Mr. BLAKE. I observe that there is a provision here that "No approval shall be given under this Act of the site or plans of a bridge over the River St. Lawrence or the River St. John." I suppose this is because of the importance of those rivers as boundaries.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me there are other streams to which the same observation will apply, as the River St. Clair, the Niagara River and the Ste. Marie River.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will include these rivers in the Bill.

Bill amended and reported.

PORT WARDEN OF MONTREAL.

Mr. McLELAN, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 122) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbor of Montreal, said : This Bill is mainly intended to consolidate the various Acts under which the Port Warden of Montreal has been acting for a number of years, and to make some provision for the better examination and survey of ships both on arriving at and departing from that port, especially on clearing. The old Act provided for a survey of vessels laden with grain wholly or in part; but it has been found necessary, for the protection of life and property, that this survey should be extended to vessels laden with other products. It is therefore proposed to give power to the Port Warden to make such survey and examination as may be necessary for the safety of life.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

238. Grounds at Ottawa.—To pay amount of award and judgment in favor of Marshal Wood$13,900.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount this gentleman has received in all, for his services.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $13,050, and the balance was to provide for the future possible costs, making $13,900. The amount he claimed was $29,050, we contested that and he offered to compromise for $15,000, we contested that again, and the Dominion Arbitrators allowed him $13,050, and they confirmed the judgment of the arbitrators. There was a Commission, I think, to take evidence in England, because Mr. Marshal Wood contended he should have more, but the Court held he should have brought that evidence before, and the cost of that evidence taken in England was given against him.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.. I do not know that the hon. Minister or any one was to blame, but I am sure we got very little for our money. All that resulted was simply what was done in front, and the hon. gentleman could have laid that out without consulting any one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would not have taken that risk. What shows that Ministers of Public Works are not disposed to take risks is this: that after my successor, the hon. member for Lambton, came into office, he sent the Chief Engineer of the Department to New York to see the Commissioner of Central Park there, who gave him some plans, and who has now a claim against the Department. That claim was only lately brought to my notice and is not yet decided.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. From what I know of this work, my impression is that Mr. Marshall Wood had not a claim for a dollar. It seems all that is necessary for a man to do is to make a claim, and if he cannot get it this year, he will get it next, or the year after. It will be referred to the Official Arbitrators, who seem certainly to take very loose views, and are disposed to give parties much more than they are entitled to. This man, I believe, had no claim whatever, the only success he had was in persevering with his claim. It was referred to the Official Arbitrators, who awarded a certain sum and the Court confirmed that award. The evidence seems to be all ex parte, and the Government had scarcely a hearing.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My hon. friend is mistaken. This case was defended on both sides before the Arbitrators, and it was only after a long trial and much deliberation that they gave the award. Then the Government decided to take the case to the Exchequer Court, and Hon. Justice Fournier went through the evidence with great care, and, as I said before, when Mr. Marshall Wood's counsel asked for the evidence in England

Mr. Justice Fournier gave a Commission, and when it came back and he saw the evidence, he said :

" This proves your case in my opinion, more than was proved before the Arbitrators, but you should have brought that in the first instance and not put the Government to this expense ; therefore I will not allow you the cost of this Commission, and the Government will pay only the regular cost of the case before the Arbitrators."

So the case was well investigated and judged on its merits.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Who defended the case.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think Mr. Lash on the part of the Government, and on the other side the Hon. Mr. Cockburn.

239. Contract of Jas. Goodwin, grounds at Ottawa $5,359.46

Mr. CURRIER. I would call the attention of the House to the necessity of an enlargement of this building. We have a Railway Committee composed of some 140 members who assemble in a room which is none too large for fifty men. I would suggest that some alteration be made. I believe an extension might be made on one of the wings so as not to change the appearance of the buildings in the front while it would improve the looks on the western side. The members of the Ottawa Valley have never been able to get a room in the building for their own private use, where they could write and converse, as we have always felt it was our duty to give the unoccupied rooms to those who came from a distance. I think an extension could be added which would give a room 100 feet in length for the accommodation of the Railway Committee, besides affording rooms for other purposes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think it would be wise to increase this building by adding wings. I think it should remain as it is. It has been so planned by the architects, and it would be a pity to damage its appearance. If we have not space enough in this building we might get it by completing the western block which, as the hon. gentleman knows, is not yet completed on the square.

243. Balance of contract for quarantine station,
Grosse Isle $5,144

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has this quarantine station been put to any use of late? There seems to have been for many years an annual expenditure on this institution.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So long as there is no war an army seems to be useless; and so it is with respect to a quarantine station. There have been only a few patients each year, and the annual expenditure has declined.

246. Expenses in connection with His Excellency the Governor General's quarters at Quebec
Citadel $5,700

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to provide a reception room which is required in the building.

247. Expenses in connection with the Supreme Court of Canada, new furniture and repairs to old.... $1,600

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I do not rise to oppose the item, but to express my regret that the Supreme Court has been removed. In my opinion, it occupies an entirely unsuitable site, it is very inconvenient of approach, and very few people are found attending the Court. The Court should be more convenient and accessible to the members of the House and the public generally.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I regret to say that I differ with the hon. member. I think the Supreme Court when in this building was in the way of communication between the different sections. It is much better that the Court should occupy its own building. It is a substantial building, it has a nice court-room, well ventilated and lighted. The legal profession complain of the accommodation in this parliamentary building. It is a change for the better for the Court as well as Parliament.

Mr. WELDON. I think the new quarters are not half so convenient as the old. The smell in the building to-day was dreadful. The building is away from the Parliamentary Library, and that fact tends to injure the efficiency of the Court.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I think the hon. Minister is entirely in error as to the views and wishes of the lawyers who practice at the Court. The opinion of the profession was almost unanimous against the building.

Mr. MacDONNELL (Inverness). I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Public Works. I have been in other Courts that have been distant from other buildings, and I think it was most desirable that this Court should be removed from this building, particularly when the House was in Session. The library was constantly occupied by those in attendance on the Court, and the Court interfered with members of both Houses.

248. Ottawa Geological Museum, Heating apparatus $5,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. How much is this building, which I have always held to be most unsuitable and most expensive, already cost.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount spent in 1880 was $38,000, in 1881, $9,000 more, and now $5,000 are asked for heating apparatus. I think the building serves its purpose very well, though of course, a great many repairs had to be made. We had to build the front of the building in order to put it on a level with the main building. The museum is in the very best order, and if the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) has visited it lately he would find it well arranged, though some improvements may yet be required; but I do not think they will cost much. The amount asked for was, however, absolutely necessary, as I could not go on with the work until the appropriation was made.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This means that we have expended $53,000 on this old building, and there is no doubt in my mind, that the Government could have had a better new building for $30,000. I have not visited the building lately for the simple reason, that had I done so, I would have had so much to say against it that the hon. gentleman would not have been pleased.

Mr. GAULT. I have visited the building, and must say that it is most admirably situated. I find that there are more people come here to see the museum at Ottawa than there were in Montreal, and I think Professor Selwyn deserves great credit for the manner in which he has arranged it.

Mr. ANGLIN. The number of visitors does not prove that the place is a proper one, and it does seem an extraordinary thing to spend $5,000 for heating up a museum in which there are nothing but mummies and fossils. The building looks out on what? On a cart stand, a pile of filth, with a stench pervading the atmosphere all the time; with dust in summer and mud at other seasons.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Still it must be admitted that it is not bad for a fossil Government.

Mr. ROSS. In connection with this item, I think the cost of printing the report of the geological survey might be reduced. It is now printed in Montreal, by Mr. Dawson, at special rates, and costs some $5,000 or $6,000. It is printed there for the reason that Mr. Selwyn could more easily revise the report and have it printed under his eye, but now that he is here, it might be printed by the Government contractors at the regular rates, and thereby save, perhaps, $2,000. I had the pleasure of going through the Museum, and though I need not say anything particularly about the building, it is due to Professor Selwyn to say that his arrangement is most admirable, under the circumstances, and that a visit would well repay any hon. member of this House or any other gentleman of a scientific turn of mind.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). With regard to the geological reports, I have letters in my desk urging that a larger number should be printed to encourage a taste for studying our mineral and geological resources. By printing a larger number, the cost would not be very much enhanced when the matter is in type, and everything in readiness for printing it.

252. Winnipeg Post Office, additions and alterations $11,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I believe this amount is needed, but I should be glad to hear what the hon. gentleman proposes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, we had to go on with these repairs, for the fact is that there was very nearly a rebellion in the Winnipeg post office every time a mail was about to be delivered. People would stand about in hundreds outside, and I was told that certain places were bought from the parties occupying them on the street for $2 a head, so one can imagine what the crowd must have been. Then the accommodation inside was so small that the people could not get in, and had a struggle every time they tried to get their letters. We have doubled the accommodation for the officers inside, and more than doubled the space for the public. We have also made a new exit from the building, so that parties coming to the post office may come in one door and go out another. These will not be permanent if there is to be only one office. Hon. gentlemen will most likely find in the Second Supplementary Estimates, when they come down, an item for a new post office in Winnipeg. The question is whether we should abolish the present post office and build a large one, or whether we should have two post offices. That point has not yet been settled; but we are quite alive to the necessity of having additional post office accommodation in Winnipeg. Of course, the city council there have something to do themselves. As the houses were not numbered, it was difficult to have letters delivered at domiciles; but I understand that the houses are now being numbered, and the Post Office Department are in a position to have letter carriers employed, and we have also ordered some boxes to be placed at different points throughout the city to receive letters. In these ways the post office will be relieved, and when the money is voted for the new post office, we will try to build it as fast as possible.

258. To cover expenditure for alterations, &c., in Parliament Building, owing to removal of Supreme Court Offices..... $10,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is this large expenditure for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the Court was removed, the Court room, which was converted into a reading room, and the other rooms around this Chamber had to be changed in order to be made suitable for the purposes for which they were intended. The old reading room was fitted up for the press, and the ceilings of three rooms upstairs over that room were lowered to afford accommodation for the translators. The accommodation provided everywhere is much better than it was before.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In the course of the discussion about these buildings last year, or the year before, the hon. Minister, I think, stated that he had under consideration the adoption of the electric light instead of gas. That would be a great improvement in two ways, the gas adds very much to the heat of the buildings, and destroys the air very much more than the electric light would do. I would be glad to know whether, among other improvements, he is disposed to give us the electric light in the future.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was my intention at the time to try the electric light in this Chamber and in the Senate Chamber, but when this intention became known I was besieged with offers from electric light companies; but I thought, as improvements were still going on in regard to the electric light, that I might allow these companies to cool down a little, and we might probably be able to obtain the latest improvements in the electric light. The matter has not been lost sight of, and I hope that next Session we may be in a position to have the electric light put in this room, and also, perhaps, on the square.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Will the hon. gentleman tell us what use he intends to make of the shelving in the reading room? If it would suit the arrangements in the library, a certain portion of the shelving might be very well used to stow away our Sessional Papers and Journals. The Sessional Papers are the most inaccessible papers in the library. If they were in the reading room, close at hand, it would be a great convenience to members.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The shelving in the reading room has been erected for the accommodation of books of reference, such as the Journals of the House, the Appendices, and the Statutes of the Dominion and the Provinces. I called the attention of several of the members of the Library Committee to this matter, and was told at the beginning of last week that the Committee had decided to call upon the Librarian to put those books of reference on the shelves.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to express my own gratitude and I think that of most of the members, to the Minister of Public Works for the admirable arrangements he has had carried out for the proper ventilation of this House, from which, as well as the passages, foul air has been expelled, with great benefit to our health.

259. Mabou Harbor—To pay Dr. Cameron for services rendered by him in connection with dredging... $126

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is the first time we have been called upon to pay a medical man for services in connection with public works. Is it for the administration of pills or ointment for the improvement of the harbor? I would like to know the precise services he rendered that harbor? What sort of therapeutic remedies or dredging instruments did he apply for the purpose?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt he is a very good medical man, and that his patients had no reason to complain of his absence while superintending the works at that harbor.

Mr. HADDOW. I would like to remind the Minister of Public Works of a petition which was sent to him last year by the inhabitants of Campbellton, asking him to send a dredge to deepen the channel a short distance below that place. The lumber trade there is rapidly increasing, and it would be very much promoted by having this improvement made in the navigation of the river. At present vessels of large size requiring great depth of water cannot conveniently load there, whereas, if the improvement asked for was made, vessels of almost any size might be employed. The lumber merchants in that vicinity are placed at a disadvantage because of the increased rate of freight required to be paid owing to these hindrances in the navigation of the river. I cannot suppose that the necessary expenditure would be very great as the portion requiring to be dredged is not very extensive, and the outlay will prove a great advantage not only to Campbellton but to the whole country.

Mr. MACKENZIE. My hon. friend no doubt wants the doctor sent to his afflicted harbor; but the Minister of Public Works has not stated what kind of services the doctor has rendered, or whether there was a gentleman of that name a Conservative candidate at the last election, and who is the prospective candidate for the coming election? Is it possible that the Government has, in consequence of his position politically, engaged him to do work on a harbor? What professional knowledge of a harbor can he have? It is simply outrageous to ask a vote to pay a Conservative candidate who is simply a medical man, for attending to that harbor, which I suppose is now as well as can be expected.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I see the hon. gentleman knows exactly the party who has been employed; and though he may find fault with that gentleman for being a Conservative, I can assure him it did not disqualify the doctor in our eyes for such employment. I am pretty sure that if the hon. gentleman had found him at work, he would have considered him a very good medical man, and quite competent to improve the harbor. Mr. Cameron was employed and has to be paid.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What did he do?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He was inspector of works for forty-two days.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think that medical men in the country charge only $1 a visit.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He may have made three visits a day.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is there any charge for medicine.

262. Owen Sound Harbor—To complete works..... $7,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a work that was begun a year ago. The contract was $58,985. The locality furnished $13,000 in money. This was for the moving of the bar outside the harbor. There was also piling to be done, and a good deal of obstacles in the shape of sand and boulders which had to be removed.

263. New hull, &c., for dredge vessel, Maritime Provinces..... $9,000

Mr. HADDOW. Will the hon. gentleman give me an answer now to my question?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These applications have been put together and will be dealt with immediately after the Session. When the votes of money have been obtained no doubt I will be able to meet the requirements.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Will the hon. gentleman also deal with the petition?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say what I shall do in the matter now, but shall give the subject my attention.

Mr. DOMVILLE. What is this new hull for, for the Lower Provinces?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the dredge New Dominion. Tenders were advertised for in eight or ten papers, but only one man tendered; he asked $11,200, which was above the estimate of the engineer, but he has since stated that he will do the work at the engineer's estimate.

Mr. ANGLIN. Who is the party?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Olive.

264. Union Suspension Bridge, Ottawa, additional amount required..... $1,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What was the total amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We expended last year $4,000, this will make $5,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is a work which should not be on our hands, but be handed over to the municipalities.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Complaint was made several times that tolls were collected on that bridge. We have not yet made up our minds to ask Parliament to make this a free bridge. If the municipalities had made an offer of some kind by which they might have paid a reasonable sum, we might have brought down a measure to make it a free bridge.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The bridge is not a source of revenue. $3,000 were collected last year and $4,000 spent.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This was for repairs that will last several years.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I merely point out the inconvenience of keeping the work on our hands. The intention was originally to have it pass as soon as possible into the hands of the municipality, so that it would be a source of no expense to the Government.

265. Compensation to Patrick McHale, for damages to his land by the erection of a dam near the head of the Chats Slides, Ottawa River..... $435

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. When was the damage done?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the month of April, 1872, Patrick McHale, of the township of Fitzroy, purchased, from William Kehoe, a piece of land without being aware that the dam, which the Government had commenced to build in the fall of 1871, would have the effect of submerging the most valuable portion of the farm, otherwise he would not have purchased Kehoe's property. The Superintendent says that the claimant is a poor man and bears a very good character, and that his assertions are fully corroborated by Mr. Kehoe and by Mr. McFarland, Deputy Master of the station. He did not make his claim sooner, because some of his neighbors told him it was useless going to law with the Government, as such a proceeding might cost him more than the whole land was worth.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was anyone sent to value this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, the station master and the Superintendent of the Ottawa Works, Mr. Brophy.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. This only verifies what I said before, that all the party has got to do, who has a claim against the Government, is to pursue it, and he will receive compensation for it. Now, that claim has been allowed to rest ten years, which is conclusive evidence that he had no claim at all. If there is anything necessary to establish the fact that this man can have no claim in equity, it is the fact that he allowed it to sleep so long.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The man delayed his claim because the neighbors told him that it would be refused. He came forward himself and made his claim to the Government, and it has been investigated and found to be correct. It is not because he is a poor man and an uneducated man that we should refuse him; on the contrary, it was exactly because he was helpless and uneducated that I thought he should get justice. He had none to look after his case, and I thought, under those circumstances, I would look after it for him, and I sent the Superintendent up to investigate it and he reported the claim well founded.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I should like to know who his representative is. It is strange that a poor man should have allowed ten years to elapse before presenting his claim. What county does he live in?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is in the county of Carleton, Ontario.

267. To complete telegraph lines to Mille Vaches and those in the Maritime Provinces..... $4,510

Mr. BUNSTER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the injustice done to Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

British Columbia by his neglect. The Dominion of Canada agreed to build a telegraph line through British Columbia, and inasmuch as British Columbia is attracting more attention than could be expected, I would like to enquire why the hon. Minister has so grossly neglected the line from Nanaimo to Comox, and also the telegraph line from Nanaimo to Alberni. British Columbia has been totally neglected, and I hope the hon. Minister will give it his serious consideration. The company is now building a railway in that much-abused country, but the Dominion Government declines to do justice to the Province, by building the telegraph line. I want the Government to build the line between Nanaimo and Alberni, and I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works will take the subject into his favorable consideration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This money is to pay the Great North-West Telegraph Company for the line from Murray Bay to Mille Vaches and a small land and cable lines on the islands of the Lower St. Lawrence and the Gulf and the Maritime Provinces. We pay $1,600 a year to the Telegraph Company for working the line.

Mr. GAULT. I hope after some time the system of telegraph lines will be owned by the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In regard to the telegraph line from Nanaimo to Comox, and the other line to Alberni, we, the Government, are not in a position this year to entertain the project. It is a scheme that will require some attention, and I shall be very glad if we are in a position another year to meet the views of the hon. gentleman.

270. To provide for expenses in connection with the training-ship Charybdis..... $12,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think the House will be glad to hear something about this wonderful engine of war. We want to know what has been done, what is being done, and what is intended to be done with respect to this addition to the Canadian fleet.

Mr. McLELAN. As to what has been done, the ship has been brought to St. John. This vote will cover the expense of the repairs in the dock-yard and of bringing her out and mooring her at St. John. As to what is to be done to her, that is yet under the consideration of the Government.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We have had a vote before for this vessel, and I think the gross amount must reach $22,000 at least, or perhaps $30,000. I would like to know what is the total expense.

Mr. McLELAN. The total amount expended up to the present time is $13,000, a portion of which is provided by Governor General's warrant during the last fiscal year.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It therefore appears that the Government are not able to tell us what they intend to do with the vessel. It had been understood that it was to be used as a training ship. What use would it be put to?

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). It is time the Government should know what they are to do with the vessel. In St. John harbor the vessel was a nuisance last year. The vessel should be taken out of the harbor as she has done damage there and two lives have been lost. The sooner the vessel is taken out of St. John harbor the better the people will be pleased.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. This vessel seems to be an extraordinary one, as she is unguidable, like a vessel without a rudder. This estimate of $12,000 is to cover expenses already incurred.

Mr. McLELAN. And to be incurred up to 30th June.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. How much does she cost per day, for what purpose is the money expended, and to what use is the vessel to be applied? The bringing out of this vessel was a most consummate piece of folly, and was a fraud on the country; it would be in accordance with the general sentiment of the people that this vessel which runs on her own account and does damage should be set on fire and burned.

Mr. McLELAN. She is securely moored and is not doing any damage. The Government will carefully consider what should be done with her.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I always objected to the Charybdis being sent to St. John, as I thought we in the Lower Provinces should not be charged with a public work from which we would receive no advantage. She is anchored in the harbor, but breaks away now and then, and I presume this item of $12,000 is to pay for damages. I do not blame the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am merely dealing with facts as I find them, and I am not prepared to say that the Government is responsible. Nobody is responsible. This vessel was sent out from England, probably in pursuance of some high-flown notions in England at that time. We know that Mr. Brassey and others had the idea of raising a mercantile navy all over the world, and this vessel may have been sent out as part of that scheme. I want it to be sent to Halifax; I think Nova Scotia should have it. The other night I was severely commented upon because I made some remarks thinking that something was not going right, but I hope I shall not get the same—

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Castigation.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes, castigation, I believe that is the word—I hope I shall not receive the same castigation to-night. I think the Charybdis should be towed out of the harbor of St. John, so as to protect the shipping, and that this money will be paid for the damages she may commit when she breaks down vessels. We want a training ship; we want all we can get, and I trust that we may have vessels that may train our mercantile navy, but I am sure this vessel is no good for us or anybody else, and the sooner she is got rid of the better. I find no fault with the hon. Minister of Marine nor the Government, because I am sure the Government did not bring her out. I have reason to believe she was forced on them. My suggestion is that she be towed to Halifax and handed over to the Imperial authorities, and let them do what they like with her.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I object to punishing Halifax in that way, and if there is no hon. member to speak up for Halifax, I am ready to put in a word for her.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) deems either that the harbor of St. John is too small for the Charybdis or that the Charybdis is too large for the harbor, but if that place advises us to take the vessel to Halifax there will be abundance of accommodation for her there.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I cannot allow a remark of that kind to be passed on the harbor of St. John. St. John harbor has certainly never been frozen over in my time, but I have walked on the ice from Halifax to Dartmouth.

Mr. OGDEN. I am surprised to hear the member for King's (Mr. Domville) assert that the harbor of St. John is not sufficiently large.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I did not assert it.

Mr. OGDEN. The hon. gentleman said something in that direction. He said that $12,000 was probably in the Estimates to pay for the expense caused by this vessel having broken adrift and damaged other persons' property in the harbor. I am sorry to hear that the harbor of St. John is so small and its anchorage so poor that a vessel like the Charybdis cannot remain safely at anchor. Last year the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) said he was anxious that St. John should be made the winter port. I did not think at that time he was sincere in making that claim, and I thought he was only jesting. Now I know he was not sincere, because if the harbor of St. John is not able, as he says, to accommodate a vessel like the Charybdis and allow her safely to ride at anchor it certainly is not a proper place for a winter port. I would say that the people of Halifax would gladly receive that vessel. They have a harbor which is safe and commodious enough to accommodate the whole British navy, and where the anchorage is good enough to prevent them going adrift. I therefore suggest that she be sent to Nova Scotia, but I think there is another and a better port than Halifax—a port which will eventually be the winter port of this Dominion. We would be glad to receive the Charybdis in the harbor of Whitehaven—the best port on the Atlantic coast—and I am glad to know that the members for New Brunswick have come out boldly and acknowledged that St. John is not a suitable port to accommodate the British navy. I therefore suggest in all seriousness that the Government should seriously consider this matter, and in making this suggestion I am only doing my duty to myself, to this House and to my constituency in asserting that the harbor of Whitehaven is one sufficiently large to receive all the ships that may be sent there and accommodate the combined navies of the world.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I cannot allow such a slur to be cast on the Province of New Brunswick and the harbor of St. John without resenting it. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, is very clever in trying to make political capital in favor of the harbor of Whitehaven and his own constituency. When the hon. gentleman asserts that the harbor of St. John is not large enough to contain that vessel and has not a good anchorage, I think somebody should correct him. Hon. gentlemen talk about my asking for a winter port. Yes, I have asked for a winter port, and I shall continue to ask for a winter port. I may not have the honor to represent my constituency here next year—many of us may be defeated—but while I have a seat, I shall endeavor to see that New Brunswick has the winter port of the Dominion. If there is any harm in that, and if the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Ogden) is to be offended because I ask that New Brunswick shall have her share, and that we shall have a winter port terminus at St. John, in spite of his slur of that harbor, I still hope my people will support me because I support them, and I trust that other hon. members of this House may stand up and defend the harbor of St. John as a harbor fit to hold a navy, and that we may not sit here to have a slur cast on that harbor as fit for nothing compared with the harbor of Halifax.

Mr. OGDEN. I wish to say that I did not cast a slur on the harbor of St. John or insinuate that it was not a good harbor. I know St. John harbor very well, and I know it to be a very good harbor; but I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this sum was placed in the Estimates to defray the cost of the damage done by this vessel breaking adrift and floating down the harbor, and I am sorry that any hon. gentleman should so forget his allegiance as to condemn this ship, which is a free gift from Her Majesty. Another hon. gentleman says she should be burned. If the gifts of Her Majesty are not sufficiently appreciated in New Brunswick, we shall gladly receive them in Nova Scotia.

Mr. KILLAM. There has been a rumor afloat that the bridge across the St. John River at Navy Island was to be removed, because there was not room enough in the harbor for the bridge and the Charybdis at the same time.

Mr. DALY. I do not think it was at all necessary for the hon. member for Lambton to rise to defend the interests of Halifax. I can merely say that those acquainted with the harbor of Halifax—and I know the hon. member for Lambton is one of that number—will bear testimony to the fact that the harbor of Halifax has ample room for not only the Charybdis, but for more than half the navy of Great Britain; that the Charybdis can ride in safety there, will not be injured, and will not be likely to break adrift and do damage to property there. I have been surprised at the number of hon. gentlemen, not from Nova Scotia, but from New Brunswick, who, if I judge rightly the meaning of their words, came to the conclusion that the harbor of St. John was not capable of affording anchorage room for the Charybdis. I think better of the harbor of St. John than the opinion implied in the representations made by the hon. member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Burpee), the hon. member for Westmoreland, and others who have spoken on the subject. Now, I believe St. John is a fine harbor, and it would be far from my desire to cast the slightest slur upon it. I would like to see Halifax a winter port, and I would be glad to see St. John a winter port also. I believe the interests of both ports can be advanced by the present Government, and I believe they are taking steps every Session to promote them, and we may expect to see the day when both Halifax and St. John will be shipping grain to the ports of Europe. I believe there is no jealousy existing between either port. I disclaim any feeling of jealousy towards St. John; they are both good ports in their way; but so far as the harbor of Halifax is concerned, if the Government send the Charybdis there, she will have plenty of room, and I believe the Government will find some useful object to which she can be applied.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. When Havard was first established; I had some doubts about the propriety of it, and the advantage it would be to the country; but I am satisfied it will be a matter of great interest to the people of New Brunswick to read the discussion which has taken place on this vote to-night. They will ascertain how highly the harbor of St. John is appreciated by some of their representatives in this House; but, happily, they cannot injure that harbor, because its advantages and its central position are such that they are well understood. But I must say I thought a more favorable view would have been taken of the position and the facilities of that harbor by those hon. members who have spoken. With reference to the Charybdis breaking loose, she has been anchored there safely all winter, and has not interfered with any vessel, so far as I know. She is in one of the best positions that could be found for her in the Dominion of Canada. It is central, and in every way a desirable point; but you would judge, by the remarks made to-night by some hon. gentlemen, that that harbor has no capacity, and that if a ship should drift from her moorings, she would come in contact with some other vessel. That is quite true, because it being the principal port of the Dominion, it has vessels for it to come in contact with, while other ports have not. But all that the hon. gentlemen have said to disparage that port will have no effect, because it is impossible that anything any hon. gentleman can say can damage the position of that harbor.

Mr. ANGLIN. In the country I came from, a man who was very angry and yet did not want to be profane, instead of sending a man to a certain warm place, was accustomed to say: "Go to Halifax." Well, we in St. John are quite willing to say, "Go to Halifax." If we had taken or sent her further in that direction than Halifax, we should say—go to Whitehaven. The hon. Finance Minister very properly, in reply to the hon. member for Guysborough, who boasts of the capacity of Whitehaven, and says it possesses ample room for the Charybdis, made the statement we have heard. No doubt in Whitehaven there would be no danger of coming in contact with anything except ice.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. OGDEN. That is a mistake. I have seen in that harbor three hundred vessels.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Fishing boats?

Mr. OGDEN. Vessels from 50 to 1,000 tons every year for the twelve years I have resided in the county.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Three hundred at one time?

Mr. OGDEN. Yes; and ice is never known in the harbor of Whitehaven.

Mr. ANGLIN. If what the hon. gentleman says is correct, and if at any time from stress of weather or other adverse circumstances, 300 sail are compelled to take refuge at Whitehaven, they had better not station the Charybdis there, because she is a most formidable vessel, and gentlemen on the opposite side are censurable for not knowing it. The hon. member for King's, in his speech, shows that the Charybdis is the very representation and incarnation of the National Policy, so to say. It is the National Policy put into wood and iron. There she stands; with her they can defy the whole world, particularly our neighbors of the United States. We can shake our National Policy in their faces, and say: "We will impose duties on your products, and we defy you to find fault with them." We can say to our enemies: "We are safe, the Charybdis stands, not behind us, but in front of us;" and if there is any excuse for having her at St. John, it is that she stands in front to defend us against our neighbors and all others. Even if she has no cannon or guns, no vessel in the American navy dare approach our frontier, for the Charybdis will run into her and sink her at once.

Mr. McCUAIG. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Marine that he should first have the Charybdis measured and inspected under the new Steamboat Inspection Act, and after that she should be exposed for sale. This should be done under a Bill before the House with fourteen new clauses and thirteen Orders in Council in regard to it—a Bill with forty clauses and six amendments—inspection under such a Bill would produce wonders.

Mr. BUNSTER. Since Canada has refused such a gracious compliment as the Charybdis, I can tell the Government how to utilize her.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Send her to British Columbia by railroad.

Mr. BUNSTER. The least you say about the Canadian Pacific Railroad the better. Your ideas are too amphibious to build the Pacific Railway. I have a grievance so far as your Government is concerned in that respect. You did not do much for the railroad. In order to facilitate commerce between the eastern and western Provinces of the Dominion, the best thing the Government could do would be to place this vessel on the route between here and British Columbia. She has been there before and we looked upon her with pride and pleasure when the British tars and officers were in our ports. Any such magnificent gift from old England should be hailed as an heirloom, and if the people of old Canada are not willing to receive her the people of British Columbia are. The merchants and manufacturers of Canada, under the National Policy, will be able to send out in her a ship load of goods to British Columbia, when we will be able to send back a cargo to the eastern Provinces. We want eastern goods, for which we can easily make a return in the production of our Province.

Mr. ANGLIN. Of what?

Mr. BUNSTER. Wheat, coal and other things.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I contend with the hon. Minister of Finance that hon. gentlemen have no right to find fault with the harbor of St. John. I endeavored, in the few remarks I made, to show that the Charybdis is totally unfit for the work she was intended for, and it would be better to hand her back to the Imperial Government, to Mr. Brassey or anyone else who wants to carry out some Quixotic idea of their own. At the same time I stated I did not think the Government were responsible or to be blamed for the inefficiency of the vessel. The hon. member for Halifax undertook by faint praise to damn the harbor of St. John and make out that the harbor of Halifax is the finest in the world. The harbor of St. John can speak for itself, and it is out of place for the hon. member for Nova Scotia to find fault with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. Minister says the entire money expended was $13,000. I felt certain he was mistaken. I know that a certain amount was expended in England to make her fit for the voyage, and a certain sum was expended to bring her out, the two amounting to $20,000; $9,040 were expended on her last year where she lies, and the whole expenditure cannot be less than $30,000. The vessel is not worth keeping: she is a source of expense and of no public utility. If nothing else can be done with her she might be sold to Barnum. The Government has no policy in relation to her. Why should we vote money every year to keep a vessel which is utterly worthless.

Mr. WRIGHT. The hon. Minister of Marine appears to be in a somewhat singular position between this Charybdis and the Scylla of the Opposition. It appears to me that this vessel which is denounced by both sides of the House might, perhaps, provide a solution of a great problem. Every one must be satisfied that under existing conditions almost all representative institutions in the great constitutional countries of the world have belied their character. Mr. Gladstone appears disposed to put a stop to free discussion, by introducing the "cloture" in England, thereby interfering with those institutions which, Mr. Green tells us, came from the green pastures and the pleasant farm-houses of Schleswig. In our country we have the introduction of the power behind the Throne, which appears practically to control the business of the country, and all representative institutions in the United States, as well as here and in Great Britain, are somewhat anomalous in their character. Perhaps the members of this House who are going out of public life, might embark in the Charybdis, and as the hon. member for Vancouver suggests, "go round the Horn," taking several horns on the way, and in that way we might leave the country practically in the control of abler and stronger men than we have proved ourselves to be.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Leaving all joking aside, the hon. Minister of Marine should inform us what the policy of the Government is regarding her. With regard to the port of St. John, the hon. Minister of Finance, with his usual ingenuity, has tried to make out we ran it down. We did nothing of the kind. I said that she was a nuisance to the port, and so she is.

Mr. ANGLIN. What is the Government going to do with this vessel? If there is any possible purpose to which she can be applied, they should let us know. My own opinion is that the Imperial Government should be asked to take her back: If they will not, she should be run up on the beach and left there till she falls to pieces. There is no reason why we should spend $10,000 or $12,000 for the care of a vessel which is of no use to us.

Mr. McCALLUM. Hon. gentlemen opposite are making a great mistake in finding fault with the small amount of money spent on this ship. These hon. gentlemen who are now trying to get the power to make our own treaties, will want this ship to commence with.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am glad the hon. member for Monck has found out a use for the unfortunate vessel. It seems when the Government appoint ambassadors they are to embark on board the Charybdis, and all nations will capitulate at once rather than have this formidable vessel enter their ports. In the meantime we must proceed like business men and ascertain from the Government how much money has been spent on this vessel.

Mr. McLELAN. The vote last year was $15,000; we are asking now for $12,000 more. The amount that has been actually paid is about $13,000, which has been made under the Governor General's warrant. This covers all the bills that have been made.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is a mistake.

Mr. McLELAN. I am speaking from a memorandum given me from the office—cheques that are sent out and the authority under which they have been given as to the cost of the vessel now. It has been inoored and is comparatively free from expense. She has one caretaker on board who is paid $25 a month. What other disposition we may make of her is not determined.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is to be done with the money?

Mr. McLELAN. Whatever disposition we make of her will cost some money; if you send her back to England or send her up to Halifax the moving of a large ship like that will cost several thousand dollars. The whole of that $13,000 has already been paid, $12,000 are now asked for, and the $5,000 for last year, makes $17,000.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman is mistaken as to the amount this vessel has cost. He will find, on reference to the correspondence, that a thousand pounds sterling was placed to the credit of Captain Scott in the agency of the Bank of Montreal in London. Two or three months afterwards Sir A. T. Galt communicated with the Canadian Government stating that a further sum of a thousand pounds was required, so that $10,000 were spent on the vessel before she left England. He will find, I think, in the Public Accounts a sum of $9,000 in addition to that, and now the hon. gentleman wants $12,000, which makes altogether $31,000.

Mr. McLELAN. I stated that there might be outstanding accounts.

Mr. CAMERON. May I ask the hon. gentleman if he has accounted for the $10,000 that was placed by the Government of Canada to the credit of Captain Scott in England before the vessel left England at all? The hon. gentleman will find that a sum of over $30,000 has been spent on this vessel.

Mr. McLELAN. The expenditures the hon. gentleman has referred to are some charges by the British Government that may not have been paid yet. That was all done by the British Government.

Mr. CAMERON. Not a farthing of it. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that that was done by the British Government? They did not spend $1 on it.

Mr. McLELAN. Repairs on the ship were done by the Government in England and paid by the British Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No, they were not.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman is wrong. The ship was put into the dockyard on the other side and repaired as to her copper and tanking, and the bill probably will come before the Dominion Parliament. But there has been no bill paid yet.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Yes, there is; it is all paid.

Mr. McLELAN. I beg your pardon. I find the amount last year was $10,000, and the $12,000 now asked for is expected to cover all expenses.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. Minister is entirely mistaken. The British Government simply gave us the hull of the vessel, the spars and the rigging. They took out of her the guns, the coal, the stores, the small arms, and gave us nothing but the hull. The hon. Minister will find, if he looks into the account, that $10,000 were paid on the other side in repairs which even then made her barely fit to cross the Atlantic in summer. Now he says she is of no value whatever to us. What is the policy of the Government with regard to her? When the British Parliament is asked to vote money the Government is always expected to tell what the money is for—how it is to be used. Why is this large sum asked for now? The ship, as she lays in the St. John Harbor to-day, is utterly unfit to go to sea. If the hon. member for Monck and the forty or fifty gentlemen around him could be induced to make a sea voyage in their political entity—I would be sorry to have them embark in her in their personal entity—I think we, on this side, would be willing to vote any amount of money to promote their voyage. But we ought really to know what the Government intend to do with this very expensive and ugly toy of ours. Are we to go on year after year voting money for the Charybdis, simply because she is there and must be taken care of? The Imperial Government probably meant well by presenting her to us, but the Government should, in this case, have adopted a policy in regard to her and announce it to the House.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was stated in the House last Session that Her Majesty's Government had placed at the disposal of the Dominion Government this steamer for the purpose of establishing a naval school in the Dominion of Canada. It was placed at our disposal by the Imperial Government, and it was considered a valuable property. It was found after we had obtained possession of this ship, which had returned from two or three years' service in the Chinese sea, that considerable repairs were necessary before she could be brought to this country. The amount of £1,000 sterling was placed at Mr. Scott's credit to bring her here. Then it was found the construction of the vessel, on account of her being built so as to be propelled both by steam and sail and with heavy yards, was such as to require a very heavy crew. When she arrived we found she was not so desirable a vessel for the purposes required as we hoped for. It was stated last Session that the Government had not decided what course it would pursue, that enquiries would be made during recess and a vote taken sufficient to bring her out. It was found on examination, that the vessel required very considerable repairs in order to place her in a perfectly seaworthy condition. The position is this: With the best intention on the part of the Imperial Government the vessel was placed at our disposal, and we are not desirous to throw the vessel back again on the Imperial authorities if we can make any use of her. If it is found practicable or desirable—because there is now a question whether a smaller vessel would not answer that purpose better—when further Supplementary Estimates come down, the leader of the House will either ask a sum of money to maintain the vessel as a naval vessel or he will be asked that she shall be returned to the Imperial Government. All we ask at the present time is a vote for the payment of expenditures down to 1st July.

Mr. ANGLIN. The explanations made by the Finance Minister are so far satisfactory, except for the "if" introduced. As we understand the leader of the Government will explain his policy before the close of the Session, I think the vote may pass without further discussion.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have discovered a solution of the difficulty. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Bunster) last night declared himself in favor of the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands, and those members on both sides of the House who intend to leave Parliament can proceed thither.

Mr. McLELAN.

In this way the good intentions of the British Government in offering us this vessel would not be ignored.

271. To provide for repairs to and maintenance of the steamer La Canadienne $12,000

Mr. McLELAN. This vessel was wrecked last November on White Island, and it was with great difficulty she was got off and taken to Quebec, the cost involved being $7,000 or $8,000. An estimate was made of the cost of repairing the vessel and tenders invited, and an additional expenditure of $5,000 was incurred.

272. To provide for expenses incurred by the Water Police in connection with the Montreal laborers' strike, and the employment of extra men $7,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How was this expenditure incurred?

Mr. McLELAN. During the laborers' strike last summer an additional force had to be employed, and this is the continuation of the vote of last year.

Mr. ANGLIN. I have always objected to the principle of the Dominion Government meddling with the affairs of the harbors of Montreal and Quebec, or any other ports of this Dominion. It is not a part of our duty, of the Federal Government, and I think as soon as possible these matters should be relegated to the local authorities. The troubles to which this particular vote refers was one with which the Federal Government had nothing to do, and now they are asked to pay this expenditure.

274. To provide for the maintenance by the Harbor Commissioners of buoys and beacons in the port of Montreal, for the year ending 30th June, 1880... $3,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Explain?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The buoying of the river has been performed in the past by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal. It was said by them, and I think with a good deal of force, that whatever might be their duties as Harbor Commissioners, there was no reason whatever why the expense of buoying the river, which was not within the limits of the harbor, should be borne by them. When I introduced the Bill last Session, reducing the rate of interest on advances to the Commissioners, I stated that we purposed at the same time to relieve them of this expense. The work has been done by the Commissioners for the year; and this sum is to reimburse them for the amount. Hereafter the duty will be performed by the Government, and no special vote will be asked.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I can see no reason why they should perform the duty one year more than another, though I admit that I can see no reason why this expense should be borne by the Harbor Commissioners.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman admits that the system is wrong, and yet he objects to our changing the system.

275. To provide for the payment of salary and disbursements to S. A. McVicar, Fishery Overseer. $541 65

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What are the circumstances of this claim?

Mr. McLELAN. It is for two years and eight months' salary as fishery overseer. He did not draw his salary during the time he performed his duties.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Was the matter simply an oversight?

Mr. McLELAN. Not wholly an oversight. The Department withheld his salary, asking for further returns than he had sent in. The matter went on for some time, until he was relieved or left the office, and he made a claim for his salary. On enquiry, it was ascertained that he had discharged his duties, and that the money collected was faithfully paid over, and all that was wanting was that he did not send in a complete return for his term.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Was he dismissed?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not sure whether he resigned or was dismissed, but he is out of the office now. On the enquiry being made it was found that either from negligence or attention to other duties he had not sent in full returns.

Mr. MACKENZIE. My recollection of the matter is very faint at present, but my impression is that he deliberately refused to attend to his duties. But he is a good Tory editor, and the Government have no hesitation in going back several years and paying a claim which should not be paid. I hope the papers will be brought down so that we may see what the claim amounts to before we are asked to pay it. I have not the slightest doubt that the claim is a bogus one, and it is at least five or six years since it was rendered.

Mr. McLELAN. The claim has never been presented until within a year—at all events it never was passed upon by my predecessors.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. When was the service performed?

Mr. McLELAN. I think from 1875 to 1877.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. And he never presented a claim before?

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was no claim to present.

Mr. BOWELL. He was in the service of the Government. He was relieved, I think, by hon. gentlemen opposite of any duties he had to perform, and they refused positively to pay him for the time he was in their employment.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I do not think that was the case.

Mr. BOWELL. I am speaking from knowledge that came to me from himself when he made the claim. He said he had asked the Government to settle with him, but that they had refused to settle because he had failed to make a certain return. I then told him distinctly that it was his duty to make a return for all the time he was in the employ of the Government, and that whatever salary was due him would be paid. A thorough examination was made by the officers of the Department, and it was ascertained that all moneys he had collected during his tenure of office had been correctly and honestly accounted for, and the Government considered that he was entitled to the salary for the time he was in office. It may have been because he was a good Tory editor that hon. gentlemen opposite thought it necessary to relieve him of the $200 a year that he was getting, and I have no doubt that the fact of his being an editor of a Tory paper in the town and county the hon. gentleman represents brought down on him the odium of the Government. I think it is the duty of the incoming Government, having due regard to the proper treatment of their officers, whether they belong to one party or another, to see that they are properly remunerated for the services they rendered.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. There is a discrepancy between the statements of the two Ministers. One says that a claim was made, and the other says that no claim was made; I would like to know which speaks the truth. I suppose the hon. gentleman means to insinuate that I refused to pay this man because he was an editor of a Tory paper. I entirely repudiate that charge; it is utterly untrue; and I think, before we are asked to concur in this vote, the papers should be brought down.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman's rebuke ought to be applied to the hon. gentleman beside him (Mr. Mackenzie).

It appears to him to be quite correct for his friends to impute improper motives to the present Government. I would not have referred to the fact of his being the editor of a Tory newspaper, had not the hon. gentleman's late leader declared that to be the reason the Government were paying his claim. There is no discrepancy between the statement made by my hon. colleague and that made by myself.

Mr. McLELAN. Year by year he claimed his salary, but he never made the claim as a whole.

276. Fish Breeding—to provide an additional sum..... $2,000

Mr. ANGLIN. The other day the hon. Minister stated that somewhere on the Restigouche or the Metapedia, a new hatchery was likely to be erected, but he was asked who owned the ground, and he evaded answering it.

Mr. McLELAN. I did not evade it, and my attention was called to a report in the Hansard which was incorrect. I stated the site had been selected and a contract made for some materials and some work, but that I had suspended operations until a title could be purchased. Under the old arrangement it was proposed to take a lease of the property; but I did not consider it proper to make a large expenditure on properties for which we had to pay a rent. I stated this and did not evade the question.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. gentleman evaded one part of the question, viz.: who was the owner, or who claimed to be the owner of that property, upon which that hatchery is to be erected.

Mr. McLELAN. Judge Clarke claims to be the owner, and the proposal is to lease it from him.

Mr. ANGLIN. Surely it was a strange way of proceeding, to erect a hatchery upon a property to which the Government had not obtained a title. Rumor says the owner is Mr. Wilmot, and that he wants the building on it that he may obtain for land for which he paid some 50 cents an acre, a large sum from the Government. The hon. gentleman did evade the main point of the question, which was to the ownership of that ground—as to the person from whom the Government had leased or purchased it. They have contracted to erect a hatchery, and have carried materials on to the ground without obtaining a title.

Mr. McLELAN. The terms of the lease had been arranged, but the title had not been completed.

Mr. ANGLIN. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to say that Mr. Wilmot does not directly or indirectly own the property.

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Wilmot does not; it belongs to Judge Clarke.

Mr. ANGLIN. Why did you not say that before?

Mr. BOWELL. You gave us no chance. You did all the talking yourself.

Mr. ANGLIN. The question was put some days ago: who was the owner, or who claimed to be the owner?—to which the hon. Minister made no answer. But he has repeated what he said that evening as to his giving orders for the suspension of the work. He ought to be able to say on his own authority, after investigating the matter, that Mr. Wilmot is not the owner.

Mr. McLELAN. I told you that Judge Clarke was the owner.

Mr. ANGLIN. Mr. Wilmot's management of this whole business is very much impugned, and there is grave doubt as to whether we receive value for our money. I had no idea how the impression went abroad that Wilmot had an interest in it, but that impression was current, and the statement that Judge Clark is the owner will scarcely remove the impression unless it is proved that Mr. Wilmot is not directly or indirectly interested in selling this ground for the hatchery in question.

Mr. BUNSTER. In the whole of the Estimates there is not a dollar down for our fishermen, although they send out $1,000,000 worth of fish yearly and pay a large amount of duty into the revenue. $700,000 go from British Columbia into the general Treasury of the Dominion, yet we are completely ignored. I trust the hon. Minister will remedy this injustice.

277. To provide the expenses of inspecting the rivers and mill-dams in Nova Scotia..... $1,000

Mr. McLELAN. This is for the salary of a special inspector, Mr. Meath, who was sent out on complaints as to the condition of the rivers on the southern coast of Nova Scotia and the eastern coast.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. How is it that Mr. Rogers was not employed? He is an official of the Department, a very competent man, who has made some invention for fishways.

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Rogers has all he can do in the supervision of all matters connected with the Province of Nova Scotia.

279. To provide for arrears of rent in connection with building occupied by the St. John Observatory $449 81

Mr. ANGLIN. What observatory is that?

Mr. McLELAN. It was in a public building pending the construction of new buildings.

Mr. ANGLIN. What building?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot point that out now.

290. Expenses connected with the charges against Fishery Inspector Mowat..... $675 80

Mr. McLELAN. Charges were made against the overseer on the Restigouche which I found lying in the office when I came there. I felt that they were of a serious nature and sent Commissioners down to examine and report upon them. The Commissioners were Mr. Brydges, one of the fishery inspectors, and Mr. E. M. Roberts, of Truro. Circumstances detained them and the investigation occupied nearly a month, the expenses for which are asked for by this vote. Sufficient was heard of Mr. Mowat to warrant the Government in dismissing him.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Is there any objection to submitting these papers without a motion?

Mr. McLELAN. Certainly not.

292. To provide for a grant to fishermen on the coast of Nova Scotia who suffered losses by storms in April, 1881..... $1,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This is an unusual vote and requires some explanation, I think. What were the circumstances which induced the Government to ask for this vote?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A very heavy gale took place in April, 1881, which destroyed the buildings of a great many fishermen, and destroyed their boats and nets, and left them without any means of obtaining a livelihood. This money was not given to them, but was placed in the hands of an agent there to purchase boats and nets as a loan to them, so as to enable them to earn a living. I do not recollect what part of Nova Scotia it was, but there came up a report showing great distress on the part of the people, giving the number of boats, nets and buildings that were destroyed.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I suppose it was done by Order in Council?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.
Mr. ANGLIN.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Then the hon. Minister no doubt will produce that Order in Council?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am very loath to oppose a thing of that kind, where the distress may have been very great, but at the same time it is a precedent which might become a very awkward one. Does the hon. Minister propose, in the event of any serious injury occurring to the fishermen along the coast, to introduce the system of loaning money from the public Treasury.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; it was because the Government appreciated the peculiar hardships of this case that they advanced the money. They did not give it, but they loaned it. We saw the difficulty, and therefore put it in the position of a loan.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The practice has been to grant aid to sufferers where there has been an overpowering calamity, such as the St. John fire; in other cases a loan of money has been made on security taken for it. It will not do to take absolute ground that under no circumstances shall money be loaned or given. At the same time, it is quite clear that if we are not very careful demands will be made upon the Government for minor calamities, and the greatest care should be observed in making loans. In this case there will be no means of paying back the loan, so it is practically a gift.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. It is stated in the vote as a positive grant.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will bring down the Order in Council, which states that this is a loan.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Of course, while having very great sympathy for these distressed fishermen, it does seem to me to be a dangerous practice to adopt to afford relief from the Treasury to unfortunate people in different parts of the Dominion. Almost every year, in Prince Edward Island and some parts of Nova Scotia, fishermen suffer very severely from storms or other calamities, and it would be a dangerous thing if it is understood that the Government are to come forward and loan these people money to indemnify them for their losses.

Mr. RICHEY. I think this case comes under the denomination of those serious calamities which are for the time overwhelming. The principle that is generally acted on is, that when the case can be made a local charity the Dominion Government does not interfere; and I do not think in this case there was any expectation this principle would be transgressed. If this harbor had been properly protected by a breakwater from the effects of the storm, it would not have been felt to the same extent; but the calamity occurred at the season of the year when the population were about to prosecute the fisheries, and it rendered them unable to prosecute their business that year. Under those circumstances an appeal was made to the Government for a loan of money, and an investigation was made by the agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and the loan was granted. The disaster occurred at Prospect Harbor and extended to Dover, in the county of Halifax.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is a matter which should have received the attention of the Local Government. A storm occurred on the Labrador coast a few years ago; and although an application was made to the Dominion Government for relief, such was not granted.

Mr. RICHEY. The expense might fall on the municipality, but it would be inconvenient that it should fall on the Local Government, which had really nothing to devote to a case of that kind, unless from the grants for roads and bridges.

Mr. DALY. I desire to know whether hon. gentlemen opposite intend to oppose this motion, for I think I can give reasons why it should pass. The circumstances under which the money was loaned were such as render it necessary. At that season of the year the fishermen were prepared to go to sea to prosecute their calling, but they were deprived, by a storm, of their nets, boats and fishing tackle in a single day. They swarmed into Halifax in a destitute condition, and subscriptions were taken up but did not prove sufficient; a loan from the Dominion Government to those fishermen was just, in view of the calamity which had befallen them; and if any vote could be justified it was such a vote as this which went to alleviate the destitution. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite are not going to oppose such a vote as this.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. We are able to protect ourselves, and while no hon. member has opposed the vote hon. gentlemen on this side of the House desire to make themselves acquainted with the principle which underlies it.

Mr. McCUAIG. I have many fishermen in my own county, and in view of the very precarious nature of this occupation, I am quite willing to support the vote; and if the House were as careful in all expenditures as in this it would be more to the credit of its members.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig) evidently knows more about this calamity than any hon. gentleman on this side or the hon. Minister of Finance, who did not know where the calamity occurred. There are circumstances which justify the lending of money, but we desire some statement of the particulars so that we may be able to judge, not merely whether the case is one deserving relief, but as to what is to be the principle adopted. It is rather singular that a calamity so widespread was not better known. A year ago a Government steamer was chartered to go to relieve the people at Guysborough at I do not know what cost to the Dominion. Now other fishermen—a portion of Halifax—wanted to be relieved.

Mr. OGDEN. I desire to state the circumstances of the case referred to by the hon. member. Three years ago, owing to a scarcity of fish, many people in my constituency came short of food. An appeal was made to me from different parts of the county to try and obtain assistance from the Dominion Government. At that time there was some money placed in the Estimates for a public work. The Minister of Public Works allowed a certain sum to be drawn in advance, which was paid back in labor and material by the fishermen in one part of the county which I represent. In another part of the county an appeal was made for relief. There were no public works to be constructed in that part of the county, and knowing that many of the people were destitute and were suffering, and that perhaps some might die for want of assistance, I did not hesitate to put my hands in my pocket and purchase $300 worth of meal, which I sent to the people of my county, telling them that if they could pay for it I would gladly receive it; and I asked the Government if they would permit me to send this meal in the same steamer which carried the meal to the other part of the county where the Government work was going on. The Minister kindly consented on condition that I was to receive no profit from the freight. I did this, as I thought it was my duty, to assist the people in my county when they needed assistance, and I think the Government did right in granting my request, as it cost them nothing. The steamer had to pass the port—in fact she had to enter within a hundred yards of the wharf where the meal was landed. It cost the Government nothing extra. The only cost was to myself, and I believe that many hearts were made glad by this assistance and that some lives were saved. I feel very thankful to a kind Providence which enabled me at that time to be in a position to grant this aid to the people, and thankful to the Government for having acceded to my request. I am also thankful to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin), for giving me this opportunity for making the matter plain. I am surprised at hon. gentlemen opposite taking up the time of the House for one moment in discussing this question, Hon. gentlemen on the other side single out the poor fishermen as groaning under the heavy taxes imposed upon them by the National Policy, but when $1,000 is asked for to alleviate their sufferings, they say it is a bad principle to establish. They fight on principles in questions of this kind. Hon. gentlemen opposite and hon. members on this side of the House did not hesitate to give $100,000 to the starving people of Ireland, and it would not be fair for the members of this House to ignore the wants or requirements of their own countrymen. The fact that these hon. gentlemen have brought up this question shows that after all their pretended sympathy for the suffering fishermen, when it comes to a question of dollars and cents, they are always anxious to fight for the almighty dollar, and they are always ready to impose upon the poor fishermen as severely as any other class. I will always stand up for the fishermen, and I congratulate the Government for making provision to pay the fishermen a bounty so as to assist them in adding to the wealth of this country, because there is no class more deserving of assistance than the noble fisherman. I wish the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) to understand that the present Government in all their dealings with the fishermen have endeavored to do what was right and just, and they have acted most favorable to them in every respect.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman evidently does not belong to that charitable class of individuals who desire to hide their light under a bushel. We are glad, of course, to receive information from him showing how extremely liberal he dealt with his constituents, but when he talks about teaching us our duty, let him understand that whether it pleases him or his constituents, when we find a vote here which imparts a bad precedent, we will not fail to record our opinion about it whether we deem it expedient to expose it or not. I do not intend to oppose the vote, but I know that such grants as these are constantly made the means of very gross jobs throughout this country.

Mr. KILLAM. I would like to ask the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Ogden) whether he regards the duty of 40 cents a barrel upon this same corn meal as one of the blessings which the Government have conferred on the fishermen?

Mr. OGDEN. I paid every cent of duty myself.

Mr. ANGLIN. The Government must have had an extraordinary idea of the hon. gentleman when they were so particular as to stipulate that he should not make any profit out of the meal or the freight upon it. The hon. gentleman's statement reflects not much credit on the Government or himself—some on the Government because they were exceedingly careful, but not much on the hon. gentleman because of the stipulations which the Government thought it necessary to impose on him. The hon. gentleman is not correct in saying we oppose relief to the fishermen, but we are anxious to know why, where and how the grant was made.

Mr. OGDEN. I wish to inform the hon. member for Gloucester that I did not make as great a profit on this meal transaction as he did upon his printing contracts with the former Government.

303. Telegraph Lines, British Columbia..... $20,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote is caused by the superintendent of the telegraph lines in British Columbia having counted the revenue from the telegraph lines as a receipt against the expenditure, and these earnings were employed without being put into the Receiver-General's hands. We corrected that and said that all that money should be placed to the credit of the Receiver-General. The receipts, which were $5,000 or $6,000 previous to the change of Government, will this year be about $25,000.

305. Additional amount required to pay for the engraving of plates and printing of Tobacco Stamps for the stamping of Tobacco under the provision of 43 Vic., c. 19 $30,000

Mr. BOWELL. It is a very large item, but it was necessary to procure the stamps, to carry out the provisions of 43 Vic., cap. 19. When the law was passed it provided that all packages, no matter how large or small, should be stamped, it was necessary to procure a very large number of stamps. I noticed, in many cases, the Customs Department had applied through the head office for 500,000 stamps at a time, in order to meet the requirements of the law and prevent the illicit sale of tobacco, which might either be brought into the country, or be replaced by the native grown tobacco which probably would, in the market, take the place of the excised tobacco.

306. Additional amount required to pay to Customs Officers commissions on Excise duties collected by them $1,000

Mr. BOWELL. This sum has been paid by the Department to the Customs officers at ports where they have no Excise officers, and where the labor is not sufficient to justify the appointment of Inland Revenue officers. The clerks of the Customs are paid 5 per cent. on the amount of their collections.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is a good arrangement.

Mr. BOWELL. A very large amount would be saved if the principle could be extended.

203. Civil Government $1,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is this to make additional payment to the Departmental officers?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This amount was paid them until the last year or two ago. It is to pay officials of the post office savings banks in the Maritime Provinces for extra work, keeping them late at night, in reference to despatching notices to depositors who have balances to their credit, in order to the correct keeping of the accounts. They received payment for this work previously.

204. Administration of Justice—Payment of expenses in the case of Russell vs. Woodward, now before the Privy Council on appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick $5,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is this the case of the Scott Act?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. ANGLIN. Does the hon. gentleman think the Government is justified in paying the costs in this matter?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; it was very important that the question should be settled, and as the Government has paid for the argument of the case before the Supreme Court they thought they would be justified in asking Parliament for enough money to have the case settled definitely.

Mr. ANGLIN. It would have been supplied anyhow. The parties themselves were taking the case before the Courts and were prepared to fight the matter out. They wanted no assistance, but the Government chose to interpose, as I understand, because the parties who wanted to prohibit the sale of liquor did not want to contribute to the contest.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I think this was a subject that ought to have been determined in this way. I think Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

the expenditure ought to have been advanced by the Government for the purpose of having a decision from the highest Court in the Empire in settlement of this great constitutional question. I believe the whole people should bear the cost of such decision.

Mr. WELDON. The appellants never asked for it, but took proceedings at their own expense.

Mr. ANGLIN. It is not a question as to whether this question ought to be settled at the public expense. The Government supplied funds to enable one party, the prohibitionists, to test this question, while the other parties were willing to pay their own expenses in the Superior Courts. This interposition on the part of the Government was not a fair one, but was intended to enforce the Scott Act and establish its validity at the public expense.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. When the argument took place before the Exchequer Court on both sides, the Government paid for it, and they believed they should pay for the present argument on both sides, when it is to test the constitutionality of such an Act of Parliament. I agree with the hon. member for Westmoreland that whatever may be the difference of opinion as to the character and wisdom of the Scott Act, it is of the utmost importance this should be definitely settled.

Mr. WELDON. It is to be regretted the Government did not arrive at that decision earlier.

Mr. KILLAM. It is absurd for the Government to spend money in carrying out elections under the Scott Act in counties where no license previously existed, when there is no force to carry out the Act.

213. For payment of the transport of immigrants from Quebec to Toronto $28,000

Mr. BOWELL. This is to meet the expense of forwarding immigrants from Quebec westward, that was agreed to be paid under the arrangement made with the Dominion Government by the Ontario Government, that that Government should pay two-thirds the expense of transporting immigrants from Quebec westward. That arrangement continued until 1881, when the Ontario Government gave notice to the Dominion Government that they would no longer be party to that agreement. The Estimates had been laid before the House by the Dominion Government before the withdrawal of the Ontario Government from the bargain, and consequently a deficiency arose which this sum is intended to meet.

Resolutions ordered to be reported; and (at 1.40 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 3rd May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PENSIONS TO COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting County Court Judges. Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only change which the first resolution makes in the law is to substitute ten years for fifteen years. It is thought reasonable, if a County Court Judge becomes disabled after serving ten years, that he should be entitled to the pension.

Mr. MILLS. Is that irrespective of his age when appointed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me there ought to be some further provision, as the hon. gentleman might appoint a man sixty-five years of age, who would be unfit for service in ten years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, the same principle will apply to Judges of Superior Courts.

Mr. BLAKE. That is true, but the hon. gentleman himself explained, on a former occasion, the difference that exists practically between the appointment of Judges of the Superior Court—when he first introduced the provision for the retirement of the County Court Judges. Then he gave the term of service, of twenty-five years, as the minimum, explaining that the decision to apply the provision as regards the Superior Court Judges would be a very considerable check on the Executive in making appointments, including persons of advanced years and imperfect health. That the same check does not exist in relation to the more numerous County Court Judges, and that it would be dangerous to give an uncontrolled power to the Executive, because it might be exercised in the appointments of persons of advanced years, who might be soon in a position to apply for pensions. Now, we found it expedient to reduce the term from twenty-five to fifteen years, which was made with some doubt. The hon. gentleman has now gone further, and reduced the term to ten years. I think that is very objectionable, unless we provide the maximum age for the appointment of the County Court Judges, as it might lead to a large number of such applications, the number of those Judges now exceeding fifty; and it might lead to the appointment of persons of advanced age and infirm health, who would not otherwise be appointed, as the hon. gentleman himself said when he first proposed the clause. I am not disposed, unless the hon. gentleman advances strong reasons, to agree to any further limitation of the period beyond which pensions on account of age or incapacity should be granted. I think the period we have already fixed is narrowly consistent with the retention of those securities which the hon. gentleman himself proposed for the prevention of abuses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite time I called the attention of Parliament to the difference between the case of the County Court Judges and the Judges of the Superior Court. Still, experience has shown the reasons for the proposed change, which is proposed upon the strong remonstrances of the whole body of the County Court Judges. I understand there are some cases of these Judges not being fit to perform their duties; and really after all, after a service of ten years, when a Judge is broken down or is afflicted with some disease or infirmity, it is not too much to ask for the continuance of his salary. I admit there is much in what the hon. gentleman says about the duty of fixing a maximum age for County Court Judges. Of course, the Government must take the responsibility of making proper appointments, avoiding the selection of parties old or unfit. I am not at all aware that during our time, or that of any preceding Government, that appointments to the Superior Court or County Court Bench were governed by the principle of providing for persons advanced in years.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether the charge of making such unfit appointments can be brought against the hon. gentleman's Government—I do not make it. But it is to be observed that during his Administration there was no provision for pensions, and therefore there was no possibility of getting rid of a Judge, and that was a check on Governments formerly. He knows the difficulty of the situation, and the pressure to which he will be exposed, and also his weakness, and it was himself, as leader of the Government and Minister of Justice, who pointed out these difficulties if he possessed the power intimated of granting pensions to those County Judges. That no abuse of the power has occurred, when there was no opportunity to abuse it, with reference to prospective pensions, is but a poor argument against the proposition that such abuses may occur when the opportunity arises, and the creation of such opportunities is what the hon. gentleman is proposing to effect to a larger extent than the law now permits.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What would be done in the case of a County Court Judge who served a number of years, and resigned his position, and served a further period of years on the Bench: would the first years count in his claim for a pension?

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. He would get the benefit of the former years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think he ought.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the aggregate of the two periods of service ought to be counted, within the spirit of the law. In questions of precedence, &c., the Imperial Government have decided that former terms of service in an inferior Court, under somewhat similar circumstances, counted in the matter of giving precedence as between the different classes of Judges.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. There is some question as to the right of a Judge, after serving twenty-five years, to resign and be entitled to a pension.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Some Judges believe they have that right.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that any question can arise.

Mr. BLAKE. The clause is the same as that with reference to the Superior Court Judges, except that we have fifteen years of a term prescribed. That clause has always been interpreted as leaving the Judges at perfect liberty to resign, with a discretionary power in the hands of the Government to decide whether they should be pensioned. It would not be proper to grant a pension to a Judge able to execute the duties of his office.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Statute has always been so construed.

Mr. BLAKE. The 7th clause seems open to some exception. One of the great difficulties the hon. gentleman will have to deal with—and I speak from a little experience on that subject—is to persuade a Judge that he is too old and incapable of continuing the duties of his office. Not that the Judge does not feel, in one sense, that it is fit for him to retire, but he feels that it is not fit for him to retire on two-thirds of his salary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is very true.

Mr. BLAKE. I repeat it is a very great difficulty. I think this clause will have the effect of causing Judges, who may be unable to fulfil their duties, to hold on to their position as long as possible, confident that they will run no risk by such a course, as they will be entitled to a pension after the Commission has been issued and proceedings taken against them. I was in correspondence with the friends of no less than two learned Judges, both of whom were declared by common consent unfit for the discharge of their duties. They had served the twenty-five years period, but neither would retire because they wanted the whole of their salaries. One of them had a junior Judge who did all the work, and another wanted a junior Judge to be appointed so that he might practically be made a pensioner at a full salary. Under this clause you would never get a Judge to retire after the twenty-five years period.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. What this means is that it authorizes the Government to remove a Judge for inability or incapacity arising from old age or ill health, and should this removal take place two years after the appointment he would be entitled to a pension as if he had served ten years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a good deal in what the hon. member for West Durham says. This clause was introduced to meet the case of a Judge in the county of Wellington, Judge McDonald, who had performed his duties very satisfactorily, but who is now unable to perform them and incapable of resigning, and if he was removed for incapacity under the law he could not receive any salary.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no provision for power to deal with this case in the resolutions, nor do I think the clause bears the interpretation put upon it by my hon. friend from Westmoreland.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Any doubt as to the construction of the second resolution would be cured by putting in the word "so" before "removed."

Mr. BLAKE. I should object strongly to a provision which in fact got rid of the ten years clause. Does the hon. gentleman propose to introduce a clause providing for the filling up of vacancies on the judicial bench in any reasonable time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the second resolution be struck out.

Motion agreed to and resolutions agreed to and reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committees on Bill (No. 112) respecting County Court Judges.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be well to specify the manner in which the enquiry is to be made, since clause 4 following is merely permissive. This clause obviously gives power to the Governor in Council to make an enquiry in any way they please, notwithstanding that the Judge may oppose it and may prefer a Commission. Therefore, it is practically investing the Governor in Council with power to remove a Judge, not with the security which the Statute provides, but only with the security of an enquiry which may be made in an unsatisfactory manner by the Executive Department of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A Judge might prefer to be heard by the Governor in Council rather than by a Commission. In any case I think any Government would be exceedingly anxious to avoid the exercise of that power. This is precisely the same provision as before, only it gives power to the Executive Council of the Dominion.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

AN ACT CONCERNING THE INLAND REVENUE.

House resumed the adjourned debate on Mr. Mousseau's proposed motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to amend the Inland Revenue Act, 1880, 43 Victoria, Chapter 19.

1. By prescribing the license fee to be paid for a bonding warehouse when in the same building with a Customs warehouse.

2. By repealing the duty of 4 cents per lb. on common Canada twist, imposed by section 35, sub-section 10, and providing that it shall pay the same duty as other Tobacco manufactured exclusively from leaf grown in Canada, under sub-section 8, such duty to be reduced from 14 cents to 8 cents per lb., for the two years next after the passing of the Act, and to 10 cents per lb. for the two years then next.

3. By reducing the duty, under sub-section 9 of the said section 35, on cigars made solely from Tobacco grown in Canada, from 30 cents to 20 cents per lb.

4. By providing for a monthly payment, equal to the cost of properly surveying the establishment, by any party licensed to use a chemical still.

5. By making certain amendments to facilitate the working of the said Act, but not affecting the rates of duty imposed by it.

He said (in French): I now move that to clause 2 of the foregoing resolution, the following be substituted:—

"2. By providing that the duty on tobacco manufactured by licensed manufacturers exclusively from leaf grown in Canada shall be reduced from 14 cents to 8 cents per lb., for the two years next after the passing of the Act, and to 10 cents per lb. thereafter."

This change has been made in conformity with the promise made by the Government when the hon. Minister of Finance made his financial statement. I think that I have already had occasion to explain the reasons that have caused the Government to make these changes, but it may not be out of the way to refer once more to the matter to-day. This policy with regard to Canadian tobacco is far more important than it appears at first sight. I have already submitted some statistics in this respect. We wish to try and cultivate in the country the immense quantity of tobacco which we import from abroad. Preliminary experiments have been made, and it has been established in the Inland Revenue Department, that the tobacco produced, both by the growers of Lower Canada and those of the Province of Ontario, is of such quality that we can manufacture as good cigars and as good smoking tobacco as those we manufacture from foreign tobacco. I have already given statistics showing the number of pounds of tobacco which we import from abroad. One well-known manufacturer alone, who yearly imports foreign tobacco to the extent of $100,000, has said to us: "With the changes which the Government is about to introduce, I am convinced that within two or three years I will take at least half my tobacco in the country; in other words, instead of sending $50,000 per annum abroad that sum will remain at home." Of course there are great obstacles to be encountered. It is an experimental policy, and many difficulties will always arise during the transitory period, i.e., between the time when we are importing largely and that when we are changing the fiscal policy in order to import less, we shall manufacture in large quantities. Several means have been proposed, and I think this one will work perfectly. Since it has been known that we are about to extend the margin heretofore existing on manufactured tobacco, manufactories are being started that will be in working order this fall or next year. Formerly the margin on cigars was from 30 to 40 per cent.; we are reducing it to 20 per cent., or a difference of exactly one-half. On manufactured tobacco the duty was 20 per cent. on imported tobacco, and 14 per cent. on Canadian tobacco; we are reducing that to 8 cents for two years, and after that to 10 cents per pound. Those figures have been declared to be sufficiently low by the manufacturers in the country to enable them to compete with foreign tobacco. With regard to the tobacco manufactured by the grower, in the shape of twist or roll, the duty will continue to be 4 cents per pound as heretofore. I shall have occasion to speak of this more fully hereafter; if these resolutions are reported, I will have a Bill to introduce, and I will give explanations later on.

Mr. LAURIER. If I understand the hon. Minister, the duty of 4 cents now in force on Canada twist is to remain unchanged?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. And the change now proposed will simply affect manufactured Canadian tobacco?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The first resolution reduced the tax from 14 cents per pound on Canadian twist, to 8 cents per pound. We now remove it altogether. It is the only change made in the resolution. Other changes are announced in the Bill which is to be brought down later. Thus, for instance, there is no longer to be any license necessary for the cultivation and sale of tobacco in the leaf, which is to be entirely free of duty for some years to come.

Mr. LAURIER. Then, if I understand aright, the first resolution is simply modified by removing the duty from rolled tobacco?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Yes.

Mr. HOUDE. Will the manufacturers of tobacco be allowed to manufacture in the same building, imported and foreign tobacco?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, there is no change in this respect.

Mr. BÉCHARD (in French). Mr. Speaker, it was with pleasure that I heard my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, declare that we could cultivate in Canada as good tobacco as that imported from abroad; and if I understand my hon. friend aright, the policy of the Government will henceforth be to encourage the development of that branch of agricultural industry. I regret, however, that my hon. friend was not able to inform the House that the Government was disposed not to impose any Excise duty whatever on the production of Canadian tobacco, and to allow it to be sold free and exempt from all Excise duty. It seems to me that such would have been the best means of encouraging the cultivation of Canadian tobacco. I recollect that my hon. friends opposite, or at least several among them, have on several occasions blamed the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) for having expressed some doubts as to the success of the cultivation of Canadian tobacco, and for having, last year, changed his opinion and accepted that of the majority of the members from the Province of Quebec, viz.: that Canadian tobacco can be cultivated to advantage in Canada. Now, I will add that as long as the Government does not encourage the cultivation of tobacco by the total exemption of Excise duty, I shall have the right to tell my hon. friends opposite that they are doing precisely what they formerly blamed my hon. friend the member for Quebec East for. From my point of view—I do not speak here in a political sense, I am speaking as a French Canadian member, not in a hostile sense to the Government, but as favoring the cultivation of Canadian tobacco—from my point of view, I say, it seems to me that the surest way of favoring the development of that branch of agricultural industry, which is apparently a most profitable one wherever it is carried on, would be to allow Canadian growers to cultivate and sell their tobacco without paying any Excise duty. If you impose any duties, you discourage the grower, you place obstacles to the cultivation of tobacco, and the slightest obstacle in this respect will cause a large number of growers to abandon its cultivation. I repeat, therefore, that I regret that the hon. Secretary of State has not been able to state on this occasion that the Government has decided to encourage, in a more decided fashion, that branch of agricultural industry. The agricultural class forms an important part of the population, and I think that this Legislature should favor it as much as possible. On referring to an official document laid on the Table of the House during the present Session, I see that the total amount of revenue collected on Canadian tobacco amounted during the present year to $22,946.89, and that the expenses incurred by the various officials entrusted with the collection of that duty were $12,832.39, which would leave the Department of Inland Revenue a balance of $10,114.50. Really it is not worth while discouraging a large number of those who would be inclined to develop that important agricultural industry for the meagre pittance of $10,114.50 per annum. This revenue is not sufficient to compensate the obstacles thrown in the way of farmers who wish to grow Canadian tobacco.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (in French). Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the hon. member speak as he has just done, because the Government measure is exactly what he asks for; for it has looked into the amount of revenue collected from that source, and seeing that it amounts to very little, it has sought to encourage the cultivation of Canadian tobacco. Consequently, as just stated a moment ago by my colleague when he was introducing the measure, the cultivation of tobacco is henceforth to be free. What more does the hon. member require for the encouragement of the cultivation of tobacco in Canada? Henceforth the farmer will be able to cultivate tobacco as he cultivates wheat and oats, and he will be enabled to sell his tobacco as he sells his potatoes and his oats. If the farmer wishes to manufacture Canada twist he may do so for his own use without paying any duty, but if he wishes to sell twist he will pay a duty of 4 cents per pound the same as every other manufacturer. Now, as to the large manufacturers, those who convert tobacco into cigars, &c., they will have to pay the duty mentioned by my colleague—20 cents on cigars, I think, and 8 cents for all other kinds of manufactured tobacco. An hon. member asked me just now if the manufacturer of foreign tobacco might manufacture Canadian tobacco in the same building, and I answered that he might not; two buildings will be necessary, but I presume that the manufacturer will work both buildings with the same machinery. At all events, the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) must be content that the Government has done exactly what he wished.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I am glad of the concessions made by the Government since the beginning of the Session, but I would have been more content had these concessions been complete. There still remains an important tax that will naturally be a considerable obstacle to the cultivation of tobacco.

Mr. HOUDE (in French). Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised to see the position taken by the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard). When he rose, I expected to hear him congratulate the Government on the measure that it has just introduced in favor of a number of the agricultural class. But perhaps it is because he sits on the other side of the House that he sees fit to look upon measures coming from this side in a different manner than if they emanated from his friends. The hon. member was not so hard upon his friends when they were in power as he is to-day upon the present Government, and yet his friends were far from introducing a measure as favorable as the present one towards the reduction of the duty on tobacco in the interest of the Canadian grower. Mr. Speaker, as shown by the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Minister of Public Works, the production of Canadian tobacco is perfectly free of duty, and my hon. friend from Iberville is mistaken when he says that obstacles are placed in the way of the cultivation of tobacco. On the contrary, the obstacles are removed by the measure now submitted to our consideration. Moreover, the sale of unmanufactured tobacco is equally free. Some of my friends asked this boon of the Government, together with myself, and we are glad to see that the Government has granted our request. As for myself, I cordially congratulate the Government in the name of that large portion of the agricultural class which is to be benefitted by the present measure. I notice that the great objection of the hon. member for Iberville is that there still remains a duty on tobacco in roll. Well, all those who have practical ideas on the subject, and who have studied it under its various aspects, have come to the conclusion—at least the majority has, and I regret that my hon. friend from Iberville has not come to the same conclusion—that it is in the interest of the farmer that a tax should be placed on tobacco in roll, in order to improve its cultivation. Our object is to cause the native product to be consumed in lieu of foreign tobacco. Now, that is the only way to cause Canadian tobacco to be consumed and to improve its cultivation. Although, generally speaking, Canadian tobacco is of a passable quality, yet the greater part of it is not so. I am aware that a few persons have incurred the expense of going to study its cultivation in the United States, but the quantity which is of excellent quality, and almost equal to the best imported tobacco, is relatively small. Now, as long as the unscrupulous farmer manufactures roll tobacco, he will have the means of defrauding, to the detriment of other farmers; he will be inclined to introduce tobacco of an inferior quality, and by placing bad tobacco within the outer leaf he will take away all its value. Now, if the farmer prepares his tobacco merely to sell it to this one or the other, and at any price that he can obtain, he will never improve the cultivation of that plant; but if he cultivates it with the intention of selling it to manufacturers, he will produce an improved plant of superior quality, for which he will obtain more remunerative prices. On the other hand, should rolled tobacco not be taxed, it will delay the establishment of special manufactures of Canadian tobacco. I feel certain that in future only bad tobacco will be made into rolls, because, in the first place, it always gives some trouble, and next because tobacco, offered for sale on the market in that shape, is not in itself to be commended. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken the necessary precautions to protect the grower and to remove obstacles from the production and the sale of tobacco; whilst at the same time it aids its improvement, the result being that in future Canadian tobacco will realize more remunerative prices.

Mr. PLUMB. As I was a member of the delegation which waited upon the Minister of Inland Revenue in the early part of the Session, with reference to this question, I feel that it would not be improper for me to say a few words, especially as the constituency I represent is one in which tobacco has been grown to a considerable extent, and it is a crop which has also been cultivated successfully in Kent and Essex, and doubtless extended to many other parts of Ontario. It could not, however, be expected that the cultivator of the soil would experiment upon a new crop which requires much special skill and minute labor, when he was followed at every step by a revenue officer who was ready to seize whatever he should produce beyond 10 lbs. weight if the Excise entries were not made and the duty paid thereon. Under such embarrassments it is not surprising that the tobacco crop has been fluctuating and uncertain and the quality unsatisfactory. It is however certain that with moderate encouragement the farmers of Quebec will be stimulated largely to increase the acreage devoted to its culture, and I venture to say that the importance of the measure now under consideration to the agricultural community of that Province can scarcely be over estimated, and, further, that they will easily see to what party they are indebted for a valuable concession worth a whole deluge of theoretical talk, which furnishes us fuel to boil the pot and no food to put in it. I trust that the Government having taken this important step in the right direction, will find it advisable to procure and to disseminate throughout the country the very best tobacco seed of varieties adapted to the Canadian climate, and that the best information that can be procured will be obtained in respect to the culture of the plant, and the proper methods of curing it. It is known, perhaps, to most of the hon. members of the House that, after the war broke out between the Northern and Southern States the growth and culture of tobacco, which was largely restricted to the Southern States, it became necessary to supplement the supply by the cultivation of the plant in the North. Up to that time it was regarded mainly as a fancy or experimental crop in the Northern States, but since that time it has become one of its great staples. Tobacco is now grown in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indiana and other Northern States, and, of course, in the great tobacco growing states of Kentucky and Virginia where it was cultivated largely before. The crop in the North is grown to such an extent that it is now very much larger than in the South, a fact which shows what can be done by assiduous culture and proper and well directed encouragement. Tobacco is one of the most profitable rotation crops, two or three acres of tobacco realizing as much as eight or ten acres of any of our cereal crops, and therefore it may allow a large proportion of the land to lie in fallow. I have at hand a few statistics of the growth of tobacco in the United States, and I think it will be of interest to the House to hear, as showing the enormous strides the growth of tobacco has made in the Northern States since 1861, owing largely to the encouragement it received from a Government which has adopted as its cardinal principle the encouragement and protection of its own people. The tobacco production of all the Northern States for 1862, did not amount to more than probably about one-eighth of the crop altogether. The products of the State of Kentucky very nearly maintains its former relations to the whole crop, as it produced in 1880, 171,120,784 lbs. Virginia, which was in its best days one of the great tobacco growing States, producing about half as much as Kentucky, or 79,988,868 lbs. Of the Northern States, Pennsylvania produced 36,943,272 lbs., valued at $4,612,894; Ohio, 34,635,235 lbs., valued at $2,633,234; Connecticut, 14,044,652 lbs., valued at $1,929,982; Wisconsin, 10,608,423 lbs., valued at $899,118; Indiana, 8,872,842 lbs., valued at $443,642; New York, 6,481,431 lbs., valued at $72,868; Massachusetts, 5,369,436 lbs., valued at $683,575; Illinois, 3,935,825 lbs., valued at $202,745; and West Virginia, 2,296,146 lbs., valued at $170,374. While the whole production of tobacco in the United States amounted to 470,000,000 lbs. valued at $36,624,357, of which nearly 123,000,000 lbs. are raised in the Northern States. Pennsylvania stands next to Kentucky and Virginia in the quantity produced. It must be remembered, as I pointed out before, that it is comparatively a new crop in the North. A new industry, owing its rapid growth to the manner in which the United States Government have fostered it. The United States Customs duty upon cigars, cigarettes, cheroots of all kinds, including wrappers, is $2.50 per lb. and 25 per cent. The internal revenue tax upon cigars of all descriptions is $5 per thousand; upon cigarettes of not over 3 lbs. per thousand, $1.50, and upon those over 3 lbs. per thousand, $5. The Customs duties upon manufactured tobacco not otherwise provided for, is 50 cents per lb.; and the internal revenue tax, 16 cents; in leaf unmanufactured, not stemmed, 35 cents; and stems unmanufactured, 15 cents. The arrangement proposed to be made by the Government is quite in accordance with the general policy which has characterized the Liberal-Conservative party since it came into power—a policy which shows that we believe the Government should, at any rate, endeavor to foster this industry, contrary to the statements of an hon. member representing one of the leading city constituencies of Quebec, who averred, four years ago, that the climate of Lower Canada was unsuitable to the growth of tobacco. It is an industry which has never been fairly fostered and cherished, and our policy is one which promises to bring about great results for Quebec, as did a similar policy in the neighboring Republic for the cold, sterile and worn lands of Massachusetts and Connecticut. I remember well when that hon. gentleman, then a Minister of the Crown, derided those who desired to encourage the tobacco growers of Quebec, and he said that the climate of that Province was such that it was impossible to grow tobacco there advantageously. I remember, too, that not long afterwards when the tables were turned, and the hon. gentleman took a seat on the Speaker's left, the same hon. gentleman supported, and I think seconded, a resolution of an entirely opposite character. In a later Session, with the patriotic consistency usual to hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches, who seem to take delight in decrying the ability of the country to do any good thing—the hon. gentleman again stated that it would be impossible for the tobacco growing industry to flourish in the Province of Quebec. But I believe the policy now adopted will prove the inauguration of a great and important movement in the agricultural interests of that Province, and I believe that if the Department of Agriculture takes proper care, we shall soon see results commensurate with the importance of the great industry which we are now discussing. I congratulate the Government upon having solved a great difficulty, which I believe will tend to the great prosperity of the Province of Quebec, and of those parts of Ontario which are favorable to the culture of a plant which, though somewhat exhausting to the soil when constantly cropped and and re-cropped for a series of years, will yet be found to be a most profitable one for the farmers of Quebec and Ontario, and a great factor in our agricultural prosperity.

Mr. DUGAS (in French). Mr. Speaker, when a few days ago the Government submitted to the consideration of the hon. members of this House certain resolutions, and that the hon. Secretary of State was called upon to explain those resolutions, the object of which was to amend the Inland Revenue Act of 1880, I did not hesitate to state that I was opposed to the duty imposed on Canada twist. That declaration seems to have surprised certain members of this House. The object of this resolution is to hasten the progress of the cultivation of tobacco in this country, and to develop that industry by encouraging those who are engaged in it. Now, how can we attain this object? By granting to farmers the right of cultivating tobacco without a license, to sell it in the leaf, and to give manufacturers alone the right of manufacturing it, so that they should manufacture it of such quality as to make it acceptable, not only to the market of the Province of Quebec, but also to those of other Provinces and of foreign countries. I now rise, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the Government, for it certainly deserves our congratulations, for the measure that it has introduced; that measure is entirely in favor of the producer. I will tell the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) that what the producer finds a want of to-day is a market for the sale of his tobacco, and it is by decreasing the duties on the manufacture of Canadian tobacco that we shall succeed in getting this market. I have every reason to believe that the producer will be satisfied with the resolutions submitted for our consideration, and I hereby declare myself in favor of them.

Mr. LAURIER (in French). Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the Ministerial members are grateful to the Government for what one calls in English a favor. They have in turn declared their gratitude to the Government for its line of conduct in encouraging the cultivation of tobacco. There are two kinds of duty on Canadian tobacco; in the first place, a duty of four cents on rolled tobacco; that duty remains as it was; on that point the law is unchanged, and that duty will henceforth continue to be levied as in the past. Now the duty on manufactured is 14 cents. In this direction the Government grants a temporary advantage to producers; it reduces the duty to 8 cents for the next two years; then the duty will be increased to 10 cents and remain so for years to come, until it pleases the Government to alter the law, when the duty will again be 14 cents.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The law does not say that.

Mr. LAURIER. The proposed amendment says that for the two years following the passing of the Act the duty will be 8 cents per pound and for the two following years 10 cents.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The duty is 8 cents for the two first years, and then 10 cents in deternum.

Mr. LAURIER. The resolution does not say that, but the Government is advancing in the way of concessions, and if its partizans will but exercise a little pressure they may perhaps obtain that result. If such be the policy of the Government, it will be sufficient to alter the resolution in that sense by excising the last words of it.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Such is the policy of the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. I am very glad to learn this, but it is not the policy expressed in the resolution. I am very glad that the Government commits venial sins only instead of mortal sins. As for me, I cannot do otherwise than give the Government credit for the good that it does, but I cannot help admitting also the harm that it does. The following is the state of affairs such as it appears to me: The duty for next year and the following one is to be 8 cents per pound, and for the following years, 10 cents per pound. My hon. friend who introduced this Bill, has been congratulated by his colleague, "because," said he, "the cultivation of tobacco is now as free as that of oats and wheat." Again am I glad to notice—and if it is true that we must give the devil his due, there is no reason why the Government should not get it—that if the Government now permits the farmer to grow tobacco without taking out a license, it will protect those who produce tobacco. But my hon. friends, the Minister of Public Works and the Secretary of State, are they really logical in their views? I remember that a few years ago I expressed some doubts as to the cultivation of tobacco in our Province. I thought at the time that our climate was so variable that tobacco could not be profitably cultivated. Everyone told me at the time that I was mistaken, not only then, but during one of the debates that recently took place in this House. The hon. member for Montcalm (Mr. Dugas) stated that the cultivation of tobacco was one of the most profitable of cultivations in the Province of Quebec; that the cultivation of tobacco was more profitable than that of wheat, and he thinks that all hon. members opposite share his views. I do not ask for anything better than to be convinced that I am mistaken. I admit that I was, and I am disposed to think that the cultivation of tobacco is among the most profitable that we have; but is the Government logical in levying an Excise duty on a cultivation which is more profitable than that of grain, which merely pays Customs' dues. I respectfully submit this action of the Government to the consideration of the Ministerial members. As they hold the opinion that cultivation of tobacco is more profitable than that of grain, is it reasonable to impose on it an Excise duty, whilst they content themselves with levying Customs on the latter? It seems to me that the conclusion is a logical one, and that if the cultivation of tobacco is as profitable as it is represented to be, more freedom should be granted to it so that it should become general throughout the country. But what is your position to-day? You say: "We have no more profitable cultivation than that of tobacco." Yet, you place in the Statute-Book a law which imposes on this cultivation a duty of 8 cents for the two first years and of 10 cents for the following ones. You have not imposed an Excise duty on grain, but merely Customs' dues. Now, if you wish to protect Canadian tobacco, you should do for tobacco what you have done for grain, viz., merely impose Customs' dues on it and leave its cultivation as free as possible.

Mr. AMYOT (in French). I am surprised to hear the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) express the opinion that the Government of this country could altogether dispense with an Excise duty on Canadian tobacco. It seems to me to be the position which the Liberal party intends to take when meeting its opponents before the electors. We know that the Liberal party when in power never afforded any protection to the cultivation of tobacco. On the other hand, we know that the Conservative party when it came to power in 1878 inaugurated a system of protection which brought money into the public Treasury, and we know that it is owing to that policy that the Government is to-day enabled to bring forward a measure which will give a real protection to the cultivation of tobacco, and that the Government can diminish its revenues by several hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Speaker, there is a fact admitted by all, and that is that in every country the first things to be taxed are the articles of luxury, such as tobacco and spirituous liquors. Why should not my hon. friend put forth as a principle before this House that since the Government is desirous of protecting breadstuffs in Canada, it should remove the duties on spirituous liquors manufactured in the country? He does not dare to go thus far, but with regard to tobacco he goes so far as to say that no duty whatever should be imposed on that product. Mr. Speaker, I lay down as a principle that tobacco and spirituous liquors are the two articles of luxury that should be the first to be taxed in any country. But there is an intelligent way of levying that tax, and the Government has followed it. It begins by saying to the growers: "I will give you every possible freedom to sell your tobacco in the leaf. I am going to rid you of that host of officers, tax-collectors and appraisers, who pursued you even into your dwellings;" and it adds: "If you wish to sell your tobacco in roll you shall pay a duty of 4 cents per lb., as you frequently conceal in it an inferior quality of tobacco. Secondly, if you wish to manufacture it you will have to pay a duty of 8 cents per lb." Now the difference between that duty of 8 cents and that of 20 cents levied on foreign tobacco establishes a sufficient protection in favor of the Canadian grower. Let us suppose that Canadian tobacco is worth 2 cents less per lb. than foreign tobacco, there will still remain a considerable margin for the protection of Canadian tobacco. I am convinced that Canadian tobacco will now be grown and be sold in large quantities in our country districts, and in a short time those who cultivate that tobacco will be able to sell it not only in the different Provinces of the Confederation, but export it to other countries. Canadian tobacco being less heavily taxed than foreign tobacco, the former is going to take the place of the latter, and instead of bringing in $10,000 per annum to the Treasury, it will bring in ere long several hundred thousand dollars, and much of the money that was sent to the States to buy tobacco will remain at home. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we would have liked the Government to have allowed the manufacturers of foreign tobacco to manufacture Canadian tobacco in the same establishment, I must nevertheless state that several manufacturers have told me that they preferred that the two establishments should be separate, and there are consequently two opinions on the subject. The Government must necessarily adopt the safest, that by means of which the public revenue will not be defrauded. On the whole, I think the measure now proposed is most acceptable. I am of opinion that the Government has committed a bold act in depriving the Treasury of its present large revenue; but it feels itself strong because all the other departments yield considerable revenue; it does not fear the future, and it is making a supreme effort to make our opponents understand the extent of the principle of protection, and how far it is possible to go in the direction of benefitting the people, all the while holding the public Treasury intact. We are told that it is but a small boon that the Government has granted the people. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think any one will dare repeat such an utterance in presence of an audience personally interested in the present law. The grower who will no longer have to purchase a license to grow and sell tobacco will tell us that a great boon has been conferred on him; the grower who will have the manufacturer call upon him and buy all his tobacco, without his having a cent to pay before selling it, will tell us that that is another great boon. But if the boon is a small one, I will ask why did not the Liberal party grant it before to-day? The Liberals were in power for five years, and they never dreamt of granting this small boon. If it was a small one they are doubly guilty for not having granted it. The resolutions now submitted to our consideration foreshadow a Bill that will prove that the country is prosperous, and that the Government is animated with the best of intentions, and that it has a claim on the gratitude of growers, traders and manufacturers.

Mr. FISET (in French). The hon. member forgets that in 1878 we voted in an entirely opposite direction. At that time the majority of Liberal members from the Province of Quebec voted in favor of a motion asking for the total repeal of the duty on Canadian tobacco.

Mr. AMYOT. The country was not rich enough then; it was so considerably in debt that we had to wait until the state of our finances was better.

Mr. FISET. Nevertheless, several of the hon. member's friends voted with us. The motion proposed by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Bolduc) was conceived in the following terms:—

"Mr. BOLDUC, seconded by Mr. BLANCHET, proposed in amendment, that all the words after 'that' to the end of the resolution be struck out, and that the following be substituted: 'That whereas one million dollars' worth of tobacco is imported every year, and whereas that plant might be cultivated to advantage in this country, this House is of the opinion that the cultivation thereof should be encouraged by the abolition of duties on tobacco grown in Canada.'"

The following voted for that motion: Hon. Mr. Blanchet, Messrs. Bolduc, Coupal, Desjardins, Cuthbert, Langevin, Lantier and Pinsonneault; the following also voted for the same amendment: Messrs. Bourassa, Casgrain and Fiset. Thus you see, Mr. Speaker, that several of us did not hesitate to separate ourselves from the Government on that question, to vote in favor of the motion of the hon. member for Beauce. Now, it has been said that in future tobacco is to be as free of duty as grain. If it is true, there is no duty on wheat, but the farmer in the Province of Quebec, as well as in the other Provinces, pays not only no tax on his wheat, but he does not pay any tax to have it ground, and we would like to see not only that the tax on tobacco should be removed, but that the grower shall be free to sell in twist or in roll without having to pay any Excise duty. We are charged with not having abolished that tax when we were in power, but we can hurl the same argument at our opponents. In 1872, when the Conservative party was in power, that tax was in existence, and why did it not abolish it? I think we should be grateful to the Government for having assented to abolish the duty on tobacco in the leaf; but we would be still more so, had it removed it on rolled and twist tobacco.

Mr. BÉCHARD (in French). I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I merely wish to take up the words spoken about me by the hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde). The hon. member stated that if our friends were in power, and that they proposed a measure similar to this one, it is probable that my attitude on the question would be a different one from that I assume to-day. I will tell my hon. friend that if he wishes to take the trouble of ascertaining what has been my conduct on that question in the past, he will see that it was the same as to-day, even when my friends were in power. I was absent when the motion to which the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) has referred was made, but it will be seen that I myself in 1867 presented a motion for the total removal of the duty on Canadian tobacco. It will also be seen that later on I voted in favor of a similar motion brought forward by the member for Joliette (Mr. Godin); and at the last Parliament I voted for a motion of the same kind introduced by Dr. St. George, member for Portneuf.

Mr. HOUDE. The friends of the hon. member were not in power in 1867.

Mr. BÉCHARD. No; but they were in 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878, and I voted for a similar motion introduced in this Parliament when my friends were in power. I mention this, Mr. Speaker, to show that our conduct has always been in unison with the position I now take. The hon. member for Maskinongé (Mr. Houde) and the hon. member for Montcalm (Mr. Dugas), as also several others who have taken a part in this debate, contend that the duty of 4 cents per lb. on the sale of tobacco in roll and in twist is advantageous to the producer, because they say that the producers who sell their tobacco in that shape introduce bad tobacco in it. In the first place, I say that this does not concern the Government. We know that the man who is known to sell a bad article will see that the price of his goods fall, and consequently it is not in the producer's interest to sell bad tobacco within a good outer leaf. On the contrary, it is his interest to sell a good article if he wishes to preserve his good name. Again, I do not see that this is in favor of the producer, for a number of them prefer making up their tobacco in rolls because they obtain a better price for it in that shape than if they sell it in the leaf; the tax on tobacco manufactured in this fashion is an obstacle to the free cultivation of tobacco. Now, we have seen by the motion read just now by the hon. member for Rimouski, and which was made in 1878 by the hon. member for Beauce, that the policy of my hon. friends representing the Province of Quebec, and who sit on the opposite side of the House, was then in accord with the opinion which I have always held on the subject, viz., they were in favor of the removal of all duties on Canadian tobacco. I regret very much that they should have changed their attitude on that question since they came to power.

Mr. BOURBEAU (in French). Mr. Speaker, when the present Government came into power, it was difficult to sell tobacco in the leaf on our market, because our growers were compelled to make up their tobacco into rolls or into twist. Now, I know by experience that growers prefer to sell their tobacco in the leaf rather than in twist or in rolls. We know that all growers are not able to prepare tobacco in that fashion, and consequently they will be glad to offer their tobacco for sale in the leaf both on the markets and in the stores. Now, the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard), has said that the growers who sell good tobacco is well known as doing so. This may be true when he sells it in his parish, but when he goes to dispose of it in a parish or in a town where he is not known, how can the buyer be aware of the fact that this man is in the habit of offering a good article for sale. The buyer may be allowed to be suspicious of the honest man who will have prepared his tobacco, and thus, the man who will have acted honestly, will come to lose on the value of his tobacco, because the one who will have placed bad tobacco within a good outer leaf will destroy the buyer's confidence in tobacco thus prepared. I must consequently congratulate the Government for having introduced a measure that will tend to make roll tobacco disappear from the market. I think that we may consider that it has already disappeared. Where is to-day the grower that will roll tobacco and pay a duty of 4 cents per lb. when he can sell it in the state he grows it without paying any tax? We know that the rolling of tobacco comes to 2 cents per lb., if we take the wages of the roller at 50 cents a day. And if we consider that the wages of the roller are $1 a day, the rolling of tobacco will come to 4 cents per lb. Now, if we add to that a duty of 4 cents per lb. we obtain a difference of 8 cents per lb. between tobacco in the leaf and in roll. Moreover, it is easier to preserve tobacco in the leaf than in roll, as by pressing it, it is kept in better condition. Consequently—I repeat it—I congratulate the Government for having been so good as to grant us the right of selling our tobacco in the leaf without paying any duty. The difference between the duties to be paid now-a-days by the manufacturer of Canadian tobacco and those which were in force when our hon. friends opposite were in power, is a considerable one. The difference amounts to this: instead of having to pay 20 cents per lb. on tobacco in the leaf, the manufacturer will merely have 8 cents to pay, or a difference of 12 cents per lb. We have gradually diminished the duty, and we cannot doubt of the good intention of the Government for the future when the time will come to make further changes. I heard the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) state that instead of 10 cents the duty would be 14 cents in two years. It is not so, I say, for since the present Government has been in power it has always reduced the duty on tobacco, and perhaps it may reduce it to 6 cents per lb. Consequently I have full confidence in the Government—in the present Government—which is working in the interests of the farmer, and I cannot but support the present measure. I will assuredly take great pleasure in proclaiming this measure in the country districts, and I intend doing so as soon as possible, so that the farmer may prepare his hot-beds and take steps to have a good crop of Canadian tobacco this year.

Mr. RINFRET (in French). The hon. member who has just sat down has stated that the grower would be free to sell his tobacco in the leaf without paying any duty. I do not know if I understood the hon. Minister of Public Works aright, but I think that he said that the cultivation of tobacco, as far as the leaf was concerned, would be free. Will the hon. Secretary of State say if the grower will have the right to sell the leaf in open market?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The sale of the leaf will be entirely free, and the grower may sell it in open market or wherever he pleases.

Mr. TELLIER (in French). Mr. Speaker, the policy which Government has just declared, with regard to Canadian tobacco, will be received with pleasure not only in this House, but throughout the country. The grower of tobacco will now be allowed to plant it without let or hindrance, without being compelled to take out a license, and he will be able to sell it to whomsoever he pleases without paying a cent duty. Through the proposed reduction of the duty, the manufacturer will be enabled to manufacture native tobacco, on a large scale, a thing he could not do before. The new measure which is brought before us will have the result of encouraging the culture and the manufacture of Canadian tobacco, and of doing away with the obstacles which are the feature of the law now in force. Both producer and consumer will have cause to be satisfied with the changes wrought, for the former will have a market, and will obtain a better price for his tobacco, whilst the latter will get an article of good quality on more advantageous terms. That policy will establish a protection, in the true sense of the word. It may not be out of the way to recall the policy followed in that respect by the two political parties in the country. The placing of a duty on Canadian tobacco dates from 1864. It was the Liberals who first had the idea of levying that tax; that idea was subsequently accepted and put into execution by the Conservative party. This first tax has been increased at various times. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that by the Statute of 1870, it amounted to 15 cents per lb. on manufactured tobacco, to 7 cents per lb. on rolled tobacco, or tobacco in coils, and to 30 cents per lb. on cigars. The Canadian product was on the same footing as the foreign product. Our growers did not enjoy any protection, and the manufacturer found it more to his advantage to use foreign tobacco. The grower could not, owing to the law, sell his tobacco to any one but the manufacturers, and as they would not use it in their manufactures, there was neither market nor demand for this important agricultural product. The grower had but the resource of making his tobacco into rolls, of paying the duty, and of then selling it at a low figure. Discontent reigned among the agricultural classes, and advantage was taken thereof to stir up prejudices which tended to render any tax on Canadian tobacco odious. Who are those who stirred up these prejudices? It is the Liberals. They spread in all directions that our grower was not free to cultivate tobacco, and that that plant should be exempt of all duty. We had to struggle against these prejudices. Whilst declaring ourselves favorable to the encouragement of the cultivation of tobacco, we sought to inculcate the principle that taxes must be imposed rather on articles of luxury than on articles of necessity. The Liberals came to power in 1873, and we had a right to expect that their policy would be totally different from that of the Conservatives, and that they would remove the duties imposed on Canadian tobacco. We were mistaken, Mr. Speaker. They took up the question as early as 1874, and modified the law, but not by removing the duties, but by increasing them. We have seen these gentlemen increase the duty on manufactured tobacco from 15 to 20 cents; the duty on rolled tobacco, or on tobacco in coils, was raised from 7 to 10 cents, and on cigars to 40 cents per lb. Thus, far from encouraging the cultivation of tobacco in the country, the Liberal party checked it by considerably increasing the duties and by keeping them in force as long as they were in power. According to that law, the grower could not sell his tobacco in the leaf, and to be allowed to sell it in rolls, he was compelled to pay a tax of 10 cents per lb. That tax weighed, therefore, heavily on the cultivation of tobacco, and could but have the effect of injuring it. I have just heard the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) and the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) pride themselves on not having followed their political leaders on that question, and of having voted with the Conservatives. Those hon. gentlemen must have had very little influence with their party since they could not cause it to adopt their views; and yet they continued to support leaders, who, far from encouraging the cultivation of tobacco, placed serious obstacles in its way. The Conservative party came into power in 1878, and what did it do, Mr. Speaker? It went to work and, during the Session of 1879, reduced the duty on tobacco, in roll, to 6 cents per lb., in order to encourage its sale. The change was an advantageous one, especially to the consumer, who did not assuredly complain of it. The discontent which I spoke of a while ago, existed among the growers. He might grow tobacco on his land, but he was not allowed to dispose of his crop except to the manufacturer, and as the latter preferred using foreign tobacco, there was neither market nor demand for Canadian tobacco. Now, in 1880, the law was so altered as to give protection to the grower, and the duty, which amounted to 20 cents on each lb. of manufactured Canadian tobacco, was reduced to 14 cents, whilst the duty on foreign tobacco was left at 20 cents, thus giving the Canadian product the benefit of a 6 cents protection. The duty on rolled tobacco and tobacco in coils, which the Liberal Administration had increased to 10 cents, was reduced to 4 cents. Moreover, the duty levied on foreign tobacco used in manufacturing cigars, was raised to 40 cents per lb., whilst the duty on cigars manufactured from Canadian tobacco was reduced to 30 cents per lb.; this gave the Canadian product 10 cents per lb. protection. That protection did not bear any fruit as it was insufficient. The present Government, which is ever making progressive strides, seeks to-day to give the Canadian producer a still greater protection, and proposes to remove the obligation for the grower of taking out a license to cultivate tobacco. It wishes also to allow the sale of tobacco in the leaf, without subjecting that sale to any duty. In order to encourage the manufacture of tobacco, it announces that on manufactured Canadian tobacco the duty is to be 8 cents per lb. during the next two years, and 10 cents per lb. for the following ones, and that the duty on foreign tobacco will remain what it was before, i.e. 20 cents per lb., or a protection of 12 cents per lb. in favor of Canadian tobacco. There is no change on tobacco in coils. With regard to cigars, the duty on cigars manufactured from foreign tobacco is to remain at 40 cents per lb., whilst on those manufactured from Canadian tobacco, it is to be reduced to 20 cents per lb. The consequence of this change in the law will encourage the cultivation and manufacture of native tobacco. The grower will be enabled to cultivate his tobacco, and to sell it in the leaf without paying a cent of taxation and without taking out a license, and he will have a market wherein to dispose of his product. We have, therefore, every reason to be satisfied with the resolution which is now submitted to our consideration. The Government is now granting a protection which will create a demand for Canadian tobacco, which will establish a real market for our growers of tobacco, and which will cause the substitution of Canadian to foreign tobacco in our manufactures. That protection will have the result of creating in all directions manufactures of Canadian tobacco. The manufacturer will find it more to his advantage to employ Canadian than foreign tobacco. The consumers do not complain of the tax levied on tobacco, and as has been said by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot); they understand that taxes must be levied on articles of luxury rather than on the necessities of life. Now, if there is an article which does not belong to the latter category, and which can be called an article of luxury, it is assuredly tobacco. Tobacco should therefore be taxed, but in such a manner as to weigh on the consumer and not on the producer. The Government has just solved this problem; it is an improvement on the old system of taxation, and has my approval.

Mr. LANDRY (in French). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong the debate, but I think that on this occasion where one has seen fit to refer to past documents in this House, it will not be out of the way to quote likewise some of the utterances of hon. members now in Opposition, who, when they were in power, held views diametrically opposed to those they hold to-day. The hon. member who has just sat down fully agrees with the remarks made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), and both are of opinion that if there is an article of luxury it is tobacco; that if there is an article that should be taxed, it is tobacco, and those two gentlemen are not alone of that opinion. If we look at the debates of the House of Commons, for the year 1878, we find the following words spoken by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier):

"And more than this, as the hon. member for Beauce had stated, if there was an article which ought to be taxed, it was tobacco."

And in those days the hon. member occupied a prominent position on the Treasury benches. And he adds:

"No one could to-day, in a civilized country, pretend that tobacco ought to be exempt from taxation; and it was above all an article on which, by every Government, revenue ought to be raised. At the present time * * * * *"

He fondly returns to that expression :

"There was no civilized country which would venture to remove this Excise duty and make tobacco free from duty. Spirits and tobacco were always articles on which all civilized Governments raised a part of their ordinary revenue."

Thus you see, Mr. Speaker, that it is in the name of civilization; it is in the name of the brightest light that shines upon the nineteenth century that the hon. member for Quebec East, ex officio, speaking as a Minister, comes and says that there is not a civilized country in the world which would take upon itself to remove the duty on tobacco. Such is one of the reasons he gave at the time, and later on he added :

"In the second place, it is impossible to levy a duty on foreign tobacco, without levying the same on Canadian tobacco. If the duty were removed from native tobacco, the effect would be to destroy entirely the revenue obtained from this source. I am of opinion that tobacco is one of these articles on which a duty should be levied, and consequently it would be an erroneous and ruinous policy with regard to the revenue to remove that duty."

Such were, Mr. Speaker, the ideas given utterance to by the hon. member for Quebec East when he was in power. It was in those days that the hon. member for Beauce introduced the motion spoken of by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset). The highest praise than can be awarded to that motion, the best testimony in its favor, are contained in the speech which the hon. gentleman made just now. He stated that he had himself voted in favor of that motion. If the measure was a good one at that time, the vote of the hon. member for Rimouski was a good one, but to-day, he does not dare say whether that vote was a good or a bad one. He commenced by reading the various names at the foot of the motion, but when he reached his own name, he stopped. We merely heard, as a feeble echo, the name of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain). The hon. member proves that at the time the hon. member was in power, we asked without being able to obtain anything. The past is thus clearly defined, and we can now see the difference between the two parties. In those days, hon. members opposite could not obtain anything from their hon. leaders; to-day, we make ourselves the echo of the popular wish, at a time when prosperity has returned to the country, at a time when the Treasury is overflowing, so to speak, and we ask in our turn, and what is the result? We succeed. Mr. Speaker, since we are now exposing the hidden relics of the past, it is also well that we should know what is the sentiment on that question, I do not say of the chief of the French section of the Liberal party in the Province of Quebec, but of the would-be leader, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain). This is what he said then :

"Nevertheless, the people complain of the tax which is imposed on native tobacco. I think it would be a very difficult matter to remove this tax, though it contributes very little to the revenue; perhaps, the duty paid on home-grown tobacco does not even pay the cost of collection, but this does not imply that it ought to be entirely removed. I believe that the time will arrive"

As early as those days, the hon. member expressed his prophetic views. As early as that he lifted a corner of the veil which hid out the future, and he saw the new Government take the place of the one he was supporting, and acceding to the popular wish, grant what it asked for in those days :

" I think that the time will come when it will be possible to somewhat reduce the duty on Canadian tobacco and slightly increase it on foreign tobacco."

In those days, the hon. member declared himself in favor of protection because we had not got it. I think that to-day his sentiments must be the same. I think that his silence, when so important a question is being discussed in the House, when it is his interest to let the country know his views on the subject, is a golden, an approving silence; it is the approval of the measure introduced by the Government. What else have we seen since that question was submitted to our consideration? We have seen hon. members of the Opposition rise in turn and say that the measure satisfied them. It is a measure which they are glad to see pass into law. They are glad to see that the Conservative party is able to carry out its ideas. Mr. Speaker, I can understand their joy. I can understand their gladness. As was shown to us by the hon. member for Iberville, the only grief which he feels, is that from a political point of view, we may derive some advantage from this measure; but I know that hon. gentlemen love their country too much, they are too fond of their Province, to allow such a consideration to prevail and to prevent them from uniting with us to congratulate the Government and to approve the policy which it submits to-day to the country.

Mr. BÉCHARD. And to render the measure more complete.

Mr. LANDRY. I do not know if that expression means that there is something supplementary or complimentary needed; but such as the measure stands, if it is not complete, at least I consider it entire. At that time, in 1878, the hon. gentleman for L'Islet added :

"The present duties on Canadian tobacco are not too high."

Such was his utterance, and yet every one knows that the duty on Canadian tobacco was 10 cents higher than the duty of 11 cents now proposed. Well, if that duty was not too high then, I understand that the hon. member cannot find it too high now; this quite explains to me his joy, and I can understand that it chokes him and prevents him from speaking. One would think, Mr. Speaker, that at this phase of the discussion, this measure produces on the two hon. members of the Opposition, who have ever sought to throw obstacles in the way of measures introduced by the Government, the effect produced on the body by a balm which is not the good Samaritan, and which goes by the name of St. Jacob's Oil. I will close with these few remarks, as I see that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret) is burning with desire to speak on this subject; I see that he has the intention of supporting the Government, and as this measure is meeting with the approval of all the hon. members of the Opposition, I wish to give him the opportunity of telling the country and the House the views he holds on the subject.

Mr. RINFRET. I have but a word to say to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry). The hon. member has quoted a speech delivered on Canadian tobacco, in 1878, by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). That quotation had already been made by hon. members on the opposite side of the House who have spoken on the subject. I regret that they should not have taken the trouble to look a few pages further and to read the speech delivered at that time by their leader, the hon. Minister of Public Works, by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) and by others. They would have seen that in those days these gentlemen spoke in favor of the motion of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Bolduc), and that they asked for the total removal of all duties on Canadian tobacco. But those hon. gentlemen asked for the repeal of that tax when it was well known that the Liberal party, then in power, was suffering from a deficit in the Treasury, and that consequently it was impossible to grant their request as the revenue was insufficient, and that the repeal of that tax would have deprived the Treasury of a revenue of $500,000 or $600,000 per annum, according to the calculations of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot); but now that the Treasury is full to overflowing, I think that it is the proper time to repeal that duty. The demand made in those days was not a reasonable one, as hon. members must have understood that the Mackenzie Administration could not grant. But they were sincere when they preferred it, and when, during the last elections, they promised on the hustings to repeal the duty on Canadian tobacco, they will never have a better opportunity than the one they have to-day of demonstrating their sincerity, as to have a surplus of several millions in the public Treasury. The hon. member for Montmagny has remarked that we are pleased with the concessions made by the Government. It is true, as I have said already, that the Government has made a step in the right direction, but I think that it has not sufficiently protected Canadian tobacco to permit of its being manufactured with advantage in the country. In order that tobacco should be really protected, the duty should be reduced another few cents; if the duty is left at 8 cents on manufactured tobacco, it will certainly not be sufficient protection, and I think that, to give real protection, the duty on manufactured tobacco should be 4 or 5 cents only.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MOUSSEAU (in French). The policy of the Government, on the question now under consideration, has been to give the farmer all the possible protection on the cultivation of tobacco. Our efforts in that direction have been crowned with success, and it is with pleasure that I have seen our friends, and even our opponents, recognize the wisdom of the legislation inaugurated by the Government. Recently, in a debate that has remained memorable, the hon. leader of the Government had occasion to say that we were not like the Bourbons; that we Conservatives could learn something, and also forget something. It is for that reason that we have listened with so much pleasure to the requests of our friends, and that we have acceded to them. There is also, Mr. Speaker, a better and higher reason, that has induced us to adopt that legislation. It is because we understand exactly our mission as Ministers. We are not in office to govern the Dominion in the interests of the Ministers, but to govern it in the interests of the people, in the interests of the Dominion represented in this House by its members. We Ministers are but a large Joint Committee of the House and of the Senate; a Parliamentary Committee, wherein the two branches of the Legislature are represented by Ministers from the Senate, and Ministers of the House of Commons. We deem it an honor to give an ear to the just demands of our friends, because our friends who sit in this House represent the interests of the Dominion, and when we submit to their demands, we are not showing weakness, but we are following a wise policy. Mr. Speaker, when the sitting was suspended at six o'clock, I was desirous of continuing the debate, not to enjoy the childish satisfaction of making a speech, I have no speech to make, but I wished to lay before the House a few facts that will show that the people approve of the proposed changes with the same gratitude as do hon. members of this House. I have also to note a curious fact in the shape of private letters, which I desire to make public, because they bear on public interests. One day, a friend of mine, a Conservative elector of the Province of Quebec, wrote me a letter precisely on the subject of that light duty of 4 cents per lb. levied on manufactured tobacco. Impelled rather by party interests than by those of the cause, he thought he was giving me wise advice. This is what he wrote:

"SIR.—A number of Conservatives of St. Hugues called upon me yesterday, Sunday, to ask me to write to you with regard to the tax on tobacco grown and sold by farmers in the country districts, and to beg you to use your influence to cause this wretched tax to be repealed. The public returns show a revenue of $7,000 derived from that tax on tobacco, and it costs some thousands to collect it. It is absurd: and, moreover, the repeal of that tax would be most popular. The Government would show an act of cleverness and would show a great deal of tact, under the present circumstances, if it removed that duty from the shoulders of the habitant who grows tobacco, whilst maintaining the tax on tobacco imported and manufactured in the country. You have a few millions of a surplus, now is the time for the Conservative Government to take advantage of its splendid position to prepare the impending elections. The repeal of that tax would have a magical effect on the mind of the country population, and would prepare public opinion for a glorious triumph for the Government, at the inauguration of the coming campaign * * *."

