand that the financial and monetary administration of our country is a rather complex thing. However, there are also thousands of Canadians who believe that the Bank of Canada does not play the part it should in the economic, financial and administrative evolution and development of our great country.

For example, if I am not mistaken—I am not an expert in this field—I believe that since its establishment in 1934 the Bank of Canada has been empowered by its constitution to lend money to the Canadian provinces. If I remember correctly—and the hon. Minister of Finance can give us precise information on this subject—the Bank of Canada did lend money to our provinces during two years, from 1934 to 1936 but, according to statistics, it has not lent any money directly to the provincial governments.

In my opinion, this is an anomaly, and it is obvious that this important body, this financial and monetary nerve centre does not answer the needs of the provincial governments. The latter are often forced to borrow on foreign markets at excessive rates.

I remember, for example, a very dynamic and necessary event which occurred in the province of Quebec in 1962, when the government of that time decided to nationalize the electric power of the province, which was produced by several private companies, in order to direct and encourage industrial expansion and the development of the natural resources in the province. It was thought important, in the Quebec of 1962, that the state of Quebec should direct the development of the natural resources and the expansion of the industry in the province by owning and controlling the production of electricity in the province. There was a most dynamic and quite justified measure for developing the province of Quebec. In order to meet this provincial requirement, the Quebec government was forced to borrow on the American market $300 million at excessive interest rates, considering the administration costs and the financial position of the province. In such circumstances as well as in all others where requirements of the various provincial governments in this country are involved, the Bank of Canada, this national institution whose prime object should be to serve the Canadian citizens as well as the governments representing the Canadian people—this backbone of our monetary and financial administration, does not adequately meet the needs of Canadians and of the provincial and other governments in this country.

Mr. Chairman, this suggestion to increase the services provided by the Bank of Canada to the Canadian people, to the provincial as well as the municipal governments and to the school boards, as the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) has proposed, is most timely. It goes without saying that the Bank of Canada should serve the interest not only of the federal government, but also of the provincial and other governments in this country. It should extend its field of operations. Its constitution of 1934 does not prohibit such an extension and precedents exist to the effect that the bank did make loans from 1934 to 1936.

Obviously, Canada, through this organization that is the Bank of Canada, is even lending money to foreign countries, to foreign banks. I can understand that Canada, in the external affairs field, as well as in international affairs, as far as financial and monetary matters are concerned, cannot live isolated from other countries and other international organizations, such as the International Monetary Fund. Considering certain historic and economic bonds, obviously, the government of Canada has even loaned, in 1964, to the Bank of England a sum of $200 million, I believe, without interest.

This is the service that our Canadian bank renders to foreign countries. But we must not forget that charity begins at home. The first to profit by this intelligent administration by the qualified personnel of this bank and by all the administrative machinery would certainly be the provincial governments and the other governments of this country.

I ask the minister to take into account the claims of many Canadians. I think that a body like the Bank of Canada would have to play a better, more obvious, and very useful role. And this would be an opportunity, among many others, to cement a kind of national unity, not in the realm of feelings, but in the field of the dollar which is very interesting for everybody, for all Canadians, whatever their ethnical origin.

For instance, if British Columbia, Ontario, the Maritimes, Newfoundland and the province of Quebec were to go to the Bank of Canada, managed by the federal government, to borrow the money they need to develop their provinces and natural resources without always having to go abroad, I am sure they would be very pleased. That would help to draw the various governments closer to one another.

There is a suggestion which is not new. Let us hope to get results along this line.

Mr. Chairman, I want to conclude my brief remarks by also asking the minister and I appeal to him to make these representations to the cabinet, where appointments are concerned to recommend to the board of directors, to the governor of the Bank of Canada, to appoint more French Canadians at the top management of this bank.

I do not know what is the present composition but I suppose it is not so much different from the figures provided in 1960, to the then prime minister, by the Conseil de vie française. These figures are reported at page 18 of a booklet I wrote in 1963 and which is entitled: "The Last Chance". Here is what it says:

> At the Bank of Canada, out of a total of 12 high officials, only one was a French Canadian.

I am sure that the minister is convinced that there are now many competent French Canadians in business, in monetary and administrative matters. Some French Canadians have proved themselves in the field of management and hold high administrative posts in the most important chartered banks in the country. We even have French Canadians who have spent sometime with chartered banks outside Canada, who have acquired the best experience at the administrative, financial and monetary levels.

Again that would be an opportunity to strengthen national understanding and unity.

In this centennial year, should there be any vacancies within a few weeks or months, some French Canadians could be added to the high officials of the Bank of Canada. It is not only a sociological matter, Mr. Chairman.

If a French Canadian was appointed to a high post it would enable those who direct the monetary and even financial policy of this country to understand better the aspirations of the province of Quebec which are not revolutionary but evolutionary. Quebec wants to play its role in Canada; it wants its fair share in every field. In the financial field, in the borrowing field, in the Bank of Canada, in the monetary field, Quebec wants to make a contribution. It would like to make suggestions, and French Canadians would even like to be consulted.

As the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) pointed out quite recently, French Canadians must think of asserting themselves competitively in our country, but before we can do so, we must be provided with opportunities to participate in a fair competition. In many fields, especially with regard to higher positions in the Bank of Canada, French Canadians have not been allowed to compete, as pointed out recently by the hon. member for Mount Royal before the members of the Canadian Club in Montreal.

If we are to compete, some of our compatriots must be appointed and there are many of them. The minister knows who they are, as well as the hon. member for Mount Royal and other government members. Let us be allowed to make our contribution and the Bank of Canada will be none the worse for it. On the contrary it will be in a position to better direct the Canadian monetary, financial and economic policy, taking into account the characteristics of the Canadian mosaic.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to speak at great length, as I do not want to delay the passing of this bill tonight. If the government wishes to continue a few minutes after ten o'clock in order to pass this bill, we will not object. We want to show that our part in this discussion is not obstruction, but we participate therein so as to express our point of view.

If the minister wants to have this bill passed tonight, we would have no objection to sitting for ten or fifteen minutes after ten o'clock. We believe that the whole bill could be passed by that time.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to summarize our position in the course of the debate that took place yesterday and today as regards the amendments to the Bank of Canada Act.

We regret that the government did not see fit to consider, analyse and take into account the suggestions we made in order to bring a few improvements to the Bank of Canada Act.

Our suggestions, the improvements we are suggesting pertain to two areas. First, we have expressed the wish that the Bank of Canada should create credit, instead of the chartered banks. We feel that money is credit. This is the most important factor, the factor which is most essential to the economic development of a country. We do not think that the creation of credit and money should be left in the hands of the chartered banks which are private enterprises and which have this exclusive privilege and who use this creation of credit for their own purposes. Now, the chartered banks create credit, as the minister himself admitted it.

• (10:00 p.m.)

We do not want this creation of credit left to some large chartered banks who would use it not for the benefit of the population as a whole, but for their own interest, for their own benefit.

At the same time, if this creation of credit were put under the control or in the hands of the Bank of Canada, this crown agency would not act in its own interest or for the benefit of some big capitalists; to the contrary, it would act in the public interest and for the benefit of every Canadian. This is the fundamental difference.

A state bank like the Bank of Canada should control and regulate itself the creation of credit in favour of the population of Canada, whereas actually the private banks, that is the chartered banks do so to their own benefit and in their own interest whenever they can.

We are against this, because creation of credit is probably and certainly the most important factor of our economic life.

Second, we have asked the government and the minister which criteria the Bank of Canada and the government itself use to determine the money supply. It is useless to say that we were not satisfied with the replies given, since everything is run in a haphazard way, without any directives and there is nothing really scientific which would serve to determine the money supply which is needed.

To us, this is very important because upon the amount of money supply will depend the economical expansion of the country, the buoyancy of the country as well as the prosperity of every Canadian.

Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that the minister and his government chose not to take into consideration those two determining factors in our growing Canadian economy. It is regrettable. We believe the Minister of Finance should have taken those suggestions into serious consideration, because the objective here is to enable every Canadian citizen to live decently, honourably, with dignity and liberty and to enjoy security in a country fabulously wealthy, capable of ensuring that each and every one living here can live decently and honourably.

If the minister is bent on holding up our system to ridicule, well, let him find another one under which can be achieved the objectives for which any economic system is established, that is to ensure that all Canadian citizens can live decently, honourably and with dignity. That is what we expect from our Canadian economy. We have had one opportunity since yesterday—for the first time in 12 years to express those ideas to the government. It chose to ignore them, not to act on them. We are sorry about that. Now, it will be up to the Canadian people, to the people of Quebec to pass judgment on the attitude of the minister, on the policy of the government in that field. The people will continue to ask: what is the use of having a prosperous country if that prosperity is not reflected in fact in the lives of its citizens? What is the use of having such bounteous natural resources in Canada, if Canadian citizens can not share them and benefit from them? That is what we would like to achieve through our suggestions to the Minister of Finance.

We regret that these suggestions have not been heard. We shall let the people judge and they will be capable of deciding whether it is normal, logical and reasonable to live poorly in such a rich and prosperous country. What would bring this prosperity in our Canadian homes would be an adequate economic and monetary system. But there are some who do not want our monetary system to be adequate. They tell the Canadian people: keep on bearing it and living in misery in the midst of plenty.

It is now for the Canadian people to judge the minister and the present government.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I point out that it is ten o'clock. We have an amendment to move on clause 11. We will have the opportunity of moving it tomorrow and discussing this section.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion to make to the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, in order to prove to the government that what we have said has not been done in order to create obstruction. If the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac has an amendment to move on section 11, and to that section only, he might agree to have the other sections on which there is no amendment passed, and tomorrow, we could come back to section 11?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 11 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clauses 12 to 20 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I also have an amendment to move to the preamble of the bill, because the preamble of the bill was removed in 1954. In my opinion, a bill of this sort should have a preamble to explain the general meaning of the bill.

Therefore I should like to move an amendment to the preamble of the bill.

TRANSPORT—TROIS-RIVIÈRES—PROTESTS RESPECTING INCREASE IN RAILWAY TOLLS

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) if he had received a telegram from the operators of our grain elevators and from the municipal council of Trois-Rivières objecting to the increase in fees on the St. Lawrence seaway and the Welland canal.

The minister said he had received no telegram. I understood why, a few minutes later, because while questions were being asked here, which, to my mind, were not important, I took time off to go through the papers and I realized that the minister had just stated that there would be no increase.

So I immediately called those people, my municipal council and the directors to tell them: If the telegram has not gone, do not bother sending it because it seems that the problem is settled. I have here the telegram, the original telegram reporting that the municipal council of Trois-Rivières strongly objected to the increase in fees on the seaway as likely to be detrimental to the economy of the whole Trois-Rivières area.

But I would nevertheless like to take this opportunity—and I thank the minister for his intervention to prevent such an increase in fee—with your consent, since I realize I am stretching the rules, if ever so slightly, to remind the minister that the grain elevators of Trois-Rivières are faced with a difficult problem which I would not want to explain all over again since I have already spoken of it. I should simply like to ask the minister whether he could not unofficially and for the good of the economy of the whole area served by the grain elevators to ask the responsible officials of the National Harbours Board to call, again to discuss the matter, an informal meeting with the mayor of Trois-Rivières, the representative of the grain elevators, the federal member for Trois-Rivières and the provincial member for Trois-Rivières, because there is a question of taxes, as the minister is aware, that concerns the provincial area.

I believe that if we could gather around a table these people whom I call men of good will, to talk together, we might find a compromise to a difficult problem which endangers the very existence of our grain elevators, something which would seriously affect the area. We are also suffering from the effects of progress. You know that my hon. friend from Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) claims that winter navigation does not operate well. I will state, tonight, that it is operating too well and the ships go right up to Montreal and do not stop at Trois-Rivières. We are therefore victims of progress, and as a matter of fact, for the first time this year, we have almost no ships.

I understand there are other considerations, and that longshoremen are not too anxious about it, but the fact still remains that our harbour facilities and particularly our grain elevators are mortgaged. I would therefore ask the minister if he would first take the initiative of calling this informal, and I mean informal, meeting of all these people of goodwill.

And here I will perhaps encroach more seriously upon the rules of procedure, to remind the minister that he once promised to help me to appeal to the Canadian Pacific to restore the night train between Montreal and Quebec for Expo '67.

I must say to the minister that in spite of the official resolutions of at least 20 or 25 municipalities, in spite of the support of a large number of members of his party, of the opposition and representatives of the provincial governments—the legislature is passing this week a bill in that connection—the authorities of the Canadian Pacific are objecting to that project and deny us that night train when the last train is at 7.30 p.m. It is being claimed we do not have the necessary facilities, whereas we know that the cars are loaned to the Canadian National, which has two more trains on the south shore, a fact that does not help the north shore.

We know that the city of Montreal will not be able to accommodate all visitors to Expo '67. We know that millions of persons between Montreal and Quebec will want to visit Expo '67, will wish to spend the night there and not be obliged to come back at 7:30 in the evening, but rather at midnight as was done in former days when we used to have a train at that hour. We know it is not true that such a service is an uneconomic one, since we have made economic studies on this matter.

Therefore, I remind the hon. minister of the promise he made to me that he would willingly support our claims to the president of the Canadian Pacific. I say to him that in a few days, the mayors of the municipalities concerned, along with some members of this house and the member of the provincial legislature will call upon the authorities of the Canadian Pacific in order to prove to them by means of figures and arguments, that they have no right to refuse this essential service to the people, that they have no right to say that it is uneconomic. Besides, we will show them that it is economic.

I know how obliging the minister was. I also know how concerned he is with the whole north shore economy which is in serious jeopardy because of this lack of Canadian Pacific service. I will tell the minister that the service offered by the Canadian National is infinitely better than that of the Canadian Pacific on that section of the province of Quebec I am referring to, except that there is no railroad along the north shore of the St. Lawrence that could serve the more important industrial towns.

Then, I shall recapitulate and express thanks to the minister whose intervention prevented increased rates on the seaway. I beg him to kindly exert his authority with the National Harbours Board to call a meeting of men of good will to settle the problem of grain elevators in Trois-Rivières. And I request him to support with his full authority, which is certainly considerable, since he is the man who decides to grant those fantastic privileges requested by the railway companies, that team comprising mayors, members of his own party, members of opposition parties and members of the provincial legislature who want, for the duration of Expo '67, a night service between Montreal and Quebec.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) is very persuasive—obviously more persuasive than I am, because so far my attempt to mediate with the Canadian Pacific does not seem to have produced results. However, I shall have another try.

With respect to the other suggestion, that I seek to arrange an informal meeting or get the harbours board to arrange an informal meeting to discuss this question of the tax problem in relation to the elevator at Trois-Rivières, I will be glad to pass the suggestion on to the harbours board. Perhaps I will be able to be a little more persuasive in that case than I have so far been able to be in the case of the night train to Quebec on the Canadian Pacific.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, for some considerable period of time, certainly before my entry into federal politics, we have had a great deal of trouble in the northern coastal part of British Columbia in getting adequate consideration from the government for harbour development. My predecessor, the late Mr. Applewhaite, who was respected in this house and at home as well, has told me in discussions I had with him during the time I was a member of the provincial legislature that this matter arose on a number of occasions, but not a great deal of satisfaction was received.

We have now perhaps four general communities in the northern part of British Columbia that lend themselves to proper harbour development, that is the type of harbour development for shipping purposes. I refer to Stewart, Kitimat, Prince Rupert and Bella Coola, all of which have access or will have access to the interior part of the province and would lend themselves to provincial harbour development.

Even in so far as Stewart is concerned, a few years ago we saw the federal government refuse to proceed further with the agreement with the province of British Columbia to build a road under the roads to resources program which would connect Stewart with the northern hinterland of the province, and the Yukon Territory. If the road had been provided, under a joint program, it would have put Stewart in the business of being a deep sea port. Just the day before yesterday, I believe it was, a bill was introduced in the British Columbia legislature to establish a provincial harbours board. This act would be called the provincial harbours board act.

The purpose of the harbours board, as I learned from a telephone call, would be to develop and to encourage the development of harbour facilities in the province, to provide access to and from such harbour facilities and to assist and promote industrial development of the province in conjunction with harbour development. In the last few years, Mr. Speaker, we have perhaps gone into the area of federal-provincial co-operation to an extent far in excess of that which existed before. We have had federal-provincial conferences on a variety of subjects, not only fiscal matters such as used to take place but matters such as fisheries, Indian affairs, and heaven knows what else.

We are in an era of federal-provincial conferences and the atmosphere has been right for some three or four years now for provincial governments to gain access to the ear of the federal government and to work out agreeable arrangements with regard to a variety of problems confronting the different sections of the nation. I submit that here is another opportunity for the federal government to take advantage of the spirit of co-operation that exists between federal and provincial governments, because the federal government is involved in the development of harbours and has been for some time. Here is an opportunity for co-operation to the fullest extent possible so that, with respect to the coast of British Columbia, we may get an orderly, planned harbour development program under way that will give the coast of British Columbia an opportunity to develop its full potential in so far as export shipping is concerned. It would provide access to the deep sea ports for the commodities not only of British Columbia but of the prairie provinces as well, to a far greater extent than exists at the moment.

I hope that co-operation will take place and that we will see this unified approach of the federal and provincial governments to the matter of harbour development, now that the provincial government has expressed its desire to get into this field by the introduction of a bill—of which, of course, I do not have full details at the moment—which sets out the concept of harbour development. Naturally I have a prior interest in the northern half of the province, because that is the area that has been neglected.

I was rather taken aback by the eruption of the minister today resulting from the question that I finally got through to him via Mr. Speaker's hands. I got the impression that he might be rather opposed to the idea of British Columbia engaging in this sort of thing, because of the constitutional requirements. I sincerely hope that he is not opposed to the idea but will work in a co-operative vein. I hope he will not be too rankled by the invective or, as the minister put it, the allegations of the attorney general of the province who, as we all know, like the Minister of Transport when making speeches is oft times not able to control his verbosity in explaining matters. I am sure that the Minister of Transport will give due credit to the remarks of the attorney general.

So, Mr. Speaker, in this regard I say, please do not take steps, as is permissible under the British North America Act, to disallow the legislation and to engage in a full scale war with British Columbia—because after all on this question, Mr. Minister, we are correct.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his lesson in etiquette, which comes exceptionally well from him. There is nothing I would welcome more than the co-operation of the government of British Columbia or the government of any other maritime province in the development of our harbours.

When on November 10 last I announced in Vancouver that the boundaries of Vancouver harbour under the jurisdiction of the harbours board would be extended south from the present limits of Vancouver harbour to the international boundary, I had informed the premier of British Columbia before I made the announcement, as a matter of courtesy. He asked me whether we would co-operate with any plans the province had, and I said that as long as they were in the national interest we would be very glad to do so. I gave him that assurance and said that I hoped that the co-operation would be reciprocal.

I also said, Mr. Speaker, that the government intended at once to initiate long term planning for the development of the facilities that would be required for shipping through the lower mainland, when the capacity of Burrard Inlet and the Fraser River ceased to be adequate to meet traffic needs. I pointed out that there was still considerable room for expansion both in Burrard Inlet and in the Fraser River, but that long term planning should not be delayed.

I also pointed out that the harbours board already had under way economic studies designed to forecast the nature and volume of water-borne shipments up to 1976, and trends to 1986. In addition to the economic studies I said that engineering surveys would also be required. Only last week, Mr. Speaker, the government authorized the National Harbours Board to engage the engineering firm of Swan Wooster to work out plans for future port development between Point Grey and the international boundary, taking into account all types of cargo which can be forecast and taking into account as well the existing and future planned development within Burrard Inlet. This study is to include feasibility, economics, engineering and chronology and is to take into account the full findings of the three studies that have been undertaken in the economic field. Swan Wooster were advised yesterday morning that the study had been approved and should be proceeded with at once.

All this planning is, of course, in addition to the very large developments that are taking place in the existing port of Vancouver, which is still a long way from being used to full capacity. The lower mainland harbour facilities are alredy handling most of the overseas export traffic of one third of Canada. These harbour facilities are a vital national asset which must and will be developed in the interest of Canada as a whole by the national government, which has the exclusive constitutional responsibility.

Needless to say we will welcome—and I underline this—the co-operation of the provincial and local authorities as well as that of private interests; but co-operation obviously involves consultation and not unilateral action without advance notice by a government which does not have the constitutional responsibility.

With respect to northern British Columbia I think, with the hon. gentleman, that we shall have to make much more use of Prince Rupert, Kitimat, and probably of Bella Coola and Stewart as time goes on. I think it is in Prince Rupert and Kitimat that we should envisage the earliest development. It is clear with its greater proximity to the Orient that the advantages recognized in Prince Rupert when the National Transcontinental and the Grand Trunk Pacific railways were built at the beginning of the century, will be realized long before the end of the century. This involves a national obligation which will be discharged by the national government in the interests of the nation. In doing so we shall welcome all the co-operation we can get from the local authorities and from the provincial authorities. We shall welcome the co-operation of all whose interests are concerned.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

RULING BY MR. SPEAKER ON PROPOSED MOTION BY MEMBER FOR EDMONTON WEST

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the hon. member for Edmonton West raised as a question of privilege what he termed a gross irregularity in the presentation of National Defence spending estimates for the coming fiscal year. He argued that the form of these estimates is in violation of the National Defence Act and the Financial Administration Act. The hon. member gave notice of a motion to have the book of estimates withdrawn and revised by the government.

Arguments were advanced by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and by other hon. members in support of the claim that the estimates as presented are irregular in form and illegal, and that they affect parliamentary privileges.

The minister in reply argued that his departmental estimates were submitted on the basis of the approved integrated commands of the armed services. The hon. members for Medicine Hat and Greenwood also argued that there was no valid objection at this point to the form of these estimates and, therefore, no question of privilege.

Essentially the question submitted to the Chair is whether the proposed estimates of the Department of National Defence are presented in such a form as to be contrary to existing law. Some hon. members claim that the presentation is irregular, others argue that it is legal. The point is of course of great interest to parliament, and the concern expressed in the form of the proposed motion may be quite justified. What the Chair has to determine is whether the debate should come before the house at this time, in priority to other business, by way of a question of privilege. Certainly it is not for the Chair to decide whether these estimates are presented in a form that is contrary to the existing law. According to the usages of parliament the Speaker does not rule on a question of law.

In my view the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West does not meet the requirements of a prima facie question of privilege. It is really an argument, no doubt serious, that can be brought forward by way of objection to the adoption of these estimates. It is undoubtedly a relevant point of debate when a supply motion is before the house for consideration. But in my humble opinion it is not a question of privilege, and therefore I cannot accept the motion proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Second report of special joint committee on the national and royal anthems—Mr. Ryan.

Ninth report of standing committee on justice and legal affairs—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

WATER RESOURCES

TABLING OF REPORT OF ENGINEERING BOARD ON OTTAWA RIVER

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies in English and in French of the report of the Ottawa river engineering board, entitled "Report on hydrology and regulation of the Ottawa river".

This board was appointed in 1962 by the governments of Canada, Ontario and Quebec to investigate the hydrology of the Ottawa river basin and the existing regulation of its waters. It was to establish procedures which would make available accurate and timely hydrologic data and to determine whether improvements in regulation were possible.

The board investigated the existing regulation on the basis of monthly mean flow data and found that this has been generally satisfactory and has been efficient in the production of power. The board considers that the co-operative arrangement which has been in effect among users constitutes a satisfactory method for determining regulated flows.

The board recommends that a committee of pertinent agencies be established to advise on the needed expansion of hydrological and meteorological networks and to continue studies of forecasting procedures.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, not having been favoured with a copy of the report or a preliminary copy of the minister's statement, it is difficult at this point to comment in any detail upon what has been said or the implications of what may be recommended in that document. I should like, however, to express the very real hope that as a result of the report and the consideration to be given to it by the government effective steps will be instituted without further delay to clean up the Ottawa river. It is surely a reflection of the neglect by government of this situation that while we have had a civilization here for perhaps three centuries, the Ottawa river is generally regarded by experts in the field as reflecting a more acute state of pollution than even the Rhine river in Europe, which has served industry and population for scores of centuries. This surely poses a challenge to the government of Canada and the Canadian people to clean up this river and set an example in effective and co-operative measures to restore our waters to a state in which they can again be a credit and a service to our people.

The thing that concerns me and which I particularly urge upon the government and the minister is that they should no longer hesitate to give the lead and take the initiative in this regard. It is true that it is an area in which the jurisdiction of province is involved, but we will achieve no solution, no action, no remedies unless this national problem finds on the part of the national government a readiness to advocate solutions, to take the initiative and institute measures to correct it. In this way the national problem could find a national solution. I hope the government will not hesitate any longer to take the leadership in this matter, call the provinces into consultation and with them work out co-operative measures for the cleaning up of the Ottawa river, which might then serve as a wholesome example of a solution of this nation-wide problem in the immediate future.

[Mr. Pepin.]

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

LAND EXPROPRIATIONS FOR QUEBEC HIGHWAYS

Question No. 2,001—Mr. Isabelle:

1. How much money will the National Capital Commission provide for land expropriations needed for the construction of highway No. 8 in the province of Quebec?

2. Have these expropriations been started and, if so, when will construction begin on the link between the approaches to the MacDonald-Cartier bridge and the new highway No. 8 which will follow Brewery creek?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Extensive discussions have been held with the government of the province, and it is anticipated that an agreement will be signed. It has been estimated that the land to be used for this purpose would cost the National Capital Commission approximately $17 million, including federal crown land.

2. No expropriations have been started for this project by the National Capital Commission.

STUDY OF FEDERAL DISTRICT

Question No. 2,215—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Has the federal government ever conducted a study on the establishment of a federal district?

2. Is a study now being conducted on this matter?

3. If so, in what year and by whom was such a study prepared and, if not, is the federal government planning to have a study conducted on the establishment of a national district including the cities of Ottawa and Hull and neighbouring towns?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Not in recent years.

2. No.

3. No.

HOLIDAY BENEFITS, C.B.C. CAMERAMEN

Question No. 2,328—Mr. Howard:

Does each employee of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with the classification of "film cameraman" receive the benefits of Part IV, General Holidays, of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and, if not, what is (a) the name of each such employee (b) the name of the community within which he works (c) the reason for not providing him with the said benefits?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: All film cameramen have been given the actual holidays or time off in lieu of the holidays at all locations except Toronto and Halifax. At both these locations, the practice has been to grant the holidays where assignment of the employee has not been required, and where assignment was necessary no additional time credit was allowed. However, these two locations have been informed that, retroactive to July 1, 1965, time credits are to be given to all film cameramen who have not received credit for general holidays in accordance with the labour code.

PENSIONS OF RETIRED C.N.R. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,427—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30 to $39.99 per month (c) $40 to $49.99 per month (d) $50 to $59.99 per month (e) $60 to $69.99 per month (f) $70 to $79.99 per month (g) $80 to $89.99 per month (h) $90 to $99.99 per month (i) $100 to $124.99 per month (j) $125 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.99 per month (l) $200 per month and over?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as following:

1. 388.

2. 2,245.

3. Amount of pension:	Number:
$ 25.01 to $ 29.99	683
30.00 to 39.99	1,392
40.00 to 49.99	1,126
50.00 to 59.99	933
60.00 to 69.99	823
70.00 to 79.99	884
80.00 to 89.99	908
90.00 to 99.99	936
100.00 to 124.99	2,487
125.00 to 149.99	2,286
150.00 to 199.99	3,579
200.00 and over	5,602

In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the C.N.R. to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the United States railroad retirement act or the social service act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions of under $25 from the C.N.R., there are 66 former international employees who also receive U.S. railroad retirement or social security annuities in respect of C.N.R. service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement before age 65, with reduced basic ($25) pensions, and employees who had very short service and small contributions.

DIRECTOR OF INDIAN AFFAIRS BRANCH

Question No. 2,430—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who is the Director of the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. How long has he held the position?

(3) As assistant deputy minister of the Saskatchewan natural resources department for four years, stationed at Prince Albert, was responsible for the administration of government programs in the northern areas where some 70 per cent of the population was of Indian origin. (4) As deputy minister of same department for 12 years was responsible for the development and administration of programs affecting the lives of Indian and Métis people of the province. This included direct participation in devising policy and drafting legislation such as the amendments to the northern administration act which, (a) introduced a program of financial assistance to all residents of the area to establish industrial and business enterprises; (b) introduced an assistance program in housing; and (c) provided a measure of municipal autonomy to northern communities previously unorganized. (5) Was directly involved in the drafting and in the later negotiation with C.M.H.C. of the pilot project in housing to provide off-reserve housing for Indians and Métis in Saskatchewan. (6) Over past 30 years has visited many Indian and Métis communities. Has attended meetings and held discussions with many groups and individuals. (7) In 1950 introduced an action research study by anthropologist V. Valentine in a northern community which led to new programs and the introduction of the community development process among staff residents of northern Saskatchewan. (8) Personally attended seminars and discussion groups conducted by the center for community studies at the University of Saskatchewan for provincial government staff, Indian affairs staff and northern residents including a large number of Indian and Métis people. (9) Assisted in drafting the organization, structure and terms of reference for the Indian Métis branch established in Saskatchewan in 1964, which Premier Thatcher assigned to Mr. Churchman for administration. (10) Served on interdepartmental committee on people of Indian ancestry in Saskatchewan. (11) Chairman of the federal-provincial fur advisory committee in Saskatchewan for 12 years, charged with the administration of the joint fur program for Indian and non-Indian trappers in northern Saskatchewan. (12) Served as chairman of the federal-provincial committee on Indian and Métis friendship centres in Saskatchewan. (13) Chairman of the federal-provincial co-ordinating committee on people of Indian ancestry, Saskatchewan. (14) Chairman of interdepartmental committee on job opportunities and training for people of Indian ancestry, Saskatchewan. (15) director of development, Indian affairs branch; from June 1, 1965 to August 31, 1966.

5. Mr. Churchman is responsible for the administration of the Indian affairs branch. He reports to the assistant deputy minister, Indian affairs.

CHIEF OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS DIVISION, INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 2,481—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Who is the chief of the social programs division of the development directorate of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. How long has he held the position?

3. What are his academic qualifications?

[Mr. Laing.]

4. What is his previous experience in working with Indians either in the department or elsewhere?

5. What are his duties and responsibilities and to whom does he report?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Mr. Arnold William Fraser.

2. Since April 27, 1966.

3. Academic qualifications, (a) St. Patrick's College, Ottawa, B.A.; (b) McGill University, M.A.; (c) University of Toronto, requirements completed toward D. Ed. degree except for thesis; (d) Ottawa Normal School, teacher's first class certificate.

4. Mr. Fraser was community secretary of the Y.M.C.A. in Ottawa from 1938 until 1949, being responsible for community work. From 1949 to 1953 he was director of the High Park community Y.M.C.A. in Toronto where he collaborated in the publication of numerous pamphlets, documents and booklets on community organization and community approach. From 1953 to 1965 Mr. Fraser held the position of secretary for program and leadership of the World Alliance of Y.M.C.A.'s with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. During this time he had the responsibility for the development programs of youth and leadership in underdeveloped countries in Africa, Asia and South America. He was also a member of the executive of the standing committee of non-governmental organizations having consultative status with UNESCO.

Mr. Fraser travelled extensively to all continents. He visited over 80 countries where he had meetings and contacts with indigenous peoples. For example, he worked with the South American federation of Y.M.C.A. on the development of programs for Indians on that continent and consulted with the Mexican Y.M.C.A. along the same lines.

Mr. Fraser joined the Indian affairs branch in 1965 and while occupying headquarters position over a period of one year, he held numerous meetings and discussions with individual Indians, band councils, Indian associations and regional Indian advisory councils. He also conducted field trips to various Indian reserves throughout Canada.

5. His duties and responsibilities are: to plan, develop and direct policies and procedures with respect to Indian welfare programs, community development operations and cultural affairs; to review the expenditure of funds related to the division's program; to analyse and evaluate the operations of the division in a national context; to negotiate and maintain liaison with senior officials in public and private agencies on matters related to welfare and community development programs; to liaise and consult generally with senior officers of the branch on the division's program as it affects the operations of other sectors of Indian affairs operations. Mr. Fraser reports to the director of development.

ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING NAME OF COMMUNIST PARTY

Question No. 2,587—Mr. Langlois (Mégantic):

1. Has there ever been an order in council to prohibit in Canada the use of the name "communist party" or any other order in council relating to this subject?

2. If so, (a) when was this or these order or orders in council passed (b) were any specific reasons given for the passing of such order or orders in council at the time they were passed and, if so, what were these reasons?

Hon. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Yes.

2. (a) Order in council P.C. 2363 of June 4, 1940, amending the defence of Canada regulations made pursuant to the War Measures Act and continued in force pursuant to the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, 1945, which regulations were revoked by order in council P.C. 1166 of March 31, 1947, effective April 1, 1947. (b) There were within Canada numerous organizations of a subversive character which were intended, or were likely, to be prejudicial to the safety of the state or the efficient prosecution of the War; the Communist party of Canada was mentioned.

DEMURRAGE ON RAILWAY CARS, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,620—Mr. Enns:

Were demurrage charges assessed on railroad cars held up in Montreal dockyards during the strike of freight handlers and longshoremen last July?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: No, there was no strike in July, but during the longshoremen's strike earlier in the year demurrage charges were assessed by the main railways.

DEMURRAGE CHARGES RESULTING FROM STRIKE

Question No. 2,621—Mr. Enns:

What is the total amount of demurrage charges assessed by the Canadian Car Demurrage Bureau on both railroads during the strike of freight handlers and longshoremen last July?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No information available.

Questions

HARBOURS BOARD PENALTIES ON DELAYED RAILWAY CARS

Question No. 2,622—Mr. Enns:

1. Did the National Harbours Board apply penalties on cars delayed at delivery points because of the strike of freight handlers and longshoremen last July?

2. Have representations been received by the government requesting the waiver of demurrage charges and other penalties resulting from the strike?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. There was no strike in July. Montreal harbour did not charge car penalty during the strike of longshoremen earlier in the year. Car penalties were assessed during the strike of railway freight handlers but due to a ruling by the Canadian car demurrage bureau that demurrage should not be charged, Montreal harbour car penalty charges assessed during the freight handlers strike are being waived and refunds made.

2. No.

NOVA SCOTIA GRANTS UNDER FITNESS ACT

Question No. 2,650—Mr. Bower:

What organizations in the counties of Digby, Yarmouth and Shelburne, Nova Scotia, have received grants under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act since that act came into force, and for what purposes were these grants allocated?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No organizations in the counties of Digby, Yarmouth and Shelburne, Nova Scotia have received direct financial assistance from the federal government under the fitness and amateur sport program. However, the province of Nova Scotia under its fitness and amateur sport program has provided financial aid and supported projects carried out in these counties as shown in the attached summary. By agreement the federal government reimburses the province for 60 per cent of its expenditures on approved fitness and amateur sport projects up to a maximum allocation each year except in the case of undergraduate scholarships and bursaries, where the federal government pays 100 per cent of the awards made on the recommendation of the provincial government.

MANUFACTURE OF DRUG LSD

No. 2,659—Mr. Allard:

1. Is the drug LSD manufactured in Canada and, if so, in what provinces and by what companies?

2. Is the import of LSD authorized by the Canadian government and, if so, under what conditions?

3. Is its manufacture and distribution authorized by the Canadian government?

4. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare made any studies or investigations to determine the harmful or other effects of LSD on the population in general and the young in particular?

5. Has the Canadian government received any reports on the use of LSD in some Canadian universities?

[Translation]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No.

2. Yes, for sale by specified distributors, to approved institutions, for use by qualified investigators to study its hazards and efficacy.

3. The manufacture of drugs in Canada does not require the authorization of the Department of National Health and Welfare. However, the manufacture of drugs for sale in Canada is controlled by the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations. The sale of LSD in Canada is strictly controlled under this legislation.

4. No.

5. Yes. The Department of National Health and Welfare has received reports on limited use of LSD in some Canadian universities.

*PRINTING OF BOOKLET ON MAPLE SYRUP

Question No. 2,669—Mr. Racine:

With reference to the booklet published by the information division of the Department of Agriculture and bearing the category number A-73-1096F; maple syrup-sugar-butter-taffy (a) how many copies were printed in 1961 (b) how many copies were reprinted in 1964 (c) was this booklet distributed to different organizations throughout the country, i.e., hotels, restaurants, institutions, etc., or was it supplied upon request?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is as follows: (a) In 1961 the quantities printed were as follows: English, 25,000; French, 15,000; (b) In 1964 the quantities printed were as follows: English, 10,000; French, 15,000; (c) This booklet was supplied on request only.

U.S. UNION OBJECTION TO APPEARANCE ON CENTENNIAL TELEVISION SHOW

Question No. 2,680—Mr. McIntosh:

1. Was an invitation extended by telephone on February 8 by the C.B.C. to Mr. John M. Lucky of Saskatoon, to appear on a C.B.C. television show in Halifax representing Saskatchewan in a centennial series?

Questions

2. Was he informed on arrival in Halifax on February 15 that he would not be able to appear because of objections by the American Federation of Musicians, New York office and, if so, what form did these objections take, and why were they allowed by the C.B.C. to influence their decision with regard to a scheduled appearance on a C.B.C. television show?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. On February 8 an invitation was extended to Mr. John M. Lucky of Saskatoon to appear as a guest on a Don Messer television program, not in a centennial series.

2. On February 13 the Halifax Musicians Association, local 571 of the American Federation of Musicians, informed Don Messer, a member of that association, that they objected to his appearing with this non-union performer. Their action was based on correspondence from the Saskatoon local of the A. F. of M. which expressed strong objections. When the C.B.C. was notified, it was too late to reach Mr. Lucky before his departure for Halifax. On his arrival he was informed that the A. F. of M. would not approve his appearance with the Don Messer orchestra and that he could not be used as a guest. The C.B.C. has a national contract with the A. F. of M. which respects the federation's jurisdiction in this matter.

FURTHER USE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION OFFICES IN N.S.

Question No. 2,682—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Are the U.I.C. offices in Amherst, Nova Scotia, and Truro, Nova Scotia, being used by Canada pension plan officials on a once-a-week basis for servicing under the plan?

2. Is assistance being given at the Antigonish, Nova Scotia, Canada pension plan office in the completion of the application forms for the new guaranteed income supplement?

3. Will the government give consideration to using the New Glasgow U.I.C. office for Canada pension plan use on a part-time basis, and also for assistance to applicants applying for the new guaranteed income supplement?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Consideration is being given to establishing a Canada Pension Plan service outlet in New Glasgow. This would operate on a part time basis and would also provide assistance to persons applying for the new guaranteed income supplement.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

REQUEST FOR FERRY SERVICE, PORT HOOD, N.S.-P.E.I.

Question No. 2,685—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Has the government received a resolution approved by the municipal council of the municipality of the county of Inverness asking for a ferry service between Port Hood, Nova Scotia, and some point in Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, is the government giving serious consideration to the inauguration of such a service in the near future?

3. Has the government already conducted, or does it propose to conduct, a feasibility study on this proposed ferry service?

4. If the study has already been conducted, what are the particulars and any conclusions which have been arrived at?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Not at present.

3 and 4. A general review indicated that the costs of vessel and terminals and costs and conditions of the operation were unfavourable when balanced against probable benefits.

*PAYMENTS TO MEMBERS OF TAXATION COMMISSION

Question No. 2,686—Mr. Coates:

1. What were the names of the commissioners appointed to the royal commission on taxation?

2. What was the per diem honorarium paid to (a) the chairman (b) other members of the commission?

3. What was the total honorarium paid to each member of the commission and, in each case, in respect of how many days?

4. What was the method of determining expenses paid to (a) the chairman (b) other members of the commission?

(5) If expenses were paid on the basis of actual transportation plus a per diem living allowance, what was the per diem living allowance paid to (a) the chairman (b) other members of the commission?

6. What was the total amount of expenses, other than transportation, paid to each member of the commission, and in each case, in respect of how many days?

7. What would be the total amount of expenses, other than transportation, paid to each member of the commission, on a $25 per diem maximum for living expenses?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is rather lengthy and contains numerous figures. I would therefore ask permission of the house to print this answer in Hansard as though read.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement to considering the answer as read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: Text of answer referred to above is as follows].

I am informed by the royal commission on taxation as follows: 1. K. LeM. Carter, chairman, A. Emile Beauvais, D. G. Grant, Mrs. S. M. Milne, J. H. Perry, Chas. E. S. Walls.

EASING OF IMMIGRATION PROCEDURES DURING CENTENNIAL

Question No. 2,693—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Have procedures been eased in countries like Poland to encourage a greater flow of visitors to Canada for centennial and, if so (a) what is the nature of the changes in procedures, and (b) to what countries do they apply?

2. Is a security bond of $1,000 required for every visitor from Poland and, if so, when was this requirement instituted?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Some improvements in the normal procedures have been agreed upon by the departments concerned which will facilitate the processing of visitors during centennial year. (a) The nature of the changes involves the streamlining of administrative procedures and communications between offices in Canada and overseas in order to expedite processing of applications from visitors. Also, those persons travelling in transit through Canada to the United States who wish to visit Expo will be allowed to do so for a period of up to 48 hours without the necessity of obtaining a non-immigrant visa prior to their departure from abroad. Other possible improvements are being explored. (b) Poland; Czechoslovakia; Hungary; U.S.S.R.; Yugoslavia; Roumania; Bulgaria.

2. No. Security bonds are required only of those individuals seeking to enter Canada as visitors whose purpose in coming is doubtful.

*PROTESTS RESPECTING LEVEL CROSSING, COTE ST. LUC, QUE.

Question No. 2,702—Mr. Trudeau:

1. When will a meeting of the board of transport commissioners be held to hear representations regarding the level crossing on Cote St. Luc road, where on the morning of February 11, 1967 a bus filled with children narrowly avoided collision with a C.P.R. train because the railway barrier did not descend, nor its lights operate to warn approaching traffic on the road of the train, and where four persons have already lost their lives?

2. For what reasons has an overpass or underpass not been constructed on this thoroughfare?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the board of transport commissioners advises as follows: 1. As indicated in the question, the board of transport commissioners scheduled a public hearing in this matter in the city of Cote S. Luc for February 27. However, at the request of the city of Montreal, also an interested party in the matter, the hearing was postponed as the city was unable to obtain the necessary records from its files for the hearing due to the strike of civil employees. The board has now set April 10 for the postponed public hearing.

As to the incident mentioned in the question, the board will inquire into the matter and ascertain whether the facts were as so stated.

2. The cities of Montreal and Cote St. Luc are jointly interested in the project and each has its own proposal and they have not been able to agree.

*LOANS TO EXHIBITIONS FOR MULTI-PURPOSE BUILDINGS

Question No. 2,706—Mr. Pascoe:

1. Did the Minister of Agriculture indicate recently that long-term government loans to exhibition companies for multi-purpose buildings will be made available in the near future?

2. Will such loans be obtainable this year?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is in two parts. The answer to the first part of the question is no. The minister has indicated, however, that he hoped that legislation respecting long term government loans to exhibition corporations for multi-purpose buildings would be introduced in the house within a reasonable period.

The answer to the second part of the question is as follows. For any such loans, legislation would be required, and should the government reach a decision to introduce such legislation the decision will be announced in the usual manner.

REORGANIZATION OF PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 2,716—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Is a re-organization of the Department of Public Works in progress?

2. If so (a) what, in detail, is (i) the objective (ii) the nature, of such re-organization (b) upon whose advice was it undertaken?

3. If outside consultants have been used in advising upon the re-organization (a) what were the names of such persons (b) what amount was paid to them for their work?

4. How many employees of the department are affected by such re-organization?

5. Of the number mentioned in part 4, how many have been (a) promoted (b) demoted (c) red-circled at a lower level than their current classification (d) refused selection for positions in the new organization and assigned to occupy supernumerary positions?

6. What is the departmental policy for relieving the classes of employees shown in the answer to part 5 (b), (c), and (d)?

7. Of the employees promoted, how many are in the following salary ranges (a) under $5,000 per annum (b) between $5,000 and $10,000 per annum (c) between $10,000 and $15,000 per annum (d) over $51,000 per annum?

[Mr. Byrne.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. (a) (i) The objective of the reorganization is to provide better and more efficient service to all government departments and agencies served by the Department of Public Works and to plan and carry out more effectively, public works projects which have increased substantially in numbers and scope since the department was last reorganized. (ii) The nature of the reorganization is, basically, to decentralize operations, including the implementation of approved departmental programs, to six regional offices across Canada; the determination of these programs will be maintained as a headquarters responsibility. (b) The reorganization was undertaken on the advice of departmental management, with treasury board approval, in order to be in a position to implement recommendations of the Glassco commission.

3. (a) Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co.; (b) $197,536.60.

4. Until the reorganization is completed, it is not possible to state exactly the total number of employees who will be affected. There were approximately 8,500 continuing full time employees in the department on March 9, 1967. Of these, there are about 5,850 operating staffs whose functions will not be altered by the reorganization. Direct effects will be confined, almost entirely, to non-operating employees of whom there were about 2,650 on March 9, 1967.

5. As a result of the reorganization up to March 9, 1967: (a) 111; (b) Nil; (c) 2; (d) Nil.

6. Departmental policy covering employees who are or may be within the definitions contained in 5 (c) (d) is: Employees who, as a result of the reorganization, are placed in a position which is classified at a lower level than their current classification will retain this current classification level and where performance is satisfactory, will be allowed to proceed to the present salary maximum for that level in accordance with civil service pay regulations. These salary maxima will not be increased as a result of revisions arising from cyclical pay reviews. However, such employees will be eligible for further salary increases when the salary range for their position in the new organization has, as a result of economic revisions, exceeded this fixed salary maximum, or if their new position is reclassified to a higher level or if the employee is promoted to a higher level position.

Employees not selected for positions in the new organization who are occupying supernumerary positions will retain their current classification level and, where performance is satisfactory, will be allowed to proceed to the present salary maximum for that level in accordance with civil service pay regulations. These salary maxima will not be increased as a result of revisions arising from cyclical pay reviews. This supernumerary arrangement will be interim in nature pending the placement of affected employees in continuing positions in the new organization or elsewhere.

Present departmental policy precludes the demotion of any employee solely as a result of the current changes in the organization of the department.

7. As a result of the reorganization up to March 9, 1967, departmental employees have been promoted in the following numbers: (a) Nil, the reorganization staffing program has not, as yet, reached positions at these levels; (b) eight; (c) 44; (d) 59.

The staffing program in groups (b), (c) and (d) have not been completed.

RETIREMENT FACILITIES FOR RETIRED PERSONS

Question No. 2,734—Mr. Isabelle:

Is it the intention of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to publish a list of resorts and retirement facilities in Canada for retired people?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): No. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has no information on this subject.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

LOANS, GRANTS AND SUBVENTION TO DOMINION COAL CO.

Question 2,504—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Since 1957, what amounts, in detail, have been loaned by the government or any of its agencies to the Dominion Steel and Coal Company or any of its subsidiaries?

2. What balance is owing at the present time in regard to such loans?

3. Since 1957, what amounts, in detail, have been provided as direct grants or subsidies to the Dominion Steel and Coal Company or any of its subsidiaries?

4. Since 1957, what amounts have been paid annually in the form of subventions for the shipment of coal produced by the Dominion Steel and Coal Company of any of its subsidiaries?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for papers No. 72 and No. 199 are acceptable to the government.

Notices of motions No. 216 and No. 217 are acceptable subject to the usual reservation concerning the consent of the relevant provincial governments.

Would you please call notices of motions No. 191, No. 210 and No. 218. I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

Motion No. 72—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communications exchanged between the Carter royal commission on taxation and the Department of Finance, or the minister or any official thereof, with reference to officials of the Department of Finance seeing draft chapters of the commission's report prior to its being presented to the governor in council.

Motion agreed to.

C.B.C. APPLICATION FOR DEFERMENT OF LABOUR CODE

Motion No. 191—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or any official thereof and any other person, group or organization, excepting any other department or agency of the government, relating to the application of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the deferment or suspension of any part thereof.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the matter raised in this motion and am advised by the C.B.C. that the subject matter of this correspondence is related basically to the internal management and administration of the corporation, and thus in the view of the C.B.C. should not be made public.

If I might I should like to suggest to the house that the C.B.C., if it is to be able to exercise the managerial responsibilities given it by statute, must be free to correspond with other broadcasters and its unions, as it has in this case, without being called upon to make such correspondence public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand it is against the usual procedure of the house for the minister to make a lengthy statement at this time.

Miss LaMarsh: I would ask therefore that because production of such correspondence could be detrimental to the internal management and administration of the corporation, the hon. member agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this motion asks for correspondence relating to the enforcement of the law passed by this parliament, and it is considered by one of the unions involved not to be privileged information. Consequently I should like to see this law applied. This leaves us no other course but to have the motion put.

Miss LaMarsh: May I ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH WILLIAM GRUBER, TORONTO

Motion No. 199—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence received by the Minister of Finance, the superintendent of insurance, the superintendent of bankruptcy or officials in their departments, from William Gruber of Toronto, and replies sent by government officials to such letters, since January 1, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

PROPOSED SOUTHERN ROUTE HIGHWAY, CAPE BRETON ISLAND

Motion No. 210—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the federal government, any crown corporations or federally sponsored organizations or agencies and the provincial government of Nova Scotia concerning the proposed project hitherto known as the southern route in Cape Breton island, between January 1910 and January 1960.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): This motion refers to correspondence in the period between 1910 and 1960. The records and files for the period 1938 to 1960 are available to the personnel of the Department of Public Works, but the earlier files are not. Subject to the usual reservation of obtaining the agreement of the provincial government, I am quite happy to have the correspondence produced and also subject to the limitation to which I have referred about not being able to get correspondence prior to 1938.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I think that will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation referred to by the minister, is it agreeable that the motion do pass?

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON AGRICULTURAL PROBLEMS

Motion No. 216—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all communications exchanged between the government of Manitoba and the Minister of Agriculture or the Canadian government with reference to the calling of a national conference on agricultural problems.

Motion agreed to.

SECOND NATIONAL PARK, MANITOBA

Motion No. 217—Mr. Schreyer:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence and relevant documents between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba relative to the proposed establishment of a second national park in Manitoba.

Motion agreed to.

McCULLOCH REPORT ON P.E.I. CAUSEWAY

Motion No. 218—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of reports to the Department of Public Works by O. J. McCulloch, on the construction proposed for the Northumberland strait crossing and an analysis of same by the department, and also a copy of all communications exchanged between the Department of Public Works and O. J. McCulloch and all communications exchanged between the government of Canada and its departments and the government of Prince Edward Island and its departments relating to the proposed design of the Northumberland strait crossing.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion refers to a copy of a report to the Department of Public Works by O. J. McCulloch, an analysis of same and to all communications between the department, Mr. McCulloch and the provincial government of Prince Edward Island. I assume what the hon. member is referring is a copy of a commentary and revision thereof referred to in an answer I gave in the house on February 8 to question No. 2556. If this is so, there is no objection to the production of that material. The correspondence can be produced as well. The analyses of the commentary are intradepartmental matters and therefore cannot be produced in accordance with the usual practice. Subject to this qualification I am glad to have the motion pass.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): It is agreeable to me, provided that at some date fairly soon the minister or some representative of his department can give assurance to the people of Prince Edward Island that such report by Mr. McCulloch has not jeopardized the contemplated construction of the crossing.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it agreed that the motion shall pass?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I rise on a question of privilege with reference to the standing of motions. I wonder if I might ask the parliamentary secretary, with respect to No. 215, when we may expect this motion to be brought forward. I may say I was given to understand informally that the motion would be allowed to stand for a week, but the information is urgently desired.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): I will see if that information can be obtained soon.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): May I ask the Minister of Industry when I may expect an answer to my question No. 2,618 on the order paper. It has been there for a month, and I am sure this information is available to the minister. Or does he find the answer too embarrassing?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I regret the delay very much, but the answer has been approved by me and is somewhere in the machine. I had hoped it would have been amongst the answers given today. The next day it is sure to be there.

Mr. Winkler: The machine is all fouled up.

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—PROTEST RESPECTING IMPOSITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether representations have been received from Mr. V. W. Scully, chairman of the board, and Mr. Griffith, president of the Steel Company of Canada, relating to the imposition of lockage fees on the Welland canal? The contention of these gentlemen is that this represents a discriminatory step against Ontario steel producers, since the Welland canal will be the only North American waterway to bear such charges. Since the result will be substantially to increase the cost of transporting raw material and will weaken the position of Canadian steel producers on lake Ontario, will the government reconsider this matter, difficult as that may be?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the factual question is concerned, the answer is that a telegram of the nature indicated by the right hon. gentleman has been received. I can assure him that this whole matter has received long, careful and indeed I might almost add agonizing consideration. It does not seem to me, having regard to the law as it now stands, that the government would be justified in reconsidering it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether that is a final decision, or is it possible that his heart might be softened enough to provide for an agonizing reappraisal?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any decision in this vale of tears is ever final. As the right hon. gentleman will recall, decisions were sometimes made in connection with the Welland canal without much consideration of any kind, and did not always lead to the results that were expected.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO BURRARD INLET CROSSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding the press release he has given out today, and the announcement being made in Vancouver by the Minister of Labour regarding a third crossing for Burrard Inlet. In that release it is stated that the federal government is prepared to make a capital contribution to the project which reflects obligations which are essentially national rather than local in character. May I ask the minister whether he can be more specific and inform those interested as to the percentage of the total cost the federal government would be prepared to contribute.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question now asked by the hon. member is not of the type that can be asked now. The hon. member is asking for an additional statement, and perhaps this may be done on another occasion, on motions.

Mr. Douglas: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am asking the minister simply whether he will clarify his statement and if he can tell me the percentage of the total cost of this project that the federal government is prepared to contribute. That is the only answer I need.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps this particular question might be placed on the other paper.

Mr. Douglas: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

EXPO '67

POSSIBILITY OF ATTENDANCE WITHOUT REGARD TO FINANCIAL POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I intended to put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, but I shall put it instead to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, the minister answerable to the house for Expo.

Has the minister received representations from certain organizations in Montreal intended to enable all who wish to visit Expo '67 to do so, regardless of their financial situation, that is to say that everyone will be able to visit Expo even if they cannot afford it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel the question of the hon. member is far too general, and that it is therefore out of order at this time.

Mr. Laprise: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS—DISCONTINUATION OF CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF TWO MODELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister based on the statement by General Motors of Canada that they intend to discontinue the production of two of their models in Canada, the Acadian and the Chevy II, and import these models from the United States. Has the government received any assurance from, or been given any undertaking by, General Motors Corporation, in keeping with the agreement, that there will be additional production in other lines in Canada for export to the United States to offset this decline in production at home?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to be particularly difficult, but it seems to me that the question asked by the hon. member for Medicine Hat is also of a general nature and I am wondering whether it can be asked at this time.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, if I may make some representation to Your Honour about the urgency and importance of the matter, there appeared in the press yesterday and today a positive statement from General Motors that they are ceasing production in Canada of two of their very popular models. I think this house has the right to know whether the government has had an assurance, in keeping with the agreement, that this decline in that particular line of production is going to be offset by some other exports.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can give a general assurance, without entering into particulars, that the targets set for achievement by the motorcar companies by the end of model year 1968 will be achieved.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the house that those models, to be made in the U.S.A., will be sold in Canada at the same price they are sold in the United States?

Mr. Drury: Unfortunately the hon. gentleman is referring to models the production of which is being discontinued.

RESEARCH

SUPPORT FOR HARP PROJECT FROM FOREIGN COUNTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Inasmuch as the HARP project for space research at McGill University has been rejected by the federal government, is the Acting Prime Minister aware that this project will be supported by external foreign aid, from another country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I wish to take notice of that very interesting question.

Mr. Winkler: Inasmuch as the minister says that he will take notice, will he re-assess the government's position in this matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said I would take notice of the question.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement of the Minister of Industry the other day to the effect that the Chapman report was the basis upon which the government decided not to continue its financial contributions, could I ask the Acting Prime Minister, or the Minister of Industry, if it is not true that the Chapman report suggested that there is a place for the HARP project? Also, will not the government reconsider its position on that basis?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said that the Chapman report formed the basis of ceasing government support for the HARP program. It might interest the hon. member to know that just about one year ago there was a long and I think fruitful discussion with the principal of McGill University and members of his staff regarding the future of HARP. Assurances were received from the university and the principal officers of this project that by June of 1967 the HARP program could be completely self-supporting, without further assistance from the government of Canada. On this basis it was agreed with McGill University that there would be no further support from the federal government for the HARP project, as such.

The federal government and its agencies would, however, continue to provide financial assistance to those particular aspects of the HARP program which were of interest to Canadian science and scientists. This undertaking, this readiness to support aspects of the HARP program which will be fruitful and useful to Canadian science is being and will be continued.

An hon. Member: Good luck.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. minister, but his answer is more in the nature of a statement, and cannot continue.

Mr. Winkler: A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister seems to know about this question, may I ask him whether he is aware that the additional aid will come from the external aid program of another country?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Drury: I think the hon. member is misinformed.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, referring to Canada's current housing shortage crisis the Minister of Labour said yesterday that the cross-country symposia and study group sessions have now been terminated, as is confirmed by press reports. In view of this I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government is now considering announcing new housing measures to stimulate house building in time to affect spring housing starts. In other words are measures now being considered in time to affect new spring housing starts, to fulfil the demands of hundreds of thousands of Canadians now looking for a roof over their heads.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time the government, through the Minister of Labour in charge of housing, will make an announcement showing that the government has been giving this and other matters having to do with housing active consideration.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question. I asked whether the government is considering making an announcement which would affect spring housing starts. There is a certain degree of urgency here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's second question is substantially the same as his first question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FOREIGN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure he will be glad to answer without looking pitifully to the Speaker for protection. I intend to use his own words, words the minister used in the other place this morning when speaking on external affairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: That question is out of order already.

Mr. Churchill: I am referring to a press release from the minister's office. I am sure he would want that widely circulated; I am giving it some publicity now. Will the minister answer this question in the same way that he answered it in the other place. When will the minister—and I now use his words, Mr. Speaker—"share with us in a preliminary way some of the considerations which have to be taken into account in our study of our foreign policy."

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I was in the other place this morning I thought of my hon. friend and of the desire which I know at one time he entertained—a desire to be in that place, which was frustrated for one reason or another. I should be glad of course to comply with requests of this house of parliament, as I complied this morning with a request of the other house of parliament.

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the continuing and increasingly disturbing escalation of the war in Viet Nam can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether any new steps are being taken by the international control commission, by any other agency, or by this government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There are new efforts being made in several quarters. I am sure my hon. friend knows why it is not possible to go beyond that statement at this moment.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PENSION INCREASE BE EXTENDED TO DEPENDANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): My question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Last November the minister announced an increase of 15 per cent in the basic single rates of veterans pensions. At that time he indicated that he had a special group of his staff studying the dependants' rates. In reply to subsequent questions on this topic he has given evasive and delaying answers. Will the minister now inform the house—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must be fair to other hon. members and put his question as quickly as possible.

Mr. McIntosh: Will the minister now inform the house if the overdue report can be expected before the end of the current session? If not, will he give us a progress report on the activities of his special group, so that we as members of this parliament can reply to the many veterans who are writing to us on this subject?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that kind of question quite clearly yesterday.

[Later:]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): My question is directed to the Minister for Veterans Affairs. When the veterans dependants are given the 15 per cent increase, will such increase be made retroactive to November, 1966, the date of the other 15 per cent raise?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): This of course will have to await a decision.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF POSITION OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister.

Before recommending the appointment of a new governor general, does the government intend to have the office of governor general studied by the committee of officials on constitutional reform, in view of Canada's political evolution?

TRANSPORTATION

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON MARITIME STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of Transport. I wonder if he can now shed some light for us on the special maritimes transportation study, particularly as this matter is now urgent, that a proper evaluation may be given to the Kauffeld report, one able proposal for the orderly development of Halifax harbour.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am afraid, sir, that I am not in a position to shed any light.

INDUSTRY

TRENTON, N.S.—REMOVAL OF MACHINERY FROM HAWKER SIDDELEY PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Prime Minister which in his absence I shall direct to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Acting Prime Minister received a telegram from the president of local 1231 of the United Steel Workers of America at the Hawker Siddeley Trenton plant, Nova Scotia, to the effect that the Department of National Defence is removing machines from the marine finish part of this industry and putting the heavy forge press, one of the largest in Canada, on the market for sale? If so, would the minister look into this matter with a view to permitting this machinery to remain in its present place so that employment in this plant may not be interfered with?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made a representation—

Mr. MacEwan: On a point of order, this is a designated area and there is no point in trying to bring new industry into the area if machinery is to be pulled out of the old.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. May I say to him that he fills that role with a distinction and a verve seldom seen in this house. I would ask him whether in his new-found capacity and with his new authority he is in a position to make any pronouncement about straight base lines?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): A date is approaching when I shall be able to say something more specific about the establishment of the co-ordinates and the straight base lines. We are now awaiting a formal reply to a note we sent the other day to the government of the United States. There have been some informal discussions in regard to the note and I believe that progress is being made. I know the hon. gentleman will welcome this information.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister be more precise with regard to the date which he says is approaching, and tell us whether it will be this year or next year?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure it will be well before the end of the next three months.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR OPEN QUOTA ON DURUM WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who has responsibility for reporting to this house on behalf of the Canadian Wheat Board. Could the minister inform us whether the board is considering the re-establishment of the open quota for Durum wheat which was discontinued on February 28 of this year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take this question as notice.

STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I take this opportunity to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale in connection with my conversations in Geneva last week, where I had meetings with the Canadian delegation to the GATT cereal negotiations which are being conducted as part of the Kennedy round. As hon. members are aware, the delegation includes producer advisers along with officials of the Canadian Wheat Board and the government departments concerned.

I also had discussions on this important subject in Germany and the United Kingdom where I gained the impression that there is growing acceptance of the need for an increase in the minimum price, as well as in the price range advanced by the exporting countries including, of course, Canada.

It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the details of these negotiations which are being conducted on a confidential basis. There are still difficult and complex questions to be resolved.

I can say, however, that progress has been made in recent weeks. It would be premature to forecast the possible outcome of these negotiations, but I am hopeful there will be a successful result. We are keeping very close to developments and doing all we can to advance them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Two seasons ago the wheat board cut the price of the farmers' wheat by some 17 cents a bushel, which lost the western farmers—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister whether consideration is now being given to restoring what was taken away from the western farmers by that action.

Mr. Winters: I am sure the right hon. gentleman shared the general satisfaction of all hon. members with the initial price and the final price for wheat paid to western farmers in respect of last year's crop, one of the highest on record in a year when many records were set.

TRADE

SALE IN CANADA OF GOODS CONFISCATED IN CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I also reply to a question asked on Monday by the hon. member for Gaspé about the sale of Cuban goods by auction.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have only 30 minutes today for questions and the hon. member for Gaspé is out of the house for the moment, so perhaps this answer might be given tomorrow.

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICITY IN UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): I should like to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is in charge of Expo '67. I believe the Secretary of State would be interested in this question, too, but I see the hon. lady has left the chamber.

On Monday I had occasion to meet two Americans from the city of Chicago who felt that Canada—

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question cannot be preceded by a narrative of any kind.

Mr. Pickersgill: A reminiscence.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Can the minister tell the house to what extent Expo, and the fact that it is being held in Canada's centennial year, is being advertised throughout the United States, as this would be a real source of tourist dollars for Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that this is not a question which can be asked at this time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RESEARCH INTO ILLNESS CAUSED BY NOISE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to focus my attention on the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: —for the purpose of asking a question. It concerns both unions and management in Great Britain at this time. In view of the statement made by Professor E. J. Richards of Southampton University's institute of sound and vibration research that there is ample evidence that many a worker's hearing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he has to ask a question, and that he cannot make a statement.

Mr. Herridge: Very well, Mr. Speaker—that many a worker's hearing is permanently damaged by noise, would the hon. lady inform the house whether any research is being undertaken in Canada at the present time into damage done to the human body by noise?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the general adverse reaction among the cadets at the tri-service college at Royal Roads toward the proposed green uniform, will the minister now abandon this idea?

An hon. Member: Close the college.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the marked increase in the import of eggs from other countries to Canada is the minister contemplating any inquiry into the situation?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I presume the hon. member is referring to the statistics shown in a return made a day or two ago which reflected a substantial net import of eggs into Canada. I was surprised at that, myself; I thought Canada was self-sufficient in this regard. I find that this is generally the case, but there were seasonal and other reasons for extraordinarily large imports last year. However, in relation to the total consumption of eggs in Canada the number imported was relatively small.

Mr. Nasserden: Does the minister not think that a 250 per cent increase is worthy of consideration?

Mr. Speaker: Order; the question is argumentative.

FLOODS

FRASER RIVER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POTENTIAL DANGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister received a recent report on the current flood potential of the lower Fraser river in British Columbia, and is he satisfied with the standards of the diking arrangements in that area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, snow survey reports in the first part of this month indicate heavy snow conditions in the Fraser river basin. Whether or not this may result in high floods on the river in June will depend on the weather conditions which are experienced prior to that time. High snow supplies have been known to dissipate without causing damaging flood conditions. On the other hand, a low snow supply under certain conditions can result in serious flooding. At the moment I am told by my experts that it is too early to forecast the degree of flooding which may be experienced in the area in the early summer of 1967.

With respect to the second part of the question regarding diking conditions, I shall take it as notice and get further technical advice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN FORM OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, based on a ruling Your Honour made earlier this day. Is it the intention of the minister to resubmit his estimates in their former or traditional form, and not on the assumption of unification?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday the form of the estimates is a reflection of the integrated commands which were authorized subsequent to the law passed by parliament in 1964. Particularly in view of the demand which has been made on the other side of the house during the last few weeks, that more precise information be given as to the roles and the missions of the Canadian Armed Forces, I would think that presenting the details of the estimates in a form which would give an accurate reflection of the expenditures being made for the various roles and missions would be welcomed by members on the other side of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A completely false answer.

Mr. Hales: As a supplementary question, would the minister not then consider putting them forward in a manner that would enable us to compare them with former estimates of his department?

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN MILK PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Florian Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has he received a request from the Catholic Farmers Union and some members of parliament to increase the price of milk to $5.10 per hundredweight —which price I find quite logical—and, if so, what action does the government intend to take?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: The very important question put by the hon. member has been asked several times in the last few days and the minister answered it.

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

STATUS OF DISPUTE BETWEEN UPI AND WIRE SERVICE GUILD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): This question concerns a matter which should be given immediate consideration. As the Minister of Labour is not here, I direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. The Canadian Wire Service Guild has stated it will strike the United Press International of Canada on March 16 unless a collective agreement is reached. The government having been asked to conciliate in the dispute, so as to prevent a serious shut-down in essential services, will the Acting Prime Minister give immediate attention to the appointment of a conciliation officer so that this strike may not take place tomorrow? Such a strike could only be to the detriment of Canada.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will have this matter looked into at once.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister asked a question a few moments ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: What can you say to that one?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am asked what I could say. I will say what I could say to people who are on a dying ship, that surely this is the least I could do or say. However, before dealing with what I was going to say I should like to welcome back to this house, on behalf of all of us, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) who has been ill for some time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am now going to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour if he would be kind enough to reply to the question with regard to the imminent strike situation.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker,

a question was asked a few days ago, I think by the hon. member for New Westminster, and now by the Leader of the Opposition, about the possibility of appointing a conciliation officer to intervene in the proposed strike. I might point out to the Leader of the Opposition that a conciliation officer was appointed 13 months ago, and from there the matter went to a conciliation board last March. The conciliation board made a report last fall recommending only that negotiations continue. Obviously negotiations have failed to produce results, and the guild are only carrying out their legal right to strike.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So there will be no mistake about this, Mr. Speaker, the wire was sent at 2.05 today and received by me in the house. It states that the situation requires conciliation on the part of the government, and no statement such as the parliamentary secretary has given in any way meets the situation. It is just a case of procrastination in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question period has expired, but perhaps the house would allow the hon. member for Danforth a question.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to ask a question but perhaps you would permit me, on the point of kindness raised by the Acting Prime Minister, to say to my colleagues in all parts of the house how very good it is to be back and how very much I appreciated their inquiries, their kindness and their consideration while I was away.

It has been a very interesting experience to watch our parliament from afar for three months. The one thing it has convinced me of, Mr. Speaker, is that irrespective of the things that seem to divide us at times, the sort of common belief we have in the value of this institution and in the years of tradition for which it stands vastly transcends in importance the policies, programs and personalities that from time to time divide us. It is good to be back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR ACCURATE ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ASKED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask another question of the Acting Prime Minister, but seeing you have called orders of the day I rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it might be easier if the house agreed to let the hon. member ask his question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIntosh: Would the Acting Prime Minister use his good offices to see that we get accurate, and not misleading, replies to our questions such as that given to me this afternoon by the Minister of Veterans Affairs. His reply was that he had answered my question yesterday. I have looked at Hansard and I find he made no answer yesterday. In other words his answer to us is nothing. I think we have a right to expect more from the government front benches in the way of answers to our questions than that reply given by the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether there is any point in pursuing the matter. What the hon. member has expressed was not a question of privilege. Perhaps the minister wants to rise on a question of privilege and pursue the matter, and I would recognize him on that basis.

Mr. Teillet: This is certainly a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I did say that I replied yesterday, and I am sorry for that; but if the hon. member will look at page 13896 of Hansard he will see I replied then. That was on Monday afternoon, the day before yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

• (3:30 p.m.)

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DIRECTION OF MONETARY POLICY, CASH RESERVES, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 14, consideration in committee of Bill C-190, to amend the Bank of Canada Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday clause 11 had been allowed to stand while the other clauses of the bill had been agreed to.

On clause 11.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I informed the house yesterday that we would have something more to say, particularly with regard to clause 11 of Bill No. C-190. This concerns the financing of municipalities, school boards and various public organizations under the control of or controlled by the Bank of Canada; this is the subject I should like to deal with briefly while introducing an amendment to clause 11.

Mr. Chairman, the bank should act as the financial agent of the Canadian government free of charge, and it should also act as banker or financial agent of the provincial governments and municipal corporations with regard to all aspects of the issue of long-term bonds to finance public buildings and various public works.

The aim of this amendment is to put the Bank of Canada in charge of financing provincial and municipal assets; to take public and social financing away from private sources; to give chartered banks complete economic freedom in the private sector, that is, with regard to individuals, families and private enterprise; above all to stop our provincial and municipal bonds from being financed by foreign countries, which is the main cause of the deficits in our international balance, mostly on account of the unnecessary interest rates which must be paid to foreign countries in addition to the money borrowed in long-term share capital; finally, the amendment aims to abolish unnecessary interest charged on the financing of the assets of our society, at all these different levels.

The provinces and the municipalities, Mr. Chairman, are actually extensions of the federal government in the administration of the nation and in the whole economic life of the Canadian people.

Provinces and municipalities are institutions as important in fact as the federal government, but at a divisional administrative level if you like, the same as the banking system which also has its operational unit at various administrative levels, as can be seen very clearly from the following outline I am going to give.

Mr. Chairman, there is a central bank and a central government; eight chartered banks—and we shall have more some time hence—and ten provincial governments; 5,700 bank branches and 4,000 municipal governments.

In my opinion, the importance of the municipal governments is thus emphasized, since there are 4,000 municipal governments right across Canada.

Since there are three banking administrative levels and, therefore, three taxation levels: federal, provincial and municipal, there are, of course, three levels of public financing: national, provincial and municipal. And, there too, the whole business must be controlled by one head, with a unified thinking, at the three administrative levels: federal, provincial and municipal.

If we do that, Mr. Chairman, we will eliminate all international financing for our provincial, municipal and private needs. Our financial system can and must meet all its financial and monetary needs, as our economic system can satisfy its production, its capitalization, its consumption, by the use of our natural resources, our manpower, our competent technicians and our graduate engineers, having had experience in the various levels of our economy.

If we do that, Mr. Chairman, we will no longer have international deficits, brought about by a surplus of wasteful interests paid to foreign countries on bonds which we have the duty and the power to create ourselves instead of leaving it to other countries, by offering for that purpose the same guarantees, that is our natural resources, our manpower and our capacity to pay taxes.

If we were to do this, our Canadian dollar would not fall to 92 cents but would remain stable at 100 cents on the dollar. We would no longer have to bear the shame and humiliation and the financial burden of a 7 or 8 per cent discount on our national currency outside our own country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Bank of Canada has a great role to play. If only our ministers and our representatives of the people had the courage to do this.

The only thing involved is a simple gesture. If we had in parliament a majority of members in favour of managing the country according to scientific and honest methods, in accordance with the facts, we could correct many a deficiency in our economic system and consequently, render an outstanding service to our population. Our economic system has many deficiencies. There is great uneasiness in the field of finance.

The main factor, in finance, is the Bank of Canada. That is as it should be, and it is under its aegis that the whole Canadian economy should be given an impetus, come to life and grow.

If the bank is mismanaged, if the flaws preventing the bank from performing its true function are not removed, if regulations found to be unsatisfactory, as far as the people are concerned, are not amended, we, as the representatives of the people, are remiss in our duty. In order to provide the necessary services to the people, all that need to be done is to pass the kind of amendment I am now suggesting, so that all public bodies may be given the necessary impetus to improve the Canadian economy and to finance school boards and municipalities without interest.

School boards, municipalities and all public bodies which would be financed by the Bank of Canada would pay their debts, this would give a certain amount of confidence to the nation, and the nation as a whole would benefit therefrom.

Thanks to that system, the Minister of Finance, the provinces, school boards or municipalities would no longer have to sell bonds to the people, draining the economic blood of the nation, in order to enable the citizens and private enterprise to develop.

Mr. Chairman, that is how private enterprise is kept from developing, for public enterprise does nothing but create debt and deprive private enterprise of the money it should have to grow and progress.

If the Bank of Canada were used to put in circulation the capital needed to finance all the public sector, there would be enough left in the chartered banks to finance private enterprise and then, there would be capital to develop our natural resources, to control our trade and industry and foreigners would no longer be allowed to control our credit.

It is about that same credit that the Minister of Finance is asked to do something. The real credit of the country must not benefit only the foreign countries which will invest capital in Canada. It must also be good for the Bank of Canada which will use the same guarantees to issue the credit needed, without interest, to finance part of the country's public assets.

Then, Mr. Chairman, new industries would spring up in Canada, the private sector would expand in all directions, new factory owners would appear, and new factories, the unemployment rate would fall, because the Canadian government would then take steps which would greatly help the Canadian people by enabling them to live, to grow, to prosper and to develop more in all fields as well as intellectually, physically and morally.

At the financial level, we could become Canadians again, we could again own our industries, our land and we could live like Canadians, as owners of our own home and not as indebted or evicted tenants, something that happens every day.

Not later than yesterday a Montreal newspaper reported that families were evicted because they could not afford to pay their rent and they were told: You are on your own, shift for yourselves.

Such things will practically never happen any more, because people will have enough to live on and develop. School boards and municipalities will no longer sell properties or seize personal assets in order to pay school and municipal taxes. This will not happen again. And municipalities and school boards will no longer have to pay four or five times the cost of their schools and municipal works.

The Bank of Canada would be repaid for the loans and advances granted, without interest, out of public funds, over a depreciation period or on the basis of 2, 3 or 5 per cent per year, until the debt is paid off.

After the new credits issued by the Bank of Canada have been repaid, they would no longer be in circulation.

So much for the argument about inflation put forward by everyone. Everybody tries to prove that what we are advocating would create inflation. On the contrary, it would bring about complete stability. Inflation or deflation would no longer exist. As a matter of fact, there would be even less inflation and surely no deflation. The problem would be solved.

It would therefore benefit the whole country and all the Canadian people, and the government which wants to remain in power would do so, because we would be the first to support it, to join it, to praise it and to say it has accomplished something worthwhile for the nation.

I have already said that we are not seeking power, but reforms. Now, by bringing in reforms, you will remain in power. We do not need power. We want reforms. But if you will not bring in the pressing social reforms we need, you will then have the advantage of always keeping us with you, because thousands of Canadian citizens have sworn to combat poverty and to denounce you and the system you favour, unless you bring about the desired changes. Now, I move my amendment.

The Chairman: It is moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac:

That clause 11 of an act to amend the Bank of Canada Act be amended by adding at the end of subsection (1) of section 20 of the main act as enacted by the said clause 11, the following:

"and to act as a banker or as financial agent of the provincial governments and of municipal corporations in respect to long term bond issues for the purpose of financing public buildings and public works, the same without interest."

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I reply to this proposal by reading two short quotations from the report of the royal commission on banking and finance. The first is to be found at page 556, where the following appears:

However, the same section of the act enables the bank to act as banker or fiscal agent to the government of any province by agreement. While never used in practice, we believe it should be removed since the bank could not run an effective national monetary policy if it were to be continually under the obligation to put out new issues for the provinces, at least without conflicting with its fiscal responsibilities to its provincial clients. Adequate fiscal and banking advice is available elsewhere, and the embarrassment which would result from the central bank vetoing an unsound provincial financial program rises all too readily to the imagination.

The second quotation, which is more specifically on the point put forward in the amendment of the hon. member, is from page 71 of the report. It reads as follows:

We also received a proposal that the Bank of Canada should finance the social capital requirements of the provinces and municipalities either directly or through re-discount facilities, a proposal which would involve major changes in that institution's operating practices and have profound consequences on its ability to promote national objectives. Financing on the scale envisaged could only be supplied by the central bank if price stability were sacrificed, and even on a smaller scale would subject the central bank to intolerable pressures from eleven competing governments. For the latter reason also, we do not believe it necessary or desirable for the central bank to act as an underwriter to these governments, especially in view of the full facilities available in the private sector.

I do not think I need add anything more, Mr. Chairman. These reasons accord also with the reasons which the government had for amending the act, as appearing in clause 11.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Latulippe) negatived: yeas, 8; nays, 71.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I move that clause 11 be deleted completely. The only change that it contains is a change to section 20 of the Bank Act which removes the possibility of the Bank of Canada acting as a banker or financial agent for the government of any province. It is our contention that the Bank of Canada already has partial authority under this portion of the act to do what we have advocated for a long time, that is to set up a municipal development bank which would be administered by the Bank of Canada, with the co-operation of the provincial governments. Of course we have not been very successful until now in convincing the Minister of Finance or any previous minister of finance to go ahead and make such provision in the operation of the Bank of Canada. However, in my view this amendment would remove one of the authorizations which would be required for the Bank of Canada to do this at some time in the future. Therefore, without going into detailed explanations of all the benefits which would flow from the establishment of a municipal development bank I will simply move that clause 11 be deleted.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, to ensure that the attitude of the government is quite clear let me say that we believe it is not desirable to continue the present section in operation without amendment for the reasons that I have quoted from the royal commission report. I believe that the continuation of these powers to enable the Bank of Canada to act as the fiscal agent for the provinces is leading to misunderstanding and ambiguity and could at some time in the future interfere with the effective operation of our monetary policy.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Medicine Hat moved that clause 11 be deleted. If this amendment were carried it would have exactly the same effect as if the committee were to vote against the clause. I would therefore interpret the amendment moved by the hon. member for Medicine Hat as an expanded negative and as such I consider it to be out of order.

Mr. Olson: If it is out of order on that ground, Mr. Chairman, I will ask for a standing vote on clause 11.

Clause 11 agreed to: yeas, 66; nays, 7.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): At the next sitting of the house.

[Mr. Olson.]

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Olson: I should like to have it noted that this bill is read a third time on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT

INCORPORATION OF PROVISIONS ANALOGOUS TO THOSE IN CANADIAN VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

Mr. Monteith: Could we have the yeas, and nays, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Contrary minded, please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Sharp) which was agreed to on the following division:

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house in committee on Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. This bill was reprinted as amended by the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I understand that the reprinted bill has been distributed to members of the committee.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, we are now in what I hope are the final stages of the long legislative history of this bill to amend the Bank Act, a history which began when my colleague, the senior Minister without Portfolio, introduced a bill in the 1965 session, and perhaps the greatest compliment I can pay to him at this time is to say that the essential principles that he laid down in that bill have been retained.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I rise mainly for the purpose of congratulating the members of the house committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for the thorough review they gave of the bill now before us, and I include in those congratulations all members of the committee. I had the pleasure of appearing before the committee on a number of occasions and I came to admire very greatly the considerable expertise that was developed by members of the committee on all sides during the long and thorough discussions they had on the provisions of the bill.

That committee made many headlines, something which is not customary for all committees of the house. Its members had before them some very notable citizens of the United States as well as of Canada, but I suggest the chief claim to fame of the committee is that it has produced many useful improvements to the bill, and at this time I would like to recognize what a great contribution the standing committee has made. It serves, I believe, as an example of the effective kind of work that can be done by parliamentary committees.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I join with the minister in congratulating the members of the standing committee who worked very diligently on this bill. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, myself, and possibly one other hon. member attended the 1954 sittings of the committee which I believe, at that time, was called the banking and commerce committee. I was a very new member of that committee and I am pleased to say I found its work very interesting, possibly because I knew something about the subject matter it was considering.

For some days we have been expecting this bill to come before us. Just a few moments ago the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and I were talking outside in the lobby and we said that if we had to wait much longer for its appearance we did not know what might happen to it.

The minister has referred to the long legislative history of the bill. Today, March 15, 1967, we are approaching the final stage of our study of the amendments to the Bank Act. This study should have been completed in 1964. For some three years the banking community has been working under the handicap of uncertainty and I blame indecision and confusion by the government for the delay.

We have had to extend the existing act several times, and we are now approaching another deadline, April 1. All this underlines the weak leadership which the government has given the people of Canada.

[Mr. Sharp.]

• (4:50 p.m.)

Three separate events during the last few days have been causing worry and despair to Canadians generally. Let me first of all refer to the suggestion by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development that Canada take steps to control its rising wages and prices. We have all heard the warnings of the governor of the Bank of Canada, and seen these in his annual report. The editorial which appears in today's Montreal Gazette should be read by all members of the government.

The astronomical estimates of government spending for the fiscal year 1967-68 were tabled on Monday last, and they present cause for worry on the part of every Canadian. I do not intend to deal with those estimates at this time, because an opportunity to do so will present itself later, but I should like to emphasize that this government has no respect whatsoever for the taxpayer's dollar.

The committee on finance, trade and economic affairs commenced its study of Bill C-222 on October 25, 1966 and completed that study on February 28, 1967. It held some 79 meetings. Twenty seven briefs were presented and 57 representatives of some 30 organizations were heard. The minister appeared before the committee, at length, as well as the inspector general of banks and the governor of the Bank of Canada. Taking everything into consideration I think the meetings of this committee were worth while.

Some 71 amendments were proposed to Bills C-222 and C-223. The Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of that committee make very interesting reading. The committee worked assiduously over long hours as a result of which the bill reported back to the house is an improvement over the bill referred to the committee.

There are still some shortcomings, one of which is the lack of the definition of "banking". The bill refers to banks as being those institutions listed in the schedule. This situation was discussed at great length with many witnesses, some of whom made certain suggestions. I must admit, however, that most witnesses did not feel competent to make a firm definition, although some of them did so. There were several members on that committee who are lawyers and I imagine that later in this debate they will have more to say about this lack of a definition of "banking".

Bill C-222 does adopt some recommendations of the Porter commission report but it does not adopt all of them. It has not adopted the recommendations that near banks be brought under federal legislation. I believe this is a mistake. The minister indicated he was in agreement with the suggestion that, under certain conditions, agencies of foreign banks should be allowed to operate in Canada and, as he put it, he wanted time to study this aspect further. Perhaps that is another delaying action in respect of this very important matter relating to the operation of foreign banks in Canada. This important matter should not have been left up in the air as it is now.

Regardless of the evidence we heard to the effect that as long as a borrower agreed to an effective interest rate higher than 6 per cent, which is presently the ceiling in vogue, such an interest rate was legal, and in spite of the legal rulings we have heard, I have always had some doubt about the legality of charging an effective interest rate of more than 6 per cent, as has been the case in respect of consumer loans.

In 1954 the then Canadian Bank of Commerce was the only bank engaged in the consumer loans field. Representatives of that bank gave evidence to a committee at that time to the effect that it had received legal opinions which indicated the bank was within its rights to charge higher interest rates. At that time none of the other banks had seen fit to enter this field and, if my recollection is correct, they did not do so primarily because they felt it was illegal. Since then the act has not been changed, yet all of the banks are now operating in this field, making loans at an effective rate higher than the 6 per cent ceiling. I have had some personal doubt about the legality of this practice.

Regulations under the new act will stipulate that all charges in future must be shown as a percentage of the loan. I think the minister has agreed that these regulations should be studied by the committee before coming into force. I am in agreement with his suggestion that this is the proper thing to do.

At this time I do not intend to say anything concerning clause 75 of the bill in respect of the Mercantile Bank. There have been rumours and news stories concerning cabinet rifts and differences of opinion between the present and previous ministers of finance in this regard. I assume we will have to wait until we reach consideration of this clause to find out whether or not the present minister will make some further proposals.

It is not my intention to say very much about a higher interest ceiling or the removal of the ceiling. We will have ample opportunity to talk about that when we reach a consideration of the specific clauses. Let me point out at this time that the maximum of 6 per cent has become the minimum. I have some apprehension in this regard when I think of the possible increase in that ceiling. An increase from 6 per cent to 7¼ per cent will mean an increase of approximately 20 per cent. This will only result in a further stimulus to the high cost of living, about which this government has done so little. We will no doubt hear a great deal about this matter of interest rates before we conclude our consideration of Bill C-222.

There are many other aspects to this bill and I am sure other members will discuss them in a general way when we reach certain clauses. No doubt a more detailed study will be made. Let me simply say at this time that hon. members would be well advised to study the recommendations of the twenty second report of the committee. There is a paragraph concerning agencies, and another recommendation to the effect that the Canadian Bankers Association Act be amended to permit those financial institutions who presently have access to the clearing system only through the intermediary of a chartered bank to participate directly in the system on an equitable basis. Then there are three recommendations concerning I suppose you might say housekeeping items, supporting services in not only the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs but other standing committees. I believe that these recommendations should be given serious consideration.

I think that is all I wish to say at this moment, Mr. Chairman. I know the minister has been anxious to get at this committee of the whole house stage. We are now at it, and I am hoping that as we continue and question the minister on the clauses of the bill he will be in a position to give us, and will be happy to give us every possible explanation.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, as the minister has said, this is, we hope, the tail end of a very long and arduous journey. At the outset, sir, I should like to make one comment which I think should be made. If, as the minister has said, this has been as unusually effective committee, I think it is in no small measure due to the capacity of the chairman, and I should like at this time to record my very deep appreciation of the manner in which the hon. member for Essex West performed his functions as chairman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He performed them with, I may say, unending patience in circumstances which often would have tried the patience of a Job, with unfailing courtesy, and always in complete control of the proceedings and with a complete understanding of how far we had got. I think this house owes the hon. member quite a debt of gratitude for the long and arduous task which he undertook. There were 79 meetings on the Bank Act, and if you contemplate 79 two-hour meetings, Mr. Chairman, you can understand that it was quite an ordeal.

As the hon. member for Perth remarked, I think he and I are the only survivors—it makes us sound rather like relics—from the previous revision of the Bank Act, now 13 years ago. I have been impressed, not so much with the changes in banking technique, developments of monetary policy and monetary theory, as with the change of attitude on the part of the committee, and I think of the general public, toward banks. After all, there has been no essential change in the business of collecting people's savings and lending them out since the days when the Lombard goldsmiths discovered that only a few of the people whose gold they guarded came along on the same day, and they could lend the rest of it at usury.

The process is much the same today. We have perhaps instituted a more polite word for usury; we now use the word "interest", and governments instead of goldsmiths provide the basis upon which loans are made. But the business of money lending is much the same as it has always been. However, the attitude of the public toward money lending and money lenders has gone through a number of changes, and after being for a while considered a rather dubious class of people who performed their functions furtively in back alleys they suddenly blossomed out into being almost high priests installed in massive marble temples and conducting mysterious rites that were beyond the comprehension of the ordinary citizens.

It was thought that any prying into these mysterious rites was, of course, bound to bring down divine wrath on all. Even 12 years ago there were still traces of this attitude. I remember that it arose over the matter of the inner reserves, which everybody often referred to as hidden reserves at that time, increasing still more the air of mysterious sanctity over banking operations. This time I think the committee and the banking fraternity almost took the matter in their stride. There were some squeaks of annoyance from the bankers that they would now have to reveal the amounts of their inner reserves to the whole world rather than to the private ear of the minister. It became evident that the real change was not in respect of any fear of the stability of the banks in the mind of the public, but that this system might reveal some slips in judgment on the part of those who look after the affairs of the banks; they did not like to have these revealed to their opposite numbers in the banks. In fact, as one bank official told me, it was a case that he did not want his mistakes to be made public. I suggested to him that we were not there in order to legislate to protect his vanity.

However, they took it in their stride, and it may be that the banks today recognize that the decline in the religious field, about which there is so much lamentation, has extended almost to their sacred mysteries too. It may also be as a result of the change in the economy, and technology, that we now have changed our attitude toward our banking institutions from regarding them as a sort of sacred mystery to being merely a piece of economic machinery; a complex one, but one which can be understood if one wants to lend his mind to it. I think this was the approach of the committee this year.

Our approach was, how well do the banks perform their functions? We were not particularly concerned this time with the question of whether the banks were safe and stable. No one had any doubts about that. We were not particularly concerned with the prices they charged for their services. Most of us have the conviction that they charge too much and should be clipped back, if we can do so. We were more concerned about finding out whether they were efficiently performing their functions. One of the witnesses, a former bank official, advised the committee not to waste its time trying to decide whether the banks were good guys or bad guys, but to remember that they were merely good businessmen out to earn a dollar and we should concern ourselves with whether or not they were performing their functions effectively.

I think it is fair to say that any doubts left in the minds of the committee about banks were perhaps some doubts as to whether they are imaginative and enterprising enough in performing their functions, whether they discriminate and play favourites between customers. There was no way of tracking this down, and there can be no way of tracking it down. One witness who came before us to make a pitch for a foreign bank suggested that the foreign bank should be here because we really required in our banking system the modern and up to date expertise of American banks. I had a little entertainment with that witness. I brought him to the point twice of virtually saying that our local banking community was incompetent and not equipped to handle Canada's growing role in the world. Of course he hastily retreated from that position when I brought it to his attention, but not before he had caused a certain fluttering among the audience, which was composed largely of bankers at that time.

The consideration of the committee was, is it an efficient institution in our society, is it enterprising enough, is it imaginative enough, is it behaving in a non-discriminatory manner? The other matters of concern were questions of the charges, and there was a great deal of thought in connection with the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling. I must say that I myself went through a whole process of thinking on this question and had to change many of my positions in light of further thinking, further reading and further evidence.

I came to the conclusion that there was not too much to be said for the maintenance of the 6 per cent ceiling because it could be evaded so easily and because there seemed to be a fair amount of evidence, to the extent that it was not evaded, that the 6 per cent ceiling was giving rise to the growth of near banks and various financial institutions which have been causing cold shivers to run up and down our national spine, for some time.

The government, the minister, and I think most of the committee members except myself and my colleague, felt that we could rely on competition to prevent the banks from making exorbitant charges when the ceiling was taken off. Competition is all well and good but I have some doubts as to whether we will achieve effective competition by the incorporation of more private banks, because I have a lurking suspicion that once a private bank gets into operation it will become very quickly part of the club and part of the establishment and the element of competition will be very severely reduced. This was my reason for making a proposal to the minister in the committee which I felt would solve two problems for him.

I proposed to the minister that in order to solve the vexing question of the Mercantile Bank and its effect on our relations with the United States, the government of Canada should consider buying out the interests of the First National City Bank of New York in that bank. This would solve that problem and also the problem of some countervailing force to control the operations of the private and chartered banks when they are relieved of the 6 per cent ceiling.

When I announced this idea to the minister I stressed the fact—and I think he took my word for this—that I was not advancing this from a purely doctrinaire position but that it was a very practical point of view and a practical solution to two problems. I think the minister accepted it seriously on that basis and I have no complaints on that score. However, when he rejected the idea, he did so not on any consideration of the practical aspects of the suggestion but purely, as I told him at the time, from a doctrinaire position of laissez-faire, on the grounds that this government does not believe in a publicly owned bank. There were no practical considerations.

I submit that this is a decision based on religious faith rather than on earthy, practical considerations, and of course it is very hard to deal with decisions that are based on religious faith. One has to be very careful about that. However, it seemed to me that that is what it was. My ideas on this score were confirmed when I saw in the bill that is now before us one clause, which I hope to amend before we get through, which led me to think that the minister decided that not only did this government not approve of a publicly owned bank but he wanted to make quite sure that none of his successors would go chasing after false gods. So he has inserted in the bill a clause which will prohibit the government of Canada from investing in a bank. As I said, I am hoping to get that decision reversed by the committee before we get through.

The idea that I have been presenting is not a particularly revolutionary one. I do not think most of us would consider that our Commonwealth cousins in Australia and New Zealand are of a particularly wild and revolutionary temperament, and I am quite sure that President de Gaulle of France would resent it very much if anyone suggested he was presiding over a communist state because the four largest banks in France are publicly owned.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I am wondering whether he is joining his colleague from Kootenay West in supporting the views of the members of the Social Credit party about the expansion of money through the ownership of a government bank?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): No, Mr. Chairman, I am not doing so at all because I do not suffer from this other form of doctrinairianism which is only slightly to be distinguished from that of the minister. Both are equally unreasoning, equally based on religious faith and equally lacking in any logical foundation. I am attempting to base my views on logical considerations, and I would like to deal with the banking system of Australia in this connection. We should be quite interested in it because the Commonwealth Bank of Australia was established by a Canadian, a rather curious character called King O'Malley who emigrated from the eastern townships at the turn of the century and persuaded his colleagues in the labour party of Australia to establish the Commonwealth Bank. At first it was established as a Canadian bank, and later, with the rise of the idea of central banking, it was constituted as a central bank.

Later a new central bank was set up and the Commonwealth Bank became a tripartite organization with three component parts. I might say that it is interesting that in Australia they have the same number of banks that we have, that is eight banks; seven of them are privately owned and one is the government Commonwealth Bank. Curiously enough the first one was established in 1817, the same year in which our oldest bank was established as we were repeatedly informed during the committee hearings—an odd piece of history that I myself thought a little bit irrelevant. As I was saying to one of my colleagues, the older I get the less virtue and value I find in old age, either biologically or in institutions. However, that is by the way.

The Commonwealth Bank was set up with three component parts: one is the Commonwealth Trading Bank—and a trading bank in Australian parlance is the same as one of our commercial banks—the Commonwealth Savings Bank, and the Commonwealth Development Bank.

I should like to quote from a recent publication by W. F. Crick, published by the Oxford Press in 1965. The author has this to say regarding the role played by the savings banks of Australia:

> Within the banking structure the growth of savings banking has assumed greatly enhanced importance in the past decade and cannot be ignored in any consideration either of competition within the financial system or of monetary policy. Savings banking in Australia grew up independently of the commercial banks, and apart from two small trustee savings banks in Tasmania it was until recently in the hands of three government organs. The largest is the Commonwealth Savings Bank, which is one of the three functional banks making up the Commonwealth Banking Corporation. Originally the Commonwealth Savings Bank Department of the Commonwealth Bank of Australia—

This savings bank has been playing a very important part in the provision of funds for a particular field of the economy which is being referred to continually in this house—it came up today in the house—namely the question of housing. The Commonwealth Savings Bank in Australia provides a very large part of the funds that are devoted to the development of housing in Australia. Mr. Crick goes on to say the following, and this will I am sure cheer the hearts of all my good free enterprise colleagues in the House of Commons:

> The new invigorating element in savings banking was introduced in January 1956, when two of the major trading banks began to operate savings banks as wholly-owned subsidiary enterprises. Since that date when those banks were granted licences under the Banking Act, all the major trading banks have entered the field in a similar manner, and the Rural and Industries Bank of Western Australia, a state bank, has opened a savings bank division. This move on the part of the commercial banking interests may seem surprising in view of their previous neglect of providing small savings facilities similar to those in other countries. It was finally inspired by, more than anything else, the competition they faced from the rapidly growing Commonwealth Trading Bank. While this is not the sole reason for that bank's expansion, it undoubtedly derived benefit in its operating costs and in competing for general banking business from sharing the use of branches and staff with the Commonwealth Savings Bank and operating commercial and savings business side by side.

I might say that right up to the present day over 50 per cent of the total personal savings of Australians are lodged in the Commonwealth Savings Bank, providing a very large reservoir of funds for such things as housing in that country.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Now, even when they had entered the privately owned banking field, the Commonwealth Savings Bank, as I have said, continued to play a decisive role. In another book entitled, "The Australian Capital Market", published in 1964, the author Mr. R. H. Wallace, senior lecturer in economics at the University of Adelaide has this to say:

> Up to 1956 the Commonwealth Savings Bank played such a dominating role in the industry that by adjusting its policy it could offset any undesired changes by the other banks. The central bank used the Commonwealth Savings Bank as an instrument for its over-all policy. It continued to conduct its over-all open market operations partly through the Commonwealth Savings Bank, but with its own greatly expanded power and experience it did not need to rely on manipulation of the Commonwealth Savings Bank to control the liquidity of the trading banks.

Later, the author has this to say:

> A most important change is the reduction in the share of the business of the Commonwealth Savings Bank. Prior to 1956, savings banking in three of the six states was the savings banking of the Commonwealth Savings Bank. Its over-all size was so great that changes in its investment policy which were marginal to its own scale of activity were sufficient to significantly influence the whole group. Today the absolute magnitude of the possible changes in the investments of the other banks is so much greater, and the relative size of the share of the Commonwealth Savings Bank so reduced, that these offsetting activities will no longer be marginal to its own activities. Further the Commonwealth Savings Bank is now operating in a highly competitive situation—
> The expansion of the housing loans of the Commonwealth Savings Bank since then indicates that its policy is still largely determined by the treasury and reserve bank, and that the directive to the board in the Commonwealth Banks Act of 1959 to direct the policy of the corporation "to the greatest advantage of the people of Australia" is not an empty phrase. So long as the reserve bank will assist it by bond purchases, the Commonwealth Savings Bank can still expand its lending for housing and to public authorities as the need arises

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was just such a wide ranging banking complex that I had in mind when I suggested to the minister that he should make a start by taking over the Mercantile Bank and solving a potentially very difficult international situation. The necessity for such a wide ranging and decisive publicly owned sector of the banking system will, I think, become more and more clear as the years go by. As the hon. member for Perth remarked earlier, one of the great concerns before the committee was this question of the near banks and how they were to be controlled.

There were various suggestions. There was a suggestion that the definition of a bank might automatically bring them under the Bank Act. I, myself, inclined to that idea for a while, until I explored its ramifications and found it was somewhat impractical and could be quite dangerous. There were other suggestions of course. The government did take a rather slight, I might say feeble, step when it introduced the deposit insurance legislation, with the unfortunate feature of leaving it in the hands of provincial governments to decide whether provincial institutions shall come under federal control.

However, in listening to the evidence of the banking witnesses, and in private conversations with bankers who attended the hearings, I came to the conclusion this problem of bringing the near bank under federal control is likely to be solved by a totally different route, a route that will not land us in the constitutional impasse in which we might be landed by relying on the definition of a bank, a route that will avoid the many pitfalls that lie ahead in nearly every one of the suggestions for bringing them under control. I came to the conclusion that we are on the verge of seeing a vastly expanded banking system in Canada. When I say "vastly expanded", I mean that I can see signs already that the banks are going to move into many of the fields that are now occupied by the so-called near bank and the various financial institutions that have been causing so much concern.

I, myself, suggested to the chief witness for the Canadian Bankers Association, Mr. Paton, that it seemed to me we could look forward to a sort of department store operation by the chartered bank whereby a customer could take his choice of a personal loan, a business loan, a mortgage or what have you. The development of such institutions as RayNat and Kinross clearly indicates that that process is already under way. I am not inclined to quarrel with that development. Despite the fact that I lack faith in the philanthropy of the chartered banks, nevertheless I would feel much easier in my mind if such institutions had control of the financial system of Canada than I would contemplating such control in the hands of Atlantic, and all the various ones which in the last few days have been mentioned in the press.

While there are desirable features in this development there are, as I have suggested, undesirable ones as well in that there would be a further concentration of power and that concentration of power could only be avoided by the development of a publicly owned sector of the banking industry such as I have described. I repeat, perhaps ad nauseam, that we have plenty of precedents for this throughout the world. I do not believe we have any particular choice in this matter. I believe this development is going to take place whether we like it or not. I am quite sure, from the attitude of bankers in private conversations, that this is their intention. Indeed, some of the academic professional witnesses we had before the committee suggested somewhat that sort of development. One witness suggested a sort of interim period in which we would have two types of banking licence, or whatever you want to call it, which would at the end of ten years be replaced by an over-all licence under federal legislation which would bring virtually all these institutions under the federal umbrella. Then all these institutions would be performing the same function.

However, Mr. Chairman, if, as I am afraid, the minister and his colleagues are too sunk in their doctrinaire vastness, if their firm religious beliefs which equate private enterprise with virtue and public enterprise with sin are so strong they cannot move from this position, then I think inadequate as it may be, we must insist on maintaining the effective 7¼ per cent which would have been the result of the original proposal of the minister. It would be a temporary dike.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I could not help rising to ask the hon. gentleman whether he does not agree, in view of the record of this government in the field of public enterprise, that we are full of sin?

Mr. Lewis: You are, but that is not the reason.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As my colleague suggests, only when they were seduced. At any rate, Mr. Minister, I do not set myself up as an infallible judge of sin or virtue. I leave that to those with religious convictions.

As I say, the 7¼ per cent ceiling would provide a temporary dike of some sort, although it would have holes punched in it very rapidly. I doubt if the minister has enough little Dutch boys at his disposal to poke fingers in all the holes. To those who fear, I think with some justification, that when the banks are let loose from their ceiling they may behave in something less than the most desirable social manner. I would very seriously commend this proposal of mine that we should establish a countervailing power in the centre of our financial institutions in the form of a government owned complex.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this brings me to one more item which I had to leave, as it were, blank, realizing that I was going to have to play it by ear. That item is the vexed question of the Mercantile Bank. I had rather hoped that the minister would make some reference to it when he made his statement, if only to allay various rumours we have had about trouble and strife along the cabinet Tiber. No one seems to know exactly what the situation is.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Don't believe all you hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have to believe sometimes what a cabinet minister tells me; and when a cabinet minister tells me that he is opposed to what the committee did I have to ask myself questions. I have to ask myself how much weight this particular cabinet minister pulls. I do not know the answer to that question and I am wondering what it is.

I do know that this particular cabinet minister was very much opposed to the amendment that was moved by the hon. member for Verdun, and seconded by myself with great relish because I realized that it had several consequences; and I am a politician as well as a student of the monetary system. I should like to know very much what is the attitude of the government and those within the Liberal party who opposed this extension of five years in order to allow the Mercantile Bank to place itself in the position where it could conform with the demands of the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament. I think it is important that we know what is their position.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, there were two courses open to us. One was the eminently practical and sensible course that I proposed to the minister and which he rejected out of hand, as I say on purely doctrinaire grounds. The other course was to amend the bill as originally presented by the government, so that the strait-jacket in which we placed this institution could be expanded or broken in order that it could place itself in the position where it could divest itself of the necessary 75 per cent of its shares.

What shocked me, Mr. Chairman, was that originally and up until quite recently some members of the government appeared to be content with the irresponsible position of leaving this bank as a festering sore in our relationship with the United States, without taking any steps to solve the problem. That is a very serious thing for the people of Canada to contemplate—that we have in the ranks of the government people who would be prepared to leave this problem unsolved, a source of continual friction with our United States neighbours and an invitation to apply more and more dangerous pressures.

I should like to know whether the Minister of Finance has succeeded in convincing all of his colleagues that because he, and presumably they, must reject common sense on religious grounds they are now prepared to make it possible for the First National City Bank of New York to dispose of 75 per cent of its shares.

I told Mr. Rockefeller when he was here that I thought he had been very foolish to bring forward his particular case to that committee. I said that he might have been wiser to have based his position on a reasoned argument to refute the argument that a foreign bank would be dangerous in the Canadian economy. I told him at that time that I had had some difficulty in advancing a reasoned, logical economic argument in opposition to his.

However, we do not always have to rely purely on reasoned, economic logic. I later received some information on the operations of this gentleman's associates in other countries and I decided that whatever one's overall principles on the matter might be, this was a gentleman that we did not want in our economy. Perhaps he was too much of a chip off the old block. In fact, almost any minute I was expecting him to plunk down in the committee and hand out some shiny new dimes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): Order. I regret I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): Does the committee give unanimous consent to permit the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have finished, Mr. Chairman. I have stated my position to the minister and tried to explain to him the weakness of his own position. I now seriously ask him to bear in mind what I have said as to the possibility of a publicly owned banking complex at the end of the five-year period. But I am very much afraid that Mr. Rockefeller will play a game of Russian roulette and at the end of the period will say "Too bad, I have not been able to sell my shares and you could not ask me to retract now". The minister may then have no recourse but to do rather expensively what he should be able to do now rather inexpensively.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: I am pleased to rise again to speak on this question and have a new opportunity to deal with the present economic and banking system that we now have.

As far as I could, I attended almost all the sittings of the committee and I was as regular as I could. I know that the committee worked very hard; it did all it could to improve the economic and banking situation that we now know. But after all these sittings and after all the work that has been done, I consider that we are giving many more advantages to the banking and financial institutions than they had previously.

Such institutions already benefited from great advantages and great privileges and these are increased. I am not opposed to some citizens having great privileges, but I am sorry that some people are without any privileges at all or that they are deprived of their privileges to give them to those who already have many.

We should realize that our people have the right to live, that some are entitled to receive dividends, to have hidden reserves, or internal reserves of indiscreet reserves, call them as you will. There are other institutions which would also be entitled to various types of reserves, if we are to be equitable, if justice is to reign in the whole economic organization.

Almost all the advantages are being given to the large financial institutions in the country to the detriment of other institutions also entitled to the same advantages. We fight, we try not to give them any more advantages, but efforts are made to increase the privileges already enjoyed by the largest institutions.

Every time the wages of toil are increased, Mr. Chairman, every time the income from capital is increased, every time the overall cost of living is increased, the economic position of the people without income is weakened, as is that of the responsible citizens.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, in order to appreciate how very important that warning is, it must be kept in mind that today, in 1966, Canada's population has reached 20,400,000 inhabitants, that over 7,400,000 citizens derive their income from their labour and their capital and that 12,600,000 Canadians have no income either through their labour or their capital, being dependent upon individuals or society in general.

Therefore, whenever the cost of living rises due to all those increases in salaries, labour or interests on capital, the situation of those 12,600,000 dependent citizens without any income derived from capital or labour deteriorates accordingly.

Perhaps at this stage I could give as an example children under 16 whose parents receive monthly family allowances of $6 and $8; that rate has not changed since 1944 and is no longer significant, being out of proportion with the cost of living in 1966.

The following table will prove my point. For instance, the gross national product which stood at $11,400 million in 1944-45, has reached $56 billion in 1966.

I also wish to point out to the minister that capital investments which totalled $1,280 million in 1944-45, have reached $18 billion in 1966.

I want to remind the house that bank assets have increased from $6 billion in 1944 to $26,500 million in 1966.

On the other hand, during the same period, the share capital of 800 large companies increased from $7 billion in 1944-45 to $102 billion in 1966; and cheques issued, from $60 billion in 1944-45 to $520 billion in 1966.

The M.P.'s indemnity was $4,000 in 1944-45; in 1966, it was $18,000.

In 1944-45, old age pensions were $20 a month while they are now $105.

As for family allowances, just a word about them in passing, they went from zero to $10 a month.

Though every item was multiplied by four, or eight or more, family allowances for children under 10 and under 16 remained the same at $6 and $8 a month; that is the 1944 rate, and the people are now living in 1966.

This restatement of the situation constitutes a warning. Why continue to favour wage increases for the workers or higher interest and dividend rates for the capitalists and bankers, when it is always detrimental to the humble and courageous citizens, the fathers and mothers of families who accept, in spite of an unbearable economic situation to nurse the next generation of adults, of producers to whom the Canada of tomorrow will owe its survival and prosperity.

At the present time, Mr. Chairman, the government is placed before two acute and striking basic cases where it is called upon to use its authority to make a decisive choice, which it should have done long ago and can no longer be delayed, there being no reasonable cause or pretext to do so.

The Canadian government is the highest authority in the land, governing institutions, public bodies, pressure groups, intermediate bodies, the eight chartered banks, the 800 largest companies which speculate and make net profits of millions of dollars each year.

One Bank of Canada, eight chartered banks, 800 big companies under the direction of one or more directors of the eight chartered banks. Such is the world of high finance, the high economic management of Canada, which is the field of activities of Canada's great administrators.

Such are the agencies which are protected by Canada. The vote which just took place was in favour of these big institutions, and in other words against the people, which will again have to be content with their crumbs. But the people certainly have a right to their share. Unfortunately, however, those who speak for Canada here are much more representative of high finance than of the population of Canada.

Either these people are responsible or they are not. Either they rule and plan the whole economic activity of Canada, or they are not concerned with it. The fact still remains that they are under the authority of the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada (Mr. Sharp), and under the authority of the governor general in council, that is, the governor general and all the 26 ministers. That is the highest authority in Canada, and those are the people to whom we should turn to ask for administrative reform and urgently needed changes. The highest authority in the land cannot remain anonymous and irresponsible for whole decades.

This government, this highest authority, this governor general in council is soon to allow fairly important increases in the revenue from work and capital. The 6 per cent ceiling on the interest rates on loans made by the eight chartered banks is to be abolished.

Even if the governor in council and his 26 ministers want to hide behind the joint committees, the royal commissions or the economic councils in order to preserve the established and so-called democratic customs, the highest authority in Canada must still choose immediately between continuing to govern the country in the old-fashioned way and courageously instituting a new system which the people are waiting for and requesting patiently, confidently and with perseverance.

Before raising interest rates and wages, it is necessay to adjust the purchasing power so that every dependent citizen who has no revenue either from work or from investments may be assured of the necessities of life.

Before allowing any increase in investment income or in salaries, our government must first adjust family allowances and all the other personal allowances of the Canadian people. Those who have no income, either from their capital or from their work, also have a right to live and to a measure of security.

When the Bank of Canada was created in 1934, chartered banks lost the privilege they had to print their own bank-notes. In fact, they had to withdraw them from circulation at the rate of 10 per cent per year. Bank-notes are now printed by the Bank of Canada which took that responsibility upon itself. We are also proud that our rulers have taken their responsibilities and created such a bank. That institution was supposed to render great services to the people, but it fulfils only half its duty. But the banks maintained their privilege of creating credit money when making loans or purchasing bonds, subject however, to certain legal restrictions, such as keeping reserves of at least 5 per cent of their deposits and respecting the then 7 per cent interest ceiling.

With the 1944 revision of the Bank Act, the interest ceiling was lowered to 6 per cent and, furthermore, banks could not pay dividends higher than 8 per cent on their shares. They were permitted to continue making secret, tax-free, internal reserves which were undeclared to the shareholders, the public and the government in their annual reports.

When the Bank Act, that is finance, was revised in 1954, the ceiling on the interest rate was maintained at 6 per cent, but the 8 per cent ceiling on bank shares was removed. Today, banks are paying dividends at a rate between 20 and 30 per cent. The Royal Bank is paying a quarterly dividend of 75 cents, or $3 per year for a $10 share. The Bank of Montreal, on the other hand, has been paying quarterly dividends of 55 cents, plus a special dividend of 17½ cents, for a total of $2.37½ for a $10 share, a yield of 23.75 per cent.

When the government applies a ceiling on interest rates and dividends paid by the banks, it must be for sound reasons, for serious motives, and not on a sudden impulse.

The same thing applies to bank reserves where the 5 per cent rate was increased to 8 per cent; it is now suggested to lower it to 7 per cent. Of course, the effects of such changes, which may appear unimportant to the public or to the layman in matters of national economy and monetary science, are either good or bad—rather bad—when one first considers that the rights of citizens should take precedence over the rights of the wealthy, learned and powerful people governing and managing the big institutions of Canada.

Why, Mr. Chairman, has the 8 per cent ceiling on bank share dividends been lowered? Why lower today the 6 per cent ceiling on bank credit? I would appreciate it if the minister would answer those questions in due course or when he has an opportunity to do so.

For instance, when the Bank of Canada was created in 1934, its interest rate on treasury bills and on loans to chartered banks was set at 2 per cent. That rate remained unchanged from 1934 until 1956, or through a period of depression, a period of war and a period of prosperity.

But in 1956, the government ends its fiscal year with a big surplus following small annual surpluses. It was rather nice to see the federal government ending its operations with a surplus, because that does not happen very often, Mr. Chairman. Then, there was talk of inflation, unemployment and steps were taken to correct the deficit policy deemed better for the country's development.

The Bank of Canada started on its own behalf to manipulate the interest rates to follow the wonderful stability it had achieved, maintained and practiced since its creation 20 years before.

The Bank of Canada rate jumped from 1.5 per cent to 6.41 per cent the same year and the federal government bonds, following the famous conversion of war bonds worth $6,400 million, were renewed at 4 and 5 per cent interest instead of 2.5 and 3 per cent, which rates had been in force since the war.

Mr. Chairman, once again the poor people, the poor taxpayers paid for that and that was allowed to benefit the financial institutions.

That is where the decision of the Bank of Canada to remove the ceiling and its failure to mind its own business led us. The fact that it started to manipulate interest rates of all kinds enabled the highest financial institution to take over the control of a great number of government bonds, to buy them back and to sell them again at a higher price.

Today, governments, provinces and municipalities, large companies, school boards, religious corporations and parishes issue bonds at an interest rate of 7 per cent and even 8 per cent. Why such prohibitive rates on money, on capital?

When will this staggering increase in the interest rate come to an end? Will someone attempt to stop it? Is it preferable to let the capital income continue to increase this way, when people do not have the basic requirements, when they lack adequate income, particularly the citizens that are too young, too ill or too old to earn their living?

This dangerous game must be ended, even if it benefits the part of the population that is well provided for, that has the knowledge, and that governs. The wealth, science and power of these gentlemen is not for themselves only, but for all the people that offer them their labour and their talent in order to get, in return, a better share of the wealth and income of Canada.

This is life in society: working for each other, not all for just a few who have wealth, talent, science and power. All these increases in interest and wages only pushes the cost of living higher, even for those citizens that have neither work nor capital. This is the painful aspect of the national economic situation.

The gap is getting wider between rich and poor between those with a surplus or a deficit, between those who accumulate capital and those who sink into debt. This is also true of all the governments, all levels of our economic activity. The interest rate is all-important in case of debts. To make you understand, let me draw the following picture. It will prove useful to understand our problem.

Suppose we have to build a bridge in Montreal, in Winnipeg, or anywhere in Canada, and that it costs $20 million. We can borrow again $20 million from banking finance at a 5 per cent interest, for 40 years. We can borrow from the Bank of Canada $20 million without interest, repayable at 5 per cent of the amount, over 20 years, because the bridge is an unprofitable public utility, that has no possible revenue. Moreover, it was built with Canadian materials and by Canadian people. Only Canadians took part in the building of that bridge or that building, if you want to put it that way.

The Bank of Canada bonds bear a 5 per cent interest; the annual reimbursement, at 5 per cent, is $1 million; the 20 year interest is $20 million. Ten years from now, $10 million in interest; 20 years from now, with the present system, the interest will cost $20 million and 40 years from now, it will cost $40 million.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out that it is six o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we propose submitting to the house for its consideration items 74, 75, 134, 136, 137 and 139.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 16, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Fourteenth report of standing committee on transport and communications—Mr. Macaluso.

Twenty third report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs —Mr. Gray.

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William) presented the fifth report of the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The report of the committee on northern affairs and national resources will have to be received on division; the members of the official opposition dissociate themselves from the report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand there is no provision for this, as I am sure the hon. member appreciates. On a question of privilege he may indicate his disagreement with the report, but it certainly cannot be the subject of a debate.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to explain—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this cannot be done.

Mr. Barnett: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has ruled that there is no question of privilege, so the hon. member cannot rise on a question that does not exist.

Mr. Barnett: My question of privilege is different from that raised by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. My question of privilege is that I failed to hear what report it was that the chairman of the committee on northern affairs and national resources was tabling. I wonder whether he might be allowed to repeat the number of the report, because I think it has some significance.

Mr. Badanai: The report has nothing to do with the matter of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask the hon. member's co-operation to indicate to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni the number of the report that he has tabled.

[Note: Text of the foregoing reports appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I indicated that we objected to and dissociated ourselves from the report presented by the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources. It has now come to my attention that the report presented today was the fifth. The sixth report is still being translated, and that is the report to which we object.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE FIVE PER CENT REFUNDABLE TAX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-280, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will be glad to know that this is a bill for the purpose of removing a tax, namely the 5 per cent refundable tax.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (2:40 p.m.)

FISHERIES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT HUNTING OF SEALS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-281, to amend the Fisheries Act (seal hunting prohibited).

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are many who support the principle contained in this bill, many with humane instincts and concern about what has taken place in the seal hunting grounds not only this year but in the past. The purpose of the bill is to prohibit anyone from hunting, killing, impeding, injuring or obstructing the progress of seals within the area bounded by the territorial sea of the fishing zones as determined under the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act.

There are two exceptions to the prohibition; first to enable the Indian and Eskimo people to hunt seals for food and clothing, and second to allow the Canadian government to engage in research work.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT SEAL HUNTING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as private members' bills do not often receive early attention, or any attention at all, I should like to address the following question to the Minister of Fisheries.

Now that the sealing season is concluded and the reports of the S.P.C.A. officials and other observers make it clear that cruelties are far from ended, and also that one of the department's senior officials was forcibly thrown off a sealing ship when endeavouring to enforce government regulations, would the minister inform the house whether he is now willing to bring before us the necessary legislation to put an end to this inhumane practice?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to advise the right hon. gentleman that I have received a report from five representatives of S.P.C.A. societies who witnessed the seal hunt this year. They have unanimously agreed and reported that the evidence of cruelty was minimal, that there was a general improvement in the operation, that the level of the enforcement of regulations by officials of the Department of Fisheries was greatly increased, and that compliance with the regulations was generally satisfactory in the circumstances.

With regard to the event the hon. member has mentioned, when a senior official of the department was ordered off a ship, may I say that this senior officer suspended the licences of most of the crew members of the ship for 24 hours. As soon as the captain ordered him to leave the ship he immediately contacted his headquarters in Halifax, which got in touch at once with the owner of the ship. In turn the owner telephoned the captain and told him that unless the regulations of the Department of Fisheries were fully carried out the captain would be immediately replaced and the licence of the ship would be cancelled.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister whether it is a fact that he received a telegram from the New Brunswick S.P.C.A. to the effect that autopsies performed on baby seals by Dr. Elizabeth Simpson "indicate a large proportion of baby seals still being skinned before death in unsupervised killings". I should also like to ask the minister, in view of the fact that the income from this operation is so small, whether the time has not come, in the interests of humanitarian considerations, to end this practice regardless of the improvement this year or the year before, which incidentally was pointed out by the minister in identical terms last year.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a telegram from Dr. Kinloch, vice president of the New Brunswick S.P.C.A. I replied immediately to Dr. Kinloch that the statement in his telegram was not according to the facts. There were two veterinarians, representatives of the S.P.C.A., who witnessed the operation and they have by their own reports concluded that the report made by Dr. Simpson and a companion, Mr. Brian Davies, was not accurate or according to the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I come back to the major question I asked, which was this. In view of all the circumstances and the fact that 50,000 is the total number that are being killed, having regard to the serious feeling on the part of the people generally toward the inhumanity of this operation and the smallness of the income from it derived by Canadians, does the minister not feel that the time has come to end this practice?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I wish again to advise the right hon. gentleman that the quota of 50,000 is the number being applied both to sealers and to those operating from aircraft. Furthermore, an additional number of seals are killed by landsmen, by fishermen who need the revenue at this time of year in order to provide a livelihood to care for their families. In view of the interest that is being shown by the right hon. gentleman may I remind him that it might be appropriate to go back to his own files between the years 1960 and 1962 and look at the letters which he himself sent to S.P.C.A. officials when he was responsible for the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we are now getting into a debate between the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Fisheries. I suggest that perhaps we should go on to another question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, following that gratituous statement—

Some hon Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would suggest to the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not mind being howled down.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. My suggestion both to the minister and to the Leader of the Opposition is that we are no longer seeking information or giving information. Following the supplementary and further supplementary questions, asked by the Leader of the Opposition we began to get more into a discussion of the merits and demerits of the case for seal hunting. I do not think we should get into that kind of debate now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want the record to be clear that I was howled down by Liberal members because I dared to assert that action should be taken in this regard.

Mr. Robichaud: All I ask of the right hon. gentleman is that he follow the policy that was followed by his own government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we forget about seals for the moment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, now that you have quietened the seals I wonder whether I might turn the attention of the house to another matter. May I draw the attention of the minister of manpower to a joint statement issued by the minister's department and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which shows that at the middle of February there were 396,000 unemployed in Canada, an increase of 40,000 over the same month of 1966 and representing an unemployment figure of 5.4 per cent of the Canadian labour force.

I want to ask the minister whether in the next few days on motions he would be prepared to make a statement to the house analysing these figures, to show to what extent this large increase in unemployment is due to structural unemployment caused by technological change and to what extent it is due to a decline in the economic activity of this country.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to looking at these details and statistics. After I have looked into them I shall determine whether it is proper for me to make a statement.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether when making that statement he would be prepared to detail what steps his department proposes to take to cope with this growing problem of unemployment.

Mr. Marchand: I shall have to look at the details of the statistics before making any commitment or statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are almost half a million unemployed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of such increase in unemployment which is particularly noticeable in Quebec where the figures are approximately the same as in the hard years of 1960, 1961 and 1962, will the minister tell us whether he intends to take special measures to check the unemployment crisis in Quebec?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, a certain number of measures have already been taken, among which winter works carried out in co-operation with the municipalities, and of which Quebec is the largest beneficiary. This measure is already operative. It may not be perfect, but we are undoubtedly ready, with the co-operation of the provincial government, to counter seasonal unemployment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Might I ask a further supplementary question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. When making his statement would he also say how much of this growing unemployment is due to lay-offs in the building trades.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned that before committing myself to making a statement I shall have to look at the details and statistics. When making my statement of course I shall try to make it as complete as possible.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister investigating or will he investigate the reasons for the 30 per cent rise in the number of women without jobs, a disproportionately high figure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the minister will take all these suggestions into account. We shall set aside an afternoon for his statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. By coincidence, my question is related to those directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a while ago.

I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of representations by builders and homeowners associations, he intends to remove the sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is similar to that which has just been put.

[English]

QUEBEC—DOUBLE TAXATION ON DEPOSIT-RECEIVING INSTITUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance. Has an agreement now been reached with the province of Quebec or are meetings planned with that province to deal with the matter of double taxation of all financial institutions receiving deposits?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the house is aware and as the Prime Minister informed us some weeks ago, a meeting is being arranged to discuss all financial institutions, including those that accept deposits. There has been some difficulty in getting agreement among all provinces for a suitable date. I believe a decision will be reached very soon for a meeting in April.

Mr. Olson: May I ask a supplementary question. I suggest that the Quebec legislature already has a bill of this nature before it, so is there any possibility there will be some double taxation of these institutions before that meeting is held and an agreement is reached?

Mr. Sharp: I am not sure that the Quebec legislature has a bill before it. I have learned what the hon. member has learned from the newspapers and the public broadcasts, that it is the intention of the premier of Quebec to have a bill introduced for this purpose. I cannot answer, therefore, whether there will in fact be so-called double taxation, although I should point out that this house has not imposed a tax upon deposit-taking institutions.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE OMISSION OF WORD "QUEEN" FROM REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): My question is for the Minister of National Defence and relates to the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Canadian forces. Is it the intention of the minister to drop the word "Queen's" or has that already been done, and substitute "Canadian Forces Orders" or some similar words so as to avoid using the traditional title?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no such intention to my knowledge. I would be surprised if there were.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY INDUSTRY MINISTER RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNOR GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether his attention has been drawn to the constitutional faux pas on the part of the Minister of Industry who commented publicly on the choice of a successor to the late Governor General, and in particular whether his attention was drawn to these words in the report in the Montreal Gazette:

—Prime Minister is giving serious consideration to the possibility of recommending—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The right hon. gentleman should ask the question directly without reference to the newspaper article.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question is, has his attention been drawn to this serious constitutional breach of a minister commenting on the recommendation to be made by the Prime Minister to the Queen regarding her representative in Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I have read the article, Mr. Speaker, to which my hon. friend directs my attention. I would say that my colleague indicated that this is a matter which under our constitutional practice rests with the Prime Minister. As my hon. friend knows, it is the reponsibility of the Prime Minister to advise Her Majesty the Queen of Canada in the matter of the appointment of the Queen's representative in Canada. The advice by the Prime Minister to the Sovereign is and always has been regarded as completely confidential, and it is not for me to speculate in any way on what it might be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The statement by the Acting Prime Minister that the recommendation is to be strictly confidential is well founded. Then I ask him what justification is there for one of the ministers to make a statement which would indicate that this particular tradition has been subjected to a gross travesty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the story warrants the conclusion drawn by the right hon. gentleman. The Minister of Industry clearly indicated that under our constitutional usage this was the responsibility of the Prime Minister. In my judgment he in no way violated this principle of constitutional practice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR SAFETY INSPECTION OF STEEL HULLED TOW BOATS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question for the Minister of Transport regarding the representations of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild about the use of steel hull tow boats, and whether the minister is in a position to reply?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes. I think this is only the fourth time the hon. gentleman has asked the question. I have found my bit of paper, and the report I have is that on February 8 last the department received a copy of a preliminary report of an investigating committee of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild into tow boat sinkings on the British Columbia coast.

In the report a recommendation was made that steel hulled tow boats be called in to ensure that they contain three watertight bulkheads placed in such a manner that the flooding of any single compartment would not sink the vessel. The department is also doing a study of the recent tow boat sinkings, and the recommendation from the Canadian Merchant Service Guild will be considered at the time the department's investigation is complete. As soon as it has been completed I will let the hon. gentleman know the results.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday in the house the Minister of Labour confirmed press reports that the cross-country housing symposia and study groups have come to an end. In view of this, and in view of the continuing housing shortage, can the minister inform us whether the government is considering new measures to be announced in order to affect springtime housing starts?

Mr. Speaker: My recollection is that this is a repetition of a question asked two days ago by the hon. member.

Mr. Grafftey: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker; I asked the Acting Prime Minister this question yesterday in the absence of the minister directly concerned, and he was unable to answer it. In view of the serious housing situation I think it is appropriate to put the question to the Minister of Labour himself on his return today.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): This is substantially the same question that was put and answered by me the day before yesterday.

TRADE

POSSIBLE FORMATION OF TRANSATLANTIC COMMON MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as minister of external affairs. In view of the announcement by Mr. Douglas Jay, president of the Board of Trade in the United Kingdom government, that the formation of a transatlantic common market including Britain, Canada and the United States is being studied in both government and private circles, has the minister any comment to make on the position to be adopted by Canada toward a wider area of free trade between Britain and North America?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): As is generally known, the Prime Minister has emphasized the importance we on this side of the house attach to the development of a strong Atlantic community. As to any comments I might be invited to make on what Mr. Jay has said, these will have to wait until I have had an opportunity to see what, in fact, Mr. Jay did say.

Mr. Crouse: Will there be a joint meeting of key cabinet ministers of the British and Canadian governments in London in April to study this question of a transatlantic common market?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to anticipate the details of the formal announcement, but discussions have been under way for the purpose of establishing with Britain the same modalities that exist between Canada and the United States and Canada and Japan for joint ministerial meetings. There is to be a meeting some time before the end of April when ministers of the Canadian and British governments will discuss foreign affairs, Commonwealth matters, and trade and economic matters.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister related to the questions asked by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg. If a meeting is held of cabinet ministers of the various countries involved, something we hope will take place, to discuss the question of an Atlantic free trade association, will the hon. gentleman in his present capacity, and with the special knowledge he has as the hon. member for Essex East, make sure that such reprehensible agreements as the Canada-United States automobile trade pact will be outlawed from the discussions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am unable to determine whether the question is directed to the minister in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister, as Secretary of State for External Affairs or as the hon. member for Essex East. However, the question appears to be out of order.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STATUS OF DISPUTE BETWEEN UPI AND WIRE SERVICE GUILD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I wish to address to either the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour. Yesterday on orders of the day the Acting Prime Minister indicated in the absence of the Minister of Labour that he would look immediately into the strike which is threatened between United Press International and the wire service guild at midnight tonight. Could the minister tell us what the position is at the present time?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in this dispute a conciliation officer was appointed several months ago, and on his suggestion a conciliation board was established. The conciliation board which, of course, included a member representative of the employees, unanimously recommended that negotiations should continue. The negotiations did continue. When they broke off a request was made, yesterday, that a mediator should be appointed. Immediately one of the senior officers in my department, our senior official in Montreal in fact, was assigned to the task. The parties are negotiating and the deadline for the strike has been extended.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR EASIER CREDIT TO ENCOURAGE INCREASED PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the sharp increase in unemployment during the past year and the obvious need for increased production to take up the slack, will the minister give consideration to making credit more easily available to producers so they can increase production and thus provide more employment opportunities?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I am sure the hon. gentleman has heard of the very considerable easing in capital markets which has taken place in the last few weeks. For example, there has been a drop in the yield on treasury bills from a high of nearly 5.20 to present levels of nearly 4.30 per cent.

Mr. Hees: Does the minister consider that the steps which have been taken are sufficient to take up the slack in employment which has become evident in the last 12 months?

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a related question for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received any representations from building contractors or labour organizations drawing attention to the serious decline in employment and construction plans in the Toronto area and the St. Lawrence basin?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I rise on a question of privilege. Apparently the microphone is not working and we have no opportunity to hear your words of wisdom, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He said "Sit down".

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING MILK PRODUCERS OF QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to one of the ministers who understands the farm people best, namely the Minister of Agriculture who also makes a deep impression each time he appears in public.

Here is my question: Has the minister had talks recently with the ministers of agriculture of Ontario and Quebec to establish what steps can be taken to satisfy the Canadian dairy producers?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Talks were held, Mr. Speaker, but not over the last few days.

Mr. Patrick-T. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can he give the house an indication of the date on which he will announce the new dairy policy which, I think, provides for an increase.

Mr. Speaker: A question identical to that has already been asked by the hon. member.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to an inquiry made some time ago, with regard to the government's dairy policy.

Since the authorities of the Quebec Catholic Farmers Union are supposed to meet federal members in their respective ridings during the coming weekend, my question is as follows—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please put his question?

Mr. Grégoire: Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he intends to announce this new dairy policy before the weekend.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a reply to a question I asked the other day when the Minister of Agriculture was not in the house. May we expect a new dairy policy to be announced before the end of the month?

COAL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the negotiations which for some time have been taking place between Japanese officials and representatives of the coal industry of western Canada are somewhere near consummation, if they have not already been concluded. I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he can make a statement at this time. I believe he does have a statement to make on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The statement should be made at a time appropriate for ministerial statements.

Mr. Kindt: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Have the negotiations been completed with the Japanese authorities or industrialists, regarding coal shipments to Japan?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the best way I can answer is by saying that the negotiations of which I am most aware are taking part in this part of the world, in Canada, between the producers of the coal and the transport companies.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN OBSERVERS AT URUGUAY MEETING OF WESTERN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he advise the house whether Canada has accepted an invitation to send an observer delegation to the forthcoming and extremely important summit conference of western hemispheric leaders at Punta del Este in Uruguay?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the last meeting of the Organization of American States there was a Canadian observer. The meeting to which my hon. friend directs our attention is a meeting of the heads of states, and so far as I am now aware no provision is made for the inclusion in those discussions of persons from the governments of non-member countries.

NORTH VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR CESSATION OF BOMBING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It is a very straightforward question which I believe he can answer yes or no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not time for Canada to say clearly that the bombing of North Viet Nam should stop?

[Mr. Kindt.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend is aware that the government has indicated that in the opinion of the Canadian government a cessation of the bombing is one of the key factors. Another key factor is what action is taken by the other side to make it possible for both parties to engage in preliminary discussions that might lead to a negotiated settlement.

Undoubtedly my hon. friend is aware that at this time this matter is very much engaging the attention of a number of governments, including the government of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, shouldn't the bombing stop now?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think it would be very useful if there were a cease fire on both sides.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN RAILWAY SERVICE BETWEEN QUEBEC AND SHERBROOKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport and it is very urgent, since the Quebec Central Railway intends to proceed before April 30.

Has the minister received protests against the elimination of passenger trains Nos. 1, 2 and 4 between Quebec and Sherbrooke and is it his intention, in the public interest, to recommend that the Quebec Central Railway reconsider its decision.

Mr. Speaker: This question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Allard: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT BY LABOUR MINISTER RESPECTING BURRARD INLET CROSSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask whether he made an announcement in Vancouver yesterday regarding a third crossing for Burrard inlet, and will he tell the house the nature of this announcement?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did make such announcement, or rather issued a press release yesterday. If the house would like me to, I would be pleased to table a copy.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of the house that the minister should have leave to table the document to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I doubt very much whether press releases should be tabled in the house. If we start that practice there will be such an accumulation of paper from the ministerial offices that we won't know what to do with it.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is only one page.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no agreement the document cannot be tabled.

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR OPENING OF CHANNEL TO AMHERST ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister please authorize the icebreaker Simcoe now on its way up the St. Lawrence river to Kingston, to continue westerly to Millhaven dock on the north shore west of Kingston, and from there to break a channel to Stella on Amherst island, in order that the ferry Amherst Islander may resume vital operations in service to Amherst island, the people of which are in serious need of the resumption of service with the mainland.

Mr. Speaker: These are very interesting representations which I am sure have been noted by the minister, but this is not the type of question that can be asked at this time.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I had notified the minister of my intention to ask it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member had not notified me.

PILOTAGE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence on a rather urgent matter. Can he activate the search and rescue service which exists within the Canadian armed forces to see whether we can find the report of the royal commission on pilotage?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I shall refer this question to the appropriate minister, Mr. Speaker.

POLLUTION

REPLY TO TELEGRAM OF CALGARY ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to a question addressed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to the Acting Prime Minister last Tuesday, as recorded at page 13963 of Hansard, regarding a telegram sent to the Prime Minister by Mr. Cronkhite, chairman of the Calgary Fish and Game Association. This telegram expressed concern at the cost of a sewage treatment plant in Calgary and requested senior government financial assistance.

I replied yesterday to the telegram, and among other things I said:

> Federal government assists municipalities in construction of sewage treatment plants by making available low cost loans through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. These loans are for a maximum of two thirds the cost and extend for a period of up to 50 years. One quarter of loan is forgiven if project is completed on time.

My office called the mayor of Calgary on this subject and was advised that no application had been made for financial assistance from the federal government, since engineering and cost studies are only now in process, and since Calgary would not be prepared to proceed with the construction for at least another year.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL OF FEED GRAIN BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. On Monday of this week the minister informed the house that by March 15 we would be informed of the appointments to the livestock feed board. Have these appointments now been made?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I announced that there would be a delay of at least ten days.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): As a supplementary question, how soon may we expect the appointments to be made to the advisory committee, which is important to the operations of this board?

Mr. Sauvé: Both will be appointed at the same time.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES—REQUEST FOR LANDING RIGHTS AT CALGARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister now indicate when we may expect an announcement by him of a decision on the submissions made by the city of Calgary and the Calgary Chamber of Commerce respecting landing rights for Canadian Pacific Airlines at the Calgary international airport?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question depends upon many variable factors, and I do not think I could work out the equation in time to answer it on orders of the day.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST THAT DONATIONS TO QUEBEC ESTATES GENERAL BE MADE DEDUCTIBLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): I should like to direct a question to another very able minister, the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board, concerning a matter which could very well be discussed at ten o'clock. Here is that question. Has he received an official request from the estates general of French Canada to the effect that any subscription, contribution or gift to that organization should be deductible for income tax purposes?

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, March 15, consideration in committee of Bill C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose last evening clause 2 was being discussed.

On clause 2—Definitions.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, last night I called it six o'clock, and I think that—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but it is rather difficult to hear his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I was just saying that I was explaining a table when I had to call it six o'clock. That table is not complicated but it does not appear in Hansard, probably because my request was not heard. At any rate, nothing was done about it and the table is not in Hansard.

If the committee will allow me, I should therefore like to table it now because it is part of my remarks, and is most important in explaining and completing my statement of yesterday. I shall send it to you, Mr. Chairman.

As I was saying, when $20 million worth of bonds redeemable in tender issued by the Bank of Canada are floated it costs chartered banks $20 million in interest over a period of 20 years; reimbursement at 5 per cent or annual interest at 5 per cent amounts to $1 million per year for the Bank of Canada and $1 million in interest for the chartered banks. After ten years, capital and interest cost the Bank of Canada $10 million, and the chartered banks, $10 million in interest, and, after 20 years, $20 million to the Bank of Canada and $20 million to the chartered banks.

Case one. Hospital entirely paid for: after 30 years, at an annual rate of interest of 5 per cent, $30 million in interest. After 40 years, at 5 per cent interest, $40 million paid in interest to the chartered banks. The bond is redeemable in 40 years, which means $20 million. The same hospital costs $60 million in capital and interest.

May I present this table so that it may be printed in Hansard?

[English]

[Later:]

The Chairman: Order. May I point out that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac requested during the course of his speech this afternoon that a table be inserted in Hansard correcting figures which he had used yesterday. I apologize to the hon. member for not hearing his request, and I would now ask the committee whether it gives its consent to having this table printed in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows]:

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE TWO METHODS

Finance Figures in both Cases: For the People—or for Financial Institutions

	Bank of Canada	Chartered banks
Bond issue: Capital issued	$20,000,000	$20,000,000
Reimbursement at 5%; or Interest at 5%: 1 year:	$ 1,000,000 in cap.	$ 1,000,000 in int.
After 10 years: capital or interest:	$10,000,000 in cap.	$10,000,000 in int.
After 20 years:	$20,000,000 in cap.	$20,000,000 in int.
Case one: Hospital entirely paid for:
After 30 years: at an annual interest of 5%		$30,000,000 in int.
After 40 years: at an annual interest of 5%		$40,000,000 in int.
Bond redeemable in 40 years		$20,000,000 in cap.
The same hospital costs $60 million, in capital and interest:		$60,000,000

Mr. Latulippe: I was saying that after 40 years—to clarify the matter, Mr. Chairman—the $20 million bond becomes due, but since the government cannot pay, having disbursed $40 million in interest at the annual rate of 5 per cent, it must renew its $20 million bond according to the new terms of the creditors, capitalists, bankers or others, and according to the new conditions of the bond market, which may mean a rate of 7 per cent. You no longer see where the greed of those people who realized profits and pleased their gods and their golden calves will stop, especially when they know that the people are the ones who pay the interests and the capital.

Mr. Chairman, I need not say more to make clear the great importance of interest on self-generating capital in the machinery of our monetary, political, Canadian, capitalist and orthodox economy.

Nevertheless, that is the reason why, in matters which concern us, such as the study of a 6 per cent interest rate ceiling on bank loans, we can conclude that it is necessary to continue the game of interests to preserve the established system. At least, with our present knowledge, we can prevent the damage from spreading; we must take steps, set up new barriers and above all keep from removing those which already exist, such as the ceiling of 6 per cent on the interest rate.

One can talk indefinitely about this game of interest and its harmful consequences on the national economy and the social welfare of each citizen of this country.

Since I am speaking to ministers and members of parliament, I think they will be able to draw their own conclusions from those very precise facts, reduced to their simplest expression, which I have just brought to their attention.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As for bank reserves amounting to 5 per cent in 1933, which were brought up to 8 per cent lately and which are supposed to be brought down to 7 per cent, I suggest that we increase progressively those reserves at a rate of 10 per cent per year, so that in 10 years, they will be equivalent to 100 per cent of the deposits; thus, the chartered banks will lose progsessively the privilege to create new credit, as they lost, in 1933, their privilege to print their own bank-notes. On behalf of the people, the Bank of Canada will use all its privileges to issue all the currency necessary to the Canadian economy and to the welfare of all the Canadian people.

Let us not forget that, as the legislators of the whole nation, we must ensure the national economic balance between all the Canadian citizens and all the Canadian institutions, in order to adminster the country efficiently, with the standard and proven formula of revenues—expenditures and profits.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) believes in taxation as the only answer to financial problems. Taxation, which tends to reduce private property so as to increase public property, is based on a false financial system which is not in accordance with actual facts. The result of this decrease in what is real by financial fallacies, causes needless suffering of individuals and families. Money is artificially rationed, while potential production is almost automatically eliminated. The money problem is strictly artificial, but society as a whole suffers thereby, judging from the number of victims and the duration of the suffering imposed. The persons responsible for this diabolical financial system cause more evils than all the other wrong-doers in the whole world, and the governments which do nothing to solve the problem are conscious—or perhaps I should say evil-minded—accomplices.

Mr. Chairman, you really would not say that the parliament gathered here is supposed to exercise the nation's sovereignty. On the contrary, one would rather think that one is witnessing a debate between people who want to divide among themselves what has been taken from the people of this nation, and I feel that to remedy this situation one should do what the Great Master did when He walked into His temple and saw that it was full of people gathered there to do business, to exploit part of the people, practically everyone.

The present taxation system is the result of a financial system based on injustice.

Mr. Chairman, we would have many things to say about this, but since my time is almost up, I feel that I have done all I could as a free man, a man who is not bound to anyone, to serve the nation. I feel that I have done my duty toward the nation, I feel that I have brought to light the ills of the present system and I would like the journalists to do the same thing, because they have not reported a single word of what has been said in this house in the last two days. I would say that the journalists also are at the mercy of high finance.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I must apologize for interrupting the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I listened yesterday with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Finance as he detailed the history of this bill and the various delays up to this time in its path to becoming the legislation of this land. I listened also with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands yesterday, particularly when he suggested that the Minister of Finance and the members of the Social Credit Party were all religious people. I would not deny that for a moment, but I would suggest that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is also a very deeply religious person, the difference being not in the depth of personal religious experience but simply whether the religion involved is living or dead with that of the hon. member falling into the latter category.

On the other hand, I would not want the suggestion to remain that the Minister of Finance and the members of the Social Credit Party share the same religious approach to matters of finance. I think the difference is that ours tends to be the examined view, whereas far too much of the approach of the Minister of Finance and his government tends to have clinging to it still the old magic and the old ritual, the old concepts of money being something quite other than a medium of exchange and holding a mystic, magical power of its own.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me to interrupt him and thank him very much for making this very clear distinction between our views? I should also like to remark, and I am sure the hon. member will appreciate this, that it is a measure of the thorough examination which has been given to this bill that when the hon. member first appeared in the standing committee his appearance was very different from what it is today, and I congratulate him on his great accomplishments during that period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate these barbed remarks of the minister. I admit that the sessions of the finance committee were very long, and I agree entirely with the remarks of the minister when he said yesterday that the members of the committee had learned a great deal in that process. I would suggest also that the learning process in this type of work in committee sessions is a two-way street and that in many cases the witnesses appearing before committees also learn. But one thing I hope for, and I think the Canadian people could come to expect this, is a greater sophistication in the approach to the monetary system than was displayed by witnesses appearing before that committee and particularly those representing the chartered banks of Canada.

This is something Social Credit has been endeavouring to do for a very long time in Canada. It has been a long-term process of education to teach the Canadian people that the monetary system is not quite as innocent system as is suggested to us, that money is not, as is suggested frequently, a commodity like other commodities, that many of the comparisons that were made at great length in that committee were specious, that money is created in a way quite different from what was frequently suggested to us, and it is a gross over-simplification of the whole process of banking and money creation to suggest that the banks lend only the deposits of the people who have entrusted their money to them for safekeeping. This is the educative process that Social Credit has been engaged in for a long time, and judging from much of the evidence in the committee we will be so engaged for a long time yet.

But we do make progress, and we know that some measures which have been advocated by Social Credit from the beginning have been partially instituted. These were referred to in the debate on the Bank of Canada Act. We know that it has been possible for the Bank of Canada to assist in meeting the interest charges on the national debt, and this has been a saving to the people of Canada. We hope, though, that as time goes by the people of Canada will take a more acute interest in this matter, and I am sure they will as the interest charges on the national debt increase. This year, as we see in the estimates that have just been presented to us, the figure is $1,250,213,000.

I am sure the enormity of this figure must give Canadians cause for thought. If they have examined the diagrams that so many newspapers have prepared which show the Canadian dollar divided like a pie and have paid attention to the percentage of the whole pie that is dedicated to the cost of servicing the national debt, it should be obvious by now to the people of Canada that what the Social Credit party has been saying for so long has a far more permanent foundation than has been suggested by the Minister of Finance or by the witnesses from the banking profession who appeared before the committee.

I know that in our questioning of those witnesses we could not expect to receive the same frank answers that were given in the 1930's when a different governor of the Bank of Canada was before the committee and when rather frank acknowledgements were made with regard to the involvement of the chartered banks in the creation of money. As I have said before, the learning process is a slow one and the defenders of the present system are not inclined at present to give a frank answer. One of the interesting features of the committee hearings was the very lengthy circumlocutions used by some of the witnesses in getting around the central facts of monetary policy and the creation of money.

We in this party are not denying the necessity of bringing the Bank Act up to date. We recognize the importance of bringing legislation up to date in light of the rapidly increasing pace of a modern technological society. This bill is overdue and has been long delayed.

