A comet far from the sun, appears in spheroidal form, due to gravitation of its ponderable matter-its luminous ether being then invisible because of its distance and feeble light. But on nearing the sun, repulsion being a characteristic property of luminous ether, the ether of the sun repels that of the comet, and thus forms the tail. The form and direction of the tail are thus quite independent of gravitation; and the comet's enor-

In the mammalia, owever, there is but one succession of eeth naturally shed, but though the successors of the so-called 'milk-teeth last long enough to acquire the title of permanent,' they are rarely retained to a very advanced age. There is, however, a belief entertained by many of the occasional acquisition of a third set in human centenarians. Thus it is recorded of the Countess of Desmond. n 'Fynes Morison's Itinerary '(1617), that, not many years before her death. which is said to have occurred at the age of 140 years, 'she had all her teeth renewed.' I was led to a discussion on this point by a worthy clergyman at the house of a friend whom I was visiting, and to my skepticism as to the alleged age and third set of teeth of the old ountess, he replied that there then lived in his parish an old woman alleg-ed to have passed her hundredth year, who was actually then cutting her third set of teeth. I rejoiced at this instance. I had long been convinced that actual phenomena had suggested the statement, but that the nature of these had been misinterpreted, and I deemed myself most fortunate in having an opportunity of testing the matter. The following morning I was driven to the old woman's cabin. It was in the north of Ireland, and she was sitting crouching over her peat fire, a typical example of human decay. To the shouts of her pastor the deaf old crone replied by pulling down her skinny lip and exposing the side of her lower jaw, from which there projected through the gum the blackened stump of a tooth, the crown of which had gone many years before. The absorption of the gums consequent on the edentulous state of the jaw in senility, had brought to light this remnant of a long-lost tooth. Other stumps of teeth, of which the loss of the decayed crown had been forgotten, might, in like manner, appear

through the shrinkage and absorption of the senile jaw. And this I take to Fatal Railway Accident. On Tuesday morning [of last week,] the regular Bangor express, leaving Carleton at 8.30 a. m., collided with a rail train near Fairville, on the St John and Maine Railway. The express was in charge of THE REGATTA:—Besides the races on the Regatta programme, already published, there is to be a pair-oared race and a race for Surveyor's Boats. Although the Mana. David Brown, conductor, with Daniel Mcand Wellington Rickers, fireman. Mc Donald and Rickers were injured, the latter so badly that he died on Thursday. Attached to the express was a number of cars containing picnicers to Westfield. Had the cars left the irons at the time of the collision it is almost sure that some of them would have tumbled down an embankment, and it is almost fearful to contemplate the loss of life that would have then taken place. Both locomotives were demolished and a number of cars were shattered. It is clear that the Conductor and driver neglected their order to cross the rail train at Fairville. Dora Deane She was thirty-two, and the prefix which would indicate her a married woman was still wanting from her name. Yet there were no lines of disappointment about Dora Deane's mouth; no troubled expression in the clear gray eyes. Yet she looked a woman to love these years he had never spoken quite and to be loved. She was not beautiful, but people had always called her a presence had renewed her own youth, youthful was the graceful figure and mobile face), until they stopped to reckon on their figures and discovered to reckon on their figures. reckon on their fingers, and discovered form the threshold! the term "woman" was more appropriate. the ideal was not attained-she remained Dora Deane still. Thus the gossips reasoned. Pry as they would, they could discover no early disappointment, no hidden romance, in all the years she had lived among them. Yet, peeping over her shoulder, as is our privilege, noting the delicate flush upon her cheek, the light in her eye, the trem. bling of the little hand which holds a letter written in firm, bold characters, they might have seized upon a clue we are too generous to fasten or follow.—

The words she had perused were these: "The fever has broken out again quite hotly with us, and I am auxious Cara should breathe purer air. May I drive her out to-morrow and leave her for a fortnight? My messenger will

(Signed) "RONALD RAY." "Of course she might come," thought

Miss Deane. Dear little Cara! Doctor Ray was her guardian. She had been left to his hope to hide it except from her? She care when a little child of three years. She must be eighteen now. For six years she had been at school. Now she had returned to her guardian's home, to remain until some one stole her away grace another. But she was still a child. That was but a remote possibility for the distant future.

Ronald Ray was a physician in the great city in one of whose suburbs was ned her. Had he not heard? The Miss Deane's beautiful home. How dust which had arisen therefrom, blind many years she had known him! He ed her. Could he not see? had even come to her first, in that longago time, to tell her the story of the child confided to his care.

She had been but seventeen herself then, he six years her senior. They had been friends always, but lately she had seen more of him than his usual wont. He had talked with her of Cara's home-coming — of the plans he had matured for her amusement—of the have never loved can little guess how pleasure his mother would experience much !" constantly near her; and she had listened, as she always listened when Ronald Ray talked-listened with a beating heart and fleeting color. But it had hever hetrayed her secret even to him. She had scarce acknowledged it to herself. She only knew that other men might come and go, but were all power. less, even by the most passionate protestations of devotion, to waken that called forth by his simplest word.

But lately he had been different. There had been a light in his eye like that within her own — a suppressed excitement in his manner totally at variance with his usual calm. And now from among his legion of friends he had chosen her home where his ward might be a guest.

Her thoughts were very busy as she made her preparations to receive her visitor. With her own hands she gathered and arranged the flowers that were to welcome her in the pretty room

But so long as he insisted on it, I am so glad it is here! We shall have such nice times together-that is, if you have not forgotten me." And she impulsively threw her arm about the elder woman's neck. There was a charm-a winsome about her impossible to resist. Dora Deane felt her heart go out toward her anew, as it had done when, a tiny, golden-haired child, she had climbed in her arms. Not until they had all gone in to gether into the lighted drawing-room, did she discover how fully the child's promise of rare beauty had redeemed

Cara had been her guest a fortnight, during which time the doctor had fulfilled his promise of devoting to them all his spare moments; but these were very few. The fever was increasing rather than absting. Miss Deane bade fair to have her guest for a long visit.

"You think so? Then I will come to-morrow. Good-by! God bless you!" At last she was alone. The knowledge came with a long sigh of relief, as some hours later the "Good-nights had been said, and Dora could face the misery the morning had brought her. How long—how very long ago it seem ed!