Several hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Such is exactly the object of that letter. It is a frank one and expresses exactly the thoughts of my friend. When the House will have heard the reply I sent to that letter, I hope that my hon. friends opposite will continue to say: hear, hear.

" * * * The farmers detest that tax, all the more so that it does not yield any profit. It is a nuisance to everybody, and it is not wise of the Government to keep it in force. Had the administration of the Government not been more fortunate in other directions in its collection of taxes, we should not have the pleasure of seeing a surplus this year. If you wish to receive formal petitions let me know, I can procure them."

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Thus did an elector of the Province of Quebec write to me. And this is how, rising above party considerations to consult public interests alone, I answered his letter:

"I received last night your letter of the 27th February. You are entirely mistaken on the question of Canadian tobacco, and let me tell you so frankly; should I convince you of the fact, I hope that you will take the necessary steps among my friends to correct the error into which they have fallen. Let us take as a point of departure two well established facts:

"1. We import from abroad several millions of dollars worth of tobacco.

"2. The result of investigation shows that Canada can produce excellent tobacco which can compete with foreign tobacco, and which consequently will keep in the country the millions which we send abroad.

"You will admit a third and equally important fact: tobacco is essentially an article of luxury, real smoke in fact. At all events, it is an article of utility to the grower, since the law exempts his own provision of it from duty. A fourth and well established fact can also be admitted. Generally speaking, our Canadians manufacture bad tobacco, and thus its fame is so much damaged by bad cultivation that many manufacturers will not handle it. With these premises, my dear Doctor, you have all the policy of the Government, which follows therefrom as a matter of course. We do not at present require the tax on Canadian tobacco to keep the Government in existence; you are perfectly right in that respect, but we require to watch tobacco, to be cognizant of its quantity and quality, and especially to direct the fiscal policy of the country so that producers accustom themselves to take their tobacco to manufacturers and have it manufactured into smoking and chewing tobacco and into cigars. By that means will Canadian tobacco take the place of foreign tobacco; hence the necessity of our inspection laws, and of the insignificant tax which we have imposed, and which will, I feel sure, be looked upon favorably by the whole people and especially by the growers of tobacco if the intention of the Government is made known and explained to them."

"Mr. Aikins, the Minister of Inland Revenue, said to me last week: 'Mr. Mousseau, I can assure you that the experiment has now been made, and that the growers of Lower Canada produce tobacco that is equal to the best that is imported.' Now, why should we take abroad, every year, millions of dollars, which we might keep here, when it is an established fact, as has been shown, especially in the counties of Montcalm and Joliette, that fine and good tobacco can be grown, and that its cultivation is extremely profitable, more so than any kind of culture in the country. It is with the object of inducing growers to sell their tobacco in the leaf to manufacturers or to their licensed agents that we have this year reduced the duty on manufactured tobacco from 14 cents to 8 cents for two years, and to 10 cents afterwards, and that we have likewise reduced the tax on cigars made from Canadian tobacco from 80 to 18 cents. This reduction creates between foreign and native tobacco so wide a margin that several manufacturers have thanked the Government for it, and are preparing to manufacture Canadian tobacco on a large scale, thus establishing a real market for our producers, and which will gradually bring about the substitution of Canadian for foreign tobacco. Thus we can overlook the small inconvenience of this insignificant tax when one obtains so grand a result. Ten years ago the county of Montcalm was overburdened with mortgages; the farmers took to growing tobacco (it is common enough to find among them some who produce from 15,000 to 20,000 lbs. per year; others 40,000 lbs. and some even 50,000 lbs.), and to-day that county is one of the richest in Lower Canada. I hold this information from Mr. Dugas himself, the intelligent member for Montcalm, who approves in every respect the fiscal policy of the Government in this direction; but yesterday he was telling us that the farmers would be furious to see that duty on tobacco repealed, because it affords protection to those who cultivate carefully. With regard to the duty of 4 cents on roll, twist, &c., manufactured by the habitants themselves, it will disappear as soon as there will be sufficient manufactures to establish a competition on the market, and a more profitable sale for leaf tobacco, which will take one or two years, perhaps three. The tax will then be completely repealed and the law will prevent the producer from selling roll, twist, &c. You know as well as I do, that this roll, twist, &c., are the real cause of the disfavor which Canadian tobacco meets with, because many of our growers sell cabbage leaf or musty tobacco enveloped in a fine yellow leaf, as good quality tobacco; thus do they lower the price and harm the production of the good Canadian tobacco. I hope that you will be satisfied with all these explanations, and that, as I feel sure you will, you will share my opinion."

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the whole policy of the Government, viz., to obtain the object of causing our tobacco to be better prepared and to take the place of the tobacco which we imported in large quantities from abroad. After having received my explanations, my friend became of the opinion of this House, and thanked me in the following terms for what the Government has done. I skip the first part, which flatters me too much. My hon. friend the member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) will see that my friend, that that elector, is as wise as he is, and that he has come over to the policy of the Government, which Government, according to the confession of one of his own leaders, has, during the whole of its existence, committed several sins, which is saying a good deal:—

"SIR,—You are the right kind of Minister, you, who as a Judge would say, have taken the trouble of sending me almost a factum, in order to give information to your constituents, and that during the time the House is in Session. Were I in the House, I would not fail to tell your colleagues that you are a model politician. If ever, as I still hope you will, although you are now far away from us, you come back to St. Hugues, I trust that all my friends who grow tobacco will present you with a fine roll of Canadian tobacco, as a proof that with you we appreciate the duty which the Government has imposed on the production of that article in the country. You have made us understand, that on looking at the question from a different point of view, that the tax is not an absurdity, as I stated in my first letter to you, but that it will, on the contrary, bring about the good results which you anticipate for the future. The only thing that I would ask you to do; would be to get some friend to make a motion in the House in favor of the removal of the tax, so as to enable you or some one else to make the explanations which you have done me the honor of transmitting to me in your letter of the 1st March inst. These explanations would be reported by the papers and every one would at once see the object of the tax. I do not pretend to give you any advice, I merely wish to tell you that it would be the best way of thoroughly enlightening our population on the subject, without being compelled to repeat these explanations to all those who approach you on the subject. However, do as you see fit. Sugaring has begun in our woods since yesterday, a month earlier than customary. Were it not that the House is sitting, I would ask you to come and see us and eat some maple sugar, and smoke some good tobacco that has not paid any duty yet."

I am glad to be able to read this letter. I do not do so to glorify myself, nor for an electoral purpose. I do not know when the elections are coming off, although our opponents know it better than we do, but I do so to establish the fact that the best friends of the party and the country are in perfect unison with the House, as we have seen this evening from the speeches delivered by the hon. members for Quebec East, Iberville, Rimouski, St. Hyacinthe, Bellechasse, Montmagny and others.

Mr. CASGRAIN (in French). The hon. Secretary of State has been good enough to read us the letter we have just heard. I asked him to be good enough to give me its date.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I feel too much friendship and esteem towards my hon. friend not to gratify his legitimate curiosity. The first letter is dated the 27th February, last; the date of my answer is the 1st March, and the date of his approval, March 4th.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to have those dates. They show to what extent my hon. friend the Secretary of State is consistent with himself. He goes as far as to take the trouble of writing a factum to one of his electors to prove that this tax on tobacco is useful, necessary, indispensable, and he so succeeds in convincing him that he receives a letter approving of his factum. But now he shifts round and changes entirely the policy of the Government which is considered to-day to be an important question. If that is the approval which that complacent elector grants to the policy of my hon. friend, I cannot pay him the same compliment. Mr. Speaker, the position which I have taken on that tobacco question is the same to-day as that which I have ever held. I have always held that that tax, from the time that it was established by the Conservative Government in 1868, was a wretched tax, as was said by the elector of the hon. Minister, rather noxious than useful, and the collection of which has cost more than it was worth. I still hold the same views to-day, and I am ready to support a motion in the terms of the one introduced in 1878, by my hon. friend the member for Beauce (Mr. Bolduc). Now, it may be said that tobacco should be looked upon as an article of luxury, but the habitant does not look upon it as a luxury, but rather as a necessary. Smokers in the country who are deprived of a number of things enjoyed by town folks, really enjoy smoking their tobacco whatever its quality, so that one cannot really say it is a luxury. I can understand that it should be considered a luxury for the well-to-do class which wishes to get finer tobaccos, and I am not opposed to the increasing the duty on imported tobacco; but since the Government goes back on the attitude it assumed in 1878, why not make the tobacco trade as free as that of groceries and breadstuffs? If it is, as certain members contend, an agricultural resource equal to the cultivation of the best grains in the country, why not make it entirely free for purposes of trade and manufacture? If hon. Ministers wish to be consistent in their system of protection, they should prevent the importing into this country of foreign tobacco, and content themselves with seeing native tobacco grown here. That would be the natural consequence of their so called policy of Protection. Now, I consider that Canadian tobaccos can and should be cultivated to advantage in the country. I will not go so far as to say that one might succeed in producing a tobacco equal to or of superior quality to that produced in more temperate climes; it would be asking for more than nature will ever grant us; but we can produce a quality of tobacco that will meet the requirements of the agricultural community. As to producing a tobacco that can be sent abroad, I do not think that we can do so for some time to come, because the climate does not permit it, and moreover the preparation of tobacco is almost unknown in this country. Under those circumstances, I am prepared to support a measure tending towards the complete repeal of all restriction on the cultivation and sale of Canadian tobacco. Now, I will leave the hon. Secretary of State to his change of policy, and I am very glad to hear him say that he serves his country rather than his private interests, and I hope he will continue to follow that line of conduct.

Mr. BOLDUC (in French). Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the Government upon the policy which it has adopted with regard to Canadian tobacco. In 1878, I took up that question. I introduced a motion asking that the sale of leaf tobacco should be free. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) has made comments on that motion, and has stated that the Government did not grant all that I asked for. I think the hon. member did not read the whole of the motion I made at that time, or he would have seen that I was merely asking for the free sale of leaf tobacco, and not that manufactured tobacco should be free of duty. Mr. Speaker, the Government is granting us, to-day, all that we asked for in those days. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) has just reminded us that he was always in favor of the complete abolition of duties on Canadian tobacco. If I remember aright, the hon. member voted for my motion in 1878, but before recording his vote, he spoke for an hour or an hour and a half to prove that he was called upon to give a vote contrary to his personal opinion and merely to please his electors. Such was the position assumed by the hon. member in 1878, but instead of congratulating the Government this evening for having adopted the principle he supported then, he can do no better than blame it.

The Government has done well, and has gained public approval in allowing the grower to cultivate his tobacco freely, without being compelled to take out a license, and to be able to sell it to whomsoever he pleases without paying a cent of duty. But if the grower wishes to do as the manufacturer does, then he must submit to the duty of 4 cents imposed on the preparation of tobacco. Once more do I congratulate the Government, and I am convinced that the measure now submitted to us will meet with the approval of all the electors of the Dominion.

Mr. LANDRY (in French). Previous to the Committee rising, I think it important to take up a remark that has fallen from the lips of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain). He is evidently under a misapprehension. He says that the Canadian grower would like to see his tobacco completely free of duty. But the hon. member ought to know that the Canadian grower does not pay a cent of duty on the tobacco which he grows; the Treasury does not derive a cent from the cultivation of that tobacco. Consequently when the hon. member comes and makes a display of his superabundant love for the Canadian grower, I think that he is speaking without cause, and the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Bolduc) was quite right in saying just now, that when he made his motion in 1878 the hon. member for L'Islet had made a speech in favor of the Government of the day, and that he ended in voting against his own speech. I should not be surprised to see him do the same thing this evening. I should not be surprised to see him support in his speech the motion introduced by the hon. the Secretary of State and to vote against it when we go into concurrence. But I think, Mr. Speaker, that we may dispel these fears, for the hon. member, who is in awe of his electors, will set aside what he believes to be the interest of the country to save his own. I hope that in this case his own interest will compel him to vote for him in the general interest, if he does not think the two incompatible: he may fall into that error, and he will be perfectly justified in doing so.

Resolutions agreed to and reported.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MOUSSEAU, in moving for leave to introduce Bill (No. 123) to amend "The Inland Revenue Act, 1880, and for other purposes," said: In the few remarks which I have made on the resolutions which have received the sanction of the House, I dealt with the objects of this Bill. It provides for the removal of some of the duties on Canadian tobacco, and the modification of others. The Bill also provides distinctly that the producer of this tobacco may raise and sell it without paying any tax or inspection dues in the market or elsewhere. A great many of the provisions apply to matters of minor importance which I can explain on the second reading.

Bill introduced and read the first time.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I desire to call the attention of the Government to this matter: I have on the paper a Bill, which I consider in the public interest, and I think also in the interests of the Government and all their employes—the Bill for the prevention of frauds in contracts involving the expenditure of public money. So far as I can see this Bill cannot be reached at this stage of the Session. The hon. Minister of Public Works, when I proposed the second reading, gave as a reason for delay the fact that the English Parliament were considering a measure to the same effect, and that he was awaiting the result in order to judge what should be done with my Bill. I will give him credit for being sincere, but it is with the greatest effort that I make that admission. I would like to ask the Government if it is possible this Bill can be passed this Session? If not I will adopt some means of ascertaining the opinion of the House on the subject, in order to see whether the Government has decided that the end of the Session is to prevent the passing of this measure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I told the hon. gentleman I would give him the opportunity he seeks, and I will. House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

9. Indian Affairs..... $23,315

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The difference between the estimates for 1881-82 and for 1882-83, is $4,215, which is made up thus: A statutory increase to the amount of $500 The Indian Office, which has been so long in Toronto, is to be removed to Ottawa, there being no necessity for keeping up a separate staff at Toronto. Mr. Plummer, who is at the head of the office, and whose salary is $1,800, and Mr. Dalton, whose salary is $1,100, will therefore be brought to Ottawa. Those amounts, with Mr. Cuttler's salary of $750, make a total of $3,650 which, with another small item, gives the aggregate of $4,215.

173. To meet expenses connected with the consolidation of the Dominion Statutes..... $ 6,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Commissioner is to get $4,000, the secretary $1,000, and the balance will cover printing, stationery, &c. The hon. gentleman asked for some statement as regards the progress made in the collation of statutes. The following letter is from the Commissioner:

"OTTAWA, 1st May, 1882.

"To the Honorable
The Minister of Justice of Canada.

"Sir,—In compliance with your request, I have the honor, as Commissioner appointed under a Commission, dated 15th November last, in connection with the proposed revision and consolidation of the Statutes of Canada, to report as follows:

"1. I have, in pursuance of the said Commission, continued and completed, to the present time, the Schedules (referred to in the Commission) of Acts requiring examination for the purposes of the said revision and consolidation.

"2. I have examined the Statutes, passed by the Parliament of Canada, since the first day of July, 1867, and have collected therefrom such of them as are still in force, and incidentally thereto, have noted the enactments of the old Provincial Statutes, which have been repealed or amended by the Statutes of Canada.

"3. I have also, pursuant to instructions received from you, in that behalf, proceeded with the examination, collection and classification of all unrepealed enactments of the Parliament of Canada and of the several Provinces coming under the general subject of Criminal Law, and I have made considerable progress with this branch of the work.

"Before receiving the instructions last referred to, I had made some progress with the collection and classification of the unrepealed Statutes of Canada and of the several Provinces with reference to other subjects of legislation, but upon receiving said instructions, I confined my attention to the subject of Criminal Law only, and am still engaged thereupon.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"JAMES COCKBURN,
"Commissioner.

"ALEXANDER FERGUSON,
"Secretary."

Mr. BLAKE. Was it not the intention to enlarge the Commission and employ other persons?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is the intention.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman proposes to enlarge the Commission, does he intend asking for another vote?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is proposed to have another Commissioner act with the present Commissioner during the preliminary work before the work of consolidation commences. Then another Commissioner from Quebec will be added. We do not ask for another vote, because we will ask next Session for that vote if the present scheme is carried.

Mr. BLAKE. A great deal of the preliminary work to which the hon. gentleman refers was done some years ago, and it is a great pity it should be done over again. It seems to me we ought not to ignore the work done by Mr. Langton in the consolidation of the Ontario Statutes, which necessarily involved a consideration of the whole question. The consolidation was not merely a consolidation of the Statutes of Ontario but of the Statutes of old Canada so far as they fell within the limits of the legislative system of that Province. Will the hon. gentleman state about how long the Commission is to sit, and when we may expect some fruit of its labors?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to answer that. I have no doubt the Commissioners are making all possible progress. I should think it might take another season to do the work. I can perhaps speak more confidently on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Who is the secretary to whom the money is to be paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Ferguson, barrister-at-law, Ottawa.

202. In connection with Penitentiaries, John Cooper, late Chief Keeper of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary $366.20

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At the time Mr. Cooper was transferred from Kingston to St. Vincent de Paul, the Board of Directors agreed that he should have a dwelling-house rent free. Notwithstanding this agreement, he was compelled to pay rent for a certain time, and this is to reimburse him.

209. To cover the amount awarded by the arbitrators appointed pursuant to the Order in Council of 24th May, 1881, to adjudicate on the claim of S. T. Drennan for loss sustained by him for the non-fulfilment of a contract made with the Warden of the Kingston Penitentiary, together with the expense of the defence and the fees of the arbitrators... $10,668

Mr. BLAKE. I think some information is required with reference to this item. I have an indistinct recollection of a very ancient claim of Mr. Drennan's, which had been for a long time in the pigeon holes of the Department of Justice when I was there. If I rightly remember, some disposition was made of it, and I hope the hon. gentleman will have the papers looked up and brought down before Concurrence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know something of the claim. The arbitrators were Judge Clarke, Mr. Wm. Hartney, of Kingston, and Mr. McInnis. They were a special board of arbitrators. There were two claims pending in connection with the fire in the Penitentiary many years ago. One was by a Mr. Evans, who had a contract for iron ware of some kind. That was left to the arbitration of the late Justice Burroughs, County Judge, who awarded a certain sum of money in favor of Mr. Evans. Mr. Drennan had the furniture contract which was swept away by the fire. His claim was so excessive that I would not look at it until it was reduced to reasonable dimensions. I suppose the same thing occurred in the hon. gentleman's time. Latterly Mr. Drennan thought it prudent to reduce his claim to reasonable terms, and thereupon a special arbitration was allowed as in the Evans case, and this award is the consequence.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman bring down a memorandum, before Concurrence, of the case, showing the dates and the decisions of previous Ministers upon the subject, and how it came to be investigated so late as the 10th of May, 1881?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will bring it down.

211. For difference of salary payable to H. B. Mackay, acting Warden of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, from 21st June, 1880, to 24th January, 1881, at $98 per month, and for salary for November and December, 1881, as acting Warden, at $212.33 per month $1,121.20

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the 21st of June, 1880, the then warden of St. Vincent de Paul was given leave of absence pending the investigation of the charges made against him, and Mr. Mackay, the deputy warden, was appointed acting warden, and continued to act in both capacities until the 24th June, 1881, when, upon the warden's dismissal, he was appointed acting warden, at a warden's salary. It was thought only fair that he should be paid the regular warden's salary, inasmuch as during that time he had the whole responsibility of the management of the Penitentiary, in fact did double work. M. Lavolette, the present warden, was appointed in November last, from which time his salary dated. Mr. Mackay was sent by the hon. Minister of Justice to Manitoba Penitentiary where he served two months, the warden being sent to St. Vincent de Paul. $264 is the balance due for travelling expenses on that occasion.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not know anything of the gentleman, and I dare say he is an efficient officer, but I observe in several newspapers reports as to state of discipline in that penitentiary, and in particular I saw a statement made the other day that when Mr. Bedson, the warden of the Manitoba Penitentiary, took charge there he caused an examination to be made of the prisoners, and quite a large number of deadly weapons were found upon them. I should like to know from the Minister whether such was the fact.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is some truth in the statement, but it is greatly exaggerated. No doubt a bad state of discipline prevailed. Mr. Bedson was sent down as an officer free from influences of any kind, to introduce a better system. He made a search and found some concealed weapons among the convicts. That, however, cannot always be avoided. In times past the warden of Kingston Penitentiary has occasionally, owing to cunning and secrecy of the convicts, been unable to prevent them from secreting weapons or iron that can be made into weapons, and that cannot be altogether prevented. I am afraid there was laxity in the general management at that time. Mr. Bedson introduced a new system, and I believe Mr. Lavolette is carrying out that system successfully, and complaints which have existed for some years will no longer be heard.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works whether the buildings are thoroughly completed, all the cells in proper order, and the stone wall which was intended to surround the building is properly built, and the convicts in a state of proper discipline?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The buildings and walls are not completed. Lately we built a large wing which will give 110 or 120 new cells. That has been completed and is, no doubt by this time, occupied. We are going on with other buildings. There is now a large dining-room being built. The walls are not completed; they are going up by degrees and the work is being executed by convicts. It is well known that convicts will not work with the same energy as men who are paid so much per day. We give them proper material, and indeed the stone is of the best quality quarried in the neighborhood, and the work is of the most substantial character. The visit of Mr. Bedson had a good effect in re-establishing discipline, and the new warden who went to Kingston for several months and made himself acquainted with the discipline there, and the benefit of Mr. Benson's experience, has taken the matter in hand and has succeeded very well. The Government ask a small sum of money to put iron gratings or wires on the lower openings of the jail, because it was thought some of the weapons must have been handed in to the convicts through those apertures. No doubt when this work has been done and the walls completed we shall be able to do without so many jailors.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is there any truth in the reports that three or four convicts have lately escaped?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position now to answer the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It appears that two or three more convicts have managed to escape, and that one or two have been captured.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know; but escapes will occur occasionally. At Kingston, where the discipline is very good and the arrangements very complete, a couple of men happened to escape some time ago, but they were captured and brought back.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under the former warden the establishment was better managed than it has been ever since. I do not think the change has been at all for the better. On the contrary, it appears from public reports and from other information, that since Mr. Desaulniers has left, the establishment has not been equal to the wants of the public.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would not like to enter into any comparison between Mr. Desaulniers and his successor. I have no doubt he did his best as well as the gentleman who is now in charge as warden, but I think mistakes were made in his regime as well as in others. The hon. gentleman must see that the enclosure is not a proper one, and that there is always a temptation to convicts to escape. When, however, it is completed there will be less trouble of this kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I notice that there appears to be two items in the Estimates for the same service, one of $1,200, which we are now considering, and the other of $264.95, for the same purpose in another item. There must be some mistake. I objected last night to this sum of $1,200, thinking it a very large one, but the total amount seems to be $1,464.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When we come to Concurrence I will be able to say whether there has been any mistake.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I hope the hon. gentleman will not forget.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will not be forgotten.

280. To cover expenditure incurred in providing supplies to destitute Indians, Manitoba, and North West Territories... $327,139 47

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This sum includes two Governor General's warrants and important expenditures which were absolutely necessary to prevent the Indians from starving. The first was altogether for destitute Indians, $147,789; the next was $197,350. Some of this was caused by a short estimate, and the other amounts are as follows: Dues unpaid, $20,072; cattle under treaty, $8,440; seed grain under treaty, $16,000; provisions during payment, $24,000; provisions for destitute Indians, $70,000; clothing, $156; farm instructors, wages and expenses, $12,000; for ordinary general expenses, $25,000; grist mill, $2,000. With respect to the grist mill, I may say that it has been sold for $10,000, half of which has been paid and the other half has been secured by mortgage. The sums make up the balance.

Mr. MILLS. In order to vote intelligently on this subject, the hon. gentleman should have brought down a statement of the products of these farms, and the manner in which they have been consumed. I mentioned the other evening when the Estimates were under consideration, that our Indian expenditure, if those farms were at all moderately productive, was much larger than the Estimates indicated, because we have no report of the products of those farms, their value, or the manner in which they are used. The sum which the hon. gentleman now asks is a large one, and unless the country has been wholly misrepresented, unless it is not productive, unless the crops are subject to be destroyed by frosts, we should have, now that we have tried the experiment four years, some report showing what the productions are and how they have been used. It would have been well to have had a statement showing where these expenditures have taken place. There are bands of Indians scattered over the whole of the North-West Territories; which of the bands is so destitute that this large sum is now asked, or does the destitution extend to all the bands? If the voting of supplies of this sort is not to be a farce, it is necessary that the hon. gentleman should give to the House the information we are seeking. In addition to the large sums already voted, we have an estimate here for the purchase of agricultural implements for the Indians. Before I retired from office, I think, all our obligations in this respect were met, except in Treaty No. 6. I do not say that it is improper, if the Indians show a disposition to turn to farming, that we should supply them with additional agricultural implements, and if we are sure that they will make use of them for the purpose for which they are given; but, so far as I can learn, in a great many instances that is not done. The oxen we give them are sometimes consumed for beef, and the agricultural implements are sometimes sold to the white population for a mere trifle, and, I think, in some instances they have never reached their destination. It is perfectly obvious, from the various estimates brought down, that the Indians of the North-West are costing us to-day, in the matter of food, upwards of $100 per family. These Indians are being pensioned on the public Treasury; instead of being taught habits of self reliance, they are being taught habits of dependence, and, at this hour, they are more dependent on the Government for their means of subsistence than they have been at any former period. Before the hon. gentleman asks for the concurrence of the House in this appropriation, I think he should be prepared to give us the fullest information on all these points.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I observe an item here of $24,000 for provisions during the payment of the Indians. That is surely a perfectly monstrous expenditure, and I should like to know what necessity there is for it. I am quite aware that for years this expenditure has been going on more or less, but it is a practice that the Government should put a stop to. Surely it can be arranged that the payment shall be made promptly, without keeping tribes of Indians in one place for days.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For some years back the Indians have been allowed to collect together in large bands when being paid, and it became a time-honored custom to feed them while they were waiting, and I suppose they gorged themselves when they had the chance. The only way to correct that is to pay them on their reserves. The Indians are settling fast on their reserves—much faster than I anticipated they would. The agents are now instructed to allow no band of Indians who have settled on a reserve to go to any other place for payment. Some nomadic Indians still assemble at some central point, but I hope that in a year or two this charge will disappear altogether. I am happy to inform the Committee that the Indians are now away from the frontier altogether, except an Indian called Big Bear, and his people, who are still on the American side, but they are expected to cross the border shortly eight or nine hundred strong. With the exception of that band, we hope to have all the Indians moved away north, so that they will no longer be able to assemble in the neighborhood of Fort Walsh, Wood Mountains, Cypress Hills, or Qu'Appelle, and they will all be paid on their reserves. Those Indians come back always in a very destitute condition, half the horses are sold or traded away, and they are often short of clothing, so that there will be some expense in moving them away towards their reserves. But I hope we shall get them all on the reserves. As soon as they will be, every band will be paid on its own reserve, when this charge I hope will fade away or, nearly disappear. Of course, there is some disappointment in managing the Indians. We cannot be sure of success with the best and most anxious exertions. The report of the Indian Commissioner states generally the products of the farms. Some of the crops were hurt by the early frosts last year, and bands of Indians went away to hunt on the first information of the buffalo crossing the line. Still we hope to have them settled, and the Indian Commissioners speak very hopefully indeed of the progress that will be made, and of the number of acres that will be cultivated next year. The hon. member for Bothwell said that the Indians are being rendered more dependent than self-supporting. There is no use in putting Indians on a reserve to teach each other agriculture. There must be Government instructors, and all but two or three of them have proved successful. I think the hon. gentleman is misinformed as to the agricultural implements not reaching the Indians. There may have been some cases of failure for want of transport, which is sometimes difficult to obtain in that country. We hope, however, in another year there will be a railway and other facilities to overcome the difficulties and enormous expense of transport. The whole matter is an anxious one. We are quite in a transition state, and only by patience and perseverance, and considerable expenditure, can we hope in a few years to bring about a better condition of affairs.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How many farm instructors are there now at present?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Twenty-six.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In what way are those men looked after?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By Mr. Wadsworth, the Inspector of Agencies, a very efficient man. He has to visit all the agencies and see that their work is done. Then we have the Commissioner, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West, and also the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Elliott, who are constantly moving about.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Do the Government intend to put farm instructors on every reserve on which a band of Indians are settled, or is there any limit as to the number?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have twenty-six instructors now, but the country is being settled fast, and largely from Ontario, and we must have a farm instructor for any considerable band on a reserve. But instead of sending a Government officer to each settlement we shall be able to get the assistance of some good practical farmer settled near the reserve, who, by precepts and example in working his own farm, can teach the Indians for a small sum in comparison to the salary given a man whose whole time is spent as a farm instructor. We shall thus save a good deal of money with as much advantage to the Indians as would be secured by the other system.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think the item is wrongly entered here. So far as I can judge from the explanations of the Minister this is not an item to cover supplies for destitute Indians in the proper sense of the term, but one which contains quite a number of supplementary votes for almost all the purposes named in the Estimates under this heading. I think this estimate ought to have been divided into as many parts as there are separate services.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The first amount issued was altogether for destitute Indians, the chief sum being $147,728; then there is a second sum of $71,000, after which comes the other charges which the hon. gentleman truly says are not for destitute Indians. But as they are for subsidiary purposes and of small amount they were included in this one warrant and brought down in this general way.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Some $219,471 went to destitute Indians, the remainder going to the other services.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does that destitution still continue?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That destitution still continues to some extent. When the Indians come around the forts for food it is impossible to refuse them. They are now moving away from the forts where they used to hang about and are going to the reserves. They will have to get supplies until the crops are in. There is no large game in the North-West, only fish and small game and very little of that.

Mr. MACKENZIE. How are these supplies provided.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By contract.

310. Head Office, Ottawa---Printing maps, advertising payments of extra clerks $10,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What number of maps have been already issued or will be issued this year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. About 15,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I dare say every hon. member of this House who represents a western constituency can corroborate my statements, that we are deluged with applications for these maps, more particularly the large maps showing the lands located. I should like to know whether any steps have been taken to allow persons to buy them. Of course, the Government would supply them at first cost.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are now on sale. The large maps of which the hon. gentleman speaks of, are being sold in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, and here at Durie's for 25 cents, and other maps at 10 cents and 12 cents. The demand was so enormous, especially from this House, that it ran out, some hon. members asking for 200 sets at a time.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I did not get them anyway, though I could have easily disposed of them. I am bound to say the officers of the Department were very courteous in supplying me so far as they could. In the country districts, I am probably within the mark in saying, that every second family has a relative going to the North-West, consequently they are very desirous of getting a map.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the Government are taking steps to advertise this country largely on the continent? I am aware it is being well advertised in the United Kingdom, but rather from the reports the emigrants send home than from the efforts of the Government. We are given to understand there will be a large emigration from Germany and Switzerland this year, I would like to know whether any special effort has been made to secure a portion of this emigration for Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, maps and pamphlets have been printed in German and disseminated in Germany, Switzerland and Holland. As far as possible, the agencies of the different steam lines have been employed for the purpose of disseminating such information on the Continent.

Mr. CASEY. It was understood that the Canadian Pacific Railway would take a great deal of this business off the hands of the Government. Are the Government aware whether they have been actually advertising this country in Europe, or is the whole weight of advertising still borne by the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So far as I understand, they have special agents in Europe with maps and plans and all the usual inducements, which they have learned from the United States companies, both from the Continent and from the United Kingdom.

Mr. BLAKE. When the immigration estimates were before the Committee I could get no information whatever from the Minister of what the Canadian Pacific Railway was doing in this direction. The Speech from the Throne, in announcing the railway contract, held out, as an inducement to its ratification, that the Company would effectually promote the work of immigration, relieving the Government largely of this duty and expense. We were also promised that there would be concerted action between the Government and the Company in promoting emigration, and I think it is desirable that the House should be put in possession of information as to what action has been taken and with what result.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If I understood the hon. Minister correctly, these maps are only on sale at the large centres. I think it would be a great convenience if arrangements could be made by which these maps could be attainable at the leading post offices, one or more in each county.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad to say that in Western Canada there is perhaps no town, and very few incorporated villages, that have not a book store of some kind, and these maps are not only sent to these points, but every bookseller or person dealing in stationery can procure these maps, and a commission of nearly one-half is allowed them. That regulation has been in force about a month.

Mr. BLAKE. I think if we allowed even more liberal commissions to booksellers it would result in a rush of orders to the Department, and that would be a more sensible and business-like way of disseminating the maps.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right. The demand for the first issue of the maps was unexampled. The supply is, however, being renewed, and will be kept up. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman will be adopted, and booksellers and stationers will be able to get supplied, and the amount of commission will be stated in advertisements.

311. Unprovided items of 1880-81, by the Auditor General's report, page 446 $392,358

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I observe that $10,356 were required for Departmental contingencies. What is the cause of that expenditure?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was an excess of the estimate by the employment of additional clerks and additional telegraphy and other expenses stated in the Public Accounts.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That brings the expenditure for contingencies up to $150,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. $137,000 or $139,000 were voted.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I notice that under the head of Intercolonial Railway, there is an unprovided item of $137,000 for rolling-stock. Was the amount required for engines?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was for locomotives and rolling-stock owing to increased business on the road. The increased receipts for the last year amounted to $300,000 and the expenditure bore a like proportion, and it became necessary in order to perform the increased business that additional rolling-stock should be obtained.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There was a vote taken last year, and another vote for $300,000 for this year.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. For next year.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The total is $1,900,000 or $2,000,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I see that this general item includes $4,040 for the vessel Charybdis, and it was stated last night that the hon. the First Minister would make a statement to the House with respect to the intentions of the Government. The hon. the First Minister stated, a year or two ago, that it was intended to make this a training ship, but that idea appears to be entirely abandoned and there now remains the alternatives suggested by the hon. members, of towing the vessel out to sea and sinking her, or of sending her to Halifax where it was estimated the vessel would do less harm, and other alternatives were named; but the House would like to hear what the Government proposes to do with respect to the Charybdis.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand the hon. Finance Minister stated last night that I would give a true and particular account of the Charybdis, her future prospects, and our future prospects with respect to her. I will do so before Concurrence.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. An amount of $10,000 appears for aid to sufferers by the Quebec fire. By whom was that money distributed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This and subscriptions of private individuals were placed in the hands of a Committee of which the mayor was chairman, and the funds were expended in affording relief to people requiring food and clothing.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I observe there is an item of $36,000 for working expenses on the Pacific Railway.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was owing to increased business which necessitated increased expenditure.

312. Militia Drill Pay and other expenses connected with the drill and pay of the Militia..... $37,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. Before this vote is adopted I wish to call the attention of the Committee to an extraordinary order which appeared in the Official Gazette. It reads as follows:—

"The Major-General Commanding regrets to be called on to censure publicly an officer of long service and good character.

"By evidence produced before a Court of Enquiry which investigated the case, it appears that Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Ross, 16th Battalion, when in temporary command of the camp at Picton, Ont., on the 6th September, 1881, gave orders, without instituting sufficient enquiries, for an armed party from the battalion under his command to pull down a certain building which was being erected as a canteen under authority of the Minister of Militia and Defence, and which, when pulled down, was by this armed force thrown over the fence upon the highway.

"The Major-General considers that Lieutenant-Colonel Ross acted precipitately in calling for an armed force. He is therefore hereby seriously censured for this grave military indiscretion, and the Major-General hopes it will be a warning to this officer, and to all future officers commanding in camp or quarters, to be very careful before proceeding to such strong measures."

In the first place, so far as I am informed, it is an unprecedented thing to censure for such an offence as this by a general order in the Gazette, and I am not able to find from the papers which were brought down in response to a motion I made, that the Major-General ever recommended such a course to be taken. The Minister of Militia has, therefore, taken on himself to order this censure contrary to the intention and the disposition of the officer in command of the forces. I am surprised that such a course should have been taken, because we have no officer in our militia force more competent to discharge his duty than Colonel Ross. At a critical time in the history of the country he turned out a battalion nearly 500 strong, and he would have done good service if required. He kept this battalion up for many years in a state of rather more efficiency than almost any other battalion, and it was quite equal to the test as the evidence in these papers show. Yet the Minister of Militia in this manner undertakes to censure Colonel Ross in defiance of the intention of the Major-General Commanding the Forces. This is one of the most extraordinary instances of petty tyranny that has ever occurred in the history of the militia affairs, and I warn the hon. gentleman that if he continues to act like this, he and his Department will have very little to do, so far as the active militia force is concerned. The hon. gentleman appears from the papers to have assumed that Colonel Ross had been guilty of disobeying orders. He says in the papers submitted to the Major-General in command:

"According to the evidence of Lieutenant-Colonel Ross that officer has been guilty of disobeying the orders of Lieutenant-Colonel Villiers, commanding the district, who acted under directions from headquarters in respect to the canteen building.

"(2) Was Lieutenant-Colonel Ross justified, in your opinion, in using an armed force to pull down the building erected by Heffernan?

"(3.) If Lieutenant-Colonel Ross disobeyed the order of Lieutenant-Colonel Villiers and was wrong in using an armed force for the purpose of pulling down the canteen building, what punishment do you consider should be awarded?"

Major-General Luard says in his reports on these points:

"As regards No. 1, I cannot see that 'the action of Lieutenant-Colonel Ross' establishes that 'he was guilty of disobeying Lieutenant-Colonel Villiers' orders.' So far from this he states as follows:—'I was not in any way notified by Lieutenant-Colonel Villiers, Major McGill, Heffernan, or his legal adviser and prompter.'

I believe that the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig) is mentioned, and he had a great deal of difficulty in connection with this affair:

"That Heffernan was the man authorized, that had the promise or authority, to come into the camp-ground and build a canteen.

"I kept every intruder from interfering with the camp-ground, and when Colonel Villiers came into camp, about 6.30 p.m., I at once waited upon him and gave up the command and obeyed all orders from the Commandant—and the evidence taken as regards his conversation with Heffernan, goes to show that Heffernan did not produce any authority from Lieutenant-Colonel Villiers or headquarters, and that Lieutenant-Colonel Ross acted in ignorance of such authority.

"As regards Lieutenant-Colonel Ross having determined to stop the further building of what he supposed an unauthorized building, he had a perfect right, as the senior officer in camp, in my opinion, to make use of armed force, and that, I think, was wise, so that the display of overpowering force might prevent any disturbance or fighting.

"Having answered Nos. 1 and 2 as I have, it appears to me unnecessary to reply to No. 3."

Here we have the evidence of the Major-General in command of the Forces, that Colonel Ross acted properly and promptly in regard to this matter. The trouble appears to have arisen from the fact that the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig) had great difficulty in distributing the patronage in connection with this small business. He made some journeys to Ottawa, and no end of letters and telegrams were sent, in order to have this Heffernan, who is supposed to have some local influence on some section of voters in that county, appointed to take charge of the canteen. The Minister was telegraphed to all over the Lower Provinces to find out where he was, in order that he might stop the granting of canteen provisions to anyone in connection with the camp; and an order was obtained from the Minister, dated at Campbellton, I think, that no appointment was to be made until he came, and afterwards an order was made that the nominee of Mr. McCuaig should get the appointment. Major McGill was notified that Heffernan should be allowed to go on the camp ground to build a canteen, but Colonel Ross being in command, pending the arrival of the superior officer, objected to his building it on the camp ground, and on his declining to go off he brought a number of men and forced him to desist and put all the materials over the fence on the roadway—what seemed, indeed, a very proper proceeding—the only proceeding that apparently could be taken. Yet the hon. Minister deliberately assumes, in the face of the evidence that is presented, that Colonel Ross was made aware of this distribution of patronage, and Mr. Heffernan himself was not able to show any authority whatever for his appearing on the camp ground. Nay, more; it appears from the evidence that the ground on which the camp was, was the property of the trustees of Colonel Ross's estate, and that the ground was obtained on the express condition that if any canteen provisions should be given they should be given to some one in connection with the camp for the benefit of the band, if I recollect aright.

Mr. CARON. The papers do not show that.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have seen nothing but the papers, and I think they show that.

Mr. CARON. You will not find it in the papers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am sure I will. The statement is here.

Mr. CARON. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will find it when I sit down. This was the arrangement made, and this undeserved and unparalleled censure upon an excellent officer in defiance of the opinion and recommendation of the officer in command of the Militia, was because this Mr. Heffernan, the nominee and protege of Mr. McCuaig, was not allowed to erect a canteen and sell liquors on the camp ground.

Mr. CARON. It will show that no liquors could be sold.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No ardent spirits were to be sold, but there was no provision against beer and porter and liquors of that kind.

Mr. CARON. Yes, there was.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What was to be sold?

Mr. CARON. If you had read the papers you would know.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman ought to know without the papers. Whatever there was to be sold, there was no authority shown to Colonel Ross. There was no reason why the Minister should interfere at all; and for the sake of distributing this little bit of political patronage, all this trouble has been incurred and all this censure bestowed on Colonel Ross. It was solely at the instance of Mr. McCuaig and Mr. Heffernan that a military court of enquiry was authorized to make an inquisition into the conduct of Colonel Ross; there was no complaint from any officer, or on the part of the Minister himself; but Mr. Heffernan, on the ground that he had obtained Mr. McCuaig's permission, and through him the assent of the Minister, to the erection of a canteen, puts in a claim that a commission of enquiry should be issued, and it is issued at once without any interview with or recommendation from any officer whatever; and the General in command has been apparently directed to issue this order which I have read, and the language of which is very remarkable—"The Major-General commanding regrets to be called upon to censure." Who called upon him?

Mr. CARON. His duty.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No, Sir, but the hon. Minister called upon him. I am sure the hon. gentleman cannot find in the annals of the Department any other case in which such proceedings were resorted to. Although he expected to show that Colonel Ross had disobeyed orders, the evidence showed that he disobeyed no orders; but the hon. Minister shows his animus against the officer by assuming that he has disobeyed orders, and he asks the Major-General, in his grandiloquent way, what punishment he should inflict on Colonel Ross. I am only surprised that Colonel Ross should submit to any such censure. No one could occupy his position better than he did, and for this act which he was fully justified in doing, he is thus to be brought into the contempt of the whole militia force and insulted. There can be no remedy applied in the case now; the mischief, whatever it is, is done; but I think that an officer of Colonel Ross' standing in the militia and his standing everywhere in the country, deserved better treatment at the hands of the Government; and I determined, therefore, to bring the matter before the House, with the view of expressing my own opinion of the gross harshness and injustice with which he was treated, and also of calling the attention of the House to the fact that the Minister of Militia has usurped the functions of the General Officer in command. It is for him to make a recommendation in a matter of this kind, and not the Minister, and the General recommends simply that he should be censured for his indiscretion; but this censure is communicated through the Minister to the public, by means of this order published in the Gazette. Anything more blameable I think I have never known in connection with the military force of the country.

Mr. CARON. I regret exceedingly that the hon. gentleman, who used to be a distinguished officer in the Militia Force of Canada, should have so completely forgotten the rules and regulations of the service in a matter of this kind. I can understand very well that the hon. gentleman should be true to the few friends who remain to him, and that he should show the feeling he has shown in the discussion of the question before the House. But the hon. gentleman forgets completely or ignores the fact that matters of canteen are left absolutely under the control of the Minister of Militia. If there is one thing that can be urged in favor of the action of the Department of Militia in the present case, it is that we have shown that we did not want to deal as harshly with Colonel Ross as we should have done; and I say that, after making myself acquainted with the facts, and not interpreting the record without having read it, as the hon. gentleman evidently has done, the matter was brought up, and a court of enquiry was appointed to investigate it. Mr. Heffernan, who had charge of this canteen, had been authorized to take charge of it by the Department of Militia, and the authorization had been sent to him through the official channel. The Deputy-Adjutant General, commanding that very camp, sent orders through his Brigade Major that this man was appointed to take charge of the canteen; and I ask, under these circumstances, whether it was right for Colonel Ross, who came into the temporary command of that camp for a few hours, to give an order to twelve men under the command of Capt. Johnson to go down to that canteen; and, would you believe it—this Colonel, in command of a regiment, a man supposed to have the responsibility of his acts, when they came within the presence of Heffernan and the canteen ordered these men to fix bayonets and charge Heffernan. Supposing Heffernan had resisted, what would have been the result? There would have been bloodshed, and Colonel Ross, instead of being censured, might have been tried for murder or manslaughter. I ask whether the Department of Militia did not act towards Colonel Ross in the most lenient possible manner. I extended the hon. gentleman opposite the courtesy of sending him the papers before I laid them on the Table; but I fancy he did not take the trouble of reading them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did.

Mr. CARON. I am afraid the hon. gentleman did not carefully read that record. Instead, he has taken up the case as made out for him by his old political friend, Colonel Ross. The order was transferred to Colonel Ross by Brigade Major McGill, who said to him that he had received instructions, not from the Minister of Militia, but from the commanding officer of his camp, from the Deputy Adjutant-General, to take control of the canteen. Did Colonel Ross attempt to ascertain his duty in the matter? If he had done so, he would have gone and enquired who that man was. But he did not want to know who the man was who would "take control of my canteen." What has been the result? As Capt. Johnson says: "When we came within twenty paces of the canteen I ordered my men to fix bayonets and there was a small war in a camp that had not yet been properly formed, because the Deputy Adjutant-General had only arrived that evening." Considering all the facts, I ask whether the whole of that investigation does not show that Colonel Ross acted in such a manner as commanding officer as to deserve not only censure, but to be forever deprived of a position in which he could command men and run risks in a camp like that held at Picton, where men were exposed to be brought into a conflict that might have produced lasting effects upon the militia of Canada. The hon. gentleman talks of its being a very grave offence, and being looked upon as affecting the future of the Force in Canada; but if the Militia Department had not taken the position it assumed, it would have been impossible at any time to have allowed a camp to be formed in any district in Canada, because men like Col. Ross might have been put in command and risked not only the future Militia Force, but brought it into discredit. So far as I am personally concerned, I have known Colonel Ross for many years and knew him when he sat in this Parliament, and I have no personal feeling against him. The action of the Department could not possibly have been avoided, unless it had done what it should have done—discharge him from the Force. The post of the General commanding Militia Force shows there was no pressure brought to bear by me as Minister of Militia upon him; in that respect the report speaks for itself. What the General advised was done, but nothing further.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. Minister says that Colonel Ross was informed by Major McGill. I have already read Major-General Luard's statement that he was not; that is borne out by Colonel Ross' own evidence. He says: "I was not in any way notified by Captain Villiers, Major McGill, Mr. Burlind or his legal adviser and prompter, that Captain Heffernan was the man who had the authority to come to the camp ground to build the canteen." The Minister said that he carried the order of the Major-General. If the hon. gentleman will show me where the Major-General recommended that this should be set over the general order, I will admit that I am wrong. I have read the papers from beginning to end, and there is no such statement. The General in command never recommended the issue of this general order. I ask the hon. gentleman to find the authority for his statement.

Mr. CARON. I recommend him to read the evidence of the General.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There is no such report, but there is simply this statement, that he should be censured for his indiscretion.

Mr. CARON. I admit that.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Major McGill is censured for not informing Colonel Ross of the telegram he had. If the Colonel was fully informed by Major McGill, why was he censured by the hon. gentleman himself for not informing him? The statement reads: "I beg, therefore, to add from the evidence adduced that Major McGill gave no information to Colonel Ross, and that Colonel Ross acted without due discretion, unintentionally causing the trouble which followed, and which will be a lesson to him in the future."

Then the Brigade Major is censured for not informing him. How can the hon. gentleman possibly hold both positions? As to the hon. gentleman's alleged courtesy to me, in giving me the papers, I presented the case without showing any feeling, or using harsh words, and I have taken no advantage of him. I have made no complaint as to his not acting courteously, and I am sure he has no complaint to make as to anything I have said to day. I think and say that he acted in an unauthorized and unusual manner, and contrary to the directions of the General in command, when he censured an officer for what is not a military fault at all. If a military fault at all, it must be one of a most trivial kind. If the hon. Minister was driven to such straits by his political supporters as to appoint Mr. Heffernan canteen-keeper, the officer in command, no matter how temporarily, should have been informed. Then, if he should have refused to accept the appointment, he would have been censurable. He was censured simply for clearing the ground of obstructions. I am quite sure our gallant officer, a member of the Cabinet, the hon. Minister of Customs, would have been the first man to take such a course. More than that. A precisely similar affair occurred in Ottawa at the very ears of the hon. Minister of Militia, and no action was taken.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This statement of General Luard most decidedly does not agree with that of the hon. Minister of Militia. General Luard declares expressly that the evidence taken, as regards Colonel Ross' conversation with Heffernan, shows that Heffernan did not produce any authority from Colonel Villiers; that consequently Colonel Ross acted in ignorance of that authority. If that is the case, a most harsh construction has been put on Colonel Ross' conduct. The hon. Minister may count himself exceedingly fortunate he did not carry out his threat, now expressed, of dismissing Colonel Ross. If he had, I doubt whether he himself would not be obliged to send in his resignation, at the instance of the volunteers of Ontario. No officer has done more for the service than Colonel Ross, or shown himself more ready to act in an emergency. In 1865 his regiment was one of the first and the best equipped to respond to the demand of the Government.

Mr. CARON. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the General in command does not say in his report that Colonel Ross is deserving of the most severe military censure for the indiscretion which he committed in that camp. I leave it to the hon. gentleman to say, after reading the whole report, not a portion of it, that General Luard advised me, as head of the Department, that the officer was liable to the greatest possible military censure. What was the result of that advice? Did I act up to it? I simply censured Colonel Ross in the general way, though I might have cashiered him from the service.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. Minister might do anything, but the law supposes that Ministers will always exercise due discretion. What I complain of is that there is not a single case in the Department where an officer was punished for indiscretion by having the punishment published in the Gazette. This is the first case of the kind, and I do not believe that Col. Ross deserved any such offensive mode of censure. Major McGill was also censured, but it was not published in the Gazette. Why should one be censured when the other was not? Major McGill never gave Colonel Ross a copy of the order he had, and Colonel Ross was surely less deserving of censure than he.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to know from the hon. Minister whether he differs from the views of the hon. member for Lambton? I understand there is no instance of a censure of this kind having been published before this one.

Mr. CARON. That is because such a case never came before the Department before, consequently I cannot fall back upon precedent; and it was in consequence of a matter of that kind coming before the Department for the first time that I acted so leniently, and if the matter had occurred before certainly I would have insisted upon his being cashiered.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not read all the proceedings, but the hon. gentleman says he will leave it to those who read the record, while the trouble is that he does not bring down the papers in time to give us facilities for reading the record.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman is completely wrong. The hon. member for Lambton will say that I sent the papers to him as soon as I could get them copied.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Last Monday week.

Mr. BLAKE. That observation does not meet my point at all—a communication of that kind from the Minister to the hon. member for Lambton, when the papers were moved for early in the Session.

Mr. CARON. They were not moved for early in the Session.

Mr. BLAKE. They were moved for a long while ago. They were asked for many times, and the Minister told us many times that they would be down the next day or two.

Mr. CARON. That is another set of papers.

Mr. BLAKE. Both sets of papers were asked for and the same answer was given. The hon. gentleman says that he sent them to the hon. member for Lambton, but I complain that he has not given the members of this House facilities for perusing this correspondence, even if they had been laid upon the Table in manuscript a good while ago. We consequently cannot enter upon this discussion. The hon. Member for Lambton read a document, a categorical demand by the Minister of Militia upon the General Commanding with reference to the proceedings of the court of enquiry, and it appears that the Minister called upon the General Commanding to state his opinion on three points. The General differs obviously from the view of the Minister as to the conduct of Colonel Ross.

Mr. CARON. No, Sir.

Mr. BLAKE. I speak of that portion which has been read, and I say it is obvious that the General commanding made a different reply from that of the Minister. It is true that on one point the Minister makes a statement—he does not ask for advice or an expression of opinion—but on that point the General differs as to the three questions, and they are not such as would justify this censure. Now, what other portions of the record justify the hon. Minister's view I know not, because I have no opportunity of reading these papers. The Minister is called upon to defend himself. That portion of the record which seems to show the impropriety of his action is read; but instead of referring the House to the other portions of the record, and pointing out that my hon. friend has drawn an incorrect opinion from the record, he reads nothing; and he says: "I refer you to a stack of papers that are scattered about the desk, and if you read them all you will find I am right." The hon. Minister has the question at his finger ends; and he ought to have established that the position taken by the hon. member for Lambton was wrong by the papers. I dare say there is no case precisely like this in the records of the Department. I hope there is not; and I think it would be an indication that the Department needed very seriously to be reformed if there were two cases like this. But if there be no precedent in a public censure upon an officer for what is called a military indiscretion, then I say the course pursued was not merely unprecedented, but was unjust. We have had statements made in former years with reference to the conduct of the officers of the volunteer force, who presented reports saying such a one was present at drill, when in point of fact he was not, and making other mis-statements of facts of a character infinitely graver than this one, but I had never seen any censure published in the Gazette.

Mr. BOWELL. Those charges were dismissed.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps so, but I never saw any censure published in the Gazette upon officers before.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman does not take much interest in military affairs.

Mr. BLAKE. No, but I take some interest. What I maintain is, that if there has been no instance heretofore of publishing in the Gazette a censure upon an officer thus making a military indiscretion the subject of a public degradation such as this, this certainly was not a case in which that precedent should be established. I am not now discussing whether upon the whole of this record Colonel Ross was censurable at all or not, because the hon. member for Lambton shows some evidence that he was not, and the Minister says that if the whole record were read it would prove that he was censurable; but admitting that the whole result established a case of military indiscretion—it was not a case of fraud or dishonesty, but of mistaken judgment—I do say that it was an extreme punishment of a distinguished officer of long standing in the volunteer force to publish in the official Gazette a censure upon him.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like to read this portion of General Luard's letter in full:

"By this it would appear that Heffernan was not named to Lieut.-Col. Ross as Mr. McCuaig's nominee. Col. Ross appears to have read telegram D, received that morning, 6th September, but was not shown the letter E, received the previous day, nor fully informed of its contents by Major McGill. The link of evidence required to prove that Lieut.-Col. Ross knew that Heffernan, as nominee of Mr. McCuaig, represented the orders from Lieut.-Col. Villiers, and therefore from headquarters, appears to me to be wanting. I must therefore reply to question 1, that, in my opinion, evidence is lacking to prove the grave military offence of disobedience of orders from headquarters against Lieut.-Col. Ross. At my interview with the Minister of Militia to-day, however, it appeared to me that he wished to know my opinion more generally than the questions in writing already asked of me would elicit. (Vide memo. 3306 and Col. Powell's memo.)

"I beg, therefore, to add that, on the evidence already adduced, I consider that Major McGill, in not fully informing Lieut.-Col. Ross of the contents of letter E, acted unwisely and without due discretion, and unintentionally caused the trouble which followed—it will be a lesson to him in the future—and that Lieut.-Col. Ross displayed great indiscretion and want of military judgment, when he saw Heffernan, in not asking him at once whether he was the nominee of Mr. McCuaig."

I do not think it was his business at all to ask a stranger if he was the nominee of McCuaig. Suppose he said he was the nominee of McCuaig, was he to accept that as a statement?

"Had he done so all must have gone right; but inflated, it would seem, by the sense of the importance of this brief and temporary command, and acting precipitately in calling for armed force, Lieut.-Col. Ross was guilty of a very grave military indiscretion, an act deserving very serious censure. On his previous history and conduct should depend whether he may be considered competent to retain command of a battalion. The case impresses on me how unfortunate it was that Lieut.-Col. Villiers was detained at Kingston, and how important it is to discover why the transport for the troops was so long delayed, so as to prevent recurrence of such an error."

That is the entire letter on which the censure is based. I have pointed out to the Committee that immediately before this was written General Luard reported formally that Colonel Ross had acted with perfect propriety in taking an armed force to dispossess this party who held the ground. Another reason why I think the hon. gentleman acted partially for some reason is the fact that Major McGill, who was also an offender against military discretion—that is the phrase—was censured privately and was told not to commit the offence again; but Colonel Ross, being in a different position in the hon. gentleman's eyes, must be, reprimanded in the Gazette. I say it is an unusual act. Anything Colonel Ross did, as far as I can see at present, any officer in command of a battalion would have done in clearing the ground of intruders who, according to the information of the Government, had no business there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I differ a good deal from the hon. member for Lambton and the hon. member for West Durham in regard to this case. Colonel Ross, I believe, is a gallant and a good officer, and deserved well of his country for his long services; but he committed, as the best of men are liable to commit, a grave military offence for which there was no excuse. There was to be a camp, and it was to have a canteen. The camp was held, but particular care was taken in this instance that the canteen should supply food and tea, but that no intoxicating liquor should be sold within the camp. The command devolved on Deputy Adjutant General Villiers and Major McGill was there as a Brigade Major. The commanding officer was Colonel Ross, who was his superior officer on the ground, but he had not command of the camp. The officer having command of the camp was the Deputy Adjutant-General, Colonel Ross having no right to interfere, and he was informed verbally by the Brigade Major that Heffernan was to have the canteen; but he disregarded it, and the censure is because he did not conform to the instructions of Adjutant-General Villiers, and every one knows that according to military practice, if a staff officer conveys a verbal communication to a superior officer, that information is to be taken as correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE. In action.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In all cases. There was a letter written the day before, but which was not delivered to Colonel Ross. A telegram was offered to him, but Colonel Ross said he did not want to read it. He was told by the staff officer, what the commanding officer desired; he was told, by authority of the commanding officer, that Mr. Heffernan was to have the canteen, and the hon. gentleman says it was a miserable little bit of patronage that the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. McCuaig) desired to exercise; but it was the desire of Colonel Ross to put a political friend in that position instead of Mr. Heffernan, and he sought to frighten Heffernan to surrendering his claim. Such was the conduct of this officer, and when those facts were explained to the General he said it was a most grave military offence. The soldiers were ordered to fix bayonets in order to drive the duly appointed caterer off the ground. No doubt Colonel Ross thought Heffernan would charge him, and so he anticipated him by charging first. But instead of charging with a bill, as the canteen-keeper would have done, he wanted to charge him at the point of the bayonet. Sir, it is a disgraceful thing, it is a mean piece of spite, and because he did not get his man appointed canteen-keeper he took advantage of the temporary and unavoidable absence of the officer really in command, and it was an act for which he richly deserved censure. The hon. gentleman does not deny that he objects to the publication in the Gazette.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do deny it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sir, it is a thing which the public ought to know. The offence was a public one—it was a grave breach of military discipline, the General says.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He does not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman read the language.

Mr. CARON. A grave breach of military discipline.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says the censure should be administered privately.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not say that. What I do say is that McGill was censured privately, and Colonel Ross publicly through the Gazette.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only offence against McGill was that he did not read the letter; he thought Colonel Ross would take his word first, but Colonel Ross' offence was a public one, and I say that if anything like discipline is to be observed, if a person is liable to be censured at all for a grave military offence, that censure should be public. If Colonel Ross had received a private letter calling it a grave military censure, he would simply have put it in his pocket or torn it up, and there would really have been no censure at all. The hon. gentleman says there has been no precedent for anything of the kind. I have seen again and again, in my experience of the Militia Department, statements that officers were removed or cashiered, some allowed to retire as a gentle punishment, some allowed to retire retaining rank, showing that they retired with honor. If there is to be any censure it should be known, or there is no censure at all. Private censure from the commanding officer is no censure—at all events, it does not convey the weight which should follow a grave breach of discipline. Colonel Ross knew that this man was appointed, and when he knew that he was to be canteen-keeper he marched a body of men with fixed bayonets and ordered the man off the ground, which he had no right to do.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It appears that when the matter was first presented to the General, the General not only believed that Colonel Ross had been guilty of no offence at all, but he explicitly stated that he appeared on the evidence to have acted in ignorance of any authority given to Heffernan. There is General Luard's statement on that point. Now, as to the statement of the hon. gentleman that Colonel Ross had been guilty of a mean piece of spite, if any one has been guilty of a mean piece of spite in this matter, it is the Minister of Militia and the Government which sustains him, and not Colonel Ross. Colonel Ross had acted perfectly right and exactly as other military men under similar circumstances have repeatedly acted, and it is a matter of great misfortune that this outside gentleman, whoever he may be, should have been permitted to nominate the canteen-keeper of the camp held under these circumstances. The evidence does not go to show, according to the statement of General Luard, that McGill did inform Colonel Ross that Heffernan was the person authorized, and so Major McGill was censured for not doing so. I have here a memorandum regarding the Court of Enquiry at Picton camp, signed by General Luard. He says, regarding the action to be taken regarding the court of enquiry:

"1. Lieut.-Col. Villiers to be informed that he is acquitted of blame, in not having been at the camp on the morning the troops were expected. In future, however, he will be so good as to be at the camp before the arrival of any troop, leaving the transport question to be settled by the department which is responsible for it.

"Major McGill to be informed that the Major-General commanding considers that he acted unwisely and without due discretion, in not fully informing Lieut.-Col. Ross of the contents of the letter marked B, and that the Major-General hopes it will be a lesson to him in the future."

Now, it is quite evident from that that the Major-General still continues of the opinion that Colonel Ross was not informed that Heffernan was appointed. He deliberately censures Major McGill for not informing him properly; and here comes the gist of the whole matter, showing that in spite of all the skill and all the lessons given in a period of two months, that there was a difference between him and the Minister of Militia:

"The Adjutant-General of Militia to have a meeting with Lieut.-Col. Villiers, D. A. G. of No 3, Lieut.-Col. Ross and his next senior officer, at which the opinion of the Major-General regarding his conduct shall be read to Lieut.-Col. Ross and he shall be informed that he is now 'seriously censured for his very grave military indiscretion,' and warned to be more prudent in future."

What the General recommended was that his opinion be communicated to these two or three witnesses and Colonel Ross; but, Sir, there is a paragraph attached to this effect: "That Colonel Ross be censured in General Orders—signed,

A. P. C., Minister of Militia." The General knows more about these matters and the custom in Her Majesty's Service a good deal than does the hon. Minister of Militia, although he has been supreme arbiter of the defence of this country for eighteen months. The Major-General thought that the proper way was to communicate privately his opinion before one or two proper persons to Lieutenant-Colonel Ross, but the Minister of Militia overrides the General's opinion and declares he is to be published in the General Orders; and that is precisely what we complain of and what the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) justly says is an unprecedented thing; and bearing in mind the relations which existed for many years between Colonel Ross and the Minister of Militia and his friends, these facts justly expose them to the charge of abusing their powers for the purpose of injuring the character and reputation of a valuable and excellent officer.

Mr. ORTON. The question is one which strikes very forcibly the whole question of our volunteer system, and the question whether volunteering should be brought into party politics or not. It seems to me that the opinion of Colonel Ross is perfectly in accord with that of the leader of the Opposition, for if there is any portion of our people who more than another are determined to sacrifice themselves in the interests of their country and in the interests of the connection with Great Britain, it is the volunteers of Canada; but when we find the leader of the Opposition openly advocating a policy that means independence and separation from the Mother Country, and the taking away of the esprit de corps of our volunteers, his conduct is perfectly consistent with that of Colonel Ross. I think it is very desirable that we should preserve the connection with Great Britain. This is an instance in which the colonel of a battalion attempted to interfere in order to benefit his political friends at the expense of the volunteer force. I have had the honor of being a volunteer for several years, first as the captain of a company, and then as the surgeon of one of the best battalions in the country, and I am glad to say that the colonel of our battalion is a Reformer—the Speaker of the Local House—a gentleman with whom I and every officer in that battalion have worked in accord; and I regret exceedingly that a Colonel of a battalion in Ontario should so far forget himself as to use his position to create division in his battalion. The hon. leader of the Opposition has yet to face the spirit of the volunteers of Canada on his independence question, and as to whether they will endorse his views, or the views of the present Government as to the importance of keeping up our volunteer force; and I wish to suggest to the Government whether it would not be wise to vote a certain portion of the lands in the North-West Territory to those who have tried to keep up the volunteer force of Canada. I maintain that the military spirit of Canada has had a great deal to do with creating respect for Canada among foreigners, and confidence among the people of Canada in our position as a portion of the British Empire. I maintain that Colonel Ross has not acted in the interest of the volunteer force. The volunteers of Canada have, so far as my experience goes, desired to unite together and eschew all political feeling, and I regret exceedingly that any officer in the force should have been the means of exciting any such feeling.

Mr. BLAKE. For some time I was at a loss to perceive the relevance of the remarks of the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton); but when I reflected that it is now after dinner, and that the subject was a canteen, I perceived at once the relevance of the hon. gentleman's remarks to the subject under discussion, and at the same time that it would be utterly absurd for me to reply to him.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not think the leader of the Opposition has any occasion to bring in the question of after dinner. What does it mean? Has not he dined himself? What has that to do with the militia question? The question relates to Colonel Ross, and to whether he was properly censured or not. As belonging to the militia, I am willing to accord to Colonel Ross every sympathy that I think he is entitled to, and I am sorry to see such warmth of feeling displayed on both sides, and especially by the leader of the Opposition, who would be glad to have any support he can get from the militia of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. And will have it.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I only hope he will live long enough to come back with all the support he expects. We know that there is a motto among the Turks:

"May you live till you die, and may your shadow never grow less."

Mr. BLAKE. The Turks of Ireland.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. gentleman says he wants justice to Ireland, and I have no doubt that every Irishman will have it written on his heart that the hon. member for West Durham is the champion of the Irish people in this country. He says: "It is true, I cannot alleviate any difficulties for you, but I am with you;" and that is his position to-night—although he leads the Opposition, he is not able to do anything for the country. I have sat in the House with Colonel Ross, and I think he is a good man; he may have made a mistake, but I do not think he should have all this punishment turned on his head. Now, for the future, it would be well to understand that as the militia of Canada serve the country voluntarily—for the pay can be no temptation to them, they believe they are doing their duty to Canada and promoting its welfare—as much should not be expected from them as from regular soldiers; and they should not be censured for any little dereliction of duty. What militia officer can be expected to know the whole of the regulations and orders. He does the best he can, coming forward for six, ten or fourteen days, and says: I will endeavor to marshall and drill the men to fit them for any duty required by the country. If Colonel Ross made the mistake, let us have straightforward orders, and let the commanding officer of any camp be placed beyond the risk of misunderstanding any orders. I know Colonel Ross, who was formerly a member of this House, and I should not like to expose him to censure. Though he may differ with us in politics and may have made a mistake, still he endeavored to serve his country as a militia officer, and I have failed to discover there is any charge against him that he did not know his duty and was not a good officer.

Mr. ORTON. I wish to make a personal explanation. I regret exceedingly that the leader of the Opposition should have found it necessary to utter the unworthy remarks heard to-night. His insinuations were utterly unworthy of the leader of a great party and of a man of ability. The point to be noticed is this: Whether we are going to be retained as a portion of the British Empire or not, because the retention of the volunteer force is involved in this point.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order. I yielded the floor to the hon. gentleman only to enable him to make a personal explanation. He has no right to enter into a discussion at this time.

Mr. ORTON. I have a right to finish my remarks in reference to the allusions peculiarly personal made by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the member for West Elgin has the right to the floor. You can finish your speech afterwards.

Mr. CASEY. I was glad to hear the manly, soldierly and proper sentiments to which the member for King's has given expression on this occasion, to the effect that Colonel

Mr. DOMVILLE.

Ross should not have been censured in the first instance; and that even if he should have been censured, the punishment should not have been out of proportion to his demerits. What we complain, 1st, is that Colonel Ross was censured contrary to the opinion of the chief military authority in the Dominion; and, 2nd, that his censure was most unduly severe; and not only so, but that we have an additional cause of complaint in the fact that, in addition to the public censure, justice has been violated, and a strong spirit of political partizanship has been introduced on the subject on the floor of this House. I am sorry the leader of the House is not present, for I wish to notice his expression with regard to Colonel Ross, respecting the petty party spite which he said was shown by that officer. He thus attacked a man whom he had often to face on the floor of this House, but who is not here to defend himself, for having shown party spite. He also accused him of a great breach of military discipline, and of disobedience to orders, and all this in the teeth of the authority of the Major-General commanding, who says he was not guilty of this offence.

Mr. CARON. He does not say so.

Mr. CASEY. He does. His words are:

"I cannot see that the evidence of Lieut.-Col. Ross establishes that he was guilty of disobeying the orders of Lieut.-Col. Villiers."

And he goes on to give evidence showing that Colonel Ross did not disobey those orders, that he was not in any way notified by Lieut.-Col. Villiers, Capt. Heffernan or anybody else of what has been alleged.

Mr. CARON. That is not the opinion of the Major-General.

Mr. CASEY. I am reading from the report signed by General Luard.

Mr. CARON. You are reading the evidence, but not the report.

Mr. CASEY. I must call the Minister of Militia to order. He insists that I do not know what is in my hand. I repeat I am reading the report of General Luard, and I must resist the interruption. It appears, then, that Captain McGill had authority to come into the camp and build the canteen. Colonel Ross says, as soon as Lieutenant-Colonel Villiers came into the camp, I obeyed him from that time out. This statement is included in General Luard's report. He goes on to say:

"As regards number two, Lieut.-Col. Ross having determined to stop the further supplying, what he supposed to be an unauthorized supplying, had a perfect right as the senior officer in camp, in my opinion, to make use of an armed force, and I hold that was wise, because a display of force might prevent any disturbance. The same reason appears to me to apply to number two."

General Luard, when the case was first presented to him, said Colonel Ross had not disobeyed orders or committed a breach of discipline, but acted very properly. But, according to the right hon. gentleman, he was made to understand, and was induced to give, a somewhat different opinion. He said Colonel Ross was guilty of grave indiscretion, not a breach of discipline or disobedience of orders. I believe the whole thing was planned by the member for Prince Edward county to damage a political opponent, but that hon. gentleman will find his course will only succeed in hurting himself.

Mr. ORTON. I rise to protest against the unworthy remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I still recollect his coming into my riding and making similar unworthy remarks. He said at a public meeting that he had been my lawyer in carrying a case through Court, and that I was the last man that ought to find fault with his political course. After making that statement he left amidst groans and hisses.

Mr. SPROULE. I think Colonel Ross might well exclaim: "Save me from my friends." Were it not for their efforts his case would only have been referred to in the official Gazette, which only very few people see, whereas now it will be read all over the Dominion. It is said a great deal of allowance ought to be made because he belonged to the volunteer force, and volunteers were not supposed to be posted in military discipline. I think Colonel Ross is above a mere volunteer, he is an officer; but there is the strongest evidence that he did not want to be exposed in this thing, because he refused to read the telegram. The whole thing is in keeping with the conduct of the Opposition here to-night. There appears to be no discipline amongst them. Colonel Ross desired to use his position for his own aggrandizement, and his friends here desire to turn this question to account—the very men who are endeavoring to estrange this country from the Empire. But Ross' friends here have done him an infinitely greater injury by dragging this question into Parliament and calling the attention of the whole country to it, than if they had allowed it to rest with the official Gazette where only one man in five hundred would ever have known anything about it.

Mr. BROWN. There appears to be a doubt as to who commands the volunteer forces, whether the hon. Minister of Militia or the Major-General. I recollect a short time ago, when Lieut.-Colonel Ross was Adjutant-General, and came before the Public Accounts Committee in connection with some question which it is not necessary to refer to now, he said he had nothing to do with the hon. Minister of Militia, but he was an Imperial officer and only responsible to the Governor-General.

Mr. BOWELL. What was the decision of the Committee and of the Government of the day upon that declaration of Colonel Ross?

Mr. BROWN. I believe he resigned without being asked to do so.

Mr. BOWELL. He went on and tried to shirk the responsibility from himself onto the Deputy Adjutant-General, Colonel Powell, and when he was called to account for it he retired from the service.

Mr. BROWN. He was an Imperial officer.

Mr. BOWELL. Paid by us.

Mr. BROWN. There is the Governor-General.

Mr. BOWELL. The only difference is the Governor-General is appointed by the Imperial Government, while we appointed the other.

Mr. BROWN. You do not appoint the Major-General.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, we do; and it is provided for in the Militia Act.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The Government selects him.

Mr. BOWELL. No, they do not.

Mr. BROWN. Well this is a serious matter, and it has engaged the attention of the Militia Department for some time. In 1880 the Minister of Militia, at that time Mr. Masson, brought down an amendment to the Militia Act, that canteens should be allowed. However, that clause in the Bill was struck out, and canteens have not since been allowed in camps. Now, neither the Major-General of the Militia Department nor anyone else has a right to establish a canteen in any camp, according to the Militia Act. It may be said that this canteen was not for the purpose of selling liquor; at all events the man who desired to establish a canteen there was not actuated by patriotism, but by a motive of making money out of it. It is to be regretted that a man outside the volunteer force should have been allowed to put up a canteen there. The limits of the camp have been laid down, and the officer in command has a right to keep out all persons who do not belong to the militia, so that they may not interfere with the drill and discipline of the camp. As to the orders that were given, Colonel Ross was acting upon his own judgment at the time as being in command of the camp, and he was authorized to prevent this man from going in there and putting up his canteen. He was an officer of long standing, and it is poor encouragement for a man after twenty years' experience, to be treated as he has been. However, this is too important a question to engage so much of the attention of the House; it ought to have been left with the Militia Department. I know several occasions where a canteen has been ordered to be removed. Colonel Ross gave orders to go down and remove the canteen; I suppose the troops were out with muskets and side-arms, and whether the Colonel gave an order to fix bayonets or not, I know in removing the canteen the men would be more useless with muskets in their hands than without them. Without them the men would have two hands to remove the canteen and put it over the fence, and how they managed to do so I do not perceive, for those in charge could not have made much resistance. It was put out of the ground in the first instance, and when Colonel Villiers came and took over the command the canteen-keeper came to him, and the canteen was stopped until communication could be had with headquarters. After it was put up the second time it was thrown over the fence, and no efforts were subsequently made to establish it there. I think it is a matter of deep regret that a subject of such small consideration as the profits that would be made out of keeping a canteen should engage the attention of this House, when no canteen, according to the Militia Act, should have been established. If such were permitted the Act should be amended.

Mr. WRIGHT. I cannot allow this debate to close without saying a few words on the subject before the House. I, too, have the honor of being an officer in Her Majesty's militia, and, therefore, I think I have a right to participate in this debate. Gentlemen of the legal profession are in the habit of telling us that we outside of the profession are laymen; this is, perhaps, specially the case in regard to military matters. I know that those who have studied the action of the Minister of Militia must be satisfied that during the brief period of his occupancy of the office, he has done very much to bring about a state of things that would promote the improvement of the militia of Canada. For my part, I read with much pleasure the hon. gentleman's progress through the Dominion, and the speeches he delivered, which gave evidence of a desire to infuse a true military spirit into the great body of our people. I know in these respects the hon. gentleman has been eminently successful, but every old member who shares in that esprit de corps of the service on both sides of this House, must have read with feelings of great pain and humiliation the censure passed on an officer so well qualified as Colonel Ross. I, for one, shared in that feeling, which I believe was entertained by everybody. I have known this officer since 1863, and I have found him foremost in every militia movement. Many will remember when he was at Quebec, at a time when it was expected that the Fenians would come over, and he has occupied a foremost position among the volunteers of Canada. Those who knew that officer best, and the attempts he made to keep up our militia organization, will sympathize with him under the circumstances, and consider that what perhaps might be a lack of discipline, committed by a gallant and generous officer, who might be somewhat impetuous, was not of such a character as to justify a public censure. I read with pain the order in the Gazette censuring that officer. When the hon. Minister said he would do the same thing again, I did not believe it, as he must have regretted adopting that course. I think it is a poor compliment to pay to volunteer officers who have done so much and exerted themselves to make the militia a great success, to censure them for what I cannot conceive to be anything more than a trifling breach of discipline. In my county there are four or five companies, and we have very great difficulty in maintaining them. But although far up in the interior we send men to Wimbledon, where they acquit themselves as Canadians always do, in an able manner. It is, perhaps, well that this discussion has taken place, because I am quite satisfied that so far as the Canadian militia is concerned, many of the measures adopted by the Minister of Militia will conduce to their efficiency, but I do not think a censure of this kind is likely to bring about the result. Knowing his generous nature, I am satisfied that the hon. Minister must regret, as much as I do, that this order was issued.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I moved for papers in the case of Colonel Campbell, an officer who served in my battalion with myself for years, and who is a credit to the battalion. I know he is a patriotic man; and when I conceived that he had been somewhat ill-used, I moved for papers in order to obtain information in regard to the true particulars of the case. I knew that although Colonel Campbell was a very strong political opponent of my own, he was a zealous volunteer, and was prepared to do his duty, as he did for some time, and I found that the usage he received was not such as was proper towards an officer occupying his position. I am glad to be able to say, after looking at the papers, that the hon. Minister is justified in that case. The substance of the decision is satisfactory to Colonel Campbell, to his officers and myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no desire to prolong the discussion, but I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright) to pass unnoticed. His remarks would imply a censure on the Minister of Militia. I always find the hon. gentleman casts his vote on the right side and that he is actuated by a generous spirit, but his remarks on the subject were very wide of the mark. Knowing the particulars of the case, and being connected with the militia force and having been in the camp where this little unpleasantness occurred, I must say that as a militia officer and one who desires to act fairly with all parties, I am prepared to affirm that the action of the Minister should be sustained by this House. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) endeavored to lead the House to believe that the Minister of Militia was stepping beyond his powers when he appointed a canteen master or tenant for the camp. In order to set the mind of the hon. gentleman at rest, I will read from the Queen's Regulations, which, under the circumstances, constitute the only authority on the question. Our Militia Law or our Militia Regulations do not deal with the question, so we must fall back on the Queen's Regulations, and under them we find that the canteen-keeper is appointed by the Secretary of War—which I suppose is virtually the Minister of Militia—and is removable only by him. I am sorry that the papers in this case have not been printed and put in the hands of hon. members, as I have not seen the comments of the Major-General on the affair. I know myself, however, more of the circumstances perhaps than he did, and if he pursued a wrong course it does not follow that we should endorse it. The facts are that there seemed to be a very hospitable effort on the part of the officer commanding the local corps to have one local canteen, and a grasping or grabbing desire that the local corps only should realize the profits. As an officer of a regiment and one always desiring to control his canteen and to keep it under strict care, I strongly objected to this course. I suppose the hon. Minister of Militia may have heard the circumstances, and knowing that it was a matter entirely under his control, he would refer to a gentleman in whom he had every confidence, to recommend some one who would give satisfaction and he would naturally apply to the member for that particular constituency. Under these circumstances I think it most unfair to make a personal attack on the Minister of Militia. From what I know of the case Colonel Ross certainly was instructed by Colonel Villiers, through the Brigade Major, of the action of the Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No, he was not so informed.

Mr. CARON. Yes, he was. The papers show it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Looking at them and forming my opinion from what I know myself—

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will permit me to say that he must see that the case must be judged on the evidence before us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am willing to take the evidence before the House. I understand that the Brigade Major was instructed by Colonel Villiers, and that he notified Colonel Ross, who was in temporary command, that a certain canteen was to be constructed, and that the place was pointed out where it was to be erected, and I think the name of the keeper was also mentioned. I do not desire to prolong the debate, for it seems to me to have already reached a greater length than was necessary considering the trifling character of the affair. I have not heard the whole debate, having just dropped in, but I understand that the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) made a violent attack on the hon. Minister of Militia.

Mr. BROWN. In reply to the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Williams) I desire to say that I made no attack on the hon. Minister of Militia. I simply wanted to arrive at the fact of whether the hon. Minister of Militia or the Major-General had the right to authorize the establishment of the canteen under the Militia Act of the present time. When a Bill was brought in to settle this question, I would like to know why that particular clause was struck out? So far as the Queen's Regulations are concerned they refer altogether to the regular service. We have rules and regulations governing ourselves, but there is nothing in them at all which refers to the canteen, and if we are to have canteens we must amend the Act authorizing them to be established.

Mr. WRIGHT. I beg to assure the hon. gentleman who has referred to me that the Minister of Militia has no more faithful supporter or greater admirer than I, but as a member of this House I will never hesitate to tell him when I think he is wrong. I think he was decidedly wrong in the present case. I think it was not fair to an old officer like Colonel Ross to censure him in that way, and I have no hesitation in saying so. So long as I have a seat in this House, I shall never hesitate to tell the hon. gentleman or any other Minister what I may think of any act of theirs.

Mr. BLAKE. But you will only censure them privately.

Mr. RYMAL. Early in my parliamentary history I became acquainted with Colonel Ross, and I have long known him as an energetic and enthusiastic officer of our volunteer force. At the time of the Fenian invasion in 1866, when the other members of this House were attending to their duties, Colonel Ross went to the front in command of a body of volunteers and did his duty as an officer, jeopardizing his life in defence of his country. I have always understood from that time to this that he has been one of the most effective and enthusiastic of our officers, and that he has been at considerable expense in devoting himself to his military duties. I think it was dealing out an extra measure of justice, when for a trifling indiscretion such as that reported by the Major-General he received a public censure at the instance of the Head of the Department. It would tend to disgrace him in the eyes of the volunteers and would seem as if merited reproach was heaped upon his name. I perfectly agree with the hon. member for Ottawa County (Mr. Wright) that, considering the services that Colonel Ross has rendered, an indiscretion of that kind has been punished severely; for what can a patriotic and enthusiastic Colonel of our volunteers think who is censured through the official medium by the Head of the Department? It appears to me, speaking for myself and giving expression to my own opinion for what it is worth, that we have growing up in this Canada of ours a lot of young men who do not seem to recognize or properly appreciate the services of the men who were men when they were children, men who proffered their services in the hour of danger. These young men think that when placed in an official position it becomes them to censure unnecessarily older men who have jeopardized their lives on behalf of the country. I am sorry to have to say this of my hon. friend, for he is a genial and a good fellow, but I agree with my hon. friend from Ottawa County (Mr. Wright) that the hon. gentleman deserves some reprimand from this House for the extra severity of the sentence which, without the recommendation of the Major-General, he inflicted on a worthy and gallant officer.

Mr. LONGLEY. I do not propose to offer any remarks on the general question, but I desire information on one point. Two or three years ago, when the Militia Bill was brought before this House by the predecessor of the present Minister of Militia, I understood that the clause relating to the establishment of canteens for the benefit of volunteers was struck out of the Militia Law.

Mr. BOWELL. It never was in.

Mr. LONGLEY. It was proposed to put in such a clause. The hon. Minister of Militia, if my memory serves me, at the instance of a few members of this House, kindly agreed to strike out that clause, and I think it was struck out. It does seem to me to be a matter of regret that our volunteers cannot meet for drill without being under the necessity of establishing a canteen. The fact is, this canteen seems to have been at the bottom of all the trouble that has arisen in connection with this matter. Had there been none, Colonel Ross would not have been subjected to censure, and we would not have been called on to spend hours over a matter that might have been settled in fifteen minutes. I hope the hon. Minister of Militia will kindly explain to us why, in the state of the law, it was proposed to establish the canteen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the hon. gentleman kindly let us know what a canteen is, and what it is established for?

Mr. LONGLEY. A canteen is supposed to be something for furnishing provision or eating; but these canteens are like taverns, which profess to be established in order that people may get something to eat, whereas the primary object is to get something to drink.

Mr. AMYOT. Having belonged to the Canadian militia for about twenty years, I will be allowed to say a few words. This is a most important matter, because the whole militia system is interested in it; every battalion in the country will read what is said here to-night, with the view of understanding exactly the responsibility of every officer, and the responsibility of the Minister of Militia to this House. For my part, I think it is wrong to say that the Minister of Militia is to be blamed because he has gone beyond the report of the Major-General; I think the reports of the Major-General, of the Adjutant-General, or of the Brigade Major, are to be submitted to the Minister of Militia, who is responsible to this Parliament. If we were to be bound by the reports of the Major-General, there would be no necessity for having the Minister of Militia here. The Major-General comes from England; we do not suppose that England sends us her best officer, but if she did, he would not understand our habits or the spirit of our system, and if we were to be bound by his reports, there would be no responsibility at all; we would be under the despotism of one man. All our militia officers hold their commissions by the good pleasure of the Queen, and that good pleasure exists so long as the Minister of Militia advises Her Majesty to continue it, and the Minister of Militia is responsible to the Parliament of the country for the advice he gives. As to this particular case, I am sorry that the papers have not been asked for before, and have not been given to us in time to enable us to peruse them and form a just opinion on the matter. For my part, I think the past services of volunteer officers should be respected; but because an officer has been long in the service it is no reason why he should be at greater liberty than another to commit a gross injustice or a gross blunder, for political or other purposes. In the present case I am not able to express an opinion, or to give a vote against the Minister of Militia, in whom I place the fullest confidence, because I do not know the facts sufficiently, and I cannot either praise or blame one or the other.

Mr. CARON. I wish to answer two questions which have been put. Several hon. gentlemen have expressed their dissatisfaction at the papers not having been brought down and placed upon the Table of Parliament. It may be my fault, although I do not believe it is. When the papers were asked for in this House, I had them copied, and as the hon. member for Lambton asked for these papers, thinking that possibly I might save him some little trouble, I sent the papers to him, expecting that he would return them to me, so that I might place them on the Table of the House before the question should be discussed, so that every hon. member might have the fullest information; but I little expected that the discussion would have taken place before the papers were laid upon the Table of Parliament. However, the discussion took place, statements were made, and I can readily understand at what a disadvantage members who discussed this question to-night were placed through not having seen the record. Upon that record I am ready to put my case before Parliament and the country; I believe I did my duty in taking the course I pursued in the light of the facts shown to me, and I would do the same again. The member for West Hastings has asked whether the Minister of Militia had a right to appoint canteens, tenants or not. The existing Act shows that he has. And let me tell the member for Annapolis, whose views on canteens I know, I foresaw the difficulty that would occur in renting canteens where spirituous liquors would be dispensed, and anxious as I always am to obtain his approval, I gave strict orders against the serving of such liquors. But a canteen is almost indispensable, where men can obtain articles of the best quality not included in the regulation allowance. Nothing could have been more painful to me, knowing Colonel Ross as I did, and having often met him as a member of this House, than to carry out the recommendations of the General in command, in censuring him as was ordered.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman says: hear, hear; but he admits himself that he has not read the papers containing the whole of that evidence, and the case as I have tried to submit it to the House. Taking up that record, and reading the report of the General commanding, it was impossible for me not to carry out the General's order, censuring Colonel Ross. The hon. gentleman in dealing with the case, read the report of the General, but not the last report sent me, on which I was bound to act, a Minister being always obliged to act on the last opinions of the officer who advises him. In carrying out that report I thought I had shown a leniency to Colonel Ross which, possibly, his former association with me in this Parliament and my knowledge of his services as a militia officer, might excuse. In fact I thought that I had been prevented, to a great extent, by these considerations, from carrying out fully the recommendation of the report.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman persists in saying that he carried out the General's order and recommendation.

Mr. CARON. I do.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is not the case. The final report read recommends that Lieutenant-Colonel Ross be censured in presence of two officers, and that Major McGill be censured for his indiscretion in not communicating the information to Colonel Ross. That is implied in the initials on the margin, W. P., for Walter Powell. There are also other words upon the margin in the hand of the hon. Minister, directing that Colonel Ross be censured in General Orders. That is not in the General's recommendation, and the hon. gentleman should know it.

Mr. CARON. The report of the General was submitted to me, and upon it I had to act. I had to give the order which nobody else could give that Colonel Ross should be, as he was, censured.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman did not act on the General's report in the sense of obeying it. That report recommended that the censure of Colonel Ross should be administered by one officer in the presence of the Colonel and another officer; and the hon. gentleman did not say, "Let that be done," but he said, "Let censure issue in General Orders," which was not what General Luard had recommended, but something so different that the First Minister, in speaking on the subject, said the private censure was nothing—the public censure was everything—so different was the conduct of the hon. member from that recommended by the General. The hon. gentleman had the power to determine whether the report of the General should be agreed to, reversed or modified. The report suggested one thing which the hon. leader of the House said was nothing. The last report recommends that this censure be administered by the Brigade Major in the presence of the next senior officer. But the hon. Minister says he felt great pain in being obliged to follow out the report of the General. His pain was so great that he went entirely beyond the report, by making public the censure which the General had intimated should be made before only one or two individuals.

Resolution ordered to be reported; and (at 1 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 4th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MONTREAL AND CHAMPLAIN JUNCTION RAILWAY.

Mr. MÉTHOT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, may I be permitted to ask a favor of the House. I have on the papers a question to the Government, and as the Session is approaching its end, I would desire, by permission of the House, an answer to it to-day. It is as follows:—

1. Whether the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway is in existence?
2. If it exists, how it happens that its name does not appear in the Statistical Return of Canadian railways?
3. Whether the Government have hitherto taken steps to cause that Company to comply with the law which requires the making of an annual return.

Mr. CARON.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to a point of order. When the Government took every day, the other day, I pointed out, among the inconveniences of that course, that hon. members would be deprived of the opportunity of asking questions. But no exception was made to that resolution; they did not leave us that opportunity, and, consequently, though I have been asked myself to put questions on the paper, I have not, feeling it would be but a mockery, since the Government has taken every day for the remainder of the Session. Now, but one measure of justice can be meted out to all members, and as I did not receive the support of the hon. gentleman, on asking for the privilege of putting questions for some time longer, I object to his asking the present question, because other hon. members have not the same opportunity.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question can be put only by the unanimous consent of the House. You cannot prevent the Government from answering it otherwise.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. member for West Durham objects to the question, of course we cannot answer it. Nevertheless, I am afraid I shall have to find some opportunity of answering the question in the House before the end of the Session.

INSPECTION OF STEAMBOATS.

Mr. McLELAN moved that Bill (No. 117) to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the inspection of steamboats and the examining and licensing of engineers employed on them, be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for amendment.

Motion agreed to; and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McLELAN moved that "May" be struck out of clause 69 and "September" substituted.

Amendment agreed to and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I renew the application I made to insert a provision in place of clause 55, to punish the master who allows his steamer to carry more passengers than allowed by his certificate. We know that on certain occasions, especially on excursions, captains of steamers often allow their vessels to be overloaded. I have only to mention the great disaster which took place last Queen's Birthday, at London, Ont., which indeed was not the first occurrence of that kind which has occurred in this and other countries. I think the punishment provided by the Bill in section 55, is quite inadequate to the crime—for it is a crime, and it should be made so by the Bill. I, therefore, move that the Bill be recommitted, with instructions to substitute for the 55th clause the following:—

The master of any steamboat who, knowingly, shall at any time allow to be carried on board said steamer a greater number of passengers than that provided by her certificate, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and who, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned for two years in the penitentiary, or for a less term or place of confinement, or shall be subjected to a fine not exceeding $500, or shall suffer both fine and imprisonment within the above defined limits as the Court may order.

The clause will provide for cases like that which happened last year near London. If the violation of the law is not aggravated, then the Judge may impose a small fine; if it is a gross violation of the law, if life be lost, then the Judge may impose both fine and imprisonment. I may also mention now that I intend to move a clause to prevent steamboat racing, which is becoming quite alarming in this country. The Richelieu Navigation Company is opposed by another line running on the St. Lawrence and the Upper Lakes, and steamboat racing between these two lines has taken place even in the rapids. There are also other opposition lines running on the St. Lawrence, and these races are becoming alarmingly frequent. I shall, therefore, propose that the Bill be recommitted to make provision to insure the safety of steamers and the lives of passengers, by making steamboat racing a misdemeanor. Clause 55 provides for the same offence, but only punishes it by a fine of $500.

Mr. COCKBURN (Muskoka). I think the present clause is more forcible than that proposed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. Under the former clause a captain is bound to ascertain and know whether he has too many passengers on board or not, but under the latter clause he is not compelled to know and would not be liable to punishment, because he might claim he did not know he had too many on board.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. It is the captain's duty to see how many passengers are on board, and if he carried too many passengers he would be held guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor, and two years in the penitentiary would not be too severe.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). In the event of the captain not being in command of the vessel, the mate, or whoever is in charge, should be held responsible.

Mr. GIROUARD. The clause is proposed with the view of meeting a case like that which occurred at London, Ontario, on the Queen's Birthday, when every one on board knew that the vessel was over-crowded.

Mr. MACKENZIE. From the newspaper reports I gathered that the cause of the accident was because the boiler was set loosely on the deck, the vessel being without a hold and flat-bottomed. When the vessel tilted the boiler got loose and carried away the supports of the other deck, and the passengers were swept overboard. Whether the Bill provides for such a case I do not know. If vessels on the Thames are still constructed after this manner, that circumstance is more dangerous than mere over-loading.

Mr. McCUAIG. It was proved at the coroner's inquest that the boilers were not fastened, and when the boat lurched it slipped to one side and carried everything before it. That was the real cause of the accident. It is very important that the House, before dealing with this question, should understand in what way it is to be determined how many passengers the steamer can carry. For instance, the hull of a boat will be 200 or 300 tons measurement, but by the more recent system of measurement the state-rooms are all measured and the total would reach 900 or 1,000 tons, and a vessel with an upper deck would carry more passengers.

Mr. McLENNAN. There was a further cause of the London accident which must be corrected by the more strict system of inspection now established. I seconded the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, because I think an evil of this magnitude affecting the risking of the lives of the people must be prevented by something more deterrent than a mere money fine, and this can only be effected by making such an error a misdemeanor and subjecting the party to punishment. I hope the promoter of the Bill will see the propriety of adopting the amended clause.

Mr. McLELAN. The desire of the Government is to provide for the protection of the lives of passengers on steamboats. The clause was so drafted that masters and owners should become interested, and watch the passengers as they come aboard and see there was not an excessive number. I think we have made a great step in advance of the old regulations. I admit it is a grave crime for the master of a vessel to knowingly go to sea with a large excess of passengers, and I would suggest that there be inserted at the end of the clause such words as these :

"The master or person in charge of a vessel who shall proceed to sea knowingly having an excess of passengers on board, should be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Motion agreed to; and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. GIROUARD. I propose to add a new clause after clause 55, to the effect that the master of any steamboat, or the officer in charge of such steamboat for the time being, who knowingly shall at any time allow to be carried on board such steamboat a greater number of passengers than that permitted by the certificate, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned for two years in the penitentiary, and so on.

Amendment agreed to and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. GIROUARD moved :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted with instructions to add another clause immediately after clause 56, to the effect that the master or officer in charge for the time being, of any steamboat carrying passengers, who shall allow his steamboat to race with any steamer so as to endanger the lives of his passengers, shall be punished as provided for in the preceding clause.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think the amendment as it stands, will have the effect which the hon. gentleman wishes it to have. How can you say racing will endanger the lives of passengers or not?

Mr. GIROUARD. That would be a matter for the jury to decide.

Mr. McCALLUM. It is already provided in the Bill that a steamer shall only carry a certain amount of steam, and if it is allowed to carry more, the owner or master is liable to the punishment provided. How can a man race his boat if he is not allowed to raise his steam to a racing point. It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment is unnecessary, as it is amply provided for by the preceding clause. It is very desirable that there should be every protection to life and property, but we need not go too far; we need not go so far as to drive off our waters all the steamboats of this country.

Mr. McCUAIG. It is provided in the Bill that the pressure shall only be so much and the safety-valve is locked up, so I agree with the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) that it is unnecessary to add this new provision.

Mr. COCKBURN. The only question that can come in after the provision with regard to the maximum pressure, is the question of crowding and the right of way, and there can be no difficulty in regard to that, because they are provided for by the general navigation law of the country. I think, therefore, that the new clause will only encumber the Bill.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. As it would be a violation of the law to put on more than a certain amount of steam, it seems that this clause is unnecessary. I do not see any objection to our steamers racing a little on our rivers, if they do not put on more steam than is allowed by the Bill.

Mr. McLELAN. This matter was considered in preparing the Bill, and we thought that the provision in regard to locking up the safety-valve would be sufficient, because the question of crowding and the right of way in narrow passages is dealt with by the navigation laws of the country.

Mr. BUNSTER. I hope the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) will withdraw that clause with regard to racing. In British Columbia we have a strong company that owns a considerable number of boats, and we have other enterprising men building boats, and they are vieing vigorously with the large monopoly in steamboats that has existed for years. I hope the hon. gentleman will see fit to withdraw that part of his motion relating to racing.

Mr. GIROUARD. I believe the clause as framed will meet every objection. It says that when a captain of a steamer shall allow his steamer to race so as to endanger the life of his passengers or the safety of his steamer, he will be guilty of a crime. That will be left to a jury.

Mr. McCUAIG. What is the meaning of the word race? It means an increase of motive power to produce greater speed, and the moment a man increases the power of the engine, he violates the law.

Mr. McDUGALL. It appears to me the question is a simple one. It is quite true that you may not be able to put on steam enough to make a race; but we know that when people want a race, there is a way of getting at this locked-up safety-valve, I apprehend, and what proof can you give whether the safety-valve has been maintained at the proper pressure or not? A race is a thing which a hundred people may be spectators of and may be able to give proof of; but as to whether the safety-valve was kept in its proper position, or whether too much steam was put on, cannot be ascertained except from the officers of the boat.

Mr. McCALLUM. I think the hon. member for Halton cannot have read the Bill, because it provides that under a certain penalty the certificate granted by the Inspector is to be hung up, so that every passenger can see it; and that tells the number of pounds of steam which the steamer ought to carry, and the steam-gauge tells what amount it is carrying. Does the hon. gentleman want more than that? In this Bill ample punishment is provided for any man who violates the law. The amendment cannot hurt the Bill very much. With regard to racing, suppose two steamboats leave a wharf together, both carrying all the steam that the law will allow, and both running at about the same speed; you might call that racing, but it is not, because they are running according to the law.

Mr. McLENNAN. The explanation that is made of the safety that arises from locking up the safety-valves does not cover the case. The test of a boiler is made with reference to its strength, and not its ability to propel craft. That will depend upon the size of the vessel for lading, and many other circumstances, and if the boiler happens to have strength enough to stand the test of a high pressure of steam, the vessel may be able to race without violating the law. Thus speed might be produced, measured only by the capacity of the boiler, not by the danger of racing, and everybody knows that racing is very dangerous.

Amendment negatived on a division.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. McCALLUM. Sub-section 6 of section 19 of this Bill provides that:

Every boiler, safety-valve, steam-gauge or other appendage to a boiler, or machine placed on board a steamboat after the coming into force of this Act, shall for the purposes thereof be considered as having been made after this Act is in force, and subject to the requirements thereof accordingly.

I consider this a very severe provision, because it will have the effect of condemning all the boilers made up to the time this Act comes in force, which are not made in accordance with this clause. I do not think that is the intention. I cannot understand it, and I have not seen a man who can explain it to me. It is not right that we should have this provision applied to all the boilers already made which are good enough, that Mr. Ristley should try his hand at such experiments. I, therefore, move:

Mr. BUNSTER.

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same, by striking out the word "boiler-cocks," in sub-section 2 of section 19, and by striking out sub-section 6 of section 19.

Mr. McLELAN. The effect of this amendment would be to permit boiler-cocks to be screwed into the thin shell of the which proves a very slight hold. The Bill now requires boiler, there should be a flange to connect the boiler-cock to the boiler, or connection by a nut, to give it a better connection between the boiler and itself. In some cases the boiler-cock has been simply screwed into the thin shell of the boiler by a very slight thread of a screw, and has afterwards been blown out, lives being lost in consequence.

Mr. McCALLUM. Never.

Mr. McLELAN. I know of some cases. The Bill provides for additional security by setting in a flange, and by allowing the boiler-cock to pass through the shell with a nut inside, and attaching it more securely to the boiler. Under the amendment a difficulty would occur in leaving the time unlimited. Every boiler made after the passing of this Act, whether in one, two, or ten years, and set in a steamer, under this proposition, would be free from the requirements of this Act. This motion would destroy the effect of the whole Act. Again, you could take an old boiler out of an old steamer and put it in a new steamer, under the operation of this amendment, and would be free from the provision of this Act. This Bill has been known for two or three months, and it will not operate till the 1st of September next, and all boilers in course of construction will be placed on board of steamers before that time.

Mr. BROWN. With reference to placing the flange inside, and the boiler-cock, as proposed in the Bill, if a boiler is likely to burst with a pressure of steam, it would be better to let the cock go altogether. If we could place a plug there on the pressure of steam, it could not do any harm. It is difficult sometimes to get the washer inside the boiler. The guide-cocks sometimes become unscrewed and frequently have to be taken out, and it is difficult to place them inside. Boiler explosions occur very seldom. The principle point is to see that the plates are of good quality and well riveted down. I never knew of a boiler exploding when the engine was in motion. It will generally work off the steam faster than it can be raised. If the steam is likely to get very high, the engineer will be able to let go altogether, which would be a better protection to the boiler.

Mr. McCUAIG. Although I am over forty years in the steamboat business, I have never known of a cock of a boiler being blown out. Previous to a steamer leaving the wharf she tests the cock at 90 lbs. pressure and 65 lbs. locked up. A good many boilers are so constructed as to render it impossible to put this flange in. This is a new clause altogether. None of my engineers either, have known of such accidents as the hon. Minister has mentioned. Steamboat owners ought not to be put to unnecessary expense simply because the Chairman of the Inspection Board wishes to test some new-fangled experiment which he learned of in England. With the present precautions and protection I do not see how any accidents can occur.

Mr. COCKBURN. I believe there was an accident in Montreal from the blowing out of a steam-pipe, but I do not think any danger exists when the proper screws are in the boilers as at present. It would impose a very great hardship on the trade were they compelled to take out all their present connections and put in bolts. I have consulted practical men on this matter, because I know the inspectors have been in favor of connections on those flanges. In some cases they have had to break the pipes all to pieces. When screwed into the boiler they were more secure than they could have been made by any flange, therefore they are perfectly safe. The accident that took place is no reason why we should adopt this change. A clause might be introduced applying to future boilers, but none should be made retroactive. If it is the desire of the Committee to make it apply in new cases only, I do not object. When people are putting in new machinery they will not object to putting on flanges, but if the inspectors wish to put those on in old boilers it would be a great hardship.

Mr. CURRIER. The heads of boilers, I presume, are generally considered the weakest part, and I think the obligation to rivet on flanges will do harm. Boring holes to rivet on flanges and putting on try-cocks, will serve to weaken the head of the boiler. The try-cock of a boiler is small, not more than half an inch in diameter. That would only be one-third of a square inch on which the pressure would come. Boiler bolts are scarcely less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter. That would take about nine threads of a screw in the thickness of a boiler bolt. I do not see how it is possible a try-cock put on with nine threads, taking hold of the thickness of the boiler, could possibly be forced out, because the pressure on it is so small, not being more than one-third of a square inch. It would be a great hardship to steamboat owners to be compelled to change their boiler heads by putting on all these flanges.

Mr. McCALLUM. It is very important there should be plenty of water in the boiler all the time, and a glass tube is attached that shows you the quantity of water in the boiler; but in case this tube should by accident be broken, there are three of those gauge-cocks in every boiler to show the amount of water. They are not any larger than my finger, and the holes are not more than one-eighth of an inch in diameter. In a boiler that will carry 100 lbs. of steam, there is not more than a pressure of 30 lbs. on the size of my finger. But as far as valves are concerned, it is greater. A man at Montreal when screwing one of these valves did not make it sufficiently fast, it was blown out and killed him. On that an Order in Council was passed, on the 26th March, 1880, providing that all valves and all boiler cocks and everything of that kind should be put on with a flange. In the pipes of any size as high as an inch and an inch and a-half, that has been carried out in the past even on board my own boats; we had to destroy pipes to get them out and they were afterwards put on with a flange. I do not object at all that in case of valves when there is any pressure of steam against them and there is the slightest danger of their being blown out, flanges should be put on; but I know the House does not want to impose this useless expenditure on steamboat owners of putting flanges on gauge cocks and making a boiler weak by boring these holes in its weakest part. The hon. Minister says if we strike out sub-section 6 of section 19 you can put any old boiler on board a vessel. But he has got the same law as we had before, and the whole Act itself, even should this sub-section be struck out. I do not want this Bill to be made retroactive so that steamboat owners will be obliged to destroy the boilers already made up to the present time, which they would have to do under this clause which provides that all the boilers made before the passing of this Act must come up to the standard of this Act although they may be safe and good boilers. By one stroke of the pen you are going to destroy people's property. If a boiler does not come up to this standard the inspector will have to condemn it. I hope the hon. Minister will strike out this clause because it is retroactive.

Mr. McLELAN. It is not.

Mr. McCALLUM. The clause reads:

Every boiler, safety valve, steam-gauge or other appendage to a boiler, or machine placed on board a steamboat after the coming into force of this Act, shall for the purposes thereof be considered as having been made after this Act is in force and subject to the requirements thereof accordingly.

If that is not retroactive I do not know what is.

Mr. McLELAN. No; it only refers to boilers placed on board after the passing of the Act. With regard to sub-section 2, the boiler-cock may stand, as the hon. gentleman has said, 90 lbs. pressure when the screws are new, but after they are worn a while and corrosion sets in—

Mr. McCUAIG. That makes them stronger.

Mr. McLELAN. After continual handling the thread weakens, and the pressure becomes too heavy. The hon. gentleman has referred to one case of loss of life, in consequence of that, and there have been many others. I believe now it is a custom to provide safety-plugs of lead, which melt and allow the steam to escape, and no damage is done.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The steamboat owners throughout the country are very much excited over this Bill. Their business is now reduced to almost a non-paying basis through the great competition they have to meet with railroads, and the out-look is that their business will be still further reduced in the future. They naturally feel aggrieved that any unnecessary, if they are unnecessary, or irksome charges should be put on them. The amendment which the hon. member for Monck proposes will not weaken this Bill at all, because it refers to boilers that may be made between now and the time of the coming into force of this Act. He only asks to have this clause amended by adding: "Any boiler, safety-valve, steam-gauge, or other appendage to a boiler or machine, and placed on board after the Act comes into force."

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. What will be the standard of the old boiler?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The same standard as at present. It will have to go through the same inspection, to be subject to the hydrostatic test and every other test now required.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. Would that test be abolished by this clause?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Not at all, it is kept in force still. This amendment will not state that these boilers will not be subject to this Act, but that they will not be required to have these new contrivances that the steamboat owners are complaining of. I think, then, that these two words "made and" might be inserted there without injuring the Act at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The proposition of the hon. member for Monck seems to me a most reasonable one, and I think the hon. Minister ought to give way to it. There can be no dangerous result from it in making it prospective altogether in its operation.

Mr. McLELAN. "Made and placed on board," made when? Made in ten years? If I understand the hon. gentleman he wants to be allowed to place on board boilers that are made or may be made.

Mr. McCALLUM. No. My amendment strikes out that altogether because it is useless.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I would ask whether a boiler made now will be subject as it is now under the law after this Act passes?

Mr. McLELAN. It will be subject to the same tests of inspection, but it may be excepted from some of the particulars of construction.

Mr. McCALLUM. I have no objection to striking out the clause altogether; it will suit me better.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I am afraid this Bill may be used in such a manner by the inspectors as to make great hardship to steamboat owners, not required by a fair consideration of the public good. I have received several communications as strongly opposing some of the provisions. While it is absolutely necessary to provide for the public safety, we all know that Government officers are sometimes apt to perform their duties in a rather austere manner, without due consideration to the interests of private parties. Of course, it is undoubtedly our duty to see that every reasonable prevention is taken to secure the safety of the public, but I do not think it is desirable that we should confiscate the property of steamboat owners by making rigid regulations which, when administered by a very severe inspector, would virtually render valueless property that can be used for the convenience of the public, and without any injury to the public by the present owners. Now, a boiler may be perfectly safe and adequate to pass the existing scale of examination, and the boat in which it is used is burned or wrecked, but under this clause that boiler could not be put into a new hull without violating this new Act, and would be practically useless, and the owner would be compelled to purchase a new boiler or else abandon the boat altogether. In my county there are some fifteen or eighteen small or large steamers navigating inland waters, and if a very rigid system of inspection is applied to every one of these boilers, and the owners were all required to build new boilers, the result would be that the public will be deprived of that accommodation which is so useful to them. I do not think the safety of life will be improved in consequence, but an almost irreparable injury will be done to the owners of these vessels. If the Minister intends to strike out that clause, I certainly think the public would suffer no harm, while the property of a good many steamboat owners who are largely interested would be secured.

Mr. McLELAN. I have no objection to strike out the clause altogether rather than amend it. As to clause 2, that has been in operation two years by an Order in Council. I understand from some steamboat owners on both sides that all the boilers are brought up to the requirements of the Order in Council passed two years ago, therefore it cannot be hard in its operation.

Mr. McCALLUM. I can tell the hon. gentleman that in the inland waters of this country not a single gauge-cock is ever put on, and the present inspector does not insist on it. But another inspector might adopt a new policy and cause a good deal of trouble. I shall agree if the hon. gentleman strikes out gauge-cocks altogether. That is a useless provision. As to the valves, I know the inspector insists on their being put in, and they are being put in in many cases at great expense to the steamboat owners.

Mr. McLELAN. It has been in force two years and no harm has resulted from it. I move, in amendment, that the Bill be re-committed for the purpose of striking out sub-section 6.

Mr. McCALLUM. Then I will withdraw my motion. But I am determined to insist on getting these words: "boiler-cocks" struck out.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McCALLUM moved to strike out sub-section 6 of section 19.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McLELAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. McCUAIG. The object contemplated by the amendments to this Bill is to secure greater safety to the public. It has been found, in cases tried before Ontario Courts, that the present inspectors are deficient in knowledge in regard to the hulls of vessels. The members of the Board of Inspectors are wholly uninformed as to the manner of constructing hulls, and, in recent cases, they failed, when brought before the Courts, to satisfy either the Court or the jury that they had sufficient knowledge to qualify them to examine inspectors. In consequence of that fact, steamboat owners generally have asked the Government to appoint a hull inspector, one practically familiar with the building of vessels. I observe that clause 7 of the Bill runs as follows:—

7. No person shall be appointed Inspector of boilers and machinery of steamboats, unless nor until he has passed a satisfactory examination before the Board of Steamboat Inspection, as to his knowledge on the subject of boilers and machinery of steamboats, and the working of the same; or an Inspector of the hulls and equipment of such vessel, unless he has passed a satisfactory examination as to his competency for the office, before a Board of three practical shipbuilders, to be appointed by the Governor in Council, or is a certified surveyor of a recognized society for the classification of shipping.

The Courts and juries have declared, time and time again, that the Chairman of this Board of Inspectors and the Board itself are not competent to examine these men.

Mr. McLELAN. Read on a little further.

Mr. McCUAIG. The clause continues:

Nor shall he be appointed an Inspector for either purpose unless he has received from the Chairman of the Board, or from the said practical shipbuilders (as the case may be) a certificate in writing that he has satisfactorily passed such examination, or is a certified surveyor as aforesaid.

I do not wish to leave it in the power of the Government to say that these men shall be examined by the Board of Inspectors. What I desire is, to separate the hull inspecting staff from the inspectors of boilers.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. They are separated.

Mr. McCUAIG. I beg to move:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same as that in clause 7 after the word "his," in line 32, page 3, the words "skill and experience in the construction, fastening and strength of a steamer's hull and of his" shall be inserted,—and after the word "Council," in line 34, page 3, the words "from amongst the residents of the Province within which the inspection is required to be made" shall be inserted,—and after the word "from," in line 38, page 3, the words "a majority of" shall be inserted. After the word "Council," in lines 34 and 35, of the same clause, the words "or is a certified surveyor of a recognized society for the classification of shipping,"—and after the word "from," in lines 37 and 38, the words "the Chairman of the Board or from,"—and after the word "shipbuilders," in lines 38 and 39, as the case may be,—and after the word "examination," in lines 40 and 41 of the same clause, the words "or is a certified surveyor as aforesaid," shall be struck out.

What I really aim to secure by the amendment is this: I wish the hull inspectors to go before practical ship-builders and undergo an examination, and that their certificate shall be satisfactory. I object decidedly to this clause, "or a certified surveyor of a recognized society for the classification of shipping." Because we know that political pressure is brought to bear on the Government, and the men appointed are not qualified to discharge their duties properly and to the satisfaction of the public. I, therefore, want them to be brought down to a practical test.

Mr. McCALLUM. I agree with my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. McCuaig) that it is desirable that life and property should be protected as far as possible, and I believe that we are going a long way in that direction in passing this Bill. I objected in Committee to some parts of clause 7. The Bill provides that the inspector of hulls shall go before a board of qualified shipbuilders and undergo a certain examination before receiving his appointment, and I think that is sufficient. I objected to the words "or is a certified surveyor of a recognized society for the classification of shipping," for this reason, that the Bill provides that they shall go before a qualified body of men who understand their business.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. That applies entirely to the inspection of hulls.

Mr. McCALLUM. Well, who is better qualified to inspect boilers or machinery than the Board of Steamboat Inspection. I object to the inspector of hulls being under the control of the Chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspection, because the Chairman of the Board of Inspection can go on board a vessel and supersede the inspection made by the hull inspector. If these gentlemen hold certificates now from the society spoken of, it certainly would do no harm, if they understand their business, to go before the Board, and show to the world that they are qualified. We have societies in the Province of Ontario for the inspection and classification of shipping, and they may be as well qualified as those the hon. gentleman speaks of. If the hon. gentleman will not withdraw the motion I will have to vote against it.