We welcome parts of the Bank Act. For example, we welcome the clauses which deal with mortgage money and will allow chartered banks to enter into that field. Housing has been one of the most neglected areas of Canadian industry and the degree of neglect has reached a crisis point because owing to rising immigration our nation is facing a very serious housing crisis. The situation has reached the point where the proponents of public housing are suggesting that it is the task of the government to enter the field of housing to a far greater extent than it has done before.

I really cannot understand why this suggestion should be made even by the socialist representatives in this house because they should know from their reading about Sweden, that socialist state which is so often held up as an example to us, that that nation, which has a far smaller and far more stable and static population than that of Canada, has a severe, continuing and worsening housing shortage. If public housing and the socialist philosophy were the answer to the housing shortage, then if any nation in the world could show that this was the way to solve the housing problem surely Sweden would be that nation. Nevertheless I know from personal experience, having visited that country in 1962, that the one complaint one heard there over and over again was that the government had not been able to meet the housing needs of that nation. Five years later we see that the situation there is worsening and that a way has not yet been found through the methods of socialism to solve their housing crisis. So it rings a little false in our ears when we hear pleas that the government should become involved in public housing.

We welcome the changes in the Bank Act which will allow the chartered banks to move into this area of money supply, and we hope that this will provide the housing industry what it has wanted for so long, a continuous and uninterrupted flow of mortgage money which will not be an instrument of monetary policy in the country but will guarantee a base from which that industry can plan and develop and use methods of production which are appropriate at this time.

There is one matter in the Bank Act which occupied a great deal of the committee's time and concerns us very much. I refer to the question of the interest rate. This is the really basic point of contention in the whole bill. This subject occupied much of the committee's time in its debate about commodities. The argument was advanced that if the prices of all commodities were increasing then the price of money had to go up as well. An analogy was drawn between the two, and there was a reason for that. Witnesses representing the chartered banks complained that they were limited in ways which the near banks were not and that this was related to the problem of the interest rate. They asked that the restrictions on the chartered banks be removed so they could raise the interest rate on loans. It was suggested that if the interest rate were raised they would be able to pay a higher interest rate on deposits, thereby attracting more deposits, and this way they would have more money to lend.

What should be kept in mind in this whole discussion of the interest rate is that the mechanics which I have spelled out do not in any way increase the money supply. This would remain constant. All it means is that the amount of money lent by the various institutions will be divided amongst them differently. If the banks are in a position to lend more, then somebody else will be lending less, but the over-all amount of money that will be lent will not be increased as the result of an increase in the interest rate.

An interesting fact I should like to mention is that this statement was made to us by representatives of the banks as a factual matter. They said that the simple truth was that if the banks could attract more deposits they could lend more money; if they could pay a higher interest rate they could attract more deposits and therefore the interest rate they could charge on their loans should be raised so as to attract more deposits. This was presented to us as a fact about which no questions should or could be asked.

Nevertheless questions have been asked. There is an important article in the Canadian Journal of Economics of August, 1966 which does ask questions with regard to the interest rate. The preamble to the article sets out the reason why the study was made, and I would like to quote from it at some length because I think it is important to the whole argument concerning the interest rate. It reads as follows:

> The primary purpose of this article is to perform a statistical test of the popular contention that interest rate differentials have been important determinants of the relative decline of the Canadian chartered banks in the competition for personal savings deposits. The report of the royal commission on banking and finance, in listing the various factors that influence the distribution of savings deposits among depository institutions, stated that, "the rate paid on deposits is also a very important factor in attracting funds . . ." The commission also commented that the fact that the banks have not paid as high rates as their competitors on personal savings deposits "has without question contributed to their relatively slow rate of growth." In support of these assertions the commission stated that, "there is evidence suggesting the force of interest rate competition. As an example, market rates and rates paid on such claims as trust and loan company liabilities rose quite sharply in 1959 while the banks' rate held steady as 2¾ per cent. In that year the share of personal savings deposits in the 'market' . . . declined more sharply than in previous years."
> The commission's evidence, it may be suggested, falls into the post hoc ergo propter hoc category. For example, the fact that the number of trust company outlets increased 5.3 per cent during 1958-59, compared to only 0.2 per cent on the average during the previous six year period, can just as easily be presented as the reason for the relative increase of trust company savings in 1959.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The study goes on at some length, and with considerable mathematical ability, to analyse the question to see whether these statistics could produce any conclusions regarding the ability of the chartered banks to attract deposits as opposed to credit unions or trust companies attracting deposits. I will omit the central material and go to the conclusions because I think they are important to the argument I am making.

> The principal conclusion to be drawn from this analysis is that a substantial portion of the ability of credit unions and trust companies to compete successfully with chartered banks for personal savings deposits is attributable to product competition (through shifts in demand) rather than price competition. This suggests not only that the rates of interest paid on personal savings deposits may not be "very important" in contributing to the relative decline of chartered banks, but also that there may even be some question whether they have contributed to the decline at all.

Admittedly, and the author of the article admits it, the study is a tentative one. However, the point I make is that the study has been made and it has been made of Canadian institutions. When I inquired of the Bankers Association whether they had made any comparable studies, the answer was no. They had handed us an idea which, in spite of the Porter commission, can be questioned. There is serious doubt as to the validity of the entire argument presented by the Bankers Association in this field. I do not believe that the Bankers Association wishes to eliminate the finance companies from the Canadian scene. I suspect that they would not mind at all removing the credit unions from the Canadian scene in any way open to them. I doubt that they want to remove the trust companies because the chartered banks themselves are involved in the trust companies too heavily to wish to see them go.

At the same time I doubt that the chartered banks are at all interested in taking over the type of unsecured, high risk loan which the finance companies at present make. When I asked the banks if they would not prefer to see some ceiling put on the interest rates that could be charged by other institutions rather than have their interest rates set, they said no, they were not interested in that kind of control of other institutions. What they are interested in is the profit picture of the chartered banks. This, I would contend in spite of much of what was presented to us as evidence, is a far better picture than the evidence was supposed to convey to the members of the committee. Although the profit picture of some of the near banks is still ahead of that of the chartered banks, they have been coming together steadily and consistently over the last ten years and it will not be too far in the future when they will be comparable again without any change at all in the interest rate. When I asked Mr. Paton, who was appearing for the Bankers Association, if the profit position was satisfactory when compared with that of the near banks, his reply was that "a profit position can always be improved."

I should like to spend a little time on the question of the legislation as it relates to the Mercantile Bank of Canada. This is something that concerns the members of this house because it represents the Canadian government taking very strong, very deliberate action involving a chartered bank and setting very sharply a new set of regulations under which one of the chartered banks can operate in this country. In many ways I think this is the kind of firmness toward a chartered bank that Social Credit has expected of Canadian governments for many years but which has not been applied. Of course there is a difference here because this particular bank happens to be owned by United States interests.

We should not really forget the history of this event or the basic factor in the whole issue, namely, that the bank was purchased by the City Bank of New York from the original Dutch owners, so it was already in foreign hands. I should like to refer to the rather outstanding contribution to the committee that was made by the hon. member for York-Humber on the last day that representatives from the City Bank of New York and the Mercantile Bank were before us. The questioning came very late in the day and was totally unreported in the Canadian press, but it did a great deal to set in focus the important elements. This questioning was not reported in the press because at the moment the press of Canada prefers the black blacks and white whites of anti-Americanism and pseudo-patriotism. It is much easier to deal with than the very complex question of relating economically to our enormous neighbour to the south.

Some very interesting remarks were made yesterday by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I am sure hon. members who listened must have thought he wandered far afield when he dealt at great length with the state owned bank in Australia as an example of nationalized banking as some sort of panacea for the economic ailments of the country. Then he was able to turn his argument to the question of the Mercantile Bank. Again, he was developing a very religious argument on behalf of state socialism with a faith which I think I could describe, Mr. Chairman, as touching. However, I am convinced that the platitudes of socialism remain platitudes whether they come from the land of the platypus or any other part of the world or whether it is the home grown variety that we have witnessed in the province of Saskatchewan.

What he was able to do with that carefully turned argument was to present to the minister a finely polished stone to kill two birds. He not only presented the stone to the minister but he also plucked both birds in advance. If the minister were to follow the advice of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands he could reap all of the political benefits of being anti-American at the present time and also thrust socialism into the Canadian economy at one of the most crucial points.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I feel there is one section in the Bank Act that is of great importance, and I refer to the amendments in the new legislation preventing the chartered banks from combining, co-operating and joining together to set interest rates. One is given cause to wonder why this provision is there. Has the minister become sufficiently certain of the future to suspect that this is going to happen? Somehow I doubt that he has the omniscience in regard to the future that the legislation would suggest. If he was so certain of the future I am sure he would never be involved in any conflict with his colleague the Minister without Portfolio.

I suspect that the legislation makes this provision because of what has happened in the past. As I say, it is very difficult to bring forward any evidence to prove that the chartered banks have combined to set interest rates in the past. Yet the provision is there, apparently as a purely preventative measure. I know how very difficult it is to obtain the sort of evidence that is necessary to convict Canadian companies under our anti-combines legislation. It is almost impossible to gather data that is sufficiently definitive to bring about a conviction, and I am sure it would be even more difficult to prove that the chartered banks of Canada had conspired to set an interest rate. Although in a way the legislation is a good thing—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, if I may have the indulgence of the Chair and of the committee, I have almost finished my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Johnston: May I just say that I think this provision represents a bit of wishful thinking on the part of the minister and the government and I do not think that the Canadian people will be beguiled by it when the bill is passed by the house, as I am sure it will be. I doubt that any case could ever be launched under this provision when it is passed, and certainly no case could be brought to the point where a conviction would be secured.

We have heard in this chamber an attack on co-operatives, an attack against those producers at the primary level who have banded together in order to provide themselves with a more sustained income than they could ever receive with each trying to market his product individually. I suggest that one of the real causes of high prices in Canada has been the combining of companies at the top level. One of the continuing problems in the Canadian economic system has been the power of the chartered banks to come to mutually favourable decisions through consultation one with another. I doubt that this legislation, good as its intentions may be, will ever end this situation.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to add my thanks to those which have already been expressed for the wonderful co-operation given the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs in the study of Bill No. C-190, an act to amend the Bank of Canada Act, Bill No. C-222, an act respecting banks and banking and Bill No. C-223, an act respecting savings banks in the province of Quebec, by the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp), and his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Chrétien), by Mr. Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, and by the deputy governors, by Mr. Maurice Ollivier, law clerk and parliamentary counsel, as well as by officials of the public service, namely Mr. C. F. Elderkin, special adviser to the Department of Finance and former inspector general of banks, to whom the committee is greatly indebted, Mr. J. W. Ryan, of the Department of Justice, and Mr. W. K. Scott, inspector general of banks.

I also wish to thank the persons, groups and associations who willingly made known their views on those various bills, the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) and the deputy chairman, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) and our dedicated secretary of the committee, Miss Dorothy Ballantyne, our researchers, Miss M. R. Prentis and Mr. Denis Baribeau, our interpreters and translators, in short, the whole staff assigned to the preparation of the minutes of proceedings and evidence.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I also feel bound to point out the effective work performed by committee members and by other colleagues who took part in this decennial review.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to submit an analysis of Bill No. C-222, an act respecting banks and banking. Financial systems all over the world have experienced a record increase in the demand and the resultant upward trends of the rate of interest.

It is customary in Canada to effect every ten years a thorough study of the country's banking legislation and to renew bank charters.

On October 18, 1961, was set up a royal commission under the chairmanship of Chief Justice Dana Porter on our banking and financial system. In the spring of 1964, on April 24, the commission published a far-reaching report on its work and studies.

Several recommendations were made and I believe the main recommendations are the following: greater competition between our banking and financial institutions to give an adequate choice to the borrowers or the depositors; allow the banks to lend on ordinary mortgages; eliminate the ceiling on the interest rates; disclosure of the actual total costs of loans or advances; greater disclosure of the accumulated reserves for losses on loans and investments; allow the banks to raise capital through sale of non-guaranteed bonds; opening in Canada of agencies such as Canadian banks have in New York and in San Francisco, U.S.A.

Mr. Chairman, as for greater competition, the commission recommends that the Minister of Finance and Receiver General be given the powers to prevent agreements between banking institutions on loans and borrowing. Clause 138 provides for the prohibition of such agreements.

As for the right of banking institutions to have common directors, subclauses 6 (b) and 7 (c) of clause 18 govern their number and eligibility.

Furthermore, the commission recommends a limitation of the powers of banking institutions to invest in non-banking and non-financial institutions. Subject to certain provisions, clause 76 of the bill respecting banks and banking restricts such participation to 10 per cent.

The introduction of banks into the field of ordinary mortgages should increase the supply of mortgage money and relieve the need for borrowers to apply to a more onerous market for second mortgage loans.

Mr. Chairman, here are some comments from the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance.

The commission says, on page 364 of its report:

> At the same time, the entry of the chartered banks into conventional residential lending would do much to improve this part of the capital market: access to mortgage security would enable the banks to improve their service to business borrowers, particularly smaller enterprises.

On page 367 the commission adds:

> If it is demonstrated, however, that bank lending in this area would have so sudden an impact on other lenders as to hinder the long-run objective of developing a larger group of well-established banking institutions, some temporary limit might be placed on the annual rate of conventional residential lending by the present chartered banks.

Clause 75 of this bill gives to the banks the power to make conventional mortgage lending subject to the limitations of subclauses (3) and (4) of that clause.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to the removal of the interest rate ceiling, clause 91 of this bill for the time being, brings only a certain relaxation of the ceiling; it provides for its removal when the general level of interest rates has appreciably decreased.

I think that it is better to have a transitional period in order to avoid doubts, apprehensions which might result from the removal of the ceiling at the height of a period of tension.

The Porter commission brought forward some arguments in that respect, and I now take the liberty of quoting a few. On page 364, the commission said:

> The prohibition on conventional mortgage lending by chartered banks and the interest rate ceiling are the most serious barriers to free market forces in the present chartered banking legislation.

Again on page 364, the commission said:

> We recommend that it be removed regardless of other changes in the legislation. The ceiling stands in the way of flexible lending by the banks in that it frequently prevents them from making loans on which higher rates must be charged to cover administrative costs and risks.
>
> Obviously, this is to the banks' disadvantage; more importantly, however, it discriminates against borrowers such as small businesses which, if they are to obtain funds at all, must turn to other lenders which charge rates well above those the banks would ask if free to do so.

On the same page, the commission recommends:

The removal of those two restrictions, that is the 6 per cent interest rate ceiling and the prohibition on mortgage lending by the banks, because they interfere with competition, they decrease the supply of essential financial services and force the borrowers to apply for funds to costly sources.

Again on page 364, the commission said:

When market rates are high, banks would undoubtedly raise their own lending charges but the force of competition and the higher deposit rates necessary to attract funds would temper the tendency for bank earnings to rise and thus limit the amount of additional business they are able to obtain.

Also on page 364:

As already noted, the banks have only been able to compete in the personal instalment loan market —in which they have substantially improved the facilities and lowered the average cost of funds.

With regard to the disclosure of real and total borrowing charges on a loan or an advance, clauses 92 and 93 will oblige the banks to do so when they issue credit to a person with regard to loans or advances payable in Canada, or will give a person a loan or an advance payable in Canada.

Clause 60, subclause 2, paragraph (c) and the new Schedule "P" will oblige the banks to disclose to their shareholders, the Minister of Finance and the general public, their reserve accumulated for losses on loans and investments. Also clause 60, subclause 2, paragraphs (a) and (b), clauses 103 and 106 and the amended Schedules M, N, O and Q will submit more information on revenues, expenses, assets, liabilities, accumulated credits, to cover losses incurred by the bank on its investments and loans profits not carried, and those statements, will go either to the Minister of Finance or to the general inspector of banks, or to the shareholders and the public.

If the Canadian parliament passes clause 77 as it appears in the reprinted Bill No. C-222, banks will be authorized to issue unsecured bonds.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Clause 88(5)(b) of Bill No. C-222, read for the first time on July 7, 1966, reads as follows:

—claims not exceeding five thousand dollars in any one case for money owing by a manufacturer to a grower of perishable products of agriculture that are direct products of the soil for such products grown by the grower on land owned or leased by him and delivered to the manufacturer during the said period of three months—

Mr. Chairman, this same clause as amended adds the dairy products to the perishable products, and the maximum has been raised from $5,000 to $7,500. The period that immediately precedes the date when this order has been made or this assignment completed will be six months instead of three.

As regards the establishment of agencies in Canada, I agree with the views expressed in the 22nd report of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, tabled in the house on Friday, March 10, 1967.

Mr. Chairman, several other questions were examined and discussed before the committee, as for instance the definition of banking operations and of the dividing line that should be drawn between banks and other institutions. In this connection, following the evidence given by a witness who had just expresed his views concerning the definition of banking operations, I remember having said the following:

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the members who were in charge of the 1954 decennial revision acted in a wise and practical way when they gave the following definition of a bank: Bank means a bank referred to in Schedule A, to which this act applies (Section 2, subsection 1, paragraph (c) and Section 4, paragraph (a). The Porter commission says the following, concerning such a definition, on page 411:

—As far as we have been able to determine, Canada is not alone, for we have not come across an exact definition of banking in the statutes of any country, in view of the difficulties of a narrower definition.

As regards activities of foreign banks in Canada, the committee held several meetings in that connection. Our banking legislation never stipulated anything concerning the establishment of agencies in Canada, even though Canadian banks have an important volume of business operations abroad. At present, the legislation concerning banks and banking operations does not prevent any foreign bank or any other group of non residents from acquiring a majority percentage or all the shares of an existing Canadian bank or applying to the Canadian parliament for a new charter. I should like to quote some comments of the Porter commission as found on page 374 of the report.

Ownership of one bank by another is a somewhat different matter. While this has been prohibited among Canadian chartered banks, and should continue to be, no such prohibition applies to the acquisition of part or all of a Canadian bank's capital by foreign banks. Of course, if foreign banking interests want to establish a new bank in Canada, they—like any other group—are required to obtain Treasury Board approval. However, there is no provision for the authorities to control in any way their buying stock in an existing bank and thus acquiring an established position in the Canadian banking system. Having regard to the large concentrations of economic and financial power which are sometimes centered in large foreign banks, we regard this as an anomaly which should be corrected.

As concerns the purchase of a majority of shares by residents or non residents, the provisions of Clause 54, sub-clause 2 of this bill would prohibit such a purchase.

"Subclause (2) of clause 56 provides as follows, with regard to a non-resident, a group of non-residents or a foreign bank which held stock on September 22, 1964."

Where more than fifty per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of the bank were held on the 22nd day of September, 1964 in the name or right of or for the use or benefit of one non-resident, sections 53 and 54 do not apply to or in respect of the bank; but if at any time thereafter there is no one person in whose name or right or for whose use or benefit more than ten per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of the bank are held, those sections apply from and after that time to and in respect of the bank.

And the following amendment was approved by the committee:

Where more than twenty-five per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of the bank were held on the 22nd day of September, 1964, in the name or right of or for the use or benefit of any one non-resident, the bank, so long as the total number of shares of the capital stock of the bank held by non-residents exceeds twenty-five per cent of the total number of issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of the the bank,

(a) shall refuse to allow a transfer of a share of the capital stock of the bank to a non-resident to be made or recorded in a register of transfers of the bank unless the transfer is from a non-resident and to any associates of the non-resident; and

(b) shall not accept a subscription for a share of the capital stock of the bank by a non-resident; but if at any time after the 22nd day of September, 1964, there is no one person in whose name or right or for whose use or benefit more than ten per cent of the issued and outstanding shares of the capital stock of the bank are held, this subsection ceases thereafter to have any force or effect.

Note that should this amendment be passed by parliament, it will no longer be possible for the First National City Bank to dispose of 75 per cent of its shares in the Mercantile Bank of Canada to enable the latter to increase the amount of its total assets (including paid up capital, general reserve and undistributed profits) to more than 20 times its authorized capital to other non-residents, whereas it could so at the present time.

The committee also approved an amendment to section 75 (2) (g) which is very important. It was moved by a government member, seconded by a member of the opposition and unanimously endorsed by the committee.

Clause 72 will change the amount of cash reserve of the bank, which is now the equivalent of 8 per cent of its deposit liabilities and which is payable on demand, in Canadian currency, to make it 12 per cent of its deposit liabilities, which is payable on demand in Canadian currency, and 4 per cent of its deposit liabilities, which is payable after notice in Canadian currency; this gives an average of about 6.6 per cent.

That cash reserve which the bank has to maintain according to subclause 1 of clause 72,—during any month following the 12th month posterior to the coming into force of the present bill, if the Bank of Canada so requires, must not be inferior on the average during each of these two separate periods constituted, the first one by the first 15 days of the said month and, the second, by the remaining days of the said month.

If the Bank of Canada so requires, the bank shall maintain, in addition to its cash reserve, a secondary reserve.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. members to read—as the member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) has also suggested—the recommendations of the 22nd report of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, tabled on March 10, 1967.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, as has been indicated by my hon. friend from Perth and again by the hon. member for Labelle, the committee met on some 70 occasions, as reflected in about 36 reports of its proceedings, to consider Bills C-222 and C-223.

It is true there were some odd interludes at times and one in particular which I thought was out of place. Somehow or other, because the committee happened to be sitting it was felt that it should be used as a forum for the airing of private views with regard to internal matters in connection with a chartered bank. I trust that particular incident will not serve as a precedent for any other type of organization which may be remotely connected with finance, trade and economic affairs, and that committees will not be used to provide a forum for the settlement of domestic disputes. Such a practice ought to be stringently applied by other committees of the house, including that on broadcasting.

I would add my words to those of the hon. member for Labelle with respect to the good working spirit that developed among the members of the standing committee, and I particularly want to commend the work of the chairman. Sometimes it is a little difficult to work under certain chairmen but as a result of our protracted hearings on this very important bill a good working relationship developed between the Chair and committee members, and I want to be among the first to congratulate the hon. member for Essex West on his performance as chairman, sometimes under rather difficult and enthusiastic conditions. I hope we will be able to continue with him in that position for some limited time anyway. I shall not wish him a long tenure of office because others might object to that.

I would like to point out to this chamber and to the country the value of the hearings that were held on this important legislation. This is the decennial revision of the Bank Act. To those who would say that committee hearings are of little or no value I would point out that the work of our standing committee gives the lie in their teeth. As a result of the committee hearings the government has proposed some 70 or 80 amendments to the bill. I do not say this is entirely to the credit of the government, considering that the present Bank Act has been in existence since 1954, that there were numerous hearings held by the Porter royal commission, and that the government put forward its proposals originally in Bill C-102. One must presume that the government's thinking had matured when it reached the point of presenting Bill C-102 but, lo and behold, that bill was never discussed in this house and now we are faced with Bill C-222 which in many respects is a radical departure from some of the proposals in Bill C-102.

Because of that I trust the Minister of Finance has urged his erstwhile predecessor and now new colleague, the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Davenport, to participate actively in the debate on this bill. I am not trying to be facetious or to promote mischief when I say so. The hon. member for Davenport had definite ideas about controlling banks and about the development of banking in Canada. These ideas were evidenced in Bill C-102. But since that time many changes have taken place respecting incorporation, certain types of control, shareholdings, the limitation on the interest rate ceiling and a number of other features. These changes are reflected in Bill C-222 and we are entitled to know why these changes have been made in this legislation.

The hon. member for Davenport was in the chamber a few moments ago but slipped away. I had hoped he would stay to hear my direct invitation to him to participate in the debate at the appropriate stages because I want to get the benefit of his thinking, particularly in view of the fact that he is the chairman of a committee inquiring into the extent of foreign holdings in Canada.

There is controversy within the government on how clause 75(2)(g) should be modified, as to how far the Mercantile Bank of Canada should be Canadianized, and as to how far the proposed provisions Canadianize our Canadian banks. This new legislation will be in force for ten years and therefore we should hear these conflicting points of view to determine their value before the house makes its final decision on the legislation.

I regret that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is not in his seat today. Yesterday we had the benefit of hearing his views, and I must say I was disappointed. Since he has served for two sessions as a member of the banking committee I thought the hon. member would have lost his doctrinaire approach to banking and the fetish he seems to possess with respect to nationalization of our banking system. I must confess that he left me behind a long time ago with his tortuous thinking in regard to the nationalization of the banking system and the advantages he claims would accrue to the country if banks were nationalized.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member for York South can bide his time. I have but 20 minutes in which to speak.

Mr. Lewis: Then may I rise on a point of order?

Mr. Lambert: A point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, sir. My point of order is that the hon. member for Edmonton West is misrepresenting what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has said. He never suggested nationalizing the banking system. He was talking about taking over the Mercantile Bank.

Mr. Lambert: If I may say so, Mr. Chairman, if ever there was a spurious point of order this is one. In fact it is an argument which the hon. member can put forward when he participates in the debate.

Mr. Lewis: Would the hon. member allow me the floor to ask a question?

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member does not have the right to the floor to ask a question. I have had the privilege of sitting on the banking committee much oftener than the member for York South and I have heard enough asides from his colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, to suggest that there is more than just the Mercantile Bank within his gunsights when he is talking about nationalization.

I must express, as I did in the standing committee, extreme disappointment with this legislation. As I say, the Bank Act has been in force since 1954 and we have seen the development of banking practices and of near banking practices since that time. Further, the Porter royal commission held many hearings and produced a monumental report which contained one key recommendation. It was not its most important recommendation but it was part of the central core of a package deal, and that was the control over near banks. Bill C-102 proposed nothing with regard to near banks and Bill C-222 does nothing with regard to them.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Lambert: The minister will have plenty of time to speak. I have only 20 minutes at my disposal. I can resume this theme if he wishes. I hope we will have a healthy exchange of views, but if the minister will only contain his impatience he will get the true perspective of what I want to say.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I would think the control of near banks could be efficient under the act and its regulations as they now exist. Regardless of where these near banks are located it is obvious that provisions for inspection and control will not be the same as those which apply to the commercial and private banking system in this country. The act could have been divided into two parts. The first part could apply to commercial banks and the second part could apply to near banks. Instead of that we have suffered financial crises, strong pressures from external forces and three changes of mind on the part of the government in respect of deposit insurance. The government has also said that deposit insurance is an interim measure and we must look at the situation regarding agencies operating in Canada with a view to providing certain specific regulations. All I can say is, this is a terrible way to run the store. This is a slipshod practice. We are applying one plaster to another, putting one bandage on another, with the hope that the wound will cure itself.

It has always been my belief that with an appropriate definition of the business of banking we could have a great deal more control. The act indulges in the luxury of using the term "business of banking" and states that no one can commence the business of banking until certain things happen. What is the business of banking? The act is strangely silent. It says one must not indulge in certain practices until something happens but it does not say what that practice may be.

Many people have suggested that it would be difficult to define banking. Some are afraid to define banking at this time because such a definition might not cover the practices of dealing with the credit and money deposits which may exist in 1970. Someone in some court might say that the 1970 practices did not exist in 1967. It is argued for this reason that it would be difficult or imprudent to confine the practice of banking to a certain definition.

It is my suggestion that it is within the realm of human possibility to define banking in such a way that the definition will grow and change with circumstances. Let me refer hon. members to certain precise definitions of banking and the practices of banking. Before doing so let me say that I am concerned about definitions in respect of banks, banking, interest and currency because jurisdiction in this regard is confined to the federal level by the British North America Act. The federal government has exclusive jurisdiction to deal with these matters. Provincial governments have at different times attempted to assert some authority in this field. The province of Alberta, under the excessive zeal of the Social Credit administration, attempted to do a number of things regarding credit. It was finally decided that the province could not carry out these things because they were outside the jurisdiction of a provincial administration.

Let me refer the members of this committee to a definition of banking by Professor E. P. Neufeld:

> —a bank is certainly a financial intermediary, and that a financial intermediary is a bank to the extent that it accepts deposits and to the extent that these deposits are used directly or indirectly as a medium of exchange; directly in the sense that cheques can be written against them, and indirectly in the sense that they may be moved very freely into cash or cheques or orders which are drawn against chequable accounts, and the question really is do the non-banks have deposits of this kind in sufficient size to justify their being controlled?

That could not be accepted as a judicial definition of banking, but certainly any institution whose deposits or liabilities enter the stream of credit or as a form of exchange is engaged in banking.

What actually forms the basis for a definition of banks and banking institutions? Regardless of parentage, if institutions engage in the practices of banking then they must conform to federal regulations in the same way that broadcasting companies and air line companies must conform to federal regulations. Air line companies may have provincial charters but they cannot purchase aircraft unless they have a certificate of airworthiness from the federal authority. They cannot put a radio in an aircraft unless they have a licence from the federal authority. They cannot fly the aircraft unless they conform to federal regulations. There are no provincial regulations of any kind in this regard. I submit to the committee that the argument that because trust companies or other companies have provincial charters they are ipso facto under the full control of the provincial authority thus falls to the ground.

Let us look at some of the traditional definitions of banking. Going back some distance in time, Halsbury's Laws of England, third edition, page 151, defines the business of banking as the receipt of money on current or deposit accounts and the payment of cheques drawn by, and the collection of cheques paid in by, a customer. Then let us look at the definition by the appeal court in a Canadian case. The Privy Council stated:

> The legislative authority conferred by these words—

They were referring to the words of section 91 of the British North America Act concerning banking.

> —is not confined to the mere constitution of corporate bodies with the privilege of carrying on the business of bankers. It extends to the issue of paper currency, which necessarily means the creation of a species of personal property carrying with it rights and privileges which the law of the province does not, and cannot, attach to it. It also comprehends "banking" an expression which is wide enough to embrace every transaction coming within the legitimate business of banker.

This definition was given in the case of Tennant v. The Union Bank of Canada (1894) Appeal Cases, at page 31. I have quoted this definition given in 1894 to deal with the argument that a definition shall fix the entire ambit of banking. Let us consider another case much closer in time which was heard in the late 1930's. This was the reference on the Alberta statutes, reported in Supreme Court Reports (1938), at page 100, and affirmed by the Privy Council in Appeal Cases (1939), at page 117. In the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada Mr. Justice Duff said:

> First, as to banking. A banker has been defined as "a dealer in credit". True, in ordinary speech, bank credit implies a credit which is convertible into money. But money as commonly understood is not necessarily legal tender. Any medium which by practice fulfils the function of money and which everybody will accept in payment of a debt is money in the ordinary sense of the words even although it may not be legal tender; and this statute envisages a form of credit which will ultimately, in Alberta, acquire such a degree of confidence as to be generally acceptable, in the sense that bank credit is now acceptable; and will serve as a substitute therefor.

There is a further case on this point, the Attorney General for Canada v. the Attorney General for the province of Quebec. It was heard in 1947 and was one of the last references placed before the Privy Council. It is interesting to note that in 1947 the province of Quebec purported to legislate an act respecting certain vacant property without owner. The purpose was to deal with deposits with the chartered banks which had been untouched, unreferred to and were really considered to be abandoned after a period of 30 years of inactivity. The province of Quebec legislated to the effect that they should now become vacant and fall to His Majesty the King in right of the province of Quebec. The provincial act provided that whenever deposits of money and of securities and all credits in specie or in securities in credit institutions and all other establishments which receive funds or securities on deposit have not been for 30 years or more the subject of any operation or claim by the persons entitled thereto, they, with the fruits thereof, are to be deemed to be vacant property and without an owner, belonging to His Majesty in right of the province. This is what the court said:

> The matter which their lordships have to determine is accordingly whether the transaction of receiving from depositors bank deposits and repaying those deposits to the depositors, comes within the legitimate business of a banker. Prima facie it does—

The judgment continues as follows:

> In their view, a provincial legislature enters on the field of banking when it interferes with the right of depositors to receive payment of their deposits, as in their view it would if it confiscated loans made by a bank to its customers.

Here their lordships were citing the former Alberta case.

> Both are in a sense matters of property and civil rights, but in essence they are included within the category of banking.

In this regard I would say that the proposals announced today with regard to certain taxes on banking profits under the guise of deposit insurance could run up against this particular case. I am just making an observation at this stage, Mr. Chairman, that I think the legislation may be in for a rough passage. I should like to conclude this stage of my remarks by referring again to what the Privy Council had to say in connection with the Alberta reference.

> The question, therefore, is whether operations of this sort fall within the connotation of "banking" as that word is used in section 91 of the British North America Act. Their lordships entertain no doubt that such operations are covered by the term "banking" in section 91. The question is not what was the extent and kind of business actually carried on by banks in Canada in 1867, but what is the meaning of the term itself in the act. To take what may seem a frivolous analogy, if "skating" was one of the matters to which the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extended, it would be nothing to the point to prove that only one style of skating was practised in Canada in 1867 and to argue that the exclusive power to legislate in respect of subsequently developed styles of skating was not expressly conferred on the central legislature. Other illustrations may be drawn from section 91 as it stands: take, for example, head 5, "Postal Services". In 1867 postal services in Canada were rendered by the help of land vehicles, but nobody could contend that the modern use of aeroplanes for carrying mail is, on that account, not within the phrase. The concept of banking certainly includes the granting of credit by banks; "a banker," as Chief Justice Duff said in dealing with the Alberta legislation reference, "has been defined as 'a dealer in credit'." Whether the expansion of credit now effected by bankers' advances is regarded as wise or unwise, as just or unjust, as economically desirable or economically unjustifiable, does not, in the view of their lordships, affect the point here at issue at all. If it is fairly included within the conception of "banking" it is a matter exclusively reserved for the legislature of Canada.

I apologize to hon. members of the committee for making these rather extensive references to judicial definitions of banking. I do so because there have been so many arguments advanced as to the difficulty of a statutory definition of banking and as to the wisdom of incorporating within the Bank Act a definition of banking. For this reason I felt constrained to say that those arguments have no basis and it would have been far more preferable for the government to have defined banking within section 2 of the act and not leave it to one of the anterior sections to simply say that one must not use the terms "bank" or "banking" and that is the only prohibition. Therefore the act could have been constituted differently and we could have had proper control of banking practices in this country where it belongs, under the aegis of the parliament of Canada. Any institution that wanted to enter this particular field would then have had to submit to proper control. It is only in this way that the Minister of Finance will be able to control the monetary destiny of this country.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, a comparison of this bank bill with the 1964 Porter report on banking and finance establishes that the bill will mark a major step toward the more creative, competitive and efficient banking system which was the objective of the Porter recommendations.

This revision of the Bank Act was originally introduced in May, 1965 by the former minister of finance. It was reintroduced in substantially the same terms earlier this session by the present Minister of Finance. The basic principles have been fully discussed at the resolution stage and on second reading, and a particularly thorough and helpful review was conducted by the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs which met under the able gavel of its chairman, the hon, member for Essex West, and its vice chairman, the hon. member for Québec-Montmorency.

Tributes have been paid from all sides of the house to the effective and non-partisan work of the finance committee. I will not repeat them except to say that I believe that most members of the finance committee are convinced as a result of their experience that the new committee system can perform a most valuable function in helping to make parliament an effective instrument of action and reform, which is the objective of all members of the house. In the course of the prolonged committee hearings there was an almost complete lack of active partisanship, and throughout the hearings the issues were examined in a rational and constructive manner by committee members of all parties.

This bill has reached its present stage after a very long process of careful consideration. Indeed, the hon, member for Perth has complained about the delay. The time has been well spent. Banking is basic and vital to our economy. We were wise to proceed with care.

The hon. members for Perth and Edmonton West have attacked the bill because it does not cover near banks. The near banks could not be dealt with in this decennial revision for practical reasons which I will mention a little later. My personal opinion is that they should be covered in the next decennial revision. Under the B.N.A. Act, parliament undoubtedly has exclusive jurisdiction over banking. The Porter commission recommended that the banking operations of all these corporations should be subject to federal regulation. This has not been done under this bill. The deposit insurance legislation passed this session will be of great help but it will not provide the entire answer. Indeed it is a startling fact which no member of this house should forget, that the Bank Act does not control any corporation, federal, provincial or foreign, carrying on banking provided it does not call itself a bank. I think something should be done about this but, as I said, for practical reasons I do not think it can be done in this decennial revision.

Certainly it is difficult to develop a completely accurate definition of banking, and we must guard against invalidating our important banking legislation by going too far and exceeding our jurisdiction. It seems to me that we could avoid all such technical legal difficulties by requiring all corporations carrying on banking within the meaning of the B.N.A. Act to obtain a licence under the federal Bank Act. If a particular corporation disagreed with the department on whether it was carrying on banking within the meaning of the B.N.A. Act, the issue would be determined by the courts. By making decisions in specific cases the courts would in time develop a satisfactory definition of banking within the meaning of the B.N.A. Act. For this reason I am not sure that we need a statutory definition of banking as suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Our financial legislation since confederation has tended to divide and isolate our financial institutions in separate compartments —chartered banks, trust companies, insurance companies, finance companies, and many others. Rapidly changing conditions have rendered this technique obsolete. Their functions overlap, and in order to remain competitive with other countries we must be prepared to break down the watertight compartments. This was recognized and recommended by the Porter commission. However, as I have said, this principle could not be made effective in this decennial revision. Before the numerous and various types of corporations now carrying on banking functions in Canada are made subject to federal banking regulations we must make sure we are in a position to enforce the highest standards of responsibility and inspection and to maintain effective monetary control of our economy. This is of prime importance and must not be sacrificed under any circumstances.

If all these corporations are to be made subject to the Bank Act, presumably they must have essentially all the rights and obligations of chartered banks such as the security provisions under clause 88, or else it should be abolished altogether. They must have access to the Bank of Canada as lender of last resort. They must have clearing house privileges and all the other special privileges of chartered banks. Similarly, they would be required to maintain cash reserves with the Bank of Canada and presumably be subject to restrictions as to interlocking directorates and ownership and control in the same way as are the chartered banks. The problems involved here are not problems of theory nor are they constitutional problems. They are very practical problems. They are not insoluble, but they could not be solved in time for this decennial revision. They should be tackled, in my opinion, in the next decennial revision.

Up to the present time we have had a nice cosy club in Canada limited to eight chartered banks, the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance. There has been the utmost co-operation among the chartered banks and the Bank of Canada in monetary policy. Their informal methods have worked well because there are only a few people involved who know each other well and are on a first name basis. There are Earl and Allan and Arnold and Louis and Jean and Bill and Neil and a few others. They understand one another. It is true that Earl likes to talk and you can never be quite sure what he is going to say next. He even writes letters to members of parliament an unusual procedure and one which lowers the tone of the club a bit. However, he means well and it works out all right. It is a respectable, well padded, well tailored group and though it may amuse or annoy us at times, depending upon our temperaments, unquestionably this banking club or establishment has served Canada well up to the present time. The great majority of Canadians are proud of the Canadian banking system despite its many imperfections.

Will the system work equally well if the club is thrown wide open to an assorted group of trust companies, loan companies, mortgage companies, investment companies, finance companies and other companies carrying on miscellaneous banking activities and of varying sizes and financial responsibility? Where will the line be drawn? Will it be possible to reach quick and effective agreements and maintain proper monetary control under these circumstances? Clearly the practical problems are great. Nevertheless they must be solved. I am sure they will be solved. The day of the exclusive club is over. It must be thrown open and the winds of competition and change must be permitted to sweep through. This can be done.

It is clear from press reports and newspaper editorials that there is a great deal of misunderstanding about the provisions of the bill relating to take-overs of Canadian banks. One of the basic recommendations of the Porter commission was that action be taken to prevent foreign take-overs of Canadian financial institutions, particularly chartered banks. It is essential that control of these institutions should be retained in Canada. Moreover, to guarantee the independence of the chartered banks and to prevent undue concentration of financial power it is desirable to prevent any one corporation or group, whether Canadian or otherwise, from gaining control of a chartered bank by buying up its shares. These principles were expressed clearly in the house by the former minister of finance on September 22, 1964, when he said:

> It has been evident for several years that there has been increasing concern about the problem of retaining Canadian ownership and control of Canadian enterprises and in particular of our financial institutions ... The report of the royal commission on banking and finance published earlier this year also expressed concern about Canadian control of financial institutions, particularly banks ... Provisions relating to this matter ... will be included in the bills to amend the bank acts and these would also be effective after today to the extent that I have indicated for insurance, trust and loan companies.

These provisions were included in the original revision of the Bank Act introduced by the former minister of finance and reintroduced by the present Minister of Finance. Consistent with these principles, the bill provides in effect that if a Canadian chartered bank now has more than 25 per cent non-resident ownership, no transfers to non-residents will be permitted which will increase further the percentage of non-resident ownership. But if the percentage of non-resident ownership in a Canadian chartered bank is less than 25 per cent transfers to non-residents will be permitted unless the result would be to increase non-resident ownership to more than 25 per cent.

Moreover, these sections provide that if at the present time a Canadian chartered bank has more than 10 per cent of its shares owned by any person or group of related persons, then no additional transfers can be made to such persons which would increase the percentage which they own. But if there is no person or group of related persons who own 10 per cent of the stock of a Canadian chartered bank, then any transfers are permitted unless they would increase the holdings of any person or group above 10 per cent.

These provisions apply generally to all chartered banks, whether Canadian or foreign owned. They are not discriminatory. They apply equally to a Canadian owned bank as well as to Mercantile. They are not retroactive. They do not require non-resident ownership of a chartered bank to be reduced to 25 per cent if it is now over 25 per cent, nor do they require ownership by a single person or group to be reduced to 10 per cent if it is now over 10 per cent. If these limits are now exceeded they can stay that way whether the bank is the Royal, the Commerce, the Nova Scotia, the Mercantile or any other. But in future no transfers will be permitted which would increase such holdings further beyond those prescribed limits. I might add that, as hon. members know, bank stock is frequently held in the names of brokers, trustees or other agents, and in the past there has been no procedure for determining the names or residence of the owners of the stock. For this reason I do not believe we know for certain what percentage of the shares of our Canadian chartered banks are now owned beneficially by non-residents or by a single person or group.

This bill contains an additional provision which limits the total liabilities of a chartered bank to not more than 20 times its authorized capital stock. This provision applies only if more than 25 per cent of its issued shares are held by any one person or related group whether resident or non-resident. If enforced rigidly this provision might prevent the profitable growth of a bank, and in the case of a small or newly incorporated bank it might be desirable to have strong interests in control for a period of time until the bank became well established and able to compete on a fair basis with the other well established Canadian chartered banks. For example, the Bank of Western Canada has been given a ten year period within which to comply with this particular provision. When they appeared before the finance committee, officials of the Mercantile Bank argued strongly that this provision would prevent any further growth since Mercantile's liabilities already exceed slightly the prescribed amount. Citibank, the owner of Mercantile's outstanding shares, took the position that when it acquired the shares from the original Dutch owners in 1963 it did so quite legally and that it had no adequate warning of legislation to restrict Mercantile's growth before becoming firmly committed to the purchase. It claimed that this particular provision was retroactive, discriminatory and punitive.

As a result of questioning by members of the committee it became apparent that officials of Citibank knew or had good reason to suspect that the Canadian government was opposed to the acquisition before Citibank became firmly bound to proceed. In effect, the legislation gave Mercantile and its owners a number of options, either to reduce its non-resident ownership to 25 per cent or to remain at its present size or to have its future authorized capital, and therefore its size, strictly regulated by the Canadian government.

Members of the committee and the general public were, I believe, satisfied that in the circumstances these options were not retroactive, discriminatory or punitive but on the contrary were entirely fair. It was essential that the fairness of this legislation should be clearly established. Canada's growth and prosperity in the past have depended very substantially upon capital and technology from abroad. Our need for foreign capital and technology will not continue indefinitely but it will continue for many years. To develop our resources we will need for many years far more capital than we can provide from our own savings. I believe that this fact of life is accepted by all members of the house.

In recent years there has been a world wide shortage of capital, and interest rates and other costs of obtaining capital have therefore been high. Many countries are competing for the available development capital. Canada's ability to obtain such capital in the past on favourable terms has been based primarily upon the assurance that foreign investors are welcome here and that they will be treated fairly. It is perhaps just one application of a principle which has been established for at least 3,500 years, and is expressed in Leviticus, chapter 24, verse 22:

> Ye shall have one manner of law, as well for the stranger as for one of your own country.

The same idea, Mr. Chairman, is well expressed in a recent publication prepared by the director of the institute of intergovernmental relations as Queen's University for a leading financial house in Toronto. It reads:

> The most important thing in the long run is the atmosphere of confidence, or lack of it, that exists among foreign investors with reference to Canada's long-term status as a reliable place for investment. For a good many years now, this country has enjoyed an unexcelled reputation for stability and financial common sense.

When they were before the finance committee the Citibank officials said they had no intention of selling their Mercantile shares. They said it would not be responsible for them to place shares on the public market in Canada until the bank was in a more profitable position and was better established. They pointed out also that it would be difficult to carry on profitable operations and build up an earnings record which would be attractive to investors if their liabilities were restricted to 20 times their present authorized capital when other banks with which they had to compete could have liabilities of 40 or 50 times their authorized capital.

Since that time Citibank has changed its mind. It has indicated it is prepared to make shares of Mercantile available to Canadians. In view of this fact the committee recommended that the restriction on growth should become effective in 1972 rather than immediately in order to give Mercantile a five-year period to establish itself and build up an earnings record which would make it possible to market its shares successfully in Canada. In the result, if non-resident ownership of Mercantile is not reduced to 25 per cent by 1972 it will be necessary for Mercantile to comply with the growth restriction formula and to cut back its size. The finance committee believes that this provides a sufficient incentive to make orderly preparations during the five-year period for the sale of shares to Canadian residents.

This is a reasonable and fair approach. It has the advantage also that it will retain for Canada the benefits of increased competition in the Canadian banking system, which is greatly needed, and the valuable knowledge and experience which is provided by Mercantile and Citibank. In its third annual review the Economic Council of Canada said:

> It is clear that nothing quite compares with foreign competition as a limitation on the exercise of market power.

It was generally recognized throughout the finance committee hearings that an increase in competition in the banking business in Canada is highly desirable. We need more competition, more initiative, more daring, more new ideas and wider experience in the banking business in Canada. Mercantile can make a valuable contribution. For example, many members will have seen the report in the Globe and Mail of Friday, March 10. The caption reads "4½ Per Cent Interest is Offered by Mercantile". The report then reads:

> Mercantile is offering 4½ per cent annual interest on savings accounts that have no checking privileges. Withdrawals can be made only at the teller's window. The 4½ per cent is compounded quarterly on the minimum monthly balance...
> Mercantile, like Canadian owned banks, also has regular savings accounts which pay only 3 per cent yearly on the minimum quarterly balance and offer one free cheque per quarter for each $100 of minimum quarterly balance.

The 3 per cent interest rate paid on savings by the Canadian chartered banks is on the minimum quarterly balance. The Porter commission estimated that in 1961 the actual effective interest rate paid by Canadian chartered banks on savings deposits was only 2.21 per cent. With inflation at an annual rate of 3 per cent or 4 per cent, do Canadians have any incentive to save? Does it not make more sense to go out and buy goods, whether for cash or for credit, which will retain their value?

One of our great tasks in Canada is to mobilize the small savings of millions of Canadians for investment in our country, its resource development and its industrial growth. Parliament has given the chartered banks valuable special privileges and has permitted them to develop great branch networks which reach into every community in this country. The chartered banks therefore have an opportunity no one else has to mobilize the savings of Canadians for the task before us. They have a corresponding responsibility. Are they performing it? They cannot do it at an effective interest rate on savings of 2.21 per cent. Mercantile's 4½ per cent interest rate on savings is a useful import from the United States and I hope that we will have many more of them. I also hope it will stimulate Canadian chartered banks to follow their example.

There must be no question of our determination to prevent foreign take-overs of Canadian banks. But surely it is equally clear that in order to stimulate Canadian banks and get the best possible interest rates for Canadian depositors, get the best possible borrowing rates for Canadian businessmen and farmers, avoid restrictive banking practices and get the benefit of foreign experience—in brief, to have the most efficient banking system possible—we must somehow bring effective foreign competition into our banking system while at the same time maintaining effective control of the system.

Not very often in Canada do we find Canadian businessmen inviting foreign competition. It is therefore a tribute, in my opinion, to the strength and confidence of our Canadian chartered banks that they agree that foreign competition is essential to the efficiency of Canadian banking and they welcome it. Without exception they gave evidence to this effect to the finance committee. But they do not yet know the best method of providing foreign competition while still retaining Canadian control of our banking system. The finance committee has recommended that his important question be considered further. Possibly agencies of foreign banks should be permitted to operate in Canada. The Minister of Finance has indicated that this will be considered very carefully.

May I now consider for a moment, Mr. Chairman, the principle that a Canadian chartered bank should be independent and should not be dominated or controlled by any other corporation or single group, whether Canadian or non-Canadian. This is a worthwhile reform. But reforms often create new problems. If shares of a chartered bank are so widely distributed that no single group can control the election of the directors, who then will in fact control these great institutions with their billions of dollars of assets which are so important to Canada? Will it not mean that in fact the present bank managements will become self-perpetuating indefinitely—in practice responsible to no one except themselves?

Some evidence to this effect was presented to the finance committee. In theory the top bank officers, the top management, are appointed by the directors who are elected by the shareholders. In practice the position is reversed. The directors are appointed by top managment. Bank directors are elected at an annual meeting held at the bank's head office. Only a small proportion of the shareholders attend in person. There is no provision for paying the expenses of those who do attend. There are no regional meetings. There is no provision for the local appointment of delegates by shareholders. There are no polling subdivisions scattered throughout the length and breadth of the nation. Proxies or voting papers are sent out to the shareholders by top management and the persons named in the proxies to vote on behalf of the shareholders are nominees of management. It is somewhat as though the last federal election had not been run from the office of the chief electoral officer but instead from 251 Cooper Street with only one polling station, naturally at 251 Cooper Street. The vote would be cast there by persons named by the national director of the Liberal federation on the basis of voting papers sent out, naturally, by our national director from 251 Cooper Street. If we could run our elections like that I do not think we would have much trouble in getting a working majority. Yet that is the method by which the men are elected who control these great corporations which in turn control billions of dollars of our money. This is a vital problem which applies not only to our chartered banks but to our great insurance companies and other great financial institutions, indeed, to all corporations where voting rights are widely distributed.

This bill will prevent any single group of shareholders from controlling the election of directors. Under present election methods this means that management becomes self-perpetuating and responsible only to itself. Clearly this is not a healthy situation. Making really effective the right of shareholders to elect directors who will be truly representative of the shareholders is a problem which must be faced in the next decennial revision of the Bank Act. Perhaps elections will have to be run from the office of the inspector general of banks. The banks will not like this and possibly the inspector general of banks will not like it either. Perhaps provision will have to be made for regional meetings to elect regional directors or for the election of delegates to attend the annual meeting, with reasonable expenses of attendance being paid from corporate funds. The problem is not dealt with in the present bill.

In present circumstances surely it is entirely clear that the chartered banks must make the most complete and frank disclosure to the public of their financial affairs and their operations. Past legislation has permitted the banks to be secretive. They have set up hidden reserves which make it impossible even for experienced analysts to understand fully their operations. This bill will stop this practice. The banks must disclose their reserves and the results of their operations. The public is entitled to complete disclosure. We think the bill goes far in guaranteeing this. If experience shows it does not go far enough then further legislation will be necessary.

[Mr. Wahn.]

There are a large number of other recommendations of the Porter commission which have been carried into the bill, Mr. Chairman, but time does not permit my dealing with them all. I wish to say a word about the relaxing and ultimate removal of the 6 per cent interest ceiling. This must be recognized as being a bold step in view of the limited amount of rate competition in Canadian banking. The alternative would have been to retain power in the governor in council to reimpose controls if the chartered banks took advantage of this newfound freedom.

Personally I think this might have been a rather good idea. Experience has shown, however, that the chartered banks have not charged all the traffic will bear in the past. If they do abuse their freedom in future I think public indignation will be such that the chartered banks will realize that they are simply inviting more restrictive legislation. Nevertheless we must recognize that the effect of relaxing or removing the interest ceiling will be an average increase in interest rates. I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the banks will pass on part of the increased profits from such increases in interest rates to their depositors.

A great deal has been done in this bill to give effect to the central recommendations of the Porter commission. This is a good bill, deserving the support of the house.

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Chairman, in making some observations on the decennial revisions of the Bank Act I do not propose to go over every detail of every consideration brought before the committee. We held many meetings and many learned men in the banking profession and in the federal supervisory field, as well as persons occupying prominent and influential positions, appeared before us. It must be remembered that we were engaged in the business of revising the charters under which the banks will operate for the next ten years. That revision was done in the light of deficiencies which became apparent to us in our study of the situation. We also attempted to impose changes in the new bill. Such amendments as were made are in the bill as it has been presented to us.

It seems to me that we should not allow the charters of the banks to expire. The act under which they now operate expires at the end of the month, I believe. I do not know why parliament should not make a terrific attempt to finalize things so that the banks may operate as of April 1 under the new act. We must remember that the present act under which the banks operate, which is really their charter, has existed for almost 13 years instead of the 10 years originally proposed and that many changes have occurred during its existence. It seems to me that we had a two fold duty, to examine the situation which has existed for the 13-year period and then to arrange for something which will be an improvement over the old act in the light of all the changed conditions and the great growth which we have seen in our domestic and export trade.

The members of the standing committee considered all these matters very seriously and with great responsibility. I must say I was greatly impressed with the membership of the committee. I associate myself to the fullest extent in the remarks made concerning the chairman of the committee. He handled the committee very well, with great impartiality, fairness and ability. The same words apply to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, the vice chairman. May I say that when the hon. member for Labelle took the place of the vice chairman he carried out his duties with great distinction.

We are talking about the Bank Act and everybody is interested in the Bank Act. We in this house are considering that act, its different phases and what it will do for us in the next ten years. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we can expect any bank act or any bank to solve our problems. We must remember that we have other duties and responsibilities and that the Bank Act and the banks can only be considered as being instruments that we can use to make this country an even greater nation than it is today. That is the way we should face the question of the Bank Act. I repeat that every member of the standing committee seemed anxious to see the act amended in such a way that it would conform to the banking needs of Canada in this world. We all had that in our minds. We had many meetings and before we got through we had made many amendments. Generally speaking, I believe the amendments are an improvement.

I was much impressed with the great knowledge possessed by the governor of the Bank of Canada. He showed that knowledge on appearing before the committee. We are fortunate to have a man of his calibre, capacity and ability at the head of the Bank of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: The Bank of Canada has operated since 1934 and it has seen many changes in this country. As we all know, the functions of the Bank of Canada are economic as well as financial. It has great influence. At one time during the depression, in the early 1930's, I was told that the depression might have been prevented had there been some machinery at that time to control the money supply. I am not arguing whether the depression could or could not have been prevented. I simply repeat the proposition I heard many times, that had there been the machinery to handle the financial structure of this country much of the depression might have been avoided or it might have terminated sooner.

Our committee, it seems to me, was faced with certain questions which it had to determine and in the committee of the whole house we face the same problems. Does this bill as amended contain adequate and appropriate provisions for dealing with the changes which have taken place since 1954? I need not mention the changes except to say there is no doubt that there have been changes. I was not here in 1954 but I suggest that if one were to go back and look at the budget for that year one would find government expenditures lower by several billion dollars than they are today. Surely we are dealing with a different financial climate, are we not?

The other day the estimates for 1967-68 were tabled in the house. I happen to be one who deplores the fact that governmental expenditures have increased so fast. I happen to be one who thinks that governmental expenditures should be provided for by taxation as we go along. I commend the Minister of Finance on the fact that just recently he imposed taxation to take care of a certain situation which was going to cost a few hundred million dollars. I have no hesitation about saying so. But I maintain that in the light of conditions today we must consider the changes which have come about since 1954 and ask ourselves whether the bill before us is adequate to take care of the situation as it will develop during the next ten years during a period in which we hope and pray we shall continue our growth in an economic sense and in the sense of the contribution we make to the general improvement of the well-being of all people in the world.

The committee has made many amendments. Let us hope these amendments will be sufficient to make this bill one which will have a great influence on the well-being of all our citizens. We have to ask ourselves, as the committee did, whether this legislation provides ways and means of taking care of the increase in the demand for consumer credit. This is an important question today. Again I suggest we might look back to 1954 and ascertain how much consumer credit was used in this country in that year so as to compare the situation then with the need today. I believe hon. members would find that the increase amounts to many millions of dollars. What machinery will be available for the supply of the funds needed? These are things which the committee had to consider and which I am sure the committee of the whole will have to consider.

Again, we in this country must of necessity export goods in order to live. With this in mind we should ask ourselves whether the bill before us provides, among its other features, for the handling of a greatly increased volume of export traffic. Does it do so or not? We should ask ourselves these questions and if we are in doubt about the answers we should make representations accordingly. We should ask ourselves whether this legislation will make it easier to bring in the ever-increasing volume of imports which now serve our rising standard of living. Every year we increase our volume of imports, particularly fom the United States. They have the styles, and I know something about the ladies' preference for style. I have gone all through that. I know that in New York they understand how to make the clothes in which the ladies feel they look well. We bring these things in and they are sold to the ladies. This is proper, and I find no fault with it. Where do we get the money to pay for them?

I said at the beginning of my remarks that my comments would be general in nature, and so they are. But my point is this. We have a great country but we find heavy demands being made on our financial structure. I believe we should live within our income. I do not think we should live by borrowing money at a time when we are supposed to be living in a boom period. I do not believe we should be passing a debt on to a future generation and asking the Minister of Finance to borrow money to pay for a standard of living which we doubt we can maintain out of our own earnings. I do not approve of borrowing money, spending it now, and asking someone who succeeds us 20 years hence to pay the bill.

The bill before us appears to exert a restraining influence on the chartered banks whose existence is generally considered to be beneficial to the growth of our economy. Hon. members may ask: What do you mean by "restraint"? I think banks should lend money to a considerable extent upon the basis of what is known as moral risk. I am thinking particularly of young people who have an ambition to do something. I am one who thinks that ambition should be encouraged. I am one who thinks that ambition is so scarce today that we should encourage all those who want to do something for themselves. It seems to me that far from imposing restraint on the banks they should be encouraged to lend money.

I could tell two or three stories to illustrate this point if I had the time and if hon. members were prepared to listen. Yesterday I attended the funeral of a man from the other chamber who had said to me some years ago: "I was a bank clerk and your father came to me and said he wanted me to do a job for him". After this young man had been released from the bank to perform these services for my father he never went back. He built one of the largest businesses in eastern Canada. He and his brother were the heads of it when he passed away within the last week or so. My point is that he had to have bank credit in order to do this sort of thing. And he got it. This is why I say we should encourage the banks to lend money rather than restrict them from doing so. If money is lost occasionally, what is the difference? Especially, as I say, we should encourage young people who want to do something for themselves.

I ask the question: Is it suggested that restrictions should apply to the banks although similar limitations are not to be imposed on some of their competitors known as near-banks? I am not taking sides one way or the other. But is it reasonable that the regulations which apply to banks should not also apply to the competitors of those banks? Is it reasonable that these competitors should be able to lend money at any rate of interest they wish to charge, as a consequence of which they can naturally afford to pay a higher rate of interest to their depositors? This is not the way to encourage the banks to carry out their functions. It seems to me these are matters which everyone should consider.

The committee had expert witnesses before it. We were fortunate to hear from the inspector general of banks who is sitting in the gallery of this chamber at the moment. I repeat, we are lucky to have men of his calibre in the public service of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: I have referred to Mr. Rasminsky, the governor of the Bank of Canada, who appeared before us many times. I shall not read the whole list which is embodied in the report, but before concluding I wish to point out that many learned professors of economics appeared before the committee. Last but not least, the Minister of Finance appeared before the committee. I am the first to say he made a favourable impression. I thought he was a person who not only knew what he wanted to do but, once he knew it, determined to do it in a particular way. A person's ability to make up his mind is a great thing. I do not always agree with everything the minister does, but when he came before the committee and made a decision it was always based on something pretty sound and solid.

• (5:50 p.m.)

I shall not go into the whole question of the Mercantile Bank. My hon. friend who preceded me dealt with it very thoroughly. I agree with what he said about the banks needing competition. We can learn a great deal by having experienced people in the banking business come to Canada and contribute their experience and money toward an increase in the flow of funds which we need for development purposes. Where shall we get the money to develop our country if we do not borrow it from the United States? There is no other place. We cannot expect our citizens to take the last dollar out of their savings accounts to develop our country. They cannot afford to do that. Many people place money in banks for safekeeping, thinking of the proverbial rainy day. We cannot take those funds and put them into what are called risk capital ventures. Therefore we have to borrow money. I cannot say anything strong enough to voice my objection to so-called anti-Americanism, if such exists in any part of this chamber. Where can we get funds if we do not approach our neighbours to the south?

One thing which interested many members of the standing committee was the definition of the business of banking. I must say it did not bother me at all. When I had anything to do with banks I was more anxious about getting a loan than about putting a label on the fellow giving out the money. In a practical sense the definition did not bother me. Can a comprehensive label be put on the business of banking? It is important to have this question answered, but I do not think the standing committee has answered it.

I think that under most general headings the near banks, trust companies, and credit unions qualify as banks because they accept deposits, lend funds and have no interest ceiling rate. What they do must be a form of banking. During the committee hearings it became apparent that the banks had been obliged to obtain extra revenue to service some of their accounts. I am one who thinks that if you put $1,000 into a bank and issue cheques on it within a few days the bank is entitled to something for the service it provides.

The committee also dealt with the question of compensating balances. A borrower might obtain $100,000 from a bank but could only use $90,000, being required to leave the rest on deposit. This bill contains a provision whereby all charges of this nature must be specified when a loan is made. The committee studied the whole question of service charges and felt it was reasonable to have such charges.

Possibly the most important single factor which the committee considered, and which is provided for in this bill, is the removal of the ceiling on interest rates. It is a question which may be bothering many hon. members who are within the sound of my voice at the moment. All I can say is that the interest rate has been set and the bill provides that for a certain length of time it shall be at a certain maximum. After that the ceiling will probably be removed. When we consider this point we must keep certain comparisons in mind. We must compare the ability of the banks to attract deposits in competition with trust companies and credit unions. I assume their ability to attract deposits depends on the legal rate at which money is lent. The present legal ceiling is 6 per cent for banks and this curtails their ability to compete with some of the so-called near banks which have no such ceiling. They can lend money at the highest rate of interest they can get people to pay for it.

I have noticed on the main street of Fredericton a trust company notice offering to pay 7 per cent on deposits. I do not know what the qualifications are, but it is unreasonable to expect banks to lend money at 6 per cent when their competition will pay 7 per cent on deposits.

The Porter royal commission recommended that the interest ceiling be removed and that banks should be allowed the same freedom in establishing interest charges as their competitors have. The commission was of the opinion that banks should be able to participate in all fields of borrowing and to do so on a basis of equality with the near banks.

People have told me that they have paid 2 per cent per month interest to finance companies. If banks are allowed to free their interest rates more people will go to banks when they need to borrow money. People's ability to borrow will be greatly enhanced, and they will have more sources from which to borrow since the banks have branches all over the country. People will be able to borrow at reasonable rates of interest, and that is a right which they should have. In a geographical sense the banks have brought their facilities within the reach of people all across the country.

• (6:00 p.m.)

So far as bank interest rates are concerned, there is a ceiling on interest rates at this time which the banks cannot ignore. It does seem strange that they are unable to meet the demand of the borrowing public at the established ceiling. The committee has recommended the removal of the ceiling, and it would seem to me that we should consider whether such action will accomplish what the committee intended, making credit available to small businesses and individuals requiring small loans. If the removal of the ceiling does not accomplish the intention then it is open to parliament to take action in respect of making loans available to all Canadians at a reasonable rate of interest. Should the improvements intended fail to materialize parliament must have the power to do whatever is necessary to bring about the desired results.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please. It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may consider private members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), Transport—British Columbia—Federal contribution to Burrard Inlet Crossing; the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Expo '67—Montreal—Representations with a View to Allowing Every Citizen to Visit Expo; the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack), Shipping—Request for Opening of Channel to Amherst Island.

The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, will the house agree to give priority to Bill No. S-41, which does not seem to occasion any controversy, so that it might be considered in committee of the whole house, read for the third time and passed.

I understand that, as a result of an agreement between the various parties in the house, the suggestion would be acceptable, inasmuch as there would not be any debate, except for a few words to explain the aims of the amendment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should point out to the house that if it is the desire to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, those bills on the order paper in the first, second and third positions may be stood at the request of the sponsors. Item No. 4 on the order paper is the resumption of a debate and therefore it can be stood only by unanimous consent. Item No. 5 on the order paper can be stood at the request of the sponsor. I suggest this procedure in order that we may deal with item No. 6. Is the house prepared to accept the request of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the suggestion that we proceed with item No. 6 on the assumption there will be no debate on that bill. Before standing item No. 4 let me say it is my understanding that the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) is prepared to withdraw his amendment. Perhaps we could have that amendment withdrawn before proceeding with item No. 6.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Peters: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should point out to the hon. member for St. Paul's that an amendment moved by an hon. member can only be withdrawn by that member. The hon. member for Mégantic is not in the house at this time.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Mégantic left instructions with another hon. member to consent to the withdrawal of the amendment, if that is permitted.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: No, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) has not mentioned it to me.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Timiskaming has already objected.

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wahn: I have no objection to adopting the suggestion that we now proceed with item No. 6.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that item No. 1 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that item No. 2 shall stand?

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to allow this item to stand on the same terms, that there will only be a short debate lasting not more than a few minutes. If the hon. member has made some arrangement I am prepared to allow my bill to stand and to be taken up in its proper order during the next private members' hour. I object to this procedure on any other basis.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think some confusion has developed as a result of calling the individual items. I think that by unanimous consent we have bypassed these items and the only way we can return to them is by unanimous consent. I think we should proceed with item No. 6, second reading of Bill S-41. At the conclusion of our consideration of that bill we should return to item No. 1 and the others in the appropriate order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will accept the suggestion made by the hon. member. However, in respect of item No. 4 we should have unanimous consent. Does the house give unanimous consent to standing item No. 4?

Mr. Wahn: I agree as long as it does not lose its position on the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the suggestion that we now proceed with item No. 6 on the order paper?

Mr. Cameron (High Park): I agree on the basis I have put forward.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LA SOCIÉTÉ DES ARTISANS

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-41, respecting La Société des Artisans.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want first to thank the house for its courtesy and the sponsors of the various bills which had priority over mine, for their indulgence, I shall not overtax their patience.

The purpose of this bill respecting La Société des Artisans, which is a fraternal benefit society, is first to enable it to use the terms appearing in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, that is: fraternal benefit society.

The second amendment seeks the authorization to reinsure any insurance risk undertaken by similar insurance companies.

The purpose of the third amendment is to confer on the executive certain privileges pertaining to the general assembly which only meets every four years, so as to improve the dispatch of the society's business.

The fourth amendment is to allow new members of the executive to be selected from outside Montreal and suburbs whereas such a territorial limit existed previously.

• (6:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the changes suggested in this bill should be implemented because on reading its title in French, "La Société des Artisans", I presumed it had something to do with artisans in the English sense of the word and was a trade union bill. I was very surprised to find the title has nothing to do with co-operatives or trade unions and is in fact not concerned with artisans in any way, shape of form but is an insurance bill. Reading the bill quickly, I find it is not even a normal insurance company in the sense that we understand. Perhaps the sponsor of the bill should have been a little more clear as to the purpose of the bill.

I notice that one of the clauses allows the society to reinsure a part of any personal insurance risk carried by a fraternal benefit society. This, of course, is not the normal reinsurance which a company undertakes with a number of other companies because the risk incurred in the insurance policies is beyond the capability of the fraternal organization to carry. Protection is achieved in this way. In this case it appears that there is an inter-relationship or interlocking among various insurance companies. Here a fraternal benefit society carries a personal insurance risk that would have to be carried by the individual and could be taken care of through reinsurance with several other agencies of a mutual character. There is in the bill the continual use of the phrase "fraternal benefit society". This may also carry a connotation in French that is not readily translated into English. In the direct translation there is apparently a totally different kind of insurance envisaged than that with which we are normally concerned.

I apologize to the house for not having considered this particular aspect of the bill, but I did not really understand that it dealt with an insurance company. Perhaps other hon. members interpreted "artisans" to mean what it means in English rather than what is apparently its meaning in the direct translation. This society seeks these changes by federal legislation, but the bill uses the expression "may delegate such power to the executive council". This matter is not very clear to me and perhaps it will be made clearer when the bill is referred to the standing committee. In its translation perhaps "executive council" has a different connotation. I presume it may have something to do with the executive council of the province of Quebec, but I should like to be clear on this point.

I am also concerned about the fact that the bill does not provide enough information for us to ascertain whether major changes are being effected by it. This statute was passed in 1946 and the bill does not include the names of the persons who seek these changes or the other normal requirements in connection with this type of bill. We are not able to look at the bill in its entirety and understand the extent to which the amendments apply.

I shall therefore be interested in the discussion that takes place in the committee, because as I read the bill there is a considerable difference from what we normally consider to be mutual and other insurance companies in regard to reinsuring and the extent to which protection is provided to the policyholder by the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. I think there will be some interest on the part of hon. members in ascertaining how this reinsurance will be carried out—

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would not want to be disagreeable toward my colleague, but I know that the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) went around the house all afternoon. We asked him all those questions. Finally, the house agreed a minute ago to consider his bill provided there were no discussion. It seems to me then that something is not in order. I think it was my colleague here who specified two or three times: Provided there is no discussion.

I wonder then whether we are quite in order.

[English]

Mr. Cameron (High Park): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would confirm that this is exactly what did take place. When I gave my consent to item No. 2 standing I did so with the distinct understanding that there would be a very limited debate on this matter. If debate is to continue, I must withdraw my consent.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I should like to say, because I was involved in the discussion, that the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata came to see me a moment or two before six o'clock and posed the question of giving second reading to this bill without debate. I think the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata will confirm that I suggested this was not a very wise course, that if we passed the bill without debate it would be contrary to what we were trying to do, and the least that should be done was that we should have an explanation from the hon. member sponsoring the bill. Therefore there was not an across-the-board understanding that this bill would be passed without debate, even though the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata may have had a previous discussion about it. However, I know that the hon. member for Timiskaming has just about reached the conclusion of his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already dealt with the point of order. In any case, I understand the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has nearly finished his remarks, so that will automatically settle the problem.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order—

• (6:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should inform the house that I did not take part in the discussion and therefore I took this bill at its face value, as I am sure you did, Mr. Speaker. The request was made to take up this bill rather than other bills and, as I said, I was very surprised to find that it was not what I had thought it was. This bill contains a couple of points which make it different from other similar bills. It may be that some hon. members are not interested in examining this type of bill. However, I think I have an obligation to point out that in my opinion there are differences between this bill and other such bills. I am prepared to let it go to the committee without further debate in the hope that an answer will be found there to some of the problems which can be raised legitimately in regard to legislation of this nature.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Gendron: Mr. Speaker, I had asked for unanimous consent so that the bill could be studied in committee of the whole immediately and the motion for third reading could also be passed.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member that standing order 102 stipulates that no private bill shall be studied in committee of the whole without a special reference. If the hon. member refers to standing orders and more particularly to the order I have just mentioned, he will note that it is extremely difficult to permit examination of a bill by the committee of the whole rather than by a special committee. Naturally, the house may make whatever decisions it wishes, but at this point I will call the attention of the house to the fact that it is abnormal to proceed as the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata suggests.

Mr. Gendron: Mr. Speaker, would you have any objection if the house gave unanimous consent? Therefore, I ask for the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, I believe the problem to which I have just alluded still remains, since the standing order reads as follows:

> No motion for the suspension or modification of any provision of Part II of the standing orders applying to private bills or to petitions for private bills shall be entertained by the house until after reference is made to the committee on standing orders, or to one of the committees charged with the consideration of private bills, and a report made thereon by one of such committees and, in its report, the said committee shall state the grounds for recommending such suspension or modification.

The hon. member suggests that the house do precisely the opposite of what is stipulated in the standing orders. To my mind, the hon. members should think seriously of the difficulties which would stem, even with the unanimous consent of the house, from overriding a standing order which stipulates that a private bill shall be considered by a special committee rather than by the committee of the whole.

Mr. Gendron: I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

On the order:

> House in committee of the whole on Bill S-26, An Act respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company (without amendment).—Mr. Stanbury.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Clearly there has been a misunderstanding about the order of business during this hour. Already half the private members hour has been taken up on a bill which many of us were led to believe was going to be passed without debate. The result of the misunderstanding is that only half an hour remains for discussion of this bill and whatever other bills might be taken up during the hour. The suggestion I should like to make for the consideration of hon. members is that private members' hour today be extended to 7.30 so that in fairness to those who have suffered by reason of this misunderstanding—

Private Bills

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to take into account the fact that it is only 6.30 now and that there is always a possibility that all the bills to which he has referred might be passed and adopted by seven o'clock. If he wishes to extend the private members' hour I would suggest to him that the motion be made and considered at that time.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-26 respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company—Mr. Stanbury—Mr. Batten in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Powers, privileges and liabilities.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, we made an exception and referred this bill to the miscellaneous private bills committee, in other words, to another committee than the one set out in the standing orders. When it was considered in the miscellaneous private bills committee on two occasions, I believe consideration was given to the question of the foreign ownership of this company. I think we cannot let this clause pass without making reference to some statements which were made earlier by the Prime Minister and to one which was made just yesterday by the Minister without Portfolio who heads the cabinet committee dealing with foreign ownership of companies in Canada, a matter of tremendous concern to all of parliament.

Perhaps I should go back to the time a few weeks ago when the Prime Minister, in a nation-wide television broadcast, made a great issue about declaring the policy of his government with respect to foreign ownership of companies in Canada, if not by direct statement then by leaving a very clear impression that he and his government were in favour of steps to bring industry in Canada under the control of Canadians and to remove as quickly as possible the element of foreign ownership of companies in Canada.

When the Minister without Portfolio said yesterday that he hoped that the matter of foreign ownership of Canadian industry would become a major issue in the next election, his statement had an even more direct bearing on the bill that is before us now. I am not looking toward an election at the moment and trying to involve myself in it, but I do say, as has been said on many occasions in the past, that we have an undeniable obligation to the Canadian people to look seriously at the matter of foreign ownership of our industry and to look seriously at the Excelsior

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Life Insurance Company which is being considered at present. Not long ago the Prime Minister replied, in answer to a series of questions in the house, that the insurance companies act contained the same provisions with respect to foreign ownership as are contained in the Bank Act. It was a bit of a surprise to most of us because we did not appreciate that all insurance companies in Canada came under the proscription that only a certain percentage of them were permitted to be owned by other than Canadians. It was for this reason we raised the matter in the standing committee when considering the Excelsior Life Insurance Company. We raised the matter of foreign ownership of this company, and if my memory is correct the figures given were that this company had 70 per cent of its share capital held in the United States. If my memory is faulty, the sponsor of the bill can correct me.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Even though the insurance companies act to which the Prime Minister referred earlier contains provisions which limit the degree to which life insurance companies may be owned by foreigners, the provisions of that act do not apply to the Excelsior Life Insurance Company primarily because it became a United States owned company before the coming into force of the amendments to that act in 1964-65.

Without reading the relevant sections of the insurance act, I want to make reference to the fact that if we were to add a few words to clause 2 we would bring Excelsior Life under Canadian control. I submit that the period of five years has been used on two other occasions when dealing with foreign ownership of financial institutions of this country. It seems that five years was established as a reasonable period of time to permit Excelsior Life Insurance Company to become a Canadian owned corporation or, in effect, lose the full power of foreign ownership. The amendment that was sought to be moved in committee was ruled out on a technicality. Incidentally, the technicality could be objected to because I have looked up the rules and have sought advice on the matter. No objection was taken in the committee because it was obvious the hon. member for Timiskaming would need a seconder for his motion from one of the other parties because the New Democratic party had only one member on the committee. Since he was unable to secure a seconder, there was not much point in attacking the validity of the ruling of the chairman at that time. Consequently he let the matter proceed, knowing that it could and must be raised again in this chamber.

It is undoubtedly our responsibility to concern ourselves with the matter of foreign ownership, not only the foreign ownership of a company like Excelsior Life Insurance Company but other companies. The foreign ownership involves a tremendous interference with the degree to which we may control our own economic destiny. The Prime Minister has declared it to be government policy, as well as the former minister of finance, that industry and finance should be brought under the control of Canadians. We cannot therefore just blindly pass the clauses of a bill of this nature without putting the matter to the supreme test, so I intend to move an amendment in a moment. If this amendment does not carry in committee, we would have no choice then but to move it, in essence, when we reach the third reading of the bill in order to test this question of foreign ownership of The Excelsior Life Insurance Company in particular, and in general the whole question of the validity of the declaration of the Prime Minister, as well as others in the Liberal party who have declared themselves in favour of advancing the cause of Canadian ownership of industry. Many of the members of the Conservative party expressed the idea in the previous election campaign.

The time is long past when we should put into effect the same provisions that are contained in the bank bill, the same provisions that were contained in this other bill and as applied to the Mercantile Bank. This provision should be made applicable to The Excelsior Life Insurance Company because that is the company before us at the moment. This seems to be the time when other life insurance companies and finance companies should be told that the majority of their stock should be owned by Canadians.

Accordingly, I move:

That clause 2 be amended in line 17 by adding after the word "thereto" the following:

"Except that the provisions of section 16F(2) and 16F(3) of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act shall not apply to the company beyond the 31st day of December, 1971."

The effect of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, just referring briefly and not in detail to the particular section 16F, would be to remove the exemption which now exists. 16F(2) provides an exception for non-resident ownership of a company. In other words, where a company is foreign owned the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act which now require that foreign ownership shall not exceed a certain percentage would not exist beyond December 31, 1971.

To put it succinctly, if the amendment carries, then by January 1, 1972, Excelsior Life Insurance Company would no longer be in a position to be a foreign owned company. This would be in line with similar provisions contained in the bank bill as well as the policy declarations made by the Prime Minister and the former minister of finance. I believe we should consider this very seriously because we have an obligation to the Canadian people which cannot be glossed over.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Howard) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 20.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Stanbury moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on the motion for third reading may I say I do not think there is much point in reiterating what was said during the committee stage on clause 2. However, I propose to move an amendment which relates to clause 2, and even though there is no reference to this in the amendment it relates specifically and absolutely to the matter of foreign ownership. It is for this purpose that I should like to refer the bill back to committee for a reconsideration of clause 2 and whatever changes might be made to it.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That Bill S-26 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for reconsideration of clause 2.

I think technically that is the proper wording, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my only comment is this. Whatever the merits of the suggestion of the hon. member, the applicant here is only one of 13 companies which are exempt from the provision referred to by the hon. member. It would of course be quite unreasonable and discriminatory to single out this company for this kind of restriction. If the hon. member feels that a change of general policy is desirable, then it seems to me that that would be done more properly by another piece of legislation. I submit that this company should not suffer in the meantime, being the only one of 13 companies to lose that exemption.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendment that has been proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), and in reply to the remarks which have just been made, may I suggest to the hon. member that what he has said really falls to the ground on two counts. One of them is that as far as I am concerned if, as and when the other companies come before this house we can deal with them at the first opportunity, in exactly the same manner as we have dealt with this company.

Second, and perhaps preferably, I suggest to the hon. member that if he is prepared to bring in an appropriate amendment to the act to which reference was made earlier—the act of general application—then I would be more than happy to support him in taking an approach of that kind to deal with what he alleges to be a discrimination against this particular company.

He may be somewhat closer to the source of initiating such legislation than I am, and in view of the fact that he has made these remarks I suggest that he should consider my suggestion to eliminate the discrimination that he feels exists. Let me assure him at once that if he can arrange to have such proposal laid before the house we would be more than happy to support him in eliminating what he terms a discrimination against this particular company.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say anything on this amendment at the third reading stage because it is self-explanatory. I will say, however, I agree with the hon. member that this action is discriminatory in that only one of 13 companies is affected, should this amendment pass and clause 2 is changed. The same state of affairs exists with regard to insurance legislation. The changes which are being recommended by the government in the banking legislation are also discriminatory against two banks in particular, namely the Bank of Western Canada and the Mercantile Bank, though obviously they are in a different position. I would submit that this is a problem that the government will have to face up to.

• (6:50 p.m.)

If hon. members decide to vote for this amendment, then obviously the government, as my colleague has said, must bring in legislation to provide for the equality of each of the companies. It would be a poor excuse to say that because all 13 companies are not before the house it should not deal with this one company. This is a financial institution, and if parliament is to control all financial institutions in this country it will have to deal with this matter. I think the amendment will be supported. There is an obligation on the government to bring the other 12 companies into line.

Hon. members voting against the amendment will be voting with tongue in cheek, because this bill now before us deals with the subject matter dealt with in the Bank Act. Surely some of the similarities in the two pieces of legislation cannot escape hon. members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour to the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall read the standing order to the house. Stop the bell, please. Standing order 6(3) says:

> If any member objects to the taking of a vote at any time between 1.00 o'clock p.m. and 2.30 o'clock p.m. or between 6.00 o'clock p.m. and 8.00 o'clock p.m., Mr. Speaker shall request those members who object to rise in their places and if five or more members rise, the taking of the vote shall be postponed.

As I remember, there was no objection.

Mr. Lambert: I beg to differ, Mr. Speaker. As soon as Your Honour said "Call in the members", I stood up, indicating I objected. Then, following the standing order, the burden is on Your Honour to ascertain whether other members do not wish the vote to take place at this time. I think we are at that point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall accept the explanation of the hon. member for Edmonton West. It is now my duty to ask those who object to the taking of the vote at this time to rise.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: More than five members having risen the vote will be deferred, to be taken when the house resumes at eight o'clock.

LAURIER LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-27 to incorporate Laurier Life Insurance Company. He said:

Laurier Life Insurance Company was incorporated under letters patent granted by the province of Ontario dated October 6, 1965. The company received a certificate of registry under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act in December, 1965, and a few days later a provincial licence to undertake insurance contracts in the province of Ontario. The federal registration restricted Laurier Life to the conduct of insurance business in Ontario. This company was formed group life business of Global Life Insurance Company, a company which was operating in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia. In order for Laurier to acquire this business it was necessary that it become incorporated and licensed as quickly as possible and there was not time to incorporate this company by way of federal charter and to acquire the Global business at the same time.

It was therefore resolved to incorporate the company under an Ontario charter and, in accordance with the request of the Ontario department of insurance, to register it federally—although the business would be confined to Ontario—so that the group life business of Global Life Insurance could be acquired. Pursuant to that purpose the company was incorporated and the sum of $2 million was raised, $1 million as capital and $1 million as paid up surplus. It was out of the surplus funds subscribed to the company that the group life business of the Global Life Insurance Company was purchased. The purchase price was $1 and upon payment of this Laurier Life Insurance Company acquired by way of re-insurance the liabilities and benefits from the group life business of Global. It also acquired the paid up reserves backing these contracts. The company therefore was immediately in business with some $80 million worth of insurance on its books and a premium income of approximately $1.3 million per year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has been requested to note that a quorum is not present. I shall therefore ask the Clerk Assistant to count the members.

And on the count being made, more than 20 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Twenty four members are present and the house is properly constituted.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): Among the business acquired was group life contracts in the province of Quebec. Under the terms of the federal registration the only place in which the company could sell insurance was Ontario, and it is a desire of the company to be able to sell insurance as well in the province of Quebec. It is necessary for the company to keep office facilities in the province of Quebec in order to service the existing business acquired by way of re-insurance from Global Life; it is relatively uneconomical to maintain these offices without also providing the staff with an opportunity to sell insurance in that province.

At the time that the formation of this company was discussed with both the Ontario department of insurance and the federal authorities, the founders of the company undertook that they would in due course apply for federal registration and federal incorporation so that the company would be on the same footing as other insurance companies; it would not be a company operating under an Ontario act and under the federal act, and to that extent be an unusual company for both the provincial authorities and the federal authorities.

The shareholders of the company are made up of businessmen from Toronto, Windsor, Barrie and other centres in Ontario. It is an undertaking of the company that it will, before entering into the insurance business under its new charter, acquire all the assets and obligations of the existing Ontario company, terminate its operation, and have paid in as capital, over and above the surplus which was used to acquire the Global Life business, $1 million. The federal incorporation of this company is desired so that it may turn its uneconomical Quebec activities into an economical operation. The transfer of the group business from Global to Laurier Life by way of re-insurance contracts has been studied by both the federal Department of Insurance and the Ontario department of insurance and has met with no apparent problems or opposition from either of these departments.

May I add, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) were in the house he would show his interest in this bill.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to talk this bill out. I should like to say just a few words.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being seven o'clock, pursuant to an order of the house made on March 3, this sitting is adjourned for one hour.

Mr. Howard: Could I plead with the house through Your Honour to give consent to have this bill read the second time, and perhaps my hon. friend from Timiskaming could explain our position with regard to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to continue the discussion on this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I appreciate the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) in relation to the difficulties encountered by this company, as well as others, in changing from provincial to federal incorporation so as to take advantage of the operations of the federal superintendent of insurance, and the protection given by his office.

I am pleased to note from the hon. member's explanation that this company is transferring its provincial assets to the federal company, unlike the last company we dealt with whose bill contained an expression to the effect that this was deemed to have been done—a form which I did not think was desirable. The company now in question is following a form which allows us to ascertain what transactions are taking place in connection with the transfer from provincial to federal jurisdiction.

Another important fact to be borne in mind when dealing with the establishment of this company is that the ownership is Canadian and meets a requirement which I believe the previous company should have been asked to meet, though it was exempted. We are pleased therefore that this transfer is being undertaken so as to take advantage of a measure of protection which in my opinion is too often overlooked—the protection available after incorporation as a federal company by reason of the operations of the superintendent of insurance.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The sitting is suspended until eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is a deferred vote pursuant to section (3) of standing order 6, as follows: Mr. Stanbury, seconded by Mr. Cameron (High Park), moved that Bill S-26, an act respecting The Excelsior Life Insurance Company, be now read a third time. In amendment thereto, Mr. Howard, seconded by Mr. Peters, moved that Bill S-26 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for reconsideration of clause 2.

The question is on the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Division

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Had I voted, I would have supported the principle, purpose and spirit of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion being made by hon. members is that the question on third reading of the bill be put, but I suggest that it would require the unanimous consent of the house to put the question at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, this is far, far too important an item to rush through at this moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration in Committee of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, this debate started off surprisingly harmoniously with the hon. members of all parties on the opposite side of the house being rather complimentary to the minister and the committee in connection with this bill and the amendments proposed in committee. There were some suggestions made by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. He said: I think the main question is, is this bill going to meet our banking and credit requirements for the next ten years? But he did not answer that question.

The hon. member for St. Paul's made several suggestions and indeed pointed out the incongruity of our banking system as it relates to our banking requirements; but he was very polite about it and tried to slay the dragon with a feather when he might have used a dagger. I am not going to use a feather; I am going to use an axe. There are really two main questions to be raised in connection with this bill. I regret very much that in this case some of my comments will have to reflect upon the Minister of Finance. This is always the case when the putative father, so to speak, the hon. member for Davenport, is not here and the foster father must answer for the legislation that is on the books.

The question is, first, is this is good banking legislation; in other words, is it going to assist Canadians in their industrial growth and in their commercial expansion over the next ten years? I say it is not; it is bad legislation and, with all due respect, the committee did not consider this question. It approached this matter on the basis of individual amendments. Mind you, they were good amendments to a bad act. However, making worthwhile amendments to a bad act will not make it a good act; it does not make it good banking legislation.

The other question is: How in the world did we mix up nationalism with banking legislation? What have those two things to do with each other? I suggest to you that nationalism, this great quest for some sort of feeling of unity, has no place in banking legislation. Indeed everyone who has spoken on it, and the hon. member for Davenport has himself commented on it, pointed out that we as Canadians are not worried about money lent to Canadian companies or any type of bond issue which can be paid back. The hon. member for Davenport said that what he has worried about was industrial equity. There is a difference between the two.

I fully support the concept that Canadians should be induced to buy shares, to get dividends and to re-invest in their own growth. Here we are talking about money, we are talking about banking tools for industry. We welcome tools from anywhere, because this can always he paid back. However, nationalism has no connection with banking. We are very concerned about national unity and we think we can obtain this national unity, or this ersatz nationalism, by skinning it off the hides of someone else. This cannot be done. We are greatly concerned about our centennial. We are rushing on at a frantic pace with the idea that we have something to celebrate, and we want to discover in our country a national spirit. So we have 200 mountain climbers climbing mountains, we have 100 canoeists canoeing down the river, and we have a high wire act and other such ambitious projects. However, this has nothing to do with banking. I do not want to deal with nationalism any further. All I wanted to do was to point out that it really has no bearing on banking. What we should seriously consider is whether we have good banking legislation.

The following question was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West and by others: What is the definition of banking? It does not matter much what we say the definition of banking is, but we have identified it by the nomenclature we use. We have said that banks are institutions, and if one examines the definition of "institution" in its broadest or narrowest terms he finds that it is an organization established for the protection of souls, to guard established or cultural rituals. It is not active. This is exactly what our companies have become. They have become institutions.

We may well ask ourselves whether institutions, in their institutional way of thinking and doing business, help our industrial requirement for capital? I say they will not. The hon. member for St. Paul's mentioned that banks are like a club. Of course they are a club, and a very private one. They are a very inefficient little club with a monopoly.

There is something to be said for the charging of interest. But interest is earned through taking risks. Interest is usually the payment of money for the mere use of money, without a risk being attached to it. I submit that our banks, for the past 15 or 20 years if not longer, have not been in the habit of taking risks. They do not want to take risks. They say: We will lend you some money, but first we want to be absolutely certain that we will get it all back, and yet we want the interest on it. There is a place for this type of financing, but it is not the type which we will need in Canada for the next 10, 15 or 20 years. We have to have someone who is willing to take a risk and get the interest for it.

Our banks are not established in that way. In their minds, and indeed in our minds, they are institutions. Hon. members will recall that the original Bank Act, and in fact all our banking legislation—and this bill specifically —was devised to protect the depositors' money. That is the whole purpose of the Bank Act. It contains a large number of regulations specifying exactly what the banks can and cannot do.

We did not consider whether this was a good way to do business. What we have said is: By following these rules we are going to make absolutely certain that the banks will be able to pay back the depositors' money. However, this is not the problem which will be facing us in the next 10, 15 or 20 years. We already have depositors' insurance, and that is an easy solution.

The object of the legislation should be to make the banks efficient and to allow them to give credit, with a calculated risk, so that our industries and our people can borrow to buy and expand their industrial potential, and indeed if necessary to buy other shares and other equities from foreign owned institutions. This bill does not do this. It is merely a coating of pieces of reforms on an act which was never intended to fulfil the function which all our banks now have to fulfil.

An argument was advanced at one time that banks could not take all these risks because their interest was limited. We have solved this. But having recommended a free interest rate over a period of time we have not changed the act as yet, or brought in any reforms which will give us protection and an ability to carry on the banking business in an efficient manner.

What changes in the bill could have been made in the committee to make it function as a good instrument of banking? I could suggest several changes, but first I should like to draw attention to what the hon. member for St. Paul's has said. He has given us a great deal of information regarding the directors and the managerial staff of our banks, and how they function. I want to suggest that I do not agree with all he said. The directors of the banks are not themselves bankers, and we all know this. They are gentlemen from all walks of life. They come from the right families and they are definitely in the establishment. Their main concern is to make no mistakes which might reflect on their good name. They do not make a living from the bank. They know nothing about banking. They do manage to scrape a few thousand dollars together on subscriptions of shares. The banks are closely interrelated with heavy industries. The directors can borrow money from the banks or from their companies, and they make their money through the share structure of different corporations, including the issuance of shares from banks. Their main concern is to have a place in all of these banks and in all the financial institutions.

I believe that if one were to refer to the press reporter's book, "The Vertical Mosaic" he would gain an insight into the ways in which the establishment really functions in our economic society. This is not banking. Indeed if those directors had to rely for their living on the bank, they would inevitably make the bank more efficient. From time to time the management and the advisory staff of the banks make recommendations for certain changes in policy. I recall hearing the president of a bank say that he has one job to do, and that is to take the advice of the management and then try to sell it to the board of directors. I asked what was the secret of his success, and he said. "If I can get 10 per cent of those recommendations approved by the board of directors I am very lucky because the directors are not that keen on improving the banking system." This is where the fault lies. Can anyone suggest that Mr. Rockefeller and Citibank would move into Canada if the Canadian banking system were efficient and competitive? We have thousands of branches of banks. We have more bank branches probably than churches. Why would he come in here? He is not a fool. The reason he wants to come is that he knows our banks are not doing the job, and that is why he can make a dollar at it. I have no objection to that.

This bill does not improve the banking position, nor will it make the banks more competitive. I notice the bill continues the same old provision with regard to proxies. The hon. member for St. Paul's mentioned this. He said that the directors are self-appointed; and so they are. I would have thought the minister or the finance committee would have introduced a clause into this bill to prevent the directors from sending out proxies. In other words the directors should send them out at their own expense and not at the expense of the bank. If there are millions of shareholders, it is a very expensive business to send out proxies in order to try to get votes. When the banks send them out at the bank's expense, the directors will continually be the directors.

If I read the bill correctly I find that if I wanted a list of the shareholders of the bank I would get a list that was four months old. In four months almost anything can happen to the shareholders. They may be all over the place by this time. This is not the type of bill I would have thought would have been presented. There is nothing in it about the near banks. I would like to know how anyone can say that this bill is going to make the banks more competitive in any way whatever.

I did not intend to dwell too long on the question of nationalism or foreign control.

However, there is a question I should like to put to the minister. Presuming that this bill passes, will it indeed bring the results that we seek? I wonder about the drafting of the bill. It would seem that in order to make this clause function in relation to the 25 per cent ownership, the bank would be the only one entitled to sell shares. Suppose at a certain time 24 per cent of the shareholders are non-resident, leaving a 1 per cent gap. Suppose, then, shares are sold on the market and, as in many cases, hundreds of thousands of shares are transferred to foreigners. The question then arises, whose shares are going to qualify for transfer? If ten people buy at the same hour on the same day, and after the shares have been transferred from non-resident to resident we find ourselves with 30 per cent foreign ownership, someone has to say that 5 per cent of those sales are not going to qualify for transfer.

The question then arises, who tells the people who are buying the shares? Do they know that they are taking a gamble? In other words, if this is to be done at all there would have to be a provision that the shares cannot be sold through the stock market but must be sold directly through the bank. This is the only way you can control the situation. Let us suppose this problem is solved, and I will put another question to the minister. If I read this bill correctly, there is nothing invalid about transferring more than 25 per cent of the shares. The only provision is that they will not be transferred in the books of the bank. Would it not be in line with the new law for anyone from the United States or Europe to buy 90 per cent of the shares of a bank? The first 25 per cent of the stock is registered but the remaining 65 per cent is not transferred, so that stock has no voting privileges. In other words, with the 25 per cent he owns he has all the voting privileges. How is this going to accomplish the purpose of the bill before us?

A further question comes to mind. The bill does state that in the event more than 25 per cent of the shares are sold or more than 10 per cent in so far as an individual is concerned, business conducted after that time is voidable. Does this mean all the loans made in that period of time are not valid? All these questions arise as a result of the provisions of this bill.

I say in conclusion, then, that there is nothing wrong with the Mercantile Bank coming into Canada and doing a good job of banking. I will say to this house that, having had some experience with United States bankers I find them much more in tune with the new requirements of banking. They are willing to take risks. In addition to that, they are willing to advise customers. They sit in and discuss customers' problems. Our banks will not do that. They say: We do not want your problems, we just want the money. I cannot see how this bill or any other bill at the moment is going to bring more competition into our banking system or make the banks more efficient. I will say this, that the introduction of a good, strong bank will set our banks on edge. Our banks will have to pull up their britches and do a good job of banking or they are going to be out in the cold. It is not our concern to protect the bankers. We need the tools; we need the money for our industrial potential.

What I should like to see is a concentration of our efforts to induce Canadians to buy shares and get dividends. Then these dividends could be reinvested so that we could see Canada grow in the way she should.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the decennial revision of the Bank Act gave the minister and this parliament an opportunity to revamp the law and to bring the banking machinery in Canada a little more up to date. It is my submission, Mr. Chairman, that the minister failed completely to do this in the bill which he presented to parliament, to the banking committee, and which is now before us. The bill makes a few useful improvements, as I shall indicate later. However, I suggest that it completely lacks imagination and is characteristically timid in its major aspects.

It seems to me there are four major areas in banking policy with which we have to be concerned. There are others, but I suggest these four are our primary concern. One is the level of the money supply at any time, and another is the level of the general interest rate at any time. The third is the level of interest rates for various classes of borrowers. The fourth, and in a sense the most important element, is the availability of capital to serve social purposes and national goals.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it can be said without having to be an authority on banking that the first two objectives, namely the level of money supply and the level of the general interest rate can be controlled through the central bank, and on the whole is regulated by the central bank; whether or not one agrees with the particular step it may take, it has that power.

I suggest that the important and deep concern we ought to have for the particular rates of interest charged various classes of borrowers, and for the allocation of available capital in the right direction to serve national purposes, is not reflected in the present banking machinery, and there is nothing in this bill which in any way assists our banking machinery to serve these purposes. That is why I suggest that, as I have said, the bill lacks imagination, and fails to meet the needs of a modern, technological society.

I want to make clear, in case the minister or anybody else is under a false impression about what I am saying, that I and my colleagues are not of those groups in the community that feel that all of our economic ills can be solved merely by playing around with the monetary or banking system. Our party does not accept that kind of approach. We are fully aware that monetary policy is only one of the tools that are available to assist us in promoting the right kind of development for our economy; nevertheless it is a very important tool, and it is a great mistake to play it down. It is important in two ways, Mr. Chairman. It is important to the economy as a whole and it is also important to many people such as small businessmen and individuals who need credit desperately from time to time.

As far as the large corporations are concerned, one need not be terribly worried about them. For one thing, during the last number of years they have developed their reserves and are able to finance a great deal of their development through internal financing. In any case they represent a pretty safe security and can obtain loans at the prime rate without much difficulty. However the small businesses and individual borrowers are under great pressure under the present banking system, and here again in my submission the bill fails to make the kind of adjustment that will be of assistance to the majority of the people in the two classes to which I have referred.

One of the basic weaknesses of the legislation which is before us, and of the government's approach to the problem of banking, is the failure to exercise a jurisdiction which, in my view, the federal parliament clearly has over all interest rates and all banking operations, whether those banking operations are performed by banks or by institutions other than banks.

The hon. member for Edmonton West referred at some length during his speech earlier today to judicial decisions of the Privy Council and Supreme Court of Canada establishing the clear jurisdiction that the federal parliament has in the field of interest rates and banking. I do not think, if I may say so without presumption, that there is any doubt that the federal parliament does have that authority.

After all, Mr. Chairman, one of the major reasons that the banks appeal to this parliament to remove the interest ceiling arises from their complaint that there is an interest ceiling for the banks but none for the near banks and other financial lending institutions, which places the banks at a disadvantage.

If I understand the matter correctly, Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons that the members of the banking committee agreed to the eventual removal of the ceiling on interest rates was to eliminate the disadvantage suffered by the banks, because of the fact that the federal legislation did not apply to the large financial corporations other than banks that did banking business. If I recollect some of the discussions of the committee in the reports I have been able to read, it recognized that the role of lending institutions other than banks—and therefore their role in controlling interest rates and the allocation of funds —was becoming an increasingly important one.

I say to the minister that there is no reason other than typical and characteristic timidity that this parliament should not have acted to deal with this question, although it may be that this particular bill is not the best framework within which to formulate legislation for the regulation and control of financial institutions, or the banking operations of financial institutions, other than banks.

However, Mr. Chairman, I can see nothing wrong with or illogical about the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that a bill of this kind could be in two parts, one part dealing with banks and the other part dealing with financial institutions other than banks. Whether or not we have one bill in two parts or two separate bills is a minor and irrelevant point: This parliament ought to have before it legislation providing for regulatory controls over all banking operations of financial institutions other than banks, as well as of banks.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I just ask the hon. gentleman a question. Did he say "all banking operations or all financial institutions"? I think I may have misunderstood him.

Mr. Lewis: I said all banking operations of financial institutions other than banks.

Mr. Sharp: Then may I ask another question for clarification. Would he include instalment finance companies, and so on, that are not carrying on banking?

Mr. Lewis: It may well be, Mr. Chairman. I think one would have to look into the constitutional problems there a little more deeply, though my impression is that the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal parliament over interest rates may easily open the door to dealing with even those institutions. But certainly there is no question of our power, I suggest, to deal with what are normally called near banks—none at all.

The reason that I criticize the government for failing to bring such legislation before us is that the government have had the report of the Porter commission in their hands for about three years. No one can suggest that this is a new idea and that there would be difficulties in drafting the necessary regulations or the necessary legislation to deal with what is, I appreciate, a rather complex problem. The recommendation of the Porter commission that the federal parliament pass legislation covering the entire field of banking has been in the hands of the government, if I remember correctly, for either just under three years or just over three years, so there has been ample time for the government and the minister's department to deal with this question.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that until such time that the federal parliament takes responsibility under the constitution for the entire field of banking we will take only half steps in dealing with our financial operations. All of the efforts that we will make to obtain some kind of control over the allocation of funds and over interest rates will, partially at least, be frustrated by the fact that a large proportion of our banking functions are being performed by organizations which do not come under the law.

The minister recognized this, of course—I am not telling him anything he does not know—and he introduced deposit insurance, making certain provisions to enable him to look into the books and regulate the operations of organizations other than banks which came within the deposit insurance scheme set up by this parliament. So as I say, Mr. Chairman, why the hesitation? This is the time to take action. This is the decennial review of the Bank Act and this is the time to have such legislation before us.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I put another question to the hon. member. Since the Porter commission did make the recommendation that federal jurisdiction be extended over near banks, what in his opinion was the reason they did not recommend the retention of a ceiling on interest rates for all those institutions?

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: I shall come to the interest rate later. I think, subject to what I want to suggest, there is good logic in not having any ceiling. I have agreed with those who have suggested that an arbitrary ceiling does not fit the situation, or may not fit the situation. When the interest rate goes up and a ceiling is imposed, though if certain institutions are included under the law there may not be problems of competition, none the less the ceiling will be pierced, avoided, evaded and a great deal of harm may be done. I am afraid I cannot look into Mr. Justice Porter's mind.

Surely, however, the minister's question is totally irrelevant to the point I am now making. Whether you have an interest ceiling or whether you have any regulation of interest rates in the way I shall suggest, we ought to have some regulation of the interest rate. And whatever you have, whether it is little or much, it ought to be applicable to all banking operations, if it is to be effective for whatever purpose you want to serve.

The minister, I suggest, had the power, the possibility, the time, and if I may so without flattering, the talent to deal with this matter; but he lacked, if I may also say unflatteringly, the courage to deal with this problem which ought to be dealt with, and ought not to be delayed for another ten years. We ought to have had legislation in one document, or two separate documents, to cover the whole field of banking operations. Until we do that we are not dealing with the banking problem in the way it ought to be dealt with.

My second point, and I shall only deal with three in this legislation,—and I find this point disturbing,—is the fact that we are proposing an increase in the interest rate ceiling immediately to 7¼ per cent. In view of the amendment made in committee where the formula for the removal of the ceiling is now based on a 5 per cent rather than a 4½ per cent floor for the debentures or securities we are concerned with, and considering that the present average interest rate for these securities already is below 5 per cent, and no one expects the interest rate to go up this year, we are legislating in this bill an immediate increase in the interest rate from 6 per cent to 7¼ per cent, and we are removing the ceiling on December 31 of this year without providing any other regulatory machinery at all. After December 31 of this year the banks, as all other financial institutions, will be free to do as they please with the interest rates.

Mr. Sharp: As recommended by the Porter commission.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member seems to quote only what suits his purpose, and not otherwise.

Mr. Lewis: That is right. I suggest that Mr. Justice Porter is exactly like the minister and exactly like myself, a human being. Some of his ideas are good, and those I accept. Some are not so good, and those I do not accept. The same holds true for the minister. Mr. Justice Porter did not write, I suggest, a holy scripture. Because I pick out one part does not mean that I have to accept the whole volume.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member was quoting from it rather fulsomely.

Mr. Lewis: I was not quoting it fulsomely. I merely said that the suggestion to bring in the near banks was in the Porter report. The minister has had it for three years, and he could have done something about it.

Mr. Douglas: One need not accept every part of the report.

Mr. Lewis: I do not have to accept every part of the report. I can disagree with some of it, and I do. I do not disagree with the increase in the ceiling, and to some extent I do not disagree with the removal of the ceiling if there could be some other form of regulation of interest rates. If we cannot have regulation, at least let us have supervision of the interest rate.

Mr. Sharp: Then the hon. member disagrees with the Porter commission.

Mr. Lewis: On that point, yes.

Mr. Sharp: That is fundamental.

Mr. Lewis: I know that is fundamental. I appreciate that is fundamental to the Porter report.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, to the whole concept.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know about being fundamental to the whole concept. Let not the minister and I enter into an academic discussion about what makes a whole or partial concept. Let me say that this is one recommendation of the Porter commission with which I disagree. Other recommendations the minister disagreed with and I agreed with. This recommendation he agrees with and I disagree with.

May I say to him. I hope without offence, that what he agrees with and disagrees with and what I agree with and disagree with point up the differences in our social philosophies.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he looked at the Porter commission report carefully. He has been quoting from it. Could I draw his attention to this one statement page 364:

> We recommend that it—

Referring to the ceiling:

> —be removed regardless of other changes in the legislation.

Mr. Lewis: I know that. I do not know why the minister had to read that. He did not have to read that sentence. I do not deny that the Porter commission recommended the removal of the ceiling. If the minister enjoys repeating the same thing three or four times I shall sit down and let him repeat it three or four more times; then without fear of being interrupted I shall go on with my remarks.

I will say that the thing he disagrees with in the Porter commission report, the extension of the law to cover all banking operations, and the thing he did agree with, the removal of the ceiling without any further safeguards, shows the differences in our social philosophies—shows the minister's typically doctrinaire private enterprise philosophy. The kinds of things I have accepted from the Porter commission report show our concern to make the banking industry function for the social goals of Canada as much as it is possible to do so.

I suggest to the minister that it is not a service to the Canadian people to remove this interest rate ceiling at the end of this year without, as I have said, providing any machinery for regulation or even for supervision with respect to what the lending institutions will do with the interest rate later.

I do not have to tell hon. members, who know as well as I know, or perhaps better, that we normally deal with three different kinds of borrower, the individual borrower, the business borrower, and the borrower involved with mortgage loans. In my submission there ought to be some decent relationship between the rates charged to each class of borrower. If the classes can be subdivided further without creating confusion, by all means let us do so.

We ought to have some regulatory body perhaps the Bank of Canada is the best body—to ensure that the removal of the ceiling will not merely create an opportunity for the lending institutions—all of them instead of only some of them—to exploit particularly some of the small borrowers of the country. If the minister does not like a regulatory body, then I suggest, as urged by my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, that we establish a publicly owned commercial bank in this country and take advantage of the Mercantile Bank situation to achieve that purpose.

This is another and very effective way of regulating the interest rate, or at least of influencing the interest rate and influencing the flow of available investment or lending funds in the right direction.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The hon. member for Edmonton West referred to the suggestion made by my hon. friend and said he was talking about a fetish of his—the nationalization of banks. I would point out that my hon. friend was not suggesting the nationalization of the banking system. He was suggesting that we take into the hands of the people of Canada through the government a commercial bank which we could make sure would function in the interest of the economy and of the people of Canada and which would introduce genuine competition into the banking system. No one can convince me that there will ever be competition among the chartered banks of this country, and I do not think the minister believes there will be. There may be, and there is, competition between them and other lending institutions; but that nice, cosy club the Bankers Association, is such that there will never be any real competition among the banks themselves. Very few people in this country believe otherwise.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Why this doctrinaire approach by the minister? Why does the hon. member for Edmonton West feel so outraged by the suggestion made by my hon. friend? The fact is that the government of Canada is already in the business of banking, either directly or indirectly, through a number of statutes which are on the statute books of this parliament. Let me mention a few. Under the National Housing Act, both by guaranteeing loans and by making direct loans we are in effect in the banking business. Under the Farm Credit Act credit to farmers is guaranteed by the federal treasury and loans are made to farmers at an interest rate of 5 per cent, if I remember correctly. This is an intervention by the government to make sure that farmers can obtain the credit they require without having to pay a usurious rate of interest. The Small Businesses Loans Act, even though it has not been very widely used or very effectively implemented, is intended to assist in the provision of credit to those engaged in small business who cannot obtain credit through the usual channels. The Student Loans Act is a form of banking into which this parliament has entered through legislation. The Municipal Development and Loan Act is another form of banking which this parliament has undertaken.

The Export Credits Corporation, by guaranteeing export credit, is engaged in another form of banking which has been undertaken by parliament. The Industrial Development Bank is an agency by which direct loans are made to business people in certain circumstances. Here are seven statutes which are on the statute books today, and there are probably others I have not thought of. Why does this legislation exist? It exists because the parliament of Canada found that the ordinary banking facilities and the ordinary banking methods based on making as much profit as possible and getting as high an interest rate as the traffic would bear were methods which could not serve the farmer, the student, or the small businessman who needed a loan and could not survive if he had to deal only with the banks or other lending institutions.

Why all this fuss, therefore because we suggest that in addition to this piecemeal kind of banking here and there this parliament and the people of Canada should set up a publicly owned bank in competition with the privately owned chartered banks as a yardstick, as a model, so that two things could be achieved.

The first would be the establishment of some indirect control over interest rates, because if this bank acted in the public interest it would apply interest charges which were justified, and because of its very existence the other banks would have to fall into line. In the second place it would help push the banking system into serving social purposes. If the private chartered banks were unwilling to make certain loans which the economy required, which fairness required, which equity required, then those customers could go to the government-run bank and, if it were run efficiently and in accordance with equitable social principles, its facilities would be available for them to use.

I ask: Who is doctrinaire? Who is being governed by a fetish or, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands put it yesterday, who is acting in accordance with irreverent religious faith if it is not the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Edmonton West? What my hon. friend recommended in the committee and what he recommended in his speech yesterday was not anything doctrinaire; it was a practical proposition for a form of regulation, a form of public intervention which would make the banking system a little more human—note, I do not say "human"; I say "a little more human"—than in most cases it is.

This is why I feel very distressed about the bill which is now before us. My hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands supported the idea of giving Citibank five years during which to divest itself of the 75 per cent of its interest in the Mercantile Bank. He explained yesterday—and I fully appreciate and respect his position—that if we are not willing to buy up 75 per cent of the Mercantile Bank now and place it under public ownership, we should not be irresponsible and make it impossible for anything to happen—remain, as it were, in a strait-jacket. If we do not act sensibly and make Mercantile into a publicly owned bank, we should do the practical thing and give Citibank an opportunity to divest itself of the 75 per cent interest as the legislation requires.

What will happen during these five years concerns my hon. friend; it concerns me, and I hope it concerns the minister. In these five years the Mercantile Bank will become a much more powerful institution. I hope that before all the clauses of this bill are finished with, the minister will be able to assure this parliament that he has ways and means of obliging Citibank to divest itself of 75 per cent of its interest in Mercantile Bank within the period allotted.

I sincerely hope that five years from now we shall not find ourselves in an even worse position than we are today because the shares of the Mercantile Bank will be much more expensive, the bank will be a much more powerful institution and the government of the United States, particularly the secretary of state of that country, will be even more angry at any steps which may be taken to deal with an institution which will have become much more powerful than it is now.

The Chairman: Order.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to be brief. At first, I was not going to take part in the discussion of this bill, because I find it very technical and I readily admit my incompetence.

But I want to tell the house what happened to me last night. I was reading a newspaper from western Canada which reported: The review of the Bank Act has been awaited for two years and it is to be hoped that, after all the time lost on the Munsinger case, the Spencer case, unification, the flag debate, the furniture matter and all that, our parliamentarians will take the time to discuss the Bank Act and to express the views of the poor man.

It is therefore the poor man's point of view that I wish to express this evening, Mr. Chairman, and my remarks will deal with that masterwork of technical complexities, the details of which baffle me, as is probably true also for a great number of members.

Interesting points of view were expressed to which I listened very attentively, because I think I am not the only one concerned with trying to pass legislation that will be able to meet the needs of the mass of the people. Other members have the same concern while expressing other points of view, but the views of an independent member possibly contribute something different.

For instance, I have listened attentively to my friends of the Ralliement or others who, with exemplary conviction, preached monetary reform and, at this point, I should especially mention how much I admire the force of conviction and the tenacity of the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe). We know the member for Compton-Frontenac as a modest man, as a man who normally does not seek the starring role but who is inspired by such a deep-seated conviction that he will not hesitate to face any provocation to try to promote his belief in monetary reform, and I believe this homage is due to him that he is sincere. Even though we may possibly hold a different opinion on his conclusions, even though we are not inclined to go as fast as he would like us to, nevertheless we must recognize his obvious sincerity.

The Créditistes consider finance in relation to the people and want to preserve free enterprise.

Our friends of the New Democratic Party, for their part, go slightly further; they want to make finance serve the people and to that end, they favour state ownership of all organizations that are sources of finance in the country. Listening to them, I sometimes say to myself that there are in that many sensible views dictated by circumstances in a way, but mostly by this anxiety that is spreading among the masses as to the extent to which our financial system is revealed as powerless and a failure as far as the problems of our times are concerned.

Conservatives and Liberals hold a different viewpoint. It is rather a search for modern techniques to ensure the survival of the present financial system. Of course, that might be explained by the fact that, in those two great parties, there are more millionaires, more directors of companies than in the others; it might be also—it was said viciously and I do not know to what exent it might be checked—because the financial circles contribute more generously to the election funds of those two parties. But their preoccupations are obviously different.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that tonight I am speaking for the poor devils, the ordinary people who wonder what that heavy and complex text will mean for them. As a matter of fact, what will it mean for the small people who never had a large bank account, who quite often are in the red, just like the grocer and the butcher who supply them, the merchant where they buy their clothes, whose credit is cut and who is then forced to limit his operations.

That is what the great majority of Canadians are concerned about. It is not a matter of knowing whether the method will make a few more rich people or a few less; it is not a matter of knowing whether banks will be a little more or a little less solvent, whether they will get a little more or a little less competition. This reminds me of certain words by Péguy, who said: What do I care if some people have more wine in their cellar, or more castles; what concerns me is whether the poor will find their bread tomorrow morning.

Such is the concern, then. I say there is a concern margin in this bill, for people say to themselves: For ten years to come, the economic life of the country is being settled, it is being decided now, in periods of prosperity, we, the poor, shall be treated. In periods of prosperity, they say: Well, there must not be too much for fear of inflation, and in depression periods it is: Well, there is no money. So, again it is hardship for the poor.

That is when the Independent that I am wonders, Mr. Chairman. I tell myself that truth is not intangible, that it does not look red or blue to me. It does not even look gray—if I may so characterize the N.D.P.—nor green—if I may apply that color to the Créditistes. I say that there is still something which seems to me very sensible in the Créditiste or N.D.P. theories, something we will have to try to combine, before long, with the orthodox doctrines of the two old parties, in order to face the challenges of the times. Otherwise, the day may not be far removed when the people will revolt in the face of that ever recurring situation: when there is money, there is inflation, too much production, and tightening measures are taken to prevent inflation; when there is not enough money, privation ensues with all it entails.

Mr. Chairman, I commend them for their strong convictions, for the seriousness of the arguments they have put forward, and I refer particularly to the hon. members who have expressed what I would call views of the "common people." Most of the speeches I have heard were from members of the New Democratic Party and from Créditistes. I say this as an Independent member who might stand his ground against them one of these days, but I think truth should prevail.

This concern, Mr. Chairman, takes many forms. For instance, not too long ago, I read this report in the financial page of a large Montreal newspaper, La Presse, and I quote:

> According to Mr. R. B. MacPherson, an economist with the DuPont Company of Canada, the country will go through a depression between 1968 and 1970. He made this grim forecast in a speech delivered this week before the members of the Montreal Rotary Club.

Mr. Chairman, when one sees that the federal government is controlling the economy, that banks, after all, are institutions applying daily the general policies of the federal government, when one sees that the future is that grim, how can simple people like us, who did not have the opportunity of learning all the intricacies of our financial system, not be concerned about the future?

Has any thought been given, when drawing up those laws—because I have always been told that financiers and even financial experts had neither heart nor soul; but they must have, for even financiers have some concern, as human beings, although it seems to me they do not when they are drawing up laws—to the effects they would have on the mass of the Canadian people, on the small wage-earner who, becomes jobless, or on the small business man whose enterprise is placed in jeopardy when their credit is cut off? I wonder, and I am really looking at this objectively.

But the economist I have mentioned is not the only one who is pessimistic. I see in the Commentator, another English magazine from Toronto—a financial centre if there ever was one—an article which I would like to quote verbatim so as not to run the risk of translating it badly:

[English]

If we look back over the budgets of the five years ending this coming December, we see that we had substantial budgetary deficits every year and that these aggregate close to 2.5 billion dollars. In a full ten-year period, the total comes to about 3.6 billion dollars; in only one of these years was there a surplus. You don't have to be an accountant or an economist—indeed one needs no expertness at all—to know that this is a financially precarious course. How can we disagree with some "authority" who forecasts a financial collapse down this road of continuous extravagance?

• (9:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, once again, for simple minded people like me and the people on whose behalf I speak, such statements are rather disquieting and I cannot but recall this caricature which appeared in the Globe and Mail a few days ago. It showed a poor devil, in rags, unshaved, standing on a street corner where a lot of well-to-do people were going about—it must have been Bay Street, in Toronto, or St. James Street, in Montreal. He had in his hand a small tin and on his chest a sign which went something like this: "Please help me. I have a wife and three governments to support." There is no doubt that he was in a rather serious situation and it is more or less how he feels when confronted by all those complicated illustrations put before him now.

I should like to quote another testimony to show that not only in simple circles are people concerned with the financial future and wonder whether the banks' role will be the creative role it should be, whether it will promote intense circulation in the economic arteries of the nation.

In a lecture delivered in 1966, Mr. Neil J. McKinnon, chairman of the board of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, said:

—there is a shortage of investment capital throughout the world, and in a country where this shortage is such as in Canada, foreign investments should not be discouraged.

Mr. Chairman, that worries and puzzles the simple people that we are, because without foreign investments, especially with the present controversies, economic development will slow down rapidly.

And Mr. McKinnon adds:

Very substantial capital investments are essential to improve production processes and increase productivity.

Well, it was said this afternoon that there are about 390,000 unemployed in Canada, and 160,000 of them are in the province of Quebec. A few days ago, I read an article stating that, in addition to these 390,000 unemployed, there must be from 100,000 to 125,000 unemployed who are not registered and not included in statistics.

Mr. Chairman, it must be admitted that this situation does not help the butchers, the grocers who want to see their bills paid and who know what worries are.

The chairman of the board of directors of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce said further:

On the other hand, if American investments in Canada are very high, Canadian investments in the United States are also substantial. Direct investments of United States citizens in Canada amount to $63 per capita, and holding investments, to $33 per capita. Direct investments of Canadian citizens in the United States amount to $97 per capita, and holding investments, to $66 per capita. On this basis, Canadian investments in the United States exceed by two-thirds those of United States citizens in Canada. Total investments of American citizens in Canada, according to the latest statistics, amounted to 18 billion dollars, and those of Canadian citizens in the United States to more than three billion dollars.

This might look like double dutch to many of us, but we can still understand that considerable sums are involved. Does it reflect the situation accurately? Should we infer that our federal government, with the support of banks, is unable to control that modern financial system supposedly responsible for that tremendous prosperity which, nevertheless, allows half a million unemployed and hundreds of thousands of poor families, as reported in the official statistics of the federal government?

It is the concern of the average or poor citizen that I want to express this evening in connection with the bill. I want to tell the minister and his departmental technicians who are well meaning, of course, but more inclined perhaps to hear only one side of a question, that of technicians expert in this complex international financial organization, which is perhaps more interested in preventing banking bankruptcies than in ensuring decent living conditions to most Canadian people.

I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that it is unwise on my part to talk that way, because I am not one of those with whom banks are making money; on the contrary, I am rather one of those who need banks and who are quite often in the red. I do hope the banks will not blame me tomorrow morning for such outspokenness concerning certain feelings that strike me as being true, now that I have listened to a number of more experienced colleagues.

And what I am saying here is so true and so vital. It was not so long ago that we read in the newspapers that the premier of the province of Quebec and his counsellors had to go to Bay Street, in Toronto. They also had to go to Wall Street, in New York. And it was in order to beseech the people there not to forsake the province of Quebec, but to permit it to take advantage of certain capital for, as they were reported as saying, the day is not far distant where the situation will not be a bright one. In fact, this represents a problem once more, that concerns poor people like us. This bill concerning banking reform is going to seal the fate of most of the Canadian people for ten years to come.

Now, we would like to strike this note to be sure that thought has been given to this proposal. If it is not possible, in this bill, which is one of complicated technicalities, to include everything, we should at least bear in mind the concern which should be underlying any piece of legislation passed by this house.

Further to the evidence I just gave, with a view to point out the concern of the Canadian people—the average Canadian, the poor fellow—faced with the financial situation which is, after all, always characterized by the part played by the banks, I will quote the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) from a comment which appeared in another newspaper, that is La Press dated February 23, 1967, and written by a newspaper man who is a specialist in economics and financial matters. Here is what he said:

> According to the analysis made by Mr. Sharp, the federal authorities have endeavoured in recent years to develop the Canadian economy by working in the field of capital as well as that of the manpower and foreign trade.

I think this is true.

> Yearly important gains have been obtained in the Gross National Product and in the reduction of unemployment. The impetus brought about by these various governmental policies has led, however, to inflationary pressures since several months. In this new context, Ottawa has used the monetary and fiscal policy in order to check the trouble in the field of prices but, according to Mr. Sharp himself, mistakes have been made because the adjustments put into effect have not eliminated the evil at its very root, which is essentially characterized by insufficient productivity and its inevitable consequence, that is excessively high prices.

Mr. Chairman, I am of those who support the financial policies of the government. I think I shall continue to do so because I promised my electors I would. I promised to do so when major issues are not at stake, regardless of the government in power. I am still willing to support the government also because I feel that it does what it can under the circumstances and I believe the minister is competent.

However, the fact remains that I must see to it that what I call the voice of the poor is heard. That is neither superfluous nor uncalled for. And I repeat, I do not feel ill at ease in doing so, considering the time that has been wasted in this house, for instance, in a quarrel over a flag, which took three months to divide the country, and for such an insignificant matter as the Munsinger affair which holds no appeal for people of taste such as we are, the members of this house. Let the voice of the poor be heard that those who in this house are responsible for the finances of the country may be reminded that the needs of the mass, the small wage-earners, should always be the first consideration and source of inspiration in our legislative measures.

And I am passing over a few things, Mr. Chairman, in order to give a brief summary of my conception of the new bill and express a thought. And to be sure of not misleading anyone, I shall quote textually the summary handed to us by the minister of his proposed review of the Bank Act.

According to him, that review of the Bank Act comprises 14 key proposals. Let us go over them briefly:

1. Banks will be forbidden to hold more than 10 per cent of voting shares in other companies, including near banks.

2. By forbidding directors of near banks to sit on the board of directors of banks, the new act will remove the overlapping of boards of directors which prevents competition.

3. Directors may not sit on the board of two banks.

4. Not more than one fifth of the directors of a company may be directors of the same bank.

5. Agreements between banks on interest rates are prohibited. The basic principles of the Combines Investigation Act will apply to the banks.

6. The ceiling on bank interest will be eliminated when credit conditions ease off.

It seems that it will be done.

7. In the meantime, there will be a slight relaxation of the maximum rate to help immediately the small borrowers and to take into account the general trend of the interest rates.

8. Banks will be required to disclose in detail their revenues and expenditures and, for the first time, their hidden reserves.

9. A federal provincial conference on consumers' credit is foreseen.

10. Federal project of insurance deposits—

11. Federal plan of insurance deposits to promote the setting up of new banks.

12. Banks allowed to grant mortgage loans—

13. Issuance of bonds—

14. Two levels of cash reserves will be required in respect of these two classes of deposits—

I find all this very good, except that it does not entirely remove worries from those I would call "the poor devils".

I already see that there will be conflict with at least one province about insurance deposits. When you look at the list of those bank directors, you find that at the same time they are all directors of large Canadian corporations. Now, this means that, in the final analysis, it boils down to a not so long list of big financiers who are the directors of our banks and large corporations. In looking at all this, well, the poor soul wonders: Is the purpose of all this not to make sure that banking institutions will get protection against the hazards of the various financial seasons, which have their ups and downs, or against competition from foreign banks, or against the cost of certain modern progress, rather than to make sure that these banks will really serve the poor, to help them have a minimum standard of living to which they are entitled in the democracy in which they live?

I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that it is a worry. I lack the competence to say to what extent or in what way that could be avoided. I am just saying that after studying the theories put forth here in this house, I have reached this conclusion: what seems lacking in this bill is the human touch, some concern for the problems of the people which remain forever unsolved, for instance unemployment, the lack of capital which forces the small contractor or the owner of the corner store or the worker to deal with finance companies which make them pay prohibitive interest rates. That does not seem to solve the problem ever. I admit that it worries people who, like me, are seeking the truth, so much so that they have to ask themselves questions.

And we see some astounding things. For example, in the Financial Post of January 19, I read a report which struck me and pleased me because I had said to myself: It is a good sign; when the Minister of Finance brought out his last budget he told us that it would prevent a too painful inflation period. I voted with the government in that respect; it achieved some success. Consequently, I will quote that editorial of the Financial Post:

[English]

The government's venture in restraint has been remarkably successful. By the last quarter of 1966, living costs were rising less than half as rapidly as in the first quarter. Prices of industrial materials at wholesale dropped 4.4 per cent during the year (against) a 4.5 per cent rise in 1965.

[Translation]

I then said to myself, that is good. But after another look, in March 1967, I said: There is not less unemployment, there is not more money. We have been hearing about such things for years. Some may tell me: if the minister had failed to act as he did, the situation would have been worse. Yes indeed, and I am grateful to the minister for having had the foresight of taking such action last year. But I am beginning to think: would it not be advisable to change the system instead of simply changing a few parts of the machine, as is being done at present? I now wish to quote an item of the Canadian Press from Vancouver reporting a statement of the president of the Laurentide Financial Corporation:

Mr. Peter Paul Saunders did, however, admit that the monetary restriction would have the advantage of slowing down the economy which is presently overburdened and to check the actual threat of inflation.

Then, for whom is inflation a danger? For the financiers, of course; for the poor, of course, because should it occur, costs would become prohibitive. But are we going to start all over again, every four or five years, with the result that whenever there is money, we will have to take steps to restrict consumption, by fear of inflation, and when there is a shortage, the poor will have to tighten their belts.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, and I believe that my concern is sincere, for I am not yet a socialist. I still believe in the capitalist system, but I say that this system is being challenged, that if it does not take up the challenge soon, it will have to answer certain questions, to face certain upheavals. I think that my colleagues, who are now listening to me, know that I am not biased, and that if I show narrow-mindedness, it is not intentional.

I am trying instead to give a warning which I hear whispered in the masses—and the problem is not settled.

Mind you, I have no intention of blaming the government. This represents probably a global legislation so important that its preparation and implementation would take years. But I say to the government that time has perhaps come to listen, and not to say at the outset: Well, the Créditistes are wrong, they are dreamers; or else: Well, the N.D.P. members are socialists, they are wrong, they are dreamers.

I wonder whether we should not take something from all these theories. And then, it is not necessary to say it, because I see on another financial page—which I shall not quote to spare time—the following title:

Did Ottawa choose the right solution?

Mr. Chairman, I almost wish to close with an extract by somebody who advocates the Mr. Douglas' theory of Social Credit, but I will spare you and shall only say this: There is, among Canadians, a great concern about what I call the failure of the financial system in which we live. The financial system has perhaps prevented a greater evil, but it did not give that minimum comfort which the people expect in our modern times.

Now, this is the challenge that the government will have to face.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that tomorrow is a very important day in the history of most enlightened people, because I will not be here and I understand that another Irishman from the riding of Rosthern will be delivering a speech, I am hoping that when ten o'clock comes hon. members might celebrate St. Patrick's day by permitting myself and the hon. member for Rosthern to complete our observations on this particular clause of the bill.

I have listened with a good deal of attention to the discussion on the bank bill during the last two days. Like most hon. members I was impressed by the chairman of the finance committee and the way in which he conducted 70 or more meetings. Although I joined that committee very late in its hearings, I think this was a perfect example of how the committee stage can work, and how committees of the House of Commons can perform an important function, provided the members forget extreme partisanship and are objective in performing the task given to them by the house. I think it is safe to say that perhaps there is more interest in this bill than ever before in the history of Canada in regard to any legislation governing banks and our financial institutions.

Canadians for generations have been proud of the record of their chartered banks. I suppose all of us at one time or another have repeated the story that our chartered banks did not fail during the depression as did the banks south of the border, and we have become a little complacent about our banking institutions. Our bankers stand up with pride and, for instance, point to the vast sums of money they are lending under the Small Loans Act. When we look at the fine print and find that practically all these loans are paid, and that the federal government is rarely called to meet its obligations as guarantor we realize that the banks are taking little risk in making these loans. However, recent failures in the field of near banks have made Canadians a little more apprehensive about our banking system and our financial institutions. Certainly if there was any intention or inclination on the part of Canadians not to be interested in the present Bank Act their attention would have been focused on the banks forcibly by the unexpected events concerning the Mercantile Bank and the so-called cabinet leak.

Most speakers have spoken very eloquently about the Bank Act. The hon. member for Labelle made a very intelligent and thoughtful opening speech concerning the Bank Act and the Porter commission report, a better speech than I could possibly deliver. However, I should like to speak on one aspect of the whole problem which perhaps was somewhat clouded in some of the recent events. First of all let me say that I do not pretend to know whether the philosophy behind the present Bank Act is the best one for Canada. I have read the recent speech of the former chairman of the Bank of England, Lord Cromer, who warned the western world and Europe that economic nationalism could impede the flow of capital in contrast to what took place in the nineteenth century. I have listened with great interest and read the speeches of the president of the Royal Bank of Canada who endorses the same views. If time would permit me I would quote an extract from "Barrons" which castigates not only Canada but also the United States and most of the other countries of the world for what they consider to be their very restrictive policy, so far as the flow of capital is concerned.

However, the one thing that is important to me as a Canadian is that regardless of what action we take and what philosophy we endorse, of whether we believe that the banks should be entirely Canadian or should be open to people from all over the world, it should be our decision to make, without the pressure of outside corporations and without the pressure of any country in this world no matter how friendly that country professes to be. That is the right of Canada as a sovereign nation.

I was appalled at the degree of pressure that was put of this government by the White House and by the various interested groups in the United States. Efforts were made to discredit the former minister of finance. I am sure very few people in the house were surprised at the testimony presented to the committee which proved that the events as outlined earlier by the former minister of finance leading up to the purchase of the Mercantile Bank by Citibank corresponded with facts. This does not surprise those of us who know the hon. member for Davenport. I have said in the house and I do not mind repeating it that regardless of what he accomplishes in the rest of his political career he has been the man responsible for preventing the further erosion of our publications. He had the distinction of putting forward in the House of Commons legislation which prevented the sale of our newspapers to foreign interests.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if progress could be reported for the purpose of making a motion to continue the sitting for a short time?

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the house to consider this bill at the next sitting or later today?

Some hon. Members: Later this day.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I move, pursuant to standing order 6(2), that the house continue to sit until not later than 11 o'clock p.m.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Richard in the chair.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I thank hon. members for their courtesy.

I was speaking of some of the accomplishments of the former minister of finance. Before I get back to the subject of the Bank Act I might remind hon. members that as the former minister of finance he brought in legislation to protect our insurance companies and our trust and loan companies from passing further into the hands of foreign investors. It is no secret that I am a strong believer in many of the ideas and much of the philosophy of the former minister, but it is equally true that I am also a supporter of the present Minister of Finance.

I think that the biggest problem we have had in the last few weeks is that many of our newspaper writers have not understood the present Bank Act. I could mention one editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star three nights ago whose author tried to make out that the present Minister of Finance has changed in some devious way the philosophy and the spirit of the act as enunciated by the former minister in 1965. I suspect that such newspaper writers are not doing a proper service to those people who believe what they read in the newspapers. I might quote for instance this statement, which appeared in the editorial to which I have referred:

> Two vital concessions—vigorously opposed by Walter Gordon and the nationalist wing of the Liberal party—have been offered the National City Bank of New York (Citibank). Citibank purchased Mercantile after being warned they could not expand unless they abided by new Canadian banking rules.

The banking committee agreed that Citibank will be allowed to retain a 25 per cent interest in the Mercantile Bank of Canada, now its wholly owned subsidiary.

Mr. Chairman, this was contained in the original Bank Act of 1965. The 25 per cent interest which Citibank was allowed to retain was a provision also contained in the original Bank Act, and no action of the banking committee nor any amendment brought in by the present Minister of Finance have in any way changed the magic figure of 25 per cent. So, I think in all fairness to the present minister, when we get to a clause by clause study of the bill some of these things should be appreciated. I am pleased, as one member of the committee, to repeat here tonight that there is no difference in the philosophy of the present bill and the bill which would have normally been adopted had the election not interfered with its passage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that, if anything, the present bill is a little more restrictive of Citibank and other large groups of investors. It is more restrictive because some of the loopholes that existed became apparent to members of the committee and were properly blocked. There is one, however, that bothers me a little and I hope to get to it in a few minutes. I will make a suggestion to the minister, but whether or not he intends to do something about it will be up to him.

I am rather pleased, Mr. Chairman, to see the front page of the Montreal Star tonight. There is a headline which reads, "U.S. Reverses Stand on Bank Control". This is one of the types of harassment to which the government felt they were being subjected at the time of the Mercantile controversy. I like to think that the remarks the Prime Minister made on the program "The Nation's Business" on February 1, 1967, pretty well summarized the philosophy not only of our party but all parties. In mentioning our relationship with the United States, he said:

There are two dangers, however, which we must avoid in the search for fair and acceptable solutions to our problem. The danger on the Canadian side is an oversensitive nationalism, defensive rather than aggressive; based on the feeling, and the fear that as the weaker partner we are too dangerously vulnerable to the effect of the decisions of the friendly giant that lives beside us. The danger from the American side is ignorance of our desire, yes, our determination, to remain independent and separate; and an inability on their part to understand our refusal to accept the doctrine that what is good for the United States must necessarily be good for Canada too.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the the main conflict with Citibank and Mr. Rockefeller resulted from their failure to understand that we respected our sovereignty, that we have a right to control our own destiny and that the Bank Act becomes a charter for our Canadian banks. We have the right, therefore, to change the rules every ten years. Once Mercantile Bank accepted this philosophy, once they realized we were firm on this particular point, once they realized that as a Canadian chartered bank they had a responsibility to respect the laws of this country, not adopted by this party but by this parliament, they stated quite definitely in a telegram placed at the disposal of the committee by the present Minister of Finance that they would respect this law. I can assure you that, to the best of my knowledge at least, in any role I may have played wittingly or unwittingly, no concession was given to Mercantile Bank in return for their realization of our determination to run our own affairs. For that matter, none was asked. The moment Mercantile Bank respected the Canadian philosophy in this bill, then we in the banking committee felt it would be fair play if we were to help Mercantile Bank adjust to the restrictive clauses that exist in the bill and which existed in the previous bill tabled in the house in 1965.

I should like to say—and I am watching the clock—something about the cabinet split and the newspaper headlines. I notice the hon. member for Ontario looking at me quizzically, but I am not a member of the cabinet nor have I been. He was a member of the cabinet. I say, what type of cabinet would this be if we had 24 members all sharing the same philosophy, all left wingers, all right wingers, all uniform in their thinking? Is it not the purpose of cabinet to represent all segments of society, all philosophies and all political thought?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Solidarity.

Mr. Mackasey: That may not be true across the way, but it is the way it should be. All Canadians in this country are entitled to representation in cabinet, whether geographically or any other way. The purpose of cabinet is to form a consensus and to—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mackasey: Not now; I will at the end, if I am given time, because I am racing the clock. If the cabinet wants to leak what goes on in cabinet, then I as a backbencher can only look upon this with a certain amount of disbelief at their willingness to destroy themselves.

That there should be controversy in the cabinet over an issue such as our banking law should surely surprise no one. I do not know whether such controversy does exist, but I do know that it beclouds the issue, which is that the banking committee in an objective spirit, representing the best brains of all parties —myself excluded—brought forward a bill consisting of polished amendments which were accepted unanimously, which I hope will be debated in this chamber from here on in with that same spirit of objectivity which prevailed in the committee, and to which reference has been made by members of all parties today.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the hon. member permit a question now, while he is reaching for his glass of water?

Mr. Mackasey: When I am through. I mentioned earlier—and I jump straight to this so I have time to answer the question—that I should like to make some reference to the evidence before the committee. As reported at page 2942 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 42 the Minister of Finance, in answer to a question, said:

> If the National City Bank had definite plans for reducing its holdings in the Mercantile Bank to 25 per cent I believe it would be in the Canadian interest to facilitate those plans.

That was the philosophy behind permitting this five year period, to come to the restrictive clause 75(2)(g).

Further on the minister re-emphasizes the fact that loopholes in the bill must be plugged. He referred to an amendment that he intended to introduce, and which he did introduce and which members of the banking committee accepted. As reported at page 2956 he said:

> Such an amendment would not prevent the shares being sold to residents of Canada. It would prevent them being sold to residents of the United States, including the present owner of all the shares. However, the decision on whether to permit an increase in capital per se remains within the discretion of the governor in council.

To save time, Mr. Chairman, on several occasions during the committee hearings the minister emphasized the following points. If a bank—any bank, including the Mercantile Bank—were to appeal to the governor in council for permission to increase authorized share capital, those shares would be made available to Canadians only whenever at least 25 per cent of the shares of that particular bank were owned outside this country or more than 25 per cent of the shares remained in the hands of any individual. The minister repeated that on half a dozen occasions.

What bothers me, and I say this directly to the minister, is that I am not certain in reading the bill that the governor in council necessarily has that right. I suggest to the minister, and this might be implemented on the appropriate clause and I am not sure which clause it is, that we ensure that whenever a bank receives permission to increase its share capital, no individual, as defined in the act, be permitted to add to his shares so long as he or his group owns more than 10 per cent of a bank. I am not talking of a specific bank; I am talking of any bank; and more than one bank is in that particular situation. This would guarantee the carrying out of the minister's intention, as he has stated it on several occasions in the committee.

I say these words in a spirit of co-operation. I have pointed out what I believe is the only flaw in the act. I bring it forward for one reason only, because the minister has spoken about this matter half a dozen times in committee. I am not the type of person who likes to play dirty pool, but I would not want to be party to the changing of any act, as it affects the Mercantile Bank or anybody else, once those people have accepted the principle of pro-Canadianism as outlined in this measure. I shall say now, notwithstanding that I am in the house—I would say it were I not in the house—that if the government tries to reduce the five-year period granted to the Mercantile Bank for the application of clause 72(2)(g) I would vote against such amendment, if the minister were to bring it in.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): May I ask a question?

Mr. Mackasey: One moment, please. I shall put on my hearing aid.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I shall make myself heard. I wanted to ask the hon. member, when he was dealing with the point, since he is making a poor job of excusing the controversy—

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question for information I shall accept it. If he wants to use the opportunity to get his version of things in, and to colour the question, then I do not intend to cede him the floor.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I was not under the impression that the hon. member had ceded the floor.

Mr. Mackasey: For what excuse is the hon. member up.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The hon. member sat down before I had asked him whether he would answer a question.

Mr. Mackasey: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question now? I shall sit down to allow him to ask it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Since the hon. member is getting so touchy I shall wait until he is through. He cannot be too long; he will run either out of water or out of words.

Mr. Mackasey: May I put it to the hon. member that I hope never to run out of brains which the hon. member ran out of a long time ago.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a question of privilege, let me say I can think of many important differences between us.

Mr. Mackasey: I am sure we could exchange those for a long time.

Mr. Knowles: Next speaker.

Mr. Starr: Time.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I hope when we approach the various clauses of the bill that we realize the precise size of the Mercantile Bank as it exists today and realize that in five years that bank can be a sizeable operation with assets of up to $1 billion. For those who are concerned with the danger of the Mercantile Bank becoming too big, and I think an hon. member mentioned this earlier in the evening, let me say this: The law is very definite. Any bank with more than 25 per cent of its shares in the hands of individuals or groups will have to combat certain liabilities. I forget in which clause of the bill this is mentioned—I think it is clause 145(5)—but there is provided a penalty of $1,000 a day where a bank with more than 25 per cent of its shares in the hands of an individual exceeds the 20 to 1 ratio.

Fear has been expressed by some people whose opinion I respect that Mercantile will make no effort to dispose of its shares until the last day of the fifth year. I think most people would agree that the bank would be most unlikely to dump 50,000 shares, or whatever the number may be, on the stock market in one day. The chances are that Mercantile and other banks in a similar situation would wish to dispose of their shares as the opportunity arose or whenever it was in their best financial interest to do so.

I notice that my time has expired and once again I thank all members of the committee for giving me this opportunity to complete my speech.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I wonder if I might direct a question to the hon. member before he sits down.

The Chairman: The hon. member may proceed.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I will make a brief comment, first.

Mr. Mackasey: Ask the question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The hon. member made an attempt to alibi the controversies within the cabinet. Would he be courageous enough to alibi the controversies which have taken place outside, and which cannot be denied? What value has the hon. member for Davenport, in relation to the more than 15 seats in the Toronto area, as compared with the Minister of Finance? Apparently the Minister of Finance is rated lower.

Mr. Mackasey: There are about six questions there. Which one would the hon. member like me to answer first?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Let us deal with the controversies outside the cabinet.

Mr. Mackasey: I suppose the hon. member was so anxious to ask this question that he did not hear what I said about the controversies outside the cabinet. I said they were deplorable. Look at Hansard tomorrow. I made it clear what I thought about the controversies outside the cabinet. I said I deplored them as a backbencher and considered them to reflect a philosophy of self-destruction. This is precisely what I said and the hon. member will see it tomorrow in Hansard.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the hon. member agree that his remarks now about deplorable conduct apply to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Associate Minister of National Defence, who stood up in this house on opposite sides, something which is rarely seen in this country?

Mr. Mackasey: On the contrary, I respect them for having the courage of their convictions.

Mr. Nasserden: I must confess I cannot claim the distinction of being an Irishman either by birth or by blood, but I often suspect I have some of their more notorious characteristics when I look at some of the speeches I have made in the House of Commons from time to time.

I cannot but feel that all hon. members who are here are imbued with at least one characteristic of the Irish, namely generosity, and I wish to thank them very much for displaying this quality. I think the hon. member for Verdun will agree that the little people must have been working on behalf of both of us tonight.

It is fitting that in the centennial year consideration of the Bank Act should be one of the major concerns of the Canadian parliament. This does not, of course, excuse the government for its indecision and for delays which have contributed to the general tightening of money and the pressure on interest rates, since the government announced that the ceiling would be one of the primary factors to be considered.

• (10:20 p.m.)

In trying to assess the effectiveness of the legislation before us it would be well that we consider the history of Canadian banking. I feel that this legislation covers not only the Bank Act but the whole future of Canada. Our aim should be to have Canada's financial resources serve the national purpose, and in order to do that we must establish a purpose which is commensurate with the potential of the nation now and in the future.

We must not forget that our country depends now, and will continue to depend in the future, on investment not only from sources within the country but from other sources wherever we may secure them, provided of course that outside investment is prepared to acquire the qualities of good Canadian citizenship and abide by Canadian aspirations. For my part, the aspiration is to secure and develop a strong, independent, free society which will be able to exert itself in the search for peace at the international level. That will not be one of the easiest objectives to attain, but I maintain it is the only worth-while objective for this nation.

I would go further, sir, and say that unless we do this it might well result in our nation becoming the slave of the United States purpose. If that happens it will not be due to what the United States does, but due to the things we ourselves do, or the things we fail to do.

Looking at the success which our banking institutions have had, we can see that that success is due to the supervision and restraints that have been placed upon them in order to meet the peculiar problems of a nation in circumstances such as those which obtain in Canada.

The problems that have arisen in connection with our financial institutions during the past few months have not come from organizations that are classed as banks; they have come from those that are classed as near banks, which have been left largely without supervision and without the restraints and regulations that have ensured the success of our regular banking institutions.

Banks in Canada have a worth-while tradition, and I cannot agree with those who have made disparaging remarks about the role banks have played in the development of the nation and in the development of individual enterprises. Our banks have one of the most romantic and heartwarming stories to be found among those which form part and parcel of the Canadian heritage. The fact that Canadian banking has not been an unprofitable enterprise does not mean that there have not been occasions when they came up against obstacles. I recall the depression years, and also the years when government itself was competing for deposits that normally would be placed in banking institutions.

Generally speaking, the concept has been that the banks have provided an instrument for short-term and intermediate-term credit. To supplement that we have the trust companies which provide a service different in character, on a longer term basis, mainly for those people who want to place their money on deposit on long term, and know that it is going to be secure. I believe the Bank Act, as it is today, has confused the role that each of these institutions might play in our economic life. The primary role the banks should play is to provide short and intermediate term loans. The trust companies have a role to play in the long term field. They can give stability and security to those individuals who want to put their money in long term investments.

As one who believes in the development of things that are rewarding to those willing to develop this nation, I cannot say that deposits in banks should receive the same interest as those deposits in development projects which involve some risk. For this reason, as well as others, I question the suggestion that we should remove the ceiling on the interest charged by banks.

The hon. member for Verdun said he was frightened by the philosophy behind the Bank Act. He is wrong in his analysis of that reasoning because we must have a credit system if we are to achieve our proper place as a nation and if we are to have maximum development. We must provide an instrument to give our citizens an opportunity to develop this nation.