Mr. McLELAN. I think everything the hon. gentleman really asks for is provided in the Bill. The inspector of hulls has to be examined by a Board of three practical ship-builders, to be appointed by the Governor in Council, and must receive a certificate from them, and I think this provision meets every requirement.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. I think the clause provides for all my hon. friend wishes. He seems to think that the Chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspection has something to do with the examination of hulls.

Mr. McCUAIG. Unquestionably he is, under this Bill.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. The Chairman of the Board of Inspection has nothing to do with the examination of the person proposed to be appointed inspector of hulls. They are entirely distinct. I think the provision with regard to the inspector being a certified surveyor of a recognized society for the classification of shipping, is a very wise one. It is the strongest possible evidence of confidence in every respect.

Mr. McCUAIG. What I object to is this provision with regard to the inspector being a certified surveyor of a recognized society for the classification of shipping. If you are going to adopt that provision why not adopt at once classification of insurance companies. The Board of Underwriters examine vessels every year, and I should be perfectly willing to accept the classification of the insurance companies. It would be a much more independent classification than the one provided for.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. The Government could authorize the person who is agent of these companies to examine and certify vessels. The Government may appoint the same men.

Mr. McCUAIG. They may not appoint these men though.

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 152) respecting bridges over navigable waters constructed under the authority of Provincial Acts.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

SEAMEN'S ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 135) to amend Chapter 29, 38 Victoria, intituled: "An Act to extend certain provisions of 'The Seamen's Act, 1873,' to vessels employed in navigating the Inland Waters of Canada, and to provide for the collection of the wages of seamen and other persons employed on board vessels trading on the inland waters of Canada, in a summary manner." He said: This Bill is intended to remedy a hardship of which seamen in Ontario complain. In most countries where seamen are employed, their wages are regarded as the first payment to be made by the owners or captains of vessels. In 1879, an Act was passed in this House allowing mortgages on vessels on our inland waters, to have precedence of sailors' wages, and several cases of great hardship have arisen in consequence. Seamen have found at the end of a season's work on board these vessels, that some mortgagee could come before them and deprive them of their wages. It is proposed to remedy this evil and to give the men who sail the vessel and make her profitable to the owners and mortgagees the right to claim their wages first. I propose to amend the Bill very considerably in Committee.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. How is this Bill originated, is it applied for by parties interested in shipping in Ontario? It makes great changes, and unless it has been asked for by a very considerable number of parties engaged in the shipping business, it does not seem necessary to change the law as proposed, because the sailors have the securities of the owners of the vessels for their wages, which is ample. It would be a serious matter to interfere with mortgagees rights, and allow sailors at any time to take steps which would have the effect of destroying the priority of a mortgage. I would like to hear the opinion of the member for Prince Edward on this measure.

Mr. McCUAIG. Under the Maritime Court Law of Ontario, the sailor has at present a prior claim for his wages.

Sir ALBERT J. SMITH. No.

Mr. McCUAIG. Yes; the sailor has a prior claim on the vessel over a mortgage and everything else, except where a mortgage was created prior to the establishment of the Maritime Court. Perhaps there are not more than half-a-dozen vessels in Ontario that have such old mortgages resting upon them. I wish to impress on my hon. friend for Monck this one point: most of those steamboats cost from $50,000 to $60,000, one-half of which perhaps is furnished by the builder, who receives a mortgage on the vessel for that amount. Is not that mortgage then created to pay the laborers, the carpenters and others engaged in building the vessel, as well as for the materials, and through these means does not the sailor get employment? What right, then, has Parliament to destroy that security created for the building and working of the vessel? So far as I am concerned this provision will make no difference to me, but the matter should be carefully considered by Parliament with such laws destroying the securities of property and railways aided by Government, competing against steamboats, we shall soon find them driven out of existence altogether. At present the stock of the mail line, which boasts of some of the finest steamers afloat, running from Hamilton to Montreal, can be bought at from 25 to 30 cents on the $1. It is the constant passing of such Bills—for every year we have an Inspection Bill—which destroys the public confidence in those boats. This frequent legislation should be terminated.

Mr. GUILLET. The hon. member for Prince Edward has made a very extravagant statement; it is not a new thing to grant a first lien on vessels to the wages of seamen, and the argument of increased employment is not worthy of much consideration if wages are insecure. If there are but half a dozen mortgages, there is the less reason for refusing the protection which is granted by universal Maritime Law.

Mr. McCUAIG. You have it now.

Mr. GUILLET. On the upper lakes the Maritime Law of the United States recognizes seamen's claims as the prior lien on shipping to everything but, perhaps, salvage; and as that law has not existed with us, our seamen have been placed at a great disadvantage to those of the United States, and consequently many of them prefer sailing under the American flag which gives them security for their wages. I know many instances of seamen finding themselves at the end of the season deprived of their hard earnings on which they had depended upon for support of themselves and families through the winter, in consequence of the existence of mortgages ahead of them. Several cases of hardship have occurred to my own knowledge. I know there is a strong feeling throughout the Province among the seamen with reference to this matter. It is well known that our seamen are men who are not very fond of money for its own sake. They are generous, hearty fellows, anything but mercenary in their characters, reckless of life and limb in the performance of duty, but keenly alive to their rights. They feel very keenly the wrong imposed on them by their being placed in an exceptional position different to that of seamen in any other part of the world. I am extremely glad the Government are giving the Bill their support, and protecting the interests of our seamen, as they have done in regard to every other class of our citizens.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). When the Act was passed in Upper Canada it was received with great satisfaction by all parties interested in shipping matters. The sailors, up to that time, had no remedy for obtaining their wages in cases where they had difficulties with the masters of vessels. This Act was passed in 1877, but in 1879 an Act was passed changing its spirit by excluding from its operation vessels on which there were mortgages prior to the passing of the Act.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Not the vessels but the mortgages.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the same thing. I think it was a retrograde step, and I am glad that the hon. the Minister of Marine has decided to wipe out that law from the Statute-Book. I have personal experience, as Proctor of the Maritime Court, of the great hardship inflicted on common sailors by the operation of that law passed in 1879, and have already, in former Sessions, protested against its continuance. I have known cases in which sailors at the end of a season did not receive one dollar of their wages. The sooner that law is repealed the better. I understand that this Bill provides to extend to Ontario the provisions already existing in the Maritime Provinces in relation to the summary obtaining of wages within a certain amount. As we have established a Maritime Court in Ontario, it is only reasonable we should have the benefit of the Seamen's Act in Ontario to the same extent as in the Maritime Provinces. I suppose this Act is only intended to be a temporary Act, if we are to judge from the resolutions passed in the other House in relation to the uniform maritime jurisdiction in the Dominion. In the meantime, I think, it is a matter of the merest justice that this Act should become law.

Mr. McLENNAN. A most prominent feature in this Act is, not the question of the lien that is held by the sailor for his wages, but an unfortunate provision in clause 7, that on a seaman or other person on board such vessel making an affidavit or affirmation before a Police Magistrate, or any Justice of the Peace, where the vessel is lying, that the master of such vessel is indebted to him for wages or refuses to pay them, the vessel may be detained.

Mr. McLELAN. Pending the result of the resolution moved elsewhere, and the carrying out of the intention of the Government to make some general Bill applicable to the whole maritime cases of the Dominion, I simply propose to make their wages a lien on the vessel and give them the right to recover that they had in the Act of 1873.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. GUILLET,

After Recess.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 1,

Charges of Management..... $169,834 10

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is the item on which the hon. member for Centre Huron asked if we had any communication to show if the engagement made by the hon. Finance Minister in 1860, in respect to the English loan, was 1 per cent. I have a letter here which I will read:

"LONDON, 17th January, 1860.

"GENTLEMEN,—I think it desirable before my return to Canada to place in writing the arrangement agreed upon between us in relation to the new Canada loan. The financial agents are to charge the commission of 1 per cent. stipulated in former cases of loans negotiated by them for Canada, to be taken into account as the loan is realized. Brokerage of one-fourth of 1 per cent. to be charged where it has been claimed by and charged to the brokers.

"The small incidental expenses of printing, postage, &c., to be charged to Canada.

"No commission is to be charged on the exchange or future purchaser of the currency or Consolidated Municipal Loan Fund Bonds, made on account of, or out of the proceeds of loan, but where bonds are bought in the market the brokerage actually paid is to be charged.

"No commission is to be charged on the conversion of the sterling 6 per cent. and 5 per cent. bonds, but brokerage of one-eighth of 1 per cent. may be paid to brokers through whom such conversion takes place.

"In lieu of the commission to which the general agents would be entitled, on the redemption of the outstanding sterling bonds, a commission of 1 per cent. is to be charged upon the amount annually invested in the sinking fund, including the accumulated interest thereon.

"In case any of the outstanding bonds shall not be converted before maturity, the agents will, in such case, be entitled to commission on their redemption (1 per cent.)"

That is the letter of the agents acknowledging this communication and accepting it.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not, however, notice any express stipulation of 1 per cent. of final payment.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It says at the end if they are not redeemed in purchases for the sinking fund, then they are to pay 1 per cent. for their purchase.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. "In case any outstanding bonds shall not be converted before maturity," does that refer to this mode?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It refers to the 1 per cent. charged as in former loans, under former engagements which we know were entered into by Old Canada.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Of course, I would not, without careful consideration, choose to contradict the construction which the hon. Finance Minister puts upon it, but it seemed to me to bear some doubt as I heard it read. There were a lot of other securities, according to my recollection, at the time. Part of the arrangement made by Sir A. T. Galt had reference to a conversion into 5 per cents. of certain outstanding 6 per cents. I should think that with these outstanding bonds, which matured at different dates, ranging over several years after 1860, were what we referred to in this, and not the whole sum of £5,000,000 or £6,000,000 sterling which constituted this 5 per cent. loan.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think if the hon. gentleman reads the second letter he will see it refers to the $2,800,000 floated in 1860.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Those outstanding bonds to which I called the attention of the hon. Minister, which were collected, as the letter shows, with our old Municipal Loan Fund indebtedness, came due, I think, at odd periods ranging from 1860 onwards, and this agreement for 1 per cent. refers to that apparently, not to the amount paid by the loan, as I read these two communications. I should judge, with only these two before me, that the point was left undecided except as regards the several outstanding debts of Canada, which came in in 1864 or 1865.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Does the hon. member recollect when the last 5 per cent. loan was issued by Old Canada?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That was the last one. None was issued after 1860.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. And that may be redeemed in 1885.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Exactly. Then that refers to that loan.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. As the bargain seems to have been concluded now, I do not know that it will affect our position materially one way or the other, but it would affect, to some extent, the terms which the agents had got. I would not venture, without further examination, to pronounce a positive opinion one way or the other upon it, but I think you had better put this on the Table.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes, I will do that. If I find to-morrow there are any other papers I will bring them down.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am inclined to think that our legal friends will say that the matter was left in abeyance, that they had neither conceded nor waived the point. As regards that particular £50,000 or £60,000, I remember having had considerable discussion with Sir John Rose about it in 1874 or 1875, though whether he produced that letter, or whether the agents produced it, I cannot say from memory, but I know we both came to the conclusion that the matter had been left open.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The correspondence that has been placed before me has not been with reference to their right to claim 1 per cent. if they redeemed it. One point was whether it was a contract we were bound to carry out with them as a firm or a banking house.

On Resolution 44,

To meet expenses in procuring and taking care of Archives..... $5,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. I have directed Mr. Brymner to make further enquiries regarding the documents in Boston, but the appropriation is so small that it has not so far been possible to obtain copies of them.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think that at Albany also, valuable documents having reference to the early struggles between the French and British colonists, and the settlement of Upper Canada can be found. Our own archives are singularly deficient in these respects.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that there should be a very full and ample index of the archives prepared and carried on from year to year, and printed in some journal. I think some sort of index or catalogue is now issued, but it does not appear to me to be at all as full as it ought to be. What I propose would not be expensive, while it would be extremely useful; so far as anything is known except to those in the Department, these archives might as well be sealed books altogether.

Mr. POPE. A full and complete catalogue is now in course of preparation.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have been informed that the Government of the Province of Quebec is getting copies of all plans and maps of Old Canada which are in the library in Boston. I have been informed that application has been made to the Government here to obtain a duplicate of these maps and plans, for the library or the archives of the Dominion. Perhaps the hon. Minister could give some information on this subject.

Mr. POPE. My attention has been called to this matter, but the appropriation is so small that I am not yet able to devote any money to that purpose. I hope this year, however, to be able to make enquiry into this matter.

On Resolution 47,

Expenses in connection with the Census..... $60,000

Mr. ANGLIN. Does the Minister intend to make any change in the Census returns to correspond with the gerrymandering of the constituencies in the Bill before the House?

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). Will the Minister not find it convenient to publish a few volumes of the Census on better paper and with better binding than the Census of 1871? If it is the same paper, it looks very bad.

Mr. POPE (Compton). It is better.

Mr. ROSS. I would suggest a better paper and better binding, to make the volumes appear respectable. The United States work is far in advance of ours.

Mr. POPE. We have obtained the best paper we could find in the country, which I think very good. The answer to the question of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) must depend on this House. We have distributed one copy to each hon. member, and it is intended to give each hon. member four as hitherto. It will take some time to get the other copies ready. One volume has been prepared much earlier than that of England or the United States, though the Census in those countries were taken a year earlier.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Gloucester enquired whether it was proposed to gerrymander the Census in the same way as the constituencies. If you have to go to three, four or five political constituencies to get the facts in relation to the numbers of former political units, great difficulties will occur. Had the Administration always continued the course of dealing with the municipal organization as the units for electoral purposes, that difficulty would, perhaps, not have been so marked. But we have now neither political nor, in the units proposed to be used in any sense, municipal units, so that we have really no means whatever, without very considerable time and trouble, of applying any unit of any size larger than a township or town, and learning what the statistical facts of the Census are.

Mr. POPE. It must be understood that the Census was taken in April of last year, which will account for the non-appearance of certain names and facts which would be included in any Census taken at present.

Mr. BLAKE. I pointed out that the redistribution was not arranged on the principle of counties, but on the principle of ridings, and as the ridings have to be all changed we have neither counties nor ridings.

Mr. POPE. The Census having been taken in April of last year could not refer to any divisions of constituencies that have been made since.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly not.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman will find that every village or municipality has been enumerated and dealt with in proper form.

Mr. BLAKE. My suggestion was that they should be aggregated with reference to one or other of two sets of aggregations in force in the Province—one set is the county aggregation, and the other set is the Federal political aggregation. We have had them here before in the Federal political aggregation of ridings or political districts. We have now not one of them in that form, or in the county form either; and unless something is done to remedy the difficulty, much trouble and expense will be the result in working the new scheme.

On Resolution 39,

To meet expenses connected with health statistics.. $10,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this, however excellent the object may be, there seems to be a very considerable divergence of opinion among the members of the medical profession in this House in regard to the utility of this vote. If I am not mistaken, many asserted no good results will flow from it. The hon. Minister himself had no very clear idea as to what value he could get for the money. He spoke of the vote as being experimental, and said he was going to confer with the Medical Council and ascertain what they would do. Has the hon. gentleman any further information on the subject?

Mr. POPE. I have no further information than what I gave when the item was first brought down. The Medical Board said that if a certain amount were placed at their disposal they could collect health statistics much cheaper than we. They will submit a plan for approval.

On Resolution 51,

Quarantine..... $68,266

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. With respect to cattle quarantines in the West, have the sites been fully determined?

Mr. POPE. One will be at Sarnia. It is possible there may be another one, but I am very loth to have another if we can avoid it. If we do it will be in a place where it can be run very cheaply, and will be for a short time in the year.

On Resolution 128,

To provide for one year's subsidy, to be granted at the rate of $50,000 per annum, to line of steamers to trade between Canada and West Indies and Brazil, provided a like amount be paid by the Brazilian Government..... $50,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A steamer belonging to this line left Halifax in February, I think. The Brazilian Government have formally agreed to pay the subsidy on their part.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman aware, at this moment, whether any formal communication on the subject has been addressed by the Brazilian Government to Her Majesty's Government?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I cannot say positively. If the hon. member wishes I will allow that to stand.

On Resolution 131,

Subsidy to steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé, and intermediate ports..... $8,000

Mr. ANGLIN. Has anything been done towards providing for this accommodation?

Mr. McLELAN. Arrangements are being completed for placing a fortnightly steamer upon that service.

Mr. ANGLIN. This is a matter of much interest to a large population. I endeavored, two or three years ago, to induce the Government to have these boats run also on the other side of the Baie des Chaleurs occasionally, where there is a large population far removed from a line of railway, and to whom the regular running of a steamboat during the season would be a very great advantage. Some attempts were made to create a trade, which were not very successful. I think, at the time, parties tendering asked a higher sum for this additional service than the Government were willing to give. As it is a matter of great interest to a large population in that part of the country, I would ask the Minister, whenever he does open negotiations on this matter, to turn his attention to that part of the subject, and make provision for supplying a pressing want to 15,000 or 20,000 people. If they were afforded facilities they could do a much larger trade than they do at present.

Mr. McLELAN. Complaints have been made that the steamers put on the route last year were not sufficient for the work, and negotiations are about closed with a view to get a better boat to run in summer, to be succeeded in autumn by a screw boat.

Mr. ANGLIN. I speak mainly for the purpose of directing the Minister's attention to the claims of this particular portion of the population on the main shore, who were really neglected in the old arrangement, the object seeming to be merely to accommodate Gaspé and Bonaventure. It is of great importance a boat should run there as late in the season as possible, because there is there a large quantity of fish and other produce waiting to be taken to market. I trust the hon. Minister will look at both sides of the Bay with an impartial eye, desirous, as I hope he is, of promoting the public service and affording facilities to all classes and parties and sections of the country. I find the necessity for this service is quite as great on one side of the Baie des Chaleurs as it is on the other.

On Resolution 132,

For steam communication from Port Mulgrave, at the terminus of the Eastern Extension Railway, to East Bay, Cape Breton..... $6,000

Mr. BORDEN. I desire some information from the Government with respect to this item. An offer was made to perform this service for $4,000 by Capt. Beaty, a man who has run a steamboat in that locality for a long time. This offer was made to the Government last year and refused. The Government employed a steamboat from Quebec, and brought her to this locality to perform the service, for $6,000. The vessel went there late in June and left in October, and complaints have been made that the service was not efficiently performed. I understand this year the same offer was made to perform the service for $4,000 by the same party. I would like to know from the Government why that offer was refused. The service should have been offered to tender. It is said there are some political reasons why the members of the county of Cape Breton did not care to give the contract to Capt. Beaty; but certainly the public interests should not suffer to such an extent for this reason. The service should be offered to public competition, as I have said, as is done in other cases. I believe, for example, the service at Gaspé is offered to public competition; and the mail service to which I have referred should be placed in a like position. I should like to know from the hon. Minister whether an offer was made last year to perform the service for $4,000, and why it was refused; and whether the same offer was repeated this year and refused; and whether any arrangement has been made for the service during the present season, and if so, to whom has it been given?

Mr. McLELAN. This matter is under the management of the Postmaster-General. I know of no such offer.

Resolution ordered to stand.

On Resolution 134,

For steam communication between Halifax and St. Pierre..... $2,000

In reply to Mr. ANGLIN,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There can be no doubt the position of St. Pierre is a very embarrassing one to the Dominion, and especially to the hon. Minister of Customs, whose duty it is to see that goods are not brought in without paying duty. This is one of the points from which it is difficult to prevent the introduction of smuggled goods, but arrangements have been made which have decreased the quantity largely. When the vote was first given it was for $4,000, but it has since been reduced to $2,000. There is a larger trade between Nova Scotia and this Island than is supposed. During the summer a large quantity of cattle and agricultural produce were sent over from Cape Breton and different parts of Nova Scotia, and business has considerably increased. The trouble has arisen with sailing vessels over which the Government has no control; and although the Minister of Customs has had secret agents on the Island to report the vessels which left with a cargo on board, it is quite evident that the existence of the steamboat line has nothing to do with the prevalence of smuggling.

On Resolution 135,

To provide for a subsidy of $1,500 a voyage for voyages of steamers from Prince Edward Island to Great Britain or Continental Ports.. $7,500

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I desire to ask the Government how long is the arrangement with the Montreal Steamship Company, and what is their intention in regard to renewing it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The arrangements made by the owners of that line with regard to the landing of freight were not very satisfactory last year, but they are in a more satisfactory condition at the present moment; and the agreement is terminable at one year's notice.

Mr. ANGLIN. Last year, in making enquiry as to the growth and progress of the cattle trade in the Lower Provinces, of one who is largely interested, I was surprised to learn that shippers found great difficulty in getting accommodation on the Allan line, and had to engage room a long time in advance. He told me that he had to pay a rate, I think, of 10s. sterling higher at Halifax than could be obtained at Boston. If these steamers were doing an ordinary business in their own way we would not perhaps have a right to complain. It might be said that competition would regulate it, but when we subsidize this line so largely, I think we have some right to interpose in the matter and ask that the rates imposed on our own people for the shorter voyage may be at least no higher than the American charge on the longer voyage.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I know nothing about the charges on cattle. The charges I referred to were those for freight on goods delivered in Halifax and the freight on goods delivered in Boston. There was a great distinction and great dissatisfaction resulted, but I believe this has been remedied. I did hear, last year, that the difficulty experienced by shippers of cattle from the lower ports was that space was engaged ahead at a high figure by certain parties, and that if other parties wished to ship they made them pay high prices, but before the season was half over the prices fell completely, so that the Allans and other steamers reduced their rates $33\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the cattle shipped in their boats. My impression was that the difficulties which arose in this connection had been removed, and I am a little surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that they charge more at Halifax than at Boston. It may be so, but the circumstances as they were presented to me, led me to suppose that they would have been glad to take cattle at almost any price at the close of the season.

Mr. ANGLIN. I am speaking of the early part of the season.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think that arrangements have been made now by which a large portion of the freight passes over the Intercolonial instead of going to Boston over the American lines.

Mr. McLELAN. The facilities for shipping cattle at Halifax during the past year have been largely increased, and the improvements will now compare favorably with those of any other port in the Dominion.

Mr. MILLS. If cattle can be shipped at Boston at 10s. a head cheaper than at Halifax, that is a good reason for going there, and the superior accommodation at Halifax will not secure the traffic over the Intercolonial as long as the subsidized steamers prefer the traffic at American ports.

Mr. ANGLIN. The shipper whom I mentioned complained loudly of the difficulty he experienced in getting space, and said that this hardship was calculated to prevent the growth of the cattle trade in the Lower Provinces.

On Resolution 137,

For the providing of a steamer to replace the Glendon $30,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is the vessel named the Fox Hound which I see mentioned as the one which is to take the place of the Glendon?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What sort of a steamer is it, and what did the hon. gentleman do with the Glendon?

Mr. McLELAN. The Glendon was offered at tender, and the tender was accepted at between $4,000 and $5,000. She was condemned by the inspector. The Fox Hound is an iron vessel employed in the fishery service. She was purchased in England and is now at Quebec for repairs.

On Resolution 141,

Expenses in connection with Canadian registration of shipping $500

Mr. ANGLIN. Has this item any meaning at all? There was an old idea at one time about establishing a strictly Canadian system of classification, but that was abandoned.

Mr. McLELAN. This is in connection with the measurement and registration of shipping.

On Resolution 152,

Grant for Meteorological observations, including instruments and cost of telegraphing weather warnings $40,000

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon. Minister has arranged for a more thorough system of weather warnings for agricultural purposes than has heretofore been in force. The warnings have been issued at too late an hour in the morning and have not arrived at their destination until all good farmers are at work; and they have not been issued to a sufficient number of telegraph offices. They should be issued to all the telegraph offices in the country. If these warnings are worth anything, they are worth millions of money to the farmers, and I think the least that could be done would be to give them the benefit of the warnings during the months of harvest.

Mr. McLELAN. It is the hope of the Department to increase the service, and to give fuller, earlier and more frequent reports than hitherto. I am afraid we have not asked quite enough money to perform all that the hon. gentleman asks, but additional information will be given, and this valuable service will be gradually extended.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The evidence submitted by the weather observers in the United States tends to show that the great storms, lasting for several days, are usually indicated for a considerable time before their approach, and I have no doubt those in charge of this Department could similarly furnish information which would be of incalculable value to the farmers. Who is supposed to supervise the distribution of this money?

Mr. McLELAN. The distribution is submitted by Mr. Carpmal and his officers to the Department and sanctioned here.

Mr. CASEY. The weather is not reported in sufficient detail to be of any use in some parts of the country. The lake region is the smallest division covered by the reports, and in the summer, during harvest, the weather may be very different at different points in this region. Severe thunder storms sometimes rage in one part of Ontario, while places not far distant are free from them. I think it would be well to ask the weather office to define when possible with greater particularity the districts likely to be visited by storms, say, for instance, eastern, central, western, or northern Ontario, and to ask those officers, when they can, to predict the general weather for a week in advance. That would be very useful to the farmers. It is often within the knowledge of the weather officers what the character of the weather for the next few days may be. They should try to give a longer forecast than for the next twenty-four hours only.

On Resolution 114,

Manitoba $13,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I wanted to know whether any steps had been taken to ascertain whether Lake Winnipeg, which lies north of the country adjacent to Winnipeg, cannot be permanently lowered. A very large portion of the country immediately surrounding it has been for a year or two flooded, and was formerly supposed to be of very considerable value. An examination was made, I believe, and reports were handed into the Government. It would be of some interest to know what the opinion of the Government is as to the possibility of draining those lands.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right with reference to some enquiry having been made, and I think the hon. the Minister of Public Works reported that he thought it desirable to make some further enquiry before asking for a sum of money to carry on the improvements that might be found necessary after full investigation.

On Resolution 158,

Indian schools in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick..... $9,800

Mr. ANGLIN. Where are those new schools in New Brunswick to be?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. One of them is at Indian village, above Fredericton, one in the neighborhood of Burnt Church, and the other is in the northern part of the Province—I do not recollect the locality.

On Resolution 176,

To reimburse D. H. Waterbury for loss sustained by his removal from the St. John post office..... $4,500

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I thought that item was to be altered in shape.

Mr. McLELAN. The change was made back again. It was thought the alteration would give it all to the lawyers.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The objection was this: that it is proposed to reimburse this gentleman for losses sustained by his removal from the post office. A good deal of objection was taken to placing in the Supply Bill a statement that we recognized the principle of reimbursing any man, appointed during pleasure, for the loss of his office.

Mr. ANGLIN. Would it not be better to say it was a gratuity—put it in some shape that would not commit us to a dangerous principle?

Item amended by striking out the words "for loss sustained by his removal from the St. John post office."

On Resolution 182,

To meet expenses under the Act respecting the adulteration of food..... $10,000

Mr. McLELAN,

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Are there no other points at which analyses are made than Montreal, Toronto and Halifax?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They are made at these places and at Quebec and St. John.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the analyses are purely voluntary?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think they are.

Mr. ANGLIN. I suppose there is no policy of restraining dealers from selling impure articles?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It would be very expensive to have persons visiting every part of the Dominion for that purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It seems to me that this is a matter which is entirely within the province of the Local Legislatures, and I think the Government should consider the advisability of expunging this item altogether from the Estimates.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have never heard the right of the Government to deal with it questioned before.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We discussed the question years ago. We might as well undertake to examine the quality of leather to see if it is fit to make shoes.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have inspectors of flour, leather, and fish and other articles of that kind, and I suppose this would come in the same category.

Mr. MILLS. It used to be the custom to have reports of the analyses of sugar sent to the Inland Revenue Department. I would like to know if any such report has been made lately, and if it has, whether it will be brought down.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not aware of any such report.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have observed that the Inspector in Toronto has occasionally advertised the results of his inspection, in some of the local papers, showing the quantities of adulteration found in the various articles of food he inspected.

On Resolution 180,

Weights and Measures, and Gas..... $76,000

Mr. ANGLIN. What is the explanation of the decrease of $6,350 in this item?

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister of Inland Revenue has found that there were more officers than were required to do the work, and he has been steadily decreasing the expenditure in that particular by not filling vacancies when they occurred, and by promoting members of the Weights and Measures branch to that of the Excise.

Mr. MILLS. At an early period of the Session, I called attention to the manner in which the duties on imported articles are collected, and I mentioned two or three cases which had come under my notice. Mr. James Dougall bought some nursery trees in the United States for the purpose of increasing his assortment, and reported to the Department that he had purchased them at the same price at which they were sold to the wholesale dealers at the nursery, and the answer he said he received from the Department was that there were other nurseries in the United States where a higher price was asked for trees of the same sort. I also referred to the importation of mills for grinding sorghum and of vacuum pans which were purchased at Cincinnati. Upon enquiry, I ascertained that the Canadian purchasers of these articles, Mr. Patterson and other farmers in the West, who wished to make experiments as to the profitableness of engaging in this sort of agriculture, and the statement they made to me was that the Customs officer at Amherstburg had charged them duties on an increased value on the articles, that they objected to his valuation, that an appraiser was sent for who valued them at a higher price than was actually paid for them, and that they were not only charged the duty on this additional price, but were fined for not having agreed to the arbitrary valuation fixed by the Customs officer. Since then, the parties have forwarded to me the affidavits of the manufacturer and the shipper, which I sent to the Department, and I have not yet been informed what action has been taken on the matter. It appears to me that this is not the way to encourage higher agriculture. The hon. Minister of Customs may be able to tell us now what course he intends to adopt with reference to importations of this kind.

Mr. BOWELL. The points brought before the House by the hon. gentleman involve the whole question of the Customs laws as they exist, the duty of the officers, and the principles involved in that law. The hon. member for Bothwell complains that Mr. Dougall of Windsor, who had bought trees in the United States, imported them into Canada; that he paid the ordinary market price in the United States, but that the Customs officer or appraiser in Canada had decided they were undervalued, and set a new value upon them and charged duty accordingly. Then it appears the same course was pursued in reference to the question of vacuum pans and cane mills, and that the importer demurred to the valuation put on the article by the collector. In that case the law provides that in case of a dispute of that kind, appraisers shall be appointed who are acquainted with the value of the article to be appraised, and also that such appraisement shall be final, and if it be 20 per cent. higher than the price at which the article was entered, the importer shall be subject to a return of the extra amount of duty imposed on the article. If those appraisers were appointed, and the value of the article 20 per cent. higher than the price at which it was entered, the law itself imposes the fine; nor does the law give the power to the collector or Head of the Department to remit that fine unless there be extenuating circumstances. From the facts that were stated by the hon. member for Bothwell, which, I have no doubt, he related as he heard them, the collector has not gone beyond his duty. The Department in Ottawa has nothing to do with this question, unless it be brought before it on appeal from the collector's decision. In such case the Department will take all the necessary steps to ascertain the actual value of the article as far as possible. Frequently, however, people will go to the United States and purchase articles which come into competition with the manufactures of Canada at much lower rates than they are sold for in that market for home consumption; that is not the fair value on which to levy the Canadian duties, but the value at which the articles are sold to the home consumer. That is the principle on which all Customs duties are levied. Mr. Dougall may have purchased at lower prices than was charged American purchasers; but whether the vacuum pans can be classed under that head or not, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. MILLS. I think the hon. gentleman has scarcely apprehended my observations with reference to the trees. I stated that the price Mr. Dougall paid was the price universally paid in the United States, and that whether those nurserymen were charging a higher price in the United States seemed beside the question; that the law was complied with; that the cane mills and vacuum pans manufactured by this Company were sold to their American customers at the same price charged Mr. Patterson, and that it did not seem to me that the Minister of Customs or his officer were at liberty to go beyond that price, assume they were entered below their value, and charge what he considered was the proper amount of duty upon the value which he chose to consider the correct one.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will see the difficulties that presented themselves to the collectors in the cases to which he has just referred. There are, it is true, some manufacturers of a particular article who will sell at less than others. There was, for instance, the case of the importation by the Canadian Pacific Railway of a large number of locomotives which were entered at a certain price. All the evidence that could be produced was to the effect that those engines cost the Canadian Pacific Railway $9,500, only. At the time they were imported we had entries for the same sized engines precisely, same sized fire-boxes and cylinder, and, as far as an invoice could indicate, of the same character, from another manufactory, however, at $14,000. The collector stopped the engines in transmission, and although every evidence possible was produced to show the actual value to the importer was $9,500, they were increased to $11,000 each for duty for the reason that that was the fair market value at the time of the exportation from the United States. It matters not what the article cost, its value for duty is that at the time it was exported.

Mr. MILLS. Supposing the price had diminished, would the Government have made a corresponding reduction?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly. I am surprised that a gentleman who pays so much attention to the business of this House, does not remember that during last Session I introduced an amendment to the Customs Act, which provided for this very case. Under the Act introduced by the late Government no allowance could be made for reduction of price even should an article have gone down 50 per cent. before it was exported, while if the price went up the duty was charged on the increased value. I believed this was not fair to the importer, and introduced an amendment to remedy this injustice. As to the case in question, we arrived at as correct a calculation of the actual value as possible. We have catalogues and price lists of all the nurserymen in the United States, who sell to this country, extending as far west as Delaware in the Southern States. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be surprised to learn that many manufacturers have an export price list and a price list for home consumption. In this case we have to make a comparison always finding the export list much lower than the price for selling to their own people. They have a very perfect system of paying drawbacks in the United States, and the manufacturers can afford to sell to foreign markets less the amount of the drawback, and make as much money as by selling in their own country. With regard to trees we have tried to establish a uniform price for certain qualities and standards. If Mr. Dougall has suffered in this case, and if any evidence be produced that he has been improperly treated, justice will be done to him.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I have no doubt Mr. Dougall's statements are correct. Mr. Dougall was annoyed at the manner in which his communication to the Department was answered, and he did not press the matter because he did not consider the amount involved was of sufficient importance to carry on the correspondence. I have no doubt, if it had been brought under the notice of the hon. Minister of Customs himself, the amount would have been refunded. Mr. Dougall felt rather annoyed, and very naturally so, that a man so well known as he is, whose respectability and credibility are beyond question, should have received the uncourteous answer he received when he first made his complaint.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY presented two Messages from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Messages as follows:—

LORNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, the additional Supplementary Estimates of the amounts required for the Service of Canada, for the year ending 30th June, 1882; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 4th May, 1882.

LORNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the Service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1883; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 4th May, 1882.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the Messages, with the accompanying Estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:50 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 5th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INSOLVENT BANKS, INSURANCE COMPANIES AND TRADING CORPORATIONS.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 145) respecting Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies and Trading Corporations. He said: There are two salient features in this Bill, by explaining which I explain the whole Bill. In the Act of 1875, there are provisions for the discharge of debtors but none for the discharge of insolvent banks, insurance and trading companies. A year ago Mr. Chamberlain, in a speech in the House of Commons, England, on presenting a Bill relating to Insolvency, pointed out abuses flowing from the Insolvency Laws which are similar to those that exist here; that is, that what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and by leaving to the creditors the entire control of insolvents estates, they, trusting to one another, did nothing, and the whole business went from bad to worse. He suggested that Parliament should take some control from the creditors and give it to a Court. There are important differences between the law of insolvency which we adopted in 1875 and this Bill. This Bill applies to insolvent banks, insurance companies and trading corporations, and the proceedings in it are those set forth in the English Act of 1879, and in our old Insolvent Law of 1875, with this difference, that there is no discharge to be granted to insolvent corporations as there is under the Insolvent Law, and the control of the assets is placed more in the hands of a council of Judges than in those of creditors.

Mr. BLAKE. The distinction the hon. gentleman makes is only a formal one, because under the old Insolvent Law, when dealing with an insolvent corporation of any description, the assignee gets everything that can be got, including the liabilities of shareholders to pay up the stock in full. There is, therefore, nothing to discharge the company from because there is nothing more to be got. The corporation being left without any assets, has nothing whatever left which would enable it to subsist any longer, therefore the discharge is immaterial. I did not exactly catch the measure of control which the hon. gentleman proposes to give to the Judges over the assignee or the assets of corporations; but I quite agree that one of the difficulties in Insolvent Laws in all countries, is the apathy and neglect of the creditors. If the hon. gentleman has succeeded in finding a method by which that great difficulty, inherent in human nature, may be removed, he will prove himself a benefactor to his country, in giving us a sample legislation which, I am sure, will be extensively copied in all parts of the world.

Mr. OUIMET. I would like to know from the hon. Minister if in these insurance companies, mutual insurance companies are comprised. We have in Quebec, as in Ontario, a lot of these mutual insurance companies, and in some cases where they have been put into liquidation in conformity with some Local Act, it has been decided that the Local Acts are unconstitutional. In the third clause, I would suggest that mutual insurance companies be included, and in the commercial joint stock companies I would suggest that building societies, incorporated in conformity with the Dominion or Local Act, be included. It will be easily seen that when these companies, although incorporated by a Provincial Legislature, are insolvent, it remains with us to deal with them. I would suggest that building societies be included in the operation of the Act. That would be a great relief to the business community in Montreal and the whole Dominion, I think, because at present we have no power to deal with these insolvent companies. All that is required is simply to mention these companies in the Act.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I think my hon. friend is correct as to mutual insurance companies, but I do not think it would be well to include building societies. I always looked upon building societies as essentially civil corporations, since their business consists in civil contracts and loaning moneys.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I am glad the hon. Minister is willing to amend the Act, so as to apply it to mutual companies; but I believe the reason he has given for not including building societies, is not a sound one. I admit that they are civil corporations, but when this Act provides for the winding up of insolvent corporations, it ought to include building societies as well, over whom we have undoubted jurisdiction. Within the last few years a great number of building societies have become insolvent, and considering the great advantages which this Bill affords for winding up insolvent corporations, civil or commercial, I think it is very desirable, indeed, in the interest of the community, that this Act should also apply to building societies.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I cannot agree with the hon. member that because building societies are civil corporations they must fall under our jurisdiction when they become insolvent. That question has been decided otherwise by the Courts. In 1867, the Quebec Parliament passed an Act relating exclusively to commercial insolvencies, the proper word for which, in French, is de confiture. It was for the winding up of civil corporations. Actions were taken under the Act, and the Superior Court maintained that it was constitutional. Appeal was taken to the Court of Queen's Bench, which declared the Act unconstitutional. It was then taken to England, and the Privy Council declared that the Quebec Parliament had a right to legislate on these matters precisely because these corporations were of an exclusively civil nature.

Mr. GIROUARD. The Dominion Act was not an Act to provide for the insolvency of building societies, it was only to provide for the winding up of building societies, a very different case. We have jurisdiction over civil or legal corporations, the moment our action has reference to the insolvency of these civil corporations, and the case cited by the hon. Minister has no application whatever to a Bill like this, which provides for the winding up of insolvent corporations, and should, I believe, also apply to building societies.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. I think the distinction is obvious. With reference to any corporation over which the Local Legislature has jurisdiction at all, it has jurisdiction for the voluntary winding up of such corporation; because the voluntary winding up may take place even when the corporation is solvent. It makes no matter what is the character of the corporation, if it is a corporation you can provide for its insolvency just as we could provide for winding up the insolvency of any company engaged in trade. We have absolute jurisdiction over insolvency, not only trade insolvency, but insolvency generally, and if we choose to extend our Insolvency Law to persons who are not traders it would be quite right. If we extend it to any class of the community which incur debts at all, it would be within our jurisdiction, because if these corporations, no matter what their character, incur debts, we can provide for their winding up.

Mr. ABBOTT. It seems to me there are important points to be provided for in this Act, in the general winding up of corporations. I see it is called in this Act "to liquidate," and, so far as I understand the Bill, this liquidator is appointed by the Judge, without any consultation with any one, without any consideration for the wishes of the creditors or the shareholders. Now, if am right in that respect, I think it would be a mistake to give to the Judge unlimited jurisdiction to appoint whom he likes to so important an office. As for the liquidation of these large companies, I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to that point, and ask him to consider how far he can arrange so that the wishes and the interests of the shareholders and the creditors, or of either of them, can be consulted in the appointment of the liquidator. That, I think, is one of the most important features of the Bill. Its efficiency will depend greatly upon the impartiality and the good judgment of the person appointed to wind up the affairs of a company in liquidation. It does not appear to me, as the Bill now stands, that there is sufficient provision for acquainting the Judge as to who is the person or company that can most efficiently perform the functions of liquidator. I quite agree with the hon. member for West Durham with reference to the jurisdiction of this Parliament; I think we have a perfect right to make provision for the winding up of any person or company who may become insolvent.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

MEMBERS' INDEMNITY.

Mr. STEPHENSON moved:

That inasmuch as certain members were delayed on their way to attend the present Session of Parliament, by reason of travel being unusually obstructed by snowstorms, such members be not deprived of their indemnity allowance for the time so lost, and that they specify such time, in their declaration of attendance.

Motion agreed to.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 69,

Canadian Pacific Railway, Prince Arthur's Landing to Red River	$1,067,000
---	-------------

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think, with respect to this item, some information was to have been given on the amount of trestle work and other matters of that kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the hon. the Minister stated that, as nearly as he could remember from conversation with the engineer, there was about a mile of this trestle work, but he said he would give more accurate information on Concurrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I have looked into the matter, and find that instead of having at all increased, the amount of trestle work which was originally estimated between Kaminstiquia and Selkir' has been greatly reduced, and the amount of square timber has been reduced by a very large amount. The amount of trestle work has been reduced on section 15, and it has been increased on sections A and B.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The exact increase you are not prepared to state.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had a table prepared, which I cannot now place my hand upon, giving the quantities of the different kinds of work as estimated in the first instance, and as they stand at present, and I will lay that upon the Table for the information of the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. Minister state whether this trestle work is now concentrated in a small number of places?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is applied to a number of places to a much larger extent than was originally intended, but the character of the road as a whole is greatly improved. I may say that the Chief Engineer will be only too happy to show any hon. gentleman who will call at the office the plans and specifications for the whole of this work as originally devised, and the plans and specifications showing how the whole work is now being constructed, and the hon. member for Lambton will see that they bear out the statement I have made as to the character of the road being greatly improved.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The net result, however, is simply this, that the trestle work on section 15 is reduced $250,000, while it is increased on sections A and B $650,000, that is, there is $400,000 more of trestle work than the original contracts provided for.

On Resolution 78,

Subsidy—Canadian Pacific Railway.....	$8,500,000
---------------------------------------	-------------

Mr. RYKERT. Before this item is concurred in, I desire to make a few observations in reference to the Pacific Railway. During the last Session of Parliament, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House found a great deal of fault with the contract which was brought down to this House in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. A large number of resolutions, in the shape of amendments, were formulated by hon. gentlemen opposite, in which they attempted to show, among other things, that the effect of that contract would be to create a great monopoly in the country. They referred particularly to the fact that the Government were exempting that road from a very large amount of taxation, and certain hon. gentlemen placed those exemptions at a very fabulous amount. The reason I bring up this question now is, that the House and the country may ascertain the exact position hon. gentlemen opposite occupy in reference to this matter. I do so particularly because I find these hon. gentlemen circulating throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion a quantity of campaign literature, which, in my judgment, conveys to the people of this country a very large amount of trash. There are statements made in these documents which are not borne out by the facts, and I desire to show the country what kind of gentlemen there are on that side of the House who are attempting to educate the people. It was said that the result of this contract, if ratified by the House, would be to create a great monopoly. That cry, I think, has now about ceased. Hon. gentlemen are shifting their sails, and endeavoring to find out some other cry on which to found their case. Instead of being a monopoly, instead of holding the land at a fabulous price, instead of retarding settlement and preventing the settler from enjoying that prosperity which he ought to enjoy, we find that the Pacific Railway Company, as a matter of their own salvation, are compelled to sell their land at a very moderate price, and are endeavoring to bring settlers into the country. We find that certain prophecies made by hon. gentlemen opposite have not been fulfilled. On the contrary, the result shows that the Government, in adopting that contract, were legislating in the right direction. Now, it seems very singular that these hon. gentlemen, who themselves, in the early part of their Administration, were committed to the exemption of the land of that railway from taxation, should now make such a cry against this Government for taking the same course. I think I will be able satisfactorily to show the House, and the country through the House, that these hon. gentlemen are playing the part of political hypocrites when they are professing to show such great alarm because this Government are exempting the lands of that road from taxation. In one of these celebrated sheets, one of which I find issued by the second lieutenant on that side of the House, the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), I find the extraordinary statement that the country is going to lose $5,000,000 by the exemption from duty of rails, cars, engines, lumber, wire, and all other material. Now, Sir, these hon. gentlemen know that that statement is not correct; because they cannot be ignorant of the plain words of the contract. They know that there is no exemption on cars or engines. So far as the cars and engines are concerned, a very material portion of the stock of the Company, they are not exempt from taxation. However, in order to blindfold the electors, they place on record the fact that the exemptions would amount to $5,000,000 for rails, cars, engines and lumber. I propose now to call into the witness box, the leader of the Opposition, to show that that statement is wrong from the very commencement. In the debate last year, in enumerating those different exemptions that hon. gentleman carefully analyzed the whole question, and wound up by saying that the total of those exemptions would amount to $1,000,000—and he was very particular in his enumeration. The first item is the exemption on account of rails, which everybody knows are exempt to every railway for a certain time, I believe for another year from this date. But he assumed the time would expire on the 1st of January, 1882, and the amount of duty the Company would be compelled to pay at that time would be $576,000, assuming the railway will require 150,000 tons; also that the duty on fish-plates would be $42,000; the duty on engines, $60,000; on spikes, $108,000—making a total of $786,000, and then there were exemptions for telegraph and other material, making a total of $1,000,000. Now, instead of telling the House and country that that was the amount, the hon. gentleman who had the engineering of this little campaign sheet has set it at $5,000,000. If you will turn to page 507 of the Hansard of last year, you will find that the right hon. leader of the Opposition then stated that the whole amount would be $1,000,000; but you must deduct from them the rails, because they came in free. But including the rails, the total would be but $1,000,000. We find, from the reports, that the total amounts of exemptions the Company will gain by the purchase of spikes, bolts, nuts and fish plates, will be $160,950, instead of $210,000, as stated by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Then, again, the amount of exemptions for telegraphing material, I place at $50,000, which every one will say is a large estimate. The hon. leader of the Opposition gives the total exemptions as at $1,000,000, while the campaign sheet makes it $5,000,000. But an error of a few millions makes very little difference with these hon. gentlemen. Instead of $5,000,000, however, I estimate the total at $510,950, including the exemption for spikes, bolts, nuts and fish-plates at $160,950. I calculate there might be ten bridges costing $100,000 each, a very large estimate indeed. A duty of 30 per cent. on $1,000,000 would be $300,000; telegraph material, $50,000, and $160,950 as before stated for spikes, bolts, &c., making a total of $510,950, instead of $5,000,000, or a difference of $4,498,050. Then, again, those gentlemen state that the amount they save by the exemption of the road and the capital stock, forever, was $7,250,000. On the occasion of my addressing the House last year, I pointed out that they were stating what they knew perfectly well were not the facts. However, in my absence, having been obliged to leave the House, when the vote came up the hon. member for North Norfolk estimated the exemptions would amount to between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. I had previously shown they would not amount to over $160,000 if the annual payment was capitalized at 6 per cent, and the land valued at $12.14 per acre. I am going to show that the hon. gentlemen were mistaken. I will assume there are 1,000 miles of road built by this Company, which is perhaps excessive, and that it is 200 feet wide, which would give a total amount of land of 32,000 acres, I will estimate that land at $2 an acre. The hon. member for North Norfolk last year stated that—I am sorry I was not present to contradict—that the property of a railway company should be assessed at its cost price. Why, any person familiar with the municipal law of this country knows that you have to assess the railway land at the price of the land adjoining. That is the law of Ontario, which it may be assumed is the strongest possible law, against the Company; and it may also be assumed that in the North-West Territory there will be Provinces established which will have the power of taxation, and whose municipal law will be largely based on the law of Ontario. According to this law, every railway company must annually deliver to the Government a memorandum showing the quantity of land taken, and fixing the price by the average quantity of the land in the neighborhood; so the only property taxed is the land itself. The rails and capital stock are not taxed, although the campaign sheet states the capital stock will be taxed. I challenge the writers to prove that statement, which they know is not true. They say, also, that they have a right to tax the cars and other things. Now, section 29 of the Assessment Law of Ontario provides that the personal property of any incorporated company shall not be assessed, but each shareholder shall be assessed for the value of his shares, unless such stock is so exempt by this Act. By sub-section 18 of section 3, the whole of that stock is exempt by law. I estimate the value of the land at $20 an acre, which is very high and higher than it will ever be in our lifetime. Now, I showed last year that the average price of land in the richest counties of Ontario was $12.14 an acre. I am going to take that land at $20 an acre throughout the line of the railway, 32,000 acres, which would amount to $640,000. I am going to take 100 station houses at $1,500 a piece, which is an extravagant estimate, as very few station houses cost over $1,000 a piece. That will amount to $150,000. The workshops, which are now exempted in every place where there are workshops, I place at $250,000, making altogether $1,040,000. Now, take the assessment at the highest rate in any municipality in Ontario, 1½ cents on the dollar, which will make $15,600 a year on that land; capitalize that and it amounts to $260,000, so that the total taxation for the roadway itself and station houses, which these gentlemen estimated at $7,050,000, at the very outside would amount to only $260,000, or a difference of only $6,990,000. I defy contradiction on that point. These gentlemen, last year, were asked by me to show that my figures were incorrect, and they could not do it; but after I left the House the hon. member for North Norfolk, Mr. Charlton, who always so wise in his own generation, went on to say:

“It is proper to assess a road for what it costs to construct it?”

Did you ever hear anything so insane as that?

“And, in addition, to assess the locomotives, cars, station houses, and all appurtenances for the future transaction of business.”

Could you imagine a more insane statement than that? And yet these hon. gentlemen go about the country making this statement in the school-houses and other places where it cannot be refuted. I have already pointed out that only the roadway is liable to be assessed by law. Now, Sir, the hon. member for West Durham, the hon. leader of the Opposition, had repeatedly declared that the exemption was a very great privilege, and in order to stir up the country against the Government he pointed out the enormity of exempting these people from taxation on land to the amount of $5,000,000. Now, let me make an estimate. I think we can safely assume, looking at what we have seen during the past year, that this Company will not hold over half the land for the next ten years; but supposing they do, we will put that at $2.50 an acre in the wilds of the North-West. Place that assessment at 1 cent on the dollar, amounting to $250,000 a year, and in ten years to $2,500,000, instead of $5,000,000 as stated by these hon. gentlemen, and as stated last year by the organ of the party at $16,700,460. I find that statement in the Globe of December, last year—they might just as well say $20,000,000 as $16,000,000. I want to show the country what absurd statements are made by these hon. gentlemen outside Parliament where there is no one to contradict them. I do not wish to use a strong adjective, but I say a greater amount of hypocrisy never was exhibited than on this question. These hon. gentlemen themselves were always in favor of exempting the land for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Do they deny that? The ex-leader of the Opposition, when he controlled the Government, and when the present leader of the Opposition was hon. Minister of Justice—both these gentlemen were in favor of exempting the land for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Yet the country is now told that the Government is committing an enormous crime in exempting the land from taxation. Let us come to the proof. Let us have a few facts in order that these gentlemen may have an opportunity of saying whether they were in favor of taxation or not. It will be within the recollection of this House that in the year 1872, an Act was passed by the British Columbia Legislature taxing this very land 4 cents an acre. That Bill was placed before the present leader of the Opposition, then Minister of Justice, in order that he might pronounce upon its constitutionality, and he recommended the disallowance of that Act, unless the Legislature revoked what they had done. That Act was not allowed. In 1873 the Legislature of British Columbia amended the Act in accordance with the wishes of the Dominion Government. In 1876 another Act was passed affecting these same lands, which on reference to their Minister of Justice (Mr. Blake), that gentleman refused to allow, as he was of the opinion that it was not the intention of the British Columbia Legislature to tax railway lands, and over his own signature endorsed the action of the present leader of the Government, and fully set forth in his report the reason why it was inexpedient to tax the said lands, repeating the present leader's report thereon. That report showed that the taxation of that land would be a great detriment to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and that the taxation of that land would render it perfectly valueless, and he instructed the Lieutenant-Governor to have the legislation so altered that that land would not be taxed. Those were the views of that hon. gentleman then. He has forgotten them now no doubt, he forgot them last year, because, in the speech he delivered in Parliament, he spoke about the enormous privileges conferred upon that Company by exemptions from taxation. I will now read a few lines from that speech which will show what he thought about this exemption then:

By the contract all that property, station houses, their harbors, their elevators, telegraph lines, road-bed, rails, rolling stock, the equipment, and all their property and capital stock are wholly free forever from Dominion taxation, from taxation in new Provinces, and from taxation by municipalities in new Provinces. Hon. gentleman will observe that here is an important departure from the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, a departure of great consequence, upon which it will be my duty, and the duty of others, further to enlarge at a later stage, while under the Act the land grant of the Company would remain subject to taxation, under the contract that grant is exempt from taxation of all kinds, until used or occupied for twenty years from the date of the grant. That also is an exemption of great value to the Company, of enormous value to the Company; an exemption which added to the right of selection, makes the land grant a wholly different thing from a land grant subject to taxation. A land grant subject to taxation, in a country like that, is as different from a land grant not subject to taxation, as a fertile field is different from a rugged hill. There is an annual burden increasing as the country grows and prospers, of the most serious character, upon all the lands which are subject to the common burden, and this makes the contract altogether different, and makes the value of the company's possession enormously greater.

That was his opinion then. Now, let me read the report made by the present leader of the Opposition in October, 1876 on the Bill of the British Columbia Legislature, which he thought taxed these lands, being referred to him. I hope he will listen to that report, because it was so different from the tune he played last year. At page 288 of Sessional papers for 1877, No. 88—it is as well to be exact on this subject—I find the following:—

"The British Columbia Assembly passed in its Session of 1872, an Act to impose a wild land tax, which was reserved. Upon that Act the following observations were made by the then hon. Minister of Justice, viz:

"35th Victoria, 1872. This Act imposes a tax of four cents per acre upon all lands, with certain exceptions."

"By sub-section A, of the first clause of this Bill, lands vested in, or held in trust for Her Majesty, or for the public uses of the Province, are exempted from the tax, although under this exemption, the lands to be conveyed in trust by the Government of British Columbia to that of the Dominion, under the eleventh section of the Terms of Union between British Columbia and the Dominion, will be free from the tax, it is clear that whenever these lands are conveyed to any company incorporated for the purpose of the construction of the Pacific Railway the exemption will cease.

"Now, the imposition of so heavy a tax as four cents an acre upon this large tract of wild lands, will render it particularly useless.

"The Government of Canada are taking active steps to endeavor to induce capitalists to engage in the great undertaking of constructing a railway to connect the two oceans. The chief inducement to such capitalists is the promise of a large grant of land in aid of the enterprise, and the imposition of such a tax upon these railway lands would greatly diminish the prospect of a company being formed.

"He also begs to suggest that the Lieut.-Governor of British Columbia be instructed to press upon the Government the expediency of exempting these railroad lands in any Act that may hereafter be passed imposing a land tax.

"The Act was not assented to. In 1873 the British Columbia Legislature passed an Act exempting land now or at any time hereafter to be vested in Her Majesty.

"It is by the Act now under consideration (passed, 1876) repealed and the following enacted:—

"Section 8.—All land in British Columbia shall be liable to taxation except all property vested in Her Majesty, and all lands to be conveyed to the Dominion Government under 11th section of the terms of Union (for Pacific Railway).

"Section 10.—In addition to the tax hereby imposed on real estate, an annual tax of five cents per acre shall be levied upon all unoccupied land in the Province (with certain exceptions)."

"It will be observed," says Mr. Blake, "that the exemption from the fixed tax of five cents on unoccupied land is not as extensive as the exemption from the tax on the assessed value; and it might be argued to include lands 'held as Dominion railway lands,' which are exempted from the operation of the 8th section.

"The undersigned (Mr. Blake) presumes that this cannot have been intended, and he suggests that the attention of the Lieut.-Governor be called to the difficulty, with a view to the amendment of the section before the period arrives for disallowing the Act.

"Signed,

"EDWARD BLAKE,
"Minister of Justice."

What better evidence can we have of the fact that the leader of the Opposition and his friends were in favor of exempting these railway lands? I think I have satisfactorily shown that the leader of the Opposition while a Minister of the Crown, expressed the opinion of the Government that it would be impolitic to tax Pacific Railway lands because it would render them valueless; yet the hon. gentleman seeks to condemn the present Government for doing the same thing. Why do they not tell the House and the country that such was the course they proposed, but they do not follow that course because they desire to play a political trick in order to deceive the electors. Their policy, as expressed in the document of October, 1876, shows that they themselves were in favor of exempting from taxation this very land. I have brought this matter to the attention of the House, because I had no opportunity of discussing this question during the Pacific Railway debate. I think the country should know what hon. gentlemen opposite are doing, and, if they are deceiving the public, the public should know it; and as campaign literature is being sent out at the expense of the Legislature (they complain of our friends, but they themselves are sending it out by the ton), I hope they will issue a supplementary sheet showing that the present Government have simply adopted the course they themselves pursued. I am not in favor of tu quoque argument, still, when we find hon. gentlemen acting the part of political hypocrites, the public should know it. I feel that I should fail in my duty to my constituents and this House, did I not, at the earliest opportunity, expose the actions of hon. gentlemen in Opposition, which are calculated to mislead and deceive the public.

On Resolution 79.

Intercolonial Railway—rolling stock..... $305,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. Minister was to bring down a full statement of the expenditure for rolling stock on capital account and revenue account for some years back.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I laid on the Table of the House to-day, a full statement respecting rolling stock from the commencement of operations on the road, from which the hon. member for Lambton will find that the quantity of rolling stock, including all that I am asking for this Session, for the Intercolonial, was much less in proportion to the present length of the road and the amount of traffic than it was in 1878, when Mr. Brydges declared that the rolling stock was taxed to its fullest capacity. The hon. gentleman also stated that rolling stock purchased for other roads, owing to increased business, was not charged to capital. I think I spoke of the Grand Trunk and Great Western; it should have been the Grand Trunk and the Northern. I requested of Mr. Schreiber to send a telegram to these three leading roads to ascertain what their practice was, and I will read to the House the telegrams and the answers:

"J. HICKSON, Montreal.

"Will you please inform me, for the information of the hon. Minister, if it is customary for railway companies to add to their rolling stock at the expense of capital, or is it made a charge against working expenses?"

"G. SCHREIBER."

The answer to that was:

"MONTREAL, 28th October, 1881.

"COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER, Ottawa.

"The stock of railway companies is constantly increased at the cost of their capital. Stock once supplied should, however, be maintained at the cost of revenue, the charges forming a portion of working expenses.

"J. HICKSON."

That is exactly what has been done. The following message was sent to Mr. Greig, the Manager of the Northern and North-Western Railway:—

"OTTAWA, 28th October, 1881.

"TO MANAGER NORTHERN AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY, TORONTO:

"Will you please inform me, for the information of the hon. Minister of Railways, if it is customary for railway companies to add to their rolling stock at the expenses of capital, or is it made a charge against working expenses.

"G. SCHREIBER."

The following answer was received:—

"TORONTO, 31st October, 1881.

"COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER, Ottawa.

"Our understanding is that the original equipment of rolling stock is chargeable to capital, also any necessary additions to rolling stock other than making good damages which are clearly chargeable to working expenses.

"(Signed) G. GREIG,
"Northern and North-Western Railway."

The hon. gentleman will see that the practice is to furnish and equip the railway in the first instance, at the cost of capital, as was done by the hon. gentleman. As I have said, Mr. Brydges, who was their Chief Superintendent of the road, said that the business then on the road required all the rolling stock. It was worked to its fullest capacity, and in charging to capital account the additional stock required for increased business, the course has been pursued on the Intercolonial that has been pursued by all other companies. I hold in my hand a table showing the quantity of rolling stock on the road, and the quantity of freight moved, showing the amount of freight moved per engine is much larger at present than it was in 1877-78. In 1877-78, 100 engines moved 522,710 tons of freight equal to 5,227 tons each, and 121 engines moved equal to 5,996 tons each. In 1882-83, 130 engines are expected to move 900,000 tons of freight, equal to 6,923 tons each, instead of 5,227 tons each, which was the case in 1877-78. The cars being of different capacity I have reduced to ten ton cars for comparison. In order to make the comparison we could not take the number of cars, because, as the smaller cars were worn out, they were replaced by cars of double capacity and not so many in number, and that was done at the cost of working expenses. In 1877-78, 2,640 cars moved 522,720 tons of freight, or 198 tons each. In 1880-81, 2,780 cars moved 725,377 tons freight, equal to 261 tons each, and in 1882-83, 3,639 cars are estimated to move 900,000 tons of freight, or 247 tons each, being forty-nine tons each more than in 1877-78. So that the hon. gentleman will see that in asking for the rolling stock I am asking for, I am still providing a much smaller amount in proportion to the freight to be moved than was the case when the hon. gentleman was in charge.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There is one thing to be remembered about the tonnage of freight cars, and that is the road was only opened in 1876 for freight and a very large number of the trains were running constantly with less than the full freight. We had to create the traffic, and the same amount of rolling stock would have done a great deal more than the business they were required to do. Then the hon. gentleman took credit for having 120 miles more to work, but it should be remembered that we furnished all the rolling stock for the traffic on the Rivière du Loup Branch. We carried all the passengers to and from Quebec in our own cars.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That practice had been discontinued long before the change of Government, the whole traffic was being done by the Grand Trunk Railway and Rivière du Loup, with the exception of some passengers' stock.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no recollection of that change. Was there no agreement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The agreement was abandoned for the work was being done by the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no recollection of its abandonment, but I recollect the agreement being made, and we were running these two years previously the same mileage that the hon. gentleman has been running since with increased force. The agreement shows that we supplied the rolling stock for the traffic except the engines, and to my knowledge, some of the engines used were also ours. I observe there is an item in the Supplementary Estimates of $65,000 for additional rolling stock at the expense of capital. I wish to examine the statement which has been laid on the Table, and which it is impossible for me to do so now; but before we come to this item, I will have an opportunity of discussing it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the Prince Edward Island Railway. That does not stand on the same footing as the statement I make in reference to the Intercolonial. The rolling stock of the Prince Edward Island Railway has been adequate to the traffic, because there has been no great increase of traffic there; but while the rolling stock has been adequate for the traffic of eight months of the year, it has always been utterly insufficient to do the business of the other four months, when almost all the freight that moved on the Island requires to be moved. I have asked for an addition to the rolling stock that will cost $65,000 for Prince Edward Island, simply on this ground. I have laid a full statement with regard to the supply of rolling stock on the Intercolonial, as well as the Island Railway on the Table, and when it is printed the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of informing himself of the details.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the Clerk would send it to the printer's at once we might have it printed for to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope it will be put in type at once.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I am not prepared to dispute the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways that capital accounts on Government railways and other roads are kept open forever, but I am prepared to say that both in Government roads and other roads I believe that system is fruitful of abuses. There is an excuse for it, no doubt, and in the English roads, and the American roads more particularly, this practice of constantly keeping open a capital account has been used and is constantly being used to cover up a great many expenditures which ought properly to go on income instead of capital account. Now, without the full details and a very careful examination, it is not possible for us to decide how far that has been the practice in the present case. I know that many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been charged for rolling stock, both in connection with the Intercolonial, and in connection with the expenditures incurred for the purchase of the Rivière du Loup Branch—in all about one million dollars, though I speak from recollection. The point to which I wish to call the attention of the House is this: It is an unquestionable point whether, in the case of the Government railway, the capital account should be allowed to be kept open, whether it would not be better to spread the items over a reasonable number of years, say three or four or even, in certain exceptional cases, as many as five years perhaps. I would also say this: that a comparison between the management of my hon. friend the member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) and that of the hon. Minister of Railways, is entirely vitiated by reason of this practice. Mr. hon. friend practically, in fact, I think, altogether, closed the capital account of the Intercolonial, and he charged a very large amount for several years to income, which certainly had a better claim to be charged to capital account than rolling stock. I refer more particularly to the charges caused by the change of gauge, and also to the charges caused by substituting steel for iron rails. It is also clear that a very large sum ought in fairness to be deducted from the charges for the past three or four years of my hon. friend's administration, during which he systematically placed to account of income sums which under the present arrangement he certainly would have been justified in charging to capital account. I regret that the hon. Minister holds out no hope of closing capital account. According to his view of the case capital account can remain open to an indefinite extent and for an indefinite period. In fact it will never be closed as long as it is convenient for the Administration to call upon us from time to time for large sums for rolling stock on capital account. There is another objection to this plan, and that is that it appears a considerable inducement on many occasions to throw sums improperly into capital account in order that the Administration may appear more economical than it really is, and also that it quite vitiates all comparison on these points.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt some force in one of the statements made by the hon. gentleman, and that is that during the four or five years of my hon. friend's administration of the Intercolonial, a very large amount of money was expended on renewals for steel rails which did not require to be made since. These renewals were, of course, made a charge against revenue, as all renewals must be. Every road must be renewed as a charge against revenue, and the hon. gentleman adopted the mode of spreading over a number of years an amount of work which was done in a single year. I feel that it is due to the hon. gentleman that he should have the advantage of that expenditure, against which there is no equivalent expenditure since the change of administration, and I have laid on the Table a statement showing the exact amount charged to steel rails renewals in each year he was administering the road. But I do not agree with the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) that it is desirable to close the capital account. I hope it will be a long time before it is closed, because the capital account, according to the proper mode of carrying on the accounts of the Intercolonial as well as other railways, will only be properly and legitimately closed when the increase of business ceases, and therefore I hope it will be a long time. The hon. gentleman surely would not consider it right, if my hon. friend equipped the road to carry 500,000 tons of freight and charged the cost to capital account, that I should not be allowed to charge to capital account the extra equipment required to carry 1,000,000 tons of freight. Where would it come from? The hon. gentleman must see that if there is only rolling stock sufficient to handle 500,000 tons of traffic, you must, in the nature of things, if that traffic doubles, increase the rolling stock, and that is a legitimate charge to capital. We have had a great additional volume of traffic. I have a letter under my hand from the Chief Superintendent, stating that, in a single month, the increased traffic handled was $34,000; and it is quite impossible to have an increase of traffic or 40 or 50 per cent. without providing for it from capital account. I have endeavored to bring down the fullest possible information, so as to place every fact in relation to the road within the reach of every member, so that he may give the question the most sifting examination that is possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course, I want to give it that examination before I reply to the hon. gentleman's observations, because the last return brought down was so grossly inaccurate and so wrongly compiled as to be intended deliberately to place my position in an unfavorable light, and to place the hon. gentleman's position in a more favorable light. It was a comparative statement of the expenditures which he and I incurred, and I was charged in it over $500,000 more than I should have been. The hon. gentleman has refused to reduce that, and how do I know that this statement is not cooked also?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has no right to apply such terms to that return. If I am bringing down a statement of the charges on revenue for the different years, I ask the hon. gentleman if I am not right in taking his own figures; and they embrace a charge for steel rail renewals, which was a proper charge on revenue. The only inaccuracy in the return was in favor of the hon. gentleman, because in his statement of renewals he had included a large amount for fences and other things which we have habitually charged to working expenses. There was no misstatement or attempt to mislead, but a desire to place the facts in the fullest light before the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say that if there was no desire to mislead the House, it was very singularly misled. The hon. gentleman did not use my figures. My figures give in one instance $1,461,000, while he makes them $1,640,000, and in another instance my figures give $1,611,000, while the hon. gentleman makes them $1,811,000. The annual reports stated the actual amounts, less renewals for steel rails, and the actual amounts including the renewals, and this the hon. gentleman took. He had the two statements there, and yet he took the one that showed in his own favor, and not in my favor.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no return that could be brought down that would be in the hon. gentleman's favor, and that is the reason of these strong and unwarranted statements. A fair and honest statement is not in favor of the hon. gentleman, and he knows it right well. Since the Intercolonial has been a railway, this House has never been furnished with the full and accurate detail of figures that I have laid on the Table of the House, and it is because these figures place the hon. gentleman in the position they do, that he makes these unwarranted and unwarrantable statements. I tell the hon. gentleman that there is no possibility of bringing down a comparative statement that would be favorable to him. If he wants to refer to a question of inaccurate statements, I ask him why it was that when he was responsible for the statements that were brought down, that he had $545,000 voted by this House for capital expenditure, expended by himself as capital, declared by himself to be capital expenditure, declared by Mr. Brydges to be capital expenditure, and yet that amount stands in the Public Accounts to-day, brought down by his own Finance Minister, as chargeable to revenue. I ask was that a false statement or a true statement? The statement I have made is a strictly accurate one; it was found that there were a few unimportant clerical errors in it, which were immediately corrected; but every statement I have made to the House is as thoroughly well founded as any statement can be, and was a fair honest exhibit of the true condition of things in every particular.

Mr. ANGLIN. In the early part of the evening the hon. gentleman seemed disposed to recede from the position which he took with regard to railway expenses and management, and to admit that charges for management should properly be deducted from the gross charges for working expenses in any comparative statement intended to show the relative merits of his management and the management of his predecessor; but he seems to have courage enough to assume his old position, and to assert that no statement could possibly be made that would place the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton in a favorable light. What we complain of is that the statement which he has placed before this House—no doubt, in order that it may be used throughout the country before the next election to prove that the hon. Minister of Railways has managed the railway efficiently and economically, while his predecessor has bungled it—is intended to create a most mistaken and erroneous impression. There is no misstatements so gross as a misstatement conveyed in words or figures which, taken merely by themselves, appear to be absolutely correct. Judging from the Public Accounts or reports of the Railway Department, the working expenses seem to be what they are represented in this paper. On the 20th of February last I made a motion for the return of the number of locomotives, cars, and other rolling stock, purchased during the past year or contracted for by the Minister of Railways, which could surely be made up in an hour or two; but though I have asked for it again and again, to this day I have been unable to get it. But this document, which required ten times the amount of labor, was scarcely spoken of by the member for Centre Huron when, presto, it appeared on the Table ready for distribution. Why? Because the return I moved for would damage the Government, but the other return produced was considered profitable and advantageous. In this document it is stated that the working expenses of 1877-78 were $1,811,273; that, no doubt, is a strictly correct transcription from the Public Accounts, but it conveys a most erroneous idea of the actual expenses of that year. In the report for that year we find that, in 1876-77, the expenditure for renewals was $544,543, entered in the Public Accounts. Now, $200,000 was charged to working expenses in that year, and $200,000 for the year 1877-78, the balance being charged in the accounts of the next year. The cost of working the line was $1,811,273; but this report goes on to say, including $200,000 for renewals. Subtracting that $200,000 for those extraordinary, unprecedented renewals, including all the steel rails on the road in the Lower Provinces, the working expenses are reduced to $1,611,000. We have had it stated over and over again that of that sum for the working expenses, the cost of converting the rolling stock of the old road into a condition to suit the new road, and of the narrowing of the gauge formed a large portion. We have had before the House the statement of Mr. Brydges, that the expenditure on that account came to another $100,000; and if a comparative statement of the expenses of the road under each Administration is to be made, this sum also should be taken from the amount charged for working expenses. If it was deducted, the expenses would reach but $1,511,500. There might be some excuse for overlooking an item of that kind, of which no special mention is made; but there is no excuse for overlooking the other item, of which mention is expressly made in the official report. In that same year we have the statement that the deficit, as compared with the year previous, was reduced by $74,901. The earnings of the road increased very rapidly indeed that year. In 1876-77, the first year that the whole road was open, the earnings were but $1,154,245, and in the year following, $1,378,947. The next year, under the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, the earnings declined to a very extraordinary extent. The official report plainly states that of this $1,811,000, which the hon. Minister of Railways is so fond of bringing before the House and country as the amount of the working expenses under the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton, $200,000 was fairly and properly chargeable to extraordinary renewals. Therefore, in a comparative statement, that sum should have been deducted. If you come to the following year, for which the hon. Minister of Railways has often, before the House and public meetings, held the hon. member for Lambton responsible, although for nearly nine months of that year he had the management of the road himself, you find a very remarkable state of things. The hon. Finance Minister has united with the hon. Minister of Railways in boasting of his consummate skill, and great energy and wonderful ability, by which he has succeeded in converting a deficit of over $700,000 into a small surplus; and for that deficit he holds the hon. member for Lambton responsible—but he is not responsible. The railway year commenced on the 1st July, 1878, and the hon. member for Lambton retired from office in the following October. In that first portion of the year, the expenses could not have been very large. The great bulk of the expenditure which swelled up the deficit was incurred under the Administration of the present hon. Minister of Railways, and for which he is directly responsible. By the reports of his own officials, we can see the character of that expenditure. Mr. Schreiber says on that point:

"In 1876-77, the expenditure for renewals amounted to $543,591.68, and was entered in the Public Accounts, Part III., page 58, under the head of renewals, surplus account. Of that sum, $200,000 was charged to working expenses for renewals in that year; $200,000 is charged for he fiscal year 1877-73, and the balance, $143,591.63, will be included in charges for renewals in the account of 1878-79. The gross earnings of the year have been $1,378,946.78, being an increase of 19.44 per cent., as compared with last year. The cost of working the line, with maintenance, is $1,811,273.56, including $200,000 for renewals, chargeable to 1877-78, for the total expenditure. $543,561.88 made in 1876-77. The renewals of the year previous were nearly double. In the former year they required 354,000 rails, and in the latter 167,742, showing an increase of the expenditure in the former year of 143,943. I think, if there is anything that the hon. member for Lambton can fairly boast, it was the condition he left the rolling stock of the Intercolonial Railway."

We find that this year, under the administration of the hon. Minister opposite, an extraordinary expenditure was incurred for improvements and repairs, which produced this strange result of a deficit of $700,000. The rolling stock was, to a considerable extent, reconstructed, a great number of railway cars being rebuilt, a number of others repaired and considerable alterations made in passenger cars, and extraordinary efforts were made to put the track in a very much better condition than it was before. A great number of additional sidings were put down, water tanks, and other necessary appliances were provided, and every expenditure possible was crowded into that year in order to put the road in the highest possible state of efficiency to do all the business likely to be done for some years. By this extraordinary expenditure incurred in that year the hon. Minister was enabled to effect a very large reduction in the expenditure of the years following. The hon. gentleman's object which was not then apparent has since become apparent. His object was to hold the hon. member for Lambton responsible for this expenditure and deficit, and therefore he has gone through the country proclaiming every where that the deficit under the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton amounted to $700,000, although in reality that deficit occurred under the hon. gentleman's own Administration. Under the management of the hon. member for Lambton the deficit never exceeded $200,000, and that was when the road was new and the traffic had to be created, and many things were necessary to render perfect the equipment of the road. Immediately after July 1st, 1876, the hon. member for Lambton, determined in the public interest that construction account must be closed once for all. Had he chosen to charge to construction account a great many of the items which he charged to expense account the balance would never have seemed so large as it was, even though we admit those extraordinary renewals must properly be charged to construction account. Thus we found the hon. Minister declaring, with a great flourish of trumpets and display of economy, after having wasted a whole year before making a single move in that direction, that we had discharged officials, clerks and employees of all kinds along the line of the railway. I have before me a return of the number of officials discharged, and I find that the total was 15 out of 119 employes, and on further analyzing the return I found that this change was accompanied by another. A very considerable portion of the work formerly done at Moncton was transferred to the Department here in Ottawa, and the money which it cost to do that work in Ottawa is not charged to the Intercolonial, but to the Civil Service Account. The hon. Minister may perhaps claim credit for having reduced the expenditure by some trifling amount, on account of dismissals and reductions of that kind, but there his whole claim must really end. We find next that station-masters, telegraph operators, freight clerks, checkers and baggage-masters were discharged to the number of fifty-five. Now, Sir, comes the question, as to whether there was any unnecessary number of men of that class employed on the road. Surely, the station-masters could not very well have been reduced in number. I am not aware that any stations were closed, and telegraph operators being generally connected with station-masters, some amalgamations might have been effected. Then we come to engine-drivers, conductors, brakemen and baggagemen, and here we find the numbers were reduced from 539 to 451, in all eighty-eight. Now, here is a point where, I think, the hon. gentleman made a most egregious mistake. He told us when first announcing his changes to the House, that a very large number of persons were employed in cleaning locomotives—an absurdly large number he seemed to think. Well, I am not prepared to say, there was not more of that class of men employed than were required, but we all know that there could be no improper motive for the Ministry of the day or the Superintendent of the railway in employing more men of that class than were absolutely necessary, because it is well known that persons who are willing to accept employment in that capacity, are rarely possessed of much political influence. We found soon after what that meant, to some extent. The country was surprised to find that this economical Minister was proceeding to paint over the brass work of nearly all the locomotives employed on the railways—a most ridiculous piece of economy which has distinguished the hon. gentleman during his action of the railway. Since then we have heard various complaints with regard to the condition of the locomotives. The hon. gentleman asserts that they are maintained in the highest possible state of efficiency; but, as I have had occasion to tell him before, the public have had a very different opinion of the condition of the railway and rolling stock. Within a few days we have had letters published over the signature of Mr. John Murray, who for years acted as fireman, and afterwards as engine driver on the road, in which he gives a most deplorable account of the condition of the locomotives. He attributes three unhappy deaths on the railway to the fact of the inefficiency of the locomotives, particularly locomotive No. 73, which was absolutely incapable of shunting a train. We find, moreover, according to the hon. gentleman himself, that conductors, engine drivers and firemen are at least permitted on that railway to work many more hours in the week than is compatible with the efficient discharge of their duties. He tells us that they do this work voluntarily, that they were never compelled to do it; but he did not tell us that in consequence of these men being overworked most deplorable results have occurred on that railway. Mr. Murray asserts that he was requested to work more hours than he was willing to work, that he was threatened with dismissal if he did not work over-time, and that after having been forty-eight hours without sleep he refused to take charge of a train. The coroner's jury, sitting in inquest on the body of Conductor Geldert, corroborated, to a great extent, the statements of Mr. Murray, because they recommended that thereafter persons in charge of trains should not be required or permitted to work more than a reasonable number of hours. Why, Sir, the story of the case of poor Geldert was one of the saddest that we have ever heard of on any railway. This man started with a heavy train and found himself in what is technically called a hole—I presume a place graded on both sides—with this heavy train and this incapable engine. So weary was he that he fell asleep on that train, and other hands on that train being apparently also wearied out and asleep, they were incapable of discharging their duties properly, and consequently this deplorable accident took place. All this was in consequence of the admirable management of the hon. gentleman, who boasts here, as he boasted elsewhere, of having dismissed fifty-five conductors and engine drivers. Under such admirable management a train stands still on the road, another train dashes into it, and poor Geldert is killed. A short time before that, I am credibly informed that a train started from Moncton towards the north, in charge of men who were all exhausted for want of sleep; that soon after starting these men all fell asleep, a portion of the train somehow became detached and remained behind and they never missed it. When about thirteen miles from Moncton this train, conducted by men who were asleep from over fatigue, dashed into another train on the siding and great damage was done to property, though no life was lost. The hon. gentleman boasts that he has effected great economy in the dismissal of these conductors and engine men, but it appears these men were paid by the number of hours they were employed, paid for each trip, and, therefore, no more money would have been paid for these fifty-five additional railway men than would have been paid if they had not been dismissed. That is a kind of economy that will not procure the hon. gentleman much credit before the country. Now, let me come to the item of repairs made upon the track. We saw that, according to the statement of Mr. Schreiber, so many hundred thousand sleepers were laid down, so many sidings were constructed in that year, and then we find him coming in when this extraordinary work was all done and dismissing a number of men, and then boasting that he had reduced the staff. He does not attempt to say that the number of men regularly employed on the track was reduced. We know that the number was reduced, and that very serious consequences resulted from that reduction. We find also that a large number of roadmasters, section men, and laborers were dismissed, reducing the number from 624 to 449. Now, how many of these did the hon. gentleman discharge, because so large an extra number must have been employed during the year previous to do this large amount of extra work described by Mr. Schreiber? We cannot say, but I think we may reasonably conclude that the proportion was very large. Then, again, we come to machinists, carpenters, painters, etc. Now, Sir, to ascertain the meaning of the dismissals here we must also look at what Mr. Schreiber tells us. He states that during the previous year a great number of cars were being built, that extensive changes were made in many other cars, and extensive repairs were made requiring a large additional number of hands for that particular period, a larger number than would be required thereafter, even if the hon. gentleman had continued to build the locomotives required from year to year at Moncton, and had continued to make all necessary repairs. But we find the number 720 reduced to 593, a reduction which was a matter of great boasting on the part of the hon. gentleman. Those were all reductions of a mixed character. Some of them were proper reductions, quite justifiable and even necessary, because the extraordinary work in which the various departments have been engaged was then completed, and there was no longer need for their services. Those who remember what transpired at Moncton before the hon. member became Minister of Railways must remember that the hon. member for Lambton found it necessary from time to time to discharge large numbers of men, not discharging them all at once, not throwing them on the labor market of the Lower Provinces, but selecting men who would be likely to obtain employment elsewhere, and so reducing the staff. That reduction went on, and the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, especially about Moncton, raised a loud outcry when men were dismissed; they said the hon. Minister was throwing whole families out of employment and on the cold charity of the world. When the hon. member for Cumberland came into power he found it desirable to stop for a time that system of dismissals, and found it desirable to make employment for the men then retained. At all events there is the fact that a great deal of extraordinary employment was found for the men for that particular year, but at the end of the year the hon. gentleman found it necessary to discharge a large number. There was no economy, no claim for credit to statesmanship to be based on such an operation; but that is exactly one of the points on which the hon. Minister founds his claim to administrative ability and efficient railway management. I have shown that the hon. Minister is not justified in charging the hon. member for Lambton with any degree of responsibility for the expenditure of 1878-79, that he himself is responsible for the expenditure of that year, and that the expenditure of that year was a reason why many men were employed in the various departments, and why it was felt desirable, at the end of a year, to discharge a large number of hands. I say, therefore, the hon. Minister has no right to claim credit in this regard. But the hon. gentleman says, the traffic is growing from day to day. Traffic grew rapidly under the hon. member for Lambton. The road was opened only on the 1st July, 1876; it was under the hon. gentleman's control a little over two years, during which period trade expanded most satisfactorily. A number of new businesses were developed—the fish business was developed, the cattle trade was created, the Allan Line was compelled to call at Halifax, and English goods were brought back in return. The hon. Minister has told the House the increase of traffic between Halifax and the West was a justification for obtaining a large quantity of new rolling stock. One of the difficulties of the railway was to find return freight for the cars which went down to Halifax from the Upper Provinces. Cars went down full and returned empty, but instead of their returning empty, they now carry European goods and West India sugar—a change for which hon. gentlemen opposite is entitled to credit. That fact should add to the net profits of the railway, the cost of moving trains from Halifax to Lévis being very nearly as large for an empty as for a full train. The number of passenger trains is no larger than those of four years ago, the number of cars attached being slightly larger, the cost of moving goods being just as great; but the increase returns and profits should be much larger. So it is with respect to freight. When the road was opened it was necessary to move trains which had only a few car loads; but since the development of the traffic such is no longer a necessity, and therefore there should be less expenditure to move one ton of freight per mile than in olden times. The earnings of the road were as follows: During the last year of the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton, $1,103,708; the year before last $1,506,000; last year, $1,760,000. Last year the amount was $1,760,000, an increase of $254,000, and in comparing the gross earnings as well as the expenditures we must not forget that we have added 120 miles to our railway from Rivière du Loup to Point Lévis. On the other hand we find that the number of employees has been greatly increased. The number, in 1880, was 1,910, and this number has been increased to 2,154. We find also that the rate of wages has increased by $86,813. I am aware that many persons employed on the railway, steady, skilful and capable men, complain very bitterly that the wages they receive are very much less than they could receive elsewhere. We find that the working expenses have increased $156,422, while the earnings have increased only $254,000. Now, I do not think that that is a very extraordinary or creditable showing, taking into account the fact that this is comparatively a new road, and that therefore, the expenses should be cut down by the annual increase of the earnings. I would now point to one or two particular instances as specially exemplifying the peculiar character and quality of the hon. gentleman's administration of this railway. We find in the mere monetary arrangements of the road some very peculiar transactions. In the Supplementary Estimates there appears an item for coal-hoppers purchased from Mr. Burland. I moved for the papers in that transaction, and the papers which came down are quite as remarkable for what does not appear as they are for what they contain. The first paper is a report from the mechanical superintendent, dated at Towanda, Pa., 2nd November, 1881. The hon. Minister told us that he was urged very earnestly by the proprietors of coal mines and others to put on additional rolling stock, that he resisted their solicitations for a time, but finally yielded. It appears that he ascertained by some means, that coal hoppers were for sale by Mr. Burland, but he does not say how he came into communication with that gentleman. He does not say that any tenders were asked or anything of that kind, but at all events communications began which resulted in the purchase of a number of coal hoppers. One would have thought that in a transaction of this kind, in which the hon. gentleman's conduct was impugned, in which there existed a suspicion of impropriety, that he would have made a clean breast of the whole matter and proved that his conduct was beyond question; but we have among the papers no copy of applications made by the owners of coal mines or others, nor of any proposal received from Mr. Burland, nor of any letter addressed by the Minister to Mr. Burland, nor by Mr. Burland to the Minister. We have no copy of any instructions to the mechanical superintendent, but on the contrary the hon. gentleman appears to have rushed in medias res, so to speak. We begin with the report of the superintendent, who, at somebody's instructions, found himself in the State of New York inspecting certain coal hoppers. What does he tell us about them:

"I reached this place yesterday A.M. and found that nearly all the coal cars that I came to see had within the last few days been put in service, after having been idle, it is said, since last spring. I saw about 120 yesterday, part of them here and part of them at Waverley, 20 miles away; last night 118 came in and I looked at them this forenoon. Some of these cars are about nine years old and not in very good condition, while others vary from less than one year to five, and all in very good order, most of them quite serviceable, a few, about fifty, as good as new, having been used but little.

"The wheels and axles, of which there are three sizes, are altogether different from anything we have in use, and if they should be purchased would involve the procuring of new patterns and castings to be used in repairs.

"As I wired you to-day, I think about two hundred could be selected from the whole lot that would be really serviceable, the principal objection being that they are different from our cars.

Mr. Lyon, the superintendent here, says that if they are purchased they will be put in condition to run should any require it.

"If we take them some person should be here to select unless you are willing to trust Mr. Lyon not to send any bad cars. I understand he has a market for forty or fifty of the poorer ones.

"I do not think it worth while to stay any longer."

This is the first report. So it appears that these cars which he supposed were five-ton cars, but which I believe were only four-ton cars, were being abandoned by this road. That report is dated the 2nd November, and whether the Minister saw that report from the 2nd to the 12th of November there is nothing to show, but on the 12th he wrote a remarkable letter to Sir Hugh Allan in these words:

"MY DEAR SIR HUGH,—Just before leaving Montreal you gave me verbal notice that you intended on my return to demand possession of the Pictou Branch.

"I have agreed to go over the Eastern extension next Friday with the officers of my Department, and, at the request of Captain Melbourne, to inspect the condition of the road.

"You are, no doubt, aware that the greatly increased coal traffic has created an imperative demand for a large number of coal cars, and I am now asking tenders for the immediate construction of 400 cars, a large proportion of which will be fifteen-ton cars. It would be impossible for you to take over the road without something like 400 cars, in addition to the supply that would be furnished you by the Intercolonial.

"Mr. Burland, of Messrs. Burland, Watson & Co., has proposed to sell 300 good second-hand coal cars, now in New York. Of course if the road is to be taken over by you, the Intercolonial will not require these cars in addition to the number I am contracting for.

"Having received notice that you intend to demand possession of the branch immediately, it would be impossible for me to assume the purchase of these cars while their acquisition presents a favorable opportunity of equipping your road with coal cars that are absolutely necessary to your assuming its management, and at small cost, and meeting the present necessities of the traffic under these circumstances, I have decided to propose to you to purchase these 300 cars, at a price to be fixed by our inspector, who will be sent from the Department for that purpose.

"In case you do not obtain possession of the road, I will take the cars at cost price.

"Hoping that this proposal will be satisfactory to you,

"I remain,

"Yours faithfully,

"CHARLES TUPPER.

"Sir HUGH ALLAN, Montreal."

Sir Hugh Allan allows seven days to elapse, and then he telegraphs on the 19th of November, from Montreal, to Sir Charles Tupper:

"If assured of permanent possession of Pictou Branch, I would buy Burland's rolling stock at once, but under the circumstances you should buy it, and if I get the road I would take over from you. Reply before four o'clock, as Burland leaves for New York to-night."

We find Sir Hugh Allan's interest excited in this Mr. Burland; but as to whether anything passed between these gentlemen during that week, we are left in the dark. We find Sir Charles Tupper, however, responding at once to Sir Hugh Allan's telegram, all the way from Stewiacke, N. S.:

"If found good, I will take 200 on terms proposed by you.

What are those terms? There are no terms mentioned in Sir Hugh Allan's telegram.

"Provided they are delivered at Chaudière Junction within ten days after I receive report of inspector, and notify Mr. Burland of their acceptance, and that the price does not exceed $210 each, delivered at that point"

Up to this moment, so far as these papers show, the hon. Minister had no means of determining the value of these cars, and yet he offers this large sum of $210 each for them. That telegram was on the 19th of November; on the 21st of November, Mr. Whitney telegraphs from Philadelphia to Mr. Pottinger:

"I leave this morning. There has been trouble with some of the cars jumping the track, and for this reason were refused by another railway. Better not close trade at present. Am making further enquiry."

So Mr. Whitney reports two days after Sir Charles Tupper has promised to purchase this large number of cars. On the 22nd of November Mr. Whitney writes from Young's Hotel, Boston:

"I wired you to-day from New York that Barrows & Company had made a written offer to supply 100 twenty-ton gondola cars for $555 each, delivered at York, S. W. I think this a much better offer than that of the five-ton cars, provided the time of delivery will suit, viz., 15th January. You did not let me know the price asked for the small cars and I did not think to ask for it, and I may say here that fifty of them would be worth about $250, 100 about $190 to $200, and fifty not more than $150, though the latter are in such condition as to be serviceable for some time yet. Still they are old cars and would not last long; this is supposing they run well and do not jump the track, as I was informed they did by a person on the train to Philadelphia, and there is the other objection of their different sizes and description of axles and bearings, spoken of in my former letter."

On the 23rd of November we find Sir Hugh Allan telegraphing to Sir Charles Tupper:

"The following is a copy of a telegram received this afternoon from Mr. J. B. Burland, dated New York this day. About fifty of the cars have only been used two or three times; balance of 200 in good condition. Will you kindly address any instructions to me at Morton House, Union Square, here; if you have any instructions to give Mr. Burland on this subject, you can either address him direct, or if you will send them to me, I will forward same."

So Sir Hugh Allan still declares his deep interest in the welfare of Mr. Burland. Sir Charles Tupper telegraphs from Moncton on the 26th of November to Sir Hugh Allan:

"From inspector's report, I don't think it advisable to take any of the cars offered by Mr. Burland."

There is his conclusion, which seems to be a fair and proper conclusion. We find next in these papers a great gap. Evidently some papers are not furnished, so as to enable us to see the whole of this transaction clearly. The next we find is a telegram from Mr. Burland at New Glasgow to Sir Charles Tupper in Montreal:

"Have received answer. You can select fifty, and will deliver at Chaudière Junction at $238 cash, or 100 at $228, delivered same place. Kindly advise me here at your earliest convenience, as I have been requested to reply to-morrow."

Here Mr. Burland says: "Have received your answer." Where is that answer? The last document from Sir Charles Tupper says: "I don't think it advisable to take any of the cars." We next have a peculiar document, dated the 10th December, 1881, by telegraph from Montreal to Mr. Pottinger :

" We will take delivery at the Chaudière Junction, of 100 boiler and hopper cars, which Whitney may select, price $220."

Surely there must have been some telegrams passing between these gentlemen before that extraordinary conclusion was arrived at. The last statement by Sir Charles Tupper was: " We will not have the cars;" and the next thing we find is this order for the delivery of the cars at a certain price. I have only to remark that here is an account in regard to the Intercolonial Railway dated 3rd January, 1882, and there is a receipt as follows: " Received from the Intercolonial payment in full, $22,850," dated 25th February, 1882. The cars were taken possession of about the 3rd of January. I find also that on the 22nd December, Pottinger telegraphs to Schrieber: " Shall I enter the cars free?" Schrieber telegraphs back: " Yes, enter them free." We also find that there is a pretence of obtaining the authority of the Governor in Council to this transaction. On 3rd January, Schrieber telegraphs: " 100 coal cars having been offered at the Chaudière Junction at $228 each, I recommend the offer be accepted." Already the cars had been delivered. After Schrieber recommended the offer be accepted, Sir Charles Tupper makes his report recommending that that recommendation be carried out, when an Order in Council of the 23rd February is made, ordering the purchase of the coal hoppers which had been purchased by telegraph weeks before. This is one of the most extraordinary transactions that could be discovered even in the most secret history of the management of any railway on this continent. The fact that those papers are brought down in this condition, and that many documents have been deliberately suppressed, although the House ordered them to be brought down, is in itself evidence of a transaction of a very extraordinary and reprehensible character. The cars were purchased in spite of the recommendation of the mechanical engineer and of the decision of the Minister himself, who decided they would not suit and that a much higher price than the value set upon by the mechanical engineer. The delivery was appointed, and they were put into use on the Intercolonial, though entirely unfit for the railway. The experience of the Intercolonial Railway has shown that the small hoppers were not the best kind for use. With regard to those hoppers what do we find? They were scarcely put in use when they excited a strong feeling of indignation among the employees of the road. They cannot even bring the coal in safety from the Spring Hill mines to the market place. I got a letter telling me that, of five of those hoppers, two came in absolutely empty and the other three nearly empty. I have been told also, that it was necessary to fasten the hoppers at the bottom and remove the coal by shovelling. I find from a return, that six of those hoppers were undergoing repairs, and no less than 114 were awaiting repairs; and rumor says, that a very large number of these were practically condemned as entirely unfit for the purpose—that the evil repute they possessed, of jumping the track, is well founded, and that they are exceedingly dangerous. I am told, whether truly or not, that a young man, Brown, killed at Amherst, owed his death to those hoppers. But this is one of the transactions which exemplifies in a remarkable light the political economy of the hon. gentleman opposite, his great ability, great prudence, great public opinion and entire disregard of all personal and private motives in the management of the Intercolonial. I think the hon. gentleman hereafter should put his case before the House and public, in such a way as to do justice at once to his opponents and himself. We are not at all disposed to deny to the hon. gentleman any credit to which he is fairly entitled for the management of this railway. But when he challenged the management of the hon. member for Lambton, and used figures in order to prove prima facie that his own administration was so much more economical and able than that of his predecessor—when he claims credit for having converted a deficit of $710,000 into a surplus of some $500 or $600, and when he charges that his predecessor, either by waste or extravagance, want of ability, skill, or due attention to the public interest in the management of the road, created that unfavorable condition of things, he must expect his statements will not go unchallenged. While he charges his predecessor with extravagance, want of ability and skill, he cannot expect this statement will pass unchallenged. All the official figures and facts disprove his statements and throw light on his own mode of managing the road. The hon. gentleman now ventures on another course, and says that whatever may be the comparison of results, he, at all events, has managed the 840 miles of road for no greater amount than the hon. member for Lambton expended in the management of the shorter distance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For much less.

Mr. ANGLIN. According to his own statement, the working expenses in 1877-78 amounted to $1,811,173. Deducting $200,000 off that would bring the amount down to $1,611,173, and I maintain that off that should be taken $100,000 more for the rebuilding and reconstruction of rolling stock. But leaving that aside, we have $1,611,000 in 1877-78 against his $1,603,000 in 1879 and $1,753,000 in 1881. The hon. gentleman will perhaps say that we did a larger trade in 1880-1. No doubt we did, but it would require a very elaborate calculation, which probably only a railway accountant could make, to ascertain exactly how much more or less the hon. member for Lambton's expenditure was than that of 1880-1, taking into account the difference in quantity of freight and passengers carried. If we look at the earnings we have not grown per mile so much as the hon. gentleman would lead us to suppose. In the first year the road earned $1,600 per mile; the next year $1,931 per mile; the year following, under the administration of the hon. gentleman opposite, it fell to $1,812; the year following it rose to $1,825, and the year after to $2,095 per mile.

Mr. PLUMB. What objection is there to that?

Mr. ANGLIN. I am not objecting. I merely point out the fact that the increase of earnings has not been so very rapid or wonderful as the hon. gentleman would have us suppose it has been under his administration. For the two years under his administration the earnings were less than the last year of the hon. member for Lambton's administration. Then when we come to talk of the acquisition of the Rivière du Loup Branch we must remember that that was not a road running through a wilderness at a loss of money, but a road which had netted even under the miserable management of the Grand Trunk Railway an actual profit of $38,000 the year before we got possession of it, so that our earnings should have increase in a greater ratio after receiving this additional mileage. The increase, however, was not so great as the hon. gentleman would have us believe. I have said the working expenses could not be calculated fairly according to the additional mileage. We ran our own trains over that road during the time it was run by the Grand Trunk Railway. Under our arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway, it was specially provided that no charge should be made by the Intercolonial for the use of our cars. We gave them all our trains. Every passenger and freight car employed on the Intercolonial, to and from Quebec, belonged to us, that went over this 120 miles of road which caused more wear and tear to rolling stock than two or three times the length of road elsewhere would. The maintenance of way for the last year or two, since the hon. gentleman has taken possession of that road, is very trifling, because during that period the road underwent extensive repairs chargeable to capital account. The whole road-bed was renewed, and the superstructure was also renewed during that time and charged to capital account, so that the maintenance of the road during this time could have cost but a trifling sum. I am sorry to have detained the House so long, but I felt it was necessary to answer the hon. gentleman's statements. Let me add one word more. I charge the hon. gentleman with having unnecessarily gone out of the country to obtain a very large quantity of rolling stock that with proper precautions, prudence and oversight, we might have obtained within the Dominion. I do not know how much of the rolling stock purchased last year has been purchased outside the Dominion. It is said a large portion has been made in the workshops of Quebec. There is no reason why it should not have been manufactured in the workshops at Moncton by the Dominion Government itself. But there is less fault to be found with them for that than in going outside the country to purchase rolling stock that could have been provided just as well in this country, though I admit not quite so rapidly. But we could furnish all the rolling stock we want, and it is the duty of the Government to afford every possible facility to our own manufacturers. I go for fair play to our manufacturers. For whatever is fair and right they will find no more earnest advocate than myself. The hon. gentleman last year went out of the country to purchase in the United States $164,000 worth of rolling stock, and last year he probably purchased twice as much outside the Dominion. This is one of the charges I make against his administration of the railway, that he has not taken the pains and care which should have been incumbent upon him as a member of the Government to afford an opportunity to our own mechanics and artisans of supplying the railway stock required on the railway. I have hurried over these statements in order to occupy as little time as possible, and I thank the House for the kind attention with which they have listened to me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I shall not reply at length to the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester for the reason that almost all the statements he has made to-night have been made again and again before, and have been again and again refuted, and I have learned by painful experience that there is one thing the hon. gentlemen opposite cannot forgive, and that is any effort at saving money. I have learned by painful experience that you can bring down any amount of expenditure you like, and these gentlemen will cheerfully vote it, but if a member of the Administration is able to show that by care and attention he is effecting a considerable economy and saving hundreds of thousands of dollars to the country, it is a crime that these hon. gentlemen cannot forgive, and there is more trouble in getting an item through this House in connection with what a great saving has been effected, than any other vote that can be asked for. The hon. gentleman has referred to the question of obtaining rolling stock outside of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman has had his answer two or three times before; he knows right well that it was done in consequence of the great and unexpected volume of traffic which demanded measures to be taken in order to handle it that were beyond the capacity of the country to furnish. The hon. gentleman has been told before and knows right well that not a single dollar has been expended outside the country for rolling stock that could have been procured in the country at the time it was required. Yet again and again we have the same old story repeated, which has been again and again refuted. Now, the hon. gentleman sees something very suspicious in the purchase from Burland of 100 hopper cars. Why, Sir, the explanation was not only made to the House, but it was apparently satisfactory to the hon. gentleman, who voted the money for these cars without a single comment until to-night he found it was necessary, in order to talk against time, at this late hour to go elaborately into the question. I met the story at every point by stating to the House that I first saw Mr. Burland when I was at Shediac on my way to Prince Edward Island. At that time it was expected the Eastern extension, which belongs to the Company of which Sir Hugh Allan was President, would shortly take over the road. They had given us notice that they intended to take the road off our hands, and under these circumstances, I referred Mr. Burland to Sir Hugh Allan, as a party who would likely avail himself of the opportunity of making a purchase of these cars; that he could not take over the road until he had necessary rolling stock to operate it, and that would naturally belong to that section of the road from Truro to the Strait of Canso, which would then pass into Sir Hugh Allan's hands under the contract made with the late Government. That I should suppose would be a perfectly natural step for me to take, and when I found on my arrival at Pictou, after having visited Prince Edward Island, and was waited upon by the coal owners there who urged the necessity of having a large additional supply of coal cars, in order to fill the orders and engagements they had made, I was obliged to take up this subject on short notice, and being on that tour of inspection, having the Chief Engineer of Government Railways and the Chief Superintendent with me, and being in communication from time to time with the Mechanical Superintendent, who was also with me on that occasion, it is quite evident that a part of this transaction would naturally be conversational and a part would be reduced to writing. All the papers and all the correspondence I am aware of that was not embraced in personal communications were brought down to the House, and the hon. gentleman ought to know from the various places at which these communications were dated that I was on the road, that the officers connected with the Department were with me, and he ought to be able, with the exercise of a very little intelligence, to see why everything is not expanded in correspondence in relation to this transaction. Now, finding that Sir Hugh Allan was not willing to make the purchase, but was prepared to take them over at the price at which they were purchased, I could not very well meet his objection from that standpoint, and it was necessary to get additional supplies; and being assured that the statement that these cars would jump the track was an error, having learnt from Mr. Whitney that the person who had told him so had no personal knowledge of it, I decided to take a certain portion of these hopper cars, provided we were allowed to select the best quality. The hon. gentleman can understand why we could not select one hundred out of the whole lot, most of which were comparatively new, without obtaining them at the same price for which they were offered to us for the whole lot. I now lay upon the Table of the House a supplementary return containing a letter received from Mr. Whitney that, I think, will set the hon. gentleman's mind entirely at rest on the subject. In a letter addressed to the Chief Superintendent, under date of April 8th, 1882, he says:

"INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY,
"MECHANICAL SUPERINTENDENT'S OFFICE,
"MONCTON, N.B., 8th April, 1882.

"D. POTTINGER, Esq.,
"Chief Superintendent, Moncton.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to the enclosed letter from Mr. Schreiber, in reference to the Burland Hopper Cars, I have to say that these cars will hold five net tons.

"They are not very inferior stock; most of them, of course, are second-hand cars; some of them, the first time I saw them, had not a pound of coal in them.

"About fifty of them were from ten months to a year old, and had been used but very little. The others had been considerably used, but were all sound cars. They are not dangerous to couple any more than any ordinary car, and they keep the road as well as any Hoppers do.

"The drawbars being somewhat lower than our standard height for box and platform cars, a crooked coupling is required, when they are coupled with other cars, otherwise they are no more trouble or dangerous to use than the cars we have.

"I had a report the first time that I went to see them, that they would not keep the road, but I found that that report was incorrect.

"You are aware that I objected to these cars on the ground that they were of different construction from ours and necessitated our getting new patterns made to correspond to castings.

"Yours truly,

"H. A. WHITNEY,
"Mechanical Superintendent."

An Order in Council, authorizing the purchase of rolling stock, having been made long before, and the purchase having been made in this particular mode, authority was subsequently taken for it when we returned to Ottawa. So the hon. gentleman will find that the story which has interested him so greatly is one that only requires a word of explanation in order to place it in a perfectly clear and satisfactory light to the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. gentleman says, with respect to 1879, that the expenditure during that year should be charged to the present Administration, because we were in power for a long period of years. But the hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Brydges was the General Superintendent, that he had the entire control of the Intercolonial Railway, and from 1st July, 1878, until the last of February, 1879. Mr. Brydges was in sole control of the road, and his administration was not interfered with, nor any arrangements made for introducing economy, and these were not brought into operation until after the close of that year. The hon. gentleman has referred to the large number of sleepers put in that year. Those expenditures were made by Mr. Brydges when the road was under his control. They were entered upon to a very large extent—the bulk of the expenditure was made—before the change of Administration, and were carried out by Mr. Brydges until the end of February, and after that the works in which he had been engaged were completed. The hon. gentleman referred to a graver question, and the only one to which I intend to call the attention of the House at this late hour—the danger to which employees are exposed arising from those economies and the accidents which have occurred in consequence of it. Why, the hon. gentleman knows there is no foundation for that statement; he is perfectly well aware that the present winter has been an exceedingly severe one. Since 1872, no such difficulty has arisen on the Intercolonial as during the present year. The hon. gentleman knows that we have increased the car mileage on that road since we undertook the management by 10,000,000 miles, and notwithstanding we have had a number of accidents, I regret to say during the present season, our position in that respect, on 840 miles of road with this increase of car mileage, in regard to those casualties, will compare most favorably with 1877-78 under the management of Mr. Brydges. The year ending 30th June, 1878, shows the following:

"Ballast train ran into freight train; engine and nine cars damaged. Conductor, driver and brakeman all injured. Coal train collided with No. 17 freight; two engines badly damaged and one coal car wrecked. Train collided with engine, breaking pilot off. Train parted; parts collided, damaging three cars. Pullman and first-class car left track; both damaged. Engine ran into train; four cars damaged and employee's leg broken. Pullman and postal car damaged by train jumping track. Employee killed by overhead bridge. Thirteen cars left track; one damaged. Engine and four hoppers left track. Engine thrown from track. Van left track and upset. Van left track; engine thrown down embankment, baggage, second-class and postal cars damaged. Employee had hip dislocated. Train divided; another train ran into one division; van damaged and two cars thrown from track. Engine thrown from track: tender smashed, engine and two cars damaged. Thirteen hoppers left track; four broken up."

Yet the hon. gentleman, knowing that was the record, that on that comparatively short road and on that comparatively short length of car mileage, six men were killed and all this damage was done to rolling stock under the management of their political friends, he never gave the matter an hour's consideration or said it arose from bad management. Every person knows that no man in Canada has had greater experience than Mr. Brydges, and I do not refer to these accidents as showing in the least degree any want of care on his part, or lack of attention in maintaining the condition of the road or the rolling stock, but only to show how hard pressed are hon. gentlemen opposite who have brought up one or two accidents to throw discredit on our management of the road. The hon. gentleman has also occupied much of the time of the House in regard to Murray's statement. He has sprung into unwonted notoriety; he has been induced even to leave the road, where his services did not receive that amount of consideration to which he thought they were entitled, for the purpose of devoting his services to a political party whose great exigencies required his assistance; but if the hon. gentleman would read Murray's own statement, he will find that he gives three different, distinct and contradictory reasons why he left the road. He has said he left the road because life and property were unsafe—because his life was unsafe; yet Murray wrote this letter:

"BEDFORD STATION, 2nd April, 1882.

"To D. POTTINGER,
"Chief Superintendent, Moncton.

"I hereby tender you my resignation as driver on Intercolonial Railway. I wish to comply with the book of rules and regulations. If you can relieve me from duty at once, you will oblige, as I cannot stand the humbug there is at Richmond and other stations.

"Yours truly,
"J. MURRAY."

On April 4th, Murray wrote:

"SHUBENACADIE STATION, 4th April, 1882.

"To H. A. WHITNEY, Moncton.

"I tendered my resignation last night to the Chief Superintendent. I would like to be relieved from duty to-day on arrival at Richmond. I am not feeling well."

"J. MURRAY,
"Driver."

We have three distinct statements for Murray's leaving the service of the road. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) asked me if my attention had been called to Murray's statement as to the manner in which the employes of the road were overworked, and whether I had received any report on that statement. I told the hon. gentleman that I had called on the Superintendent to report on Mr. Murray's statement, and also applied to Mr. Schreiber, the Chief Engineer of Railways in operation, for a statement in reference to the important point as to whether the hands were overworked? Mr. Schreiber reports:—

"In reply to your enquiry as to the train hands on the Intercolonial making extra trips and working overtime, I may say that their doing so is by no means compulsory. On the contrary, I am informed, that they are so desirous of making extra time that each presses his claims for permission to do so. They, of course, receive compensation."

I have already explained to the House the utter impossibility of maintaining a staff which will be sufficient for discharging all the duties that occasionally make an extra demand on the services of the employees, without having a large body of men idle, their wages being paid at the same time by the public. These parties are paid for the work they do, and they complain bitterly if a large number of persons are employed, because it diminishes their remuneration. I have now a letter written by the Superintendent on Mr. Murray's letter, which I will read, as a great deal has been made out of this matter, and as the letter is not very long:

"INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY,
"Office of the Chief Superintendent,
"Moncton, N. B., 24th April, 1882.

"C. SCHREIBER, Esq.,
"Chief Engineer, Government Railways, "Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—In answer to your telegram with reference to John Murray, whose letter appeared in the "Morning Chronicle" of a recent date, I find on enquiry that he entered the Railway service, as a fireman, at Pictou Landing, in October, 1874. He appears to have been promoted rapidly and was made a driver in 1876. On the 3rd of the present month, he telegraphed from Bedford his resignation.

"I am informed by those who know him that he is a confirmed grumbler and that it is almost impossible to satisfy him.

"His statements are quite untrue and carry no weight with those who know him.

"During February and the first part of March, the weather was very stormy and trains were in consequence delayed. The Enginemen were, therefore, sometimes delayed an unusual length of time upon the road, but were, of course, paid accordingly, and the detention was unavoidable.

"This was the case upon the Sunday morning he refers to, when he was ordered to assist a Freight train from Londonderry to Folly Lake, as there had been a heavy snow storm.

"I find on examining the time sheets, that he was not on duty 126 hours, as stated, and 48 hours without rest. In January I find that he did not work on the 1st, 8th, 13th, 15th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th and 29th.

"In February he did not work on the 5th, 11th, 12th, 19th, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th.

"In March he did not work on the 5th after 9.30 A. M., he did not work on the 12th, 19th, 24th, nor 26th. So that he seems to have been able to refrain from work whenever he wished.

"Engine No. 73, which he calls an old trap and fit only for the scrap-heap, was purchased in 1874 from the Portland Company. She is a Passenger engine with four driving wheels coupled. The diameter of the drivers is 66 in. and the size of the cylinder 16 x 24.

"This engine came out of the shop in December last, after having received a thorough repair.

"The life of a locomotive is not less than fifteen years, so that this engine has only been in use half the time that she is capable of serving. The engine was perfectly capable of hauling 36 empty cars and has frequently, since that time, hauled as heavy a train.

"His statement that engine driver Hunt was fined for setting off cars in false. Hunt is one of the oldest and most careful drivers on the line, and he is a good man in every respect and a good driver. Why Murray should refer to him so prominently in connection with the collision of trains at Grand Lake, I cannot understand, for Hunt was entirely blameless in the matter.

"Murray's letter is somewhat rambling and inconsistent. In one part of it he blames us for overworking the men; in another part he blames us for employing new men; and talks about Hunt's fireman being a green hand, who had only fired for four weeks.

"Our enginemen are as good a lot of men as can be found on any railway in the country, but there are a few among them—very few I am glad to say,—who, if they were allowed, would shirk their work and haul fewer cars than their engines are capable of hauling. The consequence is that such men have to be looked after and made to do the work that other men are able and willing to do under similar circumstances. There is no road in the country where the enginemen are allowed to manage the traffic and say what number of cars they shall take in a train.

"With us, the Mechanical Superintendent and the skilled men under him state what each engine's capacity of hauling is, and this information is acted upon by the Traffic Department.

"I wish it understood that we have very little trouble with our engine-drivers with regard to hauling train, it is only with a few of them—Murray being among the number.

"This winter there has been a large and unexpected increase in the traffic, both in Passengers and in Freight, and we have therefore had considerable difficulty in moving it.

"This increase of traffic should be a source of great satisfaction to every well-wisher of the country, and it should be especially so to the persons living along the line of railway and to the railway employes as it is the strongest possible evidence of the general prosperity of the country.

"The great majority of employes in all departments have been glad to see the increased traffic and have done their utmost to facilitate the work. And I am sure that they do not thank Murray for his misdirected efforts in their behalf.

"You are aware that there are a large number of people leaving the Lower Provinces for Manitoba and the North-West and of course some of the railway employes, thinking to better their condition, have gone to the North West also, but the number of our men who have left is really very small.

"The statements that rails and materials are not furnished for the repair of the track; that the rolling stock is not in good order; that the snow is not shovelled from the sidings; that men are run for 380 miles without rest and without food, &c., are untrue.

"In his letter in the "Chronicle" of April 22nd, Murray refers to Samuel Cameron, mechanical foreman, at Pictou Landing, and states that he has left the service in consequence of his pay having been cut down $10 a month.

"Cameron's pay was reduced $10 per month at the time that the reduction in salaries was made, but his pay was again raised to the original amount and for a long time he has been receiving as much pay as he ever did. Cameron has gone to the North West, taking his two grown up sons with him, because he thinks he can give them a better start in life in that new country. He is a good man and he parted with the railway in a friendly way and is deserving of success wherever he goes.

"There has been a good deal said in Murray's letter with reference to overworking the men. I have already explained to you, in previous letters, that men when running special trains are paid by the trip, the line being divided into sections and a certain value counted in days or parts of a day assigned to a trip over each particular section. For instance, from St. John to Moncton is 89 miles and this is counted one day, although it may only occupy four or five hours. From Moncton to Campbellton, 185 miles, is counted one day and a half, and it may only occupy six or eight hours. From Truro to Halifax and return, which is 120 miles the round trip, is counted one and a quarter day.

"The enginemen are paid at a certain rate per day. Murray's pay being $2.31 per day.

"From this explanation you will see that the men are paid according to the work they perform, and if they work overtime, it results in no economy whatever to the railway. The question will naturally occur to a person unacquainted with railway work, if this is the case, why not employ more men. In answer to this I may explain that the business of almost every railway, fluctuates very much, there being sometimes a rush of freight, as we have for a short time in the winter and at other times very little.

"It has been found by experience that when men are once promoted and afterwards have to be reduced to an inferior position,—such a case for instance as a fireman being made an engine-driver and afterwards being set back to be a fireman—that, in general, the promotion has had the effect of spoiling a good fireman—the man being afterwards dissatisfied in any position inferior to that of engine-driver.

"The same is the case with brakemen and conductors. Again, if many new conductors and engine-drivers are made during a busy season, the chances of accident are necessarily increased, because these men, who have not had long experience in their new duties, are employed at the very time when the greatest degree of skill and care is necessary. It is usual therefore to use, as far as possible, the regular staff.

"I think I have referred to all the matters in Murray's letters that are deserving of notice.

"It seems to me that the more letters of this kind that Murray writes, the better it will be for the railway management. When the first letter came out, I suppose that a number of people, outside of the railway and unacquainted with its working, thought that his statements were facts, but by the time he writes a few more letters, the public will be able to estimate him at his true worth, and his own letters will be the best vindication of the railway.

"Your obedient servant,
"Signed, D. POTTINGER."

That letter from the Chief Superintendent gives the most effective refutation to any statement of Mr. Murray's that required the slightest attention at his hands. Now, Sir, I think I have said everything that requires to be said. As I stated before, all the other statements of the hon. gentleman have been again and again refuted, and if they are of any interest to him, I think they have ceased to be so to anybody else.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that it is due to the faults of the hon. gentleman's officers, or of his administration, but I do know that the last railway statistics laid on the Table show a most unusual percentage of accidents as having occurred on the Intercolonial Railway during the year ending the 30th June, 1881. All the persons killed and wounded in Canada during that year numbered 246, on nearly 7,000 miles of railroad in actual operation. On the Intercolonial Railroad, of which 840 miles are in actual operation, eighty-one persons were killed and wounded during that year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How many were killed?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Fourteen were killed and sixty-seven injured. I do not know that the railway authorities are specially to be thanked that the injuries did not result in actual death; and this is a very high percentage, bearing in mind the fact that many of these railroads, such as the Grand Trunk and Great Western, carry a very much larger number of passengers than the Intercolonial, and show a smaller number.

Mr. McLELAN. Under the management of the hon. Minister of Railways, there has not been a single passenger killed or seriously injured. With respect to this matter of Mr. Murray, it seems strange that hon. gentlemen opposite should desire to attach so much importance to that letter. I can understand Mr. Murray or any other employee of that road, who did not get a promotion he sought, endeavoring, if possible, to injure the road; but I cannot understand hon. gentlemen opposite, who ought to be above such an action, giving that letter so much importance as to create the impression in the country that the road is not in a safe condition to travel upon. A considerable portion of this road runs through the county I have the honor to represent. A number of my constituents feel anxious to obtain employment on the road, and the complaint I have received from them—and I have a number of letters in my possession at present from some who are usually employed as conductors or firemen or drivers—is that being paid by the piece or by the day, they do not get sufficient employment. Therefore, having this fact in my possession, I do not attach any importance to the statements made in Mr. Murray's letter that the employees are so overworked that it is unsafe to travel on the road.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The letter of Murray was published in the newspapers, and as it had every appearance of being authentic, I was entitled to bring the matter before the House and have it explained. I said nothing either for or against him; I knew nothing about him or his statements, but they were there and had to be met. Whether they are sufficiently met by Mr. Pottinger's letter is a matter of opinion; I think to some extent they are. With regard to the accidents in my time we invariably put down the number of accidents not only to individuals, but the rolling stock. According to this last report, it would appear that not a single engine or car was injured during the whole of last year. Is that the case?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly not; the hon. gentleman knows that is not the case.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose it is not correct; but what is very remarkable is this. We have an entry of two Grand Trunk engines having got off the track and got on their sides. As they did not belong to the Government, the accident is mentioned, but we have no means of knowing the number of engines or cars belonging to the Government that were injured during the year. Then the hon. gentleman made another statement, which I presume was a mistake; he stated that there was an increase of 10,000,000 of train mileage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I intended to say car mileage.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The train mileage of 1881 was 2,813,723, and of 1877-78, 2,160,080. The increase in business does not at all correspond to the increase in the mileage. For instance, in 1872-73 and 1873-74 the number of trains per mile was 1,147; in 1874-75, 945; in 1875-76, 695; in 1876-77, 590; in 1877-78, 732; in 1878-79, 715; in 1879-80, 681, and in 1880-81, 863. Taking five years, including 1873-74, the average would be 822; five years, commencing 1874-75, average 735; the three years of the hon. gentleman opposite, from 1878-79 to 1881, average 752; and for the two last years, 772. So that the difference in the tonnage as per mile is practically nothing; and if we include the year 1873-74, it is more in the years of the late Administration than in any other period. The hon. gentleman declared, a few evenings ago, his firm conviction that all steel rails, after the road was once built, should properly and could only be properly charged to a revenue account. How does it come that he charged to capital account the sum of $40,000 for nut locks two years ago, upon his own showing of what a proper revenue or capital charge is. The fact is, the only difference between the hon. gentleman's expenditure and that which he has been criticising is this: that he made use of the capital account in order to cover all deficiencies, to an extent more than sufficient to wipe out the entire difference.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In reference to the remark of the hon. member for Centre Huron as to the accidents, they are numbered in this way in the railway statistics: the smallest possible mishap or damage is put down as an accident and is included among the serious accidents, whereas the practice on most of the other railways is only to take notice of very serious accidents. The hon. gentleman must be mistaken as to the number killed, the largest number of employees for any one year being only seven.

Mr. McLellan,

Mr. MACKENZIE. The report of the hon. gentleman's own Department gives the names of fourteen killed in one year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The damages on account of accidents to men, animals and property on the Intercolonial for the years 1878 and 1879 were $6,000 and $7,000. They have not been as high as $4,000 any year since.

Mr. WELDON. I asked on the 9th of March for a return of the accidents on this road, where there were neither lives lost nor injuries to persons, and also a return of damages to goods; but it has not yet been furnished, although the information has appeared in the papers of the Lower Provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The largest number of employees killed was seven, killed beyond the track.

Mr. PLUMB. We have heard from the member for Gloucester his annual attack on the Intercolonial Railway, and the usual discussion in the usual temper on the other side of the House. We have been treated by the hon. gentleman to a speech lasting an hour or two, in which he exemplified, as he usually does, the Italian proverb—that the tongue is like a race-horse, which runs faster the less weight it carries. The hon. gentleman has exhibited his utter ignorance of railway matters in the most striking degree in everything he has said respecting the Intercolonial. But it was reserved for the member for Centre Huron to make a direct attack on the road with a view to alarming people and frightening them from travelling upon it.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. PLUMB. If the hon. gentleman had been a railway touter for other roads, he could not have more effectually served the interests of his employers. There were no passengers on the Intercolonial Railway killed during the last three years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And none the last three years.

Mr. PLUMB. I was speaking of the report from which the hon. gentleman read. There were four employees and another person killed by falling from the engines and cars. That is a kind of accident which certainly the Company could not be responsible for. Five others were injured in the same way, and in jumping off or six persons were injured. I am not aware that the Superintendent or the Manager, or the Minister of Railways is responsible for accidents to people who choose to jump off the cars or engines while in motion. Twenty-three were killed at work on or near the track making up trains. It is impossible for the most careful superintendent of a railway to prevent men employed on a railway from becoming reckless or to prevent accidents of that kind. Another kind of accident occurs to men coupling cars; twenty-six men were injured in this way. That had nothing to do with the running of trains or the management of the road—nothing to do with the condition of the track. Thus we have got fifty-nine out of eighty-one accidents the hon. gentleman brought before the House with such earnestness. Two persons were killed by collisions and by trains thrown from the track, and one person was injured. That is the only class of accidents which can in any way, even remotely, be attributed to the management or running of the road or to its condition. The report further says, under this heading, walking, or standing, or lying, or being on the track, one person killed and no other person injured. We cannot tell whether the man was an employee of the road or not. Probably he was not. He may have been a person staggering across the track. That is the whole sum of the accidents on the Intercolonial Railway which the hon. gentlemen have made gravely the basis of a charge against the management of the Intercolonial Railway. It is only necessary to read that statement to show what is the character of the whole attack that has been made on the road by these hon. gentlemen to-night. From that one can see the animus of the whole. The House and the country will judge these gentlemen according to their merits as shown by the disingenuous statements they have to resort to in order to make out their case.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Can the hon. Minister of Railways tell the House for what reason Hamilton, the train despatcher at Truro, was dismissed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He was dismissed in consequence of having given a wrong order, and probably in connection with it the habit of falsifying the books.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was there any trial of the case?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The matter was thoroughly investigated by the Department, and in the Court where the testimony was produced. A charge of manslaughter was brought against one of the station masters. In the first instance there was an investigation under oath on the coroner's inquest; and in the second instance one of the relatives brought a charge of manslaughter against the station master at Windsor Junction. Upon sworn testimony the station master was honorably acquitted, as the evidence proved that the order had been wrongly sent by Hamilton, and that the figures had been afterwards changed from 15 to 13.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course I only saw an ex parte statement of the case, but it did seem to me Hamilton was harshly treated. The evidence did not seem to me to be at all against him. Of course the hon. gentleman is better informed than I. It seemed to me from the evidence I saw that Harris was more to blame than Hamilton.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Harris was, after a most thorough investigation before the Court, when he was brought up on a charge of manslaughter, honorably acquitted and discharged, and I have not the slightest doubt properly so, because I investigated the matter very closely myself.

RATES OF PILOTAGE.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 119) further to amend "The Pilotage Act, 1873," and the other Acts therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. VALLÉE. I have already explained to the Committee why clause 3 should not apply to the pilots between Montreal and Quebec. According to the old law, when a pilot, having charge of a ship between Montreal and Quebec arrives in Quebec, he is discharged and the ship is put under the control of another pilot, from Quebec to Bic. The clause provides that complaint against the pilot may be lodged within thirty days after an accident has happened. How can that be done? If an accident has happened between Montreal and Quebec the captain can make his complaint to the pilotage authority on arrival at Quebec, and a delay of thirty days is altogether unnecessary. Pilots between Montreal and Quebec ought not to be put on the same footing as those from Quebec downward, because, in the former case, the captain or the owner have far better facilities. The hon. Minister has supposed a case where the pilot, the captain and the owner have agreed together to wreck a ship, and where, consequently, there would be no one to make a complaint before the pilotage authority. That is a very unlikely supposition. According to the old law, if a ship has been wrecked between Montreal and Quebec, the pilotage authority may be informed of it by telegraph communication, when it can at once take the necessary steps to have an investigation. The case is quite different when a ship goes out to sea, and, therefore, the same provision should not apply to both cases. The present law has been in force for twenty-two years and ought not to be changed upon a mere supposition like this. The pilots are a responsible body who have well performed their duties in the past to the satisfaction of all parties. Then why change the law. The President of the Council quoted the other day the case of La Canadienne, which was wrecked last year, and he said that he could not secure an investigation because the prescribed delay had elapsed. That is only one case and is not sufficient to justify this change. I ask, therefore, that this third clause be struck out.

Mr. VALIN moved that the 3rd clause be struck out.

Amendment negative.

Mr. McLELAN. I beg to move an additional clause to this Bill—one limiting the number of pilots in the district of Quebec. Under the present law, the number of pilots is fixed at a minimum of 150 and a maximum of 200, and as there are more pilots there than are necessary, it is proposed to give authority to reduce the number to 125.

Mr. AMYOT. If I understand this clause, it will exclude apprentices who have not served more than three years.

Mr. McLELAN. They will have to wait till the number gets under 125.

Mr. AMYOT. How many are on that list?

Mr. McLELAN. I think the whole number of pilots are 184; thirty-five are over sixty-five years of age, and there are about thirty-five apprentices, who have to serve seven years for their license. The apprentices who have served over three years may be made pilots under the regulations until the number falls below the number of 125. Those who have served less than three years will have to await an opportunity of filling out their term, or adopt some other profession.

Mr. AMYOT. The official list showed on the 14th of September last that there were thirty-four apprentices, of whom fourteen have not yet served three years. So the Bill proposes that these fourteen apprentices, who have paid from $200 to $300 to be admitted, and have spent one, two or three years studying this business, will be deprived of the benefits of the existing law and of their acquired rights. This is nothing but stealing under pretext of law. Pilots do not ask this Bill, but would be pleased to grant licenses to their apprentices when their apprenticeships were served. Why pass this retroactive Bill and steal away the rights of these young men under the protection of a law? I believe this Parliament should not degrade itself by passing this law.

Mr. VALIN. I am of the opinion of the hon. member for Bellechasse that it is not right to deprive these apprentices of the right of completing their apprenticeship. We want to reduce the number of pilots, but it should be done regularly even though it takes some time. I therefore move an amendment:

"That the apprentices now admitted should be exempt from the application of this Bill."

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member for Bellechasse says that the pilots did not ask for this Bill; but the pilots have asked that the scale of fees should be increased upon the whole commerce of the St. Lawrence, in order to give them an additional allowance per annum. The 184 pilots on the list demand that the fees should be increased to give them, after setting apart a sum for the maintenance of widows and orphans and decayed pilots, an allowance of at least $600 a year. Now, the wants of commerce can be supplied very well by 100 pilots at the outside. Useful as are the services of these men, it would be unjust to the commerce of the St. Lawrence to compel it to maintain double the number of pilots that are required. If you do not restrict the number of apprentices, so as to allow all the thirty-four to finish their apprenticeship, it will be a generation before you can reduce the number of pilots to 125. The Bill will allow all apprentices over seventeen to serve out their term and take licenses. It will only strike out apprentices from seventeen to fourteen years of age. I think there would be no great hardship in sending them to learn another trade. Unless the Government increases the taxation on the shipping, the present number of pilots are so large that they cannot obtain $600 each with the number of vessels likely to visit the St. Lawrence this season.

Mr. VALIN. Navigation to-day is more by steam than by sail. In 1873 a compromise was made amongst the pilots, the Government and the trades, that small vessels under 250 tons would be free of pilotage. It was also understood that if, during these years, the pilots did not make an average of $600 a year, the tariff should be revised so as to enable the pilots to make that average. The first year they did, and also the three following years; but the past three years they did not make that average. While the number of sea-going vessels arriving in our ports was less, their tonnage was greater. A ship of 1,000 tons draws as much water as a steamer of 5,000 tons that carries three times as much cargo as the smaller vessels. We should impose a tax on the tonnage and not on the draught of water. We are bound to give our pilots a means of living. It would not be fair to deprive those young men who have completed their third year of apprenticeship of practising their calling.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that in these days when every effort is made to carry on commerce as cheaply as possible it would be no injustice to attempt to curtail expenses. These young men are at an age when it will be no hardship to them to adopt another career, and what they have learned in their apprenticeship may be useful to them in many ways. There is no reason why pilotage should be charged on tonnage, because it is as easy to pilot a large vessel as a small one. When we are trying to do away with tolls on canals we should also reduce charges on sea-going vessels.

Mr. AMYOT. I move that the words "now under indenture" be added to the clause. The pilotage in Quebec costs less than in any part of the world. It has been agreed by the hon. Minister that the actual tariff, instead of being increased 15 per cent. as recommended by the Quebec Harbor Commission, will be increased to 7½ per cent. and if the pilots do not then receive $700 per year it cannot be helped. It has been also agreed that the number of pilots will be diminished gradually until it is reduced to 125, and also that the number of apprentices should be gradually reduced from fifteen to twenty. It would not be right to deprive those young men who have served their two or three years apprenticeship of the right to follow out their calling and compel them to adopt another. They have selected this mode of existence, they have passed their examination, yet this Bill proposes to drive them from their occupation. Let us give them time and they will themselves reduce their number to proper numbers.

Mr. KILLAM. The hon. gentleman from Bellechasse says that this is the cheapest pilotage in the world. That may be the case, but when I ask him what the price of the pilotage is between Bic and Montreal he said he did not know.

Mr. AMYOT. It is about $3 on the average.

Mr. KILLAM. One would suppose from the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Bellechasse, that the pilots of his district were an inferior class of men if they cannot be tried after four days have elapsed from the time of an accident.

Mr. VALIN. Pilots have about $3.50 a foot in the spring of the year, during the summer time it is a little less, and in November it is nearly $4. The hon. member for Yarmouth ought to know from experience the prices of pilotage to Quebec, Liverpool, the English Channel and the United States.

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill reported; and (at 2:10 o'clock, a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

SATURDAY, 6th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that, on and after the first day of June, in the present year 1882, newspapers published in Canada, mailed by the publisher at the place of publication, and addressed to regular subscribers or news agents, in Canada, shall be transmitted to their address free of postage.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

The Order being read for the second reading of Bill (No. 153) to readjust the representation in the House of Commons and for other purposes, Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the introduction of this Bill I explained at length the mode of readjustment and the changes proposed to be made in the representation in consequence of the Census. I now move the second reading of the Bill, and no doubt, in a full discussion of the changes proposed, the Government will be quite prepared to listen to all the arguments that may be adduced on either side with respect to the redistribution of the representation.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to a question of order. The Bill which is just now placed in your hands is not the Bill which was introduced and read a first time. I object to the reading of the Bill at the present time. By the Bill which was presented the other day, and read the first time, certain provisions were made as to the component parts of the various electoral districts of the Province of Ontario, and in point of fact that was the object of the Bill. By that Bill, the township of Logan was taken from the existing north riding of Perth and placed in the south riding of Perth; by the Bill now introduced, the township of Logan is not taken from the north riding of Perth, and does not form part of the south riding of Perth. By the Bill as read the first time, the township of Clinton was taken from the county of Lincoln and added to the electoral district of Monck; by the Bill now proposed to be read, the township of Clinton remains part of the county of Lincoln and is not part of the electoral district of Monck. By the Bill which was read the first time, the village of Beamsville was taken from the county of Lincoln and put into one of the ridings of Wentworth; by the Bill now proposed to be read Beamsville remains in the county of Lincoln. By the Bill read a first time, the township of South Cayuga remained part of the county of Haldimand; by the Bill now on the Table, it remains part of the electoral district of Monck. By the Bill read the first time, the village of Petrolia was made a part of the new electoral district of Lambton; by the present Bill it is made part of East Lambton. By the Bill which was read a first time, the township of Usborne was left part of the electoral district of South Huron; by the Bill now in your hands, it is made a part of South Perth. By the Bill read the first time, the township of Wallace was left part of the electoral district of North Perth; by the Bill on the Table, it is made part of North Wellington. By the Bill read the first time, the township of Colborne was left part of the district of Centre Huron; by the Bill on the Table, it is taken from Centre Huron and made part of the district of South Welland. There are other changes in the Bill which is on the Table as compared with the Bill which is read; but I have specified these to you as adequate to the purpose of pointing out that very material alterations have taken place in the Bill read the first time, as it is now proposed to be read the second time. The law upon the subject is contained in May's book, the oldest edition, at page 500:

"After a Bill has been presented, and read the first time, it is not regular to make other than clerical alterations in it. On the 28th March, 1873, notice being taken that the University Tests (Dublin) Bill had been materially altered since the first reading, in order to meet objections raised in a debate upon another Bill. The Speaker ruled that after the first reading, a Bill was no longer the property of the member himself, but passed into the possession of the House. The order for the second reading was accordingly discharged, and the Bill withdrawn; and leave being given to present another Bill instead thereof, another Bill was at once presented. The same course was adopted in the case of Hypothec (Scotland) Bill, in 1878. It frequently happens that before the second reading of a Bill it becomes necessary to make considerable changes in its provisions, which can only be accomplished, at this stage, by discharging the order for the second reading, and withdrawing the Bill. The ordinary practice has been to order a Bill to be withdrawn and to give leave to bring in another Bill. And this course is always necessary if there be any change of title; but when the Bill is withdrawn for the purpose of making numerous amendments, without any change of title, a simpler form of proceeding has occasionally been adopted. So soon as the first Bill has been withdrawn, the order of leave for bringing in the Bill is read and leave is given to present another Bill instead thereof upon the same order of leave. This was done in 1814, and the practice has since been revived, with much convenience."

Some of the authorities on which these propositions are founded very clearly state as to what was the opinion in the House from which we draw our practice. With reference to the University Tests and Discipline Bill, a debate arose on the question of the second reading. Mr. Callan pointed out that it was not the same Bill which had been read the first time, and, referring to the case of the Marriage of Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, the Speaker of the day, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, ruled that it was not competent for an hon. member to make any other than clerical errors in a Bill which had been introduced and read the first time. The Speaker said:

"I am bound to say that the hon. member for Brighton (Mr. Fawcett) has exercised a sound discretion in taking the course which he proposes to adopt."

The course pursued was to discharge the order.

"There is no principle more clearly laid down in this House than this: when a member has introduced a Bill to the House, it ceases to be in that member's hands and passes into the possession of the House. No essential of that Bill, at any stage may then be made without the distinct order of the House.

Likewise on the Hypothec (Scotland) Bill in 1868:

"Mr. J. Lowther said that in connection with the measure he desired to direct the Speaker's attention to a point of order. Leave had been given by the House to an hon. and gallant member (Sir George Balfour) to introduce a Bill on the subject of hypothec, for which Bill another had since been substituted, and had only been delivered to hon. members that morning."

To this the Speaker replied that—"He had noticed that some material alterations had been made in the Bill. Hon. members might make clerical or verbal alterations in Bills, but it would not be in order for an hon. member to move the second reading of a Bill which, although having the same title, differs materially and substantially from the measure which he had obtained leave to introduce. The Bill which the hon. and gallant member now asked the House to read a second time was not the one which he was allowed to introduce, and, therefore, the only course open to him was to withdraw or ask for the second reading of the Bill, and to ask leave to introduce a Bill in substitution for it."

The same view was taken in the case of the Marriages Bill, the report of Hansard on which says:

"Mr. Speaker said it was not competent for an hon. member to make any other than a clerical alteration in a Bill which had once been introduced and read a first time.

The evidence, I may say, on which I stated to the House, that the Bill contained the statements I referred to, is the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior as reported in the Official Debates, which show the absence of these various changes to which I have referred, and verify the statement that it differs in the particulars I have stated from the Bill now proposed to be read.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In answer to the hon. gentleman's technical objection which was taken only for the purpose of delay—I have to state this—that the practice proposed which was objected to at the time by the hon. gentleman on the first reading, has been the uniform practice in Canada. As regards the particular case he cites, of alterations in some of the clauses of the Bill, for which he refers to my speech, if there are such alterations it is open to him to take his objection in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAKE. But my objection is to the principle of the second reading.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Do not interrupt me, Sir, if you please. The whole principle of the Bill is the readjustment of the representation. There may be a township misplaced here, or a town there; it is open for the hon. gentleman to take objection in Committee of the Whole. I shall hold to my speech, and if it be found that in any of the clauses there is an alteration or misplacement of town, township, or village, I will agree that it was not in the original Bill. I press upon you, Mr. Speaker, to hold to our uniform practice.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has not apprehended my objection. This is not the objection I took a while ago, that he ought not to have retained possession of the Bill after it was introduced. You, Mr. Speaker, disposed of that objection, and I have not renewed the controversy. I take this objection to the second reading of the Bill on the distinct ground that it was not the Bill which was read the first time. That is the ground I take, and it is consistent with the evidence I offer, which is clear and conclusive, which the hon. gentleman does not deny, cannot deny, and which is confirmed by the English practices and precedents to which I have referred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman is speaking a good deal from the sheet that was stolen by the Globe people.

Mr. BLAKE. No; from the speech.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so. The reason why I did not place it in the Clerk's hands, is that it was in galley form merely, and inaccurate in some respects. That I stated at the time. I think that our practice should be held to establish the rule in this case. The hon. gentleman is quite at liberty to move in Committee, or to show that the name of any township has been misplaced.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The question is simply whether that is the Bill that was read a first time or not. I called upon the hon. gentleman for a copy of the Bill. He said he would send it to me, but had to see the Law Clerk first. The Bill never came. There is one simple way of ascertaining whether this is the Bill or not—let the Law Clerk be called and examined.

Mr. BLAKE. The report in Hansard shows it.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. the leader of the Government asked me to get a copy of the Bill, if I could and send it to the member for Lambton. I went to the Law Clerk and tried to obtain one, but could not. I say this merely to show, that if the Bill was not given to him, it was because it was impossible to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I mentioned that merely as an incident, showing that the Law Clerk had the Bill at the time, and he can show whether or not it has been altered since it left his hands.

Mr. BOWELL. I spoke merely to show that the effort was made to keep the promise made to the hon. gentleman. He seemed to convey the impression that there had been neglect.

Mr. BLAKE. With regard to the statements made by the hon. First Minister, which I think he had no right to make, as to the source from which I drew my information, I may say that it was from the official report of the speech.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That the Bill was altered after it was introduced is beyond controversy. I paid the greatest attention to the statement made by the hon. First Minister, as I supposed he would make some alterations in my riding. He stated that the township of Osborne would form a part of the riding of South Huron, while the Bill now before us says that it does not form part of that riding, and that the Bill must have been altered after the time the hon. gentleman introduced it, and is not the Bill first presented to the House. I find also, in the organ of the hon. gentleman in this city, the Citizen, which I suppose would not misrepresent him, it is stated that the township of Osborne is to form part of the riding of South Huron. There is not a member of the House, who listened to the speech, who does not think that the hon. gentleman made that statement.

Mr. BOWELL. Whatever may have been reported, I know this: that it never was intended that the township of Osborne should form part of the riding of South Huron.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is an easy matter to have the point decided by having Hansard read.

Mr. MILLS. The terms of the Bill, as introduced, are pretty well known to the members of the House, because there is hardly a thing contained in it which the hon. gentleman did not read. He had the galleys in his hands, and from them he read the description of the limits of the various counties and electoral divisions being changed, and nearly every member of the House noted the observations he made, and they are in perfect accord with the right hon. gentleman's speech as it appeared in Hansard. Now, Sir, we have before us a Bill which is not that Bill, which does not contain the same description of the electoral divisions, but another different description. The right hon. gentleman is asking to have this Bill read a second time, as the Bill he submitted some days ago. There is no room for two opinions on this subject. It is perfectly clear that this is another Bill, and not the Bill read the first time, and it is not treating the House with proper respect to make alterations in this surreptitious way. I say surreptitious, because we seem to be governed by a conspiracy rather than by a Government, and the proposition now made is an illustration of the fact.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The report in Hansard confirms what the hon. member for West Durham has said. It will be confirmed not only in regard to the population in the various districts, but in regard to the details. For instance, in Hansard, Sir John A. Macdonald says that the south riding of the county of Perth shall include the township of Logan, which is not now in the Bill; also that the north riding of Perth shall contain the township of Wallace, which, in the Bill as it appears for the second reading, is transferred to the north riding of Wellington. The north riding of Wellington, it was stated, would include the township of Mary-borough, which is now transferred to Centre Wellington. I think that it will be found that in every case cited by the hon. member for West Durham, Hansard bears out his recollection and my own.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no doubt that the point of order is very important, and should be carefully decided, with a view to settle such questions in the future. It is true that a loose practice has prevailed in this House, and that Bills have been even allowed to be introduced in blank, without objection being taken. But the rule is absolute, and such a practice should not be permitted. It is also equally established that when a Bill is once before the House it becomes its property, and cannot be materially altered, except by the House itself. I think, since this point has been raised, it is best to follow the settled practice of the English House of Commons, and not to permit hereafter any change, except mere clerical alterations, in a Bill, when it has been once regularly introduced. I therefore decide that the point of order is well taken, and that the proper course, under the circumstances, is to discharge the order, and re-introduce the Bill on the previous motion for leave.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg to move for leave to introduce Bill (No. 158) to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

Bill introduced and read the first time.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, before the House resolves itself into Committee of Supply, I desire to call attention to the very remarkable inflation of the Estimates which has taken place within the last year or two. Had the present Supplementary Estimates been of a moderate character I would have gladly dispensed with the task, but in view of the large addition which is proposed to be made to the extraordinary large amount already demanded, I think it is our duty again to call attention to the enormous and unprecedented sums with which not merely the general expenditure, but the fixed charges are being increased. Sir, it appears to me that in this matter we are going from bad to worse. I thought, last year, that in view of the declarations of the hon. Minister of Finance himself, in view of the repeated attacks which have been made upon us when we sat on that side of the House, on account of our unparalleled extravagance in increasing the expenditure, that hon. gentlemen would have paused before they demanded from the people of Canada an amount in excess of $28,000,000 for the services for the years 1882 and 1883. But it appears we were mistaken. It appears that those hon. gentlemen, having been possessed of a surplus due to the exorbitant system of taxation, have very little idea of anything else than how to raise the expenditure so that the surplus will disappear. Last year the case was bad enough. On the occasion of the bringing down of the Supplementary Estimates in 1881, I called attention to the fact that our expenditure for 1878 was, in round figures, $23,500,000, that our expenditure for 1880 was $24,850,000, and that the Estimates for the year 1882 amounted to no less than $26,475,000. Sir, I repeat that these Estimates reveal a large proposed expenditure. I repeat that, in consideration of the statements made, not merely by the hon. the Minister of Finance, but by almost all his followers, they show a great difference between the sums which that hon. gentleman and his followers had deemed necessary when in Opposition, and the sums they thought proper to expend when in power. But I regret to say that, on the present occasion, those Estimates have been greatly increased. Sir, the actual Estimates, the bare Estimates, without counting future Supplementary Estimates, which, no doubt, will come in due time for the year 1883, amount to no less than $27,999,483, which, apart from certain large sums, to which I will presently call attention, are dangerous—I cannot say reprehensible, because some are not so unreasonable—because they involve additions to our fixed expenditure, which is already larger than that of almost any other country in proportion to our means. On this occasion we are asked to expend about $4,000 in the shape of sums to be granted to the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, in the shape of additional subsidy to Manitoba, in the shape of a proposed resolution which the Government has for granting a subsidy of $150,000 a year to a ship railway. So that apparently about $28,409,000, very nearly $28,500,000, will be required for the service of the future year, being an excess of the sum found requisite for carrying on the business of the Government of Canada in 1878, of no less than $4,906,000, or an excess over the ascertained expenditure for 1880 of $2,906,000 in round numbers. In dealing with that, I have entirely left out of sight the fact that over and against both charges which are made to the ordinary expenditure there are large sums charged to capital account of a dubious character. Large sums are charged on account of rolling stock for the various railways under the control of the Government, and large sums are charged on account of Dominion Lands expenditure. Waving the question of the propriety of those charges, as to both of which I express considerable doubt, there is this objection to them: that in our time those charges formed a part of the expenditure chargeable to income, and for the purpose of instituting a fair comparison between the expenditure of hon. gentlemen opposite and their predecessors, it is quite clear that such amounts as we charged to income and to which they charge to capital must be taken into account. Were I to include those sums, $365,000 or more for rolling stock and $450,000 for Dominion lands, which, as I say for purposes of comparison, at all events should be included, the total amount would be $29,224,000. I have often called the attention of members of the House to the fact that a great proportion of our annual charges are now fixed, and that a very large proportion of the expenditure on account of Indians, which now amounts to nearly $1,000,000 annually, must be regarded as a fixed charge. We have besides charges amounting to $3,500,000—rather more with the addition of the sum to be granted to Manitoba—for subsidies, and we have charges of a similarly fixed character which, in 1881, amounted to $12,500,000 in round numbers. So that, putting all these things together, it is perfectly plain that of our annual expenditure something like $17,000,000 or $18,000,000—I will not weary the House by going into minute details—are fixed charges over which, to all intents and purposes, the people of Canada have very little control; and when you remember that of the other charges a very considerable amount is a charge for maintenance of railroads, post offices and similar services, it will appear that we are trenching again in spite of our surplus, perilously on the margin that we might have available for the future necessities of this country. The answer that is made by these hon. gentlemen is two-fold. First of all, we are told that is no matter whether they take three, four, five or six millions of money out of the pockets of the people of Canada, because, they say, it goes back into their pockets or into the Treasury. I say that answer is faulty in more respects than one. I deny that a great proportion of this money taken from the whole of the people goes back into their pockets when it finds its way into the Treasury, or if it goes back into their pockets at all, it goes into the wrong pocket—it goes to the pocket of a small select set of favorites of the hon. gentleman, and cannot be said to be employed for the general benefit of the whole people. I say that it is bad economy, bad statesmanship, to take more money than you require out of the pockets of the people under any system, no matter how just the taxation may be, no matter how well distributed it may be, and it is doubly unwise and unjust under a system like ours, under which, in addition to the sum actually paid into the Treasury, an enormous though uncertain amount is paid into the pockets of certain private individuals of this country. Then, Sir, the other answer is that it is no matter because money is abundant and plentiful now. To that I reply that had that money been obtained without enormously increasing the burthens or taxes of the people there should now be some little sense in that answer; but when that reply is made by a Government, who have enormously increased the burthens of the people, and have so distributed them that they press most heavily and unduly upon those classes of the people less able to bear them, I say the answer is a mockery, and it is a disgrace to us that we should, under the circumstances, continue to exact many millions of money from the people more than the real necessities of the Government require, even at the very extravagant estimates which are now submitted to us. Sir, the hon. gentleman hardly appears to be aware of the enormous positive charge which is inflicted on the people of this country by this taxation. What the total amount of the taxation this year will be, it is hard to say, but I find that, in 1881, our total receipts were $23,635,000, and that of those there were raised by taxes, as nearly as possible, $23,942,000. We find, Sir, it is probable that, in 1882, judging from the returns to April, which are all we have got, that the taxation exacted from the people will be $3,500,000 or $4,000,000 in excess of the large sum I have already named. Now, Sir, as our population, without including Indians—who are certainly non-productive in a high degree, and who are rather a charge upon us—I find that the result of these enormous taxes is that, in round numbers, we are obliged to pay in the gross $7 a head, and, remembering that every family in this country has an average of five members, we would have $35 per family; or even if we take the net sum which is exacted from the people of this country, I find that the total amount per family equals $30 at least. Sir, unhappily that is very far from representing the true amount of the burthen on the people of Canada. Unhappily, over and above these taxes which go into the Treasury, a very large, although, as I said, an uncertain amount is paid under our present system to certain private parties throughout Canada, putting further and more heavy burthens on the people of this country. And, what is more, Sir, our system of taxation is so arranged, our system of distribution of these taxes is so unfair and unjust, that a very much larger percentage is levied on the poorer classes of the community than upon those who are better off; so that I am within the mark in saying, that this amount of taxation, huge as it is, probably falls short by one-fourth or one-third of the true burthen inflicted by these hon. gentlemen upon the people of Canada. As it is raised by a most unjust system of taxes—as this surplus includes taxes on fuel, taxes on light, taxes on knowledge, taxes on clothing and taxes in fact on everything, the hon. Minister should endeavor to avoid taxing, or he should be compelled to tax as lightly as possible, and should endeavor so to distribute his taxation that the poorer classes of the community should be taxed less according to their means instead of more, as under the present system, and I say, Sir, that as he has not done so these results are trebly mischievous. Now, it is quite true, that so long as we continue having this prosperity the mischief of this may not be so apparent; but even the hon. Minister of Finance will hardly venture to say in view of our own experience, and the experience of the United States—in view of the experience in England and every country which raises money at all in the same way as we do ourselves—that he has any patent which will enable him to secure a continuance of this prosperity forever, and the moment the check occurs, the moment the times become in the slightest degree hard, then, Sir, this result follows: Our surplus will disappear, and, unhappily, our taxes will remain, and the scale of expenditure, which the hon gentleman is now fixing, will remain too. I speak with knowledge—I think the hon. gentleman will not contradict me—that there is no more difficult task than to cut down or materially reduce the expenditure of any country consisting in a large degree in permanent charges, when it has been allowed to attain a certain figure. Now, I regret this exceedingly on many accounts. Canada is becoming rapidly an exceedingly dear country to live in. I am not prepared to say it is so extravagant and expensive as the country beside us, but in many most important respects the scale of living in Canada—the price of articles in common use has become enormously enhanced, and compare disadvantageously with the prices on the other side of the Atlantic. Now, Sir, a great opportunity has been given to us. We have become possessed of an enormous tract of country well calculated to attract immigration from the other side of the Atlantic. One of the first things which will necessarily attract the attention of these persons is the prices at which they can obtain the articles of every-day use, and which are absolutely necessary here. I am sorry to say that by no fault of Canada or by our own position, but simply by the foolish and unnecessary system of taxation, we are deprived to a great extent of the advantages we might naturally have possessed, and instead of this surplus having been used to any practical extent to reduce the heavy expenditure of living here, we find the hon. gentleman, although he has perforce, perhaps, for the purpose of promoting the chances of his friends with the elections, been compelled to make some concessions and reductions, has been careful not to reduce any of those articles which most require reduction at his hands. The taxes he has reduced, as they now exist, do certainly take as little from the people as any taxes that can well be devised. These he has reduced, but he has left untouched the great mass of the taxes to which I have referred, under which the burthen on the people is far greater than the actual amount placed in the Treasury. Moreover, Sir, he has, beyond all question, added very seriously to the difficulties, which always encompass persons of very small means, to make both ends meet. I do not know that these persons have placed their complaints before the hon. gentleman, although I have been informed that some of the employés in the Government service have remonstrated in vain with that hon. gentleman, and have pointed out that the salaries they get to-day are far from possessing the purchasing power of the salaries they enjoyed a few years ago. I know that all that class of persons, such as clergymen, school teachers, and clerks, who are as valuable a class as any in the community, do find the hon. gentleman's Tariff more and more oppressive every day. But, Sir, I also notice that in the case of that large portion of the community who depend on their daily wages, the increasing cost of living is making itself more and more apparent from day to day. It cannot have escaped the notice of the House that not merely in Canada, but in the United States, there is a great and growing tendency to strikes on the part of these laborers; and I say there is nothing more calculated to produce dissatisfaction in the minds of these persons than to see that the whole system of taxation contains, not in one particular, but in all particulars, more unjust preferences in favor of the wealthier portion of the community, and against those who have to earn their livelihood by their daily toil. Now, hon. gentleman, men may think this is a small matter. All I can say is that when this Tariff was introduced, and before its full effect had time to make itself felt, I was at the pains to ascertain from various quarters how, and in what way, the working community were in the habit of employing their wages. I obtained some returns within the course of the past few months, and, in looking over these, no one thing was more apparent than the fact that a great number of those persons were compelled to stint themselves to an extraordinary degree, as compared with their scale of living in former years. I found that in the amount they devoted to food, to clothing, to educational purposes, in almost all points these men were materially worse off than they were three or four years ago. This is coming home to them now; and our manufacturing friends will do well to remember that if they have a Tariff that increases the cost of the necessaries of life all over the country, they may rely upon it that in the present state of civilization, they may be speedily compelled to increase the wages of their employés all round, and it is very proper that they should do so. But that is putting manufacturers at a great disadvantage in carrying on many of the manufactures in which they are engaged, and at a special and serious disadvantage when they meet, in export trade, with persons engaged in the same trade in foreign countries. At this late stage of the Session, I do not care to delay the House, particularly as these subjects have been pretty well exhausted before, and therefore, I shall content myself on the present occasion with moving:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That the expenditure for the year 1878 was $23,503,158;

That the expenditure for 1881 was $25,502,554;

That the Estimates for the year ending, 30th June, 1883, amount to $27,999,483.86 independent of large amounts, proposed to be added to the annual expenditure, involving a further addition of $410,000 more;

That many of the items charged to Capital Account, are of a character which might more properly be charged to Income;

That a very large proportion of this expenditure consists of paid charges, or of charges of a permanent character, which when once created are either incapable, or very difficult of reduction;

That recent legislation and the completion of existing engagements will result in a steady increase of the fixed charges within a few years;

That experience has shown that the consequence of rapidly increasing the fixed charges, is to produce great embarrassment in the Public Finances;

That this House views with regret the proposal of the Government to expend for the year 1883, $2,906,627, more than the expenditure for 1881, and $4,906,325, more than the expenditure for all purposes in 1878.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman who moved this resolution has been brief in his remarks, and I shall be equally brief in my reply. I must call, however, the attention of the House to the fact that, notwithstanding it has been intimated to the country, on what grounds I do not know, that whenever our friends opposite go to the country, they do not intend to make the National Policy or Pacific Railway two of the questions they are to divide the country upon, I should judge, from the speech of my hon. friend, that whatever may be the policy of his party he intends to make the National Policy and the question of protection to our industries leading planks in his platform, at all events. In calling attention to the sums expended in 1873, 1878 and 1881, he has compared them with the Estimates now on the Table. Well, it has often been stated that a comparison between the Estimates and the expenditure for a year is not a fair mode of comparing expenditure; for instance, it will be remembered that in the Estimates of last year the actual expenditure was a little under \$500,000 less than the estimated expenditure, and, therefore, though the hon. gentleman may state the figures carefully and correctly—I have not examined them—that the Estimates for all purposes, laid on the Table, reach \$29,000,000, still it does not follow that those Estimates will exactly show the amount of expenditure during the next year. As a rule the expenditure keeps below the Estimates. Now, this resolution is misleading, though the figures may be correct, inasmuch as it indicates that the absolute expenditure for which the people are to be taxed, has increased \$2,900,000 between 1881 and 1883, and \$1,000,000 or \$4,000,000 over the expenditure of 1878. Now, I think it would have been fairer had the hon. gentleman, when giving his figures, conveyed to the House some idea of the items of this increased outlay, and confessed that a considerable portion of it is not taxation upon the people at all. For instance, I may state as to the public works, that the expenditure for our railways is considerably increased in the Estimates for 1882 and 1883 as compared with the expenditure of 1880 and 1881, and as compared with the mileage of railways in operation in 1878. It is well known to him that, since 1878, we have purchased, and taken possession of and are now working 127 miles of the Grand Trunk Railroad, formerly not worked by the Government. In the discussion of the Estimates, last evening, it was stated that \$300,000 additional had to be asked to pay the increase, chargeable to the working expenses of that railway, because its business has increased, giving us a corresponding revenue. Still, from the language of the resolution, it might be supposed that this has put an increased tax upon the people. We are now not only working these 127 miles of road, not worked in 1878, but are doing 40 to 45 per cent. more business on it than in that year. Is it fair then, to say that, because we may expend \$2,200,000 more, in 1882, in the working of railways than in previous years, and receive the \$2,200,000 back, supposing the receipts meet the expenditures, that we are in a worse position than we occupied when the average deficit was \$300,000 or \$400,000 a year, so far as the taxation upon the people is concerned? Then, with reference to the post office, its expenditure is considerably increased within the last two or three years—not because the geographical dimensions of our country have increased—but on account of the large increase in our population in the North-West and elsewhere. Besides, we are constructing railways in British Columbia, where the contractors are now employing from 6,000 to 10,000 hands, who must have additional postal accommodation. We are giving such increased accommodation throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and while we have increased the expenditure considerably in the last two or three years, if the House does not relieve the people from the burden of taxation on the country newspapers, we shall have a smaller deficit than in 1878. Therefore, any increased expenditure in that direction is not an increased tax on the people. We obtain a return from it just as much as from additional cars on our railways, which carry an additional number of passengers and a larger quantity of freight. The men carried over those roads pay for the service, and this outlay does not represent additional taxation. If we give additional postal accommodation to the people, and obtain an equivalent in revenue, the people or the House should not be misled by the idea that that increased outlay means additional taxation, though it nominally represents increased expenditure. There is another point worth noticing: during the next year, we will pay into the sinking fund \$500,000 more than we paid in 1877. Now, what does this mean? It is the redemption of our debt to that extent since 1878. Therefore, though we have to provide for this charge, under the terms on which those bonds were floated, the increase of this fund by \$500,000, within the last four years, is not necessarily increased taxation; it is a laying aside of that amount over and above what we paid in 1877 for the redemption of the debt. In this respect, then, the Government are not chargeable for any dereliction of duty or increase of the taxation on that account. Then, with reference to the expenditure on the Indians, the hon. gentleman takes a less hopeful view than ours. True, that expenditure during the last few years has increased very considerably. It is very heavy the present year and may be heavy next year. But if hon. gentlemen opposite were on the Government side of the House, and had been during the last and all that is expired of the present year, and if they were providing for the future, I believe they would have arrived at the conclusions we have reached, that this money is well spent if it prevents Indian wars—if it prevents not only Indian difficulties that would require an increase of our police force—but outrages upon the lives and properties of the settlers. And, therefore, apart from the humane considerations, as a matter of policy, I am satisfied the country will sustain the action of the Government in providing for those Indians and saving them from starvation. But we are more hopeful than the mover of this resolution with regard to this expenditure, because the time is not far distant when the Pacific Railroad will extend into the Indian territories, and we shall be able to say to the aborigines: "Here is work for you as for the Indians in British Columbia at present, and so long as it lasts; if you will not undertake it you must abide the consequences." And we will be relieved from the necessity of providing for the prevention of starvation. That state of things is rapidly approaching, and we are more sanguine on this side of the House with reference to our future expenditure in relation to the Indians, than we were in the past. As that country becomes filled up, as the population takes possession of it, it is of still greater importance that we should increase our police force so that order may be maintained and the Indians placed in such a position that there may be no justification on their part for taking possession of the property of settlers to keep themselves from starving. The hon. gentleman says that if we increase expenditure it will be exceedingly difficult to reduce it. That is the case with reference to certain classes of expenditure. In the Estimates, now before the House, it will be seen that there is at least \$1,000,000 voted for Public Works more than there was in 1878. It may be said that involves additional taxation. Well, the Government have asked Parliament this Session to vote more money than they did last Session or the previous year, because our revenue is increasing to such an extent, that though I estimated there would be no increase of Customs during February, March, April, May and June on account of the reduction made in taxes, the increase in the last six months has been something like \$600,000 in the item of Customs alone, showing that Parliament can increase the expenditure on Public Works necessary to be built or completed in the public interest. The Government have asked Parliament therefore to appropriate, as I have no doubt Parliament will appropriate, something like \$1,000,000 for the next year over and above the expenditure of 1878. Let us take up a few of the items contained in these Supplementary Estimates which are larger, I admit, than I expected they would be when I made my financial statement, and see on what grounds the increase is based. We know that a gale took place since I made my financial statement that swept away part of the island which protects the harbor of Toronto, and in order that the damage should not be increased by delay, we have had to ask for \$87,000 to remedy it. Then we come to the question of expenditure in the North-West. So strong has been the pressure of business, so universal has been the demand for greater facilities in the delivery of postal matter in Winnipeg, that the Government felt called upon to ask an appropriation of \$50,000, in addition to the sum asked for before, in order to provide sufficient postal accommodation in that city. We have also provided in the Supplementary Estimates for additional accommodation for emigrants in the North-West. The flow of immigration into that country is so great that the Government felt they could not hesitate a moment in providing, no matter what it might cost, for the accommodation of immigrants, not only in the vicinity of Winnipeg, but in the far West. A very considerable sum is also asked for the erection of gaols and buildings for the police in the far West. The whole of these additional estimates, including the harbor of Toronto, amount to over \$200,000. The interest on the public debt is also increasing, though not so rapidly as it was supposed it would, because the expenditure on our canals and the Pacific Railway has been made, to a certain extent, out of our surplus. Therefore, the interest on our public debt has not increased as rapidly as was expected. But it cannot be expected that the interest on our public debt will be no greater in 1882 or 1883, than the average interest from 1874 to 1879, when but little had been expended in the enlargements of canals and the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. From the fact that the construction of this railway is being so energetically pushed forward that it is expected 500 or 600 miles will be completed by July 1st, 1883, a very large sum will be required for subsidy; the completion of the canals and other various expenditures of that kind will also require a sum, so that the interest on our debt cannot remain at the average of from 1874 to 1878, or as it stood in 1881. To this expenditure I have named, must also be added the item of \$365,000, for rolling stock. As the hon. the Minister of Railways explained, both last night and on a former occasion, it cannot be expected, that as we increase our mileage and as the work increases on our mileage, it will not be necessary to add to the rolling stock, to provide additional engines and facilities for the moving of freight, and that that should be taken out of the receipts. I have prepared a statement, which will be increased by the increase of the Estimates yet to be brought down, showing what the taxation upon the people will be, as compared with previous years. That is a fair way of putting it. You cannot consider as increased taxation, the increased expenditure on railways or postal service, which give an increased revenue owing to increased business. The true way to test the matter is, to look at the expenditure of the country and the taxation per head of the population, necessary to pay that expenditure, as imposed in Customs and Excise duties. The question is, what sum of money would have been necessary, under the statement I submitted some time ago, in the shape of taxation during next year, and what would that amount to per head of the population? When making my financial statement in February last, I took the expenditure from 1874 to 1879, and I took the taxation that would be necessary to be collected during those years to pay that expenditure. I stated that the expenditure was not paid out of taxation during that period, but I added to the taxation collected from Customs and Excise the sums that would be necessary to pay that expenditure. I took the average of population for five years, and showed—and my statement has not been controverted, nor can it be successfully controverted—that the taxation during the five years from 1874 to 1879, was \$1.88 per head, which from 1879 to 1881 was 23 cents per head less. In the Estimates that were before the House, and that varied from the Estimates since submitted, we find that though the estimated sum to be received from Customs and Excise for the next year was \$25,000,000, it was estimated that there would be \$3,000,000 of a surplus, which would make the taxation necessary to pay the expenditure, \$22,000,000. Now then, Sir, the population of 1882-83, allowing simply the increase of the last decade, which is $1\frac{1}{8}$ per cent. will be \$4,502,000, and if you divide \$22,000,000 of the taxation by that figure we have exactly \$4.88 per head, notwithstanding we are asking for a large sum to be expended for public works more than last year, more for Indians, more in the payment of the Sinking Fund, and more interest than in the past; notwithstanding all that, the taxation per head would have been, had the expenditure been for what I stated when I made my estimate with an addition of \$300,000 for Supplementary Estimates, \$1.88 per head, and adding the additional Estimates brought down for public works it would be \$4.98 against \$4.88, which was the expenditure from 1874 to 1878 with a much smaller sum required as interest, and not more than \$500,000 paid in the Sinking Fund, with a much smaller sum expended for public works and on the Indians than we are asking for the next year. Even with other expenditures that cannot be avoided, the result will still be that all the expenditures made during the year will amount to only 10 cents a head over and above the average, with a much larger rate of progress in our public works and canals and in the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman says that we are in a state of prosperity just now, but that by-and-bye there will be a diminution of imports, and therefore we are embarrassing ourselves by asking for a large expenditure that cannot be curtailed. Sir, if at any period within the next four or five years it should be found that a reduction was taking place, we shall simply have to reduce the expenditure for public works, harbors and improvements of that kind, from \$2,000,000 to \$1,000,000. I admit that so far as the remaining expenditure is concerned, it is not easy to do that, that if you have an increase in the general expenditure of a fixed character it is difficult to do it; but with reference to the expenditure of public works, which forms a large item in the present increase, it is susceptible of being controlled by Parliament without any difficulty whatever. The hon. member speaks of increased expenditure as the result of the increased taxation. He may say: "Very well, but you are taking more than \$22,000,000, you are taking \$3,000,000 more." Well, Sir, I admit that. We are expecting to raise, during the next year, at least \$3,000,000 more than necessary to pay the expenditure. But the hon. member says that it is unwise to take this additional sum of money out of the pockets of the people, but I answer him with his own statement, that this state of things cannot continue. We are in a very prosperous condition to-day, and it is possible that a change may take place; but I asked him, would it be prudent, when we are in a period of what I hope will be one of long prosperity, to reduce our revenue to the present expenditure? No, Sir, the hon. member himself would be the first to declaim against anything of that kind. He would say that though we are now enjoying great prosperity the imports might fall off in a year or two, and therefore we would not be justified in reducing the revenue. That is what he would say were he on this side of the House. I would answer by saying: "Very well, as long as we are prosperous our people can pay this \$2,000,000 or \$3,000,000 and it will go for the reduction of our debt, or the construction of public works, which will save the payment of interest and thus reduce for all time to come the taxation of the country." Then the hon. member refers to the strikes in the United States and to the strikes in Canada as being the result of this policy; he says that men are asking for increased salaries here in the Civil Service on account of the increased cost of living, and that it is desirable that this should be made a cheap country to live in. Well, Sir, we might discuss how far a cheap country to live in has reference to the question of prices, because it is altogether a relative question. If you can only earn \$1 a day, and it costs you 95 cents a day to live, and if you can earn \$1.50 a day, and it costs you \$1.25 to live, relatively the last state of things is the best for those who are placed in that position in any country. The question of strikes was referred to the other night. It is regretted that strikes do take place; but I can say, from my communications with manufacturers throughout Canada, that I know of many cases in which an advance of wages has been made by the employers without any demand from the employés at all. I believe that in many cases the strikes could be prevented if the same course had been taken a little earlier. It is a struggle to a certain extent between capital and labor, and the very moment it is in demand then of course it has a right legally to ask to get the benefit of

it. When capital is in the ascendent then you will find that capital, as a rule, if it is not remunerative, will necessarily press upon labor and demand that the latter shall make some concession. If the same liberal course that has been pursued in many cases, had been generally pursued in Canada we would have had much fewer strikes. The hon. Minister has given us a list of increased prices. Let me say that the increase of the price of living—and I speak from my own experience—is but slightly affected by the National Policy, but the increase is chiefly in the higher price of food. Fuel to-day is higher than formerly. Why? Because men were without employment, and had to go into the woods in winter to get their fuel because they had nothing to buy it with, and consequently the price went down; but now when labor is more remunerative and men have more money the price of fuel has gone up. Of course, there is some increase of expenditure in the Dominion, and there must necessarily be an increase when we are constantly extending our public works. Well, Sir, the taxation of the people during the last year was 23 cents less than the average from 1874 to 1879, and should all this money appropriated now be expended, it will only be 10 cents per head of the population more than was collected, or ought to have been collected, by our friends opposite. Therefore, there can be no great alarm on the part of the people in this matter. If we collect more it goes to the reduction of the debt and towards preventing the necessity of floating loans that would be subject to interest, and in this way we effect a direct saving to the people. It is out of one pocket into the other. It is not increasing the taxation without obtaining an equivalent; and therefore the amount for which the people would be taxed in Customs and Excise, even with the reductions we have made in that Department, with the proposed reductions from the revenue of $50,000 now received from the postage on newspapers, the Dominion will still be in a position to have a handsome surplus that can be appropriated in the reduction of our debt.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to challenge the figures of the hon. Minister, and to show by his own figures that his statements are incorrect, in so far as regards his assertion that $4.23 is the average of the taxes paid by the people for some years.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I did not say $4.23; I never used those figures.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understood the amount stated was $4.23. What were the figures?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. To what figures does the hon. gentleman refer? I said the average expenditure for which taxation was necessary for the period preceding 1874, was $4.88, and for 1878-79 and 1880-81, it was 23 cents less.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is a matter of a few cents, the amount being $4.88. I take the returns of the hon. gentleman himself, and apply them to the Province of Quebec. I have them here, they being taken from the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1880-81, and they show that the taxes paid by the people of Quebec for Customs duties, amounted to $6.94 per head; and I desire these figures to go to the public in order that they may not be deceived by the declarations of hon. gentlemen opposite. When I made this assertion previously, I did so because I was sure that I was making a correct statement, and I then complained that the taxes were not imposed in an equitable manner, as regards the Province of Quebec.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. What proportion of that sum does the hon. member suppose was paid by the people of Quebec, and what by the people of Ontario?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I can tell the hon. member exactly, according to his own returns. In order not to make a mistake I am in a position to give him the amount of Customs duties paid per head by the population in each Province, from 1868 to 1881. I will not occupy the time of the House by giving the statistics from 1867, but I will confine myself to 1880-81. In 1880, Ontario paid $3.14; Quebec, $5.03; Nova Scotia, $3.14; New Brunswick, $4.05. In 1881, Ontario paid $3.22; Quebec, $6.94; Nova Scotia, $3.40; New Brunswick, $3.31. I have compared these figures myself with the Trade and Navigation Returns and they are correct. I repeat that the Province of Quebec bears an undue share of the burdens of the taxation of the Dominion, and we have not a return for it. That is what I complained of before, and I do so now. I do not impute to the hon. Finance Minister any intention to mislead the public more than Ontario, but I say his figures are totally incorrect as to averages. You can make an average over the whole population, and that might give $4.88, but by the hon. gentleman's own figures it appears that the Province of Quebec pays an undue taxation. We paid $3.62 per head. It is my desire that these figures from the official documents, prepared by the Department of Customs, should be laid before the public so that there may be no mistake about them, and in order that the people may ascertain, and especially the people of the Province of Quebec, as to whether the figures I have given are true or not, and judge between the hon. gentleman and myself on this point.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the hon. gentleman understands the matter better than the House would suppose he did from the statements he made. It is quite true that the amount collected at the ports in Quebec is larger per head of the population than any of the far older Provinces; but it is well known that a large portion of the goods imported into Montreal pay duty there, and are consumed in Ontario. I merely wish to put the hon. gentleman right on this point, because the impression might prevail among people outside the House who have not looked into the matter that Quebec paid a much larger sum per head than any other Province in the Dominion. In 1878-79 the sugar refined in the Dominion was refined in Quebec. It was brought to Montreal, the duty paid there, and it was then distributed through the country, and the Province of Quebec had credit for that in the revenue raised. It will be found that the statements made by the hon. gentleman are accurate so far as regards the Trade and Navigation Returns, but you must take into account the goods consumed in Ontario, and in some cases in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and that Ontario obtains very large supplies from Montreal. There can be no doubt that the consumers in Ontario pay the duty rather than our friends in Quebec.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There can be no doubt the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) is entirely wrong in the use he made of the figures in regard to Quebec contributing a much larger sum than Ontario, but it shows the necessity of having statistics correct in future Sessions. I remember we took some pains to obtain the proportion from Montreal and Quebec, and my recollection is that either 53 or 63 per cent. of the amount was actually paid in Quebec, but the balance was paid on goods consumed chiefly in Ontario, and partly in Ontario, for a considerable quantity of goods has passed over the railway to the Lower Provinces during the last few years. I desire, however, to say a few words upon the remarks of the hon. Minister. He has endeavored to demonstrate a very difficult problem, namely, that the people were heavily taxed and yet paid no taxation. It is one of the most curious illustrations of, what I was going to say, mental imbecility—it is a strong phrase—that I ever heard of.

Mr. MILLS. Hallucination.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, anything you like so long as it affects the mind. The simple fact is, and it is an appalling fact, that within the last three years the taxation of the people has been increased by $4,500,000. The hon. gentleman endeavored to soften the impression that might be derived from this one point, by stating that a great deal of it was paid for public works, Indians, and so on. No doubt. We are not accusing the hon. gentleman of appropriating the money to his own use, but we do accuse him of unnecessarily and extravagantly increasing the taxation of the people. He proposes next year to levy from the people the sum of $27,000,000 from Customs, Excise and minor revenues, an increase of $4,500,000 in the course of three years. The hon. gentleman endeavors to show that circumstances existed which compelled him to increase the taxation of the people to a considerable extent. The hon. gentleman, in the course of his remarks, alleged that the expenditure upon the canals was not necessary, because hon. gentlemen opposite—meaning the present Opposition—commenced them. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what canals we commenced? Will he mention a single one that we commenced?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. gentleman took tenders for the enlargement of the canals. He did not accept the tenders invited by us, but asked for new ones.

Mr. MACKENZIE. And were none let before that?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Some were. There was paid during the time the hon. gentleman was in office $3,000,000 and odd on contracts which were in existence when the hon. gentleman came into office.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We expended altogether something like $25,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite commenced the canal system and we carried it on. I am not blaming them for doing it; I am only blaming them for giving us the credit or discredit—if there was any—of beginning them when the hon. gentleman knows that the Government of which he was a member commenced all these works. We, of course, carried them on, doing so tentatively. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) and the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) blamed me very severely the other evening, because we proceeded leisurely—we did not go fast enough. I believed then that these canals would be a greater success than I fear now they will be; but, nevertheless, I considered that for works of that character requiring strength and solidity, and therefore requiring time to settle, it was not well to proceed too hastily. Now, instead of being blamed for not hurrying the works, the hon. gentleman blames us apparently for commencing them, forgetting that we never commenced them.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I never blamed you. I think you were right in going on with them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The only work we commenced and carried on was the small canal at St. Peters; the others were prosecuted in consequence of obligations assumed by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. Finance Minister of the late Government (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) in his first Budget Speech, gave a recapitulation of the various sums we were necessarily compelled to spend to carry out the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. gentleman has accomplished this feat: in the course of three years incumbency of office he proposes to increase the taxation of the people by $4,500,000, which is only paralleled by the last year of his former incumbency of office when he raised the expenditure from $19,000,000 to $23,000,000. I admit, Sir, the plea of the hon. gentleman with respect to the increase of interest and the increase on account of Sinking Fund. There is no doubt that whatever sum the interest was increased by, it is not one which the Ministry of the day should be charged with having produced; nor is it fair to charge contributions to Sinking Fund as an increase against the Ministry of the day. It is true, at the same time, that hon. gentlemen opposite, when arguing about the expenditure of the late Government, invariably refused to make this admission, and have charged us with the increase of Sinking Fund and interest precisely as if it were a matter for which we were wholly responsible. In the debate on the Budget I contrasted their expenditures with ours, but I gave them credit for all those increases relating to the interest on debt, Sinking Fund, Indians, North-West Police, Weights and Measures and items of an abnormal character, and yet I was able to show that their expenditure had increased more than ours by a sum considerably in excess of $1,500,000.

Mr. BOWELL. Weights and Measures, did you say?

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, that was included as an abnormal expenditure. Hon. gentlemen opposite decline to accept the existence of strikes as an evidence of the derangement of the labor market. There is no doubt, as many professional men have told me who have kept an exact account of their personal expenses, that the increase of their expenses, owing to the taxes laid upon them by the new Tariff, amounts to 10 per cent. of their income, and if that is the case with them how much more will be the increase in that of the laboring classes who have not the same facilities for obtaining immediate credit and cheap goods as the general run of our professional men. During the late strikes in Toronto a statement was made by the workingmen claiming an increase, because their taxation was 20 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. There is no doubt that the increased cost of living caused men in Toronto, Hamilton and other cities to strike for higher wages. It is true, there has been no strike in Ottawa, because all the workingmen have been driven out of Ottawa. This city, so far as workingmen are concerned, is a desert. As long as the late Government were in office, efforts were made by hon. gentlemen opposite to inflame them against the Government, and I remember well when a mob was encouraged to come up to the Buildings and raise a row at the door.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes; although the members of Parliament who were encouraging that demonstration knew perfectly well that the Government had nothing to do with the labor market.

Mr. ROCHESTER. Will the hon. gentleman name the members of Parliament?

Mr. MACKENZIE. I could name them very well.

Mr. ROCHESTER. Well, name them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman knows them as well as I do, and perhaps better—just the same as other members of Parliament stimulated riots in Montreal on the 12th of July, in order to bring odium upon the Government. In fact, there is no sort of lawless or revolutionary proceedings that hon. gentlemen opposite have not been ready to resort to, in order to bring discredit on their opponents. It will always be a matter of difficulty to restrain Tories, out of office, from such demonstrations; they become insatiable, their rapacity is inexhaustible, and nothing can restrain them while they are out of office. We can remain in Opposition philosophically; in fact, it is much more comfortable to be out of office than in it. The hon. gentleman says he understands, from certain symptoms, that nothing is to be said about the National Policy in the coming contest. Well, I can tell him, for myself, that nothing will restrain me from expressing my views freely on the National Policy, which I consider to be a national folly and a national crime. Nothing will restrain me from putting forward those views which I have always held as to the fixity of taxation where it is possible to have it. I have said—and the hon. gentleman may make of it what he pleases—that when a particular policy becomes the law of the land, no incoming Government would be justified in violently interfering with existing interests.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman may say hear, hear, but if he will look at my speech at Hamilton, in 1874, or at Brampton, in 1877, when I was in office, and without the slightest thought of the present condition of affairs turning up, he will find that I propounded those views at that time, precisely as I do now. But, Sir, whatever may be our policy in future years, it is perfectly clear that every one who has a love for his country must protest against a policy which is already beginning to produce such disastrous effects within three years of its inception; a policy which has destroyed our national trade abroad; a policy which is bringing us into discredit with the British Empire, where a different policy prevails; a policy which is levying all its extortions on the industrial classes of the country and making a few people rich at the expense of the many; a policy which refuses to give the slightest protection to labor, but imposes all kinds of restriction upon labor and increases the taxes on those who till the soil, and those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Sir, it is easy for the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, it is easy for those who possess large incomes, it is easy for those who have large and prosperous manufactories, to laud a policy which imposes severe taxation upon the poorer classes of the country; but the time will come when these working classes will resent this interference with their just rights, and will call hon. gentlemen opposite to account for the manner in which they have abused the power which they obtained accidentally three or four years ago.

Mr. BOWELL. I was surprised to hear the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, particularly those with regard to the Trade Returns. No one knows better than the hon. gentleman himself, that these calculations and tables were made upon the same principle that prevailed when he was in office; and if it be necessary now to change this principle, and to present these figures which will show the exact consumption of goods in the several Provinces, it will be equally necessary to apply the same rule to the period of the hon. gentleman's Administration of affairs. He knows that when goods are imported into Montreal and then purchased by any merchant in the Maritime Provinces or in the North-West, it is almost impossible to keep an exact account of these sales in order to learn the actual amount of goods consumed in the Province of Quebec or any of the other Provinces. Goods may be purchased and sold out of bond. If the articles that paid duty in Montreal were confined to the Province of Quebec alone, then there might be a comparative statement made, such as that desired by the hon. member for Lambton; but he knows, and every merchant knows, that when goods on which the duty is paid, are sold to merchants in other Provinces, it is impossible to prepare such a statement as he says this Government ought to prepare, unless he is disposed to enact a law to compel every merchant who sells an article in another Province than that into which it is imported, to keep a debit and credit account of the transaction. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) was out only $1 in the figures he gave in reference to the Province of Quebec—by the substitution of a six for a five; but the error, I have no doubt, was unintentional, because he did not prepare the table himself, but cut it from a newspaper.

Mr. CASGRAIN. From your paper?

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not expect the Government to give an exact statement; what I proposed was that an estimated statement should be made up.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is fertile in explanations. What the hon. gentleman said was that the result was not correct in the mode in which the hon. Finance Minister applied his figures; and that, it only proved that the Government should take steps to furnish a statement by which it could be ascertained what amount had been consumed in the different Provinces, and I have pointed out that it is almost impossible to prepare a table of that kind. The hon. gentleman also spoke of the hon. Finance Minister's mental imbecility, and it was suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell that he should not use that word, but speak of an hallucination of the mind. It is possible that, as we grow old, we may grow imbecile, but I fancy that remark may be hurled back to some hon. gentlemen opposite, to whom it is more appropriate than to the hon. Finance Minister. The hon. gentleman is not slow in using epithets towards hon. members on this side of the House that may be considered improper; it may not be improper in him to hurl epithets of that kind towards the hon. Finance Minister—I leave that to himself and his supporters. The hon. gentleman also declared that the Finance Minister had declared that strikes were not an evidence of the derangement of the labor market. My hon. friend said nothing of the kind; he made no reference whatever to that point. What he wished to impress on the House, was the fact that strikes occur in all countries, and at almost all times, and under different circumstances. If he argues that the late strikes are attributable to the present trade policy, how does he account for the strike that occurred and extended from Portland to Sarnia, upon the Grand Trunk Railway, at the time the late Premier was in office? How does he account for the strikes in the United States, with the immense destruction of property, during the same period? There was a combination of labor at that time, and a derangement of the labor market, resulting from the belief and declarations of trades unions that the men were not properly remunerated for their labor; the result was the strikes. Strikes occur in England more than in any other country in the world, the most Free Trade country in the world.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only Free Trade country in the world.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, the only one. I shall not refer at length to the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton, in reference to the difficulties that arose in Ottawa when he held office, when he accused members of Parliament of having incited those troubles and difficulties. I think he should in response to the hon. member for Carleton, have named them, if he knew of anything of the kind. I know that hon. members who were not in accord with him or his Government, used every endeavor possible to allay that excitement; and no man was more active than the hon. members for Ottawa, Carleton and Northumberland, in New Brunswick, in striving to quiet and wisely direct the men. Those members, with others, did all they possibly could—not at the risk of their lives, perhaps—but at the risk of personal injury—to prevent those men even calling on the hon. gentleman, who has complained so bitterly to-day of the exciting of the workmen at that time. As to his insinuations respecting the riots in Montreal, I do not know whom he referred to. I hesitate not to say that he is quite as incorrect in this instance as when he attributed unworthy motives to members of Parliament, in reference to the labor difficulties in Ottawa. I know of no member who incited those troubles, or who did anything other than try to allay the difficulties that occurred at that time. I also know that members on this side of the House at that time used those troubles on every stump in Ontario, in denouncing prominent members of the Orange Society, because they would not lend themselves to the aggravation of the difficulties that occurred at that time, and if there was political capital made out of them, it was by the gentlemen who followed the member for Lambton.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I know this charge was applied to myself and the hon. member for East Hastings, who also did all he could to allay the troubles. I repeat, it comes with a very bad grace from the late Premier to bring such charges against members of Parliament unless he is prepared to designate them. The hon. gentleman in his remarks referring to the trade policy of the country, and to the Trade Returns, misstated the facts, as the returns show clearly and distinctly that the National Policy has increased our trade with Great Britain, that it turned to the advantage of the manufactures of England and to the disadvantage of the United States; that while our imports from the United States had decreased, the imports from England have increased, and that our exports, on the contrary, to the United States have increased as compared with 1878, showing that we have bought more from English merchants, that, too, with money obtained from the larger exports of our products to our American neighbors. I have another point to notice. In making a comparative statement in reference to the weights and measures, as well as in reference to the other Department under the present, as compared with the late Government, I believe it will be found the result will not be to the disadvantage of the present Administration. The hon. member for Lambton knows well that when he brought the Weights and Measures Act into force, he expended over $52,000 in paying officers in the different sections of the Dominion, before they had done a single hour's work. And yet, in face of these facts, we have had from every stump almost in Ontario—I do not know as to the other Provinces—whenever a speech was made by hon. gentlemen opposite, this question of the weights and measures was hurled in the faces of the electors, and the statement made that the present Government not only increased the expenditure of the weights and measures branch, but on almost every thing else connected with them. I may just as well inform the House how this Department was administered, because we may expect, during the next campaign, the same stories told over and over again.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman says: hear, hear. I know no hon. member who is so apt in using these figures for party purposes as that hon. member. Perhaps the House will be surprised when I point out how the Weights and Measures Act was brought into operation, how many officers were appointed, how much money was expended, and the amount of work performed for the pay. We remember well that the hon. member for Gloucester, for one or two Sessions, made a particular point of claiming the refund of that proportion of an officer's salary which was retained for superannuation purposes—an officer of the Weights and Measures Department, residing, I think, in his own county or neighborhood. The hon. gentleman argued, and perhaps fairly, that though that officer had nothing to do, and did nothing, it was not his fault, but the fault of the Government who never furnished him with any materials with which he could perform any work. I find, on examining the matter, that the amounts spent by the late Government on this Department, without one hour's or one minute's work ever being performed, reached the nice little sum of $52,282. In case there should be any doubt on this point, I will give the localities in which those officers lived, and their names, from which it can be seen whether my statement is correct or not.

N. B.—The salaries of these 97 Officers began on the date of their approved surety bonds.

I call the attention of hon. members from Ontario to the fact that while in Ontario there were forty-two officers receiving only $19,800.79 for doing nothing, in Quebec there were thirty-three friends of the Government receiving $20,048 for doing the same labor. If my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Tassé) knew these facts he would admit there was French domination in this country. These facts and figures are taken from the official record of the Department, and they show that hon. gentlemen opposite squandered the public money, payed their political supporters out of the public chests to the extent of over $52,000 in this branch of the service alone, before they furnished officers whom they had appointed by Order in Council with any instruments or tools with which they could commence the duties to which they were appointed; yet those hon. gentlemen constantly declare across the floor of the House that the present Government have been the most extravagant that ever existed in this Country.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BOWELL. I closed my remarks before recess by saying that the late Government had paid in salaries of the officers of the Weights and Measures branch of the service, $52,282.32 before they had performed any work. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Sir Albert J. Smith) asked the question, who paid this money? I scarcely knew that it was necessary for the hon. gentleman to ask that question, when I gave the dates of the Orders in Council appointing these different men, and fixing the dates at which they commenced operations. Had he reflected for a moment he would have known that from the 30th day of September, 1875 to some of the last dates mentioned, such as 30th June, 1877, which were the periods during which these gentlemen did nothing. That being the case, he must have known, when asking that question, who paid the salaries during the time they were unemployed. I have a record of one case here which is pertinent to the present discussion as showing the manner in which some of these officers were appointed and the method by which they were paid. I refer to the appointment of a man named Sands, in Port Hope. I find that as early as the 23rd February, 1875, he was recommended for appointment by the then member for the riding, Mr. Ross. However, not until 4th April 1876, was Mr. Sands appointed, and thereupon Mr. Ross was notified of the fact. Mr. Sands, on the 11th April, forwarded his bonds and sureties. The next entry I found was that he was paid the sum of $350 on account of salary, which, by-the-bye, had never been fixed by Order in Council or in any other way. Again, in 1877 he had another cheque sent him for $252. In February, 1878, he was forwarded $636, being his salary from the 10th April, 1876, to the 31st January, 1878, at the rate of $700 per annum. This salary was paid out of Contingencies, the Order in Council never having fixed the amount, and the late Government never did a better thing than place on the Statute-book a law appointing an auditor, for since his appointment and under the law, transactions of this kind cannot again occur even if hon. gentlemen opposite returned to power. Having been wearied doing nothing for two years Mr. Sands tendered his resignation on the 24th of September, and the economical Government accepted that resignation. On the 4th of October, they appointed his successor, a nephew of Mr. Sands, two days before they went out of power. Mr. Perks continued in office for some time after, never having performed any labor other than having taken charge of the office, and in 1878 the gentleman very coolly proposed to the Government that if we would give him a year's salary he would retire, but the Government did not deem it in the interests of the country or of the revenue to do as he proposed, but, on the contrary, they dispensed with his services. In this transaction we have a very fair sample of the manner in which the office of Inland Revenue was conducted by the late Government, and the manner in which they rewarded their political friends, whether for services rendered or for anticipated services in future. Having disposed of that branch of the subject, I turn to another interesting fact, and that is while these gentlemen were doing nothing, the Government were employing their officers in stocking the cellars and lower flats of the Eastern Block with a large quantity of material that never was used and, as it is useless, will never be used. Without wearying the House by reading the quantity of each particular article, I shall content myself by saying that there is now in the lower parts of the building, weights, measures, scales and other articles which are comparatively useless to-day, amounting to $37,399.49, and if you add to this the $52,282.32 which was squandered on the officers for doing nothing you have a nice little sum thrown away on one branch of the service alone. I propose now for a moment to give a comparative statement of the receipts and estimates in that branch for a few years past. I find, on looking into this question, that a statement showing the annual receipts and expenditures in connection with the Weights and Measures equipment and inspection branch, is as follows: From 1876 to 1877, equipment cost $22,000.73; contingencies, $23,382.93; salaries, $55,025.48; total, $100,409.14. The receipts were $51,657.85. An Order in Council was passed in July, 1877, by which the tariff of fees was reduced, but not uniformly, the reduction varying from 11 to 66 per cent., and by 40th Victoria, chapter 15, when the weights and measures were found, on a second and subsequent inspection, to be correct, only 25 per cent. of the full fee was charged. This will account for the reduction in the amount of the receipts for the work performed after that date, and it is a sufficient answer to the charges which have been made that in the management of this branch of the service under the present Administration, the receipts have largely fallen off, while the expenditure in the performance of the work has been increased in the same ratio. In 1877-78 the equipment amounted to $4,484.37, contingencies, $25,788.21, salaries, $51,720.27, while the receipts amounted to $29,683.81, as against $51,657.85 in 1876-77. I do not bring that forward as a charge against the late Government, because they had relieved parties for whom the work was performed of a certain portion of the fee, and consequently they had less to pay.

* By Order in Council of 10th July, 1877, the tariff of fees was reduced but not uniformly; the reduction varied from 11 to 66 per cent., and by 40 Vic., cap. 15, when Weights and Measures were found on second or subsequent inspections to be correct, only twenty-five per cent. of the full fee was to be charged.

† The Weights and Measures Act of 15th May, 1879, only required a biennial instead of an annual inspection, which necessarily greatly reduced the gross amount of fees collected.

‡ The amount charged for equipment in 1876-77 contains some expenditure for Gas Standards. As there was at that time a vote generally applicable for equipment of Weights and Measures and Gas Standards, it was necessary to show all such expenditure together, but since that date there has been no special vote, and therefore whatever amount has been spent for that service has appeared in the statement for the service interested, whether Weights and Measures or Gas.

I have given this statement, Mr. Speaker, in order that the House may be placed in possession of the full details of the amount expended for all purposes in connection with that branch from 1878 to 1881. It has been alleged that there are a much larger number of officers in that branch now than there were under the late Administration, and on the surface, without investigation, there would appear to be an increase; but when the matter is investigated it will be found that the increase is only apparent and not in fact, for the reason that a number who are entered as being in the Excise Branch are also engaged in the Weights and Measures Branch, and as Inspectors of Gas. Thus one officer sometimes represents three, and this circumstance is made the basis of the statement which is circulated broadcast over the country, that three men are doing the work that was previously done by one. As regards gas inspection, the number of places at which gas was inspected in 1877-78, was eleven; in 1880-81, it was seventeen. The number of gas inspectors in 1877-78, was eleven; in 1880-81, it was thirteen. Of the thirteen inspectors in 1880-81, two received only $150 each per annum; one received only $250 per annum, for this service, as these three were also inspectors of weights and measures, instead of new officers being appointed for this service. The amount of salaries paid for gas inspection, in 1877-78, was $9,153; in 1880-81 it was $9,038. The inspection of gas meters is compulsory only once in five years. After the first inspection was completed only meters newly taken into use, or those found in new inspection districts, would be inspected. But the testing of gas for illuminating power and for purity goes on continuously, and is of infinitely greater importance and requires much more work than the inspection of meters, though it yields no revenue. I find that the Excise revenue and the Excise salaries in the different years are as follows:—

Year.	Excise Revenue.	Excise Salaries.	Cost of Salaries per cent on Collections.	Number of Excise Officers.	Increase of Revenue per cent.	Increase of Salaries per cent.
1872-73	$4,513,194	$135,305	3	180	—	—
1877-78	4,883,069	174,272	3½	206	8½	28
1880-81	5,400,903	189,528	3½	246	10½	8½

The increased number of officers in 1880-81 is accounted for as follows:—

Specially appointed for the survey of tobacco cultivated in Canada.....	15
Counted also as Inspectors of Weights and Measures.	3
“ “ “ Gas.....	1
Employed as Inspectors of Petroleum imported into Canada (for the Customs Department at the principal places), and for the more effectual inspection of Canadian Petroleum under the Act of 1880.....	6
Additional Excisemen required for the survey of distilleries, it having been found necessary to provide additional security for the collection of the revenue.....	6
Making a total of.....	31

The employment of the nine unaccounted for above became necessary in consequence of the additional work imposed on the Department in stamping Canadian tobacco and in providing and distributing stamps to the Customs Department for imported tobacco. There was a total number of forty appointed, as necessary on account of extra and additional work imposed on the Department by stamping for the different Custom Houses. I could show just as favorable a statement for the Department over which I have the honor to preside, for both the inside and outside service during the period of the present Administration, but as that has not been attacked by any hon. gentlemen on the other side, nor in the country either, I do not deem it necessary to refer to it. But there is just one other point to which I will call the attention of the House in order to show how the money of the country was spent by the late Government, and then I shall leave it to hon. gentlemen who may speak after us to explain how the $52,000 was thrown away on men who did nothing, and why they had $30,000 or $40,000 worth of material in the vaults of the Buildings useless. In October, 1878, when the present Government took office, we found about the Buildings, for such purposes as keeping them clean, fourteen men and sixty-one charwomen, making a total force of seventy-five, as against thirty or forty in 1873, when the late Government assumed office. Why it was necessary to increase the number to that extent I leave it to hon. gentlemen opposite to explain. One case, however, may illustrate the whole; one woman was appointed, who never made her appearance at all but sent her servant; the reason for her appointment may be found in the fact that her husband had a good vote, and the inference is that this rapid increase of those employees during the last days of the reign of the hon. member for Lambton was connected with political objects. We have the work now as well done as in 1878-79, when we came into power, by twelve men and thirty-seven women, or a total of forty-nine against seventy-five. I have no doubt, if the pruning-hook was still further applied the number could be reduced still further. This fact may be considered one of minor importance, but it is on a par with the whole administration of the affairs of the country during the five years that hon. gentlemen opposite occupied the Treasury benches. You may investigate every branch of the Service, and you will find the same extravagance prevailed and unnecessary employees on the staff. Not only were there too many charwomen, but too many inspectors of weights and measures, as well as superfluous officers in other branches. I think I have said enough to show the country and the House that when hon. gentlemen opposite declaim in the future as they have in the past against the extravagance of the present Government, under this particular branch, they should compare its present management with that of the late Government, and notice the smallness of the return in work formerly received for the money paid. In fact under the late Government there was no work performed. Then let them ask themselves who have governed the country properly so far, at least, as the Excise Department of this country is concerned.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to make a few remarks in connection with a statement which was made before six o'clock, by the hon. member for Lambton. He stated, if I understood him correctly, that the riots which occurred during his term of office were caused by the intrigues of hon. members of Parliament, and, as I thought, by inference, the members from this Ottawa region.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not mean that.

Mr. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman said: "The troubles were caused by hon. members of Parliament," and I naturally supposed that we were the men pointed at.

Mr. MACKENZIE. On the contrary, every one knows that the hon. gentleman, as well as the hon. member for Carleton, did everything they could in the opposite direction. I never dreamt of imparting anything of the kind to these hon. gentlemen.

Mr. WRIGHT. I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation; but I understood him to have spoken in a different sense. But, with regard to some other statements he made, I may venture a few remarks. He stated that the workingmen were driven out of Ottawa. I can tell him where they are: they are driving our rafts, running our saw-mills and engaged on our farms and in all our industries and operations. I think, indeed, the change has been a marvellous one so far as these men are concerned. So far as I am concerned, and without entering into the economic discussion which at times occupies the House, that the hard times which appeared to follow my hon. friends now in Opposition so inevitably, appear to have passed away under the present Administration. In my own section, where I used to get men under the old régime at 50 cents a day, I am now obliged to pay $1.50. That is rather hard on me; but as the object of all Governments is to secure the greatest good to the greatest number, it is a great deal better for the masses. I am quite satisfied with the explanation of the hon. member for Lambton, because I was certain that whatever good was done with regard to the men concerned in the troubles in the time of the late Government, was due to my hon. friend the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Especially to yourself.

Mr. WRIGHT. I thank my hon. friend for the compliment.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I propose to say a few words on this motion, and first to address my attention to the chivalrous hon. member for Hastings, the hon. Minister of Customs. He undertook to make a defence of his Government, because of their large economies, and particularly in the Department of Weights and Measures. It must have been apparent to every hon. member of the House, that he was giving us in advance the campaign literature with which we expect the country to be strewn during the forthcoming elections.

Mr. PLUMB. You have been scattering yours.

Mr. ROSS. If the dying swan will restrain his music a little longer, perhaps I will address a few remarks to him. We know that in such speeches we have the advance sheets of the campaign literature of 1882, and that evidently the hon. gentleman spoke from a prepared brief, although he did not speak briefly. His remarks were tedious in the extreme, and were not very pertinent; they were not a completely accurate statement of the facts. They did not prove half as much as he wished to prove. Let me address myself at first to almost the last remarks he made. He challenges the confidence of the country, for this good Government of his, because when they came into power they inspected the lobbies. They came down here early in the morning and found there were some thirty, forty, seventy or eighty charwomen engaged; and this gallant, chivalrous, Minister of Customs, true to the interests of the Conservative party, with a heroism worthy of the great work which he undertook, dismissed a number of these poor charwomen, cut down the number of employees in that Department, in order that this country might not be driven into financial ruin. If this is all the hon. gentleman can boast of, as an evidence of his economy, I commend him to the tender mercies of the charwomen; I know how they will deal with this matter when their husbands come to vote. If I were a member of the Government I would not, in the face of an expenditure of $5,000,000 over and above the expenditure of 1878, point to a reduction in the number of charwomen as one of the most significant features of my economy. The hon. gentleman dealt with the Weights and Measures in detail. Let us begin at the beginning. In the first place, who is responsible for the Weights and Measures Act? Evidently not hon. gentlemen on this side. The hon. Minister of Railways is responsible for that Act, and boasts of it as one of the beneficial Acts of his legislation. In 1875 the hon. Minister of Railways, when the expenditure under this head was challenged, said:

"He held himself entirely responsible as a member of the late Government for this legislation. No measure had ever been passed by this House upon so clear testimony of the strongest character as to its necessity. So strong was the testimony in its favor that it passed the House unanimously and he was glad that the present Government in the discharge of the duty that devolved on them had incurred all the responsibility of putting it into operation."

So here we have a complete exoneration of the expenditure incurred to put that Act into operation. I have only cited that because I know it is an authority which the hon. gentleman will acknowledge, to satisfy him that that expenditure was justifiable; for although the hon. Minister of Railways may waste hundreds of thousands on public contracts, we hear not a word of condemnation. How, then, will the hon. Minister of Customs condemn the hon. Minister of Railways for having expended, as he says, $52,000, perhaps unnecessarily, under the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say that.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman said that $52,000 had been expended unnecessarily.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, but I did not say by the hon. Minister of Railways.

Mr. ROSS. Well, it was expended under the Act of which the hon. Minister of Railways approved, for which he held himself entirely responsible, and was expended, as I will show presently, necessarily in connection with that Act. The point now settled is that the hon. Minister of Railways, as the colleague of the hon. gentleman, is responsible for the Weights and Measures Act, passed when the present Government was in power before their present term. Then he is responsible for the expenditure incurred in connection with the purchase of weights and measures. The hon. gentleman referred to the large quantity stored in the Eastern Block. I will tell the hon. gentleman how they came there. Here is a report of the Commissioner of Inland Revenue on that question laid on the Table of the House in the Session of 1873.

"Arrangements have been made in England for the construction of their standards and for their verification with the standard of the United Kingdom. * * * In consequence of an unexpected delay in the delivery of the apparatus and standards ordered in 1872, only $559.90 out of the $4,000 was disbursed prior to the 30th June, 1873."

Then we have the building stocked with standards and weights that were ordered in 1872, and the hon. gentleman, with a candor which is almost appalling in these later days, tells us: "We are responsible for the purchase of these weights and measures." The hon. gentleman says that a number of men were employed under the late Administration who rendered no services for their wages. "$52,000," he says, "were expended in salaries before these men entered on their duties." That may be true. No doubt it is; but under what circumstances? Why, we have it in the report of the Commissioner that it was expected the Act would be enforced in 1874; the weights and measures had been sent to England, and were unnecessarily delayed in their return. The proclamation was issued for putting the Act into force, and these men had to be appointed to take charge of their offices as soon as the weights and measures arrived out. They had besides to be instructed in the discharge of their duties, and it was necessary a certain delay should occur before their entering on the discharge of their duties to give them time to be instructed. These $52,000 were expended preliminary to their entering on the discharge of their duties in order that they might be instructed. Does the hon. gentleman say that was wrong? In any similar change in any Department men would have to be instructed until appointed to office, hence this expenditure; but admitting, for the sake of argument, that we spent $52,000 on salaries in 1872, for which no value was received in service, did that state of affairs exist only under the late Administration? Let the hon. gentleman turn to the first year of his own administration in the Department of Weights and Measures, and he will find similar cases of gross management, if we choose to to call it gross mismanagement. Take the town of Brockville: There was paid in salaries at Brockville, in 1878 and 1879, $801.58, and the revenue collected was $92.54. That does not show admirable management in the Department. In Halton County there was expended in salaries, $611.00, and the revenue was only $3.25. Does the hon. gentleman call that good management? In Kent there was expended in salaries, $695.00, and the revenue was $7.50. In Niagara, represented for the time being by my hon. friend shortly to be represented no more by him or by anybody else, I am happy to say, the expenditure in 1878 and 1879 was $764.26, and the revenue, $98.80. In the County of Ontario the expenditure was $728.00, the revenue was $5.75. If I went over, as my hon. friend did, the various counties and Provinces of Ontario and Quebec the same result would follow. Take Missisquoi, the expenditure there was $191.14, and the revenue, nil. Take Northumberland and Restigouche in New Brunswick. The expenditure in the one was $116.00, and in the other $535.00, and the revenue, nil. Take the County of Guysborough, the expenditure was $580.00, and the revenue, the enormous sum of $2.52. Take British Columbia, to which my hon. friend referred. The expenditure was $410.69 and the revenue was $39.

That was in 1878-79, when the Department was in charge of the hon. gentlemen opposite. There is evidence from their own report which was officially laid on the Table, that these men were discharging duties of revenue officers without contributing to the revenue in some cases not one dollar, and in others a mere trifle. The whole expenditure for that year was $66,487.67, and the revenue was only $13,085, over $5 of expenditure to collect $1 of revenue.

Mr. BOWELL. Were they not all your own officers?

Mr. ROSS. They were appointed by us, but they were under the control of the hon. gentlemen opposite. When they were appointed they were discharging their duties. I will take the year 1877-78, when our revenue was $30,084. How is it that in 1878-79, with the same officers, the hon. gentlemen opposite only collected $13,000? Does that not prove that there was some mismanagement? Evidently these men's labors were suspended, but their salaries went on precisely the same as the salaries of the officers in 1874-75. But if the hon. gentleman does not like that I will take the next year, which was entirely under the control of the hon. gentlemen opposite. If it would not weary the House I could show that officer after officer appointed by the hon. gentlemen opposite were discharging duties and receiving very high salaries, but collecting a very small amount of revenue in proportion to their salary. I take the management of that Department for the last five or six years, and it simply shows that in 1877-78 under the Reform Administration, it took $3 of expenditure to collect $1 of revenue. In 1878-79 the first year of hon. gentlemen opposite, it took $6 of expenditure to collect $1 of revenue; while in 1879-80 it took $4 of expenditure to collect $1 of revenue. Last year I admit they did a little better, they did it because they were driven to it by the Opposition, because they knew the iniquity which they were perpetrating was being exposed. In order to save themselves late in the day they sought to urge these men to a better discharge of their duties, and now they claim that they are managing this matter economically. I have shown their responsibility for the expenditure incurred in the purchase of weights and measures, and I have shown that during the first two years of their Administration the revenue was much less in comparison with the expenditure than it was under the Liberal Administration. But he says, these men were our political friends, that they were drawing their salaries simply because they were our political friends. Sir, I did think the hon. gentlemen would have been sufficiently careful not to trench upon such precarious ground. Does he not know that the very spirit of the Administration of the Government by hon. gentlemen opposite is, not the interests of the country, but the interests of their political friends? Does he not know that the Departments are filled from garret to basement with the appointees of hon. gentlemen opposite, not so much that the public service may be advanced, but that political friends may have clerical and material advantages? Does he not know that a large contract on the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia was awarded to political friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and a lower contract set aside? And yet the hon. gentleman charges us with the waste of $52,000 in the inspection of weights and measures, when we have it on the records of this House that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues sacrificed the interests of the public to the extent of over $200,000 on one contract alone, for no other purpose than that I can see, but to benefit political friends. But there is something more in connection with the inspection of weights and measures that I must refer to. In 1878-79, the hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, and they found a set of ninety-seven men for that Department who were discharging their duties well, and against whom no fault could be found. The hon. gentleman has not to this day dared to say that these officers failed to discharge their duties; and what was done? In the face of the most satisfactory discharge of their duties that could be required, ninety-five of these men were sacrificed by the political guillotine erected by the hon. gentleman opposite and his political friends appointed in their place. On the plea of economy ninety-five men were discharged, and on the plea of economy sixty-four men, political allies of the hon. gentlemen opposite, were appointed in their place. More than that, they were not appointed simply because they were political allies, but they were appointed to do the political work of the hon. gentlemen opposite, as I know. I have a vivid recollection of a contest that took place in West Northumberland in December last at which the hon. Minister of Finance was present. I also went into that county, and the first gentleman I met on the public platform the first night was a paid servant of the Minister of Finance. The next afternoon I met the same gentleman again, and also on the following night I met him in the town of Cobourg cheek by jowl with the Minister of Finance at a public meeting. I have not heard that he was discharged. Was he appointed because he was a political friend of the hon. gentlemen opposite? Why, Sir, if the hon. gentlemen had any sense of political decency, they would have discharged that man. I heard further that the same gentleman was appointed Inspector of Weights and Measures for the Province of Manitoba, but his instructions were not to go to Manitoba till after the general elections. Is that the doctrine of the hon. gentlemen opposite? I have a statement of the hon. First Minister on that subject taken from the Hansard of 1878, and of several of the hon. gentlemen on the same question. Perhaps I might refresh their memories a little on the point. Sir John A. Macdonald, in the debates of 1878, said:

Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

"Every Government selected for the Civil Service their own friends, and no one could object to it. He now contended, and had always contended, that civil servants should not be political agents. They should have the right to vote, and the Government of the day should give them a fair opportunity to do so; but the Government should sternly put their foot down against the civil servants becoming political agents."

Sir Charles Tupper said:

"If, in a political struggle, members of the public service were allowed to go out and take an active, energetic part in such a struggle, a state of things as would be a great misfortune to the country would be brought about."

Sir Hector Langevin said:

"To allow officers to go away electioneering in that manner and for that purpose was at once unfair and unjust. They were the paid officials of the country, and it was their duty to devote their time to the service of the country and not in the interests of a party. Public officials should not be deprived of their votes, but they should not mix up in politics or canvass."

That is a good doctrine.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On what occasion was it said?

Mr. ROSS. It was said, no doubt, in 1878.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On what occasion?

Mr. ROSS. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the particulars. Does the hon. gentleman repudiate the statement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Just look at the paper and say what the occasion was.

Mr. ROSS. That does not alter the fact. The hon. gentleman cannot get out of it that way. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that his enunciation of political principles depends on the occasion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What was the occasion?

Mr. ROSS. Does the hon. gentleman want the House to understand that he has one set of political opinions for one state of things and another set for another state of things? I was stating to the hon. gentleman a sound political doctrine, and was asking him to apply it to the case in which an officer of his violated that principle; and if the hon. gentleman repudiates it let him say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On what occasion was it said? Is the hon. gentleman afraid to state on what occasion it was said?

Mr. ROSS. I have said I do not know.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That cannot be the case.

Mr. ROSS. If the hon. gentleman will allow me an opportunity, I will quote those statements from the debates in the course of the evening and give him the occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Give it now.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman cannot get out of it that way. I ask him whether that is a sound political opinion or not. If he says it is a sound principle, then it has been violated by an employee of the hon. gentleman, by a paid servant of the hon. gentleman, and unless he repudiates that principle I call upon him to dismiss that officer and not let the country be insulted by having a public officer traveling up and down it to advance the interests of hon. gentlemen opposite. I think I may dismiss the hon. Minister of Customs for the time being; I may say something more about him by-and-bye, as we are likely to remain here a week and perhaps longer, and I may refer more fully to his sayings and doings. I think I have established conclusively that the late Government was not responsible for the Weights and Measures Act or the expenditure incurred under it, and I have shown by statements from the Public Accounts that our administration was more satisfactory. For my county I know this, that whereas the expenditure was nearly $26,000 in 1880-81 only $580 were paid into the revenue, and I know under the Administration of the late Government the weights and measures were inspected thoroughly, and I could name places in Middlesex where weights and measures have not been inspected since hon. gentlemen opposite came into office. So as far as the administration of the Act is concerned there has been woeful negligence of the public interests, and at the same time the officers are to-day drawing liberal salaries. I have a word or two to say in reply to the statements of the hon. Minister of Finance on the motion of the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright). I was struck with the apologetic tone the Minister assumed in answering the charge of gross extravagance. I could fancy the Minister from a platform in New Brunswick in 1878 denouncing the extravagance of the late Government. I fancy hearing now the melodious tones of his voice ringing through some great hall, and declaring that the average expenditure of the country need not exceed $22,500,000; and I can fancy a few weeks hence that same Minister going to the same Province and telling the people that a different state of affairs now exists: "True, I said that in 1878, but I was not then invested with the responsibilities of office, but a change came o'er the spirit of my dream: I have found a lot of needy political friends at Ottawa whose interests had to be attended to, and I found it was necessary to construct public works, custom houses and post offices, and make improvements in order that our political friends may have a fair chance at the elections." It was not enough that the leader of the Government gerrymandered constituencies in order to make things pretty safe; that to make them doubly sure he built custom houses and other public offices and incurred a large expenditure on account of public works; and so the hon. gentleman might say I have no doubt the expenditure on public works has been increased since 1878, but look at all the advantages derived; look at the buildings erected through the Provinces; go where you like in Ontario and you will find similar buildings; this accounts for a large portion of the expenditure. Supposing positions were changed and the late Government were in power in 1882, and we had an increased expenditure from $23,500,000 in 1877-78 to an estimated expenditure of $23,500,000 in 1882-83, what would the hon. gentleman then have said? He would have pointed to those expenditures and public works in the Departments, and he would have told the electors of this Province and of the country that he held those men responsible for every dollar, and it was proof of most intolerable extravagance on the part of the Government. I intend to take that line with the hon. Minister himself, and I hold him and his Government responsible for that enormous increase. Does he attempt to justify himself? There is not one word of justification said. He did not show this House that the expenditure was justified; he did not show that the increases in the various Departments were necessary; but in an apologetic tone he tried to break the force of the charges made by the hon. member for Centre Huron. That apology will not do, the electors know right well that the burdens of taxation are pressing heavily upon them, that the Government are exacting from them millions of money unnecessarily, and if the hon. gentleman expects under cover of such an apology to escape condemnation, I can say, that I know the electors of Ontario will not condone such extravagance as I find visible on every page of the Public Accounts. Look at the controllable expenditure alone. If the hon. Minister will allow his recollection to go back for a moment, he will know that the late Administration increased that expenditure by only $186,000. What do I find? That hon. gentlemen opposite found the controllable expenditure to be $6,065,420 in 1877-78, and by the Estimates now before the House, it is proposed to be increased to $8,560,000. While we increased that item $186,000 in four years, hon. gentlemen opposite in four years increased it by over $2,000,000. What is the explanation of that increase? None is offered. The hon. Minister says the people do not feel the burdens of taxation. I have made a careful investigation as to the burdens imposed on the people by the hon. gentlemen, and I find the expenditure per head is not exactly as the hon. gentleman stated it. The taxation for Customs and Excise for 1873 amounted to $4.35 per head; in 1881, $5.54 per head, and according to the Estimates brought down by the hon. Minister when he made his Budget Speech, the charge for the current year will be $5.83, or an increase of $1.48 per head. Can the hon. gentleman justify that increase? His only reply is that the people do not feel this burden. Look all over the land and you will find disturbances; what for? Because the people feel that the expense of living is pressing upon them, there is not the slightest remedial measure proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite to alleviate that distress. There is no proposal to alleviate it, but the expenditure of the country has been day by day increasing, not at the rate of thousands or hundreds of thousands, but by millions per annum, and the burdened taxpayers will have to recoup the Treasury for every dollar. It is appalling that during four years the expenditure of this young country should have been increased by $5,000,000. It is something we cannot understand. It did not prevail under the late Administration, and yet we were charged with extravagance. We have already charged the hon. Minister of Public Works with locating some custom houses and post offices with a view to secure political advantages to his own party. I repeat that charge. I am prepared to say here or anywhere, and I believe it to be true, that my hon. friend, in making those expenditures, had more in view the political interests of his party than the public exigencies. Look at the case of the custom house which is to be erected in Amherstburg which has a population of only 2,876, while towns nearly as large as cities have no provision made for the public requirements. I do not ask the hon. gentleman to make an expenditure on my town for political purposes, but we have more than a thousand more population than Amherstburg. If these matters are to be guided by any principle let the public expenditure be made according to that principle, and let not these smaller places, or the member representing them go to the Minister and importune him for these expenditures, in order that his political chances of success may be rendered better thereby. The whole system is wrong so long as it is not based on some principle, and I say that the large expenditure on public works is not based on any principle, and is consequently wrong. I referred in the Budget debate to the large expenditure in the Post Office Department, and the whole substance of that expenditure can be thoroughly grasped. I find that the expenditure in 1881 increased over that of the previous year by $110,000; and that out of that expenditure only $24,000 was owing to increased mail accommodation for the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Has the hon. gentleman justified that expenditure? Not at all. That expenditure was incurred through increased salaries and other unnecessary increases. We on this side of the House are willing to support the Minister in all necessary expenditures for affording mail facilities to the people of this country, but not on any such extravagances as appear on the face of the public records. If it were not too late in the night, and too late in the Session, I would take up the challenge of the hon. Minister of Customs, and go through the expenditure in every Department of the Public Service—go through the items in the Public Accounts, and challenge the hon. gentleman to justify the increases, for there is scarcely a single exception to the fact that in every Department of the Public Service there have been enormous increases in 1881 over 1877-8, and a still greater increase in the Estimates which are now being pushed through the House. I hardly expect that the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) will justify that expenditure. I do not think it can be justified. I do not think the hon. Minister of Customs, if he would reflect for a moment, would attempt to justify it. The hon. gentleman may say that in calling attention to this increased expenditure we are diverting attention from the National Policy, but I tell hon. gentlemen opposite that we are not afraid to meet them either on the National Policy or any other issue for which they hold themselves responsible. Whether it be the National Policy, the increased expenditure, or the re-distribution of seats, we have no hesitation in saying here or elsewhere that when the day of reckoning comes, the number of men from the other side of the House who will return here to give an account of the battle will be small indeed. Defeat is written on the faces of these hon. gentlemen. Why all these attempts to bolster up a failing cause? Why the resort to all these expedients, so well known to hon. gentlemen opposite, in order to strengthen their candidates in the various constituencies, were it not for the fact that hon. gentlemen know right well that the country will repudiate them and their policy they have advocated for the last four years. They say they are going to snatch an early verdict from the people, and is not that an evidence that they are afraid to abide by the well-considered verdict which the people would pronounce upon them at the proper time. Is it not an evidence that they are alarmed, and that before the situation becomes more chaotic than it is, before the people will more fully understand the political infamy—shall I call it—which they have committed during the last four years—before the people are more fully convinced in regard to the various acts which they have committed, they expect to snatch a verdict which would entitle them to occupy their present seats for five years longer. The apologetic tone of the hon. Finance Minister assures me that he fears the verdict which will be rendered. Rumour has it, indeed, that my hon. friend the Finance Minister is not going to face the music. It tells us that a distinguished gentleman from England will come and occupy the seat which he now occupies with so much complaisancy; that he will desert the Treasury Benches and become a Commissioner at Her Majesty's Court in England—a very comfortable position, in which, no doubt, he would look after the interests of Canada with honor and integrity; but it is another evidence that rats desert the sinking ship; another evidence that hon. gentlemen themselves are afraid of the results of their policy, and are not anxious to allow the people of this country to decide these issues on their merits. I am satisfied that the motion of the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) will command the sympathy of the people of this country—but the electors will not justify this extraordinary expenditure—that while hon. gentlemen here may seek to condone their extravagance the electors will conclude that those who run up the expenditure $5,000,000 in four years are not such men as should be entrusted with the affairs of this country.

Mr. ROCHESTER. My hon. friend appears to have worked himself into a fit of excitement about a civil servant who appeared on a platform with him in a western constituency. Everyone who heard that hon. gentleman talk would think that the Government of which he was a supporter were perfectly pinks of perfection in this respect; but what did they do in the city of Ottawa when they were in power? What did a member of the late Government do? He ordered out every civil servant in this building to vote for their party in the county of Carleton, and they even sent out buggies to help in the election, and a detective was put at each polling booth in the five villages around Ottawa. One was placed there with a book and pencil in his hand to record every man who came to vote; and although they could not tell how they voted under the ballot, this man was able to show the Hon. R. W. Scott the name of every man who voted and the name of every man who did not come forward to vote. To hear my hon. friend from Middlesex talk, you would think that hon. gentlemen opposite were such paragons of perfection that they would never think of doing anything of this kind. This gentleman who belonged to the Civil Service who met my hon. friend on a political platform in some constituency up west—I do not know who the gentleman was—must have been a match for the hon. gentleman, or else he would not have been so irritable to-night. But what I rose for, Sir, was to refer to a remark of the hon. member for Lambton with regard to the visit of the Ottawa workmen to the Parliament Buildings while his Government were in power. When he spoke of some members of Parliament encouraging these men, I took it for granted that he referred to some of the members living in the vicinity of Ottawa, either to the hon. member for the city of Ottawa (Mr. Currier), the hon. member for Ottawa County (Mr. Wright), or myself. The hon. member for Lambton has assured us that such was not the case, for which I am very much obliged to him, and I do not think any one of the three deserve any remark of that kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROCHESTER. I know that the hon. member for the city of Ottawa, the hon. member for the county of Ottawa and myself did everything we could to prevent any disturbance or any annoyance to the Government.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Speaker, this discussion has been carried so far beyond the precise scope of the resolution of the hon. member for Centre Huron, that the real question has been nearly lost sight of. The debate began on an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, which was offered by the hon. member for Centre Huron, after a violent speech in which he ventured to censure the expenditure of the present Government. That hon. gentleman has special advantages in bringing before this House any financial question; he was the Minister of Finance until our indignant people having for five years endured the mixing and muddling and something far worse of which he was guilty, rose up in their highest indignation and hurled him and his evil associates from their seats. That hon. gentleman's habit of mind, his course in debate, his manner of addressing the House, is so well known to us all, that whenever he rises we fully expect such a personal and offensive attack as he made to-day. The hon. gentleman when abusively criticising the public expenditure has an inveterate habit of dealing only with possibilities and probabilities. He is fond of discussing the Estimates as if they were actual expenditure, although he knows, or ought to know, that the ascertained and fixed expenditure of the country only can be accurately discussed as it appears in the Public Accounts themselves; and I venture to say that I can show from the Public Accounts that the hon. gentleman has no ground of complaint against the Government. I would say, in the first instance, that he departs entirely from the rule which was insisted upon by himself and his friends in discussing questions of expenditure when they were in power. In November, 1873, these hon. gentlemen came into power, and took possession of the Treasury Benches. The expenditures of the year 1873-74 should have been made on the Estimates adopted by the Conservative Parliament in April, 1873. We contend that the succeeding Ministry added to the expenditure of that year by Supplementary Estimates and Votes, a very considerable sum during their first Session in 1874. They hold us responsible for the whole expenditure of 1873-74, amounting to $23,316,316, on the basis of the Estimates passed in April, 1873. But what did the hon. gentleman, then Finance Minister, do when he came into power? Why, Sir, he took $540,000 that belonged to the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway, and charged it against us as current expenditure against revenue in those Supplementary Estimates; he charged nearly $200,000 for the cost of a general election which he and his associates sprung upon the country as a midnight surprise; he charged us with about $222,000 for other expenditures for which we were in no way responsible. Of the expenditure of that year, we were responsible for about $22,400,000. On the same principle which they urged in our case, we charged these hon. gentlemen with the expenditure of 1878-9, which amounted to $24,455,000, and that is why they do not want this principle applied. Why, Sir, the expenditure of 1878-9 was made upon their estimates, not upon ours. In 1875-6 their expenditure was $24,488,000. Why, Sir, in the face of the greatest depression that ever befel the commercial world, what did these hon. gentlemen do? After they came into power they increased the expenditure in every direction. They were not bound, although the hon. member for Lambton insists, when it suits his purpose, that they were by any agreement of ours to build the Canadian Pacific Railway; they were not bound to carry out our undertakings to construct other public works. Our undertakings were only theoretical; we expected to carry them through if we continued to have, as we had during the time we were in power, such a surplus rolling into the Treasury as had always, prior to 1874, enabled us to make all the yearly charges against revenue and expend $11,000,000 in useful public works, as the late Finance Minister himself acknowledged and adopted as a motto for the silver shield which he exhibited to English bankers. If the times had continued prosperous those projects would probably have been carried out, if we had held the purse strings. But we had no idea of rolling up the public expenditure upon a series of increasing deficits such as were piled up under the financial rule of the hon. member for Centre Huron. The hon. member for Lambton came into office untrammelled. He knows that one of his first acts was to take the Pacific Railway into his own hands as a Government work, under his Act of 1874, and that he repudiated every contract and every agreement made by the previous Government. He knows that he refused to be bound by the policy of his predecessors. The present member for Centre Huron, in his Budget speech of 1874, said in substance: "Although there is a prospect of a diminished revenue, although I am compelled to impose $3,000,000 of additional taxation, you will not expect me to decrease the expenditure of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works." No, there were too many hungry jobbers to be appeased. What did the subservient Finance Minister do in order to conceal his reckless expenditure? He reduced the militia vote from $900,000 to $500,000, and his expenditure on Public Works chargeable to income was cut down $500,000 in 1876-77, and in 1874-75 the expenditure, adding what had been improperly put into the expenditure of 1873-74, would have been $24,762,000. In 1875-76, it was $24,488,000, except for the starving of the Public Works chargeable to income, and the reduction of the militia expenditure, the outlay for 1876-77 would have been $24,400,000, and in 1876-77 it would have been an equal amount. In 1877-78 also, it would have reached nearly $24,500,000. They could then no longer keep it down, but were compelled to acknowledge $24,500,000 as the expenditure of 1878-79, and that is why they disingenuously seek to evade responsibility for that year. Now, Sir, I beg to enquire what was the late Government doing all those five disastrous years? Were they carrying on great public works, opening up the North-West, or endeavoring to do something towards constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway? No, they were busily engaged in decrying the advantages of the country, in warning immigrants from our shores, in exaggerating the amount of our liabilities, and understating our ability to fulfil them. They had delivered themselves over to an army of contractors, and they were compelled to go on with public works in order to give those men their wages. I can show by irrefutable testimony that the hon. gentleman who was so savage in his denunciations of his successors to-night—that I almost fancied he had recovered his old vigor—made a contract with the late Mr. Foster, for constructing the Georgian Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, before an engineer had made even the most superficial examination of the route. I can show that Mr. Hazlewood, the engineer who made a general exploration of the Nipissing country, did not go within twenty-five miles of the line upon which it was hurriedly decided to build the Georgian Bay Branch, and that upon an unknown route. In mysterious haste tenders were asked for, and the contract was awarded upon specifications that bound the Government to particulars as to which they had no information whatever. The gradients were required to be twenty-six feet to the mile on the eastern slope and fifty-two on the western slope of the divide. It was found utterly impracticable to obtain such gradients, owing to the broken character of the route, and having virtually undertaken that such gradients were possible the Government were compelled to relieve Mr. Foster and to pay him $104,000 for their blunder. The contract, I repeat, was based upon a line which had never been surveyed, ran through a wilderness which the foot of no man but the Indian or the trapper had ever trod. The hon. member for Centre Huron in his Budget Speech of 1875 endorsed the stupid scheme. I can show that the hon. gentleman began to make his contracts between the Red River and the Kaministiquia before his engineers had made even a thorough preliminary exploration of the route selected, and that tenders were based upon a bill of works which called for specific quantities of the different kinds of work: grubbing, clearing, rock and earth excavation, filling, grading, bridging, ballasting and track-laying, which were tendered for item by item thus moneyed out, and the aggregate of the whole was the amount of the competitive tender. Nothing could be more delusive, as the hon. gentleman found, to the contingent cost. Mr. Carre, the resident engineer of sections 14 and 15, testified before a Committee, of which the hon. gentleman from Lambton was a member, that while he was running a rough preliminary line with eye and compass, on section 14, having traversed but fourteen miles, he was ordered to Winnipeg to prepare plans and profiles of the whole section and make up quantities for tender for that section, a route of which he had scarcely even seen a sixth, and of which he absolutely knew nothing. The contract on that route extended from Red River to Cross Lake; 77 miles was let upon such imaginary data as he was compelled, under peremptory orders, to furnish which he never pretended were anything but the wildest guesswork, not even approximating a semblance of accuracy. Mr. Carre never pretended that they were otherwise than imaginary. The bill of works at the prices bid by Sifton, Ward & Co., of Petrolia, ardent supporters of the hon. member for Lambton, who got the contract, amounted to $402,950. Mr. Carre's surveys, such as they were, had been begun at Cross Lake, from whence he was working westward, and consequently there was no line established at Red River—in fact the contractors and the engineers arrived at Selkirk at the same time, and in one case the contractors claimed and got some $3,303 from the Government for pay of men while they were waiting for the engineers to find and establish a point at which they could begin work on the contract. The cost up to 1879 had reached $722,000, about 60 per cent. increase. In regard to section 15, from Cross Lake to Keewatin, a worse condition of things was discovered. No attempt at accurate survey had been made; the lines were run by Mr. Carre by eye and compass; a common bush profile was taken and heights were scaled by it at Ottawa. Mr. Carre warned Mr. Rowan, the resident engineer, that the estimate quantities were mere guesswork. The bid upon which the contract was finally awarded was $1,594,000. When the Committee investigated the matter in the Session of 1879, it was estimated that an additional sum of $336,000 would be required to complete the work, and I think its actual cost has been nearly double the sum for which the original contract was made. An attempt was made to build section 13, westward from the Kaministiquia, by way of Lake Shebandowan. Tenders were asked for. Sifton, Ward & Co. also obtained that contract. The distance was 45 miles. Mr. Fleming himself says that no accurate survey had been made; to use his own words: "they did not know where they were going." At Sunshine Creek, 32½ miles from Fort William, the attempt to reach Shebandowan was given up and the contract was cancelled, not without considerable loss to the Government. The line from Sunshine Creek to English River, section 25, was undertaken by Purcell, Ryan & Co., upon the same hasty and incomplete surveys—if the mere preliminary exploration can be called surveys. The amount of their tender, moneyed out on the misleading principle I have mentioned, was $1,032,000. The bill of works called for 1,000,000 cubic yards of earth excavation at the liberal price of 33 cents a yard. The amount paid for was 1,970,000 yards; the price per yard was 10 cents higher than on No. 13, of which No. 25 was partly a substitute and partly an extension. 10,000 yards of loose rock at 90 cents a yard was increased to 100,000 yards; on No. 13 the price was but 50 cents a yard. The solid rock excavation, which was taken at the low price of $1.50, was reduced from 240,000 yards called for in the bill of works to about 77,000 yards. It is very easy to see that it is absurd to argue that contracts such as these were given to the lowest bidder. Any inconsistency in prices might give the contractor far more than would have been received by a higher bidder; it all depends on the final adjustment of quantities of work performed. If items taken at very high prices are largely increased in quantity, and quantities of those taken at low prices are largely reduced, the consequences are too obvious to be disputed. This was shamefully the case in the contracts which I am now considering. The most suspicious circumstances attended the letting of section 15, 38½ miles, and I think a brief statement of the revelations in respect to that work will prove a sufficient answer to the hon. member for Middlesex; for, as he started the discussion, he must be held responsible for it, and we may as well have it out. In October, 1876, the hon. member for Lambton, then Minister of Public Works, called for tenders for section 15. The lowest sent in was that of A. P. Macdonald & Co. for $1,443,175, and the next lowest was that of Martin, Charlton & Co. at $1,562,050, the next lowest was that of Sutton & Thompson for $1,594,085. Tenders had been twice previously advertised for—once for a line with heavy rock-work and again upon a meagre bill of works, which we were told was intended to be supplemented at a future letting. Tenders were made in each case, but none were accepted. The construction upon which those tenders were asked for did not contemplate the adoption of trestle work. After a delay of several months, an advertisement for tenders was published in September, 1876, to be sent in in suspiciously short time, and it seems to have been then decided to substitute for earth and rock as a road-bed an enormous quantity of trestle-work, estimated at nearly 15 solid miles of timber, in a country in which it was notorious that there was no suitable timber to be found. In fact it was not obtainable at a nearer point, according to evidence, than the head waters of the Mississippi. When the twenty-one tenders were opened in October, 1876, the lowest was found to be that of A. P. Macdonald & Co. The tenders included ballasting and track-laying on section 14, of which section 15 was an extension eastward. Sifton, Ward & Co.'s contract required section 14 to be completed and ready for ballasting by July, 1877; but after the bids were opened A. P. Macdonald & Co. heard that the time for completing Sifton, Ward & Co.'s contract had been extended two years. They had based their tender upon the completion of that section over which they expected to take in their supplies. They saw that the change would materially alter the conditions upon which they had made their calculations; and on the 13th October, 1878, they wrote to the Minister to enquire if such was the case, because they said, as I have just now mentioned, their contract was based on the idea that Sifton, Ward & Co. would have fulfilled their contract at the time fixed, so as to enable them to get in their supplies for section 15 by railway over section 14; and that they could not get them round by way of the now notorious water stretches by the amphibious route from Fort William by way of Rainy Lake and River and Lake of the Woods, without incurring great additional expense. The secretary of the hon. member for Lambton answered in effect thus: "No explanation whatever will be given—no modification will be made of any conditions—sign the contract immediately." Messrs. A. P. Macdonald & Co. then wrote to the Government, that unless they could be assured that the conditions of the contract with Sifton, Ward & Co. would be enforced they could not safely undertake to sign the contract, and they gave good reasons as sound business men for their decision. Martin & Charlton were the next lowest tenders, the latter had a somewhat doubtful reputation as a contract jobber, if we may believe Mr. Joseph Whitehead, who denounced him as such, in a letter written during his negotiations with Mr. Mackenzie. Ostensibly Martin was a partner in the bid, but he seems to have had a secret understanding with Baird, Arnold & Co., a firm in New York, and to both of these parties he seems to have committed himself. Mr. Charlton only appears in the correspondence at first, and he is notified on the 17th October, after Macdonald & Co. had withdrawn, to put up his security, he does not offer anything satisfactory, and the correspondence continues till the end of December, when he writes that he fears he cannot give the security required. Meantime Mr. Marcus Smith telegraphed the Government from Winnipeg to defer letting the contract till he returned to Ottawa. His request was disregarded. At last, on the 27th December, after nearly three months delay, the Minister received a telegram from Mr. Charlton, saying that he was compelled, by dissension from within and extraordinary pressure from without to give up the contract. On the 29th, Mr. Martin, the partner, came and offered to put up the security which was five per cent. of the tender, and to perform the work. He stated that Charlton had never let him know that he could not make up the security, and earnestly protested against any act depriving himself of the contract. The New York firm, Baird & Co., telegraphed on 28th December that Mr. Charlton had been dodging them for three weeks, had used them shamefully, and they had not been able to find him, but they were prepared to put up the balance of security required and to fulfil the contract. To Baird & Co. the Minister replied that the parties who signed the tender having retired, the Department cannot deal with proposed partners who have not signed it, but to Martin who had signed it no reply at all seems to have been given. The very next day after Martin's offer was made, the Minister sent in a minute to the Council stating that Macdonald & Co., and Martin & Charlton were unable to furnish the necessary security—note that, Mr. Speaker—and recommending that the contract should be awarded to Messrs. Sutton & Thompson for $1,594,085, or $150,000 more than the offer of A. P. Macdonald & Co. Disregarding the offer of Mr. Martin to furnish security and fulfil his contract, who earnestly protested against having the contract taken out of his hands, the hon. gentleman proposed that Mr. Joseph Whitehead, who had written a letter urging him to give the contract to Sutton & Thompson should be associated with them, which was done accordingly, and in a short time it was found that the work had passed into Mr. Whitehead's hands exclusively. The specification or bill of works on which the tender and subsequent contracts were based, required 80,000 yards of earth excavation only, mere stripping of the rock. The small lakes and deep cuttings were to be passed by trestle-work involving for that work and for wooden bridges and culverts, 2,250,000 lineal feet of large-sized and round timber, which at the prices named in Sutton & Thompson's tender, amounted to about $335,000. Another tender put the timber at $975,000. In fact, the line was to be built in a country that had a splendid growth of rock, but no timber. The hon. member for Lambton showed his practical wisdom by rejecting the use of rock and earth for his road-bed, where a superabundance of both could be found, and adopting a perishable and inflammable trestle-work where there was no suitable timber nearer than the head waters of the Mississippi. It would have been absolute ruin to have delivered the timber if it had been possible to procure it at all. The loose rock excavation called for on the specification was 30,000 yards; it was taken at the high price of $1.75 a cubic yard; solid rock, 300,000 yards, at $2.75; earth excavation, 80,000 yards, at 37 cents a yard. It will be seen that price of the timber was very low. Mr. Whitehead had not long entered upon the work before he proposed to change the whole character of it by dispensing with the trestle-work and substituting earth and rock for the road-bed and filling. Mr. Rowan, the resident Engineer, recommended the change very strongly, and it seems to have been then suggested to the Department that enough trestle-work timber was not to be found in the country, and that such work was inflammable and perishable—considerations that ought possibly to have occurred beforehand to the eminently practical mind of the hon. member for Lambton. In some mysterious way which has never been explained Mr. Whitehead seems to have succeeded in having his plans adopted, with the following startling results: the greater portion of the timber, amounting to $299,000, was dispensed with, leaving but $36,000 worth to deliver; the earth excavation at 37 cents a yard was increased from 80,000 to 1,657,000 yards, increasing the cost by a trifle of $583,645, and I think about 1,000,000 yards more have been added since my investigation was made, making the increase in that item alone $953,645—a sum which would absorb all the alleged iniquities of sections A and B, the Carillon Canal and the Onderdonk contract put together, and leave a handsome balance still to be accounted for. But, Sir, we have not done with this model contract which seems to contain a combination of every possible form of jobbery and blundering from its inception to its completion. The specifications called for 300,000 yards of solid rock excavation at $2.75 a yard, the quantity was increased to 525,646 yards at that respectable price, making an increase of cost on that item of $620,526. Loose rock at $1.75 a yard, increased 30,000 yards in quantity and $52,500 in cost. To sum up the whole, the increases up to 1879 on that economical contract, that model of the ex-Premier's care and skill, were $1,256,800, or about 83 per cent., of which perhaps the Globe will make a note, and I venture to say that $500,000 more has been added to the cost since the investigation was made. That is a specimen of the contracting of the Reform Government, and the eminently practical gentleman, who formerly mismanaged the public works, and who now sits on the opposite side of the House, and presumes to criticise the railway administration of the Government. There is more than that. The hon. gentleman went before the public in the campaign of 1877-78, and claimed that he was entitled to a renewal of the confidence of the people of the Dominion on the ground that, by his superior management of the Pacific Railway construction between Fort William and Red River, he should be able to complete the sections then under contract, making 228 miles of road for $24,500 a mile, making ample allowances for rolling stock; that it would be equal to the Intercolonial, except that the bridges would be wooden instead of iron, and would be finished at half the cost of that work, which he put at $48,000 a mile. He made a statement in the House in 1877, showing how he arrived at that conclusion. He there took the amount of the contract, which I have mentioned at $3,302,568, and added, for engineering, rails, rolling stock and station grounds and buildings, $2,300,425; in all, $5,603,093, or $24,521 a mile. But what were the actual facts? Every one of those contracts had already shown an enormous increase of cost, and the hon. gentleman now knows, and ought to have known then, that the 228 miles to which he referred would cost nearly, if not quite, $40,000 a mile. The increase on every contract he had made was enormous. On section 14 it was 80 per cent.; on section 25 it was 32 per cent.; on section 15 it was estimated at 60 per cent., and will doubtless be 100 per cent., and with the facts before him that all these contracts were rashly entered upon without surveys even of the most preliminary character, Georgian Bay Branch and all, for sublime audacity commend me to the assertion made by the hon. gentleman at Kingston in June, 1877, when he asserts that:

"By his wise policy, his elaborate surveys and examinations of the country, and his proper system of letting contracts, he has succeeded in building and letting contracts for the road west of Lake Superior, for less than half the cost of the Intercolonial, and hopes to be able to establish that as far as the administration of the great public works of the country are concerned: he has succeeded beyond his expectation in realizing that economy which every Government proposes and desires to secure, but which very few can reach except by devoting their whole energies to the task and introducing essential reforms in the management of the Public Works."