Not very long ago we were talking in the committee on immigration about bringing thousands of people to Canada. We should develop means by which we can encourage these people to bring their capital wealth to this country. It is imperative that they bring with them their capital for the development of Canadian resources, to the benefit of Canada and the rest of the world. When we look to our neighbour to the south we cannot help but realize the development that has taken place there. Surely it is apparent to everyone that this development was the result of the influx of resources from other sources. The United States did not have this money at the beginning. We in Canada do not have the money now. I cannot understand the philosophy of those who want to place obstacles in the way of foreign investment in this nation.

As I said on an earlier occasion, this bill represents an act of cowardice. It is an indication that this government is unready and unwilling to face up to the problems relating to consumer loans. The interest rates that finance companies have been allowed to charge are such as to indicate a lack of supervision or regulation. These companies invest their money at very little risk, and they are operating at a high rate of profit in cities such as Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Saskatoon, Regina, Edmonton and Vancouver.

It is my suggestion that if we tonight were dealing with something which deserves priority of consideration we should be dealing with measures to regulate and supervise the activities of these finance companies which operate in Canada. Many thousands of people in Canada are involved in financing transaction. The expense involved in financing consumer purchases has become part and parcel of merchandising programs across this nation.

• (10:30 p.m.)

This does not mean that we have to shut our eyes, as seems to be the case with those who sit on the government benches, to the need for regulation in this field. The hon. member for St. Paul's said that the elimination of the interest rate ceiling was a very bold step. I wish to emphasize those words to you, sir because they are words that we should be thinking about in Canada today. We are a young nation, a nation that will be seeking capital from the four corners of the world, a nation with a large national debt. What will an interest hike of 1½ per cent or 2 per cent do, first of all to the cost of carrying the national debt, and second in regard to our competitive image in the markets of the world? This is one of the things that I believe we have to think about, and think about seriously as we consider this legislation.

I think it was the hon. member for St. Paul's who said that somehow we had to get effective foreign competition into Canadian banking. I cannot help but feel that they are words of wisdom at the present time as we consider the future of our nation, and our potential. The hon. member for York East said that the amendments contained in the bill were good, but the bill itself was bad. I think most hon. members of the House of Commons would agree with that statement. I wish to read from the Bank of Canada annual report for 1966, page 4, referring to the Canadian economy:

> Costs increased more, and productivity increased less, in Canada than in the United States in 1966. Diverging movements in costs and productivity such as we have been seeing recently cannot go on for long without seriously affecting the Canadian economy and in particular its international competitive position; a formidable obstacle would be placed in the way of maintaining the strong growth in output and employment of recent years.

Yet this government and the Minister of Finance, who now admit having made a mistake in bringing forward the 11 per cent sales tax, are thinking of lifting the ceiling on interest rates and adding another cost to that of business in this country. I believe that if this bill is adopted in its present form the result will be to add a substantial cost to the small businessmen from one end of the country to the other. I say again, sir, that this is one of the things that the government of Canada and hon. members who have any thought of the future of this country should take into consideration when considering the legislation which is before us. I know that there are members on the other side of the house who feel the same way as I do in this regard, and they are to be commended for the stand they have taken.

I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the committee, and I shall try to be as brief as possible. In regard to the inspection and supervision provisions, to reinforce the argument I put forward I should like to quote from the president's report, Canada Trust-Huron and Erie, 103rd annual meeting, February 8, 1967:

> Let there be no illusion that deposit insurance alone will give the man on the street iron-clad protection. An essential feature of the proposed insurance act is the requirement for adequate regulation and inspection of all participating companies.

What is said there is particularly important in regard to the finance companies that we have in Canada. He went on to say:

> Without such a requirement the act would not serve its intended purpose, for lack of proper regulation and inspection has been a root cause of the trouble.

He is referring there to the lack of proper regulation and inspection being a root cause of the trouble we have had in Canada.

With regard to foreign capital investment he had this to say:

> Canadians should do less worrying about foreign capital coming into the country to help with our development, and spend more time finding ways to encourage greater use of our own savings for the same purpose. If we want to keep Canada for Canadians, then we must give more incentive to Canadian equity ownership.

I say that if we are going to place our savings deposits in the banks of our country as against other forms of investment in the country to the extent implied in the bill before us, we will be defeating the goals which we are striving to achieve.

Mr. Chairman, in normal circumstances I would have some more things to say, but the hour is late and hon. members have been generous so I will conclude now.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in view of the hour and the progress that has been made I would suggest, with the consent of the house, that we stand clause 2 and that a number of clauses which the committee unanimously agreed to and which appear in the Minutes and Proceedings of the committee of February 14 at page 3263 be passed en bloc because they are of a general housekeeping nature and are non-controversial. The only exception in the list would be clause 9.

Mr. McIlraith: I assume the hon. member would also include the schedules?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would move seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton:

> That the following clauses and schedules be passed en bloc: Clauses numbers 3, 5, 7, 8, 15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 30, 32, 34, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 58, 59, 61, 62, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 73, 74, 78, 79, 80, 81, 94, 95, 98, 99, 100, 102, 104, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 147, 148, 149, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, 160, 161 and schedules B, R and S.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member what clauses 92, 100 and 102 were about?

Mr. Lambert: There was consent of the house; therefore—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to refuse unanimous consent from the house, I am simply asking—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am ready to answer, but I had understood that there was unanimous consent and I thought that the agreement still remained the same. Now, what are the numbers of those clauses?

Mr. Grégoire: The subject matter is amalgamation among banks and the clauses in question are numbers 99, 100 and 102.

• (10:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lambert: In order to accommodate the hon. member for Lapointe, I would withdraw numbers 99, 100 and 102.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree that from the block of clauses listed on page 3263 of the committee proceedings, clauses 99, 100 and 102 be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Lambert) agreed to.

Mr. McIlraith: I move that we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Tomorrow?

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we will be considering the same business as today, and after that the same list as indicated last night. After that, we will have interim supply and the final supplementary estimates.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO BURRARD INLET CROSSING

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Transport for some clarification regarding the press release which he issued dated March 15. I should like to quote part of that release:

> A third crossing of Burrard Inlet is under active consideration at the present time and the question of federal participation in this project has been raised on a number of occasions.
> It is understood that the preliminary estimates placed the cost of the new crossing at about $85 million. A part of the cost would be occasioned by the requirement to avoid any obstruction to navigation in the port of Vancouver and a part of the expenditure would provide easier and more efficient access to the wharves and the new National Harbours Board facilities on the waterfront, both in Vancouver and on the north shore.
> The government of Canada is prepared to make a capital contribution to the project which would reflect obligations which are essentially national rather than local in character. In addition to a capital contribution the federal government would be willing to guarantee a loan to be floated by an appropriate local non-profit harbour crossing authority, provided suitable arrangements were made to ensure the payment of interest and the repayment of the capital of the loan spread over a suitable period. If such an authority is established by the provincial and local authorities, the federal government would be prepared to enter into discussions without delay with a view to getting the project launched as quickly as possible.

Now, the part of the press release which seemed to me exceedingly vague was this sentence:

> The government of Canada is prepared to make a capital contribution to the project which would reflect obligations which are essentially national rather than local in character.

I was hoping I could secure from the minister some idea of what the federal government is actually prepared to do.

It so happens that at the same time that the Minister of Transport was issuing his release here, the Minister of Labour issued a release in Vancouver, a copy of which I obtained from the office of the Minister of Labour, and it is almost in identical terms. However, in the press conference which followed the issuing of this release the Minister of Labour was not quite so reticent, and the press report which came over the wire was as follows:

> The Minister of Labour, Mr. Nicholson, says the federal government is willing to pay one third the cost of building a bridge tunnel across Vancouver's Burrard Inlet to ease traffic congestion across the Lions Gate bridge. Mr. Nicholson added that the government was also prepared to finance the rest of the $85 million cost with a 50 year loan.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman give the source of that quotation?

Mr. Douglas: This came over the C.B.C. on the television news last night, and I got a copy of it from the C.B.C.

An article in this morning's Vancouver Province reads as follows:

> Mr. Nicholson is reported as saying that the federal government was prepared to contribute $20 million or more plus long term deferred interest loans for the construction of the crossing. He is quoted as saying that the federal grant could go as high as $30 million.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is a good deal of interest in what exactly is the federal government's proposal. If the statement attributed to the Minister of Labour is correct and the federal government is prepared to contribute one third, which would be roughly $28 million—and the provincial government has already indicated its willingness according to press reports to put up $27 million—then this still leaves $30 million to be raised.

I assume that the federal government would be prepared to lend this amount on a long term basis, but I think that the problem which would face the local authorities on the lower mainland would be to find the sources of revenue available to them to retire a debt of $30 million at the rate of interest that they speculation in the Vancouver Province to the would be expected to pay. There is some effect that the federal government is going to ask for 25 per cent of the gasoline tax in the metropolitan Vancouver area to pay off this loan. The public is entirely in the dark as to what the proposals are, and I think it would be much better if the whole thing were brought out into the open so we all know what each government is prepared to do.

I recognize that the minister cannot be too definitive and that certain negotiations have to take place. But it would be helpful if, instead of saying that the federal government's contribution will reflect obligations which are essentially national, the federal government is prepared to say that they will contribute one third or one half of the amount required, and will tell us how they propose to help the local authorities meet the problem of retiring a long term loan which the federal government have offered to finance.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am raising the matter because of the tremendous interest on the lower mainland in this question. A third crossing is essential. The congestion is atrocious and appalling. Something must be done and done quickly. I welcome the fact that the minister has made a statement regarding the willingness of the federal government to make some contribution. Now I think it would be helpful if he could tell the people on the lower mainland of British Columbia something which is more specific about the nature of the offer of the federal government to assist in this very essential project.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think I should clear up something that the Minister of Labour hoped to have the chance of clearing up today, and that is that the stories that appeared in the Vancouver Province and which were reproduced by the C.B.C.—notwithstanding that the minister held a press conference in the meantime at which he said neither of these things—were in fact not representative of what he actually did say. The minister felt quite indignant about that and I think this should be cleared up. No figures were mentioned, quite deliberately. The primary responsibility in this matter is not the responsibility of the federal government.

I think hon. members who are experienced in dealing with the government of British Columbia know that one must be on one's toes in dealing with them. It did seem to us an indication that we were willing to be forthcoming and helpful with the people who have the primary responsibility, the provincial and local authorities, they might put forward a plan to expedite the goal that the hon. gentleman, all British Columbians and indeed all Canadians ought to have at heart.

The hon. gentleman is quite right about the importance of this third crossing to the third largest agglomeration of Canadians in this country. It is important that this be gone ahead with. It was felt by our government that if we showed we were ready to be cooperative it might perhaps act as a catalyst to bring forward a definite proposal from the provincial and local authorities. We are quite prepared to discuss the matter with them as soon as they have something concrete for us to discuss.

In the meantime the hon. gentleman, who in another capacity took part in a great many federal-provincial negotiations of this kind will, I am sure, particularly when one thinks of his origins, understand why the government is a little reticent about giving any figures at this time.

SHIPPING—REQUEST FOR OPENING OF CHANNEL TO AMHERST ISLAND

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to detain the Minister of Transport at this late hour. I know he has had a heavy and busy day.

My intercession in the adjourned debate at this time concerns a matter of vital importance to an island municipality in my constituency of Prince Edward-Lennox. It is the municipality known as Amherst island, part of the county of Lennox and Addington. It was part of the old seigniory of LaSalle in 1675 under the French régime. It was then known as the Ile de Tonti, named after LaSalle's heroic Italian lieutenant, Henri de Tonti, who assisted him in the discovery and administration of the far-flung western regions of New France. Amherst island, a beautiful unspoiled rural gem on the breast of lake Ontario, is three miles from the mainland, approximately ten miles west of Kingston. It is now served during the navigation season by the motor vessel Amherst Islander, which plies between her home port of Stella, on the island, and Millhaven, on the mainland.

Each year due to thick ice in the channel, this vessel is forced to lay up for part of the winter until the opening of navigation. This ferry has been laid up since February 25 and the population of about 400 people, depending on its services, now awaits the end of this period of isolation. Many commodities are in short supply on the island at this time of the year and the people depend on various forms of transportation that can use the ice or the air. The ice is now unsafe, and there is no airport. As a result I have received a request from Reeve Harry Fleming and his council out of which evolved my question to the Minister of Transport this afternoon. My question was as follows:

> Will the minister please authorize the icebreaker Simcoe now on its way up the St. Lawrence river to Kingston, to continue westerly to Millhaven dock, on the north shore west of Kingston, and from there to break a channel to Stella on Amherst island, in order that the ferry Amherst Islander may resume vital operations in service to Amherst island, the people of which are in serious need of the resumption of service with the mainland?

For the information of the minister and the house, I wish to add that the Amherst Islander is a good ship of limited power, but she is not a good icebreaker and her hull would be vulnerable if she attempted to play the part of an icebreaker at this time and under present conditions. That is why the municipality now requires the services of the Simcoe.

I thank the minister for his courtesies and services in the past, particularly for the light buoy, which following my request he authorized at Bath, and which was installed last year as a safety measure on a dangerous shoal in front of that village. Since my question this afternoon regarding the subject under discussion, I have been informed by the minister's office that his department is giving favourable consideration to this request and I wish to voice my appreciation in that regard not only on my own behalf but on behalf of the people of Amherst island, and the reeve and council, who anxiously look forward to the re-opening of the channel and the resumption of the normal ferry service.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I do not believe it is really necessary for me to say anything because the hon. member—and I congratulate him on his excellent Italian—has not only asked his question but answered it as well.

However, just in case my department is not able to perform quite as fast as the hon. gentleman may have given the impression it may, I must say in all sincerity that the Simcoe has had some engine trouble and is now tied up at the Portsmouth wharf at Kingston. Every effort is being made to effect repairs and it is hoped to have the vessel seaworthy by tomorrow or, at the latest, on Saturday. As soon as she is available she will undertake this service, and I hope perform it successfully. As there are islands off the mainland of Newfoundland in my constituency which are sometimes in a similar difficulty, the hon. gentleman can assure his constituents of Amherst island that I am very anxious that what he has asked should be done.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF UNIFICATION BILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the peripatetic Acting Prime Minister. In view of General Allard's public statement that the integration of Canadian forces will take five years and their unification another five years, making a total of ten, will the Acting Prime Minister give full scope to his obvious leadership qualities and arrange to have the disruptive unification bill withdrawn for reconsideration?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that kind of question can properly be dealt with on orders of the day. However, I would like to say to my hon. friend "top o' the mornin' ".

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): This having been raised in a fashion typical of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I extend to him and to all those of Irish origin, in part or in whole, the good wishes of all of us in this house who are not privileged to be of Irish origin. At the same time I ask him, if he is in communication with the Prime Minister, to convey to him the "top o' the mornin' " from all of us in this house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am only one quarter Irish, but I am sure that in this capacity I can say for those who are fully Irish, those who are part Irish and those who aspire to be Irish, that we accept the greetings and good wishes of the Leader of the Opposition. I am sure that when I talk to the Prime Minister later today he will say not only "top o' the mornin' " but "top o' the day".

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR GUIDE LINES RESPECTING PROFITS, WAGES AND CONSUMER PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister a question with regard to the report of Mr. Louis Rasminsky, the governor of the Bank of Canada, in which he states that Canada needs a better performance of its income determining machinery. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government consequently is changing its position in respect of the need for economic guide lines to bring about a more equitable relationship among profits, wages and consumer prices.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will take this question as notice. I believe it is really difficult, on orders of the day, to deal comprehensively with a matter like this.

Mr. Douglas: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance following the question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has stated on previous occasions that the government did not think economic guide lines would serve any useful purpose, in the light of the report just received from the governor of the Bank of Canada would he now consider setting up economic guide lines to bring about some more equitable relationship among wages, profits and consumer prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the statements I have made on this subject I have been very careful to say that although I did not think the measures that had been taken in other countries were such as to inspire emulation, I did think we should be continuing to search for some means of mobilizing public opinion on behalf of stability of prices and indeed in support of the general proposition that we all support in this house, namely a steady expansion without inflation. I am not quite sure, and none of my advisers is either, as to exactly the form these measures should take, but I am inclined to agree with Mr. Rasminsky that we cannot depend entirely on traditional means.

U.S. ORDER RESPECTING INSPECTION OF BANKS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I should like to answer a question put to me on March 13 by the Leader of the Opposition. On February 13 I informed the house that the government had made representations to the United States concerning what appeared to be extraterritorial provisions in the proposed revision of certain United States banking regulations issued by the federal reserve board governing the foreign operations of United States controlled banks. Earlier this week, in response to a question from the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, I informed the house that at that time no reply had been received from the United States with regard to the representations made.

I can now inform the house that the United States authorities have now acted in response to these representations. Yesterday the federal reserve board announced regulations which do not contain the extra-territorial implications which Canada felt had been present in the earlier drafts. The federal reserve board expects that the foreign branches and affiliates of their member banks will conduct their affairs in accordance with the laws of countries in which they carry on their activities. This is a satisfactory outcome of our representations.

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING DEPOSIT INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. While he was preparing his federal plan for deposit insurance did he discuss this important matter with provincial premiers or provincial ministers of finance?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, during the whole course of the preparation of this legislation my officials were in contact with the officials of all provinces, including the province of Quebec.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. Did the Minister of Finance take the trouble to speak directly to the provincial premiers or the provincial ministers of finance?

Mr. Sharp: The only minister I contacted personally, and he was not a minister of finance, he was the minister of financial institutions, I believe it is, for the province of Ontario, who was urging the federal government to proceed as quickly as possible with deposit insurance.

May I add, Mr. Speaker, that as the house will recall it had been my original intention simply to introduce a bill so that the question could be looked at carefully by all provincial governments before asking this house to proceed. However, because of the great urgency of the matter and the great pressure that was being put upon the government by other provinces, particularly by the province of Ontario, with the support of all members of the house we went ahead with deposit insurance somewhat earlier than we had originally intended.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPEECH BY DEFENCE MINISTER AT HAMILTON, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence relating to a speech he made recently to a Liberal gathering in Hamilton. Will the minister cease casting aspersions on former distinguished combat officers whose knowledge of the requirements of Canadian defence far exceeds the limited experience of the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is out of order.

PENHOLD, ALTA.—POSSIBLE REOPENING OF TRAINING SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether a decision has been made or is being considered to reopen Penhold in the province of Alberta for the training of pilots or for air exercises.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that a decision has been taken, certainly not at the ministerial level. I do know that the question of the future use of that base has been under investigation by training command, and that they will probably be forwarding their recommendations shortly to headquarters, if they have not done so already.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I should like to say to my genial friend from Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I cast no aspersions on former senior officers while I was in Hamilton; and the meeting was in fact not a Liberal meeting but one in a lecture series attached to the university.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the question I have just asked the minister, is it not a fact that some R.C.A.F. personnel who were first at Centralia before it was closed down and who then went to Camp Borden, are now being advised that air training activities at Camp Borden are going to be transferred to Penhold, which incidentally is in the constituency of the hon. member for Red Deer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RETURN OF "BONAVENTURE" TO ANTI-SUBMARINE ROLE FOLLOWING REFIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of defence. I should like to ask the minister whether the Bonaventure will return to an a/s/w role following the present refit program.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF SERVICE ON KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to transport a question to the Minister of Transport which is of national significance, let me tell you. Has the minister received a resolution approved by the annual meeting of the Kootenay-Boundary chambers of commerce calling for the restoration of passenger service on the Kettle Valley railway from Vancouver to Medicine Hat? If so, what consideration has been given to these representations which are supported by 150,000 people of all parties in British Columbia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question of national significance should be placed on the order paper.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENTS SIGNED WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I had intended directing a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary. My question is this, Mr. Speaker. Have any agreements as yet been signed with any of the provinces concerning the regulations under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall bring this question to the minister's attention.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PAYMENTS TO PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

When he announces, in the near future, the new dairy policy which, I trust, will set the price of manufacturing milk at $5.10 per hundredweight, would the minister set strict standards of application in order to enable milk producers of Gaspé peninsula to take full advantage of the new policy because, in spite of the excellent dairy policy in 1966, the farmers of the Gaspé peninsula never received more than $3.50 per hundredweight.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This, to my mind, is not a question but a representation concerning which the minister does not seem to have said anything.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A question for the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister indicate whether he will be making his announcement of next year's dairy policy in this house prior to the Easter adjournment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is the same as others which have been put in a different form during the last few days.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the characteristics of good will that typify all good Irishmen I should like to ask the minister does he intend announcing that there will be an increase of 67 cents per hundredweight for producers of manufacturing milk?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe on this day I should ask the minister not to reply to this question at this time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING JURISDICTION IN EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, following the statement made this week by Hon. Marcel Masse, minister in the Quebec government, about the powers of the province in the field of external affairs, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the minister tell us if, in the spirit of co-operative federalism, he will in the near future initiate talks to settle the matter as quickly as possible?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that we have an obligation to initiate talks with a jurisdiction in this country for the only reason that, through the voice of a minister it deals with something which does not concern that provincial government, because there is no doubt that the federal government is solely responsible for the administration of our country's external affairs.

[English]

INCOME TAX

NON-PAYMENT BY HEAD OF QUEBEC SEPARATIST MOVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It is asked because of the number of income taxpayers, who have read the statement of Pierre Bourgault, head of the Ralliement pour l'Independance Nationale, who says he has not filed any income tax return since 1963, that he refuses to pay income tax, and the government is afraid to go ahead against him; that it has in no way asked him to pay income tax since he told the government three years ago that he did not recognize the laws of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since this is a matter, as indicated in the question of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, which seems to have been extant for some years I am not sure whether it is in order now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is something which has just come out in the press. Canadian taxpayers want to know if there is one law for the separatists and another law for the rest of us.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the right hon. gentleman that if the situation as outlined by him is correct, my department, which is not afraid to collect taxes, will make every effort to collect taxes from this individual as it would from every other Canadian. We treat all Canadians in the same way, whether they are separatists or not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then go ahead.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. Considering that this matter appears to have been going on for some four years, with this man claiming he has not paid taxes for that period, would the minister report on this matter on Monday?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I must obey the practice of this house and not report to the house on the tax affairs of individual taxpayers. I wish to assure the hon. gentleman, however, that the department will make every effort to collect every dollar of tax that is owing to the government of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He says you have been asleep for the last three years.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Will the minister in the administration of this matter adhere to the principle of applying the appropriate penalties?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSING

RECOMMENDATION FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour and has to do with national housing. I wonder if the minister has received representations from the Ontario Association of Real Estate Boards asking for the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pugh: Has the minister given consideration to these representations for the tax removal?

Mr. Nicholson: Consideration has been given. No change is contemplated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING CUBAN TERRORIST ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. A few days ago the hon. gentleman said an investigation was under way into the activities of Cuban nationalists in connection with bombings in Canada, and told us that discussions between Canada and the United States were taking place on this situation. Does he intend to add to this information today?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I cannot report further at the moment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the minister promised yesterday to study the latest report on unemployment in Canada, could he tell us whether he actually did so and whether he intends to take special measures with a view to checking the tremendous increase in unemployment in Quebec which has reached a very high level?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I had the opportunity since yesterday to look more closely at the unemployment statistics. Compared to last year, unemployment has increased by .4 per cent, that is, it reached 5 per cent last year, while it now stands at 5.4 per cent for the whole country. There are 40,000 more jobless than at the same date last year and it must be kept in mind that 28,000 of those 40,000 have been out of work for less than a month.

It should also be realized that the Canadian labour force has increased by more than 200,000 during the year. It is interesting to note that those 200,000 workers, or 214,000 to be more precise, include 142,000 women and 72,000 men, which means that women enter the labour market much more rapidly than men and explains why the percentage of unemployed women is higher than that of men.

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has found all possible excuses, could he tell us what measures he intends to take in order to check this increase in unemployment?

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether his analysis of these unemployment figures to which he has just referred indicated that the increase of 40,000 in the number of unemployed is related in any way to the decline in housing and construction starts in January and February?

Mr. Marchand: I can say that specific factors are responsible for these figures rather than any major change in the economy. Among these factors is a decline in automobile purchases; some decline in house building in many parts of the country, and an unusually severe winter. This may answer part of the question put to me by the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question. In the minister's analysis he did not make any reference to the number of people laid off due to displacement in the car industry. Has he any figures on that?

Mr. Marchand: Yes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we are getting into details of debate and I suggest to the hon. member that his question should not be asked now.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Is he aware that some of the many studies being conducted under the aegis of his department are showing a preoccupation with measuring fertility differentials between women in rural and urban parts of the country, and some relating to fertility differentials among cohorts of mothers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot see that this question is so urgent that it should be asked immediately.

Mr. Schreyer: I was coming to my question, Mr. Speaker. I was going to ask the minister whether he felt this sort of analysis served any useful purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 16, consideration in committee of Bill C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall not be too long, although up to now a single member of our group has participated in the discussion on this act respecting banks and banking, so as to give others the opportunity to express their point of view.

So I am pleased to rise at last to speak on Bill No. C-222 dealing specifically with the chartered banks. I note that more speakers from the old parties have spoken on this bill than on Bill No. C-190 respecting the Bank of Canada, where the members of the old parties were noticeable by their absence.

In fact, we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, were the only ones, with the representatives of the Social Credit and a few independent members, to supply the people at large with information. Yet, the population of Canada has delegated every member of the house to suggest ideas likely to improve our monetary system, the key to our economic success.

In the course of this debate, representatives of the two old parties have exchanged all possible amenities, trying to prove that each had accomplished more than the other and was more concerned than the other about understanding more or less the various briefs presented either by banking concerns or by owners of banks or near-banks.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

In the long run, who will benefit from all the time spent in such consideration? First of all, high finance, lurking behind the chartered banks and the Bank of Canada itself; secondly, the people or those who will find the patience to read through the brief contained in the report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, because they will find therein the proof that we are right.

Nevertheless, we are somewhat gratified in the realization that, in the end, the clash of ideas begets enlightenment. In fact, when we hear speakers, Tories as well as Grits wondering about the definition or the meaning which can be given today to their "banking", I think this makes up for the sarcastic laughter of past years and gives us some hope for the next revisions.

I want to mention here, to be fair, the very timely remarks made by a few independent members inviting the followers of the old-line parties to remove their blinkers sometimes.

Personally, considering that I have been studying for some 30 years a more rational and more humanitarian financial system, like the one proposed under the Social Credit philosophy, I have never stopped trying to understand fully the present system which, up to now, seemed to be only understood by a very small group. Having been chairman of school boards for 15 consecutive years, I have never understood why no government had ever thought about introducing the elements of our monetary system into schoolbooks.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Even today, when we pride ourselves on evolution in the field of education, we have not yet ventured to make known to our children the well-kept secrets of the principles at the origin of our monetary system.

I thought at the time that science was perhaps too advanced for pupils to whom we were nevertheless teaching the mysteries of our religion. But I was quite astonished when I heard the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), former Speaker of the house and brilliant lawyer, deplore the fact that we had not yet succeeded in defining the business of banking.

Let me quote the exact words of the hon. member as can be seen on page 14071 of Hansard for March 16:

> It has always been my belief that with an appropriate definition of the business of banking we could have a great deal more control.

And further on he said:

—Many people have suggested that it would be difficult to define banking.

Mr. Chairman, I will certainly not repeat to farmers and workers in my riding these parts of the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton West who is also a brilliant lawyer, because they would think that I am joking.

I was still more convinced when the not less brilliant member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) confirmed the words of the hon. member for Edmonton West, and I quote:

—Certainly it is difficult to develop a completely accurate definition of banking—

Here then is the base of the very myth of our monetary system. The present monetary system is somewhat like thunder; we cannot define it, but we know its disastrous effects in society.

And I had a good laugh when I heard the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) compare our association to a religious order, in which one should place his trust. I believe that he would have been better advised to consider closely the system in which he believes and which he never understood anyway; he would have noted that one needs a faith to move mountains to believe sincerely in the present system.

In fact, all the experts agree today that the present system is based on confidence and, furthermore, the only thing that guarantees that confidence is the flair and feel of the minister. He admitted it himself in this house.

The final lesson I drew from that debate is this: If we still have a lot to learn about our banking system, others have everything to learn, including the definition of the creature they worship.

The chartered banks serve their owners well and attempt to play their part in our financial system. They are private companies which are here to make money, as stated by several responsible bank owners or directors, and we contend that if those bodies could fully play their part in the private sector, our financial system would greatly improve, since its credit capabilities would be doubled.

According to our own definition, a business bank, generally called chartered bank, is any private company that receives deposits and grants loans. We say that the central bank is preeminently an agency for the creation of new credit and legal currency, and the exercising of absolute control.

In the present system, things do not work that way in either cases, since the chartered banks are empowered to create credit, while the Bank of Canada controls only the liabilities of the country and not its real assets.

When we made our speeches on Bill No. C-190 concerning the Bank of Canada, we clearly indicated all those flaws of our system. We witnessed the evident lack of interest of the two old parties as well as that of newspapermen, radio and T.V. In fact, all our public media of information were struck dumb. Perhaps they felt that the Bank of Canada was dying and they did not want to see its agony. Indeed, it did not get away unscathed during that dispute. On the other hand, chartered banks have gained considerably. They will not even need 8 per cent of deposits, that is with $6, $4 or even sometimes with no deposit, they will lend $100 at 8 or 9 per cent; therefore, money will be easier.

The ceiling on interests will be removed. They have been restrained long enough with that 6 per cent ceiling. This will enable them at least to increase their rate of interest. In fact, banks had been charging more than 6 or 7 per cent for a long time; they even charged 8, 8½ and sometimes more. But it was all done under cover. Tomorrow, they will act in broad daylight. When this bill is passed—and it will be passed, since the two old parties and the N.D.P. will vote for it—chartered banks will not even have to wait for the Bank of Canada to deposit the compulsory 6 per cent to its own account, through the purchase of government bonds, to multiply by 12½, since they will be able to issue their own bonds from then on.

Therefore, we can rightly say that chartered banks will extend their scope of indebtedness to the entire population with even less supervision than before. We do hope, nevertheless, that the next review is not more than five years away. Besides, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe), the most hardy defender of the people's interest, intends to move an amendment to this effect.

Mr. Chairman, with the present rate of development in our modern world, it would be a most serious mistake to allow 10 years to elapse before we do the slightest alteration in our financial system.

• (11:50 a.m.)

I have already expressed my views to the house about certain facts which were not too correct and which took place within the standing committee. I will not go over them again but I would like to say a few things to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) and a few others. I acknowledge the minister's real talents but I regret that he cannot put them to work to benefit the whole population. One feels that he is bound, willingly or not, by an occult power which prevents him from doing what he wants to do and even from saying what he really thinks. It might be an impression, but each time I hear him answer controversial questions, I think he is not the sharp debater one has known. Almost every time, he tries to evade the issue by voicing fears that he knows are unwarranted. Or he says that he finds it very difficult to answer.

Here, without malice, I should like to draw the attention of the house to three scarecrows which always come up in the minister's evasive replies: inflation, printing of bank-notes and interest.

You will understand that when watching wrestlers the most attentive spectators are in the best position to note the repetition of the same mistakes by the wrestlers. And precisely these are the minister's three weaknesses.

Indeed, when we ask him why the Bank of Canada does not issue each year's new credits, which amounted to approximately $1,588,000 in 1964-65, and $1,669,000 in 1965-66, for instance, instead of leaving this responsibility to chartered banks, for the benefit of public sectors, the minister's answer is unavoidably the same: threat of inflation; but he knows very well that if the Bank of Canada issued those amounts, under the same conditions and at the same rate as chartered banks now do it, it would not affect inflation any more than the action of the present chartered banks.

It is nothing but a scarecrow, like those our grandfathers used in their gardens to scare the crows away.

Similarly, when you suggest to the minister that the Bank of Canada should create new credits, based on the surpluses already mentioned, and put them at the service of the provinces, the municipalities, the school boards and the federal government itself, without any interest, the minister can only answer that it would be difficult. Yet, when he authorizes the Bank of Canada to purchase federal government bonds, so that the said bank can deposit them into the accounts of chartered banks, without charging them a single cent in interest, we wonder why that operation could not be logically made for the benefit of a municipal, school or provincial bank, for instance. And the minister himself admitted that chartered banks could multiply by twelve and a half these amounts which cost them nothing. And then, the members of the committee heard bank owners talk about the high cost of money.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

The minister is always pestering us with the threat of inflation. But where does inflation really lie, if not within chartered banks, due to the favours which are granted them by this parliament? And the minister dared maintain, in one of his replies, that all this was done to protect the interests of Canadians. There is a limit to window-dressing, after all.

I want to make this point clear, so that the people may know the truth. On March 13 last, the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), put this question to the minister:

> Does the minister see any serious objection to the fact that the yearly credit increase would be loaned without interest, to the public, by the Bank of Canada?

This is exactly, Mr. Chairman, the minister's answer, as recorded on page 13946 of Hansard of March 13:

> —I consider that such action would be very detrimental to the interest of the people of Canada because it would be very inflationary, and all those arguments being presented by the hon. member for Lapointe are simply a camouflage for one of the oldest practices in the world, which is the practice governments have indulged in in the past and I hope will not indulge in in the future;

Mr. Chairman, after having brought out the scarecrow of inflation, the minister turns to the printing of bank-notes. He goes on to say:

> —and that is the printing money for the purposes of meeting government expenditures.

This is the first-rate argument. The minister does not even realize that the oldest tactics to camouflage the truth are his own. We have even known some of his Liberal friends who brought their political career to an end for having printed bank-notes and making them pour down on their heads. I am wondering today whether this trick did not come out of the minister's brain.

Sir, the people are better informed today than they were in the thirties, 30 or 40 years ago. They know very well that when we are talking about monetary creation, it means precisely the one carried out by chartered banks, just book entries, and I do not think chartered banks have ever accumulated enough dollars in cities to block the streets. The minister is bringing forward a 1925 argument, that no longer holds in 1967.

I have always known the minister to be an outspoken man who could fight for his ideas fairly; he should not disappoint us on the financial level. Let him show that he is playing fair and not stooping to the level of a common cheat. We will keep on trusting him provided he proceeds seriously with the taxation reforms the people are expecting from his department.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister that now is the time for him and his department to get out of the field set apart for the magnates of high finance and to question themselves as regards today's needs. His victory or his defeat will depend on whether or not his answer is favourable for the economic life of all Canadians.

I trust the minister will champion the cause of the people.

• (12 noon)

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief. I should like to preface them by adding to the congratulations and compliments paid to the chairman and the vice chairman of the finance, trade and economic affairs committee for the excellent job they did in the performance of their duties. The hon. member for Essex West showed his masterful control of the French and English languages, a deep knowledge of banking and financial institutions and an infinite patience with witnesses who appeared before the committee and with members of the committee.

I should also like to thank the many witnesses who appeared before the committee, because their contributions were appreciated in the study of the Bank Act and related acts. I think they have added to the improved Bank Act that we have before us today. I think we were greatly helped by the former inspector of banks, Mr. Elderkin and we would like to thank him.

The Bank Act and other related acts are reviewed every ten years, but in this case it has spilled over to 12 or 13 years. One of the things that struck me is that by reason of the changing times and circumstances a decennial review may be too long a period before amendments are brought in to these important acts. The government should have no hesitation in referring special studies to the standing committee on finance and in bringing forth amendments at any time before the ten year period has lapsed.

The main financial institutions of Canada can be divided into four categories: one, chartered banks; two, trust and loan companies, which are commonly referred to as near banks; three, finance companies; and four, credit unions and caisses populaires.

The main objectives of our monetary policy should be a sustained economic growth, price stability, full employment and a sound external financial position. In order to attain these objectives and at the same time maintain supervisory control over the monetary system it is necessary that we should have a national approach to banking legislation. In the past the different classes of financial institutions operated within specific fields. The chartered banks dealt in short and medium term lending. Now they are dealing in consumer loans, and after the passage of this Bank Act they will be dealing in long term lending by way of mortgages.

The near banks, such as the trust and loan companies, in the past dealt with trust and executors' services, long term lending by way of mortgages, and corporate services. With the present intended amendments to the Bank Act the trust and loan companies will be facing direct competition by the chartered banks in their long term lending, and are asking for the right to participate in consumer loans to balance this benefit given to the banks.

This is why I was impressed with Professor Neufeld's approach of granting special charters to trust and loan companies for a ten year period, and granting to them the right of access to the credit facilities of the central bank and full access to the cheque clearing system. It is obvious that the different financial institutions are becoming multi-functional, and it is therefore necessary that federal legislation enable these institutions to grow and compete on the same footing.

This is the reason so many members of the finance committee requested that the government take the initiative in the definition of banking. We had before us the definition of the Porter commission which states that banking institutions were defined to include all financial institutions which issue transferable demand and short term claims with an original term up to 100 days.

Dr. David W. Slater stated that the test or criteria to be applied is to determine whether some of the debts of the institution are part of the money supply of the country, and whether some of the operations of the institutions result in changes in the money supply of the nation. The governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, stated it was his own view that as a practical matter the distinctive feature of the "business of banking" is primarily borrowing by incurring obligations that are repayable on demand or on short notice.

These three definitions could have provided a basis for a definition of banking, and with the federal powers set forth in the B.N.A. Act the government could have taken the leadership in defining this very important subject. However, the Minister of Finance gave no indication of an attempt to define banking, but rather leaned heavily on a deposit insurance scheme on a federal-provincial basis and gave some assurance of a study in the near future of financial institutions with legislation resulting when clearer lines are drawn.

This is not sufficient. The need today is for assertion and leadership in this field rather than for hesitation and delay. Some of the junior trust companies that appeared before the committee indicated that they were not interested in the banking business, and possibly the same could be related to credit unions and caisses populaires. It therefore may be necessary to have a two tier system in banking consisting of chartered banks possessing full powers and savings banks with limited powers.

Mr. Chairman, the formula for interest rates set forth in section 91 of the act is not acceptable to the members of the New Democratic Party. It is obvious that in all probability at the end of December 1967 or in the early part of 1968 the formula will no longer apply, thereby giving the chartered banks full control in the determination of interest rates. We recommend that a regulatory body be set up by the government to set interest rates and determine the allocation of the different types of loans that are required in the country.

We have experienced a very wide fluctuation in interest rates in the past two years. At the time of the passage of the Bank Act in June of last year there was an upward trend in interest rates. Today we find a downward trend which indicates the instability in the field of interest rates. During this unstable period the least that we can do is apply the formula that was set forth in the first bill that was presented to the house, in which 4.5 per cent was the base for short term loans before the removal of the ceiling. If we keep in mind the right of parliament to make amendments to the Bank Act at any time and not wait for a decennial review, this formula could prevail for the next two years during which time it could be constantly reviewed and amended if necessary.

Dr. Slater, in his brief to the committee, indicated the desirability of loan classification into two or three broad classes such as business loans, consumer loans and mortgage loans, with different ceilings applicable to each. Our experience with the fixed rate of 6 per cent indicated that it was not adhered to either in business loans or consumer loans, and we are attempting to apply the same formula by pretending to impose a fixed rate to all classes of loans and excusing ourselves by permitting the banks to add on service charges, thereby making up for the difference in the rates. I feel that the classification of loans suggested by Dr. Slater with the ceilings being adjusted by some formula as credit conditions is preferable to our present method.

I was also very impressed by the suggestion of Professor Ziegel that there should be a fixed ceiling of 12 per cent on consumer loans. It is almost obvious what is going to happen when the present formula goes into operation. Consumer loan rates will jump from the present 10 per cent to 11 per cent to 13 per cent or 14 per cent, and the banks will justify this increase by claiming they are now attracting a larger group of loans which formerly went to the finance companies. The best method to control the finance companies is to increase the amount to which the Small Loans Act applies from $1,500 to at least $4,000 or $5,000.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Now, Mr. Chairman, the claim of the chartered banks for the lifting of the ceiling rate was that they should be in a more competitive position regarding the different types of loans to borrowers, and they were apprehensive of the rate of expansion of the near banks. We must remember that according to the evidence the chartered banks still attract 73 per cent of all deposit liabilities, and with their credit expansion power are in a very strong competitive position. All chartered banks have shown excellent growth and profits in the last few years, and the profit trend has been upward rather than downward. There is no evidence of any meaningful differences in interest rates amongst chartered banks, and they tend to stress competition in terms of attracting deposits and performing services to customers rather than in differences of interest rates. I rather suspect that the rates of interest are on a follow the leader basis rather than a true competitive basis.

This is why my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has strongly suggested that the government should retain the powers set forth in section 53 of the act, so it may enter the field of banking and provide a more competitive basis. This suggestion has been followed in countries like Australia, New Zealand and France, and is certainly worthy of acceptance in Canada. In the committee we heard representations for permission of foreign agencies to operate in Canada, and Dr. Neufeld suggested that these agencies should be given a licence for a ten year period. This is in contrast to Canadian agencies in other countries where they are only given a one year licence to operate, such as the United States. However, if foreign agencies provide competitive conditions in respect of interest rates and services, and if competition is a good thing, then we should not hesitate to have foreign agencies operating in Canada.

I have already pointed out the difficulties that trust and loan companies are going to experience if the powers of chartered banks are extended to long term lending by way of mortgages, and the necessity of granting these institutions the right to enter the consumer loan field. Their entry into the consumer loan field would add to the competitive basis of the financial economy.

We in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Chairman, were greatly persuaded by the representation of the Canadian Credit Men's Association concerning the statutory prohibition on charges for the negotiation of out of town cheques. Their recommendation is in keeping with the Porter commission report, which makes the same recommendation and goes on to say that the actual handling of out of town cheques does not involve any significant extra cost to the institutions concerned.

In his brief Professor Ziegel indicated that the boards of directors of the chartered banks were made up of representatives of business, and not of other groups within the community such as trade unions, consumer groups and the like. I also remember Mr. Sinclair Stevens indicating to the committee that more than 30 per cent of bank loans are made to companies which have directors on the boards of chartered banks in the country. Professor Ziegel suggested that the Minister of Finance have power to appoint representatives from different groups within the community to the boards of directors of the chartered banks who would possess supervisory powers. We agree with this suggestion, which would increase public confidence in the operations of banks, which have now reached the stage of being semi-public institutions.

The evidence before the committee, more especially by the junior trust companies, indicated discrimination within the cheque carrying system which is under the control of the Canadian Bankers' Association. We recommend that the Canadian Bankers' Association act of incorporation be amended to permit all financial institutions to participate directly in the system on a fair and equitable basis.

These are the general observations that I would like to make at this time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Olson: There is only one aspect of this Bill No. C-222, Mr. Chairman, that I want to discuss, and that is the lifting of the statutory interest limit on bank loans. I was not a member of the committee, but I know this matter was discussed in the committee and I know some of the reasons advanced for authorizing the banks to go above the 6 per cent. It was suggested that all chartered banks in the country would then be able to provide a far wider range of credit requirements to Canadian citizens. I do not accept that contention, because I believe that for many years the banks have shown a reluctance to get into the consumer credit field, and this is not wholly related to the rate of interest they have been able to charge.

We know also, Mr. Chairman, that to a very great extent the banks have circumvented the statutory interest limits imposed, by various types of discounts and the imposition of certain other charges which in fact have raised the effective return substantially above the 6 per cent. If the banks had been really serious about getting into consumer financing and personal loans, then I think they could have and should have done it several years ago. I believe they missed the opportunity of providing the kind of credit requirements that Canadians were demanding seven or ten years ago. This has been the main reason for the proliferation and growth of the consumer financing companies in Canada and, as many people believe, in the world as well.

Even if this statutory limit were raised I believe all the banks would continue to lend money in large blocks to the finance companies that are now in existence, and let these finance companies do all the servicing of these accounts. It seems to me that all that is going to happen or the practical application will be that the banks will be charging 7¼ per cent for all the loans they have out now at the statutory limit of 6 per cent. One effect of this move is simply going to be to raise the cost of living, the cost of operating at the manufacturing level and the wholesalers' level, so the ultimate result will be an increase in the price structure.

I just do not believe, and I have not seen anything to indicate to me—I hope the minister has some assurance, but he has not indicated it to this house if he has—that the chartered banks of this country are going to proceed to expand their personal and consumer credit departments as soon as they are allowed to charge 7¼ per cent rather than 6 per cent. Unless they do, Mr. Chairman, I fail to see any advantage to the Canadian nation as a whole in lifting this statutory limit.

On the other hand I see some disadvantages. As has been pointed out a number of times in the committee and in this house since we have been discussing Bill No. C-222, the banks are not suffering. The 6 per cent statutory limit that is imposed at the moment is not causing them to suffer in so far as profit and net return on investment are concerned. Therefore the change cannot be justified on that ground.

Even if that were true, Mr. Chairman, I think the members of parliament have a responsibility to the Canadian people. They need to look at the whole economy to see what the net result of the change is going to be. No matter how I look at it, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the end result will simply amount to an increase of 1¼ per cent on all the loans and financing of the chartered banks. As I said, if you include this increase in the cost of manufacturing operations and throughout the whole distributive system, then I suggest there will be a significant increase in the cost of living as a result. I think this is one of our primary responsibilities and something we need to be concerned about.

• (12:20 p.m.)

The joint committee on consumer credit and cost of living recommended that the banks grant loans up to a certain amount to consumers or to families on a guaranteed basis similar to loans made under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act. I think this is a good idea. I believe that people of this kind ought to have some access to the credit granting facilities of this country. This has not been the case in the past, certainly not in a form that Canadians wanted. I am apprehensive about this particular part of the bill, because I do not believe the banks are going to provide the kind of facilities that we are hoping for.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. gentleman a question. Could he explain to the committee why the Economic Council of Canada, which is so broadly representative of all sections of the population and is just as concerned as any group in the country about the cost of living, and so on, should have recommended that the government give serious consideration to removing the ceiling on interest rates on loans?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, it is not for me to try to explain the reason for the Economic Council's recommendation, though I would agree with it if we had along with it an assurance from the chartered banks of the country that they would make use of this additional interest to meet the requirements of certain sections of the Canadian people who are compelled to go to finance companies. If the minister can give this committee some assurance that the banks intend to greatly expand their facilities for personal and consumer credit, then it would at least give us some good reason for passing this legislation. But if this provision is only going to allow them to collect more interest on the kind of loans and credit facilities which are now in operation, then all this is just going to add to the cost and will ultimately find its way into the price structure of this country.

If the minister has had such assurance from the banks, then I suggest that he tell this committee. If he has done so then I have missed the announcement. The minister may have expressed the hope that the banks would do this, but I have yet to hear the banking fraternity suggest that they are going to provide a better service in this particular sector of the consumer field.

It may also be well to note that if the finance companies, which rely on the chartered banks to supply a lot of their capital, are required to pay the banks an additional 1¼ per cent interest, which is something like an increase of 20 per cent in the rate, I suppose it follows that the finance companies will have to raise their charges instead of lowering them. Our hope was that if the banks were to be more competitive then the finance companies would have to lower some of their rates, which can go as high as 18 per cent, 24 per cent and even higher, but so far we do not have this sort of assurance.

As I say, until we have the assurance that the chartered banks will expand and intensify their lending facilities so as to be more competitive in the financing field, we are going to do the country a disservice by simply increasing the whole price structure of the country, which of course will ultimately mean an increase in the cost of living.

I said I would be brief, Mr. Chairman. I have stated my main objections to the amendments to the Bank Act. There are a number of other clauses on which we will have a word or two to say when we reach them. The party I represent does not believe there is any valid reason or justification for this increase in the interest rate because the banks have not been suffering in the profit picture.

I am a little confused as to the stand taken by the New Democratic Party on this question. The hon. member who preceded me suggested that his party was not in favour of raising the maximum interest limit on bank loans, but at the same time the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, as reported at page 14043 of Hansard for March 15, said:

> I came to the conclusion that there was not too much to be said for the maintenance of the 6 per cent ceiling because it could be evaded so easily——and so on. So it looks to me, Mr. Chairman, as if the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is in favour of removing the 6 per cent interest ceiling, while the hon. member who has just taken his seat said it was against the policy of his party to do so.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the hon. member would read the rest of my speech he would find I said that in default of any other sort of control, even this ineffective control which is contained in the original formula, the ceiling should be adhered to.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member is now trying to do is explain away what he said. I read his exact words, and he said:

> I came to the conclusion that there was not too much to be said for the maintenance of the 6 per cent ceiling because it could be evaded so easily and because there seemed to be a fair amount of evidence, to the extent that it was not evaded, that the 6 per cent ceiling was giving rise to the growth of near banks and various financial institutions which have been causing cold shivers to run up and down our national spine for some time.

That is the complete text of that paragraph, Mr. Chairman. The interpretation to be placed upon it must be that the hon. member cannot see very much justification for maintaining the 6 per cent statutory limit. Certainly that is what he said.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But I went on to say I had grave doubts about its efficacy. If the hon. member would read the rest of my speech he would find I said that if the government were not prepared to accept the only sensible solution to the problem, which I outlined at some length, then we would have to rely on this inadequate protection.

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is one of the problems that arises when you try to be on both sides of the fence at the same time.

Mr. Lambert: You should know all about that.

Mr. Olson: You just have to try to do what the hon. member is trying to do now, and that is place a new definition upon your words. Having said something the hon. member is trying to explain it away hoping that we will forget the words he used. But in this chamber what we say is written down, and what was written down was what I quoted.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member is adopting the usual practice of people who want to misrepresent what somebody else has said, and that is to give only part of the quotation.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I read the entire paragraph. Perhaps the hon. member should have corrected his speech. Recorded here is what the hon. member said. I do not know whether he intended to say those words, but they are here. The operative words to be found on page 14043 are:

> I came to the conclusion that there was not too much to be said for the maintenance of the 6 per cent—

Well, Mr. Chairman, those words are hard to reconcile with the words spoken by the hon. member who just preceded me, who said, I believe, "Our party is not in favour of raising the limit on the interest rate," or words to that effect.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what I did not say.

Mr. Olson: Then I apologize; I must have misunderstood the hon. gentleman. Perhaps when I read the speech of the hon. member for Broadview I shall also find statements he did not mean to make.

Mr. Gilbert: I said we are not in favour of the formula presented at the moment by the government.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): One speech at a time, please.

Mr. Olson: That is a good idea, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps when I read the speech of the hon. member for Broadview I shall find certain statements he did not intend to make. The hon. member may be surprised that often there are words one does not intend to say, as happened with the hon. member—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the hon. member is referring to me, I fully intended to say what I did say. I was under the impression that I had an audience capable of understanding my words.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): Order, please. The hon. member for Medicine Hat has the floor.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In conclusion I want to say that as far as our party is concerned the end result of raising the statutory limit will be the intolerable one of raising the whole cost of production and distribution in Canada, thereby raising the limits of the price structure and ultimately increasing the cost of living. I do not think this is a good time to raise the statutory limit.

Mr. Sharp: Before the hon. member sits down may I ask him how it is that he finds this action we are taking so reprehensible when the general rate of interest in Canada is coming down so rapidly today.

Mr. Olson: I hope the minister is not trying to suggest that there is any connection between the debate in this house on Bill C-222 and the rate of interest going up or down. If the Minister of Finance wants to take credit for the interest rate coming down in Canada today he should also be prepared to take the responsibility when the interest rates go up. When interest rates go up he says they have gone up in Europe, in England, in the United States and so on.

If my memory serves me correctly, and I think it does, there have been two announcements from the United Kingdom, one yesterday and another several days ago, that their interest rate has declined by one half of one per cent. That is a decline in the prime interest rate. The Minister of Finance will have great difficulty in giving the government of Canada credit for the decline in our interest rates. This is a world wide situation, happening in many countries of Europe, caused I presume by the easing all over the world in the demand for credit.

Mr. Sharp: That was exactly the point I wanted to make. This action will not raise the rate of interest around the world or in Canada.

Mr. Olson: No. It may not raise the rate of interest around the world; it may not raise the prime interest rate in Canada, but I am concerned with the consumers, the customers of the banks. If the minister says this action will not raise interest rates to manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, transportation companies, and all those other entities in our economic community, what is the point of increasing the rate? I suggest that many people seeking loans will pay more than 6 per cent on them after this bill becomes law. The minister means that will not necessarily happen. I am not naïve enough to think that loans to entities of the kinds I have mentioned will remain at 6 per cent after this bill becomes law. I think we must assume that the interest rate will be raised by 1¼ per cent, to 7¼ per cent.

What is more, I believe we shall be amazed at the consistency with which all chartered banks raise the interest rates on their loans at the same time. Provisions in the act, I know, provide fines and other penalties for collusion, combining or conspiring to set interest rates. But with the very few chartered banks we have in the country I am prepared at this date to expect them consistently and with great uniformity to raise their interest rates as soon as this bill becomes law.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with two areas of the Bank Act, one of which deals with loans to certain borrowers and the security taken for the loans. This part appears in the Bank Act as section 88. That section provides that if loans are made, for example, to a manufacturer the manufacturer transfers his right in the manufactured article to the bank by signing an intention to give such security. Not only is the ownership of the product already manufactured vested in the bank, but the product not yet manufactured and to be manufactured is also so vested.

When Mr. Elderkin testified before the finance, trade and economic affairs committee he said this as found in minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 52 on page 3524:

In most cases—

—and this provision still exists under the act—

—where security is taken under clause 88 on a moving inventory the bank gives consent to the manufacturer for the sale of inventory in the normal course of trade.

To illustrate what is meant let me give a specific example. Supposing a person manufactures television sets. He transfers to the bank the ownership of the television sets he has manufactured as well as the ones he will manufacture. When he sends out his statement of account for the sale of a television set the sales tax chargeable to it is included in the price and is deposited in the bank. Do not forget that once a person comes under section 88 to all intents and purposes he is a captive customer of the bank.

This means that the bank has received the tax owing to the government. In the event of the bankruptcy of the individual, or if it is a limited company this would apply to the directors of the company, he is personally responsible, as are the directors, for the payment of this sales tax. Things such as income tax are deductible at the source. But what happens in the event of bankruptcy is this. Prior to bankruptcy this manufacturer, as has happened in the past, would issue a cheque payable to the Receiver General of Canada for the sales tax involved on the sales which have taken place, in respect of which the banks have already received payment. The manufacturer will send out this cheque, and the bank on occasions has refused to honour it.

If the company or the individual subsequently goes into bankruptcy, under the sales tax legislation that individual—and this includes a director of a company—is personally responsible to the government for the payment of the tax which the bank has received. The regulations under the sales tax legislation are so stringent that an individual who has no money to pay and who has failed to get his bank to pay the sales tax under these circumstances can even go to jail.

I say this is an abuse. The government is being deprived of money to which it is legally entitled. It is an abuse which has been going on ever since section 88 was introduced into our law. I strongly recommend to the minister that he look into this problem, because on occasion it works great hardship on people who do not have the money to pay the sales tax because all that money has gone into the bank account. The effect of this practice is that the bank is using the sales tax receipts, which clearly belong to the government, to reduce the liability of the customer to the bank. I think this situation should not be allowed to continue.

In my view, when the banks receive sales tax they should open a new ledger account of some kind in which the amount of the net sale to the credit of the customer and the amount of the sales tax would be separately listed. The bank would be responsible for seeing that the tax was paid to the government. The same considerations apply to income tax deducted at the source where the deductions are also retained by the bank. Again the directors or owners of the company are responsible for its payment. I strongly suggest that this abuse be corrected.

The second matter I should like to discuss concerns the Mercantile Bank, particularly the time limit allowed to the bank in which to adjust its affairs in keeping with the proposed legislation. What bothers me is the period of time which has been allotted. I was struck by a statement which was made by the hon. member for Verdun as reported on page 3493 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs which dealt with this matter. The hon. member said:

The point I am trying to make is that Mr. Cameron at that time suggested to Mr. Rockefeller that we are not anti-American but that we had the right to draw up our own Canadian rules for the next 10 years. Mr. Cameron suggested to Mr. Rockefeller that a period of up to 10 years should be given for the Mercantile to conform to the rules and regulations, so long as we did nothing to depart from the principle that this is the pro-Canadian legislation that we want it to be.

The period of five years was decided on as the period of adjustment, but the decision was not made on a scientific basis. It was not made because it would take five years to do the things which the legislation requires the bank to do. It was an arbitrary figure, one which the committee felt was a reasonable length of time within which the bank could carry on its affairs in Canada in order to bring its shares into an attractive position. If this period had been calculated on a scientific basis as a result of which it was thought that five years would be the right length of time, I would go along with it, but this is not the case. As I have just pointed out, one of the members of the committee thought perhaps 10 years was the proper period. I do not know whether 10 years is the proper period or not. I do not know whether five years is the proper period or not.

As reported at page 3484 of the same minutes of proceedings and evidence, No. 51, the hon. member for Edmonton West had this to say:

> There is the point, too, which I think would be even more salutary, that in the event that they did not so feel, the investing public would certainly sense that there was going to be action taken—and very drastic action—with negative results on their profit position, and down would go their shares.

In my judgment this is a sound statement. As the law is drafted now, we are saying in effect to the Mercantile Bank "You have a charter to do business in Canada for five years, but at the end of that period your rights under the charter cease and you must comply with the conditions laid down in the new act". Perhaps when we are considering the bill clause by clause I shall have something else to say on this matter. I can visualize many things which might occur within this arbitrary period of five years. The penalty provided in the event of the failure of the Mercantile Bank to comply with the terms of the Bank Act at the end of the five year period is $1,000 for every day the bank is in default. I am not saying this will happen, but conceivably the Mercantile Bank could be so successful, and work up such an astronomical surplus, that it would be profitable to pay the $1,000 a day or $365,000 a year.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Does that include Sundays?

Mr. Klein: The hon. member is right; the yearly figure would be less than that. But the bank could use its surplus to pay this daily fine. If this were to happen, what would be the effect upon our relationship with the United States? I do not believe the imposition of a fine at the rate of $1,000 a day upon a United States banking institution would make for good relations. Indeed, we should be most careful to ensure that circumstances of this kind could never arise.

If the bank is to comply with the legislation it will be necessary for it to reduce its liabilities. It is possible that at the end of the five year period some of its assets will be difficult to realize in cash. Let us not forget that this is also an area of provincial jurisdiction. Certain forms of security may be covered by provincial legislation, and there have been cases in the past, admittedly during times of depression, when provincial governments have declared moratoria.

I do not know what the situation will be. If this five year period is adhered to the bank may find that in the fifth year no person will want to do business with it; the public will know it is going out of business, in a sense, and cannot make long term loans. It might affect the price of the shares.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I shall leave this matter for discussion when the clause is before us but, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to give more thought to the question of whether the five year period is enough under the circumstances, or whether it is too much under the circumstances. I leave it at that for the moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in effect this bill is necessary because we have to extend the bank charters for an additional ten years, but other than that I firmly believe this country would be better off if this legislation were not passed because it does nothing to meet the problems confronting Canada.

There is an interesting coincidence in our having this debate at this time in view of financial conditions during the past year and a half and the government's estimated spending in the year ahead. Just this week the estimates for the coming year were tabled, showing a 20 per cent increase in government spending and an increase of about 8 per cent in government revenues. Also the governor of the Bank of Canada has just tabled his annual report for 1966 in which he issued grave warnings to the government.

During 1966 inflation increased rapidly, to the detriment of Canada. The consumer price index went up to an extent that alarmed many Canadians. The increase in the index also alarmed the government to the extent that it appointed a consumer prices committee which held meetings across Canada, trying to ascertain the reasons for the increase. Without a doubt one of the reasons was the cost of money. I sat on that committee, which received briefs from contractors, home builders and manufacturers, all saying that the cost of money was one of the factors which helped create inflation.

Faced with all these problems the government now presents this major finance bill. Does it attempt in any way to answer the problems confronting Canada? It should, but the only conclusion I can come to is that it does not, and Canada would be better off without it if it were not for the fact that the bank charters have to be extended for an additional ten years, following the policy which has been in effect since the establishment of the Bank of Canada in 1934.

Last September 6 the Globe and Mail carried an article saying "The next four months' pay goes for taxes." In other words Canadian taxpayers will be working the last four months of this year to pay the taxes necessary to maintain the society in which we live. The only fault I find with that article is that in my business the taxes are paid first, and what comes after is all one has to live on. In maintaining a farm, a house or a business the taxes must be paid first, and I say to Canadian taxpayers that we are working the first four months of every year to pay our taxes in order to be allowed to live in this country for the remaining eight months.

What does this bill do to solve that problem? It does very little if anything. It makes no attempt to analyse the reasons for the continual overloading of demands on the Canadian taxpayer, demands which have been stepped up by the government.

We saw inflation run rampant in Canada last year. Who really benefits from inflation? If anybody benefits it is the Minister of Finance in balancing his books. To be polite, it is a less than honest way to balance the books. When the Conservative party were in office we heard a great deal of discussion about deficit budgeting, but at least deficit budgeting was honest budgeting. The Minister of Finance can disagree with me if he likes. Had we printed money as this government has done and caused inflation, prices would have gone up but the government, under its tax regulations, would have automatically received far more money.

The government has borrowed money, good honest dollars, and is repaying its borrowings with dollars of lower value than when the borrowings were made. The cost of living went up by more than 6 points last year. The government now is receiving $1.06 for every $1 it got last year, but is paying off its borrowings at a lower value dollar.

The only person who got the benefit of inflation was the Minister of Finance. He did not benefit as a consumer, but he benefited in balancing his books. In other words, if a government wanted to it could spend money wholesale, so long as it printed it and balanced its books, to the detriment of the country. That is exactly what happened last year. The government could have taken steps to achieve greater control with respect to this problem, but it has not done so.

Do we adjourn for lunch, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock, pursuant to the order of the house made on Friday, March 3, this sitting is adjourned for one hour.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in my remarks before the luncheon hour I said that this bill as presented to parliament really would do nothing to alleviate the conditions which have existed in the Canadian society in the past year. I listed those conditions. The first was the great increase in the cost of consumer goods; in other words, inflation was one of Canada's basic problems in 1966. This inflation was brought about by poor handling on the part of the Minister of Finance and his whole department and by a rapid increase in our money supply through mismanagement on the part of the Minister of Finance. High interest rates prevailed in 1966 and in addition we had inflation and labour unrest. The government has brought in the estimates for the next fiscal year and we see by these estimates that government spending will be up 20 per cent.

We have these huge increases. I wonder how they will help the situation. We have the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada who gives very clear warnings to the government with regard to the grave dangers in which our society finds itself. I intend to quote some of these warnings. In the face of these warnings this legislation should really do something more than renew the bank charters for another ten years. It does not come to grips with the problems facing Canada. As I said before lunch, inflation aids only one person in Canada, and that is the Minister of Finance. It aids him in only a very poor sort of way, namely, in balancing his books and creating what might be called a balanced budget or very nearly a balanced budget by weakening the buying power of the Canadian dollar. In this way the minister is allowed to pay off last year's debts with less real dollars. In fact, this is dealing with the taxpayers' money in a less than honest way in order to balance the budget.

When the Conservative government was in power we heard a great hue and cry about deficit budgeting, but at least deficit budgeting was an honest way of handling the finances of this country. Inflation robs every Canadian, and the only person who benefits from it is the Minister of Finance in balancing the books. It is of assistance to the minister in the way of publicity because he has balanced the books, and that is about all. This is what happened last year.

What were the warnings of the governor of the Bank of Canada in the speech he delivered in Rome? In this connection I should like to quote from the Ottawa Journal of November 10, 1966. The governor of the Bank of Canada was speaking to a meeting of Italian and international bankers, and he said:

> The main theme that I have put forward in this lecture is that the central banker today is a public servant as well as a banker. His role is to operate one of the instruments of public policy for the attainment of the economic objectives of the community.

He went on to say:

> Inflation in its early stages is popular, it creates a feeling of ebullience and well-being which does not tempt the community to ask too many questions about the future.

This government, through the Department of Finance, has allowed our money supply to increase at a rapid rate. They did this because they wanted to create a feeling of ebullience in Canada. They wanted to create this condition because they intended to go to the people in 1965 and thought they would be returned with a huge majority in the house. They failed in that attempt. But the result, of course, is the inflation that the government brought about. What does the governor of the Bank of Canada say in his annual report? He says:

> Diverging movements in cost and productivity such as we have been seeing recently cannot go on for long without seriously affecting the Canadian economy.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

This is a quotation from the Ottawa Journal of March 15,

> It is clear to me that for much of the last two years we have overloaded the economy.

"Overloaded" is the key word there. The Minister of Finance, who must control the purse strings of the government, has allowed government spending to increase by 20 per cent. This huge increase in government spending will do nothing to solve the problems that we in Canada face today. Just to demonstrate how irresponsible the Minister of Finance and the government are, an irresponsibility which is evident in the bill we are now debating, the governor of the Bank of Canada goes on to say as reported in this article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of March 15 last:

> It seems from past experience that is indeed the choice governments say is before them. But there is another course: to cut expenses—

Every taxpayer in Canada is urging governments to cut expenses. Taxes rob the Canadian people of their initiative to work and produce and will eventually price us out of world markets. But the government is imposing a higher level of taxes and is causing inflation which will put us out of world markets. The article goes on to give one simple way in which the Minister of Finance could have exercised his jurisdiction over the purse strings of the government:

> Can we believe the government was sincere in its attempt to cut expenses when the estimates reveal that the C.B.C., for instance, is to get an added $29 million or 25 per cent more?

We have heard a great deal about coloured television sets. We cannot find out where they have gone but we know the taxpayers' money has been spent for them. In this year's estimates there is an increase of 25 per cent for the C.B.C. This is only one facet of government spending. Let us look at the Bank Act itself and how it tries to meet these problems. It might be said that the Porter commission said that the ceiling on the interest rate should be removed but that commission also said that the near banks should be brought under the provisions of the Bank Act, and the bill before us does not do this. The commission said that the ceiling on the interest rate should be lifted so that the chartered banks could lend money at a more favourable rate of interest. They wanted to allow the chartered banks to be in a more competitive position with the near banks. It has always been the policy that if you give someone something you must balance it out with some other measure.

Under the bill to amend the Bank Act we are doing very little to bring the near-banks under the provisions of the act. We are giving the chartered banks the right eventually to set whatever interest rate is designated by competition. Arguments can be made on both sides of this question, but without doubt this measure will mean that the consumer will pay a higher price for the money he borrows, which will eventually cause an increase in inflation. Whether we like it or not, the cost of money is one of the key, basic factors in the production of goods. An article which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of June 21, 1966, dealt quite extensively with the question of giving the chartered banks the right to set their own interest rates on loans. The article said:

> The chartered banks claim to be losing business to the near banks—the trust, mortgage loan and finance companies and credit unions—and it's true that their percentage share of total lending has dropped since the war. But in dollar terms, their growth has surpassed that of the other institutions in the past decade. And the net profits of the big five chartered banks rose from $35 million in 1955 to $85.5 million last year.

The article goes on to say:

> No hardship case there.
>
> The main argument for a higher interest rate is that it would bring a fresh surge of competition among lending institutions and enable many businesses to borrow at lower rates than they can now. No doubt some businessmen now paying 10 or 11 per cent to finance companies would be able to get bank credit at 7 or 8 per cent.
>
> But a more general effect would probably be higher interest rates in most categories of loans, raising production costs and consumer prices. The other institutions could raise their rates along with the banks and still expect to hold their share of the business.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The words I have read from this newspaper article support my thinking that what will happen is that big borrowing institutions will be able to get money 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent cheaper than they are now paying for high risk venture capital, but the average consumer will be paying more for money if these amendments to the Bank Act go through. The average borrower will therefore have to charge more for the goods he produces, no matter what business he is in. This will cause another increase in inflation and the costs of production.

We in Canada need not be confident in thinking that inflation was running rampant last July and September but is perhaps slowing up a little now. Inflation was running rampant last July and September and perhaps it has slowed down to a certain extent at the present time, but we need not be confident that this trend has stopped because wage negotiations take place at the expiration of contracts and contracts are expiring every year. The cycle started by the government last year has created inflation and working men have realized that they have to demand higher wages to meet the increased cost of living. As a result there has been an increase in the demands made in labour negotiations, and this situation is still facing us because the cycle of wage negotiations has not ended.

It was quite clearly demonstrated to us last year that once the government had recommended that in the case of three unions the increase in wages should be 34 per cent and maybe as high as 37 per cent, what is now commonly called the Pearson formula in wage negotiations was established. Today a labour leader is not worth his salt unless he argues for a 34 per cent increase. If I were working for a union and my leader did not attempt to obtain a 34 per cent increase I would not vote for him. In fact I would vote against him because everybody else is getting the increase so why shouldn't I? This is what people are saying all across Canada.

If we as legislators could say that inflation is over and if we could revert to what is commonly considered by economists to be a normal amount of inflation, 1.2 per cent or 1.4 per cent, as was the case in the years when the Conservative party was in power—anyone who wishes to check the statistics for those years will find that the average was between 1 and 2 per cent a year from 1958 until 1963—all would be well and good. But what is the situation at present? We cannot say that inflation has stopped and that the upward trend evident last year has been reversed because, according to the statistics, housing costs and interest rates are going up.

A while ago the minister said, in answer to a question put to him by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, that interest rates are coming down. I suppose he was referring to a statement he made in the house that interest rates on treasury bills were down to 4.5 per cent. But who is affected by treasury bills? We as legislators are mainly concerned about the consumer, and a long time will elapse before he is affected by the low interest rates to which the Minister of Finance referred.

If one had a suspicious mind one could say that the interest rate on these treasury bills has been brought down by the manipulations of the government through securities and the buying of government bonds by the Bank of Canada at a time when this legislation is before the house and we are asked to remove the ceiling because interest rates are coming down. But I say that inflation is not over and interest rates are going up. There is labour unrest all across Canada. The real cause of the labour unrest is to be found in the Pearson formula with which we now have to live.

The Calgary Herald of March 13, 1967 quoted Mr. Rasminsky as saying that the central bank and the government should have recognized the dangers sooner and adjusted their credit and tax policies to suit. He said that statistics on past performance and economic forecasting are insufficient. He went on to say:

> The average increase in wage and salary rates last year was "far in excess of any reasonable estimate of the average annual increase of output per worker in the economy, and even farther above the disappointingly small gain that, according to the figures available, we appear to have had in non-farm productivity in 1966."

In other words, non-farm productivity increased far more rapidly than farm productivity. Mr. Rasminsky also said that we must realize that labour unions will continue to seek higher wages in the contracts they will be negotiating this year, and he warns the government to recognize this fact and to act on it so as to stop the inflationary trend. What has happened is that the government first created inflation and then brought about a tight money policy in order to halt it. This has caused the near bankruptcy of many financial institutions. In fact, two of them did go bankrupt and the collapse of many more would have occurred if the government had not lent them money and thus kept them in business.

I think one can safely say that in recent years we have witnessed the worst handling of government finances in Canada's history. I agree with the economists who say that perhaps we should take away from the government the power to make decisions with regard to the increase in money supply and set a fixed amount in accordance with the gross national product and the population, thus removing periods of high inflation and high increase in money supply followed by tight money and fluctuations in the economy. As Mr. Rasminsky said:

> Inflation in its early stages is popular, it creates a feeling of ebullience and well-being which does not tempt the community to ask too many questions about the future.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

The tight money situation brought about by the government has caused many hardships to financial institutions, as we saw last year, as well as to industry and to individuals operating smaller businesses or working for wages.

The Minister of Finance has shown a complete lack of responsibility. His only concern is to rob the Canadian taxpayer. The Bank Act does nothing to arrest the rampant inflation which has existed in Canada in the last few years. Not only has it not arrested it but it is moving in the wrong direction. I am not saying that we should never remove the interest ceiling on bank loans but now is not the time to do it when we still have inflation. This measure can only worsen the situation.

Let me say first of all that one of the things the bill to amend the Bank Act is attempting to do is to create more competition among banks. I am all in favour of that but I do not think it will succeed in doing it. Until there is more competition, perhaps the interest ceiling on bank loans should not be removed.

Members of the New Democratic Party have made statements with regard to the interest rate. Although I listened to the statement made by the financial expert of that party I still do not know whether he is in favour of this legislation. I thought I was the only one who did not understand him but I have found out since that the hon. member for Medicine Hat also has doubts as to the position which the N.D.P. took.

We in the opposition urge the Minister of Finance to become more aware of his responsibilities and to realize the effect which this legislation will have on every segment of the Canadian economy and on every person in Canada. We consider that he has done a poor job in handling the finances of Canada and he alone must accept the full responsibility for the inflation which exists in our country. It is all well and good for the government to set up a committee which has travelled all across Canada and heard all kinds of evidence. I have been a member of that committee and I heard the governor of the Bank of Canada explain his position with regard to the increase in money supply. He admitted in the committee that too rapid an increase in the money supply could cause inflation and he said, rightly or wrongly, that as a result of the financial collapse of certain institutions people have invested in the banks which has resulted in a greater supply of money. But basically the Minister of Finance should be made aware of his position and his responsibilities. I hope that in the proposed cabinet shuffle he is either shuffled right out of that department or made aware of his responsibilities and told to take them more seriously in the years ahead.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: I have a very few observations to make, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this measure and this clause. I do so because I think it should be emphasized over and over again at this time that there are many people in this country and many hon. members in this house who are not satisfied with the failure of the government to throw wide the net which it could cast under this new legislation to include other institutions than the chartered banks. I am tempted to make this comparison because I am sure it would appeal to the hon. member for Acadia. Within the corral now there are seven or eight thoroughbred banks but ranging beyond the corral are a number of mavericks, scrubs and standard breeds. Nevertheless, if all of them are not brought within the scope of some restricting, supervisory legislation the government will not be capable of exercising, at times when it should, supervision of monetary or fiscal policies, which is very important in the kind of society in which we now live.

For that reason I am supporting the very strong argument advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West when he spoke in the house yesterday. It was a logical argument, an argument based on legal precedents. I have used the same argument myself. I spoke at the resolution stage of this bill and I spoke when the subject was brought up by the minister's predecessor. I find it essential to advance the argument again at this time despite the fact the government does not seem to be moved by it. The argument is supported by the views of the Porter royal commission. There is no doubt at all that the constitutional cases especially have established beyond any shadow of doubt that the word "banking" has that widest and most comprehensive meaning which would be required if the government were to prepare legislation to cover many of the institutions we now know as near banks.

The Quebec case which went to the Privy Council in 1947 and the Alberta cases which were decided in 1938 and 1947 make it quite plain that if the government should see fit to exercise the right, it has every authority to do so. I believe that the very sensible, logical and orderly arguments of the hon. member for Edmonton West have pointed this out. I have read some of the transcripts of the proceedings of the committee and note that this point was brought up time and time again by the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. The minister, on behalf of the government, has said no. He has advanced various reasons. It has been suggested that it is difficult to obtain a comprehensive and adequate description and definition of a bank which would meet the situation. It has been suggested that other countries have found the same difficulty. These are not acceptable answers having in mind the dangers inherent in a situation which could come about where it would be essential or desirable to deal with monetary policy and, because of the fact all these institutions were not covered by the legislative authority of the federal government, the government would be unable to act.

I should like to deal for a moment with a situation which has been referred to in connection with an announcement by the premier of Quebec that it is the intention of his government to introduce a measure imposing taxation on institutions in that province. I suggest that we should be very cautious in our approach to this issue. It was significant that this subject was raised in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Medicine Hat because it was a government composed of the party of which he is a supporter which in 1938 attempted, by introducing a measure dealing with financial institutions and particularly banks in the province of Alberta, to use the weapon of taxation as a means of compelling the banks to follow the views of the government of the day.

There is no doubt at all that provincial governments have every right to impose taxation for revenue purposes within the scope of section 92 if they so wish. If the proposal set out by Mr. Johnson is limited purely to the raising of taxation for the purposes of the revenue of the province, none of us can or should take any exception to it. This was the basis of the reasoning in the Alberta cases. At that time the Alberta government imposed taxation of such a punitive nature and so confiscatory in its effect that it was held to be taxation not imposed for the purpose of gathering revenue but aimed at compelling the chartered banks of Alberta to conform to Social Credit policy. I suggest to the minister, therefore, that we in this house have a responsibility to watch carefully to see what legislation is introduced. If it should be such that it has the effect of imposing sanctions of a punitive nature upon the type of chartered bank which is dealt with in this legislation, then it will be the duty of the government to intervene actively and immediately. If the legislation is not of such a nature, then there is no necessity for us to do anything at all. I hope the minister will bear this in mind.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I wish to take exception to the failure of the government to deal in this bill with what are known as near banks. I do not accept, nor should any hon. member who has given any close study to the matter, the excuses being found for the minister. There are ways and means by which this could be done if the government and the minister would bend their energies to them. I want to make one suggestion about the way in which it can be done without in any way involving the government, the minister or his department in the supervision of these near banks, which apparently they do not wish to undertake.

The business of banking can be carefully delineated and defined at any particular period of time in our history. This is the effect of the decision of the Privy Council. Banking is not a static term; banking grows and expands with current economic conditions. Banking now includes a number of activities never contemplated by those who framed the British North America Act in 1867, and I have no doubt that 20, 30 or 40 years from now there will be other activities of banks which are not now contemplated but which will be included within the definition of banking. Banking is a term capable of precise and accurate definition.

It may be that the minister and the government do not wish to include in this legislation a definition of banks. But, sir, there is no reason at all that the government should not introduce into the legislation a section to provide that no person or corporation shall engage in the business of banking without first having secured a certificate from a suitable official of the government to be named. This would not involve a definition of the term "bank". It need not necessarily involve a definition of the term "banking", because the courts have defined banking and we know precisely what is included within that term.

However, Mr. Chairman, I can see some of the practical difficulties involved. It may well be that the government does not wish to prohibit the activities of individuals and corporations now engaged in certain aspects of banking, who may feel they are entitled to do so, in that they have no opportunity to change and to alter the economic picture of this country. Therefore I suggest that we include within the legislative enactment a section to the effect that no punitive steps should be taken by the government either to prosecute or to enjoin an institution of this kind from carrying on the business of banking without first obtaining a fiat from the government to do so. This is a practice well known in the country and is applied in the case of many other enactments. For example, prosecutions under the Lord's Day Act cannot be launched without first securing a fiat from the attorney general of the province. Therefore, I suggest to the minister that he take a look at the suggestion that there be a blanket prohibition in respect of corporations. It may well be that the minister might feel inclined to qualify the type of corporation in question by appending to the prohibition some description as to the permitted amount of capital of a corporation or business activity in which it can engage. But there should be no difficulty at all about the government enjoining a corporation from carrying on the business of banking without first obtaining a certificate and attaching a supplementary provision that no proceedings be taken at any time, either to prohibit or to punish, without a fiat first being secured from the government to do so.

The difficulty is, that if nothing is done more and more corporations are going to involve themselves in some of the characteristic activities of banks, and they are securing vested rights to do so. It may well be that four years, six years or ten years from now another government may come to the conclusion that it is essential to bring in under the umbrella all institutions engaging in such business in this country. But this will be very difficult to do having in mind the interests that these institutions have acquired and which new institutions will continue to acquire between now and the expiration of ten years when the next decennial revision will take place.

I suggest to the minister that by an enactment of this kind he would be making it quite plain that the government is not abdicating or abandoning its legislative responsibility, a responsibility which is given to it by the British North America Act. The government would in effect be saying that it recognizes this, and by such an enactment it would be providing that we could if we saw fit, step into the picture if we came to the conclusion that any institution, though not a chartered bank but being one of those described in the schedule, was so conducting its activities that in our opinion limitations should be placed upon it.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Of course.

Mr. Sharp: I have listened with great interest to his comments upon what is unquestionably a very difficult problem, one with respect to which, I would remind the hon. member, I have made it clear the government has not made any decision in the negative. However, would the hon. gentleman not agree that it would be much more suitable to have separate legislation dealing with what he has called the near banks rather than attempt to apply to those institutions the provisions of the present Bank Act?

Mr. Baldwin: Let me make this comment, Mr. Chairman. This might be equally as good a method of dealing with the question if I were assured and felt reasonably certain that the matter would not be pigeonholed and left for another ten years. If the minister is in a position to give an undertaking that steps to deal with this problem are in fact in the contemplation of the government and that the matter might be better handled by separate legislation, I would accept that undertaking. This is a suggestion which I offer to the minister for his consideration. It deals with what I agree with him is a difficult and knotty problem, one which will not yield easily to solution at the present time but which will be even more difficult to solve ten years from now. I give the minister full credit for his intentions, Mr. Chairman. Unfortunately ministers change, governments change and advisers change, and I would hate to see this situation continue for a further period of ten years because it might then result in a solidifying by limitation of time, say, of the position of the near banks. The longer the situation is perpetuated the more difficult it will be to deal with.

It is for this reason that I make this suggestion. I believe it is one that is quite feasible. I am sure the minister will make further contributions when intervening in this debate and I shall be glad to hear his comments, not with respect to the amendments to this act but with respect to what are his intentions for the future. I would be quite happy if I were to hear him concede, on behalf of the government that this is a difficult problem but that the government intends to deal with it by introducing legislation. If the minister will do this I will give him full credit for it.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to speak further on this clause, though I may have a few remarks to make on some amendments which this party will introduce. However, as a simple old farmer I want to make a few comments with respect to the work of the committee and to make some reference to another matter that was brought to the attention of the house by a question asked by the minister.

Mr. Sharp: You may be a farmer but you are not old or simple.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to join with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in his congratulations to the committee for their work, and to agree with his comment that he considered that this house owed the chairman a debt of gratitude for his activities in connection with the committee. I have been a member of this house for nearly 22 years but never have I heard a member of our party pay such a tribute, deliver such a eulogy and speak in such glowing terms of a chairman of a committee who sits on the government side of the house. All I can say is that this clearly indicates that the hon. gentleman earned those well deserved congratulations from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

• (2:50 p.m.)

With all the work one has to do it is almost impossible to keep up with the reading of the reports of the standing committees. All one can do really is to glance through them and get the highlights. But there is no doubt about it that this committee as a whole has laboured long and hard in attending its 79 sessions and preparing its report. I notice, Mr. Chairman, and I have gone through the names of the members of the committee, that not one of them has a degree in economics. Nevertheless their work and their report are evidence that ordinary laymen of this house, when dealing with this most complicated topic, are capable of dealing with it competently. I am bound to recognize their industry and ability in coping with these complex questions, regardless of how simple on occasion one thinks those questions are. Going through the list of members I noticed that on the committee there were 11 lawyers, eight businessmen, one professional engineer, one chartered accountant, one teacher, one druggist and one industrial worker. For a short period I think two farmers were on the committee in connection with some problems brought to the committee's attention.

My only criticism of the committee, and I hope the minister will recognize this as a well meant suggestion, is that unfortunately only one of its members actually represented the working class of Canada. Only one member of the committee was an industrial worker. The chairman of the committee was a member of the legal profession and I pay tribute to his work.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, perhaps if I ask the hon. member a question I could clear this matter up. I thank the hon. member for his kind comments. I ask him if he does not agree that because of my professional background I represent to the best of my ability tens of thousands of industrial workers?

Mr. Herridge: I fully recognize that, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. member represents industrial workers with his head. He does not expend physical effort in the production of goods, and that is the difference.

In passing I want to make reference to the 1964 report of the royal commission on banking and finance to which the government apparently gave no consideration prior to the reference of this bill to the committee. In common with other members of this party who have spoken I can support some recommendations contained in the report; others I would question very vigorously. I have gone through the report fairly thoroughly, though not as thoroughly as I would wish, and I see it is the work of some very competent people who held many hearings. It is based on evidence presented by a wide variety of witnesses representing various segments of the community. I consider that was an appropriate time for the government, when the act was being referred to the committee, to give some lead with respect to policy in relation to finance.

I do not wish to take up the time of the committee to speak at any length. I do wish, however, to make reference to a question asked by the Minister of Finance of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands during the time the hon. member was speaking on the bill. I mention this because I am of the opinion that the hon. member somewhat misunderstood my approach to the question of banking. On page 14044 of Hansard for March 15 we find these words:

> Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I am wondering whether he is joining his colleague from Kootenay West in supporting the views of the members of the Social Credit party about the expansion of money through the ownership of a government bank?

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands replied as follows:

> Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): No, Mr. Chairman, I am not doing so at all because I do not suffer from this other form of doctrinairianism which is only slightly to be distinguished from that of the minister. Both are equally unreasoning, equally based on religious faith and equally lacking in any logical foundation.

I must say that as an Anglican that rather raised my eyebrows. I repeat again that I am quite sure the hon. member misunderstood some of my remarks. Possibly they were not phrased in as polished English as he is accustomed to using in this house, but I have to do the best I can with what talents the Almighty has given me. I must emphasize that I was placing before the house policies that have been endorsed by this party over a long period of years which we consider sound for the provision of the capital for social investment required by federal, provincial, and municipal governments. Those efforts are recognized by the minister to the extent that the Bank of Canada now practises to a limited degree what members of our party have urged throughout the years should be the policy of the government.

I also wish to refer to the suggestion that those who advocate certain financial policies always do so with religious faith and fervour. At this point I must emphasize that hundreds of thousands of people in Canada, with logical, religious fervour, have joined or supported our movement in the belief that it offered the best opportunity in a democratic society to give expression to the principles of the Christian ethic through parliamentary action. I want to emphasize that, and I want to recognize the work and faith of those people who have joined our movement because, fundamentally, they were Christian socialists. I am confident that the reverend gentleman who is the leader of our group and the reverend member for Winnipeg North Centre will bear witness to that fact. They have had long experience in our movement and with the motives of many people for joining it and supporting it in various elections.

I have risen to pay my tribute to the chairman of the committee and to its members, to make certain that my position is fully understood in this house, and to correct the record. I must explain that I rose to speak more in sorrow than in anger. I trust the matter is concluded at this point. We may have a few words to say later when various amendments to certain clauses are moved by members of our party.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on clause 2. I shall deal specifically with definitions in clause 2. I shall not repeat statements of other speakers about possible defects or shortcomings in the bill. I wish to deal with the definitions contained in paragraph (a), "agricultural equipment", paragraph (b) "agricultural implements", paragraph (g), "crops growing or produced upon the farm", paragraph (h), "farm" and paragraph (j), the definition of "farmer". As other speakers have said, Bill C-222 will make it possible for banks to expand their lending program with respect to farm property and chattel mortgages.

In speaking on these definitions I want to express my concern about the danger that perhaps the government may end its lending under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This act has been a great help to the farmers by providing government guaranteed bank loans at a maximum interest rate of 5 per cent. To emphasize the importance of this scheme, generally called the F.I.L.A. program, I would refer to the latest statement issued by the Department of Finance with regard to lending operations under this scheme. Between July 1 and September 30, 1966, no fewer than 27,233 loans were made for a total of $71,415,392. As I say, the government guarantees these loans by the chartered banks and a farmer can receive up to $15,000 for farm improvements and the purchase of implements at a maximum interest rate of 5 per cent. Since the act came into effect, 1,325,464 loans have been made to farmers representing a total of $1,905,085,785. In Saskatchewan alone during the same period from July 1 to September 30, 1966, loans amounting to $23,377,000 were made for the purchase of agricultural implements, more than $1.5 million for the construction of farm buildings, half a million dollars for other construction and so on, bringing the total to $25,205,047 in this brief period. During the same period last year the total was roughly $24,842,000.

All hon. members are interested in these farm improvement loans but members who represent farming areas are particularly interested and we want to make certain that the expansion of lending by the banks to farmers under this bill will not result in the government withdrawing from this program of guaranteed loans at 5 per cent. I am speaking very briefly because I think we all want to get on with this bill.

Paragraph (g) in the definitions refers to crops growing or produced upon the farm. If I am correct, this would apply to farm-stored grain and it appears that Bill C-222 would allow the banks to make loans on grain in the farmers' bins. The Diefenbaker government brought in legislation—

Mr. Roxburgh: What government was that?

Mr. Pascoe: It was a good government, the very best. It was the best that ever was as I will show in a minute. The Diefenbaker government introduced legislation making available interest free cash advances against farm stored grain. It did this when it came to office and found that under Liberal policies a huge supply of wheat had been stored on the farms. The Liberals had given no indication of ability to get rid of the wheat so one of the new government's first moves was to bring in a measure providing for interest free cash advances on grain stored on the farms.

Mr. Roxburgh: I thought that government was known as the Progressive Conservative government. I did not know it was known as the Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Diefenbaker was the prime minister. We are very proud he was prime minister and we hope that he will again be prime minister.

An hon. Member: No applause at all.

Mr. Pascoe: The Liberal government of those days was, as I say, either unable to take action to market this wheat or did not see fit to do so. I will admit that under our policies the present government has been able to move this wheat in the last few years. Wheat has been moving fairly well in the past few years. But there could be a period—let us hope it will not come about—when under a Liberal government wheat would again pile up on the farms, and we want to make sure that the legislation to provide interest free cash loans on farm stored grain is still effective.

These are the main questions which concern me. I wish to emphasize my hope that in Bill C-222—some call it bill "two-twenty-two" because there may be headaches in it—the government is not providing itself with an escape hatch whereby it can drop or curtail the two programs I have mentioned, the Farm Improvement Loans Act with interest at 5 per cent and the provision for interest free cash advances to farmers who are not able to sell their grain and must let it pile up on their farms. I shall probably refer to these matters again when they come up for discussion later.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the bill now under study, which includes clauses on the whole Canadian banking system, deserves serious attention. I do not deny that it was studied at length by the committee. Still, because of the effects of the Canadian monetary system on the life of the people, I feel it is quite in order to dwell specifically, while studying that system, on practical suggestions intended to improve that system, in view of the part it plays in the Canadian population.

• (3:10 p.m.)

We often hear this: in the final analysis, money rules. As we are now discussing a bill on the Canadian banking system, as the debate deals with our monetary system, I shall mention certain causes of the difficulties we now experience in Canada due to the disastrous effects of the present system. I shall then submit, with the best of intentions, suggestions which I think are practical and which, at least in my opinion, are based on common sense and logic.

Any serious observer will admit that the present financial system does not ensure to each and every one a large enough share of the goods of nature and industry. Consequently, it behoves the government responsible for the commonweal to make the necessary changes or corrections, for the simple reason that systems are made for man and not man for the systems.

One realizes that modern production capacity is practically unlimited, both with regard to volume and variety. Our main concern stems from the difficulties involved in distribution methods. Since nowadays the easiest way to exchange commodities is money, inasmuch as a person has enough money, the causes of the money shortage must necessarily be sought, if we really want to solve the problem of poverty.

It is useless to accumulate studies and conferences on poverty; one would have to be blind in order not to see that a great many people live on a scant income and lack the bare minimum and especially the money required to buy the commodities displayed everywhere in stores, but that they are unable to buy for want of money.

[Mr. Pascoe.]

Therefore, the true war against poverty must be directed against the money controlling system. Is there anything more obvious?

Since when can a war be won by directing the attack off the target? In 1914-18, as well as in 1939-45, the Allies wanted to win the war, and they took the necessary means. First, they needed money: they ordered the money system to supply the necessary amounts and there was no lack of money. Furthermore, they organized the army and had the necessary equipment made. Had they been satisfied to consider the situation and to call conferences, they would have certainly lost the war.

The war on poverty will not be won by studies and conferences. And the poor will still be faced with hardship through such means. Therefore, other means are required.

The amendments which will have to be brought to the Canadian banking system, will have to be flexible enough in their terms so that the necessary funds may be used at the appropriate time in order to reduce if not suppress poverty in Canada.

If the income of those who are already short of money is taxed, the problem of poverty, will not be solved, it will become more acute. One does not have to be an economist to understand that.

An article entitled:

Will Ottawa start taxing dedication?

—appeared in the newspaper L'Action of Quebec on March 7, 1967.

That suggestion was made with regard to the part played by Caisses populaires Desjardins and the new Quebec co-operative movement.

As far as the poverty situation in Canada is concerned, the Créditistes are not the ones who describe it. May I quote an article published in the newspaper Le Droit, on November 10, 1964, under the heading "The plague of indigence". It said:

Robert Louis Stevenson once wrote: "The greatest shortcoming of our civilization and the best proof of its failure is that a man able and willing to work should find it impossible to do so."

At the recent convention of the Ontario Labour Federation, Le Droit expressed to this body its concern over the extent reached by the cancer of poverty. The question must be brought up again following the report just published by this association, a document that gives a living and finely detailed picture of the sorry situation of human misery in Ontario and in Canada.

The want of necessities of life is classified under three categories: 1. Deprivation; 2. Poverty; 3. Indigence. In Canada, nearly 2,500,000 people—more than 13 per cent of the population—live in indigence; more than four million citizens or 22 per cent are acquainted with poverty or indigence and finally, 6,500,000—35 per cent—suffer deprivation, poverty or indigence. In Ontario, 700,000 people—11 per cent—live in indigence; 1,000,000—19 per cent—live in poverty or indigence; and 2,000,000—32 per cent—live in one of the three categories.

At this time, the Minister of Finance is seeking by all possible means to extract money from the pockets of the taxpayers in order to pay the interest and the debts which the present financial system requires him to assume, and yet he dares to claim that he can win the war his government claims to have declared on poverty. I am quite willing to recognize the people's right to be imaginative, but when this happens to the man who is supposed to manage the finances of the country, I think this is something to worry about and the population is suffering as a result.

I do not believe that advising people to read the book written by the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance is the answer to Canada's financial problem, for both of them contributed to bringing about the situation I described a while ago.

The effects of this debt-making system are being felt at all levels of government: provincial, municipal and school. Everywhere debts are getting larger and larger. The representatives of those four levels of government seek by all the means available to get as much as possible out of the taxpayer's pockets, and the supreme leader of that colossal taxation mechanism says: We make war against poverty. I am sure this is a type of war to increase the number of the poor; it is impossible to arrive at practical results with an upside-down system.

Yet, there are means to envisage a logical solution, with simpler methods. Unfortunately, our politicians seek complications; with lots of means at their disposal, they multiply difficulties, to show how flexible an imagination they have, undoubtedly. However, we find ourselves with all kinds of problems: hardships, poverty, strikes, bankruptcies, robberies, crimes, unemployment. And our governments keep kneeling down before financiers, the masters of this inconceivable situation where we have a rich country and poor people.

By observing this state of affairs and the disastrous consequences thereof, we could give an honest try at finding, first of all, one of the causes of the economic confusion in which we are struggling, and I suggest that we would find at least some partial solution to many problems.

I refer to the difference there must be between public capital and private capital. Here, most of the problems related to school, municipal, provincial and federal taxes come up, because they represent a very large proportion of the public funds.

• (3:20 p.m.)

In our modern society, one realizes that our governments, of various shades but of the same basic colour, seem unaware of the difference between private and public capital.

Yet it is easy to understand that private capital like labour should bring its own reward and that that reward is called interest as a salary is the reward of labour.

Labour produces things, goods or services which earn a salary that allows the worker who produces those things or services to live from the product of his work.

It is obvious that the worker who produces things or services is entitled to a salary. Governments even have the responsibility to keep an eye on labour legislation to make sure that workers get a just salary for the work they do.

As for capital, the money owned by an individual is private capital and if that capital is loaned to an individual or a business, its owner is entitled to get interest for the very good reason that by lending that money he has enabled someone to do business, to produce things or services and he has allowed that business to make a profit on its goods or services. It is with that profit that a business can and must pay interest, out of the profit resulting from the production of goods and services.

Therefore, private capital can and must get its salary, just like labour.

But public capital is something else again. Public capital is, for instance, the capital used to build sidewalks, streets, schools, roads, bridges, waterworks, sewers, etc.. In short, all that which can serve the general public and does not bring any profit to anyone in particular.

Under a sensible system, private capital would not be invested in public works nor would public capital be invested in private enterprises. A well balanced economy would ensure that private capital is invested in private enterprises and, on the other hand, that the public capital needed for various public developments is put at the service of public bodies.

Now, why must our governments borrow money and pay interest for capital serving public projects which bring a profit to no one?

How can a non-profitable public enterprise pay interest if it makes no profit? To pay interest, profits must be made, because if an enterprise is not profitable and has to pay interest, debts automatically pile up.

Under the present system, governments borrow money and pay high interests to build schools, roads, bridges, sidewalks, etc. This is nonsense.

What should be done then? That is what some people ask but Créditistes have been saying for more than 20 years that the federal government, through the Bank of Canada, should put at the disposal of provincial governments, municipalities and school boards the money needed by those public bodies so that they may get the required capital at a reasonable rate of interest, that is about 1 to 1¼ per cent, to be able to undertake public capital enterprises.

Why is it, for instance, that a city in need of sidewalks has to borrow at a high rate of interest to finance these works, sell municipal bonds, pay brokerage costs, to obtain private capital coming from individuals, when such an investment is for public use? In borrowing private capital from individuals to invest in the public sector, the municipality is automatically reducing the benefits which private enterprise could draw from that private capital invested in public works.

Why could a municipality, a city, for example, which needs, say, $100,000 to build sidewalks, not borrow the amount from the Bank of Canada, at an administrative cost, as I said, of 1 or 1¼ per cent to finance the project, the loan being repaid through municipal taxes collected on the basis of the annual depreciation of the sidewalks? If a municipality spent, for instance, $100,000 to build sidewalks, one year, and if the sidewalks were good for 20 years, the citizens of that municipality, according to engineers, should pay $5,000 in taxes to reimburse the borrowed capital. Should the sidewalks depreciate at the rate of 5 per cent per year, there is no reason why the citizens of that municipality should pay back more that 5 per cent per year on the borrowed capital. Over 20 years, the citizens of that municipality would have paid for the sidewalks and would not have had to pay two, three and even four times their value, and still owe the entire original capital, as is the case under the present system.

If it is admitted that an amount of $100,000 invested in the building of sidewalks in 1964 can cost, in 20 years, $250,000, why have the citizens of a municipality pay $250,000 when the value of the sidewalks built only represents $100,000? It is a simple rule of arithmetic. Why force people to pay two and a half times, in interest alone, what they have received just once? If, in 1964, under this system, a municipality had improved its services by building, at a cost of $100,000, sidewalks it needed and was in a position to build because it had the necessary manpower and building materials, why should this municipality undertake to pay over 20 years $250,000 in interest alone, that is two and a half times the value of the sidewalks, that is the original outlay? This example can be applied to any public construction of buildings, roads or bridges, in short, to everything that serves the public.

The Créditistes suggest that the Bank of Canada should advance to the municipality the money to build the sidewalks; by doing so, the citizens of that municipality would repay the Bank of Canada according to the depreciation or the wear of the sidewalks. That is what Social Credit really is. To put money into circulation when wealth is being built, and to withdraw it from circulation when that wealth has been destroyed by the wear and depreciation of sidewalks, bridges, and roads.

Mr. Latulippe: No inflation.

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Chairman, those who are used to repeat what they hear instead of seeking a practical solution will probably see inflation in this. One has to put money into circulation in order to construct sidewalks, roads, bridges or public buildings, and one must draw money out of circulation according to the extent of the depreciation. So, what is physically feasible will be financially possible.

The building of sidewalks or all expenditures as public capital do not bring profit to anybody, inasmuch as they do not benefit anybody in particular. Since everybody benefits from public works, why is it that the public has no financing system to avoid stealing from itself, or to prevent itself from being robbed; in other words, a system under which the public will not have to pay three or four times the actual value. Thus, a mile long sewage system built in 1964 does not grow to three miles in a period of 20 years, that is, by 1984. Then why should we disburse on finance three times as much as we actually received, 20 years from now? Why should we, in 20 years, pay $1 million for a school which only cost $300,000 when it was built? Is it because financiers want us to spend 75 per cent of our lives working for them? We build a school worth $300,000 and pay the financing agents for more than two schools, one for us, two for them; one mile of sidewalk for us, and two for them; one waterworks system for us, and two for them. Municipalities spend 40 to 70 per cent of their budget on the interests to the financing companies. They are growing fatter every day, and the people are growing skinnier every day. The cancer of finance is consuming the people.

Mr. Latulippe: That is why we are being taxed by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Dionne: We paid $28 million as interest for the Jacques-Cartier bridge, even though the construction only amounted to $21 million. We have already spent more that the actual cost of the bridge on finance and we are still in debt. But we only built a bridge for ourselves. How many Jacques-Cartier bridges will we pay to them? Only the future will tell.

Our financial system at present is the cancer of our public bodies, because we failed to draw a distinction between private investments, which are productive, and must bring a profit, and public investments, which are non productive and do not bring any profits, but remain a public service.

Social Credit would use credit for the benefit of society by giving money to public bodies so as to allow them to carry out public works. In this way, public organizations would not have to charge our citizens interests two, three or four times the cost of public works.

Debts and taxes are increasing continuously. This is only the result of our financial cancer.

At present, municipalities and school boards are struggling with constantly increasing loads of debts. Canadian citizens have to pay taxes of all kinds to maintain the three governments, federal, provincial and municipal, and the school boards besides. How do you expect them to free themselves from their poverty? The federal government must direct its war on poverty towards the real target. In this way, every Canadian citizen will be able to see that it really takes measures to get out of this ridiculous social order under which our people suffer great hardships amidst plenty.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, it had not originally been my intention to speak at length at this stage of the debate. I thought I might make some remarks on various clauses as they came before the committee. But I have concluded that I certainly would be remiss if I did not respond, at least in a limited way, to the very kind comments that have come from both sides of the house with respect to my efforts as chairman of the standing committee on finance. I wish to say to the committee of the whole that, to whatever extent my efforts may have been considered successful, this was due entirely to the courtesy and co-operation I received from members of the committee representing all parties in the house and others who participated in the work of the committee as well. I should add that the success of our work was due also in large part to the co-operation of our expert staff, the officials of the government and the staff of the committee itself.

I think the efforts of the finance committee have helped demonstrate the value to parliament of an effective system of permanent standing committees, and I hope that the efforts of the members of that committee with respect to this piece of legislation and other matters on which we have had the opportunity to work will provide some inspiration for further development of the committee system in the very near future, a development which I am sure will be to the benefit of this wonderful institution of parliament and therefore to the entire country.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I should also point out that in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, the contribution of the French speaking members was important. I wish to insist on this because it is interesting, I believe, to witness the part played by the members of the province of Quebec, by the French speaking members, in the study of a question not only of interest for the province of Quebec itself, but also of vital importance for the country as a whole. Mr. Chairman, I think that the work carried on by French speaking and English speaking members is a valuable example, for parliament and the country as well, of what can be accomplished to serve national interest through such co-operation.

[English]

As I said, Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention to comment at length at this stage on the contents of the bill now before the committee of the whole for study. Certain other hon. members, in particular the hon. member for Labelle, have put before us the contents of the bill, the changes made in committee and in general the details of the bill which we are to study at this stage and on third reading. However, I think I should say that in my opinion at least the bill makes important strides toward providing the Canadian people with a better banking system, a better financial system aimed at providing a wider range of services at a reasonable cost. To a large extent this is done by providing opportunities for an extended range of services to the existing and newly chartered banks which are soon to begin operation. I think we should not hesitate, as has been recommended by the standing committee, to examine possibilities for change or improvement before the next ten-year revision if the operation of the provisions we are now considering seems to indicate the need for further modification, addition or change in the interests of the Canadian people.

I would also say that in my opinion at least the work of the committee and its hearings have demonstrated the importance of making sure that the control of this vital segment of the economy remains in Canadian hands so that in this open, highly competitive, interdependent, western, technological world Canada will be able to bargain and negotiate from a position of strength, a position which in my opinion can come only when a sector of the economy such as the banking and financial segment, with which we are concerned at this time, remains as far as possible basically within Canadian hands and under Canadian control. In this way decisions with respect to our economy can continue to be made to the maximum extent and can be made increasingly by people whose lives are linked, as are the lives of the members of this house, with the present and future destiny of our country. This is not an inward-looking approach but rather one designed to permit Canada to obtain the best possible deal for its people today and in the future in the competitive world around us.

In conclusion let me once again thank the members of this house and of the committee who have had certain kind words to say with regard to my work as chairman of the committee. I would again say that to the extent that these words are justified they reflect the co-operation and courtesy I received at all times from the members of the committee and others who participated in its work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to avail myself of the consideration of Bill C-222 to second the hon. member who emphasized yesterday the great ability of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

Once again, yesterday, the minister showed that he was worthy of his office in remaining silent when a question was put to him by my neighbour the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette). That silence proved that the minister is always better at taking than giving.

The public is not always aware of the ability of its public men but high finance can size a man in no time. Big financiers know what to expect of certain politicians, and to make sure they lead by a length in a race such as an election, they are not afraid of staking large amounts of money on those from whom they can expect gratitude and unlimited devotion.

If we analyse the expenses during the election held in the fall of 1965, it is obvious that the Minister of Finance was one of the financiers' favourites. For the benefit of the Canadian people, I take the liberty of quoting a few figures from the report on campaign expenses handed to us by the chief electoral officer.

In the case of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel), for example, an honest and experienced member who sat for 13 years in the Ontario legislature and who is now in his 13th year here, the financiers spent $4,400.

For that genial man with the perpetual smile, for the diplomat, the Nobel prize winner, for I refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the financiers spent $12,300.

For the election of the member who was to introduce Bill No. C-222, the report shows the unbelievable amount of $32,200. That amount of $32,200, for one month of electoral campaigning, represents $1,000 a day and is equal to the income of the majority of Quebec farmers during 25 years.

Such figures are not only meaningful but alarming and it is such amounts which, in binding key men to the administration, will turn them into public collectors.

One must recognize that the champion of Canadian collectors is before us today; he is none other than the Minister of Finance. I can imagine that the financiers will take advantage of centennary year to stress the event. Will the presentation of the trophy take place in private or will the public be invited? Such are the questions that the taxpayers may ask themselves, such are the questions that remain unanswered.

For the banks' benefit, all levels of government have become all-powerful collecting agencies.

Unfortunately, the mayors of our small municipalities and the heads of our school boards are carrying out their duties reluctantly, but the machinery is compelling them to do so. But as concerns the federal and provincial governments, collection has become the most interesting subject, the reward being an annual picnic called a federal-provincial conference on taxation.

For the banks' benefit, there is a summit conference taking place every year, where nobody ever talks about getting capital at a cheap rate.

There is never any talk of asking bankers to lower their interest rates. The guests at this meeting ponder over which of the two governments, federal or provincial, will be the first to take the most out of the taxpayers' pockets.

And every year the ritual is the same. The situation is never settled because a reason is needed to levy new taxes. And, rather than say that interest rates are too high, that credit has become too expensive, the federal government tells us: We are giving the provinces too much; that is why we have new taxes.

At the same time, or a few days later, the morning paper reports for instance that a Quebec government minister has said: Too bad but, as you know, the federal government did not grant us what I asked for; I am therefore forced to levy a new tax.

Mr. Chairman, the interests being charged by the creators of money and credit are too high. In my opinion, lure policies are being used to have this situation accepted by the public. To force the worker who wants to build a house to borrow at unreasonable rates, they give him a bonus which he must repay later through new taxes.

A bonus is also granted to the farmer to force him to borrow and tax increases make up for that bonus.

To promote industrial borrowing for the purchase of new machinery or for any business development, a bonus is offered the manufacturer, but this type of bonus is soon eaten up by the 50 per cent taxes on his profits.

Mr. Chairman, interest rates which are too high cause many bankruptcies. An excessive rate of interest is one of the reasons for the closing-down of many Canadian plants.

The capital created to serve has become a source of worry for the country, the provinces and all our public bodies and they all are doing poorly.

If one examines the financial statements of our Canadian cities, one will see that the interest on the public debt has become the main problem. The interest eats up 25 to 50 per cent, sometimes 60 per cent of their budgets.

And here I wish to support a statement made last December 20, 1966, in the newspaper "Le Nouvelliste" by a Trois-Rivières journalist, Mr. Sylvio St.-Amant. He said:

> The taxpayers of Trois-Rivières, just like their neighbours outside the St. Maurice region, will probably get a present after New Year's. In fact, our municipal legislators and administrators are juggling dangerously with figures these days and everything seems to indicate that to make ends meet they will have to increase taxes.
>
> Our administrators would no doubt like to put a stop to those runaway increases in expenditures. But there is not much they can do.
>
> The interest on the public debt alone, which will exceed $2 million this year, will eat up a quarter of the total budget.

And Mr. St-Amant said in closing:

> In any case, John Public has no choice. He must open his pocketbook which incidentally is beginning to look awfully thin. The lemon has been squeezed to the full; if one tries to get more out of it, it might burst.

Furthermore, in a city which will remain nameless 48 per cent of the budget is used for the interest on the debt, which means that the citizens will go without that much in services or the city will have to increase again its tax rates.

In the field of education, it is the same thing. School boards are forced to change their names to obtain capital. Because local school boards are overburdened with debts, regional school boards are being set up; they borrow under that new front but they send the bill to the local school boards.

The budget of the government is tangible evidence of the fact that interest is too high. A study of the recently tabled estimates reveals that an amount of $1,274,000,000 is required for the servicing of the debt, out of which $295 million approximately which will go back into the pockets of the Canadian citizens who hold saving bonds. But nearly $1 billion will be kicked back to a group of financiers. One billion for a few men, while, in the fields of family allowances, millions of young Canadians, who represent tomorrow's labour force, have to share among themselves an amount as low as $614 million. And the government does not consider for one moment to free itself from that heavy burden.

• (3:50 p.m.)

In the Speech from the Throne which was read at the opening of 1966-67 session, which is written for our whole history, there is a statement which I take the liberty of quoting once more:

> Our country is enjoying an unprecedented period of prosperity and growth.

Then why bleed the economy with further taxation? Why did we not use our years of prosperity to get rid of the national debt? Not only is it out of the question but the interest bill is submitted to the public, which is not even in a position to know in which year it will get the last bills for that item.

The Minister of Finance and Receiver General, who should know how to count, does not even know where he is going with the administration of Canada. The minister, who is the first to exercise an influence on the salary of every Canadian, told us that he had no idea of the year in which debts will be fully paid.

Let me quote here an answer he gave me, as recorded in Hansard for March 13, 1967, to question No. 2485 I had put on the order paper:

> How many years will it take the government of Canada to reimburse the debts it has been accumulating since 1867?

There is the answer the Minister of Finance gave me:

> It is not possible to predict when economic circumstances would make it appropriate for fiscal policy to aim at achieving cash surpluses. It is, therefore, not possible to forecast whether or to what extent the government would consider it appropriate to reduce or eliminate all its outstanding debt.

Mr. Latulippe: Quite true.

Mr. Godin: At one end, our citizens are caught up with the municipalities and the school boards, and at the other, with the provincial and federal governments. They end up being hogtied, like sausages.

[Mr. Godin.]

When money is involved, even the impartiality of our courts can be questioned. I was reading the other day in a newspaper that a bandit who had the pleasure of robbing a bank of $10,000 was sent to jail for five years while another individual of the same character was condemned to two years in jail for the murder of the father of three children.

Another striking example is the R.C.M.P. Let us suppose a municipality requires the services of that police force to ensure its protection for a given period of time. In such a case, the federal government will send a bill to the village authorities, after an agreement with them. But when the financial system is involved, the whole federal police may work day and night to discover the counterfeiters, but the banks, which are the first to be protected, are never called upon to foot the bill. There again, the people pay.

In this Bill No. C-222, the question of removing the present ceiling of 10 per cent on the interest rate is brought up. Hon. members do not seem concerned because they are under the impression that the banks are not making any profits. But considering the annual reports of the banks, it will be noted that they have made enough profits to pay dividends of between 20 and 30 per cent on their shares.

If such profit were not sufficient with the present 10 per cent ceiling and if the ceiling is removed, where will the bankers' ambition stop? Those men who already enjoy privileges granted to them by previous governments, feel required to support their supporters. It is also true that gratitude has always been recognized as an important factor in the relationship between governments and financiers.

Nevertheless, I hope the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada will admit that his supporters have had their share and that the time has come for the government to preserve the share of the Canadian voters.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make a long speech on second reading of this bill. I expressed most of my views when the committee of the whole was considering the Bank of Canada Act. However, there have been new developments since then which, I think, further support what I said then.

Among other things, last night, the Quebec government brought down its budget for the 1967-68 fiscal year. It is to be noted that many taxes have been increased, namely the sales tax, which went up from 6 to 8 per cent, the meal tax and the hotel room tax. In short, the wheel continues to turn and taxes go up. It was only about a month ago that the federal government increased its sales tax from 11 to 12 per cent. Yesterday, the Quebec government introduced a bill increasing the provincial sales tax from 6 to 8 per cent. Now—and this is how the matter is related to the act before us—the Quebec Finance Minister stated that "if we have to raise taxes, Ottawa is to blame, because it failed to understand the priority needs, the urgent needs of Quebec, and Ottawa refused to return to Quebec part of the taxation field". Now, we know that Quebec was asking for 100 per cent in the case of the corporation tax, the estate tax and the income tax. So we have reached a point today, in Canada, with these complicated monetary and taxation systems, beyond which we can hardly go.

I did a little figuring, Mr. Chairman, to find out just how burdensome were our taxes. I figured out how much an individual would have to pay for a new car the net cost of which would be $2,000. As soon as the car comes out of the production line, the 7 per cent federal excise tax on automobiles is slapped on, raising the price of the car by $340 to $2,340. Then, there are commissions and percentages going to retailers or middlemen amounting to about 5 per cent, which adds another $595 to bring the price of the car to $2,935. There is also the 12 per cent federal sales tax, in this case an amount of $352.20, hiking the price to $3,287.20. Then the 8 per cent provincial sales tax accounts for another $263.98, bringing the total price of the car from $2,000 to $3,550.

And then, the buyer might make a down payment of $550 on the car and finance the balance of $3,000 over a three-year period at a cost of $600. In other words, it will cost this individual $4,150 for a car which cost $2,000 when it came out of the plant. It is more than double its original cost.

The federal government collected $340 in taxes once and, another time, $352. The provincial government collected $264 in taxes, and the finance companies topped it off by collecting $600. That means that the car costs more than twice its original cost price.

Well, Mr. Chairman, when you see such examples as this, you realize there is something wrong with our banking system, with our monetary system, which should exist to serve the people and not to strangle them continually as is the case at the present time. And there is something wrong with our whole Canadian system, not only with our monetary system.

Yesterday, we saw in the Quebec speech from the throne that Quebec will have a supplementary family plan. The Quebec government has just decided to have its own family plan. I am not against that, far from it. But, in this case, it is wrong, because there already are family allowances coming from Ottawa, and now there will be other family allowances in Quebec. And then, you must organize a whole service of bureaucrats here in Ottawa, complete with data, filing cabinets, files, to prepare family allowance cheques; and you have to have a second service of bureaucrats, with filing cabinets and red tape, to prepare a second administrative service in the field of family allowances.

The cost of administration of the personnel required for sending out family allowance cheques to our young people is doubled. You have to pay once in Ottawa, and once in Quebec. Taxes will be levied by both governments. Ottawa will collect taxes for family allowances and Quebec will do the same. And we are going to pay taxes to Ottawa and Quebec, for that, we will have to pay the cost of a service to administer taxes in Ottawa, and another in Quebec.

We pay twice and when the time comes to redistribute the money through family allowances, for instance, then it will cost twice as much because there will be an administrative service in Quebec and another in Ottawa to compile all essential data to send family allowance cheques, when we could save a lot with one service only.

How much does it cost? Well, according to the estimates for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1968, the Department of Finance pays $2,566,000 for stamps only to forward family allowance cheques. It costs Ottawa, $2,566,000 only for the stamps to send family allowance cheques. On the basis of the principle that costs would be about a third of that amount for Quebec, there will be another $850,000 pair only for stamps to send family allowance cheques there. Now, if there were only one service, stamps would be paid for only once. That is a huge amount of money for stamps only, but how much more does it cost for envelopes, paper, the cheques themselves, the staff needed to write those cheques, the records and all the rest, and the inquiries that have to be made? Government expenditures are enormous for a country like Canada where everything is done in duplicate, where we always pay twice. Let me tell you that we are the only country in the world that can afford administrative expenses of that kind; the only country in the world where two administrative services are necessary to send family allowance cheques to the young.

Two groups of bureaucrats. Twice as many stamps, stationery and the rest. This costs much more, and we are the only country in the world that allows itself such a system.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister that it would be much simpler, in that case, to leave all taxation rights to the province of Quebec and to let Quebec deal with such fields as family allowances, old age security, etc.

And that is not all. Even yesterday, when he spoke about the estimates, the Quebec minister of finance declared that he would create a Quebec housing corporation. Inevitably, that new corporation will duplicate Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and we shall, once again, pay for two administrative services, two sets of bureaucrats. Our administration costs us much more than that of any country in the world because we have two levels of government.

Well, Mr. Chairman, because we indulge in the luxury of such an overheated administration, a much larger bureaucracy than that of any other country, for that very reason, we have to increase our taxes. The Quebec government did it only yesterday, by increasing its sales tax from 6 to 8 per cent; last month the federal government raised its own sales tax from 11 to 12 per cent. This means that during the year, or at least since the beginning of the year, the total sales tax increased from 17 per cent to 20 per cent, so that Quebec residents will have to pay an extra 3 per cent from now on.

And where is this going to be reflected? In a higher cost of living. A 3 per cent increase in the cost of living. And yet, some complain because Quebec workers ask for wage increases. They have no other choice, for the cost of living is increasing very fast because of taxes and as a result of taxes—the sales tax being now set at 20 per cent while two months ago the two together amounted to 17 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the situation I do not hesitate to say that there is one administration too many and that should Quebec have all its taxes, all its sources of income, there would only be one set of bureaucrats in this field.

If the rest of Canada wants a single taxation system set up by Ottawa, it is quite free to do so, but this shows once again with what is going on in Quebec, that the Canadian political system is far from being adequate and that to save the money being wasted at this time because of duplication and to give the citizens more for their tax money, there is only one solution: Quebec has to get rid of one of the two administrations, that is, unavoidably, the administration of Canada.

The day Quebec is the only one to collect and spend its revenues, the day Quebec is the only government charged with the administration of Quebec, having nothing to do with the government in Ottawa, then we in Quebec will save fantastic amounts of money which at present are spent uselessly for duplication.

A typical example of that is the supplementary family allowances which will be distributed by the province of Quebec and which will involve operation expenses already existing in Ottawa. We have another typical example of that with the Quebec housing corporation that the Quebec government intends to create. Well, since I have noticed that the province of Quebec is undertaking such duplication, I have reflected that there is only one solution left, that is, that the Quebec government get rid of the Ottawa government in order to save very considerable amounts of money.

Mr. Chairman, the system under which we are living requires, if we really want to act as qualified administrators, that we come to the conclusion I have reached and in which my faith has been steadily increasing, and the more so after the speech that was made in Quebec yesterday.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 6—Duration of authority to carry on business.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: You are on clause 6, are you not? I have an amendment to move to clause 6. Things went so fast that perhaps I did not have time to rise. But I would like to move an amendment to clause 6, if we could revert to it.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, clause 6 reads as follows:

Subject to this Act,

(a) if parliament sits on at least twenty days during the month of June, 1976, the bank may carry on the business of banking until the first day of July, 1976, and no longer, and

(b) if parliament does not sit on at least twenty days during the month of June, 1976, the bank may carry on the business of banking until the sixtieth sitting day of parliament thereafter, and no longer.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we note that a period of ten years for the chartered banks as well as for that of the state is very long. We feel that in ten years a lot of things may happen. We feel that this period might be too long and we feel also that it would be to the advantage of the banks as well as the governments to shorten that ten-year period.

It is the duty of the government to take action at the proper time and according to circumstances to set up a better balance between factors, between the private banks and the government. It is obvious that, in times such as these, the two parties should have the opportunity to make the necessary changes and improvements, according to the times, the facts and the circumstances.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in ten years, many circumstances may intervene and this parliament does not have the right to amend the bank charters and the banks do not have the right to ask for improvements which would be helpful to them, while allowing them at the same time to render service to the population. This works both ways, and I believe we should shorten this period to five years.

So I wish to move an amendment to this effect, as it seems to me that a fixed period of five years would be a reasonable length of time during which none of the parties would have a right to bring about changes. Ten years is an extremely long time, things change rapidly nowadays, in this modern world of ours and people not only have to live at a neck-breaking pace, but they also must face new obligations, new ideas, new organizations or new problems. Therefore, the government should have a right to interfere and to carry out a revision of the Bank Act at least every fifth year, as I believe that five years from now, there will surely be improvements to bring about, in banking as well as in the government's regulations. This would help the government as well as the chartered banks, as banks must find it burdensome to abide by a ten-year agreement, to be tied down to regulations ten years running. In fact, if there are things that do not suit them, they have to overlook them, to accept them. Thus, we are depriving the people as well as the institutions of their rights. The government also should have certain rights even if financial institutions have rights and privileges to assert.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I shall move my amendment.

[English]

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment negatived: yeas, 2; nays, 45.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: On division, Mr. Chairman. There are only two of us, but we are not ashamed to do so, because we know we are doing our duty.

If we have arrived at clause 9, I have another amendment to move.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I have attempted to obtain a copy of the bill to follow this debate and no copies are available. I do not see how members of the house can discuss a bill when they do not have a copy to follow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there not a copy in the hon. gentleman's desk?

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): There is not. Could not more copies be found that we might follow this debate.

An hon. Member: Look in somebody else's desk.

The Chairman: It is my understanding that reprinted copies of this bill were distributed.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Normally copies of the bill are available from the table. At the present time I see no copies there.

Thank you. I have received a copy of the bill—in fact I have two copies now. I shall not hold up debate for the remaining 40 minutes, but I do hope that those responsible will make sure that extra copies are available on Monday.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 9—Capital stock and shares.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Regarding clause 9, I shall quote it now. It reads as follows:

Subject to this act, the authorized capital stock of the bank shall not be less than $1 million and shall be divided into shares each having a par value of $1 or any multiple thereof not exceeding $10.

Mr. Chairman, there are many, main arguments to that amendment, because the par value of $1 or a multiple thereof will not exceed $10. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in the interest of Canada and also of the banks concerned, we should maintain the status quo with regard to the par value of the shares of the chartered banks. That policy was implemented during the consideration of the Bank Act, in 1944; it has been maintained for 23 years, I claim it should continue to apply. The arguments put forward to give it a par value of one dollar are nonsense. I say they are trivial, illogical.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The ten dollar par value of bank shares should be kept; there should be uniformity amongst the banks; a statisfactory established order should be maintained. Reducing the par value to enable the small wage-earners, the small investor to buy them is defeated by the mere fact that no one buys shares on the market worth one cent, ten cents or even a dollar. When one bothers calling an investment broker, it is not for a few cents or even a dollar.

There is even an agreement between all investment brokers according to which shares of less than $25 each must be bought and sold in minimum lots of one hundred. This is stated on page 39 of the December 1966 issue of the monthly publication of the Montreal Stock Market.

At any rate, the commission asked by the brokers for any transaction cannot be less than $2. Only by accident are transactions made for less than $10, and there is no commission; special arrangements have been made for unusual circumstances.

And so, the argument whereby the par value should be reduced to $1 or $2 to help the small shareholder is ridiculous and covers other less commendable reasons.

If we want to avoid arguments in the house, or having to rectify situations which stem from more or less commendable reasons, in short if we want to avoid those changes, and even long arguments in the future, let us put an end to the suggestion that the par value of bank shares should be reduced.

Banks are not like the other companies listed on the stock market. They have always obtained special and exclusive privileges which the other companies could not get.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

There are well-founded reasons for that and they are still valid. That is why banks must always be treated in a more responsible way and protected from petty schemes at stock exchanges where it is easier to humbug people by multiplying shares, through the watering of capital by any means and to conceal the real corporate profits from a public that is not always able to understand the details.

Then, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that hon. members should look into this clause with the seriousness it deserves. As a matter of fact, this advantage extended to the banks is not for the benefit of the people. Mr. Chairman, I think it is my duty to move another amendment to clause 9.

[English]

Amendment (Mr. Latulippe) negatived: yeas, 2; nays, 51.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

Clauses 10 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 13—Commencing business.

Mr. Lambert: I wish to make a few comments on clause 13. Subclause 2 illustrates the point I was making about the interpretation clause, clause 2, inasmuch as there is nothing to indicate what the business of banking is. Notwithstanding all his expertise and knowledge, the inspector general could not say when a bank commences business, except that it began when he had issued a certificate. That I think is placing the cart before the horse. This draws attention to the necessity for establishing what the business of banking is, in order that a clause such as clause 13 may become meaningful.

I am merely calling attention now to the arguments that I made in the committee and to those put forward in this chamber not only by myself but by some of my hon. friends. I will limit my comments at this time to these few words, but I think it is nonsense to have a clause of this nature when the interpretation clause does not tell us what is the business of banking which one is not supposed to commence.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

Clause 17 agreed to.

On clause 18—Management.

Mr. Lambert: Clause 18 deals with the qualifications and other characteristics of directors. I am particularly concerned about the introduction of the new subclause 7 and the limitation that no one who is a director of a banking corporation may, along with another director of a banking corporation represent more than 20 per cent of the directorate of any other corporation after July 1, 1971.

This matter was discussed during the committee hearings when it was explained that an attempt was being made to remove controls. I put it to the minister that this would impose a serious hardship on certain small corporations which might be closely held by a small group of shareholders. There might only be three directors. This forces two men who are on the board of one bank, and who may have a very successful and legitimate business operation going in a closely controlled private company, possibly of modest size, to divest themselves of their holdings because they would have to abandon their directorships. If there are only three directors in a corporation, even one bank director is too many if there is to be a limitation of 20 per cent. The only way one can get around it is to increase the number of directors in the corporation to five.

What can be done if there are only three shareholders? Does one go through the sham of setting up dummy shareholdings in order to qualify? I feel it is wrong that there should be very stringent general restriction on the participation by the directors of any corporate body in the board of directors of any bank. I have been told by a number of people that as matters stand now a number of directors of banks will have to divest themselves of holdings in certain organizations.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: I have not got the sort of phobia that the hon. member for York South seems to have about the mere fact that there is corporate existence. Two directors of a bank could have a small operation in which there are only three shareholders, yet this particular provision would force them to divest themselves of that interest. It is quite legitimate, and there is no power play.

Although the date of July, 1971, is specified, I think the provision is quite wrong and I would ask the minister to find something much more equitable. I do not share his views on this matter and I am wondering whether this clause in part can trace its parentage to some of the views of the hon. member for Davenport. After all, the minister has indicated that a good deal of the thinking in connection with, and the preparation of, this bill were an expression of the philosophies of the hon. member for Davenport. If this clause is part of that philosophy then I part company with the minister even more, because I think it is totally wrong and quite unnecessary. I am quite opposed to it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can at least give one assurance and that is that the original idea, which we might have developed ourselves, was recommended by the Porter commission, but we did not follow that recommendation exactly because it seemed a little unworkable to us. Generally speaking, the Porter commission and the government are agreed it is desirable not only that our banking institutions should be competitive and independent from one another, but that so far as possible there should be an independent banking system, and also a banking system that does not dominate or have an undue influence on the affairs of other corporations. It is in that spirit that these amendments are made, and while there may be some difficulties involved I do not think they are of such a character as to interfere in any way with the development of a sound business system in this country.

Mr. Lambert: I am sure the minister will agree that if two or three men decide they are going to have a small investment company among themselves, and they control it as a completely private venture, this provision will force them to dispose of their interests or disband. Can the minister justify that?

Mr. Sharp: I doubt very much whether they would be required to disband. There might have to be a rather different board of directors, but their common interests could be represented by one director.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Mr. Lambert: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 19 agreed to.

Clauses 25 and 26 agreed to.

Clause 28 agreed to.

On clause 29—Report to directors.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman I will admit that this has some reference to the original section 60(1), but in essence it is a new clause. There is a point I did not note during the committee hearings, but I wonder how it can be ascertained under subclause (2)(b) that a borrower has committed an act of bankruptcy, because the commission of an act of bankruptcy has a retroactive effect.

If one looks at the Bankruptcy Act and the legal definition of an act of bankruptcy, how can a bank manager or any bank official determine that a customer has committed an act of bankruptcy? Legally under the act, an act of bankruptcy can be an undue preference for one creditor and can only be ascertained and identified within the terms of the Bankruptcy Act. If the borrower has committed bankruptcy or has been adjudged in bankruptcy, then I would agree with the minister; but I do not think a bank manager should be under a responsibility to make this report on a non-current loan on the basis of a borrower having committed an act of bankruptcy. I will admit it is an identifiable point if a customer has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, but the actual confirmation of the act of bankruptcy within the terms of the Bankruptcy Act is something that no bank official could identify.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the hon. member realizes this clause is only for purposes of reporting. It does not have any other consequential effect. Moreover, the same provision has been in the law for some years and the inspector general of banks has not had any difficulty in this respect.

Mr. Lambert: What concerns me is that there is a mandatory or statutory requirement imposed upon the general manager to report on a non-current loan, and a non-current loan shall be one if a borrower has committed an act of bankruptcy. Perhaps I am being overly strict in the legal sense, but it is a legal imposition placed upon the general manager consequent upon a certain act. It is not for him to decide whether the loan is non-current, because the act says a loan is non-current if a certain event takes place. The general manager is not in a position to determine if that act has taken place. Perhaps the committee would agree to stand this clause until Monday to allow the inspector general to verify this particular point and to give the minister an opportunity to bring in an appropriate amendment to clear it up.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. gentleman would agree that if this were the only thing that held up the passage of the bill today he would not press his point, but if it is not, then I am willing to have the clause stand for the time being.

Clause 29 stands.

Clause 31 agreed to.

On clause 32—Increase of capital.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I would ask that this clause stand. An amendment to it will be offered later, when we come to another clause to which it is related.

Mr. Lewis: Could we have an idea of what the hon. member has in mind so that we may be able to think about it?

Mr. Gray: I have no objection to that. It will be recalled that the hon. member for Verdun yesterday gave the committee his views, and I quote him as follows as recorded at page 14107 of Hansard:

> What bothers me, and I say this directly to the minister, is that I am not certain in reading the bill that the governor in council necessarily has that right.

This was referring to the preceding part of his remarks.

> I suggest to the minister, and this might be implemented on the appropriate clause ... that we ensure that whenever a bank receives permission to increase its share capital, no individual, as defined in the act, be permitted to add to his shares so long as he or his group owns more than 10 per cent of a bank.

• (4:40 p.m.)

> I am not talking of a specific bank; I am talking of any bank; and more than one bank is in that particular situation. This would guarantee the carrying out of the minister's intention, as he has stated it on several occasions in the committee.

The hon. member for Verdun was referring to the standing committee. He is not present at this time, but I might say that if we should reach clause 53 subclause 4 today I would suggest an amendment. Perhaps the simplest thing would be to read it:

> That Bill C-222, An Act respecting Banks and Banking, be amended
> (a) by striking out lines 9 to 11, inclusive, on page 32 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following: "thereof,
> (b) by any person if, at the time the share is subscribed for, the total number of shares of the capital stock of the bank held by such person and by other shareholders associated with him, if any, exceeds 10 per cent of the total number of the issued and outstanding shares of such stock; or
> (c) except as otherwise provided in subsection (5), in other circumstances where if the subscription";

(b) by striking out line 19 on page 32 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"(5) Subject to paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection"

Of course, it is not easy to follow this just by listening to it. One would have to have the bill in front of him. The reason I ask that clause 33 stand is that if the suggested amendment to clause 53 should be adopted by the house it would be necessary to have an amendment to clause 33 (1) (d) which I might bring to the attention of the house at this time. The amendment will be as follows:

That Bill C-222, An Act respecting Banks and Banking, be amended by striking out line 44 on page 20 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"reason of paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (4) of".

The effect of this would be to bring into clause 33 the necessary reference to clause 53 to which I have just referred. I realize it is not easy to explain clearly a complicated insertion of this type, but perhaps to some extent I have succeeded in getting the point across. As I have mentioned, the reason I have proposed that this clause stand is so that the committee would have an opportunity to consider the amendment to clause 53 which I have read. If I am present at the time we reach this clause I would be prepared to move the amendment. The amendment arises out of a suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Verdun, with which I associate myself.

Clause 33 stands.

Clauses 35, 36, and 39 and clauses 44 to 51 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 52—Definitions. "Agent".

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, we are starting a series of clauses which we should consider very carefully because they deal with the question of the limitations on non-residents, the definition of non-resident and the restrictions on any crown holdings of bank shares. I believe we should go slowly in order to understand precisely what we are doing. Actually I have some reservations about the pseudo-Canadianizing of banks by imposing restrictions on shareholders based on residence. On previous occasions when the hon. member for Davenport, the Minister without Portfolio, was perpetually putting forward propositions based upon residence and was talking about Canadianizing, I said I thought he should have the courage of his convictions. It is so easy to defeat any idea of Canadianizing or any idea of being Canadian when the requirement if merely one of residence, because we know there are very many people who establish residence in this country without their citizenship in any way being affected.

The fact that persons merely establish residence in this country means nothing, because they might be officials in charge of branch plants; there may be trust arrangements behind the holdings or any number of things whereby the actual fact that there is Canadian residence is completely meaningless. I would have thought that at this time if it were thought necessary that there be a requirement of Canadianizing—in other words, that they were going to institute this selfsame nationalistic philosophy—the government would have stated that the requirement should be on the basis of citizenship rather than residence.

I do not honestly advocate that. I do not think it is necessary. I do say however that if the government has such convictions, then let them show they have them. To me it is spurious to say that we are guaranteeing the Canadian nature of our banks as though there were a requirement with regard to the board of directors that at least three quarters shall be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. If that is the philosophy of the government, then let it say so. That is the point I wished to make.

I agree that the directors of a bank should be Canadian citizens. I much prefer that to their being resident in Canada. Concerning ownership, if residence has to be established, there will be very great administrative problems for the banks themselves in administering the responsibility which is imposed upon them. I think there would be a tough shakedown in respect of the requirement; but I do not think it would be any more difficult for the banks to ascertain the citizenship of a shareholder than it would be to ascertain his residence. It is a question of providing the passport, if there is to be a requirement that someone be a Canadian. If this is the intention, then I believe the government should go all the way. It is meaningless merely to insist upon residence. Naturally this involves complicated requirements about associated shareholders, corporations and the corporate relationships so that individuals may not be able to defeat these requirements concerning residence by their participation in corporations. Anyone who reads pages 28, 29 and 30 in clause 52 will certainly see that it is necessary to engage in extremely tortuous descriptions. It will be extremely difficult to determine how this is to be interpreted.

If the government really means what it says, then let it say that 75 per cent of the shareholders of Canadian banks shall be Canadians ordinarily resident in Canada—

• (4.50 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Well said.

Mr. Lambert: —if that is the government's philosophy in Canadianizing the banks. To come down to what I call this really spurious qualification of residence is, I think, going through an exercise in semantics which really is quite meaningless. The clause is there. I do not like it in so far as residence is concerned. When it comes to the question of any government agency owning shares in a bank, I am with the minister. I do not believe that any provincial government should directly own any of the voting stock of any bank. There is to my mind a case for, shall we say, certain investment funds on behalf of university foundations. I refer to universities which may be state operated, as we have in most of western Canada. There is a case there for certain funds to be invested in limited numbers of bank stocks, but the government agency or emanation should not have any voting privileges. That is as far I would be prepared to allow the participation of any right of Her Majesty in the commercial banks of the country. If it is the desire of the crown to participate in some form of banking or near banking, we have the example of the emanations of the treasury of the province of Alberta. I am not supporting that idea. There is the Industrial Development Bank, which really has become a senior partner in many operations. We will have an opportunity to discuss this aspect of the question on some other occasion. We are told that some of the banks have been charging high rates of interest. I can tell hon. members in private of some of the deals that have been insisted upon by the I.D.B., and we wonder who is getting that pound of flesh. However, Mr. Chairman, with these reservations as to clause 52 I think we can start the discussion on clauses 53, 57 and 58.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the indulgence of the committee to stand clauses 52 and 53. I had prepared an amendment to clause 53, but I realize that to effect my purpose it will be necessary to have an antecedent amendment to clause 52 and a subsequent amendment to clause 53. Therefore I would ask clauses 52 and 53 be allowed to stand.

The Chairman: Shall clause 52 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 53 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be helpful if we stood clauses 52 to 57. They are part of a group, and we have immediately following clauses 58 and 59, which have already been accepted. We could deal with clause 60. We are only about three or four minutes away from the time when we shall be dealing with other business, in any event.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clauses 52 to 57 inclusive stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 52 to 57 inclusive stand.

Clause 60 agreed to.

Clauses 63, 64 and 65 agreed to.

Clause 69 agreed to.

On clause 72—Cash reserve.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, frankly, in connection with this clause I find myself at some inconvenience in that I would like to have proposed an amendment to clause 72. We have made such good progress that I do not have the amendment with me. However, I can give hon. members an indication of it. I have not, notwithstanding all the evidence that was put before the committee, seen the need demonstrated of increasing to 12 per cent the ratio of reserves against demand deposit liabilities. There was clear evidence given to the committee that the banks themselves feel that about 5 per cent is a very safe figure, and this is what they would normally carry. I refer to reserves against demand deposits.

I appreciate that the minister has established a distinction in this revision between demand deposits and deposits payable on notice, so that there is a proposed rate of 12 per cent against demand deposits and only 4 per cent against those payable after notice. There is, in addition, being included a statutory secondary reserve which will be at the disposal of the governor of the Bank of Canada for further action if he deems fit. At the present time we know that there has been an unofficial secondary reserve.

I think there was a great deal of telling argument put forward on behalf of the banks that it was not necessary to include the statutory secondary reserve. I would like to have seen within the provisions of the statutory first line of reserves a flexibility which is applicable in the United States. I spoke to the minister privately about this the other day. We saw recently that the federal reserve board, in connection with term deposits payable after notice, reduced the rate from 4 per cent to 3 per cent in two stages—that is, from 4 per cent to 3½ per cent, and from 3½ per cent to 3 per cent—in order to ease certain credit limitations that have been in force in the United States.

I would have thought the minister should have considered this provision to be applicable with regard to the Canadian banking system. The flexibility that is used at the present time is to place more money into circulation, but this invariably affects the price of bonds and the interest rate on government securities.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I am not too sure that this effect is what we are striving for. In other words I should like to see the Minister of Finance provide the governor of the Bank of Canada with an alternative tool for money control. I am not suggesting that unfettered power should be given the governor of the Bank of Canada and I think he would consult the minister in this regard. Instead of saying that it will always be 4 per cent and that all that can be done under these circumstances is that the first line of reserves against deposits payable on notice shall always be 4 per cent, the governor of the Bank of Canada could increase the reserve requirements. However, there can be no flexibility beyond the reserve requirements except through the ceiling of the monetary supply. I do not think that this would necessarily have all the beneficial effects which we would want.

I should like to see the minister consider —perhaps he has, and if so I shall listen carefully to his reply—the wisdom or otherwise of giving the governor of the Bank of Canada the right to vary downwards the percentage of the reserve requirements as against both the demand and the term deposits.

These are the two questions which I should like the minister to answer. I notice it is now five o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Later today.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house would be willing to set aside the private members hour and proceed with the business that was interrupted at five o'clock? There is a good deal of urgency about this bill, as the house knows, and in view of the progress we are making I hope that favourable consideration will be given to my request.

Mr. Lambert: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I think there is equal urgency in considering certain private members bills. We did not have a private members hour last Thursday and lately the time allotted to private members bills has been disregarded. We have made very good progress with the bank bill and I think we should leave it at that.

Mr. McIlraith: There seems to be some misunderstanding. There has been extensive consultation, and I think the hon. member is biased when he implies that this is not so. I wonder whether the proposal to continue could be considered.

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: I hope this will not cause embarrassment to the hon. member, but hon. members who wished to take part in the debate on private members bills have been consulted and appeared to be quite satisfied with the request that we continue the consideration of the bank bill.

Mr. Lambert: In view of the fact that the Minister of Public Works knew that the conduct of business, so far as this bill was concerned, was in my hands this afternoon he could have consulted me in this regard. We have made very good progress, and after having offered last night to pass some 70 odd clauses en bloc we have now reached the core of the bill. I cannot agree to the suggestion that we continue debate on the bill after five o'clock on a Friday afternoon when many hon. members are absent.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct an impression which may be left on the record from what the hon. member from Edmonton West has said. I think it is quite unfair to leave in Hansard the inference that there has been a lack of care from this side of the house in the consultation carried out. I think the hon. member will agree with me that we encounter certain difficulties in knowing who represents their party and we try our very best to meet them in an obliging and fair manner so as to carry out such consultations as thoroughly as possible. However, it is impossible to consult each member of the party and to reach a unanimous decision. I think the hon. member would agree that this is true in any party.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I cannot take this sort of nonsense from the Minister of Public Works. There was plenty of opportunity for consultation both yesterday and the day before. The minister knew where to find me, particularly when he thought I was going to offer some assistance in passing certain clauses of the bill. I have been here without interruption since we have started consideration of this bill, and the minister knew where to find me.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry, but I did not feel obliged to consult with individual members of the party. I tried to do my best to consult with those concerned, and they were agreeable. In any event, would the hon. member consider taking item 140 on the order paper, the second reading of the income tax bill?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, we are not ready to deal with it now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. If I remember correctly it deals with the removal of the 5 per cent refundable tax. I hope the minister is not trying to slip it in at this time.

Mr. McIlraith: In any event I understand the Minister of Finance is not ready to deal with it now.

Mr. Lewis: Nor are we.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: During the consideration of Bill No. C-222 a question was raised with regard to additional copies of the reprinted bill. Is there agreement to the printing of an additional 200 copies in English and 100 copies in French?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now proceed to consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

Mr. McNulty: Mr. Speaker, may we have the consent of the house to stand orders Nos. 1 to 8 inclusive and to go ahead with No. 9 on the order paper which is Bill No. C-37 under the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to standing orders Nos. 1 to 8 inclusive and proceeding with the consideration of No. 9?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR THREE WEEKS ANNUAL VACATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-37, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (three weeks annual vacation after three years).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I suppose my first word should be one of appreciation to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for making it possible for me to present this bill for second reading at this time. We were prepared to stay with the government item for the remainder of the day, but now that we are in private members hour, I have this privilege of presenting for second reading Bill No. C-37 entitled, an act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (three weeks annual vacation after three years).

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, bills are presented to this house the titles of which create a certain amount of mystery, but that is not the case with this bill. So far as this bill is concerned, the whole principle is set out in the title itself.

We now have the Canada Labour (Standards) Code in which there is provision for two weeks annual vacation with pay after one year for all workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction. This includes persons who work in banking, transportation, communications and various other kinds of occupations set out in the British North America Act. It took a long while to get the labour code. It took a long while to get the provision for annual vacations with pay; but I suggest that already the length of the vacation in the course of a year that is granted by the Canada Labour (Standards) Code is much shorter than it should be.

This is often referred to as an age of progress, affluence and a few other things. We believe that one of the ways in which this age should express itself is by providing more leisure time for our workers. During the course of this week we have been spending most of our time on the banking legislation. In many of the speeches that have been made during this debate it has been suggested that there are various indirect ways, such as control of the monetary and fiscal policies of this country, in which to bring benefits to our people. This is fine; but there are also direct ways of bringing benefits. One of those direct ways is to provide legislation setting out clearly the rights to which our workers are entitled. This bill seeks to do something directly.

We are glad that at long last we have the principle established that workers are entitled in each year to annual vacations with pay. We think the time has come, in the case at least of employees who have spent three years with the same employer, for this to be not less than three weeks each year. When we get this bill into committee of the whole, as I hope we will do, one slight change will be necessary. The reason the change has to be made is similar to the reason changes have had to be made in a number of bills this session, namely, that it has been on the order paper a long time. First reading of Bill No. C-37 was given on January 24, 1966, early in the present session. Therefore because the bill was introduced and given first reading last January, the effective date of the legislation as set out in clause 3 of the bill is indicated as January 1, 1967. This date having passed, obviously it will be necessary, when we get into committee of the whole, to change the effective date, probably to January 1, 1968.

However, I hope that the house generally will accept the principle of this bill, and that we will be able to go into committee of the whole on it very shortly and proceed with this useful piece of legislation under which we would guarantee to all workers who come under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament and who have worked for three years for the same employer at least three weeks vacation each year with pay. I commend this bill to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to express my humble opinion in this house on this Bill No. C-37 calling for three weeks annual vacation after three years with the same employer.

May I congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his initiative. He also shows perseverance, for this is not the first time he brings a bill setting forth a similar principle.

My personal reaction to a three-week leave with pay after three years for employees in industries under federal jurisdiction was to welcome that proposal. It is obvious that, with technological developments and automation affecting us more and more in this twentieth century, it will be necessary to give more thought to organizing the leisure time of all Canadian citizens.

It is obvious that a prolonged vacation is always useful; in fact, it is increasingly useful, considering the rapid changes affecting us. It is useful for the health of our employees, for the preservation of family spirit; it permits our fellow-citizens to have more spare time to look after their training, so as to reach a level of education higher than the ordinary labour skill required in the industrial field, in arts and other similar activities.

However, when I thought of expressing my views on this bill, I believe at first, I had to study a little more thoroughly the question of an annual vacation for our labour force. I also thought that by referring to the principles of the Canada Labour Code, the labour standards, to the principle of determining acceptable standards and minimums for our average industries, throughout Canada, that the time had probably not come yet for the necessary efforts to be made in order to determine through legislation, a minimum period of three weeks vacation with pay.

I can see, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out a while ago, that the principle of this bill is very clear and very easily understandable. Mention is made in the title itself of a three weeks annual vacation with pay after three years in the service of the same employer.

All the same, the Canada Labour Code that has just been enacted by the house represents a great step forward with respect to this bill, as far as holidays are concerned. Before its adoption, holidays lasted a week only. Then, we got two weeks with pay after one year employment with the same employer.

Moreover, I think it is worth noting that in addition to those two weeks, the labour code states that employers must give their employees seven holidays with pay, seven legal holidays a year.

I read seven days in the speech of the then Minister of Labour, but in another report, I found that it is now eight days.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: I should like to ask the hon. member a question.

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Could I have a minute please?

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the hon. member would not mind my reminding him that in committee on that bill the figure was amended to provide for eight. It was seven when the bill was brought in but it ended up at eight.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): That is what he said.

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): That is quite all right. Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his remark and I confess that I noticed today, in a report, that eight days were mentioned. Then, let us say two weeks of leave, plus eight days of paid holidays, eight legal holidays.

I noted, as I said earlier, that the hon. member introduced a similar bill in 1965; in fact, first reading of it took place in April 1965.

In 1964, the same hon. member moved a bill in which he suggested that three weeks of annual leave be granted after five years of employment with the same employer.

I noticed, on reading the debate of that time, that those who objected to the bill, such as, for instance, the hon. member for Halifax, mentioned that the government was about to introduce its Labour Code which was since passed since 1965. He stressed also the principle which I put forward earlier, that the Labour Code must set minimum standards, and he emphasized the necessity of studying that question in greater detail because it is quite complicated and in view of the effects that such legislation might have on the industry.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) did mention at the time that the consumer would again have to foot the bill, because when businessmen merchants are compelled to raise salaries and provide facilities for their staff, it is a known fact that, in the last instance, it is always the consumer who pays the bill. He also mentioned the financial difficulties that would result from the immediate setting up of such holidays, as well as those this measure would bring to bear on the small industries and businessmen.

Therefore, I think that the standards introduced in Bill C-37 in respect of three-week holidays after three years of employment, is much in advance of the current practice carried out in industries under the jurisdiction of the federal government and in the industry on the whole.

In 1964, a review appearing in a publication of the Labour Department on the labour conditions in Canadian industries under the jurisdiction of the federal government, among office employees, showed that 12 per cent of them only had a vacation of three weeks within ten years of employment, that is, that they worked for concerns who granted a three-week vacation to employees with less than 10 years of service.

And for all the employees, including the office workers as well as the others, a study was conducted on a total of over 2½ million employees, with the result that 15 per cent only of these employees were granted a three-week holiday when they had less than 10 years of service.

A three-week vacation after relatively short periods of service is more frequent among office workers. It is quite obvious that most enterprises which grant three weeks or more to senior employees after several years of service, after a long period of service, require that the duration of the service exceeds considerably the period of three years.

I think that these facts should be taken into consideration. Only specific data about the present industrial policy can serve as a sound basis for legislation.

As regards the vacations allowed by the provinces, we can see that in Saskatchewan the policy is to give two weeks after one year of employment, and three weeks after five years.

In three provinces, that is Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, it is two weeks after one year of employment. In four other provinces—Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and New Brunswick—the minimum is one week. Two provinces, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, have no legislation in this respect.

As I said a moment ago, the Canada Labour Code has improved the situation that existed at the time, when it was a one-week vacation; now it is two weeks, in addition to the legal holidays that must be granted and paid to the employees.

In my opinion, this is a substantial improvement for a great number of workers.

A proposal like the one put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in Bill C-37 and which would bring an important increase in the standards pertaining to annual vacations could hardly be seriously considered at this moment. The Labour Code having been passed by the government just some time ago, so to speak, it does not seem to me that things have changed fast enough in industry as a whole to justify such a proposal at this time.

The survey that the International Labour Organization sponsored in 1964, in industry as a whole shows a trend toward extending the vacation period in quite a number of industries.

In my view, an annual vacation of three weeks is an objective for the future but could not be realized now. Meanwhile, it would be normal to leave to collective bargaining, to private enterprises, the task of extending the annual vacation according to the period of continuous employment, because the philosophy of the legislation, I repeat, is to provide for minimum standards in order to protect the small employees who cannot benefit from the unions or collective bargaining. We must see to it that, in the industries under federal jurisdiction in Canada, no one has less than a two-week vacation each year. As to the other industries, the matter must be decided by way of negotiations between the employees and the employers; in certain cases, consequently, longer holidays—even more than three weeks a year, could be granted.

We ought to ask ourselves to what extent legislators should go when establishing minimum standards concerning working conditions, without interfering with collective bargaining. I also think that it has always been the policy of the government—at least when the Liberal party is in power—to protect and encourage as much as possible private initiative and to respect our standing within private enterprise.

Where the labour market is sufficiently stable to allow an employee to accumulate many years of service with the same employer, it seems that there is nothing to prevent a union organization from being effective and having a strong collective agreement.

Besides, I took the opportunity to get in touch with some of my constituents who look after labour relations within the trade unions, to give them my views on this subject and ask them their own opinions. According to my little inquiry, it is better, after the act has set minimums, to let the unions act as they see fit and to give collective baragining a chance to play its part.

This does not mean that we do not keep an eye on working conditions. On the contrary, I think that if we look at the policies of this government during the last few years or even during the last session, to begin with, the program it outlined in the Speech from the Throne which set forth many plans to improve the working conditions and the status of all Canadian workers, we find that the present government takes an interest in the welfare of the Canadian worker. Moreover, since then, various measures were introduced by the government, several of which were passed, and always in order to improve the standing of our labour force. And I am especially referring here to the different pieces of legislation that were passed concerning the labour force; indirectly or directly, they are all measures intended to help the people constituting the labour market in this country.

And, if I consider my area, the people I am most acquainted with, I think we should rather try, for the time being, to provide for sound economic health and, in order to do this, provide work for the labour force by developing new industries and reorganizing the structure of our economy.

In closing, I insist on this principle: To legislate in such a way as to set down minimum standards. I feel that if we consider the whole of the methods applied generally in Canadian industry, two weeks is quite an acceptable minimum since hardly two years ago the minimum was one week; so it has doubled.

I believe the government is acting wisely in this legislation for the time being, and when the need is felt and the general attitude of industry indicates that two weeks are, in fact, below a reasonable minimum, we can then set another minimum longer than the two week period.

Respect of private enterprise. The government must preserve the rights of man, of the individual, of the worker, through minimums, at the proper time. On the other hand the initiative of private industry must also be preserved, for when longer holidays are really necessary, private industry, the employers by agreement with the employees through the unions and labour agreements, can extend the two-week period according to requirements.

Such are some of the reasons why I felt, while taking into consideration the necessity of watching over the leasure time of our industrial workers that such a measure should be left to private industry, to labour agreements and not become at this point, the subject matter of an act of parliament.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question? Do I understand this to be the position, that the law requiring two weeks holidays with pay does not interfere with free collective bargaining, but that a law requiring three weeks would interfere?

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I made myself clear but what I meant to say once again is that the government provides a minimum of two weeks to protect the small employee who cannot join a labour union and is thus unprotected. The government sets up a minimum so as not to unbalance its economy and leaves private enterprise free. When I speak of private enterprise, I mean the employer as well as the employees who can discuss things together. I mean that through collective agreements, they can provide for the vacation periods which they feel can be granted to the employees. The initiative is left to the employers and the employees and I think that that is in the spirit of the labour code. I think it was in that spirit that the labour code was passed by the house not very long ago.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak with the intention of taking only a minute or two, realizing that other members wish to express themselves on this worth-while legislation before us. I must admit that in the first instance I hoped this legislation would also apply to members of parliament. It would be nice if we could be assured of at least a three-week holiday in which to recuperate from the vicissitudes and involvements in this place and others.

I must say also that I cannot go along with the comments of the hon. member for Rimouski, who suggested that the time is not yet ripe for making an advance with this kind of legislation, and that we ought to ensure that there are minimum standards for vacation time, particularly for those people in the labouring sector who very likely need holidays more than any other people.

All of us, whether we sit in this place or not, are aware that there are increasing pressures today on family life, that society is developing to a state in which it is not possible much of the time for members of families to be together because of vocational commitments and commitments beyond one's vocational life. If is almost true to say that in many instances members of families do not know each other well. They do not enjoy the day to day contact which is needed for a strong family life.

It is also true that the pressures of the business world are such that it is often impossible for people to get the kind of recreation which is needed week by week to allow them to restore themselves and carry on their chosen endeavours. I think it is necessary today for people to have much longer than the two weeks normally accepted as the minimum standard. I think it is true to say also that those who belong to the professional classes and who have reached some degree of independence in the business world no longer worry about these things. It is common enough for professional people in many walks of life to take vacations extending as long as two months. They feel they need this and that it is justified. I know of doctors, I know of lawyers, and I even know of some of my colleagues in the ministry who make sure they spend two months each year on vacation.

Here we are talking about people who are not self-employed, people who are often not members of a professional group, and who are allowed, in most cases, two weeks as a minimum. I think it is important that amendments be made to the labour code setting the minimum standard so as to provide for at least three weeks. While it may not be possible to take action this afternoon in this regard, I do hope this question will be given serious consideration by the government.

In confirming my support for this bill I wish, however, to put forward a word of caution. I believe that increasingly we shall be facing a problem of which this bill gives only an inkling—the redefinition of the meaning of work and of leisure. I have heard social scientists make confident predictions that by the end of this century the normal vacation period will be eight weeks. Some of us will relish the thought of reaching that date, if indeed we do. As the affluent society becomes more and more productive it will no longer be necessary for people to continue to work as hard as they have done in previous years.

Indeed it might be harmful to the economy were they to do so. This means longer periods of leisure for all of us, and greater opportunities for vacations.

One might think that everyone would be pleased with such a prospect, but in a number of instances such is not the case. Indeed many people today who have found themselves with increasing leisure have reacted by seeking other employment. The word moonlighting has come into our vocabulary to describe this activity. It seems to me we have schooled ourselves so well to work that we have not yet learned how to use leisure creatively. We have developed people with neuroses about the fact that they are not allowed to work as hard or as long as they once were.

I hope that in the next generation or so serious thought will be given by social scientists, people concerned with labour codes and so on, to the effects on man of having his work load diminished and replaced by longer periods of leisure. Surely our leisure time must not be spent huddled in front of a television set with a can of beer. Yet this is the picture which will increasingly be true of many Canadians if we cannot adduce other possibilities which are more interesting in terms of human development and interaction.

In asking for a minimum standard of three weeks we are asking for opportunity; but we are also endangering the sanity of many who have not yet learned how to handle leisure creatively. Our problem stems from the fact that the notion of work, according to our concepts, is primarily tied to the making of money and not to participating in some creative act. If we can make the transition in our generation from work being related to money to work being related to creative output, something exciting will happen in our society. If not, I am afraid we shall become a very depressing, work-orientated, unhappy society which has little hope before it, even if this period is extended to three weeks.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I are two of the members of this house who have spoken most frequently on measures such as this over the years during which we have faced one another across this chamber. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) for his sincere and forthright contribution, and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) for the new element which he has introduced into the debate.

I suppose I should congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for introducing this bill, or at any rate for reintroducing it; but he would hardly expect me to congratulate him on his address this afternoon since I have probably heard it so many times before that congratulations would really be superfluous.

The hon. member has told us it will be necessary for him to introduce an amendment which would have the effect of changing the date of application referred to in the bill. Since he so regularly introduces bills of this nature, and since a year has already gone by, I presume there would have to be two amendments, and that the second amendment would seek to extend this period to four weeks instead of three, thus carrying on a progression for which the hon. member is noted.

Mr. Knowles: Would the parliamentary secretary like to move that as an amendment? If he would, I would support it.

Mr. Byrne: I had not actually intended moving such an amendment this afternoon. Realizing that the hon. gentleman has lost an opportunity this year; I would not wish to deprive him of the right to introduce an amendment next session when I expect we shall be debating this measure again.

• (5:50 p.m.)

As the hon. member has told us, this is a simple bill and the title explains its purpose. However, he has not explained to us that the implementation of measures such as this is not quite as simple when it comes to the various industries concerned. We have only to recall that the Canada Labour (Standards) Code cannot yet be completely effective because of certain regulations brought in that were inconsistent with practice, and it was just impossible to implement them when the bill was declared operative. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) has said that professionals find it necessary to have a month or two holiday every year and that those of us who work with our hands are entitled to more than two weeks holiday each year. I am familiar with a group of small businessmen in my own riding who have not had a vacation in several years. The pressure of meeting labour costs and providing holidays with pay to their employees have made it impractical for them to take a holiday.

Having regard to the chill in the House of Commons, or at least in the centre block, for the past two days, it is possible that the entire staff of the heating plant is on vacation. I only hope that in the future their time off will be scheduled a little better, so that members sitting in their offices and in this chamber will not catch colds, which require some sick benefit time. This is one of the difficulties that arise from bringing in legislation without too much thought. The same applies to speeches made without too much thought.

Mr. Knowles: Such as the one we are getting now.

Mr. Byrne: I was not referring to any other speech maker. The hon. member always does an excellent job tearing mine apart. If we are to assess legislation of this nature we should review what has been done in the past by the federal government and the provinces. By law, annual vacations with pay in industries subject to federal jurisdiction have been provided since 1958. The first federal statute required employers falling within its scope to grant employees a paid week's vacation after one year of employment, and two weeks after two years of service. Hon. members will recall that act was replaced by Part III of the celebrated Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

The Labour (Standards) Code provides for vacations with pay of at least two weeks after every completed year of employment, and vacation pay is 4 per cent of wages for the year in which an employee establishes his claim to vacation. Under the federal law a year of employment must be continuous with one employer, and may be a 12 month period commencing with the day the employee began to work or any subsequent anniversary of that date. It may be a calendar year or any other year approved by the Minister of Labour.

All the provinces, with the exception of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, have annual vacation laws. We can appreciate why P.E.I. does not have such law because it is predominantly an agricultural province, while in Newfoundland the labour unions have not been as well organized and have not had the time in which to mature that they have had in other provinces. Provisions for annual vacations with pay are contained in the Alberta labour act and in orders under the Ontario hours of work act, and in Quebec under minimum wage orders Nos. 3, 7 and 39. They are also governed by the Quebec collective agreements act.

The Canada Labour (Standards) Code applies to industries within federal jurisdiction, and the only employees excluded are engineers, superintendents and others who exercise management functions, as well as members of the medical, dental, architectural and legal professions. The provincial laws govern employees in employment within the jurisdiction of the provinces, with the exception of certain classes of employees who are otherwise noted.

In all provinces farm workers are excluded. Horticultural workers are excluded in British Columbia, and workers employed in the growing of flowers, fruit and vegetables in Ontario. Market garden workers are excluded in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Employees of municipal and school corporations in Quebec are excluded, and members of family undertakings in Saskatchewan. Salesmen are excluded in Alberta, Ontario and Saskatchewan, but in Quebec their exclusion is limited to those with less than the three months work, and those who work for two or more employers at the same time.

Exemptions are necessary in all provinces, and if this house were to provide blanket legislation it would create a problem for industry, particularly industries operating on a very close margin.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 20, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PROCEDURE

First and second reports of special committee on procedure of the house—Mr. MacEachen.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RECLASSIFICATION OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 1,828—Mr. Isabelle:

1. How many civil servants have had their positions "red circled"?

2. How many civil servants have had their positions "green circled"?

3. Up to what salary level has such reclassification been made?

4. How many persons earning (a) more than $8,000 annually (b) $6,000 to $8,000 (c) under $6,000, have been so reclassified?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission:

1 and 2. The most accurate figures available on February 1, 1967 showed 3,600 civil servants in the administrative support category, and 1,300 in the administrative and foreign service category whose positions were red circled.

There are no statistics on the number of green circled positions, but as of conversion it was estimated that 9,900 positions in the administrative support category and 8,200 in the administrative and foreign service category would be green circled.

3. The top salary level in the administrative support category has a maximum salary of $9,472 per annum and in the administrative and foreign service category $20,802.

4. Information according to this breakdown is not available.

C.B.C. STATIONS NOT RECEIVING LIVE TELEVISION SERVICE

Question No. 2,406—Mr. Howard:

1. How many C.B.C. owned and affiliated television stations are still not receiving live network service and what is the name of each such station and the community within which each is located?

2. What (a) population (b) viewing audience, is served by each such station?

3. Does any assessment exist of the cost of bringing live television to these stations, and what is that assessed cost in each case?

4. Do any priorities exist for bringing live television to these stations and, if so, what is the schedule of such priorities?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows:

1. CFTK-TV, Terrace; CBWFT, Winnipeg; CBWBT, Flin Flon/The Pas; CHGH-TV, Churchill; CFLA-TV, Goose Bay; CJCL-TV, Labrador city; CFKL-TV, Schefferville.

2. Estimated population within the A and B service area: CBWFT (French) 50,000 (French mother tongue only); CBWBT, 26,600; CFLA-TV, 8,400. Figures for the remaining, privately owned stations would be available from the stations concerned.

3. Cost of extending live microwave service varies according to the mileage, geographical area and network supplier involved. While the corporation has estimated approximate costs, these figures are not normally made public because of the competitive factor involved.

4. Arrangements have been completed to extend service by microwave to CBWBT, Flin Flon/The Pas, and are being completed for extension of service of CFTK-TV Terrace, B.C. Estimated costs for the use of microwave for the remaining areas under (1) where feasible, are prohibitive to a point where satellite transmission may provide the only practical method of introducing live television. This too, will depend on satellite and associated costs which cannot yet be estimated. Meanwhile these areas are receiving quite comprehensive service through television recordings at up to one fifth the estimated cost of microwave service.

Questions

*PRINTED LISTS OF HOUSEHOLDERS IN CONSTITUENCIES

Question No. 2,561—Mr. Racine:

1. How many issues of the list of householders are printed every year in each electoral district?

2. How many copies are made available to each member of parliament?

3. What procedure should a member adopt in order to obtain this or these lists?

4. If a member requires additional copies, to whom should he make his request, and what is the unit cost?

5. May a member obtain, free of charge, the list of householders for a federal electoral district other than the one which he represents, and what is the unit rate?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. One. Quantities per issue vary for each electoral district from a minimum of 38 copies to a maximum of 174 copies, or an average of 71 copies per electoral district during 1966.

2. Each member may receive one free copy of the householder directory for any electoral district.

3. Write or telephone the Superintendent, Purchasing and Stores Division, Post Office Department, Confederation Heights, Ottawa 8, Ontario, naming the directory required.

4. Write the Superintendent, Purchasing and Stores Division, Post Office Department, and enclose payment at the rate of $2.00 per copy, plus the provincial sales tax applicable for the province in which the directories are to be delivered.

5. Yes. One copy of each directory may be obtained by a member free of charge. Additional copies of any directory are available at $2.00 per copy, plus the provincial sales tax applicable for the province in which the directories are to be delivered.

ASSISTANCE FOR PRESERVATION OF TOTEM POLES

Question No. 2,577—Mr. Prittie:

1. Has the Skeena totem pole restoration committee of Hazelton, British Columbia, requested assistance of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the restoration and preservation of totem poles in the villages of Kispiox, Kitseguecla, Kitanmax, Kitwancool and Kitwanga?

2. If the answer to part 1 is yes, what was the reply of the department?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

2. The Skeena totem pole restoration society received a grant of $1,000 from the Indian affairs branch on April 15, 1965. A similar grant was made to the society on October 14, 1966. In addition, during April and May, 1965 the branch made it possible for the society, at its request, to obtain the services of a supervising carpenter to work on totem pole restoration.

ASSISTANCE TO FOUND BROS. AVIATION LTD.

Question No. 2,618—Mr. Winkler:

1. Has the Department of Industry entered into an agreement with the aircraft manufacturing company of Found Bros. Aviation Ltd. whereby financial assistance in the form of a grant or otherwise is being given to this company for aircraft development?

2. What is the amount of federal funds involved?

3. What is the nature of the project concerned and what is the government financial participation expected to accomplish?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Yes. The Department of Industry has entered into an agreement with Found Brothers Aviation Limited under which the department is sharing the cost of a development project in which the company is engaged.

2. The total amount committed by the department to assist the project is $80,000.

3. Information on the nature and objectives of the project is proprietary and the department, in accordance with its customary practice in respect of such industrial development projects, has undertaken in its agreement with the company to treat it as confidential.

INDIAN AFFAIRS OFFICE, BROADVIEW, SASK.

Question No. 2,637—Mr. Douglas:

1. Have any plans been made to close the Indian affairs office in Broadview, Saskatchewan?

2. If so, what is the reason for closing this office?

3. If the Broadview office is closed, what office will serve the reservations presently served by the Broadview office?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No.

2. N/A

3. N/A

TARIFF ON MILITARY EQUIPMENT PURCHASED ABROAD

Question No. 2,641—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has there been a change made in the tariff on military equipment purchased abroad by the Canadian government?

2. If so (a) what is the amount of the purchase required for full remission of customs duties (b) is the duty still collected on components purchased by Canadian defence companies?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. After consultation with Canadian defence industry, a change was made as outlined in order in council P.C. 1966-2184 dated November 24, 1966, called the defence supplies remission order, as published in the Canada Gazette issue dated December 14, 1966.

2. (a) $250,000. (b) Yes. However, when bids for defence supplies are being assessed in competition between Canadian companies and foreign companies, an adjustment is made to the Canadian bid to exclude such duty in order that the bids may be assessed on an equal basis.

SASKATCHEWAN MANPOWER STUDY

Question No. 2,642—Mr. Pascoe:

1. Did the federal government participate in a Saskatchewan manpower study by Hillis and Partners, Management Consultants, Limited?

2. If so, how much did the federal government contribute to the cost of the study?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Yes. The study was formally proposed by the province of Saskatchewan in September 1965. It was approved in the same month by the federal government as an ARDA project in which we would participate.

2. The estimated total cost for the study was $57,000, of which the federal government agreed to pay half, $28,500. Federal expenditures to date are $15,846.

CHANGES IN AUTOMOBILE INSPECTION SYSTEMS

Question No. 2,666—Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe):

1. Has the government received representations from the United Automobile Workers relating to the statement by Mr. Larry Sheffe of the U.A.W. on February 2, 1967, regarding a change in the inspection systems of the major auto manufacturing companies and its effect on the number of defective automobiles?

2. If so (a) have these representations been brought to the attention of the Canadian government specifications board, and (b) does the government intend to bring in legislation to protect the Canadian consumer in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. No, however, Mr. Sheffe gave evidence on this subject to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, on February 2, 1967.

2. See answer to No. 1.

DESIGNATION OF YELLOWKNIFE AS N.W.T. CAPITAL

Question No. 2,703—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. As a result of the designation of Yellowknife as the capital of the Northwest Territories (a) what government operations will be transferred from Fort Smith to Yellowknife (b) how many people are involved in this transfer?

2. What developments are planned for Fort Smith to take up the slack created by the exodus to Yellowknife?

3. In what manner will Hay River be affected by either (a) removal of existing government operations or (b) addition of new activities arising from the relocation of the seat of the Northwest Territories government from Ottawa to the territories?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) Those territorial services now administered for the whole of the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories from Fort Smith but not including the purely regional headquarters functions carried out at Forth Smith. (b) No firm figure is yet available but not more than half the employees now at Fort Smith are likely to be affected. A small number will move this year with the balance phased over a two to three year period.

2. (i) The transfer of officials from Fort Smith will be scheduled over a two year period or so. This will permit the orderly growth of facilities at Yellowknife and to lessen the impact of the move on Fort Smith. (ii) Plans for new institutions in Fort Smith or for the relocation of existing institutions to Fort Smith are being made by the federal and territorial governments, e.g., a $100,000 children's receiving home is to be constructed this year. (iii) The development of new and diversified industries is being studied by the people of Fort Smith. The senior governments will stand ready to assist where possible.

3. (a) Not at all, (b) Natural growth by reason of its position as a distribution centre.

Questions

RETURN FROM ABROAD OF CANADIAN GRADUATE STUDENTS

Question No. 2,707—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration been directed to the recommendations contained in the report of Edward F. Sheffield and Mary Margot McGrail entitled "The Retrieval of Canadian Graduate Students from Abroad"?

2. If so (a) has any action been taken to establish the Department of Manpower and Immigration as the central agency for the retrieval of Canadian graduate students from abroad, and (b) what, in detail is the nature of such action?

3. Has any action been taken by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to compile and distribute information concerning Canadians studying abroad as recommended in the said report and, if so, what, in detail is the nature of such action and what distribution is given to such information?

4. Has any action been taken to establish the Department of Manpower and Immigration as the agency through which guidance should be made available to Canadian gradute students abroad as recommended in the said report?

5. If so, what action has been taken to make its role and services known to expatriate students through university placement officers, appointments boards, foreign student advisers and the like?

6. If the answer to any of the foregoing questions is in the negative, what are the reasons for lack of decision or action?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has studied this report in detail.

2. (a) Yes. (b) This year the Department of Manpower and Immigration has worked closely with the association of universities and colleges of Canada, the Civil Service Commission and representatives of Canadian industry, and professional associations, in establishing a program called "Operation Retrieval". Visits were made to 27 American universities and eight universities in the United Kingdom and western Europe, where substantial numbers of Canadians are studying. Each university was visited by a team made up of representatives from the association of universities and colleges of Canada, the Civil Service Commission, and the Manpower and Immigration Department.

The purpose of these visits was to provide Canadians studying at these institutions with information on career opportunities in Canada. During these visits personal information forms were given to all those who wanted to contact Canadian employers. These forms are being returned to the department for distribution to prospective Canadian employers.

[Mr. Laing.]

For the past three years the association of universities and colleges of Canada has sponsored a series of tours to American and British universities, initially to inform Canadian postgraduate students about academic vacancies in Canadian universities, and then gradually about a broader range of job opportunities. The department helped to finance the teams last year; this year it financed the visits, provided a representative for each team, and arranged a one day briefing conference for the team members.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration and the association of universities and colleges of Canada have agreed that in future the department will assume full responsibiilty for planning and administering similar programs for this purpose.

3. Yes. The Department of Manpower and Immigration publishes detailed information on Canadians studying abroad in the form of two directories; namely, the directory of Canadian students studying in the United States, and the directory of Canadian students studying in the United Kingdom. The directories list each student's name, address, degrees earned, degrees expected, expected year of graduation, name of university attended, field of study, and, in the case of graduate students, thesis topic and supervisor.

The directories are available from the department without charge, and are sent at present to a mailing list of some 2,500 representatives of education, industry, professional and scientific organizations, and federal, provincial and municipal government departments and agencies.

4. Yes. Please see the answer to part 5.

5. Each visiting team held a general meeting to which all Canadian graduate students were invited, and followed it with a full day of individual interviews. The teams were equipped to provide professional guidance and occupational information.

In addition to the visiting teams, about 7,000 copies of the Canada careers directory were mailed to Canadians studying in the United States. This directory is a useful guidance tool which provides information on employment opportunities.

By means of the activities described in 2(b) and 3, an increasing number of Canadians studying abroad, university placement officers, and student advisers are becoming aware of the services offered by this department.

6. Not applicable.

FEDERAL BUILDING, ESTERHAZY, SASK.

Question No. 2,708—Mr. Ormiston:

1. How many sites were considered before a decision was made to purchase the property for the proposed federal building in Esterhazy, Saskatchewan?

2. What is the legal description and location of these sites in question and the sale value quoted in each case?

3. What was the deciding factor in making the choice to purchase the property finally selected?

4. Was any representation made by any individual, group, committee, organization or company regarding the location of the proposed federal building?

5. Have any complaints been registered against the choice of location by any individual, group, committee, organization or company?

6. What is the (a) estimated cost of the proposed building (b) anticipated date of commencement of construction (c) date of completion?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Two sites were considered.

2. Site 1: Owner: Shepherd-Adamson Agency (1961) Ltd., Yorkton, Sask. Legal description: Lot 23, Block 6, Plan 66R41471, SE 1/4, Sec. 28, Twp. 19, Rge. 1, W2M, Esterhazy, Sask. Southeast corner of Main street and Third avenue, Esterhazy. Price $33,506.50. Site 2: Owner: Mike Zich, Esterhazy, Sask. Legal description: Lots twenty five (25) to thirty one (31), inclusive in Block two (2) according to a plan of record in the land titles office for the Regina land registration district as No. 59463. Southwest corner of Maple street and Second avenue, Esterhazy. Asking price: $50,000.

3. The choice to purchase the property finally selected was based on its price, location for service to the public and the general support of a majority of the local residents.

4. Representations were made in favour of the proposed location by the Esterhazy town council, community planning branch, department of municipal affairs, province of Saskatchewan and the International Minerals and Chemical Corporation (Canada) Ltd.

5. Representations have been received against the proposed location from the Esterhazy Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Mike Zich, Esterhazy, Sask., and Van Ginkel Associates, Knowlton, Que.

6. (a) It is not customary to reveal the estimated cost before tenders are called. (b) Anticipated date of commencement of construction: July, 1967. (c) Date of completion, March, 1968.

LOCATION OF NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 2,730—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. In what location or locations has it been planned heretofore to erect buildings for the National Museum?

2. Has there been any change of plan in relation to such location or locations?

3. If so, what change?

4. What is the present time schedule for the erection of each of such buildings?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. The plan was to erect the natural history museum on the site formerly occupied by the Woods-Canadian building, the Roxborough apartments, and adjacent lands extending east to the Driveway. There was a proposal to make use of a second site on Cartier Square for other related buildings, but no action on this was taken.

2. This matter is under review as to the best utilization of the proposed building on the first site and of the space at the second site.

3. See part 2, above.

4. No time schedule has been established.

*LABOUR RESEARCH CENTRES

Question No. 2,740—Mr. Irvine:

Is it the intention of the government to establish labour research centres in major metropolitan industrial cities as suggested by the representations made by local 27, U.A.W., London, Ontario, on March 7, 1967, and (a) if so, when may such action be expected (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, consideration is being given by the Department of Labour to placing representatives of the economics and research branch of the department in at least some of the offices of the Department of Labour now established in larger centres across Canada. However, no final decision has been made.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—SUGGESTED RENAMING AS VANIER HIGHWAY

Question No. 2,742—Mr. Olson:

Is any consideration being given to naming the trans-Canada highway "The Vanier Highway"?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No.

PROHIBITION AGAINST WOMEN WORKING IN MINES

Question No. 2,743—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. Has Canada ratified the I.L.O. convention prohibiting women from working in mines?

Questions

2. If so, has the federal government passed legislation to give effect to this convention?

3. To the knowledge of the government have any of the provincial governments passed such legislation and, if so, which ones?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. Canada in September 1966 ratified I.L.O. convention No. 45 concerning employment of women on underground work in mines of all kinds.

2. No.

3. All provinces had passed legislation prohibiting work of women in manual occupations underground in mines before the convention was ratified.

BUILDING FOR EXHIBITION COMMISSION AND CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Question No. 2,748—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. In what location in the city of Ottawa is it proposed to erect a building for the exhibition commission, Department of Trade and Commerce, and chief electoral officer?

2. When is it anticipated that this building will be (a) commenced (b) completed?

3. What is the estimated total cost of the building?

4. How many square feet of space will be provided in the building?

Hon. J. G. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. The proposed new building for the exhibition commission and Chief Electoral Officer will be located on the south side of Coventry road near the junction with Belfast road.

2. It is anticipated that (a) construction will begin during April, 1967, and, (b) that the buildings will be completed around April, 1968.

3. The lowest tender received is in the amount of $2,548,000.

4. 240,000 sq. ft.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO LAFONTAINE TUNNEL, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,758—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Did the government of Canada contribute toward the construction of the recently opened Louis-Hyppolite Lafontaine tunnel in Montreal?

2. If so, what was its contribution?

3. Who represented the federal government at its opening and what speeches did they make?

[Translation]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. Estimated total federal contribution $53,774,607.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

HOUSING

ALLEGED CRISIS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the serious housing crisis in Canada today, as evidenced by the disastrous drop in housing starts, high mortgage rates and the crippling rise in the prices and the rents of homes.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Danforth address the Chair on the question of urgency of debate.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be very happy to take the opportunity to do so. As Your Honour knows, this is a type of motion which is rarely brought in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Only when there is a matter which is felt to be of great and pressing urgency requiring debate is such motion brought. One of the requirements for debate is, as in this instance, that the subject matter of the matter to be debated be within the ambit of government ministerial responsibility. Of this there is no doubt. The government is involved, perhaps inadequately, but it is involved in the matter of housing.

Another requirement is to satisfy Your Honour that no further opportunity to debate this matter, which is of great importance, will be afforded us. We all recall that the minister's estimates have been passed; there will be no further opportunity for us to raise a matter of such pressing national importance.

Also we are required to satisfy Your Honour on the whole matter of urgency of debate. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker—and I make this submission to Your Honour—that in the five years I have been in this chamber there has never been an occasion, in my recollection, when a matter so urgently required the adjournment of the business of the house for discussion. At the present moment we are confronted with a housing crisis of the first magnitude. Of that there cannot be the slightest doubt in the minds of hon. members here today. In this country our housing policy is non-existent.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Our record in the field of housing is a fiasco. Today, as we talk here, our young people cannot afford to buy the homes being built, and our old people are being overcharged for them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member is well launched in his argument. Would the hon. member please resume his seat? I should remind the hon. member that he has to address himself to a very limited question, whether there should be debate at this time and whether the business of the house should be adjourned for the purpose of debating the question.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties in trying to establish urgency is to demonstrate that a real crisis faces this country. I remember, for example, that a year or two ago Your Honour allowed a debate in this house on a matter of drought affecting farmers in the Ottawa valley. That was a proper debate. Today in Canada we have a drought in housing. This situation is far more critical than the situation Your Honour allowed to be debated previously.

It is impossible for us to adequately express in words the scandalous situation that has developed in the housing industry in Canada.

We can mention the gouging and the difficulties our people are suffering, but how else can we raise this subject and demonstrate the urgency of debate? We can only do it by trying to convince Your Honour that Canada faces a crisis.

In the middle of this hurricane of discontent sits the minister, calm, indifferent, serene, unconcerned and hiding behind the British North America Act. His sole contribution to this crisis has been to suggest the release of more mortgage money and all that will do, Mr. Speaker, is to build more homes that our people cannot afford to buy anyway. No later than last Saturday one of the leading Toronto morning newspapers did a survey of housing in Canada—

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Grafftey: Name the other one.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): —pointing out that every province in this country, because of the delay and indifference of the federal government, has now developed some sort of housing policy of its own which varies from total inadequacy to mediocrity. Yet still, Mr. Speaker, we are hidebound in this house by rules that seem to say we cannot raise issues of this kind even though all members of the house know that every Canadian, almost from coast to coast, is feeling the pinch of housing, our young people and our old people. In such a situation we still have to try to convince Your Honour.

I could go on, but it would be transgressing the rules, to drag in the dreary statistics of failure in the whole housing field. But, Mr. Speaker, I want you to remember when you consider this motion that these statistics, which I would be willing to put on to the record and will do so if I get an opportunity, are people; and that every week end and every day—

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): —we members are receiving pitiful calls from people desperately crying out for action—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Grafftey: Let the right wing handle this.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Scott (Danforth).]

Mr. Grafftey: They have already dominated you. This is a right wing problem. Dinosaurs!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have had a demonstration of a cynical disregard for the rules of the house in the performance by the hon. member who has just taken his seat.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I rise on a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member—

Mr. Scott (Danforth): On a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should have a bit of patience. There is a point of order raised, and I suggest that we should hear the minister out on the point of order. If the hon. member so wishes I shall recognize him afterward.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, you have always told us a point of privilege must be raised as soon as it occurs and that is why I rise at this time, notwithstanding your suggestion, to ask you to reprimand the Minister of National Health and Welfare for his disgraceful comment that what we are doing is having an exercise in cynical misuse of the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I suggest to Your Honour—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege at all in what the hon. member is now saying. The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I had begun by saying we just had a demonstration by the hon. member of a cynical disregard for the rules of the house. On a procedural motion which ought to be directed exclusively to a point of order we have heard the hon. member import into his speech a whole series of allegations, statistics and criticisms of the government. We know that it is improper at this time. If the hon. member is to be allowed his place on the floor at this time he ought to argue directly on the point of order, namely whether the normal business of the house ought to be set aside in order to debate the problem of housing. That is the motion before us—

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: —not a series of allegations, claims and charges, which have been cynically made by the hon. member in full knowledge that he was violating the rules of the house because he said himself—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has made his point and I recognize the validity of the point. I am sure the hon. member for Danforth knows what the rule is and the limitation placed on debate at this time, and I would ask him to bear this in mind in making his submission to the Chair.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, it is also my understanding that the rules of the house provide that members may not impute motives to other members. In view of what the minister has said I would have hoped Your Honour would have drawn that to his attention, just as you have drawn the rules to my attention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member for Danforth to kindly limit his comments. I must say that since he started to discuss this motion this afternoon he has made it very difficult for the Chair. I would ask him to co-operate with the Chair and keep in mind what the rules are—rules which apply to him as they do to the rest of the house—and limit his remarks to whether there should be an adjournment of proceedings to discuss the matter to which he has referred.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Surely the rules apply to both sides of the house, and I am entitled to your protection. The minister has made an outright charge that what I am doing amounts to a cynical misuse of the rules. I have been in this chamber for five years—

Some hon. Members: Too long.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Some say it is too long. That may be, but in all that time I do not believe I have been charged with an offence of that kind by any minister. I ask Your Honour to give me the protection of the Chair against people like that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member needs this protection—and I have the impression that he can look after himself rather well—I can assure him he has that protection. I invite him now to continue. I really did not think motives were imputed by the minister. He rose on a point of order and indicated that in his view the hon. member was going beyond what the rules allow him to do. I will not rule on that. I will just ask the hon. member to make it possible for the house to go on with its business, and to continue his speech.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I will do so. Perhaps I have had sufficient opportunity to make the point I was trying to make. In conclusion I merely want to remind the house and Your Honour that the subject I am attempting to raise today involves one of the most urgent, critical and important social problems which face Canada today. It is one which has not been dealt with for as far back as I can remember. It is one which has been neglected, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare gave a good example today by his indifference.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): When making your ruling I hope Your Honour will take into consideration the critical nature of the difficulties our people face, and that you will permit us to adjourn the business of this house in order to debate the matter until such time as we are able to force this indifferent and recalcitrant government into action.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to say a few words in support of the motion to adjourn the regular business of this house in order to discuss what I consider to be the most important immediate problem facing Canadians today. Day after day we have asked the Minister of Labour and the government what they are proposing to do to help resolve this serious problem. Either the minister and the government are uninformed or they are disinterested.

To illustrate the urgency of this matter let me say that today it is almost impossible for Canadians earning an average income to acquire a house under the existing provisions of the National Housing Act. Furthermore, the difficulty has been compounded by the actions of the government itself, first by increasing the interest rate by 1 per cent in one year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chatterton: —and then by increasing the cost of production, thus placing the price of a home beyond the reach of the average Canadian. Elderly citizens are unable to pay the high rents being charged because there is a shortage of housing. I can only add my support for this motion and urge Your Honour to allow us to discuss this subject today, so that at least there might be some hope of convincing the government that action is required.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): In addressing Your Honour on this matter we must, as I understand the rules, establish urgency first of all. Next we must establish that we are discussing a national problem over which the government has jurisdiction. As to urgency, we understand the Easter recess is in prospect, and soon after that spring housing starts are due to begin.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Under the rules I would not be permitted at the present time to go into statistics. The Minister of Labour, however, when he became aware a number of weeks ago of the national housing crisis, started a series of cross country symposiums and study groups. In answer to questions we have put to him over the past number of weeks the minister has informed us that these now have to come to an end. Now that these symposiums and study groups have come to an end members of the house and people across this land are demanding immediate action. We all know that even with the modern construction techniques that are available the greatest number of housing starts normally take place in the early spring months. Now, with the symposiums and study groups having come to an end, with the Easter recess facing us, and with the time approaching when we hope there will be early spring housing starts, I think we have reached the time when we should have a debate now, not when it is too late. This is a problem which should be debatable under the constitution as it exists today.

One reason I am calling for constitutional reform is that so many of the people's problems are being pushed back and forth between federal and provincial jurisdiction. The Minister of Labour says that by and large this is a provincial problem. I differ with him. I believe the disgrace of our national crisis right now vis-à-vis housing is a national problem which should be the concern of the federal government. Because of the fact that we will come to grips with the housing crisis only if we have a national policy now and not tomorrow, because we are faced with an Easter recess and the necessity for housing starts in the early spring months, and because the study groups and symposiums are finished, I believe we should debate this matter now in the highest forum of this land, the House of Commons, so the thousands of Canadians who are looking for a decent roof over their heads right away will be given some hope by this government and this House of Commons.

[Mr. Chatterton.]

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the adjournment motion moved by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) reads in part as follows:

[English]

—for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the serious housing crisis in Canada today, as evidenced by the disastrous drop in housing starts—

[Translation]

I feel, Mr. Speaker that the country is not going through a housing crisis as much as a financial crisis which will not allow Canadians to buy homes.

The problem is not to build houses but to make it possible for Canadians to buy the houses already built. They should be given 75 to 90 years to pay a reasonable monthly instalment.

Today, the Conservatives are strongly in favour of adjourning the proceedings of the house to discuss that important matter: the housing crisis. If they had assumed their responsibilities while in office, it is likely that they would not have to support such a motion today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I am taking the liberty of reminding him, as I did in the case of other members who took part in this debate, that we must restrict ourselves as much as possible to a single consideration, namely whether such a debate is urgent at this time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for reminding me it is essential that I should deal exclusively with the adjournment motion.

I feel that even though it is urgent to discuss housing projects in Canada, our prime and most urgent concern should be to deal with the financial ways of enabling Canadians to order a house and this would then provide the required impetus. I do not feel this adjournment motion would bring anything to the Canadian people at the present time, as long as we retain a prohibitive financial system under which they are prevented from owning their own home.

[English]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, in respect of this question of urgency which has been raised, I think we must accept the fact that there has been a decline in housing starts in Canada, that there has been a serious decline in plans for high rise construction, that we have tight money at high interest rates, and that all the minister opposite has done is raise the interest rate and suggest that this will solve the problem. Over the week end in Saskatoon I noticed that some persons who have been employed in the largest industries which supply the housing trades have been laid off over the last few months because of the decline in housing starts. All these things indicate it is time this government came to grips with this problem and gave this House of Commons and the Canadian people some leadership in so far as a housing policy is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the motion of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) and state the reasons why I feel this debate is urgent. It is because when we go to meet our constituents in our home ridings, the first question raised by the Canadian people and generally by the people of Quebec, is the one they consider the most urgent to settle, that is the problem of home building.

Settlement of this question is urgent first of all for the construction workers who are laid off precisely because there is no work available for them and, as a result, unemployment is rising noticeably. For them, it is an urgent problem to settle.

For the people who need a home and who cannot do without nor buy one because prices are too high, there is also urgency of debate so that we can suggest to the government what should be done to reduce the prices and how to adapt a new system which will enable the people to buy homes.

There is also urgency, Mr. Speaker, because construction is probably a field which, when in a bad way, has the worse effects on other sectors of the economy. That is the case today.

Everyone in Canada feels there is an urgent problem to settle in the field of construction. If the public agrees that the problem is urgent, we should at least recognize that it is urgent to debate the matter. That may not do much, but at least it will prove to the people that we agree it is an urgent problem, and that is why we are now considering it. Moreover, this would give the government an opportunity to say whether it intends to take action or continue as before, that is do nothing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another point that I would like to call to your attention, and it might prove the urgency of the debate. At present, we have no other opportunity to discuss it, and even the leader of the government expressed his intention to adjourn the session tomorrow evening, that is, Tuesday. Well, I for one am ready to put off the adjournment until Wednesday, and to deal with today's business tomorrow and Wednesday, in order to discuss today the housing problem, which is more urgent than any other business right now.

I submit that this is an urgent problem, since it is of vital importance to all the citizens whom we represent here.

You judge the urgency of a debate by the urgency of the problem to be settled. Therefore, if our constituents view this as a pressing problem, it must necessarily be urgent for us to deal with it and to say here what people think in our ridings.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank hon. members for their very interesting comments in connection with the motion raised by the hon. member for Danforth. Perhaps I should remind hon. members again of the general ruling in respect of the procedure to be followed, to the effect that members should limit their remarks in support of or opposition to a motion under standing order 26 to the question of the urgency of debate rather than the substance of the subject matter. I fully realize it is not easy to talk about the urgency of debate without referring also to the urgency of the matter. I try to keep this in mind in allowing hon. members to refer to a certain extent to the subject matter itself.

Having said that, I must now decide on the basis of precedent and the standing orders whether there is reason at the moment to allow the announced business of the house to be set aside for the purpose of discussing the matter raised by the hon. member for Danforth. As has been pointed out during the course of the procedural debate we have had, the Chair must be satisfied that there is a matter of sudden urgency. As I interpret the remarks of the hon. member for Danforth and others, this is not a matter which has arisen today or within the last few days. It is perhaps an important matter of continuing urgency, and because that is so I doubt very much whether it is possible to accept the motion.

The hon. member brought to the attention of the Chair one of the important considerations; that is, will there be an early opportunity to debate the matter. It is my understanding that at a very early date there will be an interim supply motion before the house. During the debate on that motion, I think is the time problems such as the one referred to by the hon. member can be discussed.

What the Chair has to take into account is the relative urgency of the matter raised under standing order 26 and the announced business for a particular day. The business for today is the consideration of amendments to the Bank Act. That is an important and urgent matter, and if my understanding is correct it is important that a decision in this regard be made before the end of the month. In considering the importance of one as compared with the importance of the other, and in light of other considerations to which I have referred, I do not believe it is possible for the Chair to put the motion proposed by the hon. member.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF USE OF DRUG LSD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General. In view of the increasing number of tragedies in the last few weeks, the last of which occurred in Toronto within the last 48 hours, in connection with the use of LSD, will the minister place before this house some method of restricting the use of this drug by putting it on the list of prohibited drugs under the provisions of the Narcotic Control Act? I should hope such a step would meet with general support, and that it can be taken before this house adjourns so there will be at least some slow-up in the number of tragedies which have occurred at an accelerated rate in recent weeks.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, while this question is also related to the Department of National Health and Welfare perhaps I might be permitted to say that the question of control over LSD was recently brought before a cabinet committee by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The subject was discussed at considerable length. Possible amendments to the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act are under active consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the attention that has been given to this matter, which is grievously serious. Is it possible to put LSD on the list of prohibited drugs under the Narcotic Control Act in order that some control may be exercised in respect of its use? It seems necessary to place this substance under some kind of ban, as are other substances which are deleterious to individuals.

Mr. Pennell: I can only say that the very point raised by the right hon. gentleman was the subject of the discussion in the cabinet committee to which I referred. I am not in a position to give a precise answer as to when any possible amendment could be brought before the house.

TELEVISION

PROGRAM ON C.T.V. RESPECTING USE OF CERTAIN DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago I took notice of a question adressed to me by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition regarding a television program which had to do with marijuana and LSD. I now wish to advise that I caused a transcript of the program to be sent to the Department of Justice. The R.C.M.P. also have a tape of the program. The Department of Justice gave an opinion that the only possibility of action might be against those persons on the program who admitted having been in possession of drugs. I am informed that one of the persons who appeared on the program is facing a charge of violating provisions of the Narcotic Control Act. The R.C.M.P. are continuing to investigate an incident referred to on the program.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—THREAT TO WITHHOLD SUPPLIES FROM MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has received a request in recent days from a farm or dairy organization, advising him that if the present milk price continues they may take action to withhold milk supplies from the market. Will the minister indicate what course of action he is taking to deal with the situation?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I just received a copy of a wire forwarded to the Prime Minister's office in this regard. In answer to the second half of the hon. member's question let me say that we will soon announce our dairy policy for the ensuing year. I have every hope that it will be sufficiently responsible and attractive to the dairying community that such action will not be necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The minister says he will announce his dairy policy soon. Can we expect that this announcement will be made this week, before the Easter recess, for example?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure when the house will adjourn, but I trust that the dairy policy will be announced before that time.

[English]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the minister has now answered the question posed by the hon. member for Springfield, which he refused to answer last week, can he indicate whether there will be an increase to the producer in the price of manufacturing milk?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the policy will be announced in due course in the normal manner, and any increase will be made known at that time.

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the minister will bring forward some beneficial legislation at the first opportunity in respect of farm machine prices. The minister has a habit of making political speeches outside the house in respect of other levels of responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF FRENCH PROFESSOR TO LECTURE ON KARL MARX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I shall put my question to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin).

In its Saturday edition, Le Droit reported that a series of lectures on Karl Marx will be given at the Ottawa University, starting tonight, by a noted communist, Henri Lefebvre, the most complete marxist thinker of French expression. Is the government aware that seven lectures on communism will be given at the University of Ottawa, starting tonight, and has it approved or is it approving such lectures?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that this question relates to a subject pertaining to the administrative responsibility of the government.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Was the minister aware that Professor Henri Lefebvre from the University of Paris, was admitted into Canada in order to give lectures at the Ottawa University on the doctrine of Karl Marx?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know that the doctrine of Karl Marx is being taught in several universities. I was a university student myself and I attended lectures on Karl Marx, Engels and Hegel, and I think such a procedure is normal in universities nowadays. I do not know—I was not informed—when Mr. Lefebvre crossed the border.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is it for that reason the minister seems to be inclined to communism?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

SPEECH BY LABOUR MINISTER RESPECTING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS LAWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Labour and ask him to tell the house whether his recently reported remarks to the effect that there was something fundamentally wrong with the present industrial relations laws and mechanisms indicate the early introduction of legislation to provide labour courts or compulsory arbitration machinery to deal with strikes in essential services.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The remarks of the Minister of Labour were in line with the remarks previously expressed by him and, what is perhaps more important, with the remarks made by the Prime Minister that the time was overdue for such a study. That is why a task force was set up some months ago.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of his statement that our labour laws are no longer in tune with reality and that something is fundamentally wrong with our industrial relations laws, will he introduce amendments to the Canada Labour Code to correct the situation which the minister himself said has become serious in the past few years?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the question asked by the hon. member for Northumberland is a repetition of the one asked by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke.

[Later:]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, although I do not wish to repeat the question put by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke I would like to question the Minister of Labour on the speech he made in Halifax in which he spoke about our outmoded management-labour laws. In view of the urgency of this question would he now order the task force which he set up, to report before the end of 1967 rather than some time in 1968, in order that we can have action sooner rather than later?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member suggests there should be a report before the end of 1967. This places his question within the category of those that can be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, because of the urgency of the question I would ask to be allowed to rephrase my question and ask the minister whether he is considering the setting up, apart from the task force, of study groups and symposiums to look into this matter.

Mr. Nicholson: For the hon. member's benefit, and because of his sarcasm, I would remind him that the task force was not set up by the Minister of Labour. It was set up by the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister has already advised the house that he hoped an interim report would be available well before the end of the year.

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. Grafftey: With the problem as urgent as it is, when can we expect action?

FISHERIES

REQUEST FROM HUMANE SOCIETY FOR ABOLITION OF SEAL HUNT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the hope that the Minister of Fisheries is in a better humour today than he was the other day I should like to ask him now whether he has received a request from the national Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for the banning of the cruel and harmful killing of baby seals, and whether that society's representation has softened his resistance to action in this regard.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker; Friday evening I received a telegram from Mr. A. L. MacLaurin, president of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. I was not surprised to receive this telegram, because the day before the seal hunt started he sent a circular letter to Canadian newspapers saying that he would ask for the complete abolishment of this operation.

The following was my reply to Mr. MacLaurin's telegram:

> In reply to your telegram of March 17 I shall examine the written report of your observers St. Onge and Johansson in the light of information received from my officers and from the group of representatives of Canadian and international societies to whom we gave transportation. In spite of conflicting reports including some from irresponsible persons it is clear that conditions in the seal fishery in 1967 were improved by revised regulations and intensive enforcement and are comparable or perhaps better than in many activities involving the killing of animals. In view of the importance of the seal fishery to many residents of Atlantic provinces with relatively poor income opportunities I cannot consider abolition of the fishery at this time but assure you that we shall continue our efforts to improve conditions still further.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the small income derived from this operation—I believe each sealer makes approximately $300—would it not be cheaper for the government to pay these people rather than continue to give Canada the kind of black eye which the minister does nothing to correct?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is more in the form of an argument than a question.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege. I believe I have a right to do so because the right hon. gentleman has referred to the bad image this operation is creating for Canada. I should like to repeat what I have said before, namely that the bad image is created by irresponsible people who request the complete abolition of this operation without obtaining proper information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister include among those irresponsible people the president of the S.P.C.A. and the thousands of Canadians in every walk of life who are demanding action today?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a debate. We had a debate on this point last week, and the present exchange between the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Fisheries is a reiteration of the same points. I do not think this point can be raised as a question of privilege.

[Later:]

Mr. Andrew Chatwood (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In giving appropriate consideration to the charges that have been made with regard to the seal fishery by some people, many of whom are poorly informed, will the minister take all possible measures to ensure that sealers are allowed to use the appropriate weapons for taking seals and thus ensure an increase in the seal fishery which is of vital importance to the livelihood of so many Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question which relates very closely to others asked earlier today. Although the question is quite in order, as asked it does not have particular urgency and the hon. member may want to discuss it during the adjournment debate.

Mr. Chatwood: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS—DISCONTINUATION OF CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF TWO MODELS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether he has acceded to the request of Mr. George Burt, regional director of the U.A.W., for a meeting to discuss the announcement by General Motors of the discontinuance of the production of two additional models that were manufactured in Oshawa and will now be manufactured in the United States. Has such a meeting been held, and if not when is it to be held?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I advised Mr. Burt earlier this week that I am attempting to find a time at which the three ministers with whom Mr. Burt wants to meet can be together, and when I can arrange this time I will notify Mr. Burt.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON ISLAND—CRASH TRAINING PROGRAM FOR UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question refers to a matter which I raised on March 2 in a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. At that time the Prime Minister said he would be glad to discuss the matter with the minister. I brought the matter to his attention again on March 10, reiterating that a massive crash training program should be established in Cape Breton to assist the unemployed steel workers and other unemployed. At that time the minister said "I think I can answer that question on Monday". Is he now in a position to reply?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was not here on Monday, and I believe the hon. gentleman was not in the house on the following days. This is why I did not answer his question, and I hope he will forgive me.

The only answer I can give the hon. member is the one I gave on March 1 with relation to training in Cape Breton. I must repeat that my department has a waiting list of people for whose training we are willing to pay when the province whose responsibility it is to provide facilities for them can do so. The province is engaged in expanding the training facilities available. In the meantime we are doing all we can.

However, with reference to another kind of assistance, I have designated Sydney and Sydney Mines under the manpower and mobility regulations to enable workers who wish to move to receive grants immediately.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I think the minister is quite right; I was away on a speaking engagement, and I thank him for his co-operation. May I add that the reason for the large influx of unemployed on the labour market is the lack of policies on the part of this government. All it has to offer is a one way ticket out of the area in which the workers live.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL PARKS

ALBERTA—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF PART OF WOOD BUFFALO PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the increasing interest in the development of our national parks, and as a lifelong conservative, I wish to ask the minister a question. May I say that I am a conservative from a socialist point of view with respect to natural resources. Can the minister inform the house whether there have been any discussions between the minister and Premier Manning of Alberta with respect to the possible transfer of an area of Wood Buffalo park to the provincial government in return for an appropriate area of provincial land to be used as a second national park?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED CONCERN OVER CANADA'S ABILITY TO FULFIL COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Would he advise the house whether the government has received any communications or representations from allied governments expressing concern that Canada will not be able to fulfil her alliance commitments in view of the unification program for our armed forces as described by the Minister of National Defence?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): No, sir.

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Acting Prime Minister aware that representations have been made to Canada's former chief of the general staff, General Simonds, from allied military colleagues to the effect that they believe Canadians are nuts to continue with the unification program?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question contains allegations that are not proper on orders of the day.

REPORTED WEARING OF NEW UNIFORM ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of National Defence if he would clear up the mystery surrounding the two people belonging to the armed forces who on Friday paraded in a green uniform on parliament hill and then were taken into custody by the military police. Were these two individuals gremlins, or were they actually giving a first view of the jolly green jumper which the unified force is to wear?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why we should not find out, even with help from the Minister of National Revenue who cannot look after himself. Can the Minister of National Defence answer whether this is indeed the kind of uniform that Canadians may expect for the three armed services?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the particular question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is one of immediate national emergency. I doubt it very much.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We want to know.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has not accepted the question, so there cannot be a supplementary. The hon. member may wish to ask another question.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence under what authorization this uniform was worn.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, all uniforms are worn under the authority of the minister pursuant to the National Defence Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then that is the uniform? That is what we want to know.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): In the case of something new, would it not be necessary for a new order to issued? Was a new order authorized by the minister?

Mr. Hellyer: That is a hypothetical question.

EXPO '67

APPLICANTS FOR ACCOMMODATION QUERIED AS TO RACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware of the advice being given by Logexpo to applicants for accommodation in Montreal during Expo '67 to the effect they should indicate their race? If so, will the minister use his good offices to see that this un-Canadian practice is brought to a halt?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will look into it.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

APPOINTMENT OF UNILINGUAL LIAISON OFFICER WITH EXPO '67

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the hon. Solicitor General of Canada. I should like to ask him whether he has received a copy of a resolution passed by the general council of Expo '67 asking the recall of Inspector Riddell and the appointment of a bilingual inspector to replace him?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much that the question is of national urgency. Therefore, I ask the hon. member to kindly put it on the order paper.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall put it at ten o'clock. But I felt it was important enough to be put at this time. Ministers are constantly being asked in this house whether they have received this or that resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A while ago the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) mentioned that he had received a copy of a telegram from the president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and you authorized him to read his reply thereto. Today, I ask whether the minister has received a resolution from the general council of Expo, asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that, according to standing orders, if he feels that he is being treated unfairly and that the question is really urgent, he may bring the matter up for discussion on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Grégoire: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, because I feel that there is an injustice and that there is every reason to study the problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that the Chair can say there is injustice but that he cannot say so.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR INDICATION OF EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the difficulties that members have in securing travel reservations, could the Acting Prime Minister indicate when the government intends to move to adjourn the house for the Easter recess?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I express the views of all members when I say we would all like to know when it would be possible for such a motion to be made. I express the hope that we will be able to co-operate and finish the work that the government feels should be dealt with within a very short time. Perhaps later today we could indicate just what day this week, if not tomorrow, such a motion could be made.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister tell us when?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend and I have generally learned to co-operate. I am sure that with the co-operation he will give, I will be in a position soon to give a definite answer.

Mr. Starr: How much are you asking for?

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in commenting on the GATT negotiations affecting cereals indicated, as reported on page 14032 of Hansard, that progress was being made. However, the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool has recently returned from Geneva and has indicated that not much progress had been made in the negotiations up to March 10. Can the minister elaborate on his apparent optimism which does not seem to be shared by Mr. Gibbings?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a statement and I do not think this is the kind of question that can be asked now.

Mr. Korchinski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—SUPPORT FOR PEACE PROPOSALS BY U THANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the reported statement by the Secretary General of the United Nations that he is now proposing that his three conditions for beginning negotiations for peace in Viet Nam should be proceeded with simultaneously rather than consecutively, namely that an end of the bombing of North Viet Nam, de-escalation by North Viet Nam and talks looking toward peace should all be started at the same time, would the minister inform the house whether the government has informed both the Secretary General of the United Nations and the governments of the United States and Viet Nam of its support for U Thant's proposals?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary General made it quite clear he was not going to give details of the plan he had in mind. The government is aware of that plan and had an opportunity of discussing it with a representative of the Secretary General in Ottawa. Other governments are familiar with the plan and the Canadian government fully accepts it. It is not, however, for the Canadian government to decide on the matter; it is for the parties to the conflict. I sincerely hope that the proposals, the details of which the Secretary General feels should not be disclosed at this stage, will be accepted and will facilitate the negotiations that we all desire.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. I appreciate that it is not up to Canada to start these things, but I should like to ask the minister whether Canada has expressed its approval to the governments concerned of the Secretary General's plans, whatever they may be, which he says he accepts.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend outlined some details, and if I did not comment on them this is not to say that these proposed details do represent the proposition that the Secretary General has put forward. The government has made known its views to the governments concerned.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF REPORT RESPECTING YOUTH SEMINAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the recent speech by the Prime Minister urging a more positive participation in politics by Canadian youth, would the minister now call together the members of the ad hoc committee that was set up to assist in the preparation of such a program to be launched in our centennial year so we might consider the report submitted to her by the Canadian political youth council?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to ask my parliamentary secretary to do so.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL SAFETY INSPECTORS IN AUTOMOBILE PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to ask the Minister of Industry. Having in mind the continuing number of call-backs of faulty motor vehicles by Canadian plants—I understand that 105 Buicks have just been recalled—is any consideration being given to establishing a government inspection service in automobile plants in line with measures of public safety?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, that question is now being studied by the house committee on justice and legal affairs, and I do not think it would be appropriate for me to comment upon it.

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

NON-PAYMENT BY HEAD OF QUEBEC SEPARATIST MOVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

Following the statements made by Mr. Pierre Bourgault, to the effect that he has not paid his federal income tax for three years, and since the minister has been made aware of those facts, can he tell the house if some measures have been taken so that Mr. Bourgault will now pay his income tax like all the other Canadian citizens?

Mr. Speaker: That question is a repetition of a question which was asked last week.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to insist nor overtax your forbearance, but I believe that when the question was asked, the minister said that he would take it as notice. Is he in a position to give us an answer today?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the minister answered the question which was asked at that time.

[English]

HOUSING

NEGOTIATIONS WITH ALCAN RESPECTING NEW PROCESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have any negotiations been carried on with the ALCAN company with respect to a revolutionary process which would alleviate the housing shortage?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, not so far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned. If there have been negotiations carried on by other departments I will find out and inform the hon. member.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED DELAY IN MOVING PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND POTATO CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which relates to the loss of many thousands of dollars in potato shipments from Prince Edward Island. Has the minister been able to ascertain in the past few days what difficulties have confronted the C.N.R. in providing adequate double reefer cars to deal with this serious situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether this is the type of question that would better be discussed on the adjournment debate.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): With respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of grave urgency as almost half the present potato crop on the island is awaiting shipment. Unless we receive an immediate reply we will be in a very serious situation.

Mr. Speaker: Very well; not being a specialist in potatoes I am easily convinced.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I am forced to agree with the hon. member that the question does appear to be more urgent than many which have been asked today. There has been some difficulty in the port of Saint John, I understand, with the handling of cars and there was a back-up there which I believe has now been corrected. There was also, I regret to say, some shortage of motive power and the C.N.R. has said that it will do its utmost to correct that shortage as quickly as possible. All of this adds up to the fact that there is a lot more traffic than usual at this time of year, and I think for that we are all thankful.

AGRICULTURE

MANITOBA—REPORTED EDUCATIONAL CONDITION IN ARDA AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Has the federal government, in the projected ARDA agreement with the province of Manitoba, made it an essential condition of the agreement that there would be a dramatic improvement and change in the educational structure of the affected area?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, for that particular region there was no such requirement at any time.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. Is the minister aware that the premier of the province of Manitoba has blamed on the federal government the lack of a referendum in that particular area during the recent election campaign?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is not in order.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—CONSIDERATION AT DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question relates to the announcement of a conference to be held shortly between the federal government and the provincial governments with respect to medicare. May I ask the minister whether at this conference it will be possible for the provincial ministers of health to discuss the possibility of bringing medicare into effect at a date earlier than July 1, 1968?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there will be nothing to prevent the ministers from raising any subject relevant to the statute that we will be discussing.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed, from Friday, March 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on Friday, March 17, clause 72 of the bill was under consideration. The following clauses had been allowed to stand: 1, 29, 33, and 52 to 57 inclusive.

On clause 72—Cash reserve.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wondêr whether the minister is ready to deal with clause 29, because I believe he has a proposal to make with regard to that clause. The minister will remember that I had raised a point on clause 29 (2) (b), and I think he may be able to propose something which is entirely acceptable.

Mr. Sharp: I am prepared to revert to it, Mr. Chairman, but I do not have the text of the amendment with me now, though I will in a few moments. It would suit me to continue with clause 72.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: I am wondering about the clauses in the group from No. 52 to 57 and also about clause 33 which is tied in with the 52 to 57 group. The hon. member for Essex West and I believe the hon. member for Verdun have an amendment tying in with the clauses in the 52 to 57 group. I have some amendments to clause 72. I think we should go back to clause 29 which is non-controversial. If the minister will inform the committee what is proposed to be done with respect to this clause we shall allow it to pass.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the purport of the amendment is simply to eliminate subclause 2(b).

Mr. Lambert: That is perfectly all right.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. Does the committee wish to proceed with clause 72?

Mr. Lambert: I thought it would be No. 52.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 72, I had informed the Chair, last Thursday—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. Does the committee wish to proceed with clause 72 or to revert to clause 29?

An hon. Member: To revert to clause 29.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac wishes to continue with clause 69 which was being discussed, I presume, last Friday.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday afternoon clause 72 was being discussed, clause 69 having been carried.

Mr. Lambert: With regard to clause 72 I said on Friday that I was unhappy with the increase of the primary reserve on demand liabilities to 12 per cent, though I was glad to see the statutory reserve being reduced to 4 per cent with regard to liabilities payable after notice. It is my view, and I said this on Friday, that it is adequate to maintain the statutory reserve for demand liabilities at 8 per cent. In particular there is enshrined in the clause and in the bill a secondary reserve, which is something that did not exist before. In addition, since we discussed reserves on second reading and before that on the resolution stage, we have had the passage into law of deposit insurance which lessens the requirement for liquidity for which reserves serve the purpose. I agree that the banks can get along with somewhat less than 5 per cent in reserves. If there were no statutory requirements the banks' reserves would be about 5 per cent. Conditions have changed since this bill was drafted. As I have pointed out, we have deposit insurance, which is not now to come into force, and also the further secondary reserve called for the paragraph(4).

Third, the governor of the Bank of Canada proposes to have bimonthly averaging. It seems to me quite improper to continue to insist, or to provide, that demand deposit liabilities should be backed by a 12 per cent reserve. I shall therefore propose an amendment, Mr. Chairman, whereby the 12 per cent shall read 8 per cent with regard to demand deposit liabilities. In addition thereto, there will be certain consequential amendments for the transitional period.

I also propose to move another amendment—perhaps I am anticipating that the minister will not accept the proposal I made to him privately and again on Friday—that there be a ceiling of 8 per cent and 4 per cent, that there be given to the governor of the Bank of Canada a further tool for flexibility in maintaining the amount of money in circulation in the country. The governor of the Bank of Canada would thereby be allowed under appropriate circumstances, rather than entering the bond market and purchasing securities from the banks and thereby creating the means whereby more money, that is, cash, could be put into circulation, to reduce either or both of the statutory reserve limits. Instead of having them at 8 per cent they could be reduced against demand deposit liabilities to 7½ per cent or, if something different were wanted, they could be reduced to 3½ per cent against deposit liabilities. The latter provision is actively in vogue in the United States. Unfortunately the minister has not expressed his views in this connection.

I have two amendments which I wish to put forward to the committee for consideration. I move:

That clause 72 of Bill C-222 be amended by (1) In subclause (1) (a), deleting the word "twelve" and substituting the word "eight".

(2) In subclause (2) by deleting in subparagraph (a) thereof all the words after the words "months and" in line 28.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, before you accept this amendment, I should like to say a few words.

Mr. Lambert: It has to be accepted first, then you may discuss it.

Mr. Latulippe: It is because I should like to return to clause 69. On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I think a point of order has been raised.

The Chairman: I shall hear the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, some clauses were passed fairly quickly last Friday and when you called clause 69, the hon. member for Edmonton West rose from his seat. I thought he was going to speak on clause 69 but he started on clause 72.

I had an amendment to move on clause 69 and I did not have the opportunity to put it forward.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I should advise the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac that clause 69 was passed on Friday. The one now before the committee is clause 72.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: I know, Mr. Chairman, that it was passed but I did not have the opportunity to speak, you did not recognize me. Moreover, you knew that the clause was being studied and you had before you a brief showing that I had an amendment to move. You called the clause so rapidly that the hon. member for Edmonton West rose before I had time to speak. When the hon. member rose, I thought he was going to deal with clause 69. You called the clause and as soon as he rose, clause 72 was called and so he spoke on clause 72. I did not have any time at all to set forth my argument. Therefore, with the permission of the house, I should like to come back to clause 69 and move my amendment.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I certainly have no objection if we re-open clause 69. I can understand that the hon. member may have overlooked an opportunity or that inadvertently he was denied an opportunity to speak. I am sure he was not denied purposely but I suggest we should proceed with our discussion of clause 72 now.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to continue with the discussion of clause 72 and then return to clause 69?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether this is a point of order, but I would like to ask the hon. member for Edmonton West whether the copy of his amendment that I have is really correct. I do not want to be rude but to be quite frank it really does not make sense.

Mr. Lambert: I know that sometimes the hon. member is rather coy.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am not being coy now. It just does not make sense.

Mr. Lambert: The amendment merely proposes to substitute the word "eight" for the word "twelve" in line 18.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, but the next one?

Mr. Lambert: But then there is the transition period. It shall continue.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But that is not in the copy that has been distributed.

Mr. Lambert: For a period of two months.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Two months "and".

Mr. Lambert: And then you follow with subclause (b) covering term deposits. Of course the word "and" must follow at that point. If the hon. member checks it over he will see first of all that there is a transition period with regard to demand deposit liabilities and then a transition period with regard to notice deposit liabilities. They are different, but I am limiting my amendment merely to demand deposit liabilities. I am not touching the transition period with regard to notice deposit liabilities. I think the hon. member will find that my amendment is couched in the right terms.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the hon. member to explain his amendment? If the committee accepts the first part of the amendment and the requirement for demand deposit liabilities is made 8 per cent, why do you need to state that the 8 per cent will remain in force for two months? Presumably it will remain forever.

Mr. Lambert: No, because there happens to be a transition period. It is merely indicated. I suppose you might say it may be somewhat in excess but it still shows that there will be this transitional period as it follows along within the proposed clause in the bill to show that there will be the same action taken with regard to demand deposit liabilities and then, after the two months, with regard to notice deposit liabilities. The other amendment I have, if the committee accepts my substitution of "eight" for "twelve", will follow along to give a degree of flexibility to the "eight" and "four".

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, it might be important that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) tell us the reason for his amendment to reduce from 12 to 8 per cent the amount of reserves held by the Bank of Canada for chartered banks.

Is it his intention to enlarge, to increase the power of chartered banks for a period of transition of two months? What more will that give?

It seems to me that the hon. member is not very specific when explaining why bank reserves should be reduced from 12 to 8 per cent. With 8 per cent, banks would have more lending power for a period of two months than they would have with 12 per cent as required in the present clause. If they have to maintain 12 per cent, it is obvious that their lending power will be less than with 8 per cent. Will the hon. member be more explicit.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I would have hoped that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) had been here at the outset of my explanation to judge whether or not my reasons for proposing a reduction from 12 to 8 per cent, as suggested in the bill, are justified.

After all, the proposal under clause 72(1)(a) is, in fact, an increase, since today the Bank Act requires a cash reserve of 8 per cent against any deposit. The legislation, as proposed by the minister, provides for an increase from 8 to 12. Consequently, that is a reduction—how would I put it—of the freedom of the banks in this field of demand deposits, but on savings deposits or notice deposits, a reduction from 8 to 4 per cent is proposed because there is no demand period and no need to have the same degree of liquidity.

I contend that the present circumstances do not require an increase from 8 to 12 per cent, since, in the first place, as I have indicated, clause 72(4) of the bill contains a second statutory reserve. Second, we have passed the legislation to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. Lewis: A second discretionary reserve, is it not?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, it is discretionary, but it did not come about in the bill under consideration today. At the present time, the governor of the Bank of Canada has the power, under the act, as proposed, to set up that second reserve.

Today, that is what we call a gentleman's agreement. That is why I will say that it is not necessary to increase the reserve requirement from 8 to 12 per cent and that the 8 per cent rate could be maintained.

Furthermore, as I indicated, we wanted a little more flexibility and at the present time, under appropriate conditions, the governor of the Bank of Canada could establish those reserves at less than 8 and 4 per cent, if necessary, instead of printing money as stated by some people, I am assured that some people say that. What he does today is to buy the currency held by the banks and to increase the bank reserves in cash and deposits, in the Bank of Canada, the total of their deposits and of their loans is therefore extended and increased.

I would like to introduce a further degree of flexibility. It has not yet been proposed as a second amendment but we have first to establish the amounts at 8 and 4 per cent, I shall come back then with my second amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do hope that I have explained exactly what I had in mind, for the information of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, as I recall the committee hearings, no firm opinion was expressed in connection with the clause now before us. It appears that during the last 15 years a flexible reserve of between 8 and 12 per cent has been in existence in accordance with the Bank Act. The evidence before the committee showed that although during all those years there was the possibility of change, it was in fact unnecessary to do so. The other reserves were fixed on the basis of persuasion and varied from time to time in accordance with the wishes of the governor of the Bank of Canada. The banks themselves agreed to vary their secondary reserves.

One of the recommendations of the committee covers a multitude of sins in connection with the Bank Act. It is only fair to say there are a good many things we cannot anticipate because we do not know what the future will bring. With the idea, therefore, that experience will teach us along the way, the committee suggested in its report—I should like to read this recommendation in order to bring some substance to the position I take—that a different approach be made. It said:

> Your committee recognizes the value of regular or decennial revisions of the Bank Act, the Bank of Canada Act, and the Quebec Savings Banks Act but believes that these should not prevent this committee carrying out special studies on subjects related to these Acts, and amendments being made to them from time to time if such become necessary in the interval.

We could dispute long and loud in this committee on many fine points with regard to which we have no experience which would enable us to form an opinion whether we were indeed taking the best possible course. The recommendations of the committee, if carried out, would meet this problem. As soon as it was found that something in the Bank Act needed revision the necessary adjustments could be made. In the light of the evidence before the committee that opinion on this particular matter has not crystallized I would just as soon wait, let the Bank Act function, and then put the matter before the committee if hardship arises or corrections need to be made.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up much time of the committee on this matter. I would merely point out that the effect of the new section if adopted—I am not referring to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West—would be to reduce the percentage of cash reserves required from 8 per cent to 6.6 per cent. The actual amount may, of course, vary from time to time depending on the portfolio carried by the banks, but I do not think there will be any great difference over a short period of time. Thus we have provision for a substantial decrease in the statutory cash reserves and I would think that in a case of this sort we should be guided by the advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada and the inspector general of banks who both supported this new provision.

With regard to the new statutory requirement for secondary reserves, I would point out that it has been the practice of the banks for a great many years, as far as I have been able to ascertain, to keep liquid asset reserves at a much higher level than that agreed upon with the governor of the Bank of Canada. The governor sought to get agreement to maintain them at 15 per cent but for a number of years the banks have maintained them at 17 per cent. I believe this information is correct.

I doubt, therefore, that the banks can be considered to be very hard done by in this instance. Indeed, I would say that if the governor of the Bank of Canada is the source of the advice upon which this amendment is based, and I suppose he is, he has gone quite a long way in recommending a reduction from 8 per cent to 6.6 per cent in cash reserves, and I would be altogether opposed to the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, further with regard to this amendment designed to reduce a bank reserve from 12 to 8 per cent of its deposit liabilities payable on demand in Canadian currency, it seems to me the hon. member could have submitted his amendment in another form, so as to require the Bank of Canada to give 100 per cent credit and banks to have a 100 per cent reserve when they make loans.

I wish to call the minister's attention to section 72, as well as to the amendment.

Suppose that I applied for a $1000 loan at a chartered bank and the manager complied with my request or accepted my guarantees for a $1000 loan, not one bank account is affected then. Other people's accounts are not reduced when mine is opened.

I deposit the $1000 in my savings account, and then chartered banks are allowed to use that money as a 12 or 8 per cent reserve. This also enables them to multiply my loan by 12½, or 8, depending on the reserve rate.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Therefore, possibilities are practically unlimited, since chartered banks are in no way restricted from lending any amount. There is no limit because through the credit created it is still possible to create deposits, deposit liabilities. I appreciate the interaction of debit and credit, but the debit, or what I owe, is $1000, and the bank has the right to loan $12,000 even though my savings account amounts to $1000. That is how Canada, the whole country, is financially controlled.

Rather than requiring through an amendment an 8 per cent instead of 12 per cent reserve of the deposit liabilities—the banking system is given even more power—I believe the Bank of Canada should be ordered to create the credit necessary in the country. I do not see any danger of inflation, in spite of the fears often expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Why should there be more inflation if the Bank of Canada created credit instead of the chartered banks?

There is inflation now, when the chartered banks are told they may multiply their deposit liabilities by 12 or by 8 and charge interest on them. That interest is then definitely inflationary. It is the present system which creates inflation, not our suggestion that the Bank of Canada, which is our financial institution, should be used.

Mr. Chairman, I feel it is useless for us to accept this amendment which seeks to lower the reserves of the chartered banks from 12 to 8 per cent, especially when we, members of the Ralliement Creditiste, are fighting in this house against this financial control which is in the hands of a group of individuals.

We are discussing legislation which will be in force for the next ten years and we are asked to adopt the whole thing in a flash. It is much more serious than that, Mr. Chairman, and the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West cannot be accepted by us at this time.

What we are asking is that the Bank of Canada control the issue of money, credit and money supply in Canada instead of leaving this privilege in the hands of a group of private citizens called the chartered banks of Canada.

I think the minister could tell us at this point what is the limit of the banking system at the present time? There is no limit, even though it may be set at 12, 10, 8, or 4 per cent, it does not matter if the chartered banks are allowed to use their deposit liabilities as reserves with the Bank of Canada to multiply it later 8, 10, 12 and even 15 times. There is no limit because any credit coming out of, or accepted by the bank may, through a simple gesture, or by pen being put to paper, create deposit liabilities from the very moment the loan is granted and thus create inflation.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, this amendment of the reserves of chartered banks cannot be considered separately, without reference to the part reserves play in the operations of chartered banks.

The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), after many other Social Credit speakers, raised the problems of reserves, 100 per cent at the chartered bank level, and by the same token stated that the central bank should assume full responsibility for the national debt instead of chartered banks.

Those two proposals go together. They have been put forward many times in this debate by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and they would simply result in a situation where chartered banks would be obliged to have on deposit with the central bank or in cash one dollar for every dollar loaned.

Then, instead of what we have known for centuries, bank credit would simply replace the old bank-note method for transactions. We would have banks which from now on would merely make entries in their books, that is which would place at the disposal of the population an instrument of credit that would be exactly the same as the bank-note was for all transactions previously.

Replacing bank-notes by bank credit has allowed not only for an increase in currency to do business but also made it possible to do it more easily, and even from afar, and for huge amounts, etc. Everyone agrees that it has meant progress in the banking field throughout the world.

That is why the chartered and commercial banks must be allowed to maintain credit instead of keeping the old methods used in the past.

But to enable the chartered and commercial banks to continue doing business, they must be left free to some extent to grant credit as they see fit to those seeking it.

And, as a matter of fact, clause 72 now under consideration sets the reserves that our chartered and commercial banks should keep. As stated earlier, the present method provides for a limit that ranges from 8 to 12 per cent; some variation was possible, depending upon the authority given to the central bank. According to the legislation introduced in this house. This reserve is now divided into two categories, one for demand deposits and one for term deposits.

The total effect of this variation, of this increase from eight to 12 and of this drop, in the other case, from eight to four, is that the average reserves will, in the present circumstances, amount to about 6.6 per cent. Therefore this means a drop in the average reserves of the chartered banks as a whole. This drop will, of course, allow the chartered banks, with their present reserves, collectively to create more bank credit or to facilitate credit. Of course, everything will depend upon the attitude of the central bank, following the enactment of this legislation, with respect to the reserves which will be left in the hands of the chartered banks. Either by its authority over the variation of the reserves, or by another and more usual operation which is called the open market policy and which involves the purchase and sale of government issues on the market, the central bank will still be able to siphon part of the reserves available to the chartered banks.

At any rate, to form an opinion on the reserves available to the chartered banks, one has to remember how financial reserves are meant to be used.

Their first and most obvious use, which strikes us immediately and which was emphasized by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), is that of liquidity. In other words, the chartered banks are required to keep part of their assets in the form of cash deposits at the central bank so that should customers ask that their deposits be converted into liquid money, the chartered bank will be able to fulfil its obligation toward its depositors. And just from the point of view of liquidity, it must be said that the reserve should exceed the normal needs of the customers with regard to the conversion of their deposits in bills.

• (4:30 p.m.)

That purpose of liquidity also forces the banks to keep their reserves as low as possible, due allowance being made for its needs, to ensure as well reasonable profits.

Now, that is but one of the purposes of the bank reserve. The other purpose, on which the authorities of the central bank rightly insist, is that of controlling credit through the bank reserve.

From the time there is a central institution, that is a central bank, and this central bank is entrusted with the task of establishing the level of money which best suits the economy under given circumstances, in view of the goals already enumerated which are those of the central bank, it is then necessary that the level of the reserves of the chartered banks be such that the central bank can fulfil its controlling functions.

Should the reserves be too high, or too low, the efficiency of the central bank with regard to the chartered banks is threatened. The authorities of the central bank recommended to the committee a rate of 12 per cent in the case of deposits on demand as the one which best guaranteed its efficient control over chartered banks with regard to their assets on demand; and a reserve of 4 per cent in the case of term deposits as sufficient to ensure the central bank's efficient control over chartered banks.

Therefore, we see that the subdivision of the two rates is made because the behaviour of chartered banks is different and also because the effectiveness of the central bank control depends on whether it is based on term deposits or on demand deposits. Finally, it is because such reserves are also closely related to what is called the handling of the public debt.

In view of the fact that this is the most current and most effective method used by the central bank to exercise its own control, which is essential, in view of its functions with regard to chartered banks, the handling of the public debt, that is the purchase or the sale of government securities on the market, for the very purpose of creating reserves or of removing reserves within the portfolios of chartered banks, is absolutely essential within the present structures. So, it is essential that such determination of reserve rates be the same for all chartered banks. In view of the existing portfolios at the central bank level, it is essential that such determination be made here in the light of the objectives that the central bank may have in connection with the interest rates which must exist within the economy itself as a whole, because all this is related. The central bank can in no way handle the public debt without first affecting the reserves of the chartered banks and causing a substantial fluctuation of interest rates on the market. Now, as those interest rates are very closely related to the yield of government bonds on the market, it is absolutely essential that the determination of the reserves of chartered banks should take into account the effects which the measures taken by the central bank to maintain such legal rates might mean. Hence the importance of the evidence given before the committee by the governor of the Bank of Canada about the rates which, in his opinion, should be applied in practice to the chartered banks. Those three elements, namely liquidity, the control of reserves and money in circulation and the handling of the public debt, must be taken into account. If they were, it would seem that the authorities of the Bank of Canada are in favour of a split rate from now on, a higher rate for reserves on current accounts and a lower rate for term accounts. And if an average of approximately 6.6 per cent is maintained, it seems likely, according to the authorities of the Bank of Canada, that the three objectives I mentioned would enable it to play its role which, in my opinion, is the most important element to control money within the chartered banks themselves.

[Mr. Tremblay.]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I may well be fully in accord with the previous speaker who has made a brilliant outline of the operation of the present system, but because it is the present system, it does not necessarily ensue that it is the best.

It is perfectly clear that the former minister, with his academic knowledge as an economist, knows the present system. It is also because of our knowledge of the present system that we are in a position to detect its weaknesses and its mistakes.

I agree with the closing words of the hon. member when he said that reserves are the means through which the Bank of Canada, on the whole, controls the whole credit and the economy of Canada.

Obviously, it is one way of controlling things. They can be controlled by maintaining a reserve of 8 per cent, or of 12 per cent. They can also be controlled by having a 50 per cent reserve or even a 100 per cent reserve. They can be controlled also without any reserve whatever. It is a means, not an end. There is nevertheless a certain difference between the two. The views expressed a minute ago by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) in his statement must be understood. He indicated that this did not mean that the Bank of Canada or the chartered banks should necessarily have 100 per cent in cash.

Mr. Tremblay: Or on deposit.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Yes, 100 per cent or on deposit.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, but in cash or on deposit is not the same thing.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): It is not the same thing. So why give the control of the creation of such credit as the chartered banks now control to private institutions? Why not keep it? Chartered banks are certainly private institutions, whereas the publicly owned bank is the Bank of Canada. Why should such credit bear interest from its very inception when the Bank of Canada could take control, just as the chartered banks, of the creation of credit as well as the creation of paper money? I should point out to the hon. member that legal tender, whether credit, paper money or coins, is a conventional symbol accepted between individuals within a community for the exchange of goods and services. So that it is not goods, nor services, but an agreed symbol, a representation of the value of the goods exchanged.

On the other hand, if the control of this means of exchange is left in the hands of private institutions, it will be said: "The Bank of Canada controls the issues." Yes, very well, it controls the issues but it does not control the interest due in the long run, which is constituted by our national debt which we call mostly interest nor all the money now being created nor the interest-bearing credit forthcoming from the chartered banks, which now makes up the greater part of our national debt. Since it bears interest from its inception, how can we pay it back when it has never been created or issued as paper money or as coin? The time comes when someone has to carry the debt and, in the present circumstances, it is the federal government.

Why does the government not completely take over those credit issues through the Bank of Canada, charging a low rate of interest or operating costs, since it is a means of distributing goods and services within the country rather than the country's production? The government's role is to distribute goods and services according to the needs of every Canadian citizen. At present, distribution is restricted. The government is restricted with regard to the distribution of such goods and services through the control exerted by the chartered banks over currency, the creation of money and credit. It will be even more restricted under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the statement made earlier by the hon. member is very well-founded in the present situation, but this does not mean it is the best system. It does not mean either that we should return to the former gold standard system which caused trouble to everybody. It does not mean either that the paper on which money is printed is worth something in itself. Money is worth something because it represents goods and services produced by the Canadian people. When the government issues a bond and the bank purchases it, it immediately becomes a deposit liability which enables the banks to create, if the reserve is fixed at 8 per cent, 12 times and a half as much credit as the bond purchased from the government.

This means that the government itself has to borrow from private institutions, is dependent upon them and that even a government bond is a source of interest for them. That is the vicious circle of the present system. Whether the system operates with a 100 per cent reserve or with no reserve being fixed by the Bank of Canada, I do not care either way, but the entire system should come under the complete charge and responsibility of the Bank of Canada, and that the chartered banks operate as any other lending institution in our country. That is all they have to do and if they cannot operate that way, then let the government use the Bank of Canada with its branches to look after the operation of our economy, to see to it that the proper equipoise is always maintained between production, services and natural resources and that our economic assets balance exactly our economic liabilities. That would allow us to operate a little more intelligently. At present, we endow chartered banks with the power of creation, and it is somewhat ridiculous that any credit, any money coming out of a chartered bank bears interest. That means that, at 5 per cent—today it is 6 and 7 per cent and even more—it will not take 20 years before the chartered bank has gotten back all it has lent and we will still owe it twice as much. At 5 per cent, it would be twice as much.

Mr. Chairman, I would like the hon. Minister of Finance to give me, in another field, a power similar to the present power of chartered banks. I can assure him, that in 20 years, I shall own his house, and he will owe me another one, besides. Let him give me the control—

[English]

Mr. Sharp: May I ask then why the hon. member does not get some of his friends together and apply for a charter? I think he would have as much difficulty selling stock as some other people in the country who have recently obtained charters for banks. He will find it is not quite as easy and not quite as much of a gold mine as he thinks.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I agree with what the minister has said but I am not asking for a charter. I am asking him to ask the government to give me a charter similar to the one granted to the chartered banks, one which would give me control of all the construction bricks in Canada. I will not sell these bricks but lend them to him at 5 per cent interest. In 20 years time he will have to give me back all my bricks and on top of that I will probably have a mortgage on his house for its total value, so that I will have both house and bricks.

This is the way in which the present system works. Credit is given at an interest rate so that one has to pay back the capital and the interest. Where will the interest come from? This is where the national debt comes in.

Why does the Bank of Canada not give the same privileges which it accords to chartered banks? The purpose of the chartered banks is to make money; they do not work for anybody else. If they have to do so at the expense of the Canadian nation, they will do it. Even the government is at their mercy. It is the chartered banks which are now in control. When the government loses control over credit one might say it loses control over everything. I think the minister knows very well that the Bank of Canada could fulfil the same obligations as the chartered banks if only it carried out a different policy. The government could require the chartered banks to have reserves of 50 per cent before being allowed to make loans, as is required of the credit unions. Money is not a goal; it is only a means by which goods and services can be distributed. Means of distribution should be available for as many goods and services as there are in the country. Our financial system should enable the purchasing of goods and services.

A comparison could be drawn between the value of the dollar and weights and measures. A foot is always 12 inches long and a pound is always 16 ounces. They cannot be anything else. If anybody in Canada wanted to fool around with the pound he would be in trouble. Similarly the value of the dollar cannot be changed. The dollar is a basic value, and the only reason why the monetary value changes is that somebody speculates. The minister knows quite well that if the Bank of Canada were given more responsibility we could start reducing our national debt because at present the government cannot operate public services without paying interest on the money it borrows. As far as I am concerned this makes no sense at all.

What the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane has said about the present system is quite true. Our goal should be to satisfy the needs of all Canadians and to distribute goods and services. It is not sufficient to permit the distribution of these goods and services. It is the system which should be changed and not human nature. The present system might have been quite satisfactory a century ago when the problem was not the distribution of goods but their production. Today this problem has been solved and now we have to provide the necessary means for the distribution of goods and services. At the present time this is controlled by a small group, the chartered banks. I should like to see the Bank of Canada become the bank of the people. This would ensure that Canadian production was distributed interest free and not paid for twice.

[Translation]

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was right in pointing out that I only spoke of what happens within the present system.

The reason for that is simply that I never accepted the creditist doctrine which tries to make people think that the present financial system arbitrarily limits the physical possibilities of production in the economy.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion what distinguishes our Creditiste friends from all the other members of this house, and the reason why we will never understand each other, is that our Creditiste friends believe in what is known as the doctrine of plenty. They believe that the production of goods need have no limit provided unlimited funds are put at the disposal—

Mr. Caouette: No, no.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): No, there is a correction to be made there.

Mr. Tremblay: —of the people; this country would then become a paradise on earth.

Mr. Chairman, we do not believe in that possibility; that is why on any of these points, we cannot—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, for two weeks we have been listening to Creditists in this house; I think they could allow us to take part in the debate now.

Mr. Grégoire: I only wanted to put a question to the hon. member.

Mr. Tremblay: At the end of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will have no objection to the hon. member putting his question, but I think we need a minimum of time to tell our Creditiste friends why we are not in agreement with them on any of the points they raised during this debate, nor on the amount of money that has to be created in our economy, nor on the handling of the public debt by the central bank, nor on the possibility of eliminating the interest on the public debt, and so on.

The reason is, Mr. Chairman, that we are not living in the same world as they are. Creditists are like Martians who would come to this planet and tell us: "We come from a different world where economic laws are entirely different from those prevailing on earth." We would be told of the need for us to shrink to the size of those little green men supposedly coming from Mars and that it would then be easier to live on earth.

Yet, for 2,000 years or more now, there have been monetary operations and men have built a world, generation after generation, have worked out the monetary system which is now ours; developments are still possible in certain circumstances but one cannot make a clean sweep of the economic and monetary laws which have existed for centuries and create overnight a completely new financial system.

The basic difference, Mr. Chairman, as I said at the beginning, between the Social Crediters or the advocates of an economy of abundance and ourselves is that we believe that there exists at a given time with a given volume of productive resources and a given productivity, a maximum national production.

Whatever may be the monetary transactions which could be made, we cannot produce more at a given time than let us say—let us mention a figure—$60, $65 or $70 billion of goods and services.

If that production is to be increased, it is necessary to have more productive resources, manpower, forests, farms and so forth, or still increase productivity, that is use more efficiently each of those available resources.

Mr. Latulippe: You would rather let the people remain unemployed.

Mr. Tremblay: Under those circumstances, Mr. Chairman, our economy must be organized so that resources—

Mr. Latulippe: You have no products—

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe), whom we have heard for two weeks, to listen now, because he was complaining that he had not received all the answers to his questions in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I do understand his frustration, if he was hoping that he would be given a course in economics, for usually members are supposed to throw light on the matter in hand and not to be told what's what by bank directors or governors.

Today, the hon. member has an opportunity to quench his thirst for truth; I therefore bid him to be silent and to listen; if, later, he wishes to take part in the debate, I will gladly give him the floor.

Mr. Chairman, under these conditions, at a given time, there is a maximum amount of money which must be put into circulation, and it is the duty of the Bank of Canada to make available to the people the currency to insure this maximum production.

I submit that it is the responsibility which has always been assumed by the Bank of Canada, and it is its function precisely to make available to the people the amount of money necessary to achieve that maximum production.

We almost have that maximum production. What is the number of unemployed in Canada at the present time?

Mr. Grégoire: 140,000 in Quebec.

Mr. Tremblay: 3.6 per cent of the active labour force is unemployed on the average.

Mr. Caouette: 400,000 unemployed in Canada.

Mr. Tremblay: But those unemployed, Mr. Chairman, may be idle because of physical conditions, such as the weather which prevents them from working. Those people may be unemployed, because they have left a position and want to go and find another one; those people may be unemployed because they do not have the necessary training to fill all the positions required by the technical production apparatus which we have developed.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising that we have a certain proportion of unemployed in our economy, and everyone must make an effort to reduce that percentage. Nobody is happy with the number of unemployed, even if it is only 3.6 per cent within the economy.

But it is not through monetary manipulation that we are going, on the one hand, to stop the seasons in Canada, that we are trying to prevent the necessary constant transfer of the labour force from depressed to developing sectors. Monetary manipulations will not succeed in creating among the people, the necessary technical knowledge required by modern technology. Those are all the measures which must be taken to reduce unemployment, and not to create artificial money which would only be a source of confusion within the economy.

That is the difference, Mr. Chairman, between the Creditistes and all the other members of this house whatever the party they belong to, toward that basic problem which is called the creation of money.

The moment we agree that the quantity of money must be limited, that an authority such as the Bank of Canada is in a better position to determine the quantity of money at any time, in the economy; the moment that manipulation or that responsibility is left with the Bank of Canada, then, Mr. Chairman, it will be its responsibility to decide which portion of the public debt the bank is going to absorb constantly.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, if the government were to determine what amount of money is required at any given time, it would then be a matter of floating bonds and ordering the monetary authorities to issue money in exchange for bonds.

Mr. Latulippe: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Chairman, because when part of the public debt is absorbed by the central bank, its authorities decide to do so according to the monetary needs at the time. No government authority should force or dictate to the authorities of the Bank of Canada that it must absorb $\frac{1}{4}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ or $\frac{3}{4}$ of 1 per cent of the debt of the country, because the government would then interfere with the prime responsibility entrusted to the Bank of Canada by law, which law still upholds, that is to handle money so that it always corresponds with the needs of the economy.

Mr. Chairman, we at least recognize that there must be taxes, interest on loans, whether private or public. And why? Because we believe in the fundamental theory that there are real economic phenomena, that money must not exceed those real monetary phenomena but must merely adapt itself to the physical needs in a given economy.

Mr. Chairman, that is why it is so difficult to have a dialogue with our friends of the Ralliement Créditiste and the Social Credit and the other parties in this house on each every point concerning either the Bank of Canada Act or the Bank Act. That is why I wish to point out to our Créditiste friends that they can go on dreaming of a world where monetary manipulations would solve no problem.

As for us, we will continue to think that the monetary question must constantly be improved, that our Bank Act must be amended, that, as we are now doing through this clause, we must change the reserves of the chartered banks according to present needs and not those of the past. But we will never buy their suggestions that we manipulate the money supply, that we cancel the public debt or the interest on that debt. To do so would mean bringing about financial disaster and defeating the efforts which are being made to solve real problems, which is the well-being of the people and putting an end to unemployment.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, it will surely be tough to make the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) understand. Indeed, for the past 15 years at least, he has been blaming the Créditistes, and Social Credit and accusing us of reaching for the moon or Mars, etc.

I would remind the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane as well as to the Minister of Finance and the government itself that the Social Credit philosophy, for warfare purposes, has been largely applied except for this frightful creation or increase of the national debt.

In 1939, after 10 years of depression, the Liberal government of the day, of which the spiritual father of the member for Matapédia-Matane, Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie King, was the leader and prime minister, our national debt amounted to $3 billions. Everyone in Canada was paralysed. There were 600,000 unemployed, and products were not being sold. We had the production capacity and all that, but nothing was operating, precisely because money was lacking. The Bank of Canada had been in existence since 1934. Incidentally, I should tell the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane that the Bank of Canada was not created to deal only with the reserves of the chartered banks. Its main purpose was to maintain a continuous economic growth in Canada. That is the purpose for which the Bank of Canada was created and established. It is not a question of helping along chartered banks, but of maintaining Canada's constant economic growth. In 1939, Mr. Chairman, the national debt was $3 billion and, six years later, in 1945, it was a record $17 billion.

Let the hon. member tell the house and the people how the national debt increased by $14 billion. How is it that to make cannons, soldier's uniforms—and, incidentally, there was no unemployment during the war; young Canadians who had never fired a gun were enlisted and the young people were never told: "You are unfit to go to war." No, everybody was fit. "Come on, young men, enlist, you will be provided with clothes, room and board, you will be supplied with armaments, and on top of that you will be paid to make war". And that is how $14 billion worth of credit have been created during the six years of war. The war is over and back we go to the same old sins of the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay).

Since 1945, that is in 22 years, the national debt increased by $5 billion. In peacetime, over a period of 22 years, it went up by $5 billion while, in wartime, over a period of 6 years, it increased by $14 billion. The former minister says he does not agree with the Créditistes. Small wonder. However, how can a government find $14 billion for slaughter over a period of six years, and puts up a measly $5 billion for everyday life over a period of 22 years? It is because of the present system.

An hon. Member: At double the rate of interest.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the former minister does not want to accept the Créditistes' philosophy, he finds it nebulous. But is the present system any better? When the hon. member says that productivity has practically reached its maximum, does he realize that there is a relation between productivity and production? If productivity were at its peak, production would increase. There would not be a single farmer in the hon. member's constituency who would not double his farm's output within two years. I challenge him to come with me and discuss before the farmers of Matapédia-Matane the possibility of increasing the production of their farms, if they were assured of a market. And the hon. member knows that I am right. Therefore, the problem does not lie with the production system. National production could double and treble with a few years. At the present time, some plants are not operating at full capacity because the market would not absorb the increased production. And as long as there is no reorganization—

Mr. Tremblay: Production, not productivity.

Mr. Caouette: Not among the consumers a purchasing power to enable them to order the distribution of that production, and the former minister, the present member for Matapédia-Matane, will be all at sea. And finally, in his riding, he will be put straight by his own electors because those people will not accept another economic recession, will refuse to be pushed around any longer by a few people who control the economic blood of the Canadian nation.

And the hon. member knows that the main problem is the financial problem. However, for 2,000 years we have been oriented towards that system. And the hon. member believes that it is the best system there can be, a system which hurts everyone, which forces the federal government to increase taxes when the citizens cannot pay any more, which forces the province of Quebec to increase its sales tax to 8 per cent when people could not even pay 6 per cent, which forces the municipalities to live in a deplorable state of stagnation, which has the school boards by the throat, ready to choke them overnight.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, it is that system which the former minister would like to protect and to see respected by the whole population. And when we tell him—what he has not yet understood: "Our basic theory is to make financially possible what is materially practical and desirable—"

An hon. Member: The hon. member applauded me when I said that.

Mr. Caouette: But afterwards he rises and speaks to the contrary. He then gives the impression that he understands Social Credit when he says: "The unlimited issuance of bank notes, the unlimited creation of credit." When did we ever say: "The unlimited issuance or creation of credit."

And they want the people to believe that Social Crediters would devote their time to the issuance of bank notes. Greenbacks are seen everywhere. Mr. Chairman, this is not the matter involved. The greenbacks or the currency now in circulation hardly represent 5 per cent of the total amount of money in circulation in Canada or the total volume of money in Canada at the present time.

Mr. Tremblay: Would you allow a question?

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member why he would restrict the amount of money in circulation or the credit available to the people if, as he has just stated we can double or even triple our national production at a given time? Then, why not double, triple and quadruple the amount of money?

Mr. Caouette: Inasmuch as it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, and let me give an example to the hon. member.

When we undertake to build a $300,000 school, with the present system, the school board will borrow this $300,000 sum from a chartered bank. The chartered bank will not take the member's money nor mine, it will open a new credit for the setting-up of a school, and exact 5 per cent for a 20 year period. Now in 20 years the school will cost $600,000 instead of $300,000. That is the kind of interest we cannot admit and to which we are opposed. We do not object to paying interest on anything lent by the person who owns it, but right now the bank creates the credit, according to what the member, the government and each Canadian citizen is worth, and demands an interest on this new credit, which is pure nonsense.

We are not opposed to paying interest on something that actually exists. If the member for Matapédia-Matane lends me $100; I will reimburse him $106 or $107 which is only normal since he helped me with something that belongs to him. But as for the banker, he lends something he does not own; so much so that he wants guarantees, such as my marriage contract, and my insurance policies. He is ready to take my wife and children; he is ready to take everything. And then only will he agree to lend me $10,000, $20-000 or $25,000, according to the guarantees I can offer. Where do these $20,000 or $25,000 come from? They come from this creation authorized by the Canadian parliament. This money, this credit is not taken from anybody's account. No one sees any reduction in his savings account or his current account, as a result of the $20,000, $25,000 or $300,000 loans of a Canadian chartered bank, but the bank exacts an interest on this new credit. In short, I pay interest to the banker on my own property, on my own guarantees.

According to the member for Matapédia-Matane this is logical and normal. What Créditistes ask is whimsical. The present system is not whimsical: it is barbaric. We are not the only ones who condemn it. The other day the member for Kamouraska quoted what Pius XI said in his encyclical letter, Quadragesimo Anno in 1931, 36 years ago.

What did Pius XI say? "He said: "Those who control money and credit are the masters of our whole lives and no one has a right to breathe any longer against their will". The hon. member would have no right to breathe against the will of those who control money and credit. The same thing applies to the government, and to any undertaking, public or private. They are the ones who control.

Mr. Rothschild, for his part, said: "Give me control over a nation's credit and I do not care about who makes laws in that nation".

Mr. Chairman, we are the ones who make laws in this country and the minister is not even able to take a decision against the financial system. Why? Because we give them, and we are about to give them for a further period of ten years, the power to control Canada's economy, and the economic life of Canadian families and individuals. You ignore those who develop the country, but you care about those who plunge it into debt, about those who devour the country, about those who loot it.

Mr. Chairman, this act is going to be in force for ten years. We will talk about it ten years hence, in 1977; the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane will no longer be here then and we will have another minister of finance, for I hope that by that time we will have Créditistes on the other side to put some order in Canadian finance.

Mr. Chairman, the Créditistes are not asking for anything so extraordinary. We merely ask for some balance, for an adequate accounting system in line with reality. As I said a few moments ago, such an accounting system was applied by the government in wartime. But in peacetime, when money is in short supply, they spend their time talking twaddle like: This system must absolutely be respected, endured, tolerated, renewed so that it may continue its exploitation.

Mr. Chairman, when the Canadian consumers' buying power is based on reality, on statistical data about Canada's output, then we can command maximum output in this country. We know that we have not now reached our maximum output, and this applies to any of Canada's regions, be it British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, the maritimes. Speaking of the maritimes, do you thing that fishermen in those provinces have the same production or make as good catches as they made even ten years ago? No. And it is strange that no solution should be found in peace time, and that instead people should be asked to tighten their belt.

The Bank of Canada, whose first responsibility is to maintain a continuous economic growth in the country, tolerates years of depression, of restriction, of privation, years of small economic booms here and there, which do not last long except in war time. In war time, while any amount of money was found for the manufacture of guns and shells, we had a higher standard of living than in depression years or in peace time, even if we had ration tickets, as some have said. Price control and ration tickets meant absolutely nothing all though the war, for with ration tickets you could buy anything to the value of the ration ticket and you could get as many of those as you wanted on the black market by paying extra.

We knew about those underhanded practices but everyone had at least a little something during the war whereas during the depression most Canadians did without a lot of things and went through a lot in one of the richest countries in the world.

Mr. Chairman, as long as the monetary system has not been adapted to the physical possibilities and realities of our country, it is useless to believe that we will give our people a wealthy Canada where they will be able to live decently.

If billions of dollars can be found to kill, it is time to look for the billions of dollars which will enable Canadians, young and old, men, women and children, to live sensibly and according to our country's physical possibilities.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the things I wanted to say. I will probably add to them later if the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane wants to rise again because I like to answer him; he knows so much about the present system. The hon. member for Lapointe is indicating he wants to have his say. The debate should prove quite interesting in the next few hours.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that clause 72 of Bill No. C-222, as well as the bill itself, will be in force for a decade. For the next ten years we will have to put up with what is in it. Therefore, since we advocate monetary reform, it is now or never for us, as members of the Ralliement Créditiste, to say to the minister, to the authorities of the Bank of Canada, to the leaders of the financial system what we think, what we want for the Canadian people and what the Canadian people expect from their government, namely in administration for the general welfare of the people and not for that of some financiers in Canada.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I listened with pleasure earlier to the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) and I think he summarized the situation as it never was before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: Very well, your applause is quite justified.

What did the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane have to say about you? You want a system of abundance? We prefer the present system. That is what the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane said earlier and it is so revolting to say such things that the hon. member for Québec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) can hardly believe it. It is hardly believable. I agree with him, that the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane could have said such a thing. But he did. And it is precisely the present situation. You, Créditistes, want a system of abundance, but we—

Mr. Tremblay: You are in favour of economy.

Mr. Grégoire: That is right, we are in favour of an economy of abundance.

You are the supporters of the present state of affairs.

Mr. Tremblay: What do you want?

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. minister says: What do you want? We have money. If we produce, we cannot add more. The Minister of Finance, who must always borrow, should be told, as well as Quebec, the municipalities or school boards that we have as much money as we can produce. Is it because there is enough money in circulation in Canada that the premier of Quebec (Mr. Johnson) has to go down on his knees in New York or in Toronto in order to borrow money to build a university, to develop a school or build highways or bridges in the province of Quebec? No. It is because he does not have any money.

If the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) has something to say, let him rise and say it. Maybe that would do him a lot of good—

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Trudeau: You are talking against the Prime Minister.

Mr. Grégoire: I am not saying anything against the Prime Minister nor against anybody else. I am talking against the system of sweeping up everything. And the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane is saying: There is enough money. In fact it is for that reason that the Canadian citizens are unable to have houses built. If there is at present a housing shortage in Canada, the like of which we have not seen since the war, it is precisely because, as pointed the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane, we are at present under a sweeping up system and not the system of an affluent economy.

If there is a decrease in the sales of motor vehicles, is it because there is too much money in circulation or because there is a shortage of money?

Mr. Tremblay: It is on account of a shortage of money.

Mr. Grégoire: It is because there is not enough.

Mr. Tremblay: It is due to an imbalance.

Mr. Grégoire: Imbalance of what? Imbalance of the system. Because we have, in Canada, the needed persons in order to produce motor vehicles and there are potential buyers. But there is no money to meet the needs of the buyers and that is why we have a crisis and a decrease.

When, for instance, we call for highway repairs or construction to connect our municipalities with one another, what kind of an answer do we get? Lack of money. Ask any mayor of the constituency of Matapédia-Matane: Why not build a hospital here? What will be his answer? We have no money.

I never saw any municipal council or a school board sit around a table and ask themselves how to get labour or materials, no. But they will ask themselves where they are going to get money, because that is unfailingly the problem.

Mr. Tremblay: Money shields reality.

Mr. Grégoire: Someone says that money shields reality. I should like to have the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane explain that sentence. He might be able to remove the shield because he may not see reality. It might be for that reason that he states that reality is shielded.

Mr. Tremblay: Because money is a means.

Mr. Grégoire: Money is a symbol, it symbolizes production, the product. It is not even a means. It is a symbol. And what is symbolized is the product. But see what happens to production when the symbol is not there; production stops.

That is precisely why automobile manufacturers have slowed up their production: sales are decreasing. And the sales are going down because Canadians do not have the money needed to buy automobiles.

If the member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien) has something to say, let him say it, let him rise—or let him speak so that we can hear him.

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to have a big boat, but I have not enough money. I am not rich enough.

Mr. Grégoire: Well, that just shows that money is lacking. The member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche would like to have a boat, but he cannot because he has not enough money. That is the situation all over Canada.

Mr. Chrétien: That is because I do not spend more than I can afford.

Mr. Grégoire: This is an ad hominem argument which must not be applied generally. When the present system can only be justified with such arguments, well then we shall know that it is not worth much.

Coming back to the matter of reserves, Mr. Chairman, I heard a moment ago the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane say: "The reserve for long-term loans, for loans, for notice deposits has been lowered to 12 per cent, and the reserve for demand deposits, to 4 per cent. The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane said also that we have the money precisely because it was the calculated percentage which could best enable the Bank of Canada to control the amount of credits and the banks to operate without having money that is not being used.

On that point, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, whatever the reserve percentage, it is obvious that chartered banks will ask that this percentage be as low as possible because in the past the general percentage amounted to 8 per cent and as worked out by the Minister of Finance, with these two new percentages, it is lowered to an average of 10.6 per cent of loans made by chartered banks. This means that, in the past, when a bank had $8 it could create credit by making loans up to $92, whereas now a bank will need only $6.60 to lend $93.40. Calculating this for all of the reserves of the chartered banks, which now stand at $1.5 billion, and if the percentage is lowered from 8 to 6.6 per cent, it means that overnight from the moment the law is passed, taking into account the whole money supply, the banks will be able to lend over $4 billion more without needing a single cent more in reserves or in deposits.

Of course, if the Bank of Canada puts this legal money into circulation as reserves for the chartered banks, that is different. But the chartered banks may not want to give up their reserves, and if these remain the same, if the chartered banks keep their $1.5 billion in reserves, it means that the moment the percentage is lowered from 8 to 6.6 per cent, the banks can create and lend an additional credit of $4 billion, without needing a single cent more in legal reserves or in deposits.

If the Bank of Canada leaves the same amount in legal reserves in the hands of the chartered banks, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane will tell me: "But has the Minister of Finance told the house what policy the government would adopt in such a case?"

Mr. Tremblay: That is the responsibility of the central bank.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane says that this is the responsibility of the central bank. I shall answer him that when the question was put directly to the Minister of Finance in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, the minister said: "The Minister of Finance is the one who has the authority". He mentioned that the authority did not rest with the governor of the Bank of Canada, but with the Minister of Finance. This is what the hon. member took up—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I understand very well the great desire of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) and the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) to assist the hon. member for Lapointe in his speech, but I should prefer, and I know that all the hon. members agree with me, that each member make his speech by himself and without too many interruptions, so that all may have the opportunity to speak in turn.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the hon. member from Matapédia-Matane was not interrupting me; on the contrary, he was helping me. I was wondering what was the name of the hon. member who had precisely insisted on the fact that there is a section in the new Bank of Canada legislation which gives primary responsibility to the Minister of Finance, and it was precisely the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) who, at that time, observed that it was not as in former times when the governor of the Bank of Canada had refused to follow the instructions of the minister.

So, finally, to go on with what I was saying, it is in fact the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the volume of the money supply. This is all the more so that when I asked the Minister of Finance what was his basis to determine the volume of the money supply, he replied: It takes feeling and flair. Not much, perhaps, but to a certain point, some judgment. He was not sure that it required judgment to determine the volume of the money supply. Indeed, I mentioned it last week.

The minister recognized that it took flair and feeling but as far as judgment was concerned, he did not feel it was indispensable to have some to figure out the volume of the money supply.

So, I say to my friend, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane, that it is the Minister of Finance who determines what statutory reserves remain in circulation. The minister himself refused to make any statement on that. He refused to say whether with the changes in rates provided for under section 72 and the reduction of rates from 8 to 6.6 per cent, the Bank of Canada would allow the chartered banks the same amount of statutory reserves.

If the amount remains the same as we can rightly presume, it will mean that as soon as this legislation is adopted, the chartered banks will turn around and be entitled to lend an additional $4 billion without a single penny more in reserves and without a penny more on deposit than they have at the present time.

I challenge the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane to contradict me. If the legal reserves remain the same, the percentage decrease from 8 to 6.6 per cent enables chartered banks, once this legislation is implemented, to go right ahead and create $4 billion of credit without having a cent more in legal reserve or in additional deposit. I challenge again the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane to say anything to the contrary. I also challenge another of his economist colleagues, the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne), to gainsay by statements, because they both know very well that with 6.6 per cent, in view of the existing legal reserves, chartered banks will be allowed to create $4 billion more as soon as the Bank Act is implemented, without having a cent more in deposit or in reserve. Why could the Bank of Canada not create that $4 billion credit, without interest, for the benefit of Canadians?

An hon. Member: It could lend money in the Mount Royal constituency.

Mr. Grégoire: It could make loans to municipalities who are in need of it, as well as to the provinces, without interest. The member for Matapédia-Matane could not deny it, because he knows it is true.

This would become a buoyant economy for the people, but the member for Matapédia-Matane prefers the buoyant economy for the bankers. There lies the difference between the member for Matapédia-Matane and us. He is for the banks, whereas we want the system to operate for the people.

Such is the difference in the affluent systems. We have the choice: affluence for the bankers or affluence for the people; as for me, my choice is made: affluence for the people. The member for Matapédia-Matane has also made his choice: affluence for the bankers. He certainly cannot say otherwise. All he can do is to give a sickly smile because the mask is falling. We are exposing the hypocrisy of these pseudo-economists who have studied the conventional economy with a view to satisfy the appetite and consuming thirst of the big bankers to the detriment of the people.

An hon. Member: Pure demagoguery.

Mr. Grégoire: I have just heard the typical retort of those who have run out of arguments. When they are cornered, stuck, what do they do? They sit on their hands and shout "demagoguery". That is the argument of those who have no more arrows in their quiver. Instead of saying that, why does he not prove that I am wrong? Let him prove that the new clause 72, if the legal reserve remains the same, will not allow the banks to create $4 billion more for their benefit and advantage.

What are we asking for? We say that if it is possible to increase the money supply by $4 billion, let the Bank of Canada do it, so that it can benefit from it and enable the Canadian people to take advantage of the economic growth which we owe not to the bankers but to the work of the Canadian people our fellow-citizens. The money supply increases as a result of increased production due to the toil and sweat of the Canadian citizens. But they are not the ones who benefit from it. The bankers do.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) said it a while ago: placing his argument within the frame of the existing system, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane rattles off what he has learned in books.

On the other hand, when we show him the results of the present system, when we give him concrete figures with the help of clause 72, on the bank reserves, he is at a loss. He feels cornered, and his sole argument is to cry out "demagoguery". It is the argument of people who have run dry.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane talks about an affluent economy. Well, we want it, but for the people and not for the bankers. For Canada, but not for the bankers, not for the banks. That is the difference between the argument of the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane who expresses the reasoning of his colleague, a reasoning which is hard to imagine, since even one of his colleagues, who had not heard him make one of his speeches, said earlier: what the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane says there, does not make any sense, he did not say that. He was shocked to see that his colleague could have said that. It is true that the theory and the system advocated by the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane are shocking.

Mr. Chairman, I shall ask the hon. Minister of Finance to change his course, to the benefit of those who elected him from one end of Canada to the other, those who elected their representatives here in the House of Commons. We are here to work for them and not for the bankers who have done nothing, who represent an infinitely small group, a very small sector in Canada. Why not let all the people benefit therefrom?

If the steps advocated by the hon. member for Villeneuve, the hon. member for Mégantic and myself, as well as the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac and others, were taken instead of following the system advocated by the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane, we would not be faced today with a housing shortage, an unemployment crisis with 400,000 people out of work, including 150,000 in Quebec alone.

Yesterday afternoon, I met the dairy producers of the riding of Lapointe.

Mr. Guay: I met them also.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Lévis tells me that he met them also. I know that the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Langlois) and another Liberal member met them. In the province of Quebec, all federal members were able to meet their farmers.

Will the hon. members for Lévis and Matapédia-Matane tell me that the Quebec farmers are well off? Are they not living rather in the same old misery? When you met the dairy producers, the farmers of the riding of Lévis, did you tell them: Gentlemen, be happy, we get along fine in an affluent society? No. You did not dare tell them that because it would have been sheer provocation when they have trouble making ends meet in spite of back-breaking days starting early in the morning and ending late at night.

Mr. Guay: We tell them about things that can be done and we do not make pie-in-the-sky promises like you do.

Mr. Grégoire: Does the hon. member for Lévis mean that the $5 per hundredweight of milk asked for by the farmers cannot be achieved?

Mr. Guay: That is not what I am saying. But you indulged in demagogy in your riding, as usual.

Mr. Grégoire: There you have another one who has no arguments, Mr. Chairman. From the time I have been on this side, I have become accustomed to see people without arguments. That is the only thing they can say: That is demagogy. Demagogy. They are free from that. Oh yes. When you saw the former member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), with his wide smile, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane or the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) and the others who were rubbing their bellies when they saw Yvon Dupuis throwing bundles of dollars in the air, that was not demagogy, Mr. Chairman, oh no, that was intelligent. He did the same in his riding. "The Social Crediters will get the money machine rolling and you will need loads of dollars to buy a pack of cigarettes". That is not demagogy, Mr. Chairman, oh no.

We say that it is not intended to print one dollar more, but rather to make sure that the credit now created by chartered banks will be created, in the same amounts, if you want, by the Bank of Canada. Is that what you call printing money? And that has been repeated for a week in this house.

Mr. Guay: It is the same thing.

Mr. Grégoire: That is the same, except that it is the Bank of Canada that will do it without interest and that the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities would then have the interest to boot to administer their own affairs.

Let the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane and the hon. member for Lévis make inquiries in their own constituencies and they will find out that between 30 and 45 per cent of municipal estimates are expended to pay interest on the debt.

Mr. Guay: We know what is going on in our ridings; we are always there, but you are never in yours.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member should not worry about that. But let me say that this is not only demagogy but a lie as well, because I am more often in my own riding than he is in his.

When we suggest a system, a means whereby municipalities could have interest-free loans and use the money they are now paying as interest on their debts, we are not suggesting the printing of bills, and there you have the difference between the present system and the one we have been advocating. And it would spell prosperity not only for the banks but also for municipalities and the Canadian people.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane will not pursue his defence here especially when one sees him take his stand on paragraphs learned by heart from orthodox manuals of political economy often dating back to first world war.

I hope that the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane will not continue to defend an obsolete economic system, which is exactly the same as the one in effect at the time of Napoleon but that, adapting himself to progress, he will try to see, to advocate the implementation of a new system which will not be an economy of abundance for bankers only but for all Quebeckers.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I really did not intend to become involved in this debate a second time, but it does seem to me that perhaps it would be profitable for me to say a few words in connection with the topic before us. We have had a very wide-ranging debate. It seems to me that some statements have been made which certainly need to be refuted or clarified. To begin, I should like to refer to page 13840 of Hansard and quote from comments of the Minister of Finance. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, I have been trying for most of my adult life to understand Social Credit.

Mr. Sharp: So I am.

An hon. Member: You said that.

Mr. Leboe: I am quoting the minister. If the minister has not succeeded very well in understanding Social Credit, it is a great puzzle to me how he could continue as he did in the next few sentences. He said:

> But what has puzzled me even more is how anyone could accept these doctrines.

He is referring to the doctrines that he does not understand. If you can figure that out, you are better than I. I should like to read another quotation from the remarks of the minister as found on page 13371 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the young, amiable and handsome member who has just asked the question that the statement made by the premier of British Columbia is, so far as I know, without foundation. I would categorize it as both absurd and without foundation.

We have heard a lot about co-operative federalism. We have heard a lot about how the provinces should get along with the federal government and how the federal government should get along with the provinces. The minister's portfolio, of course, in essence is a product of the getting together of the provinces and is not something which got the provinces together. I suggest to the minister that the use of sarcasm and ridicule is no way to find a solution to problems. I should like to read again from Hansard, page 13111:

> —this is the sort of program that one might expect the Social Credit party to propose since they believe in a different form of financing, one that would be very inflationary and under which they would simply print money.

I should like to know what Social Credit material he has been reading. He says he cannot understand it, wonders how anybody can believe it, and then proceeds to say that it would be very inflationary in that we would simply print money. How does he know if he does not understand it. I should like to know who, in the Social Credit party, at any time advocated the printing of money. I have read items in the newspapers which have suggested that this is what we are advocating. I have been a Social Crediter since 1934 and I have never heard a Social Crediter advocate that we print money indiscriminately by means of a printing machine. This is something which has been suggested in the United States by none other than Mr. Anderson who at one time was secretary of the United States treasury. He suggested that this might be a good solution. The Social Credit party in this country has never recommended this.

I should like to deal with this question in retrospect. I go back to the time when we were in a depression, a time when people were being paid 10 cents a day to sit in a concentration camp, if you wish to call it that or relief camp because they did not have any money with which to do any purchasing. Retail stores across the country were amply supplied with goods for sale. I remember a storekeeper telling me that he had to keep a great deal more on the shelf because he could not afford to miss a sale.

What was the upshot at the beginning of the war? It was found absolutely necessary to increase the money supply greatly in order to fight the war. What was done in order to prevent inflation? I should like to go into this to some extent. In the first place, the government started selling victory bonds. They did not tell the people that the victory bonds were for the purpose of taking money out of circulation. They said it was to help fight the war. This was not the case at all. We know that. The victory bonds were sold for the sole purpose of taking money out of circulation which had already been pumped into the economy. It was already there and the expansion of credit was going on.

The next step was the introduction of war savings certificates. By this time the government was after the $5 bills. One could buy certificates for amounts as low as $5. In this way the government was able to take more money away from the people so they would not be able to spend it. Then the government introduced savings stamps in an effort to take more money out of circulation.

After having exhausted this procedure the next step was compulsory savings. No one could suggest for a minute that this was not proposed for the purpose of curtailing spending. Of course it was. I am not saying there was anything wrong about it. I am simply saying that these steps were taken by the government to prevent inflation inasmuch as the money supply had to be expanded in order to help the war effort. When compulsory saving failed to meet the demands rationing was introduced so that people would not be able to buy simply because they had money in their pockets. When rationing failed price controls were introduced.

At that time the man in charge of keeping prices down was one of the best men Canada has produced, Mr. Donald Gordon. He did a good job. During the war years the government did a good job in preventing inflation. They took the necessary steps. I am sure that if the minister would try to understand Social Credit he would understand some of the steps that were taken by the government in those days, because the concept of Social Credit is the converse of this. When the money supply is deficient there is a process by which money can be made available to the purchasers of the country.

I have heard it said that in Alberta and British Columbia the governments do not know anything about Social Credit and do not practice it. I can tell the committee that the concept of Social Credit is being practised directly in Alberta and British Columbia and now in the province of Saskatchewan. Right now in Saskatchewan a Liberal government is practising the concept of Social Credit. I make the statement this afternoon that if Saskatchewan, which is practising the concept of Social Credit, does not go ahead I will eat my shirt on the steps of the parliament buildings.

An hon. Member: You will not have one left by the time you get there.

Mr. Leboe: The hon. member says that I will not have one left by the time I get there. I will. Surely we can expect more from the minister than this nonsense of ridiculing something that he does not know much about.

Surely we should be able to expect a minister of the crown at least to look at Social Credit proposals, come up with an analysis of what Social Credit stands for and then tell us where we are wrong, if we are wrong. It is not good enough to dismiss the whole concept with ridicule. The people of this country are getting fed up with this kind of nonsense. The day will arrive not too long from now when the people will take desperate measures to rid the country of this kind of attitude.

I referred to the concept being followed by the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. I should not mention them without coming to grips with this concept and pointing out exactly what the situation is. If there is a deficiency of purchasing power in a province the people can not buy back that which is produced by the people. There is only one answer and that is to increase the money supply. Under our federal system there is only one way of doing that, in a province by creating a financial vacuum within the province so that money will flow into the capital account. If this is done there is more money with which the individual can buy the products of the country. In this way you increase purchasing power in respect of goods and services available and the people can then buy back what they produce.

The minister should take note of this method of expanding the tax base and increasing the source of tax revenue. This is the first year in 14 years there has not been a tax reduction in the province of British Columbia. The province increased home owners' grants by another $10 per month bringing them to $120 per year. This is tantamount to a decrease in taxes for home owners. This is not an across the board decrease in taxes.

In British Columbia the financial vacuum is created by the construction of highways, railways, and other transportation and power facilities. In this way money is attracted back into capital account. An individual would not buy a pulp mill worth $50 million but if one is built a great deal is paid out in the form of wages which creates purchasing power for the individual to purchase the goods being manufactured. This is the concept of Social Credit. The Minister of Finance or anyone else can bury his head in the sand, but this concept does work.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat is absolutely right when he reproaches the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) his inability to understand the Social Credit theories, but his capacity to condemn them. He cannot understand them but he wants to condemn them at every opportunity, anytime, anywhere, and mostly here in the house.

I should like to quote what his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Chrétien) had to say on February 15, 1967, as reported in Hansard on page 13095. He said:

> It is useless to try to make people believe that we find money on trees or that some obscure mechanism in the Bank of Canada can be used to solve all our problems. Money spent at any level of government comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, if the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance had been able to tell us at that time and if he could do it now, that all the money we need for the administration has to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers, the parliamentary secretary should have said who has enabled the taxpayers to have money in their pockets. If money does not grow on trees, as he said, he could have told us where it grows. But, nobody ever wants to tell us that, never.

Nobody wants to admit it either. As the bankers would not admit they create credit. No. They call it credit expansion.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know if some officials prepare the parliamentary secretary's speeches but it seems to me that such would not be their reasoning; they would never say that at any level of government the money spent comes out of the taxpayers' pockets.

In 1935, that is already 32 years ago, William Lyon Mackenzie King said this:

> As long as the government or Parliament has not recovered control of the issuing of the volume of money and credit in Canada, it is futile and trifling to talk about democracy in Parliament.
> Any nation will be ruined once usury prevails.

And that is precisely the control over finance that we are studying in Bill C-222. As for the parliamentary secretary, he has certainly not understood his former spiritual leader.

Mr. Chrétien: I am fed up with Social Credit.

Mr. Caouette: He tells us that money does not grow on trees. But where does it grow? Who is the sovereign in Canada? Who is the supreme authority in our country?

• (6:00 p.m.)

The banking system, or the Canadian government, the Canadian parliament? The authority is vested in parliament, as the former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers, once said:

> Parliament has power to amend the Bank Act... Parliament has power to give orders to the Bank of Canada ... Parliament has power to dictate the monetary policy of the country—

Mr. Chairman, precisely due to tight money, to the fact that credit remains in the hands of a few individuals who lay down the law in economic matters in Canada, we have to put up with the harm done by this system in all sectors of economic activity.

A while ago, I heard the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) mention the government's dairy policy. All the hon. members in the province of Quebec, as well as outside Quebec, I believe, have been invited by the farm organizations, by the Catholic Union of Farmers in Quebec. I had the opportunity to meet the farmers last week. They ask for $5, $5.10 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk. The government will announce its policy before the first of April and will say: $5 is too much, we cannot afford it. On the other hand, we certainly can afford to help other countries, producers throughout the whole world, execept in Canada.

If war broke out tomorrow morning, we could afford to finance it. But we cannot afford to finance and help the farmers who represent the very foundation of the whole Canadian economic system.

And I am convinced that the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), who made an intervention earlier, promised the producers in his riding, to represent them here in parliament, to be their spokesman, to make claims for them, whether they are from St. Romuald, St. David or other places in his riding. And when the time comes to vote for $5 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk, the hon. member will bow to party discipline and vote as he is told to vote.

Mr. Guay: It is not true.

Mr. Caouette: He knows it—or else he will not be here to vote, if it is too difficult.

Mr. Guay: I never hide when it is time to vote, against you for instance.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lévis knows it. He said earlier that we are demagogues, that we practise demagoguery, and every time we attack the financial system, it is demogoguery. But every time the farmer is crushed, it is normal, let us forget about him. The farmer who paid $1,200 or $1,400 for a small farm tractor about ten years ago must pay today $4,500 or $5,000 for the same tractor. The farmer is faced with a financial system without a heart or soul; he is a member of an outcast social group throughout Canada, either in the east or in the west of the country.

Mr. Chairman, we will witness soon the conflict on the milk policy and there again it will be a monetary problem. The Minister of Finance will tell us: "I do not understand Social Credit". Does he understand the present system? He does not understand it any better. That is why it is difficult for him to understand Social Credit.

Mr. Chairman, at that time it was because I was speaking to the hon. member for Lévis; I knew that he could not understand.

Mr. Guay: You addressed the electors of Lévis and I won in spite of that.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Lévis is so afraid not to understand Social Credit, or if he is unable to, let him rise and explain the present system, if he understands it. I challenge him to prove that he understands it.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, without, I hope, offending the hon. member for Villeneuve and some of his colleagues and despite the fact that I am educated every minute that I listen to them, I wonder whether it is not time to remind ourselves that we are no longer on clause 2 but are on a specific clause of the bill and that if we are ever to get through the bill the rule of relevance should be made to apply.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are talking about the reserves of the Bank of Canada and their implications.

Mr. Lewis: That is what we are supposed to be talking about and not what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): We are trying to point out the wide range of these implications. I gather that some hon. members do not seem to understand us, but that is what we are talking about. We have a long way to go before some hon. members will understand us.

Mr. Lewis: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt as to what the hon. member for Mégantic will think of the suggestion that some of the discussion may not be directly relevant, but I say very seriously that unless we are to sit here until Christmas rather than rise for Easter surely we have arrived at the point in our debate when all of us should be kept to the particular provisions of the particular clause under discussion and should not be allowed to range all over the bill. In fact we have had two debates. First we had a debate on second reading. Then we had a debate, which was a second reading debate, on clause 2 during which all of us expressed our views. Now we are having a third debate similar to the debate on second reading during which we are again hearing views about the monetary and banking system. If we do not call a halt to this, we will be doing this useless educating of each other until doomsday.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the same point of order, section 72 deals with bank reserves and we know—and the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) knows it, but I do not know whether the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) does—that the bank reserve is what permits banks to create money and credit. And when we talk about creation of money and credit, we are dealing precisely with section 72, which permits such a thing. The hon. member for York South may think we are spending much time, but how many days did he make us lose by lingering over the question of a spy in British Columbia? When we talk of money, the most important thing for the economic life of people, socialists do not want to speak any more about it.

Mr. Lewis: Demagogy is over, is it not?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South, here is another one talking about demagogy. He would not want us to talk about the most important thing.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe we should say "nonsense" instead of "demagogy." It is over now.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South thinks we are spending too much time discussing what has to do with the creation of money, while they spend days and days on other subjects far less important than the one we are dealing with at the present time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman on the same point of order. The member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is afraid that consideration of Bill C-222 may go on until Christmas. He does not realize that the Canadian people will have to stick until 1977 with the same system, under the same coercion régime.

Furthermore, I will observe here that the member for York South, as well as his friends the Socialists put themselves in their true light and show their real financial philosophy. They are not interested in improving the financial system in order to put it at the disposal of the people. On this score, the New Democratic Party differs in no way from the Conservatives, nor the Liberals; all they want is to take their place; move over, that is all they say.

It is a good thing that the member for York South has risen majestically in support of Bill C-222, telling us that we should limit ourselves to the consideration of clause 72 and to the amendment which precisely deal with the monetary reserves which allow the expansion of credit by some individuals in Canada and not at all by the Bank of Canada. It is not the central bank which ensures the expansion of credit; it is the chartered banks. A moment ago I quoted the member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien). As stated in Hansard, page 13096, he said on February 15:

—However, due to the present state of our economy, we cannot act irresponsibly.

• (6.10 p.m.)

"Responsible", that means, let us get deeper into debt or increase taxes. And this comes after the high-sounding statements of the Minister of Finance: The government has only two ways of finding money in Canada. Two ways. Either by borrowing money or by collecting taxes. We borrow and then, we collect taxes to repay the loans and then, we borrow in order to distribute, through public works or other, to pay the interests on a tremendous national debt that Canada will never repay. Then, the minister has only one solution: borrowings and taxes.

We keep telling him to use the Bank of Canada. He replies that it would cause inflation. Would there be any more inflation if the Bank of Canada rather than chartered banks created credit? Let the minister tell us once and for all. Let us be told. The Bank of Canada could create debt-free credit without interest to finance the public sector. Would it cause inflation? Chartered banks charge interest on their expanded credit or on the credit they create, and that is inflation. But it is not when the Bank of Canada is involved, though. The minister knows it.

So the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche goes on:

There is one good point to that: the taxpayers will pay for the old age pension—

We were dealing with old age pensions.

From now on, when people see the platforms, they will understand that there is a direct relationship between the purse and the platform.

That statement is made in the house, but the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche would never have made it in his own constituency during the election campaign, because at the time it was said: We will increase your pensions even up to $125 a month, because the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has announced it in the maritimes. And it was stated: Without a tax increase. We shall save money. We shall save. We shall save.

It is always a matter of saving in peacetime. If the war broke out tomorrow, immediately, savings would be out of order and we would spend as much as we could to manufacture weapons. But to produce welfare in Canada, that is impossible. We do not have the financial means.

Now money does not grow on trees. No, Mr. Chairman. But the hon. member should tell us where it grows. It does not grow on firs or maples nor in Shawinigan, Rouyn or Montreal. Money grows in chartered banks. That is Bill C-222. And we are asked to approve reserves of 6.6 per cent instead of 8 per cent. That is what the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) stated earlier. He is right. But when the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said: "That would enable chartered banks to create immediately tomorrow an additional amount of $4 billion in Canada, without increasing the reserve by a single cent, without issuing a single cent of legal currency—whether it be a figure or a bank note it does not matter as long as it is illegal—he also asked: Who grants them that right? Bill C-222. Passed by whom? By the Canadian parliament, by the sovereign parliament which can decide the general economic future of Canada.

And we, the members, the minister, and the government who are about to give that vast power to a few individuals for a ten-year period.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot let Bill C-222 pass without objection. No. The Conservatives are silent. Earlier, I was asked: "When are you going to stop? You are worse than Mr. Blackmore in 1936, 1937, 1938. When are you going to stop talking about finance and the economic system?

Mr. Chairman, we of the Ralliement Créditiste, were elected precisely because we oppose that perfidious system, the present Canadian banking system which gives to a few individuals control of the economic life of the whole nation. All the social classes have to kowtow before the financial system. The banking system has the right to bring somebody into the world financially speaking tomorrow morning and to put him into bankruptcy the next morning.

Why do we witness today such a large number of bankruptcies in the province of Quebec as well as in other Canadian provinces—but it is even worse in Quebec because bank credit is cut off? Industrialists and business people are caught in a vise, they are forced to go into bankruptcy.

However, that is not what the bankers told the finance, trade and economic affairs committee. They told us what they had promised the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) to say: Allow us to expand; cut down our reserve requirements and raise our lending rate so that we may help further the small-wage earners, lend them more money. That will enable us to control further the government or parliament, as we do at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, are we going to accept such a policy? Promises were made in the parliamentary committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, but do you believe that bankers will put them into practice later on?

As I said before, these people have the power to lend us an umbrella when the sun is shining, but, when it rains, when economic conditions are precarious, the umbrella is snatched away and we are left stark naked, and defenseless. That is the financial system we have, controlled by people who have no parliamentary power.

We have been elected to serve the Canadian people, not to serve the banking system. Through Bill C-222, the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and the government are beginning to bow to the financial powers—and hang the constituents, be they in the minister's riding or anywhere else.

Mr. Chairman, the member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) was quite right when he asked the minister earlier: "If you do not understand Social Credit, how come you say that it will cause inflation and that Social Credit is dangerous. Don't you feel that our present system is much more dangerous? It has been tried and found wanting".

People fear inflation. Social Credit does not control the present government, and yet we have inflation, rising costs, rising interest rates and a general upward trend. We have inflation indeed. Is it because of Social Credit? The minister does not understand Social Credit, he is afraid of inflation caused by Social Credit.

Let him look at the present system, let him read attentively Bill C-222 which was drafted by the minions of finance in the hope of having it adopted here for the next ten years. Having adopted it, well, we shall still be the victims of this financial system all over Canada. We can change it, we can amend it. This does not mean that the bookkeeping system, the accounting system used by the banks is bad, no. It is good, but let us have this system operate for the benefit of the Canadian people, not of a few bank managers who number, say, 30 or 40 in all Canada against 20 million inhabitants.

And when I hear members like the one for Matapédia-Matane say: Social Credit is dangerous. I became a Creditist in 1939, that is 28 years ago. The member for Matapédia-Matane is an economist, as well as the member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne). I was never afraid to discuss finance and banking with them. I do not pretend to be an economist, but I know for sure that two plus two equal four. I know how to count, I know what is a balance sheet of a company and a balance sheet of a government. But I am also aware that if private companies were administered in Canada in the same manner that the government is administered, everybody would be bankrupt tomorrow morning. I have no doubt about that.

• (6:20 p.m.)

The minister does not know it. He says their hands are tied. Here we are: there is no other way: borrowing and taxes. A time comes when they say: "We cannot borrow, we must tax". They tax to the limit, that is to the point where people are crushed by taxation. Such is the present situation.

They talk of new houses financed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Canadians cannot pay $125, $150 a month; everybody knows that. We should not wonder if houses are not erected: we lack financial means; and it is the same in every field, whether it be agriculture, labour or construction. It is always the same interrogation mark, the same problem: money, money, money.

Our Minister of Finance has not yet found the means and he refuses to admit that we should pass an amendment to this Bill C-222, so that the Bank of Canada may create all the necessary credits for expansion and growth of the Canadian economy. Later, when credit is in circulation, whether it is on deposit with the chartered banks, whether the chartered banks lend such deposits, whether the chartered banks do business with the government or with private industry, it does not matter, but let new credit come out of the Bank of Canada. That is what Créditistes demand. It is there to be used and it is the purpose for which it was established.

So, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance should not be surprised; we will insist as much as we can to have this Bank Act amended so as to serve the Canadian people instead of the bank directors. Let this be clear, let the minister understand it perfectly.

Let us have no more thoughtless statements on the principles of Social Credit. If nothing better can be found to say than "demagogues", "demagogy", "stirring up the people", etc., that is now an old story, it is old-fashioned. We have had our fill of all that. We know what we want. We know where we are going. Three American presidents took the financial system to task. These people were surely as intelligent as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada and as intelligent as any of us. When Lincoln said:

> I have two enemies: The Army of the South in front of me and the finance behind me. Of the two, the one behind is the most dangerous.

It is still true today, in Canada.

John Adams was right when he said:

> Credit should be controlled by the government... Confusion and anguish in the United States stem less from the deficiencies of the constitution and confederation than from the ignorance of credit, currency and its circulation.

We are experiencing exactly the same situation today and it must be changed. As I said earlier, we have been elected for that. We are going to fight for that, regardless of political affiliations. We believe in Social Credit and not in the present financial system.

And the Social Credit would serve the people to nobody's prejudice. Bankers would indeed keep on living, rich bankers would still be rich, millionaire bankers would remain millionaires, but at least the Canadian people would be assured of the vital minimum, of a decent living in a country as rich as Canada. That is why the Ralliement Créditiste and its members are fighting both inside and outside parliament. I insist that the Minister of Finance and Receiver General give us every detail about this system which exploits all social classes, including the central government.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. There is an amendment before the house and perhaps the committee will permit me to read it now. Moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West:

That clause 72 of Bill C-222 be amended by:
(1) In subclause (1) (a), deleting the word "twelve" and substituting the word "eight".
(2) In subclause (2) by deleting in subparagraph (a) thereof all the words after the words "months and" in line 28.

Perhaps the committee will also permit me at this time to announce the proceedings on the adjournment motion: The hon. member for Kootenay West, Health and Welfare; the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe, Agriculture; the hon. member for Mackenzie, Grain.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I ought to say a word about the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West which is the subject of our debate at the present time. I know my hon. friends in the Social Credit party and the Ralliement Créditistes and the hon. member for Lapointe are very anxious that we should proceed with this bill as expeditiously as possible, and I hope that they will permit the committee to express its views upon the proposals we are making. I am sure they understand that this is how our democracy works, and I think we all agree that they are having a wonderful opportunity in this debate to express their views and to make the people of this country and of their own constituencies aware of the difference that separates them from us.

There are two parts to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Some of his propositions were put forward last Friday and some of them today. On the last occasion he was speaking particularly about the power to vary the reserves. It is significant that the Bank of Canada has had the power to vary these reserves during the last ten years and still retains the power to vary them.

Mr. Lambert: Down from 8 per cent?

Mr. Sharp: No, between 8 and 12 per cent. These powers have been there during periods when, if the bank had felt that this was a proper way of tightening up the money supply, it would certainly have increased the reserve requirements. However, it chose not to do so. I believe this reinforces the arguments advanced before the committee by the governor of the bank to the effect that the necessary influence upon the money supply can in fact be exercised more delicately and in more timely and equally effective fashion by varying the amount of cash in the system rather than by varying the primary reserve requirements.

On this point, Mr. Chairman, I am very much like other members of the house. I have to be guided by the experience of the governor of the bank who has operated the system now for a great many years, if I may say so—I am sure I speak for a great many members of this house other than perhaps hon. members who espouse the Social Credit doctrine—with some skill. It is his view that he can influence the cash reserves of the system and the operations of the banks more effectively by varying the amount of cash in the system than by varying the reserves.

I accept that judgment and I commend it to the house. I have heard no evidence to the contrary. I know the hon. member for Edmonton West cited the example of the United States, where the power to vary reserve requirements is contained in the legislation. I have spoken about this to the governor of the bank and it has not induced him to change his views in any way. He said: "It may be appropriate in the United States to exercise an influence in this way upon the money supply. In Canada my experience has been that we can exercise the necessary influence to better advantage by varying the amount of cash than by varying the primary reserves". He said: "If I had thought otherwise I would have used the powers that are now contained in the act."

This was the first of the points made by the hon. member on Friday before the conclusion of the debate. I have been contemplating my answer since and that is the substance.

Today he has moved an amendment. I am not sure whether it accomplishes the purpose he has in mind but it has the effect of reducing the minimum reserves from 12 per cent to 8 per cent in so far as they relate to demand deposits. This would have the effect of reducing the over-all reserve requirements on the basis of the present distribution of deposits down to a little over 5 per cent.

The view of the governor of the bank is that this is too low a ratio for him to operate monetary policy effectively. Even in the amendments now before us as reported by the committee and included in the bill the ratio is reduced from 8 per cent to less than 7 per cent. I gather that on the present distribution of deposits the ratio is not 6.6 but a little less than that, probably closer to 6.3 per cent. So while the bill proposes some over-all reduction in the proportion of reserves, and is in line with the recommendations of the Porter commission, it does not go, and I do not think it should go, so far as to reduce the effective level of minimum reserves down to something over 5 per cent.

I know that the banks would like to have the maximum amount of freedom. I believe that we in this house should also have regard to over-all requirements of public policy and be governed more by the experience of the Bank of Canada in operating the monetary system to the advantage of the public as well as of the banks. I am not saying that the banks are motivated only by selfish considerations, but I am more impressed by the arguments put forward by the governor of the bank that a ratio of 5 per cent is too low for him to operate the monetary system of this country effectively. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I find the proposed amendment unacceptable. Neither do I feel that we should go a step farther and make the reserves flexible as well as lower.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: May I ask a question? Would the Minister of Finance tell us what is at the back of the decision to split the reserves on the basis of 12 per cent and 4 per cent. As is stated in the bill the 12 per cent applies to current liabilities, the other amount to deposit liabilities. Was this decision asked for by the banks or was it suggested by Mr. Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada? That is my first question.

Second, the 4 per cent figure would obviously let the banks expand their credit. They could expand up to 12 times their deposits, keeping 4 per cent at the back. Was it the thought of the Minister of Finance that by changing this ratio we would get more money in circulation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the change in reserve requirements was partly recommended by the Porter commission which said that the ratio should be reduced from 8 per cent to 7 per cent. The trend toward a lower reserve thus was recommended by the Porter commission.

The particular form of the reserve is the result of recommendations of the Bank of Canada which believes that it would be more suitable to Canadian conditions to have the reserves based partly on demand deposits and partly on notice deposits.

Mr. Kindt: I have one other point to raise. What were the feelings of the banks with respect to this matter? How did they participate in the suggestion? What are their feelings with respect to this particular ratio.

Mr. Sharp: The banks were not very enthusiastic about this change. It was not done in the interests of the banks; it was done in the interests of giving the Bank of Canada more effective control over the money supply. The banks, I am sure, would have preferred a continuation of a simple ratio at a lower level still. It was the judgment of the governor of the Bank of Canada, which I accept, that it would serve public interest better if the reserve ratios were based upon a differential rate between demand deposits and notice deposits somewhat higher than that which the banks had asked for.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there is only one comment I wish to make to the minister. I am sure he would not want to leave the wrong impression. I gather, with regard to the proposal I made as to the variable reserve rate, that he would not think I was proposing this as a sole alternative to, shall we say, the methods now used by the governor. I was suggesting something as a supplement, something more in the hands of the governor. There could be occasions when it might be preferable to work under the particular type of variation I have suggested than under the open market transactions that the Bank of Canada must carry on, as it normally does. That is what I was suggesting, and I was not suggesting it as an exclusive alternative.

I would also make a further correction. The present variable rate from 8 per cent to 12 per cent does not give the governor permission to go below the statutory 8 per cent, the minimum set. My proposal was that there should be this permission.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the second part of the proposal contained in the bill of course is to provide for a secondary reserve; that is the added element of flexibility of which we have not talked on this occasion. But it is contained in the bill. In other words, when the governor of the bank had to make a recommendation to me as to the best form of controlling the money supply he recommended to me a system of fixed minimum reserves based upon a proportion of deposits, demand and notice, and the putting into the statutory form of a secondary reserve to replace the agreements that the Bank of Canada has had with the chartered banks in the recent past. In this bill there is a well rounded and flexible system.

Mr. Lambert: All the way up.