Even in 1875, when probably not an axe or a compass had been used on the line, he asserted in regard to section 15:

"It so happened that a most elaborate survey had been made. It would be impossible to have a more careful survey, a closer examination or a more careful calculation than were made on those thirty-seven miles. There had been no such survey on the Intercolonial."

I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that the last sentence is quite true. In regard to the other assertion, I can only say Mr. Carre stated in Mr. Mackenzie's presence, and was uncontradicted, that there had been no survey at all worth the name where the contract was let. More than that. The hon. gentleman, in order to show the startling ingenuity with which he could waste the public money, built 110 miles of road at one end of a route and 112½ miles at the other—to do what? To connect his water-stretches and portages, a detour of 400 miles which led from Port Savanne by a descent of 400 feet to Rainy Lake, and thence, by Rainy River, through Lake of the Woods, to Rat Portage. The hon. gentleman would have expended on these 112 miles of road nearly $8,000,000, and the capacity of the water-stretches which he said he intended to use for years, with their eight or nine portages, was stated at 1,560 bushels of wheat per day. From the time of the harvest in the North-West to the freezing up of the shallow waters he could only get two fair vessel cargoes from one bit of railway to the other by means of the water-stretches. The capacity of 1,560 bushels of wheat a day would make a total for the season, say of sixty days after harvest, before the setting in of the October frosts, which close the shallow waters of that district, of 93,000 bushels. He would have done better to have bought that wheat at $1. per bushel, distributed amongst the Mennonites gratis, and allowed his railway and water stretches to lie idle. That, Sir, was another specimen of the intelligent, economical, practical policy of the hon. gentleman in the administration of the Public Works Department. The history of the contract for section 15 is one of the most damning records that there is in the archives of Canada, and I do not intend that the hon. gentleman shall forget it; but there are many other very unsavory transactions with which the hon. gentleman is connected indissolubly. The $52,000 expended uselessly by the hon. gentleman under the Weights and Measures Act, so graphically placed before the House by the hon. Minister of Customs, this afternoon, reminded me of the transaction in which the hon. gentleman from Lambton deflected his railway line ten miles above the terminus upon the Kaminstiquia, brought it down by a curve in front of a paper town, and paid $600 an acre for the terminal grounds, when he could have got land nearer the mouth of the river, avoiding a bad bend in the stream, for fifty dollars an acre at most, if he had not disclosed his purpose of establishing the terminus there. The hon. gentleman complains of delay in bringing down returns. I applied for returns in regard to the Fort William town plot two years in succession, and was insulted by the hon. gentleman from his seat in the House the last time I asked for them, and they were never brought down. It was amusing to hear the hon. gentleman complain of a slight delay in bringing down returns on our side. One might suppose he never had withheld a return in his life. I was surprised when I saw the hon. gentleman get up to-night, and with such violence and virulence support the resolution of the hon. member for Centre Huron. He reminded me of something in a fascinating child's book, written by a grave Oxford professor a year or two ago, called "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland." One of the principal curiosities that Alice saw in that land of strange creatures was the proverbial Cheshire cat, which, after displaying its wonderful arched back and its claws and whiskers, vanished slowly until nothing was seen of it but the malicious grin. Alice remarked that she had seen a cat without a grin before but had never seen a grin without a cat. I certainly could not but think when I listened to the hon. gentleman that scarcely anything remained of his old fighting self but the malice, which was like the grin without the cat, and I think the application will be evident enough. The hon. member for Centre

Mr. PLUMB.

Huron complains that the expenditure is increasing from year to year. Sir, that is the greatest evidence of our prosperity. A country fenced in, a country stagnant, a country of cheap expenditure is a country that I for one would wish to get out of. It is a country that is finished, completed, (like Venetia, for instance, as it was twenty years ago) with its capital containing mouldering palaces and stagnant canals, so long the refuge of those who had declined in fortune and went from the more busy capitals of Europe in order to economize there. It was so with many other Italian towns. They were cheap places to live in, but the people were in the condition of the wretched inhabitants of Paris in the days of the splendor of the court and the misery of the masses, of whom Marie Antoinette said: "Why should they starve when they could get such nice cakes for a penny?" Ah! they had not the penny. The hon. gentleman has often said that he wished Canada to be a cheap country to live in. When it is a cheap country to live in its prosperity will be gone. When we talk of limiting the legitimate expenditure of the country and stopping its increase, we might as well talk of keeping a boy always in a short jacket after he became a man and far outgrown his boyish garb. The best evidence of revived prosperity is the fact that it has become necessary for these hon. gentlemen to oppose an increase of public expenditure. They have done it because they have been driven to it by the fact that the Great West was advancing with such giant strides that it became necessary to provide for the needs of that country, the prosperity of which is due to our policy. The hon. gentleman knows that every mile constructed of the Canadian Pacific Railway is a signal that they will remain in Opposition; they know that every settler that goes into that country bears living evidence to the successful policy of my friends on the Government Benches. They will be forced to abandon their insensate attacks on our Pacific Railway expenditure and our land policy and its wonderfully successful results, as an issue in the coming campaign, because, having tried to fire the popular heart by those attacks, they found it did not enthuse, as my hon. friend the Premier, who is now listening to me, would say, worth a cent. Then there is the National Policy, and I was very much surprised to hear my hon. friend from Lambton denounce it in such venomous terms after his ingenious attempt to dodge the question in Lambton not long ago, in his farewell address to the little band of mourners in Sarnia, but I was highly gratified to hear him do so. Nothing could be more acceptable to this side of the House than such utterances as that hon. gentleman ventured to indulge in this afternoon. What did he say? Why, Sir, he said that the National Policy was national folly and national crime. He said that what we had done to make the country prosperous was a national crime, and that the people who supported that policy were guilty of national folly; and loud applause greeted him from his quondam followers. I want those words emphasized to go before the people of Canada. I desire every man in Canada to know that the party opposite is the party of reaction, the party of obstruction, the party which decries and disparages the resources and ability and advantages of this country, which has no other capital except an attempt to provoke jealousy and dissension between the sister Provinces, an attempt to create discontent in the chief Province of the Confederation; an attempt to despoil one man who does not vote for them for the benefit of another who does; an attempt to revive the cry of independence or of annexation, which means the same thing. Those will be the substantial issues of the next campaign, and we are ready to meet them and any others the ingenious Opposition leader may invent in the meanwhile. Sir, whenever there is a hard task in the way of meeting hard facts by perverted, disingenuous statesmen, which require special boldness of assertion, when the Opposition have a desperate thing to do in this House, the man who has to do that work, who is put up to do it—to use the courteous expression of the hon. member for Lambton in regard to myself—is the hon. member for West Middlesex. There is no man in the House who rises with more alacrity to do that sort of job than the hon. member for West Middlesex. Though I do not say that that hon. gentleman ever strains his figures and perverts his facts to suit the exigency of the occasion, yet I always look at the record after the hon. gentleman has made a statement, and always with satisfactory results—results that do not increase my confidence in him. He reminds me of a story I heard in the South, where a gentleman of the negro persuasion was speaking about a companion of whom he said:—“Well, I think that nigger is a very prayerful nigger, and I have great confidence in him. He is a very good pious nigger in every possible way, but I tell you what it is, I always advise the chickens to roost high when he comes round our neighborhood at night.” The hon. gentleman made the same assertion in the speech with which he treated the House at the beginning of the Session that he has made this evening. He took the record of 1877-78, as the termination of the fiscal responsibility of the party which he supports. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that they are responsible for every item of the expenditure upon their Estimates of 1878-79, voted by him and his friends in the Session of 1878. But the hon. gentleman went out of the record in every possible direction. He alluded to everything, to every issue that is before this House and to many issues that are not. I will not attempt to follow him on these points, because there will be an opportunity of discussing them before the people when the proper time arrives. But the hon. gentleman talked about the charge that had been made by my hon. friend from North Hastings (Mr. Bowell). I have never seen since I have been in this House, so damaging an effect produced upon an opposition party as was produced by my hon. friend in respect to the reckless expenditures of the late Government in connection with the Weights and Measures Act, and by those figures which he laid before us, I knew that the hon. member for West Middlesex would attempt to cover up and throw dust over the issue by a cloud of words which he, more than any other man upon that side of the House, is an adept in using. The hon. gentleman dared not meet the issue, he dared not face it, he did not face it, he knows he did not face it, he knows that he attempted every other device to break the force of the attack, except to attempt a defence against the damaging statements that were made by my hon. friend. He said that we put this Act into operation; we did no such thing.

Mr. ROSS. I did not say so.

Mr. PLUMB. The hon. gentleman knows that the leader of the late Government is responsible for the Weights and Measures Act. It was on the Statute-Book when he came into power, it is true; but to put it in force a proclamation was necessary which he was in no possible way compelled to issue. It was on the Statute-Book, to be sure, but it could not go into operation until it was proclaimed; and the hon. gentleman, if he knows anything of the law, knows perfectly well that that was the case, and he dare not and cannot deny it. There is where the whole responsibility rests. The truth is the faithful wanted easy employment, plenty of pay and leisure for spending it. There was a splendid opportunity to illustrate the beauties of reform and retrenchment. Before the instruments were bought, long before the Act was or could possibly be put into operation, this hon. gentleman attempted to persuade us that that horde who were fattening upon the public Treasury were being instructed in their duties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. How could they be instructed without instruments?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly. Although some instruments and machinery were purchased, which the hon. gentleman says are now rusting in the cellars of the Public Buildings, he knows perfectly well that a second order was given by his friends far larger than the first by ours, thus largely and as it resulted needlessly and prematurely adding to the expenditure; and he knows perfectly well that the hon. gentlemen opposite used that law for the purpose of rewarding political friends. Why, Sir, on the coast of Labrador where there is nothing to be done except to weigh and measure the seals—put them under seal, I suppose, according to law—a man was paid over $1,800 for some 1,400 days services in doing nothing. In fact he had nothing to weigh, and was willing to wait. I must say that if he was under instruction all that time he must have been a dull scholar. I would say, as some gentlemen in the United States said, it was a great mistake to attempt to give a $5,000 education to a $5 boy; and I rather think we were giving an $1,800 education to a two-penny officer. Sir, he was never instructed, they never gave him instruments, and he never did anything for his money except to sign his orders on the disbursing officer and his receipts when they were cashed. The hon. gentleman attempted to show that because after the Act was put in operation the returns at certain points were not large, and that he considered an answer to the argument made by the hon. Minister of Customs. We will leave him just where he floundered and allow him to make all he can out of that kind of argument. When we came into power we found in 1878-79, men appointed by the hon. member for Lambton occupying positions under the Weights and Measures Act. The very men of whom that hon. gentleman complained that they did not collect money enough to pay their salaries, were of his own political stripe, and everything he said recoiled upon the late Government; and the hon. gentleman must have been sorely in need of an argument and must have become desperate indeed when he found it necessary to attack his own friends in order to attempt to make a point against the damning charges which were brought to-day against his party from this side of the House. As usual we have turned the tables and put the hon. gentlemen on the defensive. I would not want any better campaign document for our side than the trenchant statement of the Minister of Customs. The hon. member for West Middlesex says, it is to be part of that document, but I do not think so, we have material enough and to spare without it, but it will make a very pretty, neat, attractive little postscript. It will be far more easily understood than the prolix theories of the hon. gentleman's hair-splitting leader. With the material that we draw from the five years, during which the hon. gentlemen exhibited the consistency and sincerity of their professions and their performances, I am quite ready to meet the hon. gentleman from West Middlesex, or his leaders on any platform he may select, and I can show beyond dispute that the figures adduced by our side of the House from the Public Accounts are such as the hon. gentleman, with all his sophistry, can never controvert. I have only in conclusion to offer a remark with respect to the hon. gentleman's statement, that a Government official took part in the late contest in West Northumberland. The tu quoque argument will answer there. I say that the whole of the riding was flooded with employes of the Province of Ontario. I tell the hon. gentleman, and I can prove it, if necessary, that there were men among them who, beyond all question, ought not to have been there, and I may remind the hon. gentleman himself that he is not entirely free from the imputation of being an employe of the Ontario Government. I can tell the hon. member that it is credibly stated that he is, and that he has been for a long time the recipient of honorariums at least, I might say of a regular yearly stipend from the Ontario Government, and it ill-becomes him to speak of officials meddling in election affairs. I can tell the hon. gentleman and his friends opposite that we are perfectly willing that they may gather any consolation they can from the present aspect of affairs, but they are like the nervous boy who whistled aloud to keep his courage up as he passed the churchyard. They fear that there is a spectre behind them, and it is the spectre of their own misdeeds. These hon. gentlemen know perfectly well that within the last week the leader of the party gave up everything as lost. They know they are a forlorn hope, desperate indeed, and their position frightful, and it is hourly proving worse. Every move thus far that they have made against us has proved disastrous to themselves. We are ready and able at any time and place to justify the acts of the Government we support, and we believe that the people at any time and place will refuse to accept again the mixers and muddlers, the blunderers and plunderers, the helpless incapables, utterly blind and deaf to the most apparent omens and the loudest warnings, who showed their utter incapacity to read the signs of the times, their utter lack of political foresight and capacity, their want of sympathy with the people, and their contempt of the distress and suffering by which they were surrounded; deaf to all appeals they went their way, and we know that the history of 1878 will repeat itself as the Nemesis of their infatuated career since they were repudiated by the people, whose confidence they betrayed. Upon what tenable ground can they claim to be taken back, for, since their great disaster, like the French Bourbons, whose hopes for restoration are almost as well founded, they have learned nothing and forgotten nothing.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I desire to inform the First Minister that he will find the speech to which I referred on page 2218 of the Hansard of 1878, and I do so merely lest it might appear that I was not quoting the hon. gentleman correctly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

338. Public buildings in Manitoba..... $19,550

Mr. BLAKE. What would be the extent of the accommodation at any time at Winnipeg and Brandon respectively in the immigration buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state the number of people. The amount is for frame buildings 51 x 27 feet, and well put up and connected. It would appear to be rather a small room, considering the number of immigrants that may arrive at one time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In addition to the permanent building, in consequence of the great and unexpected rush of immigrants, the hon. Minister of Agriculture has given instructions that a temporary shed shall be put up, the timber and boards of which may be used afterwards. In addition to this, the barracks which were occupied by the Militia will be used for the same purpose, except the portion occupied by stores.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I see it stated that communication had been made by Mr. Brydges with the hon. gentlemen opposite to stop the arrival of immigrants at the present time, in consequence of the flooded state of the country. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if such a communication has been received and if any steps have been taken in consequence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was learned from various sources that there was a temporary cessation of communication at Winnipeg and a shortness of supplies, and it was recommended that immigrants had better move slowly—that they had better stop at Quebec, Montreal or Toronto at least for ten days rather than go on to Emerson, and it was hoped that after that time communication would be restored.

339. To cover expenditure for salaries of engineers, firemen and contractors of Dominion Buildings (hitherto paid by the respective Departments for which the services were performed)..... $13,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In what items were these charged in the Public Accounts? Were they charged in the contingencies?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Then in that case it is clear that our contingencies are in reality increased by a large sum, though that does not appear on the face of the accounts.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These salaries were not paid out of the contingencies of the head office here, but out of the moneys voted for the outside service, but it was thought by the Government that those officers should be paid under one Department. By this means we can more readily ascertain what their duties are, and equalize their salaries according to the kind of work they perform. There are twenty-eight of these officers at various places throughout the Dominion.

Mr. BLAKE. There seems to be one difficulty connected with this change, and that is that we can no longer charge to each building the expenses in connection with it. There will be an apparent economy when in reality the amount is only finding its way into another part of the Public Accounts, and we will have difficulty in comparing one year with another.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These figures will appear in the reports of the various Departments.

340. Telegraph and signal service generally..... $2,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount voted for the year was not sufficient. We require this for instruments for the different stations, for preparing maps and for contingencies.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What sort of agreement is made with the telegraph companies for the transmission of weather bulletins?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In many cases they allow the despatches to go free, in other cases there is a very low rate charged; and of course they are free over our own lines, unless they are for private individuals.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I suppose there is a system of exchange with the American weather service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

QUEBEC.

384.	Grosse Isle Quarantine Station	$3,000 00
	St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.....	750 00
	Montreal Drill Shed—New roof, etc.....	20,000 00
	Montreal Post Office	5,500 00
	Bury Drill Shed—Repairs	600 00
	Cartridge Factory, Quebec.....	2,700 00
	Hull Post Office and Inland Revenue Offices— Additional amount required for grading site,	1,200 00

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of the Cartridge Factory? There has been five separate items for it, I think.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $40,000 to $43,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What arrangement respecting this Drill Shed has been made with the Montreal Corporation? The vote proposed is large. I understand the City was to pay half.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The repairing of this roof has been left in abeyance for years, it has practically left Montreal without a drill shed; $20,000 is required to roof the building. At a meeting of the Aldermen in February last, a resolution was passed in favor of properly repairing the building, the Corporation to pay half the cost, 6 per cent. on the corporation outlay, and an annual rental of $1,200 for the use of the building by militia; or that the Government give the drill shed to the city for the use of the volunteers without rent. Of course, before the money is spent upon the building, an arrangement will be made between the Government and Montreal Corporation as to the duties of each.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The arrangement will be that we shall have to pay 6 per cent. and the $1,200 besides.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first alternative of the corporation is that they should pay one-half and the Government pay the other and $1,200 besides; and that the city should give up the drill shed to the Government for the use of the militia, without rent, the Government to have the option of deciding what method would be adopted.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would not adopt the plan of paying $20,000 and rent for the remaining $20,000.

Mr. CARON. Nothing is decided so far.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Something should be decided, and we should know how the money is to be spent. We do not vote money at the discretion of the Government. The corporation should pay so much and the Government pay so much and control the drill shed. Than to pay $20,000 and give 6 per cent. on the other $20,000, it would be better to pay the whole $40,000 as we can get the money at less than 6 per cent.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $20,000 is half the cost of the roof; and the corporation will pay the other half.

Mr. RYAN (Montreal). The Corporation of Montreal do not know whether the Government or they themselves are to blame with regard to the state of this drillshed, but they feel that the volunteers have been ill-treated. For years they have had no place, even in the depth of winter, to drill in, although there is not a more efficient body of men in the country, or a body that has made more sacrifices for the public interest. The Montreal Corporation have expended on this building $150,000. The roof fell in some years ago. During the time that the drill shed was complete the Government paid an annual rent to the Corporation of $1,200; since the roof fell in that has ceased. When the drill shed was originally constructed the Government contributed $10,000 or $12,000 to its construction and agreed to pay a rent of $1,200 per year. The Corporation has made a proposition to the hon. Minister of Public Works to concede this property, which cost the city $150,000, to the Government, provided the Government will put a roof on it, whether that roof will cost $20,000 or $40,000, and the Government will have no rental to pay. On the other hand, the Corporation say that if they are called on to contribute half the cost of the roof they should receive the annual rental of $1,200 a year as formerly. I would have preferred that the hon. Minister had asked for a vote of $40,000 to put the building in proper repair in every respect, and that would be a saving to the Government because they would be thereby exempt from the rental of $1,200 per year. As the Government can borrow money at 4 per cent. the saving by this course would be $400 per year, leaving out of question the probability that it would not cost $40,000 to put a roof on the shed and properly repair it. I hope that before these arrangements are completed between the Government and the Corporation the Government will see their way clear to accept the proposition of the Corporation and assume the entire control of the property.

Resolutions ordered to be reported; and (at 11:25 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

MONDAY, 8th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INDEXES TO STATUTES.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There has been for some time in the office of the Chief Law Clerk of the House, a very useful index to the Statutes since 1867, also a table of the Statutes showing the various amendments made, also an index to the Orders in Council, authorized to be made under pursuance of those Statutes. These indexes are lying in manuscript form in the Law Clerk's office, and if they were printed and distributed among hon. members, they would prove most useful. The cost of printing, as estimated by the parliamentary printers, is as follows: Index to Statutes, $150; Orders in Council, $80; Table of Statutes, $150. This estimate is for 600 copies, and if printed in French there will be an additional charge of 50 per cent. I beg leave to move:

"That the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament be instructed, to cause to be printed six hundred copies of the Index to the Statutes, Index to Orders in Council, and Tables of Statutes, now prepared in the Office of the Chief Law Clerk, 300 copies to be distributed to the members of both Houses, and the remaining 300 copies to be kept in reserve."

Motion agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say a few words in order to place myself right with my constituents and the people of New Brunswick. In the debate the other night in regard to the Charybdis I took the ground, and was very careful to state, that no one had a right to run down the harbor of St. John, and I spoke in favor of that harbor. I find in the Government organ at St. John, the following:—

"As a good many things appeared to have been said—by New Brunswickers too—which reflect credit neither upon themselves nor the people they are supposed to represent, it is not yet too late to give our citizens the benefit of these deliverance."

The journal gives from the Hansard all the remarks I made, except the last remark. It makes a statement that I ran down the harbor, and it winds up by saying:

"The whole of the statements of Messrs. Burpee and Domville are injurious to the port and calculated to do it great injustice."

And it further says:

"Take the discussion as a whole it was most discreditable to certain New Brunswick representatives."

As I am assured that the omission could only have been made by mistake, as the journal says:

"Want of space and the late hour at which it was received compelled us to hold over yesterday our parliamentary correspondent's summary of the discussion anent the Charybdis and the St. John harbor."

I can only say I presume it could not have been intentional, and that it could not have intentionally given certain parts of what I said and left out the last part. I wish to get this in the Hansard, in order that I may be able to point it out to my friends and the public. According to Hansard, I said:

"I contend with the hon. Minister of Finance that hon. gentlemen had no right to find fault with St. John harbor, &c."

I wish to have it appear that in my remarks I said nothing detrimental to the harbor of St. John, but spoke in a contrary spirit, and that these remarks in no way reflected discredit on those people that I am supposed to represent.

FRENCH TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. VALIN (in French). Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of this House on the French translation of the debates. I see that the publishing of the French Hansard is behind time. Here we are at the end of the Session, and we have not received, so far, one-half of the debates in French. The consequence is that if we wish to refer to the Hansard for information, we have only the English copy; and if we have something to explain to anyone not understanding English, we are compelled to make a translation, which may not always be satisfactory. We were told the other day that we did not understand English. Well, if we had the French translation of the debates, we could understand the speeches of hon. members. It seems to me that it would be but justice to the French members that the French translation of the debates should be expedited.

REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 158) to re-adjust the representation of the House of Commons and for other purposes.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. PLUMB. As the constituency which I represent is interested very largely in the contents of the Bill, the second reading of which has now been moved, I venture to ask the indulgence of my hon. friends on this side of the House, as well as of hon. gentlemen opposite, in trespassing for a short time on their attention while I state the position in which I stand, and the position in which the old historical constituency which I represent on the floor of this House also stands, with regard to the changes which are made by this Bill. The clause of the Bill which specially interests my constituency first and myself afterwards, is as follows:—

"The county of Lincoln and Niagara shall consist of the town and townships of Niagara, the city of St. Catharines, the townships of Grantham, Clinton and Louth, and the villages of Beausville, Merriton and Port Dalhousie."

The old constituency which has just been merged in and connected with the county of Lincoln, was originally the seat of the capital of Ontario, in which the first Parliament of Upper Canada met. After the Treaty of Paris, in 1763, when the Canadas were ceded to the British Crown, there was no division of the Provinces until the Act of 1791. In 1791, Upper Canada was separated from Lower Canada, and by that Act each was entitled to representative institutions. The Lieutenant-Governor was directed to call Parliament together by proclamation, and the qualifications of the members of that Parliament were defined, and the electoral divisions of the Provinces were established. The 20th section states:

"And be it hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid: That the members for the several districts, or counties or circles, of the said Provinces respectively, shall be chosen by the majority of votes of such persons as shall severally for their own use and benefit of lands or tenements within such district or county or circle as the case shall be, such lands being by them held in freehold, or in fief or in roture or by certificate derived under the authority of the Governor in Council of the Province of Quebec, and being of the yearly value of forty shillings sterling or upwards, over and above all rents and charges payable out of or in respect to the same; and, that the members for the several towns or townships within the said Provinces respectively shall be chosen by the majority of votes of such persons as either shall be severally possessed for their own use and benefit of a dwelling-house and lot of ground in such town or township, such dwelling-house and lot of ground being by them held in like manner as aforesaid, and being of the yearly value of five pounds sterling or upwards, or as having been resident within the said town or township for the space of twelve calendar months next before the date of the writ of summons for the election shall, bona fide, have paid one year's rent for the dwelling-house in which they shall have so resided, at the rate of ten pounds sterling or upwards."

Under the authority of that Act, in the year 1792, Lieutenant-Governor John Graves Simcoe ordered an election of members of Parliament. His letters patent ordering the election were dated 9th July, 1792. He divided the Province of Upper Canada into the following counties: Glengarry, with two members; Stormont, with one member; Dundas, with one member; Grenville, with one member; Leeds and Frontenac, with one member; Ontario and Addington, with one member; Prince Edward, with one member; Lennox, Hastings and Northumberland, with one member; Durham and York, with one member; Lincoln, with one member; Norfolk, with one member; Suffolk and Essex, with one member; Kent, with two members; making in all nineteen counties and fifteen members. The first members who were elected to represent the country were as follows: John McDonnell, Speaker; Joshua Booth, James Baby, Alexander Campbell, who being a Quaker would not be sworn and was replaced by Philip Dorland, Peter Van Alstine, Jeremiah French, Ephraim Jones, William Mocomb, Hugh McDonnell, Benjamin Pawling, Nathaniel Pettit, David William Smith, Hazleton Spencer, Isaac Swazy, — Young, John White. The Lieutenant Governor and his Legislative Council convened Parliament on the 17th day of September, 1792, and the first Parliament of Canada was held in a small building at Fort George in Niagara, the town in which I reside. William Osgoode was Speaker of the Legislative Council, and the members of the Council were William Osgoode, James Baby, Robert Hamilton, Richard Cartwright, jun., John Munro, Alexander Grant, and Peter Russell, who was afterwards Lieutenant-Governor. An elegant writer who has made important contributions to colonial history, and whose writings have more than a colonial celebrity, writes as follows in regard to this first historic meeting of the Parliament in the Province of Canada. He first speaks of the meeting of the Parliament of Canada in the Bishop's Palace, Quebec, and then he contrasts the meeting of that Parliament with the meeting of the first Parliament that convened in the great Province, which I have the honor to represent in part in this House:

"Now let us leave the Bishop's Palace, among the rocks of Old Quebec, and visit another scene, much humbler in its surroundings, but equally characteristic of the country as it was, and equally eloquent in the lesson that it teaches. In Quebec, the descendants of the Normans and Bretons of old France, had opened the first act of a political drama, which, in its later stages, would illustrate the struggles of an impulsive and generous people for free institutions as well as their ability to understand parliamentary government. While the French Canadians were thus engaged in the initiatory stage of their political history, we pass on to the wilderness Province of Upper Canada, where their fellow colonists were also called to show their ability for managing their internal affairs in a Legislature composed of two Houses.

"The theatre in which the Upper Canadian had to act had none of the attributes of historic interest which surrounded the first Legislature of Lower Canada. The little village of Newark was but a humble settlement on the confines of civilization; and it was here that Governor Simcoe decided to open his first Legislature under the new constitution. Across the rapid river was the territory of the new Republic, which was entering on a grand experiment of government, in contrast with that just set in operation in Canada. Newark was the most convenient place in which to assemble the small and scattered population of the western Province. But if the village was unpretentious in its architectural appearance, its natural surroundings had much to attract the eye. The roar of the mighty cataract was heard in calm summer days; below the bridge rushed the dark river, seeking rest in the bosom of the great lake not far beyond. Within sight of this unrivalled river the little Parliament of Upper Canada assembled for the first time, in a small framed building, a short distance from the village. It was but a mean Parliament House compared with a massive pile which was chosen for a similar purpose in Quebec; and yet each was appropriate in its way. The Bishop's Palace illustrated an old community which had aimed at the conquest of the largest part of America, and had actually laid the foundations of an empire. The little Legislative cabin of Newark was a fit type of the ruggedness and newness of western colonial life. The axe was whirring amid the forest, and only here and there, through a vast wilderness, could be seen the humble clearings of the pioneer. But, nevertheless:

"The rudiments of empire here
Were plastic, still and warm,
The chaos of a mighty world
Was rounding into form.

We hear the tread of pioneers
Of nations yet to be,
The first low wash of waves where soon
Shall roll a human sea."

In this unpretentious building Governor Simcoe met his Legislature on a day in the early autumn of 1792."

At the opening of that Parliament, Lieutenant-Governor Simcoe delivered an address—one of the most eloquent which I think can be found upon the pages of colonial records, one which deserves to be embalmed in the history of the country and in the memories of the people of Canada. A few brief extracts from that speech will, I think, be pertinent to the present occasion. Governor Simcoe said:

"The wisdom and beneficence of our Most Gracious Sovereign and the British Parliament have been eminently proved, not only in imparting to us the same form of Government, but also in securing the benefits by the many provisions that guard this memorable Act so that the blessings of our invaluable constitution, thus protected and amplified, we may hope will be extended to the remotest posterity.

"The great and momentous trusts and duties which have been committed to the representatives of this Province, in a degree infinitely beyond whatever, till this period, have distinguished any other colony, have originated from the British nation upon a just consideration of the energy and hazard with which its inhabitants have so conspicuously supported the British constitution.

"It is from the same patriotism now called upon to exercise, with due deliberation and foresight the various offices of civil administration that your fellow subjects of the British Empire expect the foundation of union, of industry and wealth, of commerce and power, which may last through all succeeding ages.

"The natural advantages of the Province of Upper Canada are inferior to none on this side of the Atlantic; there can be no separate interest through its whole extent; the British form of Government has prepared the way for its steady colonization, and I trust that your fostering care will improve the favorable situation, and that a numerous and agricultural people will speedily take possession of a soil and climate, which, under the British laws and the munificence with which His Majesty has granted the lands of the Crown, offer such manifest and peculiar encouragements."

It may be mentioned that one-seventh of the Crown lands were at that time given to the Province. The Legislature met, and its first act was to establish British law in the new Province; its next act was to establish trial by jury; its next Act was to prepare for the speedy manumission of persons held in slavery or bondage; and in the succeeding Parliament it provided a liberal fund for the purpose of having translated into French the laws of the country, the proceedings of Parliament, and such public information as should be necessary for the information of the French population of Upper Canada, in the eastern and the western districts. When Governor Simcoe dismissed his Parliament which sat for a month in the town of Newark, better known as Niagara, he uttered these memorable words:

"His Majesty in his benevolence having directed a seventh from such lands as shall be granted to be reserved to the Crown for the public benefit, it will become my duty to take those measures which shall appear to be necessary to fulfil His gracious intentions, and I make no doubt but that as citizens and magistrates you will give every assistance in your power to carry into full effect a system from which the public and posterity must derive such peculiar advantages.

"I cannot dismiss you without earnestly desiring to promote by precept and example among your respective counties, the regular habit of piety and morality, the surest foundations of all public and private felicity; and at this juncture, I particularly desire to explain that this Province is singularly blessed, not with a mutilated constitution, but with a constitution which has stood the test of experience, and is the very image and transcript of that at Great Britain by which she has long established and secured to her subject as much freedom and happiness as it is possible to be enjoyed under the subordination necessary to civilized society."

With expressions like these, who can wonder that the foundations of liberty and freedom—freedom, not license—were laid broad and deep in this Province of Ontario? The Legislature was then discussed. Six years afterwards there was a change in the representation. It was not very material; the Parliament, however, ceased to meet in the town of Niagara, and was removed to Toronto. In 1823, an Act was passed, by which it was provided that whenever the town of Niagara could show that it had 1,000 inhabitants it should be entitled to a representative in the Legislative Assembly. In 1825, the population having reached the limit which was provided, Niagara became entitled to a representative, and from that time it has been represented in the Councils of the country. The Act fixing the conditions under which the town should become entitled to return a member to Parliament, was passed in 1821; but the Census was taken in 1824, when its population exceeded the specified number. Accordingly, in 1825, it first sent a member to the Parliament of Upper Canada. It was the ninth Parliament of Upper Canada which met in Toronto. Niagara was represented by Edward McBride; in the tenth Parliament by Robert Dickson, the brother of the present Senator for that district, who was subsequently a member of the Legislative Council. Its representative was Henry John Boulton in 1831, and Chas. Richardson, in 1835 and 1836-37. After the Union it was represented by Edward Clark Campbell in 1840 and 1841; the hon. Walter Hamilton Dickson, now a Senator, represented it from 1844-45 till 1848, and then until 1852, when the hon. Francis Hincks was elected and represented it in 1852 and 1853. Joseph C. Morrison sat for the constituency in 1854-55, and John Simpson represented it in 1858, and again in 1862 and 1863. Mr. Simpson was succeeded by Angus Morrison, who sat for it the Session after Confederation. He was again elected in 1872, but at the dissolution of Parliament in 1873, Mr. Morrison, against my strong urgency, declined to be a candidate. I was then nominated and returned for the town and township of Niagara, the township being then attached to the town, thus enlarging the constituency, and I have sat as its humble representative from that time till this. It was, perhaps, my misfortune that I came into public life at all. It certainly now turns out to have been my misfortune that I was elected to the loyal borough which I have represented so long; and I claim that the greatest misfortune that falls upon any hon. gentleman in this House, under the Bill now introduced by my hon. friend, with perhaps a single exception, falls upon me. I live in the midst of the district with which I had been identified for more than twenty years. All the constituents of that district, with perhaps a very few exceptions, are, I believe, my personal friends. They are not all my political friends; and I have had some severe contests in retaining my seat in this House, verifying the old adage: the smaller the area the more savage the fight. There is quite as much politics to the acre in the borough of Niagara as in any place represented in this House.

“But the tree of deepest root is found, Unwilling still to quit the ground.”

—and if I took any other position in this House, which is exceedingly doubtful, as an old tree is not to be easily turned up by the roots and transplanted to take root in some other place, at least every association of my political life is severed by this Bill. If there should be any complaint about gerrymandering, for I believe that is the word applied to the Bill by hon. gentlemen opposite—if anybody is affected specially and absolutely by it—I am more affected, and have more reason to complain, than any one else. If I have been wounded in the house of my friends, by the Bill of the hon. gentleman, whom I have endeavored in my feeble way to support ever since I have been in public life, I must believe that such changes as are proposed by it must arise from some overwhelming necessity, and I have reason to believe that the same disregard of personal considerations which has marked the policy of this Government in other cases, has dictated its course in the Bill now before us. Very strong arguments indeed may be urged in favor of small boroughs. I do not believe myself in cutting the Province of Ontario, or any other Province, into mathematical squares on a question of changing the representation. I believe that some variety in that is necessary to the free and harmonious play of our institutions. I believe it has been acknowledged in all cases, by all parties in England, that the system of small boroughs was one which did not work evil, but, on the contrary, there are almost unanswerable opinions given in its favor. The small borough of Arundel, disfranchised by the Reform Act of 1867, having 174 registered electors, actually represented the largest constituency in England; because for many years it was the sole English constituency which returned a Roman Catholic to the House of Commons. After its disfranchisement the Isle of Wight for a time returned the only English Roman Catholic. Since the disfranchisement of the small boroughs, the remaining larger ones either chose very rich or local men, thus excluding men capable of legislating for the interests of the whole Empire, and as little as possible hampered by local ties and prejudices. Again, there used to be a direct connection between young men of talent, fresh from universities and public life, so long as nomination boroughs made it possible for young men of ability and ambition to achieve political distinction at a comparatively early age, without long purses, or a surrender of their intellectual individuality. The eminent Liberal leader, Henry Fawcett (now Postmaster-General), wrote his opinion in 1871, that since the extension of the suffrage and the extinction of nomination boroughs, “important opinions are unrepresented and considerable sections of the community are virtually disfranchised.” And, in 1877, Mr. Gladstone deplored “the rapid and constant advance of the money power” in the constituencies, and “the reduction, almost to zero, of the chances of entrance into Parliament for men, who have nothing to rely upon but their talent and their character.” Well, in 1874, it was my good or ill-fortune, after what was called the midnight attack, to accept the nomination for the borough of Niagara. I was at that time opposed by Mr. John Currie, the brother of the then Speaker of the Local House. I had no political ambition. I had no desire to take any part in public life further than that I had pretty decided opinions upon political matters, which I had never hesitated to express whenever the opportunity offered; but I never expressed them before the public, for I never had made a speech in public anywhere in my life, and I was not “a wedding breakfast spouter,” as I was at that time styled by the Globe, but I felt that a great wrong was being done, that an attempt was being made to hoodwink the people of Canada, to steal a verdict which I thought was an unfair one, and after much hesitation on my part and great urgency on the part of my constituents, after endeavoring in vain to get Mr. Morrison to accept the nomination, I accepted it. I had ten days in which to canvass, and during that time was compelled to leave my constituents for three days. I made no personal canvass whatever, but I was elected by a majority of thirty. There had been, contrary to my express instructions and without my knowledge, a small expenditure of money on the part of my over-zealous friends. On the other side there had been, as I ascertained by means which I shall not now state, an enormous expenditure in proportion to the size of the riding. The expenditure on the other side, I believe, amounted to at least $3,500. I knew the disbursing agent, I knew where the money came from, how it came, and how it was distributed, for I had the whole evidence ready, in case the gentleman who opposed me and through whose direction my election was protested, should claim his seat. However, he did not venture to do so. I was unseated, and when the trial in which there were more than 100 witnesses subpoenaed, and which was conducted on the part of my opponent by Mr. Thomas Hodgins assisted by Mr. J. G. Currie, was about half through, it was disclosed that a small amount of money had been expended in my behalf. I was then asked by the opposing counsel if I would throw up the sponge, for there had been a device at that time invented to cover up the shameful expenditure of the party of purity, by which device a member whose seat was protested, could, during the trial, the very instant a single act of bribery was proved, acknowledge it, and he was unseated and any further developments prevented. I do not know exactly to whose ingenuity that device was due. It has been credited to an hon. gentleman whom I see before me, but I may be mistaken in supposing that he was the author of a system which certainly was calculated to screen and did largely screen the gentlemen who were elected upon the elevation of the standard of purity and the disclosure of whose election cases do not form a very savory page in the history of the Reform party. We refused. My counsel demanded that the investigation should proceed to its extremest limit, and said that if I were not called into the witness-box by the opposing counsel he would put me into the witness-box himself. They did call me. We defied them. We told them to proceed as far as they liked. The consequence was that an expenditure of $125 was proved and I was unseated; but the Judge, in his charge, specially and explicitly exonerated me from any participation in bribery by any improper act. I then ran again, after purging the voters list in the Township of 41 votes. At that time, the party then in power in Ontario had disfranchised or wiped out Niagara as a borough for local representation although there was a good deal of indignation felt at that, for it seemed to be an entirely uncalled-for procedure, I did not perceive that the loudest of those on the other side who denounced it in the borough, left their party on that account and voted for me. But I had a large majority; I was elected by a majority of 105. Since then I have had another very notable contest. For some reason or other it was deemed desirable that the borough of Niagara, which had for many years elected a Conservative, should change its allegiance. It was said by a prominent gentleman, the leader of the opposite party, just before the election, that means had been found by which I was to be forever excluded from this House. He said that I never would come back again. I also am told that the late leader of the party in this House was also influencing a gentleman to oppose me. That gentleman's case has been commented upon in this House, and I am always reluctant to speak of it, but I have been forced, very often by statements made, particularly by innuendoes from my hon. friend from West Middlesex, to drag before the House and the public matters which are not or which ought not to be very pleasant to hon. gentlemen opposite, or to those who have acted as their agents or allies. I told the gentleman who was put up to oppose me that I knew he could not be elected if the election was a fair one, and I gave him notice that if he expended money corruptly I would follow him to the last extremity and punish him if I could possibly do so. The election came on and I was defeated by two votes. Some of the money which was lavishly thrown about the constituency was brought to my friend on the very night after the election. The gentleman who came there claimed that he came in the interests and at the suggestion of the late leader of the party, and of his great supporter, whose name I will not mention here. He claimed he was acting for them. That gentleman made the most lavish expenditure that has ever been made, I presume, in any constituency in Canada, not excepting South Huron or North Simcoe, or London, or Chambly or any other of those illustrations of the remarkable elevation of the standard of purity by hon. gentlemen opposite. The gentleman himself confessed that he expended in that election $17,500. He got a majority of two votes. I protested the election in my own name—the first man that ever dared to do it. I claimed the seat—the first man that ever claimed a seat under the Election Law. My opponent was disqualified, and I gained the seat without an election. It was only necessary to strike off three, or four of the corrupt votes to give me the majority. The case disclosed that my opponent by himself and by his relatives and other agents had been guilty of the most flagrant bribery, and after my counsel had succeeded in establishing enough to secure the seat for me and his disqualification, it was not deemed desirable to proceed further. It was agreed that no more witnesses should be called, and that votes enough should be stricken off my opponent's list to give me a majority. If I had proceeded further I could have secured a larger majority. My opponent not only lost his lavish outlay, most of which went into the pockets of agents and never was paid to voters at all, but he had an enormous bill of costs to pay swollen by his counsel by many motions not directly affecting the main issue, and also notably by the contention that the Parliament of Canada had not the power to enact the Election Law of 1874. I came back to my seat in the middle of the session of 1879, at the time that the Conservative party, having succeeded by an enormous majority, was carrying out their National Policy, one of the great pledges they had made during the election campaign. I came here at that time, and I have remained to do whatever duty might devolve upon me in my humble capacity. I believe the constituency I represent is still faithful to Conservative interests; I believe that constituency, if I were to go back for election to-morrow, would return me by a majority ranging from 50 to 100 out of the few votes which that small constituency polls. I can only say that by wiping out that county, or in attaching it to the county of Lincoln—for which, of course, I cannot think of competing with my hon. friend who sits behind me—I think in doing so, I have been deprived of a sure seat in this House, that my constituents have been deprived of a representation which, to them, was of inestimable value. One can imagine that an old county having been in existence for more than sixty years—it is sixty-one years since they were first made by law, entitled to the privilege of electing a representative—must feel with great chagrin, with bitterness, with humiliation, the deprivation of a privilege which they have so long enjoyed. It is no fault of their own if the old borough has been so unfortunate as to be declining in population. The Welland Canal and the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railway system diverted from our noble harbor and magnificent river, the great part of the carrying trade from the limited point upon which the beautiful town in which I live is situated, that growth, activity and prosperity which have signalized most other places in Canada, and yet it is beautiful for situation; it is the garden of western Canada; it is a place where the finest productions of nature are grown with lavish profusion; it has a climate of unequalled salubrity, where the severe winters and bleak springs are unknown, it is inhabited by the descendants of the United Empire Loyalists, who settled there after having dared the great and terrible wilderness, the dense forests, the deep and rapid rivers and the dangerous swamps and morasses that barred the way from the Mohawk to Lake Ontario, an undertaking full of hardships and dangers which it is now scarcely possible to imagine,—fleeing from the revolution of 1776 to remain under the British Crown, and leaving their farms on the Mohawk and in New Jersey, leaving their crops ungathered, leaving everything that could contribute to their material prosperity, to be true and loyal to the Crown. In that district first settled the pioneers of a great part of western Ontario. Lands are still held by the descendants of those families, and that explains why there is so large a Conservative element in my county and the adjoining counties. They will see with the most intense regret that they have been deprived of their ancient privileges. They cannot see it with greater regret, with greater pain, than I do. While I feared that some necessity of the kind was pressing itself upon my right hon. friend, I received resolutions adopted at a meeting held in Niagara in respect to the redistribution of seats which I sent to my right hon. friend, accompanied by a letter which I shall venture to read to the House:

Mr. PLUMB.

"23rd March, 1882.

"DEAR SIR JOHN,—An influential meeting of the electors of Niagara was held on the 19th inst. at which the resolutions enclosed herewith were unanimously adopted, and I beg to commend them to you in support of the strong efforts that I have already made to prevent the disfranchisement of the old constituency in the impending readjustment.

"Its historical position as the former seat of Government where the first Parliament of Upper Canada was held under Governor Simcoe, and as one of the earliest points of settlement of the brave and devoted United Empire Loyalists, who gave up every advantage they possessed in the revolted colonies for the sake of the Crown, would seem to give it peculiar claim upon the consideration of the Government, and its unswerving attachment to the Conservative party, evidenced by many a closely and bitterly contested election, seems to entitle its prayer to a favorable hearing from the chief of the party.

"I venture therefore to express the hope that some means may be found of avoiding the sacrifice which is feared, and of either continuing the district as at present constituted, or of enlarging it in such a way as to preserve the name and to give it additional weight in public councils.

"I am, dear Sir John,

"Yours faithfully,

"J. B. PLUMB.

"To the Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, K.C.B., M.P."

I wish to put that letter on record as an evidence that I made every possible effort to save the constituency from the doom which I feared was impending. I could not suggest an enlargement which contained an approximate equalization,—without which an enlargement would have been only a temporary expedient,—without making it liable to interference in the future, and without seriously injuring Lincoln or Welland or both. The feeling of my constituents with regard to absorption, led me to fear that even an apparently satisfactory solution of the difficulty would be threatened by the resentment of the electors who would be taken from old associations and forced into new ones. I felt strongly impelled to meet the situation by placing, when I now sit down, my resignation in the hands of the Speaker. If I had taken my own counsel, I certainly would have done so; but, Sir, I have talked with those who, perhaps, are better able to decide my course of action, in such a trying position than I am myself, and now that the excitement is over, I think I have best done my duty to my constituents, and have best done my duty to the party I represent, and through the party my duty to the country, not to take any such step, for certainly I would not do anything, even at a grave and solemn juncture like this, which would in the slightest degree embarrass my right hon. friend, or in the slightest degree weaken his hands in carrying out a plan which involves the greatest difficulty, involves the greatest possible complications, involves embarrassments it may be much easier to accept upon the other side of the House than upon this side; for I venture to say, that there is more dissatisfaction really felt among friends than among foes, at the inevitable necessities which have compelled my right hon. friend and his colleagues to make the apportionment under which the Bill is now before the House. When I found that I personally had so large a stake in the Bill, and that my constituents were personally so largely concerned, I abstained from any interference, after making my own remonstrance and using all the arguments I could use for my constituents more than for myself, and I can say that I did not know one single item of the contents of the Bill which is now before the House, until the day on which it was laid on the Table. I can say, also, that I decided it was best for myself and for my constituents that I should so abstain; but I now wish to appeal to my right hon. friend to say whether I have not, so far as in me lay, fulfilled the duty which I felt devolved on me, with respect to the sacred trust placed in my hands to protect the constituency which has honored me with its confidence, and through it to protect those generous friends, the ardent supporters who have always been ready at my call to stand firmly shoulder to shoulder with me and to fight the three severe battles which I have been compelled to fight in order to be returned to this House. Sir, those friends will be deeply grieved to find that all their labors are henceforth no longer to be extended in that direction, but I will say to them that I bow to the inevitable. I believe that nothing but the absolute necessity which compelled my right hon. friend and his colleagues to take away a seat from the borough of Cornwall, having three times the number of inhabitants of that which I represent, would for a moment have induced him to do what he has done in my case. I say I will submit, but I submit with sorrow, I submit with a feeling which seems to me to indicate that I will not long anywhere stand in the public councils of the country. As to myself I may say—"The shadows lengthen as the day declines," and it is not important that I, or any other individual, should be in the councils of the country. Ontario has men enough to represent her, talent enough coming forward in the young men of the country to enable us to say that taking the whole Dominion together one man more or less will never be missed, when the general election comes. I believe, we having established—as we have established—the policy which has brought this country into a state of prosperity, although it may be disputed by hon. gentlemen opposite, is not denied by the practical-thinking people of the country who are not warped and biased by party prejudice—I believe that having adopted that policy we, the majority, which is now represented on the floor of this House, and which I believe, will be largely augmented whenever an appeal is made to the people, notwithstanding the bitterness of the press on the other side, and of some hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches—I believe that having established that policy, whether one man more or less is here to represent that party is comparatively of little consequence. I only wish, in the statement which I am making, to have my friends remember and believe that I have, so far as in me lay, discharged what I believe to be my duty to the country through the party which I have sustained. I trust that in doing so I have not gone far out of the way of strict parliamentary propriety. When hon. gentlemen opposite sat on this side, a persistent effort was made to prevent me from addressing the House and to frighten me out of my position; and if I had some little revenge to gratify—and we are all human—I think by this time we on both sides, myself and those on the other side who took a prominent part in the endeavor to crush me, are pretty nearly even—at all events what ever may happen, I will cherish no unkindly feelings. I carry anger as the flint bears fire, which being struck gives out a heated spark and straight is cool again, and if I have in the heat of debate unconsciously and unwittingly, for I would not do it otherwise, done injustice to hon. gentlemen opposite, I humbly beg their pardon. With this statement I intend to close my remarks. I will take no general part in the debate which is now to proceed in its present stage, but I deemed it necessary, before excitement had arisen in this House respecting such an exciting subject as the present, that the statement I have now made should be made at the earliest possible moment, and I thank the House for the great attention, and the great kindness which it has shown me while making these explanations, for I have made them not so much for myself as for the faithful, the true, the honest, and the unpurchasable friends who first urged me to enter public life, and who have so energetically and so truly sustained and supported me since I entered it; and I close by appealing to my right hon. friend, whenever it may be possible in the course of this debate, to exonerate me from any lack of duty which I owe to those kind and true friends, from whom as a public man I must henceforth be separated. I will say this, that it falls with peculiar hardship upon me because I am a resident in the midst of that community, I must live among them, I will stay among them, I expect to spend my life among them, and it is peculiarly bitter to me that I am to live among them while they feel in some degree perhaps I might be held responsible for the position in which they are placed. But I tell them that they are to be represented, I trust heretofore, by one who is entitled to their fullest confidence, by one of the most ardent supporters of this Government, by an indefatigable and resolute fighter for the right; and I say this, that if I can endure the change, who am at present most affected, I think my friends who were my former supporters can also take the same position, and I believe, when the time comes, they will rally with me as one man to the support of my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAKE. The second reading of this most important measure, a measure which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has described as even in his view possessing most complicated and difficult considerations, a measure which he says has created disappointment and dissatisfaction even greater on his side of the House than on this side of the House, a measure, which therefore, if the secret hearts of hon. gentlemen were to be revealed—for according to the hon. gentleman, it pleases hardly any body, and would be rejected by the vast majority of this Assembly—the second reading is moved in silence. And although its justice, its propriety, its principle, the fairness with which it dealt with the subject under consideration were all challenged, no attempt is made in this debate, by the hon. Minister who introduced it, by the Government who are responsible for it, to answer that challenge or to vindicate the justice of their measure. So much with reference to the portion of the Bill which deals with the redistribution of seats in the Province of Ontario. But there is another provision of the Bill upon which not even a word has been said, not even on the introduction of the measure—that clause which at a blow sweeps away one of the securities for fair dealing between Governments and Oppositions, long fought for, but unsuccessfully, by the Liberal party, but which they placed on the Statute-Book when they had the opportunity of obtaining the reins of power,—the clause which prescribes that men of local station, men of local rank, having a certain stake and interest in the local community, and living amongst the people whom they are to serve on this occasion, and who ought to act, from their general position, in a judicial manner and in manner commanding respect—the choice or the limiting of the returning officers who may be selected is wiped out and left to the absolute and uncontrolled discretion of the Government of the day, and that added change to the Electoral Law is made without a word on the introduction, without a word on the first reading, without a word on the second reading of the Bill, and the House is asked to assent to the change. Now, Sir, first of all, dealing with the subject of redistribution, the avowed object of this Bill as stated by the hon. Minister on a former occasion, and as set forth in the preamble, is to deal with certain necessities arising out of the British North America Act, and arising out of the determination of the Administration to consolidate the old county of Lincoln and the old county of Cornwall by uniting the borough of Niagara to Lincoln, and uniting the borough of Cornwall with the county of Stormont. I say the preamble of this Bill states as the measure of necessity, as the ground work of these changes which are to be made by it in the Province of Ontario, these two things and these two alone. You find in the preamble of this Bill no statement that it is necessary or expedient to provide a greater equality among the various constituencies of Ontario than now exists as a reason for readjustment, but you find this and this only:

Whereas by the Census of the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, and in accordance with the 'British North America Act, 1867,' the Province of Ontario is entitled to four additional members in the House of Commons.

Then, omitting the reference to Manitoba: "By reason thereof," that is to say by reason of the right of Ontario to four additional members:

By reason thereof and of the intended union of the electoral district of the town of Niagara with the township of Niagara thereto, attached with the electoral district of the county of Lincoln, and the union of the electoral district of the town of Cornwall with the township of Cornwall thereto attached, to the county of Stormont it is expedient to readjust the boundaries of certain of the electoral districts in the said Province of Ontario.

There, Sir, you have the groundwork. By reason of the necessity of giving four new members to Ontario, by reason of the determination to unite the old county of Lincoln, all the parts of it into one, and the uniting of all the parts of Stormont into one, which is necessary to readjust the representation of Ontario, and it is on that narrow foundation—that narrow basis—that the hon. gentleman proposes to justify the revolutionary measure and the readjustment of the whole political map of the Province of Ontario, which is contained in the clauses of this Bill. Now, Sir, we stated on the occasion to which I have referred, ten years ago, the general principle which, according to our mind, ought to be adopted in giving new seats to a Province entitled to them by reason of increase of its population; and that general principle—not bounded, however, by any hard and fast laws—as we stated it was, that the new seats would, as a rule, be given to the population to which new seats were due. If you found a very large and rapid increase of the population of a county thus giving to the whole Province, it is fit and proper that some regard should be paid to this increase, and to the use of the power given to Parliament of having additional seats to bestow, to remedy, so far as practicable, the most gross and glaring inequalities at that time existing in the representation. Adopting that principle which I advocated ten years ago, I agreed then, as I agree to-day, it is from that principle the hon. gentleman has wholly departed, that electoral representation was not a mere geographical term, and that it was of the last importance for various and most cogent reasons, that the municipal county boundaries should be respected, and that electoral districts should not be carved out of various portions of different municipal counties for the purpose, and in search of a fancied equality not attainable accurately, not attained even approximately, either by the Act of 1872 or by the measure now before us. Now, Sir, the duty which devolved upon the hon. gentleman assuming the consolidation of Lincoln and Stormont, and thus that forty-six seats had to be disposed of, might very easily, in my opinion, have been discharged, and in very considerable measure discharged in the direction toward which the indications were so plain, that they have moved even himself. If you look at the county of Essex, it is plain and clear that it ought to have been, as it is proposed to be, divided into two electoral districts. But there was no necessity for the addition to either of these ridings of townships from other counties, or for taking any township from them to add to other ridings. Taking the municipal counties of Kent and Lambton, divided at present into the electoral districts of Kent, Lambton and Bothwell, it is clear these three would be entitled to five members, and that by dividing the electoral district of Lambton into two, by resuming and reattaching to a portion of the county of the electoral district of Kent, those townships of the municipal county of Kent which belong to the electoral district of Bothwell, two ridings might be made, reattaching a portion of Bothwell, and the remainder of Bothwell would form one separately, and you would find a reasonable result as to equality of population and the distribution of political strength. By giving to Bruce an additional member, and by giving one member to the municipal county of Dufferin, created some years ago in accordance with the petition of the people, and by dividing what would remain of Simcoe (after Dufferin had been dealt with, and after Cardwell had been readjusted as would be necessary in order to deal with Dufferin) into three instead two, the whole six seats would have been established, while at the same time reasonable regard would have been had to those principles which ought to apply—the recognition of municipal county bounds, and the assigning of new seats, so far as that principle would permit, to those places where there was the greatest discrepancy of population, and where there was the largest number of persons represented by only one member at the time of making the arrangement. Now, Sir, such an operation as that, or an operation anything like it, or proposals made by the hon. gentleman in any other reasonable way to deal with the seats remaining after he had dealt with those he has disposed of, after the fashion to which I have referred, demanded hardly a touch upon the map of Ontario. They demanded no such wholesale reconstruction, no such wholesale change, no such adding of townships to other ridings than those to which they at present belong, no such cutting and carving of the constituencies as the hon. gentleman proposes by this Bill. I say it is plain and clear, both from what the hon. gentleman has himself proposed, from his own mode of dealing with the six new seats, from the considerations I have briefly stated as to the true mode of dealing with those seats, from an inspection of the Census returns and the map of Ontario, that the basis which the hon. gentleman provided these wide-spread changes is a basis too narrow altogether, and that these changes are not required by the discharge of the duty he was called upon to discharge, but are the outcome of a decision on his part to alter the political map of Ontario in a manner which he thinks will be advantageous to himself. What did the hon. member for Niagara say? He said that he would not insist that the boundary of Niagara should be enlarged so as to render it reasonable that that borough should be retained, because it would endanger the counties of Lincoln and Welland. Those are the considerations which the hon. gentleman's loyalty to his party led him to believe of such weight that he withdraws his proposal that the boundaries of the borough should be enlarged. He feels that no changes should be made which would endanger the party's prospects in those two counties.

Mr. RYKERT. He did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. I think he did. I hope my hearing is as good and my memory as reliable as the hon. member's. He may differ from me, I differ from him. The operation in which we are engaged, which, as I have said, is nothing less than a wholesale change of the electoral bounds of the Province of Ontario, is, in its character, a most difficult one. There can be no doubt of that. It is one which, if you abandon the principle we have been hitherto agreed upon, the principle of county representation, we are wholly at sea. It is one which, under any circumstances, even retaining that safeguard, requires the exhibition on our part of some of the great tests which exist for the capacity of a people for self-government under our system. It requires, in the minds of those who are to exercise this power, a sense of moderation, of justice, of fair play, an exhibition of the spirit which ought to animate legislation and which was so well referred to by the hon. gentleman who preceded me, of doing unto others as you would that they should do unto you; that without which our institutions would become wholly different from what representative institutions properly analysed ought to be. There is no right on the part of the majority in Parliament, or out of Parliament, to pass laws designed to oppress a minority. There is no right on the part of the majority, outside or inside of Parliament, to pass laws designed to do injustice. The only moral sanction for all laws is justice and fair play to all sections of the community; and when you depart from those principles in the aims and objects you have in legislation, you depart, I say, from the only moral sanction for real legislation, and you deprive the legislation propounded and brought forward with those aims and objects of those sanctions upon which legislation ought to depend for its being respected and enforced, and you deprive it of the right to the respect of the people which ought to rest upon the conviction that the aim and object has been—however far we may have fallen short of it—to do justice, and that justice has been attained. I say you will find in this measure an attempt professedly to apply to the Province of Ontario a principle not heretofore applied to that Province in this sense, except very slightly, and this slight application was formerly condemned by the hon. gentleman himself ten years ago, thus repudiating his own handiwork. He pointed out at that time that this principle was so false that it was not to be repeated again, and those observations were echoed from the other side of the House, and so it then became the unanimous sense of Parliament that a departure from that principle was not to be commended, and that from that time out Ontario in this particular was to be legislated for as the other Provinces were legislated for. I say you find to-day, asserted by the hon. gentleman—though before I sit down, I think I shall be able to prove that the pretence of the application of that principle is hollow and unfounded—that the prominent and predominating feature as applied to Ontario only, mark you, is equality of members in the persons who are to send a member from each county or district, and that the equality of members which he says he is desiring to give to the Province of Ontario, but which he does not give—desirable in itself, so far as you can attain it consistently with other and more important objects—is to be attained at the sacrifice of those other and more important objects, at the sacrifice of that county autonomy, at the sacrifice of those arrangements sanctioned by old usage, by common interest, by the circumstances and working of our municipal institutions—is to be sacrificed, I say, for the Province of Ontario, in which the municipal system has been more highly developed, and exists in its greatest strength and vigor, while for the other Provinces the contrary principle is to be justly maintained. Now Sir, a measure like this, dealing with such a subject as this, on such a principle as this, and on such an extended scale as this, ought of all measures to have been brought down earlier in the Session, so as to have given the amplest opportunity for full consideration in all its bearings, not merely by us who are now pronouncing upon it, but also by our constituents, who are so deeply, directly, and diversely affected by it. The hon. member for Niagara told us in touching terms, when he departed from that most important subject to which he devoted the greater part of his attention and touched upon his constituents—he told us of the feelings which they entertained at the wrench to their old associations by the change which had just come upon them. Does the hon. gentleman not suppose that other constituencies, other residents of municipalities, other holders of the franchise in combination with their own county or their own riding, will also entertain feelings like these? Does he not suppose that they also would have a desire to be consulted and considered, and have time and opportunity to reflect upon this subject; and surely that time and opportunity ought to have been allowed to them. But that time and that opportunity were not allowed to them, because this measure is brought in towards the end of the Session, and is being pressed to a second reading within a very brief period from the time at which its true merit was communicated to the House. It was more needed than in the case of most great measures, because in this case the Government does not pretend, cannot pretend, that it stands indifferent to the legislation which it is proposing to Parliament. It cannot pretend that as to the details of this measure it stands indifferent as to what townships shall be aggregated to create constituencies. It is at once judge and party. It cannot pretend but that a measure of this description may have a very great effect upon the contest which is shortly to take place. It cannot pretend but that in forming these constituencies it has had regard to its effect upon that contest, and therefore it stands in a position altogether different from that which a Government may ordinarily assume towards measures of public legislation which they propound. On a measure of public legislation, not affecting constituencies or the franchise, you may say: "Well, what object can we have, except to promote the general good, except to increase our strength and popularity, by proposing some measures such as will secure the sympathy and support of a larger portion of the public than we even now gather around us." But, with reference to this measure, it deals with considerations directly touching the mind of the Government itself, in its party interests. I do not suppose that one of those hon. gentlemen who have taken part in the concoction of this measure will say—if they did say it we would all laugh at them, some of us aloud and others not aloud—but none of them would say: “We never considered anything in framing this measure, except equalizing the representation. It never occurred to us to look at the electoral returns. We never considered what the balance of power would be in the various constituencies. Oh no, we declined to advise with our political party friends, we would not consult with the members or the county wire-pullers, or the political committee men. We would not do such a thing; we felt that it would be wrong. We knew we were the party and the judges, and therefore we blinded ourselves, and blotted out from our memories all those things and dealt with the question merely as one of representation.” No, they will not say that, but perhaps they will say: “But while we considered the interests of ourselves and our friends, we have allowed to you what we think is your just due.” That is a proposition which will indicate the exceptional delicacy of this measure in which, in point of fact, the Government is judge as well as party. Therefore, I say once again that the measure was one which, beyond all other measures, we should have had early in the Session, and which there should have been ample time to discuss in the municipalities and in the different sections of the country, and to analyze its effects here and there. Full deliberation is needed for another cause—because this measure is exceptional in its character in this: All other measures of legislation which you bring before Parliament, you submit, when the time of trial comes, to the constituencies which sent you to do their business; you submit to the same men and the same set of tribunals throughout the community; you go before them, and you say: “Five years ago you entrusted me with power to act as your representative, such-and-such things have I done, I bring them before you as the fruits of my labors in that capacity, and I ask you who sent me to judge whether I am deserving of your continued confidence or no.” But this is a measure, Sir, which proposes to alter the jury, to alter the tribunal, to provide for a different set of jurors to try those who are to come before them very shortly for trial upon the events of the last four or five years. No longer are we to appeal to the same set of men before whom we fought the battle four years ago; no longer are we to say to them: “You returned me by such-and-such a majority, or you defeated me by such-and-such a majority, and I appeal to you, on the one hand, to continue your confidence, on the other hand to reverse your vote of want of confidence on the issues which have been raised during those four or five years.” No, it is proposed to provide for a different set of jurors, to whom hon. gentlemen, afraid to appeal to those who sent them here, propose to appeal to vindicate their conduct. Now, Sir, the operation is most delicate of all in this: that the Province of Ontario, perhaps beyond any Province—I do not know whether I might not say beyond any country possessing representative institutions, in a very marked and extraordinary degree—is composed of constituencies very closely balanced, constituencies in which the range within which you may mark the strength or the weakness of either party is a narrow and limited one, and in which, therefore, a strong popular impulse or a good cause may change very markedly the representation in this House, although with a comparatively slight change in the gross numbers of those who poll on the two occasions which are being contrasted. The hon. gentleman in the course of the debate on the first stage—not of this measure, but of the measure which he introduced—declared that it was idle to speak of the constituencies as being of fixed opinions, that they changed their opinions according to the times, the circumstances, and the issues which were before them. We know that there are certain changes in opinion, but we know also—and it is unnecessary to do more than analyze a few election returns to prove it to you—that these changes in opinion are slow and slight, and that it requires, in the Province of Ontario but a very slight change in opinion, under the impulse of a popular cause, or with the strength of a very good cause, to create a very great change in results. What follows? It follows, of course, that a change in the electoral districts of Ontario, constituted as they are very largely of closely balanced constituencies, is a very delicate operation, capable, unless it be very justly performed, of producing very great results. Under these circumstances it is that we are called upon to decide this great question, involving the general principle to which I have referred, involving so many complicated details to which it will be my duty to allude—this great question, in which, as I have pointed out, the Government is acting not merely as the promoter of public legislation, but also the judge in a case in which it is a party—this great question, in which the majority is dealing with the matter in a sense in which it is bound to consider what its effect will be upon its own chances at the next elections;—we are called upon, I say, to enter upon and complete the discussion of this question within a very few days, and before the country has had a proper time for its consideration, before it has been possible for the members of this House even to apprehend, by that communication with constituencies, with friends, and with persons in all parts of the country, what the wishes, the wants, and the feelings of the people are, and what results by the measure may be. This, Sir, is the position of the Liberal party and of the Parliament of the country on the one hand, while, on the other hand, we know that for months the Government of the day has been concocting in secret this scheme, with the assistance of Tory members, with the assistance of Tory candidates, with the assistance of Tory manipulators, with the assistance of Tory political agents—

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. PLUMB. That is no-Tory-ous.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, it is too notorious—with the assistance of all those whom they could gather round them, to discover what sort of measure they might make, which would do most good to them, and do most hurt to those who are opposed to them. You have had private caucuses, you have had private gatherings, you have had your little arrangements with one another. Why, look at the Bill; compare it with the Bill the hon. gentleman brought in; look at the changes that were made in it. We can imagine the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) saying: “I won't stand this—I won't stand losing the good township of Clinton; I must insist on the county of Lincoln—

Mr. RYKERT. I will resign to-morrow, and try you in the county of Lincoln, if you dare.

Mr. BLAKE. Why, the hon. gentleman is making the county of Lincoln to suit himself, and then he asks an antagonist to meet him in it.

Mr. RYKERT. I beat the strongest man you ever had, with all your money,

Mr. BLAKE. We all know, Sir, because we have had the hon. gentleman's assurances for it, repeatedly this Session—and who so well qualified to speak of himself as himself?—we all know what an invincible opponent he is. We hear from himself that he has been on every platform; we hear from himself that he has conquered everybody and that he is quite invincible; but, notwithstanding that, we can imagine the hon. member for Lincoln saying: “I won't do it; these gentlemen from Niagara will be annoyed at the old borough of Niagara being wiped out, and I will have to conciliate them; it is true, you are making some other arrangements which may lighten my load a little, but I cannot do without the township of Clinton; although you put it in your Bill, although you brought it up in your caucus, I insist on getting back my own township of Clinton;”—and he got it. And the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), who, we all know, is a sturdy man, determined to do his best, was obliged to content himself with the loss of the Reform majority of Caistor and without the addition of the Conservative majority of Clinton. I can imagine my hon. friend from North Perth saying: "Well now it is quite true that your Bill gratifies me very largely—that it puts North Perth in a very different position from what it was a while ago—it is quite true it gives me, on the return of 1878, instead of 40, 200 or 300 of a majority—but for all that, I do not like losing my good old township of Logan with its Tory majority of 208, and I insist on getting it back again. Take Wallace or some place else, but do not deprive me of that good old township of Logan—I will have it;" and he got it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He says he will give it back.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say I thought the party cowardly putting in North Perth and insisting on Logan.

Mr. HESSON. Wallace gave 175 Tory majority last time.

Mr. BLAKE. The arrangements were such, according to the returns, that at any rate North Perth did not want to lose Logan, and has got it back again.

Mr. HESSON. I wanted to preserve the shape of my county.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, he did, and to preserve the Tory complexion of his county; and he himself felt that the county, after carrying out the Governments proposals, after six months of deliberation, would be a shapeless county; but there are other shapeless counties which are simply monstrosities.

Mr. HESSON. Come up and try our county.

Mr. BLAKE. It is remarkable to see those bold, gallant men who proposed to carve up the constituencies to suit themselves challenge us to come up and try conclusions with them. "Come on," he says, "I have prepared the battle field, and am ready for the encounter." Then it was considered expedient to strengthen the hon. member for Centre Wellington, and to give him the township of Maryboro; but the hon. member for North Wellington said, with great propriety—I can imagine the conversation, though I was not present: "I have no objection to a fair exchange, to swap a township, but to lose Maryboro without getting something for it, is more than I can bear; and, therefore, if you take Maryboro to strengthen yourselves in the centre, I must have Wallace or some other place." And my hon. friend will probably say, also: "I challenge you to come and meet me," after the constituency is prepared to suit himself. So that we had to get a new Bill to remedy those difficulties and alterations—to remedy the alterations hon. gentlemen opposite had made to suit themselves in various particulars. I have already announced the considerations which led to the arrangement respecting the north riding of Bruce. I have stated to the House, what I repeat, that the leading Conservative Association in North Bruce met in solemn conclave and passed a resolution to the effect that it would be a safe Conservative constituency if you took out the townships of Bruce and Saugeen, which includes Port Elgin—that to retain Saugeen and Port Elgin would make it dangerous and disastrous in the near future.

Mr. BOWELL. How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. BLAKE. I know it to be a fact.

Mr. BOWELL. I will tell you how you know it?

Mr. BLAKE. I will say to you that what has been done in the north riding of Bruce, at the instigation of the Conservative Association, is another proof of the equalization spoken of, which cuts that riding down to a little over 17,000 inhabitants, while the west riding of Bruce is made up to 25,000, a difference of over 7,000. If the equalizers had left the township of Saugeen in the north riding, Bruce would have produced two constituencies very nearly equal in point of number. These are some of the events which took place almost on the surface, which appeared to us after the first reading of the Bill, which we know from the changes in the Bill, and as to which we can conjecture the moving causes of several of them. But we do not know, of course, all the precedent discussions—all the arrangements which were in process of execution for so long before the measure assumed the form in which it was first presented in this House. I say the Bill is not a just Bill for the redistribution of the representation of Ontario; it is a personal, a party, a political measure, framed with regard to party ends and aims, with a design to use power, so far as those who are in power can, unjustly to promote their own objects. I am amused at this commentary upon the boasts of these hon. gentleman for the last four years, and this testimony to the sincerity of these boasts. Why, all the time they have been telling us how proud they were to consider that the day was approaching on which they would go back to their constituents and invite them to endorse their action. All the time they have been telling us they were growing in strength, growing in popularity, particularly in Ontario. All the time they have been telling us about their superior strength in Ontario, under the returns. I do not know the exact figures; it has not been worth my while to count them up. I suppose they give about three to one in favor of hon. gentlemen opposite, and they say they are stronger to-day, and are more than three to one. I do not know in what way they lead themselves to this belief; but I know it to be an unfounded belief. I know this Bill proves, and they have a shrewd suspicion of it, that they cannot carry their present seats and retain their present majority: and this Bill is designed, so far as they can make up by legislation, for the strength they have lost by their misdeeds for the last four years and by the results to which they have led. Now, they confess that they expect to be strengthened by it. They confess that and say: "Oh, yes; but that is because any measure which enabled the principle of the equalization of the population to be carried out would strengthen us." On a minor scale that thing was done in 1872, in the case of Monk and Haldimand, and in the division of Huron and Wellington. The hon. gentleman was assisted on that occasion as he believed by that measure. The changes were, on the face of them, looking at the returns and at the apparent strength of parties in the divisions, obviously and palpably designed to give him political strength at the elections. That did not succeed any more than this measure will succeed. The hon. gentleman had on that occasion this legislative string to his bow, the Redistribution Act of 1872; and he had that other string to his bow, which came of the arrangement made in Montreal with Sir Hugh Allan, and by bribing the constituencies of Ontario, as had been agreed upon, he hoped and expected to obtain a majority. Of course, we do not know what are the arrangements which the hon. gentleman has made for the supply of money on this occasion—whether they are of the same character, or from what source they are to come. But his political arrangements which are upon the surface, which are before us, which are to be made by Act of Parliament, are plain, and they are very extensive indeed. They are contained largely in this measure, though they are contained also in other measures which, if I had time, I would be glad for a moment to allude to. Now, I have said that I believe this measure will fail of its obvious and intended effects; and I say so because, in the first place, a measure so treacherous, unjust and indefensible as this will arouse, as it has aroused, to the uttermost the zeal, the enthusiasm, the indignation of those whom the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to oppress; because, in the second place, there are a considerable number in every constituency of fair-minded persons who do not take a very active part in politics, who are not very much enamoured of party, but who will resent, as upon a former well-known occasion they did resent, what they believe to be an abuse of a high trust, an attempt to trample those who are supposed to be in the power of the oppressors; and will give their voices in favor of those who are sought to be oppressed, and against the shameless oppressors; and lastly, because I believe that even in the ranks of the Conservative party there are to be found, if not in this House, at any rate in the constituencies, cut and carve them as you will, many men who will repudiate the claims of party, if the cost of allegiance to party be the support of a measure of this description, who will prefer the recognition of the just and sounder principles to which I refer, which the hon. gentleman himself propounded in 1872, of adherence to the county and municipal boundaries, who will not be compelled by the disguised suggestion that that principle is no longer in force, and that some new principle is triumphant, and is to blot out all former considerations; but they will recognize the fact, that without cause, without reason, without any just pretence for the action, the hon. gentleman has departed from his own views publicly expressed as the leader of the Government and endorsed by Parliament in 1874, and departing from it to tear asunder men who are solemnly associated together as one community for electoral purposes, to break cherished associations, to break the associations of business and of local and municipal interests—and all for the purpose which he does not even accomplish in fact, which he barely professes to have in view, of equalization, and for that purpose to disregard those close ties, those higher and more important considerations. I am glad to say that these views are being largely adopted, that there is a very great deal of dissatisfaction with this measure, not confined to the hon. gentleman's opponents, but existing also among the hon. gentleman's friends. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction amongst those who believe that no sufficient cause has been urged for that departure from former plans of representation which obtain everywhere except in Ontario. The hon. gentleman will find that though he may by the force of his majority transfer territory and men's bodies, he will not transfer their minds or their opinions. He will find that though he may transfer the voters, he will not transfer the votes. They will vote in another locality and also in another way; and they will vote another way just because they condemn the action of the hon. gentleman in proposing this measure. It is my duty to lay before the House the objections in detail to this measure. I have already stated the conclusion, viz.: that it is a measure breaking down altogether the hon. gentleman's principle of action as heretofore stated, not accomplishing at all his new principle of action, the equalization of population at all hazards, but dealing with the constituencies in a low, party spirit, with the design, if he can, of strengthening himself and hurting those who are opposed to him. It is my duty even, within these walls, to appeal, not to the supporters who have concocted this measure, but to those who come from other Provinces and have a cherished system of county representation which has not been interfered with, to look at what is being done to-day in Ontario by this Bill, to consider how they would like such a measure applied to themselves; and if their answer be as, if honestly given, I know it will be, that they would not endure such a measure as applied to themselves, that they would resent the proposal, that they would consider it a thing to be rejected with scorn and indignation, I ask them to apply those principles to the Province of Ontario which they would desire to see applied to themselves, and as they would not like to be so dealt with, not to so deal with us. It is unfortunate that the details have to be entered into; but, of course, a general statement on the one hand, that the Bill is just; and a general statement on the other that the Bill is unjust; a general statement on the one hand, that it interferes slightly with county boundaries, and, on the other hand, that it interferes greatly with those boundaries; a general statement on the one hand, that it is an equalizing bill, and on the other, that it leaves inequality so gross as not to deserve that name, or to be defended under that title—these general statements balance and neutralize one another. Therefore, it is that I feel bound to go through this measure and show wherein it sins against the principles to which I have referred, and against every view which ought to commend a measure to the acceptance of a Legislature. In the first place, I say that county boundaries are violated most flagrantly, and I refer once again, upon this subject, to the hon. gentleman's statement and his mode of observing it. In introducing his Bill of 1872, he said:

Mr. BLAKE.

"With respect to the rural constituencies, the desire of the Government has been to preserve the representations for counties, and subdivision of counties as much as possible. It is considered objectionable to make representation a mere geographical term. (Hear, hear). It is desired as much as possible to keep the representation within the county, so that each county that is a municipality of Ontario should be represented, and if it becomes large enough, divide it into ridings—that principle is carried out in the suggestions I am about to make. That rule was broken in 1867 in three constituencies, viz.: Bothwell, Cardwell, Monck; and I do not think on the whole that the experiment has proved a successful one. I do not think it was unsuccessful as far as the representatives of those new constituencies themselves were concerned, as they are well and ably represented by the gentlemen who now hold seats for the constituencies; and I hope that if am returned again to the next Parliament I shall meet those hon. members. But it is obvious that there is a great advantage in having counties elect men whom they know. Our municipal system gives an admirable opportunity to constituencies to select men for their deserts. We all know the process which happily goes on in western Ontario. A young man in a county commences his public life by being elected by the neighbors who know him to the Township Council. If he shows himself possessed of administrative ability, he is made a Reeve or Deputy Reeve of his county. He becomes a member of the County Council, and as experience increases, and his character and abilities become known, he is selected by his people as their representative in Parliament. It is, I think, a grand system that the people of Canada should have the opportunity of choosing for political promotion the men in whom they have most confidence and of whose abilities they are fully assured. All that great advantage is lost by cutting off a portion of two separate counties and adding them together for electoral purposes only. Those portions so cut off have no common interest; they do not meet together, and have no common feeling except that once in five years they go to the polls in their own township to vote for a man who may be known in one section and not in the other. This tends towards the introduction and development to the American system of caucuses, by which wire-pullers take adventurers for their political ability only and not for any personal respect for them. So that as much as possible, from any point of view, it is advisable that counties should refuse men whom they do not know, and when the representation is increased it should be by subdividing the counties into ridings."

The hon. gentleman's speech was commented on from this side of the House, and at a subsequent period of the debate, referring to this commentary, he read these words:

"I believe the House generally agrees with me that the county organizations should preserve as much as possible their municipality limits." So that I think I have proved clearly, not merely what was the principle that the hon. gentleman enunciated in 1872, but also the fact that it was generally accepted by the House, and that the hon. gentleman himself, in closing, so far as he was concerned, the debate, once again reiterated the principle. Now, Sir, what is the hon. gentleman's answer to all that? He says: "I think so still; I would not withdraw a word of it; those words express my opinion of to-day; but the whole state of things is altered because Mr. Mowat passed a Bill in the Ontario Legislature to readjust representation, and that was quite wrong; the Bill was a very bad one, it violated my principles and views; it was contrary to my opinions, which I still hold. He has not converted me to those opinions, and I hold them yet, but I am going to follow him; as he did wrong I shall do wrong too; as he violated the principle of county representation I shall violate it as well; as he inflicted upon this Province, so far as he could, these great evils, I will do all in my power to complete the infliction, and as he has done in the Province I will also do in the Dominion, what I can to deprive the county organizations, in Ontario, of the advantage they now possess of affording a sufficient mode of elevating their young men by degrees from the municipal and township councils to the county councils, from the town councils to the county wardenship, and from the wardenship to a seat in Parliament, and say that Mr. Mowat has broken that system down so far as the Provincial Legislature is concerned, he has done a great wrong to Ontario, and I will complete it: I will destroy the last chance there is for keeping the representation of the country upon a sound principle, and I will violate a good principle because he has done it." Well, Sir, I will show you in the way I put it, how absurd this answer would be if it were true, how utterly preposterous it would be to assign as a reason for doing this thing that a wrong had been done by another legislator in another Legislature. There still remains, supposing it to be true, the principle of carrying out, with reference to this great Legislature, with reference to this more desired object, with reference to this higher object of aspiration than is stated in the Local Legislature, the full opportunity of carrying out the first principle. It is all with us. We have it here, it cannot be taken away from us. Are we to give it up? Are we to abandon it? Are we to go in a wrong path because in the Local Legislature it is said Mr. Mowat has so gone? The proposition is absurd; but the argument has another weakness, and that is that it is founded upon an utterly and entire misapprehension of the Bill to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. Well, an hon. gentleman suggests misrepresentation, and I will believe that the hon. gentleman had that argument put in his hands while he was speaking by somebody whom he had told that Mr. Mowat's Bill had done this, and that he used the argument in the heat of debate, not having read the Bill, for I cannot believe, if this were not the case, that he would have said what he did. Now, what were the changes made by the Act to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and which I read, I must confess, for the first time after the hon. gentleman's speech? In the first place, the representation of Ontario was settled by the hon. gentleman himself in the first instance, it was settled by the coalition government which passed Confederation, and it stood, if I rightly understand the question, wholly unchanged until the close of the year 1874—when the Act was passed, after the Census, to give additional members to the Province of Ontario. Now, the first change that took place, taking them by the order of the sections of the Bill, was that the municipal county of Huron was divided into three ridings instead of two. There was surely no departure from the principle of county municipal representation, there was simply a division of a riding, one of the largest in the Province, and most entitled by its increased population, as recognized by the hon. gentleman himself, to three representatives. The second change which took place was the abolition of the electoral district of Bothwell. The east division of Bothwell had been established by the hon. gentleman, it was one of the three electoral districts to which he referred in 1872 as having been unsuccessful experiments—not successful in the character of the men whom they had sent to represent them here, but unsuccessful experiments on the whole, and not to be repeated. So far from going on lines different from those of the hon. gentleman, it appears the Ontario Legislature proceeded on his lines, only they brought into action in this instance that about which he simply spoke. He declaimed against Bothwell, Cardwell and Monck as mistakes. He said: "Yes, they are such great mistakes that we will abolish Bothwell." For what purpose? For the purpose of applying in a new direction the principle of county representation. What was done? Bothwell is abolished; one of the three electoral districts, not identified particularly with counties, is abolished, and the municipal county of Lambton is divided into two ridings. So you find here by Mr. Mowat's Bill, in advance of the hon. gentleman's action, but in accordance with the hon. gentleman's professed principles, a restoration of the principle of the county municipal boundary as the true limit, and of the plan of dividing the largest counties into two or three ridings as the mode in which the representation should be applied. What followed? The county of Kent was divided into two ridings. Thus you find the second marked application of the same principle—Bothwell blotted out of the map, Kent and Lambton, the two municipal counties of which Bothwell was composed, actually divided into two ridings. You find that not merely in those changes which were necessary in order to add seats for the simple purpose of adding seats, but in the other modifications which were made. The Bill goes upon the lines of recognizing the importance of municipal county representation, and upon no other lines. The county of Essex was divided into two ridings. Once again, you find a municipal county having the largest population divided into two ridings, and the same principle of not making merely the electoral districts but of keeping the county united, and where it was too large, or was entitled to more representation, dividing it into ridings, exemplified by this Bill. The municipal county of Dufferin was provisionally established after many efforts had been made by the people in that neighborhood to attain what they thought was a boon to them. The counties from which it was cut off are counties of enormous size, and their county towns Mr. Mowat formed from the localities out of which Dufferin was formed, and upon the petitions of the localities interested the provisional municipal county of Dufferin was formed, and it was erected into a county upon proclamation after a vote of the people had been taken in each locality, if I rightly remember, affirming the view that those townships and municipalities which constituted Dufferin should be constituted into one municipal county. That municipal county so created, was given one of the additional seats. Once again, you find an emphatic and expressed recognition of the principle of municipal county representation. Dufferin was formed into municipal county and is given a member in the Local Legislature. Then, Sir, Dufferin municipal county was formed in part of Grey, Wellington and Simcoe, it comprised a part of the electoral district of Cardwell. Obviously the formation of that county of Dufferin, taking away a part of the electoral district of Cardwell, not very large in its population, rendered it necessary to add a township to Cardwell in order to make it proper that Cardwell should be continued as one electoral district; and if I recollect aright, a village was taken from South Simcoe, adjoining the townships in Cardwell and added to Cardwell, not altering the political complexion of the south riding of Simcoe, which was Conservative, as far as I remember a convenient mode of effecting what was a necessary readjustment. There was in this action no disregard of the principle of county representation; the only alternative that could have taken place would have been to abolish Cardwell. Supposing you were to continue Cardwell, it was essential to add one township, and that was what was done. Then the county of Grey was divided into three ridings. There was no alteration there of county bounds. The municipal county of Wellington as it existed after the creation of the municipal county of Dufferin was readjusted because its bounds were changed, its extent and area were changed by the formation of Dufferin. There, again, there was no departure from the principle of recognizing municipal county representation. The districts of Muskoka and Parry Sound, which I think had been formed into provisional judicial districts, but which had not received separate representation, received that representation, and some townships that had therefore been added to North Victoria, but which were not part of the county of Victoria, which were a municipal part of Simcoe, but not an electoral part of Simcoe at that time, were transferred from North Victoria to the new provisional district and electoral district of Muskoka and Parry Sound. There was, again, no disruption of municipal ties. There was the recognition of the provisional judicial district as entitled to more than a township, not a township from the electoral district of Simcoe, but from the electoral district of North Victoria.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Those townships are still a municipal part of Victoria.

Mr. BLAKE. No; not as I understand it.

Mr. CAMERON. The warden of the county of Victoria is reeve of one of those townships at this moment.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. COCKBURN. The hon. member for North Victoria is correct; a portion of Muskoka is connected with the county of Victoria for municipal purposes.

Mr. BLAKE. However that may be, those were arrangements which were connected with northern and north-eastern townships, and if it be the case (which I have not been able to ascertain myself from a hurried perusal of the Bill) that certain townships were abstracted from Victoria and put in the new district, it is an exceptional case, and is by no means a justification of the proposition that the principle of the Bill is to abolish and abrogate municipal and county divisions, as the hon. member has said. East and West Peterboro' were readjusted, but as far as I can ascertain no change was made in the principle to which I have referred. Certain townships were taken from Lanark and added to South Renfrew; the same abstraction applies to Brockville, a township was added, but there is no change in the county and municipal bounds. Niagara is abolished, and Lincoln, of which Niagara is municipally a part, is constituted one electoral district as if one county. A general provision of the Bill says:

"Every village, township or place lying within the territorial limits of any electoral district, and not specifically included in other districts, by the Acts hereby amended or by this Act, shall be taken to be and be part of the electoral district in which it is so locally situated."

Thus you find that whether you regard the general provisions or the details of the Statute, the principle elucidated is the recognition of the municipal county divisions and the application of that principle by giving a member to every county and more than one to such counties as by their population are entitled to more members than one, in which case the division would be into ridings. No fair minded man can reflect on the Statute without deducing from it as its principle and underlying basis that view of representation to which I have referred; and therefore it is I maintain that the excuse of the leader of the Government, if it were true, that Ontario was cut up by that Act, is no excuse because it is accurate to say that the principle of this measure is non-recognition of the municipal and county bounds.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. The question to which my hon. friend from North Victoria referred, so far as it concerns the connection of certain townships of North Victoria with Muskoka, is occasioned by these townships being also conjoined to Muskoka in the Act of 1872. The same townships which, being to Victoria municipally, form a part of it electorally also formed part of that county electorally in the Province of Ontario. He says also that another change was made in that direction by the formation of the provisional and judicial county of Haliburton, including some portions of a township formerly belonging to Peterboro', and the conjunction of these with the North Victoria. These are the only instances in regard to which the observation might be made that we have simply the fact that following the legislation here they attached the townships forming the provisional county with the north riding of Victoria with which they naturally belong. I repeat that on the whole it is utterly impossible to demonstrate by any fair process of reasoning that the Bill furnishes any ground—if its being analogous or based on the same principle would form a ground—for the present legislation. But I proceed to discuss the mode in which the county municipalities have been dealt with. I wish to analyse for a little what the results are of this great measure of equalization, because, mark you, this enormous disturbance of the political map of Ontario is founded on one proposition, that it is proper to equalize the voting population, that it is proper to arrange that there shall be the same number of persons entitled to return a member in one part of the country as shall be entitled to return a member in another part of the country. I wish to enquire how far the Bill as it is before us reaches that object, how far this can be said honestly to be a Bill having that in view, how far it can be justified disturbing as it is as a Bill accomplishing an approximate equalization of the population. Take the eastern district—the eastern third of the Province considered by the number of seats—take the eastern thirty-two seats, extending as far west as Durham and Victoria inclusive. It will be observed that, so far as representation goes, the eastern district comprises little more than one-third of the total number of seats to be allowed to Ontario by this Bill, the centre and west comprising sixty. Now, there are for that allotment of thirty-two, 519,674 souls, or an average of 18,550 to a member. The quota under the Act which gives an increase is 20,908, and, therefore, the eastern district, with its thirty-two seats, averages 2,358 per seat under the quota. The centre and west, with their 60 seats, have a population of 1,329,654, averaging 22,161 souls to a member, or 1,253 per seat over the quota. The difference between the eastern and centre and the west is no less than 3,611 per seat on the average. This is the condition of things with reference to the division en bloc between the east and the centre and west. To give the same power to the centre and west which is given to the east by this Bill, the centre and west should have more than 71 members instead of having only 60 as they have at present, and if you allowed to each member in the west and centre the 18,550, which is the average in the east, you would have 11 more in the centre and west, than you have by this Bill. I say that that brief statement of facts demonstrates that this measure is not defensible on the ground that it is a measure for equalizing the people, because it is a measure which does not give even an approximate political strength in proportion to the number of persons in each constituency. But while that is the general result in a large sense, I can exemplify it more strikingly by referring to some details which will show how utterly absurd is the ground taken that this is a measure of equalization. Take eight of the smaller constituencies: South Grenville with a population of 13,526, North Leeds 12,423—the latter having been actually reduced by about 500 souls from its previous population—Brockville 15,207, Frontenac 14,993, Kingston 14,091, West Peterboro' 13,310, Ottawa—with two seats—27,412; making a total of 110,962 souls, with eight seats, or an average of 13,870. In the same district is to be found Russell, with 25,000 souls or nearly double the population, Lennox with 16,314 souls, Addington 23,470, Frontenac 14,993; and consider if you please that a large portion of the territory and population of Addington belongs municipally to Frontenac. Take seven other small seats so as to get a larger average: South Wentworth 15,599, as readjusted, Monck 15,940, which has been readjusted by being reduced, Peel 16,387, Cardwell 16,770, Lennox 16,314, East Hastings 17,315, West Hastings 17,400—total 115,665; to which add the population for the eight smallest seats and you will have a total of 226,627 for fifteen seats, or an average of 15,108 under this equalization Bill. Now, take eight of the largest constituencies: Kent 28,112, East Simcoe 27,185, South Wellington 26,618, East Elgin 26,303, North Perth 26,538, North Simcoe 26,120, North Huron 26,098, North Wellington 26,024, a total for the eight of 212,998, an average for the eight largest of 26,624 against an average in the eight smallest of 13,870. Proceeding, as I have already done, and taking the seven next highest constituencies, we find the following: West Bruce, 23,618; South Grey, 25,703; East Grey, 25,909; Russell, 25,802; South Oxford, 24,798; North Oxford, 24,390; East Middlesex, 24,552, or a total of 176,053, to which add the eight already quoted and you have an aggregate for the fifteen ridings of 389,050 as against 226,627 of the other fifteen, or an average of 25,936 each—almost 26,000 souls—against an average of 15,108 souls in the smallest townships. No less than 162,423 persons are left unrepresented in the fifteen large districts as compared with the fifteen smaller ones, and to give the same proportionate representation to the larger that you do to the smaller you will have to give them twenty-six members, and to give the same proportionate representation to the eight largest that you would to the eight smallest you would have to give them sixteen members. In fact, Sir, if you want to equalize, if you want a reality instead of a sham, you must proceed from one end of the Province to the other, taking off the smallest municipalities from the more populous ridings and adding them to the less populous ones without regard to anything else than this one consideration. If you did that you might accomplish one thing, though I believe it would be at a cost in excess of any value to be derived from it—the equalization of the population. But this measure does not accomplish that, it does not approach even an approximate equalization of the population in the constituencies. You adopt that plan by which in effect you can say and do say that whenever you can strengthen yourself or weaken your adversary, we must do a little equalization here; but it is elastic and where you find you can strengthen your own cause, or weaken that of the other side, there is not much difficulty found in even reducing already inadequate populations. Where it would reduce the strength of counties on the other side there is not much difficulty even in increasing superabundant populations. A very slight variation for the average is quite sufficient to present a cause of over-ruling necessity which obliges these hon. gentlemen to absorb county corporations and to make a new arrangement entirely regardless of them. There is a gross violation of county limits having as a result, upon the basis of the figures of the contest of 1878, the weakening of one party and the strengthening of the other. It is done in such a way, with such persistency, and with such a general result that it is impossible that any but the most prejudiced can come to any other conclusion than that it is the design, end and object of this measure. Now, Sir, in order to establish that proposition, I shall deal with a large number of the constituencies dealt with by the hon. gentleman in groups, as nearly as possible dealing with those that are interfered with in the same connection. It is not possible to do so always, because the interlacing is so varied and extensive. Not much change is made in the eastern district. It did not suit him to make it, and as I say, he has left great disparity as between East, Centre and West Ontario, as the figures I gave a moment ago established. But let us take a group in the east he does deal with, made up of North Lanark, South Lanark, Carleton, North Leeds, Grenville and Brockville. The population of North Lanark is 13,943, of South Lanark, 20,032—a total of 33,975; an average of 16,987 souls. As I have shown you, the average of the whole of the thirty-two eastern ridings, in the middle of which the Lanarks are, is 18,552. The average of the Lanarks is therefore only 1,565 below the general average. But there are eight seats in this eastern district, the average of which, as I have shown, is 13,870, or 2,608 below the average of the Lanarks. There is therefore no especial reason why the Lanarks should be changed in respect to county boundaries. An easy arrangement is capable of being made to avoid the disparity of population between the ridings. There is a tier of municipalities to the southward of North Lanark, by adding one or more of which to the south riding, you could equalize the populations of the two ridings without adding anything to Lanark or taking anything from it. Any hon. gentleman who will look at the map will see how that could be done. But Sir, look at North Leeds and Grenville and Brockville. These comprise 40,886 souls with three seats, or 13,828 on an average, which is to be reduced to 12,423. North Lanark was too small, but it was not so small as North Leeds is to be. It had to be made larger, but it could not be made larger by taking a township from my hon. friend who sits smiling at me there, but by cutting a piece from Carleton, and South Lanark is to be readjusted by taking a piece from some other place, so a portion is taken from South Leeds to add to it, thus reducing the population of that riding down to 12,423. Yet South Grenville is left at 13,256. Brockville will be 13,000. But his feelings overcame him when he thought of Lanark, and he felt that a crying wrong had to be remedied. And how did he remedy it? He takes two townships out of the county of Carleton in North Lanark. Carleton, as we all know, is a strong Tory county, though my hon. friend had another hard time of it to secure his election there on the last occasion.

Mr. ROCHESTER. No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I think it was close enough. The hon. gentleman says he does not mind losing a township or two, he is quite indifferent, and that is one of the cases in which the Tories have weakened themselves, but it does not do them any harm.

Mr. ROCHESTER. We wanted to equalize the number.

Mr. BLAKE. We all know just where the hon. gentleman is desirous of equalising the number. He is quite ready to make a change where the Reformers can be hurt, but elsewhere the numbers are to be left where they are. Now Lanark was too small. It did not have enough of population to adjust it within its own bounds, and so two townships had to be added from Carleton. But that made Lanark too large, and so having added on something to the north riding, something has got to be off the south riding. By a piece of ill-luck or misfortune, which I am sure my hon. friend for the south riding (Mr. Haggart) deeply deploras, it became absolutely necessary, in pursuing this policy of absolute justice which is the leading idea of this Bill, to take from it the village of Smith's Falls, which polled a majority of ninety-seven votes against the hon. gentleman. I am sorry for my hon. friend that such cutting and carving up of the south riding of Lanark was necessary, and that his political strength should have been impaired by the loss of a municipality which, in 1878, polled against him a majority of ninety-seven Reform votes. The village of Smith's Falls is added to the little riding of North Leeds. I do not think North Leeds would have been very much too large if Smith's Falls had been left on, but that would not do. That little addition of a couple of thousand souls would not answer, and so the township of Kittley is taken off North Leeds and added to Brockville. We all see what this little game is designed for. It is not equalization, but it is a disturbing of the county boundaries in order, as the hon. gentleman hopes, to weaken the Reformers in North Lanark, to strengthen himself in South Lanark, to have North Leeds and Grenville safe, and to weaken Brockville. And this, while Lennox is left with a population of but 16,314, and Addington with a population of 23,470, which is taken in a large measure from the municipal county of Frontenac, comprising only 14,993, while West Peterboro' is left with 13,310. In the whole eastern district there is an average of 18,523, or between three and four thousand souls less than the average for the centre and western districts. But there was not much change made in the eastern district. The hon. gentleman thought that changes in that district would not bear much political fruit, and so he leaves this collection of the smallest constituencies in the province untouched, except to reduce one of them and increase another a little. He passes by these smaller constituencies and goes on to Centre and Western Ontario, where he makes his great changes. Take the map, and look at North and South Ontario, Muskoka, North, East and West York, North and South Simcoe. What is the state of things there as it stands? The county of Ontario, south riding, has a population of 20,708; the north riding has a population of 28,434,—a total of 49,142; or an average for the two of 24,521. I have shown to you already that the average for the whole sixty constituencies in Centre and Western Ontario is 22,161, so that the average for the two Ontarios would be but 2,411 above that average. The population of those two counties is perfectly capable of adjustment within their own municipal bounds, with the result of giving to each riding a population of 24,500 souls. As to the Yorks, there are at present three ridings,—the east riding with a population of 23,312, North York with a population of 24,502, and West York with 18,804 souls, an aggregate of 66,618, or an average of 22,206 for each riding. The quota is but 20,904, so that these three counties are but 1,296 each above the average quota. The average for the central and western districts is 22,161, so that the average for the Yorks is but 40 above the average of those groups of constituencies, and they can be easily adjusted within their bounds, adjoining as they do, a large number of municipalities which want readjustment most. The west riding of York, with a population of only 18,804, is left untouched, because the hon. gentleman thinks he has a strong cause there, and he wants some change in the other riding to effect his purpose. Take the Simcoes, the south riding, with a population of 26,891, and the north riding with 49,238, or a total of 79,129, and an average for three seats of 25,376. This number is above the general average for the sixty constituencies by 3,215, but the county is easily capable of readjustment within its own bounds. That municipal population to which I have referred, would of course be diminished, if, as is right, a member were given to the municipal county of Dufferin, part of whose municipal bounds are within the bounds of the district of South Simcoe, and if an additional portion were taken, as would necessarily follow upon giving a member to Dufferin in the readjustment of Cardwell. So that, now while that is the state of things as it is, what are the actual results of the proposed change? There is the new riding of West Ontario, with a population of 19,730, and the riding of South Ontario, which would have 20,241 as against 20,348. The riding of South Ontario has 20,241, against 20,348, or 107 less in population than it is now; North Ontario has 20,828, instead of 28,434; Muskoka is cut down to 17,646 from 27,204; East York is 22,853, against the present population of 23,312; West York, the most defective in point of population of all, is left where it was; North York is 21,730, against 24,502 at present; South Simcoe is 22,721, against 26,981; North Simcoe is 26,120, and East Simcoe, 27,185; and such revolutionary changes have been made in order to accomplish the equalization at the very spot where the equalizing process should go on most freely. You find one of the Yorks left where it is, a new riding made up of 19,730, another reduced to 17,646, and you find two new ridings, one with 26,120 and another with 27,185, all in the same batch. Now, to accomplish these admirable results in the process of equalizing the population, what has been done? The municipal bounds have been violated and the electoral bounds changed thus: West Ontario is made up of Whitechurch, taken from North York, Newmarket from North York, Stouffville partly from North York and partly from East York, Pickering from South Ontario, Uxbridge from North Ontario, and Uxbridge Village from North Ontario, being made up of parts of two counties and parts of four ridings—that is the mongrel constituency of West Ontario. The south riding of Ontario is changed by adding the township of Pickering to West Ontario, by taking Reach from North Ontario and by taking Port Perry from North Ontario; and North Ontario is changed by adding Port Perry and Reach to South Ontario, by adding Uxbridge and Uxbridge Village to West Ontario, and by taking Oakley, Macaulay, Morrison, Ryde, Maclean and Bracebridge from Muskoka, and leaving Seugog Island, whose electors will have to travel seven miles through South Ontario to reach their own division. East Simcoe is made up of seven municipalities, from North Simcoe, which would give it a wholly adequate population, as I shall show presently; but that would not do for the hon. gentleman in his equalizing process, and so he takes five Reform municipalities from Muskoka, including Wood, Monck, Gravenhurst and Medora, with the result of producing a very great inequality in the populations. The south riding of Simcoe has transferred Bradford and West Gwillimbury to North York, and the old north riding of Simcoe has transferred seven municipalities to East Simcoe; the north riding of York has transferred Newmarket, Stouffville and Whitechurch to West Ontario, and has added West Gwillimbury and Bradford from South Simcoe; and East York has transferred Stouffville to West Ontario. Thus you find changes in the municipal bounds and in the electoral bounds, the whole face of that country changed to accomplish these results. Now, as I said, the east riding of Simcoe which has had an adequate population without having added to it from Muskoka the five townships I have mentioned; without this addition, the population of East Simcoe would have been 23,118, or in excess of equity, and in excess of the average of those constituencies in which it is placed; but in order to give the Grits, the 180 majority in these townships had to go, and so they are transferred to East Simcoe, which is raised from 23,118 to 27,185, the county bounds are broken, and Muskoka is lowered to 17,646. Seven townships are also taken from Muskoka and added to North Ontario. Now, what is the political effect of this transaction, taking for convenience sake, the figures of 1878? In South Ontario the hon. gentleman hopes to weaken the Reform interest by 198 votes; in North Ontario by 260 votes; in Muskoka by 163 votes; in East York by 42 votes; in North York by 184 votes; in North Simcoe he hopes to get a Tory majority of 287, and so weaken the Reform interest by 237 votes. In East Simcoe he puts together twelve municipalities from North Simcoe and Muskoka, of which eleven had a Reform majority and one a tie, giving a Reform majority of 558; and in West Ontario, he puts together six Reform municipalities, giving a majority of 583; the general result being to give to the Reformers great majorities in two ridings, and to weaken them, according to the hon. gentleman's expectation, in six ridings. The third group of counties to which I shall refer is composed of Lincoln, Niagara, Monck, South Wentworth, North Wentworth, South Brant, North Brant and Haldimand. The present population of Lincoln is 22,963, and the population of Niagara is 3,445, making an aggregate of 26,408 in the old municipal county of Lincoln, apart from certain parts of Lincoln which had previously been taken away, or 4,247 above the average of the sixty constituencies, equal to a very large number that are left and smaller in population than several that are left. But it was necessary to add another township to Monck, which had a population of 17,145 before the equalizers put their hands upon it. North Wentworth has a population of 15,998, and South Wentworth 14,993, or a total of 30,991, being an average of 15,495, being higher by 1,631 than the average of eight of the smallest ridings to which I have referred as left by this scheme, within 435 of the population of readjusted Monck, and over 300 beyond the average of fifteen of the smallest ridings which are left by the equalizers. The south riding of Brant comprises 21,975 and the north riding 11,894, or a total of 33,869, giving an average of 16,934, or higher than some eighteen or twenty constituencies which are left untouched. Haldimand has a population of 18,619 as it stands. Now, what are the results of the change? Lincoln and Niagara are made 23,400, instead of 22,963, Monck is reduced from 17,145 to 15,940, the north riding of Wentworth is changed from 15,998, to 20,406, the south riding of Wentworth is increased from 14,993 to—what? Why, to 15,539, and there is where the equalizers have left it. The south riding of Brant is changed from 21,975 to 20,482; the north riding of Brant is changed from 11,894 to 17,645; and Haldimand, which is below the average, numbering 18,619, is still further reduced to 17,660. So that those who were so anxious to equalize Haldimand and Monck and to get them upon the standard of 1872, have now found it their duty in the pursuit of the same phantom, to reduce Monck below what it was in 1872, and to reduce Haldimand as well. They must be equalized even at the expense of a general equalization. Now, to accomplish that result, municipally and electorally, they proceeded thus: Grimsby town and village have been withdrawn from Lincoln and added to the south riding of Wentworth; Barton township, belonging to the county of Lincoln, municipally and electorally, to the district of Monck, has been added to South Wentworth and withdrawn from Monck. The hon. gentleman who represents Monck I am sure will have regretted the abstraction of the Reform township of Caistor from that riding. He contended very earnestly, when it was proposed to add the Tory township of Dunn in 1872, that he thought he was quite as competent to represent those extra thousands as any other man, and he wanted them added and it was all right. But he does not seem to feel himself as competent to represent those thousands of souls in Caistor which has been taken from Monck, while Cayuga was taken from Haldimand and added to Monck. The figures for Monck are 15,240; so you have two changes in Monck—the abstraction of Caistor and the addition of Cayuga. From South Wentworth the township of Ancaster is withdrawn and added to North Brant; the township of Caistor, municipally belonging to Lincoln and electorally to Monck, is handed over to South Wentworth; Gainsborough township and village are taken from Lincoln and added to Monck. From South Brant the townships of Burford and Oakland are taken away and added to South Oxford; Paris and Onondaga are transferred from North to South Brant. First of all, they add to the weaker riding of North Brant, to the South, the stronger riding, two portions of the weaker; then they take away from the stronger two of its townships and add them to another county. The north riding of Brant is too small, and so Paris and Onondaga are taken away from it. But to make up for that abstraction Blenheim is taken from the north riding of Oxford and added to North Brant, and Ancaster is taken from Wentworth and added to North Brant; and the constituencies formed from two townships, one from North Brant and one from South Oxford, are forty to forty-eight miles long and forty-four to forty-five miles broad. Haldimand, as I have said already, which is considerably below the quota, is equalized by being reduced nearly one thousand. What is the purpose effected by this business of equalization? Lincoln and Niagara are consolidated; but then Grimsby village, with six of a Tory majority, is withdrawn; and Grimsby township, with sixty-four of a Reform majority, is withdrawn; and Niagara, with two of a Tory majority, is added, making a net result of weakening the Reformers by 62 votes. From Monck they have taken Caistor, which had a Reform majority of 34 and Cayuga is added to it, making a net Reform majority of 32. From South Wentworth a township has been withdrawn and added to North Brant. From South Wentworth, Ancaster has been withdrawn and Grimsby and Caistor added, weakening the Reform majority by 177. To North Wentworth, the Tory township of Nelson has been added, which gave a Tory majority of 73, and also Burlington village, with 13 of a Tory majority, thus weakening the Reformers by 86 votes. As regards South Brant, Onondaga, which has been added, gave a Tory majority of 40, and these with the votes from the other new additions weaken the Reformers by 241 votes. All those results cannot be accomplished without hiving the Grits somewhere, and one place where they have hived them largely, is North Brant, a riding in which, on a poll of 700, we had a majority of 191 and which was perfectly safe for us. But by the additions made where they did not do any good to us, the Reform majority is increased to the handsome figure of 723. The result is that our majority is increased in a constituency which was perfectly safe, while we are attempted to be weakened in five ridings in this group. The next group to which I will refer is that of North and South Norfolk, North and South Oxford, and North and South Perth. The population of North Norfolk comprises 17,219 souls, and South Norfolk, 16,734, and an average of 16,846. There are then 18 or 20 ridings which are left by this scheme very nearly equally divided as the constituencies now stand. South Oxford comprises 24,732 and North Oxford 25,361, giving an average of 25,046. South Perth has 20,778 souls and North Perth 34,207, or an average of 27,492, a very fair average, but not so large as some of the constituencies created and some altered by this scheme. It was easy, if desired, to take 13,000 from South Perth and make a new constituency without disturbing anything. It would have been better to divide the county equally. What are the actual results of the changes in the population? Old North Norfolk had 17,219 of a population as against the new population of 20,293. Old South Norfolk had a population of 16,294 against the new of 19,039. South Oxford was too large before, having a population of 24,732, so it is equalized by being increased to 24,778. North Oxford had 25,361, which is reduced to 24,390. South Perth, old population, 20,778; increased to 21,608. North Perth had 34,207, and has now less than 26,538. So the equalizers did not get perfectly equalized in this division, when you find the south riding with 21,608 and the north riding with 26,538, under this process of equalization. To accomplish this result, what changes have taken place in the municipal and electoral bounds? South Easthope has been withdrawn from Perth and added to North Oxford, and Osborne is taken from South Huron and added to South Perth. From the north riding, Easthope is withdrawn and Wallace is added to North Wellington and Palmerston is withdrawn and added to North Wellington, so North Perth contributes to two different constituencies. As to North Oxford, North Easthope is taken from North Perth and added to North Oxford, and South Easthope is taken from South Perth and added to North Oxford. Blenheim is withdrawn and added to North Brant; so the Oxfords bled in the north riding in those ways. From South Oxford, Durham is withdrawn and added to North Oxford, and Tilsonburg is withdrawn and added to North Norfolk. Burford has to be taken from South Brant and also Oakland and added to South Oxford. What is the political effect of these transactions? To the north riding of Norfolk a Tory majority of 46 is added by the attachment of Tilsonburg, 56 being added by the township of Durham, giving a total Tory majority of 94, and weakening the total Reform vote by 8. The real object to be attained was to do my hon. friend from North Norfolk little hurt, but to make South Norfolk safe to the Government. So it was necessary to take a Tory municipality from the north riding and add it to the south riding, to make him feel a little more comfortable, and Simcoe was taken from the north riding with a Tory majority of 94, and added to the south riding, thus rendering necessary serious additions to the north riding of Norfolk. The sole reason why any change was made in the north, is that my hon. friend from the south riding may be strengthened. The hon. gentleman having taken something from the north had to add something to it from some other constituency to make things square. From the south riding of Perth, South Osborne is withdrawn and Logan was added. But Logan was afterwards taken away, and the net result is that the Reformers are weakened by 195, according to the return of 1878 in that south riding, and in the north riding of Perth the Reformers are weakened 205. But I admit we are strengthened in two constituencies of this group. In the south riding of Oxford, where in 1878 we had a majority of 361, the hon. gentleman has been thoughtful enough to strengthen the Reform majority by 327 votes by taking away some of the Tory municipalities which he wanted, making a total majority in our interest of 680 votes. He is generous to us when we are perfectly safe. He adds strength, but he adds it by some portion of his own supporters and putting them where they will do most good. So with reference to the north riding of Oxford. It is well known that there is a small Reform majority in that riding. In the last contest that majority summed up 903, but the hon. gentleman must add to it by the changes he has made, 262, making a Reform majority of 1,165 in the north riding of Oxford. The result of the hon. gentleman's various efforts in search of justice and equality in these six ridings is that he weakens the Reform interests in four and strengthens it in two, where this strength is wholly useless, because it was utterly impossible, as things stood, for any of his friends to have the slightest chance. I will now deal with the Wellingtons and Halton. The present condition of the Wellingtons is that South Wellington has a population of 25,400; Centre Wellington, 22,265; North Wellington, 25,780, making a total of 73,445, or an average of 24,461, not seriously above the average of the 60 constituencies I have mentioned. Halton has a present population of 21,919, while the quota is 20,908, and the average of the 60 counties, 20,161. What has been accomplished in South Wellington? The old population was 25,400, the new riding is 20,270. Centre Wellington has now a population of 26,818, as against the old figure, 22,265; and North Wellington, whose population was 25,780, is now reduced to 26,024, or a total of 73,019, being a total change of only 326 souls in the three ridings, but with the result, in their distribution, of producing slightly greater inequalities among the three than exists at present. Halton, which had a population of 21,119, or 200 over the quota, has been moved up to 22,632 by the change, and to do that the municipal boundaries have been changed.