Mr. Sharp: The system has this advantage. Whereas if you vary the cash reserves you may sometimes be having an enormous effect upon the earnings of the chartered banks either up or down, the money supply can be influenced through the secondary reserves, with only a marginal effect on the earnings of the chartered banks.

Mr. Lambert: With the greatest respect, I still feel that the minister has missed the point of the proposal I put forward. At no time did I suggest that the variable rate should be above 8 per cent. We have that as a primary reserve. The secondary reserve is now being enshrined. All I say is that controls breed controls. That is my opinion of that.

What I should have liked to see is the additional facility open to the governor, in that he could move downwards from the primary rate—the primary rate of 8 per cent, 12 per cent, or whatever it is. This facility is not open to the governor at the present time; he is not authorized to go below 8 per cent. In the proposed act the rates are to be fixed at 12 per cent and 4 per cent and there are no deviations up or down. The government can move with respect to the secondary statutory reserve—perhaps one should call it the statutory secondary reserve—but that is a movement upward. Then, of course, he could come back to the former level. The flexibility is all in one direction, and that is the point I want to get across.

As an alternative tool I should like to see some downward flexibility in the primary reserves, rather than having that flexibility only in the secondary reserves. I do not think it is right to say that the governor had that power and he has not used it, and that therefore we are not impressed with it. The governor has never had the power to do this.

Mr. Kindt: May I ask the Minister of Finance a question? Is it not true that the 8 per cent in effect now against reserves, and I refer to deposits, controls primarily the amount of credit a bank can extend? It must keep 8 per cent against deposits. A loan is made to an individual and it comes back as a deposit. Of course 8 per cent must be kept against that deposit.

The 8 per cent is reflected in the amount of credit which can be extended by the banks. Reducing it to 4 per cent will double the credit which theoretically the banks are able to provide. It may not work out this way in practice, but the lending facilities of the chartered banks will certainly be increased tremendously. How does the minister explain this? What is the answer? Is it the thought of Mr. Rasminsky that all this additional credit should be in the hands of the banks on the assumption that the banks will take care of whatever need for credit exists? I should like to hear the minister's ideas on this subject.

Mr. Sharp: I think the best way of answering would be to say that these recommendations were made at a time when it was clear that monetary expansion had to be restrained. In other words, these changes are being made, not for the purpose of influencing the amount of money in circulation at the present time but to change the form of control over the money supply by relating it, not as in the past to 8 per cent of total deposits, but to 12 per cent of demand deposits and 4 per cent of notice deposits. The combined effect is somewhere between 6 and 7 per cent. It does indicate some reduction in the amount of reserve which needs to be kept against deposits.

If the hon. member will look at the clause under discussion he will see that there are transitional arrangements. In other words, we move in stages, month by month from the 8 per cent requirement down to the new minimum requirement, as provided for in clause 72(2) paragraphs (a) and (b). However, it would be the object of the Bank of Canada to exercise whatever might be the appropriate restraint or stimulation of the money supply as economic conditions dictate.

In other words, it is not the purpose of this amendment to enlarge the money supply or to restrict it. It is intended to change the way in which the Bank of Canada may influence the amount of the money supply. It is certainly not the purpose of this bill to enlarge the money supply. After all, the bill was brought in at a time when the governor of the Bank of Canada was concerned, as I was, about the money supply expanding too rapidly. He looked upon this bill as constituting a different form of control over the total volume of money in circulation, to be exercised in the light of economic conditions at the time the bank is making its decisions, operating in the open market or otherwise.

Mr. Kindt: In order to bring about an understanding between two individuals who are discussing a monetary problem it is necessary, before anything else, to define the terms used. What does the minister mean by "money supply"? Is it currency; is it money given by the Bank of Canada to the people? Is it hard currency or is it paper notes? If I go to the bank and borrow $1,000 I simply get a $1,000 credit on the books. I do not take any money out with me. I write cheques against my credit. What is the money supply? I think we must define that before it is possible to understand the minister's meaning.

Mr. Sharp: I have explained this on a number of occasions, both in committee and in the house. The money supply is the amount of currency, deposits in chartered banks and, to some extent, deposits in other institutions, against which cheques may be written. It is the total amount of money available for circulation whether through cheques or as currency.

Mr. Schreyer: Listening to the exchanges between the hon. member for Edmonton West and the Minister of Finance I was not sure whether the difference between them was one of degree or of kind. I gather that in any case it is a minor one.

My first reaction on looking at clause 72, and in particular at the provision for reducing the reserve requirements, was one of opposition. But I suppose a case can be made for reducing the reserve requirements, if for no other reason than to conduct an experiment under conditions of control. I think the decision to reduce the requirement by this small amount from 8 per cent to 6½ per cent is not an imprudent one. I am a little puzzled by the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He seems to think that the clause does not allow for sufficient flexibility. It seems to me that the provision is such as to allow for the flexibility he believes to be desirable. The wording says clearly that the reserve requirement "Shall not be less than" and so on. Then it specifies what the minimum limit shall be. Beyond this there is, of course, room for discretionary judgment and variation on the part of the money management authorities.

Speaking more from feeling and instinct than from knowledge I cannot escape the impression that to the extent we reduce the reserve requirements we are giving to the banks greater discretionary power, and impinging upon the money management power of the central bank or of the public authority.

I see this kind of inverse relationship existing and I am not sure I like it one bit. However, as I say, the provision set out in the clause seems to be prudent enough. I look upon it as a kind of experiment within control, and on this basis I find it possible to support the proposal to reduce the requirements.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Since I have not taken an opportunity earlier in this debate to speak about money management generally, I should like to take a few minutes in which to comment on some of the statements which have been made in this chamber in connection with this subject, particularly by those speaking for the Social Credit party and the Ralliement Créditistes. I am not one who has ever ridiculed their monetary theories or taken an opportunity to make fun of some of their basic propositions. Like the Minister of Finance I must say I really cannot pretend to understand all of Social Credit theory, but unlike him I have not, as I said, felt the urge to tilt at Social Credit theory with sword in hand. I believe it is possible to effect an expansion in the money supply without necessarily engaging a debt creating process. I do not want to get too involved with the immediate concept of debt creating but, after a considerable amount of reading and having interviewed some people who are in positions of authority respecting our economy and banking, I have come to the inescapable conclusion that, within limitation, it is possible, feasible, and practical to effect an increase in the money supply without necessarily bringing about an increase in debt.

What I mean is that it is simply no more inflationary to have the Bank of Canada take up government securities directly than it is for the chartered banking system to take them up. It is often said that one reason why we cannot entertain the prospect of the Bank of Canada taking up government securities directly is that this would have a direct inflationary effect, but the fact is that every time the chartered banks take up government securities there is an increase in the money supply.

Why should one kind of increase be inflationary and the other not? After persistent questioning on this point I have come to one hard bit of information: The main reason why there has been a reluctance or refusal on the part of central banks to take up government securities directly is that it would be psychologically disadvantageous. That is not a very satisfactory answer to hear, but it is the only one I have been able to get.

Before going to the point where I would be prepared to endorse the main body of Social Credit monetary thinking, I must enter one major caveat with respect to it. I do not apologize for taking the time of members of the committee in this way because this matter is one of the most central, crucial problems that face governments or any body of people elected to fill positions of public responsibility and trust. The one caveat I have to enter is that even if it were a matter of deliberate and conscientious government policy, and of central bank policy, to have central banks take up more and more government securities, this in itself would not ensure that the economy would progress without inflation and without interruption, because very often the problem is not one of inadequate supply of money or loanable funds. Very often it is a case of maldistribution of money and loanable funds within the economy, of a wrong distribution as between one industrial sector and another.

I can make reference to a specific case in point. Last year and to date there has been widespread consensus that we are facing a crisis in the residential construction industry and in housing. Many people are of the impression that this is due to a chronic shortage of loanable funds in the economy or of tight money. There may be some element of justification for this position, but I think it can also be said that it is not so much a case of shortage of loanable funds as the fact that existing loanable funds were being lent out to sectors of the economy that were more profitable. Last year, while we had a dramatic increase in industrial and commercial construction, we had a falling off in residential construction.

Very often an increase in the money supply is not what is required. Very often what is needed is a selective channeling of supplies of money, loanable funds, purchasing power—call it what you want—into particular sectors of our economy. At the present time when we have this crisis in housing and residential construction I submit that nothing short of massive injections of funds by direct channeling into residential construction will deal with the problem effectively.

To increase the money supply indiscriminately in the context of today would not necessarily deal with the problem of the downturn in residential construction starts and would, in fact, add to the problem of inflation. This is because these added funds would be attracted to higher return commercial construction and away from housing. So there must be channeling. We are really facing somewhat of a problem of inflation. Even though many of the indices show a turning away from the spectre of inflation which we faced last year, the problem still lurks with us and is around the corner at all times.

As I say, the solution is not as simple as merely advocating an increase in the money supply and saying this will cure the problem, because attendant with it much thought must be given to matters of distribution, allocation, and so on.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I agree in part with those who advocate a greater degree of public, political or parliamentary control over our monetary system. I believe we have such control in large part now, but I have misgivings when I see provisions in this legislation to reduce the reserve requirements on the part of our commercial banks and, as I say, the ratio there seems to be an inverse one. The less the amount of reserves which commercial banks are required to hold with the central bank, the more is the reduction in public or parliamentary control and management within our monetary system.

Now I would like to make passing reference to the recommendation put before the committee just the other day by my colleague from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I believe we should endorse a policy of some experimentation in our monetary and banking system. That is one reason why we are supporting this clause of the bill. There is nothing wrong with experimentation, if it is prudent and conducted under conditions of close control. In like vein the hon. member put forward the proposition that the government should give consideration to the feasibility and desirability of owning and operating a commercial bank, and that it consider the desirability of having one of our eight or nine chartered banks publicly owned.

• (7:00 p.m.)

There is nothing rash or imprudent about that. Admittedly it would be a matter of experimentation. It certainly is in the public interest that we have a degree of experimentation in order to find out which innovations and which approaches are in fact the best ones and the ones most likely to be most beneficial so far as the public good is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Seven o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: It is seven o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Some hon. members are calling it seven o'clock. Perhaps I should remind the committee that last week when the house and committee did suspend sittings during this hour, this was done pursuant to an order of the house made on March 3. That order expired last Friday. Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I should like to move that we rise until eight o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, there was an understanding that we would rise from seven o'clock until eight o'clock. I think that is agreeable.

I wonder whether it might be agreed that the question be dealt with before seven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have an inquiry for the minister before the question is put. Does he think that clause 72 weakens or strengthens the position of the Minister of Finance in the matter of influencing monetary policy.

Mr. Sharp: It strengthens; otherwise it would not have been proposed.

Amendment (Mr. Lambert) negatived: yeas 6, nays 43.

The Chairman: Shall clause 72 carry?

Mr. Latulippe: No.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the understanding that the sitting of the house be suspended until eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the house would now agree to resume the business interrupted a few minutes ago in committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222 respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee will resume its work at eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

[Mr. Latulippe.]

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: When the committee rose shortly after seven o'clock clause 72 was being considered.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words about clause 72 with regard to bank reserves, and then move an amendment.

When the Bank of Canada was established in 1934, a five-line section provided that the Bank of Canada had to maintain a reserve of at least 5 per cent of the value of deposit liabilities required in Canadian dollars. Following the 1944 decennial review, a 12 line paragraph said the same thing: "a 5 per cent reserve". Following the decennial review of 1954, the 5 per cent reserve rate was increased to 8 per cent in a section containing 37 lines. In 1967, after a decennial review which has lasted 13 years, since it is being made this year instead of in 1964, that same currency reserve takes up 97 lines and involves various types of rates for several kinds of deposits in the same banks. It is beyond understanding, Mr. Chairman.

The amendments of the 1934 and 1954 decennial reviews were very easy to understand, consisting of only a few lines and fixing the reserve at 5 per cent in one case and at 8 per cent, in the other. People could then understand something.

We now have a 12 per cent reserve, a 4 per cent reserve, another 8 per cent reserve and still another of 8 per cent, so many reserves that it is practically impossible to understand anything. I wonder why things have to be so complicated when it would be so easy to simplify them. It is practically incomprehensible. One must have a university degree to understand something and still, many with university degrees fail to understand anything.

The hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) said earlier that financiers or bankers who appeared before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs should have given me a course in political economy or financial economy. I think that several members opposite would need such a course. I feel the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane himself has still something to learn, even though he is an economist, because he does not have a clue about the whole system.

As a matter of fact, the present system is so complicated that something should surely be changed. We do not have to accept such situations and complications. We should explain those things as simply as possible. Whether it be a rate of 8, 5 or 10 per cent, we should know that it is a rate and only a figure. There is no need for ten figures to complicate the system. It is so complicated that even experts, such as the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane, find it difficult to understand. Many people should take these courses, because you can take my word for it, the more it goes, the more complicated it gets and the more difficult it is to understand. The population is being held in ignorance, people are prevented from understanding anything in all this and the whole truth is being hidden from the population of Canada, as far as financial affairs are concerned. And the great economists such as my hon. friend opposite, who are supposed to do something to enlighten the population, are doing everything they can to keep them in the depth of ignorance, the deepest in the country.

So, Mr. Chairman, I say to the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane you have responsibilities, and I am asking you to honour them, because the population will not long tolerate private preserves as in the past, it will not tolerate things the people should have known and that no one knows today.

Mr. Chairman, the same experts who have had classical education and taken university courses do not understand anything any longer; they do not know what to believe about cash reserves, about bank reserves; the more complicated it gets, the more confusing it becomes for the people who have no business understanding anything about this medley of bank acts, particularly when it is desirable to prove that the banks are not creating either money or credit.

So, Mr. Chairman, I move: That section 72 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"72. The bank shall maintain a cash reserve in the form of notes of, and deposits in Canadian currency with, the Bank of Canada.

Such reserve shall not be less than ten per cent of all its deposit liabilities in respect of all its depositors, for the first year of the present Act, and shall be raised by ten per cent each year, thereafter, until it becomes one hundred per cent of its deposit liabilities.

Such reserve shall be calculated on the monthly average of the bank deposit liabilities."

Mr. Chairman, by passing this amendment, we would allow chartered banks to finance private enterprise and enable the government to assume their responsibilities; we would enable the government to give the Bank of Canada what it needs to assume its own responsibilities and then the Bank of Canada would finance public projects and with interest-free money. When we talk about interest-free money, we know that there are going to be administration costs, but we know that those administration costs, for instance, will not be like under the present system. Within the space of a dozen years, we have doubled the capital and this is nonsense.

When the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) says there will be administration costs, this will not change anything. The administration will not cost twice as much, if we know how to administer.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move this amendment. I have copies of it here, if someone wishes to send them to the Chair. I read it a while ago, so I do not have to read it again.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: It is moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac that clause 72 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

72. The bank shall maintain a cash reserve in the form of notes of, and deposits in Canadian currency with, the Bank of Canada.

Such reserves shall not be less than 10 per cent of all its deposit liabilities in respect of all its depositors, for the first year of the present act, and shall be raised by 10 per cent each year, thereafter, until it becomes 100 percent of its deposit liabilities.

Such reserve shall be calculated on the monthly average of the bank deposit liabilities.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Talk it out.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I will not talk out the amendment of my own party.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Are you going to speak for or against the amendment?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, in the past I have seen, on the other side of the house, members of the party in power speak against the amendment presented. In the present case, however, the party to which I belong does not compel me to speak for or against an amendment; you may be sure of that. Since I have been elected to the House of Commons thanks to the good sense of my constituents, I am trying to act with the same good sense. Sometimes, it is the reverse on the other side of the house. Indeed, we witness obvious inconsistencies. In any event, I state for the benefit of those who doubt it, that I favour the amendment.

The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) has precisely suggested a simplification of the matter, and his amendment is, after all, rather simple, practical and logical.

If I am referring to it, it is because I understand it. I do not know exactly what the Minister of Finance has stated following a question put by the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) on March 10, but he answered:

[English]

The minister said:

I have been trying for most of my adult life to understand Social Credit, I have not succeeded very well. But what has puzzled me even more is how anyone could accept these doctrines.

The hon. member for Cariboo spoke about that a few moments ago. I do not understand how the minister can condemn anything which he does not understand. Before approving or condemning something one should know what it is all about, if he does not wish to act in an irresponsible way. Sometimes I think that the minister has a tendency to do just that.

I also believe that ridicule is a way of hiding total ignorance. We have often seen it happen that when someone does not understand a principle or a doctrine he does the ostrich act and hides his head in the sand, or else ridicules it as a form of defence. In such a case what else can he expect but a kick in the posterior? The minister says he does not understand the Social Credit doctrine. If that is so, then obviously he also cannot accept it. Of course it is his privilege to reason that way but this is certainly not my way of thinking.

The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac moved an amendment whereby the bank shall maintain a 10 per cent reserve which shall be gradually raised by 10 per cent per year until its deposit liabilities become 100 per cent. By this process the operations of the bank would be restrained to a certain extent and a totally new credit would be created. Under the clause as it stands at present the bank can maintain 4 per cent to 8 per cent reserves in different sectors, which allows the chartered banks to give credit up to approximately $4 billion without requiring larger savings deposits.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

Not too long ago, in 1965, I was called a prophet by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Davenport. I made the prophecy, and I am still here, but he has changed his seat. My prophecy was made in May of 1965 and anybody who wishes can look it up and check it. At that time the minister lowered the reserves from 8 per cent to 7 per cent, thus allowing the chartered banks to extend loans up to the sum of $1,428 million. This prevented the government from restricting credit in May and early June of 1965. The government planned to have an election in the fall following which credit restrictions would be imposed. If the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane would care to look back to the time in 1965 he would see that there was an election on November 8, 1965 immediately followed by credit restrictions.

In the months of May, June and July the government even cut down expenditures on government construction in Montreal. It tightened the screws wherever it could. This measure gave the bank more power to operate for another two or three months without having to ask for a return on some of the loans it had made. The situation maintained itself until November when the election took place. There was no reason for the election because the government had not been overthrown at that time.

That is what I prophesied in May of 1965 and the former minister of finance called me a prophet. I did not want to be a prophet. All I did was to think logically on the basis of a system which had operated in the same way for the past 40 or 50 years. It will not change today. The present system is following a definite pattern. Some amendments or changes will have to be brought in before the situation can change. At present we live from one crisis to another. We have a high rate of unemployment, credit restrictions, and wide fluctuations in our economy. At one time we have a period of inflation and at another time a period of recession. Then, we have a boom period, but it is fairly short. Normally the country is alternating from one to the other. What is wrong, Mr. Chairman? I feel that we should try to look more deeply into the financial policies of the country. This Bill No. C-222, governs the financial policies of this country. The minister introduces this bill and when it is passed the financial institutions must operate according to its provisions. It will permit the financial institutions, the banking institutions of the country, to operate for the next ten years. Before we can have another discussion of banking policies in Canada, we will have to wait until 1977.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I believe it is time we looked at this question. There is one aspect of this policy into which the government has not looked deeply enough. Last Friday one of our members made a speech concerning the public sector and private sector of our economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, there are two sides or rather two sectors in our economy; the private and the public sectors.

I might say to the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) that I do not object in the least to the banks being allowed to charge interest on their loans. It is their privilege. By lending money they help and we must pay for goods and services.

Mr. Tremblay: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Certainly.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, has the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) calculated what interest rate chartered banks would have to ask the public if they were to keep reserves of 100 per cent, either in bank notes or in deposits with the central bank?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): They could operate like the caisse populaire. Let me say this to the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay): In fact, if chartered banks were to have non-usurious interest rate, a normal interest rate, from which the people of this country would not suffer, then if the bank did not manage, that would be the least of my worries.

In private enterprise, when things do not work out successfully, it is because the goods or services are useless.

Nowadays, the Canadian taxpayer or citizen has to go and kneel before the financial or banking institutions because their system does not allow him to live otherwise. That is where the problem lies.

If we had a system in which human beings are shown some respect, chartered banks could exist if there was need for them. They say themselves that they are private undertakings operated to make profits. If they did not make a profit, I am sure they would be intelligent enough to close shop. And I would not be too unhappy about it.

However, there might be more competition than we have now. Why? Because the individual would not be caught by the throat, or constantly strangled. He could not be told: Go that way or else you're done for. That is what our present system does.

If we could choose between the private and the public sectors, but that is not possible.

I would say to the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane that if he planted potatoes in the school yard, he would be told: You, listen, your potatoes, your onions, your garden, they do not belong to you. As an individual, no, collectively, yes. Then, if you do not have the right to plant potatoes in the school yard, how is it that they have the right to take your savings, as an individual, to pay for a public undertaking? And charge interest to you for a thing belonging to the whole society.

Why not use what is a public property, a public credit, that is the Bank of Canada, to finance the public sector of the economy. I have no objection to private enterprise being financed by private credit or private banks, with interest, because the people have something to do with production.

There is a productive field and a non-productive field; the service sector which is the public field.

A highway produces nothing. It can help the private sector to produce more, but the highway itself produces nothing. After its construction, it starts to depreciate until it disappears completely.

Yet, when depreciation starts, interest begins on the other side of the balance. Ultimately we have a road which has no value at all but there is the capital to repay, and interest which multiplied, which doubled, tripled, depending on circumstances, during 20 or 30 years of payment.

The hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) quoted the example of the Jacques Cartier bridge which was built in that way. After a given amount had been paid for the construction of the Jacques Cartier bridge, it was again paid for in interest. There is still interest owing, as well as the cost of the whole bridge. And that is not a productive sector, it is a public service. Public affairs are financed by interest, capital and money taken from the private sector. Why does the government, through the Bank of Canada, not finance school boards, which are also governments? Why does the Bank of Canada not finance municipal governments, provincial governments and all that comes under the jurisdiction of these governments, at all the different levels of economy, whether municipal, educational, provincial or federal?

There is a public sector, and it is as ridiculous to ask the private sector to finance public affairs as to ask the public sector to finance private enterprise. Let us distinguish between the two. We would at least then clip the wings of some financiers who profit at all levels.

At the moment, the federal government, which is a public body, has to finance itself by taxing the small private investors in the country. The economy of the country is now completely based upon the taxpayers, the small investor. He is the one who bears all the burden. The small worker has to bear the consequences of all that happens at different levels in the economic life of the country.

When the government borrows money on which interest has to be paid, it signs a debt for each Canadian citizen. That is not the way things should be; the system should not work like that.

Mr. Chairman, if the banks operate, fine. I have nothing against banks lending money. What I hold against the hon. minister and the government is that they give these chartered banks almost unlimited powers, greater even than those of the government itself. But why? Why give this group of nine chartered banks and their directors complete control over our economy?

[English]

We cannot permit these conditions to continue. If they are given the green light they can go, but if there is a red light you can stop them for as long as you desire.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The amendment introduced by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac seeks to raise by 100 per cent the reserves of the chartered banks. This seems to be the principle adopted by the credit unions, though they espouse only 50 per cent, and charge the public a reasonable interest rate. At the moment the banks do not only lend the money they have, but they also create money.

In 1936 the government of the day prohibited the banks from making their own paper money and the Bank of Canada was given the sole right to issue currency. There is in circulation $3 billion and there is a purchasing power of $21 billion. How do we account for this difference of $18 billion when there has only been minted or printed $3 billion?

The minister admitted in committee that the chartered banks were given certain privileges in order to create credit. This is what I am opposed to. This is the prerogative of the Bank of Canada. The task of every member of this house is not to place more power in the hands of the private institutions, the affairs of which the people do not control. The government is responsible for the fiscal and monetary policies of Canada. If it does not control monetary policy it will place into the hands of private organizations the control of the economy of this country, which is what I am objecting to. The minister knows that this is not to the advantage of the Canadian people. The bankers themselves admitted in committee that they were profit making institutions, and not operating purely to the advantage of the Canadian people. In such circumstances how can you place the total economy in the hands of private institutions which are working for their own benefit?

We ask these questions of the minister but do not receive the answers. He says that he cannot control this situation. Why does the minister not admit that it is the banks that control the situation? Because this bill will give them that control. This house will not consider any further revision for another ten years, and if we do not take action today we will be in exactly the same position in ten years time.

I do not agree with the suggestion that the banks are in financial straits. A visit to any town will reveal that in the best located part is to be found a chartered bank. Take for example the present Bank of Canada building, the bank of the Canadian people, and compare it with the Royal Bank on Sparks Street. Prosperity shows. Let us look at the fantastic size of the chartered banks.

The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac talked of hidden inner reserves. There are six or seven different kinds of inner reserves which the banks are not obliged to call upon. How many Canadian private institutions are privileged to the point that that they can hide from the government and the income tax department different kinds of inner reserves? Why are they granted this privilege? Why should we grant that privilege? In comparison they are a mere handful of people. The Minister of Trade and Commerce could probably tell us about this because he was in the banking business himself.

If we confer upon these institutions further privileges by this bill, it may be good for business but it is not necessarily good for the people. We are not here to confer favours upon little individual businesses. We are here to tend the welfare of the people and to see they get action from the government. The job of the government is to produce the results that the Canadian people expect. If we require a better distribution of goods we will achieve it if we eliminate some of the controls in Bill No. C-222. But if the government maintains their ostrich-like position of putting their head in the sand and leaving their posteriors sticking out, in another ten years we will be faced with a system that as far as I am concerned has produced swings in the economy from recession all the way through to inflation.

I suggest that the minister take a close look at the situation and consider the amendment moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac limiting the powers of the chartered banks in the financial field. They should not be allowed to create credit and charge interest on that credit. This is within the province of the Canadian government, and if the government does not control the economy it can start to take measures to gain control. This would be one of the measures they should take. Therefore I hope the minister will consider carefully the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, it is not very often that we have a really brilliant new idea but I think we have one here, if only we can make it work. May I just read the amendment so that we know what we are doing:

[Translation]

The bank shall maintain a cash reserve in the form of notes of, and deposits in Canadian currency with, the Bank of Canada.

Such reserves shall not be less than 10 per cent of all its deposit liabilities in respect of all its depositors, for the first year of the present act, and shall be raised by 10 per cent each year, thereafter, until it becomes 100 per cent of its deposit liabilities.

Such reserve shall be calculated on the monthly average of the bank deposit liabilities.

[English]

If I can translate that correctly—I might point out that I have only the French copy—this is a really brilliant idea. We will get the chartered banks to undertake the job of collecting the savings of the Canadian people in the form of deposits and then make them hand them over to the central bank—a very sound idea. They collect the money and the central bank will lend it.

The only question in my mind is whether the chartered banks would go along with us on this score. They might all go broke, in which case I suppose we would take them over; and in that event we might get all of the 5,000 branches they have across the country at fire sale prices. But I doubt whether the government would go along with this. In fact, I doubt whether the Social Crediters will accept it, because I understand that they are great upholders of free enterprise and do not believe in government-owned banks. That is what I have been told a great many times.

This, Mr. Chairman, is really what the amendment means. We will ask the chartered banks to continue their task of collecting the savings of the Canadian people—savings upon which all advance in the economy must be based—and hand them over to our central bank, and the central bank will then lend the money.

• (8:40 p.m.)

That is a very sound idea, I think, if we could make it work. I notice that we have a representative of the Canadian Bankers Association in the gallery. I suggest to my hon. friend from Mégantic that he go up and consult him, and see whether he can sell this idea to the chartered banks. Then all our troubles would be over.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member who has just resumed his seat would have done better by remaining seated instead of rising to talk such nonsense. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) does not mean that the chartered banks should place on deposit with the Bank of Canada the savings they receive; it is not that at all. They could, like the caisses populaires and the credit unions of western Canada, lend on what they have in cash. That is what is meant by a 100 per cent reserve. If the Bank of Canada is empowered to multiply the money according to Canada's needs or to create money in this country, this does not mean that the chartered banks will disappear, but that any new credit will come from the Bank of Canada, which is the financial institution of the Canadian people. Once that money is in circulation, people do not keep it in their pockets; they place it on deposit in chartered banks, caisses populaires or savings banks. That is quite natural and the hon. member who has just resumed his seat does not need to have set the world on fire to understand that, or he will never understand anything in his life.

The Créditistes never suggested for a single moment, that the chartered banks should disappear. We suggest that chartered banks use what they have in their drawers. As the hon. member for Lapointe rightly said this afternoon, under this amendment to Bill No. C-222, and as soon as this legislation is passed, the chartered banks will have the right to issue $4 billion in additional credit, without having one dollar more in deposits. It seems to me that the socialist member who has been preaching against finance for 25 years, should know that by now. Is it realized, Mr. Chairman, that $4 billion loaned at 7 per cent, under the new rate, means that which we are placing in the hands of Canadian chartered banks $280 million a year in interest alone?

An hon. Member: Would you allow me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Would the hon. member permit a question? My French, as the hon. member may realize, is defective. Perhaps he would translate these words for me. Do these words, "jusqu'à ce qu'elle soit de 100 p. 100 de passif-dépôts" not mean, "until it is 100 per cent of deposit liabilities"?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, but it is not necessary for the bankers to deposit those reserves with the Bank of Canada. They have only to do what the caisses populaires and the credit unions in the hon. member's own province are doing. They do not ask the Bank of Canada to receive deposits from the public; not at all. We do not want to make laws to suit only the chartered banks, to support the creation of credit for the benefit of only a few individuals in our country. That is what we are up against, and that is what we are fighting. We are not asking the chartered banks to take deposits away from other banks and put them in the Bank of Canada. What would be the use of that?

We admit that the chartered banks have a role to play in our economy, and they will play it notwithstanding that they have 100 per cent reserves behind their loans, as we suggest in this amendment. That is what we mean, and nothing else.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is showing me that the representative from the Canadian Bankers' Association is in the gallery. I do not know where he is or who he is and I do not care either if he is a director, president or vice president. I am the representative of the electors of Villeneuve; I was elected to defend their interests here, to fight a financial system which crushes everyone, because even the government is not free to do as it pleases.

The power which the banks would have, as soon as this bill is passed, to create $4 billion more in credit, without increasing their deposits by a penny, and to lend it at 7 per cent to the federal government, would mean that the latter would pay $280 million per year in interest alone. Let us say that it is the whole banking system which would accept to lend $4 billion because it is not only the National Canadian Bank, the Provincial Bank, the Royal Bank and the Bank of Montreal. Together they would have the right to lend $4 billion in new credit. It is expansion, not creation. Expansion at 7 per cent; $280 million in interest annually. To the eight Canadian chartered banks, this would mean an additional $35 million a year. Not bad, and by simply providing that from now on total reserves will be 6.6 per cent instead of 8 per cent, instead of 12 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, that is the kind of control they would get out of the interest alone, each bank becoming a millionaire over a period of about four months, according to the terms the house is asked to include in Bill C-222.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac states that reserves shall be 10 per cent of deposits for the first year and shall be raised 10 per cent each year for ten years until it becomes 100 per cent of loans made. As I said a moment ago, if new credit is issued by the Bank of Canada, it does not remain as cash in the pockets of citizens but is deposited at the bank which can use the deposits, as do caisses populaires, to make loans to private enterprise, to individuals, to small borrowers. The chartered banks can do exactly as caisses populaires do, and I do not think it would affect the banks to any great extent. However, they would lose control over the issuance of credit, over the money supply and credit, because actually this control is in the hands of chartered banks, even if we are told that it is exercised by the Bank of Canada. It is definitely not, for the only function of the Bank of Canada is to cater to the branches of Canadian chartered banks. That is the function of the Bank of Canada. And nobody can tell me that the inspector of the Bank of Canada has the power to dictate to chartered banks, because that is not true. And I dare the Minister of Finance to say otherwise. Chartered banks have absolute control over all credit in Canada. The only function of the Bank of Canada is to wait on the chartered banks. As a matter of fact, we saw it in the committee. Officials of the Bank of Canada were careful not to contradict the Bankers' Association and representatives of the latter were careful not to contradict officials of the Bank of Canada.

Meanwhile, we do not know whether we are coming or going, so many whopping lies and all sorts of insults are being thrown at us. Why? To save the system. Care must be taken not to make the system known to the general public. The general public must be kept in the dark as far as big business is concerned. This is why, when we speak about Social Credit, the old political parties take turns raving against utopians, dreamers, preachers of obscure and foggy concepts.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, there goes a bright boy, shouting: "Hear, hear." What does he know about the present system. Nothing. What does he know about Social Credit? Nothing. But during the election campaign they wandered throughout Canada saying, "Social Credit is dangerous. Where has it been applied? It has never been applied anywhere". A very good reason indeed to continue to be victimized by the present financial system.

Mr. Chairman, everybody feels the effects of that system, when we suggest to the Minister of Finance to include in clause 72 of his bill the bank reserves which we are asking, to use the Bank of Canada to finance provinces, municipalities and school boards, we get nowhere. There is no doubt about it we are in a bad way.

Recently, the budget of the province of Quebec upped the sales tax from 6 to 8 per cent. Other items were increased to raise the provincial budget from $140 to $150 million. The Quebec premier was asked: "Have you any other alternative than the increase of the sales tax to 8 per cent? He answered "We had no choice. We had to increase those taxes."

When income tax was increased here to raise old age security from $120 to $240 per year, the Minister of Finance stated: "We have no other alternative. To increase old age pensions, we have to get it out of all the taxpayers' pockets." Well, now—

Same answer at the provincial, municipal and federal levels as well as from school boards. And the system is still grinding away.

Mr. Chairman, have we not had enough of these government's financial acrobatics? The minister told us the other day that we have enough money. We have a lot of money. I never heard him say that we lacked money. But when we ask him something for the provinces, then there is no money left.

When there are federal-provincial conferences in Ottawa, and the federal Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the deacons, the sub-deacons, besides this, are all in conference, what is being discussed? The possibility to give something to the provinces? No. They quibble about which of the two will be the first to dig into everybody's pocket. That is the major purpose of the federal-provincial conferences.

When the provinces ask for money, the Minister of Finance says to them: We have no money, we do not create any, we do not make any, we have no other alternative but to borrow and to tax.

Then the premier of Quebec blames Ottawa for having to increase taxes in his province at this time. If Ottawa gave us what we are entitled to, we would not have to increase taxes. All we hear is this: If Ottawa gave us what belongs to us, if Ottawa minded its own business, if Ottawa did this, if Ottawa did that.

Why does the Quebec government say that? Because it would have liked to see the federal government increase taxes instead of the provincial government, increase equalization payments in order to enable the province to finance itself and putting the blame concerning taxes on the federal government. You can understand that, it is as plain as that.

Mr. Guay: It is true.

Mr. Caouette: Of course it is true. But because the federal government does not want to shoulder the burden of a tax increase, then the province has to go ahead in order to repay the loans made by the former government, and the one before that, the loans made in New York, in Washington, in Boston, in Belgium, in Switzerland, in France, throughout the world; a reimbursement has to be made even to British Columbia; a hundred million dollars to British Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, as the federal government does not want to increase taxes for fear of losing its prestige, the provincial government has no other alternative but to levy more taxes; to save face it has to denounce the federal government. "It is Ottawa's fault if we are compelled to increase the sales tax, if we have to increase the income tax," even if the income tax will be lower in the province, because there are exemptions of $2,000 for single people and of $4,000 for a couple.

My good friend, the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), has nine children. He is a remarkable father. He is entitled to an exemption of $4,000, on provincial taxation, according to the new budget. On the other hand, his $300 exemption per child is taken from him. For nine children the exemption was $2,700. Now, it is gone.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am very interested in the remarks of the hon. member but do you not think they might be more closely related to the clause under discussion?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I am aware that some of what has been said by those who have spoken today has been more or less irrelevant. They have taken the opportunity to speak in this debate to discuss many of the problems involved in the finances of municipalities and the relations between the provinces and the federal government, as well as their pet policies and party doctrines. I would ask the hon. member for Villeneuve, who always understands the interest of the Chair in keeping the debate in line, to refer his comments to clause 72. I believe he has made his point very clearly, as he always does, and I am sure that other hon. members of the house, like myself, appreciate what he is trying to say.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your kindness and I shall limit myself to clause 72 and the amendment moved by my colleague from Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe).

[Mr. Caouette.]

I still believe that the whole thing is related to the conditions under clause 72 of bill C-222, since these same conditions allow for the expansion of credit, or the creation of credit in Canada and this very expansion enables the Minister of Finance to tell the provinces: "We have no money to give you, none to lend you, we cannot afford it; you go ahead but tax your own people yourselves".

Mr. Chairman, this is simply an economic machinery in which we are living, precisely and directly linked with the reserves which chartered banks are supposed to keep in the Bank of Canada for credit expansion.

• (9:00 p.m.)

I have something here that directly pertains to clause 72, that is the report of the Carter royal commission on taxation; in the last paragraph of page 2 it is said:

Creating money.

This paragraph has to do with bank reserves.

—The government can simply create money and use this money to outbid private citizens for the resources it needs.

—As we shall show later, the creation of money has an important role to play in the achievement of economic objectives;

The heading is "Creating money", not "The expansion of money" nor "Inflation of money". I read on:

—the creation of money has an important role to play in the achievement of economic objectives; but—

And this is most interesting:

—if practised when all our resources are productively employed, increasing the money supply more rapidly than national output expands can bring about a rapid increase in the general level of prices.

I see that my good friend, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) is happy, proud that I quote these excerpts. But the Carter report rightly says:

—increasing the money supply more rapidly than national output extends.

But if there is balance between the money supply and the national output, is there a risk of inflation?

Today, the reverse is happening. The money supply is not sufficient to permit the normal distribution of the output; such is the problem now. It is not a problem of output but of distribution. Distribution is precisely linked to clause 72, as worded in Bill C-222.

The member for Matapédia-Matane may deny whatever he wants, but let him visit with me any part of Canada, any area, whether it be Quebec, Amqui, Causapscal, in his own region, Trois-Rivières, as well as Montreal; he will see enormous store inventories and special Easter sales everywhere. No store is afraid to be short of goods the next day, and the member for Matapédia-Matane is not afraid either to find himself deprived.

He knows that if he wants a suit, a hat, or food, there is plenty of all that in every store. On the other hand, he knows that a great number of Canadians do not have the purchasing power to buy from the stores the products they need. The case of production is solved in Canada. There is no Canadian production problems. The real problem is distribution, and distribution is precisely what the Créditistes are battling for because we believe that it is very badly organized.

When a distribution system similar to the present taxation system increases taxes, takes money away from some people to give it to others who do not have any, it does not increase the general or global purchasing power in Canada, it takes from those who have a little without giving much to those who do not have anything. In my opinion, that increases the number of poor people and reduces the number of those who can live better.

Mr. Chairman, that is not a solution. The solution lies in the equilibrium which must exist between the true production of goods and services and the purchasing power in the hands of consumers. When the consumers have the purchasing power, there is no need to worry, demand follows and the products are taken up by consumption. That is what the Créditistes have been advocating for 35 years. The Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) has failed to understand that yet. He might never understand it. However, we have at least the satisfaction of explaining to him what we believe in, what we really believe to be in the best interest of the Canadian people, not in the interest of a small group of men in Canada who control everything. No. Of the people who are building up Canada.

Mr. Chairman, Lincoln said:

> Credit and the expansion of credit control the whole economic life of the United States.
> It is impossible to have prosperity by discouraging initiative. Initiative is discouraged with a government fiscal and taxation system. It is impossible to strengthen the weak by weakening the strong.

Destroying what is good will not improve the lot of those who live in shacks for instance. It is possible in Canada to give everyone decent and healthy housing.

Let us go then. Let us build something in adapting our monetary system directly to the physical possibilities we have. "You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich." Lincoln said it. "You cannot avoid trouble when you spend more than your income." That is still true, Mr. Chairman.

"You cannot build lasting security on borrowed money." The Minister of Finance should consider that for a few hours before retiring tonight. Sleep on it. The next day he would introduce a logical amendment to the Bank Act.

"You cannot form character and build up courage by depriving a man of his initiative and his self-respect." There is no one like the Créditistes to preach respect for initiative and self-respect of the individual, of the human being. You cannot help men indefinitely by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves. But they must be helped and encouraged to do what they can and should do for themselves. You cannot uplift the employee by crushing the employer. You cannot uplift the little man by bringing down the big ones.

What Lincoln said at that time, Mr. Chairman, is as true to day as it was then, over a hundred years ago. That is why we are saying: Instead of trying as we always do in this house, and throughout Canada, instead of trying to tame men, women and children according to the whims of the financial system, let us once and for all, tame the financial system and make it serve the human beings which make up Canada, a Canada which, in the end, must bring security with freedom to each and every one of its citizens.

Mr. Chairman, that is the perspective in which we see the possibility and the urgency of amending the financial system, not in order to set one class against another or to make some people hate each other, but to create a united Canada, where Canadians feel at home and will always feel at home, where they will acquire financial independence through their bank which we call the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the clause and the amendment now before the house.

In clause 72, we have obviously reached the core of the problem and the very heart of our Canadian monetary system. Clause 72 fixes the bank reserves, the legal reserves which the chartered banks must maintain in their regular operations. An average of 6.6 per cent is fixed, starting with 12 per cent for demand deposits and 4 per cent for notice deposits.

Mr. Chairman, it is precisely this bank reserve fixed at a certain level which allows the chartered banks to use their reserves, which are legal, and then to multiply them by 12½ under the former system and by 15 under the new one. And by that multiplication, banks create credit.

• (9:10 p.m.)

What we ask, Mr. Chairman, and what we have been straining to ask for some ten days, during consideration of the Bank of Canada Act, and again today during consideration of the Bank Act, is that credit be created by the Bank of Canada rather than by the chartered banks. This afternoon someone quoted the following statement made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Chrétien):

> Money does not grow on trees. It must be obtained either as taxes from taxpayers, or as loans.

Those are the only two methods found by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General when it comes to formulating the budget of the government: to take money, either as taxes out of the pockets of the public, or as loans.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) say a very clear sentence, which is a very good illustration of the problem, and I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, by recalling this, or at least by having recalled to him what happened at the beginning of the war, will not realize that there are other monetary sources. That is what happened when the war broke out in 1939.

They are certainly not going to make us believe, Mr. Chairman, that when the Canadian government wanted to finance a war, which cost it about $14 billion, it got that kind of money from the pockets of Canadian citizens. No there was no money in there. Canadians certainly did not have the $14 billion required to finance the war.

In the United States, the situation was no better. The beginning of the war was for them the end of a depression. There was no more money in the United States to finance everything that the Americans spent during the 1939-45 war than there was in Canada before the war. Therefore we could not have borrow it or find it somewhere else to wage States since the Americans themselves had to borrow it or find it somewhere else to wage their war.

We could not borrow it either from France or Italy or Germany or England; on the contrary, we were lending money to England. We were able to find money during the war, which was quite a feat, and yet when war began, the government was dead broke, as well as the provinces, the municipalities, and the school boards, and Canadian citizens were in the midst of an economic crisis, they lived on relief with meager amounts which barely allowed them to exist.

Suddenly, overnight, a madman in Europe declared war; Canada found money to buy cannons, cannon balls, planes, warships; it found some more to lend England billions of dollars during the six years the war lasted. Suddenly money was found, not in the pockets of the Canadian people, because they did not have any money, they were dead broke.

Therefore, Canadian citizens did not pay for the 1939-45 war, nor for the loans to England, with their taxes. No, and we could not borrow from the United States or England since we were lending them money, nor from Germany or Italy. So where did we get it? How is it that during a period of depression, from 1929 to 1939, during ten years, the government allowed itself to let all the people of Canada in misery and, suddenly, when war was declared, the funds needed were found? There was always money to finance the war and it was never necessary to do it on finance. I have never heard of a Canadian airman dropping bombs on Germany and then sending the bill to the finance company saying that he had 24 months to pay. Indeed, bombs were not paid through finance companies but were dropped free of charge on the Germans. They just got them, nothing more. Money was found for all kinds of things, whereas money was scarce during the depression.

People rightly complain nowadays about the difficult housing situation. I heard an N.D.P. member, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) move this afternoon the adjournment of the house in order to discuss an important problem, namely the housing shortage in Canada. The Conservatives supported the motion and I did too. Everybody admits, including the Liberals, that there is a housing shortage. There is no money, as during the 1929-39 depression, when no money could be found for public works, for hospital and road building. When the war came, all the required money was found to make all cannons, bombs, planes and submarines needed. And now, there is—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please. Would the hon. member for Lapointe please return to the subject of the amendment? He started off well by dealing with the amendment concerning the "currency reserve in the form of bank notes and deposits in Canadian money—

Mr. Grégoire: Precisely, Mr. Chairman, I said so at the outset. It is that reserve and the interaction of reserves which enable banks to create money. We maintain that banks create money, but that they do not create it according to the needs of the country. They create it with flair, with feeling and perhaps a little judgment, but that is not too sure. Since the minister is not sure, we cannot be either. Then, I am referring precisely to that section which deals with the creation of credit, and I was saying that chartered banks whose role and duty today is to create credit, are not doing it as they should, since even though they control credit creation, they are not successful in settling our credit and money problems.

That is my point and it is precisely because banks perform badly the duty assigned to them under the Bank Act, that we want that duty to be taken away from them and entrusted to the Bank of Canada which should perform it much better than chartered banks have done. That is why I say that chartered banks which during the 1929-39 depression had the same powers as today, have perfomed their duty so badly during the depression that they have maintained the Canadian people in poverty. But when a war breaks out, then they are forced to play their part. Then all of a sudden they made a decision—if it is a question of manufacturing lethal instruments—they decide to fill accurately the part they are entrusted with, under clause 72 of Bill No. C-222, and during the war, they put money into circulation, in great quantity, to destroy their fellow men.

Then when peace is restored and a constitutional crisis arises much as the one we are witnessing at the present time. The chartered banks are not playing the part assigned to them, under clause 72, namely that of creating credit. They do not create the credit that is necessary to enable the building industry to pick up again, and that is why we are going through a stagnation period. It is not only in the building industry. I have here Mr. Chairman, an article, which proves precisely what I am saying, namely that chartered banks do not play the part assigned to them, under section 72 of Bill C-222. Here is the title of the article: "300,000 Montrealers want to have their place in the sun." Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lévis may joke, but in fact, in his own constituency of Lévis, there are also people calling for their place in the sun, who would like not only to exist but to live, who do not want to be satisfied any more with a mere pittance such as is allowed them by the government at the present time, but who would like to have more than that.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. The hon. member for Lapointe heard me, a while ago, asking him to come back to the amendment to section 72. I am therefore asking him to come back to the subject before us.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the point I am on. The amendment asks that chartered banks stop creating credit, that the Bank of Canada do so instead. Why do we ask that? I told you a moment ago; it is because we realize that chartered banks have failed as creators of credit and we think that the Bank of Canada could do better.

I was precisely trying to prove that chartered banks have been remiss in their duties and have allowed Canadians to live in extreme poverty. I was saying that the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) may joke about it, but let him try and explain to his constituents the building situation now, in Lévis as elsewhere, where all companies stop making loans, banks cannot advance money for loans on mortgage. The building industry is going through a crisis seldom matched since 1867.

The hon. member for Lévis may joke but this is not a laughing matter. Things are really serious. The hon. member for Lévis may joke behind the curtains but he never rises, for instance, to say something worth while to protect the interests of his constituents in the house. He is one of those members who keep silent, who never speak except to joke behind the curtains, who is afraid to express his opinion on the crisis in the building industry. [Sundry noises]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I would ask the hon. member to allow the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) to continue his speech. Once again, I would remind the hon. member for Lapointe who is quite experienced in this house that he surely knows he is departing from the rules and that he could keep some of his remarks for another time. He should deal at the moment with the reserve mentioned in clause 72.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I think you are right to call the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) back to clause 72 of Bill No. C-222. Only, does the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay), sitting behind the curtains, have the right to grumble all the time, to interrupt all the time and to try to annoy the hon. member for Lapointe? And yet he knows that he cannot faze him.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I agree with what the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has just said, and I have even asked the hon. members to allow—order, please—the member who now has the floor, the hon. member for Lapointe, to finish his speech without interruptions. I might add that I have been sitting in this chair for quite some time, and I think we would have finished dealing with many clauses already, had there been no interruptions.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for calling the hon. member for Lévis to order. I forgive him, Mr. Chairman, because I imagine he must be frustrated—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I would ask the hon. member for Lapointe not to go astray, once again, because he only has a few minutes left and I would like to learn something about clause 72.

Mr Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would be only too happy to enlighten you, but I could not teach the hon. member for Lévis anything because he does not want to learn.

Mr. Guay: Not your brand of learning anyway.

Mr. Grégoire: More interruptions, Mr. Chairman. You can see he does not care one bit about the rules or your authority. That stems from the frustration of never being able to speak in the house, and if it can be any consolation, if it can simmer him down—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I would ask the hon. member for Lapointe, who has enough experience here to know that nobody questions his ability to talk, to carry on with his speech and refrain from looking at the hon. member for Lévis.

[The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard).]

Mr. Grégoire: I should not do so very long, Mr. Chairman, because it is not worth it. I was on clause 72, more particularly on the amendment dealing with transferring the power of creating credit from chartered banks to the Bank of Canada. I think this should be done because, considering the way chartered banks have abused this privilege granted to them under clause 72, it must be taken away from them.

The purpose of the amendment is to put back in the hands of the Bank of Canada the privilege to create credit. Everybody knows that chartered banks do create credit today; everybody knows also that they make poor use of this privilege because, they have not met in the monetary field the needs of Canadian citizens.

It should be noted that at the hands of chartered banks, this privilege to create credit is far from reaching its goal. And after all, what is the aim of credit? The purpose of a monetary system is to allow citizens of a country to enjoy what they produce and their natural resources. Here, in Canada, it cannot be said, in the framework of the present system, that our citizens can take advantage of their natural resources, or of their productivity.

When we say, Mr. Chairman, that the chartered banks, having the privilege to create credit according to clause 72, do not even know how to use it to assist consumption, and that when a Canadian citizen must buy something on the instalment plan, whether because of the price or because that an article retains a certain value for a long time, like a house or an automobile, Canadian citizens are not able to apply to the chartered banks, or at least, very seldom, they must instead use the finance companies where the interest rates are much higher. And in return, these companies will be financed by the chartered banks which will simply endorse the bills of the purchasers of cars or furniture. But then, the consumer will have to pay a very high interest rate whereas if he could simply have dealt with the creator of the credit he could have taken advantage of it at a much lower interest rate.

Mr. Chairman, this is the purpose of the amendment: to take away from the chartered banks a privilege which they used badly in the past. And the advantages that would accrue to Canada, if the creation of the credit were passed on to the Bank of Canada: first, the Bank of Canada would do all the public financing interest free, because the Bank of Canada does not aim at profits, whereas this is one of the goals of the chartered banks.

The objective of the Bank of Canada is to serve the country, not to make profits, whereas the chartered banks aim at profits. They charge high interest to grant loans to the municipalities, the federal and the provincial governments, and these interests that these different governments must pay every year represent too great a part of the governments' estimates.

Mr. Chairman, let me give you an example of what would happen if the creation of credit were entrusted to the Bank of Canada instead of the chartered banks. It was calculated that in 1966, the latter created credit to the tune of almost $1,900,000,000 and that credit was new credit.

Mr. Chairman, calculations were made to see what it would represent in Quebec if some day the Bank of Quebec were to create credit for the province of Quebec. Basing ourselves on the principle that Quebec would not benefit from an increase of $1,900 million, which amount was for the whole of Canada, but merely on 28 per cent, namely $500 million per year, the increase in credit if those $500 million were loaned without interest for a term of 25 years, to be reimbursed at the rate of so much a year, $20 million a year during 25 years, well, Mr. Chairman, if one figures out the increase that would represent each year at an annual economic growth rate of 5 per cent a year, with reimbursements without interest from municipalities, or school boards or the Quebec government itself, without interest; if all that were taken into account, after 12 years, the Bank of Quebec could loan each year, without interest, for public development, an amount of $3,225 million, which represents almost twice the overall economic growth in Canada at the present time.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if that holds good for Quebec, I cannot see why it should not apply to the whole of Canada. Personally, I figured it out according to the Quebec level. One can see the continuous increase involved in this endeavour to favour economic growth or public development, without charging a single cent of interest to the budgets of the municipalities, the schools or the province of Quebec itself.

Well, if such an increase can be possible in the single state of Quebec, you can imagine, Mr. Chairman, what this would represent for Canada as a whole. The point is to effect a simple change in clause 72 of the Bank of Canada Act: not to leave in the hands of the chartered banks the creation of credit, but to vest it into the hands of the Bank of Canada.

The question is to amend the clause and not to ask the chartered banks always to keep $100 in legal tender, when they have to make loans amounting to $100 or when they receive a deposit of $100, it is a matter of asking them to operate on the same basis, according to the same regulations and subject to the same privileges and to the same rights nothing more than what the savings banks are doing at the present time. We shall study somewhat later the bill concerning the savings banks, as well as the caisses populaires, the credit unions and the trust companies.

And if chartered banks were placed on an equal footing with those other economic institutions, well then, they would no longer over a year, create a single cent of credit, but this would be done by the Bank of Canada. And this was very ably expressed by a member of the New Democratic Party this afternoon; whether the money comes from the Bank of Canada or the chartered banks, provided it comes in equal quantity, the monetary supply will not be increased, nor inflation be produced; however, this will provide for the budgets of the municipalities or any other level of government some savings equivalent to the interests that these various departments of the government must pay each year.

And when one considers the tremendous amounts that must be spent by the various governments only for interests on their debts, well, Mr. Chairman, one can reflect that a whole portion of our economic growth escapes from us, escapes from the citizen. And who will benefit by this? Some bankers. And this is what we object to.

We know that precisely because the chartered banks are the institutions entitled to control credit according to clause 72, the federal government pays in interest on its debt each year the amount of $1 billion. This year, the government will pay $1,273 or $1,283 million, and next year the amount will be even larger, since the interest increases each year.

After our election in 1962, in one of my first speeches in this house, I tried to point out that the amount of interests we were paying on Canada's debt was astronomical. During my first year of office as member of the house, when I saw the astronomical amount that we were paying in 1962 in interests only, I was completely astounded. And then, I believe that the amount was of the order of $770 or $775 million.

Well, Mr. Chairman, in five years, that is one year with the Conservatives and four with the Liberals, the interest on the national debt increased by $500 million. These last five years, the interest on the debt has risen at a rate of $100 million per year, that is more than any other item in the federal budget.

Mr. Chairman, we have today the opportunity of putting an end to all that by amending clause 72 of Bill C-222 and, as suggested by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe), of withdrawing from the chartered banks the privilege of creating money and putting it into the hands of the Bank of Canada which, in turn, will grant interest-free loans to the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and school boards. I see that a member is willing to support that right away. He should rise and support the amendment. We are happy to see that at least one member has seen the light, namely the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard). I see him only when he comes in my corner to mumble; otherwise he never speaks, except perhaps to read, from time to time, figures and question numbers.

So, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I just explained, I say that the amendment is highly justified, that it will ensure enormous benefits to the various levels of government in the balancing of their budgets as well as considerable advantage for the economic growth of the Canadian people, and that is what we all wish after all.

Consequently I ask why the Minister of Finance would not accept the proposed amendment, after all the explanations we gave him, after the detailed description of the situation? It would enable him to recover, for the benefit of the people of Canada, the greatest of all possible privileges, that of creating credit, which should not be left with a few individuals, but should be vested in the Bank of Canada.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, just one word.

Some hon. Members: Oh no, oh no.

Mr. Caouette: I hear some members say: "Oh no, oh no".

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Are we going to pass a bill enabling people to continue their exploitation for another ten years? Now the Liberals are blaming us. But there was a time when the Conservatives spent three whole months discussing the adoption of a flag, and that was tolerated. But the financial question, without which perhaps not a single Liberal member would have been elected, that we must not discuss.

Mr. Chairman, in 1962, as reported on page 1290 of Hansard for November 5, an amendment was proposed by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) which read as follows:

—that the amendment be amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "and replaced with a policy of debt-free money and constructive proposals to foster balanced domestic economy and balanced international trade."

A little later on in the day a vote was taken, as reported on pages 1350 and 1351. The Conservatives were then in power, the Liberal in the opposition. And I see those who voted in favour of debt-free money, that is of going to the Bank of Canada to benefit from a debt-free monetary system. Here are but a few of those who voted in favour of it:

Béchard, Benson, Boulanger, Cardin, Drury, Dupuis—

The one who laughed at us.

—Gordon, Hellyer, Nicholson, Pearson, Pennell, Pickersgill, Pilon, Richard, Sauvé, Turner.

Several other Liberals voted for the debt-free money.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Now, we have here an amendment favouring the creation of debt-free money and those who voted in favour on November 6, 1962, look at them blush now. As if they were not red enough, they get even redder. Wanting to annoy the Conservative government of the time, the Minister of Transport voted with us. He was in favour of debt-free money. Now that they are in office, that we ask for debt-free money, they are against the principle for which they voted in 1962. That is the logic of politicians more concerned with their seats than with their constituents. That is important.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member can talk of mistakes in reckoning as much as he wants; his name is recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Grégoire: Is it because the hon. member did not know for what he was voting?

Mr. Caouette: Then it would be serious.

Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary to the minister, Mr. Chrétien was not a member at that time. If he had been, he also would have voted for debt-free money.

Mr. Chrétien: That is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Caouette: A political, yes. But the government now makes a political issue with the monetary question. Not simply a question of economics. An effort is being made to bamboozle us. They are trying to lull the committee by saying: "Quick. Hurry up and adopt this Bill No. C-222 if you want Easter holidays." Why was this whole Bank Act with section 72 and all the others, not brought down six, seven or eight months ago? But no, they always wait until the last minute and then they tell us: "Hurry up and carry the bill. Hurry up and vote the amendments brought down by the government. Hurry up and vote the sections of the bill."

Mr. Chairman, there is no fooling around with a bill that will be in force for the ten years to come. The entire membership of the house, whatever their party, cannot be asked to vote blindly on such a bill.

Mr. Chairman, we maintain that if our amendment of November 5, 1962, introduced by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) was valid at the time, since the Liberals voted for it, today March 20, 1967, six days before Easter, it is just as valid today: Adopt a debt-free monetary policy.

I see the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane is nodding his approval.

Well, Mr. Chairman, what we suggest is that the minister recommend to parliament the adoption of legislation which will not bring about inflation, but rather the economic balance needed by this country.

Unfortunately, too many countries now suffer from economic chaos, terrible and incredible economic conditions. Here in Canada we have the physical means and we could have the financial means to create an economy as stable as possible. The only way to do this is to have a financial system reflecting as much as possible our physical potential.

What does this mean? It means to make financially possible what is physically possible and desirable. It means that there would never be any inflation or deflation. There would always be a perfect balance between the purchasing power of the Canadian consumers and the production which is the work of Canadians, of the Canadian people and of Canada. That is all that the Créditistes ask for. We do not, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) rightly pointed out this afternoon, ask that an unlimited number of bank notes be printed; this was never part of Créditiste policy.

The Créditiste policy, the Créditiste doctrine, the Créditiste philosophy, means the balance between the consumers' money and the Canadian production. That is what we want and that is why we are asking the committee to support and to pass the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe).

[English]

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Latulippe) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 47.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 72 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, on clause 72.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on clause 72 I note that, at this time, the government that does not have very many opportunities to vote on such matters, has just voted and rejected the idea we had brought forward, without any counter-opposition.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Lapointe is now reflecting on the vote just taken. I suggest that the proper thing for him to do at this time is to direct his remarks to clause 72 now before the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is not at all my intention to comment upon the vote, and I will not do it either. I simply wish to mention that while we rejected the amendment, we did not deem it necessary to make any alternative proposal. I am in order, which may shock you, but let the Liberals remember what they did in 1962; their systematic obstruction campaign was much worse than ours, which is not a filibuster after all.

Mr. Guay: That is a fine filibuster.

Mr. Grégoire: You are the ones who did it when you prevented someone from speaking in this house.

Mr. Chairman, I will simply read a paragraph from the article the title of which I was just quoting which is an ironical illustration of what we are trying to make you understand. Here is what it says:

In the shade of the sky-scrapers, in the heart of Montreal lies the decaying world of slums.

Skyscrapers on one side. To whom do they belong? To banks. The large building at the corner of Dorchester and Peel? To banks. Place Ville-Marie? To banks. And in the vicinity of those imposing buildings, of sky-scrapers in the centre of Montreal stagnates a world of slums, those old districts built more than a century ago and where some 80,000 families are living.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Lapointe must realize the remarks he is now making, while having something to do with banking, are not very closely related to the clause before the committee. Again I invite him to confine his remarks to clause 72. I am sure that he wishes to go along with the committee in the work that the committee is trying to do, and also to assist the Chair.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I can assure you that it is exactly what I want to speak of, that is section 72; but to illustrate an idea sometimes, one needs testimonies of others and this is precisely what I was doing when I quoted a five-line sentence to emphasize the fact that section 72 does not render service to the people.

Then, Mr. Chairman, if you allow me to read those five lines that would be a clear testimony confirming my allegation to wit that section 72 of Bill C-222 is far from doing a service for the Canadian people. And this testimony—I quote or I repeat it where I stopped when I said:

In the vicinity of skycrapers, stagnates a world of slums. Those old districts built more than a century ago shelter some 80,000 families with an income which seldom exceeds $2,000 per year.

And now banks are authorized to create credit under section 72. Nothing is changed to that even if the effect of the system is to encourage stagnation—as above mentioned—80,000 families, 300,000 persons in the most abject poverty with an income which does not exceed $2,000. And all this in the vicinity of the skycrapers in the centre of Montreal. Banks are encouraged by section 72 of the Bank Act which enables them to create credit and lend it under terms favourable to them.

It is owing to that act, owing to that clause 72, that chartered banks can allow themselves to create credit, which makes them grow million and billion dollars richer, which enables them to build skyscrapers, to which I do not object, Mr. Chairman, far from it. But the sad thing is that banks are selfish; they do not care about the people and they let stagnate under the shadow of their sky-scrapers 80,000 households, 300,000 people whose revenue never exceeds $2,000.

It is that system, Mr. Chairman, that must be changed, it is that system where credit, the sinew of the economy, is controlled by a few bankers, a few individuals, who are using it for their own profit, while they are neglecting the Canadian citizens, the Canadian people.

Something will have to be done, Mr. Chairman, to cope with such a situation. We suggested the Bank of Canada should do it instead of the chartered banks. That was not accepted by the majority. Could the Minister of Finance and Receiver General tell us whether he intends to bring forward some other kind of measure or some other kind of system or of scheme, so that clause 72 could be amended? If the government does not want to take away completely from the chartered banks that privilege of creating money, would not the government be prepared then to grant them part of that privilege, on a trial basis? If the government thinks it too great a danger to put 100 per cent of the creation of credit into the hands of the Bank of Canada—and it is its last opportunity to do so with clause 72, once that clause will be passed, there will be nothing more to be done in that field. Would it not be possible, at least for the government, to grant say 5 per cent of the credit privileges to start with, on a trial basis? And if things go well for a year, well, if it brings about the results we are expecting, we shall try 10 per cent and the following year 15 per cent. And if this does not work, Mr. Chairman, we will be the first to admit it and we shall say: "It is true, you were right". But at the present time we are convinced, and logic, figures, statistics, the scientific basis of an economic system are here to prove it, it could not go wrong. Therefore, in order to convince and reassure yourself, try it. Let us say 5 per cent for a year; instead of having a 6.6 per cent reserve, let us have a 1.6 per cent reserve and let the government create another 5 per cent of credit. We shall see then if the idea was a good one.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I move, pursuant to standing order 6 (2), that the house continue to sit after ten p.m.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed earlier that we would be prepared to co-operate to the extent that we would sit until this bill was passed in its entirety, with the exception of third reading. However, over the past two hours we have had to sit here and listen to a discourse from the other side of the house and have been prevented from reaching the clauses on which we had a few comments to make. If this continues I am a little dubious about agreeing to sit, because we are only wasting our time. Unless the government house leader is prepared to give some assurance that we will move from this clause to other clauses at once, then we are not prepared to go ahead. But if this does happen we are prepared to sit to complete this bill, with the exception of third reading.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is possible for me to control the debate on this clause, and I am sure that that is not what the hon. member for Ontario meant. In any event what I will do is this: If we do not make progress on this clause in very short order I will move that it stand and that we proceed to other clauses, if that is agreeable. I am trying to meet the wishes of the hon. member in what I think is the most practical way.

Mr. Starr: Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we could not agree to a motion to have us sit without any time limit stated. Under the circumstances I think we are prepared to have the motion amended to read that we sit until eleven o'clock. We can then see what progress we have made by that time, and we may be inclined to do otherwise when that period arrives.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, if I may suggest something, because I am convinced that those who speak on this bill which we consider important, are ready to co-operate and get on as fast as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion to make to the house leader; he should try to muzzle, a certain group of members who, I think Mr. Speaker, delay the debate, or at least prevent them from barking or purring. We are ready to co-operate and I would suggest that something be done to teach them good manners.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is now debating the motion before the house. I am sure he is quite familiar with standing order 6 (2), which states:

> No debate or formal vote shall be held on such a motion to extend a sitting.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is that if we wished to continue we could not put another motion. That is a difficulty in which we would find ourselves. I am willing to go along with the suggestion and try to meet what I think the hon. member for Ontario has expressed to be the wishes of his party. I think this can best be achieved by leaving the motion as it is. There seems to be a willingness to co-operate. We will see how we get along, and if necessary, if we do not make progress, I can then move that the house adjourn.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, would the house leader give the commitment that he will move that the house adjourn at that time, if we do not make progress?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if no progress is being made. I would also reserve the right to move that clause 72 stand if it is clear that we are not getting ahead—if it is clear that progress is not being made with clause 72.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, for our part we think the minister ought to be a little more definite than that. If Créditiste and Social Credit members find it necessary to debate at length, that is their business. Other amendments are to be moved. We have one or two that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will move and we think they are important. We have been waiting for days to move them. I do not think they can be listened to, let alone be discussed intelligently at twelve o'clock or one o'clock in the morning. We are not prepared to agree to sitting indefinitely.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I agree with that.

Mr. McIlraith: There is some misunderstanding of the procedure. The real difficulty, as hon. members know, is in getting third reading after the present stage has been completed, so that the bill may go to the other place where it must be considered. It was in an effort to meet that requirement that I think all representatives of all parties discussed some formula for getting forward tonight with the clauses as far as we possibly could, with a view to finishing third reading tomorrow.

It is a matter of meeting this situation in a practical way that will best meet the wishes of all parties. I should prefer to leave it that we continue to sit; then, I shall consult wtih the house leaders about the rest of the evening, and I will move the necessary motion depending on progress. If we are making good progress and everybody is satisfied, there is no point in our being confronted with a situation where there is a time limit. We can move the motion to continue if it meets with the wishes of everybody.

Mr. Lewis: May I suggest that perhaps we sit until eleven o'clock, by unanimous consent, without the motion?

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Lewis: At eleven o'clock if we are making progress the minister can move the motion.

Mr. McIlraith: That is precisely the difficulty. The minister cannot move this motion then. He has to move it before ten o'clock. Having moved it before ten o'clock tonight, he does not want to lose that right. It is precisely that difficulty arising out of the interpretation of the standing order that made it necessary that the motion be moved now.

My offer is, if we are not making progress, to adjourn at eleven o'clock. I will keep in consultation with the other house leaders to see what progress is being made, to try to meet the wishes of all parties.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Not agreed.

Mr. Starr: I agree with the minister, if there is an indication that we are making progress. But we have been discussing clause 72 for the past 5½ hours and some members have made three and four speeches on it. If we make no greater progress this evening than we have made for the past 5½ hours I see no reason for staying here until morning.

Mr. McIraith: We can move the adjournment of this house at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Starr: I want it clearly understood, and I want an undertaking to this effect from the government house leader that, if no progress is made, at eleven o'clock we shall move to adjourn.

Mr. McIlraith: That is agreeable. That is what I thought I said earlier.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I will not be long. We agree with the proposal of the minister that we sit until eleven or eleven thirty. We want to pass the bill. Now if we spend fifteen or twenty minutes discussing whether we should or should not continue to sit, that will leave us less time from now until eleven, when there are many clauses on which we would undoubtedly like to move amendments.

In any case, we agree with the proposal of the government house leader.

[English]

Mr. Patterson: I do not know why the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) brought the Social Credit party into his discussion.

Mr. Lewis: I withdraw.

Mr. Patterson: We of the Social Credit party have taken little part in today's debate. We have made our position clear.

Mr. Monteith: What about last Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Patterson: We have made our position clear on this legislation dealing with banks and banking. While we do not agree with every clause, we realize the importance of getting ahead with the bill as quickly as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Grégoire: What motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion moved by the Minister of Public Works is that this house sit beyond ten o'clock. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that this clause be put to a vote because I object to it and I would like to vote against it. I then ask that this clause be put to a vote.

[English]

Clause agreed to: Yeas 65, nays, 8.

The Chairman: Clause 75.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder whether it would not be preferable to go back to clause 29 and clean that up.

Mr. Sharp: I think an undertaking was given the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac that we should revert to clause 69.

The Chairman: I apologize to the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac. That agreement was made this afternoon.

On clause 69—Report on excess appropriations.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. Minister of Finance for having suggested that the house study again clause 69, because it had been passed Friday last. Inadvertently I did not rise in time to put forward my amendment.

Since the Minister of Finance has helped me to have this clause reconsidered, maybe he will vote with us.

Mr. Chairman, section 1 of clause 69 reads as follows:

> (1) Where in the opinion of the minister an amount set aside or reserved by the bank out of income, either by way of write-down of the value of assets or appropriation for the purpose of meeting losses on loans, bad or doubtful debts, depreciation in the value of assets other than bank premises or other contingencies, is in excess of the reasonable requirements of the bank, having regard to all the circumstances, the Minister shall notify the Minister of National Revenue of the amount so set aside and of the amount of such excess.

That means that this is left up to the bank and to its point of view, if it is a reasonable one.

Then, who is going to determine whether or not it is reasonable? It is a vague clause. I believe it is most important when it has to do with secret reserves, hidden reserves or indiscreet reserves, call them what you like. There are excessive amounts, there are quite high amounts which the Minister of Finance, I think, does not know because I asked him when he was before the committee whether he was aware of those reserves and he said yes. I asked him what was the amount of those reserves and he could not answer me. He did not know the amount of the reserves and it is very plainly stated in the clause that the Minister of Finance cannot take any action with regard to the matter of secret or secondary reserves.

Banks already have enough reserves of all kinds that they must not be given a free hand with the other secret reserves, which would be limited only by their own judgment, under the present act, for "The reasonable requirements of the bank."

Who is going to determine what are reasonable requirements? The Royal Bank, for instance, in 1933, during the depression, transferred, in that one year, $15 million from its general reserves to its secondary, secret and hidden reserves, as reported on page 306 of the French version of the proceedings of the standing committee on banking and commerce, in 1934. Page 4 contains many other monstrous statements concerning secret bank reserves.

The Minister of Finance told the house on two or three occasions that, for the first time, chartered banks would be forced to disclose their secret reserves. Now that deposit insurance has been introduced, banks have even less reason to have unlimited secret reserves, left at the discretion of bank directors.

Surely, the limit is set high enough—I think it is one half of 1 per cent—when we know that deposit insurance easily covers a guarantee of 1/30 of 1 per cent, as insurance premium, of all the deposits in Canada and of companies that want or have to pay deposit insurance premiums.

• (10:10 p.m.)

As far as paragraph (2) of the same clause, just imagine, sir, the condescension necessary when it comes to keeping a close watch on the bankers' scheme. Just refer to the wording of the clause: this is not an invention of mine:

> Nothing in subsection (1) shall be construed to give the minister any jurisdiction ... with regard to amounts set aside, reserved or transferred to any reserve—

Thus there are reserved, sacred, hidden, direct or indirect accounts, whatever you call them.

How much did the banks hide in 1966? How much did they put aside in the last ten years? For what reasons do we allow banks to have hidden reserves? Did all large corporations have hidden reserves, for different amounts in 1967? There are many other companies, many other institutions which would surely be entitled also, Mr. Chairman, to indirect reserves, internal reserves or hidden reserves.

I note that clause 69 of the bill is similar to section 68 of the present act and there is no evidence that banks will be obliged to state their secret reserves in the future, any more than in the past. Why did the Minister of Finance state to this house, and I quote:

> Banks will have to give a detailed statement of their earnings and expenses, and, for the first time, of their hidden reserves.

In your own mother tongue, I quote No. 8 of your principal resolutions:

[English]

> The banks to reveal revenue and expenses in detail and for the first time their hidden reserves.

[Translation]

The minister should tell us under what clause of Bill No. C-222 the banks are forced to reveal their hidden reserves. Whom can we trust if we are deceived by the Minister of Finance on such an important matter as the presentation in the house of Bill No. C-222 on banks and banking?

In 1934, Mr. Chairman, when the Bank of Canada was created, in the same committee on banking and commerce, at pages 305 to 308 of the Minutes of Proceedings, there was talk of making such reserves. In a strange way, several questions by hon. members remained unanswered by the bankers. It is just like today, and it is the best proof that the stronger is not the government but the banker who hides everything he wants from the people, the government and his shareholders. I could give many other examples of hidden reserves by banks and big corporations. But what is the use, Mr. Chairman?

I will not say any more about that because I cannot do any more to force the minister to speak and tell the people the truth. I used all the means at my disposal. He speaks neither French nor English, but an incomprehensible language.

In another statement made to the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance, one could read in clause 5 on page 9:

> We propose to require from the banks that they reveal to the public for the first time their hidden reserves made up with taxable income.

The minister himself said that. And in his own language:

[English]

> We propose to require the banks to reveal to the public for the first time their hidden reserves created out of taxable income.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, is this the same Minister of Finance? Is he still prepared to make the same statement? Is he prepared to include in the bill the clause he had advocated requiring banks to disclose their hidden reserves?

I will now move my amendment, Mr. Chairman, for I do not want to extend the debate too long. It reads as follows:

(1) That the words in "reasonable requirements of the bank" in section 69 (1) be deleted and replaced by the words "½ of 1 per cent of its deposit liabilities".

(2) That subsection (2) be deleted and replaced by the following: "Any amount in excess of the authorized reserve shall be immediately declared as taxable profits of the bank by the Minister of National Revenue".

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to support to a certain extent the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe).

It is obvious that in clause 69, what we used to call hidden reserves, are not hidden any longer today, but what I object to is that the banks are empowered to put up a reserve for losses and that such reserve, whether the bank incurs losses or not, is exempt from tax.

Mr. Chairman, if any business man, any store owner, any automobile dealer, any furniture salesman, any home builder, were putting up reserves against losses, they would have to pay taxes. But the bank gets more benefits than the businessman. The ordinary bank has an additional privilege, it is exempt from tax, not on its losses, but on what it declares to be a reserve for losses, whether or not it incurs any losses, and that is what I object to.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the committee will be aware that when we approved clause 60 of the present bill we did approve the following. I should like to draw attention to paragraph (2)(c) of clause 60. Subclause 2 reads as follows:

At every annual general meeting of the shareholders, the outgoing directors shall submit a statement (hereinafter called the "annual statement"), which shall present fairly the financial position of the bank for the financial year immediately preceding the meeting, and shall contain—

I will read paragraph (c):

• (10:20 p.m.)

—a statement of accumulated appropriations for losses of the bank for the financial year, showing the information in the form specified in schedule P—

I will not read the rest of that paragraph. Schedule P provides for the revelation for the first time, as I said before, and as referred to by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, of inner or so-called hidden reserves. This act does in fact carry out the undertaking that I made in the house that for the first time the inner reserves of banks will be publicly revealed. Clause 69 with which we are now dealing provides that I shall continue, as I have in the past, to have some control over the amounts of those reserves that are to be considered taxable or non-taxable. I submit it is better for public administration to have that judgment made by the Minister of Finance rather than by the Minister of National Revenue, who is concerned with taxation but not with banking questions.

In respect of the particular amendment moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac let me assure him that the kind of inner reserves dealt with in clause 69 have nothing to do with the deposit liabilities of banks. These have to do with their investments and they are reserves against the possibility of losses. Therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, that these amendments do not fulfil the purposes of clause 69 and should be rejected.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Why grant a special treatment to the banks and say to them: "Whether you lose money or not, it does not matter, because you are entitled to a reserve for losses; furthermore you have tax exemptions". And it is also indicated in schedule P to which the minister referred a moment ago:

Accumulated appropriations at beginning of year, general—Tax-paid—Total.

In no other field of trade or business would the Minister of National Revenue say: "Gentlemen, you are entitled to an appropriation for losses, for example, and it will be tax-free. It is obvious that if a loss is real, the interested party will find an arrangement and will have a delay of five years to substract that loss from its income tax report. The loss will be spread over a period of five years. But for the bank it comes to more than that. Even if it has not sustained a loss, it will pay no tax on its reserve for losses. This is irregular and I cannot accept it. I believe that if we remove this idea or notion that appropriations for losses should be tax-free—and this is where I am slightly at variance with my friend, the member for Compton-Frontenac

(Mr. Latulippe)—I would ask him to forget the ½ per cent and say that, since the reserves are now open and known, the bank may appropriate whatever it wishes for losses, it does not matter, provided it pays income tax. It would then be a reserve such as those of any business concern. The purpose of section 69 is to prevent banks from having reserves that are too high since they are tax free. But even if the reserve is not too high, the bank should not enjoy any unfair privilege. As soon as the bank looses money, it should be allowed to deduct it from its income tax like all the other business concerns, over a five year period, but it should not be tax exempt for losses not incurred. A bank should not be told: Build up a tax reserve which is tax-free. It is on that point that I support the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois). I wonder if the Minister of Finance does not find our request reasonable. After all, banks are not to so much to be pitied. The saying "as sound as the bank" is very significant. That means it is a well-established institution. I wonder why it should need preferential treatment or such a favour which is not given to any other business. There are businessmen here, doctors who may lose accounts, lawyers who may be unable to collect certain fees; dentists who may be unable to collect certain bills. They are not taxed, it is true, but the lawyer, for instance, is not told: Take $5,000 and put it aside as a reserve against losses. Whether he loses it or not does not matter. According to the legislation as it stands, it is just a reserve on which the bank is not taxed.

The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac mentions one half of one per cent. I think that in committee, the question was put. I think it was said that bank losses, if I am not mistaken, my memory may fail me, but I think the losses were under one tenth of one per cent. I would not swear to it, I do not have the report of this committee with me, but possibly the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), who attended the committee as I did, could tell me whether it was approximately this amount that was mentioned. If my memory serves me well, the losses were of one tenth of 1 percent. Then, if no tax is levied on this, quite right. However, if we charge one half of one per cent—for a bank, this is a great deal. On a business turnover of 18 billion per annum, 1 per cent represents $1,800 million, and half of one per cent is $900 million. If they are allowed reserves in connection with which we declare: "On this, you will have no taxes to pay", well, perhaps—If we were doing this for all concerns, if everybody were on an equal footing, personally, I am for this, but when there is favour for some one and disfavour for the others, I am against that.

This is why I am asking whether the minister would agree to delete this discriminatory clause. I think that the request is perfectly logical and reasonable; the banks are not to be pitied, they are not in the red, they need no other favours from the government, since I figure that they have enough; then the tax is always removed. And on this I could reach an agreement with my friends of the New Democratic Party, who say at all times taxes should not be paid by the little fellow but by the big fellow; well, are not the big fellows in Canada the chartered banks? If so, let us not grant them special favours concerning income tax; under section 60(2) and Schedule (p) they get some valuable favours: they are told: "Gentlemen, do put aside a reserve for losses, and on this, whether you lose it or not, you will not be charged income tax." Then I wonder whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) would have a few remarks to make on these points, whether he would not be prepared to accept what we are asking from him.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding about the basis of our taxation system. There is nothing special about this clause. All businesses have the right to have reserves against bad debts. That is all this is. The reason that discretion is given to the minister is to see that the amounts set aside are not excessive, and that is the spirit in which it is administered. The inspector general of banks advises me every year of the amounts set aside, and he advises me whether in his opinion they are excessive. In my opinion there is greater control over taxation of banks than there is over taxation of other institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Schedule (p), point no. (1) where it is said:

Accumulated appropriations at beginning of year tax-paid.

Does the same apply to any kind of trade? This tax paid accumulations, this tax free reserve for losses that exists for all kinds of trade, must an ordinary merchant not declare it, and when he declares it, has he not already lost it in fact? At that moment, does he not pay the tax on that reserve? And is it not then what distinguishes the other trades from the banks? From this particular point of view?

• (10:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Sharp: No, the treatment is identical for the banks and for other corporations that pay taxes.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister. Could he tell us whether there are other institutions that have the same privileges as the chartered banks nowadays.

Mr. Chrétien: All the corporations.

[English]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): All those in favour of the amendment will please rise.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, what then is the idea behind this clause, since the bank is compelled by the terms of clause 69 to reveal its reserves? I am told it pays taxes on them, like all other corporations. If there are no actual losses, what is the idea behind clause 69? Does the minister not admit in schedule P that all those reserves are exempt from tax, whether losses have been incurred or not? If this is not the case, I should like the minister to give me an answer concerning this subject.

Are not reserves for losses exempt from tax in the case of banks, whether losses have been incurred or not, whereas in the case of other companies reserves for losses are taxable, or are those reserves taxable only if there has been no loss? That is what I should like to minister to explain.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: I must repeat what I said before, that the taxation of banks and other corporations in this respect is exactly the same, except, in so far as banks are concerned, not only does the bank have to satisfy the tax collector but it has to satisfy the inspector general of banks and me. There is therefore greater control over the reserves set aside for banks than there is for other corporations. Clause 69 is simply a reinforcement of the tax laws so that banks are treated no more favourably than other corporations. All corporations pay taxes on exactly the same basis.

Amendment (Mr. Latulippe) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 60.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 69 carry?

Clause agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Clause 75?

Mr. Sharp: Would the committee be agreeable to going back to clause 29, one of those which was allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 29—Report to directors.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to have an amendment moved to carry out a suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West to whom I am grateful for drawing this unnecessary subclause to our attention. I ask one of my colleagues to move the following amendment:

That Bill No. C-222, an act respecting banks and banking, be amended by striking out paragraph (b) of subclause (2) of clause 29 on page 18 of the bill and by relettering paragraphs (c) to (e) thereof as paragraphs (b) to (d), respectively.

Mr. Winters: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Mr. Sharp: May I suggest that we move on to clause 52 and take clauses 52 to 57.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I do not have anything to say on clause 29 but I would remind the Chair that before the last amendment reached this end of the house the clause had been carried and I had not time to see it. Therefore I would ask the Chair to make sure before carrying a clause that there is nothing to be said on any amendment.

On clause 52—Definitions.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, last Friday I asked that clause 52 be allowed to stand, because I had an idea that I wanted to move an amendment. I now see I do not need to do this and I do not wish to hold up the clause any further.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 53—Limit on shares held by non-residents.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments to this clause. The first is as follows. I move:

That paragraph (a) of subclause (3) of clause 53 be amended by striking out the following words in line 38 on page 31 "in right of Canada or", and also by striking out the word "either" where it appears in line 40.

I am quite sure that the minister realizes the significance of this amendment, because it deals with the question I raised with him during the committee hearings, and again the other day when I was speaking in the committee of the whole. I am proposing this amendment, not to alter any powers that the government of Canada has at this moment but to prevent the minister from divesting the government of Canada of the power of making an investment in a commercial bank.

I feel it is important at this particular juncture that the government of Canada should retain that power in its hands. I set out the reasons for this the other day when I was speaking in the house. At this time I would merely like to underline again the possibility of having to use this power in connection with a circumstance which still could possibly cause some trouble with our American neighbours.

I am not at all sure, as I said in the committee, that we have solved the problem of the Mercantile Bank by the only course left open to us at the time, in passing an amendment which I seconded to give the bank five years to expand their shares and make them attractive to Canadian investors. I have the uneasy suspicion that at the end of five years we will find the bank not anxious to divest itself of its shares, and may present the government of Canada with the very difficult task of asking the bank to shrink its shares back to this twenty to one ratio, or to get rid of 75 per cent of its shares.

• (10:40 p.m.)

I have an idea that if at this time the Minister of Finance for Canada were to recognize this and say that he accepts this amendment, that action of his might be noted in New York and Washington, and the conclusion might be drawn that the Canadian Minister of Finance was retaining in his hip pocket a club which he might see fit to use if necessary in five years. For that reason I urge the committee to support my amendment, to leave in the hands of the government of Canada the right to invest in a bank.

The other day my hon. friend from Edmonton West, as I noted from reading Hansard, though I did not hear him, meant to say, I think, that I have an obsession. He told me the other day—even today—that I have a coy way of using words. I do not wish to say this to my friend, but he has an incorrect way of using them. He used the word "fetish" quite incorrectly. I suspect that he meant to say I had an obsession with the nationalization of the banks of Canada, and using "fetish" was quite incorrect. It was incorrect even in its original Ashanti form in West Africa, to say nothing of its modern psychological connotation.

An hon. Member: Smart.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): One has to be smart with me, my hon. friend. I have no obsession with the nationalization of the banks; but I do have an obsession, and it is not shared with my hon. friend from Edmonton West. My obsession is that every institution in our society must serve the welfare of the Canadian people. I have another obsession, that no one has the right to be allowed to exploit his fellow citizens, that no one has the God given right to make money out of any operation of our society, or to assume that this is a privilege we grant to certain people under certain terms, a privilege that can be amended or withdrawn at any time. No institution serves the welfare of the Canadian people if it is for the aggrandizement of only a few of our citizens.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I say a brief word about this proposed amendment. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is relating it to the experience of the Mercantile Bank. Mr. Chairman, if the Mercantile Bank is unable to dispose of its shares to Canadians it would be better that it remain as a very small operation, as it is today. Certainly, if that is the position of the Mercantile Bank, then I have no quarrel.

On the other hand if the government is to make an investment in a bank, a chartered bank, or a bank operating under one of our charters, in my opinion it should not have other private shareholders. Therefore if we are to embark on that course of action—and this is an arguable case; I think there is a good deal to be said for having a government-owned bank—let us do so not by inadvertence or indirection, but let us do it as the result of a positive decision by this parliament to form a bank for that purpose.

I am therefore opposed to the amendment proposed by my hon. friend. It seems to me that if we are to change our policy and have a government bank in competition with private banks, let us do it, not now, but let us charter a bank for that purpose.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I could not agree more with the minister. I am not proposing that we change our present position; he is proposing the change. That change is to prohibit the government of Canada from ever following this course of investing in a bank. Certainly, if this bill passes as it is worded now, Her Majesty in the right of Canada would be prohibited from investing in a chartered bank.

Mr. Sharp: That is right.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Then it is the minister who is changing the position which presently prevails, because the power now lies in his hands or in the hands of the government of Canada, and will continue to do so until this bill is passed.

Mr. Sharp: What this clause does is to prevent Her Majesty in the right of Canada from acquiring any shares in a chartered bank included in the schedule to this bill. If parliament were to decide that it would form a government bank to operate like a chartered bank, it could certainly do so and would not be bound by this act.

Mr. Lewis: This does not explain why the minister and the government found it necessary to include this prohibition. The fact is that under the present Bank Act there is no such inhibition which would prevent the government entering into a partnership, if you like, with a chartered bank or buying any shares in a chartered bank which in the public interest it believed would be desirable.

What my hon. friend is saying to the minister is that his amendment is not the one which proposes a change in the present law; it is this new clause which proposes a change, and I have heard no explanation why this change should be made. The minister has not told us why it should be necessary for this parliament to tie its hands for the next ten years. It may be that the government of the day will not wish to use the powers it presently has to buy shares in a chartered bank. But why should we now decide that in no circumstances in the next ten years will the government of Canada be able to do so, no matter what the circumstances may be?

The minister should explain to the committee why he found it necessary to include this provision in the bill. What are the circumstances in 1967 which differ from those of 1965 or 1957 when this prohibition was not contained in our banking laws? What has happened to make this provision necessary? The minister should tell us what moved him to propose this fundamental change in the banking law. If his explanation is that because he wished to prevent the provinces from doing so he is making things even, then I suggest this is the type of equality which does not appeal to any logical mind.

Mr. Sharp: The change was made because we wanted to prohibit any government, whether provincial or federal or foreign, from owning shares in a chartered bank. We do not think it is appropriate to the kind of banking system we have that governments should be shareholders in banks. As far as I know, the government of Canada has no shares in a chartered bank and never has had any. Perhaps by inadvertence it may have got into some pension fund, or something like that but, as I have said, I do not know of it.

I would come back to my original point that if the parliament of Canada wants the government of Canada to invest in the shares of a bank it should authorize them specifically for some purpose and not have the government in the position of becoming an investor in an existing chartered bank. I believe this is thoroughly consistent with the whole philosophy of the act.

Mr. Barnett: The thing that puzzles me, Mr. Chairman, is why the minister does not admit that this is a case of the government biting off its nose to spite its face. The last time the Bank Act came up for decennial review this question did not arise. No change was made at that time in the concept of ownership of bank shares, or laws in that respect, and I presume those laws were the same since banking legislation first came into being in this country.

Why does the minister not admit that it was because the government of B.C. expressed an interest in acquiring the shares of a bank that this whole question came to the fore? Why does he not admit that the government of Canada never thought of this question until the government of the province from which I come expressed some interest in the idea of developing a regional bank in which the government of that province would have some say, so far as its management and policy were concerned?

I do not suggest that we should enter into a debate on that question at this time, nor does the amendment moved by my colleague from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands suggest that we do so; but certainly so far the minister has failed to impress me with the logic of there being any parallel between the views the government has with regard to provincial governments or foreign governments holding bank shares, and leaving within the power of the federal government the right to hold shares in the name of the body which I have always understood to be the authority over monetary and fiscal policy in Canada. I think the amendment carefully emphasizes that particular distinction in the concept of money and banking business.

Mr. Peters: I too am puzzled by this problem. I listened with interest to the discussions which took place concerning the Mercantile Bank and the desire of the Canadian government to obtain Canadian control over that institution. I agree with the method by which such control may be obtained, as outlined in a previous clause, whereby expansion of that bank will be allowed in order to make the sale of its stock to Canadians more advantageous, but I think the minister should face the very simple proposition that if that bank's shares are not bought by Canadians, then it may be necessary for the federal government to buy control from the foreign owners in order that control may rest in Canadian hands. The government might have to set up a crown agency to buy that stock if Canadians as individuals do not buy it.

I cannot see how the minister believes he should allow such expansion of the bank to take place in order that the stock can be sold to Canadians and, at the same time, expect that the institution will remain a very small bank. For this reason the government should reserve the right to buy the stock through a crown corporation operating in the right of Her Majesty. Personally I feel this provision should be left in the bill, also covering the right of a province.

I would think, if there really is a desire to implement the idea of establishing a method to obtain Canadian control over foreign owned financial institutions, that a start should be made at least in respect of the one bank in question. If you leave in the one exception where no shares are to be held by a government, then obviously you are taking away the machinery which would make possible what has been suggested. When one considers the proposition of exempting Her Majesty from having any control, he can better understand the government's inability to obtain Canadian control over other financial institutions, including near banks and insurance companies.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Evidently the minister is sincere in his wish that the Mercantile Bank eventually will flow into Canadian control. I believe, if this particular clause in its present form, or with the limitation against provincial government ownership, is to be retained, that a clause should be included which at least would allow the minister to establish a corporation which eventually would be able to buy the stock, which may not always be easily disposed of. It may not be easy to persuade Canadians to buy this stock, particularly with the pressure which would be applied in a situation where it was desired to unload that stock on Canadians.

I believe the minister should give a better explanation of the reason he is not willing at least to leave with the federal government the right to establish a crown corporation. If the government itself does not wish to buy the stock it should allow an agency to assume the financial control which, in my opinion, the Bank Act is designed to do. If the minister is unwilling to provide the machinery to make it possible, then I think we should have passed the previous legislation without amendment, because this certainly will not accomplish the desire of most Canadians eventually to obtain control of one foreign owned bank through purchase of the stock by Canadians, or through government purchase of the outstanding stock.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to hold up the committee, but I must say I am shocked at the way in which the Minister of Finance of Canada places the government of this country on all fours with foreign and provincial governments. I think this is another example of truckling to the provincial governments. This is something which this government has been doing continually with disastrous results. The minister has given no logical or acceptable reason for wanting to divest himself or the people of this country of this power. He has no right to take from the Canadian people the power to decide whether they wish to have a hand in the banking system of this country. His suggestion that a crown corporation would not be the same as a chartered bank is another example of his sophistry. There is no difference between a crown corporation of this nature and any other crown corporation. If this bank were set up in Canada as a public bank it would operate, I would hope, under the framework of the Bank Act. So the argument that this applies only to banks which are now in existence is completely specious and phony, because if we organize any other new bank it comes under this act.

• (11:00 p.m.)

I suggest to the minister that this is another disastrous example of fear on the part of this government to exert its authority in a field in which there is no doubt about its constitutional right. This is another example of truckling to provincial governments to encourage intransigencies on their part, because they realize this government in Ottawa is too afraid of them to exercise its rightful authority.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat, so the record is quite clear, that there is nothing to prevent this parliament from establishing a government owned bank. There is no limitation in this act to prevent that. I think it would be most inappropriate to amend the law in this way, if for only one reason, namely that we could hold only 10 per cent of the shares of any bank under the law as it now is proposed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether this clause prohibits the government, as suggested by the hon. member for Timiskaming, from buying the block of 75 per cent of the shares of the Mercantile Bank, which must be sold in the next five years? If it does, why does the minister continue to insist on preventing this from happening in view of the limitation placed on this bank? This bank cannot expand unless it sells to Canadians. Does the government really want Canadians to participate in Canadian banking?

This bank was given a charter and we should honour that charter. This particular clause prohibits the government from assisting Canadians in acquiring ownership of that bank, which we as Canadians are forcing to release 75 per cent of its interest.

Mr. Sharp: All this clause does is prevent the government of Canada from owning 10 per cent of the shares of any bank. I see no useful purpose to be served by the government of Canada having a 10 per cent ownership in any bank. Moreover, if the Mercantile Bank is not able to sell its shares to Canadians I think it should operate as a very small institution. I do not think the public interest would be damaged if that happened.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I am not too worried about the public interest. We as Canadians made an agreement in 1953 to grant a charter to a foreign concern. Let us be honest and live up to that agreement which was granted, rightly or wrongly, to this concern. Perhaps if we were asked to do this again we would not do it. We did do it with our eyes open, without any stipulations at all. Then we allowed that foreign concern to sell its shares to another foreign concern. Canada is respected throughout the world as a country which lives up to its agreements. Certainly we would not want to be considered as having a preference for a Dutch concern over an American concern. We are very dependant upon United States capital and its commerce, and we would not want to create an impression that we preferred Dutch firms to American firms. All foreign concerns should be treated equally. We allowed the transfer or sale of stock in one foreign concern to another. Surely we cannot now come along and enact retroactive legislation having the effect of devaluing those shares. That is exactly what we are doing.

By passing this clause we are taking away the one safeguard that still lies in the hands of the Canadian government. We must live up to our commitment. Whatever the foreign concerns are, we should not show preference to one over another. So if the charter was good for the Dutch in 1953 it is good for the Americans today, and we are not going to allow those shares to devaluate. We will not deliberately, through a misunderstanding at the transfer of those shares, force their value down. Surely we will live up to a prior commitment, regardless of whether it was right or wrong.

The only safeguard we have is contained in the particular clause with which we are dealing now. Let us suppose for example that the First National City Bank of New York had the opportunity to divest itself of only 25 per cent of its interests in the next five years and still owned 75 per cent, so that its interests would be larger than permitted under the act. As the minister said, it would have to divest itself of the rest of its interests and withdraw completely from the banking business. Surely we do not want to force foreign capital out of Canada even if the former minister of finance was still in the driver's seat. We may not welcome foreign capital but we do not want to force it to flow back to the United States.

This is exactly what would happen if the bank were not able to sell 75 per cent of its stock in the next five years. Surely we should keep this one safeguard to allow the government to set up a trust which would buy 50 per cent of the remaining amount that was not sold. I am using a fictitious figure. The bank may only have been able to sell 25 per cent, which would leave 50 per cent to be sold. Surely we can expect the Canadian government to honour its commitment and to safeguard the value at which those shares traded in 1966. It should be able to buy them, to put them in trust and then to sell them.

Both the former minister of finance and the present minister have spoken a great deal about the establishment of the Canada Development Corporation. This would be an ideal body for such a transaction. Surely the minister should not destroy the one remaining safeguard in the bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, of course I cannot predict what form the Canada Development Corporation will take but if it is of the kind that had been proposed by my colleague, the former minister of finance, it would not be debarred under this bill from buying the shares, since it would not be an agency of Her Majesty.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on the amendment moved by the member of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) because I approve of it and also because according to the amendment a bank could not allow the transfer of capital stock to the federal government. But the member does not say anything about the problem which then crops up with regard to provincial governments. The member seems to object to the fact that the federal government is denied the right to own bank capital stock but he also seems to accept the fact that the provinces are denied the same right or power. Personally, I believe that neither the federal nor the provincial government should have the right to own bank shares, and that their right should not be limited to 10 per cent but that the provinces should be able to set up a bank if they so wished. I see no objection to that. On the contrary. It is generally recognized that banks have tremendous privileges to facilitate economic growth; but the public that is the province, is not allowed to have a chartered bank and all the powers which chartered banks are granted, including that of creating credit.

The provinces are to be denied that power. The Bank of Canada is denied the power to create credit, and the provinces are also denied it. If the federal government does not want to do it, why does it not allow the provinces to do so, at least to a certain extent, through ownership in a provincial bank or a chartered bank? Clause 53(3)(a) forbids any province and the federal government to purchase shares of the capital stock of a bank.

• (11:10 p.m.)

Then, I think I cannot agree with the minister on this subsection (3)(e). I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands who said that the federal government should not, through this subsection, be prohibited to hold shares, or a share of the share capital of a bank. I think that neither should the provinces be prevented from doing so.

That is why I would like to move a subamendment. I have not yet written it but I would like—it will not take long to write it —to move a subamendment which would strike out from subsection (3) paragraph (a) not only the words "to Her Majesty in the right of Canada", but also the words "in the right of a province". The subamendment would then mean that the whole paragraph (a) of subsection (3) is struck out. I therefore move that paragraph (a) of subsection (3) be struck out.

Then I believe, that it could be used as a subamendment, since the amendment only strikes out the words "Her Majesty in the right of Canada" and I would also strike out "or in the right of a province", and finally when both are stricken out, paragraph (a) of section 3 has more or less been been removed.

Then, I believe that my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will have no objection, if the federal government is allowed to hold shares in a chartered bank, to let the provinces also have some.

An hon. Member: There is a difference.

Mr. Grégoire: One can perhaps claim that there is a difference, but we will wait and see what will be the argument brought up by the hon. member to the effect that there is a difference.

There is obviously a difference in this that the federal government and the provincial government are not one and the same government. But I do not see that other point where there is no difference, and I do not see why there should be objections to allow the provinces to own shares in a bank and even to own a chartered bank. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, one argument in support of this would be the following: The federal government, and the provincial governments, have huge amounts deposited in chartered banks, on which they draw no interest. It has also been mentioned in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I believe the amount is almost $200 million if I remember correctly. That money belongs to the federal government and is deposited in the chartered banks, but the federal government does not receive any interest.

Now, there are too many privileges granted. If the federal government is entitled to own shares, to own a chartered bank, well then it could allow itself to deposit such amounts in its own bank, and thus not lose substantial amounts in interest, as when this money is deposited in banks that are privately-owned institutions.

I therefore wish to introduce an amendment to the main amendment which excludes from the formal prohibition specified in subclause 3, to own shares in a bank, the federal government and the provincial governments.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is in the interest of the federal government to own one or several shares in any commercial bank.

In fact, the federal government owns or rather the parliament owns the Bank of Canada. That is why we do not have to buy shares from commercial banks. Moreover, it is not for the government to do business or to be interested in doing business.

Now there is a difference between this attitude and preventing a province from owning its bank or from buying shares from a commercial bank. The provinces have no power on the Bank of Canada, whereas the government or the federal parliament have complete control over it. As for us, we suggest that the Bank of Canada own a branch in every Canadian province to process of to finance provincial, municipal and education projects in these provinces.

So I do not believe that the federal government would be justified in buying commercial bank shares but it should, for instance make full use of the services of the Bank of Canada owned by the Canadian people. That is something the federal government and the federal parliament have the means and the power to do. Let us use our powers without buying shares which would not in the least give us ownership of a bank, but let us allow the provinces the opportunity, the possibility, the power and the permission to purchase bank shares or to establish provincial banks to serve their own ends and their people.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add just one word and state that I second the member for Villeneuve when he says: "I do not see how the federal government could need to invade the area of the chartered banks since they already have the Bank of Canada. All they need to do is to give the Bank of Canada the privileges the chartered banks have. It would be much better than to buy shares of another bank. They would have their own.

All he has to do is leave to the Bank of Canada the same privileges as those which are vested in chartered banks: he would not have to buy stock in another bank, for he will have his own.

On the other hand, I would not object to withdrawing from the bill this interdiction to secure stock affecting the federal government especially for exceptional cases which may occur, such as in the Mercantile Bank, where American interests will have to remit within five years 75 per cent of their shares. If they do not succeed in selling them in the meantime, it might prove useful for the federal government to act directly.

That is why I did not see any objection to withdrawing the whole paragraph a of subsection 3 from clause 53 and for that reason I did not leave in this subsection 3 the limitations prescribed to the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, a few more words with respect to this clause. If what the minister says is correct the Canada Development Corporation may be involved. Would the minister assure us that the Canada Development Corporation will get off the ground in the next five years? I was interested in his remarks, because he suggested that this was the idea of the former minister of finance and he did not take full credit for it.

There is some doubt about this in my mind and I would like to know whether the Canada Development Corporation is going to be founded. Does the minister hold it up as the possible saviour of Canada's good name and reputation in respect to the exchange of the charter of the Mercantile Bank between the Dutch and American interests? Does the minister regard this as a possible saviour for the good name of this government in world banking and trading relationships?

Another question I would put in all seriousness is this. Over a number of years we have had treasury branches operating in the province of Alberta. While I have never been a depositor in these banks I have used them from time to time and I say without hesitation they have played a part in the banking world of Alberta. Many sound, financially interested people in that province would like these treasury branches to obtain a charter to do business elsewhere. Though the branches are solely owned by the province, would the minister allow them to obtain a charter because of their long standing reputation in Alberta?

• (11:20 p.m.)

I would have thought that members of the Social Credit party, who are long on banking and finance, would be interested in this clause. From time to time we hear them making utterances in that province, suggesting that these banks be chartered in Canada to be allowed, using the party's words "to multiply or make money", so that these institutions may serve the people of Alberta. I should like to hear the minister on these three questions, before passing this clause.

Mr. Sharp: I only made notes of two questions, the first being about the Canada Development Corporation. This is part of the government's policy, to which I am firmly committed and in which I believe strongly. The Canada Development Corporation would be a very useful addition to the financial institutions serving this country.

I qualified the answer I gave earlier, because I said that if the Canada Development Corporation was organized along the lines which had been suggested by my predecessor in office, the present senior Minister without Portfolio, then it would be empowered to buy the shares of the Mercantile Bank; if, however, it were organized as an agency of Her Majesty, which was not the idea of my colleague, then it would not be able to buy those shares. That is why I made the qualification. I can assure the hon. member that that remains an important part of this government's agenda.

Speaking of the treasury branches of the government of Alberta, if an application were to come from—I do not know from whom it would be—the government of Alberta for a bank, I do not know what this parliament would do with such application. I would think it would be rejected, on the grounds that we do not want any province running a chartered bank. Indeed that is what the legislation we are considering says. Parliament, of course, can override the Bank Act, if it wishes to, to enact a special statute enabling the treasury branch to be organized as a chartered bank. It would be perfectly possible for a group of entrepreneurs, private citizens, to take over that enterprise, apply for a charter, and operate it as a chartered bank. That would be perfectly possible and would probably commend itself to parliament.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Those are two points. I regret that I have forgotten the third raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister asked me a question, Mr. Chairman. May I answer?

The Chairman: Before the committee goes any farther I wish to say a word about the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe. The amendment moved by him purporting to amend the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands I think should not be accepted at this time because the subamendment does not amend the amendment. The subamendment would have to amend by leaving out certain words, by inserting other words or by adding other words. I would point out, too, that the subamendment as proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe, while slightly defective in form, might well be accepted as an amendment to subclause 3 if these corrections were made.

At this time I cannot accept as a subamendment the proposition moved by the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Can the minister give an assurance on the other point I raised? Can he assure us that the Canada Development Corporation will, in fact, get off the ground? Will we be able to place our hope in it? Will it really carry out our aspirations? After all, the setting up of the corporation was proposed some three and a half years ago. Does the government intend to bring in the necessary legislation this session, or in the next session? I suppose that as long as the session continues the government will continue to place material on the order paper; we see it lengthening every day.

Before we pass this clause, perhaps the minister will tell us whether he is still committed to this idea. Will it be before parliament during the coming session as, one might say, a fitting centennial project, if the hon. gentleman firmly believes in it? Or shall we have to wait and hear about it at the next election?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that is, yes; it is the intention to bring this forward in the next session.

Mr. Peters: I was surprised by two things the minister said. He told us he was opposed to provinces purchasing shares in chartered banks, though he agreed that individuals involved could set themselves up in such a way as to do so. I was more concerned about his comments on the Canada Development Corporation. He felt that because this was not directly an agency of the government, as crown corporations are, one of the roles it could play would be to purchase the outstanding stock of Mercantile Bank. I suggest this is one heck of a way of neutralizing the corporation and making a real eunuch of an organization which it was hoped would become a vitally important institution for the economic development of this country.

I agree with the hon. member for Acadia that this is an important clause affecting the responsibility of Canada. We have reached a simple decision to get control of our financial institutions, and two banks have been affected, one under foreign ownership. We have decided they will be given a special dispensation to expand so that they can sell on a reasonable basis.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion it will only be possible for them to sell either to the government directly or to a crown corporation. I suggest that what we appear to be saying to the Americans is not what is actually being said. This clause would make it impossible for the Canadian government to expropriate at the proper time the shares in the Mercantile Bank which are outstanding, in terms of the Bank Act, and as a result they will be sold at bargain basement prices to the other chartered banks, if those banks are interested in them.

I believe this is not in keeping with the standard Canada has had in expropriation in other fields. I believe there is little difference between the expropriation that may be necessary to get control of the stock of Mercantile Bank and expropriation to get control of other property which the government thinks it is desirable to have in the right of Canada.

Therefore I think the minister is limiting not only this government—and this government will not be in office too long—but is also limiting future governments which may desire to honour the intent of the Canadian people to get control over their own institutions while at the same time paying a reasonable price and, if necessary, getting control by government expropriation. The minister is tying the hands of all governments for at least 10 years ahead.

Mr. More: I am left confused by the minister's answer to the hon. member for Acadia. He spoke about the Canada Development Corporation being able to buy the stock of a bank. Is it not true it can buy only up to 10 per cent?

Mr. Sharp: That is right.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What is the effect of this clause on the newly chartered Bank of Western Canada? I am under the impression that one concern owned something like 53 per cent of its stock, and recently that figure was reported as being 51.5 per cent. Has that concern to sell a certain percentage of its ownership?

Mr. Sharp: So far as I know this clause has no effect upon the Bank of Western Canada. Clause 75(2)(g) has; except of course in due course the Bank of Western Canada will have to comply with the requirement that no shareholders shall have more than 10 per cent of the stock and, of course, so far as any shareholders do have more than 25 per cent it is subject to the restrictions in clause 75(2)(g).

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister explain what he means by "in due course"? Before the recent transfer of Bank of Western Canada stock to a concern in Montreal I had the impression that three individuals in Toronto owned 53 per cent of the stock. Does this clause mean they will have to reduce their individual ownership to 10 per cent per person, and 10 per cent per company? Is there some time limit for all banks, and is there some special time limit for that bank?

Mr. Sharp: "In due course", in the case of the Bank of Western Canada, means in 10 years. With respect to the other question, no transfer of stock in the Bank of Western Canada was involved in the transactions the other day. As I understand it, those were transactions in the stock of the British International Finance Corporation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why is the Bank of Western Canada being given ten years to dispose of stock? In the standing committee I asked the inspector general of banks whether, if a group of people raised $13.5 million, they would get a bank charter, and would he feel it his duty to examine the management of such a group. In this case the group is the B.I.F. corporation. That official answered that this group were examined and that their banking ability, management, and experience were considered to be of a high degree.

Since all this has taken place we have seen what in effect is the direct opposite. The former governor of the Bank of Canada has practically dissociated himself from the B.I.F. group. We have seen the Toronto Stock Exchange place the B.I.F. group in trust for a period of two weeks. We have seen huge trading in B.I.F stock. All this is based on an examination of the capability of their management by the inspector general's branch. If I am mistaken, I should like the minister to correct me. A special order in council was passed by the minister which in a sense makes a special provision to deal with this concern to grant it 10 years to divest itself of a huge percentage of its interest in this bank. Surely the minister should have something to say concerning the reason this special provision was given to these people, who since have proven to the investment world that they were not capable of raising the money, and were not capable of managing their financial interests. They appeared before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs and suggested they would have to go to the United States in order to obtain the capital.

I wonder why the minister would suggest that the government should pass such an order in council in respect of this shaky concern, this poorly managed concern which reached out for more than it actually could control. This concern not more than a year ago guaranteed to the committee that it could put up $6.5 million. Yet, when they actually had to put up the money they were $1,400,000 short. Last July or August the government of this country, without even ascertaining whether or not the $1.4 million was there, took upon itself to provide an order in council to get around this particular clause in the bill, which would grant this concern 10 years to divest itself of its interest. The story that was spread across Canada was that this management was so sound that we should not force it to divest its interest within three years, because it had to get the bank off the ground.

I say that this bank is not off the ground yet. Mr. Coyne, the former governor of the Bank of Canada, made quite clear last fall that there was some hanky panky going on in respect of the B.I.F. group. I should like to know why last July the minister felt it was necessary to give this poor group of financial experts 10 years within which to divest themselves of their interest. They should have been forced to do it within three years. In fact I am sure that all Canadians across the country, if they knew the complete story, would realize that this group should not have been given the charter in the first place. I am certain that if Mr. James Coyne had this to do all over again he would never have been sucked in. I use that expression, because I know everybody knows what it means. He was sucked in; his name was used to sell shares all across western Canada. Now he would like to get out. He displayed very, very shrewd business judgment by investing only $7,500 in it.

I should like to hear from the minister a further explanation concerning why a special order in council was granted to allow this company 10 years within which to divest itself of its interest when it could not even put up the full amount of money which the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs was assured would be put up and would be readily available.

I should like the minister to explain why the 10 year period was granted to this shaky group, which has proven itself to be made up of poor financial managers. Surely the committee is entitled to some kind of reply by the Minister of Finance as to why he took it upon himself to ask the Treasury Board and the governor in council to grant this group of poor managers a 10 year period in which to divest itself of this interest.

We are setting a precedent. It is all very well for hon. members on that side of the house to laugh and clap their hands, because they are trained seals; but we should remember that we will be granting charters for years to come. Will every group or individual who makes a request to this government be permitted 10 years to divest themselves of their interest, or will they have to qualify in some way for that longer period? I am sure many of these groups could qualify under the same provisions as B.I.F. qualified. I am sure anyone who can raise $13.2 million could qualify.

Will the minister indicate whether all charters to be granted from this time on will carry the 10 year term during which the interest may be divested, or is there some special regulation, clause or rule which applies to this period as opposed to the five year period? I am sure that I can continue to talk about this particular subject until the minister is prepared to give us some answer.

Mr. Sharp: There is a very simple explanation. If the hon. member will look at clause 59, which we will come to in due course if he has a little patience, he will see that it provides that all new banks will be given time to comply with the provisions of clause 53. That was the practice followed in the case of the Bank of Western Canada and I think it will be the practice followed in the case of all new banks which become established in Canada. It is my belief that this is a good practice because it is useful to have new banks in Canada owned by Canadians. The Treasury

Board and the governor in council in order to facilitate the establishment of those banks should allow some time for the shares to be distributed.

We have not had a new bank established in Canada for such a long time that this may seem an unusual provision. I do hope it will become increasingly common for groups to apply for charters, and that they will be granted some leeway to distribute their stock as widely as the law intends.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not see any reference to 10 years in clause 57 such as was the case in respect of the B.I.F. group, which has proven to have consisted of of poor financial managers. It was given 10 years, whereas the Mercantile Bank, which does not have to prove its ability in financial management, was given only five years. The B.I.F. group must prove itself in the financial field yet it was given 10 years. Will the minister give us some reason for this difference?

Mr. Sharp: The Mercantile Bank does not have to dispose of any of its shares, if it does not wish to. If it wishes to remain a small operation, as it is today, it does not have to distribute any shares. The provisions of the law, to which we have not yet come, place restrictions upon any bank whose shares are owned to the extent of more than 25 per cent by any single individual, but if the bank chooses to remain small it may do so and retain 100 per cent of its ownership.

What we are talking about here is the incorporation of a new bank in Canada. I do believe that there should be some discretion to assist Canadians in establishing new banks. I believe we need more new banks and there will be many applications. I doubt whether it will be possible at the outset to distribute the shares so widely that all the banks will be able to comply from the first day with the 10 per cent requirement. It seems to me that under the circumstances 10 years is reasonable. Of course this is always a question of judgment. All these orders have been tabled for a long time. They were discussed to some extent in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

We are not now confronting parliament with some very special, hidden arrangement. The details have been well known. They have been discussed in the newspapers and elsewhere. While some questions may be raised about some of the shareholders, it is hardly surprising that some difficulties should be experienced in getting a new bank started. This is one of the reasons why I doubt that a lot of the argument we have heard today, about the enormous profitability of banks, is justified. We are seeing evidence that it is very difficult indeed to get new banks started. Therefore I believe we should encourage them as far as possible, and permit them to have in excess of 10 per cent of their shares in the hands of individual shareholders. To me this seems a very small concession to make in order to get a bank successfully established.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, hon. members seem to be in a great hurry. Surely we are not in any particular hurry. Finance is a very important subject. We are dealing with every facet of the Canadian economy. Hon. members on the other side are making great deal of noise. I wish they would rise and speak so that I could hear them more clearly. The microphones should be turned on and then all of us could hear them more clearly.

I should like to ask the minister why this restriction was put on the Mercantile Bank in particular. Was there a limit put on the Dutch interests, then we must conclude that the gov- back in 1953? If a limit is put on the U.S. interests, then we must conclude that the government is anti-American. I would not like to think that a country as big as Canada but dependant upon the economy of the U.S. and its ups and downs, as has been proven in the past, has acted in an anti-American manner by placing a limit on the size of a charter that was granted back in 1953 and forcing that company to divest itself of 75 per cent of its interests.

This suggests to me that the government is definitely anti-American. If the minister wishes to deny that, then I hope he will do so because I am very proud of our good relations with the U.S.

There is another question with regard to the management of the B.I.F. group which I should like to address to the minister. Would he admit now that only a very cursory examination was given by this department to the financial ability of the B.I.F. group before a licence was granted to the Bank of Western Canada? I would like to think that the minister gave this question a lot of thought before the charter was granted and the licence issued by his department.

We have seen Mr. Coyne, who is a very honest individual. I do not think there is a man in Canada who would question his honesty. I am not saying his judgment is always correct but I believe that his intentions are honest. However, he certainly did not do the Bank of Western Canada any good by raising the furore he raised last fall. He did maintain his basic integrity. He could not live with the shakiness of the B.I.F. group which is still $1.4 million short.

• (11:50 p.m.)

I wonder if the minister will now admit that his department should have made a much more thorough examination of the financial ability of that group before he permitted it to have a charter? I know several ministers with whom I have talked in private who have told me that a bank charter is a very special and very valuable commodity in this country of ours. Just the charter alone is a very special and very valuable commodity. Surely, now that we have seen the difficulties into which the B.I.F. group has fallen, when we have seen that they are $1.4 million short, the minister could honestly declare to this house that in the future a much more thorough examination will be made of the financial management capabilities of a group asking for a charter. Surely this is not asking too much of the minister before this clause passes, to say that he is now convinced that the examination of the management of the bank was not enough. The examination should have been far more thorough.

The minister should be able to say that in the granting of bank charters in the future a much more detailed study will take place before the inspector general of banks comes before a committee and says, "Yes, the committee can rest assured that the management is sound and has ability". We even saw Mr. Stevens, the main spokesman for the B.I.F. group, come before us eight months later and say he was a little short. He wanted to go down to the United States to pick up the $1.4 million because there he would get the money and also experienced advice. Surely there has been a shortfall in the examination the minister's department has made. I should like him to say that in so far as future charters are concerned, there will be a much more thorough examination.

The minister may ask why I am so concerned. I am concerned because very close to

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

$6.3 million was money invested from western Canada, which money was invested on the strength of the understanding that the management had been examined, that James Coyne was in a group of very wise, shrewd financial men. This is why I am so concerned. I am firmly convinced that we westerners, as James Coyne said five months ago, were sucked in along with him. Now we are going to have to ride that out.

We have heard lately that the stock has changed hands and gone to Montreal from Toronto. I ask the Minister of Finance, has the inspector general of banks or his department examined this new group to see whether they are capable of managing a bank? Can we expect within a few weeks, five months or five years, that the whole bundle will go somewhere else? Surely the minister now realizes that his department did not examine the management ability of this group. As a result of that, the people of western Canada invested $6.3 million, and they find they have not had the money to use. It has been placed in trust, so to speak. The shares were bought at $15 per share, and the value has dropped substantially below that. If those shares were placed on the market, that would be the result and nobody on that side of the house can deny it.

We were sucked in, along with James Coyne, who invested only $7,500 in the bank. His intent was honest, but he found he could not live with the Stevens group from Toronto. Last fall he did not ask any questions. He did not point out anything factual to the committee, but he felt firmly this was going to happen. He raised a great furore and cleared his own name. But there is still a huge amount of money invested in that concern in western Canada. Does the minister realize that there was a shortfall in that concern which was examined by his department? Can he assure the house that before granting charters in the future a more thorough examination will take place? Because that is an important point.

Charters were granted in B.C. and others may be granted in Quebec and Ontario. I would not like to see the minister agree to granting a charter to a firm which had ten years to divest itself of its interest among aunts, uncles and brothers-in-law. That is what Mr. Stevens did in Toronto, according to the evidence given in the committee last year. He spread his investment around in this way. Therefore I should like the minister to assure the committee that in granting further charters his department will make a much more thorough examination of the firm in question, so that we as legislators are assured that people enticed to join the firm in the years ahead can do so with confidence.

The B.I.F. group sold 50 per cent of its interest to a concern in Montreal. Let us suppose that the concern in Montreal does not get started. Could the minister step in under this clause and buy up that 50 per cent, place it in trust and hope to entice some financial experts to move in? No, he could not. This clause would limit the government to buying only 10 per cent, which would not be enough to bail out the B.I.F. group. I think this clause needs further study and that the minister should comment on the anti-American approach the government appears to be taking on the Mercantile Bank.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Public Works and government leader (Mr. McIlraith) has made a rather firm commitment at ten o'clock to the effect that we would discuss the bill for one hour or so and then report progress. Two hours have now elapsed I think and the minister had stated that if no noticeable progress had been made by eleven o'clock or so debate would be adjourned until tomorrow.

We have been discussing the bill for two hours. In my opinion the progress accomplished since ten o'clock is not too noticeable since we have not tackled any new clause; instead we reverted to clauses already considered.

Since the hon. Minister of Public Works is not here, I want to know who replaces him. To whatever minister who replaces the government house leader, I ask if he is ready to rise and comply with the rather serious undertaking on the part of the Minister of Public Works and move the adjournment of the house until tomorrow?

[English]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Grégoire: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of being ready or not. It is midnight and the Minister of Public Works had made a formal commitment. I am wondering who is replacing him and whether he intends to honour the commitment made this afternoon by the government house leader.

• (12:00 midnight)

Mr. Peters: The minister raised an important question in which I am vitally concerned. A few moment ago he answered questions asked by the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Grégoire: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The government house leader made a commitment. There were other ministers, at that time, who are still in the house. He said that if no substantial and appreciable progress was made, he would move the adjournment around eleven o'clock, we have been discussing for two hours already.

Did the minister make that proposal in order to fool us? That is my question of privilege. Furthermore, the Minister of Public Works, who made that commitment, is no longer here to answer. So we might go on until five o'clock tomorrow, without making any progress, and as the minister is no longer here, there is no one to answer now.

So here is my question of privilege: a commitment was made by a cabinet minister, with whom all the others are solidary. I ask them, on the basis of this ministerial solidarity, whether they are ready to honour that commitment made by one of their colleagues and whether or not any progress has been made. If not, let us have the adjournment.

That is my request and I think, Mr. Chairman, that my question of privilege should be taken into consideration by the other members of the cabinet.

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: I think the hon. member's question of privilege is well taken. In answering some questions the Minister of Finance brought up the relationship between some shareholders and directors of the Bank of Western Canada. I should like to take a look at the record, when it is official, to follow what has been brought up.

The Chairman: I am having trouble relating the remarks of the hon. member to the question of privilege.

Mr. Nasserden: The relationship is that because of answers made the debate has been prolonged.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in a matter the minister has raised.

Mr. Grégoire: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I refer to the same question of privilege. I see that the government house leader has arrived and I think the question I have raised requires an answer. We have a definite commitment from the house leader about what would happen if he finds we have made progress—and I do not think the majority of the committee thinks we have. He should respect that commitment.

Mr. McIlraith: I shall be glad to deal with the subject. The hon. member, who heads a party that is unanimous in the house in that it has only one member, gave a firm commitment to me that he intended to finish the committee stage of the bill tonight, that there would be no objection from him and no delaying in the committee of the whole procedure, and that it would finish tonight. In the light of that I am mystified by the question of privilege he has now raised. Some progress has been made, notwithstanding the hon. member for Lapointe. I shall be glad to carry out my commitment exactly as it was made with other members of the committee. I recognize the lateness of the hour, but I also recognize that many members want to proceed and are trying their best to proceed with the discussion of this bill. It is just a matter of what the committee wishes to do in the circumstances in which we find ourselves at the moment.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order. May I ask the minister how long he intends to request the committee to sit? It is now after midnight. I will not enter into a debate as to precisely what the commitment was, but it is my impression that the kind of progress we have made would not have justified continuing as long as we have. It would certainly not justify our continuing beyond midnight. But I am not arguing about that. I should like to know from the Minister of Finance or from the leader of the house whether it is intended that we sit until the bill is passed, which may be three or four o'clock in the morning.

Mr. McIlraith: No. I would think it has to be made clear, very quickly, that there is a will on the part of hon. members to get down to the discussion of clauses, and some apparent progress has to be made. Otherwise I will move the adjournment.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on the same question of privilege. I would like to refer to a statement made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith.) When he tells me that I agreed that we could finish the bill tonight, I must tell him that I am not responsible for what happens in all corners of the house.

Mr. Chairman, I committed myself to the same thing as the Minister of Public Works namely that if noticeable progress was made within a few hours, we would be ready to finish examining the bill. But when it looks as if this might go on all night, until six o'clock in the morning, then, Mr. Chairman, I certainly did not agree to that, I never told the minister that I was ready to continue until six o'clock in the morning. I think it would have been better for the Minister of Public Works to report faithfully what has been said or not to have asked us our opinion outside the house.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I would point out that there is no question of privilege in what the hon. member for Lapointe has said. But as to the substantive question as to whether or not the committee should rise now, I am quite prepared to act in a way which, I hope, will meet the wishes of hon. members, because I recognize the lateness of the hour. Does the committee feel there is any possibility of making any progress by continuing?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, no.

Mr. McIlraith: Then, Mr. Chairman, I think I should ask you to rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

• (12:10 a.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I move that this house do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Maybe I should point out to the house that there will be no other adjournment motion, and therefore no proceedings on the so-called late show.

Mr. Knowles: We have had it.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 12.15 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 21, 1967

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Eighth report of standing committee on industry, research and energy development—Mr. Cashin.

[Translation]

Eleventh report of standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts—Mr. Stanbury.

[English]

Fifth report of standing committee on Indian affairs, human rights and citizenship and immigration—Mr. Klein.

Tenth report of standing committe on justice and legal affairs—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the sixth report of the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources, in English and in French.

Mr. Dinsdale: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to point out that this report is presented on division.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY DISPUTE—AGREEMENT WITH ONE UNION AND APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATION BOARD

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform those hon. members who have not heard it over the air that an agreement has been reached on the terms of settlement between the railway companies concerned and the negotiating committee of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers representing some 20,000 employees. The agreement is to be submitted immediately for ratification. I may say that the agreement was reached with the assistance of Mr. Carl Goldenberg who it will be recalled was appointed mediator some months ago. In view of this development both the brotherhood and the companies concerned have asked that I withhold any action or arbitration on this particular dispute.

I also wish to announce the appointment of a board of arbitrators under section 10 of the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act, 1966 to deal with the dispute between the shop craft unions and the railway companies mentioned in the schedule to the act. Some 23,000 employees are involved. This is the only group that now has asked for arbitration. The board of arbitration will consist of Hon. Wilfrid Roach, formerly a justice of the Ontario court of appeal, Mr. Leon Lalande, Q.C. of Montreal and Dr. Horace Read, Q.C. of Halifax. Mr. Roach will serve as chairman of the board.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I also wish to lay before the house, Mr. Speaker, the regulations establishing the said board. I do so by tabling two copies in English and two copies in French.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the regulations to which he has just alluded.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Minister of Labour a question in two parts arising out of the announcement he made earlier. First, is he in a position to inform the house whether the settlement between the railways and the C.B. of R.T. follows the lines of the settlement made with other unions with the assistance of Mr. Goldenberg? Second, can the minister inform us whether two of the members of the board of arbitration which he announced, Mr. Lalonde and Mr. Green, were appointed on the recommendation of the parties to the dispute or by the governor in council?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): To answer the first part of the question, there are some points of difference in the settlement reached as compared with the settlements in the other cases, but there is a uniform pattern throughout all the settlements. The differences are those one might expect because of the varying circumstances involved.

With regard to the second part of the question, the responsibility for the selection of the arbitrators was placed by parliament upon the governor in council. Incidentally, I might point out that the hon. member erred in the name of one of the arbitrators. It is Dr. Horace Read, not Mr. Green. All three of the arbitrators were chosen by the governor in council.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister inform us whether the railways and the unions concerned were consulted about the persons appointed? I thought the minister said "Green"; I understand now it is Horace Read.

Mr. Nicholson: Suggestions were made by the groups involved, but I think I can safely say that no one of the three arbitrators was recommended by either side. They were chosen by the government entirely on its own responsibility.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION FOR ADMINISTRATION

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. S-57 (from the Senate), to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Museums of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ESTIMATED DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it is with respect to an article in today's Globe and Mail which no doubt, coming from Toronto, he reads with care and thought. What is the government's position with regard to financing Expo, in view of the disquieting reports that the deficit is now estimated to be of the order of approximately $100 million? Will the minister before this session ends, possibly tomorrow, give a detailed statement about the situation in general, and will he advise the house whether it is in fact true that in advertising Expo in the United States the fabulous sum of $13 million is being expended.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the act establishing Expo, the minister responsible for the federal government's participation is required to periodically table in parliament an estimate of the capital and operating expenditures, and this has been done. This is a matter of public knowledge.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How long ago?

Mr. Winters: Very recently.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How long ago?

Mr. Winters: A few weeks ago; just recently. But as to the deficit, this is entirely dependent on the public response to Expo, the response of the people, of customers coming through the turnstiles and spending money in Canada. It is difficult, almost impossible, to estimate that response. It is estimated that regardless of the response within the gates of Expo itself, the net return to Canada will result in a profit on the expenditures made by the various governments concerned with Expo, which has every likelihood of being a tremendous success. The moneys expended for advertising in the United States, to which the right hon. gentleman referred are part of our insurance for the success of Expo.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, addressed to the Secretary of State. In view of the question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, and the general interest in encouraging people to come to Expo, would the Secretary of State convey to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the suggestion that further programs such as "Shop Talk" this morning and others which have occurred within the last few weeks, and which are actively discouraging people from coming to Expo, be discontinued?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy as always to convey my hon. friend's thoughts to the C.B.C.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF STRATFORD SHAKESPEAREAN COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the house a number of very illustrious young Canadians, members of the Stratford Shakespearean company, which opened last night in Ottawa on the centennial festival of Canada tour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST THAT SPECIAL COMMITTEE HEAR A. G. HEAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): My question is for the Solicitor General in the absence of the Registrar General. I should like to recall a question which was asked last week by the hon. member for Kootenay West concerning the special committee of three which has been set up to study the bankruptcy situation in this country and complaints with regard to it. Would the Solicitor General be willing to allow a certain Mr. Heakes to testify and explain his classical case before this committee? I have on the order paper a motion for the production of papers which is relevant to this matter, and if the procedure I suggest were followed I could remove this motion for papers.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I will take notice of the question and bring it to the attention of the Registrar General.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGES BY MANAGEMENT-LABOUR CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether he will consider the advisability of calling a summit conference of labour and management as recommended by Mr. Jean-Réal Cardin in his presentation to the conference on labour-management relations, to consider all problems related to technological change.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Having read the paper in question with great interest I can assure the hon. member that serious consideration will be given to his suggestion.

FINANCE

REPORTED BANK CHARGES FOR RENEWAL OF PERPETUAL BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. As reported at page 12557 of Hansard for February 2 the minister promised to make inquiries into certain charges made by the banks for renewal of the 3 per cent perpetual bonds. Has the minister authorized remuneration to the banks for renewing these bonds, which he promised to look into at that time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had this question investigated, and I understand that in a few isolated instances charges were made by branch banks for this service. We have not authorized such a charge, and we are taking up the matter with the Canadian Bankers' Association.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister in a position to indicate what action his department plans to take with regard to serious unemployment situations developing in Nova Scotia, especially in Amherst where the two major industries have laid off large numbers of employees with no indication as to when they might be re-employed, with the only alternative being transportation assistance to some other area of Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think what my department can do in such cases is very well known. The department of manpower makes placements, gives travelling grants and also gives retraining allowances. Of course we do not have an instrument in the department to fight seasonal or local unemployment as such, but in Nova Scotia we are going to do what we are doing elsewhere.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. May I ask him whether action is being taken through the Department of Defence Production for greater work in-put at Enamel and Heating, which only this week has indicated that further lay-offs will take place.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the question of consideration for Enamel and Heating has been raised on a number of instances, and we will continue to do what we can to see they are provided with a fair share of the work load.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister aware that the Ryan trophy of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy will be awarded on March 26 to the International Mineral and Chemical Corporation of Esterhazy, Saskatchewan, for the best safety record in Canada? This potash mine is the most modern in the world and deserves this award. Would the minister convey congratulations to I.M.C. on this achievement?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXPO '67

REPORTED OBJECTIONS TO DESIGN OF WEST GERMAN PAVILION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question is based on an aerial photograph of the West German pavilion at Expo '67 which is supposed to represent a map which includes certain areas of the present Polish state and other eastern European states. A copy of this photograph was recently sent to me. I am also informed that the shape of this pavilion has been severely criticized by some eastern European states. Is the government of Canda responsible for the design of pavilions at Expo, and would the minister investigate the basis for these objections raised by some eastern European countries to the design of the pavilion of the West German government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think both these questions should be placed on the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the very interesting and welcome announcement as to new mineral development in the Yukon, and having in mind the minister's statement as to the need for increasing port facilities would he, in collaboration with his colleagues, immediately review the government's position with regard to the Alaska highway and shortly make a statement in the house on the government's intentions and the result of discussions it has had with the United States and British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a proper question at this time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—INQUIRY AS TO FINDINGS OF SUPREME COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. Has the Supreme Court of Canada given any indication as to when its findings with respect to the case of Steven Truscott will be made known to the government?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I have no information on this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I do not anticipate that any prior notice will be given to the law officers of the crown before judgment is rendered.

CROWN ASSETS

REPORTED SALE OF OBSOLETE DEFENCE MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In a current report it is revealed that some $103.7 million worth of obsolete but still serviceable defence equipment was sold for approximately $4.7 million through the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. In view of the huge increase in government expenditure both this year and next, what assurance can the minister give that vast amounts of tax dollars are not being wasted through inadequate policies and inefficient administration?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not in order.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REPORTED DELAY IN RECEIPT OF SUBSIDY CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether there is any reason that the fluid milk shippers have not received their subsidy cheques since January 14.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge most of them have. I was under the impression that they were all receiving the cheques regularly. If my hon. friend has information regarding any specific instances in which these cheques were not received, I would be glad to look into the matter.

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION PROPOSED BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Would he advise the house whether it is the intention of the government to bring in a motion in connection with the case of Mr. Justice Landreville? Second, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister what action the government is taking regarding the unparalleled request by the justice to appear on the floor of the House of Commons while it is in session.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give an immediate reply. I understand that the evidence of the committee has not yet been printed. Perhaps later in the day or certainly tomorrow I may be in a position to say more about it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF OFFICIALS OF AIR CANADA AND C.N.R.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention that officials of Air Canada and the C.N.R. will be examined by the committee on transport and communications? If so, when? I ask this question because it is a considerable time since we have looked over these annual reports. Some of them already have appeared.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the annual report of Air Canada was tabled the other day. I have been advised by my friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West that he hopes to be able to arrange for the officials of Air Canada to appear quite early after what we fondly think of as the Easter recess.

INDUSTRY

NEWSPRINT—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING PROPOSED PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Finance. Having in mind the $3 a ton increase in prices scheduled for the newspapers of Canada by the newsprint industry, is consideration being given by the government to consultation with the newsprint industry with a view to restraining this proposed general increase, as was done in respect to the steel industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker; I have no plans to meet with the newsprint industry.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO ENTRY OF AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I wonder whether, before the Easter adjournment, the minister would be in a position to announce to the house government policy regarding the matter of seasonal farm labour, due to the approach of the planting season.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHANGES IN RULES SUGGESTED BY MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Do the suggested changes in house procedures presented by the Minister without Portfolio in a speech delivered to the Osgoode Hall legal and literary society, which would prevent Social Credit and Créditiste spokesmen from replying on motions, represent official government thinking in this regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I am told it was a very interesting speech.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXPO '67

APPLICANTS FOR ACCOMMODATION QUERIED AS TO RACE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked whether I was aware of the advice being given by Logexpo to applicants for accommodation in Montreal during Expo '67 to the effect that they should indicate their race.

Mr. Speaker, no such advice is being given. Because of the seriousness of the suggestion, I looked into this matter quite carefully. The Quebec lodging service for Expo '67 is operated by the Quebec government, and has the responsibility for selecting the accommodation which Logexpo then makes available to visitors to Expo. No printed form of Logexpo or of the Quebec lodging service for Expo '67 asks any question regarding race or creed, and certainly no such question is asked of prospective visitors to Expo '67. In fact the hotels act of the province of Quebec specifically provides that there shall be no such discrimination. As far as the federal government is concerned, we have made our views in this regard clearly known to Expo.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EASTER MONDAY—INQUIRY AS TO HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. On Thursday, March 9, I asked him whether it had been indicated that Easter Monday would be a holiday for classified civil servants but not for prevailing rates employees. I asked further whether the government would consider treating both groups in the same manner. The minister said he would look into the matter. Has he anything further to say about this matter at this time?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, these groups of employees are being treated this year exactly the same as in previous years.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED DISCRIMINATION IN ADMISSION OF IMMIGRANTS FROM POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which I have given him notice. At page 38 of the white paper on immigration there is reference to the non-discriminatory policy of the department. I should like to ask the minister how it is that five members of the Kawa family from Poland have been admitted to Canada, yet the children of a sixth brother are being discriminated against. At the moment Mr. Gruszka lives across the road from me in Toronto, and I should like to ask why there is a policy of discrimination against this man when his five uncles and aunts have been allowed into Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked contains allegations, and I do not think it should be accepted in that form.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED INCREASED USE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Can he give a clear indication as to the disposition of the request by the Manitoba government that DC-9 jet aircraft be overhauled and serviced at the Winnipeg airport?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The representations made by the Manitoba government were passed on to Air Canada which, of course, has the responsibility for formulating policies of management in this regard. I did ask them to give me their views, but up to this point I have not received them.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, does that not indicate another reason for the minister to accept this responsibility of seeing that the estimates of Air Canada go to the committee fairly soon?

OLD AGE SECURITY

INCOME SUPPLEMENT—GRATUITY TO RETIRED N.S. COAL MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the Minister of National Revenue whether gratuities received by retired Nova Scotia coal miners would be calculated as income for the purpose of qualifying for the guaranteed income supplement. At that time he said he would give an answer in the afternoon. I might say he was very prompt and an answer was sent to my office that afternoon, although I regret I was not there. In that answer reference is made to $35. I should like to ask whether any amount they may receive will be calculated as income for this purpose.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the amounts received from pension funds, whether they have been contributed to by the employer or employee, are generally considered as income for tax purposes. Any amount, no matter how small, will be taken into consideration. I might say that steps are taken to offset some of these amounts in calculating benefits to be received under the supplementary old age pensions.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister how he or the government arrived at the decision that retired Cape Breton miners are receiving pensions.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in the answer I sent to my hon. friend I was a little more explicit, and I thought I should not go into it in detail in the house. Under the general rules for determining the amount of supplementary old age pension, income is considered in the same light as income under the Income Tax Act. An amount which would be income under the Income Tax Act would be considered as income in determining the supplementary pension.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): If you will allow me to do so, sir, I should like to point out to the minister, as was pointed out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare at the time this legislation was considered by this house, that miners in Cape Breton receive no pensions whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will ask his question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister to take note of some of the correspondence between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the miners of Cape Breton in respect of the gratuities they receive and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT ACTING PRIME MINISTER READ EVIDENCE GIVEN TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, if I can engage his attention. Is it the minister's intention to read the complete text of the evidence taken before the defence committee in order to form his own judgment, in view of the fact that the cabinet was not kept fully informed concerning the program of integration and unification.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question contains an allegation, and is not acceptable.

REPORTED WEARING OF NEW UNIFORM ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence did not have an opportunity yesterday to answer a question I asked him. In reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton South he said:

> —all uniforms are worn under the authority of the minister pursuant to the National Defence Act.

The question I asked related to the appearance of certain members of the armed forces on parliament hill apparently wearing green uniforms. Were those uniforms worn with the consent and approval of the minister, and do they represent the view of the government at this time regarding the nature of the uniform which the united forces will wear?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on a number of occasions, it is the intention of the government, the minister and the department that a number of uniforms will be worn this summer on a trial basis to determine their suitability for the forces in years ahead.

These uniforms are presently in the process of being developed, and they will be issued to selected members of the armed forces very soon to be worn this summer. In this process of development some photographs are being taken in order that they may be shown to members of the armed forces to acquaint them with our plans. It is hoped that as soon as this has been done—and this has been indicated to the armed forces—they can be taken into the confidence of the department at the outset, at which time they may obtain their information internally through appropriate channels rather than by seeing pictures of the uniforms in the newspapers.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister indicate the estimated cost of this propaganda effort?

Mr. Hellyer: This particular effort will not be costly. The uniforms are being developed in fairly limited quantities for user tests. My hon. friend may or may not be aware that each of the three services was in the process of developing a new uniform of its own. Consequently the development of a single uniform at this time will probably save the Canadian taxpayers a certain amount of money. I am sure that news is welcomed by my hon. friend. I hope he will like the new uniforms as well as those people who have seen and worn them, because I am sure he will realize that they will reflect great credit on the fine Canadians who will wear them this summer.

Mr. Churchill: If the minister does not buy the Cadillac he has in mind he will save money; is that right?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the minister has never been able to afford a Cadillac.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister will come down from the high atmosphere and answer the question. Were the soldiers on parliament hill on March 17 wearing a uniform which was authorized by him? That is the question!

Mr. Hellyer: There is an old saying which my right hon. Baptist friend will appreciate. "The better the day the better the deed." I think it was on March 17, St. Patrick's day, when these uniforms were worn. Certainly at that time they were worn on the authorization of the Minister of National Defence and the chief of defence staff.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the reference to Baptists leads me to state that we Baptists would never abolish the navy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, speaking for at least my section of the Baptist church, I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Do you mean you would abolish the navy?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, the question I was about to pose was very similar to that asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, but I should like now to ask the Minister of National Defence the following question. Having been one of those fortunate members who saw the rather furtive appearance of the new uniforms on parliament hill last St. Patrick's day, would the minister consider having some of the members of the armed forces decked out in the new uniform for the Easter parade so we could all see them prior to the defence bill coming before the house again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether hon. members do not think it is time to call orders of the day.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed, from Monday, March 20, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. The house again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking. When the committee rose last evening, March 20, clause 53 of the bill was under discussion. The following clauses had been allowed to stand: 1, 33, 54 to 57 inclusive, and 75.

On clause 53—Limit on shares held by non-residents.

The Chairman: Shall clause 53 carry?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, unless I am mistaken there is an amendment to clause 53 before the committee. Surely we should take the amendment first. I may be wrong, but that is my memory.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for York South is quite correct, and I apologize to him. The committee is now dealing with the amendment to clause 53 proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Cameron, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) negatived: Yeas, 10; nays, 95.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 53 carry?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of an earlier clause the chairman of the committee on trade, finance and economic affairs gave notice that he was going to move an amendment on behalf of the hon. member for Verdun, which is to be found in Hansard for March 17 at pages 14152 and 14153. Perhaps the hon. member for Verdun would now like to follow through with his original intention.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, during the opportunity to speak on this bill on clause 2 I, like other members of the committee, reviewed some of the activities of the banking committee and some of the conclusions that we arrived at. I reviewed the minister's answers before the committee, not only in answer to some of my questions but some of those asked by the hon. member for Regina and other prominent members of the committee. The minister enunciated on several occasions that the principle behind the bill was to prevent large blocks of shares being held by individuals and their associates, which in the opinion of the minister, would act to the detriment of banking in general in Canada.

The various amendments to the bill brought forward at that time in my opinion and, I would say, in the opinion of all members of the committee, tended to tighten up many of the loopholes that existed. But there was one in particular that bothered me and it obviously also bothered the chairman of the committee. Since I did not anticipate being here today, the chairman of the committee very kindly followed through for me in his speech on Friday last. I refer to the possibility of individuals and their associates, as defined in the act, at present owning more than 10 per cent of the shares of a bank and adding substantially to their holdings on those occasions when new subscriptions or new share capital may be authorized by the governor in council. As I recall the minister's answers at the time, and I wish I could quote them precisely now, he assured the committee that on those occasions when the Mercantile Bank or any bank would request and obtain permission to increase their authorized share capital, those shares would be disposed of by sale to Canadians only.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The other evening I expressed the opinion that laudable as the minister's intentions were, and convincing as his assurances sounded before the committee, this intention was not necessarily reflected in any of the clauses of the present bill. While I did not question the motive of the minister, I did express grave doubt that the minister or the governor in council would have a legal right to impose this type of condition under the provisions of the Bank Act. I suggested, therefore, that possibly it would be in the best interests of the bill if the minister were to introduce some amendment at the appropriate place that would ensure the pro-Canadian spirit of the act.

Perhaps by way of clarification, before reading the amendment, I should point out the situation as it now exists with respect to Mercantile. Under one of the restrictive clauses, I believe it is 75(2)(g), Mercantile Bank has been given permission to dispose of 75 per cent of its shares over a period of five years if the bank desires to avoid the restrictive features of this particular clause concerning the ratio of liabilities. I point out to the committee that there is nothing in the law that says Mercantile must divest itself of these shares, but the law is quite clear that it must divest itself of 75 per cent of the shares if it wants to avoid the punitive features of this particular clause. Furthermore the committee, at the suggestion of other members, also included a provision to the effect that where a bank is more than 25 per cent owned by non-residents, there can no longer be a transfer of bank shares from one non-resident to another. In other words the whole spirit of the bill has been to retain, as much as possible, Canadian control of our banking institutions.

What bothered me was precisely what the minister had in mind, as I reread the testimony, in those future cases where permission would be granted by the governor in council to Mercantile to increase its authorized shares. What is there in the bill that would prevent such a bank from retaining 25 per cent of its shares in perpetuity simply by buying up 25 per cent of the new issues? This could happen despite the assurances of the minister on half a dozen occasions that this is not the spirit of the act.

I requested the minister to introduce some amendment—this refers to all banks—which would provide that if any individual now owns more than 10 per cent of the shares of a bank and that particular bank does obtain permission to increase its share capital, that particular individual and his associates should not be able to purchase any of these authorized shares. This in effect would mean that whenever Mercantile or any other bank attempted to increase its size by increasing the authorized share capital, the bank could do so only by the sale of those shares to Canadians until such time as the non-resident ratio was down to 25 per cent, and under no circumstances could those shares be purchased by someone who at that time owned more than 10 per cent of the shares.

This is not a new interpretation. This is what the minister assured the committee on three or four occasions was the intention. I expressed the reservation, however, that although I recognized the sincerity of the minister's desire, I would feel more comfortable if this expressed intention of the minister were transferred into some provision in the bill. Accordingly the chairman of the banking committee, as recorded on page 14152 of Hansard, pointed out that to attain the objective I desired an amendment would be required to another clause as well. Perhaps I should read his remarks so I can interpret precisely what I had in mind:

Mr. Gray: I have no objection to that. It will be recalled that the hon. member for Verdun yesterday gave the committee his views, and I quote him as follows as recorded at page 14107 of Hansard:

"What bothers me, and I say this directly to the minister, is that I am not certain in reading the bill that the governor in council necessarily has that right."

I might say in explanation to the committee that the right I was talking about was to impose a condition on how the shares could be sold and who could buy those shares where the governor in council authorized an increase in the share capital. I continue the quotation from page 14152 of Hansard:

This was referring to the preceding part of his remarks.

"I suggest to the minister, and this might be implemented on the appropriate clause ... that we ensure that whenever a bank receives permission to increase its share capital, no individual, as defined in the act, be permitted to add to his shares so long as he or his group owns more than 10 per cent of a bank."

I think this will meet with everybody's approval.

"I am not talking of a specific bank; I am talking of any bank; and more than one bank is in that particular situation. This would guarantee the carrying out of the minister's intention, as he has stated it on several occasions in the committee."

[Mr. Mackasey.]

The chairman of the banking committee went on to say, as recorded on this same page:

The hon. member for Verdun was referring to the standing committee. He is not present at this time, but I might say that if we should reach clause 53, subclause 4 today I would suggest an amendment. Perhaps the simplest thing would be to read it.

This is the amendment which the chairman of the banking committee was offering on my behalf. The amendment reads:

That Bill C-222, an act respecting banks and banking, be amended

(a) by striking out lines 9 to 11, inclusive, on page 32 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following—

Mr. Lewis: May I interrupt the hon. member and ask him if he would be good enough to look at the bill to see whether this is exactly what he meant to say. It does not seem to fit lines 9 to 11 on page 32, but perhaps we are failing to see something.

Mr. Mackasey: No, it would be clause 53, page 32, subclause 4. I do not want to hold up the committee too long, but perhaps I could take a minute to check out the clause and make sure this is the one the hon. member has in mind. I might as well read it from the top of page 32:

(a) by striking out lines 9 to 11, inclusive, on page 32 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following: "thereof",

(b) by any person if, at the time the share is subscribed for, the total number of shares of the capital stock of the bank have by such person and by other shareholders associated with him, if any, exceeds 10 per cent of the total number of the issued and outstanding shares of such stock; or

(c) except as otherwise provided in subsection (5), in other circumstances where if the subscription";

(d) by striking out line 19 on page 32 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"(5) Subject to paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection"

• (3:30 p.m.)

The lawyers can work it out among themselves, but what this simply says is that if at the present time an individual or his associates own more than 10 per cent of the shares they will not be able to purchase any of the new shares issued.

I do not want to bore hon. members too much but at the same time I should like to quote the chairman of the banking committee as reported on page 14153 of Hansard of March 17. He went on to say:

Of course, it is not easy to follow this just by listening to it. One would have to have the bill in front of him. The reason I ask that clause 33 stand is that if the suggested amendment to clause 53 should be adopted by the house it would be necessary to have an amendment to clause 33 (1) (d) which I might bring to the attention of the house at this time. The amendment will be as follows:

That Bill C-222, an act respecting banks and banking, be amended by striking out line 44 on page 20 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"reason of paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (4) of".

I do not grasp the significance of the last amendment suggested by the chairman of the committee but I am sure it can be fitted into the amendment I have just suggested pertaining to clause 53.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I will take the hon. member's word that it can be fitted in here somewhere. I have no objection to his amendment but I wonder whether he quite realizes what he is doing. It may be an excellent idea but it does make fish of one shareholder and fowl of another. Suppose that a bank applies for an increase of up to 100 per cent of its authorized capital. Those are the terms which we have discussed for the Mercantile Bank. Is the hon. member for Verdun going to tell those who now hold 10 per cent of the existing capital are they cannot buy any more shares of the new issue and that they are limited to holding only 5 per cent but that a new shareholder coming in can buy 10 per cent of the whole lot? I have no objection to doing that—I have no particular love for bank shareholders—but this is obviously what will happen. This will create two classes of shareholders. The original shareholders will not be allowed to own 10 per cent of the shares. They will only be able to hold 5 per cent, or whatever may be the ratio.

Mr. Mackasey: I think the hon. member will understand that a shareholder will always be able to own up to 10 per cent of the shares. If the number of shares is doubled, there is nothing to prevent an individual from adding to his portfolio until such time as he owns 10 per cent of the particular banking interest. There are other banks in Canada in the same position. There is at least one bank where one individual owns more than 10 per cent of the shares as permitted under the act. This would apply as much to a particular shareholder as to the Mercantile Bank. So I can assure the hon. member that there is nothing here to prevent an individual in the United States or in Canada—this applies to everybody, regardless of where they live and what the bank is—from owning up to 10 per cent of the shares.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question either to the "minister" of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands or to the Minister of Finance on clause 53 with regard to the exact procedure that will be used in a particular situation which may very well arise. Shares of banks are listed and sold on the stock exchange. Owners of shares sell them from day to day. Let us suppose that at a particular time only 24 per cent of the shares of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce are owned by foreigners and 10,000 shares are still available, and at one and the same time several buyers, some from the United States and some from England, buy 5,000 shares through the Montreal, Toronto or New York stock exchange. Only 5,000 shares are allowed to be transferred. Which 5,000 does the minister intend to authorize? Which of the individuals purchasing the shares will have good, valid shares?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this very difficult point was discussed at great length in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs by Mr. Elderkin, who is sitting before me today. I will repeat the answer which he gave at that time. He said it would be a case of first come, first served. The responsibility would rest on the bank.

Mr. Otto: Nevertheless, as the minister knows very well, these shares could very well have been bought all at the same time and not necessarily transferred or even registered at the stock exchange at the same time. Has the minister given any thought to allowing the shares to be transferred directly over the counter in the office of the bank instead of being listed on the stock exchange? Buyers of the shares would then know whether or not the shares were transferable. An American buyer of shares might say, "I did not know those shares were not transferable". The question is: How will he get his money back from the vendor?

There is one more question I should like to put to the minister before I resume my seat. It is my understanding that options are not considered as ownership. In other words, an American can have an option to purchase 40 per cent of the shares of a Canadian bank from a Canadian resident. I think the minister knows very well that an option to purchase is tantamount to ownership, that it is possible to predict how the person who has the option will vote. How does the minister intend to deal with the question of options?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the first question posed by the hon. member is that he would get his money back by reselling the shares. The principle underlying the bill as far as ownership is concerned is dependent on registration, and that is within the power of the bank itself. Indeed, the bank is under an obligation not to register shares that exceed the limit set forth in the act. I agree with the hon. member that practical difficulties are involved. However, if it is our intention, as I believe it should be, to maintain Canadian ownership and control of our banking institutions, then this is an inescapable difficulty.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not answered one question, namely, what would be the difficulty in buying the shares of the bank directly over the counter? Is there any particular difficulty other than that this would deprive the stock exchange of some transfer fees?

Mr. Sharp: We considered this problem at some length when these clauses were being drafted. We believe it would place too great a responsibility on the stock exchanges. The only workable method is to provide that the bank shall be responsible for the registration within the limits fixed in the bill.

Mr. Otto: Let me put it this way. If it is just a matter of the transfer of shares, let us suppose that an American buys 90 per cent of the shares of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and only 25 per cent are transferred. Would that not mean that the owner of the 25 per cent has absolute control of the bank?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, he cannot buy 25 per cent. The limitation under the act is 10 per cent for an individual. The test is "registered owner", and that is the only test that can be applied in our judgment. We have examined other alternatives. As I say, if we are to try in this bill, as we should, to maintain a Canadian banking system we shall have to face these difficulties which are very real. In due course people trading in Canadian bank stocks will understand the intention of parliament and will understand the limitations.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: I now have in front of me a copy of the amendment which I wish to present on behalf of the chairman of the committee who has entered the chamber. The first amendment I have is to clause 53(4). I should like to place this first amendment on the table. I shall not deal with the other amendment until we have disposed of this first one.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order. It is impossible for us to understand this amendment unless we have it before us. There is no excuse for not having copies for the members of the committee.

Mr. Gray: I must take the responsibility for order, I quite agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. If we look at page 14152 of Hansard for March 17, 1967—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have done so. I hate to shatter my hon. friend's illusions, but that is as clear as mud. It is equally confusing.

Mr. Gray: I must take the responsibility for not being as clear as I ought to have been. The point is that the text of the amendment is reprinted verbatim in my remarks which, though not clear, cannot be faulted for not containing the text of the amendment. That being so I suggest to the hon. member that the amendment is available to every party spokesman and to every member of the committee because of this gratuitous situation.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should like the hon. member for Essex West to please explain to me how this fits in in the place in which it is supposed to fit because I do not think it fits.

Mr. Gray: I shall be glad to do so. Perhaps I might look at the amendment for a moment.

Turning to page 32 of the bill we see that lines 9 to 11 are to be struck out.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): "Subdivision thereof".

Mr. Gray: Line 9 reads "thereof, or". Line 10 reads: "(b) except as otherwise provided in subsection" and line 11 reads "(5), in circumstances where if the subscription".

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should like the hon. member to read this. It says, "foreign state or any political subdivision," and then we knock out the "thereof" and continue with "except as otherwise provided".

Mr. Gray: If instead of reading the words "thereof, or" the hon. member reads in line 9 the word "thereof", the word "or" being eliminated, subclause 4(a) will stand as a whole. There will then be a new paragraph

(b) which brings into the act a new concept arising out of the useful suggestion made by the hon. member for Verdun in his speech of Thursday last. Then, following paragraph (b) there will be a new paragraph (c).

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be thought dumb but I still think that this amendment does what I suggested it does. It sets up two classes of shareholders. It says in part:

—held by such person and by other shareholders associated with him, if any, exceeds 10 per cent of the total number of the issued and outstanding shares of such stock;

Surely this must refer to the period before the extension of the authorized capital. Those must be the shares actually issued and outstanding at the time the governor in council is to authorize the expansion of capital. In effect you are saying that the original shareholders will have their percentage of shareholdings diluted. If you double the capitalization they will be allowed to have only 5 per cent of the total but the new shareholder coming in can have 10 per cent.

Mr. Sharp: I draw the attention of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to lines 15, 16, 17 and 18.

Mr. Gray: If I can supplement the remark of the minister I suggest that the point raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is taken care of by the last four lines. It makes the restriction apply only to the extent that the person referred to in the clause has holdings in excess of the total outstanding issued shares of the stock. Otherwise the hon. member has a good point.

Mr. Mackasey: I apologize to the hon. member for not having copies of the amendment. Copies are now available and will be distributed. I want to assure the hon. member, and I say this sincerely, that we welcome his thinking on the matter and we want to see if there are flaws in the amendment. The spirit behind my amendment is that anybody who owns more than 10 per cent of the shares of any of our Canadian chartered banks would be prohibited from adding to his holdings. I use the word "his" as applying to the individual and his associates as defined in the bill. It is not intended to apply to shares in the Mercantile Bank more than to shares in any other bank. Let us say a person holds 8 per cent of the shares of the Bank of Montreal. If at some future date the Bank of Montreal were to decide to increase its share capital and obtained permission to do so, such a person would not be able to increase his holdings beyond 10 per cent of the share capital including, of course, the new shares.

This provision would in no way affect the clause in the bill which states that not more than 25 per cent of the shares of a bank can be owned outside the country. Provided the percentage in aggregate is less than 25, there is nothing to prevent non-residents from acquiring shares. But the amendment would prohibit all persons, whether resident or non-resident, from acquiring further shares if they already owned 10 per cent of the shares of a bank.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have no quarrel with the spirit of this amendment or the intention behind it. But in legislation it is the words which are important, not the spirit behind them, and it is for this reason that I should like to have the wording cleared up. I will not press the matter unduly because I do not bother about bank shareholders to any great extent, but I do like to see a little logic in our legislation.

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I might say a word for clarification. I have examined the proposed amendment and so has Mr. Elderkin who is sitting in front of me. As far as we can see, and I have more confidence in Mr. Elderkin's judgment than in my own, the amendment does in fact carry out the intent of the hon. member for Verdun.

Mr. Monteith: Would this amendment have the effect of preventing anyone taking up warrants if he already owned 10 per cent?

Mr. Sharp: I am advised that warrants could only be taken up provided they did not bring the shareholder beyond the limitation in the bill. No one who already owns more than 10 per cent could take up any more shares.

Mr. Monteith: Suppose shareholders own 10 per cent even can they then take up their warrants?

Mr. Sharp: Oh, yes, they can maintain the 10 per cent level, certainly.

Mr. Monteith: Under this present amendment?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Mr. Sharp: Could we refer to clause 33 which was allowed to stand so as to make a consequential amendment?

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to revert to clause 33?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 33—Offer of shares of capital stock.

Mr. Mackasey: Again, as the chairman of the banking committee is present I would prefer him to deal with this matter in view of his greater experience and knowledge of the Bank Act. The reason I am talking at this moment rather than doing something more concrete and beneficial is that, having in mind the very logical suggestion that members should be provided with copies of the amendments, I have asked that photostats be made of the amendment I am proposing to this clause. I do not know whether they have yet reached the table. Perhaps I could borrow one in order to read it. Again I beg the indulgence of the committee and express the hope that the chairman of the banking committee will give the legal explanation. Obviously clause 33(1)(d) should be amended so as to make the amendment we have just accepted logical. I therefore propose the following amendment:

That Bill C-222 be amended by striking out line 44 on page 20 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"reason of paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (4) of".

I know this sounds jumbled but if hon. members will look at clause 33 they will see that it fits.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to clause 54 to be found on page 33 of the reprinted bill.

Clauses 54 to 57 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to clause 75.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder if I might make a suggestion at this point. A formidable task still seems to lie ahead of us. The clauses I am about to mention have been "cleared" with the other parties in the house by my hon. friend from Edmonton West. I believe they are non-controversial in every respect. The list does not include clauses 75, 88 and 91. It occurs to me that the following clauses might well be moved en bloc without discussion: 103, 106, 117, 122, 124, 137, 138, 139 150 and 157. Schedules M, N, O, P and Q might also be put to the committee at the same time. I believe this might save some time.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Then by unanimous consent the clauses as mentioned in the motion are declared to be carried.

On clause 75—Business and powers of bank.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, would the minister comment on how this clause affects the establishment of a new bank in Canada, and in particular its effect on the take-over of the Mercantile Bank by the First National City Bank of New York? Last night the minister and I dealt with this subject at some length, and as a result of what the minister said I received the impression that if a person wanted to establish a new bank the bulk of the shares must be owned by men of good financial management capability in order to get the bank off the ground.

In fact the minister said he found no fault with the B.I.F. group owning 53 per cent of the stock of the Bank of Western Canada, and no fault with a bank such as Mercantile being taken over by a United States bank. As a result I must conclude that whenever a new charter is granted it must be done under special privilege. The Bank of Western Canada was granted ten years in which to distribute its stock and the Mercantile Bank was given five years to do likewise. Does the establishment of a new bank require special privilege or a special amendment or special legislation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, there are two separate questions involved here. One of them has to do with the establishment of a new bank and the conditions that may be laid down as to the distribution of shares. I do not know whether it will be possible in this country to begin a bank with a sufficient number of shareholders each of whom does not have more than 10 per cent of the shares at the outset. I could conceive theoretically of circumstances in which a sufficient number of original subscribers were found who could get together with sufficient capital to establish a new bank and that, of course, is the ideal. However, I think it more likely that a group of entrepreneurs could be found who could put up the necessary amount of capital and who would be prepared to undertake the original risks of organization, and that they should be encouraged to do so and should be given an opportunity, after the establishment of the bank, of distributing the shares more widely in order to comply with the requirement in the legislation that hereafter no one shall own more than 10 per cent of the shares of a bank.

In the case of the Bank of Western Canada that is what happened. A group of financial people got together, applied for a charter which was granted by this parliament and then applied for a certificate to begin operations. They asked for a reasonable time in order to distribute the shares more widely. Treasury Board felt this was a reasonable request and granted ten years within which the original subscribers should distribute the shares more widely among a larger group, none of whom would own more than 10 per cent.

The Bank of Western Canada, however, which does have a single shareholder with more than 25 per cent, is just as much subject to clause 75(2)(g) of the bill as is the Mercantile Bank. There are two separate questions here. One has to do with the distribution of shares and the second has to do with the restrictions placed on any bank so long as one shareholder owns more than 25 per cent. In other words, the restriction contained in clause 75(2)(g) is not directed against foreigners. It is directed against any bank which has a single or associated group of shareholders owning more than 25 per cent. It is not directed specifically against the Mercantile Bank. It is equally applicable at the present time to the Bank of Western Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Is it possible to establish definitely that a holding of 53 per cent has been reduced to 10 per cent? In other words, can one follow the shares closely enough over a ten year period to establish that individual holdings have been reduced to 10 per cent?

I have a second question concerning the amalgamation of banks. We have seen bank amalgamations take place over the years and we can expect such amalgamations in the future. There were two major amalgamations recently. Yet the Porter royal commission recommends greater competition in banking. It is logical that the more bank charters there are in force the greater will be the competition. I give one example, using a hypothetical case. It is conceivable that the Royal Bank might buy out the Bank of Western Canada or buy a controlling interest in it. Would this clause with its 25 per cent provision affect amalgamations, and will the minister give his views on amalgamations generally?

Mr. Sharp: With respect to the first question, a bank has to take declarations from the shareholders as to their holdings. The responsibility is laid upon the bank to observe the limitations on share ownership.

With respect to the second question, a bank requires my approval in order to offer to enter into an agreement with another bank. The amalgamation cannot take place without the approval of the government. So I believe there are as many safeguards as possible unless one were to have a complete prohibition, and I doubt the wisdom of that. Short of that, the government has complete control over future amalgamations. It would be impossible for an amalgamation to be effected in any way without the permission and knowledge of the government.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Nasserden: Is there anything in this legislation which would prevent the amalgamation of the Mercantile Bank with a Canadian bank?

Mr. Sharp: I should like to remind the hon. member that the Mercantile Bank is a Canadian bank. As I have said, there is sufficient power within this legislation to prevent the amalgamation of the Mercantile Bank with any other bank or the Bank of Western Canada with any other bank. The permission of the minister would be required in order to begin negotiation and the approval of the governor in council would be required to consummate the amalgamations.

Mr. Monteith: Does the government contemplate moving any amendments to this clause?

Mr. Sharp: I do not have in mind any amendments, although I understand from the discussion which has gone on that some questions have been raised which may emerge in due course. If views are put forward on this question, I have an open mind.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to move in respect of this clause. When I spoke on Friday I mentioned the fact that there was concern about whether the five year period was an equitable one, whether it was too short or too long. I believe we ought to avoid having to face on December 31, 1972, a situation similar to the one we have recently experienced. The right of the Mercantile Bank to do business and to improve its position during the five years should be respected. It may be that at the end of the five year period the shares may be worth a great deal of money. As the hon. member for Acadia said yesterday, if suddenly the bank were obliged to comply with the law, the shares would be worth considerably less or the bank would not be in a position to find buyers.

I believe there should be provision for consultation between the Mercantile Bank and the superintendent of banks. This consultation should be periodic and should be carried on in good faith. It might well be that in the course of the discussions, as proposed by the amendment, the time limit might perhaps be found to be too short, in which case the superintendent of banks would be in a position to report to the government that more time was required. Should the time elapse, this would place the Mercantile Bank in a very serious position. On the other hand, there would be an opportunity for the government to learn at first hand from time to time what progress was being made in respect of compliance by the bank with the law. Therefore I propose the following amendment:

That Bill C-222, An Act respecting Banks and Banking, be amended by striking out line 43 on page 53 of the Bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"1967, or after such later day, not being a day later than the 31st day of December, 1972, as may be prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council, have outstanding total liabilities (in-"

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I understand that the hon. member for Cartier has made available to the different parties copies of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to speak at some length on clause 75(2)(g), but in view of the general agreement on the part of members and the arrangements which have been made to expedite debate I shall restrain my desire to outline in considerable detail the unusual peregrinations of the government in its retreat in connection with the Mercantile Bank. I doubt that in the history of our country there has been the equal of the sinuous course taken by the government in connection with this matter.

Finally, after having been assured in this house only a few weeks ago by the Prime Minister that there would be no retreat from the stand taken, the government swallowed its words and knuckled down to the demands of United States financiers in the persons of the Rockefellers. Indeed, so successful has Mr. Rockefeller been that he is now advising Canadians on other economic matters. In particular he is suggesting that we should establish between Canada and the United States free trade along the lines of the auto agreement which agreement has revealed already, as I pointed out it would, that Canadians are suffering as a result of the action taken by this government in bringing about the agreement.

Let us review what has happened. I am glad the Minister without Portfolio—the former minister of finance—is here, because he has made a study of this subject unequalled by that of any other member of the house. Indeed, when he was head of a royal commission in the 1950's he dealt at length with the need to preserve in Canada the ownership of banking institutions operating in this nation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Let us go back to July of 1966 when the present Minister of Finance, the anointed saviour of right wing Liberalism, decided to leave the former minister in a most unenviable position. He abandoned the principles that were enunciated by the former minister and he ignored the pious declarations of the Prime Minister and other members of the government that the government of Canada was going to take a strong stand in connection with the Mercantile Bank.

In July the announcement was made that the First National City Bank of New York would be required to divest itself of 75 per cent of its interest in the Mercantile Bank within 18 months, and reverse its ownership by issuing new shares or be subject to having its growth restricted by proposed changes in the Bank Act. The Minister of Finance planned to restrict the ownership of bank stock by an individual to 10 per cent. This provision was to apply also to the Mercantile Bank. The penalty for failure of the First National Bank to comply with the directions of the government of Canada was to be the same as that contained in the proposals of his predecessor in office. The Mercantile Bank's growth would be restricted to 20 times its authorized capital. All through the succeeding months the government stood firm. Fears were expressed that it would not stand firm because, after all, the record throughout the period of office of the present administration has been one of declaration, expounding.

determination and retreat. That has been its course through the years. The Prime Minister said when I faced him with this situation—I could give chapter and verse but I do not want to speak at length on this occasion—that the government would not retreat. Ever since then it has been running away from its commitments.

Mr. Sharp: That is just a bit of fiction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister says the government has not retreated. I should like him to explain the difference between a retreat and a strategic postponement. First the government went its way and then the Gordon way. Then it went both ways and then it met itself coming back. To continue the analogy, the government got there before it left and returned before it arrived. What a performance this has been. Never before has this nation witnessed a greater conglomeration of insipidity—declarations, determination and retreat.

Let me now read from a book written by the Minister without Portfolio. It states on the cover:

> What is Canada's political and economic future? The author examines the role that Canada should play in shaping her own destiny.

The book in entitled "A Choice for Canada". I know the Minister of Finance has read this book because he told me on one occasion in the course of cross-fire about the benefit he had derived through reading it. Let us see what is said in this book by the former minister of finance, that man who has such wide knowledge that he used to take bankrupt corporations and turn them into corporations that were more bankrupt than when he started. That is what he did. I could give a perfect example of that but I do not intend to divert from setting forth fully what I have in mind.

Let me quote from page 94 of this book. This is what was written by the minister:

> I said the same sort of thing nearly five years before that in a speech entitled, "Whither Canada —Satellite or independent nation?" This was severely criticized at the time—

Let me skip a paragraph or two. The following was written:

> Amendments to the legislation governing federally incorporated insurance, trust, and loan companies in the fall of 1964 provided for their continued control in Canada. It was announced at the same time that similar amendments would be included in the revision of the Bank Act and made retroactive to the date of the announcement. Just prior to this, the president of the First National City Bank of New York came to Ottawa to inquire whether the government would be favourable to his bank acquiring the Mercantile Bank of Canada from Dutch interests. He said no commitment had been entered into, pending information about the views of the Canadian government. He was informed that the government would not look favourably upon such a transaction because, inevitably, it would lead to requests from other United States banks for opportunities to enter Canada in other ways. The Canadian government wished to avoid this.
> The president of the First National City Bank said he presumed that, if his bank went ahead with the transaction against the wishes of the Canadian government, it would do so at its peril.

When the minister says that I believe him because no matter how one may disagree with some of his ideas the statements of fact he has made in the house have invariably been unchallenged. I can pay no greater tribute to him than to say that is his reputation. When he says he advised that if they went ahead against the wishes of the Canadian government they would do so at their peril, I believe him. In reference to the president of the First National City Bank the minister wrote:

> He was advised not to proceed until the coming amendments to the Bank Act were made public. He was warned that, as his bank had no commitment to buy the shares in question, the government would feel quite justified in proposing amendments that would be retroactive in their application. Nevertheless, the First National City Bank of New York proceeded to acquire the shares of the Mercantile Bank, contrary to the wishes of the Canadian government and despite the warning given.

Nothing could be clearer than that. He then wrote:

> The revision of the Bank Act, announced in May of 1965, provided for the renewal of the charter of the Mercantile Bank of Canada but placed limitations upon its future growth. Immediately, the government was subjected to heavy pressure to remove this limitation.
>
> This incident is mentioned to illustrate how Canadian governments are sometimes regarded by private foreign interests. A strong stand is necessary if the government is to make its decisions stick and if Canada is to retain her independence.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Those are strong words. He and the government were subject to pressure. What was the pressure? He is in the house, and I know he yearns for the opportunity of placing before the house and the country his knowledge of what took place. This government made its stand; it decided what it was going to do. It reversed Mr. Gordon in part. I refer to the Minister without Portfolio as Mr. Gordon because it is difficult to refer to "the Minister without Portfolio" and be certain that one is identifying him. What happened? The government made a change, but that change was going to be final. Then a few weeks ago the government swallowed itself. I wonder why. Where was the heavy pressure against the government? The minister has never given any information in that connection.

Was it pressure from the United States government? Did the American administration decide that it was going to determine the course Canada was going to take? I remember that in 1962, during the election of that year, the Minister without Portfolio and other members of the government were not averse to receiving assistance from the United States. There was assistance in the way of manpower and also the expectation of financial assistance in order to defeat the government I had the honour to lead because we dared to take a stand on nuclear weapons contrary to the wishes of the United States administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister without Portfolio will recall the gentleman from Washington who with the approval, indeed with the activation of the administration of the United States came to Canada to show the Liberal party how to win an election because Canada had dared to take a stand that was not acceptable to the American administration.

I would like to hear the Minister without Portfolio tell us the story of the meetings with Mr. Harris at the Royal York hotel in Toronto and all the contributions that were made by the Americans to help the Liberal party. I would like to hear about that. Then American assistance for the Liberal party was not only acceptable but warmly welcomed. What happened? We wonder who exerted the pressure to bring about the last change that resulted in the bill that is now before us and in particular the clause to which I am referring and the revised version in the amendment of the hon. member for Cartier. I must say to him that as he produced that amendment he brought a smile of pensive approval to the countenance of the Minister of Finance. This amendment was going to be just a little thing and would help out. It has all the appearances of directed spontaneity. It was a beautiful piece of work—so obvious, so transparent. This amendment would bring about a situation that might command the support of the Minister without Portfolio and others who are associated with him in their particular economic views.

What happened in Washington? I recall in 1962 and 1963 that the trouble with the Diefenbaker administration was, they said, that it could not get along with Washington. The Liberal party embraced the assistance, as direct as possible, received from Washington. In the city of Ottawa the American ambassador had his staff meet with the press of Canada for the purpose of showing them, in connection with nuclear weapons, how politically vulnerable the Canadian government was and the means that should be taken by the press to undermine that government because the United States disliked the stand we had taken. That stand is being followed today. That which was heresy is now accepted internationally.

How wonderful the new heaven and earth were going to be. Revelations never produced an equal of the description. Relations were going to be so nice. I need not tell the committee that when the Prime Minister of Canada went to Washington he was treated with about the same consideration by the president as his two dogs were except that he was not lifted by his ears. Only the other day one of the leading exponents of Liberalism in the press gallery stated that the relations were somewhat strained and that when the Prime Minister went to Washington he was kept sitting around cooling his heels while the president was telephoning for an hour or more. What a strange transition. What a metamorphosis has taken place. Those who had the magic means of bringing about good relations with the United States find themselves in a position where pressure pays off. Only in the last few days a book has been published in the United States. It is referred to in a Canadian Press article by Arch MacKenzie. The article says:

> A "Mike Pearson massage file" was set up at the White House after President Johnson became indignant about the Canadian Prime Minister's 1965 proposal for a North Vietnamese bombing pause—

Then it says:

> —the purpose of the file was to "hold friendly communications which had been sent to Ottawa over the president's name without being seen by him."

As I have said, the file is called the "massage file." Apparently they have two methods. They have a massage at one end and a massage at the other end whereby they kick the Canadian government around and get their results. Let us consider this article, because the book is not yet in the library and I know the Minister of Finance always reads the books I suggest to him.

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I have already read them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The article then says:

Possibly it was intended to "massage" or soothe Pearson's feelings.

Then it says:

"Relations between Washington and Ottawa became frosty . . .

"White House aides, looking for a turn in the president's mood, began keeping a 'Mike Pearson massage file.' "

• (4:40 p.m.)

What a change. Those who had the answers said we should not stand up to the United States and contend that Canadian policies would be made in Canada by Canadians. This was wrong. I have a great deal of material before me but all I am going to do is summarize it. There is a reference to the "massage file". I know that the Minister of Finance is a master of the art of massage because anyone who can take the Minister without Portfolio and others associated with him and massage them down to accept the present amendment has qualities that are possessed by few. How did he line them up? There is the Minister without Portfolio who is today supporting the government in doing that which he condemned. He wrote a book about it. What happened? Why did the government retreat? We will never know. Was it massage that brought it about or was it forceful denunciation? Whatever it was, they wavered. The government of Canada has bowed to the demands of the United States on a matter that is basic to Canada according to the Prime Minister, the Minister without Portfolio and other ministers.

I see over there the courier, the hon. member for Verdun. They tell me it was his masterly "message to Garcia" which brought about the acceptance by the United States, and in consequence he is about to be elevated to that sphere which all desire to attain. Yesterday the other Minister without Portfolio announced, in a most unusual way, that the hon. member for Verdun was about to be made a member of the cabinet. I am the first to congratulate the hon. member for Verdun because I know that with his eloquence, with the powers of persuasion which he exercised with such consummate skill in New York when everything else failed, all will be well.

Speaking seriously, and I am now speaking seriously, I say to the government, you have retreated. You have swallowed yourselves. You have made a joke of Canada. You took a stand, then you turned one somersault. That was not sufficient so you turned a second one. Now you have put the legislation in cold storage for five years. A few moments ago the hon. member for Cartier decided that five years might be five years too short and he is adding a tail. I can just imagine Rockefeller laughing to himself. "I came, I saw and we conquered", that is the attitude of the Rockefellers today. They take Canada and determine the course of Canada through a government which apparently responds to treatment whether it be massage or condemnation.

In view of this clause I say quite frankly that this bill ought not to have the support of the house. This is one of the clauses to which the strongest possible objection can be taken. Surely, sir, parliament is not going to be asked to be the cat's paw of a government that, having declared in the loudest, clearest terms through the lips of the Prime Minister there would be no retreat, has retreated. To accept this clause in its present form is to admit that this nation is not sovereign but is subject to the control, to the domination of the United States. Indeed, I go back to the immortal words of the Minister without Portfolio: Being subjected to heavy pressure, Canada cannot afford to be placed in the category that too often smaller countries have been placed in, of having their policies determined, not within their own country but outside.

Mr. Sharp: We can always depend on the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman, for an entertaining hour or so and he has certainly not disappointed us on this occasion. He appears, however, to have his facts a little mixed. Perhaps the least I can do is to set the record straight. The hon. gentleman is attempting to create quite a false impression of the course of events. When the present senior Minister without Portfolio was minister of finance he brought before this house a bill to amend the Bank Act. Included in that bill was clause 75(2)(g) exactly in the form as I introduced it in 1966. That clause was to the effect that any bank with an individual shareholding of more than 25 per cent would not be permitted to have liabilities in excess of 20 times the authorized capital after December 31, 1967. Neither in the bill introduced by my distinguished predecessor in office nor in the bill introduced by me was any change made in any of the other provisions relating to the authorized capital of a bank. In all of those respects, the bills were identical.

The committee on finance, trade and economic affairs recommended two important changes. Here I should like to give credit to the committee once again for the very thorough way in which they examined this bill and for the many very useful improvements, some of which were recommended by me or by Mr. Elderkin on my behalf while others were made by the committee itself. One of the most important changes made by the committee was to strengthen this bill in so far as it related to a bank in the position of Mercantile Bank. This amendment prohibits any bank, subject to the restrictions included in clause 75(2)(g), from selling shares to non-residents. This was a very important amendment. As the bill was introduced in 1965 and 1966, shares could have been sold to non-residents as well as residents.

If this recommendation is accepted, and it is now in the bill as reported by the committee, the Mercantile Bank can only escape from the restriction on the ratio of its liabilities to its authorized capital if 75 per cent of the shares of the bank are acquired by Canadian residents. This is a very important and I believe a very useful improvement in the bill.

I now come to the second main recommendation of the committee, and I refer the house to the evidence of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs of February 22, 1967, when I appeared to discuss clause 75. At that time I read to the committee two messages from the Mercantile Bank. I will read them into the record so that we can have a ready reference. The first message was from Vancouver, dated February 14 and addressed to me. It reads as follows:

> As there appear to have been some conflicting reports about the position of our bank regarding the current revision of the Bank Act, we would like to make the record clear. Being a legally constituted Canadian chartered bank since 1953, we of course have been and are now subject to and governed by Canadian law. Any increase in our authorized capital is subject to the control of appropriate Canadian authorities. At the present time it would be inappropriate to offer shares in the bank to the investing public as some years are needed to build profitability. We would appreciate a period of time to accomplish this work. If the proposed special ratio of liabilities to authorized capital becomes the law, this time is needed. We will give consideration to making shares available to Canadian residents when it is appropriate to do so.

[Mr. Sharp.]

I now read into the record another message I received that day, February 22:

> We are pleased to confirm our intent to seek share participation by Canadian residents when it is appropriate to make an attractive offering.

Both of these telegrams were signed by Stewart B. Clifford, general manager of the Mercantile Bank of Canada.

The committee discussed these telegrams at some length, and in order to avoid putting the whole of the discussion on the record, although it is very interesting and sheds a somewhat different light on the situation from that which has been suggested to us by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, I might quote the following excerpts. I was asked the following question by the hon. member for Regina City:

> If I may put a supplementary question to the minister, does he consider this to be a reasonable request to meet the situation, so that the committee may have some basis for consideration?

To which I answered:

> Yes; I believe it is not an unreasonable request. It is very difficult to have a judgment.
> I am so interested in having the Mercantile Bank become a Canadian bank that I hesitate to put any unnecessary road blocks in the way. If the extension of a few years would enable them to market their shares successfully to Canadians, then I say, from a Canadian's point of view, that I think this would be a reasonable thing to do.

The chairman then asked the hon. member for Edmonton West whether he had any further questions to ask. The hon. member for Edmonton West said the following, as recorded at page 3492 of the proceedings:

> —I am glad to see the minister's attitude, and that of others, which is to let the Mercantile people get themselves back into reasonable shape, or at least of giving them a chance to get into reasonable shape to dispose of their shares. I think it would be an absolute death sentence for this organization if we insisted on the legislation as it now stands, without a further amendment providing for at least five years and a chance to operate in a very competitive market. I am going to limit what I say to that. As I said, I do not agree with the principle of the legislation.

As members of the committee who are present here know, the hon. member for Verdun, at the invitation of the chairman, then moved an amendment which is now the present version of clause 75 (2) (g) as it appears in the committee's evidence. It was seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and all members of the committee, including some of the supporters of the right hon. gentleman, unanimously agreed that this was a reasonable change.

These are the facts, and I thought that at this point I should at least put the record straight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister produce the United States note or notes of condemnation of the action of his government relating to the proposed legislation respecting the Mercantile Bank? Will he admit that the United States government took strong objection and condemned the government of Canada for this action, and will he table these notes?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the best answer I can give is to say that one of the most notable things that happened in the committee was the complete reversal of the position of the Mercantile Bank because the government of this country did not give way to pressure from any source.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister now whether he will answer my question instead of indulging in his customary evasive non sequiturs. Did the United States government not offer the strongest objection to the intended legislation regarding the Mercantile Bank? Did not the ambassador, Mr. Butterworth, who supported the Liberal party in 1962 and 1963, express strong objection? I ask the minister that simple question. It cannot be answered by recounting what the committee did.

Mr. Sharp: I did not think I was being irrelevant. I was simply putting the record straight. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that the United States did make representations to us on this subject. This was stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I think I said it on the same occasion. However, we did not in any way give way to any pressure from the United States and, if I may say so, what the right hon. gentleman is doing is to accuse his own members on the committee of knuckling under to that pressure, and I do not think they did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, it is the government that knuckled under.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would he not like to modify or withdraw his statement about the representative of another country in Canada being identified with a political party, because I think it is a reflection both on the ambassador and on his country, something which I know my right hon. friend would not in any way want to do?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, that question indicates that no one should ask about matters being debated when he has not been here and has not listened. The minister wandered in at this moment and decided he would propel himself into the discussion. What I said was that in 1963 the ambassador of the United States and those connected with him briefed members of the press of Canada as to the means whereby they could attack the government of the day. If he does not accept that, will he look up the statements made by a very distinguished member of the press gallery who in a national radio and television broadcast admitted there had been such a briefing. The minister usually speaks after reflection. Today he departed from his custom.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am aware of the alleged briefing in question. I do not know whether it took place. However, that is not the statement to which I take exception. My right hon. friend said that there was a link between the ambassador and a political party in this country. As Secretary of State for External Affairs it is my duty to defend the heads of missions in this country in the absence of evidence to the contrary. I regard this statement as a reflection on the United States ambassador to Canada. I know this is a reflection which my right hon. friend, with his great experience, would not want to persist in casting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not be diverted by rataplans. I make this very clear, that I believe the administration of the United States participated actively through its agents in Canada in the elections of 1962 and 1963, and no amount of subterfuge or smokescreen on the part of the minister can convince us otherwise.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, the fact that the right hon. gentleman makes a statement does not necessarily establish the validity of that statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): An argument which is made by assertion, as my right hon. friend himself has often pointed out, is often the weakest kind of argument. The right hon. gentleman has made an assertion in respect of a matter of the greatest delicacy and importance and involving our relations with a friendly country. I do not propose to sit by and listen to so baseless a charge made against my party, with all the implications it contains. In the last election and in other elections the Liberal party conducted its own case under its own program and under its own leader without influence from any country, without influence from any other party, but with the great support of the Canadian people.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will simply say that if there is a prize for fiction this year the hon. gentleman should receive it.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take part in this discussion. I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition. All of us in this house are aware of the precision with which he documents his arguments. It seems to me he has raised a serious and fundamental charge drawing attention to the apparent deep-seated division between the views of the Minister of Finance and those of the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Davenport.

This is a division which has been widely discussed throughout Canada. The Minister without Portfolio is spending a good deal of his time going all over the country and making eloquent speeches about the need to preserve Canadian sovereignty. Today the Leader of the Opposition has pinpointed with devastating accuracy the nature of the division between these two individuals and, as a consequence, within the government. I do not see how we can allow this bill to pass unless the Minister without Portfolio is prepared to rise in this committee and say the things he is saying outside it.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I cannot help admitting I was very disappointed to see the Leader of the Opposition turning his back, as it were, on principles which I have hitherto admired and training his guns upon the government over an issue which really does not matter. If there is one thing I admired about the right hon. gentleman it is that he has always stood up against the establishment. He is the man who fought against the elite, the mandarin class, and no one can deny he made his presence felt.

But here we find the right hon. gentleman defending the Bay Street boys against the Wall Street boys. In reality that is all this amounts to. What have the people of Canada got to do with banks? Are they shareholders? Their only connection with them is when they are refused loans. The right hon. gentleman would have done better to concentrate on subclause 2, paragraph (e), which says:

(2) Except as authorized by or under this Act, the bank shall not, directly or indirectly,

(e) lend money or make advances in a principal amount exceeding five per cent of its paid-up capital to a director of the bank or to any firm or corporation of which a director or the general manager of the bank is a member or shareholder without the consent of two-thirds of the directors present at a regular meeting of the board or a meeting of the board specially called for the purpose;

This is the essential point, in my opinion. The establishment, the elite, the directors, all belong to this family compact. Can anyone deny that the family compact is more powerful today than it was 130 years ago? The members of this establishment control 85 per cent of our industry in Canada. This is the enemy. Can the right hon. gentleman tell me why he is giving up his fight against the Canadian establishment, why he has now embraced that establishment while purporting to pick a political quarrel with this government?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the committee too long, but I came in while the Leader of the Opposition was in full oratorical flight. I always enjoy the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition when he is in full flight and I was particularly interested in this instance because, as the Minister of Finance has revealed—I suppose most people knew it—I seconded the motion which was proposed by the hon. member for Verdun. As I suggested when I spoke a few days ago, I did so with somewhat mixed motives. It is not very often that one can do what one thinks is the right and sensible thing while also deriving some fringe benefits. The fringe benefit I anticipated was the discord within the Liberal party which I thought might be stimulated if this particular motion were passed.

On the other hand—and I address myself now to the Leader of the Opposition—we have to face some realities in these matters. I gather he has adopted the same position, an irresponsible one in my view, as was adopted by the former minister of finance, the present Minister without Portfolio, who was prepared to leave this bank in a strait-jacket as a potential cause of future trouble between ourselves and our United States neighbours.

One would have to be very naïve not to believe that the pressures to which the right hon. gentleman has referred would be intensified if we left the bank in its present anomalous position. There was one sensible solution which I proposed in the committee and in the committee of the whole. It was rejected by the government and to the best of my recollection it obtained no support from the members of the party led by the right hon. gentleman. I proposed the only sensible solution to this problem created by the presence of a foreign-owned bank in Canada, which was that the government of Canada should make an offer to the Rockefeller interests for their shares in Mercantile. Mr. Rockefeller told us he had nothing of value to sell, and it occurred to me that this was an opportunity to do him a good turn by relieving him of his valueless property. But that solution was rejected by the government and it was rejected, I gather, by members of the party on my right.

To return to the points raised by my hon. friend from Danforth, I suggested when I spoke earlier that the people of Canada are entitled to know just what is the position taken on this question by the former minister of finance who has expressed himself so forcibly with regard to the presence in Canada of a foreign-owned financial institution and who since this move was made has continued to speak all across the country, as hon. friend has pointed out, warning us of the dangers inherent in United States ownership. I think it is time the former minister of finance got up in this house to tell us that he agrees with the irresponsible position outlined in the bill as he originally presented it to the house, leaving the problem of the Mercantile Bank unsolved in order to create future trouble with our United States neighbours. I suggest we have much more important problems to discuss with them in the near future.

I am sure the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will agree with me on that point. We should clear out of the way these irritating and exasperating things such as the Mercantile Bank matter. Of course, the best way to do it is the way that has been rejected. The only other course is to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Verdun and seconded by myself in the committee, as I said, with some misgivings because I have very grave misgivings about the future conduct of the Rockefeller interests of New York.

I hope the Minister of Finance is prepared to make sure that the Rockefeller interests will divest themselves of their shares in the Mercantile Bank within the five year period. I do not quite know how he is going to do it. So far he has not been able to tell us how he is going to do it. He can only express a hope that they will agree with the policy of the Canadian government.

I conclude by saying that I think the Canadian people and this parliament should know the position of a member of the Liberal cabinet who, up until quite recently, vigorously opposed the action taken by the standing committee and which is now being presented to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I rise to thank the Leader of the Opposition for taking such a great interest in the affairs of the Irish community. Had I known he was that interested in what transpires in our community in Montreal I would certainly have invited him and, God willing we are both here on March 17, 1968, I shall invite the right hon. gentleman to Montreal to attend the various functions, to march in the parade, take his place on the reviewing stand and, all in all, to wear the green. I do not know whether the new uniform of the armed forces will be worn in the parade next March 17 as part of the celebrations. However, I do know that I at least have misgivings about the colour because not only is it the traditional colour of the Irish but unfortunately it is also the official colour of the socialists. Thus at times I am for the green and at times opposed to it.

Someone once said to me, "You should never speak when you are angry," and I am going to take that advice. A few things were said during the debate in the course of the last 15 or 20 minutes about pressure by the Americans. The Leader of the Opposition has a knack of painting pictures much blacker than they are when it suits his political purposes. He is a past master at that and I always like to attend his performances in the house because I learn on each and every occasion how to be gloomier than necessary and how to be more optimistic than necessary. But I would like to tell the committee that I share his concern that pressure was put on the government in the case of the Mercantile Bank.

I believe this. I believe it from press reports. I believe it from the evidence given before the committee. But what I think is more important is that the government did not bow to American pressure. I had no idea that the right hon. gentleman had intended to participate in the debate at this time. Had I know I might have brought along some documentation showing that we did not bow down to the Americans. But perhaps it might be sufficient for the right hon. gentleman if I read to him some of the statements made by the Prime Minister on the television program "The Nation's Business" on February 1, 1967, which I think best exemplify the firmness and the decision of the government that we are sovereign in affairs of finance and do not have to be told by anyone how to act. I would like to quote exactly what the Prime Minister said on that occasion:

There are two dangers, however—

He was talking about our relationship with the United States in this particular area.

—which we must avoid in the search for fair and acceptable solutions to our problem. The danger on the Canadian side is an oversensitive nationalism, defensive rather than aggressive—

I suggest this was the spirit of the right hon. gentleman's intervention a few minutes ago.

—based on the feeling, and the fear that as the weaker partner we are too dangerously vulnerable to the effect of the decisions of the friendly giant that lives beside us. The danger from the American side is ignorance of our desire, yes, our determination, to remain independent and separate; and an inability on their part to understand our refusal to accept the doctrine that what is good for the United States must necessarily be good for Canada too.

The point that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has conveniently overlooked is the fact that at no time before the banking committee was any amendment brought forward, or any suggestion of an amendment from members of this party or members of his own party, in any way, shape or form destroying or weakening the pro-Canadian spirit of Bill C-222. The principle of the bill today is as it was in 1965 when first introduced by the former minister of finance and as reiterated by the present Minister of Finance when he appeared before the committee, that we in this country insist on our right as a sovereign nation to decide every decade what are the rules and regulations under which the banking institutions are to function. This is a fundamental right of Canada that was given in 1871 with the passage of the first Bank Act. Every ten years we review banking in this country and set out the terms, rules and regulations under which banking is to operate.

The owners and directors of the Mercantile Bank refused to recognize this Canadian right but because of the efforts of the present Minister of Finance the directors and owners, in not one but two telegrams to the committee and to the Minister of Finance, later emphasized quite clearly and quite concisely that they accepted the principle that Canadians had the right to make their own rules and regulations governing banking. They recognized the fact they were a Canadian chartered bank, and recognized the right of the Canadian government to specify their conditions of operation for the next ten years.

It was in the spirit of these telegrams from the Mercantile Bank accepting this principle that any and all amendments were introduced to the Bank Act. Several people have overlooked the fact, and it is one I must mention once again to the Leader of the Opposition, that his party was represented on the banking committee by what must be considered to be the cream of the members of the Tory party. Hon. members like the hon. member for Regina City, the hon. member for Perth, the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Kamloops sat on that committee and the latter, despite his compaigning around the country, rarely missed a meeting of the committee. With such hon. members on the committee you would imagine, Mr. Chairman, that the right hon. gentleman would have been more than pleased to trust the viewpoint of the Tory party to the hands of these very well educated and responsible people.

When the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands indicates that the key amendments made in the banking committee were accepted unanimously, I can only repeat what I said last Thursday, that this is not only a tribute to the effectiveness of the chairman of the committee but also to the spirit of objectivity that prevailed in that committee. If the right hon. gentleman is going to accuse that committee of retreat then he has to accuse in the same breath the hon. member for Regina City, the hon. member for Perth, the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Kamloops, and all the other distinguished members of the Conservative party who sat on that committee and approved every amendment that was adopted.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Mackasey: I would be surprised if you didn't. Go ahead.

Mr. Nasserden: Thanks very much. All I want to ask is whether the hon. member agrees with his colleague who earlier in the debate said that there were some good amendments to what was a bad act.

Mr. Mackasey: Those might be a few good words in what could start out to be a bad speech, and I will comment on the hon. members' remarks at another time. The important thing, is that this bill as amended is no retreat and, as I mentioned before, if it in any way, shape or form can be considered as a retreat, then each and every member of the banking committee of the House of Commons must be held responsible.

• (5:20 p.m.)

There is an evolution of this house toward the committee principle. Committees of the House of Commons are obtaining a new dimension of responsibility. The committee system is working despite its disruption of the work of the house itself. The committee on finance, trade and economic affairs is a fitting example of how committees should proceed in the future. When we got rid of political partisanship and started discussing the bill we came up with a bill of which all members of the house, not just the minister, should be proud. Many of the suggestions, objective criticisms and improvements which were made were advanced by members of the Conservative party. Obviously there was very little communication between the right hon. gentleman and the members of his party who were members of that committee.

The clause to which the right hon. gentleman objects, clause 75 (2) (g), is familiar to all members who have followed the proceedings. What was the content of this clause in its original form? It stated simply that if any bank, as at January 1, 1967, had more than 25 per cent of its shares held by an individual or his associates, that bank would be restricted to a ratio of 20 to one in its liabilities. This is the crux of the problem. This is the clause in the bill that the former minister of finance felt was necessary to prevent the Mercantile Bank from growing and dominating the Canadian banking scene. Some of us are a little puzzled about how the Mercantile Bank is to grow into such a monster when we realize that, with its authorized share capital of $10 million, it is about one fifth the size of the next largest bank and considerably smaller than many of the banks such as the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and others which may be 20 times as large.

Because of the philosophy behind the bill that it is our right as Canadians to administer financial affairs in this country we accepted the principle. However, when we considered that the effective date for the coming into force of the legislation would be six months hence, it became apparent that it was not realistic. In six months we would have expected the Mercantile Bank to dispose of three quarters of its shares, 750,000 shares of the stock. We keep proclaiming that we are not anti-American. There is a very fine line between professing our sovereignty and adopting a dog in the manger attitude. If every country were to take restrictive action, the flow of capital in the world would cease.

The important point, having convinced our United States friends that we intend to exercise our right to administer the act according to our principles, is that we should not then adopt an anti-American attitude. If we were to force any United States controlled bank to dump 750,000 shares on the market and dispose of them to Canadians in a period of six months, this would be an anti-American action. I do not care what anyone in the house is inclined to think about it; there is a thin line, but it is there.

We agreed to give the Mercantile Bank five years within which to dispose of its shares because neutral observers who appeared before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, including the minister, expressed the opinion that if 750,000 shares were dumped on the market now in accordance with the restrictions contained in clause 75(2)(g), there would be sheer speculation and no one in his right mind would buy the shares. This was the information we received from bond dealers.

The question then arose, what should we do? All the members of the committee, including members of the Tory party, the New Democratic Party, the Liberal party and the Social Credit party, said to the bank, "Go out and prosper; if you can make the shares worth while in five years, go to it. On January 1, 1972, unless three quarters of the shares of your bank are in the hands of Canadians, you will come under the restrictive clause and be forced to a 20 to one liability position." There is nothing unfair about this; there is no question of retreat.

I said that I did not intend to speak in anger, but my anger has been generated by the amendment of the hon. member for Cartier. If we say to the Americans that we are going to give them five years and then do not, we are being anti-American. In effect this amendment says that we are giving them five years but next month we will hold a cabinet meeting and say that it is not in the best interests of this country that the law become applicable in 1972. That is the effect of the amendment of the hon. member for Cartier.

The clause would no longer say that the Mercantile Bank, or any other bank in the same position, has until 1972 to divest itself of the shares. It would say in effect that the date would be any time after a certain date in 1967, or after such later day, not being a day later than the 31st day of December, 1972, as may be prescribed from time to time by the governor in council. The effect would be that if at any time in the next five years the governor in council thought that the Mercantile Bank was not acting like a good Canadian and was not divesting itself of its stock fast enough, the restrictive clause, clause 75(2)(g), could be brought into force before the date which was unanimously agreed upon by the members of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I do not know what effect this might have on me as a politician but, as I said on Thursday, I do not play dirty pool. I said, and I say again, that I will vote against the amendment because it is diametrically opposed to what was accepted unanimously by the members of the committee some weeks ago.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this matter. I wish to differ with the hon. member for Verdun in one respect. He suggested there had been no communication between the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the members of his party who were members of the committee. I should like to point out that this is absolutely incorrect. Further, I should like to say that it was not the Conservative party which retreated. I had not taken a stand in respect of the Mercantile Bank. When the matter first came before the house for consideration my stand was that I did not like discriminatory or retroactive legislation of this nature. Aside from that, however, I agree with him that when we were in committee we discussed this matter and I voted for the five year period. I thought this was the consensus of the committee after having considered the matter. Following my statement to the effect that I did not like retroactive or discriminatory legislation, I find no reason to be ashamed of the way I voted in the committee.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

The hon. member has explained the consideration which led to the decision. I suggest that the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Cartier is presumed to be a compromise to settle the dispute which arose between the Minister of Finance and the ex-minister of finance some two weeks ago. I do not think there can be any shadow of doubt about that. The minister has not had the gumption to get up and move this amendment himself. He has not had another member of the ministry move it. He is simply using the hon. member for Cartier to move the amendment in an attempt to bridge the gap which exists between the former minister of finance and the present Minister of Finance. That is very obvious.

The amendment would leave it up to the governor in council to select a date upon which the government would say to an institution that it must divest itself of whatever assets it might hold at that moment. The date when this should happen should be spelled out in the legislation. It should not be left for decision by the cabinet. What could we expect under these conditions? We would not even know which minister would initiate the final decision. We must know specifically when this is to take place. All this amendment is supposed to do, as I said before, is to fill the gap between the opinions of the Minister of Finance and the former minister of finance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, we are all awaiting with anxious expectation to hear the views of the former minister of finance. The hon. member for Perth has suggested that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cartier has simply been devised to provide a means whereby the two wings of the government can get together. I am sure the Minister of Finance would join with others in asking the Minister without Portfolio, who has wide knowledge in business, to give us his views.

Having listened to the hon. member for Verdun I doubt whether I have ever witnessed a minister excoriated to the same extent as was the Minister without Portfolio. He did not mention him specifically but he condemned him out of hand, and he condemned any suggestion that there should be control on investment. I think his attitude in general is one which would indicate that he wishes this house to recall that old song, "Walter, Walter, lead me to the altar".

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) that the hon. Member of the Administration should explain his attitude toward the control the Mercantile Bank will be able to exert on the Canadian national economy. The former minister of finance, now a Member of the Administration, has already denounced rather categorically, even sharply, that intrusion of American finance in the Canadian national economy.

Mr. Chairman, it seems the bank will continue to operate as it does now for a period of five years, during which it will be required to dispose of 75 per cent of its shares in order to retain only 25 per cent.

This treatment of the Mercantile Bank by the government makes me think that the government seeks more to lull Canadians for a five-year period in connection with the direct invasion of American capital by an American bank, called the Mercantile Bank, which is under Rockefeller's control and domination.

Mr. Chairman, in five years hence that important portfolio probably will not be held by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp); perhaps then another government will be presiding over Canada's destinies. In five years, virtually everybody will have forgotten clause 75.

This sort of reminds me of the frog in the pail of boiling water. You do not throw the frog into a pail of boiling water all of a sudden, for it would explode and jump to the ceiling. But when you make it boil slowly, you get it. The frog is thrown into a pail of cold water—it can stand cold water easily—which is then heated slowly. The water gets warmer and warmer and the frog tolerates the gradual change of temperature. At a given moment, the water is boiling and the frog is boiled, but it never noticed anything. The same thing is tried at the present time with the Mercantile Bank of Canada.

To wait five years to see what happens, to grant five years' grace, if you prefer, when the present Canadian legislation stipulates very clearly that a bank must be controlled in a ratio of 75 per cent by Canadians.

The government—and I support the Leader of the Opposition on that point—has reversed its stand, if the statements made a few months ago are compared to clause 75 under consideration. And the Member of the Administration who, a few months ago, when he was minister of finance, took a strong stand against that American control, against the intrusion or American capital and financiers in the Canadian economy, is now reversing his opinions. The Member of the Administration does not have the courage to express his views frankly as he did when he was minister of finance. He prefers now to criticize Créditiste theories that he does not understand. And if he understands the theories of the present system, let him rise and repeat the same statements he used to make at his press conferences or talks about the control exerted by American interests over the Canadian economy.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, we are looked upon and treated somewhat as children, but American pressure is what makes the government change its mind and views. This does not mean I am anti-American, not at all. The Americans do not control only the Mercantile Bank and we are asked to believe that the Mercantile Bank alone could enable the Americans to control markedly the financial system. In the field of industry and trade, in the economic development of Canada, it is nevertheless the Americans who control the larger part of our economy at this time through the Canadian banks under the American financial influence.

This may have provided opportunities for Canada. We are not against American capital investment in Canada. Not in the least. But I share the view of the former minister of finance, now a Member of the Administration, that we as Canadians, should keep the control of our economy. The Americans are not working in our stead, in Canada. Maybe we are using their capital, but Canadian men, women and young people are the ones who work at the development of the country and the government is committed and the young people are committed for 20, 25, 30 and 35 years through loans floated in the United States or through bond issues brought up by American financiers.

Mr. Chairman, the government or the sovereign parliament goes and kneels in New York, Washington, Chicago, Boston or San Francisco to mortgage the future of the Canadian people and that of forthcoming generations. That is how this system works; the Mercantile Bank is not the only thing involved.

Claiming an intrusion by American financiers, or a Rockefeller, into Canada, they say: Let them operate for five years and over that period they must sell 75 per cent of their shares. By that time, nobody will likely remember what we are doing today, because once this bill is passed, the act will remain in force for ten years, which means that in five years from now this matter will probably not be reconsidered.

Mr. Chairman, whether or not the Conservative amendment is carried, we shall vote against the control of the Canadian economy by a few foreign individuals. I think that on behalf of the Canadians, we have to vote in favour of the amendment to clause 75 (2) (g).

[English]

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak very briefly on the amendment before us. After listening to the debate in the committee this afternoon it seemed to me that all hon. members were generally in agreement with the basic principle that this vital segment of the Canadian economy should not fall under foreign domination, and that there would be some value in giving to those who do not at the present time fit within the code of rules aimed at bringing about this result a reasonable period of time to get into the position required by the legislation.

It seems to me, in looking at the proposed amendment, that its basic purpose and approach are consistent with the principle I have stated and that the only real difference between the amendment in the bill as reported to the house by the finance committee is that it gives the government a greater opportunity for supervision in a flexible way, to assure that the basic aim is achieved within the period of five years. It will make sure that those institutions which do not at present conform with the code of rules contemplated by the law, which is aimed at making sure that this crucial and vital segment of the Canadian economy remains in Canadian hands, comply fully with those rules.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that this is an entirely divergent view from that expressed by the chairman in the committee.

Amendment (Mr. Klein) agreed to: Yeas, 50; nays, 16.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment carried. Shall clause 75 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 76 and 77 agreed to.

Clauses 82 to 87 inclusive agreed to.

[Mr. Caouette.]

On clause 88—Loans to certain borrowers and security.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, clause 88 sets out provisions that are perhaps the most important so far as the agricultural industry is concerned. It lays down the provisions under which banks may make loans to farmers. Before it is passed I should like to comment briefly on one or two points and I have a question or two to pose to the Minister of Finance.

There is no doubt that in this day and age the costs of production of primary products are so high that there is tremendous concern on the part of farmers about the economy of their industry. One of the difficulties which farmers face is that in many instances the manner in which their products are sold causes great concern and grave economic hardship. This is particularly true in regard to certain specialized crops such as fruits and vegetables and products of the dairy industry. These foods are financed and produced by the farmers and delivered to warehouses or storage facilities where they are subject to further processing before they are placed before the buying public.

In the case of dairy products, for example, milk is manufactured into cheese. When this takes place a long period of time often elapses between the time the primary producer delivers his goods and they pass out of his hands until the time he is paid for his product. Very often a tremendous risk is involved because of the perishable nature of the product and varying marketing conditions. There are instances where a farmer may deliver a product such as tomatoes and three or four months pass before he receives payment for his produce. I have used the example of milk products where there may be a lapse of 30 days or more before the farmer receives remuneration. In the case of tobacco and sugar beets, many months pass before the producer is paid for his product.

• (5:50 p.m.)

This situation has always been of great concern to the farming industry across the country on two counts. First, it is often felt that manufacturers have the use of the products of the farm and in many instances have received returns for them and are using the farmers' money upon which the farmers have had to pay interest. Second, there is grave concern that in many instances manufacturers may fall into economic chaos or bankruptcy before payment has been made. In extreme cases, the result has been that when the creditors have been satisfied there has been nothing left to pay the farmers for their products.

These instances, although they have been few in number, are striking examples of what can happen at any time. When they are coupled with the high cost of production today, farming communities can suffer great hardship. Clause 88 indicates that there has been an attempt to check this trend and give primary producers a more favourable position. I have absolutely no quarrel with this. Farm organizations have been trying for years to bring about this change in the legislation. Farm organizations were faced with the fact that the act is normally revised every ten years so there was a ten-year gap during which they knew that although they might make representations there was little chance of having such an amendment made.

Farmers across the nation are delighted to see that at last the government has taken cognizance of this problem and is attempting to do something about it. In the last ten years nearly every farm organization concerned with fruits, vegetables and dairy products has made representations for such a change. Every device has been used, even the introduction of a private member's bill. I should like to give credit to the hon. member for Essex South whose private bill was referred from the house to the committee and paved the way for the clause we have before us today. Even so, Mr. Chairman, there were many months when it seemed that success would not crown the efforts of those hon. members who were directly concerned about the welfare of the farmer.

Clause 88, subclause (5) (b) makes provision for the fruit and vegetable growers. Can the minister explain to me why a sum was not stipulated in dollars and cents as was the case in connection with dairy products? Since I feel we are truly concerned about the success of both of these segments of the industry, perhaps such a sum should have been stipulated in both provisions.

I should also like to have the minister's comments on the effect such legislation might have on the credit of small canning factories and small manufacturers of dairy products who depend almost exclusively on bank credit for their seasonal operations. While we have every sympathy with the farmers and must make sure they receive their just due for their produce, we are concerned also for the small dairyman and the small fruit and vegetable canner. If as a result of the provision of this bill it is impossible for small canners to obtain the necessary financing in order to conduct their operations successfully, this will certainly cause grave hardship in small, isolated regions where the farmers depend almost exclusively on delivering their special products to the local plant. Can the minister explain whether or not this provision will cause any serious impediment to bank loans to these small processors? These are my concerns in connection with clause 88. I am delighted indeed to see the farmers are being protected to the degree they are, but I should like to be assured also that in protecting the farmers we are not causing the processors undue hardship because they are necessary to the successful operation of this industry.

Mr. Sharp: May I answer the two questions put by the hon. member who has just spoken? First, I should like to join with him in congratulating the hon. member for Essex South upon the happy outcome of his indefatigable efforts, as he would say himself. May I couple with the hon. member for Essex South the hon. member for Labelle who supported the hon. member for Essex South so valiantly in the standing committee on banking, trade and economic affairs. In saying this, I do not want to be invidious because I know there were many members in the committee who worked toward the same end. However, I happen to have observed particularly the work of the hon. member for Labelle when I was visiting the committee.

The first question put by the hon. member relates to page 74 of the bill. The answer is a simple one. If he will read the clause he will see that the words beginning at line 18 apply to subparagraph (i) as well as to subparagraph (ii). The $7,500 relates not only to (b) (ii) but also to (b) (i). The words are extended out to the margin and apply to both of the foregoing subparagraphs.

The second question was related to the effect upon the credit standing of canning factories and others. There is bound to be some effect. If the position of the producer is going to be improved, to some extent this must be at the expense of other creditors. However, under the amended act the banks can take other types of security and I do not believe the effect will be serious. I think the over-all effect of the legislation is good and should commend itself to the committee.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the minister one supplementary question? Does the minister feel that under the provisions of the bill there would be any instances in which small canning factories would not be able to obtain the necessary credit? Were representations received in the committee on behalf of any processors or canning factories in this regard? I am a bit curious to know whether they were aware of the provision and whether they made representations.

Mr. Sharp: I, of course, cannot speak for the committee because I was not present during all the hearings. I understand that the Federation of Agriculture, which would have some concern about canning factories succeeding, did support this amendment.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief remarks with regard to this clause of the bill which as presently worded allows the bankers to make loans in the field of agriculture. As a representative from Saskatchewan where a considerable amount of bank credit is and has been incurred over the years I know that many of our people would be concerned about their position with regard to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. In clause 88(1) (h) (v) there are these words:

> any works for the improvement or development of a farm for which a farm improvement loan as defined in the Farm Improvement Loans Act may be made,

The question which comes to my mind is, what will be the position of a farmer or a banker in the case of an application for a loan, to which a farmer is entitled under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, for the purchase of various commodities, and what rate of interest will be applied? On the one hand there is the Bank Act which may require a higher rate of interest and on the other hand there is the Farm Improvement Loans Act which permits farmers and all those who fall in the categories set out in the act to obtain a maximum loan of $15,000 at 5 per cent.

I know that if the interest rate is increased to 7¼ per cent the interest which a farmer will have to pay on a loan may amount to a considerable sum of money and may cause hardship to farmers who are used to paying 5 per cent interest on a $15,000 loan. The difference will amount to $337.50 according to my calculations. Many of these loans are made for a longer period than one year. They may be made for as long as five years or whatever time is permitted depending on the type of loan that the farmer wishes to obtain. However, as soon as he has repaid a certain part of the loan he may want to purchase other equipment or make necessary improvements on his farm.

I have before me some figures which were provided to me by the Department of Finance. I note, for example, that in 1961 the total value of the loans amounted to approximately $108 million. By 1965 the amount had increased to $202 million, and according to the news release issued by the Department of Finance the latest figures indicate that in 1966 85,553 loans were obtained for a total of $212 million in round figures. It is quite evident that there has been a tremendous increase in the number of loans that have been obtained. The total of loans in the whole of Canada amounts to approximately $394 million. Even with an increase of 1 per cent, an additional $4 million will have to be paid in interest charges. If the additional interest rate were 2 per cent or 2¼ per cent, it would mean roughly $9 million on the volume of business that is transacted.

This sum does not amount to much when spread over a number of farmers but it does mean that $9 million is taken out of the pockets of farmers to be paid to the banking institutions. This money could be used in many cases to help farmers who have not been very successful. When one realizes that approximately 10,000 farmers leave the industry every year one begins to wonder what the reason for this is. Of course some of those who leave have retired, but on the other hand some of them leave the industry because they cannot make ends meet and they have no possibilities for improvement. This additional cost may prove to be too much for them.

I realize there are many farmers who have obtained the maximum loan permitted under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, $15,000 and then have found that owing to the rising cost of machinery and other essential facilities they require additional funds. At times they have to borrow from the machinery companies at higher rates. Perhaps the provisions set out in this clause will eliminate the necessity of obtaining loans at higher rates of interest. I should like to ask the minister whether he feels that the implementation of the provisions set out in the bill will eliminate the need for financing by machinery companies or other financial institutions which provide services to farmers.

The two main questions I wish to raise at this time are, first, will farmers be able to obtain loans of $15,000 at the 5 per cent rate now permitted under the Farm Improvement

Loans Act and then obtain further loans under the provisions of this bill or will the banks have to tell the farmers that it is impossible for them to grant loans at 5 per cent? According to my information, and I have checked it with the officials of the department, there is no means whereby the banks can be compelled to lend money at 5 per cent even under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Until now the banks have been co-operative in cases where no risk is involved. As a matter of fact the record of farm improvement loan repayments is good. However, if a man has a good record of repayment there should be no reason for not granting him a loan at that interest rate. I have not heard of many cases where people had difficulty in obtaining loans but that is only so because their credit rating is good. Will those whose credit rating has been good be able to qualify or will this bill nullify the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

My second question is whether this legislation will eliminate the higher rate of interest demanded by finance and machinery companies? This is important, particularly in Saskatchewan where about one-third of all the loans are made. This legislation will also be of importance to the machinery industry. What will be their position if farmers decide to stop buying machinery owing to the high interest rates and the difficulty of obtaining loans? This would be a natural reaction of people who try to save money in every way possible and try to cut corners in their operations. With these few remarks I shall conclude, hoping that the minister will provide me with the answers.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I reply to the questions asked by the hon. member for Mackenzie. I fully expect that the Farm Improvement Loans Act will continue to function as it is now functioning. The banks which make farm improvement loans to Farmers, are guaranteed against loss and are therefore willing to make loans at lower rates of interest than under the normal ordinary commercial terms where risks must be accepted. I do not think that the greater freedom we shall give the banks under this act, if approved in the form of the amendments before us, will make much difference to that part of their activity. The principal effect of removing the ceiling will be to give the banks greater scope to vary the interest rate with the risk involved.

My answer to the second part of the question is, therefore, that the banks will hereafter be able to provide a greater range of services to the farmers who, I think, will not be as dependent as they have been until now upon supplementary financing from the machinery companies at very much higher rates of interest. If the banks are freed of the ceiling on their interest rates I believe they will be able to service the farmers at a lower rate of interest than obtainable from the machinery companies now doing the financing.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask a hypothetical question? If we find after this bill becomes law that the banks are charging a rate higher than 5 per cent, what guarantee have we that even though a man is a good risk, is progressive and has paid off his indebtedness to the bank over many years he can still go to the bank and say, "Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act I am entitled to a loan. Why must I pay a higher rate?" What safeguards are there that the higher rate will not apply?

Mr. Sharp: The rate with respect to the Farm Improvement Loans Act is fixed by parliament at 5 per cent and cannot be raised. That is a separate piece of legislation and is not affected by the Bank Act. It will be possible for the farmer to get other forms of financing partly because the banks will now be allowed to take security which they could not previously take and partly because they will be free to compete with acceptance and loan companies for business that hitherto had been unobtainable for them.

Mr. Korchinski: Should we find ourselves in the position that for two months after the coming into force of this bill there are fluctuations in the interest rate and the banks decide they must first see how the rates level out and as a result restrict loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, what safeguards are available to farmers? I realize that the point I have raised is only a possibility, but what guarantees are there that farmers will be able to obtain loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

Mr. Sharp: This is a highly hypothetical question and perhaps I should not even attempt to answer. There are strict provisions in the law against any such conspiracy as the hon. gentleman has described. Second, I cannot believe that the banks of this country will stop providing the services they have been providing for farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act when greater freedom is given under this act. It is my belief, and it can only be a belief, that it will be in the interest of the banks to continue serving farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act as they have in the past. As the hon. gentleman knows, the banks cannot be compelled to lend money to anyone.

Mr. Korchinski: That is the point.

Mr. Sharp: There is nothing we can do about it. We cannot compel anyone, including banks, to lend money to anybody else. I may say that the experience we have had with the Farm Improvement Loans Act leads me to believe that the banks will continue to provide hundreds of millions of dollars of loans under that act.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, with regard to Bill No. C-222, in clause 88(5)(b), I read on line 45:

—au cours de la période de trois mois qui—

But, if I refer to the English version of Bill No. C-222 reprinted, on line 16 page 74, I read:

—the period of six months next—

Then, I wonder whether, in such a case, we must amend the French version or whether the correction can be made without an amendment.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): Would the hon. member be good enough to repeat what he has just said?

Mr. Clermont: This is it, Mr. Chairman. On page 79 of the French version of Bill No. C-222 reprinted, I read the following:

—au cours de la période de trois mois qui—

But if I refer to line 16, on page 74 of the English version of the Bill No. C-222, I read:

—the period of six months next—

Under the amendment passed by the committee of finance, trade and economic affairs, it is really a period of six months, and this is my question: Should we move an amendment to the French version or can we make the correction some other way.

[English]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): I am informed by the law officers of the House of Commons that it can be changed without an amendment.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, in clause 88 there is reference to a manufacturer in subsection 1(b) and to a farmer in subsection 1(c). Are these definitions inclusive or exclusive? Is a farmer excluded from being a manufacturer? I see that money can be lent to a person engaged in the manufacture of maple syrup. He can use the maple syrup as security if he is a manufacturer, wholesaler, purchaser or shipper of maple syrup. If a farmer doing this as a sideline he be considered a manufacturer despite his being a full time farmer for the rest of the year?

Mr. Sharp: The answer is simple. He can be either or both. He can be both manufacturer and farmer or he can be either manufacturer or farmer.

Mr. Bigg: That brings me to my second question. In this bill we are giving the banks what appears to be a blank cheque. I can vote for some clauses in the bill with a clear conscience because I realize that farmers and small producers must get the credit they need. We had been told so far that we are protecting these people by allowing the banks to enter the lending field in places where they have been excluded, which has been to the detriment of these farmers and small producers. That sounds fine. But I am worried that the suggested ceiling of 7¼ per cent will become a floor. I do not think anyone will be able to borrow money under all these fine subclauses at a rate lower than 7¼ per cent. This will place an added interest burden of at least 25 per cent on all these primary producers.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I certainly think the risk is extremely small. Farmers who borrow money at the present time constitute a risk amounting to only one tenth of one per cent. I should like the banks to show me why they need an increase of 1¼ per cent and later of 2 per cent in interest rates when there is no indication whatever that farmers in the future will prove any more of a risk than in the past. I do not see why farmers should not get the money when the risk involved is virtually nil. When people go out to pioneer the land, when they put up with the absence of facilities for their comfort and for the education of their children, I do not see why they should not have the benefit of lower rates, especially when the risk they constitute is as small as one tenth of one per cent.

I do not see why the chartered banks should not become a pipe line from the financial wealth of Canada to those who are making the greatest contribution to our affluent society. I should like to have some assurance that this ceiling will not in fact become a floor. I should like some assurance that the banks will really and truly be in competition not only with the loan sharks, as I call them, and the legitimate money lending institutions but among themselves. The chartered banks should make a real effort to provide the necessary capital for young people who are starting out and who find it tremendously difficult to raise the $30,000 or $40,000 necessary to begin farming operations. Although there are other acts which provide facilities for borrowing a certain amount of money, young farmers are still forced to borrow money against their cattle and field crops in order to pay for the machinery they need. I hesitate to give the chartered banks a blank cheque, as it were, without good reason to believe they will be really competitive and help the primary producers to set themselves up, branch out and even increase Canada's agricultural wealth.

Mr. Sharp: By way of a brief reply to these observations may I point out that when the ceiling was 6 per cent over a long period of years loans were made at very much lower rates of interest—3½ per cent or 4 per cent, for instance. So the ceiling has not by any means been the rate which the banks have charged. I can recall when 6 per cent was considered to be a very high rate of interest. The banks thought they would never be able to realize such a rate. It is only in recent years with the high demand for funds that rates have risen to around 6 per cent. I would hope and expect that as in the past there would be keen competition among the banks below the ceiling or in the absence of a ceiling at all.

Mr. Bigg: I do not think any farmer in my district in the last 20 years has been borrowing at a rate anything like 3½ per cent. It has been difficult to borrow at 6 per cent in many cases. So they have been forced into the hands of the loan sharks; there is no kind word for them when they charge an interest rate anywhere between 18 and 30 per cent.

I am hoping this legislation will help those who have had no opportunity whatever to borrow money at reasonable rates. As I say, I am afraid that if the ceiling is raised there will be a tendency to lend money close to the ceiling. It provides a certain amount of fuel for those who believe in Social Credit theories and suggest that the flow of money should depend on the natural resources of the country and the willingness of the people to work rather than on arbitrary decisions made behind closed doors and around mahogany tables. Those of us who have spent all our lives in the farming industry cannot but feel there is a modicum of common sense in this contention. If by statute we are able to make reasonable loans to people for reasonable purposes, taking into account their ability to repay, we accomplish something which is of real value. Otherwise I can only give my full approval to this bill with a great deal of trepidation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to a large part of this debate with great interest. I want to say that I find a number of members are not very well informed with respect to the operation of banks. I am saying this as a socialist. I have dealt with a local bank for 50 years. I have found that the local manager is always honourable and willing to co-operate with the farmers in the district and the small forest operators and has an understanding of their problems. Within the limits of the act and the circumstances prevailing I have always found him willing to do the best he can.

This is true of other bank officials in my area. I have known them to stick their necks out, to use a vulgar term, on behalf of people they are trying to help. I am sure the farmers, the vegetable growers and the fruit growers will be pleased to see clause 88 in the bill and I wish to compliment the committee for adopting it. I know that the chairman of the agricultural committee, the hon. member for Essex South, and other members of that committee have a direct relationship with farmers and know their problems at first hand. I always enjoy the remarks of the earthy member for Kent (Ont.) on this subject because he speaks from personal experience, not just from the book.

I rise to say once again that in my opinion the agricultural producers will consider clause 88 to be a great improvement over the previous section in the act. I wanted to ask the minister one question. This provision applies to agricultural producers, fruit growers, vegetable growers and so on. Would it apply also to the farmer who grows wood as a crop as part of his farming operation and sells it in the form of logs or otherwise to a small sawmill, for example? People engaged in operations of this kind often lose considerable sums of money because those with whom they are dealing go bankrupt. Are they protected in the same way as other producers are protected?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Chairman, they are not.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I was the sponsor of a bill to protect primary producers in the case of bankruptcy when I was first elected to this house in 1962. I re-introduced it following the election in 1963 and the government at that time saw fit to send it to the banking and commerce committee. It was one of the first private members bills which was studied by the committee and reported back to the house.

As a primary producer this made me quite happy and today, finally realizing that what I was seeking is going to become law, I feel happy that I have accomplished one little thing since becoming a member of the house. I know that farm organizations across Canada will be delighted by the action of the government and the committee. The former committee recommended to the government that some type of legislation be initiated to protect farmers, mainly producers of primary crops that are perishable. I commend the committee, and in particular the hon. member for Labelle and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for their studious work while serving on the committee.

I was not a member of the present standing committee which studied this bill, but I did observe some of the work done by it and had consultations with its members at different times. The provision now incorporated is even better than what was contained in the previous bill introduced last session but which never became law. The committee has done a wonderful job and, as I have said, the farm organizations will be happy about it.

The new provision raises the amount of money which farmers can claim. In the previous bill it was set at $5,000. That is now changed to $7,500 and farmers have been given another three months from time of delivery in which to make claims.

I know the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) is aware that people are concerned about this matter in the province of Ontario and that the provincial legislature is hoping to pass legislation to protect the producers of dairy products in Ontario.

The provision in this bill will not create any hardship for any small canner. In my opinion any such canner who cannot finance himself has no right to use the assets of a primary producer whose whole livelihood can be placed in jeopardy if the canner is not on a sound financial footing. A lot of financially unstable canners have already gone out of business but this has not stopped new canneries being established. In fact in my own county of Essex five new ones have been established.

Bankers were aware of this new provision, and knew there was a great possibility of its becoming law. When moving my original bill I received an education in bankruptcy and in parliamentary committee procedure. At one stage the bill was thrown out of the standing committee. Later it was returned, however, and the experience which I gained on that committee has helped me in my work on other committees. I want to thank the present Minister of Finance and the present standing committee for making this become a reality.

Mr. Aiken: I wish to ask the minister a question concerning subclause (5) (b). I have looked back at the initial consideration of this question in the standing committee, and my recollection is that at that time the bankers who appeared said categorically that if a provision of this kind were put in the bill, by which they would lose their first charge on the assets of canners, they would refuse to make loans to them. There was a great deal of discussion about the matter in the committee. Is the minister now in a position to get any assurance from the bankers that they are satisfied with this subclause, and that they will continue with normal loans to canners, particularly to small canneries, so that the provision will not in the end hurt both small canners and the producers themselves? The feeling was very strong that bankers would not make loans to canners. It was thought that because this new provision gives no protection to bankers they would discontinue making loans to this type of operation.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this matter was discussed at some length in the committee. If the banks had shared the views expressed by the hon. member they certainly would have expressed them to the committee. They did not do so, and it is my understanding that their attitude is that they can live with the legislation.

Mr. Aiken: But can the canners live with it?

Mr. Sharp: If the banks had been so strongly opposed and felt they could not deal with canners they would have said so. They expressed themselves in the way that I have expressed it now, that they can live with the legislation, in other words that they can continue to operate and make loans.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, a few words only to show my full appreciation as regards this clause 88, which gives banks authority to lend money and make advances to any farmer, producer, wholesaler, forwarding dealer or buyer of agricultural products.

I believe this clause really places the bank in its proper perspective. As a matter of fact, we claim that banks should finance the private sector, encourage individual enterprise and initiative and we believe the part it will thus play will be effective. And the bank can certainly and very easily replace, for instance, the financial organizations that are swallowing up the farmers at present.

A farmer from the Témiscamingue area wrote me recently to say that he had borrowed from a finance company in order to buy a car; and he owed about $2,800 to the company. A month later, the farmer goes to the finance company, bearing the name of Delta Acceptance. Now, for a one-month period, the company charged him $208 for service costs and interests.

Banks can certainly play an important role in that field. Still, it should be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that some bank directors are often also directors of finance companies or acceptance corporations as we call them.

And so they would rather loan money at 12, 14, 15, 20 and 25 per cent through acceptance rather than at 6 or 5 per cent through the bank: it pays more. And anyway, all those loan companies are financed by chartered banks. The note of a finance company is discounted at the chartered bank within a few hours after it is signed and the finance company immediately makes 80, 85, 90 per cent of the full amount of the note, which includes the interest for a period of 36, 24 or 12 months.

• (6:40 p.m.)

I for one would not wish to see banks discriminate against our farmers for any consideration whatsoever. I agree that the minister and the government have their hearts set on assisting the farmer.

This clause 88 clearly sets out the possibilities for farmers to profit by a government act, but what we should know is to what degree the banks will meet the requirements of farmers and will understand the important part they can play in the development of agriculture in Canada. Indeed, of all the clauses contained in Bill No. C-222, I suggest that clause 88 is the most important, the most vital, for it affects the social class which is the whole basis of our economy. Without a prosperous agriculture, we cannot maintain the other social classes in prosperity indefinitely.

Farming is the foundation. Without farmers, not a single member or minister would be sitting in this house. We must have food and clothing, and all that comes from the farmer, from farming.

And that is why, Mr. Chairman, we give so much importance to the help which parliament and the government can give to the Canadian farmers. I sincerely believe that the Minister of Finance is as proud as we are of clause 88 which is meant to help the farmer in his sphere of activity, and we support that objective wholeheartedly. The bank will be able to play its role in its very own field and we do not want to prevent it from doing so, far from it, because we know that farming must remain in the private sector. If we help the farmer to have more initiative, he can improve considerably the quality and quantity of his production, because if the farmer has better equipment and facilities, he will give a better output to serve society. As a matter of fact, the farmer asks nothing more than to serve better, as long as we give him the possibility to do it.

Two years ago we had the opportunity to visit some community farms with farmers who own absolutely nothing. In Russia, for instance, in Czechoslovakia, where the government practised controlled farming, what were the results? Such a complete failure that today those governments are forced, to go back to the method of personal incentives and determine that if a farmer produces beyond such a quota, he will receive a bonus on his production surplus.

If, in those countries, they nationalized, state controlled and communized everything, now they must go back to realities and rehabilitate farming.

Mr. Chairman, in Canada, we must preserve, improve and further assist the initiative of our farmers, and that is why the members of the Ralliement Créditiste are happy to endorse clause 88 which will allow the banks—let us hope that they will be broad-minded—to co-operate to the farm development required in Canada, to assist the farmers, so that they can improve their living conditions as well as their production capabilities.

Mr. Chairman, we are glad to see the interest shown by the government in the Canadian farmer through clause 88 and we endorse 100 per cent the potential role of the bank in assisting our farmers.

[English]

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, although I am in accord with one part of clause 88, I am very much concerned about another part of this clause with which I should like to deal in a moment. First of all, I should like the minister to give us an explanation of how the provisions in clause 88 (5) (b) (ii) will work with relation to provincial legislation, which I understand deals with this specific subject in a somewhat similar manner. I should like to know whether or not there has been any consultation at the federal-provincial level in this regard and whether or not it was found that such legislation is compatible federally and provincially. Also I should like to know whether in respect of this clause the federal and provincial governments will act separately or together in order to provide the protection which the farmers need. This is one matter which I hope the minister will explain.

Like the hon. member who preceded me I am not in full accord with subclause (1) (h) (v) of clause 88 because I believe the effect of this would be to cancel one of the very vital financial tools which farmers in recent years have employed in successfully carrying out their operations. This clause makes it possible for banks to loan money to farmers for any works for the improvement or development of a farm for which a farm improvement loan as defined in the Farm Improvement Loans Act may be made. The banks cannot be compelled to lend money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Under this act the rate of interest is stipulated to be 5 per cent. Loans at an interest rate of 5 per cent will not be accorded to farmers.

The banks certainly are in business to make money. If under the provisions of the Bank Act the banks are in a position to loan money at 6 per cent, 7 per cent, or at such higher percentage rate as may be authorized when the Bank Act comes into effect, certainly when the farmer approaches a banker for a loan the banker will not lend him money at 5 per cent under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

This will bring great hardship to members of the agricultural industry who have over the years taken advantage of these 5 per cent loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. These loans have been very popular among farmers. In recent years millions of dollars have been loaned to farmers on this basis. If the banks are to be given an alternative, this provision in the bill would be useless because the farmer would be unlikely to receive a farm improvement loan at 5 per cent. My contention is that if in the implementation of this legislation the ceiling on the interest rate is allowed to rise, then all the good which has been brought about by the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be nullified because since the banks will not make a loan with a rate of interest of 5 per cent these loans will not be available to farmers. Because of this farmers will be faced with the necessity to borrow money at a rate of interest which has been increased by one and a half or two per cent.

• (6:50 p.m.)

With the high cost of living today the farmers carry a sufficient burden, particularly when one considers the cost of farm machinery and its necessity under present day farming practices. I can only express consternation and alarm at the fact that these amendments to the Bank Act will work to the detriment of farmers in those ways I have outlined, in spite of the fact that to some extent it may appear that some relief will be provided. I hope I am wrong in this belief and that the Minister of Finance can convince me of that error. However, unless I hear a reasonable argument to the contrary I am satisfied that when this measure comes into effect the benefits farmers now receive under the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be lost.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 89 and 90 agreed to.

On clause 91—Powers re interest.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have a problem in respect of clause 91 in that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac wishes to speak to it.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, before the next hon. member speaks, with his permission perhaps I may suggest that we adjourn now for dinner and return at eight o'clock in order that his remarks will not be interrupted.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, may I call it seven o'clock?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, it apparently is the wish of hon. members of the committee that we rise and suspend the sitting until eight o'clock in order that we may have a dinner recess.

The Chairman: Shall I rise and report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), income tax—request made by the Estates General of French Canada; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), health and welfare—research into illness caused by noise; the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Chatwood), fisheries—abolition of seal hunt.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the sitting be suspended until eight o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps hon. members will agree to resuming the business interrupted a few minutes ago, before suspending the sitting.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222 respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee will resume its work at eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking. The committee is considering clause 91. The hon. member for Rosthern.

Bank Act

On clause 91—Powers re interest.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question before the hon. member speaks on clause 91? I understand that clause 88 has been carried. Has the minister had an opportunity to study the remaining clauses with the thought in mind that possibly we could clean up most of them, or all of them other than clauses 1 and 91?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, during the supper hour I took a few minutes and made a note of clauses that I thought were non-contentious. Perhaps I might read the numbers and a note might be taken of them.

Mr. Monteith: Would you mind reading them rather slowly, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I will. Then we might at an appropriate point decide that we could in fact approve them en bloc. Clause 93—

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Not 93.

Mr. Sharp: —clauses 96, 97, 98, 101, 145, 151 and 158. Then I include all the remaining schedules.

Mr. Monteith: Would the minister mind repeating the numbers?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I will read them again: 96, 97, 98, 101, 145, 151 and 158.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned clause 93 the first time. Has he dropped that clause?

Mr. Sharp: There was an objection to clause 93.

Mr. Monteith: And all the schedules?

Mr. Sharp: All the remaining schedules.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, does this leave clauses 91, 93 and 1?

Mr. Sharp: The final clauses, and No. 1. With respect to the final clause I propose to move an amendment. Because of the lapse of time and there being no opportunity for proclamation, this act will have to come into effect when it is approved.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, the minister is referring to clause 162?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, clause 162. I am leaving that clause for discussion because I propose to ask that an amendment be made; and clause 1. I am not certain which of them I left out, but anything I had any question about I left open for discussion.

Mr. Knowles: Then it looks like clauses 91, 93, 162 and 1.

Mr. Sharp: And clause 99. I think the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac asked that we hold clauses 99, 100 and 102.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I think there might be a misunderstanding, Mr. Chairman, according to my information. Clauses 99 and 100 were not reserved in this respect. With regard to clause 93, I do not wish to anticipate anything but I would rather have that clause held for the moment. I would rather discuss it later on.

Mr. Sharp: Then, Mr. Chairman, may I add to the list clauses 99, 100 and 102?

Mr. Monteith: May I suggest that the minister move the adoption of these particular clauses.

Mr. Sharp: I would like to be fair to the committee. I do not want to appear to be pushing anything or trying to put anything over on the committee, but I would be very happy to move that these clauses be approved en block without further discussion.

Mr. Monteith: Would the minister mind repeating the numbers again?

Mr. Sharp: I will read the numbers again: 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 145, 151 and 158, and all the remaining schedules.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Minister of Finance:

That clauses 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 145, 151 and 158, and schedules A to L and R and S be carried en bloc.

Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

• (8:10 p.m.)

On clause 91—Powers re interest.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak to this clause of Bill No. C-222, I think it is fair to make the observation that this is perhaps one of the more important clauses of the bill. It is important not only because of the effect it may have on banking in our country but the effect it may have on the economic activity within our country for a number of years ahead. While it is true that the Bank Act will provide for charters being granted to the banks over a period of ten years, the effect on the economic life of our country will be more far-reaching than that. The trends and patterns that will be established in the years immediately ahead after this bill comes into operation will, in large measure, decide the future of Canada itself and of individual Canadians as well.

What we in this house must consider tonight is whether or not the wealth that has been accumulated in this country which finds its way into deposits in the banks of our nation will serve the average Canadian or whether that wealth will go to those who can pay the highest amount. This, in my opinion, is one of the reasons our parliamentarians of an earlier era put a ceiling on the interest rate that could be charged by our banking institutions. It is a notable fact, sir, that notwithstanding the many obstacles that our bankers have had to overcome throughout the years, such as depressions, wars and other things, our banks have not been unprofitable. One has only to look at the financial statements of these institutions to ascertain that. This does not mean, sir, that the banks could not have been more profitable in Canada had successive governments come to grips with the problems confronting the people of this nation in relation to finance companies, and the activities in which they have engaged over a period of years.

Mr. Monteith: You mean successive Liberal governments.

Mr. Nasserden: Someone says, successive Liberal governments. It is a notable fact that the Liberal party has been in power for the greater part of the last number of years. I recall that for 22 years they had almost unlimited access to power in the nation's parliament. Today we are faced with problems that have grown up during the last few years, problems that are the result of the actions that have been taken by the government as well as actions the government failed to take in coming to grips with the problems that face Canadians in every part of our land.

In this particular clause before us we see embedded the objective toward which this government has dedicated its life, dedicated every effort for a period in excess of two years. I need only point to the rise in interest rates that has taken place in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans, the higher interest rate that was provided for farm syndicate loans, to indicate the attitude members opposite have toward the development of our nation. Indeed, sir, from one end of Canada to the other and in all the four corners of the world, Canada is becoming known as a high cost economy. This is one of the things with which we will have to live and with which successive governments will have to try to come to grips. It is a problem that has been created as a result of the carelessness of this administration.

Now, on this occasion we have a Minister of Finance coming before parliament with predictions. You know, sir, his predictions in the past have had an unhappy knack of raising false hopes in the Canadian people. We need only think of what he said would happen with regard to inflation. We think of what he thought could be the economic situation in this nation. We think of what happened with regard to the housing problem. We think of the increased rate of unemployment which has set in, but I note that the Secretary of State for External Affairs smiles. This is a fact in the city of Toronto and in other places in this country. People have suffered hardship and privation this winter because of a lack of a housing program which was effective. In addition to that, other Canadians have had to pay more for houses they have bought than otherwise might have been the case.

We see a rise in the number of unemployed. We see contractors viewing the future apprehensively, and then we see the Postmaster General laughing. The increase in the number of unemployed in the province of Quebec is just as great as, if not greater than that in the city of Toronto. What I wanted to say before I was diverted by those smiles from ministers opposite was that the Minister of Finance has had a knack of raising false hopes in the hearts of most Canadians. Listening to him and to his colleagues one would almost think that high interest rates were a virtue. We listened to the Minister of Labour the other day as he sought to brag about the effect high interest rates would have on the housing program in this country. Everyone knows—everyone who cares, knows—that the people of this country are reaching a stage where they cannot afford to buy the homes which are necessary to house their families. We have this arrogant government, the ministers of which smile when these things are mentioned, going on their way, bringing before this parliament a bill which is a further successive step in those they have taken to raise the cost of production in this country, and lessened the productivity of the individual members of our society.

One part of this clause provides that for the period commencing on the coming into force of this act and ending on December 31, 1967, the interest rate shall be 7¼ per cent. This is 1¼ per cent more than the limit which resulted from the deliberations of an earlier committee of the house. Now, sir, we have to ask ourselves what the effect of this action will be on industry and initiative in this country. Who are the people who are going to be able to bid for this money? It will certainly not be the young, with limited resources, because in the minister's own words they are going to be more of a risk than the well established. They will have to pay a higher rate of interest than those who are well established and on the way to building their futures in our nation.

● (8:20 p.m.)

The problem which has existed in the last several years was that the banking institutions of our country have been unable to bid for the deposits which have gone into the consumer loan and finance companies all across this nation. These companies have been able to do what they have done because the government has not provided regulations forcing them to compete with the banks of our nation. The minister himself has given lip service to another concept. That concept, as seen in this bill and as expressed by the minister before the committee, is that we must bring our banks into competition with the finance and consumer loan companies in this nation. I say to you, sir, that the lack of these regulations will stifle initiative and will discourage the development of our nation. I cannot help but feel that if the measures outlined by the government in the bill which is before us are followed, Canadians in the years ahead will pay and pay, and in many cases opportunities to develop their business will be denied them. Small businessmen, farmers and professionals will all suffer because of that legislation.

It is for this reason that I believe this clause in the bill should be amended. Therefore I move:

That paragraph (a) of subclause (3) of clause 91 of Bill C-222 be amended to delete the words "and ending on the 31st day of December, 1967, 7¼ per cent; and that the words "6 per cent" be substituted so that paragraph (a) would then read as follows:

"for the period commencing on the coming into force of this act, 6 per cent".

And further that paragraph (b) be deleted entirely, that subclauses (4), (7), (8), (9) and (10) be deleted entirely, that subclause (5) be renumbered subclause (4) and that subclause (6) be renumbered subclause (5).

If this amendment is adopted, our banking institutions will be able to operate in the same way as they have in the past without discriminating against the small income groups and will be able to provide the services which they have been able to provide in the years gone by. At the same time the government will continue to have the responsibility of bringing forward legislation to regulate and supervise other financial institutions in the country which live in a jungle of their own. This is what I feel Canadians from one end of this country to the other have waited for all too long.

I will not say anything more with regard to the amendment which I moved. All I will say is that if the present bill is passed, the people of this country will band together before too long to organize banks of their own in order to provide the services at reasonable rates of interest.

Another point which I should like to make is that in the United States interest rates have generally been lower than those prevailing in Canada, and therefore the legislation which is before us may have a detrimental effect on the transfer of funds from the United States to Canada. The minister says that the high finance charges will be levelled out. However, the fact remains that they will be levelled at a higher rate than 6 per cent. This will mean an increase to most of those who have utilized the banking services of our country over a long period of years.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, clause 91 is the most important clause of Bill C-222. There has been much talk about clause 75 (2) (g) concerning the Mercantile Bank, but clause 91 is the real nub of the bill. I recall that back in July, when the Minister of Finance introduced the bill, serious concern was expressed by the members of his party about the formula he presented at that time determining the interest rate. It was a compromise formula to satisfy the differing views in his party concerning the determination of the interest rate. As you remember, Mr. Chairman, the formula was to add 1¾ per cent to the preceding average quarterly yield of government of Canada short term bonds, and if the average yield on the government short term bonds fell below 4½ per cent, then the interest rates would be freed.

This formula was presented at a time when the interest rates were rising. In the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs the weight of evidence on behalf of the chartered banks was that the present 6 per cent rate was unrealistic in today's economy and unduly restrictive to the competitive position of the banks. This was the basis of the claim. There was no evidence of any real effect on the profit that the banks enjoyed. Professor Slater indicated the advisability of classifying interest rates into two or three broad categories, namely business loans, mortgage loans and consumer loans, and applying different rates to each class. No action was taken on the recommendation at that time. Professor Neufeld said that the problem would be solved by adding one half of 1 per cent every six months until the interest rate reached 8 per cent. This suggestion also was not acted upon by the government. We in the New Democratic Party felt that a regulatory body should be set up to determine the interest rates and the allocation of moneys to different categories of borrowers. As time went on and more evidence came in we found there was pressure to change the formula that was presented by the Minister of Finance in the first instance. A great deal of the pressure came from the Progressive Conservative members of the committee.

Mr. Monteith: Pressure for what?

Mr. Gilbert: In fact the motion to change the formula was initiated by the hon. member for Regina City. I think he had the support of the hon. members for Edmonton West and Kamloops. It would be fair to say that he probably did not have the support of the hon. member for Perth.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Monteith: Thank you.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Or of the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Gilbert: But the initiative came from the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. Monteith: On the invitation of the government.

Mr. Gilbert: The government lent its support, after the proposal was made.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before.

Mr. Monteith: The government requested it.

Mr. Gilbert: The main change was the changing of the base rate on the yield of short-term government loans, changing the rate from 4½ to 5 per cent. The compromise formula of 7¼ per cent would apply to the end of December, 1967. After that time the formula would be to add 1¾ per cent to the preceding quarterly average yield for government of Canada short term bonds. If the yield of government of Canada short term bonds fell below 5 per cent—not 4½ per cent as set out in the original formula—there would be a freeing of the interest rate. This is the formula we have before us tonight.

The Minister of Finance having presented the original formula to the house in July, when interest rates were high, we now find that there is a downturn in those interest rates, the rate for government of Canada short term bonds now being below 5 per cent. Applying the formula today would free the interest rates; nevertheless the 7¼ per cent figure applies until December 31, 1967.

The result will be that as of January next year the chartered banks will determine the interest rates for their different types of loans. The evidence before the committee showed that the chartered banks do not adhere to the present 6 per cent figure; for consumer loans the rates average between 10 per cent and 11 per cent, the reason being that the banks include service charges in the determination of the interest. Rather than charging 6 per cent for business loans the banks often demand compensating balances, increasing the percentage.

Once interest rates are freed one can prophesy that the rates for business loans will be probably around 8 per cent, and the rates for consumer loans will probably move up to between 12 and 13 per cent. We have evidence that the chartered banks will enter the mortgage field. With National Housing Act mortgages at around 7¾ per cent and with conventional mortgages being about 1 per cent higher, we shall find that conventional mortgages from the banks will be around 8½ to 8¾ per cent.

This is the picture Canadians will face in 1968; it is not a happy one. Probably that is why the hon. members for Rosthern and Acadia are not happy with the positions taken by certain members of their party in the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. In the New Democratic Party we realize that there has to be a certain amount of realism with interest rates today. We should prefer returning to the original formula set forth by the Minister of Finance last year—

Mr. Monteith: Is the hon. member adopting a holier-than-thou attitude?

Mr. Gilbert: —where the base was 4½ per cent. At the moment the rates on government short term bonds are 4.9 per cent.

There appears to be a fluctuation in interest rates; there is an unsteadiness; and that concerned or troubled the Minister of Finance when he introduced the legislation in 1966. We feel that by leaving the base at 4½ per cent the present formula will have more time to adjust itself and to be tried and tested.

Foremost in the minds of many committee members was the need for parliament to review the Bank Act more than once in every ten years. In our party we feel that if the minister's original formula, with the base at 4½ per cent, were tested for two years that we should know where we are going with interest rates. Otherwise we shall be left with the formula we have today, with interest rates at 7½ per cent until the end of the year, and with the possibility of a substantial increase in 1968, and in the years ahead. After the disposition of the amendment by the hon. member for Rosthern, therefore, we shall move the appropriate amendment.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to hold up a vote on the amendment of the hon. member for Rosthern, but I wish to say that I support his motion. It has been clearly intimated that circumstances change rapidly. When we started hearings on the Bank Act last October there was definite evidence before the committee that interest rates were rising and would reach a maximum, and evidence was given to the effect that the rates would probably stay up for about ten years.

We have seen the reversal, as a consequence of which clause 91 (3) (a), fixing the rate at 7¼ per cent until December 31, 1967, has become obsolete overnight. The situation is completely uncertain. We have these fluctuations, and I think the hon. member for Rosthern was correct in moving his amendment. Apart from some financial institutions encountering difficulties, others, including the banks, are doing all right. For the time being we could well maintain the 6 per cent rate, to see what happens. We were in a position at one time where 7¼ per cent seemed not unreasonable. Today, as has been said by the hon. member for Broadview, with short term bonds at around 4.9 per cent, by adding 1¾ per cent to that figure, as in the original formula proposed by the minister we should not approach 7¼ per cent.

As I have expressed more than once in this house I am afraid of maximum rates becoming the minimum. I do not believe that, as of tonight, we should authorize this 7¼ per cent rate to December 31, 1967.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to say something about banks and the rate of interest. The house wishes to pass this legislation tonight. I suggest to the minister that he adopt the agreeable mood the Minister of Transport adopted when we were dealing with a massive piece of legislation, the transport bill. I am speaking in support of the amendment of the hon. member for Rosthern which would, in effect, amend clause 91 throughout and return us to a 6 per cent interest rate. I am particularly in favour of this arrangement, but if this argument fails, we could find ourselves agreeing to take a close look, in the three quarters of a year which will remain, if this bill passes, at the 7¼ per cent mentioned in paragraph (a) of 91 (3).

• (8:40 p.m.)

Consideration of this clause took up a great deal of time in committee when much was said by the Minister of Finance about interest rates of this kind. I suppose it is of little use, now, discussing whether or not bank profits should be as high as they are, or whether they should be higher; or whether the removal of the interest ceiling will indeed bring about greater competition between the banks and the financial houses.

Let us take a look at interest rates. I have before me the Wood-Gundy market report giving market quotations of government of Canada bonds. The date is March 17, 1967. I do not know what the minister calls a short term bond. Is it two years or three years? The minister holds up three fingers. That would be 1967, 1968 and 1969. A quick look at the bids, and what was asked, and the yields, for April 1, discloses that government of Canada bonds, stood at 4 per cent. It goes from 4 per cent to what is shown for the last government bond, due October 1, 1969 at an interest yield rate of 4.56 per cent. I do not know where the hon. member for Broadview gets his 4.9 per cent. It would appear evident to me from these figures that in actual fact short term loans are closer to an average of 4.3 per cent as the minister said last Thursday. His observations are reported at page 14057 of Hansard, and I am accepting his figures.

If one looks at the whole question of interest rates in the light of the formula this clause suggests, involving the 1½ per cent above the closing rates of short term bonds, and if one adds that 1¼ per cent to 4.3 per cent, the total is 6.05 per cent. So there is just argument in support of the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Rosthern.

As the hon. member for Perth has suggested, interest rates have been fluctuating because of uncertainly in the financial market. Legislators do not panic. One of the first things we learn is not to react to a day to day situation. Conditions should be watched to see whether or not they return to normal, particularly interest rates. They may fluctuate a great deal from week to week; they may rise for six months. But eventually, through sound financial management, they may well return to normal levels. After a study of the formula suggested here, during what could well be conceived as the closing three months of the year, we might well say that a 6 per cent interest rate should be employed. If the minister could find himself in an agreeable mood, we on this side of the house would like to see him vote for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rosthern. If he cannot do so, we on this side, and myself in particular, would like to see the government move an amendment to (3)(a) where it says:

> —for the period commencing on the coming into force of this Act and ending on the 31st day of December, 1967, seven and one-quarter per cent;

I notice that as reported at page 3505 of the proceedings of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, the minister has this to say about an interest rate of 7¼ per cent:

> I am a little concerned that the ceiling which comes in at 7¼ might come down to 6¾.

He is concerned that with a ceiling fixed at 7¼ per cent under this legislation the interest rate might in fact turn out to be 6¾ per cent. That was on February 22. I have given a résumé of last week's closing interest rates on short-term government bonds. Now I invite hon. members to look at page 14057 of Hansard where the minister is recorded as saying that the average rate was 4.3 per cent. It can be understood why the minister is concerned that a ceiling set at 7¼ per cent might come down to 6¾ per cent.

• (8:50 p.m.)

What kind of legislators are we if we sit here blind to the facts? Interest rates were higher a month ago on short term bonds. They have since come down and for all we know may stay down. If the minister knows something different, then he should let us know. If he knows that 7¼ per cent is going to be the interim percentage he should tell us the facts, so that we can pass legislation with our eyes open and not with our eyes closed.

I urge the minister to put himself in an agreeable mood and keep this committee well informed. We can only judge by the figures that are available. The ones we have show that short term interest is 4.3 per cent, and with the specified addition it will be 6.5 per cent for the next quarter. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is always in an agreeable mood. I can vouch that the Minister of Transport is always in an agreeable mood when he is trying to have legislation passed. And with this being centennial year the Secretary of State should be in an agreeable mood. I would hope those three ministers could convince their colleague to inform the house that interest rates are going to go up, that 7¼ per cent is going to be the halfway house between what is now the statutory 6 per cent and the 8 per cent after 1968.

The minister should read his own words as recorded at page 14057 of last Thursday's Hansard and then take a look at the formula in this clause. If he does so I believe he can accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosthern. Interest rates play a great part in the rising cost of production. The cost of borrowing money is an important factor in inflation. No government wants to be branded as a high interest government. Governments like to be considered as being concerned with the problems of money borrowers. I know that deep down in his heart the Minister of Finance must be concerned about the people who borrow money, but under this clause he seems to suggest he is only concerned with the money lenders.

As recorded at page 3505 of committee proceedings No. 51 the minister admitted that he was concerned about this particular clause. I urge him to accept the amendment and, if he cannot, to come half way and be agreeable to a compromise.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. For the information of hon. members who have entered the chamber since the amendment was moved I think I should read it. It reads:

That paragraph (a) of subclause (3), of clause 91 of Bill C-222, be amended to delete the words, "and ending on the 31st day of December, 1967, seven and one quarter per cent; and" and that the words "six per cent" be substituted so that paragraph (a) would then read as follows:

"for the period commencing on the coming into force of this act, 6 per cent; and further that paragraph (b) be deleted entirely, and that subclauses (4), (7), (8), (9), and (10) be deleted entirely, and that subclause (5) be renumbered subclause (4), and that subclause (6) be renumbered subclause (5)."

I would also remind the committee that the hon. member for Broadview has indicated he will have a further amendment, and also the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac. So that we may have some order I hope that hon. members who speak at this time will co-operate and direct their speeches to the amendment being proposed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I begin by commending your advice to the committee. I believe it would be very helpful to the orderly consideration of this clause if we decided what to do about the amendment that has been proposed which in effect maintains the act in the form it is in today, namely with a ceiling on bank interest rates of 6 per cent.

I would remind the committee that this question was discussed at some length on second reading and in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. I would also remind the committee that the recommendation that the ceiling should be removed entirely was made originally by the Porter commission, which was appointed by the government that preceded us in office. I shall read just a few words from their principal recommendation. It gives the reason for the removal of the ceiling. These are the words I would draw to the attention of the committee:

—the ceiling stands in the way of flexible lending by the banks in that it frequently prevents them from making loans on which higher rates must be charged to cover administrative costs and risks. Obviously, this is to the banks' disadvantage; more importantly, however, it discriminates against borrowers such as small businesses which, if they are to obtain funds at all, must turn to other lenders which charge rates well above those the banks would ask if free to do so.

That, essentially, is the argument for removing the ceiling. This argument was supported by the Economic Council of Canada in its Second Annual Review, when the council said:

At the same time, the instabilities which have arisen in Canada's financial markets during the past year urge a careful reconsideration of both the needs and possible methods for improving and strengthening Canada's existing framework of financial institutions. More generally, to minimize distortions and instabilities in credit and financial markets and to ensure easier access by home-builders, consumers and small business to credit, various recommendations of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance deserve careful attention—including measures to promote more competitive credit conditions and removal of the arbitrary 6 per cent interest rate ceiling which currently forces many small borrowers into loans at much higher rates.

Bank Act

• (9:00 p.m.)

Essentially that is the argument for removing the ceiling. I hope the committee will deal first with the amendment which has been proposed, which in effect restores or continues the 6 per cent ceiling. Then, if that should be defeated, perhaps we can discuss the second question concerning the form of the arrangement which might substitute for the 6 per cent ceiling.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, under clause 91 (3)(a), the minister proposes, as we already knew, because he just said so, to increase the rate of interest charged by chartered banks, that is, to remove the existing 6 per cent, so that banks will be allowed to charge 7¼ per cent for the period ending on December 31, 1967.

Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the government succeeded in having the house agree, although not unanimously, to the principle of reducing bank reserves from 8 to 6.6 per cent, thus enabling all chartered banks to lend a total of $4 billion of new credit immediately.

Supposing that the bill is passed this evening, that banks decide to create tomorrow $4 billion of credit and that they are allowed to charge a 7¼ per cent interest. I wonder whether the minister does not fear inflation at this time. And at the very time when the government suggests the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling on the interest rate, the governor of the Bank of Canada is giving the following warning to the population:

Inflation threatens to cause serious difficulties.

And Mr. Rasminsky states:

You cannot get a quart of wine out of a pint jug.

Mr. Chairman, when banks loan, say, $4 billion or $2 billion, no matter what they create, they do not create at the same time the 7¼ per cent interest. Therefore, where will the government, the public institutions or the general public find the 7¼ per cent interest in order to repay both the capital and the interests at the same time? It is mathematically impossible, even if it is claimed that through rapid circulation of money, the point will finally be reached where payment can be made.

This always reminds me of the chap looking at a hollow log while a rabbit is running back and forth inside. How fast should my friend from Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) run to make two rabbits appear at once, while only one is running back and forth in the log?

The play of interest and circulation of money is exactly like that. And that is why, Mr. Chairman, we cannot see how the government and the Minister of Finance can agree with the governor of the Bank of Canada who goes on to say:

Gross national product in money terms is estimated to have been more than 10½ per cent higher . . . However, two fifths of the increase was accounted for by higher prices.

And what is the cause of the higher prices? The increase of interest rates in almost all areas.

Looking back—

continues Mr. Rasminsky,

—it is clear to me that for much of the last two years, we have overloaded the economy.

The Minister of Finance tells us, for his part, that by increasing the interest rate, the small borrowers will be in a position to borrow more easily. This will enable the banks to lend more to those who need credit while the governor of the Bank of Canada tells the government: Great problems are liable to be caused by inflation.

Mr. Rasminsky continues:

The central bank and the government should have realized the danger earlier and aligned the credit and taxation policies to meet it.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member whether he is aware that Mr. Rasminsky supported the removal of the ceiling on the interest rates?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: So, in one place or the other, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Rasminsky lies. If he said the interest rate should be raised, he said exactly the opposite on March 13, 1967, according to the paper Le Soleil of Quebec. Mr. Rasminsky is not consistent for, on the one hand, he says the government should take the means to fight inflation and that one of the means of doing so is to see that credit is not too costly. If the hon. minister maintains that the governor of the Bank of Canada tells us we absolutely must allow the banks to raise their interest rate, then the governor of the Bank of Canada is not logical.

Mr. Chairman, can the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General tell us that as a result of the bill and this clause 91, which authorizes the banks to charge an interest of 7¼ per cent before December 31, and to increase their interest rate further in 1968, the rate of interest will not be 10 per cent even for the banks within the next few months? The minister tells us that it is essential to increase, or to allow the banks to increase, their interest rates in order to make the banks more competitive, because of the higher administrative costs. How much would it cost them to have the power to lend an additional $4 billion overnight to the good Canadian public, to the population, at a higher interest rate? Will the cost of administration be higher tomorrow than it is today? No. And nobody can afford the interest charged on this monetary creation.

Mr. Chairman, it is so true that those interest rates prevent the government from paying its debts that this morning's Le Devoir reported on page 10 that a $475 million bond issue had just been floated by the government of Canada. The minister is well aware that this $475 million bond issue is offered to the public so as to enable the government to pay back some debts it cannot pay now. Mr. Chairman, $475 million, is half a billion that the government undertakes to repay, partly in 1968, partly in 1973 and partly in 23 years and one month from today, that is in 1990.

Mr. Chairman, those amounts borrowed by the government will not help create jobs, but simply to pay off debts contracted perhaps some 15 or 20 years ago. Why? Because during the last 20 years we have been paying interest only, and interest has eaten up the whole capital borrowed 20 years ago, for the loans were made at 5 or 4½ per cent. Will the government find repayment easier if it borrows at 7¼ per cent? It now proposes to borrow at 4½, 5 and 5¼ per cent, yielding some 5.48 per cent—which means practically 5½ per cent—to maturity, on the last $125 million it wants to borrow.

Mr. Chairman, the government, Canada cannot continue in that direction. By permitting banks to increase their rates, does the government think it contributes to the development of Canada? In my opinion, the government helps the Canadian people mainly to flounder into a slough of debts and they will never be able to get out of it.

The only way the government knows how to operate is to borrow again to repay an old debt and at an increased interest rate at that. The interest rate the government is going to pay on that amount of $475 million is higher than before. And it is always the financial system which benefits and it is always the people who pay.

That reminds me somewhat of the story about an evening performance in which participated a kind of magician, an extraordinarily strong man, displaying feats of strength before his audience. At one point, he takes a lemon, holds it in his hand and squeezes it above a glass to fill it half-full. The strong man in question then turns to his audience, and offers the sum of $100 to whoever can get another drop of juice out of that lemon. A small man comes forward, steps on the platform, puts the lemon in question above an empty glass, squeezes it again and gets out half a glass of juice. Astonished, the strong man asks him: But who are you, sir? And the latter answers: I am the Minister of Finance at Ottawa. We know how to squeeze lemons.

At this time, the minister gives exactly the same treatment to the Canadian people.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak much longer about that matter. However, we strongly object to the interest rate being raised to 7¼ per cent and we will support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) to keep it at 6 per cent. The Minister of Finance will waste his time if he tries to sell us that the banks will stop lending money if they can only do it at 6 per cent. The banks would do it at 5 per cent if the minister told them: "The interest rate is 5 per cent." The banks would also do it at 3 per cent if the minister told them: "It is 3 per cent". The banks would even lend money at the administrative rate, plus a reasonable profit. But in the banking field they do not look for a reasonable profit but for an exorbitant profit.

As stated yesterday by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), the skyscrapers the banks are building in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver or Winnipeg have not been paid by the finance companies or financed by companies such as the Trader's Finance Corporation or Industrial Acceptance Corporation. No. They are financed with the money or the interest taken out of the pockets of the Canadian people, which constitute a profit for these chartered banks that have virtually not invested any money in that organization.

Mr. Chairman, the accrued interest enables them to take more money out of the pockets of Canadians, to deprive those who are building Canada, for the benefit of those who are exacting their pound of flesh. That is why we object to the increase in the interest rate and support wholeheartedly the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden).

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support also the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosthern in order to maintain the interest rate at 6 per cent.

I would like to use the answer given by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) himself, to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, on Monday, February 6, 1967. As recorded in the proceedings and evidence of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, volume 43, page 3012, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) the Minister of Finance and Receiver General said:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans.

Now then, Mr. Chairman, whenever banks make loans, they create credit. According to the very statement of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, what banks lend is money they create. Now if the banks lend money they create, that money does not cost them anything. If a bank creates $100 and that $100 does not cost it anything and if it charges a 6 per cent interest, it makes a net profit of 6 per cent, since that money does not cost it anything. It does not cost the bank anything, since it is money it creates. The Minister of Finance and Receiver General admitted that himself and I will read his answer once more:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans.

It is credit creation and the banks lend money they create. Therefore, that money does not cost them anything.

Let us see what happens in the case of trust companies, savings banks or caisse populaires. Well, conditions are entirely different. When the caisse populaire wishes to lend money, it must first of all have a deposit. It pays an interest on such a deposit, then it lends it at 6½ or 7 per cent interest. And it is only the spread between the two that represents its profit. On the other hand, whenever the chartered bank lends money at 6 per cent, it is the whole 6 per cent which constitutes its profit, since it is money it creates, as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General admitted himself before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. In fact, he said this:

The process of credit creation is a familiar one. The banks make loans.

Banks grant loans and the minister admits that in granting loans, they create money. Therefore, they lend credit and money which does not exist, and this costs them nothing but they make a 6 per cent profit.

No other organization in Canada or in the world can do the same. The caisse populaire charges 7 per cent interest because it starts by giving 4 per cent to its depositors, while the chartered bank creates money to lend it; it does not pay interest on the money it lends. That makes all the difference in the world. And this is the reason why I find that this idea of allowing banks to increase the interest rate, while allowing them in advance to create the money lent, is an abuse on the part of the Minister of Finance. He is giving to the banks too many privileges.

There is another argument in favour of the 6 per cent interest. At present, under section 91 of the act, the situation has become more complicated. According to section 91, the interest rate is established at 1¾ per cent, plus the average of the market-yield on short term bonds of Canada. And that rate is computed quarterly for a period of three months.

That amounts to saying, Mr. Chairman, that every three months, that is on December 31, March 31, June 31 and September 31, after working out their computations, the banks may change and vary the interest rate charged to their customers.

• (9:20 p.m.)

In that case, the citizen who deals with the banks will never have a chance to know what rate of interest the banks charge unless he inquires once every three months.

This will bring the following disadvantages: just before each new trimester, should the banks find out that the average yield of government bonds has increased substantially during the preceding quarterly period and that this will enable them to raise their interest rate for the next one, they will stop granting loans for the rest of this period and await the next one, where the interest rates will be higher. This means that for some seven, eight or 10 days, banks will arrange the restriction on credit so as to draw a better profit on the credit created at the beginning of the next three-month period.

This will also mean, Mr. Chairman, that the banks will no longer be interested in giving loans for a longer term than three months because, if the market were to improve or if the interest rates were to increase in the following three months, all the money lent before this period would bring in less than money lent after these three months.

And if the banks decide that they had better not make loans for a longer term than three months, in order to benefit from increases in the interest rate every three months, they will then reject a whole category of loans, such as mortgage loans, loans to finance the purchase of furniture, and so on.

Now, we are also told, Mr. Chairman, that when government bonds have reached the 4½ per cent level, for a three-month period, restrictions will be removed and banks will then be free to make loans at any rate of interest.

That aspect had not escaped the Minister of Finance when he introduced this bill nine or ten months ago, at a time when rates were very high. Today, banks seem to lower deliberately their rates in an effort to bring back the average yield of short-term government bonds to 4½ per cent so that the ceiling on interest rates may be removed.

But on the day—and it might come soon—when the average return on government bonds stands at 4½ per cent, then the limits on the interest rate will be abolished and the banks will be able to make loans at whatever rate they choose, 4, 8, 9 per cent.

That is why I say that various methods should not be used to calculate the interest rate for banks; it should be a fixed rate and 6 per cent seems reasonable in view of present market conditions. That is why we will support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden). I support it not because I agree with the rate of 6 per cent or because I find it reasonable, but because I prefer to see the banks kept to a fixed interest rate rather than allowed to increase or decrease it as clause 91 enables them to do.

Only, I think that even at 6 per cent, it is an unreasonable charge for the banks on the money that they create. It might be a reasonable rate on the money they have on deposit, but not on the money they create, and I think there will be an amendment about it, later, upon which I shall also express my opinion.

In regard to the present amendment, after what I have just said, I think that parliament would not act cleverly if it left the banks the privilege of varying the interest rate as they wished, and that it is preferable to determine this interest rate once and for all. This, I think, will be the purpose of the amendment presented by the hon. member for Rosthern, and therefore, I shall second it.

[English]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two on this amendment. I would recommend it to all members of parliament who are interested in retaining a reasonable level of interest at which persons can borrow money. I would also ask those interested in the borrowing of money by the average person to consider several propositions which I shall put forward. It seems to me that with regard to short term borrowing that now takes place under the Bank Act, namely at 6 per cent interest, we have found the government reluctant to make the act effective. In a number of ways we have found that the banks are not lending money at 6 per cent but in most cases at a very much higher rate of interest. It is therefore surprising to me that the committee should agree to allow even short term borrowings from the bank to be subject to an interest rate beyond 6 per cent.

In my opinion it was a fallacy when we enacted legislation to subject overdrafts and the right to borrow from the bank to an interest rate of 6 per cent without a provision for premiums and subsidies being paid on that 6 per cent. It seems to me that we really changed the interest rate without changing the law. I was surprised to go into a bank and to find the bank manager, when I asked if I could borrow money at 6 per cent for a specific purpose, say, "No, that is not the rate we get." I asked him whether it was not true that, the bank rate being set at 6 per cent, he would have to charge only 6 per cent. He said, "No. I will tell you what the rates are for all the banks." He pulled out from his desk a slip of paper and indicated to me what the rate would be at every bank at that particular time. This rate changed from week to week. He could tell me whether there was any advantage in borrowing money from the Bank of Nova Scotia under the small loans legislation, whether it was wise to borrow from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, or whether I should go across the road to the Royal Bank. I found that in no case were they talking about loans with an interest rate of 6 per cent.

In my opinion the 6 per cent loan legislation has not been in effect for probably a long time. I think it is safe to say that all the banks have found ways of getting around the 6 per cent interest charge, and they will probably continue to do so. For the government to get pushed into the position where it cannot enforce the legislation and has to allow big business to dominate the legislation of this nation, and is not able to amend the legislation to provide a ceiling of 6 per cent on certain types of borrowings from the banks, seems to me to be an odd position for a government to find itself in.

I have listened to this business about the banks being poor. I would suggest that the banks are certainly not poor. I know of one case where I was very concerned about the difficulties in which a finance company might find itself. I found that this finance company, if it ever went bankrupt, would take with it two of the major banks of Canada. The banks are lending money to the finance companies and the finance companies are lending that money at 28 per cent or 29 per cent interest. The banks own the finance companies. Therefore, in effect the banks supply the money to the finance companies and there is no money left at an interest rate of 6 per cent. Why should there be? Why should there be any money at 7 per cent for a farmer who wants to borrow when his collateral is not sufficient to cover the loan? The banks do not want to take any risk, and therefore there will not be any money available to the farmer even at an interest rate of 7¼ per cent. What bank will lend money on a federally guaranteed bank loan at 5 per cent for farm improvement? The bank manager would be fired if he lent money at 5 per cent when he could obtain an interest rate of 10 per cent on it through one of the finance companies. Any bank manager would be in trouble if he made loans of any size without taking full advantage of the money market.

I think the government should be in a position to come before parliament to enact legislation that would provide money to those who need short term loans with a 6 per cent ceiling of interest. I refer to the chartered banks of Canada. I believe we should make an exception with respect to mortgage money, because mortgage money has not been available for some time, and will not be available in the future, at an interest rate of 6 per cent. Probably an interest rate ceiling of 8 per cent on first mortgages would provide a reasonable return for loans made in this respect. I think there are many banks and many insurance companies that would get back into the housing field and eliminate the difficulty in which the government finds itself in raising mortgage money for housing. I believe, too, that the interest rate on consumer loans covered by collateral should be limited by the government to 12 per cent. No one imagines that the loans that are made by the finance companies are going to be made at 12 per cent. I believe if the banks were allowed to charge 12 per cent on chattel mortgages they would be able to cut immediately into the small loans business of the finance companies. This would eliminate what no one can doubt is profiteering and gangsterism or stealing of money from people who cannot afford to borrow from other institutions. These finance companies charge 25 per cent interest and all the while hang on to the kitchen sink or the refrigerator in order to see that they get their money.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, when the minister raises the interest rate to 7¼ per cent he is giving in to the banks. Every time I feel that the banks may be hard up I take a look at the new buildings they are constructing; I take a look at their expansion. I should like to be smart enough to be able to examine the financial structure of the banks and their relationship to other financial institutions, including the hundreds of insurance companies they are financing. I suggest that if one were sufficiently competent to make this examination he would find a close relationship between the directorates of finance companies, banks and probably 50 other companies. These companies in fact control the Liberal government, control this parliament and control the financial institutions of this country. They make it impossible for us to pass legislation that will allow the little guy to go into the financial market and borrow money at a reasonable rate, which will enable him to repay his loan in 20 years without increasing the amount of the original loan by 100 per cent.

If the average worker earning $3,000 or $5,000 buys a home for $25,000 today even at the rate of interest Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation charges, that house does not cost $25,000 but $60,000 by the time he repays the loan. I suggest it is bad business for any worker to go into debt to that extent. This does not represent 25 per cent of his income; it represents all of his income for the rest of his life. It is my opinion that members of parliament, if they are really representing the majority of the people of this country, if they do not represent the financial institutions and if they do not recall who made financial contributions to their election campaigns, are surely going to provide banking institutions that will allow people to borrow mortgage money at a reasonable rate of interest. This should be done, even if the government itself has to get into the banking field as some members have suggested. I suggest that members who think they are going to bring down the cost of living by sitting in judgment when prices go up, and saying it is the fault of this one or that one, should take a close look at this government's action in increasing the interest rate by 1¼ per cent.

The provisions of this bill uphold the unfairness, the dishonesty that has been taking place in banking institutions. A businessman may borrow $50,000 but he has to put $10,000 in an account and continue to pay on the $50,000. The bank will use that $10,000, so the borrower really only gets $40,000. The interest rate may be 6 per cent, but if anybody is smart enough to calculate how much interest that borrower really pays, then I feel we should think about that. Surely, in this country we can make a division between the risk borrowing that the banks had to undertake in the past when they went into the mortgage field so deeply. For instance, a few years ago the federal government had entered the mortgage field to such an extent that 40 per cent of the housing constructed in this country was constructed under federal loans. The government got themselves out of that field, but they were not replaced by lenders in the private sector. I am sure that the 7¼ per cent is not going to provide this type of lending. Surely, we are going to have to take a look at some of the things that will permit us to arrange our financial institutions in such a way that people can make short term loans at 6 per cent, which will mean more than doubling the amount of the loan in 20 years, and at the same time allow these financial institutions to make a profit.

I think we should give consideration to some of the other types of banking in which our banks should indulge, but which are not occurring now. Does the Minister of Finance never look at himself at night in the mirror, when he has returned from a walk downtown where he has seen these trust companies erecting new buildings one after another? Does he never wonder what he is doing which is permitting these companies to construct these buildings? There are so many trust companies downtown that they will give you a piece of silverware if you make a deposit, or they will give you a set of coins. Most of the buildings on Sparks Street today are owned by trust companies that were unheard of 10 or 12 years ago. These buildings have been erected with the money the companies have obtained from people who desired loans. The money that was lent was borrowed from the banks. I am sure that the directors of the trust companies are not unrelated to the directors of the banks. It is not difficult to transfer money from one place to another, and then lend it out at twice what it cost you.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the people of this country are going to be looking at this legislation and wondering what happened to the members of parliament who failed to give any protection to the little person who has to enter the mortgage field. I am sure those people are going to find this legislation wanting in protection for the borrower, under ideal conditions, that is if he really did not need the money badly but was going to substitute it for his assets and repay it at 6 per cent interest. We know this type of borrowing is very limited, but people should be able to borrow under these circumstances when the need arises without having to pay the higher rate of interest which we are setting by the passage of this bill.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

• (9:40 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Nasserden) negatived: Yeas, 38; nays, 54.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I indicated that I would be moving an amendment to clause 91. The amendment is as follows:

That Bill C-222, an act respecting banks and banking be amended by striking out lines 3 to 18 inclusive on page 79 thereof and by substituting therefor the following:

"or advance referred to in subsection (2) is,

(a) for any part of the interest period ending on the thirty-first day of March, 1967, 6 per cent; and

(b) for any part of an interest period commencing on or after the first day of April, 1967, one and three quarters per cent plus the average of the market-yield on short-term bonds of Canada for all Wednesdays in the averaging period immediately preceding such interest period, calculated to the nearest one quarter of one per cent or, if the result would be equidistant from two multiples of one quarter of one per cent, to that multiple thereof that is the lower."

Mr. Chairman, this was the amendment which was brought forward by the Minister of Finance when he introduced the bill in July 1966. Through this amendment the minister persuaded many members of his party to reach his compromise position. A great deal of pressure was put on the minister to lift the ceiling completely, and this was the formula that he devised to overcome the difficulties within his party. We have seen the fluctuations of the interest rates from July 1966 until the present time. The hon. member for Acadia had attempted to quote the rates on government bonds. However, he was quoting the rates on long term government bonds rather than on short term government bonds. At present the rates on short term government bonds are 4.9 per cent. If you were to add $1\frac{3}{4}$ per cent, the rate would be approximately $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. We must be realistic with regard to the interest rate. This was the proposition which the Minister of Finance advanced at the time he introduced the bill. He indicated that it was necessary so as to improve the competitive position of the banks in the business world. Their plea was that the rate did not meet the demands of the business world. We have found that the rate of 6 per cent was not being applied by the banks through the use of services and charges that were being imposed.

All I am asking is that the minister revert to the original position which he took in July, 1966 and give his formula a chance to be tested and applied. Let me say again that we should not bind ourselves to a decennial revision, but that we should review the situation in one or two years time.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should have some explanation of the amendment that has been proposed. As the hon. member for Broadview has just said, the government introduced the clause in the form that he has now recommended as an amendment to the report of the committee. When the bill was before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs there was a long discussion about the formula. At that time I said—and I know hon. members will be able to verify this—that I did not think this was a matter of vital importance and that I was not pressing for any amendment, but that if the purpose of the legislation was to move towards freedom, that is to provide for a transitional period followed by complete freedom—which was certainly the purpose that the government had in mind in introducing the legislation—then I thought there was a good deal to be said for varying somewhat the formula that had been put forward in the original bill.

One of the hon. members has quoted the remarks which I made at that time when I said that the ceiling could drop from $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent to $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent and that I had some concern about this. The reason I had concern about it was that we could probably get ourselves into the farcical situation that at the outset the ceiling would be set at $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent, it would then decline to $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent and then be removed completely, so that we would have this quite useless fluctuation in the ceiling when the whole purpose of the exercise was to provide a transitional period and then move to freedom. That was the context in which I made this explanation, as the hon. member who drew attention to it will confirm.

On the whole I am inclined to believe that the variation of the ceiling formula proposed by the committee is superior. This was not my particular formula; it was worked out by the committee acting jointly. The original questions were raised, I believe, by the hon. member for Regina City or by another member of the Conservative party who participated very actively in the committee. I believe the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands recognized the nature of the problem, even if he did not support the amendment—

Mr. Douglas: He opposed it.

Mr. Sharp: Although he never said what he would do.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I understood the hon. member to have stated that he asked the committee chairman to record his opposition to that amendment. I state this for the record.

Mr. Sharp: It really does not matter what position the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands took, but I do think he recognizes the anomaly if the formula were to work in the manner I have described. I wish to remind the committee that it was the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands who did something very unusual in this house. He admitted that he had been persuaded by some of the discussions that had taken place in the house to change his mind about the ceiling. Let me again quote to the house his words on second reading when he said: "There are compelling arguments for the removal of the 6 per cent limit". I believe this was the spirit in which that hon. member worked in the committee. He took an objective, non-partisan view, and for this I give him full credit. I believe that he continued to take that position even in relation to the formula for the ceiling.

Briefly, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it would be in the interest of the borrower and it would be in the interest of an orderly transition to freedom, which has been so strongly recommended by all of those who have made a thorough study of the situation, if we were to adopt the committee's report.

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to say a word or two on this matter. I am particularly interested in what the minister has just said. In essence this amendment is one I had suggested ought to be moved. It allows for a short transitional period.

Perhaps, by oversight, the minister completely dodged the issue I raised about a floating interest rate on short-term loans. I want to know, everybody in Canada wants to know, where we are going. We are talking about interest rates; where are we going with interest rates. If the minister expects the bill to be accepted, then the transitional rate of 7¼ per cent has to be accepted. What will be the position, ultimately, if the 7¼ per cent rate is transitional? One can only assume that the final rate will be close to 8 per cent. I cannot believe that the Canadian public will agree to this 8 per cent interest figure.

In spite of everything, banks are not doing that badly that we have to allow for this great increase in the interest rate.

Miss LaMarsh: Now, now; the hon. member will never make a leader.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I heard a comment from the Secretary of State, but I did not hear it all. If she wants to make a speech she is welcome to. I have found her easy to get along with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): She is prepared to compromise on definitions.

Miss LaMarsh: Now, now.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The question confronting the Canadian population is, where are we going. We have seen increased taxes, increased interest rates affecting home construction. We have seen this government coming in with a major breakthrough, providing for increased interest rates on farm loans. Even the Farm Credit Corporation has increased its rates over the 6 per cent figure. One can only assume that this government is a high interest government. High interest rates affect the cost of production.

Some years ago, and I speak of 1961, 1962 and 1963, we found ourselves in an advantageous position because of the devaluation of the dollar, which gave us an 8 cent advantage in world trade. The governor of the Bank of Canada in his annual report sounds the warning that if we are not careful we shall cause increases in costs to take place. I do not know the exact page on which he states this, but he says that we must be careful, that we have overloaded our society because costs are increasing more rapidly than in the United States. The United States, it must be remembered, is fighting a war in Viet Nam.

Is there any justification for the Minister of Finance to say that the committee in a genial mood agreed that in the light of everything the interest rate of 7¼ per cent was justified. Is it justified in the light of government spending, increased interest rates affecting house construction, farm loans, even farm syndicate loans, to say nothing of increasing the sales tax from 11 per cent to 12 per cent for manufactured goods?

I point out that the 12 per cent tax on manufactured goods was applied at the place of origin of the goods. Talking to builders, and contractors all across Canada before the price spreads committee, I learned that the 12 per cent, when multiplied through the various trades, ended up by being 25 per cent. One can only assume that this government is blind to what it is doing to the Canadian public. It is a high interest government, a high cost government blind to inflation.

It is all well and good for the minister to say that the committee reached the agreeable conclusion that the 7½ per cent interest rate is justified. It is not justified. The committee's job is to solicit evidence, not to reach conclusions. We, as legislators in this house send various members from each party to a committee; that committee solicits and hears evidence. That evidence must be made available; but any judgment shall be reached through debate in the House of Commons, where everybody—those who have served on the committee and those who have not—can participate in the discussion.

May I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, may I ask that you rise and report progress for the purpose of asking the committee to continue sitting for another hour?

Progress reported.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the house to continue sitting for another hour, to get on with the bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to sitting for another hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-222 respecting banks and banking—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak for only another few minutes. I intend to make clear to the Canadian taxpayer, the Canadian voter and to the Canadian public generally just how badly the Minister of Finance and his cabinet colleagues are disregarding the facts affecting our economic society.

Here we have an important piece of legislation; we have an amendment which would, in effect, provide for the 1¾ per cent addition formula. This would affect interest rates from April of 1967 on. We see, looking at the Wood-Gundy Securities Limited report for the week ending March 17, 1967, that the average interest rate yield on government bonds ranged from 4 per cent to 4.7 per cent. Averaging this out, as the minister did on page 14057 of Hansard for last Thursday, we can come to the conclusion that the average short term interest rate today in essence is 4.3 per cent. Taking the 1.75 per cent and adding it to that we arrive at a 6.05 per cent interest rate.

There is absolutely no justification for the 7¼ per cent rate for the interim period. I listened to the hon. member for Broadview on the amendment he sought to move. His is almost the same amendment I had intended moving. I listened carefully to the minister, and he at no time said that the 7¼ per cent rate was too high. He said it was the interim rate, and that once we are working on the flexible formula things will take care of themselves. I can only reach the conclusion that once we work under the flexible formula of 1¾ per cent plus the short term bond rate that the rate in Canada will eventually reach 8 per cent.

If this is so, the minister should serve notice that he recognizes the course he is taking and is prepared to support it. First, this government has increased taxes. Second, it has increased the cost of housing construction. Third, since it came to office it has increased the cost of farm loans as well as interest rates generally to farm syndicates. Fourth, it has increased rates under the National Housing Act. Fifth, it has imposed an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and manufacturing machinery. The last budget increased this to 12 per cent. Remember, this tax is placed on the original goods, so it amounts to a 25 per cent tax to the consumer, as we were told by an Edmonton contractor who gave evidence before the committee which is studying the question of the cost of living to the Canadian consumer. This man had been responsible for the erection of a huge building. Forty trades worked on it and each added the 12 per cent sales tax to its cost before counting profit. This is the practice in the industry. So the eventual cost of the sales tax to the consumer is 25 per cent.

If the minister continues to stumble along, refusing to accept amendments such as this, I can only conclude that government policy today is one of high interest, high taxes and high costs. I believe this needs to be repeated again and again because the minister seems unaware of what he is doing to the Canadian people. Here we have an amendment which accepts the minister's formula of one and three quarters plus the market yield on short term bonds. In essence this would provide the banks with an adjustable interest rate.

When the interest rate goes above 5 per cent clause 91(9) will come into effect and in essence we will have a 6.75 per cent interest rate. By right today the interest rate would be 6.05 per cent if the amendment were accepted. But the minister says he cannot accept it even though, as recorded at page 3505 of committee proceedings No. 51, he expressed concern about this provision. Since then he has returned to this dogmatic position that high interest rates are necessary. He is not even paying attention to his own words, as recorded at page 14057 of Hansard, that there has been a drop from 5.20 per cent to 4.30 per cent.

The minister has become blind to the effect of high interest rates on our society. The governor of the Bank of Canada has warned us, in his 1966 annual report, about pricing ourselves out of world markets. I urge all hon. members to support this amendment. I urge government backbenchers to protect their own cabinet ministers. If they vote for this amendment they may stay in office a little longer. If this provision stands I hope the Canadian public will say, "Enough, enough. Let us go no further with a high interest rate government".

Mr. Chrétien: Is the hon. member aware that the committee was persuaded to do this by the hon. member for Regina City?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not prepared to admit that. The minister appeared before the committee and his evidence appears, starting at page 3502 of volume 51, continuing on to page 3503, and it was his suggestion that 7¼ per cent be the interest rate for the interim period.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I do not wish to delay a vote on this amendment. I agree with it, but would like to express my views on it, particularly the first part which aims to retain an interest rate ceiling of 6 per cent.

• (10:10 p.m.)

I have listened attentively today to some of the discussion, particularly in respect of clause 91, and I cannot help but agree with most of the hon. members who spoke. I have made a note of some of the arguments brought forth by the hon. member for Acadia, and particularly by the hon. member for Timiskaming who made some true statements concerning the effect of the interest rate and who also gave a pretty clear picture of the banking situation which prevails across the country at the present time.

I am strongly opposed to the raising of the interest rate. When the Minister of Finance brought in his mini-budget I remember the intention at that time was that it would curb inflation and the rising cost of living in this country. I cannot understand how the minister can turn on the gas with his left hand, and then with his other hand turn another valve. This is the way in which he has been operating. I remember when he brought in his mini-budget the minister was talking about the boom, and that we must slow down but must not break the boom. With one breath he says one thing and then with another breath he says something else. The minister seems to have this ability, to switch from one side to the other.

I told the minister at that time that when the appropriate measure came before us, if he intended to place restrictions across the board he should not forget to take action to lower the cost of living. We are not stupid; we know that the entire production of Canada is financed through the banks, if not directly at least indirectly. The interest rate is reflected in the cost of production and in the retail price, no matter how we look at it. The minister may attempt to tell me a different story, but he cannot fool me. If he should try to make the people believe a different story, then I do not believe he would be fooling them either. Whenever the interest rate increases, the cost of production increases.

The representatives of the banks say that if they had an interest rate which would be more competitive they could lend more money. This is utter nonsense. Representatives of the banks have appeared before the committee and have spoken to different members. When the officials of the Laurentide Bank appeared they told us their bank would be a bank for the small loan borrower. They said that they wanted to help the smaller borrower. They said that the other banks are not helping these people. At that time I told them that the only reason they appeared before members of parliament to ask for a charter for this Laurentide Bank was that they wanted to obtain more credit for the Laurentide financing operations. That was the reason they appeared before us with the same singsong we hear from every chartered bank.

I do not believe for a moment that by increasing the interest rate to 7¼ per cent we will be helping anybody in this country. This will place the banks in a better bargaining position among the other financial institutions. We are not by act of parliament at this time permitting the mortgage companies, the trust companies, the finance companies or the insurance companies to increase their rates. What we are doing is allowing the banks to put themselves in a position of saying to these various lending institutions that they can now get 7¼ per cent on small loans. This will mean they can withhold more money from these other financial institutions. Obviously they would sooner make 100 loans of $1,000 at the higher interest rate than one loan of $100,000 to one of these financial institutions. They are then in a position where they can tell these companies to look elsewhere for their money.

I fail to understand why members of parliament do not open their eyes to this situation. They should pay a little more attention to what is happening. The chartered banks at this time are the only financial institutions in Canada permitted to create credit in any real form. Other financial institutions must borrow their money from the chartered banks.

The presently proposed increase in interest rates will not in any way assist those individuals who are forced to make small loans. If anyone is not convinced of the fact, let me refer him to what has happened in respect of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That corporation began making loans at a rate of interest which varied between 2¼ per cent and 3 per cent. It is still making a profit because it is still in operation.

I should also like to know why chartered banks do not have to pay a similar initial interest rate on the money they lend. They are creating credit with the use of money for which they are not paying as high an interest rate. Why should the chartered banks be empowered to make loans by using money for which they pay less? If the banks are poor they should come forward and say they are starving, and require this increase in interest rates in order that they will be able to make loans.

The passage of this measure will put chartered banks in the position of refusing to provide money to these small lending companies. They will indicate to these companies that they also can make small loans at a higher rate of interest than they would receive on the money they could provide to these companies. Perhaps it would be wrong to suggest that this is a form of blackmail, because the banks are being given the authority to do this by an act of parliament. Surely the net result of this increase will be an increase in the cost of living in this country, just as the 11 per cent sales tax on construction materials has caused an increase in the cost of living.

• (10:20 p.m.)

We have seen interest rates rise all across the country. To now open the back door to all financial institutions to raise their interest rates will cause a general increase in the rate charged by all financial institutions across Canada. What will happen to the cost of living? If you raise the interest rate 1 per cent at the production level, when it comes to the retail level that rate has increased to 5 per cent. If you do that twice, you are increasing the rate to 10 per cent. Will this help the consumers of this country? Will we assist in reducing the rising cost of living if we increase the interest rate on loans from the banks?

This government certainly has a tendency to cause difficulty. The only group this provision will help will be the banks, period. We may say we are entering a more realistic financial situation and our financial institutions will be more competitive with each other; but you cannot separate the directors of the chartered banks from the directors of our finance companies. You find that if you look at the directors of the banks and those of the finance companies, they are sometimes the same guys. If you go to the directors of mortgage companies, you find the same guys. This also applies to some of the major producing companies of Canada. You see the same faces in these fields.

Some figures were given to us in the committee in this respect. We learned that those who were directors of the banks and were also directors of these companies were concerned with a total of about 30 per cent of bank loans. One realizes what a fantastic amount of money this involves when in a friendly, family sort of way the same people are involved in the same interests. I do not have to go too far to illustrate my point. You can go across to the other place and find out how many of our distinguished senators are sitting on the boards of major financial institutions and companies in this country. You can look at those in the House of Commons. There is one cabinet minister who was a director of several companies. I remember that when he was appointed a cabinet minister he was a director of many companies. He was a good businessman, and I have nothing against him for this. But I realize that his companies involved a turnover of $14½ billion in one year in production. This is approximately one quarter of the total Canadian production.

He is a very prosperous man. He exercised a great deal of control and had a great deal of say-so in these companies. He had much more say-so in this respect than the small individual who has to borrow from this type of company. Often a bank refuses a small loan to an individual because the work in which he is engaged does not produce enough money and a great many guarantees are involved in giving him a loan. Often the bank manager says to this person, "I do not think we can make this loan; go and see the finance company". The loan at 6 per cent interest is refused by the bank. This person goes to the finance company and borrows the money he needs at an interest rate of 24 per cent, 27 per cent, 28 per cent or 30 per cent. Depending upon whether he has a little difficulty in meeting one or two payments, the interest rate may reach 35 per cent before the loan is paid off. How is it that his name is good when the interest rate involved is 35 per cent, when it was not good when the interest was 6 per cent? I will tell the committee why. It is because the bank was not interested in collecting 6 per cent interest. They knew damned well they would collect 35 per cent the safe way, because these finance companies have the same directors sitting on their boards as the banks. If the minister and his colleagues are not afraid to admit this, I am sure they would see the truth in what I have said.

This is one of the most important pieces of legislation to go through this parliament for years. This legislation has to be revised every 10 years, and now is the time to consider it seriously and not after it has been passed. I agree entirely that the amendment before the house, if it will only curb the rising cost of living that now faces this country, is well worth while. But I do not for a single moment believe that if we were to increase the ceiling of the rate of interest to 7¼ per cent we would help solve this situation. I do not believe that passing this legislation would in any way assist the individual who wishes to borrow a small amount of money. It will just give the chartered banks a better bargaining position with these big financial institutions.

The banks are not suffering. One just has to get out and see where the banks stand with regard to new buildings. I think many of the Canadian people are faced with more serious financial crises than the banks will ever have. If the banks ever reach a period of real hardship, there will be a lot more hollering on the part of the public than we are hearing now. They are in good financial condition at the present time. The banks control the whole system, and they not only control the system but they control the government. We can see this from the legislation the government is bringing before the house.