Mr. POPE. It is not true.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, it is according to the figures as I read them. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of making any correction. I know that the hon. gentleman has these figures at his fingers' ends, for he had a great deal to do with them, being sort of sub-counsel to one or two other persons in manipulating the constituencies of Ontario. What has been done to accomplish these results? The township of Erin is withdrawn from South Wellington and annexed to Halton in order to make South Wellington below the quota and unequal to the other constituencies of Wellington. It is not added to the constituency which it adjoins, and which it would raise up to something near the quota, but it is added where it will do no harm by swelling the Reform majority already arranged for in Halton. Maryborough is transferred from the north to the centre riding of Wellington, part of Shelburne village to East Grey, and Wallace is transferred from North Perth to the north riding of Wellington; also a part of Palmerston. Halton, which comprised a population as near the average as one can hope to get, is mutilated by the abstraction from one corner of the township of Nelson and the village of Burlington, in order to weaken the Reformers in Wentworth, and by the addition to another corner of the township of Erin taken from the south riding of Wellington. What are the political results? In the south riding of Wentworth the Reformers are weakened by 220 votes, in the centre riding by 36, and in the north riding by 48. Halton, already a Reform riding, is made more so by the withdrawal of Nelson and Burlington to gerrymander North Wentworth, and Erin is now added to Halton from South Wellington, in order to make the gerrymandering complete, so that the Reform majority is made 300 in the county of Halton. The general result is that the Reformers are weakened in the three ridings, and strengthened in the county of Halton. Let me deal with the case of the Middlesexes and London. Their present population is:

North Middlesex	21,239
East do	30,600
West do	21,496
London	19,746
Total	93,081

This comprises the whole municipal county of Middlesex with its city. East Middlesex comprises the town of London East and the village of South London as suburbs of Middlesex, and East Middlesex is the constituency in which there is the greatest equality. The average for these four districts would be 23,270, a sum hardly in excess of the average to which I have referred. The average of Centre and West Wellington could be easily adjusted by the addition which was suggested on the first reading of the Bill by the First Minister himself, by the addition of one of the suburbs of London to London, and its withdrawal from East Middlesex; and the three ridings of Middlesex would be represented in accordance with their population, and with a full, fair and unusual degree of equality of numbers as between themselves. But what has been done? North Middlesex of which the old population was 21,239, has a new population of 19,540. East Middlesex has its old population of 30,600 reduced to 24,552. West Middlesex whose former population was 21,496, has now but 19,491, and South Middlesex is given 18,889. London is left as it is. This gives an average of 20,423 to the five ridings as against an average of 23,270 to the four ridings according to the present numbers and distribution, and all this although West Middlesex and North Middlesex are made a little further from the quota than they were before the readjustment. Still South Middlesex, the new riding, is furthest removed from the quota. Now, to accomplish these changes in North Middlesex, Lobo is transferred to South Middlesex and Adelaide to West Middlesex. Stephen is transferred from the county of Huron and added to North Middlesex; Westminster is taken from East Middlesex and transferred to South Middlesex; South Dorchester is taken from Elgin and added to East Middlesex; Delaware is transferred from West Middlesex to South Middlesex, and Caradoc is transferred to South Middlesex; Euphrasia is taken from Bothwell and added to West Middlesex; Westminster is transferred from East Middlesex, Lobo is taken from North Middlesex, Caradoc from West Middlesex and Delaware from West Middlesex, and all are added to South Middlesex. I need not tell you that South Middlesex is the new county, and you will have already learned from the experience you have derived in the history of this Bill that these four townships are four Reform townships. The political results of these results are that the hon. member for North Middlesex, who got in by eight votes—

Mr. McCALLUM. You did not get in by that many.

Mr. BLAKE. I got in by acclamation this time, but I do not think the member for Monck, of all hon. members in this House, is a man to twit persons about small majorities. I congratulate the hon. member that there is one advantage in a small majority. His majority last time was twenty-eight. Not very serious changes have been made, but they have been big enough to more than double the majority. He has taken care of it; he dislikes a small majority; he knows the trouble, and he takes care of the mammon of unrighteousness. Now, Sir, the hon. member for North Middlesex did not feel happy, and the leader of the Government did not feel happy about the north riding, and so he equalizes things by turning 8 into 271, or thereabouts, to weaken the Reform party. East Middlesex was a fighting riding. I think the hon. member got in by eighty-six votes, and the riding was a condition which the hon. gentleman knew was precarious. Well, it is adjusted. It is well known what the strength of the Reformers was in East Middlesex; there the township of Westminster was their main strength, but it is taken away, and they have added a little township from Elgin and they have made a Reform weakening in East Middlesex, according to the vote of 1878, of 232. The west riding of Middlesex,—of course it is impossible to make a tremendous weakening everywhere, and where they could not hit a man very hard they hit him as hard as they could—my hon. friend who had a majority of forty-eight is weakened by eight votes. The south riding of Middlesex, as was the natural outcome of these magnificent changes, is composed of the Reform municipality of Westminster with a majority of 258; of Lobo, with a majority of 251; of Caradoc, with a majority of 61; and Delaware, with a majority of 12, giving an aggregate majority of 581. In fact the Grits are hived in order to strengthen the hon. gentleman in the three other ridings. That is the result of the change. Take next Kent and Essex, Lambton, Bothwell and the Elgins. The present condition of these is as follows: the electoral district of Kent has a population of 36,626, that of Lambton, 42,616, and Bothwell, 27,102, making an aggregate of the municipalities of Kent and Lambton of 106,344. Essex has a population of 46,962; the electoral district of Lambton has a population of 42,616, giving an average of 21,308, or almost literally the quota. Electoral Kent has a population of 36,626, which, if you take from electoral Bothwell part of the old county of Kent, about 5,500 souls, and add them to Kent, you get 42,000, giving an average of 21,000 odd, and leaving electoral Bothwell about 21,000, thus making, by dividing electoral Lambton, and by restoring to Kent a portion of the townships in excess in Bothwell, a division natural, convenient, disturbing hardly at all the existing state of things there. Essex has, as I said, a population of 46,692, which would give an average of 23,346, in excess of the quota, it is true—considerably in excess, but not so much in excess of the quota that an equalizer ought to hesitate about leaving Essex as it is;

Mr. BLAKE.

and the equalizer did not hesitate because it was a little too large, but he hesitated on the other side. He was like the Irishman whose wall was more than plumb, because, although Essex is in excess, the hon. gentleman equalizes it by taking a township from Kent and adding it to Essex. Then, Elgin is comprised of 28,147 souls in the east riding and 14,214 in the west riding, a total of 42,391, with an average of 21,195, as near as possible correct, requiring only the subtraction of St. Thomas from the east riding, and its addition to the west riding to make the numbers, as between these, as nearly accurate as you could hope for, which would leave East Elgin 19,780 and West Elgin 22,581. Was it possible to adjust these two ridings within the municipal bounds to give to the old county of Elgin the two representatives within its own municipal bounds, to which it is entitled by all considerations which can possibly be brought to bear upon that question of population? Well, now, what is done? Electoral Lambton is divided into two, as I suggested would be right, West Lambton having 20,917 and East Lambton 21,975. Instead of subtracting a portion of old Kent from Bothwell and adding it to Kent, thus creating the equal constituencies, Kent has taken from it only a small portion of its 36,000 souls, and has left no less than 28,112 by the equalizers, and Bothwell is reduced from 37,102 to 22,497. East Elgin, too large already, having a surplus probably to be applied to an increase of West Elgin and to readjusting the county within its bounds, is made from 28,147 to 26,303. It is not brought down to the proper point as it would have been brought down by a transfer. West Elgin has 14,214, and the Essexes about equally divided, with the addition of a township from Kent, making them 23,176 for the north riding, and 23,786 for the south riding, by virtue of the addition of the township of Romney, in the county of Kent. Now, to accomplish this result, what has been done? Romney has been taken off from Kent and added to South Essex. The hon. member who now represents the whole county of Essex said the other day that he objected very much to that, but I understand that the hon. member is going to stand for North Essex, which he does not affect particularly; but what he objected to was the addition to the south riding of a township which gives a small Reform majority, which would no doubt add to our strength in the south riding of Essex where we have a majority, but which would do a good turn to the hon. member under the new arrangement. So it was hardly brotherly on the part of the hon. member for Essex to object to a transaction which would relieve the hon. member for Kent a little without doing anybody any great harm, since the Reformers could carry South Essex any way. Then Bothwell, Chatham, Wallaceburg, are added to Kent; instead of restoring some of the surplus Kent townships to Bothwell, thus making two divisions, they take from Kent, Chatham and Wallaceburg, and add them on to Bothwell. Having taken some from one side they have to take off from the other side. They took off Orford, Howard and Ridgetown are taken off Bothwell and added to West Elgin and Euphemia is taken off and added to West Middlesex. In South Essex, Romney is added from Kent, Port Stanley is transferred to the east riding. In East Elgin, part of Port Stanley is transferred from West Elgin and South Dorchester is taken away and added to South Middlesex. How would it stand according to the vote of 1878? In Kent, according to that vote, there remains after all that has been done, 375 majority; and the hon. gentleman, I suppose, thought the county was quite safe with that majority, and he would spread the overplus among other places where it would do the most good and still leave the hon. gentleman safe—not so safe but that the hon. gentleman is anxious to get Romney transferred to his county; but the result is that there is a Tory accession of 154 where there was a majority of 375; but in Bothwell there has been a net Reform weakening of 473, and in West Elgin, a constituency of small proportions, where the majority in 1878 was 108, and which by consequence was perfectly safe, the Reform strength is increased by 355, making its strength now 463. It is made safe for the hon. gentleman, but it was safe before. Objection was made not so much with respect to the charge as it affected West Elgin but as to its effect on other constituencies. In East Elgin the Reformers are deprived of 41 votes, and the Reform strength in other constituencies are also reduced. Next we come to the counties of Huron, Bruce and Grey. Huron it will be remembered was the scene of the attempt at gerrymandering in 1872.

Mr. PLUMB. In 1874.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought the hon. gentleman had pronounced his final oration and was not about to take part in the business of the House for some time to come, but he is a lively corpse. Why, we must have an Irish wake over him, and after the appeal he made to the hon. leader of the House he will expect an answer with usury and that he will not only obtain a certificate of good character for which he has humbly implored, but that will use his influence with his supporters in the various ridings which he thinks he has made safe by this Bill to give the hon. gentleman a safe county, so that he may come back and interrupt us once again. It appears that this was not, after all, a final oration, but as an hon. gentleman behind me says it was an apotheosis, it was not an absolute political death, but a transition to a serener upper air to be heard still in the politics of the country, in a Chamber where, perhaps, his speeches will be as much appreciated as they have been here. Huron, I say, was the scene of the gerrymandering in 1872. The hon. leader of the Government has found that the hon. member for the south riding of Huron is a hard man to beat, and so he has to gerrymander the Hurons again in order to do the business. The county which was cut and carved ten years ago is to be cut and carved again, and not content with that, portions have to be abstracted and put outside the bounds. The present population of South Huron is 23,393; Centre Huron, 26,474; North Huron, 27,103; or an aggregate of 76,970, giving an average of 25,656. In Bruce there are but two members for the county. The south riding has a population of 39,803, and the west riding, 24,971, giving an aggregate of 64,774, or an average for three members of 21,591, or slightly over the quota. South Grey has a population of 21,127; East Grey, 29,688; West Grey, 23,334; or an aggregate of 74,149, giving an average of 24,716. The readjustment boundaries of Bruce and Grey are not touched, but Huron must suffer though there is no appreciable difference in population. What is the proposed population? The old population of South Huron was 23,393, of the new, 23,042. The old population of Centre Huron was 26,474, of the new riding, 19,808. The population of old North Huron was 27,013, and of the new, 26,098. There is a greater proposed inequality than exists to-day. North Bruce has now a population of 24,871, and it is reduced to 17,335. The west riding will have 25,618, and the south riding, 21,502. Here is one of the most gross and flagrant departures from the professed principle of equalization that exists in the whole Bill. By leaving in the north riding the township of Saugeen and including Port Elgin, 13,490 will be added to its population, making it 20,825; North Bruce would be 22,128, South Bruce 21,502, or as nearly equal as they may be. You could make them more nearly equal than is done by the Bill by dividing the present south riding into two, and allowing the north riding to remain as it is. They however take Saugeen and Port Elgin from the north riding, not to equalize the population, but to make the north riding safe for the Conservatives. The population of South Grey, under the old arrangement, was 21,127—new, 25,703; North Grey, old, 23,314—new, 23,334; East Grey, old, 29,668—new, 25,909, the change being that Artemesia is taken from the east and added to the south riding. There is no change, as I have stated before, in the bounds of Bruce and Grey, but in Huron—the scene of a former exhibition of carving and cutting—changes are made. Goderich town and Colborne are added to South Huron. From the centre, Stephen is removed to North Middlesex; Osborne is removed to South Perth. The townships in which Exeter is situate are not taken away, but Exeter is taken from the centre and added to the south. My hon. friend from the south riding (Mr. Cameron) is made a present of Exeter because it gives a Tory majority of 116; they go away, but the township in which Exeter is situate could not be spared. The centre riding of Huron has part of Brussels transferred from the north, Colborne and Goderich transferred from the south; and the north riding has part of Brussels from the centre, and part of Lucknow is added to the new riding of West Bruce. Now, what are the political results? The hon. gentleman had “hived the Grits” pretty well in 1872 so far as South Huron was concerned—he had made it as strong as he could, I do not say as strong as he decently could—but he has found that these Grits have swarmed and the hon. gentleman has to make fresh arrangements for hiving. The majority of 362 in 1878 is to be increased by thirty-six of a majority in Centre Huron, giving a Reform majority of 446. I need hardly tell you that the abstraction of these Reform townships from the county was not in order to increase the Reform strength in one place, but to weaken the Reform strength in another place. I do not suppose the most audacious or the coolest of the individuals who discuss this subject will venture to deny that. Then as to the south, there is a net Reform weakening of 163. My hon. friend's majority at the last election in a constituency already gerrymandered was 163, and the hon. gentleman has framed his Bill so judiciously that he has just taken away his majority.

Mr. CAMERON. They cannot do it very well.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, they took away the old majority, but my hon. friend has made a new one since. They say it is so far right as it stands in the south and north that even that is not enough, and that mayhap if the delegations from these ridings, of which I have received advice to-day, succeed in their persuasive efforts he may make further changes. They say: “You have not done your work well enough. You have done enough to create all the odium, to excite all the indignation, to do all the mischief you can to yourself, but you have not done enough to produce the political results which you want to produce,” and he may be told: “If you rob take possession, if you kill take the plunder of the man you kill. Do something more; you may as well be hung for a sheep as for a lamb, particularly when you will not get the lamb; and you may, perhaps, have a chance of getting the sheep.” So in South Huron, my hon. friend's majority of 78 is cleaned out, and the member for North Huron is trying to take a little better care of himself and that portion of Lucknow which belonged to his riding, but of which he is not very fond and which gives a Reform majority of 39, is put to another riding, and a portion of Brussels which gives a Reform majority of 3 is also removed, so that the Reformers are weakened in that riding to the tune of 42. But they are going to carry that riding notwithstanding their loss of 42 votes. So that so far as the Hurons are concerned, judicious arrangements have been made to put as many Reformers as possible where they will not be available for electoral purposes, and to weaken them as far as possible in other ridings. In North Bruce it was not enough to detach the township of Bruce with 319 Reform majority from the north riding. Although this would have left an apparent Tory majority of 163, yet they were afraid to face my hon. friend with even that majority on the figures for 1878. This would have left the riding with the proper population. It would have left a population nearly equal, it would have done that part of the business correctly and would have given them a majority of 163. But no, say these valiant and chivalrous gentlemen, we will cut down the population of Bruce to 17,300 and we will raise up the population of the adjoining riding to 25,000. Was this done in order to equalize? No, of course not. That is not equalizing; that is creating inequalities of the most shameless character and in the most wanton manner. No, not wanton for a purpose—for the purpose of taking away another large Reform town and township which gave a Reform majority in North Bruce; and this is done by creating inequality absolute and relative, an inequality by cutting North Bruce down, by putting the other riding away up; by making about 7,000 difference in the populations; and in their endeavors to destroy the Reform interests in North Bruce they have weakened the Reformers by 493 votes. Then the difference between these two ridings, Sir, the product of the hon. gentleman's equalizing business, is about 8,000 souls. In West Bruce are concentrated eleven municipalities with nearly 26,000 souls, Reform majorities of 1,086, less Tory majorities of 130, leaving a net majority of 956; taking almost the whole Reform strength out of two ridings; taking a portion of the Reform strength out of North Huron and creating a Reform riding with a majority of 1,000, with an unnecessarily and unduly large population in the centre of these two ridings—equalizing again to give the Grits and get Tory constituencies around them. In South Bruce four townships are taken off to form a new riding, giving 461 of a Reform majority in the last contest; and the Reform interest in South Bruce as it stood before is weakened to that extent and by that amount. In Grey Reformers are weakened by adding from East and South Grey the township of Artemesia with a Tory majority of 153. And they may say: "We have helped you in East Grey." Well, Sir, it is just the way they like to help us. The majority was 531 in that constituency, and, of course, they could afford to take off 153, the majority in Artemesia, leaving them 378, so my hon. friend need not be so much alarmed, although Artemesia does go over to cook the goose of his brother practitioner, as he stands for the south riding.

Mr. SPROULE. All right.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope he is all right, notwithstanding the machinations of this Bill. Now, Sir, the general result is this: In these last groups, whereas there were before eight seats, there are now nine, and the Reformers are weakened in five of those seats, and strengthened in the centre riding of Huron, where they were strong enough before. Now, I have shown by these statements of details and which follow irresistibly the conclusions which I state to you, the result as designed by hon. gentlemen opposite of this measure. I have shown, with reference to the municipal counties, enormous interference. I have shown you that two townships are removed from Carleton, two are added to North Lanark, one township removed from Lanark to Leeds and Grenville, townships removed from North York to West Ontario, townships taken from Muskoka, to North Ontario, from Muskoka to West Simcoe, from South Simcoe to North York, from Monck to Wentworth, from Wentworth to Brant, from Halton to Wentworth, from Brant to Oxford, from Oxford to Brant, from Haldimand to Monck, from Perth to Oxford, from Huron to Perth, from Perth to Wellington, from Oxford to Norfolk, from Wellington to Halton, from Elgin to Middlesex, from Kent to Essex, from Oxford to Middlesex, from Kent to Bothwell, from Bothwell to Elgin, from Huron to Middlesex, making in all five-and-twenty changes of municipal county boundaries. I have shown too that the electoral divisions are changed, carved and cut up in more than 50 cases, of nine instances only are in this eastern division which the hon. gentleman thinks it better not to interfere with largely, and in Centre and Western Ontario, where his greatest struggle is to take place, no less than 41 changes are made in electoral divisions. The result as the hon. gentleman hopes and expects it to be is, that the Reformers are weakened and the Tories strengthened in a great number of what I may call fighting ridings—those in which contests may be expected to take place: North Lanark, South Lanark, Lincoln, Brockville, Monck, South Wentworth, North Wentworth, North Ontario, South Ontario, Muskoka, North York, East York, North Simcoe, North Norfolk, South Norfolk, North Perth, South Perth, North Middlesex, South Middlesex, West Middlesex, South Wellington, Centre Wellington, North Wellington, South Huron, North Huron, North Bruce, East Bruce, South Grey, Bothwell, East Elgin, Haldimand. I have shown you that the Tories are weakened, where they think it will do them no harm because they are so strong—in Carleton, South Simcoe, East Grey, North Simcoe and Kent, and in the fighting riding which they give up, knowing it to be lost. The Reformers are given for the purpose of living West Bruce, South Middlesex, West Ontario, East Simcoe, and their strength is closely concentrated in North Brant, South Oxford, North Oxford, West Ontario, East Simcoe, South Middlesex, West Bruce, Centre Huron and West Elgin. The Reform majorities, applying the figures of 1878 to those new constituencies, are as follows:—North Brant, 723; South Oxford, 688; North Oxford, 1,165; West Ontario, 583; East Simcoe, 558; South Middlesex, 581; West Bruce, 956; Centre Huron, 446; West Elgin, 463; Halton, 290; a total of 6,445, or on the average of 645, for ten ridings; while in the same districts which are the subject of these manipulations the Tory majorities by the same figures, are North Simcoe, North Perth, West Middlesex, East Middlesex, Kent, North Essex, North Bruce, East Grey, South Simcoe, a total of 3,506, or an average of 350 as against an average of 625 in the ten Reform constituencies I have just referred to—being a concentration with Reform counties, with the design of weakening us in the fighting ridings. Now, Sir, will any man outside of this House, will any man inside of this House, pretend that this is all accident, that this is the result of an honest and fair effort to discharge the duty of giving four, or almost six, new seats to the Province of Ontario? Will any man pretend inside or outside that such a concatenation of circumstances as I have pointed out here does not indicate, does not make plain and conclusive, that the intent and object of this Bill is something utterly different? Not to equalize the constituencies in point of population, not to equalize them in point of voting strength, but to use as a miserable pretence some attempted equalization in order that the hon. gentleman can convert a minority of Tories amongst the people to a majority of Tories in the House. That is what he is aiming to do by this Bill, as I have proved. I say, Sir, honest men cannot afford to vote for such legislation. I say this legislation is dishonest and fraudulent, a disgrace to those who propose it and a disgrace to those who support it. I say it is an insult to the people of Ontario, whether Conservative or Reform; to the people of Ontario whose legislation you wantonly disallow, to the people of Ontario whose bounds you wantonly and improperly refuse to concede to them; to the people of Ontario, whose municipal arrangements, most cherished amongst them, whose legitimate aspirations in connection with those arrangements, whose cherished associations in connection with Federal representation you are about wantonly to interfere with and to violate. I say you dare not to do this with the other Provinces. You dare not propose that with reference to the members from the other Provinces. I tell the members from the other Provinces, who would resent this Bill if administered to themselves, that they are not behaving as men ought to behave, as upright and honest men should behave, if they support an Administration enforcing upon one Province what they would resent and resist if attempted to be imposed upon another. I ask them to judge as they want us to judge them. I ask them to consider what their feelings would be if such a measure as this were proposed with reference to them. I ask them to realize how they would denounce such a measure, with what vehemence they would declaim against it, with what obstinacy they would declare it was an outrage and that they would not submit to it. And if these be the feelings with which the Province of Quebec, the Province of Nova Scotia, the Province of Prince Edward Island, the Province of New Brunswick would view a measure of this kind applied to them, I ask them in all fairness, candour and decency, to deal with us as they would be dealt with, to look at us as they would look at themselves in a like case, to reject a Bill based upon principles which they must know in their hearts are principles which they would not permit to be applied to themselves, based upon professions which I have proved are dishonest, based upon pretences which I have proved are false, and which aim at results—and they tell us this themselves—which are iniquitous and fraudulent. You hope to have the unanimous support of your friends from the other Provinces in forcing on Ontario a measure which you know you dare not ask them to support in the case of their own Provinces. And you hope for more. You hope the Ontario Tory may exhibit signs of being a patient animal; you hope that he may not resent this measure; you hope to get his acceptance of it by telling him: "It is quite true, it is a bad business to cut up the counties, to carve up the municipal organizations, to destroy all your old associations and arrangements; we know it is a cowardly thing; it looks cowardly to us, because we have been telling you that we are strong enough to carry the country as it stands; but—mark you!—come closer and let me whisper in your ear!—it was necessary in order to win at all; pardon it and forgive it; forgive it for the good of the cause; smother your emotions, conceal your disgust, and go to the polls like a man in the new constituency of what's-its-name, made up of I-don't-know-what municipalities; go to the polls in your new associations, in your new arrangements, and vote for the man who did all these things in order that he might convert a minority of Tories in the country into a majority of Tories in the House." Why, Sir, this proposal—which, as I have told you before, you are mistaken in supposing will accomplish its ends, which I have told you before, I believe, the people will revolt against, which I believe the honest sense of the people in all the Provinces will revolt against, whatever the members from the other Provinces may do or say, or whatever restraints they may wish to impose, or whatever fetters and shackles they may wish to place upon Ontario—this is a proposal, I say, which I believe their constituents, the people of their counties, will look upon as one they ought to be very jealous of. I believe they will say: "This comes close to our doors; we know not, if this rule is adopted, on what principle it can be confined to one Province; if the representation in the largest Province is to be disposed of in this way, how soon may it not be that the same rule will be applied wholesale to the country, and with what force can we reject it after we have sustained you in imposing it upon our neighbors." I believe they will say: "We decline to be responsible for this." Up to this moment the Government is responsible for it; if it passes in this shape the House will be responsible for it; and if the people endorse it at the polls, they become responsible for it; and those who endorse it must do so on the principle that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; and if all municipal bounds are to be swept aside on the flimsy pretence of an attempt at redistribution of the representation, that cannot be confined to the Province of Ontario, but must be extended over the whole Dominion. But one would have thought only this Bill was enough. One would have thought that the boasters and braggarts who talk of going to the polls to increase their strength, who said that the constituents who sent them there would send them again with an enhanced majority, would have been satisfied with cutting and carving these constituencies up; one would have supposed that their attempt, by this audacious, this outrageous measure, to smother the popular sentiment which is against them to-day as they boast it was for them in 1878, would have been enough. But it is not enough. The hon. gentleman does not trust in that alone. He knows that it is necessary, in taking a step of this kind, to go still further; and so, as I said in my opening, that great reform, which after many efforts, having been contended for in two Parliaments unsuccessfully, the Reform party was able to achieve in 1874, of providing that the returning officers with their large, important and delicate duties, their judicial and administrative duties, their duty of choosing the deputies, their duty of seeing to the count, their duty of seeing fair play, should be chosen from and selected from among persons who had a stake and a position in the community, whose duty it was, obviously from their station, so to demean and comport themselves as to win the respect and confidence of all classes of the community in which they lived. I say that great reform which took away the power which the hon. gentleman had used in former years, of selecting returning officers as he pleased, and made well-known officials of character and standing in the community those from amongst whom the choice should be made, is now to be repealed, and, without one word of explanation or defence, upon the first reading or the second reading, the hon. gentleman has asked us to assent to a Bill which contains a clause repealing that clause in the Act of 1874, and providing once more that the returning officer should be chosen at the sole discretion of the Government; once more that the hon. gentleman may do what he did in 1872; once more that he may appoint his creatures to return the minority candidates as they were returned in 1872 in Muskoka and West Peterboro'; to re-enact the outrages which were enacted under the hon. gentleman's direction and responsibility when he had the power of appointing such persons as he pleased to be returning officers for the constituencies. Sir, these are the two cardinal principles of this measure: first, to mar the face of the constituencies and alter the municipal bounds, and if, by any means, in the Liberal Province of Ontario, it can be done, to destroy or weaken the Liberal strength and give strength by force of law to the Tories; and secondly, what the law cannot do, by executive authority, administered as the hon. gentleman formerly administered that authority, with the result which he formerly produced, to use his discretion to appoint returning officers, in order that he may no longer have men restrained by the considerations to which I have referred to act as such ought to act in such a position, but to appoint his creatures to do his dirty work. Sir, we saw an account the other day in the newspapers of a great banquet at which there were flowers and sumptuous meats and costly wines and great enthusiasm—the banquet of the Old Guard. It is not a very numerous body as represented in this House. I do not think anything can more strikingly tell us what the precarious tenure of a Canadian politician's life is than these figures. The hon. gentleman was, I suppose, 125 strong in this House in 1873, and he is about 150 strong here to-day; but of his 125 of 1873 I see here to-day in his majority of 150, about 38 souls; while of us who were in a minority of about 80 then, and are in a minority of about 60 now, there remains so large a percentage that we appear about 30 strong. These are the mutations of a Canadian political life, and I do not doubt, when the hon. gentleman looked at these figures and saw in the midst of his triumph that among his majority to-day, those who supported him in 1873 were under forty, he must have felt that there are chances in the future as there were chances in the past. I wonder if at that great feast, brilliant as it was, whether the Belshazzar of the feast did not at the same period see a mysterious handwriting in unknown characters on the wall. I wonder was there any Daniel there to decipher those unknown characters and to tell him that the "mene, mene, tekel, Upharsin," being interpreted was—"God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians." Whether it was at the banquet or before it, the hon. gentleman saw that handwriting on some wall, and what did he say?—"I know that according to the feeling of the constituencies that elected me, my kingdom is gone. I know that according to the views of those who sent my supporters here, and who are to return them again, if there be a change, 'I am weighed in the balance and found wanting.' But, like the unjust steward, he said: 'I will readjust the numbers; I will falsify the weights; I will arrange for trusty enumerators and carvers of the work who shall give a proper account of the result; and so, by adjusted divisions and falsified balances, and by counties of my own making and my own legislation I will do what in me lies to defeat the characters which are written on the wall, so will I continue my kingdom and remain still again in power.'" But the handwriting on the wall is not reversible by any such fraudulent, impotent pretences as those. The shadows have deepened, the handwriting is darker and more marked, the words are plainer to be seen. They are to be read in our honest English tongue to-day; and they tell us that an indignant and honest people of whatever political complexion, is about to resent at the polls the fraud which is attempted to be perpetrated upon it, and to tell the hon. gentleman that the handwriting is true and his kingdom is indeed finished. I believe this measure deserves our attention at this stage, and that it is at this stage we ought to be called upon to record our opinions. This Bill may or may not be rejected. The hon. gentleman thinks it will pass. He knows the views of his friends better than I do. But if it pass, it shall pass over such amendments as shall enable those who vote for it to give a sound reason for their votes if they can, and shall enable those who vote against it, to vindicate the vote we are prepared to give. I move in amendment:

That in dealing with the representation of the people in Parliament, the municipal County organization has been observed in all the Provinces, save Ontario, and that in Ontario the said organization modified by a division of Municipal Counties into Ridings, has been generally observed;

That on the occasion of the re-adjustment of 1872, the soundness of the said plan of observing the Municipal County organization, and the evil consequences of a departure therefrom, were recognized by Parliament, and on that occasion the First Minister of the day, Sir John A. Macdonald, announced with approval from all sides the policy of the Government to the following effect, viz:—"with respect to the rural constituencies, the desire of the Government has been to preserve the representations for Counties, and sub-divisions of Counties as much as possible. It is considered objectionable to make representation a mere geographical term. It is desired as much as possible to keep the representation within the County, so that each County that is a Municipality of Ontario should be represented, and if it becomes large enough, that it should be divided into Ridings—that principle is carried out in the suggestions I am about to make.—That rule was broken in 1867, in the three constituencies, viz.:—Bothwell, Cardwell and Monck; and I do not think on the whole that the experiment has proved a successful one. I do not think it was unsuccessful as far as the representations of those new constituencies themselves were concerned, as they are well and ably represented by the gentlemen who now hold seats for the constituencies; and I hope that if I am returned again to the next Parliament, I shall meet those honorable Members. But it is obvious that there is a great advantage in having Counties elect men whom they know. Our Municipal system gives an admirable opportunity to constituencies to select men for their deserts. We all know the process which happily goes on in Western Canada. A young man in a County commences his public life by being elected by the neighbors who know him, to the Township Council. If he shows himself possessed of administrative ability, he is made a Reeve or Deputy-Reeve of his County; he becomes a Member of the County Council, and as his experience increases, and his character and abilities become known, he is selected by his people as their representative in Parliament. It is, I think, a grand system that the people of Canada should have the opportunity of choosing for political promotion the men in whom they have most confidence and of whose ability they are fully assured. All that great advantage is lost by cutting off a portion of two separate Counties, and adding them together for electoral purposes only. Those portions so cut off have no common interest; they do not meet together and they have no common feeling, except that once in five years they go to the polls in their own township to vote for a man, who may be known in one section, and not in another. This tends towards the introduction and development of the American system of caucuses, by which wirepullers take adventurers for their political ability only, and not for any personal respect for them. So that as much as possible, from any point of view it is advisable that Counties should refuse men whom they do not know, and when the representation is increased, it should be by sub-dividing the Counties into Ridings * * *

I believe the House generally agrees with me that the County organization should be preserved as much as possible. I have observed this principle and no county in Ontario has been split up.

That the said principle of observing, as far as possible, the limits of the Municipal Counties in adjusting the Parliamentary representation is sound and should be followed in the said Bill for the reason so given by Sir John A. Macdonald, and approved by Parliament; and also because it affords some safeguard against the abuse of power by the party in office to adjust the representation unfairly towards their opponents.

That the said Bill is framed in utter violation and total disregard of the said principle, since it takes away territory from the Municipal Counties for electoral purposes, and conjoins for electoral purposes territories, having no Municipal County relations with each other in a very large proportion of the constituencies of Ontario; while, at the same time, it does not effect the proposed object of equalising the population of the Electoral Districts.

Mr. BOWELL. If, as the member for West Durham says, we have had a dying speech from the hon. member for Niagara, we have had a funeral dirge from the hon. leader of the Opposition. He has occupied the time of the House for the last four or five hours, dividing his discourse into four parts: First, general abuse of the Government; second, a defence of the Ontario Government in the division of counties into electoral districts; third, a criticism of the Bill before the House; and, fourthly, the hon. gentleman wound up with a characteristic flood of general abuse. I have noted a few of his choice epithets, such as "dishonest," "Tory conspirators," "Tory schemers," "fraudulent, dishonest boasters, braggarts and raniplulators of electoral districts." We are told we presented to this House an odious and outrageous Bill, and have framed clauses in order to appoint returning officers determined to do the Tories' dirty work. Also that they were determined to commit iniquitous and cowardly acts, and, among other things, to take from Ontario those rights and privileges which she had obtained in the past, and which is her particular mission, judging from his remarks, to retain in the future. I do not know that the word coward comes with a very good grace from the hon. gentleman, particularly when he attempts to discuss the question of the boundaries of this Province, and the alleged desire of the Dominion to deprive her of the land which legitimately and properly belongs to her. If the hon. gentleman had had the courage of his convictions, we should have heard the sound of his sweet voice when that question was under discussion in this House. He found it convenient either not to risk the utterance of his opinions, or he had none to utter on the question, or if he had an opinion it must have been in accord with the policy of the Dominion Government or we should have heard from him upon the subject. When he spoke of conspirators, I was forcibly reminded of his political conduct during the last ten or twelve years. Conspirators, forsooth! Who, I should like to know, conspired to seize the reins of Government from the late John Sandfield Macdonald? Did he not succeed by a majority of one in ousting that gentleman from power, when there were no less than eight seats in Ontario unrepresented. Who entered into a conspiracy with the Speaker of the Ontario House and brought him down from the Chair and made him a Cabinet Minister, but the hon. gentleman who now hurls these epithets across the House at others. Who tampered with and brought the Treasurer of that Government but he? Yet he stands up here with a coolness—I will not say audacity as he does—and apparent honesty that one would think, who had never heard him before, that he was a paragon of perfection. He also poses himself as a leader of a great party, possessed of all the honesty, integrity, and political morality in the world. We know how he and his party got in power in 1873. We know that the same schemes, the same devices, the same conspiracies and the same eaves-dropping are taking place to-day. Why did the hon. gentleman not answer my question when I asked him how he obtained certain information? He did not answer it, because he knew that he obtained it improperly; that he knew that information was obtained by one of his late colleagues who broke the seal of a telegram. Had he been a gentleman he would never have used that information, but retained it within his own breast. In the past those gentlemen did not hesitate to subsidize people in order to obtain information that was afterwards made public, and we know now that they do not hesitate to open telegrams and letters in order to obtain information which, if they had one particle of honesty, they would retain within their own breasts and not publish it forth to the world.

Mr. MILLS. Who did that?

Mr. BOWELL. You know very well.

Mr. MILLS. No, I do not.

Mr. BOWELL. Ask the hon. gentleman to whom I am addressing myself. He will tell you. Admitting for a moment, as may be said, that these telegrams were opened by mistake, I say that the hon. member for West Durham, had he the instincts of a gentleman—I use the word advisedly—he would not have used that information. I am not surprised to hear the hon. member for Shefford say “hear, hear,” remembering his record.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Will the hon. gentleman explain the record which justifies him in singling me out.

Mr. BOWELL. When an hon. gentleman assumes the right to sneer at what another hon. gentleman is saying, I have a right to retort in the manner I did. I do not propose to enter into the hon. gentleman's record just now.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. You had better not.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman need not be at all alarmed. I have heard his sonorous tones before, and am not at all afraid of him now.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Then go on.

Mr. BOWELL. The world knows who the hon. gentleman is; his record is known. I am not going to deal with it now.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. You dare not deal with it.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is very boastful, I know. In the meantime we will attend to him on some other occasion.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. Go on, and tell us what about my course.

Mr. BOWELL. I am very glad that I have awakened the ire of the hon. gentleman. He has been very quiet during the last few Sessions, and it is charming to see him lose his temper. I have nothing to do with him just now; I am treating another question, and shall let the hon. gentleman alone most decidedly.

Mr. HUNTINGTON. That is the best thing you can do.

Mr. BOWELL. When interrupted by the hon. gentleman I was remarking that even private telegrams had been opened perhaps by mistake, and that those who had opened them ought at least to have kept the contents to themselves, no matter what might have been their character. In that brag-gadocio speech which we have just heard—if I may copy the expression of the hon. leader of the Opposition—we have but a re-enacting of the scene that took place in this House in 1872. When the hon. the First Minister then introduced his Bill giving an additional representation to the Province of Ontario, the same language was used towards him as is used to-day, and the proposition met with equal abuse. At that time, so much in love with the principle of representation by population were the hon. gentlemen opposite that they denounced the Government for not demolishing the small boroughs of Brockville and of Niagara. They supported it to such an extent that the hon. member for Lambton moved the following resolution affirming that principle:—

“That the six additional members to be allotted to Ontario are due to the increased population of that Province, and should be allotted with reasonable regard to the population. That the Bill be referred back to a Committee of the House with instructions to amend the same by allotting members for Ontario in such a manner as to give as far as practicable representation to those parts of the population which, by the present division, would be excluded from their fair share of political power.”

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is all right.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the principle which the hon. gentleman then advocated, and I expected that the remark he has just uttered would fall from his lips at the present moment. Now, that the hon. First Minister and the Government have adopted that principle, so far as practicable, in the readjustment of the constituencies which I shall show before I sit down, the same parties denounce him for it. The Globe, at that time the organ of the hon. gentleman opposite, used language of this kind, and one would suppose that they still remembered their language in 1872, or had been studying the debates of that time and committed them to memory. This is what the Globe said:

“Our own convictions are that the intense feeling of indignation at the recent proceedings of Sir John Macdonald's Government, the disgust that this last endeavor to defraud the country of a fair representation will excite, will give enormous strength to our cause, defeat this gerrymandering and cause the arts and craft of the too-cunning schemer to recoil upon himself. As the Bill openly violates the constitutional theory, there remains only the conviction that the whole thing is the meanest and merest shuffle—an electioneering dodge, in fact, to gain a vote or two, no matter who is wronged or who is cheated.”

This was the language of the leading organ in 1872, it is the language of the hon. gentleman opposite to-night. The leader of the Opposition says that the right hon. leader of the Government is not adhering to the opinions he then expressed, that he has even violated the principle he then enumerated. Well, the hon. gentleman is not charitable. In a speech lately made by himself in the West he declared that he was not to be held responsible to-day for what he said a few days ago. I think it is quite right and proper that he should have used that expression, because he changes so often it is difficult where to find him. I am glad he approves of it now.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say it.

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say he did not use that language at a dinner in Toronto?

Mr. BLAKE. No, I did not.

Mr. BOWELL. All I can say is that I shall, with the permission of the House, read from the report of the hon. gentleman's speech as published in the Globe and supposed to be correct, but which I have not by me just now, to prove that he did use that very expression.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether it is correct or not. I never read it.

Mr. BOWELL. I know that whenever it is convenient for the hon. gentleman he is quite willing to repudiate Hansard, repudiate his own organ, and any other newspaper report when it suits his purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. I repudiate it when it is wrong.

Mr. BOWELL. I know that when he made a speech at Dundas a few years ago he deprecated the fact of being followed by reporters, because he said he had not an opportunity to repeat his speeches. I take for granted, judging from the past, that he has a good memory, but I know it is convenient for him to disavow any expression he may be reported to have uttered as incorrect when it suits his purpose. Now, Sir, he has argued for nearly an hour that the principles of the Bill of the Ontario Government were correct, that in no case were the boundary lines of municipalities interfered with—

Mr. BLAKE No.

Mr. BOWELL. Wait until I have finished my sentence—with the exception of cases where new counties in the new electoral divisions were established. He ought to know, because I take it for granted that he has read the law, for he pronounced it almost perfect, that in some cases they actually divided the townships.

Mr. BLAKE. I said the county municipalities.

Mr. BOWELL. Is not a township a municipality as well as a county? Is not the subtracting of one portion of a township and adding it, for electoral purposes, to another township, just as bad, if it be wrong, as to take a township from a county municipality and attach it to another? The hon. gentleman may not be capable of comprehending the distinction, but if he will look into the matter he will find that in this very county of Huron, which he talks of as being gerrymandered that townships have been divided for electoral purposes. They have taken a portion of one township, lying on the other side of another township, where that township belonged to another division. The principle is precisely the same. I find no fault with that, particularly when the principle is applied to the Dominion Parliament. Now, there may be some argument in favor of retaining municipal divisions for the Local House, but it does not apply in any sense to the Dominion Parliament. The Provincial Legislatures have exclusively to deal with municipal corporations, and with all local matters pertaining to the Provinces. They have nothing whatever to do in their legislative capacity with the general politics of trade and commerce of the Dominion, and hence there is no analogy between the two cases. I admit, and I say it frankly, that if it were a readjustment for provincial purposes, there would be much force in the argument advanced by the hon. member for West Durham, but as applicable to this Parliament where the trade policy of the whole Dominion is to be discussed, as well as the commercial policy and monetary institutions, and all that is of a general character, a division of even municipalities, whether they be county or township, could have nothing whatever to do with it. I would like to know what difference it makes to a voter who lives in one township, in what electoral division he votes upon a question affecting the trade policy of the country? He records his vote in accordance with the opinion he entertains, and the effect is the same wherever he votes. But the hon. gentleman says, oh, no, he is disfranchised unless he can vote in the municipality in which his township or county is situated. I leave it to any intelligent man, and leave it to any man who will take the trouble to think for a moment, whether municipal institutions, or the municipal divisions of a county or township, have ought to do with the questions to which I have alluded. I desire to show that whatever has been done in the way of readjusting the representation it has been done without cutting townships in two, and has been in the direction of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Lambton in 1872, when the former Redistribution Bill was before the House. When the First Minister introduced that measure he did not declare that the sole object was representation by population; what he said was that in the readjustment they had followed that principle as closely as it was practicable and convenient to do so. There are many counties that were overpowered numerically by those adjacent to it, and in order to secure anything like a fair redistribution it was necessary to take from one and add to another. The hon. member for West Durham justified the abolition of Cornwall and Niagara. Why did he justify that and at the same time argue for hours in favor of retaining other electoral districts with very few more inhabitants than Cornwall and Niagara? In regard to Cornwall, the hon. gentleman says the Government were justified in abolishing that constituency because it was a step in the right direction. Why was it in the right direction? Was it because it returned a Conservative to this Parliament, because it was sure, if left with its present boundaries, to return another Conservative, or because it has a small population. If there is one feature in the Bill of which I have any doubt as to its not being strictly correct, it is as to abolishing the town of Cornwall, because it has a growing population. But the hon. gentlemen says you may abolish Cornwall with 9,904 people, but you must retain North Brant with 11,894. Why is North Brant to be retained and Cornwall abolished? Is it because one is Conservative and the other is represented by what he terms a Reformer or a Grit. The hon. gentleman is desirous of retaining North Brant, and would like South Wentworth with 14,993 and West Elgin with 14,214 to be retained as they are, but he objects to any diminution in the electoral districts of East Elgin with 28,147, East Middlesex with 30,600, North Perth with 34,207, North Huron with 27,104, Bothwell with 27,102, North Ontario with 28,434, Muskoka with 27,204, and would retain of course according to the same argument North Victoria with only 13,799. It is a crime in his eyes to have electoral districts equalized territorially and numerically, but if the hon. gentlemen can only retain half a dozen or a dozen constituencies in the West averaging from 11,000 to 14,000, composed of gentlemen who will follow him (I will not use such language in regard to them as the hon. gentleman used to members on this side of the House), it would be quite right and proper. Abolish the Tory constituencies as much as you please; it is all right and proper; but Reform constituencies should be preserved, even though the members represent, proportionately, but one as compared to every three or four electors represented by Conservative members. If that is not the hon. gentleman's argument, it is nothing. The hon. gentleman never uttered a word against that, but, lawyer-like, and very few members are equal to the hon. gentleman when speaking from a brief, he would have condemned the Government just as strongly if they had abolished Grenville. North Leeds, with a population of 12,929, hon. gentlemen opposite would like to remain, while they sustain the retention of Grenville with about the same population. The hon. gentleman had not the common honesty to tell the House, when he spoke of North Leeds being reduced that the readjustment occurred from the fact of the increased population at Brockville, nor did he tell the House when speaking that his own party dismembered another municipality alongside of Brockville, by adding two or three Grit townships by which they could secure the seat for a member of the Ontario Cabinet. There is no excuse on the ground of the hon. gentleman's lack of intelligence, because he knew it, and was no doubt a party to it at the time. If his party had not attached the township of Young to Brockville they would have lost their Minister of Public Works in the Ontario Government. Let me go through the changes and see what has been done. The hon. gentleman's figures were comparatively accurate as far as population is concerned, but in one or two particulars they were not correct. The town of Cornwall was found with a population at present of 3,904. The hon. gentleman is quite willing that that should be abolished. Stormont, which adjoins it and which forms a part of the same county has a population of 13,294, and by adding Stormont and Cornwall together they obtain a population of 23,198, that is about as fair and equitable a division as under these circumstances you could obtain except you divide some municipality. Carleton had a population of 24,689, while North Lanark, which was represented by a follower of his own and a Liberal, the hon. gentleman did wish disturbed, seeing no reason why a Grit should not represent 13,000 while a Tory alongside should have 20,000 or 24,000 to represent; or, in other words, one Grit, according to the hon. gentleman, was as good as two Conservatives. However, that being a matter of opinion, we will not discuss it. Carleton has 18,777 instead of 24,689; North Lanark, 19,855 instead of 13,943; South Lanark, 19,949 instead of 20,032 or 18,19 and 19 as compared with 13,24 and 20. Could you by any possibility, without dividing different municipalities and villages conceive any greater equality than that contained in the Bill. It is true we have Brockville with 15,107 and North Leeds with 12,443, but the hon. gentleman objected that Brockville should have been increased from 12,000 to 15,000, while Smith's Falls has been taken from South Lanark and added to North Leeds, thereby making the constituencies as nearly equal as possible. Peterborough East had 23,956 and it has been reduced to 20,058. The hon. gentleman was horrified at the idea of West Brant being forty miles in length, and one would suppose that no such case prevailed in our representation. East Peterborough is 100 miles in length; North Hastings, which I represent, is 100 miles long by thirty-five miles wide. It may be the hon. leader of the Opposition is desirous to have pocket-boroughs which would return men to support him and the party which he leads. In order to equalize East Peterborough, territorially as well as otherwise, we deducted three or four townships from that very large riding, and attached them to North Victoria, an addition which the hon. member for North Victoria will not like, because it will give him a great deal more difficulty to canvas the constituency. And by that division we increased its population from 13,799 to 16,540, and we not only increased its population but we increased its territory, by which, I repeat, it would have more territory and a greater probability in the future of the population increasing in that neighborhood, and reducing the east riding of Peterborough so as to bring it within the reach of reason. Well, Sir, we went to the Ontarios. True, the hon. gentleman objects to the division in the Ontarios, and he points out how one municipality is interfered with—how one municipality is detached from another, in order, he says, to accomplish political objects. The House knows and the country will know, from reading the Bill, that in giving additional members to this House, the Government have selected those portions of the Provinces which are most densely populated, and in increasing the representation of these particular localities, it was absolutely necessary to detach one municipality from another. South Ontario had 20,378 of a population, it now has 20,244; North Ontario had 28,434, and that has been reduced to 20,825. And this new riding to which the hon. gentleman has alluded has a population of 19,732, making these three ridings as readjusted as nearly as possible the same in population without interfering with separate municipalities, either villages or townships. But the hon. gentleman objects because a village, one portion of which lies in one municipality and another in another, is placed wholly in one electoral division. The village to which he referred, lies territorially in two of the Yorks, and is a separate and distinct municipality of itself. Part of it for electoral purposes lies in one municipality and part in another. The hon. gentleman, if he takes the Bill from one end to the other, will find that in every instance where we have found a village, part of which lies in one county and part in another, we have invariably in cases where it was a municipality in itself, allotted to some one riding or the other. Some difficulty occurred in my own riding some years ago, when, if I remember aright, by a special Act the village of Stirling was attached to North Hastings. It was attached as Stouffville is, and as Palmerston and others which have been alluded to, to an electoral division, and I ask the House and the country if the plan we have followed is not correct in theory and in principle. Then the hon. gentleman complains of the division of Muskoka and the Simcoes. At the last census Muskoka had 27,204, and it is now reduced to 17,640. Those who were in the House when Muskoka was erected into an electoral division in 1872 will remember that it had between 8,000 and 9,000 inhabitants, and hon. gentlemen denounced the erection of that territory into a separate and distinct electoral division. It was declared that the Government were creating another rotten borough. It was declared that while there were large counties, numerically speaking, in Ontario, that had only one representative, the new riding of Muskoka was given an equal voice and power in this House, while it had only 8,000 or 9,000 of a population. During the last ten years that territory has increased to nearly 28,000 inhabitants, and if it has been reduced to 17,000 now, it is on the same principle upon which it was given a representative in 1872. It is in the new and unsettled portions of Ontario, where we must expect the great increases to take place, and I venture to say, that in 1892, whoever may live to see it, Muskoka will have increased much greater in population than any of the older settled parts of Ontario, and Muskoka by that time will have her full quota and more comparatively than she has to-day as compared with 1872. The Yorks contain at present 23,312, 24,502, 18,884, while under the redistribution they will have 22,853, 21,730 and 18,884, or as nearly equal as it is possible to make them. It is true that in order to form a new riding—to give that thickly settled and wealthy portion of Ontario another representative in the Councils of the Country, it was necessary to take from one and give to the other, but I repeat that so far as the duties of a member of this House are concerned, he has nothing to do with territorial limits or the county, or township, or village in which he lives, from the fact that local questions which crop up constantly in the Local Legislature, cannot arise in the Dominion Parliament. Then, Sir, we come to the south-western peninsula of Niagara. The hon. gentleman denounced Niagara as a rotten borough in 1872. He denounced its retention as a parliamentary riding as a gross violation of the principles upon which the Confederation was based so far as the representation of the country was concerned, and now he approves of it.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon. gentleman say that he does not.

Mr. BLAKE. I disapproved of it then, and I disapprove of it now.

Mr. BOWELL. You denounced the Government then for retaining it, and now you approve of its being wiped out, probably because it is represented by a Conservative, while the hon. gentleman sustains another division which has scarcely more than one-half more electors than Niagara.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all. I do not sustain it.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly you did, for you denounced the whole scheme. With regard to Niagara and Lincoln the hon. gentleman finds fault with the detaching of one township from a county.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no doubt he would like to have Niagara abolished and tacked on to Lincoln, and let the population remain as it would be with that addition, but he would like to have Wentworth, which returns gentlemen who support him, kept at a population of about one-half. That is the argument the hon. gentleman has indulged in to-night. Lincoln, without Niagara had a population of 22,903. By attaching Niagara to Lincoln with which it is geographically connected, renders it necessary to interfere with the county, for this change increases its population to 26,408; by the re-adjustment it is made 20,901. Haldimand was 18,000; now it is 17,660. These were the only divisions that could be properly made to fairly distribute the population; had they not been made, South Wentworth would have remained precisely as it was, with 14,993 at which figure the hon. gentleman would have liked to retain it, because it would return a supporter of his own to this House. But he forgot to tell the House that the whole of the three municipalities which with the remaining portion of South Wentworth constitute the riding, are Reform. There was no Tory municipality, as he terms it, added to South Wentworth, to swallow up the Reform majority.

Mr. BLAKE. No, but there was a Reform constituency taken away.

Mr. BOWELL. The population of North Brant was increased by the addition of adjacent townships, the only way by which it could be given anything like a correct population. North Brant, as the hon. gentleman would like to retain it, had a population of 11,894; we have increased it to 17,705, and if there had been a possibility of giving it more without cutting a municipality in two as the Ontario Government did, we would have equalized it a little better. South Brant, which had 21,975, is now 19,281, so that the Brants, instead of being 11,000 and 21,000, are now 17,000 and 19,000. The hon. gentleman objected to the reduction of the Oxfords; but the Oxfords had more than their quota. North Oxford which had 25,361, is now reduced to 24,389, and South Oxford, which was 24,732 is reduced to 23,923. North Norfolk, which had 17,219, has now 20,133; and South Norfolk, which had but 16,374, to which the hon. gentleman objects to add the Town of Simcoe, although it lies in the south riding, and naturally and geographically belongs there, is given 19,279, which is certainly a more equitable division than existed before. Now, we will take the Perth, which formed a large part of the hon. gentleman's complaint. We find by the census that the south riding had but 20,778, while the north riding has 34,207; but as the south riding was comparatively a pocket borough for the hon. gentleman he did not want it touched. We, however, carrying out the principle on which this measure is based, made one 21,508 and the other 25,538. The arrangement of the Bruce, the hon. gentleman says, is the most iniquitous scheme ever propounded. If the hon. gentleman carried his mind back over the past ten years, he would know that the population of the county of Bruce has increased very rapidly, and if it increases in the same ratio within the next ten years, that increase must be in the north riding, so that, although North Bruce is now the smallest in the county, the same principle prevailed with regard to its arrangement that prevailed elsewhere. It was but fair and proper that those sections of country in which a great increase of population is expected should have their population so established as to give them the same representation as the counties around them. The county of Bruce contained a population of 64,774, with two representatives; upon the principle of equal representation as near as possible. We established three ridings, consisting of 22,618, 25,618 and 17,655 respectively, and I have no doubt that before many years roll round North Bruce will be as strong numerically as either of the other ridings when the disparity which exists now will exist no longer. We now come to the Elgins. The hon. gentleman thought that East Elgin, having a population of 28,147, and West Elgin, having but 14,215, should not be interfered with except by taking the town of St. Thomas from the East and adding it to the west riding. Perhaps if there had been no other readjustment necessary in order to equalize the population, the suggestion by the hon. gentleman might have been accepted. But as Bothwell, and Kent, and Lambton, and Essex, lie in the same group, it was necessary in the readjusting of West Elgin to readjust the others, and regard was to be had to population. Well, the result of the readjustment is that East Elgin, instead of having 28,147, has 26,304; and West Elgin having before 14,214, has now 23,480. So the two Elgins have a population of 23,000 and 26,000 each, instead of 28,000 and 14,000 respectively. East Elgin is represented by a Conservative and West Elgin by a follower of the hon. gentleman opposite. Two to one must be retained in this place as well as others. One Grit of course, is just as good as two Conservatives, and ought to have double the voice in the representation of the people, that possessed by two Conservatives, taking the hon. gentleman's argument, this is his theory. The question of representation by population has very little to do with his argument or principles when it suits his political purposes. We have Bothwell next, with a population of 27,102, which is now reduced to 24,115. Kent had 36,626, now reduced to 28,112. It ought to have been reduced still further if possible, if it could have been done without dividing townships or villages, to a small number, in order to come down to what the hon. gentleman calls the correct quota for each division in the country.

Mr. MILLS. It is quite possible.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman thinks he is quite capable of accomplishing this object, if he had the matter in hand, and two or three more constituencies to add to the Province of Ontario. If the population would have justified it I have no doubt we could have carved it out as the member for West Durham has suggested. But having but four new constituencies to add, and two to abolish, we divided them as equitably as we could, at the same time reducing the larger constituencies to a minimum, without dividing the different townships and adding to those which had but a few. Well, Kent has been reduced to a population of 28,112. Essex, the hon. gentleman thinks, with the same disregard to the population of the country, should have been divided north and south without any townships being attached to it. He was quite willing that Kent should have retained its 3,000 or 4,000, and I have no doubt my hon. friend from Essex would have been very glad, if the suggestion could be adopted and Romney taken from that County. Oh, said the hon. gentleman, South Essex is a Reform Constituency and they gave to it no strength. Has he forgotten that it is represented in the Ontario Legislature by a Conservative.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. BOWELL. You either forgot the fact or attempted to deceive the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I stated that I took the figures of 1878.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman, if he had analyzed those figures, knows that the vote given in 1878 against my hon. friend from Essex, for certain reasons which did not exist at the local election, and that when the east riding was contested at the local election it was carried by Mr. Wright by two or three hundred majority. Then he tells us that it is a Reform constituency. It is one of those constituencies in which the electors have an opinion of their own, and which expresses its opinion on principles. It is well, as the Premier said a few years ago, that the opinions of the intelligent electors are not bound by territorial limits. It is one of the boasts of a free country, not only on this but on the other side of the line, that the people mark their ballots in accordance with principles and not for the men who are running at the particular time. And if they thought that the Government of 1873 did wrong, they marked their disapprobation by returning the late Ministry to power; but after five years' experience of the hon. gentlemen opposite, those same electors, having changed their opinion as to their administrative abilities, as to their honesty of political profession, reversed that judgment. In the neighboring Republic we find that scarcely at any two Presidential elections is the same vote cast. As new principles crop up the necessities of the country require a change or the adoption of another policy, in order either to mar or assist its progress, the people, as intelligent, educated men, cast their ballots accordingly. And so it was in Ontario and South Essex, the hon. gentleman had therefore no right to claim it as a pet Reform constituency. Essex is now altered by the addition of Romney, the north riding having a population of 25,609, leaving the south with 21,303. We have increased the population of South Essex by making it nearly 22,000, while North Essex will have exactly the same territorial division as the Ontario Government leaves it, with 25,659 of a population. But if it had not been for this condition of things—a county with a population of over 36,000, represented by but one conservative, or nearly three times as many inhabitants as the member for Brant represents, the change that is now effected would not have been made. The hon. gentlemen complain of the division of Lambton because it has not been divided up between Lambton and Bothwell counties leaving Essex as before. I think if you will look at the figures and at the territorial divisions you will find that the division is equitable certainly in point of numbers. One division, the West, contains 20,891; the East division contains 21,725. I suppose they would like to have it a little closer. I supposed we could have cut one of the small villages in two and made perhaps the division a little more equal, but it was impossible, taking the county as it was to divide it more equally and fairly. It is true that in the first draft of the Bill, Petrolia was in the wrong place, but that was a printer's blunder which was discovered and corrected. The village of Beamsville was also misplaced and because these were taken out of the ridings in which they had been improperly placed, and placed in the correct ones, the hon. member for West Durham objected to proceeding with the Bill last Saturday. Now we come to Middlesex and to Huron which the hon. gentleman says are gerrymandered. Middlesex and the Ontarios are two of the most wealthy and populous portions of Western Ontario, and because the Government has given an additional representative to each of these two sections of the country, they are denounced for gerrymandering and doing an iniquitous act. It will rest with these constituencies to say whether they will approve of the position that has been taken by the hon. gentleman or whether they will approve of the act of this Government in giving an additional representative to each of these sections of country. The carving out of a new constituency in that particular locality of Middlesex and Huron it was necessary to detach the townships as they have been in order to equalize them. Not a single word fell from the leader of the Opposition during that five or six hours' speech denouncing the formation of any of those constituencies, except that of North Brant which he said was 48 miles long. South Middlesex, the new constituency that is created, contains a population of 18,884, and East Middlesex that formerly contained 30,600 is now reduced to 24,552; West Middlesex that had 21,496 has now 19,491; North Middlesex that had 25,000 has now 21,496, and South Middlesex that had 21,239 has now 19,540. As I have already pointed out, the necessity of changing the county of Huron in order to equalize the counties as much as possible, the township of Stephens was added to North Middlesex in order to increase its population, while South Huron had attached to it the town of Goderich, and the township of Colborne, Centre Huron had a population of 26,474. Now how do they stand? The north riding of Huron had 27,104. The hon. member for West Durham found a great deal of fault because that municipality had been reduced by adding a portion to the county in Bruce. Centre Huron instead of having 26,474 has now a population of 22,321.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman is mistaken by 3,000.

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon. gentleman explain how.

Mr. CAMERON. I detach Goderich and Colborne from Centre Huron and add 444 for Brussels.

Mr. BOWELL. You should also detach Usborne from South Huron?

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman said that Centre Huron contains now 22,000. I say it only contains 19,443. His figures are all wrong.

Mr. BOWELL. And South Huron which formerly contained 23,393 now contains 23,916. It may be possible the hon. gentleman is right, I am not prepared to say distinctly he is not, but I am inclined to think my figures are correct. I have gone over them very carefully, and am satisfied they are correct. You can take the whole divisions from beginning to end and you will find that they are based on the principle that hon. gentlemen opposite advocated and on account of which they condemned the Government in the past in the most uncompromising terms. Taking the bill as a whole I defy the hon. gentleman to make a more equitable readjustment in regard to population and locality. The peroration of the hon. gentleman was similar to those which he generally makes on all questions. It was a rhetorical display which certainly does him great credit, but if he would adhere a little closer to arguments and facts and less to splitting of hairs, which characterizes Chancery lawyers and more particularly one of his standing at the bar, people would have more confidence in him than they have to-day. This is a question which we might discuss without using those strong adjectives he has so often used towards those who do not agree him. I have no doubt that if he goes to the country he will find that the people will not be misled by declamation such as he has uttered here to-day. It is marvellous that all the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are afraid of going to the people. He tells us that the Government is doomed. They say the Government is afraid to retain office until the expiry of the parliamentary term, and that the whole country is rising in denunciation of its policy. Now if the country holds the opinion that it is represented on the other side of the House as holding, surely the Opposition ought to court an appeal to the country at once. If the Government are willing to relinquish the eighteen months remaining of the parliamentary term, and appeal to the people now, it shows that they have perfect confidence that the country will again endorse their policy. If the Government retained office until the end of the term they would do precisely as their predecessors did—holding on to power with such tenacity as characterizes them in holding on to every office ever they had an opportunity of putting their clutches upon. If the people of this country are opposed to the policy adopted by this Government, the sooner they make their opposition known the better it will be for all parties, and particularly for capitalists who are specially desirous of being assured that the policy of the Government is a stable one. If the policy of the Government of the last three or four years is to be set aside, and we are to go back to the days of deficits and depression, when men were seeking employment in great numbers without finding it, and we are to have, instead, the principle of free trade inaugurated, then let the country know it. Then the people will know that it is not safe for them to invest their money in this country. Many of the hon. gentlemen opposite have been trimming on this question, but, I am glad to know, there are a few who have nailed their free trade colors to the mast and will accept no compromise. Let them go to the country purely and squarely on that issue, and then we shall know whether the country is going to pursue a policy that has made the neighboring Republic great and prosperous, or whether it is to be reduced to the straits in which it was a few years ago, when we shall be dependent, not only upon our neighbors, but upon every other country. If we are to accept the speeches of the hon. member for Lambton, I should say that he intends to pursue the same policy that he pursued after his accession to power. The same language he used then he has used lately in his speeches in the West and in this House. The people should learn that, notwithstanding their promises when they attained to power, they violated every one of them, and I shall be very much mistaken if, on appeal to the people, they do not tell them that they have as little confidence in them now as they had in 1878.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no intention of speaking at the present moment upon the merits of the question, but I desire to ask if the hon. gentleman who has just sat down alluded to me as making known the contents of a telegram addressed to him.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then, Sir, I can only say that the longest and best part of the hon. gentleman's name is the same as mine, and a telegram was delivered at my desk which I tore open naturally the moment I got it, and when I saw the address inside, I immediately carried it over to him and told him that I had not seen a word of the message. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should have thought me capable of doing such a thing.

Mr. BOWELL. There is an adage of a man telling just half the truth. I am not referring to the telegram the hon. gentleman opened in this House addressed to me, but to a telegram he opened in the Railway Committee Room. As to the first telegram, it is quite true that the hon. gentleman did cross the floor of the House with an open telegram and handed it over to me saying: "Here is a telegram I opened through mistake, but I have not read it." The other telegram, that was opened in the Railway Committee Room, I saw him holding in his hand and reading it. I did not know it was mine until he handed it over to me saying, "I have made another mistake." I know that immediately afterwards in the railway train and everywhere else the contents of that telegram were talked of by a late colleague of the hon. gentleman who said—what was a falsehood—that I at once took up my hat and rushed away to the telegraph office and gave the telegraph operators a blowing up for sending my telegram to the hon. gentleman. I do not say the hon. gentleman opened it knowingly, but that it was he who opened it—and I think if he had common decency, the decency of one gentleman to another—he certainly would not have read its contents. One thing is quite certain, I never told the contents to the hon. gentleman's colleague.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say that I did not see a single word of the message in question. I hope I am incapable of doing such a thing, and I hope I have not sat for twenty-five years in Parliament to hear a single gentleman think I could be capable of doing such an act.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's denial; I have only to add that I did not tell the contents to the hon. gentleman's friends.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think my hon. friend who sits beside me need believe that a single human being whose opinion in Canada is worth respect will attach the slightest importance to any charge of the sort that may be brought against him by any man in this House, let him be whom he may. Now, Sir, as regards the measure before us, I, for one, can say that I am not in the slightest degree surprised by this Bill. It is true, as the hon. gentleman for West Durham has said, that the measure now in your hands is a cowardly measure, a dishonest measure and a treacherous measure. It is most true that the measure in your hands is one which it is not possible to conceive that any man of honor could introduce, or that any man of honor could vote for under any conceivable circumstances. Sir, it is most true that the measure violates every principle—I do not say that the introducer ever held—but that the introducer ever professed or ever put on record in this House. It is most true that this measure openly applies one distinct rule of action to the Province of Ontario and another distinct rule of action to every other Province in this Dominion. It is most true that he applies one rule and one measure to constituencies of equal strength lying side by side, and that at every point and every passage of this Bill, every shadow of a principle which the hon. gentleman proposes to base it upon is openly and flagrantly violated. I say now, I say it is a measure which will, if it becomes law, pave the way to a great and radical change in the constitution of this country, and the hon. gentleman who does not like intelligence and foresight, and who is aware as to what is involved in such a measure, must be satisfied that although he is the nominal leader of the party which professes to uphold the constitution he is by this measure laying the axe to all principles on which the constitution rests. I am not surprised. I knew the man, knew what he is capable of, and I was not the least surprised that he should have brought down the measure. If hon. members will look at past history they will find the hon. gentleman's record. Is not this the man who, after denouncing his colleague as being steeped to the lips in corruption, held office for many years at the good will and pleasure of his friends? Is not this the man who was driven into a corner by some of the intrigues in 1868, particularly by a piece of treachery—the most outrageous in the history of any country—the man who would not, on any account, consent to the introduction of the Federal principle in legislation, and yet when the choice came between losing office and accepting the Federal principle, he accepted the latter.

Mr. BOWELL. You supported them in everything at that time.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In 1868 I sought another and better leader, but could not find him. I will not allude to the circumstances under which the hon. gentleman lost power in 1873. But if the hon. Minister of Customs talks of conspiracies and dares to say that the hon. First Minister was turned out of office by unworthy means I ask what honest man can look back without a blush rising to his cheek at the manner in which Canada was disgraced by the hon. gentleman who occupied the Treasury benches in 1872; but of all his dishonorable acts none are more dishonest and more treacherous to the interests of Canada than this measure. The measure shows what the hon. member is ready to do when he thinks he has power. It shows, too, the point of degradation to which his followers and the country have been reduced. One question alone remains to be answered. Has that hon. gentleman judged correctly of the debasement of his followers here and outside of this House? Have four years of the hon. gentleman's rule so debased and degraded what was once a good and honest party that they are prepared to throw aside every sense of fair play and every instinct of pride and enable the hon. gentleman to consummate his efforts. For the sake of Canada, for the sake of all of us, I hope the hon. gentleman will not follow up his conclusions in this case. What is the aim of the hon. gentleman? His object is clear. The measure is framed so that it will prove injurious to his own Province, where he has lost the good will of the people and it is desired to give a minority of the voters in Ontario control of the majority of seats. What is his pretext for doing so? What has the hon. Minister of Customs told us is the pretext? The Minister of the Interior, of all men in Canada, in his old age comes forward as an advocate of equality, and in order to adjust four seats in Ontario finds he must change the boundaries of fifty-four constituencies. So fond of equality and representation is the gentleman that he has prepared a scheme by which, if carried out as he hopes and expects it will be, will enable one-third of Ontario to control two-thirds of the seats, and that is what he calls equality of representation. All through the other Provinces there is to-day the greatest possible inequality of representation, even not excepting Manitoba. The hon. gentleman's supports is as crooked as his politics. I do not deem it necessary to go at length over the arguments which have been put forward by my hon. friend, but in answer to the reply, if reply it can be called, of the Minister of Customs, I will take four or five groups of constituencies in various parts of Ontario, and I will show with what zeal the principle of representation by population has been applied. No one objected to the grouping of Cornwall and Stormont, but we find that the hon. gentleman who desired to apply the principle of equality of representation calls attention to the fact that at this moment there are upwards of thirty constituencies in eastern Ontario, with an average population of 15,000 as against sixty in western Ontario, which average 22,000 or 23,000, that the hon. gentleman does not deny and for good reasons, but when he comes to North Leeds and Grenville he has an earnest desire to amend the representation. There is a reason, North Leeds and Grenville contains 12,900 people, or a little more than half the population which was necessary to carry into practice the principles of the hon. gentlemen. Why, Sir, after you deduct the township of Chitley with 2,593, and after you add Smith's Falls with a population of 2,087 you get this result, that North Leeds and Grenville, which was nearly 10,000 too small is 500 souls smaller than before. In virtue of the principle of equality of representation the hon. gentleman asks this House to decree that North Leeds and Grenville instead of having 9,929 shall have 12,423, and that is the first step in his pathway to equality of representation. But Sir, he redresses all that. Brockville is too small. It has only a population of 12,500. To Brockville shall be added Chitley, with a population of 2,593, making a total population of 15,000 souls. Now let us mark how well this hon. gentleman acts up to his professions. Close to Brockville, in direct municipal connection with Brockville is the county of South Leeds. South Leeds contains a population of 22,206, something like 1,300 souls more than the proportion it should have—something like 4,000 more than the proportion it should have as compared with the groups of 30 constituencies at the end of Ontario. Now, had the hon. gentleman desired to apply this principle, had he been actuated by any honest impulse in this matter would he have travelled far enough to select Chitley, would he have taken from South Leeds, which had a population considerably in excess of what it should have on any fair ground of proportion of division and added it to Brockville? Let the House judge what are the grounds upon which he passed South Leeds with 22,000 of a population and fixed upon North Leeds and Grenville with 12,900 as the county from which the extra number should be drawn. But the hon. Minister of Customs tells us that in all these cases we should have regard to the probable growth of the constituencies. He said with some degree of force, if you find that certain constituencies from year to year are growing larger you may fairly assign those in some cases a smaller number, trusting that the growth of population will soon rectify the apparent inequalities. Now it happens that in a constituency well known to the hon. Minister of the Interior and myself, and well known to many member of this House that that the hon. gentleman had a most excellent opportunity of putting in practice the doctrine laid down by his own Minister, and how does the hon. gentleman do it? On the occasion of the last Census the county of Frontenac contained 16,300 souls. On the occasion of the last Census Addington contained 2,132, and now let the House mark the just and wise application of the principle respecting growing counties. Addington has increased in ten years something like 2,158; Frontenac has decreased by 1,317 souls, but not one hair's breadth, not one township, not one of the smallest municipal sub-divisions is to be taken from the sacred soil of Addington and put to Frontenac, and most of us who have studied the electoral references can guess the reason why. And this is the most unreasonable because not merely is Addington enormously in excess of Frontenac but it was largely taken away from the original county of Frontenac. Many of the townships deal with the municipal centre of Frontenac and have no natural connection with Addington at all. I come next to South Wentworth. The hon. Minister of Customs spent some time to show what a righteous and excellent thing it was that South Wentworth, with a population of 14,933, should be raised no matter at what expense or inconvenience to 15,539. Sir, allow me to call the attention of the House to one of those remarkable combinations of numbers which sometimes occur. You saw that it went to the heart of the hon. Minister of Customs that South Wentworth, with a miserable population of 14,933 should have been left unaltered and unadded to. But let us look back. We find that Frontenac has 15,933 too. Frontenac and South Wentworth contain to a single unit identically the same population. I believe one difference is that Frontenac is unhappily losing, while South Wentworth is growing a little; but nothing could induce him to touch Frontenac, though he found great urgency for meddling with South Wentworth. From South Wentworth he takes Ancaster, with a population of 4,726—a township which represents, I believe, the utterances of my hon. friend the member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal), and in order to make up for it he adds Grimsby and Caistor and the village of Grimsby, with a population of 5,722, for the purpose of making up for the disproportion which exists in South Wentworth, giving a total population in that riding of 15,929, or only about 6,000 less than the amount to which it should be raised were they going in for the principle of equality of representation. To the case with reference to the Middlesexes, I desire to call the attention of the House particularly. We find that in the case of Middlesex that we have three ridings with a total population of 73,335. Now, Sir, if you will turn to the adjoining county of Huron you will find that there is a population of 76,968. What would be the natural course which the hon. gentleman would have taken had he been desirous of promoting the principle of equality of representation? Would he instinctively come to the county which had nearly 3,500 less, and say I must give that county four members and leave the larger county with three? Is that the case which necessarily and naturally and instinctively suggests itself to the mind of the hon. gentleman. But here also comes in another principle which the hon. Minister of Customs dwelt upon greatly.

An hon. MEMBER. There is not a Minister in the House.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not wonder at it. I have not the highest opinion of these hon. gentlemen, but I may say that it is to their credit that they are ashamed of this measure, But we are not speaking to the Ministers. We do not expect to influence the Ministers. We expect to find an Abigail among the 120 supporters. We expect to find a good many more among the good men and true whom they have deceived for the last six years.

Mr. HESSON. No traitors here.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I wish I could say that even in the absence of the Ministry, but I am sorry to say that I fear that the men who vote for this Bill, whether they know it or not, are in the highest degree traitors, not merely to their own Province but to the Constitution and good government of Canada. My position is this: We were told that a growing population should be considered and respected. Well, we find that in the course of the last ten years the County of Middlesex has increased 5,566; we find that the County of Huron has increased 10,802; therefore, on every rule of right, on every reasonable ground that can be urged, if you were going to give four members anywhere you ought to have given them to Huron and not to Middlesex. But why was the representation given to Middlesex and not to Huron? Because the people of Huron were too troublesome to be trusted with four constituencies, while in Middlesex two might have been saved out of the fire. But when the people of Ontario come to understand the principle of this measure, I can assure hon. gentlemen that they will resent the idea that the whole territories and constituencies of that Province should be made a matter of bargain and traffic by hon. gentlemen opposite. What is the argument of these hon. gentlemen? They tell us, forsooth, that they are justified in cutting and carving many of these constituencies, because they allege that Mr. Mowat, in the local divisions of Ontario, chose to make certain alterations. My hon. friend has shown that Mr. Mowat, in every case in which he did not strictly respect the proper municipal divisions, adopted the division made in 1872 by hon. gentlemen opposite themselves; and yet the talk of the division of townships made by Mr. Mowat as being irregular. But the hon. gentleman told us it was of no consequence to the Dominion Parliament, whether municipal divisions were respected or not. Is he a subordinate minister prepared to disavow all the utterances of the hon. First Minister on this subject no longer ago than the 28th of April, when on introducing this Bill, he said with regard to his speech of 1872:

"I do not go back on a single word of what I said then. I said then, and I say now, it is of great importance to keep the arrangement of the electoral and municipal divisions which were the same, and I contended then that it was of great importance that the municipal counties should be the electoral districts and I gave my reasons, that young men would first become Councillors, then Reeves and then Wardens, and there would be municipal as political uniformity."

Is the Minister of Customs the true exponent of the doctrines of the Government, or does the Minister of the Interior, as of right, expound the sentiments upon which the majority of this House are to base their legislation? The Minister of Customs went further; he asserted that my hon. friend objected to the division of the Peterboroughs and the Victorias. Now, I took careful note of what my hon. friend said, and I did not hear him say one word against that division. The hon. member went on to explain that the reason Haldimand, already below the proper quota was reduced, was because it was necessary to add to South Wentworth; and he said that there was no Tory addition made to South Wentworth. Well, Sir, if there was no Tory addition made there was a very large reform subtraction. And what did the hon. gentleman say about Bruce? He represented that it was necessary to make provision for a growth in population, where it was limited, but nothing could induce him to disturb the statu quo of my hon. friend for Frontenac. As in the case of Essex, my hon. friend showed in the clearest and most distinct manner, that by observing the municipal boundaries by taking away from Bothwell, which is slightly overgrown, and adding to Kent, without the slightest difficulty, without disturbing any municipal boundary from one end or the two counties to the other, my hon. friend showed in great detail that it was perfectly possible to equalize the representation, and at the same time to keep the municipal boundaries; and he showed an utter disregard of all such boundaries in the proposed division. Was there an attempt made on that side of the House, to shake my hon. friend's proof that there were fifteen constituencies at one end of Ontario which have double the representation of fifteen at the other end. Was there the slightest reference made to it? No; it was one of those clear distinct facts which the people can understand, which they shall please Providence, have an opportunity of understanding, and on the understanding by which they will condemn the hon. gentleman's scheme as an impudent fraud and an impudent attempt to deceive and mislead the people of Canada. The hon. the First Minister is an expert tactician. He has not studied in vain the constitution under which we live. He knew that under our existing system of representation there is a plot; he knew that there is a danger here, like many dangers that are known to exist in the British Constitution from which ours is in part derived if that plot is taken advantage of by an unscrupulous administration for their own vile purposes. Every man who has paid the slightest attention to our system of representation, especially when it is carried out under the very perfect municipal system we possess, knows that where the constituencies are, as in Ontario, closely divided, the difference not exceeding 100 or 200 voters between the two sides in politics, it is always possible for an unscrupulous man so to gerrymander the constituencies that one-third of the voters may be able to return, under cover of the law, two-thirds of the representatives. The case is clear. We may have in thirty constituencies an average majority of 500, and in sixty others an average majority of 100. We should then, on the whole representation, have a total majority of 9,000 votes, or far more than the present Ministers received; and yet we may be left with but one-third the representation in this House. That is the blot on the measure known to exist, and pointed out as hostile to the British Constitution; and, up to the present, not only in Great Britain, but in every British Colony, the trust of the people has been that their representatives will be too honorable and high-minded to avail themselves of that blot, or to attempt, by such unjust and unfair means, to prevent the will of the people from being exposed on the floor of Parliament. Now, I think that the English people and their descendants heretofore have relied on these two things—on a sense of justice among the legislators and on the weight of public opinion—to correct them if they went astray. Have we to ask ourselves now whether these things exist and can be trusted in Canada? If they do exist, then I feel that those hon. gentlemen never made a greater mistake in their own interest than if they vote for a measure like the present. But if it does not succeed—if, by any misfortune, the people should consent to allow this nefarious scheme to go into effect, then I warn the House that they are preparing for themselves very great constitutional changes. It is not to be expected or desired that the Reform party, a party so powerful at present that it controls by an overwhelming majority the Local Legislature, will sit down patiently under a wrong like this. Hon. gentlemen may depend upon that they will be punished soon, if not immediately, for supporting such a measure. I believe the hon. Premier has gone far to make changes of our whole constitutional system inevitable by that proceeding. I do not think this scheme will succeed, but it is possible; and I ask if the result of the next general elections shows that the Reform party have a clear majority of the votes polled in Ontario, and yet have failed to get a majority of the seats in this House, is that a state of things conducive to good government, or likely to make the people of Ontario respect and obey the decisions of the Dominion Parliament? I felt surprised the Minister of Customs would rise in his place, and, in face of the facts cited from this side of the House, could pretend that Ministers were actuated by a desire to promote equality of representation. Why could he not take the more honest and straightforward, if more unscrupulous line, and tell us at once that they had the power, and would use it, to deprive the people of Canada and our party of their just rights. That admission at any rate would have a respect for the truth. A Bill to give Ontario four new seats has caused an alteration of the boundaries of 54 constituencies. Let me contrast this course with that of the hon. member for Lambton, when, in 1874, he had the opportunity of using the power he legally possessed to secure the discomfiture of his opponents. The House knows that my hon. friend and his supporters had long contended that it was right, proper and desirable that the general elections should all be held on the one day. Yet in 1874 the law gave him power to hold those elections as he pleased. What did he do? Did he take any mean advantage of it? Did he bring on all the elections in Ontario on the same day? Every man knows the effect on the public mind, and the overwhelming victory we secured, and that small as the Conservative minority was in 1874, it would have been vastly smaller had my hon. friend used the power he then possessed. Hon. gentlemen opposite think they have effectually provided for the retention at any rate, of a certain number of seats. In those calculations they depend on the vote that was cast in 1878. Now, the natural changes which have taken place since have been large, the exodus from Canada has been large, and what is more to the purpose there was in 1878 a very considerable vote which held back and was in many cases large enough to have turned the day in many constituencies; and Ministers may find now that all this trickery and deceit may have the effect of driving the more respectable number of their party from them in sheer disgust and despair. I repeat the Government have shown by this act that they have no regard for the interests of Ontario; that Ontario is looked upon, as the late Geo. Brown said, "rather as the milk cow from which they might draw to support their extravagance, than as the great Province whose rights and interests should be respected in this House." I will say that if the people of Ontario, after what they have seen and experienced at the hands of these hon. gentlemen opposite, should sustain them by their generous vote, which I do not in the slightest degree believe, they will show that they desire to be trampled upon, their rights disregarded and their liberties made a football of by the present Administration.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The only attempt made on behalf of the Government to answer the arguments of the hon. member for West Durham was a singularly feeble and ineffective one. What the hon. member for West Durham contended was that the principle of county representation had been violated in almost every instance. The answer which the hon. Minister attempted to make was, that the Government had endeavored to follow the principle of representation by population. He admitted, in fact, what he could not deny, that they paid no regard whatever to municipal and county boundaries. The hon. member for West Durham showed that there was a way by which the principle of representation by population could be in a large measure followed by observing municipal and county boundaries. For instance, as he showed in the case of Brant, if you take North and South Brant, and add the populations together, you would have about 34,000; and by dividing them as nearly as possible you would leave each riding a population of 17,000, which is a larger number than that of many of the constituencies which this Bill leaves untouched. Again, with regard to Elgin, the hon. member for West Durham showed that, without changing the county of

Elgin within its own municipal boundaries, there was an opportunity to equalize the populations between the east and west ridings. So with regard to Peterboro, the west riding has a population of about 14,000 and the east riding nearly 24,000, why should not that be equalized? Why should West Peterboro be left with a population under the quota and East Peterboro with a population over the quota, when the latter could have been reduced so as to equalize the numbers? It will be found that, in every case mentioned by the hon. member for West Durham, the equalization of population could have been obtained without the extraordinary disregard for municipal boundaries which this Bill exhibits. There is one remarkable feature about this scheme which I do not think has been referred to. There are as many as twenty-eight rural constituencies which have not been interfered with. Of those twenty-eight, twenty-four are represented in this House by Conservatives and only four by Liberals, and the total number of rural constituencies interfered with is forty-seven, of which twenty-six are represented by Conservatives and twenty-one by Liberals. Nearly half the constituencies interfered with are represented in this House by members of the Opposition, a proportion out of all keeping with the number of Opposition members from Ontario. What does this mean? It means that where the Conservatives in this House felt they were safe their constituencies were not interfered with, and that where they did not feel safe, they have either increased their strength, by relieving themselves of Liberal townships or by arranging so that they would get Conservative townships from adjoining constituencies. In what instances has that been done? This is altogether independent of that scheme of hiving which the hon. member for West Durham has well illustrated. We find Conservative members being relieved in the manner I have indicated in the following constituencies: South Lanark, East York, North York, Lincoln, Monck, North Perth, East Elgin, East Middlesex, North Middlesex and North Huron. We find that Conservative townships have been added to constituencies that were considered too weak, where they could be spared from other constituencies. They have been spared from Carleton to weaken the Reform party in North Lanark; they have been taken from Halton to weaken North Wentworth; North Wellington has been made more Conservative by drawing from North Perth; South Grey has been strengthened by drawing from East Grey; and Centre Wellington, by drawing from North Wellington which was previously strengthened by receiving Wallace. In all these instances it will be found on examination that the sole motive for making the change has been to strengthen the Conservative cause and weaken the Liberal. The hon. Minister of Customs has not attempted to impugn the figures of the hon. member for West Durham, showing the political effect of these changes, showing that in some eight or ten cases Reform townships have been thrown together, giving enormous Reform strength in particular counties and weakening the Liberals in a number of adjoining counties. There are some thirty constituencies affected by these "hiving" processes, eight or ten of which will return Liberal members by majorities ranging from 500 to 1,500, and the other twenty, according to the calculation of the framers of this Bill, will return Conservatives. Thus, if this Bill accomplishes its purpose, our number from these groups on this side of the House, now seventeen, will be cut down to ten, whereas before this iniquitous Bill was brought forward, we had every prospect of carrying some twenty-eight out of these thirty. No better illustration can be found of the Government's motive in framing this measure than the fact that out of the thirty seats, of which we now occupy seventeen, they intend to leave us only ten, whereas we had a reasonable expectation of carrying twenty-eight. The hon. Minister of Customs undertook to answer some of the arguments about the inequality of population in respect of only a few of the counties. What did he say in regard to the district about Niagara? We find that the constituencies of Niagara, Lincoln and Monck combined have a population of something like 43,000. If that population were divided equally so as to give a member to Monck and a member to Lincoln each would have a population of something over 21,000. That cannot be considered out of the way, in view of the disparities existing in counties that are not affected by this Bill. If there was a real intention to equalize the population, how do these hon. gentlemen account for the fact that Welland is left with a population of 26,000, and that county adjoins the county of Monck which is reduced to 16,000? Yet those gentlemen say it was an absolute necessity to interfere with the Wentworths, one of which had about 15,000 and the other 16,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, ask yourself if that single instance does not illustrate the plan and plot and scheme upon which this measure has been based? Why was Welland not interfered with? Because the member for Welland could not spare any Conservatives and the hon. member for Monck did not want any Liberals. That is the real secret of it. The hon. member for Welland would gladly have given Liberals to the hon. member for Monck, but the hon. member for Monck did not want them, and so we have this result that that large county is left untouched and the adjoining county of Monck is reduced to 16,000. Then, again, what is the operation in Wellington? We are told that a growing county should be considered. Now, if any riding in Canada is growing it is North Wellington, which has increased its population from 18,000 in 1872, to 26,000 in 1882. It has growing towns and villages and plenty of unoccupied land. It is pretended that regard was had to the prospective increase in North Bruce and Muskoka; but was regard had to that in North Wellington? Why, instead of diminishing it this Bill actually increases its population to a little over 26,000. The population of the whole county is at least as large as the county of Middlesex, which is to have an additional member. The three ridings of Wellington as they now stand are about as nearly equal in population as could be desired. One has 25,400, the other 22,000 odd, and the other 25,000 odd, and the changes that are made by this Bill leave the total population of the county just about what it is now; but they violate the county by taking out of it a Reform township at the south end and adding at the north end, from another county, a Conservative township. Could anything better illustrate the sham and hollow pretence of this equalizing population argument which we have heard advanced? In this county the whole shuffle of the cards results, not in changing the population of the county, but in so distributing it as to weaken the Reform cause in the whole three ridings and to strengthen the Conservative cause in each at the expense of violating in two of the constituencies the boundaries of the county. Then we have the case of the adjoining county of Halton. We have that county mutilated to help the Conservative cause in North Wentworth and weaken the Liberal cause in South Wellington, while the riding of Cardwell, which adjoins South Wellington, has a smaller population than Halton would have even after the township of Nelson was taken out of it. We have that left untouched; why? because the township of Erin, if added to Cardwell, would render Cardwell a doubtful constituency for the Conservatives. The hon. member for Cardwell would not allow Erin to be added to his county, and the result is we have the township of Erin added to a county that is larger in population than the adjoining county of Cardwell. We have a large number of constituencies throughout Ontario left untouched that have populations under 20,000. They are: South Grenville, South Renfrew, Frontenac, Lennox, having only 16,000, while the adjoining county of Addington has 23,000; East Hastings, West Hastings, West Northumberland, Peterborough, with only 13,300—no necessity felt on the part of the Government to interfere with it; Durham East and West, West York, Peel, 16,000 only; and the county of Cardwell, which I have already mentioned. All these counties are left untouched, thus showing that the pretence of equalizing population is a sham. When this Bill was first introduced it was pretended that it was following a precedent set by Mr. Mowat in the Local House, but after the very lucid explanations we have heard of that measure by the hon. member for West Durham, no attempt was made on the part of the Government by their mouthpiece the hon. Minister of Customs, to show that that measure was based on any other principle than that of observing, as far as possible, existing county lines and not transgressing municipal boundaries. There has been no attempt on the part of the Government to answer that. There has been not one solitary reason adduced why the proposition that was laid before us to-night by the hon. member for West Durham, showing where additional members could be given to Ontario in counties having the necessary population, without doing violence to the principle of respecting municipal county boundaries should not be adopted. We have the county of Essex entitled to two members, Lambton entitled to two members, Bruce and Simcoe to three members each, and Dufferin to one member. You can accomplish all the purposes that the hon. leader of the Government said in 1872 were desirable, and still give Ontario the additional representative she is entitled to without doing injustice to either of the political parties. The names given in this Bill to electoral districts are misnomers. We hear read a statement of populations; we are told that the population of North Brant, for instance, is about 12,000, and that it is to be increased to 17,000 or 18,000. Any one listening to these statements would suppose that North Brant was really what the name implies; but what is it? North Brant is to consist of part of two other counties and only a very small part of North Brant. North Brant, in other words, is not North Brant. It might, with as much propriety, be called West Wentworth or East Oxford, for it is made up of townships from both those counties, as well as from North Brant. So with respect to North Oxford, we were gravely told by the hon. Minister of Customs that the old population was so much and that the proposed population would be so much, leaving in the minds of those who have not examined the details to suppose that townships composing new districts were really part of the county of Oxford. The fact is North Oxford is made up of part of Oxford and a part of the south riding of Perth and the north riding of Perth. So with respect to West Ontario, that county should properly be understood as comprising parts of Ontario, parts of East York and parts of West York. So with respect to North Middlesex, part of which is in Middlesex and part of which is composed of townships taken from South Huron. So it is with respect to South Perth. Its boundaries have been altered not only by depriving it of a Reform township to be added to North Oxford, but by having a township from Huron added on the west side. Those names are misnomers, and if the Government really intended to do right in the matter they would insert different names so that the people would not be misled. We have it, as the result of this discussion so far, that the only pretence for this measure is the desire to produce equality of population. That, however, has been shown to be utterly unfounded; not only have greater inequalities been left untouched, but the attempts made to re-adjust have left the constituencies tampered with in a worse position. For instance, in the cases of Leeds, Muskoka and Haldimand, the Government have reduced them very much below the number allowed, while North Wellington, Centre Wellington and Halton have been increased beyond the correct number; so that you find, when you come to disregard the general assertions and examine the details, the true reason must be found in something else, and it has been demonstrated beyond cavil that the motive is a political one, because every one of the changes has been made with a political purpose and with the intention of unfairly retaining Conservatives in office and weakening the Liberal party. Under those circumstances can you wonder that the measure has been received by many of the independent Conservative electors and newspapers with disapprobation. Conservative townships refuse to be made tools of. Hon. gentlemen opposite are ashamed to defend the measure. It has no merits, and no wonder hon. gentlemen opposite desire to vote upon it in silence. The leader of the Government, in proposing the second reading of the Bill, did so in silence, and a desire has been manifested to make no attempt to answer the masterly speech of the hon. member for West Durham. It has been said that we on this side of the House have been desiring a dissolution. Not a word has been said by us indicating a fear of a dissolution if we are to have fair play with respect to the constituencies; but we protest that hon. gentlemen opposite who have been pointing to an alleged growth of public opinion in their favor should seek to take advantage of their large majority here and legislate us out of our seats, conspiring to prevent that full and fair expression of public opinion which they so much profess to court. Why, we cannot fail to come to the conclusion that hon. gentlemen opposite are really afraid to appeal to the people under the same constituencies as in 1878. I feel satisfied, from the expression of opinion we have had by correspondence and through the public press showing a strong sense of the unjust nature of the measure itself, that although the Government may meet some advantages from it, they will not reap the full advantages they expect to reap. I believe we can with confidence appeal to the fair-minded electors and ask them to say whether we are to be treated as this Bill seeks to treat us; over fifty constituencies have been arranged with such disregard of right and justice that not a majority will give a potential voice, but a minority shall return most members, and the larger portion of Ontario will be in the position of being represented in this House, not by members possessing its confidence, but by men who have not its confidence.

Mr. COCKBURN. I desire to offer a few remarks on this Bill, seeing that the county which I have represented is now cut into about five pieces. But before discussing the features of the measure I wish to point to one particular which comes home to myself as representing a new section of the county. The House will observe that no step has been made in giving more representation to the northern portion of Ontario. It is quite true that my constituency has a population of over 27,000, but while it is true that some portions of it should be added elsewhere the Government have gone in the wrong direction. I hold that Algoma and Muskoka should have been put into one constituency, and a new constituency formed in the centre and called by some name and description of the localities—taking the northern portion of Muskoka and the southern portion of Algoma. I hope the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) will assist me in trying to get justice for that portion of the county. As I stated before, the new settlements are entirely ignored. The district of Nipissing, for instance, is entirely unrepresented, and one village of 700 inhabitants in the northern part is totally unrepresented. The Government, in fact, do not appear to have had in view the better representation of the northern part of the Province, but to have confined their efforts to the more southern parts. They take off from my county 5,000 souls and add them to North Ontario, leaving us a little less than 22,000. They go further and take 4,000 more and add them to East Simcoe—in other words, they take from the smaller counties and add to the larger. Among the anomalies, inequalities and oversights in the Bill with regard to Muskoka, I notice that in one case where two townships form one municipality, one goes to one municipality and the other to another; and in another case three townships are omitted altogether—they are not even mentioned—I refer to the townships of Baxter, Gibson and Freeman. These townships, geographically, could most conveniently be added to East Simcoe, and as East Simcoe has a household franchise, the Government could either confer the household franchise upon them, or what would be better, add them to Muskoka. The figures which have been given go to show that my case is not a singular one—that I have not had the antipathy of the Government specially, except as belonging to my party. I humbly submit that the people of this country, of all shades of politics, will look upon this Act with disapproval; that the outrage which has been perpetrated in this portion of the nineteenth century will be denounced by the sensible, independent men of all parties. There are, of course, blind partizans who would support any act of their friends, but I have good reason to believe that the atrocious character of this Bill will defeat its own object. When the House is in Committee I shall have some amendments to suggest, in the direction of removing the anomalies I have indicated. As they do not involve any questions of principle I hope they will be agreed to. For example, I think it is time that the elections of Muskoka were held on the same day as elsewhere. Under the Act the returning officer is obliged to have two weeks intervene between nomination and polling day. I found that a disadvantage in 1878, and though I believe it will operate in my favor at the next election, I am quite willing to forego the advantage if the district is treated the same as other parts of the Province. The local elections are held upon the same day, and considering that the size of the constituency has been diminished and that the roads have been greatly improved, I do not see why it should be treated exceptionally in the Dominion elections. I think also that the name of the district should be changed and that it should be called Muskoka and Parry Sound, as the latter, which is a large and important district should not be ignored. In conclusion, I may say that I think hon. gentlemen should freely own up the corn, as the plea that their plan was to equalize the population is too thinly disguised not to be quite apparent to all. The people will see very plainly that the Government have got themselves into a trap, they have themselves to blame, and I have no doubt they will be visited by condign punishment.

Mr. RYKERT. I do not wonder at the plaintive tone of the last speaker, as I have heard him adopt the same tone in a different place and under different circumstances. I recollect his appealing very strongly on one occasion for Conservative support for which he was abused by the organ of the party to which he now belongs. I believe he was one of the nine martyrs, and I have no doubt, if the Government would only consent to gerrymander two or three townships in his favor, he would be quite willing to be a martyr at the present time. As regards the member for Centre Huron, I think I can dismiss him with a few words. It is necessary for the Reform party always to have dirt slingers; and I know of no man so fitted for the position as that hon. gentleman. I think I should retract those two last words, "hon. gentleman;" and I do retract them—or, rather, I use them in a strictly parliamentary sense. I have known that gentleman for forty years; I knew him at school and he was despised and disliked then as he is now. He was always viewed with suspicion, and the boys were always glad to lock up their lunches when he was about. No man can throw dirt better than the hon. member for Centre Huron, a man despised by almost every one in the community, a man who is the Jonah of the Grit party, and if there is any one person to whom the hon. member for Lambton is indebted for his overthrow, it is to that member and to his contemptible conduct. He treated every person with whom he came in contact as his inferior; the big "I" and the little "u" was his leading principle. The hon. member for West Durham must have been highly flattered by the way in which the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) tried to bolster up his case. One would suppose that, if there is anything at all in the speech of the leader of the Opposition, he required very little assistance from his friends. It must have been clear to the mind of every man who heard him (Mr. Guthrie) that that hon. gentleman feels he was about to receive his quietus at the hands of the electors, provided this Bill goes through the House. I think that future is in store for that hon. gentleman, and I think he sees the handwriting on the wall. The hon. member for West Durham has gone into this matter in the most elaborate manner; and has collected an extraordinary category of adjectives which he has thrown across to this side of the House, but I think they will have very little effect either in this House or in the country. The hon. gentleman has spoken about a conspiracy. Well, he had better not say much about a conspiracy, or he may hear something about one that he was interested in. We can stand being called brutes by the hon. member for Centre Huron, because he does not know better, but when a man of intelligence like the hon. member for West Durham talks about a conspiracy, I tell him that it is just as well to let sleeping dogs lie. But it is necessary for these gentlemen to have a cry. They have failed in their cry about the Pacific Railway upon which they were so anxious to go to the country last year, but the very moment the electors were aroused, and the moment they saw the great benefit that the contract was conferring upon the country and how rapidly the North-West was being developed, that moment these hon. gentlemen, instead of insisting on an appeal to the electors, wanted the elections staved off for a long time. The National Policy cry is no longer used by these hon. gentlemen, but they want some cry to go to the country with, and they seem to have hit upon the gerrymandering cry. They are going to make the electors believe that we are legislating all the Grits out of the House, and going to elect Conservatives; however, I do not believe that the cry will amount to a great deal. The hon. member for West Durham appealed to the sympathy of his friends from the Lower Provinces to rise in indignation and vote down this measure. He contrasted the representation in Ontario with that in the Province of Quebec, but he forgot to tell this House that when Confederation was finally adopted, the principle of representation by population was to be paramount with regard to Ontario, but with regard to the Province of Quebec there was nothing said about representation by population or readjustment; and I venture to say that those who have thoroughly examined the Confederation Act will come to the conclusion that neither the Province of Ontario or the Province of Quebec has any power whatever to increase its representation. That ground was taken on the floor of the Legislature of Ontario, and was never successfully refuted. It was never contemplated to increase the representation of these Provinces for local purposes, but for Dominion purposes. But that Christian politician in Ontario, the Hon. Oliver Mowat, thought he would satisfy Ontario better if he added to that representation. The question of representation by population, however, was not to be considered in the future adjustment of the representation of Ontario, so far as this Dominion is concerned, except as regards the number of members coming from that Province; there is nothing in the British North America Act to indicate that constituencies should be set apart through that Province according to population, but it was intended simply that the Province should have eighty-two members at that time, and increased as the population showed it was necessary, but it does not follow that these members shall represent constituencies of equal population. In this Legislature we have only to consider what interests and benefits the whole Dominion. We have nothing to do with questions affecting counties or municipalities, which are matters for the Local Legislatures, and yet hon. gentlemen want to make capital out of the fact that one man represents 20,000 and another only 12,000 or 13,000. The hon. member for South Wellington seemed delighted that the hon. member for West Durham had answered the charge with regard to the policy pursued by Mr. Mowat in the Local Legislature. Well, Sir, according to my idea, the Hon. Oliver Mowat gerrymandered the Province of Ontario to a greater extent than is done by this Bill. The hon. member for West Durham saw that it was necessary to defend the Mowat Government, and that there was something wrong in his legislation of 1874. Mr. Mowat had only one object in view, viz., to strengthen himself in the Ontario Legislature. What other reason was there for altering the boundaries of Brockville and adding the two Grit townships from the adjoining county unless to strengthen his hands. We all know that county was represented by a large Conservative majority, and the two Grit townships were added to it for the purpose I have mentioned. The town of Brockville and Elizabethtown had townships with a Grit majority of 228 added to overcome the large Conservative majority of the previous election, and in order to have a sure seat for the present Ontario Minister of Public Works who had received a warning in South Grenville. With regard to South Huron, and in the division of other counties, it is said that Mr. Mowat followed the plan adopted by the Dominion Government in 1872. He did no such thing. In Huron he turned about fourteen townships, placing them differently from their positions under the previous Acts. If he desired to act in the interest of the country, and no complaint was made as to the population, what necessity was there for altering that constituency? To meet his own views, and to satisfy the demands of his party, he divided the townships in a way that only the hon. gentlemen opposite would justify. The result of that gerrymandering was, as I have said, which gave the east riding 21,976, the west riding 24,474, and the south riding 22,025, whereas; under the Act of 1872, the south riding had 21,512; Centre Huron 22,791, and the north riding 21,862, almost equal numbers in the three constituencies formed by the Dominion Legislature. But mark the ingenuity of Mr. Mowat. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the one thing he kept in view was to hold the municipalities together. A few days ago it was said the townships were not divided, that the municipalities were kept intact; yet when we challenge this statement, showing that four were divided by Mr. Mowat, they back water and say that they kept them intact so far as the counties were concerned. The end always justifies the means with Liberals when in power. The hon. member for West Durham stated that there were certain associations connected with those municipalities; that the people were in the habit of acting together, and ought to be represented together in this House. Now, what connection is there between municipalities, so far as politics are concerned, and what necessity is there for one township adjoining another, so far as the representation is concerned? Mr. Mowat solved that matter, in endeavoring to justify his little trickery—and he was equal to such tricks so far as Huron is concerned—in order to satisfy his own friends, who represented the three ridings. He justified the dividing up of the townships by geographical lines. He said he had endeavored to find a division that would be correct geographically, looking to the Census, and which would put together those portions most nearly associated in their business relations, and that he found it impossible to do this without dividing the townships. If he wanted to have those social relations kept intact, why did he divide the townships? His object was to get a Grit majority here and a Grit majority there; and he violated the principles which he laid down in the very opening of his speech. He gerrymandered South Wellington in order to secure that constituency. The hon. member for West Durham states that the county of Dufferin was set apart provisionally at that time. He is mistaken. It was not established as a county, nor was the Bill read the second time till after Mr. Mowat made his speech on redistribution. I have got the documents here to show it. The hon. member for West Durham said it was set provisionally apart, but I say it was not, because the provisional setting apart of counties only takes place when the junior county withdraws from the senior county, or when a new county is established and provision is made for officers to be elected for a certain time. The Bill was introduced by Mr. Mowat on the 7th of December. His speech in regard to Dufferin was made that same day, and the second reading of the Dufferin Bill took place on the 9th. After screaming about, as he knows how, to find some excuse for the gerrymandering and for the political slaughter of his opponents, he says:

"The Government had come to the conclusion that the evils of such a change would exceed the advantages, but whenever a new county was to be formed they thought it desirable that it should be represented by a member of this House. There might sometimes be considerations that would make it impossible to carry that out, but now that they had some seats to dispose of it was desirable that if a new county were to be formed during this Session it should receive representation. He believed it was only likely that one such proposal should be made this Session, that referring to the county of Dufferin. One Bill of that kind was brought down in 1873, another in the first Session of the year and now the question was before the House again. It had been urged upon the Government that although they might not be disposed to deal with all the applications for the formation of new counties in which they clashed with one another, there was not sufficient reason to resist the demand from the county of Dufferin which did not clash with any other scheme, and the reasons for which were such as to commend themselves to everybody."

Two days after that, the Bill was read a second time, so that the hon. member for West Durham is a little astray in his historical narration of the case.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman will contradict anything and everything on every occasion and everywhere, regardless of the truth. As regards South Wellington, Mr. Mowat said that he had selected Eramosa on account of its commercial relations with Guelph. Eramosa was a very convenient township to put on, on that account. What on earth had its commercial relations to do with the Local Legislature? The little Premier showed a great deal of ingenuity in endeavoring to find out a reason. In Centre Wellington we found out how much he knew about geography. Talk about gerrymandering. What could be worse than that. [Here Mr. Rykert held up a plan of the county]. See how ingenious the little fellow was. The township of Garafraxa, of which half gave 260 or 270 of a Tory majority, and half gave a Grit majority, the Tory half he adds to Dufferin and the Grit half he places in Centre Wellington; and in order to make it certain Grit he adds Erin township, with 200 Grit majority. I do not think we will hear much more about gerrymandering, as far as North Brant is concerned. Take another county. As I said before, the county of Huron had no less than fourteen townships gerrymandered. Take the county of Grey. Unfortunately the political complexion was not alike all over that county, and in order to make it as beneficial, politically, as he could, he found it convenient to make a change, and wanting to give some reason for it, he said:

"The only change they proposed in making the arrangement which had been adopted by the Dominion, was that they learned that St. Vincent was not connected by railway or travelled road with the township of Artemesia, in which the nominations had been held lately. They learned that if St. Vincent people wished to reach Artemesia it was necessary, if they took the most convenient road, to go first to Owen Sound. They propose therefore, to place St. Vincent where Welland was, and Portland where St. Vincent was."

By doing that they turned the majority in that constituency. The people protested in the strongest terms against the change, but their protestations were unheeded. When, however, it came to the counties of Cornwall and Glengarry the Premier said: "I understand they do not wish to join the town of Cornwall, and consider that the objection should not be disregarded." In this instance he gave effect to the appeal of his friends, though the appeal in the other case was unheeded. Then we come to East Grey, which was changed about by the addition of the township of Langton, and then we come to the celebrated county of Dufferin, which was not a county at all until Mr. Mowat made it. A Bill was introduced in 1873, with different boundaries, which did not become law. He did not ask for the same division as in 1874, because there were five Conservative constituencies which could be made into four Grit and one Conservatives by judicious carving. Not satisfied with that, they gerrymandered Cardwell, which was a county quite square with four townships, but was not of the proper political complexion, and by so doing they succeeded in destroying the Conservative majority. Of the whole counties in Ontario Mowat redistributed not less than twenty-six. Mr. Mowat, seeing that power was slipping from him, felt it necessary to sell some of the assets of the Province in order to make the surplus appear large, although this Government had given him $340,000 a year by assuming the debt, and in order to preserve his hold he proceeded to gerrymander the Province and altered no less than twenty-six constituencies. He paid me the compliment of adding Niagara to my constituency. He hoped to wipe me out. He knew there was a feeling of hostility against me in Niagara on account of my views on the question of the county seat. But for all this at the next general election they gave me a majority of sixty-five, and ever since they have given me a handsome majority. I am ready to test my constituency at any time with the strongest man my opponents can bring forward. We all know that that was done for the purpose of killing me in the county of Lincoln, and the attempt signally failed. The hon. member from West Durham said to-night that I appealed to the Premier to have Clinton and some other township taken back. All I can say is that the county of Lincoln intact gave me a large majority last election, though my opponent was the strongest man they ever had in the county. Hon. gentlemen opposite complain of this Bill as a gerrymandering Bill, but they forget their own attempts to gerrymander. I have heard of a Bill called the Tuckersmith Bill, and I have heard of another Bill to which Col. Higginbotham's name is attached, but I have no doubt the hon. member for Centre Wellington will deal with that matter. Mr. Mowat, in order to retain power altered the counties of Huron, Bothwell, Kent, Lambton, Essex, Cardwell, the Greys, South Simcoe, Wellington and Victoria. Speaking about Wellington, when the Redistribution Bill was introduced in 1872; the hon. member for South Huron pronounced the division in Wellington as a proper division, and I have on record his approval of it. Yet Mr. Mowat, in the face of that, alters that county and changes eight or ten townships in order that these three counties might return a Grit majority. On page 1060 of the Debates, the hon. member for Centre Huron said: "The proposed readjustment of Wellington was right and proper." Changes were made in North Victoria, the Simcoes, East and West Peterborough, North and South Renfrew, Brockville, Niagara, East Northumberland, West York, North Lanark, South Bruce and the three Greys. Now, what was all that done for? In the outset of his remarks he states that it is necessary to increase the number of members for the Province; that the large counties ought to be divided, he gerrymanders over the whole Province. For what purpose? There was no necessity for it. No one ever complained there was any rivalry or jealousy between the eastern and western sections of Ontario. During the time I was a member of the Local Legislature there was no appearance of sectional strife at all. Well, setting out with the proposition that representation by population should be the guiding principle instead of dividing the constituencies, Mr. Mowat left no less than twenty constituencies, having a population of under 15,000 and some as low as 8,000. Now this Bill alters fourteen of those twenty constituencies and raises them up to an average population of 21,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite complain that this Bill does not fairly readjust the representation between the eastern and western parts of the Province. They can look at the Bill introduced by themselves which left some twenty constituencies containing under 15,000 of a population and which this Bill now properly rectifies. Any one who looks at the question for a moment must come to the conclusion that this Bill is in the interest of the general public. According to their organ there are now forty-five constituencies properly readjusted with an average population of 21,000. I think that is an evidence that the Government followed that principle precisely in framing this Bill. True there may be some discrepancies in it, as you may find in any other Bill, but taking the Bill as a whole no person can find fault with it unless it be the hon. member for Niagara whose constituency is to be wiped out, but that hon. gentleman is sufficiently patriotic to perceive that the interests of the whole country ought to dominate over the interests of any small portion of the people, and I feel satisfied that his constituents will take the same view. Now, the hon. member for West Durham spoke about minority representation in that celebrated speech of his at Aurora. But there in this Bill we find that very principle is being carried out to a large extent, and that minorities are obtaining better representation than they have yet had. I know the hon. gentleman feels much grieved that some of his friends are likely to lose their seats in this Legislature. We may regret some of them; no doubt this House will regret the departure of the hon. member for South Wentworth, who has so long furnished amusement to this House. No doubt the House regrets the hon. member's departure; but under any circumstances the handwriting was on the wall. The last local election was significant; the hon. member and his party failed to win the last local election with all their power.

Mr. RYMAL. It did not go against me.

Mr. RYKERT. When the Reform party's candidate had all the power of the Government at his back he failed, and it was a significant warning that Mr. Joseph Rymal should not try a contest again. I am glad to see the hon. gentleman has made a virtue of a necessity. The right thinking people of every province will come to the conclusion that the Government has desired to do justice to Ontario, and although they may use strong language and vote against the Government, opponents have not asked that any change be made in the Bill. The hon. member for West Durham in his plaintive way has asked that justice be done to Ontario. The Maritime Provinces to which he has appealed would not make such a demand, but the hon. gentleman is trying to raise a sectional cry. When the second thought of the people comes to pass judgment on the Bill it will be given in favor of the Government by an overwhelming majority, and when the case has been thoroughly examined, and when the arguments have been sifted to their foundation, when the people of Ontario come to examine into the motives which have actuated hon. gentlemen opposite, that second thought will pronounce that the Government Bill is a step in the right direction, and that it embodies a principle which has been a guiding principle with political parties and that the measure is in the best interests of the whole Dominion.

Mr. RYMAL. I wish to put my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) right in regard to a statement he has made respecting what he calls my forced retirement, and the fact, as he says, that my constituency was lost to the Liberal party. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The election that I won in 1878 was no warning to me that my political days were numbered. My majority in 1878 was three times what it was in 1867, and twice what it was in 1861 and 1863; and with the falsehood and deception practised in 1878, the wonder was not that I was returned by seventy-five majority, but that I was returned at all. The following year, at the local election, the reform candidate won his seat. Tory villainy endeavored to wrest the riding out of our hands, and we were obliged to appeal to the Courts, and then my Reform friend obtained his seat. It is forty-six years since the Tory party obtained a triumph in the constituency which so long has done me the honor of returning me, and I fear not now, gerrymandered as we are (for there will be a pretty hot time before a Tory is returned for South Wentworth), although I am not going to be a candidate, I will not be a disinterested spectator, and I hope that we will not appeal to the electors in vain. If the hon. member for Lincoln could boast of such uninterrupted confidence of his constituents as I have enjoyed, he might have something to boast of. But he has gone and come again and again; and although he has endeavored to secure himself more firmly in Lincoln than formerly by getting rid of sixty Reform votes, he is not going to sleep on a bed of roses when the next contest comes on. He had better put his house in order in time and see that his guns are loaded. The hon. gentleman was always referring to the hon. Premier of Ontario as the little man. I will compare the two men. They are both legal gentlemen and politicians. Let us look at the positions they hold as professional men. Mr. Mowat held one of the most lucrative practices in Ontario and was afterwards entrusted with an important position in the courts of that Province, in which position he did great credit to himself. Every one was satisfied he was an able judge. Let us see where the hon. member for Lincoln stands as a member of the Bar. He stands somewhere between a fifth and a fifteenth rate lawyer, he is a briefless barrister practicing in Police and Division Courts, and even there only with a limited degree of success. Let us compare them as politicians. Mr. Mowat is the first commoner in his native Province, a position which he has held for many years and he is strong in the affections of the people. My hon. friend is, I was going to say, a fifth rate politician, but I will value him at his own estimate and will call him a second rate politician. It was said by Pope, the poet "That the soul was the measure of the man." I never heard any man say that Mr. Mowat, was not a whole souled noble hearted specimen of humanity that bore the stamp of nobility on his countenance, while ten thousand souls like that which actuates the hon. gentleman opposite could lodge in a flea's skull and then have as much room to play in as two frogs could have on the broad bosom of Lake Ontario.

Mr. MILLS. As it is now 2 o'clock in the morning, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say to my hon. friend that I gave the hon. gentlemen opposite an opportunity on Saturday to discuss this measure. They chose to take a technical objection and they may make the most of it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. MILLS. We see now how much sincerity there was in the assurances given to the House by the hon. gentleman. We see that this measure was introduced at the last hours of the Session, and was introduced purposely late in order that there might be no opportunity for a full and open discussion. The hon. gentleman tells us he gave us an opportunity on Saturday and, Sir, you ruled that the Bill which the hon. gentleman proposed to be read a second time was not the Bill which he before read the first time. The hon. gentleman introduced some days ago a measure to this House relating to the subject of the re-distribution of seats and that measure is not the one now under consideration. It is a wholly different measure and it proposed a wholly different distribution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it did not.

Mr. MILLS. I say yes it did, and you said so, Mr. Speaker. It was because it was a different measure that the hon. gentleman was compelled to ask that the order be discharged and to introduce a new measure which was read the first time on Saturday and now the hon. gentleman at the first sitting and the first day after that, and the first opportunity for a fair discussion of the subject, insists that after we have been sitting eleven hours that this discussion shall be proceeded with and that a measure, the most important that has ever been before this Parliament shall be forced to a second reading without any fair chance for its being considered by the country. I know, Sir, that it is a matter of form in a great measure to proceed with this discussion. I know that a number of supporters of this Government did not intend that there should be a fair opportunity for the consideration or discussion of this subject, but I owe a certain duty to my constituents and if I do not succeed in discharging it as efficiently as I could desire it is because I have been listening for more than ten hours to the discussion which has taken place, and I do not think it is fair to me or my supporters that I should be compelled to discuss this subject at two o'clock in the morning. But the hon. gentleman professes to be guided in this measure by English practice. I made some evenings ago a statement showing the practice in England and a series of statements showing the time that important measures since 1831 were introduced in the English Parliament and how long they were before the House of Commons. In almost every instance there was not a measure which reached its third reading that had not been before the House for nearly three months. I alluded to the opinion expressed by Mr. Disraeli in reference to the Irish Church Bill, and the hon. gentleman seemed to doubt whether the views expressed, and which I attributed to the late leader of the Conservative party in England, were the views which that distinguished nobleman entertained. Well, Sir, I have turned up the speech of Disraeli on that occasion and I will read an extract to the House. Mr. Disraeli, when Mr. Gladstone first proposed the resolutions relating to the disestablishment of the Irish Church, declared that the measure was important and should not be disposed of by Parliament without the country having an opportunity of considering it—that the House should be dissolved and the question made an issue and that if the people in the country sustained Mr. Gladstone in that view, then, and not before it would be time to deal with the subject. Well, Sir, Mr. Gladstone acted on the principle laid down by his antagonist. An appeal was had to the country and a majority were returned favorable to the disestablishment of the Irish church. After the new Parliament met, after Mr. Gladstone spoke on the subject, Mr. Disraeli made the following observations:

"I take the fair interpretation of the decision of the country at the general elections to be this: That it was the opinion of the country that the right hon. gentleman should have the opportunity of dealing with the question of the church in Ireland. I do not understand that the country pledged itself to support any particular measure. No particular measure was then before it; but it declared and decided in a manner which could not be mistaken that the right hon. gentleman should have a fair and full opportunity of dealing with the church in Ireland."

On the same subject he goes on to say:

"I trust the right hon. gentleman will give ample time to the House and the country for the consideration of his measure before he asks for a decision."

The House will mark the observation "ample time to the House and the country for the consideration of his measure." He goes on to say:—

"I trust, therefore, as we are not opposing the motion, the right hon. gentleman will accede to my proposition, and allow the House and the country an opportunity for considering this important subject, which involves details all of which must be investigated; and if he pursues that course, he will find that he will have to encounter no unnecessary or vexatious delay."

Mr. Gladstone in reply said the measure would be in the hands of members next day, that being a Monday, and two weeks from the following Thursday would be allowed before the Bill was read a second time. That was seventeen days between the first reading and the second. The Right hon. gentleman, who led the Conservative party, asked not merely that the House should have ample time for consideration, but that time should be given for consideration of the subject by the country. Now, I would like to know what time the hon. gentleman has given for the consideration of this Bill by the country. Why, Sir, four-fifths of the country—a great majority of the constituent body have had no opportunity at all. In many parts of Ontario it has scarcely reached them yet, and yet the hon. gentleman insists at the last moment of the Session that the present measure shall be put through, not only without giving the country a fair opportunity for its consideration, but the House an opportunity for considering the effect of this measure in all its details. The right hon. gentleman says why you took a technical objection to the Bill. I say we took a proper objection to a wholly different Bill. The hon. gentleman brought down here one Bill; he submitted to a third Chamber that same Bill. It was surreptitiously taken from this House; it was submitted to that third Chamber unknown to our law and our constitution. It was altered and amended there. Why, Sir, we have heard rumours of the discussion which took place there. We have heard of stormy meetings there, of high words that passed between men who were fighting for this township or that, to have it transferred to this constituency or that, and one hon. gentleman it is said averred that he had not heard such swearing, such profanity since the meeting was held for the execution of Mr. Letellier, and when similar profanity was indulged in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who told the hon. gentleman that?

Mr. MILLS. I said it was a rumour.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the hon. gentleman is the propagator of a false rumour. He is stating what is distinctly untrue.

Mr. MILLS. Is it true, I ask? Were there no disputes? Is it true the Bill he introduced on the 28th of April was altered in that caucus?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not true.

Mr. MILLS. How is it then that we had brought down on Saturday a wholly different Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not true.

Mr. MILLS. How is it that we have a Bill which is wholly different in its provisions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not wholly true.

Mr. MILLS. I say it is, and the Journals and Debates of the House will prove it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is false, altogether false.

Mr. MILLS. That statement on the Journals will show whether the falsehood rests with me or in the denial of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman leads not a Government but a conspiracy—a conspiracy against the constitution of this country—against the liberties of the people of this country, against the rights and honour of Parliament.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman should retract these words. They are a disgrace to him and I say his words should be taken down.

Mr. MILLS. Are they true? The hon. gentleman to-day said himself that his constituency was not the proper shape and that he insisted on these changes.

Mr. HESSON. There is another falsehood.

Mr. MILLS. This Bill is the result of a contract between conspirators. This Bill confirms what these hon. gentlemen did in that secret caucus, and the people will decide whether these hon. gentlemen will profit by the conspiracy which was then formed to deprive the majority of the people of the controlling influence in the Parliament of Canada. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to deal with a subject which is a great public trust committed to his hands, a subject which does not relate to the administration of public affairs, which does not concern the Crown, but which concerns this House and belongs to the constitution of this House; and he should deal with this question as the leader of this House and not as the chief adviser of the Crown. How has he undertaken to protect the rights of the minority of this House and to deal with the electorate of this country, who are represented by that minority? Has he undertaken to exercise that protecting care which, as the leader of this House and the guardian of rights of the electoral body represented here, are entitled to look for at his hands?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Every new constituency is a Grit constituency.

Mr. MILLS. We know how anxious the hon. gentleman is to accommodate the Grits. This is the most important question that ever came before Parliament, because it makes it quite possible that the great majority of the votes of the electors may be cast for one party and the great majority of the representatives who sit in this House may belong to another party. A measure that makes such a thing possible is not a proper measure; and the measure now before us was intended to produce this result and might produce it but for its atrocious character and the indignation that it will arouse. Sir, we can have some regard for the revolutionist, even though his acts may be wholly unjustifiable, who will run some personal risk to obtain success, but what can be said for a leader of a Government who feels that the majority of the country are against him, and in order to secure success without any risk to himself, avails himself of the power of legislation to secure office and its emoluments for himself in the succeeding Parliament? The hon. gentleman has spoken in favor of the great principle of representation by population. That principle is not recognised in this Bill, and if it were, it would not remove the objections against it as it appears before us. What is the aim of Parliamentary Government? Is it not to carry on the Government according to the well understood wishes of the people and to give to the prevailing sentiment of the country a controlling influence in Parliament, while the Bill of the hon. gentleman aims to carry out the design of keeping a political party in office irrespective of the sentiments and feelings of the majority of the electors. I am in favor of representation by population, but I deny that it is the only point to be considered. There are many other considerations such as those of municipal boundaries, which the hon. gentleman recognized in 1872, which he again affirmed a few days ago, but which the hon. Minister of Customs to-night repudiated. He told us that these considerations were of no value in this House because we did not deal with municipal or local affairs, but with matters of trade and commerce. The hon. gentleman knows that in choosing a candidate for election, the bringing together of people who have been associated in municipal affairs and in various other matters, is a wholly different thing from calling a people together who never meet for any other purpose. There is no justification for it—it being proposed wholly in the interest of the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman has proposed to govern us by the sacred rule of three, and yet the hon. member for West Durham has shown that that rule is wholly illusory as applied to this measure, and that representation by population is not recognized. If the hon. First Minister was sincere in his professions, why did he not equalize the constituencies in the other Provinces also? We know there was no sincerity in this argument, and that his object was wholly different. Equalization could have been secured without violating the municipal boundaries of the various constituencies of Ontario. The hon. gentleman is a very recent convert to representation by population which he formerly struggled against and denounced in the strongest language. In the readjustments of 1867 and 1871 he did not propose any such policy as the present, or only to a very limited degree, as in Grey, the Hurons and Wellingtons, and in Haldimand and Monck. We pointed out the injustice involved, and he was limited in his operations by the principle he himself laid down. He has now disregarded that principle and proposed a scheme which would reduce the Government of Canada to the condition of those of Mexico and Peru. He is exercising no such restraint and forbearance as are absolutely necessary to fairly carrying out the English system of parliamentary government. He knows well that if we accede to power we could not permit those proposed boundaries to remain. They are a crying injustice; an injustice so great that they would require to be immediately remedied; and if we were to act on the principle of the hon. gentleman, we should have no settled institutions in this country, or no enduring bases of government. It has been well said by Sir James MacIntosh, that institutions grow and Governments grow, and are not made. The hon. gentleman is acting on a wholly different theory that institutions may be made, without growth. Some respect should be paid to the habits and Conservative tendencies of the people of this country: When you have a county which requires but a small reduction to give it the number required for representation, why interfere with its boundaries? Its people are used to act together in all their municipal affairs, ecclesiastical organizations and other arrangements of life; and you propose to interfere with them to bring the fractions of several counties together, men who never met before, which may produce half-a-dozen rival candidates at an election, none willing to yield to the other. If you act on his principle of dissociating wholly the political life of this Parliament from the political life of the people in every other respect. Parliament should rather be the outcome of our municipal and provincial institutions than an arbitrary creation standing wholly alone. When you propose arbitrarily every ten years to break up the whole constituent body of the Dominion, what is the result? Why that every ten years you will have society cut up by the roots, and new constituencies formed to suit the party in power. The principle of the hon. gentleman's Bill is most dangerous and wholly inconsistent with parliamentary government. I am willing to recognize the principle of equality, so far as you can consistently, with a due regard to other interests equally important.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is what this Bill does.

Mr. MILLS. It does not. The hon. gentleman has paid no regard to county boundaries. Take, for instance, the county of Essex, which has more than population enough for two members, why then add on the township of Romney? The county of Kent has nearly enough for three, and under this Bill has not its due representation. Why then give to the county of Lambton nearly three members, when it has 2,000 of a population less than Kent? Why take part of the county of Kent and add it to the county of Essex, which has already more than sufficient population? You add to the county of Elgin where there is a sufficient population for two within the county. The county of Lambton has two and a-half representatives, and the county of Kent less than two, yet the hon. gentleman professes to recognize the principle of representation according to population in the division which has been made. The propositions made in this Bill have completely thrown off the restraints which I have mentioned. You take away all certainty as to the stability of political associations, and you put, as the hon. gentleman said some years ago, the constituent body of the country, not in the hands of the people who may be said to fairly represent the electors, but in the hands of professional politicians. It may be laid down as a correct principle under our system of parliamentary government that the leader of a party owes something to the country as well as to his party, that there are other interests than those of the mere success of a party to be considered, and that there are interests to which the future well-being of a party may require that the party interests for the time should be subordinated. This is one of those occasions. The hon. gentleman, in dealing with a measure of this sort, had two courses open to him. One was to adopt the principle of equalizing the constituencies throughout the Dominion, beginning at some point in each Province, and making them uniform so far as the township, town and village municipalities would permit, or recognize the municipal boundaries of counties and act within the restraints which those municipal boundaries impose. He has done neither. He did not apply the principle of representation by population pure and simple; neither did he recognize the principle of respecting the political and municipal boundaries of counties. Had he done so the fifty odd changes that have been made would not have taken place. I have taken the trouble to prepare a map based on the Bill, as it was introduced on Saturday, and the extent to which the hon. gentleman has disregarded the boundaries of counties is most extraordinary. There is hardly a county lying west of Kingston, the boundaries of which are intact. It is preposterous, in view of these facts, for the hon. gentleman to pretend that he has paid the slightest regard to the county municipal boundaries. As the hon. member for West Durham has shown, the right hon. gentleman has taken a number of constituencies in groups and hived, to use his expression, the Reform party within those constituencies, so as to give that party a minority in representation. There is another very important consideration, and that is the degrading effect a measure of this sort must have on the minds of all those who are disposed to follow the hon. gentleman in the course he has marked out. No greater misfortune can befall a country than for their representatives to undertake to degrade the political and public sentiment of the country. There is not a particle of generosity or open, manly warfare remaining in those who once enter on the course of defending the Bill which the hon. gentleman has submitted to the House. The hon. First Minister, in proposing the measure which is now before us, has paid no regard to the principle of fair representation of the various political parties in the country in proportion to their numbers. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to confine the Reform party within a few constituencies—in South Essex, the two Oxfords, West Elgin and South Middlesex, and a few other constituencies, and it is impossible to look at the results of the last elections without seeing the care with which this object was kept in view. I have said already that a system of parliamentary government cannot be carried on based solely on mere personal loyalty or party consideration. There are certain traditional influences which grow up in a country, emanating from institutions established by the people, and which time will ultimately crystalize into law, it has been observed by Bagehot in his work on the Constitution, that very few men think out many of the political problems with which they have to deal. The great majority of our political opinions are second-hand. We profit by the experience of others and we add our own small stock to the accumulated knowledge of our predecessors, and it is only by doing so that the system of parliamentary government becomes possible. What the hon. gentleman proposes to do by this Bill will render it impossible to profit by the experience and labor of those who have gone before us. Now I object to the Bill on this ground. It is a matter to me of small consequence which party may succeed at the elections; it is a matter of small consequence whether I am elected here or not. Those who know me know that I care very little whether I come back here or not, but I do know that if I wish to come back here for Bothwell as it is now constituted I can come, and the hon. gentleman cannot form a constituency in Kent that I cannot be elected in, whether in West, East, or North Kent. But it is a matter of great consequence to the stability of the Government in the country and the maintenance of our English system that a measure of this kind should not receive the sanction of Parliament. If the hon. gentleman chooses to act upon the principle of a Mexican chief and to use the power of the law for the purpose of establishing himself in office, then I say that parliamentary government is at an end, because the means employed to secure that object will render further and radical changes necessary, and will render it impossible that the system as it now exists can be continued, and it is because this is the case that I enter my earnest protest against the measure the hon. gentleman has submitted to the House. This country is new, its institutions are new, and many of them have taken but a slight hold of the country. The permanency of the Government will largely depend upon the stability of those institutions, but we know that those institutions cannot be made available in the Government of the country if a measure like this becomes law. The hon. member for Lincoln says that Mr. Mowat proposed a measure exactly of the same sort, and he told us that the county of Dufferin was formed after the Distribution Bill was passed. If the hon. gentleman had looked at the Statutes of Ontario he would have found that a municipal and electoral district were formed which should return a member, and in fact the two measures were before the Legislature at the same time, they were introduced by the same Government to provide for the municipal county of Dufferin, and they designated it in the Bill which I hold in my hand. The hon. gentleman's statement was wholly misleading when he informed the House that the county was formed for electoral purposes and was subsequently organized for municipal purposes.

Mr. SPROULE. They were organized at the same time. I selected a member first who sat in Parliament for a length of time and then the municipal county was formed.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The two Bills were introduced the same Session, and were under control of the same Administration, but supposing the statement were true that the measure of Mr. Mowat was as objectionable as it is represented to be, and any statement made here to-night shows that he confined himself within the municipal boundaries of the counties except in those districts that had been previously established under the British North America Act; but suppose his measure was as objectionable as this one, then I say what the people should do would be to hold the Government of Mr. Mowat to strict account for it, and it would be no justification for us to pursue a course equally open to objection, equally injurious if it should become law. Sir, many will remember in the history of England the story of Richard III; how he accused the Earl of Hastings of withering his arm in consequence of the witchcraft of Jane Shore. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman in pleading the act of Mr. Mowat as a justification for his act, seems to be putting forth an argument very much like the accusation of Richard. The spirit is the same. The act is in intent the same. We have not the axe of the executioner, but the hon. gentleman undertakes to execute us by the votes of his followers in pressing this measure. If we are not executed, the hon. gentleman and his friends will be disappointed because they are seeking to prevent the Reform electors from being represented in this House. The hon. gentleman is like King Richard in more respects than one. He has been ambitious, and in the gratification of his ambition he has not always been particular in the means employed. We all know something of the double shuffle, we all know something about the sale of the Pacific Railway charter to Sir Hugh Allan, and we know something of the design of the measure which is before us. I say the hon. gentleman has not always been particular as to the means he employs to accomplish his ends. King Richard on one occasion said:

"If Edward be as true, as just,
As I am subtle, false and treacherous,
Then by this act shall those I fear be mew'd up."

And the hon. gentleman is saying something very much like that at this time. But I do not believe the hon. gentleman will succeed in his object. I am glad to know that there is in this country a considerable section who have not tied themselves to any party, men who love fair play, men whose sense of fair play is stronger than their attachment to any particular party, and who will be the first to resent the policy upon which the hon. gentleman has entered. There is a large section of the people who will always array themselves on the side of that which they believe to be in the public interest. They may be mistaken; they may sometimes err in their notion, as to what is best for the public interest; but in a matter of this kind there is no possibility of mistake. This is a moral question, and all their sense of manliness, of fair play, all their dislike of cowardice and treachery, will be arrayed against those who support the proposition which is now before the House. Those who are real Conservatives, who wish to see something like stability in our institutions, who look to preserving what they believe to be best in our institutions, no matter whether they approve of the National Policy or disapprove of it, will know right well that they have before them a higher question than the mere question of dollars and cents. The Constitution has been attacked in the Streams' Bill and in its most vital parts by this measure now before Parliament; and without abandoning the view I entertain as to the mischievous character of the fiscal policy of the Government, I say this question is one of greater magnitude because it involves the subject of the government of the country. Looking at what has happened in Ontario—at the interference in questions of local policy, with the restraint exercised in the interests of the minority upon the policy of the majority in the attempt to rob the Province of its right to a fair representation in this House, I have no doubt whatever that the majority of the people of Ontario will disregard every consideration and stand up for the rights and liberties of that Province. Hon. gentlemen opposite may succeed in carrying this Bill through this House and the House of their friends at the other end of this building. No doubt those hon. gentlemen will feel that this is no concern of theirs, and it may be that they will be pleased to have an opportunity of serving their friends; but here is another tribunal to which this Richard will have to appeal. The disaster which will befall the hon. gentleman will equal that of the other Richard at Bosworth field.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not see that there is anything very new in the policy of representation by population. It was at one time strongly insisted on by the Reform party, and, if the Government now adopt it, I do not see that the Opposition have any great cause of complaint. For my own part, it is a policy in which I could not fully acquiesce if it were to be generally applied. Representation by population may work well enough in the more densely settled parts of the country, but, even in these, it cannot be carried out without modification. If closely adhered to, in all cases, the cities would have undue representation as compared to the rural districts; and, if applied to new settlements, the consequence would be that in most cases they would be without adequate representation, and in others without any representation at all, or the next thing to it. In a new country, such as this, there must always be extensive districts but sparsely settled, and how could the people, when spread over a wide region in small numbers or in isolated settlements, be adequately represented on the basis of representation by population. The district which I have the honor to represent covers half the territorial area of Ontario; or, to make the matter more clear, I should say that Algoma proper, that is Algoma as it has heretofore existed, without going beyond the old boundary of the height of land, embraces about half the Province of Ontario, and this being the case, it does seem rather odd that one-half of Ontario should have ninety-one representatives in this House, and the other half but one. The singularity of this arrangement shows that there should be territorial representation as well as representation by population; and in fact we are acting now and must always act on the system of territorial representation, at least to a certain extent. British Columbia, with a white population less than that of Algoma, is represented by five members in this House and three in the Senate; and Manitoba when it had a population of only ten thousand white people, was represented by four members in the Commons and by two Senators in the other House. But, in fact, territorial representation has always been acted on in this country. In 1791, when Upper Canada was first cut out of the Province of Quebec and became a separate Province with a constitutional government, the population was only about 15,000, and yet it was provided that there should be two Houses—a Lower House, with at least sixteen members, and an Upper House with at least seven members. By the year 1800 the population had increased to about 50,000—chiefly from the influx of people from the United States who did not desire to live under republican institutions—but, even then, the average to each constituency was only a little over 3,000. Kent and Essex, which at that time covered the entire western part of the Province, had only a few straggling white settlers, but they nevertheless sent their member to the Parliament of Upper Canada. During those days and for a long time afterwards the new and thinly-settled districts were always fairly represented, as well as the older and more populous sections, and that, in my humble opinion, is the policy which should obtain in every well-governed country. Adequate representation must, moreover, be a favorable element in bringing about the development of new districts, inasmuch as, for one thing, it is, at least, a means of making the Legislature and the country at large familiar with their resources. The district of Algoma, taking the height of land as of old for its northern boundary, extends from the 81st to the 91st meridian, making ten degrees of longitude, and it covers something more than four and a-half degrees of latitude. In a region so vast, it will be readily understood that there must be differences of soil, climate and natural productions, and although the population is scattered and amounts in all to only 21,000 souls, that is no reason why a district of such extent should have only one member in this House, unless we are to depart from the system under which the country has grown and flourished. True, we have as yet only a population of 21,000 or so in Algoma, but with the development sure to arise from the construction of the Pacific Railway, it would be safe to reckon on at least 60,000 before the end of the next decade, and in apportioning the representation of a new district the prospective increase in the population should certainly be taken into account. In 1871 the population of Algoma was but 7,018, in 1881 it was 21,000, so that it has trebled in ten years, and that too without there being anything unusual to stimulate it. In view of this fact, I do not think I am in any way too sanguine in predicting that it will again have trebled before the time for the next Census comes round; so that if we cannot have more than one representative now on the basis of population, we will be entitled to three in less than ten years, and this should, I think, have been considered in arranging the representation. In British Columbia and Manitoba the representation seems to be based more on the assumed population of the future than on the present numbers. In new districts this is unquestionably the true policy to follow, and I cannot see why it should not be applied to Algoma—in other words, to the western half of Ontario. I am quite aware that Ontario, with full and untrammelled power in this matter in her hands, has, ever since Confederation, refused to increase the representation of Algoma in the Local Legislature. But if the Government of Ontario deems it right to treat the finest and largest constituency in the Province, and the one from which the chief provincial revenue is derived with injustice, that is no reason why the Dominion Government should follow in its footsteps. The district, as it now stands, might at least have been cut in two, with one representative for Eastern and another for Western Algoma. But if we cannot have this, the people would prefer to remain as they are. The inhabitants of Manitoulin would rather stand where they are in the front of Algoma than to be tacked to the tail of Bruce. Neither have the people any desire to see Muskoka extended along the north coast of Lake Huron. What they want is a fair sub-division of their district as it now stands, and there is room enough in it for three large electoral divisions which might be known as Eastern Algoma, Central Algoma and Western Algoma, and all within the old and recognized boundary of the height of land. Our friends on the Opposition benches seem to entertain gloomy apprehensions as to the effect of this Bill, but I venture to think that the country will survive and flourish under it. The district which I have the honor to represent has at least as much cause to complain as any other district. A territory running 600 miles from east to west, should in all reason have more than one representative, but the want of adequate representation in our case will soon cure itself. A district in which the population trebles in ten years need have no fears for the future.

Mr. ORTON. I desire to draw a comparison between the position of the hon. leader of the Opposition to-day and the position he occupied some years ago. In the year 1874 an attempt was made by the then Government, led by the hon. member for Lambton, backed up, I believe, by the hon. member for West Durham, to do what would justly have called down upon this House the indignant remarks which that hon. member has used to-night. But I well recollect that when that atrocious attempt was made by the Government of that time to shield their friends and injure their opponents by gerrymandering, the hon. member for West Durham sat silent and allowed the Bill to pass this House and the Senate and become law. As many hon. members of this House will recollect, there was a process pending against the hon. member for South Huron, and that Bill was introduced because the Government knew that that hon. gentleman had bought his way into this House, and had little chance of being elected again. After being unseated he did not come back again, because the charges against him were of such a grave nature that he dare not face the people of South Huron, and he fled the country in order to avoid an election. But the high standard of political morality which the hon. member for West Durham has appealed to to-night, he did not appeal to when that Bill was introduced. Following that was another Bill, introduced by another supporter of that Government, who also had a protest hanging over him. And what did that Bill do? Among the protests that were pending was one against myself as the representative of the Centre Riding of Wellington. There was also a protest hanging over Mr. Higginbotham, the member for North Wellington, who had secured his election by a very small majority, and this Bill proposed to take from Centre Wellington 5,000 inhabitants and add them to North Wellington, which was then larger in population than any other riding of Wellington, numbering over 30,000 inhabitants. It proposed also to add to the constituency I represented two Government townships, one of which gives a majority of from 200 to 300 Reform votes, making the population of Centre Wellington something over 26,000 and reducing that of South Wellington to over 14,000. And that gerrymandering Bill was introduced and passed its first reading without a protest from the hon. member for West Durham, and it was not the excuse which the Government has to-day of rearranging the electoral divisions of Ontario, but it was for the bare-faced purpose of shielding the Government's friends and injuring their opponents, when they had a large majority in the House. I might quote the evidence which was given at the trial of the petition against the hon. member for South Huron, to show the justice of the cause which was so advocated and so consented to by the hon. member for West Durham in connection with the Tuckersmith Bill:

"He told me to go to his office the next Saturday (says Millar) when he would give it me. I went, and he gave me the note. I gave him the note originally on account of his conducting the case for me, and when I got the note from him I gave him nothing in return. I would not have voted for him, nor do I think that I would have even promised him if he had not given me up the note."

The Judge on that occasion said that the expenditure was so great in the election that he would order the respondent to pay all the costs, showing that he believed there was an unusual amount of bribery and corruption; and yet to shield this iniquity the Tuckersmith Bill was introduced. Now, Sir, I want to draw attention to some reasons why it is important that the present rearrangement should be made. It is well known that the reason for the readjustment is that four additional members were required from Ontario according to the Confederation Act. In the Lower Provinces, especially in Quebec, the population is in different circumstances, and the constituencies there are arranged in order to carry out certain principles that were agreed upon in the Act of Confederation, one of which was that the Protestant minority in Quebec should be secured their rights. We recollect, also, that in the Province of Ontario the cry of representation by population carried the people of that Province, and was eventually accepted by both political parties, and it was agreed upon that that should be an essential principle in Ontario representation. Therefore, it became the duty of any Government that might be in power to arrange the constituencies according to representation by population, which principle seems so repugnant to the feelings of the Reform party to-day. With regard to the conduct of the Local Government, we know that they have increased their patronage for no other purpose than to compel the electors of Ontario to support them and to keep them in power. We know that their highest gifts are given to the most bitter partisans in the country. Only the other day, in my county, the clerk of the County Court resigned, and notwithstanding the fact that a petition signed by the most respectable of the electors asked to have a Reformer appointed, a gentleman of known integrity and fairness, the Government of Ontario appointed a bitter partizan, who no doubt was in accord with the leader of that Government. This was a gentleman who took the highest interest from the poor people in that section, 40 to 60 per cent. Then the Mowat Government took the issue of tavern licenses away from the county and municipal councils, and entrusted it to the Local Legislature, thus securing further power over the people. Only the other day in my county one of the commissioners appointed to ascertain the number of tavern licenses in the village of Fergus refused a license to one of the most respectable men in the town, in which a good business is done and in which he kept a good house; he was refused because a Conservative, and, in order to coerce his vote at the coming election, however, they were obliged to give him his license again, owing to the indignant protest and demands of the people, Conservatives and Liberals alike. This is one of the methods taken by the Mowat Government to keep itself in power. When you contrast the conduct of the Opposition and their supporters in Ontario with that of their opponents you cannot otherwise conclude than that the present Government have acted in the best, the only way possible—that is, to rearrange the representation according to population, and carry out the feeling of the people of Ontario; and that, on the other hand, every effort had been made by the Liberals to use their power to promote their party interests, without regard to justice or the public welfare.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The arguments used by the hon. member for Centre Wellington are just the kind of arguments used by the supporters of the Government in defence of this Bill. That because the Mowat Government did not distribute the representation in the Province of Ontario to suit the views of the hon. gentlemen opposite, this Bill should pass; that because some man in a country village did not get a license, therefore the Bill should pass; that because some friends or clients of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down was not granted a tavern license, therefore, this Bill should pass. This is the kind of argument used in support of this Bill. We had, first, the hon. member for Niagara whose whole speech did not contain one argument in favor of the Bill; a Bill of the most unjustifiable ever submitted to Parliament. I rose more particularly to answer some statements made by the First Minister and others with reference to Bills introduced by the late hon. member for North Wellington and myself in 1874, to adjust the representation of our respective counties, and to answer some charges personal to myself. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down stated that the late member for North Wellington (Mr. Higinbotham), introduced a Bill into the House to gerrymander the north riding of Wellington, when there was a petition against it, and that it had the support of the hon. member for West Durham. He knows perfectly well, or should know, that the Bill never reached a second reading—was never more than introduced. Mr. Higinbotham had a right to introduce a Bill as well as the hon. member for Centre Wellington, and any fair-minded man would say he was justified in introducing that Bill. He did it to correct an outrageous wrong perpetrated on him by the Government in gerrymandering the constituency in 1872. I introduced a Bill in 1874 to rectify an equally glaring wrong. Prior to 1872 Tuckersmith was attached to South Huron for electoral purposes. In that year the Government detached it from South Huron for political purposes. I, in 1874, introduced a Bill to attach it again to South Huron. Why did I do so? Because regardless of rights—and relying on their majority in Parliament the Government attempted by detaching this township from my riding—a township that gave me 200 of a majority to legislate me out of Parliament they knew my total majority was only 165, and it was thought that the detaching of that township from South Huron would secure my defeat. I warned the Government that they would fail in securing their object, and they did fail; a Liberal member was returned by a majority of eighty-four. I introduced my Bill to rectify the wrong perpetrated in 1872. When I introduced that Bill—the present First Minister—the hon. Minister of Customs and many of their followers were in Parliament, and yet not one of them ventured to divide the House against my Bill. They were ashamed of their work of 1872 (as now they are ashamed of the Bill,) and one of the colleagues of the hon. First Minister said that the Bill was one that should be sanctioned by Parliament.

Mr. PLUMB. Who was it?

Mr. CAMERON. Peter Mitchell—a man who stands higher in the estimation of the public than the hon. member for Niagara.

Mr. PLUMB. I would like to know where you will find that?

Mr. CAMERON. If the hon. gentleman will look up the records of that day, he will find that Peter Mitchell said the Bill had his entire approval. Why, the hon. gentleman ought to know that; or is he really so ignorant of the proceedings of former Parliaments that he does not know this fact.

Mr. PLUMB. I know when the hon. gentleman's case was tried, and I can get the record for him.

Mr. CAMERON. I know when yours was tried, and if you got your deserts you would not be here. The hon. member for North Wellington has seen fit to refer to my election trial, and to make some unfavorable comments on it, but he had not the candor to refer to any other than the one witness who gave testimony against me, a man named Millar. He has not the honesty to point out that this man's evidence was contradicted by that of two other men. He had not the candor to point to the judgment of Mr. Justice Galt, who said that he placed no weight whatever in Millar's testimony, that he did not believe a word that Millar uttered, and that I was in no sense personally implicated in the charges made against me. Sir, I never disputed the fact that there was money spent in South Huron; but why, Sir, you must meet the devil with the devil's weapons, and so some money was spent.

Mr. PLUMB. $6,000.

Mr. CAMERON. Perhaps so, but the hon. member for Niagara was never able satisfactorily to account for $1,700 found in the manger of a stable on the eve of the election, conveniently left there to be had by his friends, and to be used for corrupt purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has ventured to say that $1,700 were found in my stable which I could not satisfactorily account for. The hon. gentleman has said, probably not wittingly—for I will not charge him with that—a positive untruth. No such sum or any sum of money was ever found on my premises or near my premises. No such statement appeared in the evidence at the election trial; no such charge was ever made against me; I was never called upon to account for any such sum; no such sum was expended in my election. The whole sum proved to have been expended was $125, while the hon. gentleman expended $6,000, as he acknowledged himself.

Mr. CAMERON. I say that in one of the trials against the hon. gentleman for corrupt practices the evidence pointed to the fact that a certain sum of money was found in the manger of the hon. gentleman's stable which was never accounted for. I never disputed the fact that there was money expended in South Huron in 1872. Anybody who will turn to my evidence will find a candid statement of the amount of money so expended. But I have explained why it became necessary to expend any money in South

Huron in 1872. Will the hon. First Minister deny, if he is within the range of my voice, that he sent his law partner to South Huron in 1872 with $3,000 of Sir Hugh Allan's money in order to defeat me, and that it was spent to corrupt the electors of that constituency? If he does deny this charge, then I challenge him to give me a Committee of this House and I will prove it. The less hon. gentlemen say on a question of this kind the better for themselves. Let them turn to the records of the election trial in Kingston before the late Chief Justice Richards. Do they not know that their leader escaped disqualification by the skin of his teeth; and he would not have escaped it at all had not his colleagues happened to be conveniently absent at the time. The less hon. gentlemen opposite say on this subject the better. A word or two as to this Bill. No one, who will honestly examine this Bill, can doubt that it is a Bill solely in the interest of the Tories. Every county is gerrymandered in their interest. Equalizing the population, contiguity of municipalities, maintaining county boundaries, were all of minor consideration. The one object aimed at was to keep the Government in power, and this is notably so with regard to the Hurons. Let us see how the population stood, and now stands, in that county: The population of the north riding, according to the first proposition, was 26,098. The population of Centre Huron, was 22,321, and of South Huron, 23,453. These three ridings were, therefore, as equally balanced as probably any three ridings in any county in the whole of Ontario. As between the centre and the south there was a difference only of 1,132 souls, and between the centre and the north, by that readjustment, there was a difference of 3,777 only. What was the object then of making any further change, which the hon. gentleman did make, detaching the township of Osborne from and annexing the township of Colborne to the south riding? Was that for the purpose of equalization? As the hon. Minister of Customs has gone over these figures with great care, as I understand, he was the manipulator of the whole transaction, perhaps he will explain what was gained by this shuffling of municipalities in the way of approximating the populations to the quota. By detaching one and annexing another municipality he succeeded by the enormous number of sixty souls. For the purpose of this approximation, in the judgment of hon. gentlemen it is necessary to detach from my riding a township that gave me, in 1878, a majority of seventy-five, and would give me, to-morrow, 100, and annex to my riding a corporation that gave against my hon. friend who sits before me a majority of seventy-three. Now, does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that there is a man in this House or out of it fool enough to believe that the hon. First Minister gerrymandered Huron for the purpose of approximating the population, when only sixty souls were concerned in the matter? Sir, there is no justification for this intermeddling with the constituencies, and none was offered. What then is the cause of it? The cause is not very far to seek. My hon. friend from Centre Huron could not be defeated in Centre Huron, though all the power of the Government were arrayed against him. They tried it in 1874, and made an ignominious failure; they tried it in 1878 and failed again. They knew there was no chance of defeating him, and therefore they withdrew from the centre riding of Huron a municipality that gave a majority against him of seventy-three and attached it to South Huron, and by detaching a township that gave me a majority of seventy-five, they have taken from my majority 140 votes. They knew perfectly well that my majority in 1878 was 163; they knew that by reducing that majority by 148 my majority of 1878 would be reduced to fifteen, and that therefore there would be a chance of defeating whoever the Liberal candidate might be for South Huron. But hon. gentlemen were not satisfied with that. Intimation reached Ottawa to-day from the Conservative Associations of the Hurons that they could not defeat the Liberal candidate for South Huron by this gerrymandering, and so they set their wits to work to devise another scheme by which they could more successfully accomplish their purpose. Now they propose withdrawing from South Huron another township, evenly balanced politically, and attaching to it one from Centre Huron that at the last election gave a Conservative majority of fifteen; and thus by completely wiping out my majority of 1878 they hope to defeat me in 1882. Now, that is the cause, that can be the only cause, for the outrageous gerrymandering of the Hurons. But they will fail. All the power of the Tories from here to Jericho cannot defeat me in South Huron, and hon. gentlemen will discover that in due time. Sir, that is the motive—that is the cause for this scandalous and outrageous proceeding, and yet these men talk about fairness, about honesty; they talk about dividing these counties to equalize the population. They talk about the compactness of the ridings and their geographical position. Why then did they detach from South Huron the township of Stephen and annex it to North Middlesex? Why did they detach from South Huron the township of Osborne and annex it to South Perth; and why did they leave the village of Exeter, carved out of the townships of Stephen and Osborne, in South Huron? To be honest and fair the village of Exeter should have been attached to one of the ridings to which Stephen or Osborne was attached. No; Stephen and Osborne, that gave me a majority of seventy-three, were detached; but Exeter, that gave 115 against me, still forms part of South Huron. That is the fair play and honesty of the Government. Why, Sir, as well might a thief talk of his honesty as hon. gentlemen talk about their fair play; as well might a prostitute talk about her virtue as hon. gentlemen opposite talk about their fair play in dealing with gentlemen on this side of the House. Whenever they can attach a municipality to a riding and thus secure the triumph of the Conservatives, that will be done. Whenever they can detach a municipality from a riding so as to defeat the Liberal candidate, that will be done. But I tell hon. gentlemen that they will fail in their machinations as they failed in 1872. Sir, when the hon. First Minister was forcing this Bill through Parliament in 1872, by which the Hurons were gerrymandered so as to be unlike anything in the heavens above or in the earth beneath, I warned him what the result would be. He left me in a minority of 187. I told him then he would fail; I told him such dishonest tactics never succeeded with an intelligent people. I told him I had unbounded faith in the honesty and spirit of fair play of the intelligent electors, and that if he gerrymandered the county in the way he proposed the result would be that the Liberal candidate would be returned to Parliament, and I was right. My predictions were verified and the Liberal candidate was returned to Parliament by a majority of eighty-four, and that majority has increased in every election since that day. I say the same thing to hon. gentlemen now. They may gerrymander the Hurons, they may think they will succeed in getting two out of the three representatives that county sends to Parliament; but they will fail. It is said the Conservative party in Huron is still unsatisfied. It does not feel quite secure notwithstanding the gerrymandering. It is said a deputation is now on its way to Ottawa to induce hon. gentlemen to make another shuffle of the cards, and to so shuffle them this time as to make the election of two Tories perfectly secure. Sir, they cannot do it. I have an abiding faith in the spirit of fair play of the people of the West, and I know that whatever the Government may do the people will rise in their might and teach the hon. gentleman a lesson that he ought to have learned in 1872. A word or two as to the Bruces. No more unfair or outrageous division of the Bruces could possibly be made than has been made by this Bill. Why in South Bruce, of the twelve municipalities composing it every one that gave a Reform majority is detached but two—and these two only gave in 1878 a Reform majority of thirty-four—leaving South Bruce Tory by 586. In North Bruce my hon. friend who represents that riding had a majority of 156; two municipalities that gave him an aggregate majority of 487 are detached, and he is now in a minority of 331. Not only is this the case, but the population is scandalously unequal—that in West Bruce is 25,618, while that of North Bruce is only 17,655. Now, Sir, was all this done in the interest of the country; was all this the conduct of honest and fair men; was all this for the purpose of equalizing the population? No, Sir; the object was to defeat my hon. friend—that was the sole object. I trust it may fail. In fact, Sir, the whole Bill is a fraud on the electors; it is an outrage on common decency. It is a Bill “conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity.” But it will fail as all other infamous schemes have failed in the past and as all outrageous schemes will fail in the future.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Lanark). I desire to express my opinion and the opinion of my constituents, why this motion should not pass. I regret that no hon. member on the other side has given any reason why North Lanark has been changed in the manner proposed. It is true that after the last election in that riding, threats were then made that that election would be the last one in which North Lanark would return a Grit. That threat was made by the hon. member for South Lanark, and has been reiterated by every Tory in that riding. And I regret that the hon. gentleman has not seen fit to give his reasons why the boundaries of North Lanark have been changed as they are changed now. I regret, moreover, that such a change is proposed, because it will alter the relations existing between Lanark and Carleton. During my course in this House I have endeavored to deal with political questions on their merits. I have given no opposition to the hon. gentlemen except so far as to differ from them respecting their legislative measures. If North Lanark had been allowed to retain its boundaries it was my full intention to have retired from political life; but when I found that they wished to crush out the riding I resolved to again contest it. The hon. Minister of Customs has said that the reason why the boundaries of North Lanark are changed is in order to equalize Carleton and North Lanark. That is true so far as it goes, but the hon. gentleman did not give the full reason why the change was made. We find that the riding of North Lanark has a population of 13,943. If it had been desired to equalize the two ridings, it could have been done. Mr. Mowat did it when he altered the constituencies. We took Carleton Place from the south and gave it to the north riding, thus nearly equalizing the two ridings. He did not take from Carleton a township or cut off the village of Smith's Falls, but he left Lanark intact, so that the two ridings now represent 33,000. If it had been intended to equalize the Lanarks it could have been done as I have just stated. They added Torbolton and Fitzroy; perhaps the hon. member for South Lanark will explain why Huntley was not added also?

Mr. BOWELL. Would the hon. gentleman prefer Huntley to Torbolton, for we might accommodate him.

Mr. MACDONNELL. No; but I would not be surprised at you adding anything now. In fact the people of Huntley came down here and insisted that Huntley should be kept out. If there was no reason to add Huntley there was no reason to add Torbolton and Fitzroy. Hon. gentlemen opposite said they desired to equalize the Lanarks. Why did they not go down to Russell, with a population of 25,082, and equalize that? The people of that county declared that if two townships were taken from Russell and annexed to Stormont they would go against the Government. Such a statement was made even to the hon. Minister of Customs or the hon. leader of the Government; and that is the reason why Russell was not changed. In Ottawa there are two representatives to a population of 27,412; had Nepean been added, the average would have been 17,703, and Carleton would then have had 16,645, or 418 more than the average of thirteen eastern Ontario constituencies. The hon. member for South Lanark had boasted of strength, but he was compelled, in order to strengthen himself, to cut off Smith's Falls. He found his opponent, Mr. Frost, with 100 majority, and had him moved into another riding. It was supposed at one time that part of my riding would be taken to South Lanark, at another time to Frontenac, but it turns out that part of South Lanark is taken away. The man with 300 majority at the last election is afraid to meet his opponent. The hon. leader of the Government in introducing this Bill, said that his whole aim would be not to interfere with the territorial boundaries of the counties. But this is the very thing they have done. If Fitzroy and Torbolton are to be parts of North Lanark for municipal purposes, I have nothing to say if the people of those townships consent; but if they are simply placed there for election purposes, then I say the Government should take into consideration the resolution of Torbolton Council and the petition of Fitzroy Council:

“At a special meeting of the Council of the Corporation of the township of Torbolton—Present all the members.

“Moved by Mr. P. O. Kelly, and seconded by Mr. James Shaw, and resolved, That this Council sees with surprise and regret that the Dominion Government has in contemplation a move to separate part of the county of Carleton and join the same to the county of Lanark.

“We would therefore take this opportunity of expressing our view on the subject. We therefore are unanimous in our opinion, that any change would be against the wishes and injurious to the interests of all ratepayers of this township.”

This is signed by the reeve and the clerk. The hon. leader of the Government says he has received no petitions on this subject, but I say my late opponent and the prospective candidates of the Conservative party, and the president, secretary and several members of the Conservative Association were here weeks ago and had communications with the Government in reference to this Bill. If they desired to equalize the population why did they not call upon the people of Fitzroy and Torbolton? No; but my late opponent and the Conservative manipulators in North Lanark did not wish to do so. The people would have been up in arms. And the Tory manipulators ask that this Bill should go through without their consent, and I say that if they do not pay attention to the wishes of the people of these townships, they will be glad to do so before the elections are over. They may compel them to vote in a certain place, but they cannot compel them to vote for a certain candidate. Nothing more convinces me that the Government will be opposed by the Liberal young men of this country than this Bill. Why did not they gerrymander North Lanark in 1872? Because the hon. member for Halton (Mr. McDougall) represented it at that time, and if there was no necessity for a change in 1872, why make a change in 1882? The reason is that they have ascertained that any person professing to support the acts or the policy of the Government need not apply to Lanark now. They cannot make the people of these townships believe that this Act is passed for anything else than political purposes, and if they pass it they will find that not only the people of these townships, but the electors all over the country will rise up against them. We have the hon. Minister of Customs occupying an important place and receiving a large salary, as do many of his friends, and the same is true of the hon. Minister of Finance, and whatever influence or power I may possess I shall exert to the utmost to remove them from the positions they now further wish to hold by this Bill.

Mr. CASEY. Although it is an outrageous, and an unfair, and an absurd thing to debate a question of this importance after four o'clock in the morning we feel that a debate must be had, that we have that to say which must be said, and we shall say it at whatever hour in the morning or the afternoon it may have to be said. Hon. gentlemen opposite speak of a midnight attack having been made upon the electorate in 1874, when a change of Government was brought about by unforeseen and unlooked for scandalous disclosures in regard to the personal conduct of the men who formed the Conservative Government. But the fact was that new Government, although it possessed a small majority in the House, had not a working majority, and as the public sentiment in favor of the new Government was stronger in the country than in the House, the gentleman who led that Government dissolved the House, and took the only constitutional means of ascertaining what the will of the country was. Now, Sir, we are on the verge of another midnight attack, if that were a midnight attack.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. CASEY. The Bill before the House shows it; the stump speeches made in the House by the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Railways, and the other members of the Government, are sufficient proof of it. The statements of the Conservative papers and of Conservative candidates show that we are on the verge of an election. They hope that in spite of all these signs they may catch us napping; but I think the country is sufficiently aroused now to the fact that there is going to be a dissolution, a sudden and uncalled-for dissolution. We find a Government with a majority of eighty or ninety who declare that they are stronger in the country than ever, that the National Policy has more friends than it ever had, that the Pacific Railway bargain is more popular than it ever was, about to dissolve the House and appeal to the people. Their excuse is that the people should pronounce on their railway and financial policy. We asked this House and the Government to let the country pronounce on the Pacific Railway contract when there was some chance of the opinion of the country having some effect upon it, and they absolutely refused to do so. But now they demand an appeal to the people when it is too late, and the introduction of the present Bill is the most convincing proof that the Government know that the public sentiment of Ontario at all events is against them. Why, Sir, they have not the courage to fight out the battle on the old battle-field, or to play out the game according to the old rules, but in the last days of the Session, when they know they are going to dissolve the House in a few days, they are changing the whole map of the battle-field and making new rules for the game; and yet they dare to tell us that they are going back to the country to consult the people and obtain their true opinion. Why, Sir, I venture to say that it is quite possible, under the provisions of this Bill that a minority of the total vote of Ontario may elect a majority of its members in this House, and it is with that object that the Bill is introduced. The great Napoleon used to say that Providence was on the side of the strongest battalions. Our Canadian Napoleon seems to be of the same opinion. He thinks Providence is on the side of his strong majority, and he thinks it well to make sure that that majority shall be permanent. He is going to obtain his future majority by the votes of the majority he now has. If this Bill succeeds in its object, this House will virtually become a close corporation. Talk about consulting public opinion? Under a Bill of this kind, the Government will not be consulting the public opinion of Ontario, but the opinion of those who sit behind them. I think that on this occasion the hon. gentleman is counting too much on his strong battalions and on the miraculous effects of the providence which sits behind him, which however powerful in carving the constituencies, will fail in enlisting the sympathies of the people. I think the Government are far mistaken in supposing that with the transfer of townships they can transfer the votes of their inhabitants. Their action has disgusted many of their own friends as well as all the Liberals, a proof of which I can advance in an extract from the Ridgetown Standard, published in Ridgetown, one of the places transferred from Bothwell to West Elgin. This Conservative editor denounces the Bill, saying that the Opposition is right in condemning it as an infamous one; and this for the reason that the purpose of the Bill was so unconstitutional that even the grossest partyism could not decently excuse it.

"With all the Reform and many of the Conservative journals, we must confess our surprise at the scope and range of this Redistribution Bill. We looked for the creation of new ridings in counties where the Census showed the population to have increased to the proper extent, or the rearranging of electoral divisions where this could not be conveniently done, but we find instead a complete transformation of the political map of Ontario. That to give this Province the four members to which it was entitled the Government found it necessary to change the complexion of and tamper with fifty-two constituencies without any apparent regard to their municipal boundaries, and this in direct defiance of the principle laid down by its leader in introducing the Bill of 1872, when he declared that so far as possible the municipal boundaries should not be interfered with. A pretence is made that it is attempted to equalize the representation, and with this we could find no fault if it had been done in anything like a fair spirit, but in every case the exigencies of party are considered paramount to the convenience of the electors. Constituencies are run in all directions and at every angle, and the new map will resemble about the worst possible specimen of a patchwork quilt. To show that the excuse for mangling the constituencies in this manner is false is the easiest matter possible, and numerous instances could be cited. Townships are taken off here and added there, in opposition to the principle of representation by population, and none but the blindest partizan can deny it. Take, for instance, the case of the Elgins, the east riding of which had a population of 28,147, and the West Riding 14,214. All that was needed was to take St. Thomas from the east and add it to the west to equalize the representation a great deal better than the Bill provides for, and without interfering with county lines. But in this, as in the others, party would suffer, so cutting and haggling had to be resorted to. A reply is made that Mowat did as bad. Yes; and for doing so was condemned by the whole Conservative party, which now attempts to justify its deeds by those of a man it found guilty although powerless to punish. The Standard is in accord with and supports the general policy of the Government; but it cannot endorse such a measure as the one under discussion, and which was rightly pronounced by the Opposition an 'infamous Bill.'"

It is quite clear that we must give up all pretence of considering this Bill one to equalize the representation of the people. How has the representation been equalized in Elgin? The total population was over 42,000 and returned two members. To be exact there was one member for every 21,195 souls. But the two ridings were unequal in size, one containing 28,000 and the other 14,000. Was it possible to equalize those two ridings without giving outside county boundaries? It was extremely easy. On the boundary line between the two ridings stands St. Thomas with a population of over 8,000, and if it was transferred from the east to the west riding and the village of Port Stanley transferred to the east as by the Bill, the two ridings would stand thus: East, 19,780; West, 22,581 as near an approach to equality as you could expect. Why was that not done? Because St. Thomas gave a Conservative majority of 117 in 1878, and this change would have made the east riding Reform, though it would have afforded a fair chance to a Conservative to carry the west riding, because the Conservative majority in St. Thomas was about the same as that by which I carried the west riding in 1878. The probability is, however, that both would have gone Grit at the next election and hence this change was not made. The population of the new riding of East Elgin is over 26,000, and the west riding over 23,000. In other words, as the two ridings are arranged they return one for every 14,500, instead of one for every 21,195 as formerly. And this the hon. gentleman has the audacity to tell the House is equalizing the population of those two ridings. He has placed them 3,400 each further away from the average quota than before his redistribution, and has made their inequality greater, and for the purpose of securing the election of a political friend for the east riding, for he gives him a piece of a Conservative village which gave a Conservative majority of 40 in 1878. The right hon. gentleman also wishes to get rid of the hon. member for Bothwell by taking away two townships and a town which gave a Reform majority of 320 at the last election, and by whose votes the present member for that riding was elected. It is not at all wonderful, therefore, that it is such a glaring case of injustice and impartiality that even the Conservative newspapers of Ridgeway should denounce this as an infamous Bill. So much for the equalizing of the county of Elgin. I shall not go into the equalizations that have taken place in other neighborhoods. Many glaring cases have been brought up, and there are a great many more to bring up. Although we are weak in the flesh at this hour in the morning, we are not weak in spirit, and as long as we have voice left to express our indignation, we shall make ourselves heard. This Bill and the dissolution of Parliament, which is to immediately follow, are parts of a concerted scheme to bulldoze the premier Province of the Dominion, and to make this House a close corporation, to extort from the people a verdict favorable to the Government by the means of the noisy majority at their back. I do not believe this midnight attack, this coup d'état, will have the success expected. I do believe it will have a very considerable effect. It is impossible to suppose that such a cleverly-concocted scheme, such a cunningly devised trick, such a cleverly contrived fraud, should not have some effect on the next elections. It is impossible to suppose that it will not reduce, to a considerable extent, the number of Reformers who would otherwise have been returned to the House of Commons. But it will be successful to a smaller extent than its authors imagine. I shall not detain the hon. gentlemen who are about to follow me on this side by making any further remarks, but will simply express a confident hope that in spite of this midnight attack, in spite of the coup d'état effected by this Bill, we shall come back to the next House, if not in a majority of the whole House, at least in such force as will prevent the perpetration of any such outrage as this during the next five years.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. member for Niagara insists on calling in the members because I am not speaking, and I cannot speak simply because of the noise he is making. The hon. gentleman who is dying so gracefully, who is being so nearly guillotined, should not be so hard on others on whom the same thing is attempted. It is perhaps consistent with the whole course of the Government's action in this matter, and is consistent with the text of the Bill, that the hon. gentlemen who support this unworthy act should supplement it by an attempt to prevent those who have been directly aimed at from saying a few words in reference to it. I can understand that hon. gentlemen are tired, and that speaking must be very repugnant to them at this late, or, rather, early hour in the morning, but if they will force on a division, I must first give expression to my opinions on this matter. There is in the Bill a confession of weakness on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. For a long time they have been proclaiming that if an appeal was made to the constituencies again they would be returned by an overwhelming majority; and yet judging from my information and from the details of this Bill, some of the hon. gentlemen that have been loudest in their boasts, have had fear and trembling in their hearts, and therefore it is we find townships containing intelligent electors have been kicked from county to county and member to member as boys might kick a football. And thus it is that after the Bill was first introduced to the House changes were made at the solicitation of members, and actually after quarrelling on the part of different members, with reference to the different townships. What means a Bill of this kind? The hon. First Minister was charged with the duty of finding seats for four new members, and he could find these four new seats in the counties of Essex, Lambton, Bruce and Simcoe, each one of them requiring an extra member. How is it then that after finding these four seats fifty-two different constituencies in Ontario have been cut and carved as we find them in this Bill? The hon. gentleman himself years ago laid down a just principle which should guide him in legislation of this kind. The crime, for it closely approaches to that in taking the course he has done, is only exceeded in its wickedness by the attempt made in its justification to show that the great principle upon which these changes have been made has been the equalization of representation by population. Why, Sir, Leeds and Grenville, with its 12,000 population, Monck with its 16,000, and dozens of other constituencies give emphatic denial to this preposterous assertion. All these constituencies cry out in thunder tones that no such principle has been guiding the hon. gentleman who framed this Bill. One of the first faults of this Bill is that it is calculated to bring into the contest an element of bitterness perhaps greater than has ever before entered into any previous election contest. It is calculated to engender a bitterness between hon. members of this House who sit opposite each other in friendly relations. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that the epithets applied to their Bill from this side of the House have been strong and denunciatory, but I would ask hon. gentlemen who object to the words "cowardly," "infamous," what words I shall apply to it? Give me the words that will fitly describe the Act that a majority of the members sitting in this House, with the power in their hands, are directing against me personally, against the hon. member for West Durham personally, against the hon. member for Bothwell personally, against the hon. member for South Wentworth personally, against the hon. member for South Perth personally, against the hon. member for North Wentworth personally, against almost every member on this side of the House. A small band we are, and this Bill is deliberately levelled at us for the purpose of causing our political decapitation over which their organs gloat at the present time. Hon. gentlemen opposite have, I trust, a little spark of manliness left yet. Let me ask them to put themselves in the places of the gentlemen aimed at by this Bill, when they were powerless to resist, how would they feel to have their hands tied, and these men to stand there and scoff at them and say: "Ah, you cannot withstand us now." Noble, manly warfare this! What a party of gentlemen they are who tie a man's hands and then defy him and mock him, because they know he is no longer able to go into the fight. Our hands are, in a measure, tied, but our spirits are as resolute as ever. To-day we see the organs of the hon. gentlemen opposite gloating over the victory to be accomplished by tying their opponent's hands and feet. I am one of the victims so intended, and I find, in the Tory organ of my town, that the sounds of the voices of Mackenzie, Mills and Paterson will soon be heard in the legislative halls no more. We are marked out to fall, not as honorable men fall, but with our hands bound, manacled, and we are to be jeered and scoffed at as they are endeavoring to slay us. But all is not lost yet. Speaking of South Brant, and only speaking for myself, I know that an attempt will be made to take advantage of my supposed helplessness, and suppose easier seats might be found, but it is not my intention to seek them, and it is not my intention, in my old constituency, to allow any gentleman supporting the present Administration to go in there and be returned by acclamation. The question has been often asked, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" And I suppose the question has been now answered. The man has been found who struck the blow, in the noble and chivalrous gentleman whom Her Majesty thought it right to appoint a member of Her Privy Council. It was always supposed that the first hon. gentleman, as the head of the Conservative party, possessed chivalrous feelings, but their treatment of a political opponent had awakened in the minds of men a feeling that it was dishonorable on the part of the hon. gentleman to have struck a blow below the belt. I believe a change of sentiment will take place among the people. Why should a little band of representatives be legislated out of existence and not given a chance to defend themselves in a fair and open contest? Have we deserved it? True, we have opposed the hon. gentleman. I challenge the hon. gentleman to say that I have not discussed questions in a manly and non-partizan spirit, and if I have overstepped the bounds in the heat of debate I have been ready to apologize. If I opposed them on the National Policy it was because I held contrary opinions which I fearlessly expressed. Are there, however, no duties to be discharged by an Opposition, and is it because we have discharged them that hon. gentlemen opposite are not willing to leave us to fight it out in the country before the same constituents? I regret that the hon. First Minister should have placed his name to a Bill that cannot bring to him credit and renown. The hon. gentleman must now see he has made a mistake. No defence of it is made, in the Bill, to the arguments of the leader of the Opposition; no attempt to answer them was made. It was absurd to talk about the Bill equalizing constituencies. They had to travel almost from Niagara up to the county of Brant in order to strike a blow at myself; but the contest which is coming on has yet to decide whether it will be fatal. I regret, however, that the townships taken away should include men who have stood by me during my political life, and with whom I have had pleasant associations. Here was the riding of North Norfolk, with 17,000 people, needing equalization; but Oakland is dismembered from South Brant, and not put there, but tacked on to a riding with which it had no connection, a riding which has already a population of 24,000. I ask the hon. Minister, who I see has resumed his wonted good nature, why this was done? The right hon. gentleman will find that in this matter, as in many others, he has committed a mistake in fighting against principles which in days gone by he opposed, but which he was always ready to take up and adopt in order to retain himself in office. But he will find, as he has found before, that when he takes up principles which he does not believe in, which he never did believe in, and attempts to put them in practice, he is sure to bungle. The county of Bruce was entitled to another member, and the hon. gentleman gave it another member. But how? Three divisions could easily have been made, approximately equal in population and geographically correct. In that case, they would have taken from my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. Gillies) nearly 200 of his supporters; but that was not enough. Even that did not satisfy them, and they took away from him another township with 150 of a Reform majority, and the result of all this is that one riding has 25,000 population and the other 17,000, and so it goes throughout the whole Bill. I find it is impossible, in view of the details of this Bill, to speak of the hon. gentleman in the terms in which I would like to speak of him—to speak even of an opponent. The hon. gentleman professes to be guided by the principle of representation by population, and I appeal to him before it is too late—for it is within his power and within his province, while the Bill is within the Committee, so to alter it as to give a measure of recognition to that principle which, as the Bill now stands, is violated in every clause. Every honorable and fair-minded man must see, in the measure, a shameful and deliberate attempt to stab political opponents, to bind their hands. In Committee of the Whole there will be an opportunity for the hon. gentleman to retrace his steps. If the hon. gentleman will yet amend his Bill so as to accord with the principle to which he professes his adherence, I, for one, will not raise my voice against the Bill, no matter what may be its political effects in individual cases. But if this Bill is allowed to go through Committee as it is, with all its iniquities, with all its violations in almost every clause of the true principle of equalizing the population, then, Sir, I will be sorry for it, and deep down in my heart will rest the conviction—and it will be a lasting and abiding one—that a gentleman who has passed a high and successful career in the cause of Canada, has, in his last days, been a party to putting a measure on the Statute-Book which the unbiassed people of the country and of the world will repudiate as an act unworthy of his position. The right hon. gentlemen said with some pride, in our hearing the other day: "A Briton I was born and a Briton I hope to die." Sir, it is a grand thing to be a Briton, because associated with that name is all that is noble and brave and chivalrous; but if the hon. gentleman puts that Bill through, a Bill intended to level a fatal blow at his opponents, and intended to strengthen him in this House by sheer force of the majority which he has, I put the question to the hon. gentlemen, having been born a Briton, how can he hope to die a Briton with that blot on a name which I would fain hope might yet go down unsullied by it to posterity.

Amendment (Mr. Blake) negatived on the following division:—

Mr. MILLS. The discussion which has taken place shows that the right hon. gentleman and those who support him are not disposed to disturb the representation in such a way as fairly to represent the different political parties in the country. Further than that, the Bill now before us interferes with existing arrangements unnecessarily, and it does so in a manner wholly unfair to the Liberal party. The observations which the hon. the First Minister himself has made, indicate that it was his deliberate intention, to use his own expression, to "hive" the Liberal party in the constituencies in the Province of Ontario. But, Sir, we will have an opportunity of appealing to hon. gentlemen, to their masters, the constituent body of the Province of Ontario. I move:

That the said Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be resolved, that in readjusting the representation of the people in Parliament, there should be no needless interference with existing arrangements, and the principle of justice and fair play towards both political parties should be observed.

That the said Bill contains numerous needless changes, and is framed with a view to concentrate large bodies of the Liberal voters in a few electoral districts, and to add Conservative voters to, or remove Liberal voters from, many electoral districts, and thus to weaken the effective strength of the Liberal party, and to pack the constituencies of Ontario in favor of the Conservatives.

Wheler.—52.

Bill read the second time.

PROVISIONAL DISTRICTS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:

LOBBE.

The Governor General transmits, for the information of the House of Commons, the copy of a Minute of the Privy Council of Canada, dated the 8th May, instant, on the subject of the establishment of the Provisional Districts in the North-West Territories, as shown on the accompanying Map, which he recommends to the favorable consideration of the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 8th May, 1882.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I give notice that I will, on Wednesday, invite the consideration of the House to His Excellency's Message.

House adjourned at 5:45 a. m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

TUESDAY, 9th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CHIGNECTO SHIP RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That in view of the great advantages which would accrue to the Maritime Provinces, and the Intercolonial trade of Canada generally, from the construction of a ship railway across the Isthmus of Chignecto from Tignish, on La Baie Verte, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to a point at the mouth of the River La Planche, on the Bay of Fundy, and of the proposal made by Mr. H. E. C. Ketchum, on behalf of a Company formed and to be incorporated as "The Chignecto Ship Railway Company," and approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, after consultation with the Chief Engineers of the Department, it is expedient to entertain the said proposal and to provide:

That if the said Company do within ^{years} ~~day~~ ^{now next} construct such Ship Railway, according to the terms of their said proposal, and of an agreement and contract in that behalf which the Government of Canada may, if they see fit, make with the said Company, in a substantial manner and fully equipped for the services therein to be stipulated, to the satisfaction of and subject to the approval of the said Government; then, during a term of twenty-five years from the date of said approval, provided the said Ship Railway is kept in thorough repair and satisfactorily performs the services aforesaid, a subsidy at the rate of $150,000 a year shall be paid to the said Company out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, such subsidy not being payable for any period during the said twenty-five years during which the conditions above mentioned shall not be complied with.

He said: I have received the assent of the Crown to this resolution.

Motion agreed to.

HARBOR OF ST. JOHN, N.B.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution:—

1. That it is expedient to provide for the appointment of certain Commissioners for the improvement and management of the harbor of St. John, in the Province of New Brunswick.

2. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to raise, by the issue of debentures bearing interest payable half yearly at the rate of four per cent. per annum, and redeemable in forty years, the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and out of this sum to advance and pay to "The Harbor Commissioners of St. John," in the first place five hundred thousand dollars, to enable them to complete the acquisition of the harbor property, rights, rents and privileges, from the Mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of St. John, in the manner provided in the Act to be passed in that behalf, and to advance the remainder of the sum, so raised from time to time, to the said Commissioners to enable them to meet payments to be made for the improvement and extension of the harbor; the said Commissioners depositing with the Receiver General, on the advance of any such sum, their own bonds in favor of Her Majesty for the Government of Canada, for a like amount in such form as the Receiver-General may approve, and bearing interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, from the time of such advance, payable out of the income of the said Commissioners, from tolls and other sources of income under the said Act, and to be the first charge thereon, after the expenses of collecting the same.

He said: The assent of the Crown has been given to this resolution.

Motion agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill (from the Senate) was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 160) to amend the Act respecting the Harbor of North Sydney in Nova Scotia.—(Mr. McLellan.)

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Government Orders are called, I desire to direct the attention of the hon. First Minister to a Bill which I have charge of, and which he was kind enough to promise me, on a previous occasion, should be acted on this Session. A week ago Monday we completed the Notices of Motion, and the House adjourned when the Orders were reached, the Bill standing first on the Order Paper, and I had the hon. Minister's promise that the Bill would be taken up yesterday, the next private day. Since then, however, that private day has been taken by the Government, and unless the courtesy of the Government is extended to me, I cannot reach the Bill this Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must say that I think the hon. gentleman's friends on the other side are responsible a good deal for my not having hitherto given him the opportunity to take up the Bill. I shall, however, give him an opportunity before the close of the Session.

NORTH-WEST PROVISIONAL DISTRICTS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I brought down this morning a Message from His Excellency the Governor General about the territorial subdivisions of the North-West which I intend to move to-morrow, and I have a plan of it attached to the Message, and I think I had better have it put up in the reading room that hon. gentlemen may see at once what the proposed divisions are.

REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 158) to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I desire to offer a few remarks upon this Bill, and I shall detain the House but a very few minutes in doing so. I intended to have spoken on the subject last night, but the lateness of the hour prevented me. I shall endeavor, in discussing this matter, to do so in a temperate spirit, a spirit which, I must confess, it is very difficult for one to possess himself of on an occasion of this kind. The course of the Government, aside from the character of the Bill itself, is one calculated to provoke resentment and indignation, because this Bill, a Bill of a character more important than any that has been introduced into this House for many Sessions, has been brought down at the very last stage of the Session, and with an evident desire of curtailing and stifling that full and free discussion which should have been had upon a measure of such importance. Enquiries for this Bill have been made repeatedly by the leader of the Opposition. On each occasion that hon. gentleman asked the hon. First Minister when it was his intention to bring this Bill down; on each occasion the importance of having it brought down at an early day was plainly placed before the House. On each occasion it was asserted that a measure of the importance of this measure should be brought down at such a stage of the Session as would admit of a full and free discussion of the Bill. Sir, that has not been done; the Bill has been brought down at a late hour, and the evident tactics of the Government, now that it is brought down, are to rush that Bill through with all possible haste. They are unwilling to permit any greater degree of discussion of that measure than the majority choose to permit; and it must be admitted that the Government in this respect will succeed, because the members have already been kept here beyond the ordinary period of parliamentary Sessions, all are anxious to reach their homes, and this Bill will evidently fail to have that discussion which it should receive. The Bill throughout its course has been marked by irregular proceedings. The hon. gentleman, when he introduced the Bill, did not leave it with the Clerk of the House, but withdrew it after its introduction. That Bill was materially altered after it was introduced into the House. The whole course of the Government with respect to this measure shows that they have determined to do as they please, to be a law to themselves. I think it is due to your honest and judicious ruling on this matter that they should not be enabled on this occasion to carry out their intentions by disregarding parliamentary rules. This Bill, and I say it without any desire to use harsh language, desiring only to characterize the Bill fairly and dispassionately, as it deserves, is an outrage upon popular rights, and particularly upon the rights of the people of Ontario. It is a Bill calculated to secure for the minority a majority of the representatives in the House of Commons, and to suppress the free expression of popular sentiment. It is a Bill calculated to give to a small portion of the people of Ontario undue strength and undue weight in the political affairs of this Province. This Bill is subversive of free institutions; and the party capable of framing it, and attempting to pass it, would be restrained by no considerations, would stop at no outrage upon popular rights that might be perpetrated with impunity in carrying forward their policy. The party that can thus trample upon the majority of a great Province, may be naturally expected to disregard popular rights; and this Act is the entering wedge subversive of popular liberties of that Province and this Dominion. The Bill, in addition of being subversive of popular liberties—and I am sorry to use so harsh an expression—partakes of the character of a swindle; because it is founded upon false pretences, including the pretence of equalizing the representation, and of sweeping away small boroughs with a population smaller than the basis of representation, and equalizing the representation of various ridings; and yet no attempt is made to obtain that result. Five of the new ridings that are formed under the Bill have a population of but a trifle over 15,000 each; seven of the old ridings that had a population of about 16,000 each are left untouched. In all, there are twenty-five ridings either now being formed or old ridings not interfered with having a population a trifle over 17,000, and many with a population of a trifle over 14,000 each; and yet this Bill was introduced ostensibly to equalize the representation. I am, therefore, justified in characterizing the Bill as a swindle, because it is founded on false pretences. One thing that strikes me in this matter with alarm is the fact that it is impossible to elicit a single expression of shame from hon. gentlemen opposite over a crime like this, a crime perpetrated for the first time in Massachusetts, and there recognized as subversive of the popular liberties. The design of this Bill is to enable a powerful majority, to deprive the minority of their rights in the government of the country. That offence at present does not elicit, in this House, a single blush, and the protests of the Opposition against this scandalous operation are received with jeers and gibes. I am sorry it is so. I think it augers ill for the future of this country that a monstrous Bill of this kind should be introduced as this has been, and forced through in the manner witnessed. I noticed a caricature in one of our cartoon journals—a model of a Christian statesman on his knees praying the Lord to forgive this fraud and make it a great success. That seems to illustrate the feeling that actuates hon. gentlemen opposite, who profess Christian feeling. They may, like the Pharisee, thank God that they are not like other men; and I think there are many thousands in the country, who will thank God that there are a great many men not like them. Well, this scheme, immoral as it is, is pre-ordained to failure. Already we are beginning to see the first fruits of the ingathering that will come. I noticed in the daily journals last night that the president of a Conservative association in East Durham has resigned his seat. He had a little sense of shame left. He could not condone so great a crime, and, as an honest man, he washed his hands of the whole matter. I now wish to give an historical account of the class of measures called gerrymandering schemes, and I wish to call the attention of the hon. First Minister to the first transaction of this kind, that resulted in giving schemes of this nature the name they now bear. The first scheme of this kind, the first atrocity of this kind, was perpetrated in Massachusetts in 1811, at the time that the Hon. Elbridge Gerry was Governor of that State. We are told, in the historical account of this matter, which is very brief and which I will read, that the contest for power between the Federalists and Democrats of Massachusetts had been long and bitter. In 1811 the latter succeeded in electing their candidate as Governor. The following is the account of the origin of the gerrymandering process: "The contest for power between the Federalists and Democrats of Massachusetts had been long and bitter. In 1811 the latter succeeded in electing their candidate for Governor (Elbridge Gerry), and a majority of both Houses of the Legislature. In order to secure the election of the United States senators in the future, it was important to perpetuate this possession of power, and measures were taken to retain a Democratic majority in the State Senate in all future years. The senatorial district had been formed without any division of counties. This arrangement, for the purpose alluded to, was now disturbed. The Legislature proceeded to re-arrange the senatorial districts of the State. They divided counties in opposition to the protests and strong constitutional arguments of the Federalists; and those of Essex and Worcester were so divided as to form a Democratic district in each of those Federal counties, without an apparent regard to convenience or propriety. The work was sanctioned, and became law by the signature of Governor Gerry. He probably had no other hand in the matter, yet he received most severe castigation from the Opposition. In Essex county the arrangement of the district in its relation to the towns was singular and absurd. Russell, the veteran editor of the Boston Sentinel, who had fought against the scheme valiantly, took a map of that country and designated by particular colors the towns thus selected, and hung it on the wall of his editorial room. One day Gilbert Stuart, the eminent painter, looked on the map, and said the towns which Russell had thus distinguished resembled some monstrous animal. He took a pencil, and with a few touches, added what might represent a head, wings, claws, and tail. 'There,' Stuart said, 'that will do for Salamander.' Russell, who was busy with his pen, looked up at the hideous figure, and exclaimed: 'Salamander! Call it Gerrymander!!' The word was immediately adopted into the political vocabulary as a term of reproach to the Democratic Legislature. Stuart's monstrous figure of the Gerrymander was presented upon a broadside containing a natural and political history of the animal, and hawked about the country. From one of these before me, kindly placed in my possession by the late Edward Everett, I copied the picture given in this note, which is about one half the size of the original. After giving some ludicrous guesses as to its character and origin—whether it was the genuine Basilisk, the Serpens Monocephalus of Pliny, the Griffin of romance, the Great Red Dragon or Apollyon of Bunyan, or the Monstrum horrendum of Virgil—the writer of the natural history of Gerrymander, says the learned Dr. Watergruel proved it to be a species of Salamander, engendered partly by the devil in the fervid heat of party strife. ‘But,’ he says, ‘as this creature has been engendered and brought forth under the sublimest auspices, the doctor purposes that a name should be given to it expressive of its genus, at the same time conveying an elegant and very appropriate compliment of His Excellency the Governor, who is known to be a jealous patron of whatever is new, astonishing, and erratic, especially of domestic growth and manufacture. For these reasons, and other valuable considerations, the doctor has decreed this monster shall be denominated a gerrymander.’ What was the result of that scheme, which, like the present one, disregarded county lines, and placed districts without regard to geographical outlines and county lines, and was calculated to secure for the party ascendancy in the State Government, but which resulted in disappointment to its authors. In the history of Massachusetts is the following reference to the result of this scheme :

“In the midst of this excitement, a new election took place which resulted in favor of Caleb Strong. The contest was ‘uncommonly animated’ and both parties were active; but the friends of Mr. Gerry, with all their exertions, could not overcome the prejudices against him. Yet the vote was close and the majority for Mr. Strong was but 1,370. It is possible that the conduct of Mr. Gerry, in districting the State for the election of Senators, had some influence on the popular vote; and it was alleged that the division thus made, which the Federalists christened with the name of ‘Gerrymandering’ was new and arbitrary, and was ‘designed to secure the triumph of the Republican party.’ And, so far as the Senate was concerned, it had that effect; but a majority of the House was of the Federal party. It happened then, as it has often since, that the movements of politicians, however sagacious in their own estimation, failed of effecting all they desired. There were elements not taken into the account, which operated against them; and the fluctuations of public opinion were wholly overlooked.”

Sir, there are fluctuations of that nature at work now. There are fluctuations of public opinion in consequence of this felonious measure that will produce results unexpected by the hon. gentlemen who have concocted this scheme. Many subsequent atrocities in the United States in this line have been perpetrated. We have the account of the shoe-string districts of the State of Mississippi, where the colored population of that State were hived in counties along the river. The hiving process, no doubt, my hon. friend has copied from the example of the Democrats of Mississippi. In addition to the gerrymandering process of the State of Mississippi, the gentlemen from whom hon. gentlemen opposite have copied went a step further. They adopted the policy of the shot gun association and intimidation, the natural outcome of a state of things such as is now introduced in this country. To-day, the Republican party in the United States, after twenty years rule, after having saddled that country with a policy under which the people are becoming restive, and seeing indications that they will be driven from power, are seeking to fortify themselves by gerrymandering the congressional districts from one end of the Union to the other. They have gerrymandered the State of Ohio in such a way that they expect to carry nineteen out of the twenty-one districts in that State, when, with a fair division of districts, it is doubtful if they would carry a bare majority. They are gerrymandering every State in the Union that they may override the wishes of the people and set the popular will at defiance. That is what my hon. friend is doing to-day. He is simply a servile imitator of those men. The press of the United States are making some comments on the gerrymandering. They must be interesting reading to Sir John and his followers. To an American, of course, there is nothing particularly new or startling in the process.

The public of the United States have become habituated to it, and it is looked upon almost as a matter of course that the party in power should use this means of perpetuating its rule. The United States press treat it as an evidence of the rapid Americanization of our politics. The Boston Post thinks that as imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, the Republican party can point with pride to the fact that its example in the matter of re-districting the States is being followed so closely by Sir John in Ontario. It says :

“There is no patent on political knavery. It is easy to smuggle it across any boundary, and it looks to us as though Sir John Macdonald had been a close student of the methods of manipulation employed by the Republican party in the United States to keep itself in control of the Government.”

As a matter of fact, neither party can claim any monopoly of the practice, both having fully availed themselves of it when the opportunity presented itself. American experience, however, is not calculated to encourage the naturalization of the system in Canada. Operations of this kind have frequently had a boomerang effect on the projectors, as may not improbably be the case with the extensive job which the Republican party now have on hand. The Chicago Times says :

“The gerrymanders of Massachusetts are finding Boston a difficult problem, and are proposing to put the city into five different congressional districts, but the longer heads are counselling against a course which some day will be certain to bring retaliation. Canadian Tories would do well to restrain their exultations until the elections are well over, for on this side of the line the public conscience has not been deadened to the enormity of the crime by its frequent repetition, and the recoil will be much swifter and surer than they imagine.”

I hope the right hon. gentleman will take into consideration the fact that the course he is taking is one that some day may bring retaliation, that he is opening the flood-gates for evils the extent of which no man can foresee. When we have the misfortune to lose talented, efficient men from our midst, when death calls such men away from us, it is customary for us to indulge in expressions of grief, to mourn their loss. The right hon. gentleman, on this occasion, proceeds to usurp the functions of death in attempting to remove, as effectually as death could, from this Chamber, men whose services here can ill be spared. He has aimed a blow at the hon. member for Lambton, whose experience and ability are invaluable in the solution of public questions. He seeks to deprive this House of the presence of the hon. member for Bothwell, whose painstaking industry and close attention to his duties will make his loss, should the hon. gentleman succeed in his aim, severely felt in the councils of this country. My hon. friend from South Brant has been singled out as a victim, as well as many other of the brightest intellects in this House. For what purpose? Certainly not for the good of the country, and I hold that the right hon. gentleman should be condemned for this Act, if for nothing else in connection with this gerrymandering scheme. But, Sir, there is another feature in this scheme the most deplorable of all, and that is the demoralizing influence that it will exert upon public sentiment and upon the public morals in this country. The Bill is calculated to produce a state of feeling like that which exists among people destitute of political virtue. It is calculated to say to the people: “Behold the rewards of fraud, behold the rewards of political dishonesty, behold the rewards of a disregard of popular rights, behold the rewards that attend the sweeping away of the safeguard of popular liberty.” If this Bill be a success, if, in consequence of it, the right hon. gentleman and his party are continued in power, the lesson that Bill will teach to the people is a demoralizing, a debasing, a disastrous lesson, and the right hon. gentleman in this matter, standing as the conservator of the peace of this country, standing as he does with reference to this people and with reference to that Maker who rules over us all, ought to pause before he perpetrates an atrocity and wrong of this kind, fraught with consequences so monstrous, consequences so deplorable to the Dominion of Canada. Sir, we are hastening on to the day when we shall have the rule of American politics adopted in this country. We are adopting the most scandalous, the most debasing, the most demoralizing of all the things that pertain to American politics in this gerrymandering Bill, and following this we shall have rogues in office and good men avoiding office as they do in every State in the American Union; we shall have in this country politics a by-word and stinking in the nostrils of all honest people, we shall have lobbies, we shall have rings, we shall have bribes, we shall have corruption, we shall have speculation, we shall have the whole nameless brood, the whole swarm of evils, that will follow like vultures flocking to the carcass when you open the floodgates, as the consequence of adopting this Bill. The right hon. gentleman, like every man placed at the head of affairs in this country, is a public educator, and his influence will be exerted either for good or for evils, and no consideration should have greater weight with any public man than the consideration that his influence is more potent than any other influence that can be named in the education of the people, over whom God has called upon him to preside. What has been the influence that my right hon. friend has exerted upon the morals of this country? Why Sir, it is time for that hon. gentleman to seek repentance with tears, instead of adding to the long list of his—I will not say crimes—to the long list of his failures to perform his whole duty to this people, by this most scandalous of all his public acts. Sir, that right hon. gentleman, in the matter of the Pacific Scandal, struck a blow at political morality in this country that is most disastrous in its results. I say that, without any desire to open that old matter, I only refer to it as a historical matter, and I say that the right hon. gentleman, with the record he has behind him, ought to have sought, on this—perhaps the great closing scene of his political career, to have secured the blessings of man and the favor of his God rather than to introduce this measure, which will be pronounced by posterity as the most scandalous of all the measures that the right hon. gentleman is responsible for. Well, Sir, we have to trust that his design will fail. We have more than a trust of this, we feel an assurance, we have not a doubt, Sir, that this act will fail. We do not believe that the public of Canada are debauched to such an extent as to give their sanction to a measure like this. We believe that an indignant people will rise in their might, and will repudiate this measure and those who have sought to enact it; and we believe the result of this will be to verify the words of the greatest poet of all time who said:

"I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree; yet he passed away, and lo! he was not. Yea, I sought him, yet he could not be found."

Sir, the party who are attempting to perpetrate this outrage upon the people of Ontario, the party who are so insensible to the demands of justice, the party who are so insensible to the common claims of honesty, will inevitably be repudiated by the people of this country. That party will be swept away and they will leave nothing to remember them by but the evil odor of their acts from which we implore them to-day to withhold their hand, not to insist upon passing the Bill and making it the law of this land. But, Sir, great an injustice as it is, this matter is worse than an injustice; it is a crime that promises disaster to Canada, it is a crime that is aimed at one Province alone. Of all the Provinces of this great Dominion Ontario is the only one brought under the operation of this gerrymandering Bill. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the state of feeling in the Province of Ontario is sensitive, that it is excited, that a resentful feeling exists there. Various things have conspired to create the feeling that now exists in Ontario. We have had a dispute about the boundary of that Province; the right hon. gentleman has refused to accord to that Province its territorial rights. He seeks to despoil it of a large part of its domain in the face of an award which the Government of the Dominion solemnly bound itself to stand by. He seeks to do that in violation of his own past record, and the manner in which he seeks to do it, and the circumstances attending this case, are such as to create resentment among the people of Ontario. I can tell him that the feeling is deep seated; it is one that it will not do for the right hon. gentleman to trifle with. Then, Sir, with a degree of fatuity almost beyond belief, the right hon. gentleman proceeds to provoke that feeling still further by the disallowance of legislation clearly within the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario. Then, Sir, the right hon. gentleman, in place of having the wisdom to adopt a policy of conciliation, and striving to undo the mischief he has done already, proceeds to crown his acts by an Act which he proposes to-day that will arouse a greater feeling of indignation in that Province than both other Acts put together. Sir, the right hon. gentleman and his followers in this matter are invoking disasters upon themselves and upon this country that no hon. member in this House may be able to measure. I can tell the right hon. gentleman that the people of Ontario are not represented fairly by the class of men who are here as their representatives, and obeying the behests of the right hon. gentleman. I can tell him that the people of that Province will repudiate the acts of these men. I do not utter this as a threat, but I call his attention to it, and maintain that he is now taking a course that imperils the existence of Confederation. I can tell him that there is a limit to the forbearance of freemen, and when that limit is reached Ontario will resent these attempts to trample upon her rights, these attempts to drag her through the mire, and to make her the victim of malignant party hate. I can tell him that there is danger if he persists in his course of driving the people of that Province to start out upon a career for themselves, with justice for their motto and liberty for their guiding star, freeing themselves from all the complications that exist in this Dominion in consequence of the policy of the right hon. gentleman. I give him plainly to understand that the outrages he is perpetrating upon them are outrages that they will submit to no longer. I may have spoken warmly on this subject. I feel that a grave crisis threatens this Dominion. I feel that the right hon. gentleman in his desire to secure the perpetuation of his power is trifling with the dearest and most sacred interests of this country. I feel that the right hon. gentleman is allowing his regard for and allegiance to party to override and overwhelm his allegiance to country, and I implore that right hon. gentleman and his followers to consider the step they are about to take, and, if possible, to be governed by reason, by principles of common fairness, by a desire to promote the interests of the country rather than of the great Conservative party, to act as patriots, to look above mere party interests to the interests of the whole Dominion. I implore them to regard the rights of the minority, to do justice, to refrain from perpetrating a great wrong, and if they do not do this, I warn them that the day will come when they will regret the course they have taken to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think I can keep silent when I hear such language uttered on the floor of the House, as I have heard from the hon. member for North Norfolk. That hon. gentleman has treated us to a tirade unsurpassed in violence in any of the debates we have heard for years. The hon. gentleman has not touched the case, he has not discussed the Bill before us, he has not mentioned a single instance in which he complains; his whole language has been that of violent denunciation. The hon. gentleman, contrary to his usual habit, has absolutely lost his temper. What does he say? He says this Bill was brought down at a late hour. Ample opportunity has been given by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, ample opportunity will be given to hon. members to say what is to be said on this subject, to discuss this matter fully and freely, and we showed, by the patience with which the discussion was listened to last night, there was no intention to do as hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House did from 1874 to 1878, choke down the minority by the most unseemly conduct ever witnessed on the floor of a deliberative assembly. The hon. gentleman says that we are attempting to deprive Ontario of her liberties. We saw in a very clever newspaper a caricature which the hon. gentleman has referred to, and I am glad he has put me in mind of it. We saw Ontario represented as a helpless Gulliver thrown ashore upon the island of Lilliput, who in the morning found himself tied to the earth by lines which proved to be the largest cables that small people could find, and they were not larger than a hair. If the hon. gentleman had read his Gulliver lately, and I have not certainly since I was a boy, he would remember that Quibus Flestrin—the Man Mountain, as he was called by the Lilliputians in their little language—when he awoke in the morning and brushed the dew from his locks and rose like a giant refreshed, went into the service of the Government, and remained there, not at all disturbed by what had been done. On the contrary, with the greatest alacrity he commenced and carried on for a long time a warfare on his own account against the big Endians who were contending with the little Endians. He waded into the sea, seized the cables of the hostile fleet with one hand, and towed them into the harbor, as we intend to seize the cables of the minority, and bring them captured into our port. That is the final conclusion of the caricature which the hon. member for North Norfolk has quoted. But there is something more serious than this, to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. He has ventured to say that the dominant party has attempted to use their power for the purpose of crushing out the miserable remnant of life left on the Opposition side. They failed to be in sympathy with the people of Canada; it is not a scheme for redistribution seats that has killed these hon. gentlemen, their doom was pronounced in 1878, and it has never been reversed; and whatever hon. gentlemen opposite may have said, I say that their lack of political instinct has killed them, their lack of sympathy with the whole of Canada has killed them; the fact that they failed to recognize what were the absolute necessities and requirements of a country like this has killed them. The reactionists and obstructionists are the men who will be hereafter held responsible for the ruin of a party which was once powerful and respected, and which it was desirable in the interests of this House to keep in opposition, for I believe nothing can be more unsafe than to have a weak and feeble minority, a threatening and desperate minority, such as the hon. gentlemen who has just spoken represents on the Opposition side of the House. I could imagine, if I desired to do so, a conversation among hon. gentlemen opposite, similar to that which was quoted by the leader of the Opposition last night during his long speech. I could imagine those hon. gentlemen in power in 1882, and could see them get together to construct a scheme for the redistribution of seats in Ontario. I could see them guided by the inspiration of the Mowat Government in 1873-74, and we very well know from the indications we had then what would have been the result of their cogitations. The hon. gentleman spoke as if a scheme of this kind was an anomalous one. Does he not know that the voters of Ontario remain the same? With one breath he says we have annihilated his party, and in the next breath he says an indignant people will rise and repudiate the attempt made to destroy them, and will repudiate the attempt to do what we had a perfect right to do; but no man can complain of what is perfectly legitimate, what we have done in the exercise of an authority which was delegated to the right hon. gentleman who I follow and his colleagues, what we could not refrain from doing, and hon. gentlemen opposite knew it full well. The wounds smart no doubt, and the hon. gentleman shows his wounds, and like a whipped school-boy he whines over them. Sir, the hon. gentleman and his friends will get no sympathy in Ontario. The Province of Ontario will say: "In 1874, we entrusted those hon. gentlemen with power. In 1874, misled by the promises of the hon. gentleman and his friends, we said, if you can govern better than the party who have been in power from 1868 to 1874, we give the country into your hands. You have promised that you will govern the country on certain principles which you have announced, you have promised retrenchment and reform, you have promised a reversal of the extravagant policy which you renounced; we will let you try your hand, we will send away our old and trusted servants, we will listen to your charges against them, you shall have the keys of the Treasury, and we will see how the new men will manage." With an enormous majority, with a majority at his back which gave no excuse for shortcoming, what did the hon. leader of the Government do during all those five years. I will venture to say there is not a more shameful record of jobbery, of plundering, of abuse of powers than can be found in the records of the Government for five years between 1874 and 1878. There is the secret of the hon. gentleman's grief; there is the reason why he and his party suffer the humiliation of which a daily spectacle is presented to us in the minority which now sits in this House. The people took these hon. gentlemen at their word. They trusted them. They were deceived, and upon the flimsiest issue that ever went before a people they hurled them indignantly out of office. Hon. gentlemen say we stole a verdict. Sir, let the words of the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard J. Cartwright) never be forgotten when he rose, after my right hon. friend moved his resolution for the protection of the struggling industries of Canada. He said: We are thankful now we are face to face with the Liberal Conservative party upon an issue which can be discussed, an issue which cannot be avoided, an issue which we had sought; we have nailed our flag to the mast, we will keep them to that issue, and the people of Canada well understood it. The people of Canada accepted that issue; they pronounced upon it, and the hon. gentlemen on the other side are, to-day, reaping the fruits of their policy, and they have discovered what was the drift of public sentiment, what was the desire of the people; and I can tell you, Sir, that they are responsible for the condition in which they find themselves to-day. But, Sir, the voters remain the same, the people are the same. The hon. gentlemen now direct their attention to Ontario. They have deserted all their former battle grounds; their whole appeal is to Ontario, and it is a revolutionary appeal. The hon. gentleman says, the people of Ontario ought to rise in their might against this nefarious scheme. Well, Sir, the voters are all there. If they have a majority in Ontario they can easily obtain it. There is no difficulty about it. The Government cannot smother the views of the voters. The votes would be taken away from them; but if the hon. gentleman is fully satisfied that the voters of Ontario will denounce this scheme, why does he expend his fury on the denunciations in which he has just indulged? Why does he not let us rush on to our fate? Why attempt to check us, and appeal to us in a language which is first a menace and then a whine? The hon. gentleman knows that he and his friends have lost the confidence of Ontario; that they cannot regain that confidence. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is not the habit of our side to bring American politics into our discussions. That role is notoriously reserved for the hon.

member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), for I believe every speech of any consequence made by that hon. gentleman since he entered Parliament has contained something with regard to the great Republic beside us—a country which we greatly respect, which we always desire to treat with consideration, but we want them to have their politics in their own way. We do not intend to meddle with them, or that they should meddle with us, and we do not intend to import any of their opinions. When the hon. gentleman was on this side of the House he opposed the Democratic party, and now he is denouncing the Republican party. I do not intend to make any insinuations against the hon. gentleman, but I would like to ask him if he voted in or near Bay City, Michigan, at the last presidential election, and whether he voted for the Democratic or Republican party.

Mr. CHARLTON. In reply to hon. gentleman, I may say that I am a British subject by birth, that I never voted in the United States, that I left that country when I was a minor, and since that time I have been a resident of Canada, and the only votes that I ever cast in my life were cast in Canada. If it were worth while to pay any attention to the rudeness of the hon. gentleman, I might refer at some length to the insinuations of the hon. gentleman, but I merely repeat that I am a British subject by birth, although born in the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. A British subject by birth although born in the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes. In Queen Anne's reign a Statute was passed for the purpose of relieving those who were born outside of Great Britain of the hardship of being aliens, and under that Statute any person born a British subject in a country at peace with Great Britain is a British subject by birth. I might say further to the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) that I can trace my ancestry back to the ninth century, that I am proud of my ancestry, proud of the fact that I am a British subject, and proud of the fact that, in comparison with me, the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) is a plebeian.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not intend to question the hon. gentleman's genealogy or his family tree, nor did I assert that he had voted in the United States. I merely asked that question which I might have asked in another way, by enquiring if he had voted would he have voted for the Democratic candidate or the Republican candidate. The hon. gentleman says that the Province of Ontario, if it is driven to the extremity of being compelled to accept this Act, will rise in its might. He says already there is great dissatisfaction in that Province. The truth is that these gentlemen, reduced to the desperation of their condition, have abandoned their attacks on the National Policy, except the snarl uttered by one hon. gentleman the other day. They have been silenced on that question since their Bill on Colonization Railways was, unfortunately for them, produced in the House not long ago. They have abandoned all the previous issues, and now they intend to stand upon the seizure of private property without compensation—upon confiscation. They intend to stand upon secession; they intend to stand upon disunion; and they are welcome to that position, for I believe the loyal heart of Ontario the instant a movement of that kind arises, will repudiate them altogether. Sir, the leader of the hon. gentleman's party ate up all the cake last night and left not a crumb to the hon. gentleman, or to his associates on the back benches, so that he was obliged to resort to declamation alone. The hon. gentlemen both quoted Scripture. Well, we have heard that a certain person more celebrated for his talents than his virtues, can quote Scripture on certain occasions. But I can say with Hood, that in my speeches:

"I do not waste the Scripture in my speech,
And thus upon the public mind obtrude it;
I thought, like Otaheitan cooks,
No meat was fit to eat till I had chewed it."

And all the declamation hon. gentlemen opposite can pour down upon our heads will not alter the intention of the Conservative party in this House, or in the country, or the intention of the men of this country, who will not go back to the days of deficits, those dark days when these hon. gentlemen sat upon the Treasury benches, and were only intent on how they could reward their friends and squander the public money. We know very well what would have happened if they had in their day had the opportunity which we have not taken advantage of. What has happened? My hon. friend has wiped out two constituencies which were represented by men whose seats in this House were secure. There is not an instance cited by hon. gentlemen opposite in which the injury to them is more than hypothetical. They contend that no disasters will happen to them, but that the people of Ontario will protect them against this monstrous attempt to deprive them of their seats. The world would actually come to an end, as one hon. gentleman put it, if we aimed a blow at the hon. member for Lambton. Why, that hon. gentleman committed hari-kari himself, when he left Lambton and went to East York. That hon. gentleman had little sympathy from hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly from the hon. leader of the Opposition, when he was in extremis, and when they deprived him of the leadership of the party. That hon. gentleman feared to face the electors of Lambton where he was elected by acclamation a few years ago. He dare not face them; he withdrew from them voluntarily, and was not crowded out in any way; he voluntarily took his chance of appealing to the electors elsewhere, in order to let himself down more easily, for he could not face the idea of defeat in the constituency which he had misrepresented so long. Then we are told that we may possibly be deprived of the services of the hon. member for Bothwell. Well, I have said that if it were in the power of the Conservative party by any policy to shut up the mills of Bothwell the world might be the gainer. We are told also that there is a blow aimed at South Brant. I believe my hon. friend from South Brant has no fear of himself, whose manly utterances are always received on this side of the House with a measure of approbation, and a certain amount of admiration—for he strikes from the shoulder squarely, and it is not necessary, when he makes a speech in the House, for us to go back to the records to see whether he has garbled the facts or the public accounts. The griefs of the hon. member for North Norfolk lie in another direction. He sees that by the equalization of the population of the district he represented, which had 6,000 or 7,000 less than the average population, something may happen which will not make it quite so easy for the township of Townsend to override the whole population of North Norfolk. The hon. gentleman has a majority in one township of North Norfolk that absolutely overrides the whole vote of that district, and yet the hon. gentleman talks about the importance of free municipal representation. The hon. gentleman knows that his majority in the township of Townsend and the little village connected with it far exceeds his general majority in the district by nearly 300 votes, and he is a little afraid that Tilsenburg and Dereham, and the other municipality which is added, will make it a little more difficult for him to carry his constituency; but he is sure of carrying it of course. The hon. gentleman's eloquence has given him a position which would make it impossible for the people of Ontario ever to refuse to send him to the councils of the country. The hon. gentleman only fears that he may be obliged to stay at home and attend to his constituents, that is his trouble. I hope, Sir, when the next Parliament assembles, whenever that may be, that we may see a goodly representation of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, and that hon. gentlemen opposite will continue to be Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, and no one who has noted the signs of the times can have any doubt that they will continue to be so; in fact, the whole case was given up at the very introduction of this Bill by the leader of the hon. gentleman himself. He said there was no hope for them.

Mr. BLAKE. No, I did not.

Mr. PLUMB. He said a diabolical arrangement was made by which there was no chance for him and his party getting back to power.

Mr. BLAKE. No I did not.

Mr. PLUMB. I noted the hon. gentleman's words, and I can produce the ipsissima verba, but I do not think it is worth while. The hon. gentleman knows that he begged the question, that he gave up the whole case; and I was surprised at his want of tact; I was surprised that the leader of a party should absolutely deliver himself and them over to defeat as that hon. gentleman did. He will lead them to defeat at the next election, though I trust that we shall have against us in the next Parliament an Opposition of respectable weight and numbers, it is desirable in every way, and especially for this way: no party should be too strong; and I am only afraid that the course which is adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite, playing into our hands on every occasion, throwing themselves utterly at our mercy, and in every resolution they have offered, turning the tables upon themselves, and enabling us always to put them on the defensive—I am afraid that the course they have pursued,—not on account of this Bill, or any arrangement of the constituencies, but throughout the whole Dominion, everywhere—will result in sending back to this House so small a baker's dozen of them that they will not act as they should act, as a check upon a dominant majority. And I, for one, have no desire to see their numbers any less than at present; because I do not think, in the interest of the country, it is desirable they should be much weaker.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I do not propose to follow the hon. member for Niagara, except merely as a matter of form, as an hon. gentleman beside me suggests. I should remark, however, that I am delighted to see him in such a happy mood. Yesterday he was a despairing Hamlet, exclaiming:

"Of comforts let no man speak,
But talk to me of graves and worms and epitaphs."

But to-day he is a Romeo, who exclaims:

"Night's candles are burnt out,
And jocund day stands tip-toe on the misty mountain tops."

I am delighted with his resurrection. I hope he will stay resurrected a good while. Of course, by the provisions of the Bill which the hon. gentleman has so vigorously defended, we shall not again in this House hear his eloquent voice; but, perhaps, elsewhere he will be a burning and a shining light, as he has been in this Chamber. I object to this Bill. I have an alternative Bill to propose, which is not so extensive in its provisions, but which, I think, more fully discloses the true inwardness of the policy on which the attention of the House is fixed. My alternative Bill differs in title and in every other respect from the Bill now in your hands. The title of the alternative Bill reads as follows: "An Act to bull-doze the Liberal party of Canada, and for other purposes." I will read its provisions:

"Whereas by the Census of the year of Our Lord 1881, and in accordance with the British North America Act of 1867, the Province of Ontario is entitled to four additional members in the House of Commons;

"And whereas it is desirable to secure, if possible, the defeat of the Liberal party of Canada, and the return to power for the next five years of the present Government; and

"Whereas public opinion has been seriously affected by the large increase of the public expenditure, the railway and commercial monopolies created through the policy of the Conservative party, the exodus from Canada of thousands of her best sons, and the interference with Provincial rights, particularly with the rights of the Province of Ontario;

"And whereas, it is desirable that the Conservative party should not be bound by the declarations of its leader in 1872, that municipal county lines should be respected in the re-adjustment of electoral districts:

"Therefore, Sir John Macdonald, by and with the advice of party whip-pullers and Tory deputations from the Province of Ontario, and with the connivance of Tories from the other Provinces, enacts as follows:—

"1. The House of Commons shall consist of 211 members, of whom a majority shall belong to the Conservative party.

"2. That several members of Parliament, during the last four years, have loyally supported the present Government at a great sacrifice to their own conscious conviction of duty, and at the peril of their political lives, that it is alleged by the members aforesaid, to wit: the members representing the electoral districts of South Lanark, Cornwall, South Grey, North Huron, North Middlesex, East Middlesex, Monck, Lincoln, South Norfolk, Centre Wellington, North Wellington, East York, North York, North Simcoe, South Bruce, East Elgin, and Kent, that their constituents are very much dissatisfied with many of the votes given by the members aforesaid during the said period of time that the various gifts bestowed on the said constituencies, to wit, the post office in St. Thomas $28,000, the post office in Stratford $28,500, the post office in Oshawa $28,000, the post office in St. Catharines $31,500, the post office in Cornwall $28,000, have not fully appeased the clamor against the members aforesaid,

"Therefore it is expedient so to readjust the constituencies of the said members as to prevent their being driven from public life and their vote and influence lost to the Conservative party.

"6. That the appointment of returning officers is a political gift, that all such appointments should be made in the interests of the party, that there is great danger lest the well known social standing of Sheriffs and Registrars should interfere with that liberty of action which political exigencies sometimes require, it is expedient, therefore, to repeal section one of the 'Dominion Election Act of 1874,' thus leaving the Government free to select such returning officers as in their opinion would best serve party interests.

"7. The various schedules to this Act amended, marked respectively from one to fifty-four, contain the true boundaries of the electoral districts of Ontario under the provision of this Act."

I have also to submit before we go into Committee on this Bill, a few of the electoral districts as defined under this alternative Bill, as follows:—

"That several members of the Liberal party represent constituencies that cannot be readjusted, that in divers cases, by aggregating the Liberals, if two or three constituencies together after the process recently patented, known as 'hiving' certain adjacent electoral districts, can be rendered more secure for the Conservative party, that in several electoral districts, to wit: the electoral districts of North Lanark, Muskoka, North Ontario, South Ontario, South Wentworth, East York, North York, South Perth, North Bruce, South Brant, West Middlesex, Bothwell, South Norfolk, there can be made such a readjustment of the Liberal vote as to weaken the Liberal candidates in said constituencies, that no loss would accrue to the Conservative party from the absence of the members representing said constituencies from the House of Commons, it is expedient, therefore, to readjust the electoral districts aforesaid in such a way as to prevent the election of the Liberal members in such and all of the said electoral districts."

I do intend to follow these provisions through. Of course, they will be discussed in Committee, when the various amendments and sub-amendments to the Bill will be treated. I have done this in order that the House may not be misled, in order that the Conservative party might not appear before the country in false colors, and the hon. leader of the Government ridiculed for bringing in this Bill under false pretences. It is quite clear this Bill is an attempt to bull-doze the Liberal party in Canada, originated in the cowardly hearts of several members of Parliament, who knew that under the old condition of affairs their seats were seriously in danger. The pretension that its object is to equalize the constituencies is not borne out by its own provisions. I have, therefore, carefully and deliberately drafted a Bill that shall indicate the true purpose for which the various clauses are designed, and thus, while achieving the same result as the one under discussion, will leave no room for misconception. Take for instance the clause affecting the hon. member for Niagara. We all know that his leader could continue that constituency if he wished, that the hon. member for that borough implored him to continue it; we all know that the leader who could pass through this House various measures this and the preceding Session, could easily continue the existence of that little borough of Niagara. Then why was it blotted out? The hon. the First Minister could not have had any grudge against that borough, which has always been right loyal to him; but, as I have said, its distinguished representative, having gained considerable in this House, being well trained in parliamentary usages, will be quite an acquisition to the Senate. This will be the crowning point in his career. It would be an apotheosis to the hon. gentleman, and his resurrection in the Senate will cause that body to rise as it were from the dead, or from the lethargy which is akin to death, and from which it only requires the lively corpse that we propose to send it to arouse it into life. Look at the case of the hon. member for Lincoln, who is very courageous when there is no danger. He has challenged not only a humble member like myself, who would dread to meet a man of his stamp on the platform or anywhere else, but he is prepared to challenge the leader of the Opposition. We know the hon. gentleman is very valiant in this House, but in his own county, which has rejected him already several times, he does not feel very safe, so he has had it strengthened to make his return secured. He is one of the cowardly members who had their constituencies fixed to suit their own purposes, and he calls that statesmanship. I do not propose to discuss the Bill at great length now, but I hope the House will favorably entertain it. I have promise of the support of the hon. member for Lincoln, at least to one clause of the Bill. I trust, when it is fully understood, it will be considered an honest Bill, for I would scorn to bring down a Bill that I did not believe to be honest. I know the right hon. gentleman knows that every clause of my Bill more truly represents the purposes for which all these deputations met here day after day. I know that its title is more applicable than his, and I believe that when this Bill is put upon record it will relieve the hon. gentleman of the odium which I fear will attach to him from the Bill he has placed in your hands. Therefore, incited by the motion to get honest legislation from this Parliament, and to protect the character of the right hon. leader of the Government from the odium of dishonesty, and to protect the reputation of hon. gentlemen opposite from the charge of cowardice, I have brought down this Bill in the humble expectation that it will receive the cordial approval of this House, and be carried by a very large majority.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2, section 2,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the word "Huntley" be struck out and the word "Torbolton" be added to meet the views of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Amendment agreed to on division.