We saw the Minister of Finance introduce his mini-budget, and he was just about in tears. It was the only time I did not see a smile on his face. He was begging the Canadian people to be understanding and to make every effort to save the Canadian economy, to stop the boom before there was a bust. The people were asked to tighten their belts in order to cut down the cost of living. The minister came in with taxes here and taxes there. We now have the bank bill before the committee, and what is the minister doing to reduce the cost of living? He is permitting the banks to increase the interest rate which will increase the cost of production in this country. It will affect everything. The minister does not speak, he just bows his head. One can only judge that the master has spoken and the servant has listened. If the minister wants to be a servant, then certainly I do not want to be a servant, and for this reason I will support the amendment.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Gilbert: I have only a few minutes in which to reply to the Minister of Finance, but we feel it is necessary in view of his remarks. He stated that primarily the formula he presented was for a transitional period. One of the big surprises he got was when he went to the committee, when he thought the formula probably would still apply. However, he found that the persuasiveness of certain Progressive Conservative members placed him in a position where he could free the interest rate immediately. He took advantage of that position. This is the reason we have the amendment today which imposes a 7¼ per cent interest rate to the end of December, 1967.

In view of what is happening today with short term government bonds, it is obvious that at the end of December there will be no interest rate applying. The banks will have full freedom to determine the rate. This will mean that from now until the end of December we would have ceiling of 7¼ per cent, but after December the banks would be free to set the rate. The rates on business loans would range between 8 and 8¼ per cent, while on consumer loans the rate will probably increase from 12 per cent to 14 per cent. The rates on mortgages will probably be in the neighbourhood of 8½ and 8¾ per cent.

• (10:30 p.m.)

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands recognized the situation and took a realistic approach. We agreed with that. However, the approach the minister has taken, by almost immediately freeing the interest rate at the end of the year, is not an approach with which we could agree. This is the reason why we are asking the minister to revert to his original position of July, 1966 when he so ably persuaded the members of his party to accept this formula. We are prepared to accept it for a period of two years after which it would be reviewed. At that time we would be able to bring forward a more positive policy with regard to interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Gilbert) negatived: Yeas, 24; nays, 59.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, at this stage in the consideration of Bill No. C-222, we still have something to say. We have an amendment to move on the interest rate.

A while ago we had the pleasure of voting with the Conservatives to maintain the interest rate at 6 per cent. Unfortunately, I think some Conservatives who are in cahoots with big finance went into hiding and did not vote. That is why the amendment was defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is some joking in this house or whether people are serious. Had the Conservatives been serious, they would certainly have voted on this important bill.

They want the people to believe they are working for them, that they are on their side, but they are against them. We on this side of the house, Mr. Chairman, are with the people and we can certify we are with them. Whenever we move an amendment, we are here to vote, even if we are few in number. We are not in such great number as the Conservative members, but our amendments are moved with conviction and by true representatives of the people.

As regards this clause 91, it is felt that the profit margin and the stock increase are not sufficient, with an interest rate, the ceiling of which is set at 6 per cent. Now, if we remove the ceiling and if the rate of interest goes up to $7\frac{1}{4}$, 8, 9 and even 10 per cent, and perhaps up to 12 per cent, or if there is no ceiling at all, the bank shares at a $10 par value will certainly go up to $100 and even more. Dividends will perhaps go up from $4 to $5 per share, which will represent a profit of 50 or 60 per cent on $10 shares.

Then, where will the ambition of the financiers end, since they are already enjoying an exclusive privilege belonging to the parliament of Canada, which represents the people, and not only to bank presidents and directors and to their shareholders?

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Again, we would like to set the interest ceiling at more than 6 per cent on money created by means of guarantees from individual borrowers, companies, corporations, and federal, provincial and municipal governments.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I wish to bring forward an amendment to clause 91. When it comes to allowing chartered banks to lend banking credits at more than 6 per cent, do we not feel that this is going to result in a federal increase in the rate of interest? We asked all the financiers, all the bankers who appeared before the committee whether they did not feel the increase in the rate of interest would result in an increase in the cost of living and they answered: No. They also answered that more money had to be put into circulation, that it would be easier for the small industrialists or for the small wage-earners to have more money.

Therefore Mr. Chairman, when one knows that Canadian citizens are up to their ears in debt at present, when one knows that they can hardly borrow, that the credit of three quarters of the people is not good any more, because they are far too indebted, in brief when one knows that the majority of the people do not want to borrow any more, since they are sure that they will not be able to repay, such are the conditions our friends opposite are creating. With every means at their disposal, they protect high finance and high society at the expense of the people. They are working against the people and the people will become aware of it one fine day.

Mr. Caouette: Quite true.

Mr. Latulippe: This is the banks' main argument: they are asking for the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling on the interest rate so as to be able to compete with other financial institutions not subject to the same ceiling. Would it not be advisable, Mr. Chairman, to also set a ceiling for the other financial institutions, thus preventing at the same time an increase in the cost of living, in production costs and the rise of the whole economy?

The Minister of Finance resorts to this argument. He says it would be unfair to freeze the interest rate at 6 per cent if other institutions have the advantage of lending their money at higher rates. To my mind, that is not a valid argument. The duty and the responsibility of this parliament was to set a ceiling and to put all institutions on the same footing. That is what we should have done, but we did not do it. We did not face up to our responsibilities.

Gentlemen opposite, you have voted against your responsibilities. You have overlooked your responsibilities to the people in order once again to protect high finance, which already has everything, controls everything and exploits everything, and nobody can even breathe without its consent. You have forgotten that, hon. members opposite.

It is a known fact that the cost of an issue now totals from 10 to 20 per cent: the advertising, the sale, the printing. The capital is issued as new money and entered into the books of the chartered banks purchasing such bonds and the interest is paid out of taxes on the people and it is the system of eternal interest, debts and capital created by a stroke of the pen.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it is the responsibility of the state to differentiate between the two economic sectors—the private and the public sectors. And the major role is played particularly in the public sector. It is mostly in the public sector that the banks have the advantage of using their pen to create money. It is in the public sector that the various bonds of public bodies, the federal government as well as all other governments, provincial, municipal, school and parishes, are issued and it is through such bonds that the large financial institutions create credit and multiply credit with the ink in their pens.

That, Mr. Chairman, is fictitious money. That is money which should not be created by the financiers. That should be the responsibility of the Bank of Canada. In fact, it was the responsibility of our friends opposite and their Conservative neighbours to vote a moment ago to maintain the interest rate at 6 per cent. I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) went hiding because he is in collusion with high finance.

Mr. Chairman, we could still make important speeches. Take the case of the Cuban government. When they needed $2 billion to refinance their country's economy, they tried to secure money from the United States. They could not have it unless they were ready to pay 5, 5½ and 6 per cent. So they asked Russia and that country is now financing the Cuban government at an interest rate of 1 per cent. If the communists are able to finance different nations at a rate of 1 per cent, Canadians should be able to finance their institutions at a reasonable rate of interest and not at 7, 8, 10 or 15 per cent, in other words, at all sorts of rates.

• (10:40 p.m.)

It is unfair to the people to refuse to fix a 6 per cent ceiling on the interest rate. I think this is the greatest injustice ever witnessed by parliament, and it will have serious consequences.

Today, the people are beginning to know, to understand, in other words, to read between the lines. There are people who have known extreme poverty, who have been sabotaged by high finance, and who remember it, who remember the interest rate they had to pay and how they lost their property.

A great number of citizens are going bankrupt right now, because the present system is taking away from them their property, all they possess, is taking away from them the work of several generations. In fact the present system does not hold water, since it cannot operate otherwise than by elevating a group of citizens and bringing down another one.

There is another group that has to go bankrupt, because it has to reimburse money created with nothing and on which interest is required. In fact, they require the repayment of capital created with pen and ink; they require money from the Bank of Canada, they require actual money in return.

The present system does not hold water, and this is why we see bankruptcies of all kinds, people who are turned out on the street, on the road, people who lose all they have.

This is what the gentlemen opposite voted for. It is the situation with which we are familiar at the present time.

And there is talk of changing this situation. You would not change it for all the tea in China because of your ties with big business. I think a certain number of people among you are bank shareholders living off the interest paid on their capital. And that is why you do not want to change this situation. But tomorrow morning the people will ask that it be changed.

Why, Mr. Chairman, is dissatisfaction rife in Canada nowadays? Why are unions mushrooming out in every sectors? To try and organize structures to help their members make a living. These structures could have been established by the governments, but they did not assume their responsibilities, they did not set up the structures, and these unions have to unite, to organize and come before the government, and face the people who have these responsibilities and who did not want to assume them.

You have seen that happen today with the Farmers' Union. They came over here; they are all on the verge of bankruptcy. They are deeply in debt. Therefore, to help them out, lend them money at a higher rate of interest. Mr. Chairman, it is like throwing a drowning man an anchor to submerge him further instead of throwing him a life-saving jacket.

The people are being submerged further into debt by all kinds of financial schemes, by raising interest rates thereby increasing the over-all cost of living and depreciating the purchasing power of our currency in foreign countries, in all the countries of the world, thus placing Canada in an unfavourable position.

This financial system of ours does not hold water; it works in favour of a few financiers to the detriment of 99 per cent of the people, perhaps more.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, many reforms should be made, but the government failed to introduce them. As far as we are concerned, we moved many amendments, but you have voted them down. They would have opened the way to do so many things for the people; we could have helped the citizens to have a more decent living, to benefit from the present system, to take advantage of scientific progress, to get an education and improve themselves from all points of view. Alas, we cannot even develop our natural resources.

Our present financiers do not even bother to develop our natural resources, and we are forced to let our Canadian fellow countrymen beg on their knees for the Americans to come in and develop our public and private wealth, our natural resources, because we have no money. The federal, provincial, municipal governments as well as the school boards endeavour to tap the people's savings, but there is not a single cent left in our society.

When one wishes to create or expand industries, develop our natural resources, well, there is no more capital, because it has all been absorbed by the present system to pay interest to financiers, to pay interest on money that does not exist, on fictitious money.

This is our situation, Mr. Chairman. These are the fields where great improvements would be necessary. And you were not willing to assume your responsibilities, you, members opposite, and you, Conservatives, and even you, New Democrats. In fact, you voted against almost every amendment we moved and which would have meant so much for the people. You all protect high finance.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

I therefore move an amendment to maintain at 6 per cent the interest on private loans, and at 2 per cent, the rate on public loans, because government bonds do not cost anything to those gentlemen, the financiers. Citizens have to make sacrifices to pay interest, to maintain the present system which is so bad for society, for the citizens, for the families, and which prevents the development of Canada in every respect. Now, you should vote for this amendment because you refused to allow the Bank of Canada to take over the control of money and credit, to create the credit required to finance public undertakings. We ask financiers to take their responsibilities. We ask the government that the financiers be forced to deprive themselves a little and loan that money at cost. It is claimed that costs amount to a little over 1 per cent.

That is why we have set at 2 per cent the rate on the money which will be created to finance the provinces, the municipalities and the public bodies.

Mr. Chairman, I would very much like to see those who were elected to represent the citizens really and properly, assume their responsibilities so that every Canadian might live decently.

I know quite well this amendment will be defeated. On the other hand, I shall have had the satisfaction of moving it. I shall have had the satisfaction of saying that I work for those who elected me, for the people and not only for the financial interests. I am not against high finance: I even want to give it the right to live. But I also want it to allow the citizens to live.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): All those in favour of the amendment please rise.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Does the hon. member for Lapointe wish to rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on the amendment.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I have asked the house if it was ready for the question.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, when you took your seat, you asked the house if it was ready for the question. I got up and said. "Mr. Chairman", but the assistant clerk was directly in line between us at the time and you did not see me.

Mr. Chairman, I am not responsible for circumstances and I think that—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I will say to the hon. member for Lapointe that I have taken the necessary arrangements to hear hon. members. As for me, I am ready to hear you, but I do not think the committee is. Therefore, I will—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, is it the wish of the committee that we do not speak on the amendment? Pardon?

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): I will ask the hon. member for Lapointe to speak right now.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about this amendment. The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) suggests that while maintaining the interest rate at 6 per cent, on the loans made to a public body—namely the federal and provincial governments, municipalities and school boards—the banks should have a 2 per cent interest.

And this is justifiable, Mr. Chairman, since our present system, as the hon. Minister of Finance admitted according to my previous reference, the new money lent by the banks is simply created money. Since banks do not have to pay any interest on it, but draw some, they can lend this money at the rate of 2 per cent to the governments and still make a profit of 2 per cent.

If the amendment were carried, the banks could lend the money they have on deposit, at the rate of 6 per cent, and that portion of money they create, which represents the yearly advance of the Canadian economy, could be loaned at 2 per cent to the government only.

Mr. Chairman, was any thought given to all the savings that could thus be made in municipal, provincial and, indeed, federal budgets? For instance, when you think of the fact the federal government alone pays $1,280 million a year in interest, you can easily imagine what kind of savings it would make if it could get a 2 per cent interest rate, that is three times less than what it now pays. In fact, instead of paying $1,280 million interest per year, it would pay only $400 million, which would mean additional available funds of some $800 million each year. Those additional funds could be used for many more useful things than what it is now used for.

In this way, the government, for instance, could give back to the provinces part of the tax revenue, to enable them to develop the field of education. Such amounts could be spent on public works which would allow the hiring of the unemployed we now have. They could also be used to increase family allowances and old age security pensions. When you think of what $800 million per year means, you realize that it is an amount which could be of tremendous usefulness to the Canadian people, as the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) said a while ago. I think that measure would be a compromise between those who support the present system and those who advocate a new system of debt-free money. At least with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac, it would only be a reform of the present system and at that time, instead of interest-free loans by the Bank of Canada, the chartered banks would again continue to make loans and get an interest of 2 per cent—instead of not getting any at all—only when it comes to loans to public bodies.

If you stop to consider the savings it would mean for the federal, provincial and municipal governments, it would represent money available to the Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I want to support that amendment because I am convinced that if the house approves it the chartered banks might not benefit from it—although that will not make them poorer—but rather the 20 million Canadians.

The house can choose between the chartered banks and 20 million Canadians. By its vote, the house will indicate if it prefers to serve the chartered banks or 20 million Canadians.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I will vote for the amendment because I prefer to vote for the interest and the welfare of 20 million Canadians rather than for the chartered banks.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words in support of the amendment just moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe). As the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said earlier, what we are asking for, and what the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac is suggesting, is to maintain the interest rate at 6 per cent, in order to finance the private sector of the Canadian economy, and to establish at 2 per cent the interest rate in the public sector. This would enable the federal government, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards to finance their projects through loans obtained at 2 per cent.

As the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac was saying earlier, if it is true that a small country like Cuba can borrow millions at a 1 per cent interest rate from the Russian National Bank, it seems to me that the Minister of Finance and the government should take that fact into consideration.

Shall we wait, here, in Canada, until we have communism, when the banks shall be under state control as they are in Russia where all banks are now state property? Is it not possible, in a private enterprise régime to have an adequate financial system that would make it possible to finance the public sector at a lower interest rate than that we are now paying; in short, at an interest rate that would allow the country, the provinces, the municipalities and the school boards to finance themselves more easily?

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the government can bring the Canadian banks to their senses, and if they are reasonable enough, they should look around them and across the Iron Curtain. They will suffer tomorrow the consequences of their present attitude; if not in five years, then in ten years. If this ends in bloody revolution, the banks, the "controllers" of the economic blood of the nation will be responsible for it.

Mr. Chairman, it is time to take the necessary steps to have the Canadian public protected and respected. Therefore, I ask the members to second the amendment introduced by the member for Compton-Frontenac. It is a logical amendment intended to keep the interest rate at 6 per cent, in order to finance the private sector and to establish a 2 per cent rate to finance the public sector of the administration and Canadian development.

Mr. Clermont: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

This afternoon during consideration of clause 88 of Bill No. C-222, I called the attention of the Acting Chairman to the fact that the French and English texts were not in agreement with regard to subclause (5) (b) (i), and I asked him whether or not I should move an amendment. The Acting Chairman replied that it was not necessary, but I am now informed that it would be better to move an amendment. Accordingly, I ask for the indulgence of the house in order to move an amendment that will not give rise to any debate, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is it agreed that the French version of the bill should be amended to conform to the language of the English version?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I thank the house for bearing with me. This is the amendment I should like to move: that the word "three" appearing in line 45, sub-paragraph (i) paragraph (b) subsection 5 of clause 88 be replaced by the word "six", in compliance with the amendment made by the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

[English]

Mr. Clancy: I should like to have the amendment read in English. I do not speak French.

[Translation]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Clermont) moved that the word "three" appearing in line 45, sub-paragraph (i), paragraph (b) sub-section 5 of clause 88 be replaced by the word "six".

[English]

For the benefit of those who did not understand my speedy French, line 45 on page 79 of the French version, the numeral 3 is to be replaced by 6. Shall the amendment carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 92—Definitions.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken, I will only put a question to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp). Clause 92 (1) (a) reads as follows:

(a) "cost of borrowing" means, in relation to a loan or advance,
(i) the interest or discount thereon, and
(ii) any charges in connection therewith that are payable by the borrower to the bank or to any person—

Thus, the "cost of borrowing" includes first the interest and second the related charges. And subsection (4) reads as follows:

The minister may make regulations
(a) respecting the manner in which the cost of borrowing shall be disclosed to a borrower;
(b) respecting the manner of calculating the cost of borrowing;

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance and Receiver General what are his intentions in that field, not necessarily with respect to interest, since it has been defined in section 91, but especially with respect to charges on loans payable by the borrower to the bank and for which the minister has the power to establish regulations. Does the minister intend to restrict charges other than interest levied by banks? Has the minister already established a series of regulations and could he tell us what are his intentions in that connection?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: The function of this section is to disclose to the borrower the cost of borrowing, and it would be my intention to make regulations similar to those being made in the provinces so that there is available to the borrower a direct comparison of costs between the cost of borrowing money from a bank, the cost of borrowing from a finance company or from an acceptance company, and so on. I have not yet drafted these regulations. I can assure the house that they will be in conformity with the practice being followed by the provinces. Indeed, as the committee may know, in the province of Nova Scotia there has been great pressure to extend provincial regulations to the banks, and it was on the assurance that the banks would be required to follow a similar practice that no action has been taken against them.

• (11:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the minister, when setting up rules, to limit the loan charges that banks may require? Is it the intention of the minister to restrict these loan charges, beside the interest rates?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Chairman, this was solely for the purpose of disclosure.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister has mentioned the progressive legislation which has been adopted in Nova Scotia as well as in other provinces, although credit has not always been given to Nova Scotia. My question is simply whether the regulation under clause 92 (4) goes as far as to include advertising?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member asking whether I would go so far as to regulate the form of advertising or the cost of advertising? What is the hon. member's question?

Mr. McCleave: No, it relates to the method of advertising the interest rates or the cost of loans. Sometimes this is put in very general terms and the person applying for the loan may be led to think that the rate is lower than the one with which he is actually confronted, so that this is where the sales job is done on him. This point has been raised by several people in Nova Scotia and the suggestion has been made that the actual figures be used in advertising.

Mr. Sharp: Under paragraph (e) of subclause (4) I would have authority to do that, and I will bear this suggestion in mind. However the main purpose is to ensure that the borrower knows how much he is paying before he enters into the transaction.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, at the hearings before the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs the minister undertook to refer the regulations to the standing committee, after they had been passed by the governor in council. I should like to ask him whether he still intends to follow that undertaking.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am a man of my word, and if I said that I shall certainly carry it out. It is my recollection that I made such a commitment.

Clause 93 agreed to.

On clause 162—Coming into force.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of Transport to move amendments to this clause. These amendments arise out of the fact that this act is being approved at a much later date than we had originally intended. I would ask that the following motion be made:

That Bill C-222, an act respecting banks and banking be amended

(a) by striking out lines 29 to 32 inclusive, on page 108 of the bill and by substituting therefor the following:

Saving. "(2) This section shall come into force on the day that this act is assented to and section 6 shall come into force with respect to the banks to which the Bank Act, chapter 48 of the Statutes of Canada, 1953-54, applies, and section 6 of that act is repealed, on the coming into force of this section."; and

(b) by adding at the end of line 35 on page 108 of the bill the following:

"; and notwithstanding section 10 of An Act to Incorporate Bank of British Columbia and An Act to Incorporate Bank of Western Canada, respectively, sections 5 to 9 of those Acts, respectively, do not cease to have effect until section 54 of this Act comes into force".

Mr. Pickersgill: I do so move.

[Mr. McCleave.]

On clause 1—Short title

Mr. Nasserden: Clause 1, Mr. Chairman, deals with the title of the act. I suggest that the title ought to be "the fluctuating interest rates act—an act to abdicate the government's responsibility for monetary policy".

Fluctuating interest rates are not conducive to stability and the orderly development of this nation, its industrial and economic life. This measure introduces a new factor of instability into monetary policy. It robs the Minister of Finance of some of the powers he now has to control monetary policy and it surrenders to the banks part of the responsibility that should and must remain in the hands of the government, through the Minister of Finance.

Interest rates can now work at cross purposes with those of monetary policy. This is not a good nor a worthwhile development. In my opinion it cannot have any but undesirable effects; in extreme circumstances such a policy could have disastrous effects.

This measure as it stands is a monument to this government's careless abdication of its responsibilities. It is another indication of this government's lack of sound monetary policy.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time.

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Starr: Would Your Honour call the yeas and nays.

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we do not object to the motion for third reading being called tonight but we do think the house should take another moment or two to consider the importance of clause 91 of this bill. We regret that the committee of the whole was not prepared this evening to accept one or the other of two alternative proposals that were made. We feel that this bill has not yet dealt, as it should have, with the question of the interest rate.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: We feel that either the ceiling should have been maintained or that something rational should have been put in its place. To give the house an opportunity to consider once more the importance of the interest rate question to the people of Canada for the next ten years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That Bill C-222 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering clause 91 thereof.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the house ready for the main question?

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Huron rising for the purpose of announcing a pair?

Mr. McKinley: Yes, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Ballard: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Chairman, now that almost all the members are back in the house, I would not want to delay further the business of the house and prevent the passage of the bill. However, I should like to draw the attention of the house to clause 72 of Bill No. C-222, dealing with the reserves which the banks must maintain in the Bank of Canada in order to create more credit in the country.

This law, or this Bill No. C-222, will, when passed, remain in force for ten years, which is quite long. I think it is time for the house to come to a decision as to these bank reserves which we have allowed to decrease instead of increasing, thereby giving the chartered banks considerably greater powers than before.

I then move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) that Bill No. C-222 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house for the purpose of reconsidering clause 72 relating to bank reserves.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question on the amendment? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-223 respecting savings banks in the Province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Sharp: This bill parallels very closely the Bank Act which the house has just approved. In order to expedite its consideration I should like to say that I have two amendments to propose to clauses 26 and 46. The main amendment is to clause 46 and there is a consequential amendment to clause 26. These are in exactly the same form as the amendments made to the Bank Act. They relate to ownership and they provide, as was provided in the amendments to the Bank Act which were approved today, that no shareholder who owns more than 10 per cent of the shares of a bank may subscribe for any shares issued by that bank. This is the purport of the amendment to clause 46, and the amendment to clause 26 is the same as the consequential amendment which followed in the Bank Act.

I would point out to the committee that this bill was studied very carefully by the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs and it does not contain any principle different from those contained in the Bank Act. It simply applies those principles to the savings banks in Quebec which are under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Monteith: I agree with what the Minister of Finance has said but I am wondering what amendments he has to propose.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the only reason I did not ask that the amendments be made is that I was not sure how you wanted to proceed. These amendments are to be made to clauses 26 and 46. I would be happy to suggest that the other clauses be approved en bloc.

Mr. Monteith: I would second that suggestion.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that all clauses of Bill C-233, with the exception of clauses 1, 26 and 46 be carried en bloc?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 2 to 25 inclusive, 27 to 45 inclusive and 47 to 131 inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Sharp: I would appreciate it, Mr. Chairman, if you would call clause 46 first, where the substantive amendment is to be made.

On clause 46—Limit on shares held by non-residents.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of Transport to move:

That Bill C-223, an act respecting Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec, be amended

(a) by striking out lines 29 to 31, inclusive, on page 20 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"thereof;

(b) by any person if, at the time the share is subscribed for, the total number of shares of the capital stock of the bank held by such person and by other shareholders associated with him, if any, exceeds ten per cent of the total number of the issued and outstanding shares of such stock; or

(c) except as otherwise provided in subsection (5), in other circumstances where if the subscription"; and

(b) by striking out line 39 on page 20 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"(5) Subject to paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (4)".

Mr. Pickersgill: I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 26—Offer of shares of capital stock.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Transport, to make the following motion:

That Bill C-223, an act respecting Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec, be amended by striking out line 39 on page 9 of the bill, as reprinted, and by substituting therefor the following:

"by reason of paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (4)".

Mr. Pickersgill: I so move.

Amendment (Mr. Pickersgill) agreed to.

Clause as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, you should also call the schedules at the back of the act, which I suggest should also be approved en bloc.

Schedules A, B, C, and D agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises I would like on this occasion to express the thanks of the house, and in particular of the members of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, for the services performed for us over many years by Mr. Clayton Elderkin who is sitting in front of me this evening. Mr. Elderkin was formerly the inspector general of banks, from which position he retired a few months ago, and he consented to stay on with the department as a consultant in order to see these bills through the house and through the Senate, and I would like personally to thank him very much for his great services to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (12:10 a.m.)

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might have the privilege of saying just a word or two at this time. Having been a member of the committee in 1954, which at that time was known as the committee on commerce and finance, and at which time we last examined the Bank Act, Mr. Elderkin was inspector general of banks. I should like to add my word of commendation to that person.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave now.

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—REQUEST FROM HUMANE SOCIETY FOR ABOLITION OF SEAL HUNT

Mr. Andrew Chatwood (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Fisheries with regard to the seal fishery grew out of my amazement at the distorted coverage being given to the seal fishery in the news media, due to the actions of some misdirected persons who have very little knowledge of the facts.

I was startled and shocked, Mr. Speaker, at the actions of the members of the Conservative party who demanded the abolition of the seal fishery. Sealing is a very vital part of the livelihood of thousands of Canadians, and even though the amount of income is not large, it does represent to many of my constituents an important part of their dollar income. Sealing also enables many people by their own effort and by risking their own lives to acquire goods which they could not afford to buy and for which there are no substitutes.

The action of the Conservative party through their leader in calling for a prohibition of sealing is, I am sure—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. gentleman rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been under the impression that this portion of our time is set aside for members to bring up questions with a minister of the crown. When a member uses this time to read a prepared speech in criticism of members of this house I do not think he is following the order of business which is before the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador may continue.

Mr. Chatwood: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will refer to my notes. This action, I am sure, is based on their ignorance of the importance of this historic hunt to the lives of thousands of Canadians, not only in the riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member who now has the floor is putting the question to the house. He has the right to put it in any way he wishes. There is no point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege; I should like someone who has responsibility for the government to explain that this particular time is set aside for members to put questions to the ministry, when they have not been satisfied with the answer given during the question period.

For that reason this time should be devoted to obtaining information from ministers, not to criticism of opposition members for any action they have taken. This time has been set aside for the purpose of obtaining information because that information could not be provided during the ordinary question period. I suggest what the hon. member is now doing is reading a prepared text for the purpose of criticizing opposition members, rather than seeking information. I submit this is not the purpose of this time set aside by the house.

Mr. Chatwood: Mr. Chairman, this matter is of importance not only to the whole province of Newfoundland and Labrador, but to Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, eastern Quebec and all areas where seals are taken from the shore, as well as to those firms in Halifax and other centres which buy the pelts and provide employment to residents.

Individuals who are writing to the press fall into many categories; some are vegetarians and do not eat meat of any type or in any form, and protests from those people are legitimate. They are loyal to their beliefs. I do not agree with them, but I respect their rights. I cannot agree with those who try to prevent hard working—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise again—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must point out again to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) that the hon. member has seven minutes in which to make his statement, and he has the right to make that statement in any way he wishes, so long as he abides by the rules of this house. Let me suggest to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that he allow the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador to continue.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that you make a ruling as to the reason for setting aside this time. In my opinion it is set aside for obtaining information from ministers who were not able to answer questions asked in the normal question period. I respectfully ask that you make a ruling that hon. members use this time for the purpose set aside by the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let me remind the hon. member for Cape Breton South that the hon. member who was interrupted was making a statement before asking the minister his question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Let me again request the Chair to give me a ruling as to whether—

Mr. Tardif: Sit down.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Are you through?

Mr. Tardif: When I am through I will let you know.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to find out whether I am right in assuming that this time has been set aside for members to obtain answers to questions which could not be answered in the house. If the time is to be taken up by hon. members who wish to make political speeches, then all I can suggest is that many of us may be here every night of the week making political statements in opposition to actions taken by the government. Surely members of this house during this time should not be permitted to make statements of a political nature. This time, as I understand it, has been set aside for the express purpose of members obtaining information.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Let me remind the hon. member that this time has been set aside for the discussion of questions, and that the hon. member who was speaking has seven minutes in which to pose his question to the minister.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I request the Chair respectfully to make a ruling as to the amount of time a member can use to make a speech of a political nature before posing his question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has seven minutes in which to make his statement and I suggest to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that he allow the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador to continue.

• (12:20 a.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I would remind you, sir, that the hon. member's time has now expired.

Mr. Chatwood: I cannot agree with those, Mr. Speaker, who try to prevent hard-working, God-fearing men from earning an honest living by the sweat of their brows as their forefathers did before them. I cannot agree with those who stand either in this house or outside it and say "prohibit sealing", and then sit down to a meal of chicken, pork, beef, duck, lamb or any other meat—the same people who would hunt a deer or a wild bird for sport, or give chickens or baby bunnies to their children for Easter, well knowing that these baby chicks and baby bunnies will be starved or crushed to death by over-loving children. Where are last year's Easter chickens?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. I would again remind the Chair that despite whatever develops in the house during the seven minutes allotted to any hon. member—and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) can verify this by referring to a time when he tried to intimidate the C.B.C. into making a move for him—if the time is used by reference to any matter, the seven minutes allotted to an hon. member expires and there is no more time allotted to him. I raise my point of order on this particular matter now, and the Chair must rule on it. The hon. member is not permitted to read word for word from a prepared text.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I might remind Your Honour that when this rule was established it was clearly understood that no member of the house was permitted to interrupt or to speak during this period except the hon. member to whom the Speaker had allotted the seven minutes to express his grievance, and the minister or the parliamentary secretary in reply. The hon. member has deliberately and persistently defied Your Honour's repeated ruling that he should take his seat, and I suggest that he be asked to desist from interrupting the most junior member of the house. An experienced member usually extends to a junior member the courtesy of allowing him to be heard.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Minister of Transport that to raise his point of order he had to break the rules himself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps I should read to the hon. member for Cape Breton South the standing order which applies.

An hon. Member: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Shut up. You are talking cheap.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I refer to standing order 39—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is too bad hon. members opposite cannot back up some of the things they say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Standing order 39 provides as follows:

> A member who is not satisfied with the answer given to a question asked on any day at this stage, or a member who has been told by Mr. Speaker that his question is not urgent, may give notice that he intends to raise the subject matter of his question on the adjournment of the house.

As far as the question of time is concerned, it has always been the ruling in this house that when an hon. member is speaking and a point of order is raised, that time is not charged to the hon. member. If, however, he were to allow questions, that of course might be quite another matter. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

Mr. Chatwood: Some of the people who are complaining most vehemently against the seal fishery would think nothing of using a rod and line to hook a salmon and play the poor unfortunate fish for hours just for sport. The practice of catching the salmon or trout on a line and playing it for an extended period of time before finally bringing it to shore to allow it to gasp itself to death is accepted, as it should be; and it certainly cannot be compared to the quick, merciful killing of a seal. It is unfortunate that animals must die to sustain life, but it is necessary in order that man can have food and clothing and that he can feed and educate his children.

I returned just last week from a brief visit to my riding where I reviewed the sealing practices with many of my constituents, all of whom ask only for the right to work for a living and the right to use the best possible tools to do the job. I can assure this house that there is no cruelty in the seal hunt. Seals are killed either by a sudden blow or by a quick shot, and are killed instantaneously—faster by far than the death of some of our domestic animals.

The Department of Fisheries and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) have done excellent work in bringing in regulations and in getting agreements from other countries to control the size of the herds, and the need for regulation is recognized. If the herds were allowed to become too large the effect on the commercial fishery would be disastrous. The amount of bait fishes, of salmon and of shell fishes that would be consumed by these animals would deplete the supply to a tremendous extent. It should be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that even today it is necessary in some cases to provide a bounty on certain seals in order to protect certain of the fishes. The same people who now complain about the killing of seals would soon complain if the number of salmon and other game fish in our rivers were reduced by the appetites of an excessive seal population.

It would be impossible, Mr. Speaker, to speak about sealing without thinking of the gaff, the traditional tool of the sealer which has saved many a sealer's life on treacherous icefields both in preventing him from falling into the water and in assisting him in recovering on an occasion when he might fall in. Because of the importance of the hunt for those taking seals from the shore, it is imperative that the use of shotguns and shells be continued, as expensive rifles are not available to everyone and slugs are not as effective as shot. The thought of high powered rifles being fired from small boats on a misty morning is one that brings visions of possible tragic results, and is something that is not necessary. The fisherman taking seals from the shore must be allowed to use the equipment that is best suited for the task at hand. He must be able to use the best boats that he has for the job and the boats to which he is accustomed.

I must urge the minister to consider the stories being told as what they are—foibles of people who wish to attract public attention to themselves for reasons of their own. They have no knowledge of the matter under consideration and no feeling for the many people whose livelihood depends on this important section of our economy, both in dollars in income and materials necssary for their livelihood. I ask the minister to do everything possible to insure that the seal fishery continues and maintains its important place in our economy, and that all possible assistance be given to the sealers taking part in the seal hunt.

Mr. Richard Cashin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the Department of Fisheries is very much interested in the welfare and in the well being of the fishermen on the eastern coast of Canada, as well as the western coast of Canada. However, the Department of Fisheries has taken steps in the past, and will continue to do so, to ensure that this fishery is carried out in as humane a way as possible. While it is unfortunate that certain unfounded publicity from time to time has been spread about regarding certain aspects of the seal fishery, there is also ample evidence to suggest the killing of seals is carried out in a way which, in many instances, is more humane than that carried out in the killing of other animals.

I might say that personally, like the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, I sometimes find it a little inconsistent to hear big game hunters and big game fishermen advocate the abolition of the seal fishery while they find it easy to spend an hour or an hour and a half playing a fish on a line. I think it may be helpful to some people if there were a clear distinction between the two forms of killing. Perhaps some would even suggest the seal fishery was not as cruel, if that is the right way of putting it, as sport fishing.

In conclusion, I can assure the hon. member the Department of Fisheries has and will continue to have a great interest in fishermen in all types of fishery and at the same time will hope to see to it that as fair and as humane regulations as possible are introduced in this aspect of the fishery, as in all other aspects.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

HEALTH AND WELFARE—RESEARCH INTO ILLNESS CAUSED BY NOISE

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Living, as I normally do, in relative solitude, I notice the city noise in all its amplitude and it is for that reason I have taken a particular interest in the damaging effect of the noise of modern society. This is important to communities, to working people generally and to the general public. It is for that reason I have been interested in the subject. I have read the report on noise published by the World Health Organization, and its effect as a public nuisance as shown in studies of occupational research. I have also read the final report presented to parliament by the lord president of the council and minister for science, by command of Her Majesty, July 1963, in the parliament of Great Britain, which deals with this question in a very interesting way and makes some recommendations.

• (12:30 a.m.)

My attention was directed to this subject the other day on account of an editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 15, 1967 entitled: "Sue over noise, workers urged". It reads as follows:

> Thousands of persons working in British factories may be in a position to claim compensation for damage to their hearing caused by noise.
>
> J. B. Cronin of the Southampton University law faculty told a scientific meeting at the Royal Society in London that employees could successfully claim for bodily injury caused by employers' negligence. Yet no employee had ever taken such action.
>
> "I don't know what the trade unions have been at," Mr. Cronin said.
> Professor E. J. Richards, of Southampton University's institute of sound and vibration research, told the meeting that there was already ample evidence that many a worker's hearing was being permanently damaged by noisy working conditions—and as the power and size of machinery increased, the noise problem would get worse.

Mr. Speaker, the general effect of noise is, in the first instance, on the physical health of the body. For the most part people's well being is diminished by noise. In this sense of the term there is no doubt that noise affects health. It has been proven to affect the mental health of some people and to affect the enjoyment of communication based on sound in relation to hearing. It can affect working efficiency, and also the incidence of industrial accidents. I have had some personal experience in connection with the operation of mine compressors and machines of that sort—not that I have worked in the place, but I was an observer. In my opinion noise is an occupational hazard and a public nuisance in modern society. Research is required in an effort to provide remedies and compensation for those who suffer from noise in industry and in other segments of our communities.

It was for that reason that on Wednesday, March 15, I asked the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether any research is being undertaken in Canada at the present time in damage done to the human body as the result of noise.

> The fair lady listens with dignity and poise,
> To my inquiries about research and noise,
> I hope her reply will be complete and good
> Based on homework well done, as it should.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is yes, the government is concerned about the effects of noise, both on the human body and on the mind. For example, over the past several years research assistance from the public health research grant has been given to a number of studies on the relation of noise to hearing loss. I understand that the Medical Research Council and the Defence Research Board have also given grants for research in this area. In addition, we do know of various university activities in this field. We would be pleased to have a list of these research activities prepared for the hon. member for Kootenay West, if he so desires.

Mr. Speaker, if I may end this very brief reply on the same note as that of the hon. member for Kootenay West, I would say that:

> The hon. member for Kootenay West
> Asks lots of questions, as do the rest.
> In this long, long day, it has been one of my joys,
> To answer his questions about bodies and noise.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 12.37 a.m..

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 22, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

CONGRATULATIONS BY U.S. SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members will be interested to know that on March 14 concurrent resolutions were introduced in the United States Senate and House of Representatives that the United States Congress extend its congratulations to the parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of Confederation.

The resolutions were introduced in their respective chambers by two great friends of Canada who have long been associated with the Canada-United States interparliamentary group, Senator George D. Aiken of Vermont and Congressman Cornelius J. Gallagher of New Jersey. Senator Aiken and Congressman Gallagher, it should be noted, will once again be the co-chairmen of the United States delegation to the tenth meeting of the Canada-United States group when it meets in Canada next May 10 to 14.

The resolutions were referred on March 14 to the appropriate committees of Congress for due consideration. They have now been reported back and adopted unanimously. The text is as follows:

Whereas the year 1967 marks the centennial of the confederation of Canada; and

Whereas the century of Canadian confederation has been marked by close ties of friendship and association between Canada and the United States; and

Whereas relations have been strengthened through the annual meetings of the legislators of Canada and of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States extends its congratulations and its best wishes to the parliament of Canada on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation of Canada and in affirmation of the affection and friendship of the people of the United States for the people of Canada.

I shall be pleased to convey to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate a message of appreciation on behalf of all hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

NATIONAL DEFENCE—FIFTH REPORT

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the standing committee on national defence.

Mr. Lambert: That is presented very much on division, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING DEFERRED CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table an order in council, P.C. 1967-533 of March 21, in English and in French, amending the regulations under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table those documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: In the budget last March it was announced that a regulation under the Income Tax Act had been passed to provide that capital assets of certain classes acquired in the period after the date of the budget but before October 1 of this year would be subject to deferred capital cost allowances. This action was intended to serve as a restraint upon capital expenditures at a time when these were increasing at excessive levels.

The present order in council which I am tabling changes from October 1 to April 1 of this year the date at which this period comes to an end. Consequently property acquired after March 31 will not be subject to the deferred capital cost allowances provided for in the regulation last year.

It had been my intention to announce this change in capital cost allowances in speaking on second reading of Bill C-280 because the reason for terminating this period of deferred capital cost allowances is the same as the reason for introducing that short bill. Now that consideration of the bill has been deferred until after the recess it is important that there be an immediate announcement here in parliament of the action in regard to capital cost allowances. It will be possible to discuss this action as well as that in respect of the refundable tax when parliament is able to consider Bill C-280, which is an amendment to the Income Tax Act.

• (2:40 p.m.)

In the budget last year it was stated that this temporary reduction in capital cost allowances, like the refundable tax, could be terminated on short notice should economic circumstances change. At present the economic circumstances and short term prospects do not appear to require any such restraint upon capital expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I failed to notice that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands wishes to comment on the statement made by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I was waiting, Your Honour, in case someone from the official opposition wished to comment. I have not had time in which to consider all the implications of this statement, but I suggest to the Minister of Finance that this is another of the rather haphazard ad hoc amendments to our fiscal structure which he seems to have been practising constantly. It is my hope that before contemplating any other such changes he will refer to the recent report of the Carter commission on taxation, where these problems are dealt with in a coherent manner. I hope there will be no more of these sudden changes without reference to the whole framework of fiscal policy.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT POLICY FOR 1967-68

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I wish to inform the house of the support which will be provided by the government to dairy farmers in the 1967-68 support year.

[Mr. Sharp.]

[Translation]

I apologize to my French speaking colleagues: I do not know if the French translation system is working right now. Thank you.

[English]

As I am sure hon. members will recall, there is an important structural change in dairy support which will be effective on April 1. While in past years the management of the program has been the responsibility of the agricultural stabilization board, effective the first of next month the newly formed Canadian Dairy Commission will assume this responsibility. Working with provincial marketing boards this commission has broad powers designed to permit it to develop an industry best suited to Canada's needs.

During the current support year the agricultural stabilization board has provided a subsidy at the rate of 85 cents per hundredweight on manufacturing milk testing 3.5 per cent and an equivalent amount on cream. The estimated cost of this program is $90 million. For the forthcoming year a total of $120 million will be made available to the commission for subsidy payments. This is an increase of 33⅓ per cent in the level of government aid.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: This sum will permit of an increase in the subsidy rate to dairy farmers to $1.21 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk testing 3.5 per cent and an equivalent rate on cream. While total returns to producers from subsidy and the market will depend upon the action of provincial boards and agencies in establishing minimum paying prices, I am informed by the commission that the combination of subsidy and price supports will provide for a total milk price in the order of $4.75 f.o.b. the factory for manufacturing milk testing 3.5 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: It should be noted that the commission will deduct such sums as they deem necessary for export cost in the same manner as the 10 cents hold back was handled last year by the agricultural stabilization board.

Complete details on the program of the commission will be announced by that body shortly. I can say, however, that it will embody individual subsidy eligibility quotas designed to bring about adjustments aimed at increasing the over-all efficiency of the industry. This, I believe, is a useful step toward the long term goal of the government and the commission to put the industry on a sound basis whereby farmers will obtain a just return for their production with an ever-increasing share coming from the market place.

I should also note that this level of support includes provision for the agreement I reached with the ministers of agriculture of the two major milk producing provinces, Ontario and Quebec, that the federal support, effective April 1, will be increased by the equivalent of 25 cents per hundredweight of milk, subject to the provinces withdrawing from the direct subsidization of manufacturing milk and cream other than in exceptional circumstances. At the same time, since fluid milk is generally accepted as being a provincial responsibility, the federal government will leave the field of fluid milk shippers to the provinces in order to avoid a conflict of jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont)): Mr. Speaker, this so-called dairy policy announced by the minister today, after his government has been five years in office, will provide very little comfort to the dairy industry of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Danforth: When we look through the excellent verbiage that has been presented us today what do we find, Mr. Speaker? We find there has been no solution to any of the problems facing the dairy industry. Instead there is an increase in government subsidization, by direct payment to the industry.

An hon. Member: Are you against it?

Mr. Danforth: If the government is not aware of it all I can say is that every segment of the agricultural industry knows that subsidies are not a cure. They are just a medicine and don't solve anything. The government appreciates as well as the opposition that this does not meet the needs of the dairy industry, and that the dairy industry will be back again within 12 months for an increased subsidy made necessary by increased expenditures.

The dairy industry made a proposition to the government and outlined the need for a minimum f.o.b. price of $5.10 per hundredweight in order to operate for the season. What we have today is simply $4.75, with 10 cents deducted for export, which leaves $4.65 for the farmers instead of the $5.10 that they need.

I have been asked if I am against this policy. The real test of the policy announced today will be proven in the next year if we find a drastic change as the result of this and other government policies, with too many creameries closing up, too many small dairies being gobbled up, too many valuable herds being dispersed, and too many young men leaving the industry because there is no money in it.

These are the problems which must be solved, and I contend that this weak announcement of increased subsidies will not solve one single problem of the dairy industry. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government would have been much better advised to follow the lead set by the ministers of agriculture in the two largest dairy producing areas and try to work out a single control of the dairy industry, placing in the hands of the national dairy commission the power to disperse the very small surplus supplies we have in dairying today.

Anyone connected with the dairy industry knows that the surpluses each year vary from one commodity to another, and if our small surpluses were disposed of in external markets the dairy industry would be in a much stronger position to support itself. This is what the dairy industry wants. This is what the consumer wants, not a continuous policy of support each year for the industry from the coffers of the people of this country. The dairy policy announced today by the minister solves no dairy problem. It just gives the government a chance to buy 12 months in time.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, it would be an exaggeration to say that the policy put forward by the minister serves no useful purpose. I do not wish to exaggerate the case. The fact remains, however, that while the new policy which has been announced does indicate a measure of increased support and assistance for those engaged in the dairy industry, it really is an improvement of minor degree. I do not think there should be too much dispute on that point.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The minister's statement contains some calculations and figures which are quite difficult to reconcile. The statement indicates that the increase will bring the level of support to $1.21 per hundredweight. When one compares that with the level of support which has been paid during the last year it seems quite clear that the increase is only in the order of 36 cents or 37 cents per hundredweight, and really does not come out to an increase of 33⅓ per cent as the minister contends.

Representatives and spokesmen of the dairy producers in this country have taken the trouble and the time during the past few weeks to present a solid case to members of this house showing clearly that the present state of the dairy industry is such that unless some substantial policy action is taken by this government there will be a steady deterioration in the industry in the next short while. The number of dairy producers who are willing and able to remain in the industry which produces this vital food commodity is being reduced rather significantly and rapidly. It is only because of the increased productivity per unit that we are able to maintain the level of milk production we have maintained in the past few years.

These are very disquieting times in the agricultural industry as a whole and in the dairy industry in particular. As has been said by the previous speaker, the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), we could have hoped, the people could have hoped, and the dairy producers could have hoped for some more substantial policy announcement on the part of this government and this minister.

While I am on my feet I should like to pose two questions to the minister which really should be asked because there is no indication in the statement in this regard. What intention does the government have with regard to the two features in last year's program which were widely criticized within the dairy industry; that is to say, the provision that the price support shall be paid only on that amount of fluid milk which is in excess of 120 per cent of the quota. I see no reference to that in the policy statement. This has been a very serious shortcoming in this past year's program and is something which should be rectified.

Second, I see no indication in the statement with regard to the negative differential which cream shippers have been receiving in the past year by way of price support. Unless the minister and the government are prepared to take remedial action in these two instances, then this new policy statement is even worse than the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) and I say it is.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the policy the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) has just stated may seem generous for some, but it does not at all gratify the hopes of the farmers or dairy producers in Ontario or in Quebec, and even across Canada.

Yesterday we had the opportunity of meeting hundreds of farmers from all over Quebec who were able to state their claims with great logic and common sense which claims are based on facts and real needs in the field of agriculture.

Yesterday the hon. Minister of Agriculture, as well as the members from the province of Quebec, met the representatives of the CFU. The latter asked the minister and the government to grant subsidies or some kind of discount to enable the farmers to get $5 per hundredweight of manufacturing milk, and an extra 10 cents for export costs.

Now, we find that the minister, in his statement, or in the announcement of his dairy policy, offers, in co-operation, or within plans, as he says here:

[English]

—I am informed by the commission that the combination of subsidy and price supports will provide for a total milk price in the order of $4.75, f.o.b. the factory—

[Translation]

He says this:

[English]

It should be noted that the commission will deduct such sums as they deem necessary for export cost in the same manner as the 10 cent holdback was handled last year by the agricultural stabilization board.

[Translation]

This means, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers will get $4.65 f.o.b. factory, and that is not sure. That is far from the $5.10 asked by the farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I find it completely illogical that the minister, as well as the government and hon. members, especially those from Quebec, should welcome such a policy with regard to the farmers and the dairy producers who make up the most important sector of the Canadian economy. No one seems to mind when millions of dollars are granted for all kinds of things, but it is another matter when it comes to giving satisfaction to all those who make up the most important and useful class in society.

For the farmers, it is felt that $90 million is a huge amount and this year:

[English]

For the forthcoming year a total of $120 million will be made available to the commission for subsidy payments.

[Translation]

This only means an additional $30 million over last year. Farmers are not getting a fair deal and this policy should have been applied last year.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The government is one year late. The farmers will not be pleased with that dairy policy, and rightly so. They will also be right in blaming their members of parliament who met them several times in the last month or so, and were asked to support their request for $5 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk.

Mr. Speaker, I warn the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) that we are going to do our utmost to see to it that farmers, dairy producers receive a higher subsidy, a better price support than the one the minister now offers them. We feel that there is miserliness in this treatment of farmers, when there is so much generosity shown those who benefit from the labour of farmers.

Yesterday the farmers reminded the minister that a tractor costing $1,200 or $1,400 about ten years ago now sells for $5,000. The farmers' average income is about $2,000 or $2,200 whereas in any industry the average income these days is almost $5,000. It is imperative that farmers command a greater concern of the government and I say that the Minister of Agriculture and the government are not now being fair to the Canadian milk producers particularly to those of the two more populated provinces, Ontario and Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I think the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture again points up the need for a conference of all concerned on the whole question of farm income, such as has been requested by the federation of agriculture. The announcement today presents, as usual, a bare minimum of assistance with no related action concerning costs or prices. As usual we see the agricultural problem of this country tackled industry by industry year by year, so that we have a continual crisis.

The measures will, of course, be of some assistance. They will apply more particularly to Ontario and Quebec than to my own province of British Columbia, where the main dairy industry is concerned with fluid milk although there is manufacturing in the Fraser valley. The clear demarcation of involvement as between the federal and provincial governments is I think one area that is welcomed in the announcement, because any progress in clearly defining responsibility in this field is appreciated.

TRANSPORT

PROVISION FOR REGULATION OF SUSPENSION LINE DEVICES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-58 (from the Senate), respecting interprovincial and international teleferries.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, this is a very little bill that was passed in the other place. I wonder whether there might be time at the end of the afternoon for the house to consider it and for it to receive royal assent. I ask that this be done if possible, because I believe some plans depend on it.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house or later this day.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DIRECTIVES RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION

Question No. 2,308—Mr. Reid:

1. Has the Board of Broadcast Governors received any policy directives from the federal government respecting educational television (ETV) and, if so (a) when were they issued (b) by whom were they issued, and (c) what action has the B.B.G. taken on these directives?

2. What specific research has the B.B.G. itself undertaken or caused to be undertaken respecting ETV in Canada?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Board of Broadcast Governors as follows:

The Board of Broadcast Governors was asked by the cabinet, toward the end of December 1966, to take steps within the authority of the present legislation to develop plans leading to the introduction of educational television throughout the country, and to get in touch with the provinces immediately interested.

Questions

The B.B.G., within the limits of its jurisdiction, had already been in touch with some of the provincial governments. These contacts are now proceeding to enable the B.B.G. to complete the task given to it by the cabinet.

EMPLOYMENT BY CANADA ON INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

Question No. 2,579—Mr. Ryan:

How many persons are (a) directly and indirectly employed by Canada for the three international commissions in Indo-China and their inspection teams (b) directly or indirectly employed by Canada domestically and in any other parts of the world, other than Indo-China, by reason of Canada's representation on the said three international commissions?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) There are a total of 95 persons (66 Canadian military personnel and 29 Canadian civilians) directly employed in the work of the Canadian delegations to the three international commissions in Indo-China. No personnel are indirectly (i.e. locally) employed by Canada in Indo-China.

(b) In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, the number of directly or indirectly employed personnel in Canada or other parts of the world is nil. In the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa, two foreign service officers are engaged full time in dealing with matters flowing from Canada's participation in the three Indo-China commissions. In addition, both in Ottawa and at Canadian diplomatic posts in countries which have a particular interest in the problems of Indo-China, other officers devote varying proportions of their time, depending on circumstances, to dealing with questions relating to or flowing from Canadian membership in the commissions.

PERSONS SERVING PENITENTIARY SENTENCES

Question No. 2,588—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many persons were serving penitentiary sentences in each penitentiary in Canada during each year from 1960 to 1966 inclusive?

2. Of those persons serving penitentiary sentences, how many were (a) Indians within the meaning of the Indian Act (b) of Indian ancestry, in each penitentiary during each year 1960 to 1966 inclusive?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. The number of persons serving penitentiary sentences in each penitentiary in Canada as of March 31st in each year from 1960 to 1966 inclusive was:

Penitentiary Institutions	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965	31 March 1966	31 December 1966

ASSISTANCE TO INDIAN FAMILIES, YUKON

Question No. 2,674—Mr. Nielsen:

Over the 12 month period preceding the recent deaths of Silas Alfred, Mary Alfred, Emily Alfred and David Alfred at Minto in the Yukon Territory, what monthly assistance was given to each by the Indian affairs branch in terms of, money, food, clothing, medical attention or other aid?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Silas and Mary Alfred, as a married couple, were eligible to receive assistance together as a unit in the event of Silas's being unable to meet their joint needs. They were not on regular assistance. In the period in question they received one order for food in the amount of $70 in November, 1966.

Emily Alfred, listed in departmental records as Emily Charlie received $45 every month for food prior to and throughout the period in question. This was issued in the form of an agency cheque. She also received a clothing order in March, 1966 amounting to $31.

David Alfred, listed in departmental records as David Charlie, was not a member of the Silas Alfred household. He lived with his grandmother and shared in assistance issued to her household. By agency cheque she was issued $85 each month for food for the period December, 1965 to June, 1966; $70 each month for the period July, 1966 to December, 1966 and $80 in January, 1967.

Medical services to Indians are a matter which falls within the responsibility of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Indian affairs branch has no record of any aid given.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT OFFICERS, INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 2,683—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Arising out of the answer to question No. 2,177, answered on February 8, 1967, when did the following community development officers, who are listed as being on staff as of February 8, 1967, leave employment with the department, either through resignation or dismissal: R. G. Helbecque; M. Coquet; G. T. Gambill; I. Beaulieu?

2. Where are the following community development officers, listed as working for the department as of February 8, 1967, employed: G. Rouleau, E. G. Russell, C. Thompson?

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

3. Are the following community development officers, who were on staff as of February 8, 1967, working on Indian reservations or in an administrative capacity with the department and, if so, in what cities are they working: Miss M. M. Gillis, W. McFarlane, Miss F. Y. Osborne, Miss M. M. Stott, G. C. Crockett, K. D. Uppal, A. Spence, T. R. Kelly, W. J. Wacko, R. J. C. Ford?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

1. Name		Date of Separation
R. G. Helbecque	*1	December 30, 1966
M. Coquet	*2	November 5, 1966
G. T. Gambill	*1	January 15, 1967
I. Beaulieu	*2	November 16, 1966

*1—Although the reply to question No. 2,177 did not appear in the House of Commons Debates until February 8, 1967, the department's reply was forwarded to the Secretary of State Department on December 21, 1966 which is previous to the separation date of Messrs. Helbecque and Gambill.

*2—Official documentation from the area personnel officers covering the separation of Messrs. Coquet and Beaulieu had not been recorded at headquarters prior to submitting the reply to question No. 2,177.

2. G. Rouleau, Quebec, P.Q.; E. G. Russell, Lethbridge, Alberta; C. Thompson, Ahousat, B.C.

3. Yes, with the exception of Mr. K. D. Uppal who has been promoted to the position of regional supervisor of social programs for the province of Saskatchewan with an effective date of February 1, 1967. The others are working in the cities shown below: Miss M. M. Gillis, Amherst, N.S.; Mr. W. McFarlane, Toronto, Ontario; Miss F. Y. Osborne, Toronto, Ontario; Miss M. M. Stott, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Mr. G. C. Crockett, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Mr. A. Spence, Regina, Saskatchewan; Mr. T. R. Kelly, Edmonton, Alberta; Mr. W. J. Wacko, Edmonton, Alberta; Mr. R. J. C. Ford, Vancouver, B.C.

INFORMATION TO IMMIGRANTS RESPECTING ENGLISH AND FRENCH LANGUAGES

Question No. 2,709—Mr. Allard:

In the 34 cities abroad in which the Department of Manpower and Immigration maintains recruiting offices, do the 435 employees, either from Canada or employed locally (a) supply prospective immigrants with publicity printed in both official languages of Canada (b) inform prospective immigrants that English and French are the two official languages of Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) Publicity material prepared by the Department of Manpower and Immigration is printed in English and French and a number of other languages. Wherever possible these publications are supplied to prospective immigrants in their own language. If publications are not available in the native language they are provided in either French or English. (b) Yes.

PAY DIFFERENCES BETWEEN MEDICAL AND DENTAL OFFICERS

Question No. 2,710—Mr. Brand:

What are the reasons for the vast differences in basic and increment pay between a captain medical officer and a captain dental officer in the first three years of service?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): To establish rates of pay for newly graduated dental and medical officers in the rank of captain on October 1, 1966, comparison was made with the starting rates in effect for dental and medical officers 1 employed in the public service. The differences in these rates of pay are therefore the direct consequence of the corresponding salary scales in the public service.

GUESTS AT VIMY RIDGE OBSERVANCE

Question No. 2,719—Mr. McIntosh:

Who have been invited as guests of the government to participate in the ceremonies honouring the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Vimy Ridge (a) at the Ottawa service, giving name and present address (b) at the Vimy service, giving the name, rank, original unit and present address?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The invited guests of the government to participate in the ceremonies honouring the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Vimy Ridge, at the Ottawa service and at the Vimy service, are as follows: (a) a survivor of each of the battalions and of the supporting arms and services which participated in the battle, (b) a representative of the Royal Canadian Legion and another from the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada, (c) certain other distinguished persons including members of the Senate, the House of Commons and the Supreme Court, who participated in the battle, (d) the chairman of the standing committee on veterans affairs is being invited to attend the Vimy ceremony.

Survivors of the battle of Vimy Ridge are being selected by the commanding officers and colonel commandants of the present day regiments and corps which perpetuate those which fought at Vimy Ridge. Not all of the nominations have been received and their service in the battle of Vimy Ridge verified, therefore, it is not possible to provide at this time the nominal rolls requested.

RETURNING OFFICER, VILLENEUVE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 2,733—Mr. Caouette:

1. Is Mr. Clément Fontaine of Val-d'Or returning officer for the constituency of Villeneuve?

2. If not (a) since what date, and (b) for what specific reasons was he relieved of his functions?

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Clément Fontaine of Val-d'Or is the present returning officer for the constituency of Villeneuve.

ALTERATIONS IN CONFEDERATION BUILDING, OTTAWA

Question No. 2,749—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Are alterations and improvements being undertaken in the Confederation building and, if so, what are they?

2. What is the purpose of such alterations and improvements?

3. Will any additional space be provided and, if so, how many square feet?

4. What is the estimated cost of such alterations and improvements?

5. When will they be completed?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Alterations and improvements are planned for this building. They consist of: General renovations of the space to be vacated by the Department of Agriculture with some minor partition changes; lighting improvement generally; installation of an improved fire alarm system; relocation of present library.

2. Consolidation of Treasury Board and Department of Finance within the Confederation building.

3. No.

4. It is not customary to reveal the estimated cost before tenders are called.

5. Fall of 1967.

Orders for Returns

*APPEARANCE BY HOUSE MEMBERS ON PROGRAM "FRONT PAGE CHALLENGE"

Question No. 2,763—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Have any ministers of the present cabinet appeared on the C.B.C. T.V. program "Front Page Challenge" since January 1, 1967 and, if so, which ministers and on what dates did each appear?

2. Have any members of parliament belonging to (a) the Progressive Conservative party (b) the N.D.P. (c) the Social Credit or Creditiste party, appeared on the said program since January 1, 1967 and, if so, which members?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the C.B.C. has informed me that in addition to my own appearance on "Front Page Challenge" on February 13, the only other appearances on the program by any member of this house to date in 1967 were those of the Prime Minister on January 2 and of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on March 13.

TENDERS FOR FEDERAL BUILDING, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 2,767—Mr. Coates:

On what date will tenders be called for the new federal building at Amherst, Nova Scotia?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No date has been set.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Question No. 2,239—Mr. Harkness:

1. For the period from the appointment of the present Minister of Agriculture until November 30, 1966, what trips has the minister taken on government business and at the taxpayers' expense?

2. In each case (a) where was the trip to (b) what was the purpose of it (c) what was the cost (d) was a government plane used?

Return tabled.

COMMUNICATIONS RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION

Question No. 2,310—Mr. Reid:

Has the federal government or any of its agencies, including the C.B.C. or the Board of Broadcast Governors, had any communications with the various provinces concerning educational television (E.T.V.) and, if so (a) with what provinces (b) who initiated the correspondence (c) what is the content of this correspondence?

Return tabled.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

SALARY LEVELS, MANPOWER SERVICES AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Question No. 2,428—Mr. Reid:

1. What are the criteria used by the Public Service Commission in establishing the salary levels for various classifications of the Canada manpower services and the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

2. Were the recommendations of the Gill report used in determining the salary levels of Unemployment Insurance Commission staff and, if not (a) for what reason (b) what report, if any, was used?

3. What are the salary levels for the various staff classifications of the Canada manpower services and the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

4. If there are differences, what are the reasons for these differences?

5. What impact has the difference in salary scale on the calculation of superannuation for employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Return tabled.

COSTS OF REPRESENTATION ON INDO-CHINA CONTROL COMMISSIONS

Question No. 2,578—Mr. Ryan:

What have been the total all inclusive costs of Canada's representation on each of the three international commissions in Indo-China, in each full fiscal year, since the Geneva agreements were entered into, and what amounts of such costs has Canada borne in each case?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 219 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all other notices of motion stand.

STATEMENTS AT ROUYN-NORANDA BY MILITIA OFFICER

Motion No. 219—Mr. McIntosh:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence to or from the Minister of National Defence in connection with the statements allegedly made by Major Stanley H. Nudds, militia officer in Rouyn-Noranda on November 11, 1966.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY POLICY—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask leave to make a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), for the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the announcement of a dairy policy which does not permit producers of manufacturing milk to make a decent income from the sale thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Considering the notice of motion of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), I think it is my duty to inform him that the first item of business this afternoon is consideration of interim supply. As the hon. member will have the opportunity to discuss the subject matter of his motion during that debate, I do not think he can convince the Chair to change the order of business for this afternoon.

HOUSING

REPORTED ADVANCE BY CORPORATION TO YORK TRUST CO.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, whose responsibility it is to deal with matters concerning C.M.H.C., I would ask whoever is acting as prime minister whether before we adjourn a statement will be made on behalf of C.M.H.C. setting out the basis upon which some $20 million was advanced by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in 1965 to one of the Sinclair Stevens' companies. This announcement has been made by the president of York Trust and Savings Company, who said the money was advanced because the company was in financial difficulties. I should like a statement to be made as to the basis on which such an advance was made, and whether advances like this are available to other companies that find themselves in financial difficulties.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

CO-OPERATIVES

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State, since I have been trying for some three years to obtain assurances that the co-operatives act is being prepared and since the Prime Minister said on December 16 last, as reported at page 11224 of Hansard:

> The government hopes to be able to consider the draft bill shortly. After that consideration I will be able to make an announcement to the house as to when it could be introduced.

I want to ask the Secretary of State whether, if the draft bill is ready, it has been submitted to the cabinet and how soon she expects to present it to the house.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell my hon. friend that the responsibility for that matter, amongst others, was placed in the hands of the Registrar General of Canada on October 1.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I then direct a question to the Registrar General and ask him what progress is being made in the matter of the national co-operatives legislation.

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will understand that in the circumstances I should take the question as notice so as to give him the most appropriate answer.

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF AMOUNTS OWING BY SUPPORTERS OF QUEBEC SEPARATIST LEADER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the hon. Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board.

I have here a form entitled "Formal demand on third parties". That form was used by the Department of Revenue for the garnishee of $15 from the salary of a worker to whom the department had refused, in 1966, deduction of an expense account for 1965. Can the minister tell us if that worker could have spared himself that garnishee by stating that he supported Mr. Bourgault of the R.I.N.?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the government's acceptance of the amendment to clause 75 (2) (g) of the Bank Act, now known as the yo-yo clause, after the declaration of the Minister of Finance some time ago that that clause in the bill constituted a principle, is actually a derogation from that principle.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a yo-yo question.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister which will require only a short explanation. For the last two weeks I have endeavoured to press my best judgment upon the Minister of Agriculture. Now I will ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would use his good offices to remove that city slicker from office, because there are other Irishmen aspiring for the job.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think you would agree that this kind of an observation from a beloved gentleman who is about to retire from this house is hardly appropriate as his last speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Is this the hon. member's last speech?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to assure Your Honour and every other hon. member and friend in the house that this is not my last speech.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO RECOGNITION OF SIERRA LEONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether the Canadian government has officially recognized the commonwealth country of Sierra Leone?

[Mr. Lambert.]

NORTH VIET NAM—TRIP BY C.B.C. TELEVISION CREW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the government on the appointment of Mr. Charles Ritchie as high commissioner to the United Kingdom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us whether his department has made arrangements for obtaining visas for the members of the C.B.C. television camera crew who are on board a ship en route from Hong Kong to Haiphong in North Viet Nam, accompanying the delivery of medical and other supplies from Canada to North Viet Nam; and is this expensive trip being made at the suggestion of the government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last part of the question is no. May I say with regard to the other part of the hon. member's question concerning visas for other countries that of course they have to be accorded by the appropriate country.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister suggesting that the Department of External Affairs has made no arrangements for that trip to North Viet Nam?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The supplementary question is argumentative.

GHANA—PROVISION OF ADVISERS TO PROMOTE TOBACCO PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has he sent or is he planning to send technical advisers to Ghana to promote increased production of tobacco in that country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF DAIRY POLICY ON FLUID MILK SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell us whether there is anything in the new dairy policy which would change the amount of the fluid milk surplus eligible for price support?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think this statement speaks for itself. By virtue of the agreement which was reached last summer with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec we have agreed to assume the responsibility of price support for the manufacturing milk industry. In the coming year we will let the provinces deal with the matter of fluid milk so as to avoid mixed jurisdiction.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the price of $4.75 per hundredweight for all manufacturing milk a guaranteed price under the new dairy policy, or is it conditional on certain other factors?

The second part of my question is whether under the new policy the milk distributing shippers will not be selling a large percentage of their milk for a price well under $4 per hundredweight, as has been the practice in the past year. My question refers to provinces other than Ontario and Quebec, with which the minister said agreements have been made.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, price fixing mechanisms are a provincial responsibility. In the opinion of the Canadian Dairy Commission the price support program should maintain the level of $4.75, but price fixing to ensure this level comes within the authority of the provinces.

Mr. Moore: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not realize that although—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking an argumentative question when he prefaces it in this way.

Mr. Moore: May I rephrase it then, Mr. Speaker. Is the surplus milk not sold as manufacturing milk rather than fluid milk? I am referring to the 20 per cent surplus milk.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture, and ask him whether he read the brief submitted by the Federation of Dairy Producers of Canada asking for a subsidy not only for the hundredweight of milk but also for the sale of manufactured products, namely butter, powdered milk and casein.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as put is not acceptable.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a question of order, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin asked a question regarding the price received by producers of milk in western Canada, and wanted to know what the price would be. I feel sure Your Honour did not fully apprehend the nature of the question, which with great deference is one that requires to be answered. The situation today is such that in parts of the country producers of milk are getting only $4 per hundredweight instead of something more.

Mr. Speaker: The question by the Leader of the Opposition, I must say, is asked in the same way as the one asked by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, and is certainly argumentative.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was speaking of his question, Mr. Speaker. Would Your Honour allow the hon. member for Wetaskiwin to ask a question for the purpose of getting information in respect to something the western farmer wants to know about?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition knows I can refuse him nothing. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Moore: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know whether the minister is aware that the 20 per cent milk referred to is sold as manufacturing milk and therefore is under federal jurisdiction in the matter of subsidies. For this milk the farmers are receiving at the present time less than $4 per hundredweight.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have gone as far as I can. I have allowed the hon. member to ask his question again, but I am still convinced that as asked it is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is there anything in the new policy to reduce the differential in payments as between shippers of cream and shippers of manufacturing milk?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, cream shippers under the new program, as under the old, are treated in exactly the same manner as shippers of whole milk are treated.

HOUSING

OTTAWA—STEPS TO PREVENT RENT INCREASES DURING EXPO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as the minister responsible for administering Logexpo. Can some action be taken to prevent unreasonable increases in rent in the Ottawa area at the time of Expo?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I suppose this is a matter within provincial jurisdiction, but I will refer it to the Ontario government and ask them whether they are contemplating any action.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR CABINET CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question, which I direct to the Acting Prime Minister, is based on the report and recommendations which were tabled yesterday by the justice and legal affairs committee concerning highway automobile deaths and injuries. Because the motor vehicle industry is now finalizing its plans for 1968 models, will the minister assure the house that the government will seriously consider the recommendations contained in this report without delay, so that action can be taken in time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is much too general in nature, and I suggest to the hon. member that it cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, this is a specific question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: My specific question, which is extremely urgent and which I will reword, is this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: I will ask it when there are a few less interruptions from the trained seals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

Mr. Grafftey: My question is this. Yesterday the justice and legal affairs committee made specific recommendations on highway automobile deaths and injuries. The motor vehicle industry is now completing its plans for 1968 models. Because of this, will the government give serious consideration to this report so that action can be taken in time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must maintain my opinion which I expressed earlier.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION AGAINST THEFTS OF TRAWLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the trawler Cape Spry of 191 tons was stolen last week by one man, and the 84 foot trawler Hansen was stolen last night by two men and is now at sea, has the Minister of Transport given any thought to establishing special regulations which will prevent a reoccurrence of these thefts and provide some protection to trawler owners?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as these acts took place within territorial waters I would not want to invade the jurisdiction of the attorney general of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question. It is evident that the one man show which was put on by one of the cabinet ministers has had a serious effect on our east coast fishermen. Will the minister use his good offices to see that this bad example is not followed in the future?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—REFERENDUM RESPECTING JURISDICTION OVER ESKIMOS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he tell us whether it is true that his department intends to hold shortly a surprise referendum among the Eskimos of northern Quebec on their right to self-determination and to decide who is going to have jurisdiction on them, the federal government or the Quebec government?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister was ready to answer the question; he was merely waiting for the end of the translation.

Mr. Speaker: This is not the impression I had.

[English]

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I will put my question to the Minister of Public Works—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask for the hon. member's co-operation. I have already recognized the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Clancy) and I shall come back to the point of order immediately after.

[English]

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I will put my question to the Minister of Public Works on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is the following: I saw the minister rise. I would like to ask him the same question again, so that he may answer.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Did the minister intend to reply to the question?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in 1964 certain negotiations were entered into between ourselves and the appropriate minister of the province of Quebec in respect to turning over certain functions in Nouveau Quebec. These negotiations have continued among ourselves and no change will be made until consultation is made with the Eskimo people themselves. It might be that within a matter of two or three months I shall have something to report to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us whether a group of Protestant ministers from New Quebec has exerted any pressure for the holding of a referendum in the next few days, alleging that Eskimos at this time and under special circumstances, would choose federal jurisdiction?

[English]

Mr. Laing: I know nothing about this, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I would ask the minister if he could tell the house whether the agricultural stabilization board has yet come to a decision about assistance to the Prince Edward Island potato industry this spring.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, an announcement was made this morning concerning assistance to producers who have a surplus of potatoes at the present time. I believe this assistance is to a maximum of about $1,200 per producer, which compensates them for the loss of up to 1,000 barrels a head.

TRADE

SALE IN CANADA OF GOODS CONFISCATED IN CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce offered to answer a question I had put to him concerning the importation into Canada of seized Cuban goods. I wonder whether he is in a position to answer today.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This question concerned the auctioning of goods imported into Canada from Cuba. In so far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned this is not an illegal transaction and therefore there is no basis for stopping it. At the same time, I must say that this is not a significant item and is not apt to be a continuing item of commerce.

Mr. Keays: A supplementary question. Surely the minister is aware that these goods which are entering Canada are "blood" goods, and the government should give extra consideration to limiting them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXPO '67

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING REQUESTS FOR ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning Logexpo. In view of recent reports that there have been serious delays at Logexpo in replying to accommodation inquiries received from the United States, will the minister assure the house that Logexpo has informed, or will immediately inform, all major United States tourist agencies, automobile clubs and air lines that it can now process without delay all inquiries it receives?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. The work of Logexpo has improved tremendously during the past few weeks. It is receiving over 30,000 requests per week, and these are increasing. However, we will now get out a notice of the kind mentioned by the hon. member and inform all concerned.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARRANGEMENTS FOR VISIT BY GENERAL DE GAULLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Aflairs. Is the Department of External Affairs making the arangements for the visit of General de Gaulle to Quebec city and Expo '67 next June, or are these ararngements being made by the government of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that visits to Canada by heads of state or heads of government are made as the result of consultations with the government of the country to be visited. There have been informal discussions between the government of Canada, through myself, and the French ambassador in Ottawa with regard to this visit, but the details have not yet been finalized.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for what he has said, but he did not answer the question. Is the government of Quebec not making the arrangements for the visit of General de Gaulle?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend has not understood me he must understand that I cannot give him understanding. I stated clearly that the arrangements were being made by the government of Canada. This does not of course preclude arrangements for heads of state or heads of government to visit other parts of Canada. I should think it would be the most natural thing in the world, if and when General de Gaulle decides to visit Canada, that among the places he would visit would be the province of Quebec where is found a majority of those speaking the French language. I might express the hope too that so distinguished a man as the head of the government of France would also find it desirable to visit other sections of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF REPORT ON SPACE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, I have had a good half hour of exercise rising and sitting down. My question is for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister consider sending the relevant sections of the science secretariat special study No. 1 on the upper atmosphere and space program for Canada, dealing with Canadian participation in space satellite communications, to the committee on transport and communications for study?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since one hon. member has been asking about one committee perhaps I might reply to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River about a matter that I think is rather urgent, this new and revolutionary method of communication by satellite. As we need to know a lot more about this subject in order to form intelligent judgments about this important matter I think it would be very desirable to refer it in some appropriate way to a parliamentary committee. I shall endeavour to make a suggestion to my colleagues to make this possible immediately after Easter.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister seems to want to send this matter to the committee on transport and communications will he also refer to that committee the survey on icebreaking in the St. Lawrence, another subject about which we need to know much more?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be glad to do that once we have dealt with satellites and Air Canada, about which the hon. member asked yesterday.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to referring the matter of satellites to the committee on transport and communications would the government not think it wise to refer this matter also to the broadcasting committee, which also has a great interest in this subject?

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not mention the committee on transport and communications. I thank the hon. member for interpreting my mind. The government would have to consider the nature of the reference. The appropriate committee would probably depend on the nature of the reference.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Minister of Transport, since he is making the commendable move of sending the question of communication satellites to the committee on transport and communications—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: —or to the broadcasting committee, to use his good offices with his colleague the Minister of Industry, not to discontinue payments to the HARP project until such time as this matter has been finally settled. Otherwise the HARP project may fall by the wayside and the opportunity of dealing adequately with communications satellites may be lost.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have noted the hon. gentleman's representations.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister not consider the present application of the Bell Telephone Company for an amendment to the legislation governing it as a suitable vehicle to bring this matter to the attention of the government?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should think that is a debate, sir.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport. Could he see whether he could not hurry along the answer to my question on the order paper so that my colleagues may not tear my questions apart and I may get the answers and be able to put a further question to the government on the procedures that they expect to follow in regard to this matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: When I have sorted out the hon. gentleman's question I shall try to answer it.

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO FAMILY PLANNING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government yet made a decision with respect to the recommendation of the standing committee on health and welfare that the subject of birth control be removed from the Criminal Code of Canada? May we expect legislation on this matter during the present session?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I shall have to take that question as notice.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1967-68

MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like the permission of the house to revert to motions to move a motion with respect to the estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson moved:

That the message of His Excellency together with main estimates, 1967-68, presented to the house on Monday, March 13, 1967, be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

17g. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of estimates, $94,387,000.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I think we should be remiss in our duty if these supplementary estimates carried without serious words of caution being uttered to the government about the grave situation the agricultural industry finds itself in today. Taking a broad look at the agricultural picture we see many farm papers in western Canada calling for a conference of the agricultural leaders of this country. A conference is urged in order that an agricultural policy may be designed. This is what the farm papers are saying. Strange as it may seem, we have been studying the agriculture estimates in this parliament year after year and the government has been in office for three full years, yet farm papers are asking for a conference to design an agricultural policy. This should appear strange to anyone who is concerned about agriculture.

A new Minister of Agriculture took office in 1965. One would have expected a definite statement from him with regard to agricultural policy. But none has been forthcoming. He has travelled across the country, particularly to western Canada where he condemned the railways for not moving grain fast enough. But when the opposition urged the government to consider the problems of the grain farmers during the passage of the controversial transport bill the minister did not take part in the debate. He was not even in the house at that time.

A major debate has just taken place on the Bank Act. Three weeks ago the minister went out west and instead of concerning himself about agricultural policy he condemned the banks generally and said they had failed the farmers. This is not quite true. I can honestly say that in the last 20 years the banks have been reasonably good friends of the farmers, though they could have done better. The Bank Act which we passed last night could have been changed so as to improve the farmers' position. Instead of laying down a firm policy which would cover the broad spectrum of agriculture, the minister went out west and condemned the banks. A better course would have been to take part in the debate on the Bank Act, to point out areas in which the banks have failed to help the farming industry, and to seek to improve the bill. But the minister did not take part in the debate. Recently he condemned the businessmen. He would be better engaged if he would lay down the broad outlines of a general policy.

We realize he has tried to bring about an improvement in the dairy industry. Continuing a policy which we had laid down for the establishment of a dairy council for all Canada, he arranged a $4 price for milk. It did not work. We have seen farmers putting cavalcades of tractors on the roads in protest against the milk price which the minister announced. He went out west two or three months ago to speak in Winnipeg at a conference of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. He stated without equivocation that there should be no further subsidies given to the dairy industry. Yet today we have heard the announcement of a further subsidy. This is not a policy which will uplift the industry as a whole.

For some time Canada has been obliged to import butter from New Zealand. Can we stand here as legislators and say we have provided a whole market for our dairy products and an incentive to our farmers to produce the butter to supply our needs? How can the minister say he has brought any benefit yet to the dairy industry when for the first time in 20 years we are obliged to import butter?

We are importing some $800 million worth of agricultural products which could be grown in Canada. If an agricultural conference were held, as has been suggested, certain segments of these imports could be designated as capable of being provided by our own industry here in Canada.

I believe it is about a year and a half ago that the Minister of Agriculture told us 40 per cent of our farms today were providing a good standard of living, 30 per cent were on the verge of making the grade and the other 30 per cent were too small to make a profit and might as well quit. Is this the position he wants Canadian farmers to accept, that 30 per cent of them might as well quit? Is he saying that he has given up hope for them and does not intend to provide them with an incentive to stay in business? I hope not. As the leader and spokesman for the industry the minister must be prepared to lead. Where some farmers feel there is no hope he must provide them with hope. He must give them an incentive and, if necessary, see that they receive adequate prices to enable them to stay in business.

There is no reason why an agricultural land like ours should be importing $800 million worth of agricultural products which can be grown right here in Canada. All we need is an incentive to produce these products ourselves. For example, when has it ever been stated definitely that sugar beets are a necessity and should be grown here in order to stabilize sugar prices? We cannot allow ourselves to depend entirely on Cuba. In a good year prices will go down but after a bad year prices will skyrocket, as happened recently. I am using this as an example. In the sugar beet industry we should ensure through deficiency payments that 20 per cent of the market is satisfied by the home-grown product. I do not have up to date figures in front of me, but the minister might be able to announce that 25 per cent of the sugar needed by the home market would be home grown.

Over the years 6,000 acres of marginal land in Ontario have fallen into disuse, land which four or five years ago produced fruits and vegetables. Today we are importing these products. Why? Why are we so anxious to get rid of 30 per cent of our farmers? Let us have some leadership. Let us have an agricultural conference which will confirm that the various regions of our country can produce the commodities we Canadians want. It might be argued that all tariffs should be abolished and that we should buy the food we need from the West Indies and from the United States. If this line of thought is carried to its logical conclusion we might just as well sit on our fannies and let the United States feed us. They can do it; they have surpluses. But throughout its history Canada has grown on the basis of its agriculture and it is up to the Minister of Agriculture to lay down a policy which will maintain in this country a strong and independent farming industry.

We know that today beef prices are down, pork prices are down, wheat prices are down. It is all very well for the minister to say he is hoping for an increase in the international wheat price. So far no increase has been achieved. About a year and a half ago the minister stated his belief that the world price should be raised 25 cents. So far nothing has happened. It is all very well for economists to tell us that by 1980 Canada will have to double the number of its cattle. This will not help today, tomorrow or next year. Farmers today are not particularly interested in what will happen in 1980. They want a dollar in their pockets today or tomorrow and if they do not get it they will go out of business. It is the duty of the minister to lay down policy, not to say that 40 per cent of our farmers are making good, that 30 per cent are on the verge and that the other 30 per cent should give up. What kind of leadership is this? What kind of incentive is this?

About a year ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture, "Are you aware of the acute hardship which the agricultural industry faces in hiring help"? He replied, "This is a problem but we are introducing unemployment insurance in the agricultural industry." I said this was not going to help. I told him I had noticed that in middle European countries and even in Great Britain there was a surplus of labour. I asked him to make a special effort to bring farm labour to Canada. At a meeting of the agricultural committee he replied that this was a very interesting thought but he had not really considered it.

I then asked the minister, "Will you consider it? Will you have the immigration authorities go over there and make a special effort? Will you have them advertise the need for farm help in Canada and the possibilities in agriculture?" It is still possible for any immigrant who wants to work in agriculture to come here and later own his own land. That is still possible in western Canada, and I believe it is still possible all across Canada.

Some time ago I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if some effort would be made in this regard. He said no. The Minister of Agriculture said no. Where is the Minister of Agriculture going? What is he doing? This is what farmers all across Canada are asking. Farm papers continually ask, "What is he doing? Why is he not laying down some policy for agriculture?" It is an amazing thing that a minister who professes to be so concerned about the industry is not in the chamber to see his supplementary estimates pass.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Usually the final supplementary estimates are carried by the Minister of Finance or by the President of the Treasury Board. All ministers involved have not been required to be in the house. This has been the general practice and I object to my hon. friend referring to the absence of this particular minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is contemptuous of parliament.

Mr. Benson: You did the same thing when you were in office.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The farming people of today will judge his interest in the industry by his failure to attend.

Mr. Benson: He is here far more often than you are.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Minister of Agriculture goes across Canada telling the farmers that the railroads have failed the farming industry and that the banks have failed the farming industry. Then he goes to Toronto and says that businessmen do not understand the farming industry. He has to do more than talk to convince the farmers that he is really concerned about them.

What has the minister done for the agricultural industry since taking office? Not one solid piece of legislation has come before the house under his sponsorship. By order in council he has announced the formation of a dairy council. That is all, and it still remains to be seen whether that council will do something for the dairy industry. It was founded some nine months ago and established a price of $4 per hundredweight for milk. But that did not work because last summer we saw farm tractors parading on all the highways in eastern Canada.

Today the minister has offered milk producers a bigger slice of the carrot. But is this enough? It is not enough for him to say that he appointed a body to inquire into the farm machinery industry. Will this mean a lowering of farm machinery prices? That is very doubtful. In fact Professor Barber says it is not likely.

It is all very well for the Minister of National Revenue to stand up and say that the Minister of Agriculture does not have to be in the house. Certainly he does not have to be here, but if he wants to convince the farmers that he is concerned about their welfare he should be in the house taking part in this debate and laying down policy. If the minister cannot devise a policy he should call an agricultural conference, something which farm leaders have been seeking. They have told him, "If you cannot form a policy and nail down what Canada should be doing in agriculture, let us help you. We will be at the conference. We will assist you." I hope the minister takes their advice and heeds their warning because never before have we had a minister of agriculture so long in office with the whole industry still asking him, "What is your policy"?

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks as a sequel to those of the member for Acadia. Anyone who has an intimate awareness of what is going on in the farming industry must admit that very disturbing trends are at work, which have accelerated within the past few years. The Minister of Agriculture has been in office for 18 months and hon. members have a right to expect a greater degree of tangible action by him. Up to now he has succeeded in projecting an image as a sort of Canadian Will Rogers, the image of a man who is aware of the problems that face the farming population. I do not question that he has this awareness, and so it is not too much to expect that by now he should have been able to place some legislation before the house which would show that the government was determined to grapple directly with the major problem of the agricultural industry.

The major problem is still the cost-price relationship and the indices showing the cost-price relationship are readily available. I believe the truth will come out ultimately that during the government's term of office problems within the agricultual industry have increased and its deterioration has accelerated. For example, let us consider the situation with respect to milk production. If it were not for the increased productivity per unit in milk production there would be a very alarming picture simply because the number of people prepared to remain in the dairy industry is decreasing with each passing year.

I wish to make particular reference to cream shippers. Butter supplies in Canada show a pretty clear pattern and one of the reasons why that pattern is at work is that the government's dairy policy actually militates against the cream shipper. I have heard it said, although I suppose it cannot be proven, that the government's policy is a deliberate attempt to ease people out of cream production, reduce the number of creameries and thereby add impetus to the trend toward consolidation of manufacturing plants in larger centres. This kind of policy militates against those smaller dairy producers who are the ones to feel most heavily the cost-price squeeze.

On a number of occasions and again today the Minister of Agriculture was given an opportunity to indicate whether or not the government was going to do anything to get rid of the negative differential in the price support received by the cream shippers. In reply to a question he said there was no differential. But the fact remains that almost every spokesman for the dairy industry has stated without equivocation to members on both sides of the house that the present price support policy results in a negative differential to cream shippers. How can the minister make such a bald-faced statement contrary to the statement made by the organized dairy producers?

• (4:00 p.m.)

The minister was also asked whether there was any intention to change the basis upon which price support shall be paid on fluid milk surpluses in excess of 120 per cent of the quota. He replied that since this involved fluid milk it was a matter for provincial concern. Yet as the hon. member for Wetaskiwin attempted to point out, almost all surplus fluid milk goes into manufacturing and as a consequence is manufacturing milk when it is in excess of the fluid quota and therefore is properly a matter for concern on the part of the federal Department of Agriculture.

Surely members opposite and the minister are aware that the policy in respect of the payment of price support on fluid surpluses is not very practical at all because it is based only on that amount of surplus which is in excess of 120 per cent of the quota. The end result is that during most months of the year shippers of fluid milk receive support which is marginal and fractional. Certainly it does not amount to anything significant.

With regard to the general agricultural picture, surely the minister and his colleagues must be aware that, despite the unprecedented yields, the net income position of agricultural producers has not improved; in fact it has worsened. Gross income has increased and attempts are being made to point that out. What is not pointed out so consistently is that while gross income has increased so also has the operating expense, the cost of production, and the result is a net income picture which has shown a deterioration in the course of the past few years. What do we get from this government in response to that problem? We see an attitude of indolent nonchalance. The government takes the position that somehow they must depend on the natural market forces. The government refuses to take action in the face of the steadily deteriorating position which faces our agricultural industry.

The result of all this has been a steady exodus from rural areas and farming operations with the result that today, if one looks closely at the situation, one will find that the average age of active farm operators has increased statistically. Behind these statistics, of course, is a very poignant human story. In my own area of eastern Manitoba I have seen conditions develop whereby at the present time the number of farmers below the age of 55 in my home municipality is less than a dozen. One must ask what will happen a few years from now. How will the big transfer of land and production effort from one generation to the next take place? The young people, in the face of the present agricultural income position, are not anxious to take over. Even if the income position were somewhat better than it is, the changing habits of living and working have resulted in many people turning their backs on farming as a possible vocation. It seems evident, therefore, that in order to counteract this kind of development there must be a very substantial improvement in the farm net earnings position.

If I an repeating myself for the fourth or fifth time I do not make any apology because I believe that in respect of this problem there has been absolutely no indication of any concrete or significant action on the part of this government. The minister, of course, as I said earlier, has succeeded in projecting an image of himself as a man of the soil or a kind of Canadian Will Rogers, sort of rurally oriented. He has travelled throughout Canada, particularly western Canada and, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Acadia, has taken swipes at the Canadian Pacific Railway and the banking institutions. If I may use a colloquial expression, he has raised hell with the banks because he alleges that they have not been generous enough in the granting of credit to farmers. Surely the minister is not of the opinion that the farming population of western Canada or anywhere else in Canada is 30 years behind the times and still thinks that it is the banking institutions which are the cause of their present difficulties. Credit is one thing which agriculture has received without too much difficulty within the last few years.

Many persons, as well as myself, have come to the conclusion that the problem is not so much one of agricultural credit as a problem of net income or capital formation. One cannot have capital formation without net income. No matter how much the restrictions on the granting of credit are eased, this will not get at the basic root of the problem unless something is done about the cost-price relationship. In that connection I suppose it is germane to mention that the position taken by the minister in respect of farm machinery prices was quite cute. I use that term advisedly. He let it be understood throughout the country and in the house that he was somewhat chagrined about the pricing policies and practices of the farm machinery manufacturers, so much so that he wrote several letters to them in which he indicated his displeasure. When asked to produce these letters, however, he backed down. He gave some indication to members of the committee that he had received an undertaking from the farm machinery manufacturers that they would not increase their prices during the period when the machinery investigation commission was carrying out its study. He said that during this period they would not increase their prices by more than an average of 3 or 4 per cent. What was not indicated was the nature of this average of 3 or 4 per cent. Is it to be a weighted average?

There is quite a difference between the absolute cost of a tractor and cultivator, and a surflex discer. An increase of 5 per cent in tractor prices and 3 per cent in discer prices is not, for example, a 4 per cent true average. Is the minister talking about an average of the price increases for machinery which has the same relationship as the relationship in using one rabbit and one horse in making a stew? We really have not had an opportunity to question the minister more closely in this regard. It should be pointed out, however, that it is becoming more and more difficult with each passing year to fool the agricultural producers of this country. Now, after the minister has been in office for 18 months and after this government has been in office for four years, reasonable people are saying that it is time some substantial, significant, concrete and tangible action was indicated by this administration. Certainly, if it were only a matter of six months, eight months or one year, the argument could logically be advanced that it takes time to marshall all the facts in order to have a proper base on which to determine policy. But that time has passed and now we should have action. We should have action, as has been clearly indicated already by the hon. member for Acadia and I hope by myself, because the cost price relationship and the net income position have been steadily worsening despite unprecedented yields and increases in productivity.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Where are we going? I am sure the phenomenon of the ever-increasing average age of people on farms in this country is evident in all counties and municipalities across the land, not just in my own province.

It has been my pleasure to have this opportunity to join with other members on this side to indicate to the government that it has a very serious responsibility which cannot be sloughed off simply by adopting the attitude that because of changing technology and patterns of production a continuing exodus of people from farm lands is inevitable. To what degree should we allow this to happen? If one projects the present trend for perhaps 15 years or two decades one will come to the conclusion that within that time there will only be about 2 per cent of the population on farms. This will likely mean we will have an agricultural industry dominated by vertically integrated, factory type, giant operations and by a few landed aristocrats. Is it our desire to see history repeat itself in this way?

We must also consider the problems in relation to the number of families living on farms with substandard levels of income. I do not oppose the ARDA program but it alone should not be used as a means of coping with the problem of low farm income, and to do so is absurd. ARDA is and will be very useful in dealing with rural poverty as found on small marginal farms, but it is absurd to try to use ARDA to deal with low net income problems facing operators of medium or statistical average even. These people are finding it very difficult to operate at a profit under present economic conditions.

Let me say in conclusion and without apology that up to now the government has displayed an attitude in respect of agricultural problems which can only be described as one of nonchalance, and there can be no excuse for that.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few minutes of the time allocated for consideration of the first item of the supplementary estimates (G), namely agriculture, to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, that is the announcement of a dairy policy which does not enable producers of manufacturing milk to derive an adequate income from the sale thereof.

When I introduced that motion on the orders of the day earlier, I had hoped to discuss that matter in the presence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) but I noticed, as pointed out by the spokesman of the Progressive Conservative party a moment ago, that we are forced to discuss matters as important as agriculture and production of manufacturing milk, in the absence of the minister.

I know the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) can pilot supplementary estimates, but the fact remains that the Minister of Agriculture is not here to listen to the views of hon. members on the problems of the Canadian dairy industry, particularly in the province of Quebec.

In the last three speeches from the throne, we were told or we have read that the government proposed to give special attention to the agricultural problem, but we have come to realize that the agricultural policy of the government is applied with a dropper. As a matter of fact, only yesterday, many farmers from all parts of the province of Quebec came here, to parliament—some of them had a long journey and even travelled overnight—to meet the Minister of Agriculture and Quebec members of parliament.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred to welcome those farmers, those of my riding as well as the others, as visitors, as tourists, in short, as people on holiday. However, to have their rights respected or, at least, to make special representations to the minister, they had to make rather great sacrifices and even to go to some expense. If the Minister of Agriculture and the government had assumed their responsibilities and established a really fair agricultural policy, those people would not have had to come to parliament to demand their rights. They came here, Mr. Chairman, because the situation is urgent, because the situation is alarming.

According to the December 1966 issue of the News Bulletin of the Department of Agriculture, the number of milch-cows, in 1966, reached its lowest level in 46 years. The farmers are getting rid of their herds because they do not pay enough, because they do not bring in the profits the farmers are entitled to.

According to the article, and I quote:

> On June 1, there were an estimated 2,279,000 milch-cows on the farm, that is 86,000 less than last year and 6 per cent fewer than in 1961.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the alarming aspects or our farm policy with regard to dairy farming. Farmers and dairy producers are justified in being alarmed at such a situation.

The same publication says, a little further on, that:

> —the production of manufactured butter has decreased for the fourth consecutive year.

Mr. Chairman, not so very long ago, Canada produced so much butter that there was a shortage of storage space. I remember that a few years ago, in 1962, 1963 or a little later, a butter warehouse burnt down in Saint-Denis-sur-Richelieu. At that time, the Minister of Agriculture was asked whether Canada and the government would incur a loss on account of that fire. He replied that since it would no longer be necessary to pay storage costs following the fire, it would be so much money saved.

This means then that only a few years ago, the dairy industry did not lag while to-day, for the fourth year in a row, there is a deficit in production, that is to say that less butter is being produced than is being consumed, even with the increased population. In fact, this year, 2,250,000 pounds of butter had to be imported for our consumption.

Mr. Chairman, this is another alarming point of our farm policy and that is why approximately 8,000 farmers were on parliament hill yesterday to demand a fair agricultural policy to allow the necessary profits to which they are entitled, because no one can be expected to continue producing at a loss.

A former minister of agriculture has already said that we should find an incentive other than that of gain to encourage people to produce more. Thousands of Canadians must make a profit in order to continue to produce. How can so many people not understand such an important fact? Since producers cannot make a living, they sell their dairy cattle and abandon their farms, and when they cannot find work in the manufacturing industry or in the services, they become unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Agriculture and several of his colleagues in the cabinet seem to think that farming has become economically worthwhile in Canada. Yet we know that parishes in agricultural regions are emptying, and that young people no longer want to continue farming well-organized and highly productive farmlands.

Now if there is no one to take over in farming, it is because the operation is not profitable. That is why rural parishes are being abandoned and the land goes to waste. On the other hand, should the farming occupation be a profitable one, we would see the unemployed and labourers leave their cities to take over the farms. Those people would be ready to fight so as to buy land, to make money, but the opposite situation prevails. Farmers desert the land and head for the cities, where they try to earn a living.

That is the present situation. Therefore, I believe that it is up to the government to bring forward, in the dairy industry, a policy which will enable producers to answer the needs of the Canadian consumer.

That is why I blame the hon. Minister of Agriculture for the timid and limited announcement he made earlier and for trying to lead the dairy producers to believe that they would receive $4.75 per hundredweight when, once all the deductions are made they will not get more than $4.10. The hon. minister tells us that the subsidy he offers, that is $1.21 per hundredweight, when the Federation of Dairy Producers asked for at least $1.40, will allow the dairy producers to get $4.75 per hundredweight. But he adds that 10 cents per hundredweight have to be taken away for export charges. And he adds that the Quebec and Ontario governments, which used to grant 25 cents per hundredweight, will stop as of April 1.

If we know that it costs at least 7 cents per pound to make butter, to process the cream into butter, we arrive at $4.10 per hundredweight of manufacturing milk.

Mr. Chairman, that is what the dairy producers asked for last year. The government is one year behind with its dairy policy. That is the reason why the farmers cannot make a profit and ask constantly for a minimum price of $5 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk.

During the question period, the hon. minister said that under the authority of the provincial governments, the farmers had the duty to negotiate the price of their products.

I shall point out to the hon. minister that the Federation of Dairy Producers not only asked for the subsidy per hundredweight of milk produced but also for a support price for butter, powdered milk as well as cheese and casein. In other words, if their request were granted, the farmers could get $5 per hundredweight for their dairy production. Then, they could make a profit and it could become relatively interesting to be a farmer, a dairy producer and to have herds.

And then, instead of decreasing, our production of consumer goods—which is so important for us—would increase and be sufficient for our national consumption.

We must remember, Mr. Chairman, that when the war was declared in 1939, we had just got to the end of a depression that had lasted ten years at least. At that time, when it was impossible to sell agricultural products, the farmers were deserting and disorganizing their farms. And when war was declared, we found that we did not have the means of production. So we started immediately to reorganize our farms, to ask the farmers to reorganize in order to produce more, because it was necessary to feed our soldiers and the workers employed in the munitions factories. It was also necessary to feed a great part of England, and yet we noticed that our agricultural production was lagging, that we could not meet the demand.

So, we were behind at that time. If the same situation is allowed to continue, how do we know that tomorrow we will not be facing the same problems as in 1939? And then, we will again be lagging behind. Dairy producers were asking for a minimum of $150 million to be able to get $5 per hundredweight of fluid milk. It is easy to foresee now that farmers and dairy producers will not obtain the price they are asking for. I do want to point out that the dairy producers did not make their request unprepared. I have here, from the editorial page of La Terre de Chez Nous of February 15, 1967, an article written by Jean-Marc Kirouac, which says:

> The Dairy Farmers of Canada, grouping associations of dairy producers from all Canadian provinces, developed, in the last weeks of January, their dairy policy for 1967-68 and for some years to come.

Thus you see, Mr. Chairman, that the dairy farmers do not study their problems from day to day, they take steps beforehand. And that is the art of governing which the present government should practice. And the article adds:

> It seems to us that the main concern of the Dairy Farmers of Canada was to make a serious study based on precise information of all the main problems which face the dairy industry in Canada and to prepare a complete dairy policy whose immediate and long term effects were to give new life and stability to the Canadian dairy industry.

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the objective which the government should keep in mind in order to set up and implement a full dairy policy that will immediately and in the long run give new life and stability to the dairy industry in Canada. That is what we need Mr. Chairman, that is what the farmers and the consumers need, because that drop in the dairy production is felt in other consumption sectors and has something to do with the high cost of living at the present time. And the president of the C.F.U., Mr. Lionel Sorel, mentioned it yesterday. We are now witnessing a fast increase in the price of beef in Canada and that is due to the fact that the dairy farmers are getting rid of their dairy herds. Since fewer heads of dairy cattle, calves or young livestock are offered for consumption, this shortage of animals for slaughter makes the price go up.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene)—I know he is not in the house but I see his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Beer)—explanations on this item of the supplementary estimates, amounting to $97,395,602 and what he intends to do with it exactly. Will it be used to pay grants, help Canadian farmers, pay employees or something else? Furthermore, I notice in the estimates for 1967-68 an increase in item 20 of the Department of Agriculture, amounting to $103 million. I would like to know what will be the use of the supplementary estimates requested today and the increase which will be requested in the 1967-68 estimates?

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, we are now on vote 17g and I will be pleased to explain to the hon. member votes 17g and 20g. Under vote 17g we see the figure of $89,967,000 which includes subsidies on dairy products amounting to $81,624,000. I should point out to hon. members that this sum will be increased as a result of the increase in the federal government subsidy announced by the Minister of Agriculture from the guaranteed price of $4.10 per hundredweight to $4.75. In the succeeding year it will go up to $112 million.

The estimated cost for the various stabilization programs is $7,483,000 for sugar beets, $726,000 for wool, $22,000 for eggs and $112,000 for pork, canned cuts and hams. These arise out of the deficits of the Agricultural Stabilization Board which are traditionally recouped by this house at the end of the year. The additional $5,663,000 is to cover the net operating loss of the Agricultural Products Board up to March 31, 1967.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for his explanations which might serve to enlighten us on certain points.

When I saw the blue book for 1968, I was most happy to note an increase of $103 million under vote 20, under the heading "Grants, contributions and subsidies".

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): It costs $112 millions.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, in the final analysis, the policy announced by the minister today on the dairy industry is clearly inadequate, since the price announced is lower than that requested by the dairy producers, if allowance is made for all the deductions the minister mentioned in his statement.

As the officials of the processing plant Société coopérative agricole of Sainte-Rose-de-Poularies pointed out, they barely make $3.18 per hundredweight of milk processed into butter and casein, and that, without taking into account the cost of processing, a minimum of 7 cents per pound of butter. Considering all that, the producers or the processing plants are unable to pay, even with the direct subsidy, an amount that could come to $5 per hundredweight. They could not do it last year and they will not be able to do it this year either, unless there is an increase in the price support concerning butter, casein, powdered milk, cheese and other products.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the agriculture policy announced by the minister is insufficient. Even if there is an increase, it still falls short, by far, of what the farmers were entitled to expect or what they called for. There is no doubt that we shall soon hear about that from the agricultural representatives, who are grouped today into a federation of more than 50,000 members in the province of Quebec only. Mr. Chairman, 50,000 dairy producers, that is becoming important. Considering what is being produced nowadays, in some of the states of our neighbours to the south, in the field of dairy production, it is to be feared that the same thing will happen here, and this is exactly what is to be prevented.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, a few brief remarks in order to answer the comments made by the hon. member who just resumed his seat. It is not in an aggressive way, but rather objectively, in order to help restore the facts, if possible.

There is doubt that the hon. member spoke exactly as a member of the opposition would, and if the members on this side happened to be sitting across the way, they would probably do as the hon. member has just done: They would deplore the inadequacy of government policies. It is good strategy, let us admit it. It is almost an accepted practice in the house to proceed in this way. Nevertheless, sitting on the government side, I do not feel it is inappropriate to set things in the proper perspective and to state that the policies the government intends to apply starting next April 1, represents a significant improvement and are surely such as to raise the standard of living of the farming community.

I agree with the hon. member that the farmers are entitled to a better fate. If anyone understands, surely it is the members sitting on this side of the house, particularly since we have in our caucus no less than a real farmer, no less than a member of the C.F.U. who never fails to enlighten government policy through his own knowledge. I am referring to the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Côté) who, since taking his seat in this house, has made a contribution which deserves to be mentioned. He is a farmer himself, and when agriculture is being discussed, I feel he must know what is going on and he is surely in a position to inform the authorities, since he has lived, in fact he has been prominent, in a farming community.

I would not like to be overly partisan, but I simply want to note that since we have been in power, we have always looked upon the requirements of the Catholic Farmers Union with the utmost respect and, I would say, with the utmost efficiency. At different times, it so happened that farmers in their briefs called for a Canadian Dairy Board. Legislation to that end has been passed by the present government.

It happened that the Catholic Farmers Union, in its briefs to government authorities, asked for the establishment of a Livestock Feed Board for eastern farmers. The present government implemented such legislation.

It happened that farmers complained about the poverty in several rural areas. That is why, in order to comply with the farmers' requests, the government implemented a piece of legislation setting up a Rural Development Fund of approximately $50 million.

It also happened that Quebec farmers complained that they could not take advantage of the Crop Insurance Act. The Liberal government amended that Act, thus enabling the Quebec government to implement its own crop insurance program. It has been announced that the provincial minister of agriculture, Mr. Vincent, has introduced the bill in the Quebec legislature and through the future co-operation of the federal and provincial governments, the Quebec farmers will be able to take advantage of the Crop Insurance Act.

Therefore, it is unfair, Mr. Chairman, to deplore constantly the lack of government policies. It does not seem very fair to deny that the government is considering the matter earnestly and that it is sincerely trying to improve the farmers' lot.

Of course, the opposition always feels it is not enough. They are never satisfied, they are always asking more, but while the government is responsible for the administration it must also bring down a budget.

I would have liked the previous speaker to tell us where to find more money for farmers. They are getting an additional amount of $30 million this year. Is there a specific figure which he could quote and perhaps tell us where to reduce expenditures, why they should be reduced and how we could reduce them in such and such department, in order to give more?

An hon. Member: Let him cut down the national defence estimates.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, let the hon. member rise and tell us which items should be taken away, and how this can be done; then, his proposal could be considered.

However, no mention is made, for instance, of the fact that, this year, the government will spend $30 million more for the farmers, which is certainly a marked improvement. The hon. member cannot deny this. If the government were not concerned with the farmers, it would not bother to spend more, to earmark an amount which is quite considerable to assist the farmers. Such policy will help maintain an average price of $4.65 per hundredweight of milk with a fat content of 3.5 per cent. To this price of $4.65, the export subsidy of 10 cents must be added. However, it is perhaps too soon to criticize the dairy policy, like the hon. member has done, since the Canadian Dairy Commission has not yet made known its support price policy.

It is only in the light of the announcement made by the minister this afternoon, and in the light of the Canadian Dairy Commission policy which will be known soon, that we will be able to appreciate the actual repercussions and effects of this new dairy policy.

In spite of everything, I therefore suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we must give credit to the hon. Minister of Agriculture for having the great merit of thinking and taking action on behalf of the farmers, for his really effective efforts, so that milk producers may receive for their product a better price than they received before.

Something else is worth mentioning. When we came into power, in 1963, as the Conservatives gave way to the Liberal government, the price of milk was $2.66 per hundredweight. Today, in 1967, it has reached $4.65 per hundredweight; that is certainly an appreciable increase which we cannot but notice and, in my opinion, without indulging in flattery, the merits of the government and the Minister of Agriculture who made worthwhile efforts, deserve to be mentioned.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity of saying a few words about the plight of the dairy farmers across Canada. I do not feel that the new policy which has been announced will really solve many problems. The increase in the amount of subsidy paid this year compared with last year will cover only some of the increase that can be expected because of rising production and living costs.

The hon. member who preceded me stated that the farmers can be assured of a price of $4.75 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk. With this I take issue because nothing has been said about how much is going to be taken off this price, as happened last year, for seeking export markets, and there is really no guarantee at all of $4.75. It is just a hoped for price that will vary across Canada, as was the case last year.

The minister referred to an agreement entered into with the ministers of agriculture for Ontario and Quebec, but I should like to ask about the other provinces. Certainly the policy did not take into account the recommendations, which I have read, made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Most of the thousands of farmers who have ceased operations during the last few years were dairy farmers, which shows that our dairy policy has not solved the problems. The hon. member for Springfield dealt with the discrepancy between the returns to cream shippers and the returns to milk shippers. This in itself is a serious problem. Where do the herds go when dairy farm operations are discontinued? Many of the cattle, especially the better bred, go to the United States and are taken out of production so far as Canada is concerned.

Speaking of milk shipments 20 per cent over quota, on which no subsidy is paid, may I put this into figures. Let me take a shipper with a quota of 1,000 pounds who ships 1,200 pounds of milk a day. Let us suppose he receives $5 per hundredweight for the first 1,000 pounds and only $3 per hundredweight for the next 200 pounds. This averages out to $4.60 which is less than the $4.75 suggested by the hon. member. And we must also remember that this farmer's costs are higher.

I wonder whether the minister and other members of the house have any idea of the costs of distribution of milk shippers. Do they know what a bulk cooling tank costs? Usually they cost more than $4,000 installed. Do they realize the cost of barn cleaners, silos, equipment needed for harvesting winter feed, the cost of maintaining a high-producing herd, and all the incidental costs of labour, if the farmer is fortunate enough to be able to hire any labour?

The method of paying this subsidy may seem to be a small consideration but over the last year it has become a bone of contention and I hope that this year there will be an improvement. I have received hundreds of letters from constituents who have either missed a payment or have received no payment at all, or have received one payment and missed the next, and so on. I know this sort of thing can happen in any scheme of this kind, but it should certainly not happen on the scale it has. After a year I am still receiving pleas from dairymen in my area asking me to please find out what has happened to their subsidy. I know that neither the minister nor the department is trying to hold up this money and would not think of doing so. They know it has to be paid and they are glad to pay it.

• (4:50 p.m.)

But the method of payment is awkward. Surely it should have been straightened out by now. I hope that this year there will not be any trouble with these payments. We should ask ourselves this question: Do we want corporations controlling our agricultural land? If this comes about, and it will unless we do something about it, then we can expect a real increase in the price of food to the consumer.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, there is a general feeling abroad in Canada that because western Canada had a magnificent crop last year all our agricultural problems have been solved. I want to dispel that idea immediately. There are many spotty districts in northeastern Alberta particularly where crops have been almost non-existent. This has occurred in streaks. It is as though a hail storm had gone through the area, with one farmer obtaining a magnificent crop and another only half a mile away being hailed out, in addition to all the other unfortunate things that can happen to farmers. Northeastern Alberta has been badly hit. Prairie farm assistance inspectors used to be familiar with the districts they worked in and the local problems and they gave relief to the farmers. That has changed. P.F.A. inspections are faulty when the inspectors come from outside the province. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will give this matter his personal attention. The region to which I refer is a designated area.

I suppose that the Minister of Agriculture faces problems with respect to increasing industry in that area, as does the Minister of Industry. I hope that in 1967 these two departments will get together, end interdepartmental competition and let the right hand know what the left hand is doing. Inasmuch as the area is a designated one for industry and a depressed one for agriculture in some places, I ask the ministers involved to get together and work out plans. I know it is difficult for the Minister of Industry or the Minister of Agriculture, both of whom are not from the west, to discuss problems with the representatives of the great prairie area. If they do not wish to accept the recommendations of our own agricultural committee, and we have a fine one, I suggest that they talk to members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and to members of the Alberta Farmers Union, to name two organizations, to find out what the pressing needs of agriculture are in the west.

One way that western farmers can improve their lot, particularly if they have small family farms, is by developing secondary industries in the agricultural field. I can tell the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Industry that the bottleneck in developing secondary agricultural industries is capital. To set up any reasonable industry today takes research, technological know-how and risk capital. The farmers cannot find risk capital. They have not the ability to raise a sum in the neighborhood of $30,000. I suggest that the Minister of Industry get in touch with the Minister of Agriculture to try to work out some formula to meet this need. Perhaps there could be hearings before a government official of some kind to determine what the local people need. Perhaps they need a rapeseed factory to produce edible oil, perhaps a desiccating factory for alfalfa products, which is a burgeoning industry in Alberta.

The local farmers have not the capital or know how to set up such industries. The Department of Industry talks about disseminating industries among rural communities. The answer is to provide risk capital to get small secondary industries off the ground. That is one area where the government can properly step in, not in the socialistic sense, with help in research and planning by making reasonable amounts of money available. Perhaps the ceiling ought to be $50,000, the money to be made available to local people willing to contribute part of the necessary capital to develop industries which are tied in with agriculture.

Providing aid for research and planning, and also capital, would help all around. Winter employment would be assured. The small family farmer is hard put to pay for the high cost of farm machinery and farm labour. To stay on the farm he must have a secondary industry close to his home. Going to the oil fields or to the bush is not always practical but he can work as a labourer in local secondary industries tied in with agriculture.

If the minister has no faith in the agricultural committee which has made the recommendations I am making time and again, let him listen to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and to the farmers' unions and he will obtain the viewpoint of the farmers. If the minister, together with the Minister of Industry, then makes available the technical know-how and the risk capital we shall take a great step forward in agriculture.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this subject. Everything that can be done must be done to aid agriculture. We hear of the world wide population increase, which many of us have not considered seriously enough. We do not see much evidence of it in this country but it is taking place in the countries of Asia and Africa. While the population of this country remains relatively stable the population of these other countries is increasing rapidly. Half the people do not have enough to eat. This is the stark problem we face today.

An agricultural expert in the United States said the other day that he believes that by 1980 the United States will have no surplus whatsoever of farm products to export. This alarms me in view of the fact that in 1900 the world population was 1.6 billion, by 1920 had advanced to 1.8 billion, by 1940 was 2.3 billion, and in 1965, 25 years later, had reached 3.5 billion.

An hon. Member: The pill takes care of that.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Rynard: An hon. member has said that the pill will take care of the situation. That is probably true in part for Canada which has only a very small part of the world population. The pill will have no effect in Asia and Africa, where two-thirds of the people of the world live, for a good many years. It is expected that the world population will reach six or seven billion by the year 2,000. Fifty per cent of the people in those countries today do not have enough to eat and the types of food they eat are of poor quality. It is natural to suppose that as the living standards of these people improve, and we all hope they will, not only more food but a better type of food will be demanded.

Why is the population increasing so swiftly? The reason is that up to 1900 advances in medical science had not affected the countries of Africa and the Far East. Indeed, they had hardly affected the populations of Europe and North America. Science and medical skill have made it possible for vastly greater numbers of children to survive their first year—always a dangerous period—to reach adulthood and in turn to reproduce themselves.

What can be done about this situation? Let us look at it. At the turn of this century 75 per cent of the population of Canada worked directly in agriculture. If we look at the picture today we find that the figure is an alarming 10 per cent and would probably be nearer 8 per cent if allowance were made for those working part time or moonlighting. Consider the capital which is required by farmers today. Figures show that for every farm worker in the United States a capital expenditure of $35,000 is involved. In the industrial, field the amount is only $25,000. Here we find a disparity of $10,000 right off the bat. It is obvious that something must be done to help provide capital for those who are engaged in farming.

Once the buying power of the primary producer is interfered with the effect is felt in the urban areas and in the industrial field because the farmer buys trucks, uses farm machinery, uses oil and gas and consumes food himself. He is a taxpayer and he is an employer of labour. I often wonder what this country would have done without the billion dollars derived from wheat sales, the largest single item produced by the farmers of this country.

What are the returns which these people reap for the work they do? I find that today there is nowhere in the world, with the exception of the United States, where people are as well and as cheaply fed as Canadians are. I am sure that we as a parliament should take every step open to us, to ensure the continuance of an ample food supply at a price our people can afford. But let us remember that if there are not enough primary producers, somebody else must take over the farms. The position was well set out by one of the leading dairy farmers of Ontario; in fact, he is internationally known. I refer to Mr. George McLaughlin who operates Donrobin Farm near Beaverton. This is what is said about him:

> A quiet-spoken, modest-mannered man, looking more like a metropolitan businessman than the operator of the well-known model farm, "Dunrobin" near Beaverton that he is, made one of the most telling points on behalf of his fellow farmers that the general public has yet heard. Speaking at the annual rural appreciation luncheon of the Rotary Club to a mixed audience of businessmen and farmers, George McLaughlin, noted agriculturist and vice-president of the Dairy Farmers of Canada, noted that Canadians ate better, and at less cost, than any other people on earth.
> He pointed out, however, that all this remarkable feat was achieved at the direct expense of the farmer, whose income, in relation to his costs, had declined steadily until it was now 30 per cent lower than it had been in 1949. In the same period, the figure for his fellow worker in industry had risen no less than 54 per cent.

I do not believe the people of Canada generally want this inequality to continue. I do not believe we are that type of people. Mr. McLaughlin went on to point out:

> —this spread of 84 per cent represented a subsidization of the economy by the farmer—"the biggest subsidy in Canadian history."
> For while Canada prided itself on the low cost and the variety of food offered its consumers, it accorded its agriculture the lowest measure of government support of any country in the western world.

I repeat that statement because I think it is worth noting—"the lowest measure of government support of any country in the western world". Then Mr. McLaughlin says: "The Canadian farmer has been able to survive only through a number of expedients". Money which should have been used for capital purposes has gone to pay current expenses.

If we were to visit the farms of Canada today I am sure we would find that the average age of those who are operating them is increasing every year. What is to happen to these farms in the future? Will they be owned by dairies or food processing companies or grocery chains which will be able to set prices at whatever levels they wish and thus obtain the fair return for their labour which has been denied to Canadian farmers?

If the present trend continues we shall lose our export market which has proved a valuable adjunct to our economy in the past. Today we are shipping thousands of Holstein cattle round the world at high prices to increase the value of breeding stock. We possess some of the finest breeding stock in the world and we are proud of it. It has been a lucrative trade and one which has done a tremendous amount to advertise Canada in countries abroad. It has been made possible because our cattle have proved themselves to be of first quality as milk producers and as a source of beef as well.

When I look at the cattle sales advertized in the Holstein-Friesian Journal and in the journals of the other breeds I have grave doubts about the future of this trade. The very man who made the speech to which I have referred, one of the foremost and best known dairy farmers in Canada, is holding a sale this fall and going out of the dairy cattle business. The McCaigues of Glen Afton Farm, Alliston, outstanding second generation breeders, are holding a sale in May. These are people who have built up this flourishing export business from its very foundations with the result that we have been able to sell our cattle throughout the world.

The hon. member for Wetaskawin suggested that the increase in the price for milk was too little. Some hon. members may consider it a fair increase, but really how much of an increase is it when one considers the cost of labour and farm machinery and the disparity between what the farmer is getting and what the man who works in industry is getting? This disparity has brought a man like George McLaughlin to the point where he thinks he can earn a far better living by getting out of the dairy industry. No one doubts that he has ability and it is a fact that he will make a better living outside the industry.

This whole problem strikes right at the roots of Canada because for every farmer who is a primary producer three other people handle his products after they leave the farm.

Not only that, the farmer buys machinery and equipment manufactured by industrial workers in the urban centres. If we are to maintain employment and keep industry viable there must be a better deal for the farmers.

Subsidies are not the answer. They are only a stopgap measure. Parliament and the government will have to come up with a better answer. Something must be done or else we on this continent will suffer from a shortage of food, not to mention the poor people in the Far East and Africa who are improperly fed, with 50 per cent of them underfed at the present time. Farmers must be allowed to reap the rewards of their work. We provide incentives to industry in the form of capital investment in depressed areas and should do the same for the farmer. Food is more essential than machinery or equipment.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to express my disappointment at the announcement made today by the Minister of Agriculture concerning the subsidy paid to milk producers. My concern is based on the fact that owing to geography many milk producers in my area have to pay more for machinery and machine parts. Their problem is accentuated. I am concerned about the 50,000 milk producers in the province of Quebec. Their industry is dwindling. It is being chipped away and they can foresee its disappearance and the disappearance of their livelihood.

The minister referred to the 33⅓ per cent increase in the total amount of subsidy. This does not impress me because reference to an increase on a percentage basis really does not mean too much. It is applied to the present situation in the industry. We have started off in the wrong direction because even if we paid 50 per cent, 75 per cent or 100 per cent more subsidy it would only mean we would have more people producing milk and selling milk. We have to look at the broader aspect of the whole question to discover how we can do justice to the farmer.

At present the farmer sees the money he has set aside as depreciation on equipment dwindling and eroding. In a few years time he will not have money to replace his equipment. In a few years he will be out of business and his departure will be a grave loss to one of our basic industries.

Unfortunately I could not be here yesterday when the Quebec farmers congregated in Ottawa, because I was undergoing medical treatment in Montreal. However, I feel sorry for them. They were given a build-up which led them to believe they were going to get the price of $5.10 per hundredweight that they sought, the minimum amount on which they can live and secure a fair return for their investment and labour. They have now been let down and let down seriously.

No one in this house need look upon himself as a great defender of the farmer. We are all concerned about the dairy producers and other farmers. We all have to find some means by which we can cure the problem with which they are faced from year to year. In the last three throne speech debates we heard how deeply concerned the government was about the dairy farmer and farmers in general. But all that has been done has been nothing but patchwork. There has been an average increase in the milk subsidy of 10 per cent per year. The increase has done no more than to offset the increased cost of production which in many cases has been more than 10 per cent. The farmer's capital is being eroded and also the money which he has set aside by way of depreciation to replace his equipment. There is danger of the total disappearance of this vital industry.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I believe the increase will be a serious disappointment to all dairy farmers. When I think of all those who are defenders of the dairy producers in the province of Quebec I realize it is not one party alone that is defending them. When the former member for Nicolet-Yamaska was in this house he constantly worried about the dairy producers. In the position he now occupies in his province he is following the same policy of having a deep concern for these producers. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot also expressed concern about the dairy farmer. I do not believe our mandate is being fulfilled when there is an announcement such as that made by the minister today. It will be a serious disappointment to the farmers. It may also contribute to the total disappearance of the dairy industry in this country. How can we cure the problems if all we do is carry out a patchwork job as one would on a pair of trousers? One of these days the trousers will rot away and we will not be able to attach a patch to them.

We should look for other policies. Instead of following the policy of holding farmers to the position they are in today we should look for a policy which will give them the security they need so they will feel equal to those who are engaged in other industries. The farmer should be able to receive the same remuneration for his hours of labour as is received by those engaged in other industries. Once we concern ourselves with the problem of seeing that the farmer is equal we will have begun to do something to help bring this industry up to the level of other industries in this country. We have the right to criticize but we also must find a solution to some of these problems. If we followed the practice being carried out by Ontario and Quebec, which have committees to study industries, we would know where the problem lies and would be able to recommend a solution to this problem to the recently created national dairy council. In this way we could start to do something for the dairy farmers of this country. If we were to study this matter properly I am sure we would be able to do something which would bring about an increase in the production of milk. Through an advisory board and researchers we would be able to find outlets for our production.

Because of my concern for the welfare of these farmers I must take exception to the proposal made today by the minister. I do not believe it will advance the welfare of the milk producers. I hope the government will realize immediately that the action they are taking will not be sufficient. I hope the minister and the government will reconsider the policy announced today.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will forgo for the time being the opportunity to speak.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to add a few words on this problem which faces the dairy producers at this time, not only those in Quebec and Ontario but all across Canada.

If we remember correctly—and the minister does—the milk producers asked for a minimum of $5 per hundredweight or $5.10, including the 10 cents for the export premium. It is that amount of $5.10 that the Quebec dairy producers asked for officially yesterday when they came 1,000 strong to meet the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) as well as the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, the hon. member for the Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauvé), and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) as well as the Quebec members.

Milk producers in the province of Quebec asked the federal government for a subsidy of $1.40 per hundredweight of milk and requested that the price per hundredweight paid by the dairy be raised to $3.60, which made a minimum of $5 in all.

The first thing to be noticed about this request, Mr. Chairman, is that the dairy producers talked of a minimum of $5.10 per hundredweight of milk, whereas last year the farmers received an average—"average" was the word used—$4 per hundredweight of milk. This year, after one year's experience, the farmers are talking of a "minimum" instead of an "average" per hundredweight of milk with a fat content of 3.5 per cent.

The minister did not think it advisable to rectify this first request of the farmers. There is still talk of an "average" instead of a minimum price per hundredweight of milk. We know that after this average price was granted last year, instead of a minimum price, many farmers got $3.70 or $3.75 instead of $4 per hundredweight.

The minister announces an 85 cent raise, bringing the subsidy to $1.21. The farmers had asked for $1.40. But while the minister announces that the subsidy will now be set at $1.20 per hundredweight of milk, the farmer will have to pay 10 cents for exportation, which means that the government subsidy will, in fact, amount to $1.11 per hundredweight of milk with a fat content at 3.5 per cent.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, to continue my remarks on the minister's announcement, the minister says that the Canadian Dairy Commission of recent creation, will be responsible in cooperation with the provincial marketing boards, for making sure that the farmer gets $4.75 when the $1.21 grant is paid.

It might thus be useful to remark that this $4.75 price will not remain stationary. First of all, 10 cents will be taken off for the export premium and, then, the Canadian Dairy Commission will have to get the provincial marketing boards to increase the price of butter, cheese and casein to such a level that dairies can afford to pay farmers $3.54 per hundredweight. Today, we know they give something like $3, and often less—

Mr. Choquette: Not the dairies. There is no question of dairies here. The hon. member did not understand a thing.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, these are dairies or processing plants because some dairies also produce cheese and butter. If they do, then they use what is called manufacturing milk and not fluid milk. But that is another story.

I believe the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) will have to recognize that he does not yet understand the problem. He imagines that dairies do not buy manufacturing milk while in fact many do when, for instance, they make butter, which is what dairies can make or cheese, which they do make and when milk is processed to make ice cream, which dairies do also. Then, dairies use manufacturing milk to transform it into butter, cheese, cream or ice cream.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the dairies or the butter industry, or both, must be able to pay $3.54 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk, plus the subsidy of $1.21 paid by the federal government, totalling $4.75, less the 10 cents export premium, that is $4.65.

But who tells us, Mr. Chairman, that provincial marketing boards see to it that $3.54 per hundredweight is paid? There again, the minister does not want to assert it. What is wrong in this whole policy is that there are too many different agencies which can affect the price of the hundredweight of milk.

For instance, if a dairy producer delivers fluid milk to the dairy, that is determined by a quota, and the amount over his quota, less a percentage of 20 per cent will be at the level of manufacturing milk, but for the 20 per cent surplus, the producer does not have a minimum price. If the dairy decides to buy it at $2, $2.25 or $2.50 per hundredweight, the minimum amount received by the farmer for his milk will be reduced by that amount, and that is where the industrial producers, the buyers of fluid milk and the dairies can make their profits.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that there are too many agencies deciding on the prices. There are provincial and federal agencies responsible for the milk delivered by the farmer as fluid or manufacturing milk.

For instance, when the farmer arrives at the dairy to deliver fluid milk, the amount over his quota—incidentally this quota is not always enforced—the surplus of 20 per cent—and even over 20 per cent—for which there is no minimum price policy, does not always yield the support price which should be paid by the dairy.

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the Minister of Agriculture, who was seconded yesterday by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, as well as several others, could not get the cabinet to agree to $1.50 increase in the subsidy. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) was also one of them. I am surprised that they were unable to get the cabinet to grant $1.40 per hundredweight of milk. Because yesterday, the minister actually told Quebec farmers who came to see him: your latest march will help and support us in bringing your claims before the cabinet and will give more weight to them.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) was also there yesterday. He was much more attentive than today; he is speaking much louder than the standing orders entitle him to do, so that I hear him more than I hear myself. And this has been going on for about 10 minutes.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I am surprised to see that the five ministers who were there, after having witnessed that show of force by the Quebec farmers, have not been in position to influence the cabinet to obtain that subsidy of $1.40 per hundredweight of milk. Not long ago, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, the member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien), stated that the French Canadian ministers had the right of veto in the cabinet. Nobody disputed that fact.

Finally, there were many French Canadian ministers at the meeting of the C.F.U. yesterday afternoon. They all said and claimed that they would make every effort to help answer the farmers' wishes, namely this $5 per hundredweight of milk. How is it, Mr. Chairman, that those five ministers who attended the meeting, and all those other members who committed themselves to support the case of the farmers before the whole cabinet, did not succeed on their behalf?

Mr. Choquette: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Grégoire: Of course.

Mr. Choquette: Does the hon. member know that according to the new dairy policy those producers receive an additional $30 million? What is it, if not a gain?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, of course it is a gain. But the president of the C.F.U., Mr. Sorel, explained to the minister yesterday that in the past farmers obtained a mere pittance, and whenever they did gain anything at all, the cost of living or the production cost would increase even more, so that although they received an additional 15 or 20 cents in subsidies they were not any better off because the cost of milk production rose faster than the prices they could set for their product. That is what the president of the C.F.U. was complaining about. And his argument was very well taken.

Now, this year, to catch up with the cost of living, to permit milk producers to operate at some profit and no longer at a loss, and to enable them to increase their productivity, they will get $5.10 per hundredweight for milk but, in fact, they will barely get $3.65 once they have paid the 10 per cent export premium.

Mr. Chairman, the differential is 45 cents. What they get is not enough to catch up with the rise in the costs of production. And that is important, as was explained yesterday by the president of the C.F.U. who stated that with a grant of less than $5.10 per hundredweight farmers cannot catch up with the costs of production and increase their farms' productivity. Even if they were granted $30 million the increase in production costs was even greater. And that is what should be borne in mind.

Mr. Choquette: Is the hon. member aware that the Livestock Feed Board will soon take up its duties which will be precisely to prevent production costs of mill-feed, for example, to reach a prohibitive level.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman I am quite willing to admit that, and that will likely correct many ills in the future, and that would please me. But, there is something else, this Livestock Feed Board is not operating yet, and the feed prices have already increased. It is a hard fact and this explains the high production cost and why the milk producers are asking $5.10 per hundredweight. If, in the future, it were possible to prevent the feed prices from rising, so much the better; in that case the farmers would not have to keep coming back to parliament to ask for subsidy increases.

Of course, the farmers would be quite satisfied if they no longer had to come to Ottawa to beg for subsidies. But they have to do it, because production costs are rising. And if this increase ever stops, the farmers will be most happy not to have to beg for a raise in the federal subsidies. But the price of feed grain has increased and we are now confronted with the following situation: the commission has perhaps not done its duty in the past, and the price of grain has increased, as well as the price of tractors, of gasoline and production costs. Consequently, the producer of milk now needs $5.10 per hundredweight at least to meet those production costs and to increase his productivity.

This must be settled, Mr. Chairman. And the amount granted today by the minister will not be sufficient to enable farmers and milk producers to meet present conditions, because that small subsidy is lower than the percentage increase of production costs during the past year, and this is serious. Subsidies are not being raised at the same rate as production costs have increased. This was what farmers and milk producers requested and what the government refused.

As I said earlier, I heard the ministers say that they would do everything possible to obtain from the cabinet $5.10 per hundredweight of milk.

We heard last week the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche, state that the French Canadian ministers had the right of veto in the cabinet. Then, could we conclude that the French Canadian ministers have not really pleaded the case of Quebec farmers with the cabinet? It is the Minister of Agriculture who introduced his colleagues from the cabinet to the members of the U.C.C. and, introducing the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) to the farmers, he did not say this: "Now I introduce the Minister of Manpower and Immigration." Not at all. He said this: "I introduce the Quebec leader of our party". That is how he introduced him: "The leader of our political party in Quebec".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: The Minister of Agriculture introduced the Minister of Labour and Immigration as follows: "I introduce now the leader of our party in Quebec."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: Well, then, the Minister of Agriculture says: Since he is the leader of our party in Quebec, he will see to it that the Quebec people get what they ask for. That other minister was introduced as the leader of the party in Quebec, but obviously it did not mean much because he, with the four other Quebec ministers, plus all the Quebec members, did not succeed in getting what the Quebec milk producers asked for. Obviously, they were not very influential.

Mr. Choquette: Thirty millions, that is a lot.

Mr. Grégoire: The member for Lotbinière says: Thirty millions, that is a lot. Even then, it is not enough to compensate for the increase in production costs on the farm, and that is what counts. Even if you granted subsidies of $40 million, if within the same year production costs went up by $60 million, the farmers would be no better off. That is what the Minister of Agriculture and the member for Lotbinière must understand. Thirty millions is not an absolute figure; nor is the $5 the farmers are requesting. That figure was based on the increase in production costs, and if it doubles again, $75 million will be needed and not $30 million. The $75 million would not be worth then more than $30 million, since production costs would have absorbed the effect of the $30 million.

Mr. Choquette: Just one question and that will be the last one I ask the hon. member. First, I contest those figures; those are unfounded assertions. However, I ask him this question. Does he not agree that there is not only one level of government that must take action to prevent the rise in the cost of production? Other governments must take their responsibilities.

Mr. Grégoire: This is obvious, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: This matter does not come under the federal government only.

Mr. Grégoire: It is for the federal government to announce the policy on manufacturing milk because it comes under its jurisdiction. The provinces are responsible for fluid milk, the federal government for manufacturing milk. We are now concerned with manufacturing milk because the Quebec minister of agriculture decided to grant a subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight of manufacturing milk, whereas the federal government asked for this subsidy to be abolished and said: We are going to assume responsibility for what has to do with manufacturing milk. So, the federal Minister of Agriculture assumed responsibility for manufacturing milk on behalf of the federal government. The production cost of manufacturing milk and fluid milk has gone up. And if it did—

Mr. Choquette: Remember that Quebec increased the sales tax to 8 per cent. The federal government is not to blame.

Mr. Grégoire: Quebec increased its tax by 2 per cent; Ottawa increased its sales tax by 1 per cent. One levies a tax of 8 per cent, the other a tax of 12 per cent. If the hon. member for Lotbinière wants to pursue this discussion and make of it a matter of petty politics between Quebec and Ottawa, I could follow him on that field. But I will not do it and I will not play politics at the expense of the farmers and the dairy producers. I will leave that to the hon. member for Lotbinière.

But one thing remains, Mr. Chairman. Even if there is a flaw in the system, even if there are faults in our system on account of which our farmers are caught between two governments and do not know where to go, if our farmers and our dairy producers are taxed by two governments instead of one and if it were better for them to have only one government, and they chose the Quebec government, one thing remains, Mr. Chairman, namely that at the present time we are still living in Canada, that the federal government is taxing the people in Quebec, the dairy farmers like the others, that it has responsibilities towards the dairy producers, that the federal Minister of Agriculture chose to have jurisdiction over manufacturing milk and left to the provinces jurisdiction over fluid milk, the minister should at least fulfill his duties. One of them was to take into consideration the representations made by the representatives of the dairy producers when they were received by the minister and hon. members yesterday on parliament hill.

The dairy farmers came to explain their problems to us in a very simple, clear and concise manner. They said: At the present time, the farmers have the lowest standard of living of all the social classes in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture cannot deny that. The dairy producers said: The farmers' production cost has increased more than that of any other group. The Minister of Agriculture cannot deny that. And the farmers said: What we want is not to become millionaires but at least to be able to face increases in production costs and have a little money to increase the productivity of our land and improve our production. The minister cannot deny that either because he was there when the dairy farmers said it. And the farmers, the dairy producers said: To reach those objectives we need $5.10 per hundredweight of milk. It seems to me that the reasons given by the president and the vice presidents of the C.F.U. and the president of the Quebec Association of Dairy Producers were clear and convincing. Those farmers came to talk to us not as businessmen but as people who like their farms, their land, their work. They work from early morning until late at night; their income is the lowest although they work the longest hours of all Canadian citizens.

It was moving to hear the president of the Catholic Farmers Union tell us: If we want to make $2,000, $2,200, $2,400 a year, our wives and children must work without pay, and then we have an income which, for one person alone, ranks amongst the lowest in Canada.

Are the farmers' requests exaggerated, Mr. Chairman? Not in the least. They were not asking for extravagant incomes; they were merely asking for enough to live on their farms, before they have to leave them for lack of sufficient income to make a decent living. That is what the farmers came to ask. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) will agree with me that when they asked $5.10 per hundredweight of milk, they were not asking for salaries of $5,000 or $6,000 a year. They were asking for the minimum to allow them to live decently on their farms. The member for Lotbinière has farmers in his district. Is he going to tell me that $5.10 per hundredweight of milk would make those farmers richer than our city workers? Never. It would give them an even lower standard of living than urban workers, teachers, dealers or other classes of society.

The request of dairy farmers from Lotbinière country and elsewhere was not excessive. The hon. member for Lotbinière knows that they were not being unreasonable in asking $5.10 per hundredweight of milk so as to be able to meet their production costs, increase their productivity and modernize their equipment.

When I see those who object to the farmers' claims, when farmers are probably the group which is most neglected by the federal government, and when I make a comparison with federal subsidies for gold production of between $8 and $10 an ounce. The federal government pays from $8 to $10 to gold mines for every ounce of gold produced. This makes $16,000 per hundredweight of gold. Yet, when the farmers ask for $1.40 per hundredweight of milk, some people rush in to defend the government policy.

I state, Mr. Chairman, that if all of us in this house were to agree unanimously to try at least once, to meet the demands of farmers, whether from Quebec and Ontario or throughout Canada, and give them $5,10 per hundredweight of milk and if we could count on the support of all members approached yesterday by Quebec and Ontario farmers, then, the Minister of Agriculture would have to recognize that this is not an excessive but a minimum demand.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The farmer certainly did not receive the best treatment in the past from either society or the government. I think it is time the Minister of Agriculture thought about that, and I would ask him, Mr. Chairman, to set himself a goal, either in the form of subsidies, by fixing a minimum price for milk, butter, cream, cheese, casein and so forth, or by giving the farmer $5.10 per hundredweight of milk.

I may be told that this would raise the price of milk, butter, and cheese. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the new Canadian Dairy Commission were willing to assume its responsibilities and eliminate all sorts of intermediaries between the milk producer and the retailer, even the savings which would result from this would make it possible to give the farmer $5.10 per hundredweight of milk without raising consumer prices.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge the minister to reconsider his position in that respect. And I make a special appeal to all Quebec members who have had the opportunity yesterday to hear valid and convincing arguments from the representatives of the Quebec dairy producers. All those who were there yesterday and who are still here today know that the arguments were most convincing. And all hon. members who are here and who have farmers in their riding, know that the farmers are far from being the class best dealt with by the government, nor the most affluent one.

Well, if we were, for once, unanimous in claiming these $5.10 per hundredweight—I am not speaking of subsidies or anything else;

I am only asking a minimum of $5.10 per hundredweight of milk for the farmers—well, if we were all in agreement on that point, if the Minister of Agriculture and all the members of the cabinet saw that all the members, in every corner of the house, were unanimously requesting it, I am convinced the cabinet would reconsider the matter and adjust the budget so that farmers would receive $5.10 per hundredweight of milk.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I am making an appeal for unanimity in this regard. I am convinced the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) is in constant contact with the farmers in his riding. He asked some questions earlier on behalf of his Liberal colleagues. I know he goes and sees the farmers of his riding, that he takes their interests at heart, that he knows their problems and that he really wants—

The Chairman: Order.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, may I propose that progress be reported for the purpose of continuing to sit after six o'clock?

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit later today or at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Later today.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon):

That pursuant to standing order 6(2) this house continue to sit after six o'clock p.m.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister whether he has any idea how long it will take to finish what he has in mind?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I understand that consideration of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture will not take very long but that there are other matters involving policy which can be dealt with on interim supply. I am in the hands of the committee which will have to decide under what item to take up these matters but it seems to me that since they involve policy it may be better to discuss them on interim supply. It is my understanding that this should take about an hour and a half.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

17g. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of estimates, $94,387,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take this opportunity to say a few words about the dairy industry and the announcement made this afternoon by the minister.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we all know that agriculture is in a state of stagnation. In fact, farmers are making representations and putting pressure on the federal parliament, the Quebec parliament and even the parliaments of every province to improve their situation.

The agricultural situation is more serious than we think. Our agriculture is in a dreadful state of stagnation, as those who have eyes can see. If the farmers are taking so many steps, it is because our agriculture is going into bankruptcy. We must make the required efforts if we want to rehabilitate agriculture.

Agriculture must be rehabilitated because it is the foundation of society. It is the very foundation on which rests our whole economy.

So, Mr. Chairman, small measures or small subsidies, dispensed with a dropper, will not solve our agricultural problem.

Once and for all, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance and the whole Canadian economy must get together to rehabilitate agriculture because it is run down, it is stagnating, it can barely survive. The young are leaving the farm, they cannot see any future in it, any way of making a living out of it, the possibility of raising a family. They want to live like the others. They want to have reasonable working hours and nobody can blame them.

Agriculture is in a state of stagnation. In various parishes of my riding, in the past ten years, 70 per cent of the farmers have left their farm.

In one small parish, comprising approximately sixty farmers, 13 farmers left their farm during the same week. This has been happening everywhere for the past several months.

It can be truly said that agriculture is in a state of stagnation. Farmers are surely justified in expressing their views and in making their plight known to the government.

It is not the fault of the farmers, but of the greatest economic factor, the financial factor. The financial system has driven farmers into debt, together with farm loans.

Farm loans were supposed to save agriculture as a whole, but it was not saved. It was sunk and it floundered. The further ahead we go, the deeper the farmer goes into the hole. This results from several economic factors of our system, which is upside down.

The system has to be corrected. When we talk about reforming the system, we are taken for cranks, for ignorant people, we are taken for people who have never been to university. But why did the intelligent people who went to university bring ruin upon us? Why did they lead us into our present situation, where nobody can live reasonably any more in a country overflowing with wealth?

The problem, Mr. Chairman, is that farmers produce below cost. That is why they need farm loans. When you produce below cost, you can neither repay your loans nor modernize your farm.

When a farmer is given a loan, he is not given enough to turn his farm into an economically worthwhile enterprise. He is given about half of what he needs, or three quarters, and he never gets the balance. And with that, he cannot enlarge his property; he cannot neither improve his land nor his farm buildings; he cannot improve his machinery. He does not have enough of one farm loan, because it is too small.

The farmer who needs $20,000 is loaned $12,000, $13,000, $10,000 approximately. There is one of the problems. If you want to lend money to farmers, if you want to improve agriculture, lend enough to enable it to recover. Or else allow them to make profits, and then farm loans will not be needed. A great number of farmers will then be able to do without the various farm loans or other bank loans granted at excessive interest rates. They had to borrow because they were not making any profit, and the minister knows it.

Therefore, farmers are in a bad way and prices keep going up. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) says the government is doing much for the farmers, but he turned a deaf ear to what was said yesterday, for instance. The farmer needs a lot of equipment: a car, a truck, a tractor and various farm equipment. He also needs buildings and all kinds of materials and implements. The farmer is one of the biggest consumers in Canada, for he needs all sorts of things in various fields.

The farmer keeps on buying things while the government keeps on raising taxes and interest rates. Therefore, the way things are going, economically the farmer is going from bad to worse. When a farmer needs some instruments or materials to improve or build installations, he has to pay the 11 per cent tax, the 12 per cent tax, school and municipal taxes. The cost of living is rising for farmers just as for other people, and their profits are not sufficient to balance all those increases in the cost of living.

I shall not enter into details, knowing that $90 million is considered a prohibitive amount, for farming. Everyone is shocked at the thought we spend billions for defence, feeling it is nothing. And when it is not enough, supplementary budgets are brought down for defence. But when it comes to forming the very foundation of our society, of the economy of the entire nation, we do not move. Subtract $50 million from the $90 million for management, and you will get $40 million for effective assistance to farming. That is what is done for farming, and allegedly it is not possible to do more. It is stated that substantial amounts are given and everything is done for farming, but nothing is done. It is like a drop of water in the ocean. Ninety million.

I suggest that farmers would be better off with nothing at all. They would give up sooner and the government would not be compelled to squander that money with no avail. When funds are invested somewhere, they are supposed to yield profits in the long run, to improve something. But when insufficient funds are granted to improve conditions, it would be better not to give any.

Then, I maintain that the amount asked by farmers, namely, $5.10 per hundredweight of milk, is not too high, that it is not even sufficient. They would need $8 per hundredweight in order to make profits or pay off their debts; it is not with $5 per hundredweight that they will do it.

I say to the minister that within a year, even if he gives the farmers $5 per hundredweight, they will still be in a very difficult position because the cost of living will have continued to rise.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

What must be done is to stop the rise in the price of farm equipment and machinery, of building materials and the rise of interest rates. Then, farmers and all other classes of society would enjoy a decent living in such a rich country.

The farmers are ready to produce as much as is needed. But the prices are not adequately balanced. Right now, we find a decline in the budget. A great number of farmers of my area, as everywhere else in the country, have set up an organization to produce pork. And now, as we say, they are played a low trick. Hog prices are down and once again people who made high expenditures can no longer make both ends meet. Anything related to agriculture is discouraged. It is the same in all areas. When the farmer manages to produce beef, the same thing happens. If he manages to produce milk, he faces the same situation. It is the same thing in all agricultural sectors. The farmer cannot even set his price, when he has merchandise to sell, for it is the dealer who comes to him and says: I'll give you so much for your products. The farmer cannot charge his own price, though he knows that the price offered to him is lower than his production cost. He needs money so much that quite often, he sells under cost.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is the government's duty as well as that of the Minister of Agriculture to submit a true master plan, a true reform of agriculture with all the millions of dollars that will be needed to give it the expansion and the vitality which will enable it to play its role and make it possible for the farmers to stay on their land, for those who are qualified to go into farming and do something they like for a living.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, wonders will happen in the field of agriculture and the millions of dollars spent for its development will be counterblanced this time by the millions of dollars which will find their way into the Canadian economy. Today we are not always sure to recuperate the millions of dollars allocated to agriculture because when farmers leave their land they forget about their farm loan at the same time and the governments get stuck with the abandoned land.

One must not imagine, Mr. Chairman, that the Quebec government has not on hand several pieces of land that it has been compelled to take over. Statistics show that very few federal farm loans have been granted in the province of Quebec. There are a few, but, for the most part, the farm loans have been made by the provincial government, since the latter are a little more advantageous than the federal ones. That is why, almost all farmers have taken advantage of the provincial farm loans. But, one should go and see how many pieces of land the provincial government has on hand at this time, because it has been unable to sell them.

When a farmer who has worked all his life to build a farm worth $25,000, $30,000, $40,000 or $50,000, wants to sell his land because he is too old, he cannot even give it away. Then, he has worked all his life for nothing. And that is what the young people refuse to do. That is the reason why the young people do not want to stay on the farms, because farming is in a frightening state of stagnation. We have to get it out of the doldrums and, in order to do that, the hon. minister has a lot of studies to undertake.

Even as individual members, we must assume our responsibility in this house. It is not simply that of the Minister of Agriculture but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), the officials in every department and all the members must assume their responsibilities with regard to what is happening in agriculture, because the conditions are not easy. In fact, the problem is far more serious than we seem to realize.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not say any more, although I would still have quite a lot to say about agriculture. However, I have said enough to show you that farming calls for reform.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture?

• (6:10 p.m.)

[English]

I would ask a question of the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell me if the price of $4.75 per hundredweight will be a minimum or an average price?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might take a moment to answer several questions that hon. members have asked.

First of all I wish to commend the hon. member for Simcoe East for his responsible and pertinent speech about the problems of farmers generally across the country, the cost-price squeeze they face and the image they sometimes have with those in urban centres. By some it is thought that the farmers are a burden on the rest of the taxpayers or in some way are imposing on the rest of the taxpayers.

The statistics the hon. member drew to our attention were meaningful and pertinent, particularly when one considers that a decade ago the average Canadian spent some 28 per cent of his income on food while today he spends only 20 per cent. That statistic, more clearly than any words of mine, shows that farmers by their productivity and efficiency have contributed to the well-being of the rest of the people. But they have failed to share to as great an extent as other citizens in the booming economy and increasing economic opportunity in our country. All of us concerned with the well-being of the agricultural community must bear this in mind. We must do what we can to improve the lot of the farm community.

When we consider how proud we are of the efficiency of our industrial sector, which in this age of automation and rapidly moving technology has moved ahead extremely quickly, I wonder whether we have paid enough homage to our farmers and to their increased productivity. Statistics I have show that industrial productivity per industrial worker has gone up by approximately 2.6 per cent per annum over the past decade. During the same period the increased productivity of the individual agriculturalist, the individual farmer across the country, has gone up by over 5 per cent per annum, almost twice the increase for industrial workers. The increased productivity of the farmer is the main reason for our higher standard of living. We continue to spend less of our income on food and we have more left over for other amenities, some even the luxuries of life. I thought the hon. member for Simcoe East drew these facts to our attention forcibly.

There is a heavy onus on us, conducting the business of the country in this house, to see that the farmer continues to share equitably in the increased wealth available in this country. The problem is not simple. At the beginning of the second world war about 30 per cent of Canadians were engaged in agriculture. Today only 11 per cent of Canadians are engaged in agricultural production. The economists tell us that within a decade between 5 and 6 per cent of Canadians only will be producing the food for the rest of us. That figure enables us to see the nature of the problem.

The agricultural community is becoming more efficient. Production units are becoming larger. Yet agricultural problems remain grave and difficult. I have found that these problems are not pertinent to Canada only but are generic problems facing the entire agricultural industry. From my studies I have found that the higher the standard of living is in any country, the fewer are the people producing that country's food. All those countries that I have studied, I find, suffer from the inherent problem that fewer, more efficient farmers assume the responsibility for feeding the rest of the population which is moving largely to the cities and the industrial sector. The problem in all these lands is that the farmer receives an inadequate income when it is compared with that of the industrial population. In all countries this is a major concern. Recently it was demonstrated by a major agricultural study undertaken by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development that in countries that were becoming largely industrialized more efficient and larger farm units were feeding the rest of the population.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, most of us agree with what the minister is saying, but I express the hope that he is not opening a debate that will take considerable time.

Mr. Grégoire: I was hoping the minister would answer my question but he is taking a long detour.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member for Lapointe thinks he is the only member in this house; he has often left that impression. Many other hon. members have asked questions and it is incumbent on me to try to answer them as best I can.

The hon. member for Acadia raised some points. He complained that I was not in the house for part of the time when he was making his remarks. I think my record of attendance here is certainly the equal of his; in fact, it may be very superior to his. I think the hon. member labours under the impression that, though he is not here very often, if he makes enough noise when he is here he will make up for all those times when he is not here. In point of fact I was in my office attending to a prior appointment. My office is on the second floor. When the hon. member for Acadia speaks one can be anywhere in the building and hear him. One does not have to be actually in the chamber.

[Mr. Greene.]

• (6:20 p.m.)

The hon. member complained about the lack of legislative accomplishment, including agricultural accomplishments, during the past year. Possibly I should clear the record in this regard. He claims that this government has accomplished nothing whatsoever during the past year in agriculture. I would draw attention to the following items. The Farm Credit Corporation Act was amended to increase the capitalization from $24 million to $40 million and to increase the borrowing power from $600 million to $1 billion. An act was passed to establish the Canadian Dairy Commission which I suggest will prove in the future to have been a milestone in Canadian agriculture. Amendments to the Crop Insurance Act were passed increasing the federal level of payment and making the act adaptable to a greater variety of crops. Crop insurance is now available as never before all over Canada. Section 88 of the Bank Act was amended only yesterday to give a very impressive benefit to those engaged in agriculture. I claim no credit for this. The hon. member for Essex South deserves all the credit for it, I believe. But I do suggest that credit should accrue to the government side.

A farm machinery inquiry was established. Hon. members opposite had asked for this for many years and in all fairness I must say that they attempted to do something about it in 1961 and 1962 by bringing this matter before the committee. We instituted an inquiry by highly responsible people so as to allay fears and find new policies in this area. The dairy program in each of the years we have been in office has evolved continuously and shown a continuing improvement. It represents an accomplishment in which I think the government can well take pride.

With regard to the situation in agriculture generally, I think I should point out that for the first time last year farm income in Canada reached a gross figure of $4 billion. Some hon. members opposite including, I believe, the hon. member for Acadia, have indicated that farming is a diminishing industry. Some said that farmers were almost going out of business. Let me cite a few statistics. In the years from 1959 to 1963 the average production of cheddar cheese amounted to 118.7 million pounds. In 1964 it was 144.6 million pounds, in 1965, 158 million pounds, and in 1966 an estimated 167 million pounds. So there has been an increase each year. What are the figures for cheddar cheese exports? From 1959 to 1963 the average was 21.9 million pounds. In 1964 they amounted to 30.3 million pounds, in 1965 31.6 million pounds, and in 1966 an estimated 35 million pounds.

An hon. Member: What about butter?

Mr. Greene: I will come to butter. It is doing fine too. What about the price of beef about which some hon. members from the west should be concerned? Despite their lamentations and their accusations that the government has done nothing, the figures are interesting. The price of beef when they were in office in 1963 was $23.65 per hundredweight for good steers at Toronto on the basis of monthly and yearly averages. In 1964 it was $22.70. In 1965 the price was $24, in 1966 it was $26.03, in January of 1967, $27.50 and in February it was $27.50. I suggest these are improvements and that it is completely irresponsible to say there have been no improvements in the industry. These improvements have been made since we came to office.

What about eggs? In 1963 the price was 34 cents a dozen. In 1966, the average price for all grades was 40 cents a dozen. I will admit that at the present time, as some hon. members have pointed out, there are problems in connection with the supply of eggs. But I think these will be solved as the season proceeds. Even now the price is 35 cents a dozen.

What about wheat sales and wheat products? No less than 840 million bushels of wheat were produced and 600 million bushels went into export. I have a speech made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, formerly minister of agriculture, during his term of office. In it he stated that we should not foresee export sales in the future greater than 300 million bushels. This was quoted in the Western Producer and I am pleased to say I have a copy which I can show at any time to hon. members who are interested. This was the "doom and gloom" philosophy with respect to agriculture which has not been borne out under the authority of this administration.

Someone asked about dairy products. Let me cite a few statistics in this regard. Milk production in 1957 amounted to 17 billion pounds. For succeeding years the figures were as follows, in billions of pounds: 1958, 17.7; 1959, 17.6; 1960, 17.7; 1961, 18.3; 1962, 18.4; 1963, 18.4; 1964, 18.5; 1965, 18.3. Dairy milk used went up in every area except that of farm use where, of course, it has a lower commercial value. In 1952 fluid milk production amounted to 5,117 million pounds and in 1966 to 5,240 million pounds. Butter production rose from 7,099 million pounds to 7,440 million pounds in 1966 and cheese from 1,212 million to 2,039 million pounds.

I could continue reading figures into the record from now until midnight to show not only increased productivity in agriculture but an improvement in the price structure during the past three years since the government took office.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask the minister a question? Is he suggesting by these figures that the net income of farmers increased in those years?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is the minister trying to talk out these estimates?

Mr. Greene: Hon. gentlemen opposite are very prone to make speeches on the estimates which are devoid of substance and contrary to the facts under the assumption that they will get away with it and that no one will show them to be false.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If the minister opens this up he will be kept here until after Easter.

Mr. Greene: This is all right by me. This is what we are here to do, and every time false facts are placed on the record I think any hon. member has the right to correct them.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I suggest the minister should get in touch with the President of the Treasury Board and see what that minister thinks of the way in which he is conducting himself.

Mr. Greene: If the hon. member is saying it is the duty of members of this house to leave false facts on the record I will be very pleased to take his opinion in this regard.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think the minister has yet answered my question, though it was I who asked him a question originally.

Mr. Greene: If the hon. member will permit me to finish my speech I will answer questions thereafter.

Some comment has been made about dairy prices. I do not pretend for a moment that we have achieved during three years in office all we would like to achieve. But with respect to the allegations made this afternoon that there has been no progress I think it is fair to point out that when we came to office the price of manufacturing milk was $2.66.

Supply—Agriculture

The party that was responsible for a price of $2.66 for manufacturing milk is claiming today that an increase in that price to $4.75 over a period of three years is not a notable accomplishment. The hon. member for Gaspé said, and I took down his words verbatim, "What is a 33⅓ per cent increase"? In other words, what is an increase of $30 million? At one time in this house someone is supposed to have said, "What's a million"? Now we have the statement, "What's $30 million"?

There are improvements in other areas, Mr. Chairman, that I think I should put on the record. In 1961 the total wheat crop was 283.4 million bushels, in 1962, 565.6 million bushels, in 1963, 723.4 million bushels; in 1964, 600.4 millions bushels, in 1965, 648.9 million bushels, and in 1966, 844.4 million bushels. Exports of wheat in 1961 totalled 305.3 million bushels, in 1962, 474.4 million bushels, in 1963, 565.9 million bushels, in 1964, 531.7 million bushels, and in 1965, 566.5 million bushels. Here are the figures of total farm production in millions of dollars. In 1961 the figure was $485.3 million, in 1962 $941.4, in 1963 $1,259.2 and in 1964, the last year for which we have figures, $957.2 million. The price for No. 1 Northern wheat at the lakehead in 1961 was $1.90 per bushel, in 1962 $1.96, in 1963 $2.03, in 1964 $1.98, in 1965 $2.00, and in 1966, estimated to date, $2.11.

If these figures indicate a declining industry—

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a question?

Mr. Greene: When I finish my speech. If these figures indicate a declining industry, and I know figures do not always tell the truth, it seems a strange conclusion to draw. All these figures in every facet of the agricultural industry show that the industry is a productive one, that the Canadian farmer is doing a tremendous job of production, something which seems to be denied in speeches made from the opposite benches. Speeches made by hon. members opposite indicated that the industry was a dying one, that it was in terrible shape, and some of the speeches indicated that we are going to be out of farming altogether in Canada soon. I do not think we serve the farmers well, or anyone else well, by raising bogies that do not exist, by alleging facts that are not so, or by indicating problems that in fact are merely indicated for political and partisan purposes.

[Mr. Greene.]

I think we should all agree, as I said at the outset, that we want to do everything we can to improve the farmers' position, that we want to have policies which will enable the agricultural sector to have a better way of life and income more comparable with the industrial sector. But I think we will achieve those ends much more effectively if we face the facts as they are and not as we would like them to be for political or partisan purpose

Some questions were asked with respect to the dairy program. First of all allusions were made, again I believe by the hon. member for Gaspé, to the effect that we gave an undertaking to the very good meeting of agriculturalists from l'Union Catholique de Cultivateurs of the province of Quebec who came here yesterday. This was a meeting called at their request. They came here in order to give us their views and to make their representations with respect to the dairy program for the ensuing year.

Those representations were made forcibly but responsibly. Their views were made known very clearly to us. No undertaking whatsoever was given except that the representations which had been made would be given every consideration in this year's program in the light of the government's responsibility. As with this and other programs I do not claim we have achieved everything we would like to do. I do not think we have perfection by any means but I say that a contribution of a further $30 million is a responsible contribution. I say that a program which increases the support at the federal level beyond last year's price at this time of $4.10 to $4.75 is a step in the right direction even though it may not be all we would have it be.

I know that the party of hon. gentlemen opposite has had the responsibility of office from time to time and that its members realize some of the differences between opposition and the responsibilities of government, with the government having to consider all facets and factors of the economy. Members of other parties have never had the responsibility of government and never will have it. The public does not think they ever will have it and so it is very easy for them to say, "You should give everybody everything they want." If we had given everybody everything they wanted by acceding to the requests made from time to time from various parts of the house, this country would have been bankrupt long ago.

Some hon. members remind me of the American congressman who was asked how he stayed in office so long. He said, "I voted for all expenditures and against all taxes." I think maybe there are members of this house and parties in this house that subscribe to the same irresponsibility.

I merely say, Mr. Chairman, that all these facts and figures indicate that the government has created a climate and has passed legislation which has moved the agricultural economy ahead productively and economically. I agree that there is a great deal more to be done, that none of us should cease in our endeavour to bring the farmer into the economic sunlight in the same measure as the industrial worker has come into it over the past few years. But I do suggest that to load the record of this house under any pretext, be it interim supply or otherwise, with facts that are not borne out by the record does no service to the farmer and does not bring the day closer when we will have the kind of comprehensive policies which will achieve the economic results that I think all members want for the agricultural community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the minister quoted figures relating to increased production and prices. Could he give us the same prices with regard to production costs? Could he tell us, for instance, how much it cost in 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 to produce a hundredweight of milk compared to today?

I also want the minister to answer my earlier question. Is $4.75 per hundredweight of milk an average or a minimum price?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, costs of course depend upon the efficiency of the farmer, the size of his operation and the techniques he uses. I have no cost figures which would apply to each and every individual farmer. I certainly appreciate the fact that the farmer's costs have gone up, that he is caught in the cost-price squeeze and at the same time in some areas is unable to get a better price for his product, but there is one area in which he has certainly been able to get a better price for his product, thanks to this government's policy, and that is in the area of manufacturing milk. However much his costs have gone up I suggest I am very safe in saying they have not gone up during the last three years in the proportion of $2.66 to $4.75, which is the price we have made available to him now.

With regard to the hon. member's question about $4.75 milk, the statement is very clear. It is very specific. I know the hon. member understands it, and I hope he does not wish to delude either this chamber or the farmers in any way. What we have said is that our support policy will enable factories to pay $3.54 for milk which, with the $1.21 subsidy, will give a price of $4.75 for milk.

• (6:40 p.m.)

As I said last year and repeat now, we have no authority to force factories to pay any price whatsoever. We have a support program that will enable them to pay $3.54. In the province of Ontario machinery has been set up which will compel the factories to pay this price when the support program enables them to do so. The minister in the province of Quebec has assured me that in the ensuing year they will have similar machinery available so that they will be in a position to fix the price. In the province of Quebec and possibly in other parts of Canada there are remote areas in which there are casein and roller powder plants which may not be able to pay this price. This applies particularly in respect of casein. The minister in the province of Quebec has assured me that as a result of the savings which will ensue from our taking over the support in respect of manufacturing milk they will be able to supplement provincially those areas in which the companies cannot pay the $3.54.

I should like to make it abundantly clear that I have never said that we are fixing the price, that we can fix the price, or have the authority to do so. The statistics I have indicate that in some areas, particularly in Quebec, some factories may not be able to pay this price but, from the statements which have been made to me, the provincial government will put them in a position to pay it then in fact the factory will pay this price to the producer.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I am stressing this problem because it is extremely important. We were told, last year, that our dairy policy would give the farmers, the producers of industrial milk, an average of $4 per hundredweight of milk and it is precisely this $4 per hundredweight that allowed certain industries to avoid paying that price.

Now, since the minister tells us that his government is granting the necessary aid to enable industry to pay $3.54 per hundredweight could he say whether the assistance his department is giving the dairy industry is designed to secure a minimum of $3.54 per hundredweight?

Does he not feel it would be better to set a minimum price the manufacturers or the processors would have to pay the milk producers, as he has said that his department was giving all the necessary assistance and the required support so that the milk industry could be in a position to pay $3.54 per hundredweight of milk?

Since the federal government is providing the assistance necessary for a minimum payment of $3.54, why is his Department not setting a minimum price of $3.54 per hundredweight as the price to be paid by the operators of the milk industry to the milk producers?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, as I explained before, the best advice I have is that at the federal level we do not have the authority to fix prices within a province. This is a provincial responsibility. I do not know whether it will be feasible in all the provinces to have boards which set prices. Certainly, however, this is a matter which will be discussed by me with the provincial ministers. I know this already has been done in the province of Ontario and I am assured by the minister that it will be done in the province of Quebec. Surely this should answer the fears of my hon. friend concerning the $3.54 being paid, provided that the action which I have been assured will be taken is carried out by the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it is an important problem. I realize that everyone is anxious to complete as soon as possible, the consideration of those estimates; nevertheless, I would have one or two questions to put to the minister.

Could the minister tell me whether his Department would object to the payment of additional subsidies by the Quebec government, if the dairy industry was unable to pay the price of $3.54 per hundredweight of industrial milk?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the problems in respect of provincial subsidies which arose last year made life very difficult for those provinces which did not have the subsidies. When a subsidy in one province enables a manufacturer in that province to produce more cheaply than a manufacturer in another province, this leads to an unnatural flow of the product across the provinces and makes it difficult for the federal government to exercise its responsibility equitably over the movement of the product across provincial boundaries. Accordingly, the ministers from the province of Quebec, the province of Ontario and I met and resolved the problem as best we could. I believe we reached a viable solution. It was agreed that provincial subsidies would be removed provided that the federal program for the ensuing year included an increase of a minimum of 25 cents. This has been done. It was made quite clear, however, that in areas such as those which have casein or roller powder plants, or other remote areas where the plants are not able to pay the $3.54, the province of Quebec would have every right to subsidize those producers up to the $3.54 level.

It was suggested that the funds they would save by reason of the Federal increase in our support level, which I understand would amount to $8 million or $9 million, could be used for that purpose and, along with capital expenditures, for the purpose of rationalization of the industries in those areas which do not have economic plants or, in particular, in which there is a desire to carry out a conversion from casein.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, if I understand correctly the minister's statement, his department would see no objection in allowing the Quebec government to pay additional subsidies which would enable the leaders of the dairy industry to pay $3.54 for a hundredweight of milk?

In my view, that is what his statement is all about.

[English]

Mr. Greene: I think that is quite correct. I might add that I would be somewhat presumptuous if I were to tell any province what kind of subsidies it should provide. I think it was agreed that if there were to be provincial subsidies they should be equalized, that is, that a disparity in respect of subsidies between one province and another would not lead to an efficient and economic industry. In our deliberations, however, I believe the provincial ministers preferred to get out of the business of subsidies on manufacturing milk in consideration of a better federal program and in turn we believe the responsibility in respect of fluid milk should remain with the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have another question and I should like to clarify this point, as I know it is one of the most important problems facing the Quebec dairy producers. As a matter of fact, the province of Quebec has a right, and this was recognized at the conference between the federal Minister of Agriculture and his counterparts in Ontario and Quebec, to pay a subsidy for manufacturing milk, but only up to $3.54 per hundredweight of milk, so that this will be standardized throughout Canada. Then, the province of Quebec will have the right to grant a subsidy up to this amount of $3.54 per hundredweight of milk.

And now, another point, since this is what the Minister of Agriculture just told us. I think that, at that time, the Quebec milk producers—

Mr. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): It is not that at all.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I hear the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Asselin) telling me it is not that at all. Perhaps I misunderstood the answer of the Minister of Agriculture.

Therefore Mr. Chairman, I will again direct my question to the minister. If milk producers received less than $3.54 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk in some areas, the Quebec government could make up for the difference by means of subsidies, so that the dairy producer would get a minimum of $3.54 per hundredweight?

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I have tried to answer this question four times but apparently I am not getting through to the hon. member. I cannot stop provincial governments from paying whatever subsidies they wish. They have the constitutional right to pay any subsidy they desire.

The gist of our agreement last year was that we would envisage a program in respect of subsidies which would improve the situation of the industrial milk farmer by the provision of a minimum of $3.54 in the coming year. The provincial governments indicated that if such was the case they would stay out of the manufacturing milk subsidy field except in those areas where the plants could not be supported to the extent of $3.54 because of economic reasons. It was agreed by the three parties at that time that if Quebec adopted such a program in those areas enabling producers to get $3.54 it would be in keeping with the spirit and tenor of the agreement we made.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have another question for the Minister of Agriculture—

[English]

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I should not like to let this opportunity pass without assuring the minister that I do not belong to the school which believes in the weights and measures criterion. I belong to the school which believes we should get away from this spending spree but not at the expense of the farmers. The 33⅓ per cent figure in which the minister took such pride is relative to the amount of milk produced and does not relate to dollars and cents. We should look at production and methods of providing farmers with a better way of living.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take part in this discussion at this time but I cannot let the minister's partisan remarks go by without comment. He suggested that the facts put on record by those of my colleagues who are not present at this time in the house were substantially incorrect. Will the minister accept the facts in respect of agriculture put forward by my colleagues or does he stand by his figures and say that the farmers in Canada never had it so good?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, those are the hon. member's words, not mine. My remarks and the statistics I placed on the record clearly indicate that from the standpoint of productivity the Canadian farmer is doing the best job he has ever done and the best job being done by farmers in any part of the world. From the standpoint of gross income we have made considerable improvement. I have said time and time again, and if this is what the hon. gentleman has reference to I agree with him, that we have done quite a bit but must do a great deal more. On the other hand, we cannot contribute to the accomplishment of better policies or a better way of life for the farmer by mis-stating the facts or misleading the farmers by suggesting that farming is a dying industry and there is no hope. That attitude will not contribute anything. I take exception to this attitude when expressed by hon. members. My contention is that we have done a great deal but we must do more.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A further question, Mr. Chairman.

The Minister of Agriculture knows that when a dairy producer produces fluid milk for bottling, the dairy fixes a quota, and when such a quota is exceeded for an additional quantity of 20 per cent, the dairy no longer has to pay a minimum or average price to dairy producers. Therefore, this means that if a farmer has a 500-pound quota and he comes to the dairy with 700 pounds of milk, he will get his maximum or the average price on 500 pounds, but on the extra 200 pounds he may as well get $2.00, $2.25 or $2.30 per hundredweight. In this way, his average price for 700 pounds of milk is greatly reduced.

Can the minister tell us whether, under the new dairy policy announced today, dairies will have to pay $3.54 per hundredweight for any surplus, above the quota fixed, that will be used as bottled fluid milk, but as manufacturing milk to be processed into butter, cheese and other dairy products? In other words, will the policy announced today also apply to any surplus, starting with the first pound of milk, above the quotas fixed by the dairies?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the statement very clearly indicates that responsibility for the fluid milk industry as far as we are concerned now rests with the provinces. No matter how hard everyone tries to do his best it is difficult to devise effective programs when there is mixed jurisdictions. As a result of our agreement with the provinces last year, under which we accept responsibility for the support of manufacturing milk, we deemed it in the interest of the industry generally that we should leave the entire authority and jurisdiction in respect of fluid milk with the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I am not referring to the quantity of fluid milk for bottling sold by the dairy farmer, I am talking about that part of the small producer's milk to be used as manufactured milk and processed by the manufacturer. I am dealing only with that part used as manufactured milk and brought by the farmer to the dairy in excess of the quota fixed by the dairy.

I shall therefore repeat my question. If a farmer brings 700 lbs. of milk to the dairy when his quota is fixed at 500 lbs., that quantity will be bottled and sold as fluid milk. Then, that quantity of milk will come under provincial jurisdiction, but will the remaining 200 lbs. used as manufactured milk and processed as butter, cheese or other products be subject to the new dairy policy announced today by the minister? That is what I want to know.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall vote 172 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, can the minister answer this question; it is the last one I have to put to him. Will that part which is to be used as manufacturing milk and processed at the factory, and which will not be used as fluid or bottled milk, come under the new dairy policy announced today? Will the new dairy policy apply to part of manufacturing milk? That is what I should like to know from the minister.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, all I want from the minister is yes or no. It is my last question. Could the minister answer it? Will it come under his jurisdiction?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I want to answer the question if I can.

Mr. Grégoire: Just say yes or no.

Mr. Greene: As I understand the nomenclature of the trade, if you have a fluid milk quota and you deliver to a fluid milk plant you are a fluid milk producer whatever your quota may be. Everyone who has a fluid quota is looked upon as a fluid milk producer. It is the intention of this program that those individuals will come under provincial jurisdiction and that those individuals who do not have fluid quotas will come under federal jurisdiction so far as subsidy and support are concerned.

• (7:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister could have answered much faster. Is the answer to my question, yes or no? We do not know it by the way he answers, because he says finally that fluid milk comes under provincial jurisdiction. I admit that, but I am referring to the surplus fluid milk which will be used as manufacturing milk and which will be processed. Does that part of the manufacturing milk come under the jurisdiction of the dairy policy announced today? It is simple. Is it yes or no, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, surplus fluid milk does not come under the policy announced today.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 17g carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On division, since we did not get any satisfactory answer from the minister. Mr. Chairman, I say "on division" because—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Lapointe is now insisting on the answer that he would like to receive.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Chairman, I am not insisting; I say "on division" because I am far from satisfied with the answers given by the minister, because every time we ask him questions, every time we try to get precise details, he refers us to the Quebec government, and Quebec refers us to Ottawa. In fact, farmers do not know where they stand. Let us organize a system whereby a farmer knows exactly where he should apply. Both governments tax him, but when the time comes to know what to do or to get answers, he gets such a vague answer like: "It is the other one, it is not our fault, but the fault of the other."

If both governments want to keep on taxing, let them organize so as to give him at least satisfactory answers instead of letting him always find himself between two stools or on the fence, which is the least interesting situation I know of. When taxation time comes, he is made to sit down and taxed, but when it is time to do him a service, he finds himself between two stools. That is why I say "on division".

[English]

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 17g carry?

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

20g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $223,600.

Plant and plant products—

35g. Grants, contributions and subsidies as detailed in the estimates, $1.

Health of animals—

40g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $136,000.

45g. Grants, contributions and subsidies as detailed in the estimates, $1.

Canadian dairy commission—

65g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $49,000.

Farm credit corporation—

90g. Estimated amount required to provide for the operating loss of the farm credit corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, $2,600,000.

The Chairman: This completes the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

ATOMIC ENERGY

The following items were agreed to:

Atomic energy control board—

1g. Administration expenses of the atomic energy control board, $2,214.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—
(Research program)—

10g. Current operation and maintenance, including expendable research equipment, $1,000,000.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

1g. Grant in respect of the net operating amount required to discharge the responsibilities of the national broadcasting service, $800,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have a question I should like to put to the minister under this item which calls for an additional grant of $800,000 to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am not against the grant but I have a question I should like to ask; indeed, I have a suggestion to make.

On January 16 this year I filed a question on the order paper in which I asked for figures covering the calendar year 1966. My question asked how much money had been spent by the various departments of the government on advertising over C.B.C. radio, C.B.C. television, private radio and private television.

My question was made an order for return on March 13, 1967, and a return was tabled that day which is identified as sessional paper No. 238C. I must say that I was a bit amazed to discover from the information contained in this return that with the exception of one department of the federal government all the departments that do any advertising over radio or television stations spend considerably more money on the private radio and television stations than they do in advertising over the C.B.C. The minister will see immediately why I indicated that I had a suggestion to make to him, that if the C.B.C. needs some extra money maybe one of the ways we could do it would be by transferring government advertising from private stations to the public stations, or at least by doing it on something of a 50-50 basis—not the one horse, one rabbit, a suggestion that was made earlier today.

I will not take the time of the committee to put all the figures on the record; as I say, they are contained in sessional paper No. 238C. But let me give the totals. The total amount spent by the government in advertising over C.B.C. radio last year was $67,511, and over C.B.C. television stations $149,733. I am omitting the cents. But the government spent in advertising over private radio stations $510,246, and over private television stations $502,711. If I may go one step further and just add those figures together, both radio and television, it adds up to an expenditure of $217,255 in advertising over the C.B.C. but $1,012,958 in advertising over private radio and television stations. There is a difference there of almost 5 to 1. In fact, in one of the minister's own departments—I am thinking of the minister as having three departments, the Treasury Board, taxation and customs —Treasury Board and customs apparently did no advertising of this kind, whereas the taxation people spent $3,857 in advertising over C.B.C. but $77,854 in advertising over private radio.

I am going to ask the minister for an explanation. I ask why this kind of advertising is not divided a little more evenly between the two broadcasting régimes in this country; and does he not agree that here is a way where money might be obtained by the C.B.C. for advertising services rendered, rather than having to make a grant at this time? I do not wish it to be inferred that I think the advertising that is done is all worth while. Some of it is, but I think some of it is not. I am not going into that matter now; I am going, rather, into the question of the inequity of the way in which this advertising money is spent.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, of course I cannot speak for all advertising that is done and how it is divided as between C.B.C. radio and private radio stations. But I can speak with respect to my particular department and the taxation division. The advertising that is carried out on radio is allocated in order to achieve coverage in all cities in Canada and all areas of Canada.

There is a much greater number of private radio stations than C.B.C. stations. The C.B.C. stations cover the major markets. Where these stations exist, they are used. Every station is covered by the advertising agency based on listener reports. They are selected by the agency in order to obtain maximum coverage. There was no television involved with regard to my department. To obtain the coverage we wanted in the areas we wished to cover, we had to use far more private stations in number, and consequently in dollars, than C.B.C. stations.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, does the minister expect me to believe that this explains the disparity in his own department of 20 to 1?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: The minister says yes but he has not convinced me.

Mr. Benson: I would be very pleased to show my hon. friend the breakdown in the submission which was given to me by the advertising agency in order to accomplish the coverage which was desired in this particular campaign.

Mr. Knowles: I would still like to suggest to the minister, in his capacity as President of the Treasury Board, which looks at these expenditures, that he take another look at this question of the government spending five times as much on private stations as on the C.B.C.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, since parliament has given us practically no opportunity to discuss matters relating to the C.B.C.—the latest example of that was when the estimates of the C.B.C. were withdrawn from the committee on broadcasting and brought into the full house a few weeks ago—I should like to make some comments on this vote. Since the C.B.C. gives no information to anybody, they cannot be said to have a spokesman in the house. I have referred to the Secretary of State on several occasions as representing the C.B.C. She certainly does not answer for it, as she is never given any information with which to answer questions.

I can say that I can state the position of the C.B.C. with regard to the most recent exchange between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Minister of National Revenue. One reason for the great disparity in the moneys paid out to private stations as compared to those paid the C.B.C. is that private stations have a much greater audience appeal and a much larger number of listeners and viewers. This can be proved by the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement. If the cabinet wishes to reach the largest number of viewers and listeners for the money it is spending, it has to use private stations.

It will be interesting to have an analysis made of the figures which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just produced to see how much money was spent on private stations which are located in centres where there is also a C.B.C. station. I find it hard to believe, after having been in the advertising business for 40 years, that the disparity could not be reduced in the smaller communities where the C.B.C. does not have an outlet, especially in view of the fact that rates are not very high in these smaller communities. The most interesting comparison would be between the money that is spent on private stations in centres where there is a C.B.C. outlet and places where they operate alone. I do not expect this information will be given to us much before one or one and a half years have elapsed, at which time we will have forgotten about the whole matter.

My purpose in rising now is to ask two questions. I note that in the past few days that great Canadian commentator, Mr. James F. Minifie, who is a full fledged American citizen and therefore is in a position to look through Canadian eyes at affairs going on in Washington and in the United States, and is able to tell us stay-at-home Canadians how he looks at Canadian affairs, has recently made a trip to Guam with the President of the United States. If it is at all possible I should like to ascertain whether or not the C.B.C. paid anything for the passage of Mr. Minifie, a United States citizen, because of the attack made by Mr. Knowlton Nash on three Canadian newspapermen alleging that when they took part in an aeroplane trip to South Viet Nam paid for by the United States government their opinions were therefore coloured. If these newspapermen's opinions were coloured by the fact that they flew to South Viet Nam at no expense, what about the opinions of Mr. Minifie who flew to Guam? If we are told that Mr. Minifie's expenses were paid, can we ascertain from the C.B.C. how much the C.B.C. paid for that trip?

If he was only paid $100 or so, as a token payment, which is nothing compared to what it would cost to fly from Washington to Guam, survey the scene and fly back, then there is nothing more to say. Otherwise I do not see how the C.B.C. can allow a man like Mr. Nash to stand before the microphones and accuse people who fly to South Viet Nam at the expense of the United States government of being biased in their opinions, while a fellow citizen commentator, Mr. Minifie, flies to Guam and back and we have to believe that his opinions are absolutely crystal clear and pure. If the C.B.C. would stop attacking competing media and look after its own house, it would be much better. I would ask the minister to ascertain how much money the C.B.C. paid for Mr. Minifie's flight to Guam.

Has the C.B.C. taken a definite stand to do everything possible to offend the U.S. government? I have stood in this house on numerous occasions and stated that, come what may, the foreign policy of this nation should be to maintain the closest possible friendship with the United States. I will repeat this tonight. In the last 24 hours we were told about a group of U.S. citizens who, according to the United States government, were violating the United States law in taking medical supplies to North Viet Nam by launch from Hong Kong. They are going to North Viet Nam with $10,000 worth of medical supplies. I say: All power to them, and God bless them in the work of compassion which they are performing. I certainly do not criticize them.

We are told, when we are performing any works of compassion, not to let our left hand know what our right hand is doing. I do not know of any organization that is getting more free publicity for their limited work in helping the injured in North Viet Nam than the organization which is operating that launch from Hong Kong to Hanoi. Yet why is the C.B.C. sending a man to travel alongside the launch in preparation of an hour long documentary? Is the C.B.C. going to spend its time to show that the United States government is performing great outrages in North Viet Nam and at the same time prepare a documentary on these fine gentlemen who are going out in a launch with medical supplies, to show the fine work they are doing?

The $10,000 in gifts going to North Viet Nam is nothing compared to the value of the free advertising that this trip in a launch is receiving. Why does the C.B.C. have to commission a freelancer to go along and make a documentary of the trip? Is it not enough to tell us that medical supplies are being run to North Viet Nam and the United States does not like it? Why does the C.B.C., which is paid for from Canadian government funds, have to have a man following the launch to prepare a documentary showing that $10,000 worth of medical supplies are being brought to North Viet Nam? It is galling, the way the C.B.C. is eternally needling the United States and its attitude with regard to North Viet Nam, as well as its attitude in other parts of the world where the United States government has to take an active stand while more supine governments take no stand at all. Why is the C.B.C. always needling the United States?

Can the minister ascertain whether the C.B.C. is paying for Mr. Minifie's trip to Guam and back, and can he also advise us whether the C.B.C. has taken a definite anti-U.S. stand in the light of the fact that Beryl Fox had been sent to South Viet Nam, and now this freelancer is going to North Viet Nam?

Mr. Reid: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman who just spoke whether he knows it as a fact that Knowlton Nash is a United States citizen?

Mr. Cowan: I never made such a statement. I said Mr. Minifie is a United States citizen. I do not have enough interest in Knowlton Nash to inquire what his citizenship is.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I was only going to take about five minutes of the time of the committee to make my comments, and I would not even take up that much time except for what the previous speaker has mentioned, namely that we never get a chance to discuss the C.B.C. in this house. In fact we have not had such a chance for years, except for the briefest exchanges during the question period.

There are one or two points which I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. I do not suppose that my comments will make any difference in the outcome because this extra expenditure will be approved this time. I should like to know who if anybody in the C.B.C.—and I suspect no one—has any control over the amount of money that is spent on these trips, and what is their purpose.

People are being sent on such junkets as this trip to North Viet Nam to cover the Quaker launch taking supplies to Hanoi, and we could name many more instances. I realize that people in the C.B.C. think there is a limitless well of money, and all they have to do is ask for it, that no matter what the purpose of such an expenditure might be, parliament will grant it. To be fair, I do not blame the C.B.C. officials for thinking this because the supine parliament, of which I have been a member for many years has always voted, almost without question, whatever amount of money the C.B.C. has asked for. As I said earlier, parliament seldom gets the opportunity to do much questioning of the operations of the C.B.C.

• (7:20 p.m.)

As the previous speaker very well pointed out, the C.B.C. seems to be more interested in being anti-American than it is in looking after the problems in Canada. They send all sorts of people down to the southern United States to take pictures, make documentaries and all the rest about the very difficult race problems existing in the southern United States. This is of some interest to Canadians, of course; but for a while every time you turned on the radio or a television set all you would hear about was the problems of the southern United States.

The C.B.C. should spend more of the taxpayers' money on trying to better the lot of the Canadian Indians and Eskimos and some of the other groups in this country. This would be much better than spending much of their time broadcasting the problems of other countries. Though these may be of some interest to Canadians, they are not of paramount interest. Our main interest is, or should be, the problems we in Canada face, and we should be told how we can cure them. I suspect that some of the people in the C.B.C.—for what reason I know not, though I have my suspicions—want to do all they can to damage the image and reputation of the United States in Canada; and we all know who will benefit the most from this.

There are many other examples I could cite in this regard, Mr. Chairman, but my time is limited. I should like whoever is replying for the C.B.C. just to cite one example during the course of the last two or three years, or even further back than that, of a program that was even neutral in content toward the United States. All of the programs I have heard were violently anti-American, and I am a constant listener to the C.B.C. We will have a great deal more to say on this matter on another occasion, but I think this matter should be brought before the house as often as possible.

One of the main criticisms I have heard of the C.B.C.—and it is one of my own as well—is that some people in the C.B.C. seem to have a God-given mission, a self-appointed one, I may add, to know what is best for the people of Canada and they make sure that Canadians get it whether they like it or not. They decide a certain economic policy or political policy or social policy is good for Canadians and they ram it down our throats. All you have to do is listen to any of the commentators on programs, or C.B.C. spokesmen, and you will see what I mean.

I have no objection to some people in the C.B.C. wishing to make it a policy to brainwash the public, provided both sides of a controversial subject are presented. I know that there is, of course, a very practical disadvantage to this suggestion, because if the brain trusters in the C.B.C. decide to promote anti-Americanism, or socialism, or something else, they will do so. Then if they are asked to present the other side of the picture, all they will do is to put on the program people who do not present a very good case for the other side. That is all they will do and I know that perfectly well.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I think that some sort of body should be given the power to make regulations. Certainly the Board of Broadcast Governors do not do their job, that's for sure; otherwise we would not have this problem. I suppose a lot of people like to be appointed to the board because it gives them some prestige and they never do anything. I think they should pay more attention to their jobs.

To return to the subject, before the C.B.C. is given a lot more money by this parliament it should be impressed upon that organization that they will not get it unless controversial subjects of great public interest are presented in a fashion which shows both points of view. This has never been done to date, and I think it should.

I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman, because we all wish to get things completed as soon as possible; but I know that a good many of my colleagues on both sides of the house will have more to say on this subject.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say that, as my hon. friend of course knows, the government is not responsible for the programming policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The best I can do is to bring to the attention of the C.B.C. through the Secretary of State the remarks made by hon. members in this chamber.

I should point out that the amount of money we are asking for in this estimate is $800,000. This represents part of the cost of the increased salaries that were agreed upon in negotiations this year. We pressed them very hard to find as much of this as they could out of their existing budget, and this is the balance which could not be found.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I just ask one question. Is any of this money for these colour television sets we have been hearing about?

Mr. Benson: No. This is purely salaries, nothing to do with television sets, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, if the minister is conveying what has been said here to the C.B.C. officials, I hope he will also add that there are some programs the C.B.C. puts on which some of us think are very good and very useful.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just want to speak briefly on a matter that is of importance to Canadians generally and of particular importance to those who have been following the question carefully and have made some study of it. I refer to the growing concern across this country among professional people and other Canadians at the decision of the United States to increase the capacity of Grand Coulee dam from 2 million kilowatts per annum to 9.2 million kilowatts per annum by 1990, all based on storage in Canada.

I think that more and more Canadians are realizing that this situation has resulted from an unfortunate mistake on the part of the Canadian government and the government of British Columbia, and they at least hope that this experience will make us very careful when we come to develop a national water policy in the days ahead.

In order to save time I want briefly to quote from the Globe and Mail for January 14, 1967, which contained this article by Mr. Bruce Macdonald from Washington:

> Largely as a result of water storage facilities provided by Canada under the Columbia River treaty, the power-generating capacity of Grand Coulee dam in Washington state will be increased from the present level of almost two million kilowatts to a proposed output in the 1990's of 9.2 million kilowatts, making the Grand Coulee the largest power dam in the world.
>
> Interior Secretary Stewart Udall announced yesterday that a start had been authorized on the addition at once of a further 3.6 million kilowatts, as anticipated at the time the agreement was signed with Canada for the joint development of the Columbia River power and flood-control facilities.

Further on in the article the following appears:

> Despite the U.S. contention, Canadian sources—

We do not know at the moment who they were.

> —expected that officials in Ottawa would almost certainly scrutinize the complex formula laid down in the treaty with Washington to determine whether the addition of power-generating capacity would entitle Canada to claim increased compensation.
> Canadian officials noted that even if the total power output was no greater than anticipated at the time the treaty was signed, it was possible the fine print would show that British Columbia was entitled to a higher payment if the extra power produced was used to meet peak demand and was therefore capable of being sold to power distributors at a higher price than electricity for base demands.

Then under the subheading "Canada sold down river, Toronto economist says", Mr. Macdonald writes:

> • (7:30 p.m.)
>
> Mr. Higgins said: "The U.S. is taking advantage of the tremendous opportunity for the investment in very cheap power and very cheap storage. I don't think there is an estimate available as to the cost the United States would face to get the peaking power they would need if the Canadian storage was not provided."
>
> Mr. Higgins said Canada would not reap any of the benefits the United States is obtaining from the savings brought about by the cheap peaking power of the Columbia.
>
> "Canada should have got greater benefits in the treaty, Canada is not even going to get enough money from the treaty to cover the costs of building the storage capacity, which will only aid the United States. We get zero from it."

[Mr. Herridge.]

Then, in Vancouver, Dr. Hugh L. Keenleyside, co-chairman of the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, said:

> Increased power-production in the United States would have no bearing on major power development projects under way in British Columbia.

There is a final statement from another Canadian expert on the treaty, Mr. Gordon MacNabb, of the water resources branch, of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. He agreed with Dr. Keenleyside in that the Coulee announcement would have no effect on Canada. He said water stored several hundred miles away in Canada would not be affected by the operation, and the extra capacity would have been installed whether or not there had been a treaty.

This has created concern among hydro engineers. Not long ago a leading engineer spent two hours with me discussing this question, which has been discussed at professional meetings with engineers. These people, who did not take a stand when the treaty was signed, think that Canada has been sold down the river as far as this treaty is concerned. Others are becoming concerned. I know that trade unions in British Columbia particularly are concerned, as well as some in Ontario. I see the hon. member for Kootenay East smiling; he knows what I am talking about.

Mr. Byrne: That is N.D.P. propaganda.

Mr. Herridge: Also farm organizations as well as other organizations in the province having to deal with the conservation of water resources generally in Canada are concerned with this question, as the result of considering it. Having discussed this question at the union meetings, and at other meetings, I happen to know that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is receiving an increasing flow of correspondence dealing with this question, urging that he have the Columbia River treaty brought before the appropriate committee so that it can be studied, and so that officials of our water resources branch can be examined again.

A few days ago one of the top hydro engineers in Canada told me that though Mr. MacNabb is competent in his field, never in his life has he operated a hydro plant. Other engineers consider him a theorist. These engineers would like the officials of our water resources branch to be brought before the committee and examined, to defend the situation as it is today. We all know that to build this project will cost British Columbia more than it will receive from the United States.

With these few comments I conclude my brief remarks. I have sat here patiently for the great part of the day. I ask the minister to convey my message of this evening to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the first opportunity.

Mr. Benson: I shall do so.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

Field and air surveys, mapping and aeronautical charting—

20g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $100,000.

General—

85g. Polar continental shelf project, $251,000.

B—Dominion coal board—

100g. Administration and investigations of the dominion coal board, $6,500.

105g. Payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council—To extend the authority granted by mines and technical surveys vote 75b, Appropriation Act No. 10, 1964, as amended by mines and technical surveys vote 75d, Appropriation Act No. 2, 1966, and by energy, mines and resources vote 105c, Appropriation Act No. 9, 1966, to increase to $37,737,911 the amount that may be spent pursuant thereto in the current fiscal year; additional amount required, $4,591,686.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1g. Administration, operation and maintenance, including a payment to the Roosevelt Campobello international park commission for the purposes and subject to the provisions of the act respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campobello international park, and grants as detailed in the estimates, $1.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): An answer to one matter might facilitate consideration of these estimates. I notice that one amount here is set out at $32,000; beneath that amount fortuitously is found the amount of $31,999, the difference happening to be $1. If the minister will explain at this time how it is that these amounts occur so fortuitously, he may get the co-operation from this side he is not getting from his own side.

Mr. Benson: I appreciate the co-operation I have received from all sides of the house. Perhaps I can say a few words about the $1 items in general. There are 18 of these particular items. Ten amend or extend the authority contained in previous vote wordings. They do not affect the provisions of any statute law, other than previous appropriation acts. They amend the amount or extend the purposes.

The ten votes in this category are: Department of Agriculture, votes 35g and 45g; Department of External Affairs, vote 1g; Department of Defence Production, vote 13g; Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, votes 3g, 15g and L51g; then there is Department of Manpower and Immigration, vote 30g; Department of Transport, vote 20g, and Department of Public Works, vote 30g.

Three of the one dollar items are set aside under a provision of the Financial Administration Act to permit the carrying out of a particular transaction, without amending the act or affecting its application to other transactions. These are, Department of External Affairs, vote 6g; Department of Transport, vote L82g and Board of Transport Commissioners, vote 82g. One item sets aside on a similar basis for a specific case a provision of the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, without amending the act or affecting its application to other cases. This is Department of Veterans Affairs, vote 6g.

One item seeks the authority to write off certain uncollectible debts in excess of $1,000. Parliament alone can grant this authority since the Financial Administration Act gives authority to the governor in council only with respect to debts not exceeding $1,000. This does not involve amending any statute. It seeks an authority for which no statute makes provision, and this is Treasury Board vote 25g.

The three remaining items, out of 18, involve, technically, changes affecting existing statutes. Department of Industry, vote 15g, increases a commitment authority originally fixed in the Area Development Incentives Act. This will not affect the original provision of funds but it does increase the commitment authority, so that further projects can be carried out. In due course parliament will have to authorize the funds to carry them out. This is merely to allow the Department of Industry to increase its area development commitment up to $200 million from the present commitment limit of $125 million.

Treasury Board votes 19g and 24g each involve a technical amendment of the Public Service Superannuation Act, first, to delete defunct corporations or boards as well as persons already covered by other plans from the coverage of the act, and second to set a 6.5 per cent ceiling on the combined public service superannuation and Canada Pension Plan contributions in regard of all earned income received after December 31, 1965. This, I might say, was necessary because with respect to income received after December 31, 1965, which was earned in 1965, employees without this amendment might have been committed to pay 8.3 per cent rather than the 6.5 per cent. We have assured members of the public service that their contributions would be on the same basis as previously.

Item agreed to.

5g. Representation abroad—operational, $195,000.

Item agreed to.

6g. To authorize the establishment of a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, to be known as the Canada foundation account, to which shall be credited (a) the interest payable on the bonds received by Canada under the civilian relief agreement of 1950 and the cultural agreement of 1954 between Canada and Italy, and (b) the proceeds from the sale, redemption or maturity of the said bonds and notwithstanding section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, to provide in the current and subsequent fiscal years and in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council for payment out of the Canada foundation account for the purposes of the said agreements, $1.

Mr. Cowan: I am speaking on item 6g under Department of External Affairs on page 8, Mr. Chairman. I do not like the way these estimates are being jammed through the committee—and that is the proper way to describe it. I might emphasize that this is no reflection on the Minister of National Revenue.

As the minister has already pointed out, there are 18 one-dollar items in these supplementary estimates. By no means are they legislative items. The cabinet has learned that the house does not like one-dollar items in the supplementary estimates, as is proven by their not proceeding at the present time with supplementary estimate No. 7, under the Department of the Secretary of State, for $750,000 on behalf of educational broadcasting facilities, which should be brought in as a separate bill so that it may be fully discussed by the house.

[Mr. Benson.]

We have 18 one-dollar items, of which one, and possibly two others, might affect legislation now on the statute books. Also I want to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that in these supplementary estimates there will be found eight times the expression "notwithstanding" some act already on the statute books of the nation. This means that these supplementary estimates, if passed in their present form, will set aside the requirements of eight pieces of legislation. For instance, under vote 6g of the Department of External Affairs we are asked to set aside section 35 of the Financial Administration Act. This is money that has been received from the people. It has been taken in by the Receiver General of Canada and paid into the consolidated revenue fund. Why cannot this money be taken by the Receiver General of Canada into the consolidated revenue fund in the same way as all other moneys are received? I do not see any urgency about setting up tonight a separate organization to accept this money from a foreign government. It will not be embarrassed by any delay caused by the time taken to bring in a bill to create the change suggested in this one-dollar item.

• (7:40 p.m.)

I have addressed myself to this item 6g in particular. I have made no comment about other one-dollar items up to this point, because they do not have the effect of legislation. But if we turn to page 12 of these estimates we will find under vote 20g a statement that, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, something is being done. On page 13 under the heading "Industry", vote 15g, we find the words "to authorize, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act—" and so on. Then if we move on to page 17, under the heading "Privy Council", we find in vote 5g "Ministers without Portfolio—payment, notwithstanding anything in the Financial Administration Act—", and so on. In all, there are eight separate references setting aside some law of the land at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like to see legislation by supplementary estimate and I do not like to see the law of the land being set aside by this means. I frankly think this vote 6g could be set aside, and this situation handled in a more parliamentary manner than by a supplementary estimate. I mean every word of what I say with regard to this item 6g, and hope it will be withdrawn and brought up for consideration at some time in the future.

Item agreed to.

15g. Assessments, contributions and other payments to international (including commonwealth) organizations and international multilateral economic and special aid programs as detailed in the estimates, $256,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is an amount here of $25,000, a contribution to the United Nations program for the education and training abroad of South Africans. I wonder whether the minister could give us an explanation of this.

Mr. Benson: Yes, because I remember this particular item. I myself questioned whether we were not, perhaps, contributing to the education of persons who believe in something in which we ourselves do not believe. I was assured that this money goes to helping young persons who have left South Africa to obtain education outside South Africa. I could get a further explanation if I were given a minute or so in which to look one up.

Mr. Nesbitt: I imagined that this was the purpose of the item. What concerns me is that we might be setting a precedent here, and find ourselves contributing funds for students in goodness knows how many countries around the world because they do not like the government of the country to which they belong. I can think of a great many countries where funds such as this might be set up. We might be setting a precedent here which would be most undesirable. We do a great deal ourselves in the education of foreign students and I think hon. members are very much in favour of such a program. But I wonder whether the precedent we are setting here is a good one. Could the minister perhaps find out whether South Africa is contributing toward this United Nations project? We would be interested in knowing the answer though I realize he may not be able to provide it immediately.

Mr. Benson: I will certainly try to find an opportunity to give the hon. gentleman a more detailed answer. In the meantime, I can assure him that this question was examined very carefully by the cabinet before this grant was determined on, and it was decided that the vote would be quite proper in the circumstances.

Item agreed to.

External aid office—

35g. Economic, technical, educational and other assistance as detailed in the estimates, $3,500,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1g. Departmental administration including administration of the Guaranteed Loans Acts, $125,200.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There is an item here amounting to $35,200 and a note which reads "Less: Amount recoverable from Treasury Board for Administrative Services". Can the minister explain what this means? Is this one of the magical items we heard about earlier? Is this amount recoverable in any case, or only because of its inclusion in this vote?

Mr. Benson: The amount is recoverable because the Department of Finance carries out administrative services for the Department of the Treasury Board, which has now become a separate department. An amount is being paid to the Department of Finance, and the Department of Finance is only asking for the balance.

Item agreed to.

3g. Grant to the endowment fund of the Vanier institute of the family, $167,000.

Mr. Cowan: I should like to ask the minister whether the Vanier Institute of the Family is being supported exclusively from the proceeds of an endowment fund. Is this to be the only grant to the institute or will there be annual grants from the government in this connection?

Mr. Benson: The government made the Vanier Institute a capital grant which has been approved by parliament. In addition, it agreed to match dollar for dollar contributions to the institute up to a maximum amount. This particular item is the equivalent, dollar for dollar, of the amount collected by the institute.

The following items were agreed to:

Comptroller of the Treasury—

25g. Administration, including the administration of the Superannuation and Retirement Acts and recoverable expenditures on behalf of the Canada pension plan, $440,900.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Administration—

1g. Departmental administration, $23,000.

Fisheries management and development—

15g. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of estimates, $300,000.

Special—

17g. Estimated amount required to recoup the fishing vessel indemnity account, the lobster trap indemnity account and the fixed fishing gear and shore installations indemnity account established under vote 540 of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955 and vote 527 of the Appropriation Act No. 6, 1956, to cover the net operating losses in the said accounts as at March 31, 1967, $132,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

1g. Departmental administration, $7,000.

Forestry—

23g. Contributions to the provinces in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the details of estimates, $130,000.

GOVERNOR GENERAL AND LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS

1g. Office of the secretary to the governor general, $4,000.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Resource development—

3g. Administration, operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of Indian affairs and northern development vote 3 of the main estimates for 1966-67 to increase the contributions to the Canadian council of resource ministers to $107,310, $1.

Natural and historic resources—

15g. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates, $1.

20g. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—to extend the purposes of Indian affairs and northern development vote 20 of the main estimates for 1966-67 to increase to $17,906,700 the authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year and to provide a further amount of $990,000.

Indian affairs—

30g. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as specified in the sub-vote titles in the estimates, $2,100,000.

35g. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,100,000.

Northern administration—

45g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $271,600.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

15g. To authorize, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, an increase to $200,000,000 in the total amount of commitments in the current and subsequent fiscal years for development grants under the Area Development Incentives Act, $1.

INSURANCE

1g. Departmental administration, $25,000.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1g. Administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $102,000.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the minister tell us what professional and special services are included in this item for which $100,000 are provided?

Mr. Benson: This covers legal fees, witness fees, reporters' fees and so on in connection with the appeal of Steven M. Truscott—the Truscott appeal.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

B—Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

25g. To reimburse Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, pursuant to Section 35 of the National Housing Act, 1954, for expenditures incurred during the period January 1, 1966 to December 31, 1966, for Housing Research and Community Planning as contemplated by Part V of that Act, $2,171,932.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion every Canadian has the right to adequate shelter. We have been told that we need 170,000 housing starts per year just to keep up with the present level of accommodation. Last year we had only 134,000 starts. Why? I submit there are three or four basic causes.

The first cause is high labour costs. More important is the federal government's sales tax, municipal taxes and a tight money policy. We in this party have been pressing for the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax which is applied at the manufacturers level. We have been pressing for its removal with good and just reason, because we find that this tax, innocuous as it appears to be at 11 per cent, by the time it hits the ultimate consumer has been marked up by the various levels through which it passes until it reaches 15 per cent or 16 per cent.

I have been a member of the consumer credit committee, which has been informed that in the average home costing $15,000 to $18,000 roughly 60 per cent of the cost is accounted for by material, and by the time the various profits are made on the sales tax at the various levels, instead of this tax amounting to $1,000 on such a house, as it normally would, it winds up being between $1,500 to $1,600.

We definitely have a housing crisis. In fact reference has been made to a fiasco in the housing industry. I submit that the cost of government at various levels, municipal, provincial and federal is to blame to some degree.

I was recently interested to read a statement by Mr. Hignett, President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, to the effect that the average self-contained three bedroom home probably has a municipal tax burden of $38 to $40 per month, due to services which the public demands, and which has resulted in the fact that the average person earning $5,000 to $6,000 per year can no longer own or even attempt to own a home.

Another situation is developing whereby people living in limited dividend housing and subsidized housing are being forced out of such homes due to the actions of the government. Indeed at Saint John, New Brunswick, there are at present 30 or 40 vacancies in public housing because the formula which is used for rental accommodation is based on the gross take home pay of the renters. Due to the money which the government takes from the average wage earners' pay packet in Canada Pension Plan contributions, hospital insurance, income tax and all the other deductions, he can no longer afford to stay in subsidized socialized housing. Therefore the 25 per cent to 27 per cent figure which is applied to total income in establishing rental for such a person must be re-examined. In other words the percentage figure must be applied to what such poor people have left over after the government has dipped into their pay packets first. We have welfare stated ourselves so far that such people cannot afford subsidized socialized housing.

Due to lack of action by the government, and lack of an adequate housing plan, the government has spread the mantle of poverty over those in the low income bracket until it now reaches up into the class I choose to call the affluent poor, those in the $5,000 to $6,000 per year category, who should be able to own houses but who cannot.

I shall not take up the time of the committee further, Mr. Chairman. I just close with one statement with which I think no one will disagree, namely that housing should not be the victim of government tight money policy.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chaimran, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has introduced a very important issue, that of housing. On Monday afternoon my colleague, the hon. member for Danforth, attempted to initiate an emergency debate on the housing crisis. He pointed out that the government has had a housing policy fiasco and that it has reached the point of being a critical national calamity and national disgrace. He also pointed out that the Minister of Labour, in charge of housing, in the midst of this crisis remains serene, indifferent and unconcerned. That was on Monday of this week.

In today's Ottawa Citizen there appears an article quoting statements made by the Minister of Labour on the housing crisis. I read it in part as follows:

> Canada is coming out of its house-building crisis, Labour Minister J. R. Nicholson contended Tuesday.
>
> But the new houses are going to cost too much for the average Canadian to own if they're located in major cities, he readily admitted—
>
> "Housing problems are going to be serious for an indefinite period," he concluded. "But I would hope that the crisis period is over."
>
> Mr. Nicholson offered no hope that the cost of housing would decline as new housing becomes available.
>
> He said high land values would continue to prevent Canadians from getting the housing they wanted in major cities.
> "If you're going to live in a city you're going to have to live in an apartment," he said.
> The alternative was to move to the suburbs, he explained. Or if you wanted to own your own apartment you could resort to condominium housing which had just been approved in British Columbia and Alberta.

That is the approach being taken by the minister to the housing crisis. In 1965 there were 165,000 new homes built in Canada. In 1966 the figure was 134,000, a drop of 19 per cent. The projected housing goal for 1967 is 170,000 units, set by the Economic Council of Canada and confirmed by the President of C.M.H.C. But in the first two months of this year there has been a serious drop in housing starts, so serious that it prompted the hon. member for Danforth to bring it to the attention of the house.

An article in the Globe and Mail of March 8 stated:

> It is not news that Canada is moving into a housing crisis. Last fall the Economic Council of Canada warned that anything short of 170,000 housing starts a year would result in a serious shortage—
>
> Central Mortgage this week confirmed everybody's worst expectations. Total urban housing starts in January, it reported, nosedived 29.6 per cent compared with last January. Toronto's starts were down by an alarming 59.2 per cent, and Toronto and Montreal, which also showed a decline, are the housing weathervanes of the country—

• (8:00 p.m.)

> Yet no spirit of haste is evident in either national or provincial government. Federal Labour Minister J. R. Nicholson has announced that loans for 20,000 new housing units will be distributed in the spring —a mere drop in the bucket; that funds available under the National Housing Act will be increased from $600 million to $800 million; and that he is contemplating some changes in the act. Ontario has promised to launch its dubious Home Ownership Made Easy program, for buying up land and leasing it at nominal sums to would-be home owners.

This is the approach the minister is taking. He says there will be 20,000 new units in the spring and that the reason for the drop in January and February this year is that the direct loans last year were made in the summer. He says that this year they will be made in the spring and the result will be a projected increase in housing starts.

Another approach was to increase the interest rates on N.H.A. mortgages from 7¼ per cent to 7¾ per cent. He also hopes there will be an increase in housing because of the participation of the banks in the mortgage lending field. This is the approach the minister takes to our housing crisis. In the past few months he has held a housing symposium in many cities across the country. He has heard from the builders about the serious lack of mortgage money. He has heard from the developers about the serious lack of serviced land, and he has heard from other representatives about the serious rise in the cost of homes. I recall that Mr. Mansur, who has been called Mr. Housing in Canada, indicated that Canadians have outpriced themselves in the cost of homes. He said that mortgage money is available but that the costs are so prohibitive that purchasers of homes are not being attracted. In Toronto the average cost of a home is $29,000. In order to carry that type of home one would have to have an income of between $8,000 and $10,000. This would indicate that any person with an income below that amount would be left homeless, in the full sense of the word, when one thinks of adequate housing.

It might be said that it is very easy to be critical and that it is better to become constructive with regard to a definite housing program. We in the New Democratic Party have attempted to be constructive. We have impressed upon the minister the need for a ministry of housing and urban development. By this means we would be in a position to provide leadership to the country in respect of housing needs and to encourage the provinces and the municipalities to participate in a massive housing program to fulfil the needs of the low income groups, middle income groups, senior citizens, and those people who wish to participate in co-operative housing projects. We believe the government should inject a massive amount of money into the economy for mortgage loans at interest rates of 5 per cent or 6 per cent. These would be reasonable rates at which people could afford to buy homes. Someone may ask, where will we get this money. The amount has been increased from $600 million to $800 million. We have suggested, and I suggest again tonight, that we should participate in home bonds. We believe the government should float bonds at attractive rates of interest in the same way they did during wartime when they promoted the victory bonds to prosecute the war.

We should float home bonds so that Canadians would be in a position to participate in a program which would ensure that there would be decent housing for all Canadians. The government should also take the initiative in respect of public housing. The government has not been able to persuade the provincial and municipal governments to participate sufficiently in public housing in order to take care of the needs of the people who have incomes ranging between $4,000 and $6,000. The result is that there is a tremendous shortage of apartments for these people. The apartments which are available are available at very high rentals.

During the housing symposium a suggestion was made that the government should take a more active interest in limited dividend housing. At the moment the government guarantees a return of 5 per cent on limited dividend housing. The suggestion was made that there would be more participation by builders if the guaranteed return on their investment was between 8 per cent and 9 per cent. We are in agreement with this suggestion. Because of the serious housing shortage some inducement must be given to builders and developers.

One of the saddest commentaries we have in centennial year is the serious plight in which our senior citizens find themselves today. Our senior citizens who are on fixed incomes are paying very high rent for apartments and rooms. Because of the high cost of living this represents a very great drain on their limited assets and income. This is the reason the government really should encourage the provinces and municipalities to build more homes for the senior citizens so that their needs can be fulfilled. Co-operative housing also should be encouraged so that those people who have the desire to build their homes could be given help, so that they would be in a position to finance their homes.

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent mentioned a very important problem with regard to the cost of homes today. One reason is the 12 per cent sales tax that is imposed on building materials, and the 5 per cent provincial tax. Both these items should be eliminated in respect of residential homes in particular, if these homes are to be sold at prices which will be attractive to purchasers.

These are a few ideas which we would hope the Minister of Labour would consider seriously, rather than continue in the belief he has now that there is a constitutional barrier with regard to full participation in this important matter. He seems to believe that his only role at the moment is that of the friendly banker. We disagree with this and hope that he will forge ahead and give the necessary leadership to meet the housing crisis, so that Canadians in 1967 will have a housing program of which they can be proud.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I realize it is getting late, but some of us believe that we should not go away from the house at this time without again drawing the attention of the government to the magnitude of the housing crisis, and the fact that all of us have had our attention drawn to the plight of the people all across the country who are suffering because of the lack of decisive action in dealing with the problem at this time.

My colleague from Toronto-Broadview has pointed out the way in which the minister is indulging in optimistic and hopeful predictions about what will happen in respect of housing this year. Actually the members of his staff are much less optimistic than the minister.

I wish the minister were here tonight but I have no doubt his duties require him to be elsewhere. I should like to urge him to take his head out of the sand and look around to see what is happening in respect of housing today. His head is far too decorative a part of his anatomy to be left in the sand. He should look around to see what is happening, rather than hide behind the rosy vision which he obviously has in respect of what he hopes housing starts are likely to be. He should realize that something more far-reaching has to be done in respect of this very difficult housing situation. It is time the minister stopped predicting housing starts and began to do something to help provide the 170,000 new homes we will need for this current year. That number of new houses will not be of any assistance in reducing the backlog that has been built up.

The committee on prices heard a great deal of evidence across Canada about the need to deal with the housing shortage in a much more comprehensive manner. I wish to make a few remarks about the situation in my city of Vancouver because I have had a great number of representations from people who live there, and because I feel that that city is fairly representative of larger Canadian cities. Those things which are evident in Vancouver are evident in most of the major cities in Canada.

On February 1 the director of planning for the Vancouver city council prepared a series of notes for the use of aldermen at the housing conference. I do not believe those notes were used to any extent during that conference but I should like to quote one paragraph. The director of planning wrote the following:

> Much has been written about housing needs in Vancouver and elsewhere, yet no major Canadian city appears to have made a comprehensive survey of such needs. The city of Vancouver in 1960 and 1961 budgeted for its share of a $36,000 metropolitan housing survey to be financed 75 per cent by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under Part V of the National Housing Act, and 25 per cent by lower mainland municipalities. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, however, declined to participate.

In 1960-61 the city of Vancouver realized the need for a comprehensive survey of housing needs in the city at that time, and that was six or seven years ago. At that time the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation had the rosy idea that if things were left to the workings of the market sufficient housing would be provided in the city of Vancouver. Vancouver is still waiting for the C.M.H.C. to approve this plan. However, the city is now trying to get another survey under way, which has been approved by the council, endorsed by the province and referred to the corporation. It will cost in the neighbourhood of $96,000. That approval has not been forthcoming.

It is my belief that such a survey is crucial in every large city from Vancouver to Halifax because we do not know how many housing starts are necessary. Very little consideration has been given as to the kinds of housing needed or the number of each kind. I think if the policy of C.M.H.C. and the minister continues we will spend an increasing number of the taxpayers' dollars to assist the better off people in our community. The people of moderate and low incomes will not get any help, or not as much as they should get. We will then have a situation in which socialism will provide for the rich, and free enterprise will provide for the poor. The rich have decided that socialism is necessary in order that they may obtain C.M.H.C. loans and that the poor should be left to the tender mercies of free enterprise.

The president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation appeared before our committee on January 26 of this year and stated:

> Nevertheless, Canada's housing policies in the past have been based on the assumption that the determination of a very large part of our housing production can be left to market forces.

He then went on to say that a very large and increasing proportion of our housing needs cannot be met by private enterprise alone. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent pointed out that we were told by individuals appearing before the committee that people with incomes under $6,000 per annum could not afford to own homes. I am sure that even the minister is beginning to realize, with reluctance, that even though a great number of homes will be built the people who need live in them will not be able to own them.

The Vancouver Housing Association prepared a brief for our committee in which it stated in respect of home ownership:

> So far as home ownership is concerned, building costs, after remaining fairly static in the Vancouver area for several years, rose by 7 per cent between the springs of 1965 and 1966, and have since risen further. Prices of serviced residential lots have risen during the last five years by anything from 10 per cent to 100 per cent according to location, with an average increase of perhaps 25 per cent, and today it is difficult to buy serviced lots in suburban municipalities for much less than $5,000.
> High mortgage interest rates aggravate the effects of rising building and land costs and, while no specific figures are available to us, there are indications that a good many families are tying up an excessive proportion of their income in housing outlays.

This statement is confirmed by what Michael Wheeler of the Canadian Welfare Council wrote in a submission to our committee. He said:

> We have no reliable data on the number of families who are enjoying the pleasures of home ownership at the cost of severely strained budgets, nor do we know the actual cost of this strain in terms of other budgetary items that have to be sacrificed or its general impact on family well-being. This is a matter which, like so many other aspects of Canada's housing program, deserves more systematic attention.

I am urging that there should be more planning and an overall survey made in respect of housing needs. In respect of home ownership even the minister is now convinced that we are not going to meet the needs of a great many people in lower and middle income groups.

This is what was said by the Vancouver housing association in its brief to our committee:

> A canvass of leading real estate firm suggests that apartments falling vacant are renting for amounts from 5 per cent to 10 per cent higher than six months earlier, but in the low rental field increases have been much steeper. Within the last month elderly single persons applying for non-profit housing at the Central Housing registry operated by our association have reported the following increases in their rents:—
>
> From $45 to $75 (excluding heat)
> $45 to $80
> $45 to $85 (shared bathroom)
> Vacancies in rental housing, where families with children are accepted, are, according to real estate firms, virtually non-existent, so that it is difficult to quote any meaningful figures, but rents often appear now to be related more closely to what the traffic will bear than to the actual worth of the accommodation.

The greatest single need of Vancouver is low rental accommodation for middle and low income families. As a matter of fact, the director of the war on poverty made the statement as long ago as last fall to the Couchiching conference that Canada is spending more money on tinned dog food than it is on public housing. That certainly does not say very much for our degree of civilization.

• (8:20 p.m.)

There is a tremendous need in Canada for housing for low and moderate income families. If hon. members need an example to underline this I would refer to the matter raised a while ago in this house when it was pointed out that the immigration officials in Europe are saying to would-be immigrants to Canada, "Yes, come to Canada by all means. But if you do come, and have more than three children, do not go to any major Canadian city." They named half a dozen, including Vancouver. They said, Do not go to any major Canadian city unless you have a guaranteed income of at least $7,500 a year.

This reminds me of the old nursery rhyme. I am emboldened to quote poetry after what happened last night:

> "Mother, may I go down to swim?"
> "Yes, my darling daughter.
> Hang your clothes on a hickory limb;
> But don't go near—

—Vancouver, Halifax, Toronto, Montreal or many of the major cities in between, because you will not find housing there." That is the situation in this country. We have only to consider places like Birmingham and others in Britain, to which people immigrated and where there was no adequate housing, to see what happens to the good feeling and good neighbourliness at all levels vis-à-vis people already living in those areas.

This further question concerns Central Mortgage and Housing. Family formation is going ahead by leaps and bounds these days. Not only are new families rapidly being formed but we are finding greater and greater mobility in Canada. Many young couples would not want to own homes even if they could afford them. They must have rental accommodation, because we are told that one family in four across Canada moves every year. We must have rental accommodation to take care of this situation.

Before I conclude my remarks I want to make a special plea to the minister and draw a special matter to his attention. In Vancouver's west end we are at long last apparently going to have a high-rise apartment block for elderly citizens. I do not know whether it will be available to the most needy among the elderly citizens. I hope it will be. But I believe a mistake, and a bad one, will be made in connection with this housing project unless something is done to prevent it.

In respect of any housing project for the elderly, of the type being built in Vancouver's west end, there should be not only self-contained apartments with kitchens but a main dining room with a kitchen attached, and there should be provision whereby elderly people can have meals taken up to their rooms in case of need. The last advice I received from Central Mortgage and Housing was that it does not propose to put these facilities in the new, high-rise apartment block being built in the west end of Vancouver. I would urge the minister to change his mind in this regard and see that these facilities are provided before the project is completed.

I would remind hon. members that the social welfare and housing people urged the minister and Central Mortgage and Housing to include recreational facilities in low rent housing projects in Vancouver, for example in Skeena Terrace and other low rental, subsidized housing projects. The minister did not do this. Now, after these projects have been lived in for a number of years, and after a great deal of trouble, inconvenience and agitation, at long last Central Mortgage and Housing and the city of Vancouver are trying very hard to find ways and means of including these facilities in the Skeena Terrace development. The facilities should have been included when the development was being built. I am warning the minister that if he does not see that these modern facilities for the care of the aged are incorporated in the new apartment block being built in Vancouver's west end, he will have to do it in a piecemeal fashion later.

There is a good more I could say on this subject, Mr. Chairman. I hope we will have a better chance to discuss housing at a later time, rather than talking about this important matter in the dying hours of interim supply. However, I will have pity on the committee because I know everyone here is just about as tired as I am. I hope the Minister of National Revenue will draw these matters to the attention of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to say that having listened with interest to the speeches made with respect to housing, I will be most pleased to bring the matters raised by hon. members to the attention of the minister under whose jurisdiction fall the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I assure hon. members that I will do this as soon as I return from the Easter holiday.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a few words on his vote, as it concerns Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in particular. As hon. members are well aware, I represent a constituency which is entirely rural. The question I wish to raise concerns small towns and in some cases small contractors. I emphasize as forcibly as I can that I believe Central Mortgage and Housing has fallen back into its old rut in this respect. In 1958 and 1959, when the Conservative party formed the government, we directed C.M.H.C. to move into the smaller centres of Canada in order to help the citizens in those areas as well as those in the larger areas of this country. C.M.H.C has now fallen back into its old rut and is now concerned with helping the large contractor to build numerous homes, helter-skelter and everywhere in the larger cities. It is paying no particular attention to the smaller centres in Canada, and to our smaller contractors.

In the absence of the Minister of Labour I urge the Minister of National Revenue to bring this matter to his attention. I hope the minister will see that the small rural towns do not suffer because of the policies of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and some misguided rules and regulations that the district offices set up. I will cite a particular case where a contractor is building a home. Before he can obtain any money from C.M.H.C. he has to have the home 85 per cent completed. I know the minister will say this cannot be true. However, it is true. This contractor is building a home for a medical doctor in a town that has a population of 3,500. The home is perhaps a little better or more extravagant than the average citizen is able to afford. In any case, Mr. Chairman, the contractor told me he would have to have the home 85 per cent completed before he could obtain one cent from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I ask the minister to urge C.M.H.C. to get out of the rut they seem to be falling into and to pay particular attention to the contractor who builds, not 200 homes a year but 20 or perhaps only 10. The minister should remember that home building conditions are not the same in small areas. It might well be said that the small contractor has higher costs because he does not build a great many homes. Of course the more homes one builds, the cheaper it is to build them. But the direct reverse is also true, because in many of our cities land costs and servicing are higher.

The servicing costs, and by that I mean wiring, sewerage, street lighting and so on, are greater in the larger areas than in the smaller towns. Therefore while I readily accept the fact that a small contractor may need a proportionately greater amount of money to build 20 houses in a year than to build 200, there is not that much difference, and I would urge the C.M.H.C. in making its inspections to make special allowances for the small contractors building in rural areas.

I could cite 100 instances of such cases all across rural Canada. The C.M.H.C. money is not being made available in the smaller areas. Time and time again small contractors have said to me. We will build a house, but please do not make us build it under C.M.H.C. because we cannot get the money, the lumber yards are after us to pay them, and we cannot get anything out of C.M.H.C. I urge the Minister of National Revenue to ask the Minister of Labour to bring this to the particular attention of C.M.H.C. to redirect its thinking toward the rural areas of Canada. Rural Canada is a vast area which needs better homes. I do not think there is one hon. member in this house who would deny that fact.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

It is all well and good for us to stand up in this chamber and say that we must carry out slum clearances in our cities. But what are we actually doing? Are we making a special effort to improve the living standard of people in the rural areas and the smaller towns all across Canada? I cannot honestly say we are. The C.M.H.C. is making no special effort to improve the slum conditions which exist in the rural areas and which are just as bad as those in the cities. This is why I say to the minister it is all well and good to talk about low cost developments in the cities. We in the rural areas are not specifically asking for low cost housing. We are asking the C.M.H.C. to redirect its thinking, as has been the case in 1958, 1959 and 1961, and to give the people living in rural Canada a chance to build their houses under the C.M.H.C.

One has only to look at housing starts in rural areas under C.M.H.C. to see that what I say is correct. The first housing starts in the farm areas carried out by the C.M.H.C. were made back in 1959 and 1961. Today this has dwindled to practically nothing. We must give equal treatment to all the citizens of Canada, whether they live in cities or in rural areas.

There has been much talk about paying special attention to slum clearances and low cost housing in cities. I urge the Minister of National Revenue to ask the Minister of Labour to redirect the thinking of the C.M.H.C. so as to give the citizens in rural Canada an opportunity to build houses and to improve their standard of living, as well as to give an equal opportunity to small contractors providing services in rural areas to that given the large contractor. There is a great disparity between the two. Housing inspections in cities are much less rigid. As one contractor told me, the big contractors building houses in cities under the C.M.H.C. can get away with much more because the inspections there are much less rigid and less stringent. We in rural Canada pay taxes to improve the slum areas in cities and to build what could be qualified as subsidized housing in cities, but no special consideration is given to those living in small towns or in farming communities. It seems to me that the C.M.H.C. has taken the line of least resistance, and we in rural Canada are not satisfied with this attitude.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that, as always, I have listened with great interest to the speech made by the hon. member for Acadia and I can assure him that I who came myself from a small town, have just as much interest in small town housing as he does. Not only will I bring all of his remarks to the attention of the Minister of Labour but I will personally send a copy of today's Hansard to the president of the C.M.H.C.

Item 25g agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

30g. To reimburse Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for losses sustained by it during the calendar year 1966 as a result of the operation of public housing projects undertaken under part VI of the National Housing Act, 1954, $2,109,457.

35g. To reimburse Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for amounts loaned under section 36H of the National Housing Act, 1954, to any province, municipality or municipal sewerage corporation, and forgiven by the corporation during the calendar year 1966, pursuant to section 36G of the act, $7,898,965.

40g. To reimburse Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for grants charged to the consolidated revenue fund as established by section 23E of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of contributions made during the calendar year 1966, to any province or municipality for the preparation or implementation of an urban renewal scheme or pursuant to an urban redevelopment agreement, $6,632,832.

LEGISLATION

The Senate—

5g. General administration, $282,500.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the Senate of Canada has already cost the people of this country nearly $3 million this year. I object to our being asked to vote another $282,500 for an institution that is not responsible to the people of Canada.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I should simply like to explain what these additional expenditures are for. They include office stationery, sundries, and so on, which arise from the length of the sittings of the House of Commons, which of course causes the Senate to sit longer. They amount to $11,500. There is an increase in the printing costs of $41,000, which would indicate increased activity in the Senate and an increase in the activities of the joint committees on consumer credit and cost of living, divorce, immigration, and penitentiaries.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is item 5g agreed to?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

National employment service—

20g. Administration of the national employment service, $370,000.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief remarks on immigration before we pass it. I will take only five minutes to show how amiable I am.

This item cannot be passed over lightly because, as I said earlier this afternoon when speaking on agriculture, immigration is one of the key problems and one of Canada's key assets. We can talk about our natural resources but we must not forget that our human resource may well be our greatest. What are we doing about it? I fear that the Minister of Immigration and Manpower has come to the conclusion that only skilled immigrants or immigrants with money and capable of establishing themselves in Canada, should be admitted to our country.

I am not a member of the committee on citizenship and immigration, not because I do not wish to be but because I have not had sufficient time to devote to it. However, one has only to examine where our immigrants have settled after their arrival to Canada and where in Canada are the greatest needs for immigrants. In other words, do we need skilled or unskilled immigrants, and which of the two categories can best be absorbed? As I said this afternoon, farm labour is very scarce in Canada to day. Nine out of ten farmers anywhere in Canada are prepared to accept unskilled labour and are prepared to train these people.

We are a young country with great natural resources. Whether we like it or not we are still hewers of wood and carriers of water. It does not take too much skill to do that job. I urge the government not to restrict immigration to skilled labour, because those are not the only immigrants we need in Canada today. I have already said that we could absorb more unskilled labour. The other day I spoke to a manufacturer in Winnipeg who employs 670 men in his manufacturing plant. I asked him how he hires his men, does he hire skilled welders and machinists? Believe it or not, he said: "No, we prefer them unskilled as long as they wish to work. We are quite prepared to train them." So let us not hastily jump on a bandwagon and think that Canada is developed and cannot absorb any more unskilled labour. Canada is a young country with much development still needed, and we still have room for immigrants who are unskilled.

• (8:40 p.m.)

That is the key point I want to make before this particular item passes, Mr. Chairman. I recall an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal about six months ago which listed the areas in which immigrants found jobs, and nearly 45 per cent entered what could be called unskilled labour areas. I think, for example, of the servicing industry. It does not take too much skill to put gas into the tank of a car from a gas pump, an occupation which could be regarded as part of the servicing industry. They also entered agriculture and the semi-manufacturing industry, and the three industries lumped together took almost 45 per cent of the unskilled immigrants who entered Canada.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge the Minister of National Revenue to draw this situation to the attention of the minister of immigration. We may believe today that Canada is developed as a manufacturing country, and in the highly mechanized and technological world of today needs only skilled immigrants. This is not so. I urge the minister to continue to permit unskilled immigrants to enter Canada and to continue sponsored immigration for a few more years at least.

Item agreed to.

Immigration—

30g. Administration, operation and maintenance —to extend the purposes of vote 30 of the main estimates for 1966-67 to increase the grants to immigrant welfare organizations from $20,000 to $28,000, $1.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence services—

15g. Operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment and development for the Canadian forces, $15,000,000.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, this is an item of $15 million for pay and allowances for the Canadian forces. Under the National Defence Act the Canadian forces consist of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force. Perhaps the minister would give us the breakdown of this amount of money for the three recognized services.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether we could move to the next vote and let this item stand for a moment. I will dig up the information for my hon. friend if I have it here.

Item stands.

Defence research—

35g. Research satellite program—to provide for the design and instrumentation of a series of satellites to carry out a scientific research program agreed upon jointly by the United States national aeronautical and space administration and the defence research board, $1,328,000.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether this is the appropriate item for the remarks I wish to make, and if it is not perhaps I can be corrected. This afternoon there was a series of questions asked on orders of the day relating to satellite research and development in the communications field, an area in which the Department of National Defence may be interested. I know the National Research Council is working in this field, and from conversations I have had with officials in the department this field is relatively new.

A search in the library indicates that Canada has not done too much work in this field and is presently not in a position and might never be in a position to do so, for the simple reason that communications satellites cannot be sent aloft without the necessary vehicle to put them into orbit and thus make service available to areas presently without service.

I realize the Defence Research Board is working on this problem. Whether or not they are working in conjunction with other countries I do not know and I am not in a position to say. I do not know whether anyone in this committee can enlighten us in this regard.

However, Mr. Chairman, telecommunications is a subject which is under discussion at the moment. About one year ago I placed several questions on the order paper which at the time related to the C.B.C. These were prompted by a series of articles appearing in various papers across the country dealing with this problem in an exploratory fashion, providing information, and entreating the scientists of this country to experiment in this new area of communications. My opinion is that we should move very rapidly in this field.

I am aware of the fact that national defence communications are important and that the department is interested in this question. I am also aware from the information that has been provided me that eventually we will attempt to send a satellite aloft to provide telecommunication for defence purposes only. However, this subject can also be related to other fields of communication essential to the country.

I am very conscious of this question of telecommunications because some areas of the part of the country that I represent have very little television service, some have no television service and some have bad television service. The people in these areas would appreciate the opportunity of being educated along with the rest of the country which have this facility made available to them.

Someone behind me says that perhaps we are lucky, but I suggest that with a satellite service perhaps we would be luckier in the sense that we would not be restricted to one particular program. We would not be subjected to what is at times the corruption of the C.B.C, though there are other times when their programs are good. I must say that my impression is that some of the programming is not too good; but regardless of the type of programming this is an area which requires urgent investigation.

We must allow notional research or defence research boards, which have scientists trained in this field, to act. A few days ago the Prime Minister said that the Minister of Transport has the responsibility of co-ordinating work in this field. When talking with the minister I realized how unexplored the field is. We seem to be waiting to see what will develop. We have the technicians and the scientists to work in this field, and we have organizations such as Northern Electric and Bell Telephone which can be useful to us. We can create a vehicle to transmit messages, but we lack the capability of sending it into orbit. For this capability we must go to other nations. If the United States does not want to help us, or if it feels that our satellite may take up a spot in the heavens they might be interested in later, then we shall have to put up a satellite. In one sense we are at the mercy of countries such as the United States. At the moment I have no reason for believing they will not co-operate with us.

This capability is necessary for our defence, as well for the entire question of telecommunications. We must talk to nations other than the United States. Several have the capacity to send vehicles into orbit. From my understanding of the problem, sending a vehicle into orbit does not require much more capacity than we now have. Nevertheless as satellites become more complicated they become heavier. We shall not have them in orbit for several years.

Our research at the moment is very limited. I understand that the attitude of our government is not to allow grants to those working in the research field in this sphere. I am thinking of the McGill University space research institute. It is essential, if we feel that communication between all parts of Canada is necessary, and if all parts of the country must participate in education, to consider carefully every aspect of this field. Whether they serve national defence or education, satellites are important. I do not know the technical problems, but I think that one satellite can transmit many messages simultaneously—telephone, television and radio messages, as well as others. In this area we should be more actively engaged than we are at present. More funds should be made available. Other countries are working rapidly in this field. If we wait patiently to see what will happen we might suddenly find another nation occupying that area we had thought to occupy in the first place.

We should have a vehicle to unite the north and south of our country, and to transmit from Vancouver to Halifax. It could transmit educational programs to our northern areas, where we are spending millions of dollars trying to provide an education for the inhabitants. The north is developing rapidly. When we think of the decline in the death rate, and increasing education among Indians, we must realize that our population will continue to grow. We must give our northern peoples an opportunity to see the rest of the country. We must show them that other parts of Canada welcome them. Only through this medium will they realize that. Once we provide those people with the opportunity to see the rest of the country, to see for themselves what exists beyond their own area of 50, 100, or 200 miles to either side of them, they will realize that they are part of the country. There can be no better way of spending money than on this type of research.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Benson: May we revert to vote 15g, under the Department of National Defence?

15g. Operation and maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment and development for the Canadian forces, $15,000,000.

Mr. Benson: I was asked a question about this a moment ago by the great and distinguished member opposite. The information which I have, which does not break this down by services—and I am sure he is quite familiar with this—is that at the end of the year there are transfers in the Department of National Defence, not among votes but among various categories. More than this amount of $15 million is required for the provision of civilian wages and salaries in the Department of National Defence.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

20g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,970,000.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1g. Postal services, $12,700,700.

Item agreed to.

PRIVY COUNCIL

5g. Ministers without portfolio—payment, notwithstanding anything in the Financial Administration Act or the Senate and House of Commons Act respecting the independence of parliament, to each member of the Queen's privy council for Canada who is a minister for whom no salary or allowance in addition to the allowances under section 33 and section 44 of the Senate and House of Commons Act is provided (the acceptance of which shall not render such member ineligible or disqualify him as a member of the House of Commons) of a salary of $7,500 per annum and pro rata for any period less than a year, $1,715.

Item agreed to.

15g. Expenses of the royal commissions listed in the details of estimates, $145,500.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this vote includes money for various royal commissions. There is a breakdown on page 17 of the supplementary estimates. The amount listed as expenses of the royal commission on the status of women seems small, as expenses of royal commissions go. Perhaps the minister could explain.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: As the hon. member knows, this commission was appointed only very recently and the amount included here is just a start. The bulk of the expenditure will be provided for in the estimates of 1967-68.

Mr. Knowles: I take it, then, that in a full year we can count on the equality of the sexes.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Benson: We shall find ourselves spending as much on the women as on the men, I am sure.

Item agreed to.

B—Economic council of Canada—

20g. Administration, $120,000.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This includes an item of $19,200 under the notation "Special reference concerning the Department of the Registrar General". Would the minister indicate the nature of this special reference to the Economic Council of Canada?

Mr. Benson: I can reply to this question from memory; if I am wrong I will correct what I am about to say. I believe this has reference to consumer affairs and combines. There was a special reference to the Economic Council.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BOARD

1g. Administration expenses, $44,700.

Mr. Knowles: Does the voting of this money for the fiscal year 1966-67 mean that the board has been fully constituted, and can the minister say whether the regulations under Bill No. C-170 which provide for this board have been promulgated?

Mr. Benson: The board has been constituted as far as possible. The chairman and the vice-chairman were appointed immediately and I believe there have been two or three employee and employer appointments. There have been three each, I believe. Some difficulty has arisen in getting the kind of people who suit. The board is in operation, however, and I understand that the regulations have been promulgated—I am not sure whether they have all been promulgated. I would have to check and inform the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister hopeful that the timetable we had in mind will be met?

Mr. Benson: Yes, I am very hopeful of that.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1g. General administration, $275,000.

Item agreed to.

5g. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, $1,010,000.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers engineering services—

30g. Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for harbour and river works (including expenditures on works on other than federal property); provided that no contract may be entered into for new construction with an estimated total cost of $50,000 or more unless the project is individually listed in the details of estimates, $1.

Mr. Bower: I should like to speak on this vote. The western end of the province of Nova Scotia is the area where the heaviest fishing is done, perhaps, in Canada, but we are still very short of the infra structure needed to maintain the growth of this industry, which is one of the mainstays of the province.

Last year, for example, a wharf of a new design was built in this area. I am not being critical of the use of a new design; but the design was unsuccessful. Some $1.5 million was spent on its construction, but on Christmas Day the wharf was incapacitated and the last I saw of it a fence had been built across it.

Serious consideration should be given to correcting this situation immediately. The money has been spent, but the facility is not operative. A large fish plant which has been expanding greatly in recent years—it is even going into whaling—is dependant on this wharf. I insist that steps be taken to correct this unfortunate situation. There are other areas in the western end of Nova Scotia where there is need for dredging. The Harbour at Meteghan River in Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare should be deepened, so that the shipbuilding plants can handle repairs of the draggers and other vessels which, as things are, must often waste time travelling long distances to undergo necessary repairs. At Yarmouth the fisheries have grown to such a point that more wharfage facilities are badly needed. The same can be said about Pubnico harbour, where bigger and better structures are required if the size and scope of the industry is to be improved.

I see no evidence of any moves in this direction in the new estimates, and this creates grave doubt in the minds of the people of the area from which I come, particularly when they note the amounts of money which are spent by the national government on projects which are not productive of wealth. The works I am talking about will of themselves create prosperity in an area where the per capita income is relatively low in the scale of income of a province which, in turn, has a low per capita income compared to the rest of the country.

We hear a great deal about Cape Breton and its problems and I do not want to detract by one jot or tittle from the seriousness of those problems, not do I imply that the government should not proceed with the steps it apparently plans to take to solve those problems. However, I submit that the western end of Nova Scotia tends to be forgotten amid the publicity given to the problems of Cape Breton.

Mr. Benson: The hon. member has made reference to a specific situation and since I am not the minister in charge I cannot answer what he has said. But I can assure him I will bring his representations to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

National capital commission—

60g. Operation and maintenance, $473,000.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I forgo the pleasure of making a speech on national capital planning, in the interest of expedition, but I do want to say that it is intended to hold the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works firmly to their commitment to establish in the next session of parliament a special committee of this house to explore all aspects of national capital planning. In my view this should be done at the earliest opportunity next session.

I will merely add that I think the question of bridges across the Ottawa River is of vital importance, two of these bridges in particular, and that this is the crux of future progress in capital planning in this area.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE REGISTRAR GENERAL

5g. Corporations branch, $5,900.

Item agreed to.

10g. Combines Investigation Act—Administration, $100,000.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Educational broadcasting facilities—

60f. To authorize the Secretary of State, with the approval of the governor in council, to procure the incorporation of a company pursuant to part I of the Canada Corporations Act, to construct or otherwise acquire and operate, subject to the Radio Act and the Broadcasting Act, broadcasting facilities for the broadcasting by such company of programs for or on behalf of provincial and other Canadian educational institutions and authorities, and to authorize the Minister of Finance, on terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, to make payments to or on behalf of such company for the purposes thereof during the 1966-67 and 1967-68 fiscal years—not exceeding in the aggregate $750,000, $750,000.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think this item has been called in error. If 60f is the item I think it is, I do not think it was intended that it should be called, and certainly that it would be carried without discussion.

Mr. Knowles: A firm undertaking was given that it would not be called.

Mr. Benson: The ones we are carrying now are supplementary estimates G.

The Chairman: I apologize to the committee. This supplementary estimate F was mixed up with supplementary estimates G. It is not called.

Item stands.

(The following items were agreed to):

1g. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $125,675.

15g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $213,772.

27g. To extend the purposes of secretary of state vote 27a, supplementary estimates (A), 1966-67 to authorize, notwithstanding the said vote, payments in the current fiscal year of the remainder of the amount not exceeding $60,000,000 referred to therein, $21,600,000.

35g. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions for language instruction and citizenship promotion, $107,000.

50g. Payments to the national arts centre corporation to be used for the purposes set out in the National Arts Centre Act, $25,000.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

12g. Reimbursement of the penitentiaries industrial revolving fund for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed, $16,007.

Item agreed to.

25g. Payment in the current and subsequent fiscal years of a pension to Mrs. Helen Coleman, Mrs. Gladys Welfringer and Mrs. Annie Rosalie Laird in an amount equal to the amount that would be payable in that year to each such person under schedule B to the Pension Act if each of them were the widow of a Lt. Col. (Army) and entitled, pursuant to the Pension Act, to payment of a pension in that year at the rate set out in schedule B to that act minus any amount payable to such person in the year pursuant to any other statutory authority providing for the payment of a pension in respect of the loss of life while engaged in the performance of duty; amount required for 1966-67, $1,068.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question or two of the minister piloting these estimates of over $300 million, or one third of a billion dollars, through the house in one evening. I gather that this item 25g has to do with establishing a little larger pensions for three ladies, of whom I know nothing, but I gather from the information given with the item that it has something to do with the R.C.M.P. I am still smarting under the recollection of what happened to Belec and Poitras, two men from Montreal who were the first commissioned officers in the entire history of the R.C.M.P. to be convicted of malfeasance when in office, with their conviction being upheld by the appeal court in the R.C.M.P. service.

I understand we are doing a little bit of legislating by supplementary estimates in order to increase the pensions of the three estimable ladies mentioned under this item, because the cabinet does not have the authority to issue an order in council to increase their pensions.

But if we have to pass this supplementary estimate tonight in order to give pensions to these three ladies and thus establish a new law, because the item refers to this year and subsequent years, I wish to recall, with respect to Poitras and Belec, that they would not have received any pension at all if they had got their just desserts. Under this Liberal government, however, the cabinet brought in an order to establish pensions for them, in one case of about $6,000 a year and in the other of about $1,900 a year. If the cabinet thought it wise to establish by order in council pensions for these two men who were convicted, and whose convictions were upheld, why did it not bring in a special order in council to establish the necessary funds for these three women?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I am not allowed to give legal opinions. I can merely assure my hon. friend, in the particular instance that is before us to increase these pensions, that the advice given to us by the law officers of the crown was that we must do this through a special item in the estimates or by legislation, and we are choosing to do it this way.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

5g. Administration, operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to increase to $27,016,900 the commitments for the current fiscal year for the Canadian coast guard service, $360,700.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to remind the minister that recently there has been a serious loss of life on the east coast, when no less than three deep sea ships went down, with a total loss of 35 lives. The largest loss of life was due to the grounding of the trawler Cape Bonnie outside Halifax harbour. I am sure the minister is well aware of that happening. A large number of mariners, and fishermen in particular, have expressed the opinion that the navigational aids which are outside Halifax harbour should bear closer investigation by the Department of Transport.

At the present time the Sambro lightship is no longer on station. During the period that it was on station there was greater communication between the captain of the lightship and the officers in charge of both merchant ships and fishing ships, trawlers and draggers, entering and clearing the port. Therefore I would like to enter a plea that the minister and the government give consideration to restoring the Sambro lightship to its position outside Halifax harbour. This would be an act that would receive the commendation of all mariner interests, and in view of the importance of the matter I hope it will receive the government's favourable consideration.

Mr. Benson: I most certainly will bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport. I believe my hon. friend brought it to his attention on orders of the day recently, and that the minister indicated he would look into the matter of safety precautions at the entrance to Halifax harbour. Undoubtedly he is doing this, but I shall bring these additional representations to his attention.

Mr. Bower: I should like to supplement what my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg has said, but in connection with another lightship, that on the tremendously treacherous Lurcher shoals off Cape Forchu outside Yarmouth harbour. There is a report in the area that the Lurcher lightship is to be replaced by radar buoys, and the feeling of the maritime people in the southwestern end of Nova Scotia is the same as that expressed by the people in the Halifax area, that it would be most injudicious and dangerous to remove the lightship. I make a plea for the maintenance of that navigation aid in its present position.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, it is unusual for a member from the west coast to support a position taken by members from the east coast, yet it should not be because all of us are interested in the maintenance of traffic in and out of Canadian ports. From personal discussions I have had recently I know the very real concern felt by those who are interested in the port of Halifax with respect to the matters which have been drawn to the committee's attention by my colleagues from Queens-Lunenburg and Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare.

I understand one of the reasons for the reluctance to make a commitment to restore the lightship on the shoal upon which several vessels were lost, is a matter of money. Recently an automated signal has been placed there, but the authorities are concerned that if they restore the lightship manned by human beings it will cost them money to maintain the crew, provide sustenance, and transport them out to the ship on interchanges of duty. This is an improper consideration to allow to stand in the way of restoration of 100 per cent service at that station.

All that is really asked for is that the manned lightship with trained personnel be restored while another look is taken at the situation to see whether the automatic signal is really adequate to protect the lives and the safety of those in charge of the vessels coming in and out of that port.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue to give us a little more than the automatic assurance that he will bring this matter to the attention of his colleague. I would ask him to assure the committee that he personally will recommend to his colleague that, starting tomorrow and continuing until the further studies of the adequacy of the system are completed, or until an assurance is given that it is the best system which can be devised, the old system will be restored, because it is an indisputable fact that under the old system there was not this loss of life which there has been in recent months since the automatic system was installed. If the minister would give us that assurance, rather than just say that he will bring it to the attention of his colleague—that is, that he will make a positive recommendation that the former system be restored—then this item can be carried with a good conscience. If, however, he is not prepared to give that assurance, then I do not think my colleagues from the maritime area would be prepared to let the item carry.

Mr. Benson: First of all, may I say that I am not at all surprised that the hon. member from the west would support this very worthwhile plea which is being made by the members from Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: Queens-Lunenburg.

Mr. Benson: However, I am not in a position to give him my assurance that I will tell the Minister of Transport what he should do in respect of his particular department. But I can give the further assurance that tomorrow morning I will get on the telephone and speak to the Minister of Transport about this particular matter so that he can give it his own special consideration.

Item agreed to.

15g. Payments to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made by the company to the Minister of Finance to be applied by the company in the payment of the deficits, certified by the auditors of the company, arising in the operations in the calendar year 1966 in respect of the following services: Newfoundland ferry and terminals; Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals; Yarmouth, N.S.-Bar Harbor, Maine, U.S.A. ferry service, $1,176,000.

Mr. Bower: Mr. Chairman, on Friday, February 24 I asked a question of the Minister of Transport and I was declared out of order by the Speaker. I brought the matter up again on Monday, February 27 on the adjournment debate. I believe I am in order in bringing up the matter at this time, because I see in this vote specific mention of the Bar Harbor ferry. This is the subject in respect of which I should like to speak now. During the adjournment debate the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport simply talked around the subject. He was speaking of one ferry and I was speaking of another. I did not find that very satisfactory and probably he did not either. Therefore I wish to take this opportunity to bring up the subject again in an effort to obtain from the government some assurance that a situation which is very bad will be corrected.

[Mr. Fulton.]

The problem is that the ferry from Bar Harbor, Maine—the motor vessel Bluenose—to Yarmouth is so crowded during the summer months that people are unable to obtain passage on it. In this way tourists are discouraged from coming to Nova Scotia. Tourism happens to be just about on a par in importance, with our fishing industry. It is an other economic backbone of the province. In my remarks on the adjournment debate I endeavoured to receive an assurance from the Minister of Transport that this summer a second ferry—a supplementary service—would be available for service between Bar Harbor and Yarmouth, so that the tourist trade would not be throttled.

I had reason to believe that such a ferry might be available because last winter when the Bluenose was placed to go into drydock for overhaul, the Leif Eiriksson, which is a car ferry, was supposed to relieve her. At that particular time, however, the Leif Eiriksson was required to relieve the M. V. Cabot and therefore was not available to replace the Bluenose. I presume that now, or at least by early summer the Cabot will be back in service, and therefore I urge the minister to consider putting the Leif Eiriksson, or some equally suitable vessel, into use as a supplementary service. It is absolutely essential that our tourist industry not be restricted; it should, rather, be given a very opportunity to expand.

I think the request I am making is a reasonable one. I am dealing now, not just with the town of Yarmouth but also with the interests of the province of Nova Scotia. I believe the people of this province have every right to feel that they should be given consideration in this matter.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

20g. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land, dock and terminal facilities, including improvements to terminal facilities owned by Newfoundland, and of vessels and related equipment as listed in the details of the estimates provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amounts within the vote to be expended on individually listed projects, $1.

27g. Canadian National Railways deficits, 1966—amount required to provide for payment to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made by the company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the company in payment of the system deficit (certified by the auditors of the company) arising in the calendar year 1966, which deficit shall be calculated after taking into account subsidies received by the company in 1966 in respect of the maintenance of lower freight rates in 1964 and 1965, and after providing for outstanding liabilities for vacation pay accrued in 1966, subject to recovery therefrom of accountable advances made to the company from the consolidated revenue fund, $25,000,000.

30g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $339,000.

35g. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to increase to $37,800,000 the commitments for the current fiscal year for airports and other ground services, $5,300,000.

Mr. Bower: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak in respect of this item also. Again this is in connection with tourism in the province of Nova Scotia. The Yarmouth airport is the air gateway into Nova Scotia and indeed into the maritime provinces from such moderately populated places as New York city, Boston, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Washington and so on. A year or so ago the government improved one of the two runways at the Yarmouth airport but did not improve the other. I questioned the ministry on that and was informed that they would not do the work on the transverse airstrip because they did not expect to have DC-9 aircraft in use until 1970. It seemed therefore, that we were to be relegated to the position of having second rate landing facilities until 1970, and second rate planes to the same date.

I should like to repeat my point that everything should be done to encourage people to travel to the Maritimes. There is no limit to the ability of the people in the maritimes to entertain tourists, including people from central Canada, during the summers. I feel that consideration should be given to providing first rate treatment to the gateway to the area, and that this should include provision of a first rate airport and up to date planes.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell me whether this vote includes any money for improvement of the facilities at the Winnipeg International Airport. I have in mind in particular the fact that the arrangements for people to enter the airport from incoming aircraft have never been completed.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I believe the minister has indicated that he is going on a trip out west in the next few days and will stop at Winnipeg. If he has not done so before, I hope he will take advantage of the fun of walking up a flight of stairs for no other purpose than to come down again. When he gets off the plane somebody will no doubt recognize him as a V.I.P. and will open the garage doors down below and let him walk through the catacombs. I hope he will refuse that privilege and act like an ordinary person by walking up the stairs for the fun of coming down again.

Mr. Benson: I always do.

Mr. Knowles: As I understand the original plan, it called for escalators both ways. In the meantime there has been some discussion about the possibility of having one of those telescope arrangements from the second floor to the aircraft level. I might mention that there is no problem confronting people leaving the air terminal to go to the aircraft. They do have to take an escalator up and then walk down. But people arriving find they have to go through this process of walking up the stairs for the fun of walking down, and this is a particular hardship for older people and people with children.

I hope this item includes money for this improvement. If not, I hope that the minister in his capacity as President of the Treasury Board—that man who says there is money for this and for that—will encourage the Minister of Transport to correct this deficiency.

Mr. Benson: I should point out that the improvement to the Winnipeg airport is not covered by this item. The Minister of Transport indicated to the house in answer to a question on orders of the day that this particular matter is under consideration. I assure my hon. friend that if he makes a recommendation to me, and we have any money, his recommendation will be looked upon favourably, at least by me.

Mr. Knowles: Those are very nice words, but let me remind the President of the Treasury Board that the previous minister of transport, the present Minister of Public Works, was also looking into the situation when he held that portfolio. I hope this process of looking into the situation will some day soon produce results.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

35g. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to increase to $37,800,000 the commitments for the current fiscal year for airports and other ground services, $5,300,000.

General—

73g. Reimbursement of the Department of Transport revolving fund for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed, $215,700.

B—Air transport board—

75g. Salaries and other expenses, $12,000.

78g. Subventions for air carriers as detailed in the estimates, $250,000.

C—Board of transport commissioners for Canada—

80g. Administration, operation and maintenance, $35,000.

82g. Railway grade crossing fund—to authorize, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, an increase from $34,967,000 to $40,967,000 (in addition to any commitments in respect of which amounts are appropriated under this or any other act) in the commitments that may be made in the current and subsequent fiscal years, $1.

D—Canadian maritime commission—

90g. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates, $2,081,919.

E—National harbours board—

104g. Payment to the national harbours board to be applied in payment of the balance of the deficit incurred in respect of the calendar year 1965 and the deficit expected to be incurred in the calendar year 1966 (exclusive of interest on advances authorized by parliament and depreciation on capital structures) in the operation of the Jacques Cartier bridge, Montreal harbour, $483,000.

F—St. Lawrence seaway authority—

105g. Operating deficit and capital requirements of canals and works entrusted to the St. Lawrence seaway authority with the approval of the Governor in Council and to authorize, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act or any other act, the disbursement by the authority of revenues derived from the operation and management of such canals and works, $549,000.

107g. Payment to the St. Lawrence seaway authority, upon application, approved by the Minister of Transport, made by the authority to the Minister of Finance, to reimburse the authority in respect of the Welland canal deficit incurred by the authority during the calendar year 1966, $10,150,000.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Asselin, Richmond-Wolfe): That concludes the Department of Transport. We will now consider the supplementary estimates for the Department of the Treasury Board.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Administration—

1g. Departmental administration, $74,400,000.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have sat here for a number of hours, suffering with the minister, while he has laboured to explain these estimates and send them into the cold, hard world. I think this is an appropriate time to make a few remarks about our procedure of dealing with estimates. The minister I am sure knows what I am going to say on this item, which includes the publication of estimates.

Perhaps I am preaching to the converted so far as the minister is concerned. It is his delinquent colleagues to whom I wish to address my remarks because they are delinquent through indolence, negligence or in attempting to slip these estimates through at the last minute.

The total amount involved in the supplementary estimates is $235 million and, if I may continue in the same vein in which I started, the period of gestation is all too short. These estimates were brought down on March 10, three weeks before the end of the fiscal year. The minister will likely say that this practice has been followed on many previous occasions, but in light of the fact that the estimates for the ensuing fiscal year show such a tremendous increase I do not think it is competent for us to let these supplementary estimates pass without registering a very strong objection.

It is a bad parliament that follows this practice. We have now no alternative because these estimates must be passed by the end of this month. It is an even worse government which brings down estimates at such a late date and indicates that the money has either been spent or committed. There have been problems but many of them have occurred because the government did not arrange its affairs as it should have by bringing these estimates down some 15 months ago. The government has gone forward, backward, sideways; it has wiggled, squirmed and jiggled like a go-go dancer with Saint Vitus dance. In my view this is not good enough.

I do not want to debate the reports of the standing committee on public accounts and on procedure, but we have attempted to deal with this problem. I hope we can go a step further. I mention this because the senior Minister without Portfolio made a speech the other day regarding procedure, in which he outlined what the government would like to see so far as the opposition is concerned. What the opposition wants to see so far as the government is concerned is some order in the way these estimates are brought down.

Some day I hope a fixed date will be set when the main estimates must be brought down, and a fixed date when supplementary estimates must be concluded in order that we will not have this situation occurring again and again. It is my hope that the procedure committee will have an opportunity to come to grips with the situation because I think it is shameful and scandalous that we are being asked to approve estimates at this stage without an opportunity to give careful and anxious scrutiny to $325 million of expenditures. I hope that with the co-operation of all hon. members the procedure committee will accomplish something in this regard, because this problem has caused difficulty for everyone. It is my hope that we will be able to avoid any repetition, and I have spoken tonight to file a caveat to this procedure at this time.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, let me say in reply that the hon. member is preaching to a convert. I am one of those who believe parliamentary estimates should be dealt with in the early days of a session. Two things are involved in this regard. The government must present the estimates properly, and this year we have presented the estimates for next year as quickly as they have ever been presented. Second, committees to whom estimates are referred must not hold on to them for undue periods of time. This happens on occasion and we do not get them back quickly to the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Like within seven days.

Mr. Benson: I cannot specify a time limit within which they should be considered by a committee, but they should be dealt with expeditiously and returned to the house as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in support of the position taken by the hon. member for Peace River. We are both members of the committee on procedure, and therefore are particularly conscious of the recommendations now before the house. I hope the President of the Treasury Board can sell this recommendation to his colleagues.

Having regard to the point made about committees not doing their jobs—

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Knowles: I did not mean to be offensive. In respect of the point the minister made about the committee holding on to estimates and not allowing them to get back to the house, I simply say that one of our recommendations will take care of that difficulty.

The significant recommendation is to the effect that unless estimates are passed before the end of the 90th sitting day of the session the government will suffer the penalty of loss of time. This is true also if the government has to bring in supplementary estimates after that period of time.

I think the hon. member for Peace River was speaking not only for himself but for most members of the committee when he said we should like soon to see the day that we have a calendar in respect of these things. In the meantime we have recommended that we adopt this rule, which we hope will induce the government to get the estimates through in the early part of a session. It is a good thing that we are preaching to one person who has been converted, and we hope that he will attend to the other ninety and nine.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1g carry?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about the committee system, because I think it is time we gave our attention to it. The idea of having standing committees to which departmental estimates are referred is an excellent one, and an improvement of course in our procedures. But I raise with the minister, the government and the committee the question whether we have not gone too far along the lines of referring every department every year to a standing committee. This means that we have 24 standing committees. That is fine, but you cannot man 24 standing committees all meeting at the same time as the house and its committees are meeting.

I think we are suffering, as it were, from an excess of bad conscience. Because in the past we did not refer enough departments for committee scrutiny, we are now making up for it by referring too many all at the same time. I make this suggestion for the consideration of the committee of the whole and the standing committee. We now have 24 standing committees corresponding roughly to each department of government. Could we not, on the basis that the normal life of a parliament is four years, refer, say, six departments a year for detailed scrutiny by a committee? Then in four years you would have had every department of government studied exhaustively in a committee. But you would have in each year only six committees sitting, and it would be possible to man those six standing committees in terms of work of the members, the committees staffs, the translation service, and so on; whereas at the present time, while I think the desire is commendable, the work is suffering and committees are not able to do the job because they lack the staff, and members lack the time they would like to devote to these matters.

I would therefore ask this committee of the whole, the government and the standing committee to consider the idea that instead of having every department referred every year we should have, say, six departments referred every year, so that in the life of an ordinary parliament you would have all departments given one thoroughgoing scrutiny in a standing committee.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I just happened to come in at the appropriate time when someone was talking about the committee system of the House of Commons. I wish to add my protest in this respect. I think that the House of Commons has gone crazy over committees and the house itself has suffered accordingly. This is a committee of the House of Commons, a committee of the whole house, and should be used as it used to be used in days gone by, instead of hiving off small committees scattered all over the buildings on parliament hill.

You can be sure of maintaining a quorum in the committee of the whole house, but you cannot be sure of maintaining a quorum in some of our smaller committees. Time and time again we hear of committees meeting and waiting for a half an hour or longer for a quorum before they can proceed with their work. I say, Mr. Chairman, let us revert to half way between this system and the old, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops. Let this committee of the whole house deal with estimates to the fullest extent that is reasonable and from time to time refer estimates for more so-called detailed study by committees.

There is some advantage to this detailed study by committees once in a while, but not every year. Senior departmental officials have told me that burdensome as it is to appear before a house committee on estimates, nevertheless it is a spur and a help to them in their work because they are put on their mettle, they have to know their job and be able to answer the questions of interested members of the House of Commons. I would not subject them to this every year, but as the hon. member for Kamloops has quite properly said, perhaps six departments each year should be referred to our smaller committees. This system might very well satisfy the house.

[Mr. Fulton.]

As a matter of fact some years ago we had a committee on estimates. The idea with regard to that committee was just about what has been proposed by the hon. member. But I warn the House of Commons against the proliferation of committees. I have seen during the last two years the deterioration of the committee of the whole house and the House of Commons itself because hon. members have been occupied elsewhere. Of course the general public think we should be here in this chamber. For the last six weeks—and I am a fairly good attender in this chamber; I am either here in my seat or behind the curtains, and can generally be found—on the defence committee alone, with 23 other hon. members of this house. I have been attending twice and three times a day through the five sitting days of the week. Our only opportunity to be present in this chamber has been on the orders of the day. This is not right. Just think of the speeches the house has been deprived of hearing, because we have been absent on committee work.

Mr. Baldwin: What about the benefit to the defence committee?

Mr. Churchill: The defence committee has of course reaped the benefit. But a larger audience exists in this chamber. The present system is ruinous of the work of an hon. member; it is ruinous to the chamber itself and is putting too much emphasis on the committee system. The committee system has value, but its value is not as great as some outside observers maintain. Having done quite a bit of committee work over a great number of years, I come back to the point that here in this chamber more effective work generally is preformed.

There are special times and special investigations when better work is carried out by a smaller committee, but by and large this chamber is the place where the work should be carried out. I hope that instead of having 24 committees examining estimates, the bulk of the estimates will be covered here and the ministers concerned will stand up and disclose to us whether they know anything about the departments with which they are fumbling. We will soon find out. I support what has been said by the hon. members for Kamloops and others in regard to the committee system. It has gone too far too fast, and there should be a retraction in this respect.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word or two with regard to the committee system with which we have been experimenting during the last year or two. I think it has advantages in many ways, but I believe many of the advantages are lost because of bad scheduling. This is the point I particularly wish to make, namely that the committees should be set up early and the scheduling of the meetings of the committees should be such as not to interfere with the sittings of the house or with the sittings of other committees. During the 22 years I have been a member of the House of Commons I have been trying to put this point over in the various committees of which I have been a member, and in this chamber. However, I am sorry to say that there has never been very much in the way of material advance made in that regard.

If you have two or three committees authorized to sit at a certain time, they will almost invariably hold their meetings on Tuesday mornings and Thursday mornings, and if they are meeting more than twice a week they will probably all meet at the same time. I believe that many of the difficulties which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has mentioned could be obviated by a reasonable scheduling by a house co-ordinating group.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1g carry?

Item agreed to.

Government administration—

19g. To authorize the Governor in Council to amend from time to time schedule A of the Public Service Superannuation Act by deleting therefrom any board, commission or corporation named therein that has ceased to exist, and to deem, with effect from the 11th day of July, 1966, that persons in positions, as determined by the Governor in Council, in the whole or any portion of any board, commission or corporation which has its own pension plan are not employed in the public service for the purposes of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Public Service Superannuation Act while such pension plan is in force, $1.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, lest the President of the Treasury Board think that there is concurrence in the remarks which he made earlier about $1 votes, I merely wish to say that I think this item and the next one are not matters which are proper for the estimates and should be put in a statute. I believe this is particularly true of these two $1 votes, because earlier the house had before it the superannuation acts. I suggest that this is where these matters should have been dealt with. I will not reiterate the views that I have expressed before. I only wish to say that I am unrepentant so far as they are concerned.

Item agreed to.

24g. To authorize as of March 31, 1967, the charging to the superannuation account and the retirement fund, as defined in the Public Service Superannuation Act, of the amount of all advances made pursuant to finance vote L100D of Appropriation Act No. 2, 1966, and L100E of Appropriation Act No. 4, 1966 to or in respect of persons described in those votes who were required to make contributions under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Canada pension plan or the Quebec pension plan in respect of remuneration received after December 31, 1965, and to provide that, notwithstanding the Public Service Superannuation Act, the contributions payable pursuant to that act to the superannuation account or the retirement fund by any such person shall be reduced to the extent that the combined effect of that act and the Canada pension plan or the Quebec pension plan result in a requirement to contribute in respect of that remuneration at rates in excess of 6.5 per cent in the case of a male contributor and 5 per cent in the case of a female contributor prior to his or her ceasing to be employed in the public service, $1.

Item agreed to.

25g. To authorize the treasury board to delete from the accounts certain debts due, and claims by, Her Majesty, each of which is in excess of $1,000, amounting in the aggregate to $15,133,978.33, $1.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, vote 25g is a very large sum of money. I think that perhaps it is the largest item which has ever been written off. One sees that in relation to the National Revenue taxation the average amount of write-off is $10,456, which would indicate that there are some very spectacular claims. Similarly, in Defence Production the average write-off is $13,289, and in Unemployment Insurance there are two claims averaging $25,300. The minister has been kind enough to give me, in accordance with past practice, a list of the items which are being written off, which I have not had an opportunity to examine.

However, I would like him to assure the house that he has given them his careful consideration and that he believes that all these items, totalling over $15 million, are in fact uncollectible.

Mr. Benson: Not only do I believe this but, as my hon. friend knows, before a write-off takes place an inter-departmental committee examines it and decides whether the amount is absolutely uncollectible. I would point out that the largest amount is in the Department of National Revenue. This is quite normal because after all that department is responsible for collecting most of the money collected by the government. I think that over the years the efficiency of the department has been demonstrated by the relatively small amount which ultimately has had to be written off, and the officials in my department should be congratulated for the work they do in collecing accounts. When one considers that they are collecting between $10 billion and $11 billion a year, the write-off of $15 million is not as significant as one would think. One hates ever to have to write off accounts as bad debts, but people do go bankrupt.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the minister concerning vote 25g under the Treasury Board. I know the minister well and I know he is truthful in his answers. He and I became members of this house together in June 1962, when our party was in opposition. No doubt he will remember the time when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was sitting then in opposition, assisted by some newcomers to the house, was pressing the government of the day for a statement concerning all amounts over $1,000 that had been remitted by the government, as required by the Financial Administration Act. The minister will remember that there had been some hanky-panky or sleight of hand by the government of that time whereby they raised tariff rates on a large number of items and reduced them on another large number. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre drew the attention of the house to the fact that when there is remission of more than $1,000 it must be published for the information of the members of parliament.

In vote 25g we are asked, under a $1 item, to authorize the Treasury Board to delete from the accounts certain debts which are due. I should like to ask whether this language has been picked deliberately in order to get around the requirement under the Financial Administration Act, according to which amounts remitted in excess of $1,000 must be published. It seems to me that this item should be covered by the Financial Administration Act and not by supplementary estimates for $1 authorizing the Treasury Board to delete from the accounts certain amounts due. When I take a stand in opposition I remain with it even when I am on the right hand of the Speaker. I believe the Minister of National Revenue acts similarly. However, I would like to know whether the cabinet has used the word "delete" in order to get around the provisions of the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Chairman, that is not the case. Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act allows the governor in council to forgive amounts of indebtedness under certain conditions. If the amount of indebtedness is in excess of $1,000, it has to be published in the public accounts. In this instance we are not forgiving or remitting anything. Every possible effort has been made by the government to collect the money, but it has not been possible.

So there is no object in keeping it in our accounts as an account receivable and inflating the balance sheet of the government of Canada by showing an amount which we cannot collect. It is the same as a bad debt in ordinary business. Remissions under section 22 of the Financial Administration Act are a different matter, where an indebtedness is forgiven. Here we are not forgiving anything, and indeed, if we had a chance to collect the amounts, we would not be writing them off.

Mr. Cowan: I should like to ask the minister one question: Does the debtor come out the best when the indebtedness has been remitted or when it has been deleted?

Mr. Benson: It is being written off as a bad debt. The governor in council did not decide that this was an unfair amount for someone to pay, and that therefore it should be written off. In this case we made every effort to collect it but were unable to.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, can the minister give an indication of the reasons for the write-off in some of these cases? Are the 1,300 write-offs under National Revenue, taxation, individual income tax debts, or are they corporation income tax debts? In either case why are they being written off?

Mr. Benson: In some cases they are corporation debts. Under customs and excise the total amount is $1,073,000.

Mr. Knowles: What about the other taxation?

Mr. Benson: There are many of them here and in each case the reasons are indicated beside them. In the first case there are deceased debtors with no estate. Then there are untraceable debtors, that is taxpayers who may have left Canada. We may have searched for them from six to ten years, after which the debt is written off because we cannot find them. Then there are cases of people who are no longer resident in Canada and from whom we cannot collect. They do not cease to be indebted to the crown merely because we write them off as a bad debt. Another large number of cases are bankruptcies.

Mr. Knowles: Then there is a difference between these cases and the cases referred to by the hon. membr for York-Humber? If one of these persons who has left Canada were to come back, would he still owe us money?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: So the amount has been written off because we cannot get it, but he has not been forgiven.

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Item 25g agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

The following items were agreed to:

6g. To provide, notwithstanding the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, that Martin Merlihan, Mary Merlihan, Sheila Merlihan and Patricia Merlihan, children of the late Francis J. Merlihan who died on the 7th day of June, 1965, while under treatment for a pensionable disability, be deemed to be students on and from the 8th day of June, 1965, within the meaning of the said act, $1.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Pensions—

20g. Administration, $70,000.

Treatment services—

30g. Operation and maintenance, $900,000.

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

40g. Administration of Veterans' Land Act; soldier settlement and British family settlement, $210,000.

LOANS, INVESTMENTS AND ADVANCES

The following items were agreed to:

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—

L5g. Advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, subject to such terms and conditions (including the delivery to Her Majesty, in satisfaction of the advances, of obligations or shares of the company), as the Governor in Council may approve, to finance the construction in Quebec of a Candu-BLW 250 nuclear power station, $3,000,000.

Defence production—

L13g. To extend the purposes of the revolving fund established by loans, investments and advances vote L18e, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1966, to include (a) the procurement of insurance coverage at bulk rates on the movement of household effects; and (b) the financing, in the 1966-67 and 1967-68 fiscal years, of the cost of hotel accommodation in Montreal during the period of the Canadian universal and international exhibition, Montreal, 1967 under arrangements approved by the treasury board, $1.

External affairs—

L24g. Additional advance to the working capital fund of the United Nations educational, scientific and cultural organization in an amount of $23,460 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1967, which is, $25,000.

Finance—

Comptroller of the treasury—

L29g. To authorize the operation of a working capital advance account, in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the treasury board, for the purpose of providing to federal government departments and agencies standing travel advances, advances for petty cash expenditures and imprest bank accounts, and such other accountable advances as may be approved by treasury board; advances made shall be charged to the account and refunds of advances credited thereto, the amount outstanding at any one time not to exceed, $17,000,000.

Indian affairs and northern development—

L51g. Indian housing assistance account—to extend the purposes of Indian affairs and northern development vote L51a of the supplementary estimates (A), 1966-67, to authorize loans and advances to Indians for the acquisition of houses and land for housing purposes in areas other than Indian reserves, $1.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two comments on this item. About a month or so ago I saw a television program which indicated that the department of Indian affairs had set aside a certain amount of money for housing projects for Indians. A difficulty had arisen in that the amount of money allocated for these homes was insufficient to complete them. As a result, we are now awaiting action by the department of Indian affairs.

My question is this. Is this item to meet this particular situation, and can the minister give us an indication whether this is a serious problem? Or is this just an isolated case.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I can read this particular item so as to give the explanation of the department for the amount of this vote. Item L51a—that was the original item—was approved so as to provide money for the construction of houses for Indians moving off reserves. Unfortunately, the vote that was approved provided only for the construction of houses off reserves and did not provide the authority to purchase land for the construction of houses or for the acquisition of houses. It is felt that Indians will in some cases prefer to acquire houses rather than proceed with the construction of houses, and it is necessary to extend the wording of the vote to provide the branch with the necessary authority.

Mr. Korchinski: I am sure the minister does not have all of the details, but has the problem that I have indicated been corrected and the houses completed? In other words, have sufficient funds been made available for the homes but not the land, or is this a fund which did not provide sufficient money to construct these homes?

Mr. Benson: All we are doing here is changing the vote wording so that not only can Indians moving off reserves build houses with a loan from the department of Indian affairs, but they can also get a loan to buy a house. In other words, they can do either.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

Labour—

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

L38g. Advances charged to the special account in the consolidated revenue fund established by subsection (4) of section 35A of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of housing and land development projects undertaken jointly with the governments of provinces during the calendar year 1966, $19,500,000.

L39g. Advances charged to the special account in the consolidated revenue fund established by sub-section 2 of section 36H of the National Housing Act, 1954, in respect of loans to any province, municipality or municipal sewerage corporation, for construction or expansion of municipal sewage treatment projects during the calendar year 1966, $32,500,000.

Manpower and immigration—

L41g. To increase to $500,000 the amount that may be charged at any time to the special account established by vote 626, Appropriation Act No. 2, 1955, as amended by vote 526, Appropriation Act No. 6, 1956, for advances to posts and to employees on posting abroad; additional amount required, $225,000.

Public Works—

L56g. To authorize the operation of a working capital advance account in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the treasury board, for the purpose of making payments in respect of construction and repair projects undertaken by the Department of Public Works on behalf of other federal government departments and agencies; the payments to be charged to the account and refunds by federal government departments and agencies to be credited thereto, the amount outstanding at any time, after deducting therefrom all amounts due by federal government departments and agencies, not to exceed, $10,000,000.

[Mr. Benson.]

Solicitor general—

C—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

L70g. To authorize the operation of a working capital advance account in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the treasury board, for the purpose of operating RCMP messes; expenditures for such purpose to be charged to the account and receipts for mess services to be credited thereto, the amount outstanding at any time not to exceed, $80,000.

Transport—

L81g. Loans to Canadian National Railways in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve for maintenance, repair and acquisition of passenger equipment, $200,000.

L83g. Acquisition of two Twin-Otter aircraft for leasing to Leeward Islands Air Transport Services Limited, in accordance with an agreement to be entered into with the approval of the governor in council, at a rate that will reimburse the crown for the cost of acquisition, and that will include an option to purchase the said aircraft, notwithstanding anything contained in the Surplus Crown Assets Act, $771,757.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, this item is a little unusual. It calls for the acquisition of two Twin-Otter aircraft for leasing to the Leeward Islands Air Transport Services Limited, which operates in the Caribbean. This is in accordance with an agreement to be entered into with the approval of the governor in council, and so on. This is a little different from the normal loans, investments and advances which we make and approve in this house.

Could we have an explanation from the minister as to this item? Is the Leeward Islands Air Transport Services Limited owned by one of the islands in the Caribbean, or is it a privately-owned concern? Is there any connection with the Canadian government?

Mr. Benson: This is subject to correction, Mr. Chairman, and if I am wrong I will let my hon. friend know, but the Leeward Islands Air Services is controlled in large part by the government of Trinidad. These two aircraft are to assist them in a capital way to carry out the inter-island air service which is very necessary down there. It is really a type of foreign aid which is not going to cost the Canadian government money. We are providing these very necessary aircraft for our friends in the Caribbean, sister Commonwealth countries, and the cost is amortized over a period of years. I have been assured this amortization will be made and that this money will be recoverable. As I understand the situation, in the case of default the government of Canada is completely protected in that they will maintain right of ownership in the aircraft.

Mr. Churchill: Would it not have been better to have some sort of government arrangement? If the Trinidad government owns the Leeward Islands Air Transport Services, would this not have been better?

Mr. Benson: They control them. I believe there was some difficulty because some people had a minority interest in the company. I am not fully cognizant of all the facts in this case and the Minister of Transport would know much more about it than I. As I understand it, it was necessary to make this arrangement in this particular manner and it is now before parliament as a loan item to be authorized to enable the Department of Transport to provide, in effect, aircraft for the use of our fellow Commonwealth countries in the Caribbean which are short of capital to buy these aircraft.

Mr. Churchill: I do not disapprove of assisting our fellow Commonwealth countries in the Caribbean by any means whatever, but here we are making a loan to a company which is now disclosed to be partly controlled by the government of Trinidad and partly a private enterprise organization. To say the least, this is an unusual arrangement. There may be companies in Canada that would like to make an arrangement like this with the Canadian government.

Mr. Benson: The Minister of Transport, who has just come into the chamber, says that the agreement has now been made and he would be more than pleased to show the agreement to my hon. friend so he could consider the details of it. He does not have it with him but he would be more than pleased to show it to the hon. member.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, much as I like dealing with the Minister of Transport I would rather do this in public. Will he disclose the details to this house so that everyone will know about it, instead of this being private information provided on a confidential basis?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very glad to lay the agreement on the table at the first opportunity.

Mr. Churchill: I think that would be satisfactory and I regret that we had to suggest this indirectly to the minister. He should have done this before the estimates were put in front of us.

Mr. Monteith: Is that an undertaking?

Mr. Pickersgill: This will be done on April 3 or thereabouts.

Item agreed to.

L82g. To authorize, notwithstanding sub-section 5 of section 58 of the Financial Administration Act, the retention within the Department of Transport revolving fund of credits arising from the introduction of a system of standard pricing, $1.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this is another of the dollar items. I think there are 18 of them in this set of estimates. I should like to put this question to the minister. What is his attitude toward the complaints that have been made on both sides of the house of the extensive use of dollar items for the purpose of legislating? Does the minister just regard these protests as something he has to listen to, or is he going to do better next time?

Mr. Benson: I think one would find, Mr. Chairman, that on the last two occasions when supplementaries were presented to the house the government did much better than it had previously done in this regard.

Mr. Knowles: There are 18 in these votes.

Mr. Benson: As I understand the situation, there were almost as many last year. However, that is neither here nor there. As I explained earlier, many of these items are not legislative items, inasmuch as they only change a vote wording. I read into Hansard a little earlier this evening an explanation of all of them. As I recall it there were only three which were really legislative items, two of them with respect to the pension plan and superannuation contributions of civil servants.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Perhaps I might take the blame for there being an oversight. Were that not provided we should have to amend the Superannuation Act. This is a once and for all item, and may be dealt with in this manner. I can assure my hon. friend that I do not like this because, no matter what department comes before the committee I have the responsibility for getting it through, and I know how difficult that is.

Item agreed to.

Ways and Means

L83g. Acquisition of two Twin-Otter aircraft for leasing to Leeward Islands Air Transport Services Limited, in accordance with an agreement to be entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council, at a rent that will reimburse the crown for the cost of acquisition, and that will include an option to purchase the said aircraft, notwithstanding anything contained in the Surplus Crown Assets Act, $771,757.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Veterans affairs—

Treatment services—

L100g. To authorize the operation, in accordance with section 58 of the Financial Administration Act, of a revolving fund for the purpose of financing the acquisition and storage of materials and supplies by departmental hospitals and other facilities in Canada, including the central medical stores maintained in Ottawa; the amount to be charged to the revolving fund at any time not to exceed, $5,000,000.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Benson moved:

RESOLVED, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1967, the sum of $324,983,578 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-282 for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st day of March, 1967.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Benson moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Benson.]

On clause 2—$324,983,578 granted for 1966-67.

Mr. Benson: I rise at this time to assure hon. members that the bill is in the usual form, that the items contained therein are exactly the same as the items which were included in the resolution, based on estimates.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask, for the purposes of certainty, whether it is clear that item 60f is not in this bill.

Mr. Benson: It is not in the copy I have. If it is I shall move that it be deleted.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Commitments.

Mr. Cowan: May I ask how many millions of dollars have been voted in this bill under contingencies?

Mr. Monteith: That is a good question.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York-Humber is asking a very sensible question. How much is in here for contingencies?

Mr. Benson: There is nothing in here for contingencies. This is money which must be spent by the end of the month, by the end of March. No contingency reserves are being built up.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $583,621,688.93, being the aggregate of—

(a) one-twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1968, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $499,354,305.59;

(b) an additional ten-twelfths of loans, investments and advances item L40 (schedule A) of the said main estimates, $16,666,666.67;

(c) an additional four-twelfths of the total amounts of atomic energy item 5, energy, mines and resources item 10, and national research council of Canada, including the medical research council, item 10 (schedule B) of the said main estimates, $23,778,000;

(d) an additional three-twelfths of the total amounts of energy, mines and resources item 80 (schedule C) of the said main estimates, $2,543,000;

(e) an additional two-twelfths of the total amounts of energy, mines and resources item 30, external affairs item 35, loans, investments and advances item L25 (schedule D) of the said main estimates, $27,544,166.67;

(f) an additional one-twelfth of the total amounts of industry item 15, legislation item 20, national revenue item 5, solicitor general item 15, and trade and commerce item 29 (schedule E) of the said main estimates, $13,735,550.

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1968.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: I wish to say that the proportions requested in this bill are for one month's interim supply to last to April 30, 1967. In no instance is the full amount of an item being released by this bill. The form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills, and this goes for the resolution, as well. The passage of this resolution and the following bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize any item of the estimates when it comes up in the committee of the whole house, and an undertaking is given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Churchill: The only thing that saves the government from a prolonged debate on interim supply is the fact that we have been engaged in this lengthy session of the house for 231 days, which is an indication of serious bad management on the part of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: If there are any complaints, I will explain that statement.

The other fact is that the hour is late and the members of the cabinet want to have an Easter break. Out of compassion for them we do not propose prolonging the debate on interim supply. But we have a very serious complaint to offer, and I propose in just a few minutes to state that complaint, so that there may be no misunderstanding in future and no one on the government side will be able to say we raised no objection at this time. This is the first opportunity we have had to raise the objection, as the new estimates are before us.

On Tuesday, March 14, the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Calgary North, myself and several other members of this house drew attention to irregularities in the defence estimates. On that occasion we raised a question of privilege and Mr. Speaker decided that because the estimates had not been referred to the house they were not before us for discussion, and that a question of privilege was not in order. But he did leave the door open to us to raise the matter on the appropriate occasion and the appropriate occasion is, of course, right now.

If the situation were different, the estimates would have to be withdrawn and rewritten as far as the Department of National Defence is concerned. I feel the greatest regret that this has not been done by the government. We pointed out the error to hon. gentlemen opposite, but they are so accustomed to taking up inflexible positions that we are continually placed in the position of having to plead with them to do what is right. It should be the other way round. They should be setting an example as the government of this country. But it is we who have to point out their errors and urge them to do what is proper and within the law.

They have broken the law by submitting the estimates for 1967-68 in their present form in connection with the Department of National Defence. They had no authority to present those estimates in the way they have done, contrary to the practice in the past. If the Treasury Board or the cabinet is to have the right to alter the wording of items in the estimates at their whim and pleasure, it becomes almost impossible for this house to do what it is duty bound to do, namely to examine the estimates with care, make comparisons with other years, and present a clear picture to the public showing how the money is being expended.

The mistake which was made was smuggled into the book of estimates for the year ending March 31, 1967, the fiscal year which is now coming to an end. My recollection is that during the last two years, in 1965 and 1966, the estimates of the Department of National Defence were put through the house by the use of the guillotine. There was a very restricted debate and it was not noted that in the estimates for 1966 the introductory paragraph to vote 15 had been materially altered as compared with previous years. This is where the trouble arose. I now want to refer to the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966 where the introductory formula to vote 15 reads as follows:

Operation, maintenance and construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and major equipment for the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Now the book of estimates for the coming fiscal year, 1967-68 repeats the introductory paragraph which was smuggled in last year, and is again in error, because according to the National Defence Act the Canadian forces consist of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Heretofore the estimates have appeared under these appropriate headings and a comparison has been made between the new fiscal year and the old fiscal year. In the estimates now in front of us for 1967-68 there is no possibility of discovering what amount of money the government proposes to spend on the Royal Canadian Navy or the Army or the Royal Canadian Air Force for the coming fiscal year, in order to relate these sums to the amounts spent in the past fiscal year. They have all been grouped together, and we have a new division into the commands which the Minister of National Defence has set up.

I have no objection to the expenditures of those commands being set out separately, but they should have been listed in addition to the information supplied with regard to the cost of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force. This was the substance of the question of privilege we raised on March 14 and I raise it again, now, not as a question of privilege but as a warning to the government that although we propose tonight because we are co-operative, to pass interim supply for one month, we reserve the right to raise this question again and obtain a settlement of this matter before the fiscal year is consumed.

[Mr. Churchill.]

• (10:30 p.m.)

We think it is absolutely wrong to do this without the approval of the house and without consultation with the standing committee on public accounts. It is absolutely wrong to fail to give the house and the people of Canada an exact assessment of the proposed expenditures in relation to the three armed services which are still in existence. These three armed services will remain in existence until the Canada Defence Act is altered. It has not been altered yet.

This house has not changed that act, and even if the proposed amendments to that act which are to abolish the three armed services pass this house later on this year, we have the word of the minister himself that four to six months will elapse before the new act will be proclaimed. At a rough guess, that means that anywhere from five to eight months will elapse before the three armed services are completely abolished, and before the new set of estimates would have application to their changed formation. So, for a great part of the coming fiscal year, the estimates presented to us give a false picture. This is what I am objecting to tonight, and I am reserving for my party the right to raise this question again, whether it be during the course of some other debate, or when the next application for interim supply comes before us.

Meantime I give a friendly warning to the government, this sometimes inflexible, sometimes immovable government, to change its ways and make the alteration which we are now suggesting. It would be a simple matter on an issue as important as this to delay the operation of this house until the change is made, but I am counting on the good sense of the Minister of National Revenue and of the Minister of Finance to have this change made.

It is not too difficult to do. We are not asking for the whole group of estimates to be altered. We are asking for these few pages dealing with the Department of National Defence to be set up in the form in which they were a year ago. That is not impossible for the Department of National Defence and the Department of Finance to arrange. It is a simple request and I hope when the estimates finally come before the house they will be in the proper form. If that happens, when the next request is made for interim supply we will not raise the objection I have been raising tonight, and which I raise with regret because of the long and hard session we have had, and the long hours. But, always staunch in doing my duty, I bring this to the attention of the House of Commons.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to comment on the point that has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, but I would like to say a word or two on another point. I have not checked the history of the last hundred years to be absolutely sure of this point, but I believe this will be the first time in which three different sets of estimates have come before one session of parliament.

That is what we have done in this 1966-67 session. We have passed the main estimates for 1965-66, although we did it at a time when most of the money had been spent. Then we dealt with the estimates for 1966-67, including all the supplementary estimates which we finished just half an hour ago. Now we are starting on the estimates for 1967-68. Without assessing any blame I suggest that this robs sessions themselves of their meaning and it also downgrades the question of dealing with estimates.

In the course of a year we are never sure whether we are dealing with money already spent, and therefore can do nothing about it, or whether we are voting money for the future and doing it on the basis of an advance, and therefore feel we must restrain ourselves from going into any discussion. I am not going to repeat what was said earlier about the recommendations which came from the public accounts committee and from the special committee on rules and procedure, but I hope all of us in this house, government and opposition, cabinet ministers and private members—and this calls for co-operation—will do our best to get the work of parliament on a more regular basis so that there will be meaning to our procedures with respect to the voting of money.

As I have said, in this session we are now attacking our third set of estimates, and in almost every case we have done this under some sort of special circumstances. It can hardly be said that we are ever dealing with the expenditure of money at the right time. I therefore hope the government will take seriously the suggestion of the committee on rules and procedure that we try to deal with the estimates during the first 90 sitting days of a session, so that we will be dealing with them before the money is spent, and dealing with them in a meaninful way.

I could berate the government for the mistakes it has made in the past. I could turn this into a lecture to the government, but at this point I merely suggest this is something of concern to all of us and I hope we will soon get things on a more regular basis.

Mr. Leboe: I think it is essential, Mr. Chairman, that estimates are dealt with early in a session so that the government itself can get control of a situation. There is one factor in connection with the situation that has been outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have had the experience of fighting six elections in 12 years. In such a situation we naturally get behind with legislation and estimates. This is one of the reasons why I think it is time all of us took cognizance of the situation in Canada today, and forgot about elections for a little while in order to get along with the business of this house.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, this resolution calls for an expenditure of $583,621,688.91. So that there will be no misunderstanding and lest anyone think that this is the total amount of money which will be spent during the month of April, I wish to point out that there is probably an equal amount of money which is statutorially provided for, and which is not being voted at present. As a consequence, with the huge expenditure forecast for 1967-68 of approximately $11.2 billion, the actual amount which is going to be spent in April is closer to $1 billion than the amount specified in the resolution.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Benson in the chair.

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1968, the sum of $583,621,688.93 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-283, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

Ways and Means

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—$583,621,688.93 granted for 1967-68.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, can the minister give the assurance that this bill is in the standard form and contains nothing that is not customary in a standard bill of this type.

Mr. Benson: The bill is in the normal form. I am told there is a slight variation as set out in section 5(2). I perhaps misrepresented the situation unintentionally in respect of the previous bill dealing with final 1966-67 supplementaries. There was a change in section 5 of that bill to allow journal entries at the end of the year in order more accurately to report the accounts. That change in the bill was based on a criticism by the Auditor General, but essentially it was in the standard form of other final supplementary appropriation bills.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is the change?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the change in the form of the interim supply bill is to be found in clause 5(2) which has been inserted here. The reason is that on April 1, 1967, $325,000,000 government of Canada bonds and $72,300,000 Canadian National Railway Company bonds mature and the government is in the process of floating a new loan to provide the necessary funds to retire these maturing issues, and to provide funds for general purposes of the government. Since the government must take decisions concerning a new issue two to three weeks in advance of the issue date, which in this case is April 1, 1967, it was necessary to make commitments in connection with this issue under the existing borrowing authority. The wording of section 5(2) of this bill accordingly provides that the coming into force of this new act cancels only that portion of the outstanding and unused borrowing power in respect of which no action has been taken by the governor in council pursuant to section 42 of the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, are we to understand that in addition to the $1 billion borrowing capacity which is granted by clause 5, that there is the unused capacity amounting to something in the category of $400 million?

Mr. Benson: That is correct.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Therefore, we now are granting a borrowing power of approximately $1,400 million?

Mr. Benson: The $450 million already has been granted.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): But it would expire, were it not for this?

Mr. Benson: That is correct.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): So, we are renewing the $450 million, granting $1 billion, and in effect the total borrowing capacity would be $1,450 million?

Mr. Benson: That is correct.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A, B, C, D, and E agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved:

That, when this house adjourns at the end of this sitting, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 3, 1967, at 2:30 o'clock p.m., provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's government, that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that we will not attempt to transact any other business and that there is a desire to suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair. Before doing that perhaps I might be permitted, in the absence of the house leader and in the unusual capacity, being the senior minister in the house, of Acting Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —to express in my usual modest fashion the appreciation that all of us feel on the eve of Easter for the services of his honour, Mr. Speaker, the other officers of the house, the staff, and all those associated with our labours. Perhaps I should even go so far at this moment, in an expansive spirit, as to say a kind word about the opposition.

While I realize that we are not even at the end of the session, which has been a long and exceedingly productive one, I should like to feel that we will all come back on April 3 refreshed and ready to quickly terminate this session and get on to the next, which I hope can be terminated also, or at least part of it, very quickly so we can really have some fun during this centennial year.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the senior surviving member tonight on this side of the house may I express my congratulations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) on his temporary, and I hope short, term of office as Acting Prime Minister. We have had sufficient trouble from his immediate predecessor, and it is perhaps a good thing that this part of the session is coming to a close.

I join with him, however, in expressing our thanks to those who make it possible for this institution to survive, including yourself, Mr. Speaker, and all those associated with you. I congratulate the Acting Prime Minister for his suggestion that it has been a productive session, but the work we have done this session could have been done in two other sessions, with proper organization. If the Acting Prime Minister will use his brief authority to straighten out things on that side of the house perhaps the next session will be conducted along better lines.

I am afraid I cannot agree with the Acting Prime Minister, that the balance of this prolonged session will necessarily end very quickly following our return, because I note that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) is in moderate health and may wish to take part in a debate with us when we return after Easter. If in the interval, refreshed from a Caribbean cruise or some such vacation, he has a change of mind, the session will end very quickly. We will then be able to begin the long awaited centennial session in the best of humour. I do not mind on this occasion, and this may not often be repeated, extending my congratulations to the government side of the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be an evening for senior members. As the senior member in this corner of the house, and perhaps the senior non-privy councillor here tonight, I should like on behalf of this party to express our thanks to the Acting Prime Minister for the very generous felicitations he has conveyed on behalf of the government to all members of the house. We are happy to reciprocate those good wishes.

The break that is apparently about to take place will be a very short one but we trust it will be very recuperative for us all and that we will come back prepared to do a good amount of work in the remaining part of this session. Let us hope it will not be followed by just a pro forma kind of centennial session, but one during which we will do some real work for the people of Canada whom we represent.

We join with others in expressing our good wishes to all members of the house with a special word for perhaps the most long suffering member among us, namely Your Honour.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like on behalf of the members of the Social Credit party to briefly express our appreciation for the services rendered and the direction given by yourself and those associated with you. We also want to extend greetings to everyone as we are about to recess for the Easter season. We are all looking forward to this recess because we feel that perhaps it will help clear away some antagonisms that have built up. Certainly it will assist us in getting back in touch with reality, upon our return to our constituencies.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let me thank all members opposite for their kind words. I wish to reassure the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) that my tenure as Acting Prime Minister will be very brief. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) assured me he would be back before midnight.

I should now say something that perhaps I should have said before. This coming Sunday, which is Easter Sunday, is the anniversary of the election to this house of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith). In view of the fact we will not be sitting on that day we should perhaps just note this fact and in doing so, since the Minister of Public Works is not here, I can spare his blushes and express our appreciation for the indefatiguable and successful efforts he has made to facilitate the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I briefly thank hon. members for their kind words and assure them that I am sure my colleagues at the Chair and at the table appreciate the generous co-operation which has at all times been extended to us.

• (11:00 p.m.)

I should like to mention to hon. members that the house will reconvene at the call of the bell. In the meantime hon. members, members of the press and officers of the house are invited to congregate in room 16 in a spirit of unification and integration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The sitting is suspended until the call of the bell.

SITTING SUSPENDED

SITTING RESUMED

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 22, 1967

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable J. R. Cartwright, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Wednesday, March 22, for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (12.50 a.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy to his Excellency the Administrator had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1968.

An Act to authorize the making of certain fiscal payments to provinces, to authorize the entry into tax collection agreements with provinces, and to amend the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

An Act to make provision for appeals to an immigration appeal board in respect of certain matters relating to immigration.

An Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

An Act to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

An Act respecting Banks and Banking.

An Act respecting Savings Banks in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to special order adopted earlier this day this house stands adjourned until Monday, April 3, 1967, at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

At 12.54 a.m. the house adjourned, without question put.