On section 3,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the word "Torbolton" be struck out and the word "Huntley" be substituted to meet the views the hon. gentleman expressed last night.

Mr. BLAKE. No, not at all.

Mr. MACDONELL (Lanark). Last night I said that though the addition to North Lanark of the township of Fitzroy might be justifiable, so far as equalization is concerned, there was no reason why the township of Torbolton should be added. I protested vehemently against adding the township of Huntley, or adding any township outside of North Lanark, and then told the Government they should divide the two ridings of Lanark more equitably and more honestly by giving me the village of Carleton Place to the north riding. I told them that the reason they did not add Huntley was because the people of Huntley protested against being added, and, at the last moment, the Government put in the township of Torbolton instead of the township of Huntley. But when my present opponent and late opponent, and the President of the Conservative Association, found out the addition of Torbolton would make a majority against their party, they came down here and said that North Lanark would still be lost unless the township of Huntley were added. I saw them on Monday evening when this Bill was introduced, down in the lobbies of this House. I heard that they were in the company of the hon. First Minister, and I ask the hon. First Minister if they were not a deputation asking to get the township of Huntley added, and I ask him honestly if they did not tell him that unless Huntley was added North Lanark would still be lost to them? And that it was only at their solicitation and upon the representation that it was the only way they could carry North Lanark, that Huntley was added and Torbolton thrown out. Why did they not listen to the people of Huntley in this respect? Because they knew that the people of Huntley would never consent. And I say it is a midnight attack, it is cowardly, low and mean, and everything that is dishonest to add the township of Huntley to North Lanark. If Parliament desires to annihilate North Lanark, and affirm that it shall at least not return any member who is not favorable to the dishonest dealing of the present Government, let the declaration be made. I am surprised that the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) should glory in the Bill, because he has boasted of his strength in his constituency. Nothing could be more dishonorable than to support a party which initiated such a Bill as that before the House. The people well know that if such a measure was necessary, the acts of the Government could not bear the light of day. Although Torbolton has been taken away and Huntley added, I am not dead yet.

Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

Mr. BLAKE. The House is now aware of the true inwardness of the change proposed. The change was made, not for the purpose of equalizing the populations, but in order that the political complexions of the constituency may be made to suit the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman last night asked why not add Huntley, so that the riding might be symmetrical. He declares he has found that Torbolton would give him a majority, there was no objection offered to that change made; but the reason why Huntley has been changed for Torbolton is simply this: Strong representations have been made to me that Torbolton is on the Ottawa, and that Carleton is an Ottawa county stretching along the Ottawa. Torbolton is on the Ottawa and Huntley is more inland, and in order to carry out the principle of making one an Ottawa constituency and the other an inland constituency, Huntley, in order to meet the views of hon. gentleman opposite, has been substituted for Torbolton.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman now says that the changes were made for a geographical reason, and because strong representations were made that Torbolton lies on the Ottawa. We, however, know that long ago we did not require representation to inform us of that fact. It is as to the political lay of Torbolton that the hon. gentleman has been informed.

Mr. HAGGART. It is only last night that the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Macdonell) was complaining very much about Torbolton being added to the north riding because of its geographical position. Huntley lies beside it geographically, and it is difficult to see why he complains of the addition. I did not hear the hon. leader of the Opposition make any special reference regarding the constituencies in Central Ontario. According to calculation it would appear, when these changes are made, a majority will be left for the hon. member for South Lanark, and the constituencies have been arranged so as to be nearly equal. The Grit majority which the hon. gentleman complained of as being taken from South Lanark and added to North Leeds, would leave a majority of Reformers in the latter constituency. The last two elections that I remember were between Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Jones. It may be contended that Mr. Jones, although supported by the Opposition, was not a true Opposition candidate. The last fair and square political fight that occurred in that riding was between Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith, the majority obtained by the former being forty-seven. Another complaint was made respecting the addition of the township of Kitley to Brockville. Not a word is said about the addition of 250 Reformers to Brockville. I do not think the changes will have the slightest effect in altering the political complexion of these constituencies. There was not a word in the statement of the hon. leader of the Opposition, in which he dealt with the western constituency, as to the changes in Central Ontario.

Mr. BLAKE. I made a special reference to the south riding of Lanark.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman simply stated the fact that there was a Reform majority of eighty-seven in Smith's Falls, and that it was added to North Leeds. He did not pursue the argument farther.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, I did.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman did not say what would be the effect of the change on the other constituencies concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, I did. I said the county of Carleton was so Conservative that the abstraction of two townships from it would not affect the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Rochester), and that hon. gentleman cheered me when I said so. I said these two townships were added to North Lanark with a view of weakening my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) there. I said that the abstraction of Smith's Falls, with its Reform majority of eighty-seven, from South Lanark was designed to strengthen another hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart). I said that North Leeds and Grenville was supposed to be so Conservative that it was of no consequence to it to gain Smith's Falls and lose the Township of Kitley, and that the hon. gentleman supposed that North Leeds and Grenville would be safe for him still, while Kitley was added to Brockville to weaken our strength there.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, but the hon. gentleman went over the various constituencies and elaborated the figures, comparing the Reform and the Conservative majority in each of them, but he did not try that in the case of North and South Lanark. If he applied that principle in the constituencies in Central Canada, it would show him that there would be no such result as he states. The changes and interchanges which are made in the votes given at the different elections will not affect the general political complexion of the constituencies, and they will have left them as nearly as possible equal in population, and geographically correct in every way. The scheme is one which is perfectly defensible, and much more defensible than any other that could be made in that section of country.

Mr. BLAKE. For reasons which I told the House, I confined myself to the figures of the last General Election, for I felt that if I entered into the figures of previous elections the result would be to lengthen a speech already too long. Now, in the county of Lanark, there has not been for many years a strictly party election.

Mr. ROCHESTER. Mr. May ran in the interests of the Liberal party.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman consider that the majority he got last election was his regular party majority.

Mr. ROCHESTER. I am dealing with what happened. Rev. Mr. May ran in the interests of the late Administration. I can prove that by letters from one of the late Cabinet Ministers.

Mr. BLAKE. My information is derived from the newspapers, and from them I understood that he was running as an Independent candidate.

Mr. ROCHESTER. Not at all.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I was not in the country at the time, and the hon. gentleman was on the spot, so he probably knows, but I fear that the news that a Liberal candidate could run the hon. gentleman so closely in the county of Carleton is too good news to be true. I fear, however, that the hon. gentleman will not repeat that statement when he goes before the electors; that he will not tell them that the contest was one between a true blue Conservative candidate and a Reformer. My view was that it was impossible to elicit from the votes in Torbolton and Fitzroy according to that contest, any result; therefore I stated what I believe, that they were of a Tory complexion. I could speak of South Lanark with assurance, because there was a party vote there, and I could speak of the majority in Smith's Falls, though I notice that the hon. gentleman, with characteristic modesty, does not discuss South Lanark as freely as he does the adjoining constituencies. The contest in North Leeds and Grenville was not a party one, as all who are familiar with the political complexion of the constituencies know perfectly well that the contest there is decided largely upon personal questions and considerations, and the future complexion of that constituency is as decidedly Conservative as Carleton. It is one therefore which hon. gentlemen opposite treat as they have treated others of the same kind. First of all, they add some Reform strength upon it where it would be thrown away. They abstract some Tory population from it where it could do most good, and they reduce the population still further. I gave as accurate figures as could be attained from the records of that election to which alone I was confining myself.

Mr. MACDONELL (Lanark). I have here a statement of the figures showing the political complexion of these townships. There were three candidates running at the last election. Reverend Mr. May, an Independent; Mr. Rochester, an out-and-out supporter of the Government, and Mr. J. A. Grant, an Opposition candidate. In Fitzroy, Mr. Grant got 63 votes; Mr. Rochester 185, and Mr. May 85, giving a Conservative majority of 135 in Fitzroy. In Huntley, Mr. Grant got four votes; Mr. May 186, and Mr. Rochester 120, or a Conservative majority of 302 over the Liberal candidate. Those are the facts and those the reasons why Huntley was added to North Lanark. In Torbolton, the Liberal candidate polled six votes and the two Conservatives 54, giving a majority of 48 in that township.

Mr. HAGGART. How does the hon. gentleman arrive at the fact that Mr. Grant was a Reform candidate when he only polled a few votes in the whole of Carleton county; why does the hon. gentleman regard Mr. May as a Liberal Conservative candidate, when the letter was written by Mr. Scott, a member of the Reform Ministry, advising the supporters of his Government in that constituency to support him?

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) or the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Rochester) say that these changes do not strengthen the Conservative interests in North Lanark?

Mr. ROCHESTER. I am prepared to prove that the late Ministry took up Mr. May and ran him in the interests of their Government, and one of the Cabinet Ministers—I think the President of the Council—sent several letters to the township of Fitzroy to the Reformers there asking them to support Mr. May as the Reform candidate. Mr. Grant, whom my hon. friend from South Lanark has mentioned as running in the Reform interest, was a local man belonging to the township of Fitzroy. Mr. Grant came down and saw Mr. Scott, and wanted him to withdraw Mr. May from the field and let him run alone, but after consultation here with ten or fifteen of the principal Reformers in Ottawa, it was finally decided that Mr. May should not be withdrawn from the contest. Mr. Grant then said he would run at all hazards, and I know him to be a true and consistent Reformer. Then the split came between the Rev. Mr. May and Mr. Grant. Mr. May ran in the interest of the late Administration, and Mr. Grant ran in the interest of the Reformers of Ontario, and he received those votes which the hon. member for South Lanark said he received from Fitzroy.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman answer the question whether the addition is intended to give a Conservative majority?

Mr. ROCHESTER. I did not say that I would answer that question. I said that when I first learned that the townships of Fitzroy and Torbolton were to be added to North Lanark, I was opposed to the change, because I thought it would be better to take in the township of Huntley, because Fitzroy and Torbolton border on the Ottawa River and naturally belong to Carleton.

Mr. McCALLUM. How can you tell the political effect of these changes? I have represented a constituency for fifteen years in this House, and I can say that the candidate has a great deal to do with the carrying of a constituency. What right have hon. gentlemen to ask our opinion of the political effect of these changes?

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has been telling us for the last four years what the political sentiment of the whole country is, and now he says he is unable to tell what the political sentiment of a single portion of his own constituency is. In fact, he says it has got no political complexion—that everything depends on the candidate. But that is not the principle on which the Government have acted; that is not the principle on which the third chamber acted when they sat in deliberation on this Bill; that is not the principle which the hon. gentleman himself recognized when he advised the Government with regard to the alteration of the constituencies in his own neighborhood. He took into consideration the votes of the last election, and advised the Government accordingly. We know that we cannot obtain an honest, candid, and fair expression of opinion from hon. gentlemen supporting this measure; nevertheless, we shall have this measure discussed. The public know their reasons, and the public will judge between the sentiments expressed by hon. gentlemen here and the acts of hon. gentlemen as revealed by this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the effect on population of this change?

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. gentleman's question is absurd. Does he think that he can judge the political feeling of this country by a single township? I cannot give an opinion of what the next election will do, but I should judge, by the feeling in the country, and by the fact that this Government has carried out every pledge that it made to the people, that it will be sustained.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. BLAKE. I find that the result of this change is to reduce the population of Carleton to 18,777, and, under pretence of equalization, to increase the population of North Lanark to 19,855; so that the population of North Lanark is increased beyond that of the old electoral district of Carleton. The hon. gentlemen who were blind, during the whole period of the concoction of this Bill, to the obvious circumstance that Torbolton naturally belonged to Carleton, have, since the first reading of the Bill, discovered that the circumstance of its being on the Ottawa River should make it part of Carleton. Something occurred since the publication of the Bill, since it got into the regions of Torbolton and Fitzroy, which suddenly made the Government alive to the obvious geographical considerations to which they had before been blind, to which the remonstrances of the hon. member for Carleton made them alive, and which something induced them to make this change. Can any one doubt what that something was? We know that their plans will not meet with the complete success that they had hoped for, and that they are at present altering their Bill in order to further those plans.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman objects very much to deputations coming here, and to communications having been received from various quarters with reference to this Bill. Yet he and several other members have complained that the Bill was not brought down early enough to enable the people to make representations; and now he complains that it has gone to the country, and that we have received representations.

Mr. BLAKE. We did complain that the Bill was not brought down early enough to enable the general people to make representations regarding it. We knew that that portion of the people which consists of Tory wire-pullers and agents had private opportunities of ascertaining its provisions, and that they could boast of it, and that the representations being now made are from others in the localities affected, and that the Tory wire-pullers have a little bungled, and the hon. gentleman is proposing such changes as will rectify those bumbles, those who advised him formerly. The time that we wished was to enable the honest yeomanry of the country, not simply the election agents on the other side to analyze the measure and ascertain its bearings and aspects fairly and openly. He perfectly well understood that a week, or ten days, or three weeks is not adequate for that purpose, as regards this class. It may be adequate to those who take an overwhelming interest in political questions, and those who are the local chiefs of the party, and who would act at once in the hon. gentleman's interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In other words, the hon. gentleman objects to any representation being made by the Tories; but the honest yeomanry—not the Tory yeomanry, of course—should be attended to. Let me tell you that I have received representations from other parties, from two honest men not Tories, from the members for Muskoka and North Norfolk.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has received a representation from the hon. member for Muskoka on two points which show the defects of the Bill. Upon one point he communicated with the Premier a long time ago, and upon another point, which indicated that the Bill was not adequate to give the franchise to all the people in that district, and that this was a defect that required to be remedied. I am quite aware that he received communications on these subjects from the hon. member for Muskoka, who had just communicated with me, and whom I told that it was the best thing he could do to make the measure perfect, so that no part of the district should be disfranchised. But I repeat that I objected strongly to the Government not giving the whole people ample time to consider and analyze the measure, make their views known in regard to it, while Tory wire-pullers and agents had early information on the subject, and every opportunity afforded for selfish partizan operations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman complains that in regard to this Bill there was a want of sufficient notice. Now, there has been eight times the notice given to the country in respect to this Bill, that was given to the hon. gentleman in regard to the measure for the disposal of the whole of the surplus of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. CASEY. Our objections is not that the Tory agents are heard, but that they were heard secretly, privately, before anybody else had an opportunity to be heard once. It was on the representations of Tory agents that the Bill was prepared. As in the case of the Tariff Bill, the Government have acted simply as the mouthpiece of other interested parties, who have urged their views secretly, and for the most selfish objects and political purposes. The Government have framed this Bill on the suggestions of the little Committee which sat to cook up this measure on the representations made by persons and the localities interested. It is scarcely a secret even to us on this side, who composed the Committee. We know several members of the Committee, who were more run after than the Premier himself, while the Bill was in process of production. We know they were run after by people who wished changes to be made in their county. The only possible reasons for those changes that we can discover, are drawn from the figures that appeared in the records of 1878; but even these figures fail to afford any proper justification for this iniquitous measure.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

On section three,

Mr. CAMERON. Nothing could more clearly exhibit the object and scope of this Bill than the item now under discussion. The hon. Minister who has charge of the Bill, in moving this change, attempted to justify it on the ground that this township of Torbolton should remain in Carleton, because it is one of the municipalities that border on the Ottawa. The hon. Minister knew that as well when he introduced the Bill as he does now. The hon. member for South Lanark wanted us to believe that this change and the whole Bill had no political significance, that this change left the north and south ridings of Lanark and the north riding of Leeds as they were before, in so far as the political strength of parties is concerned. If that is so what reason was there for the change. If there is no political object to be gained, clearly no other reason has been given, for there is no attempt at equalization. The hon. member was quite wrong in trying to make us believe that there is no political significance in this movement. He knows that the Liberal majority in North Lanark, though always certain, is by no means large, and that by the annexation of either Torbolton or Fitzroy or Huntley to North Lanark—all Conservative municipalities—its political complexion will necessarily be changed. He knows that by detaching Smith's Falls, that gave a Liberal majority against him, he must be more or less affected, and the change is not to his injury, otherwise he would have protested against it. By it he gets rid of a disagreeable majority against him of some eighty-seven, and legislates his political opponent out of the riding. The hon. gentlemen knows that in North Leeds there has been for years no contest except between Conservatives as in Carleton. He knows also that Brockville has been an uncertain constituency, and that the strong Conservative township of Chitley being annexed to Brockville, that district is secured, as hon. gentlemen opposite hope, in their interest beyond peradventure. How are the populations affected by these changes? Old Carleton had a population of 24,689, or 3,781 above the quota; by the present change it is reduced 18,777, or 2,131 below the quota. South Lanark had a population of 20,032 or 872 below the quota; by this proposed change it is reduced to 17,945, or 2,963 below the quota. Yet the hon. gentleman wants us to believe that the sole object of this change is to approximate, as nearly as possible, the populations of the various ridings to the quota. If that is so why did he meddle with the electoral divisions at all. He has in no sense effected his professed purpose. Whatever necessity there might be to deal with North Lanark, there was none to touch South Lanark. But when the hon. gentleman detached from Carleton, the two townships and annexed them to North Lanark, he thought it was necessary to make some alteration in South Lanark. Let us see how this change affects Leeds. North Leeds had 12,929, 7,929 under the quota. Under the new arrangement it has a population of 12,422, or 8,486 under the quota, or 506 farther from the quota than under the old arrangement. Surely the hon. gentleman cannot deny that there was some object besides the mere object of approximating the population in this extraordinary and unjustifiable change. Now, the hon. member for Brockville represents a constituency which gave a Conservative majority of 127. It was necessary to make that secure, and hon. gentlemen think they have made it secure by detaching Kitley from North Leeds and annexing it to Brockville. Anybody can see that the sole aim of these changes was not in the direction of equalizing the population, but in the direction of an attempt to make three out of the five constituencies more Conservative than they now are. In order to accomplish that the hon. gentleman has transgressed his own rule with respect to three different counties, and he has to encroach upon the municipal and judicial boundaries of three counties, and entrench upon the boundaries of five electoral divisions, and that solely with the object of strengthening the Conservative party where it is weak, and weakening the Liberal party where it has now a majority. There can be no clearer evidence that hon. gentlemen opposite are afraid to go to the country with the constituencies as they have heretofore existed. Suppose for instance that the electors of North Lanark as now proposed to be constituted should defeat my hon. friend—I believe, however, they will not—can it be said that it is an endorsement of the policy of the hon. gentleman opposite? No, Sir, that cannot be said, because the county to which my hon. friend now appeals is not the county to which he appealed in 1878, and so a verdict adverse to my hon. friend would be no argument in favor of the view presented by the hon. gentleman opposite that they were prepared to appeal to the country and expected to be sustained by the country. They are prepared to appeal to the country, but, before doing so, they take precious good care that they will not be tried by the same jury that tried them in 1878. I say there is no possible justification, and no excuse has been attempted, for annexing either Torbolton or Fitzroy or Huntley to North Lanark except the one I have just indicated, and the hon. First Minister might just as well admit at once that the Bill we are now discussing is a Bill in the interests of the Conservative party and not in the interests of the people of this country.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. BLAKE moved in amendment to add the village of Smith's Falls.

Amendment lost on division, and section agreed to.

On section 6,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved in amendment:

"The east riding of the county of Northumberland shall consist of the townships of Cramahe, Brighton, Murray, Perry and Seymour, and the villages of Colborne, Brighton, Campbellford, and the whole of the village of Hastings, which now extends jointly into another electoral district."

On section 14,

Mr. STRANGE. The hon. leader of the Government finding that he was compelled by the Statute to secure more new seats in Ontario, has, in my opinion, very wisely readjusted the distribution of seats in that Province. He has done so for the purpose of equalizing the population. Hitherto the various ridings in Ontario have averaged from 9,000 up to 36,000, and the 36,000 in the one riding have only had the same representation as the 9,000 in the others. Now, what ought to be taken as the unit for the representation of this House in Ontario? Should it be the county, the township, or the incorporated municipalities? This House has nothing whatever to do with parish politics or with the deliberations of the county councils or the municipalities. We are here on broader ground to discuss matters pertaining to the Dominion, irrespective altogether of the various influences which exist in the various counties of the Province. Well, the township being taken as the unit, what does the hon. leader of the Government do in this case? He has taken the various townships, and looking at the large and largely increasing population of the metropolitan county of York, of the county lying alongside, the county of Ontario, has found it necessary to give a new member to that section of the country. In order to do that it would have been impossible to divide any one of the counties up so as to provide for a new representative; so it has been found absolutely necessary to divide up Ontario and York to create a new constituency. Now, in order to get the amount of representation there it has not been found possible for the sake of securing the proper population, and of adopting the principle laid down by the Premier of representation by population, to avoid touching the township of Simcoe. Therefore the new north riding of York is composed of a portion of the old riding and a portion of the county of South Simcoe. I feel there is nothing to fear in thus invading the county of Simcoe. Simcoe has a population already far too great for its present representation, and is well able to give to York the necessary population to make up the new county of West Ontario. Moreover, it has been alleged by the hon. leader of the Opposition that this Bill interferes to a great extent with the municipal boundaries at present existing. The old riding of North York consists of various townships and certain municipalities—among others, half of the municipality of Stouffville, the other half being in the east riding of York. My hon. friend from East York and myself, in attending to the wants of that district, used to meet in that village; he represented the one half and I the other. We felt it was an anomalous position for any two gentlemen with seats in this House to occupy. The hon. Premier has decided to put the whole of that village into one electoral district. I think this a thoroughly sound principle. An incorporated village ought never to have been divided, and I am glad that Stouffville is now embraced in the constituency of West Ontario. The hon. leader of the Opposition also, in objecting to this Bill, dwelt with great strength on the fact that the Government were taking the power of appointing their own returning officers. I think this is one of the wisest provisions of the Bill, as any impartial man must admit who knows that the sheriffs and registrars at present entrusted with these duties have been the mere creatures of the Ontario Government and have often displayed the grossest partizanship in the interest of the Reform party. I know a certain registrar, not a hundred miles from North York, who has used his office for the promotion of Reform schemes and interests upon all occasions. Every Reform cabal, intrigue and scheme in the riding which I represent, has been hatched and brought forth in that registrar's office. If, therefore, there is one wise provision in this Bill, which meets with my most unbounded satisfaction and approval, it is that the Governor in Council may appoint the returning officers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

On clause 20,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the words "Electoral District" be put before the words "County of Simcoe."

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman is determined to disregard municipal boundaries, why insert the expression electoral district, and why speak of ridings at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the county of Simcoe in the main; it is therefore convenient to divide it into ridings.

Mr. McCARTHY. With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for West Middlesex, with regard to the north riding, I would point out to the Committee that the north riding has exactly the same bounds as the west in the Local House. I do not know how it is possible to divide it in any other way than that proposed. There were nearly 50,000 inhabitants in the north riding and the west riding, which is called the north in this Bill. I do not know what was meant by the hon. gentleman in saying that this redistribution had been made on any suggestion of mine, or from any desire to create a riding more favorable than the one that now exists. The only possible division is the one that has been made. I would be very glad if any other arrangement were made which would reduce the riding to some extent. It has now 26,000, and might well be less.

Mr. BLAKE. If my hon. friend is so anxious it should be reduced a little, why should East Simcoe be made as large as North Simcoe by changing townships from Muskoka to it, thus bringing Muskoka down to 17,000?

Mr. McCARTHY. I was answering the objection made from the other side of the House. It was suggested that I had the district arranged so as to get a larger majority. All I have to say is, that some scheme had to be adopted in order to relieve Muskoka, which had a population of 27,000. I do not know that any other course was open, but at all events the one taken is a fair one.

Mr. BLAKE. We have already relieved Muskoka by taking six townships from it and adding them to North Ontario, with the result of reducing Muskoka with the townships transferred from it to East Simcoe, the population of which is thus raised to 26,000. Thus the population of East Simcoe is raised to 26,000, and that of Muskoka diminished to 17,000.

On section 20,

Mr. BLAKE. Why, since it was necessary, ten years ago, to increase the population of Monck, is it expedient now to diminish the population considerably below what it was then?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the abolition of Niagara it was necessary to readjust the whole of the townships of the surrounding constituencies.

Mr. RYMAL. If the desire was to equalize the population several thousands might have been drawn from the populous county of Welland.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The electoral county of Monck is now made up in some part by the municipal county of Welland, so that with great propriety a little more of the municipal county of Welland might have been taken, it being now too large, and added to Monck, which is too small.

Mr. BLAKE. Was it necessary because Welland, although having a population larger than that of any of the other electoral districts as they stand before or stand now, has not been touched, Welland with its 26,000, though Monck is partly municipally composed of Welland? But the county of Monck, which the hon. gentleman found it necessary to raise awhile ago, is reduced, because Lincoln is increased. Because Niagara is added to Lincoln, therefore it is necessary to readjust it, but as the readjustment does not extend to equalization, but extends to diminution of Haldimand, already below the quota, to the diminution of Monck, already below the quota, and leaving Welland largely in excess of the quota where it stood. That is what he calls equalization and readjustment.

Mr. McCALLUM. I am quite willing that Monck should have a larger population, and would be perfectly willing to get a portion of the county of Welland, and I believe it would increase my majority in the next election. South Cayuga was not added to Monck for any political reason, because it only gave a majority of two in favor of the Conservative candidate.

Mr. BLAKE. The necessity of adding Cayuga was because Lincoln had been taken away, which was put in the first Bill, and by the abstraction which would also take place of Caistor. Clinton he gave back again to Lincoln, and having given it back of course he had to take something from the neighboring counties in order to get the population up to 15,445. The hon. gentleman made two gains; he lost a township with a Reform majority, which was a gain, and he found a township with a Conservative majority, which was another gain.

Mr. McCALLUM. I never asked for the township of Clinton, I never asked for anything; but whatever is necessary to do in order to readjust the county of course I am satisfied. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. Of course Caistor is in the county of Wentworth, and it gave thirty-four majority against me at the last election. But I think it is desirable in the interest of the county that I should be in this House, and it can tell my hon. friend that if I am a candidate at the next election, I am coming back to this House, and I can tell him further that if he left Caistor in my county I would come back to this House. I know they looked upon Monck as a Grit preserve, but I took it from them and I have managed to hold it, except on one occasion when I was defeated by a fluke. I am not at all alarmed about Monck, as it was because I defeated them in 1874, although I had the power of both Governments to withstand, and some of my opponents were guilty of bribery too; they bought a man and turned me out in 1875. I had another election and came back to this House in spite of them. Of course I would like to get another township in order to equalize the population if it is agreeable all round.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman boasts of his having always won, but we know that he carried the county of Monck in virtue of the gerrymandering vote of ten years ago, which gave the township of Dunn to Monck. That township gave him about eighty of a majority, and by virtue of it only has he been able to retain his seat.

Mr. McCALLUM. I never asked for the township of Dunn to be added to Monck, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that he has got a supporter in this House who asked for it in order to make himself strong. It is true that I did not object to it, and I never spoke of it at the time. Even after he asked for it he was not man enough to stick by it, because afterwards he moved that it should be put back where it was before. I am ready to-morrow to run for either Monck or Haldimand.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman boasts he will be able to carry Haldimand, but he did not object ten years ago to have had the township of Dunn added, and another change made ten years afterwards.

Mr. McCALLUM. I never asked for it.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand). The facts of the case with respect to the township of Dunn being taken from Haldimand and added to Monck, are these: During 1872 a petition was placed in my hand signed by the electors of the township of Dunn, and asking that this change should take place. I presented that petition, and no sooner was it presented than a counter petition was sent to me against that annexation, and the facts set forth in that petition went to show that the first petition was not signed entirely by ratepayers or freeholders of that township. Of the 162 names signed on the petition, ninety-nine only were parliamentary voters, and some of the signatures were represented as having been obtained in a not very honorable way. The petition against annexation was signed by over seventy-one names. I have here copies of the petitions certified by Mr. Lindsay, who was then Clerk of the House. I will leave it for the House to say how far I asked for this change.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman asked me to put it in and I did so.

Mr. THOMPSON. After the presentation of this petition, if the petition is right there can be no objection to it; subsequently, a counter petition came in, and I took the action that has been stated.

Mr. McCALLUM. I was aware the hon. member for Haldimand was going to ask for this.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The political complexion of the township of Dunn appears to be this: The hon. member for Monck had a majority in the township of Dunn of eighty-four, and his total majority in Monck was only twenty-eight.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. member for Monck has discovered since six o'clock that there are Tory and Reform townships. He knows well how the people of the township of Dunn are disposed to vote, and he was glad to support a measure by which Dunn would be received into his constituency.

Mr. McCALLUM. What I said before six o'clock was to the effect that the Bill would have very little effect on the electors. The people would remember how Government affairs have been conducted by the late Administration. Did hon. gentlemen suppose the people forgot the acts of the late Government.

Mr. MILLS. What about the Pacific scandal?

Mr. McCALLUM. It is a slander which you try to keep alive, but you did not honestly come by it. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot expect to come back to power on the sins of the Conservative party. Those sins were washed out in September, 1878. That crew of pirates who were destroying every interest in the country were soon removed by the votes of the people. When hon. gentlemen opposite are defeated at the approaching elections they wish to make it appear that it was due to gerrymandering the constituencies.

Mr. RYMAL. If equally divided, the average population of Welland, Lincoln and Wentworth would be about 22,000. There was no reason why Caistor should be taken from Monck. There was some reason why Grimsby on the Lake shore might be added to Wentworth. But I can see no reason why Caistor, belonging to Monck, and Monck being below the average population, should have been transferred to Wentworth. Wentworth, if left as it is, with Grimsby added, would have been nearly 19,000, or 2,000 below the average. Monck might have got a township from Welland, retaining Caistor, and would have been a fair-sized constituency, leaving Welland above the average still. Now, to tell any person who knows about the position of affairs in the Niagara Peninsula, that there was no motive in this other than the equalization of the constituencies there is enough to cause every one to laugh at you. The veriest Tory, if told that that was the sole and only aim of the Government, would reply at once that you lied. I am sure that even as poor a mathe-matician as I could have sat down and made these compact in form and could have equalized them in population within a limit of 1,000 or 2,000, which is all that we could expect.

On clause 21,

Mr. RYMAL moved in amendment that after the word "Townships" Ancaster be inserted. He said: If you carry out this idea the south riding of Wentworth would have 20,265 of a population, or 643 below the average. As it is now proposed to be constituted it has only 15,539, or 5,369 below the average, and as it was before this Bill was introduced it was only 546 less than proposed. But in the change they have made they have turned a Reform majority of seventy-five to a Tory majority of 102, and they have taken the principal township of the county of Wentworth—a township which reaches within a mile of the county buildings, and a township which has been the central figure in that section of country since the settlement of Upper Canada. When the old Gore district existed, Ancaster was the centre figure of that group, and the village of Ancaster, in that township, at the time the seat of Government was to be chosen for Upper Canada, was the rival of York for that honor. In the united counties of Wentworth, Halton and Brant, Ancaster was still considered the key-stone of that organization, and it has remained the key-stone of Wentworth ever since. But it happens to be strongly Reform, and to it I owe my election on every occasion on which I presented myself; and in order to decapitate me or my successor, Tory violence had to be resorted to and fraud consummated. It is a constituency that for forty-five years at least has never returned a Tory, and when it did return a Tory, it was by the interference of the Executive in the time of Sir Francis Bond Head, when an irresponsible Government, in order to override the wishes of the people, issued some 500 patent deeds on territory that the Indians had surrendered, and by this means swamped the Reformers of Wentworth. Now, an irresponsible, wicked and tyrannical Executive, backed by a cowardly and wicked following, are ready to deprive Wentworth of its central figure and transfer it to the county of Brant, uniting it with townships forty-five miles distant and making a constituency some forty-five miles long by eight or ten in width. A greater outrage on the rights of a free and independent constituency was never perpetrated, and that for the sole and only purpose of converting one of the veteran Reform ridings of Upper Canada into one which they consider hopelessly Tory. But I have my opinion about that yet. It will be all they will be able to do to convert that ancient stronghold of the Reform party into a Tory riding, and I promise them a stern fight for it. I would like to know from the hon. First Minister his reasons, if he has any good reasons, for taking Ancaster from Wentworth other than to decapitate the Reform candidate in South Wentworth.

Amendment negatived on division: Yeas, 35; nays, 71.

Mr. RYMAL. How true the old saying is—

"Injustice leagued with strength and power,
Nor truth nor innocence can stay;
In vain they plead when tyrants lower,
And seek to make the weak their prey.
No equal rights obtain regard
When passions fire and spoils reward."

On section 22,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sections 22 and 23 postponed.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what his intentions are with reference to sections 22 and 23.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The object in postponing them is to give them further consideration.

Mr. RYMAL. It seems to me that in an old municipality like this, where the bounds and population are so well known, it is impossible that we can understand why these should be left.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is it that requires consideration in connection with these two counties? We ought all to know, because we are to consider them as well as the hon. gentleman. He is not the House. If there is something wrong in these two constituencies as laid down in the Bill, let us know what it is. We may be able to help him in the consideration. Perhaps the hon. member for Halton may be able to help him also.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that a good deal of dissatisfaction exists amongst the Conservatives of a portion of the county of Halton as to the proposed change there, and I believe they have sent down a deputation to interview the hon. gentleman in regard to that aspect of the Bill, which he has so carefully kept out of consideration in concocting these different municipalities. The hon. member for Lambton does not seem to reflect that when the hon. gentleman drew up this Bill, with a sole regard to maintaining geographical and municipal grounds, occasional mistakes were made as to their political aspect, and it is with the view of considering these political matters, which the hon. gentleman was very properly blind to until after he introduced the Bill, that it is now proposed to postpone these clauses.

Mr. MILLS. No answer?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have told the hon. gentleman I may submit the same clauses, or I may submit an alteration of these two for the consideration of the House.

On section 29,

Mr. PATERSON. I will explain the arrangement with reference to the north riding of Brant. This was one of the ridings that I supposed, the county lines having been thrown over and equalization having been resorted to, would need to have some population added. If I remember right, it was something like 12,000. Its sister riding, South Brant, which I represent, had something like 21,000, if we count in the Indian population. But a very strange way of equalizing North Brant was by taking from that 12,000, between 3,000 and 4,000 in the town of Paris, and between 2,000 and 3,000 in the township of Unandago and adding them to South Brant; that, of course, gave South Brant more population than was required, and therefore the townships of Burford and Oakland were taken from the south riding and added to South Oxford, that, with their addition, has more of a population than the south riding from which they were taken. Of course, the north riding would remain with about 6,000 or 7,000, and in order to make that up, and equalize the township of Ancaster, which was required in South Wentworth, was abstracted from it and added on to what is now called North Brant, and Blenheim was taken from North Oxford and attached to North Brant; the total result being that North Brant had still but 17,000 population. Why were all those changes made? There was only one object to be gained, and that political. I had thought of an amendment, but from the fate of the amendment of my hon. friend from South Wentworth, I have no hope from this Committee. I see that some clauses are laid over for consideration, and of what the objects are I have a shrewd suspicion; and if the Government restore to South Brant the townships they stole from it, it will be only because they have awakened to a sense of the truth of my prediction last night, that though they desire the dismembership of that riding in the first place, to secure for themselves and supporters a representative in South Brant—if they restore those townships, which, I think, they ought to do, in order to maintain for the people the associations in which they have been connected so long, but which I despair of their doing—I can only attribute it to the fact that it will be because they have awakened to the consciousness that South Brant, mangled as it has been by them, dismembered and torn up, without any excuse as far as the equalization of the population goes, is, after all, not to be found a Tory preserve, not one in which a supporter of the Premier can be returned. I repeat, if I can secure a nomination for South Brant, and I think I can, there will be found a candidate in opposition to the Government who will bend his ever lawful means to retain that county, as it has been for the last ten years, on the side of the Opposition. I may move an amendment on the third reading, but I thought it right to expose to the House the means taken to get rid of Liberal members and convert their counties into Tory preserves. I believe there will be a reaction in reference to this matter and that the Government and their supporters, if they endorse this transaction, will find a spirit of resentment has been awakened in the country, of which they will feel the tyro effects, as happily there is still a sense of fair play in the breasts of our people. I am sorry that the Government should have introduced such a Bill. I feel the sorrow that every true Canadian must feel when the Government of his country does that which should produce an honest blush of shame, and introduces a measure that will produce a reaction in the minds of honest and fair-minded men, of whatever party. I believe it will be found that its effect in reference to the House and the majority of the members will be, that they will be opposed to a Government that could resort to such a device, to secure themselves in power, as the cutting and carving of 52 constituencies out of 92--if, peradventure, the Government may seek to obtain, by legislative force, what they failed to obtain by fair and honest appeals to the judgment of their countrymen.

Mr. FLEMING. I wish to exhibit a diagram showing the present form of North Brant as altered by the Bill before the House. A moment's inspection will enable hon. members to judge of its convenient, graceful and symmetrical propositions. (The hon. gentleman held up a diagram.)

On section 29,

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has, in other cases, applied the term "electoral districts." In this case the township of Lancaster is a part of the county of Wentworth, not a part of the county of Brant. Blenheim is a part of the county of Oxford. Here are parts of three counties, and it is a misnomer to constitute them part of the north riding of Brant. There is a definition given of the county of Brant, which does not correspond with any county of Brant that we know.

On section 31,

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I notice that the hon. gentleman has postponed some of the clauses in the Bill. He should postpone this one also and reconsider it. If the changes were made on the principle submitted by the hon. leader of the Government, I would feel bound to support them, but the facts prove the contrary. The population of North Oxford is at present 25,361; as readjusted it is 24,732. The north riding, in its old form, is a well-formed riding; the people act together municipally and have intimate commercial relations with one another, and I am sure it is the wish of the population of both sides of politics that the county should be left as at present constituted. Even if the Government required to take off the townships they have taken off, they should still leave that riding with the other townships that constitute it, when it would have a population of 21,000. The electors of North Easthope and South Easthope are so situated geographically that they have very little connection, either municipal or otherwise, with the county of Oxford. Personally I have no objection to the change, because I believe the people of North Easthope and South Easthope will vote as they ought to. But I would ask the Government to postpone this section for reconsideration.

Mr. TROW. I coincide with the views expressed by the hon. member for North Oxford, so far as North Easthope and South Easthope are concerned, which have been taken from the south riding of Perth, the population of which, prior to readjustment, was 20,708. If the Government could not see their way to returning South Easthope to the south riding of the county of Perth, at all events, they could withdraw from North Oxford, North Easthope, connecting it with South Easthope, which is in the south riding of Perth. This would make about equal the number of inhabitants in Oxford, North Perth and South Perth, and would not interfere with North Perth. By taking Usborne from South Perth, the four ridings would be nearly equal in population. I felt somewhat astonished that the old townships, North Easthope and South Easthope, that have been united together for one quarter of a century, should have been disturbed. I have resided with these people for one quarter of a century, and now see the township of South Easthope severed from me, of which I have been reeve for twenty one years. The people of South Easthope have held a meeting to protest against the policy of the Government in attaching them to another county entirely. I have had in the riding a majority of over 200 Reform votes. This township is now taken away, and the result is that they have taken that majority from me by this Bill, and I am now in a minority of 118 votes, so that when I go back for election I shall have to work myself through that 118 votes in order to get an even start. It strikes me forcibly that it is doing an injustice to the riding to place it as it is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would ask one question with regard to the other clause. South Oxford has a population of 24,732 at the present time, and it is increased to 24,778, and I think that the hon. member might easily reconsider this, or, at any rate, lay it over with the other clauses. It has 4,000 of a population over the average. Besides, it destroys the municipal boundaries and the municipal and social relations of the people in that riding.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course, it is increased because they take 6,000 off my riding to increase it. It is evident, from the remarks of the hon. Minister of Customs, that he has been placed at a great disadvantage by consulting a few men who by chance happened to be of one political opinion; if he had chosen to obtain information from this side of the House how much nicer a map he could have made.

Section agreed to.

On section 32,

Mr. MILLS. This clause and the three or four that precede it show very distinctly that the object of the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues was not the equalization of the constituencies, but to give the Grits. Hon. gentlemen on this side have asked that a certain clause should be reconsidered. Why, it has been considered and reconsidered, and they would not accomplish their object if any other arrangement were made than that which has been made by the provisions of this Bill. The hon. gentleman could not have succeeded in putting a great majority of the Reformers in a large district of country like the county of Oxford if any other arrangement were made. The hon. gentleman is quite right in not reconsidering these clauses, because so long as he is determined to carry the elections if possible by a minority of votes he must, of course, persist in the line he has adopted.

Section agreed to.

On section 35,

Mr. TROW. I think that section, at all events, should be remodelled and the township of Usborne, which is now proposed to be added to South Perth, should be left in connection with South Huron.

Section agreed to.

On clause 40,

Mr. MILLS. This is another case in which, if the hon. gentleman really desired to equalize the constituencies, he could easily accomplish that result without any interference with the municipal boundaries. All that would be necessary would be to transfer the city of St. Thomas from East Elgin to West Elgin, and the two constituencies would be as nearly equal as may be.

Mr. CASEY. I scarcely know, with the exception of Brant and one or two other counties, a more glaring case of re-adjustment for political purposes than the case of the two Elgins. The ostensible basis of this Bill is the equalization of population. These two ridings as they stand give as nearly as possible an average of 21,000 souls to each member. The total population is 42,361, making an average of 21,180 in the two ridings. The two ridings, however, are considerably different in population, the one being about 28,000 and the other 14,000; but here the geographical position of the county steps in to relieve the Government of the difficulty of equalizing them. It happens that a large body of population, municipally separated from the rest of the county, lies in St. Thomas, having a population of 8,000 odd. The population of East Elgin being 28,000, this 8,000 might have been transferred and yet leave over 19,000, while it would make the population of West Elgin about 22,000. This would have been a close approximation to equalization. But, instead of following this obvious and reasonable course, the Government have seen fit to do otherwise. Finding East Elgin too large, they subtract 1,800 and add 300, leaving it with a population of 26,300. West Elgin being too small, 9,000 are added from the adjoining county of Kent, in townships which form a part of the electoral district of Bothwell. The two ridings at present stand at 26,302 and 23,480, the difference of 3,000 being as great as before the change was made, and greater than that which in several other instances has caused an attempt to be made at equalization. The average population per member under this arrangement is 24,800, so that, by redistributing the two ridings, the average is made about 3,000 further from the average quota of the Dominion than it was before. That fact is sufficient to show that no regard was had to the equalization of population. But if further proof were required it is furnished in the nature of the subtractions and additions. East Elgin gave a very small majority to the sitting member, forty only; South Dorchester, which gave a Reform majority of six, has been added to East Middlesex. There was great risk that Dorchester would give a much larger vote in the coming than in the last election, and therefore South Dorchester was taken away and the small Reform majority was smothered in East Middlesex. A part of Port Stanley, which belonged to West Elgin, which gave a Conservative majority of thirty-five, was also added, so that by the addition and subtraction proposed the Conservative strength in the east riding was increased by forty-one votes. No greater change could be effected without cutting the county into two parts. It happens that East Elgin consists of a row of townships along the lake shore, with South Dorchester at the top, and that the latter is the only township that could be taken away without cutting the county in two, unless Bayham had been added to South Norfolk—and the member for that riding might have objected to this. Take West Elgin. It is a strong Reform constituency, and it gave a majority of 112 in the face of all the difficulties which a Reform candidate had to contend against at the last election. They have added a population of 9,000 from Bothwell to West Elgin, making it 2,000 beyond the quota. These municipalities were added because they were so strongly Reform that they turned the scale in favor of the present representative of Bothwell, who, by the logic of his speeches in this House and elsewhere, is one of the worst thorns in the side of the Government. In both these cases there has been a virtual disfranchisement of certain townships. In England disfranchisement is reserved for such localities as are proved to be hopelessly corrupt in the case of an election, but by this Bill it is meted out to townships which show themselves independent of the Government. South Dorchester gave a small Reform majority at the last election. On former occasions it was more strongly Liberal, and it was expected that it would be more so in future, but by adding it to the strongly Conservative riding of East Middlesex, where it is smothered by Conservative votes, it is virtually disfranchised, and the same is true of the townships and town taken from Bothwell. It is quite possible that the vote of South Dorchester might have turned the scale against the member for the east riding. It is certain that the vote of Orford, Howard and Ridgetown was sufficient to turn the scale in Bothwell. Yet all four are now placed where their vote will not make the result different from what it would have been in any case. This is virtual disfranchisement. On the proper occasion I shall put on record my protest against what has been done and my view of what would have been a proper arrangement and one in consonance with the principles on which the hon. gentleman professes to have based the Bill. I omitted to state the reason why the change I have spoken of as being a proper arrangement of Elgin was not made. The reason was that the city of St. Thomas, which should have been transferred to the west riding gave a Conservative majority at the last election, about three times as great as the total majority of the Conservative candidate in East Elgin, and if it had been added to West Elgin this time he would have had no chance of re-election.

Mr. ARKELL. I repudiate the idea that the Government had any political motives in the arrangement of the Elgins. South Dorchester, which is taken off East Elgin, used to give a Reform majority of fifty. At the last election it only gave a majority of six against me, and I am satisfied from what I know of the township that it would have given at least a majority of fifty for me, if I had run again. Port Stanley was included in East Elgin in the Census, making it something over 28,000. South Dorchester and Springfield, which are taken away from East Elgin, have a population of something like 2,400. In arranging the new ridings of Essex and Kent the Government had to commence at some certain point, and I suppose that was their object in making this arrangement. So far as West Elgin is concerned the Conservatives of that riding are much annoyed at the change, and they say they could have carried it under the old arrangement, and were making ready for the election. My hon. friend's majorities in that riding have been decreasing of late, and the Conservatives felt satisfied they could have carried it this time. The Government have gained nothing at all so far as I can see, and for my part I would as soon have had East Elgin as it existed before than as it is proposed to be arranged by the Bill. With regard to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), whom my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) is so anxious to see in the House, the best thing he (Mr. Casey) could do would be to resign in West Elgin, and allow the hon. member for Bothwell to run for his constituency.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member rose to explain and repudiate, and he is very severe upon the Government. He repudiates the idea of political effect being intended by this Bill. By so doing he casts the strongest possible reflection upon the common sense and the ordinary intelligence of the hon. leader of the Government. If this Bill is not intended to have political effect, if it is meant to equalize the population, it is a clumsy, absurd and ridiculous Bill, because it has put these two ridings very much further from the quota than before. It is an ineffective Bill, because it does the very opposite of what it was intended to do. As to the township of South Dorchester, the hon. gentleman says it formerly gave a larger Reform majority than it did in the last election; but he hopes it will give a Conservative majority next time. I do not know that; but I know that in 1878 a whirlwind passed over our western townships which induced a great many townships which ordinarily gave large Reform majorities, to give smaller Reform majorities or to give Conservative majorities. But that, I believe, has largely passed away, and the National Policy is not likely to have the same power as it had in 1878, when it was new and untried; and the probability is that these townships will give a larger Reform vote than they did in 1878. But the fact remains that the population of East Elgin had to be reduced to some extent in order to bring it nearer the quota.

Mr. ARKELL. It is in good shape now.

Mr. CASEY. South Dorchester is the only township that could be touched without cutting in two the northern boundary of the riding; it is also the only one that could be cut off with any regard to the convenience of the member for East Elgin, and it is taken off; and it happens that that excision leaves East Elgin in a comparatively decent shape. The riding is not unshapely or objectionable on the ground of form; it is objectionable simply on the ground that a township has been taken from the county and added to a neighboring one, when the equalization of the population could have been better attained by taking from East Elgin and adding to West Elgin without disturbing the county bounds at all. But the hon. gentleman has another excuse; he said the Government had to commence somewhere in order to equalize the population of Essex and Kent. I do not know that they had to commence there for that purpose. Both Essex and Kent had about the right population to cut into two ridings; and if the Government wanted to equalize them they might as well just cut each of those counties in two as the Local Government did, instead of taking some of the Kent townships belonging to Bothwell and attaching them to Elgin. The hon. gentleman suggests a way out of the difficulty. He made a very suggestive remark, one which perhaps his leader would have been just as well satisfied he had not made. He said that if I wanted to see the hon. member for Bothwell have a seat in this House, I could resign and give him West Elgin. I do not know whether the hon. member for Bothwell needs another seat than the one he now represents. Besides, the suggestion shows one of the objects of the change, which is to create a rivalry between the hon. member for Bothwell and myself, by making us both residents of the same riding. As to the candidature of West Elgin, that is not a matter which either the hon. member or I can settle by our own motion; it is a matter to be settled by the electors themselves, and a matter which the electors and the hon. member for Bothwell and myself can settle to our own satisfaction, although perhaps not to the satisfaction of hon. gentlemen opposite. By this change they hope to insure the exclusion of both the hon. member for Bothwell and myself from the House; but I am sure that in that expectation they will be utterly disappointed.

On section 51,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). With reference to North Middlesex, under the old division, as it stood before the readjustment proposed by this Bill, the population was 21,239, or only about 331 above the quota; but by withdrawing from old North Middlesex the townships of Adelaide and Lobo, and adding to it the township of Stephen, from Huron, the population is reduced to 19,543, or 1,365 under the quota. In connection with this I may mention that the population of South Huron, under this Bill is 23,453, 1,728 over the quota, while the population of North Middlesex is only 19,543. The township of Stephen is detached from South Huron and annexed to North Middlesex; but the village of Exeter, carved out of the township of Stephen, attached to North Middlesex, and the township of Usborne, attached to South Perth, is attached to South Huron, although not one foot of it is in any of the municipalities, that make up South Huron—it is detached from North Middlesex, to which it properly belongs as part of the township of Stephen. That is manifestly wrong, and contrary to the principles laid down by the hon. gentleman, that when a village is made up out of a municipality, or carved out of a township, it should belong to the riding to which the township has been attached. The object the hon. gentleman professes to have in view in these changes is not served by these arrangements. And in addition to this the populations are further from the quota than the adjustment I have suggested. If Exeter is attached to North Middlesex the population would then be 21,268, or only 260 over the quota, and if it were detached from South Huron the population of that riding would be 21,728, or only 820 over the quota.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps my hon. friend would state what the political complexion of Exeter is.

Mr. CAMERON. Surely it is useless to talk about the political complexion. No one imagines for a moment that a man in the position of the hon. gentleman would be actuated in a matter of this kind by political considerations. I may say, however, for the information of my hon. friend, that Exeter gave 115 of a majority against me, and that may account for this gerrymandering.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will postpone the consideration of the three ridings of Huron.

Mr. CAMERON. But not with a view of correcting it in the light I have indicated.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite clear the hon. gentleman has news that the nefarious objects of this Bill are not likely to be accomplished in Huron by this means, and he wants time to devise some other.

Mr. MILLS. We are obliged to go back to the Statutes of thirty years ago to find out the political boundaries of many of the electoral divisions of Ontario. A very few minutes' work would embrace them all in this Statute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be done in the consolidation of the Statute.

Mr. MILLS. That may be ten years hence.

Committee rose and reported progress; and (at 11:25 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 10th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ABOLITION OF POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that on and after the first day of June, in the present year 1882, newspapers published in Canada, mailed by the publisher at the place of publication, and addressed to regular subscribers or news agents, in Canada, shall be transmitted to their address free of postage.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. RYKERT. I have been informed that papers of an agricultural nature, published monthly, do not come under this provision. It is just as important that agricultural papers should have this exemption as well as other papers.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is intended to cover all newspapers, but not magazines. When the Bill based on this resolution is introduced, we may make it include monthly papers.

Mr. ANGLIN. The qualification of newspapers will prevent the Bill applying to that class of periodicals to which the hon. member for Lincoln has referred. Agricultural papers will not be regarded as newspapers.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The intention is to include newspapers published specially in the interests of agriculture.

Mr. BAIN. Most of our newspapers devote more or less of their space to agriculture, but there are other periodicals, not very numerous, which are not in newspaper form, and which will be excluded from the benefit of this exemption. I think it is desirable that these periodicals should be included if for no other reason than that they are more likely to be used and kept when they are published in the periodical form than in the newspaper form. I presume the objection is not only to encourage newspapers, but also to encourage a beneficial class of literature.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I would suggest that the postage should be removed from all purely Canadian periodicals—not American or English.

Resolution agreed to and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 161) to provide for the free transmission of Canadian newspapers by mail within the Dominion. He said: I do not propose taking the subject up to-day, and I will probably make some amendment in the draft submitted, if there is no objection.

Bill read the first time.

INCREASED SUBSIDY TO MANITOBA.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to consider a certain proposed resolution on the subject of increased subsidy to Manitoba.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. As the papers in connection with the application made by Manitoba were laid on the Table of the House some time ago, and the Order in Council in connection with it, it is perhaps scarcely necessary for me to enter very fully into explanations relative to the proposed change. It is well known that, owing to the extensions of the boundaries of Manitoba, the expenses of that Province will be necessarily very considerably increased. On the change being made, the Government of that Province applied to the Dominion for a change of the financial basis upon which that Province is placed at present; and it will be found by the papers on the Table that the Government of that Province asked that they be allowed 5 per cent. upon a debt of $3,243,000, that is at the rate of $32.43 per head of an estimated population of 100,000. They ask also that they be allowed 80 cents per head on an estimated population of 80,000, and ask various other concessions that were taken into consideration by the Government, who decided to ask Parliament, not to grant all Manitoba asked, but to grant what, under the circumstances, they felt it was reasonable to expect Parliament should concede. The Government considered that, inasmuch as under the terms of Union, there is no arrangement made for a change in the population, that is as respects any one of the Provinces after they enter the Union—no provision for an increase of the per capita grant to the Provinces, in proportion to its population, until it reaches 400,000—that they could not concede the full claims of Manitoba. When Prince Edward Island was admitted into the Union, from the fact of its having no Crown Lands, such as is owned by the other Provinces, $45,000 a year was granted in lieu of Crown Lands, or $500,000, that the money might be used in the purchase of lands belonging to absentee proprietors. It was thought advisable, as in the case of Prince Edward Island, to ask Parliament to appropriate to Manitoba $45,000 a year; and as we could not increase the debt for an increase in the population, it was thought proper to pay Manitoba for the next ten years, a subsidy of 80 cents per head on a population of 150,000. It was estimated, two months ago, before the recent immigration to that Province commenced, that its population was 90,000. The Census returns show simply the actual inhabitants at the time of the immigration, and not the new arrivals since. Therefore, 90,000 was taken as the number, in March last, but in all probability it will reach, before the year closes, 115,000 or 120,000. As this arrangement is intended to extend over a period of ten years, until the Census of 1891, it was considered desirable, inasmuch as it was impossible for that Province to transact its business without some consideration beyond what the population of to-day entitles it to, to ask Parliament to consider the population during the next ten years as 150,000. It is also proposed to increase the sum voted for the expenses of the Government from $30,000 to $50,000. Those changes will make altogether an increase of $120,000 over the present grant. It receives now, 80 cents per head on an estimated population of 70,000, under the Act of last Session; $30,000 for the Government and 5 per cent. upon the balance of the money undrawn, which amounts to about $12,000 a year. Though this increase is considerably below what was asked by Manitoba, still after the most careful consideration, and examining the lowest figures which would enable them to manage their affairs for the next ten years, the Dominion Government believed they were warranted in asking the House for this readjustment for the present terms and arrangements. This will give Manitoba something like $220,000 or $230,000 income for the expenses of the Government and the management of the affairs of that Province.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state exactly what the Manitobans demanded?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The delegates proposed that they be allowed for Government and legislation, $60,000 instead of $30,000, also 5 per cent. interest on $3,243,000, being at the rate of $32.43 per head on a population of 100,000; also the amount already received by the Province, 80 cents a head on 100,000, or a total of $286,730. The Census returns showed the population of Manitoba to be 64,814, which does not, of course, include the immigrants of last year, estimated at 25,000, making a total population of 89,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does it include the Indians?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; they claim that the Province should have the management of the sale of the public lands, and of the wood and timber thereon, and quote the course pursued with British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. There were other claims made with reference to half-breed grants and the appointment of Judges, and various subjects, but these are the financial portions of the claim; and instead of increasing the debt, as was proposed, the Government do not ask Parliament for any increase, because that is stipulated under the Constitution, and cannot be set aside without interfering with the whole basis on which the different Provinces in the Union rest. The Government propose to give them $50,000, and instead of granting them land it is proposed to give them $45,000 per year.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said this proposal was made after very careful consideration, and reducing the service to the lowest possible cost. I should like to know what are the broad details of the general estimated cost of carrying on the Manitoba Government from which the Government arrived at the conclusion that the sum proposed would be adequate to the needs of the Province with its enlarged boundaries and expanding population.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We took up the different items of expenditure and estimated that the sum of $225,000 would, with the greatest economy on the part of the Manitoba Government and Legislature, enable them to pay the expenditure for the next ten years. Besides their subsidy, they received last year something like $18,000 for licenses, and we estimated that with the increase of population they would, in future, receive $50,000 a year from that source. Adding the various items together, it is found that the sum proposed would, with the strictest economy, cover their expenditure for the next ten years.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not able to furnish the House with a statement of the mode by which this calculation is arrived at, because it is impossible for us, without that statement, to form any independent judgment, as to the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's result. The expenditure of Manitoba, up to this time, would furnish an extremely inadequate basis on which it would be possible to arrive at a conclusion as to what would be the proper sum for the next ten years. In two important respects the condition of the Province is wholly changing. The boundaries are enormously enlarged, and while they are enlarged, the timber lands included in them do not go to the Province, so that increased expenditure is involved without compensation in the way of territory. The population is increasing rapidly, and increasing over a very large area, and this will also involve a considerably increased expenditure. I expected the hon. gentleman would have given us the details on which he has based his calculations. His proposal is less than what the Government has demanded as a minimum, and they ask for the lands besides. The lands have not been granted, and the money grant is considerably less. What we are entitled to know is what is the basis of taxation upon which this settlement is proposed to us? We have a right to know the process of reasoning by which the hon. gentleman arrived at this conclusion. We ought to know what the hon. gentleman thought Manitoba was, what he thought was the eastern boundary, because, obviously, upon the extent of its territory depends to a considerable extent the costs of its administration.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is certain information asked for by my hon. friend that would be exceedingly difficult for the Government to furnish. As to the calculation where the eastern boundary of Manitoba is to be, that question did not enter into the consideration, because no matter where that may be it probably will not affect that question very materially for ten years to come—although it will, of course, affect it to some extent. With reference to the detailed information the hon. member desires, I can only say that certainly before the third reading of the Bill, if he wishes it, I will bring down a statement showing the exact expenditure under the heads of education and judiciary at the present time, and the mode at which we arrive at that. Of course, there is no record made of that, but from the discussion I can give the expenditure under these different heads, and what the Government thought probably would be sufficient to cover them collectively. If it is any advantage to him I may also state the sum under each head that will probably be required. With reference to the question of the boundary, it will be very difficult for me to give him such definite information. We can give him no definite information, because whatever may be the decision, it may affect the expenses of the judiciary, and it may, to some extent, affect the expenses of education; but, as a rule, that subject was not definitely considered when we arrived at the calculation as to the amount that would be necessary.

Mr. BLAKE. Whether the Province contains 60,000 or 70,000 more square miles, the hon. gentleman thought it was not at all necessary to consider whether that would affect the statement of its public revenue for a period of ten years to come. I am afraid, if the same judicious vagueness pervades the other elements of the hon. gentleman's calculation it will not be found as available means of reaching a conclusion as we might have hoped it would be. But vague as it is, and indefinite as it necessarily must be, it certainly would be some help to us if we had it at some period before the third reading. Of course, we have access to the public documents in that connection, but it would be to the convenience of the House if we had also a statement of the expenditure under each head of the public service in Manitoba for each of the last three or four years. That would show us the expenses of the nearer past. Then the hon. gentleman's calculation as to what the expenses ought to be under each of these different heads for the next ten years would enable us to form some sort of judgment of the correctness of the calculation which he has reached. For my own part, under these circumstances, I shall not, at this stage of the Bill, give utterance to some further views which I have entertained, but will hold them in reserve until I receive that information which we ought to have had to-day.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be doubly desirable, if the hon. Minister of Finance should furnish this information in considerable detail. I recollect very well when the Province of Manitoba—and I think you yourself, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Royal) was at that time a member of the Government of Manitoba—appealed to the Government of which my hon. friend from Lambton was the chief, for an increase, and we found, on examining the details of the administration, that there were very large, and as it appeared to us, very unnecessary expenditures incurred. I speak from memory, but I think that almost all the sum devoted to the service in Manitoba was unfortunately at that time absorbed in what may be called legislative expenses, almost to the exclusion of any of the more valuable services, with the solitary exception, perhaps, of some parts of the administration of justice. Now, I am bound to say that the then Government of Manitoba did, so far as I can see, apply themselves with considerable earnestness to the task of reducing this expenditure, and although we were not able to give them quite as much as we could have desired in the then state of the public finances, still considerable additions were made to their income. It is therefore all the more desirable that we should know how this sum, that we are about to give, is intended to be expended. But there is another reason: it is very undesirable in the public interest, and in the interest of the other Provinces, that those settlements should be perpetually disturbed; it is very undesirable that, from year to year, fresh demands should be made, fresh questions should be raised, as to what this or that particular Province is entitled to; and it is therefore to be regretted that this question was not brought up at an earlier period of the Session, because there are very important questions underlying and involved. It is exceedingly expedient on many grounds that the demands of Manitoba should be fully and fairly considered, that we may not see Manitoba next year, or the year after that, or perhaps each year in succession, appearing here and demanding further increase, shouting for further subsidies. Such a state of things is very undesirable both between Manitoba and the Dominion and between Manitoba and the sister Provinces, and I therefore think that we should have, in this case, even fuller information than would otherwise be necessary to form an opinion on the subject.

Mr. MILLS. I think it is greatly to be regretted that the Government did not bring down this proposition at a reasonable time. It is perfectly obvious that at the close of the Session it is impossible to give this subject the consideration to which it is entitled. It is one that ought to be very carefully considered by the House. We should act upon some intelligent principle, and we should know with the greatest minuteness the reason for the course the Government has adopted, and for the particular sum upon which they have decided. There can be no doubt that Manitoba stands in a different position from any of the older Provinces. The Government still controls the public lands in that Province, which is an important source of public revenue, and the Government have undertaken, and at the expense of this country, to make certain improvements in Manitoba that are considered in other Provinces local improvements, and it is very desirable that we should know how far the Government have taken this into consideration in determining the amount to which Manitoba is entitled. Now, the hon. gentleman has told us that he proposes to give $5,000 a year as an offset to any claim Manitoba may have for public lands, while that may be more or very much less than Manitoba might be fairly entitled to. We ought to know, in connection with this, how far the Government proposes to appropriate lands within that Province to aid in the construction of railways that would in other Provinces be considered local works, undertaken if at all, by the Government, or if subsidized by the Government would be at the expense of the other Provinces. Now, I have no hesitation in saying that so far as the lands are concerned in the limits of Manitoba, subject to the amount it has cost the Dominion to survey them, they should be administered wholly in the interest of the Parliament; they should be regarded as Provincial lands, and it always seemed to me that as soon as the Province was able to take charge of them, that is, so soon as the Government became a settled Government, these lands might be very fairly placed under the control and at the disposal of the Province. It is true we have undertaken the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and propose to aid the construction of that road through the Province out of these lands. I do not object to that. That work, however, may be considered as standing in precisely the same condition as other works of the old Provinces, such as canals and railways, which may not be aided by the Government at the expense of the country as a whole. It is important how far the Government have considered the improvements which they have made within the limits of Manitoba, as improvements which might be charged against the Province, as a debt with which they would come into the Union. Those are important considerations, because they enable us to arrive at the principle which forms the basis upon which we may fairly deal with the Province, and place it in a position to control its own affairs without being embarrassed and compelled to come here as a dependent upon this Government. That is a very undesirable condition. Manitoba ought to stand as an independent Province, having its own autonomy, controlling its own affairs; but in a great measure the Premier of the Province has been dependent upon the Government here, and has not acted in accordance with the wishes of the people of that country. In a large degree, the policy of that Province has been controlled by the Federal Government, and the affairs of that Province have been largely administered in the interest of the Administration here. Why has the Premier of

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.

Manitoba so acted? Simply because the Dominion Government have kept that Province dependent upon their Administration. Practically they have controlled the finances of the Province, and in doing so interfered with the action of the Manitoba Government. It is greatly to be regretted that the hon. gentleman did not bring down the proposition earlier. He has acted upon the assumption that as a Minister of the Crown he is not subject to this House. In dealing with matters of finance, and in submitting a proposition of this kind, which may be approved or not by the House, the members of the Government are acting as agents of Parliament. The advisers of the Crown are nothing more, yet they have ignored Parliament, disregarded its authority, and have simply come down at the last moment and asked its approval of a certain proposal, allowing no time within which an opinion can be formed. What is the position the hon. gentleman occupies before the House? It is this: he comes down and tells the House that as Minister of the Public Treasury, and as controller of its finances, he makes a certain proposal. He informs the House that a conclusion has been arrived at, but he does not go out of his way to furnish information which would enable hon. members to form an opinion for themselves; he asks the House not to excuse an independent judgment, but to accept the resolution at which the Government have arrived. That is in perfect accord with the policy of the Government during the past four years. The Ministers have looked on Parliament as a body appointed to register the decrees of the Government, and we find how the Government has treated Parliament. The Government have come down at the end of the Session and submitted a proposition which is to remain a contract between the Dominion Government and the Province of Manitoba for the next ten years. The hon. gentleman knew right well that he thereby ties the hands of his successors in office, and although that fact is obvious, yet Parliament is called upon to support that proposition without any information having been given. I enter my protest against such a policy. I assumed when I was elected that I was to exercise an independent judgment as to what the public interests required, and I declined to abdicate my functions, and hand over the trust which the electors have committed to me to the Administration. The hon. gentleman must have considered the details of this proposal which he has submitted, and it is necessary that all information should be furnished to the House to enable it to arrive at a proper conclusion; but the hon. gentleman has not done so, and he and his colleagues, who expect the Session to close within a few days, know it is impossible to give a proposition of this kind the consideration to which it is entitled. It is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman did not submit the proposition relating to the proposed increased subsidy to Manitoba at an earlier period, and did not accompany it with such a statement respecting the finances of Manitoba as would have enabled hon. members to reach an intelligent conclusion on the subject.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A stranger would suppose that the Government had prevented by some process the hon. member for Bothwell and other hon. gentlemen opposite from discussing to the fullest extent every subject that has been under consideration. During my experience, extending over a number of years, I have never known Government measures, whether affecting the Tariff or other matters, to have been so fully discussed, and have never known so little an attempt made to shut out the fullest debate. The Government has not intimated to the House that it will close the Session at a certain date, for that depends on the state of public business and the feelings of hon. members as to the time which will be required for discussion as to this proposition, which the hon. gentlemen seems to think is a most intricate and difficult one. The whole correspondence between the Dominion and the Manitoba Government, and the Order in Council were brought down a month ago in order that hon. gentlemen might make themselves acquainted with the desire of the Manitoba Government and the action of the Dominion Government in that regard. There is no desire to withhold the fullest information, but the Government thought, with the correspondence and Order in Council before the House, those documents would prove sufficient to enable hon. members to form an opinion on the subject. I will have the information which he desires before the third reading, with the income and expenditure for the third and fourth years. The hon. gentleman states that the Government are simply the agents of this House. Sir, we know that perfectly well, and as the agents of this House the Government of Manitoba approached us, because it was necessary to do so in order that we might decide what we should submit for the consideration of Parliament. After having given the subject careful and deliberate consideration, we felt that it was desirable to come to the conclusion which we have presented to the House. The hon. gentleman says that this action we propose will prevent future Governments from interfering in the matter for the period of ten years. The very object of this Bill is to close the question, so far as we can, and we gave the Government of Manitoba to understand, as stated in the resolution, that this agreement was to stand as a contract until 1891. Of course, the present population does not amount to 150,000, but we all feel that it will largely increase and even exceed that number, and the present action is taken in order to prevent them coming year after year. The hon. gentleman says that this is an important question with reference to other Provinces, but there is no other Province situated like Manitoba which has enlarged its borders and is increasing its population rapidly. The hon. gentleman asks how far the Government consider that the expenditure they make on railways should be taken into account with reference to the public debt. We have not conceded that Government any increase of the public debt. In the case of Prince Edward Island, a consideration for its public debt according to its population, and amounting to $32 per head or so, was allowed. That debt was largely created for the construction of their railways, and in this case the Dominion Government are, either by subsidies granted or by the sale of lands at a fixed rate, encouraging the construction of railways in Manitoba, and that Province is therefore relieved from that expenditure. That was one of the reasons given to the representatives of that Government, that they were not in the position of other Provinces, and therefore had not the same ground for claim apart from the constitutional difficulty. The hon. gentleman says that it is an intricate calculation that $30,000 we paid when that Province came into the Union, with a small population, a much smaller population than at present. Any one can understand, judging by the amount at present expended approximately for legislative and governmental purposes what their expenses will be for the next ten years, and say whether a certain sum is an exceptional or a reasonable one. It is a point upon which hon. gentlemen opposite are as able to form a calculation as the Government can. With reference to the proposition of placing the lands at the disposal of the Government, the trouble is that a large portion of the lands of Manitoba have been secured for the construction of railways; a large portion of the territory of that Province has been taken up or pledged, mortgaged as it were, in various ways; and it was considered desirable that the lands should remain largely as they are. It was considered, under those circumstances, that we should deal with them as with the Island of Prince Edward. That Island has a less population to-day than it is probable Manitoba will have in a year or two, and therefore the Government considered that the proposition they made with regard to the next ten years was a moderate one as regards the expected population of the Province. Another question is, whether in placing the average population for the next ten years at 150,000, we have made a number too high or too low, and if there is any ground of complaint on that score. The people of that country will say it is too low, and that the average will be beyond that. Since the correspondence between the two Governments has been on the Table for two months, I did not expect to be asked these details, though the hon. gentleman is within his rights in asking them. But I may say that the statement of the income and expenditure will be laid on the Table in ample time.

Mr. BLAKE. And your calculation?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I can give you the general calculations, though I do not know that we have a record of the minute details.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the complaint made by the hon. member for Bothwell was not merely that there was a lack of information on this subject, but that the information was brought in at so late a period in the Session. It really looks as if important measures had been delayed until a number of members left the House, and hon. gentlemen would have but a small audience to which to discuss their measures at the last moment. We have the resolutions regarding the Baie Verte Ship Railway, $150,000; the fisheries boundaries, $150,000; the Manitoba resolutions, $110,000; and the representation Bill, all brought down within the last week. If ever a House had reason to complain of those who are charged with the administration of the affairs of the country, this House has. I have never since I recollect found so many important measures crowded into the last few days of the Session, when, as hon. gentlemen know, discussion is impossible. Even when discussion is possible hon. members behind the Ministers get up and insult the Opposition, by taunting them with the smallness of their numbers—taunt them in every possible way—and no decent regard is paid to anything that is said on this side of the House. No attempt whatever is made to fulfil the functions of parliamentary government, by those who are now charged with the administration of affairs.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I join in the regret that these resolutions have been delayed so long. I think they involve matters far more important than the mere grant of $227,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Did I not delay them at your request?

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman was kind enough, two weeks ago, to say that he would not bring them down on a particular day, when I expected to be absent at Kingston; but I certainly expected them the following Tuesday, which was two weeks ago yesterday, and, besides, they might have been brought down long before that. They involve far more important considerations than the mere money grant, which is, of course, important to Manitoba; they involve the careful consideration of the relations to which the various Provinces of the Dominion stand to the Confederation. If we are going to have the Province in the dependent position it has been in since it came into the Confederation, we practically destroy its independence. We all know that, owing to the financial necessities of the Province of Manitoba, the Premier and deputation after deputation from that Province visited the Government at Ottawa, and had frequent interviews with the Government, with the view of obtaining better terms; and we all know the danger involved in placing a Province in that humiliating position. I think this condition of things was not intended when the Federal system was established in 1867. I think it was intended that each Province should be so provided for, that it might stand in a position entirely independent of the Dominion Government for its revenues. We know the excitement that prevailed in this House and the country and the political complications that arose, because of the better terms that were sought for and extended to the Province of Nova Scotia a few years ago. Now, here we have a Province larger in area than the Province of Ontario, a Province containing probably 70,000,000 or 90,000,000 acres of land, placed in the humiliating position of being obliged to send its Premier to Ottawa, year after year, to ask for further concessions, to ask that its depleted exchequer should be replenished, to ask from the Government of the day such financial aid as would enable it to provide for the ordinary expenditure for Government housekeeping. We all know that financial independence under such circumstances is practically impossible; we all know that involved in this there is a tacit understanding, that for any financial advance to that Province, a political quid pro quo will be returned. Let us look at the advances already made to Manitoba. We gave her at first $71,072 a year; in 1876, this was increased to $105,653 a year; and, in 1879, a further advance was made of $112,000 a year. Now, it is proposed to double that sum, and to make it $227,000. It is quite possible that this sum is not equal to the wants of the Province of Manitoba. I fear very much, from the statement made by the hon. the Minister of Finance, that he has not considered what the wants of the Province may be; I fear very much that with the growing settlement in the North-West, and the large influx of settlers there, her population will soon be much larger than he has estimated it to be, and that as a consequence her expenses will be much larger than we are making provision for. Take the Province of British Columbia. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. DeCosmos) informs me that the Estimates for that Province for 1882-83, amounted to $629,000; we know that Prince Edward Island with a population of 100,000, spends nearly $500,000 a year; Ontario last year expended $2,838,000, and Quebec expended $1,956,766. It is necessary, then, in laying the financial foundations of a Province, that such provisions should be made as would place it in a position of financial independence, and that no Provincial Government should be obliged to come here and petition the Dominion Government for such advances as would prevent absolute provincial bankruptcy. The question of finance, I believe, has not been properly considered; but more than all, I think the Government have failed carefully to consider the land question. I cannot understand why—after due allowance is made for the first expenses incurred by the Dominion Government with respect to the land being paid—the Province of Manitoba should not be afforded, like the other Provinces, full control of its own land. That Province has 73,600,000 acres of land, equal to about four times the amount of land settled and cultivated in the Dominion of Canada. These lands are very productive, and would soon be placed in the market. Now, who is so well qualified to manage these lands as the people of Manitoba? We are so far removed from that country that it is impossible for any Minister, I care not what his capacity, to consider the various exigencies that will arise in the settlement of the country—how drainage would add to the value of the land, how certain lands might be placed in the market at one season and realize more than they would at another season; we cannot tell, at this great distance, in what direction the tide of immigration flows, and I am exceedingly anxious, as we are adding Province after Province to this Dominion, that each Province should be placed in such a financial position as to be entirely independent of the Government, and I am exceedingly anxious too that we should now consider carefully the policy we intend to pursue in regard to these Provinces. The whole system should be carefully considered, and I will be prepared, under reasonable circumstances, to give my hearty support to any scheme that would give the Province of Manitoba control of its own lands, subject to such diminutions as might be necessary to make up for the expenditure already increased by the Dominion in the purchase of the North West Territory and the settlement of the country. The Province of Ontario last year had a revenue of $838,000 from woods and forests. How much revenue the Province of Manitoba could derive from the same source we do not know, but if she had that source of revenue, she might not be obliged to petition us for assistance for her depleted Treasury. I would suggest that the matter should be delayed in order that it might be more carefully considered; but I suppose delay is impossible under the present circumstances; and as the Minister promises to give us more information on the third reading of the Bill, I will withhold further criticism until I am able to judge what line should be taken, not only in the interests of the Dominion, but in the interests of Manitoba herself.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not intend to discuss this Bill, but I desire to notice a point made by the hon. member for Lambton. Those who were in the House during the period when the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, will remember what course was pursued in regard to one of the most important measures ever brought before this House. The hon. gentleman who then led the House, brought before Parliament a Bill relating to the Pacific Railway, on the 8th of May, 1874. He stifled discussion upon those resolutions by his overbearing majority. The Bill was introduced on the 12th of May, and the second reading took place on the 19th of May; and everybody then in the House knows how discussion on that Bill, on the Opposition side, was choked down, and how the Bill was passed under whip and spur, long after midnight by the use of the mechanical majority of the hon. member for Lambton. The House prorogued on the 25th of May. For three days prior to prorogation it was merely kept together to receive Bills from the Senate. It does not then lie in the hon. gentleman's mouth to talk about the late introduction of Bills this Session. Everybody knows, who has watched the proceedings of this Session, that we have not attempted to make reprisals for the treatment we received from hon. gentlemen opposite when in power. Everybody knows that the largest latitude and liberty has been given them. We might well have retorted upon those hon. gentlemen what was said by the hon. member for Lambton on one occasion, when a hon. member, then in the minority, in his perfect right, rose to discuss a question in respect to a resolution he had offered; when he had made an address in the first instance—not a long one—and when he attempted to speak again on his amendment, and when the hon. gentleman with his mechanical majority tried to silence him, the hon. leader of the then Opposition remonstrated, and told the hon. member for Lambton that it was unfair to use his majority for such a disgraceful purpose. The hon. gentleman said: "Oh, yes, I acknowledge the hon. gentleman is in his right—he has made an amendment—he had a right to speak, but he has already spoken on the main question, and our people have not the patience to listen to the repetition of speeches day after day." What have we been listening to? There never was anything so monotonous as the speeches from the opposite side. This Session we have had the same statements that we have heard repeated every Session since 1879, a re-hash of stale speeches over and over again, the same discussions, the rolling of the stone up the hill like that of Sisyphus rolling down again, and the same rolling up again with precisely the same results; and yet we have sat here day after day and listened to those tiresome harangues without losing patience which has been sadly tried. We have seen hon. gentlemen with speeches prepared come to the front and read them with the most unblushing effrontery, and the hon. leader of the Opposition afraid to rise unless he spoke from a brief, which he would read page after page, ready to take anybody's brief for his purpose who persuaded him to accept it. I did not intend to speak on the merits of this question, but to say that the Opposition have wearied the House with the grossest, most insulting and tedious harangues, day after day, and that if ever an Opposition tired the patience of a majority it is the present. Who is responsible for the House sitting to this time, and for all the delays? Who have made interminable speeches on all occasions, and kept up the discussions week after week? The excitement and interruption of hon. gentlemen opposite show that they are hard hit now. I will appeal to the pages of the Hansard. Though they number but fifty-five representatives of the once triumphant party—that is the number to which they are reduced—the party of great promises, by their own mismanagement, and not by any stealing of a verdict on our part, but simply because they did not know how to conduct themselves when in power—if you take Hansard you will see that these hon. gentleman occupy as much of its space, or more than the whole 144 members who represent the triumphant majority on this side. We have let them have full swing, as a rule. Now and then, of course, when a bumptious speaker gets up on the opposite side late at night there may have been some expressions of dissatisfaction; that is usual and quite parliamentary. But we can remember that during the rule of the late Premier the contemptuous and insulting playing of the jewsharp by one of his colleagues, and the blowing of penny whistles, indulged in during the whole time we were engaged in discharging our duty as members of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. We have never adopted the shrieking system of hon. gentlemen opposite, who are now wincing under our hard knocks. Night after night the then leader of the Government would say, I cannot control my men, while hounding them on. I remember once in the middle of a most important debate, one of that gentleman's followers danced a jig to the amusement of the members on the back benches and danced himself out of the House. I repeat the Opposition is responsible for all the delays and loss of time this Session. Everybody knows that many Government measures could not be introduced while the supplies were being voted, and that it is the first duty of the Government to secure the voting of the supplies. It was the duty of the Government to act as they have done. It does not become the member for Lambton, who introduced his Pacific Railway resolutions within five or six days of the regular demise of the House, and forced us to accept them whether we would or not, to utter the reproaches we have heard. I have heard him boast on public platforms that that Bill never was amended, that there never was a comma even changed. Why? Because his mechanical majority refused to hear any member on the opposite side. I merely rose to recall some reminiscences of the old days which many of my hon. friends know nothing of, and others are apt to forget. But I am determined that no such statements shall be made by hon. gentlemen opposite, unless they are brought face to face with their old record.

Mr. MacDONNELL (Inverness). The remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down remind me of a certain personage reproving sin, when he lectures any hon. gentleman on this side for taking up the time of this House. If there is any hon. gentleman in this House who has made himself obnoxious to it, and an obstruction to business, by long and frequent speeches since the day he entered the House, it is that hon. gentleman. It is not only in this House that we are annoyed by his meaningless platitudes. In the Committee as well, not many days ago, that hon. gentleman had the presumption and the ill-breeding to tell every hon. gentleman on that Committee that he would stand there and speak, despite the efforts of both his friends and opponents to make him sit down and allow the business to go on.

It is well known that the hon. gentleman is to be translated from this honorable House, and that the main object of his friends is to rid this House of his presence. In the time of this Legislature, which he has uselessly taken up, he has cost the country ten times more than his little services are worth. It is well known that the Government has crowded the business of the Session at its close. From day to day, at the beginning of the Session, for weeks together, we were here without anything to do. The hon. leader of the Opposition time and again complained that the Government measures were not before the House. The hon. Minister of Finance says there is no intimation to be given by the Government as to when the House is to close. It is well known to the Government that at this season hon. members must go home to attend to their various businesses, and it is evident that the Government have kept back their most obnoxious measures until such time as these measures could not meet with the vigorous opposition that they would otherwise meet with. We have heard a great deal this Session about organized hypocrisy. It has been a favorite cry of the Government to charge the Opposition with organized hypocrisy. If ever hypocrisy was organized, it is organized by hon. gentlemen opposite. Notwithstanding their cry that the National Policy is a great success, they are driven to bring down resolutions which show they have no faith in their own professions. They come down with a change in the Tariff by taking the duty off tea and coffee as a bribe to the people on the eve of the elections; they have thrown out a paltry bait to the fishermen, and in order to gain Halifax they have given a large vote for an elevator in that city; and we find after all this their gerrymandering Bill. If ever there was hypocrisy, it is the hypocrisy which hon. gentlemen opposite exhibit in every move.

Resolutions agreed to and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 162) for increasing, during a certain period, the yearly subsidy to the Province of Manitoba.

Bill read the first time.

SEAMEN'S ACT OF 1873.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 135) to amend Chapter 29, 38th Victoria, intitled: An Act to extend certain provisions of "The Seamen's Act, 1873," to vessels employed in navigating the Inland Waters of Canada, and to provide for the collection of the Wages of Seamen and other persons employed on board Vessels trading on the Inland Waters of Canada, in a summary manner.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McLELAN. When we went into Committee a few days ago, I proposed an amendment that seamen's wages should be the first claim on mortgaged ships. The Bill as originally introduced made provision for the collection of wages and for the attaching of vessels. It is proposed in the first clause of the Bill as altered to restore the state of things which existed under the general Act, and I propose to add the words "wages accruing after the passage of the Act," so that the Bill will not affect cases now in litigation.

Mr. BLAKE. The remedy given should apply to wages now due, but the hon. gentleman could provide that it shall not apply to cases now pending before the Courts. This would meet the object he has in view.

Mr. McLELAN. I understand from those who suggested this amendment that action has been brought against owners of vessels, and since commencement they have been transferred into other hands. It might enable them to follow the vessel although she had been sold two or three times.

Mr. McCALLUM. At this time, the spring of the year, you will not find many wages remaining unpaid since last year.

On clause 2,

Mr. BLAKE. "Recover their wages." That is recovering their wages otherwise than in rem.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended, then, that the seamen shall have a remedy to recover their wages in a Maritime Court and also in another Court?

Mr. McLELAN. It is intended they shall have the same remedies as provided in the Seamen's Act of 1873, and they shall have the remedy in rem, as well.

On clause 4,

Mr. McCALLUM. This was not in the first Act. It is giving the preference to mortgagees in case of accidents or collision. I think it would be much better if this clause were struck out. Supposing a vessel is shipwrecked on the lake shore, and a man goes to her assistance and saves her, if the vessel is mortgaged that man will not get his pay.

Mr. McLELAN. This alteration I found in the other Bill, and it was agreed to by the shipowners of Ontario. I would have preferred to drop the clause.

Mr. BLAKE. The shipowners of Ontario may have an interest different from that of the mortgagees. It is well we should consider what the real foundation of the clause is.

Mr. McLELAN. I was about to say that, looking at the clause as it stands, I should think it was but just, in the interest of the shipping itself, that the clause should be thrown out. As the shipowners and those interested in Ontario have suggested that it be dropped now, I move that it be struck out.

Mr. McCALLUM. I would say that no honest man can have anything against the interests of the shipowners. If a vessel gets into trouble, and the master calls for assistance, of course the men who render that assistance know that they can collect their pay.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with the hon. gentleman that there can be no justification in putting any claims above those of the nature of salvage claims. Of course, it is in the interest of the mortgagee that the vessel should be saved, and therefore I would have no reluctance in saying that the salvage claims should stand uppermost. What saves the ship must be to the advantage of all interests.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

HARBOR AND RIVER POLICE.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 107) respecting the Harbor and River Police of Canada. He said: The object of the Bill is to establish harbor and river police at Montreal and Quebec. This force has existed for a number of years, but doubts have existed as to the authority for establishing that force. It was originally appointed by the Governor General in Council, and legislation that has been had in respect to it has proceeded on the supposition that authority had been given; but as the force became more important it was necessary to define clearly the authority to appoint it, and to place that authority in the hands of the Governor in Council. It is also proposed that the authority under which the force was acting should be increased, and that a Judge of the Superior Court should have power to try cases brought before them by the police, either at Montreal or Quebec. At present the Police Magistrate and Judge of Sessions and Stipendiary Magistrate are all represented by one person at the port of Quebec, so that in case he is absent there is no person to try cases, and in order to avoid this difficulty it is proposed to add a Superior Court Judge.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McLELAN. With regard to the first clause, I may say that it is intended that the operations of the Bill may be extended to other ports in Canada, and that it is done in order that the force may be sent down the Lower St. Lawrence in case disturbances should occur. That power has been rendered necessary by the fact that mutinies have occurred on vessels outside of the port of Quebec.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the Bill was merely designed to place in more regular form the votes which have been passed for the support of this force ever since Confederation. The hon. gentleman uses the words in the Bill "Harbor and River Police of Canada." Now, Sir, we have consented time after time under protest, to the establishment of a harbor and river police force at Montreal and Quebec, but it seems to me that if we are to have such a force they should be confined to these places, and possibly to the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence. We are now proposing, however unnecessarily, to establish a harbor and river police force, which shall have an indefinite jurisdiction over the whole of Canada. The hon. gentleman says that he asks for that power, but he does not intend to use it; but I think it is a power objectionable to be asked for. It is beyond the scope of the hon. gentleman's necessities as he explained them. If the hon. gentleman wants to give this force jurisdiction over the Gulf of St. Lawrence let him say "such parts of the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence as may be defined by the Governor in Council."

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman complains that the ground covered by the Bill is too much, but the intention is to confine the exercise of that power to the St. Lawrence and the navigable rivers flowing into it. It might be desirable to send the force a long distance below Quebec, and it is well, therefore, that we should have the power to send them there, or to some of the navigable rivers flowing into the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, that might be defined in so many words without giving the general power.

Mr. McLELAN. I have no objection to making the amendment.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I fear that the words suggested by the hon. gentleman will not be sufficient, because these sailors may go upon the shore, into villages, or into country ports, or upon the wharves of cities. It is necessary, too, that they should be able to arrest persons and take them to port.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps those words will not cover the ground, but I took the words suggested by the Minister. The difficulty might be obviated by saying "at towns and cities and the shores thereof."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think that we should limit the power when the intention is expressed in the Bill, and the exact power must be defined by the Governor in Council. An Order in Council may be brought down next Session to hon. members and laid on the Table, so that they may see how far the power has been used. I think it would be better to leave the Bill as it is.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman's suggestion comports with his general view of leaving everything to the Governor in Council. He says the Governor in Council will define it. Cannot we define it? Is there any greater difficulty in this Parliament defining it, than the Governor in Council defining it? Is not the Council here? What I object to is that the Governor in Council shall be given an unnecessary power, a power infinitely larger than the necessities of the case could possibly require, and that we should place on the Statute-book a law creating a force with authority and jurisdiction from one end of the Dominion to the other. That should not be possible under the law. It is not required by the necessities of the case. Whatever way in which you define the territories in a day or two, it is as easy to define them now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So far as the powers of the Governor in Council are concerned, I agree, and I have always agreed with the hon. gentleman, that we should do here as much of the legislation of the country as we can; but the hon. gentleman knows that we cannot attend to all the details of our legislation—that a great many of these details have to be afterwards defined by Order in Council, because cases will sometimes arise requiring an immediate change.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that you should say "such territories adjacent thereto as may be defined by the Governor in Council."

Mr. McLELAN. I think it is better, as the Bill says, to let the Governor in Council define the jurisdiction of the police after full enquiry. These men are sometimes obliged to pursue criminals in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence and elsewhere, and if the hon. gentleman's proposition were adopted, they would be prevented from doing that.

Mr. CARON. It has become necessary on more than one occasion for the river and water police to follow and arrest prisoners entirely outside of the territory adjacent to Montreal or Quebec. I have known cases in which they had to go to Toronto or Hamilton to arrest prisoners. I can readily understand how inconvenient it would be to give them jurisdiction beyond a reasonable limit. They are specially appointed for the harbor of Montreal and the harbor of Quebec; but to carry out their duty they are sometimes required to go elsewhere, and I think it is necessary to leave the Bill as it stands. I cannot see how the expression, "territories adjacent thereto," could meet the case I have mentioned.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite admit that the words do not meet the case of an arrest in Toronto or Hamilton. I do not want that they should. I object emphatically to such an extension of the functions of this Government as that they should be able to send these harbor police to arrest criminals at such a distance. This whole provision for harbor police for Montreal and Quebec is an excrescence; it is exceptional legislation which has been objected to from time to time; but, as I have said, I do not intend to object to putting on the Statute-book a provision which has been carried out since Confederation. But to give the Government power to send their police to arrest criminals in the Province of Ontario would be largely to subvert our Constitution, which gives the administration of criminal law to the Provinces. If a sailor is to be arrested in Toronto or Hamilton, or at any other port so remote from the scene of the labors of this police force, let it be done by the ordinary machinery of the Province just as a murderer or a thief is arrested.

Mr. McLELAN. If you insert the phrase, "and territories adjacent thereto," the question would arise: Where is the territory adjacent thereto? The River St. Lawrence extends into the Province of Ontario. I think it is better to leave the clause as it stands. I think that under this Bill, which provides that the territory in which the police shall have jurisdiction will be defined by Order in Council, the force will work more satisfactorily than at present.

Mr. KILLAM. No doubt it would be more satisfactory to have everything done by Order in Council than by Act of Parliament. When this law was introduced it was owing to the exceptional circumstances of the harbors of Montreal and Quebec, and I hold very strongly that the jurisdiction of the force should be limited strictly to what was intended when the provision was first passed for establishing this force.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I join entirely with the view expressed by the hon. member for West Durham, that this is an encroachment, an assertion of power, for the first time under my notice, and I think it might be well to insert the words: "such parts of the Province of Quebec," which would confine the jurisdiction to that Province. The harbors of Montreal and Quebec are great national harbors, and ever since Confederation they have been dealt with exceptionally, and I see no objection to regulating the jurisdiction of this police force by the authority of an Act; but I have very strong objections to our asserting in an Act of Parliament that we are extending it all over Canada.

Mr. McLELAN. I think the hon. gentleman's proposed amendment will meet all the objections—jurisdiction over such parts of the Province of Quebec as may be defined by the Governor in Council.

Mr. OUMET. This proposal is as objectionable to Quebec as it would be to Ontario. If you limit the jurisdiction of the superintendent of police, it might be all right. We in Quebec have no more love for the interference of Dominion authorities than has Ontario, and as we have our own means of carrying out the Criminal Law, it would be unfair to leave the House to think that we want some extra jurisdiction, which is resisted by the other Provinces. We wish to be treated as well as the other Provinces. I object to Quebec being placed under the jurisdiction of the Privy Council, and to its being enabled to send its police everywhere through the Province to arrest criminals, whom our own police can capture as well.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend has lost sight of the fact that those Boards of Police are in the Province of Quebec, in the harbors of Montreal and Quebec; and it is not proposed, nor will the Act empower the authorities at Ottawa to order the police to go over the whole Province, but only to such parts as the Governor in Council may decide as necessary for the purposes of the law. There is a reason for applying this Bill to the Province of Quebec, which does not exist as regards Ontario. The harbors of Montreal and Quebec are within that Province; and a force has been required and provided to sustain the law at those ports.

Mr. OUMET. The Governor in Council will be empowered to use their police to arrest a man in any part of our Province if they think proper to do so. We do not want such a power; but only that the power be limited to those ports for the maintenance of the peace and the arrest of criminals within their limits. If a criminal flee from those ports and the jurisdiction of their police, our local police officer may be empowered to arrest them. I protest against singling out the Province of Quebec for this legislation.

Mr. McLELAN. There is no other Province in the Dominion visited by so much shipping, and the Bill is for the regulation, not of the inhabitants of Quebec, but of the foreigners visiting those ports—for the preservation of peace and order among the large body of sailors. As the force is specially for Montreal and Quebec, it should have jurisdiction over such adjacent territories as may be defined by the Governor in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. I should like to know whether it is intended to make the harbor and river police of Montreal and Quebec one force, or to have the force at each port a distinct organization; whether it is intended to have a separate superintendent for each, or one superintendent with jurisdiction at one port, with an assistant at the other port, and how many officers it has proposed to appoint?

Mr. McLELAN. At present there is a superintendent at each port, though the police are considered one force. It a difficulty occurs at Montreal or Quebec, the whole of the men may be concentrated at either port to preserve order.

Mr. BLAKE. How many men are there?

Mr. McLELAN. About seventy; forty at Quebec, and thirty at Montreal.

Mr. BLAKE. Is not that number increased?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. CARON. There is a reduction.

Mr. McLELAN. There is a superintendent at Montreal and another at Quebec, which arrangement is to be continued.

Mr. BLAKE. Is each to have independent authority?

Mr. McLELAN. Each superintendent has authority over the men with him.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Were there no temporary additions made to the force last year, in consequence of the labor troubles?

Mr. McLELAN. I think eight or ten men were added to the Montreal force; eight or ten of the Quebec men have been ordered up to Montreal during the last few days. The same number are engaged at Montreal as in former years.

Mr. ANGLIN. I have often contended that we should wash our hands clear of this business; that it is entirely out of our province to take charge of the domestic affairs of the Montreal or Quebec harbors. We should relegate this duty either to the municipal or provincial authorities.

Mr. AMYOT. Why does not the member for Gloucester ask the ports of Montreal and Quebec to pay the Custom house officers and all the expenses necessary for the commerce of those cities? It is a strange statement that the payment for the public services at those harbors is a domestic affair. If we do the country any immense service by those harbors, I think it is the first duty of the country to pay such expenses.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken; they are paid now differently from what he supposes.

Mr. BLAKE. The clause was to be amended.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; I move it be amended so as to include those words—"jurisdiction over such part or parts of the Province of Quebec as may be defined."

On clause 2,

Mr. BLAKE. This gives unlimited power to the Governor in Council to appoint harbor and river police. Such a thing was never done before. When the Mounted Police were appointed the number was limited, and when an increase was proposed the maximum was made 500.

Mr. McLELAN. We do not know what the emergency may be. We may at any time find it necessary to increase the force temporarily for a few days.

Mr. BLAKE. A maximum number should then be fixed in case of an emergency. I do not see why we should depart from the rule adopted with regard to the Civil Service and the Mounted Police. Why should unlimited powers be given to the Government on water any more than on land?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's premises are entirely unsound. The hon. gentleman fails to see a distinction between this force and the ordinary Civil Service.

Mr. BLAKE. I spoke of the Mounted Police.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman said he did not see why this was different from the Civil Service. There is a great difference between the two as there is also between the Mounted Police force and this force. The course the hon. gentleman proposes would be a mischievous one. What you want is the smallest police force with which to perform the ordinary service. If provision is made that only so many men may be appointed to the harbor police force, you will enable persons to organize strikes in sufficient force so as to overwhelm this maximum of police force, which cannot be exceeded; while, on the other hand, if the number is left unlimited it may be at any time made sufficiently strong to quell any disturbance they may be able to make.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. I was observing, when the House rose, that the force in question, has been in existence since a date before Confederation, and that, therefore, the nominal strength of the force necessary for the attainment of its ordinary objects, has been well ascertained by the experience of the years that have elapsed since 1867. It is now well known what the existing state of the commerce in Quebec and Montreal requires should be the number of this force. I do not propose that the Minister should be authorized to arbitrarily state the exact number of the force, but that a certain amount of elasticity should be allowed. I suggested even as many as ten, in excess of what the hon. gentleman knows from the experience of the last few years, as the amount of the force required at this time—not that that would mean that ten should be appointed in excess to what are required, but that the increase might be made when the necessity arose. As to the extraordinary purposes of the force, the hon. Minister of Railways suggested that a limitation of temporary appointments would lead probably to the disturbers of the peace gathering together in force enough to overcome the maximum. That is easily got rid of by not establishing the maximum, but by leaving it to the discretion of the magistrates. I am of the opinion, and I think the Committee agree with the opinion, that if we are called upon to organize this force, its normal condition, its standing as an ordinary and permanent police force, its officers and the salaries, ought to be fixed by the Bill, as in the case of the Mounted Police—I do not mean the exact salaries, but the maximum salaries. The present clauses leave everything, in all these particulars of organization, as vague as they are left to-day, although the hon. gentleman justifies the introduction of the Bill upon the ground that it is expedient to put formally in the shape of a Statute the opinion of Parliament as to the constitutional force.

Mr. McLELAN. The force has been in existence for forty years, and I think no person will contend that the power to appoint has been abused. The strength has always been required according to the requirements of the time, and I think we should leave it where it is, in the discretion of the Minister. The extent of territory over which they have to operate is increasing, and perhaps the number may require to be slightly increased.

Mr. DESJARDINS (in French). Mr. Speaker, if any complaint has come from Montreal, it is to the effect that Montreal has not, in comparison with its extent, a sufficient police force to protect its wharves. I do not think that the water police's position can be compared to that of the mounted police. It is well known that at a given time an organized body of laborers can put to flight the small body of police now existing, and if the Government has not the power to increase it at once in a reasonable proportion, it might as well be abolished at once, for in many instances it will be really inefficient. I think that the latitude asked for by the Government is reasonable and that it should be granted.

Mr. McLENNAN. I think it is a mistake to suppose that this police force bears any resemblance to the Mounted Police or any other system of preserving the peace that we ordinarily use. This is a special service for the protection of a special interest, and that object can only be attained by placing the fullest powers in the hands of the Government to apply this force in any measure and at any time when it happens to be required, to determine on some fixed body that we would be able to incite into an active and efficient force. Parliament would destroy that efficiency and it would fail to meet the very pressing necessities for which this force is brought into use, that is to preserve the peace in the harbor of Montreal at a time when a Ship-laborers' Union is creating a disturbance and requires to be dealt with promptly. It is not a charge upon the public; the special object of the Act is to legalize and bring within the operation of the law this necessary provision for the protection of this interest, and unless it is applied as it is proposed, and in which it has been proposed by the hon. Minister after advising with the parties concerned, it will simply fail of its effect.

Mr. McLELAN moved that clause 4 be struck out.

Mr. McLENNAN. Before this is done, I would expostulate with the Minister. Every word I have said applies generally to the character of the force and is an argument that the superintendent of this force should have some power of acting. I am told that when there are thirty men in the force on duty in the harbor of Montreal, taking from that number the men who are on duty at the station, and those required in other ways, there is about one man per mile left on active duty. The only way to increase the efficiency of this force and to overawe those who organize for evil is to give some magisterial authority to the superintendent of the force. I do not know that it is an extraordinary provision. I presume the arguments used when this clause was inserted in the Bill were sufficient to convince the Minister of its necessity; I think they exist still, although perhaps the power proposed to be given is perhaps too great, but some power should be given to the superintendent to act judicially.

Amendment agreed to.

On clause 8,

Mr. BLAKE. The Act 31 Victoria, respecting the Harbor Police, which is repealed by this Act, provides for further levying of a tonnage tax; but it provided further for the application of that tax towards the maintenance of the Harbor River Police. Now the hon. gentlemen proposes simply that these tonnage dues shall simply form part of the general revenue.

Mr. McLELAN. It is the same for the old Act.

Mr. BLAKE. That part of the old Act which provides that the tax shall be applied specifically for the keeping up of the Harbor and River Police is entirely struck out. My opinion is that the tax should be adequate to the maintenance of the force, and should apply to the maintenance of the force, and that a return should be brought down to Parliament every year, as at present, showing the amount of the tax, what the expenses of the force have been, and how the balance stands.

Mr. McLELAN. The old practice of allowing the money to be drawn from the Receiver-General by the proper officer no longer obtains, but money is voted in the usual way in the Estimates. The return made every year will show the amount of money received, and other transactions.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not advocate a return to the old custom of drawing the money from the Receiver-General's hands; but what I object to is that the old plan of specifically applying that tax to the keeping up of the force is done away with by this Bill.

Mr. McLELAN. I have no objection to adding to the 10th clause, words to the effect that a return should be made to Parliament.

Amendment agreed to.

On clause 8,

Mr. McCUAIG. It often happens that the Upper Canada mail steamers arrive at Montreal about the time that the steamer for Quebec is leaving, and passengers and so forth are simply transferred from one boat to the other. I wish to know if the Upper Canadian boat has to pay the harbor dues in such a case.

Mr. McLELAN. There is no change affecting that point in the present Bill.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

HARBOR OF ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK:

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions to provide for the appointment of certain Commissioners for the improvement and management of the harbor of St. John, New Brunswick.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These resolutions, except the name, are similar to the resolutions submitted to the House the other day respecting the Harbor Commission of Three Rivers, and the Bill which will follow the adoption of these resolutions is based on the Bill which was then passed. There will be five Commissioners, as in the other case: one will be appointed by the City Council of St. John, another by the Board of Trade of St. John, and the three others, including the chairman, by the Government.

Mr. ANGLIN. I, myself, have for a long time been opposed to the proposal to place the harbor of St. John under a Commission, because I do not believe such a change in the management of that harbor is either necessary or desirable. Our harbor is now very fairly managed. We have ample accommodation at present for all the trade of the port. There is no necessity for the erection of new wharves or for any very extensive improvements in order to enable us to do all the business we at present have or are likely to have for several years. This proposal, in different aspects, has been talked of in the city of St. John from time to time, but the talk has been confined usually to small circles. The Board of Trade is a very small body indeed, having on its list of members comparatively few of the merchants and business men of the city, and a yet smaller number attend its meetings. The largest number that ever attended its meetings could easily be accommodated in a very small room. The members of the Common Council, on the other hand, have had their own peculiar views on this subject. They have been desirous of disposing of a quantity of corporation property lying contiguous to the harbor, and of getting control of the money to be raised by selling this property to the Commissioners. Should this project be realized, it would be necessary to state that the moneys advanced by the Government shall really be appropriated to benefitting St. John—that the money shall not be left at the absolute disposal of the Common Council—that it shall not have discretionary power as to the manner in which the money so raised shall be invested. What the present project is, strange to say, the people of St. John do not know, never having been consulted. Only the few promoters of this scheme know anything of its provisions. The members for the county and I, myself, have not been able to answer the questions put us by parties interested in St. John with reference to this project; and gentlemen here representing the wharf owners, until a day or two ago, had no idea of its character. They were never consulted as to the project which the Government have carried out and which must materially affect their interests. The people in St. John interested in this measure—which is of the character of a private Bill—should have had an opportunity of forming and expressing an opinion upon it. They regard the clandestine project with alarm. Fully two-thirds of the whole harbor of St. John, on the east side, on which nearly all our deep-watered wharves are settled, is the property of private individuals. In the lower part of the harbor the Government have erected large wharves, and further up the Corporation have some deep-water wharves. Then we come to the Custom House wharf, from which, up to Rodden's wharf and Rankin's wharf, at the head of the harbor, the whole property is private, except one or two properties owned by the Corporation. The value of this private property will be very seriously affected by our proposed legislation. Harbor Commissioners, as might be expected, would regulate the business of the harbor from the private wharves to those under their control. I believe that representatives of those private owners are here at present to ask either that this matter be postponed, so that the wishes of the people may be fairly expressed upon it, or that at all events due regard be had to their private interests. They urge that if this measure is to be passed against their strongest remonstrances and despite their serious apprehensions, that the Commissioners be required to take over this private property again at a fair and reasonable value, to be determined by any proper mode the House may choose to adopt. I think that is but a reasonable demand, but it is more reasonable to ask that the whole matter should stand over till the people of St. John have had an opportunity of pronouncing upon it, when, next year, Parliament, if so disposed might carry out the well-understood wishes of the people, and not the wishes of some parties working for purposes not understood by those whom they pretend to represent.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the present position of the harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The second resolution is the money clause. The harbor of St. John belongs to the city by the charter given to it years ago. Some of the wharves belong to private individuals who own them, or the land on which they have been built, and for which they pay to the city a yearly rent. The proposal is that the property belonging to the city shall be transferred to the Harbor Commissioners. That property has a revenue of between $30,000 and $33,000 a year.

Mr. ANGLIN. Do you include in that what are known as harbor dues?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; and the revenue from the fisheries belonging to the city. The proposition is that the Government should advance to that trust, as they have done in Montreal for the deepening of the channel, and in Quebec for the graving dock, say $500,000 to the Harbor Commissioners, at 4 per cent. to pay for that property, and they will raise besides $20,000 at the same rate to go on with the improvements of the harbor. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat seems to think this is a new scheme of which the citizens of St. John know nothing; that it has been decided by a corner meeting. This, on the contrary, is a project that has been before the city of St. John since 1874. The hon. gentleman says that there have been no complaints there, and that no improvements are required. I do not know where the hon. gentleman has been during that time, but I know that when

Mr. ANGLIN.

I went to St. John, the citizens of both parties were unanimous in declaring that large improvements were required. He knows perfectly well that the Dominion Government have made large expenditures for the breakwater at Negro Point. The people of St. John held that it was a Dominion work, being for the protection of an important harbor; but, on the other hand, as spirited men who know they should help themselves, as well as call upon the Government to help them, that other improvements were required which they should aid in making, therefore, they said: "Let us have a property on which we can obtain money, and we will administer this property." I am astonished that an hon. gentleman hailing from St. John should have objected to that scheme. The hon. gentleman says we must not trust the Council of St. John. I am surprised that he will not trust the people of St. John who have elected that Council, which we must suppose, having been elected by the people, has their confidence, and will not use their money in any other way than that provided by law. The hon. gentleman, who understands constitutional principles, must know that if we purchase that property from the city, we have no conditions to make as to the disposal of the money, which is theirs once we have paid it to the city. I think the scheme is a good one. It will enable the Harbor Commission to make the necessary improvements to the harbor, and, on the other hand, the Government will be safe, because, by the provisions of the Bill, the Government will take care that the revenues of the harbor, after the expenditure connected with its collection, are forthcoming to pay the interest. The hon. gentleman says we must be careful not to interfere with private property. We are not taking private property. The revenues coming into the city from it, and due to the city, are to be transferred to the Commission, as well as the property of the harbor; but without reference at all to the complete acceptance of the property belonging to private individuals, the question whether we should provide for the purchase of that property volens volens from the proprietors of those lots is a different question. We have provided in the Bill in the first instance, that the Commission may purchase these private properties after coming to an arrangement with the proprietors. The question now is whether we should go a step further, and give the Commission the right to purchase the property, as the hon. gentleman suggests, whether the owners are willing to sell or not. That question will be decided when we come to the second reading of the Bill. I am informed that the local Act of the New Brunswick Legislature provides that the money shall be applied to pay the debt of the city, therefore the hon. gentleman's fears must entirely disappear. On the one hand, the money will be paid to the city, and the law of New Brunswick says what the City Council shall do with that money.

Mr. ANGLIN. Will the hon. Minister tell us what improvements are to be made that will cost $250,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Harbor Commission, after being incorporated, will decide what the improvements shall be. It is not for us to prescribe what improvements the Commission shall make. The hon. gentleman will see that if the Commission desires to purchase property they will have to secure the sanction of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Bill [regulating the Harbor Commission at Quebec provides that no works can be undertaken without the approval of the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is correct as to the large docks at the mouth of the River St. Charles, and the graving dock on the side of the harbor.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the same provision ought to be here. The hon. gentleman should have given the House some statement of what was to be done with the money.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so. The money must be put at their disposal for the construction of the necessary works; of course, the Government will have to see that the money is expended for the purpose for which it is voted. As to the suggestion that the sanction of the Governor in Council should be obtained for the construction of the works, that will receive my attention before the second reading.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister laid some stress upon the fact that this money was to be expended, or at least obtained, on the request of the Municipal Council of St. John. Now, as a matter of course, a requisition from the Municipal Council of St. John is entitled to all reasonable respect; but I would like to know whether it was understood, when these gentlemen were elected, that this project was under contemplation? Unless it was understood at the time that they were going to make a requisition on the Government to have the money so expended, it can hardly be fair to say that in any shape or way the concurrence of the citizens of St. John can be had to this measure.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I know that this matter has been before the citizens of St. John for seven or eight years, and this grant has been in contemplation by them for the last month at least. It has been under discussion in the City Council and the Board of Trade, and has also been thoroughly discussed in the newspapers. Since the City Council and the Board of Trade have come to a thorough understanding in the matter, there has been no petition and no letters against the project. On the contrary, all the information I have is that the scheme is looked upon with great favor by the citizens.

Mr. ANGLIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. There are petitions before the House signed by hundreds of the most respectable people of St. John, asking for postponement.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That may be, but there is no petition against the scheme.

Mr. ANGLIN. Yes, there is.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The thing has been thoroughly discussed, and the press are unanimous about it. They do not oppose it, they do not say it is a bad scheme, but there have been a few, no doubt, who wish the matter postponed. I have no doubt that if the scheme were submitted to-morrow to the people, they would sanction it at once. This scheme will furnish money at a very low rate of interest for the improvement of the harbor. The city of St. John loses nothing by it, and they will have, besides, the $500,000 to pay the debt, and $250,000 to dredge their harbor and make other improvements required by the trade of St. John. The hon. gentleman says that we should purchase private properties. Well, in the second reading, I will be ready to say whether we shall put in a clause to that effect.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. Minister does not seem to be aware of the fact that petitions signed by several hundreds of the business men of St. John, asking for delay in this case, have been presented to this House. The principle reason they assign is that they do not know what this scheme is. The hon. Minister seems to think the matter has been fully discussed. I can assure him that until I heard his statement here to-night, I had but a very vague idea myself of what the scheme was to be. It is not known. There has been a great deal of discussion as to the propriety of putting the harbor under a Commission, and one of the strongest arguments in favor of any scheme ever proposed has always been that a large amount of money could be got in that way at a less rate of interest to apply to other purposes; in other words, that the Dominion Government could in some way be used for the purpose of enabling the city to convert a 6 per cent. debt into a 4 per cent debt

But there is this difficulty about that: that only a small portion of that debt is likely to become due within the next year or two, that a great many of the bonds have ten years to run, and in some cases as long as thirty years. If this money is paid over to the Corporation now they will have to invest it somewhere at a lower rate than 4 per cent., in order to derive any profit from it. The only profit arising out of it for some years to come will be the difference between the rate of interest at 4 per cent. charged by the Government, and the rate at which the city could borrow money to-day to pay off the indebtedness as it accrued. That certainly will not be over 5 per cent., or there will be saving of 1 per cent. and that only upon such amount as the Corporation will in the meantime be able to pay off, and that 1 per cent. will be swallowed three times over by the expenses of the Commission. Some of us do not like it, because we apprehend a great deal of extravagance. The hon. Minister boasts of the improvements to be made. I know something of the harbor of St. John. Down the harbor large wharves are erected, which may be considered outside the harbor; away to the head of the harbor on the east side, where vessels requiring deep water can lie at the wharves, the whole grounds are covered by wharves, and there is as much accommodation as can be provided. On the western side of the harbor, the Western Railway erected a wharf at Sand Point, which I regret is not much used. On the Carleton side, there are places where such wharves can be built. But the propriety of building them is a matter of doubt, inasmuch as the harbor, which is already narrow, would be rendered incommodious. Such extensions, for they would not be improvements, would rather injure the harbor than serve it; and I do not know that anybody contemplates the work of dredging the great mud banks so as to provide deep-water wharves. What the improvements are, I venture to say, the hon. gentleman promoting the Bill cannot himself state. A large number of wharves have been erected during the past few years. The Corporation has managed this business fairly well, let it be said to their credit. They have erected large wharves and have purchased large properties, and have, in fact, covered all their own ground with wharves of the best character. I am sorry there is not enough business to make them paying properties. Last year, the hon. the Minister of Public Works was urged to undertake various improvements in the harbor. I suppose they pointed out some improvements which it was thought should have been undertaken, and which would not cost a large sum. They asked for the use of a dredge in the harbor. There was no necessity to create a Commission to carry out that work. If the work was a necessary the Common Council could carry it out, and there is no necessity to effect a change in the management of the harbor. The hon. Minister should be able to tell us what would be effected by the Commission, what improvements are to be made, and how they are to be made. The hon. Minister has spoken of the breakwater at Negro Point, but it was undertaken as a Dominion work, and should be completed as such. A great storm damaged the work, but the Government have undertaken the repairs. I do not know any other work, unless it is the wild idea of making deep-water wharves on the Carleton side. With regard to private property, no doubt private individuals pay a small rent to the Corporation, but these wharves are not the less the property of individuals. It was long ago decided that while persons owning property on the banks had not the right to build wharves, no other person had the right to build in front of them; and, therefore, it came to this: that all the owners of property running down to deep water obtained from the Corporation, perpetual leases at very low rates. The property just as much belongs to the wharf owners as if they held it in fee. The hon. Minister has said that it is not proposed to diminish the value of the property. If the hon.

gentleman fully understood the state of things he would not have made that assertion. No doubt he intends to promote the interests of St. John, but he does not understand the case when he speaks in that way. The Commission would have control of the harbor and business. They would have directly or through their agent the right to say where vessels would lie.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The harbor master, who is now appointed by the City Council because the property belongs to the city, would be appointed by the Government as are all harbor masters, when this Bill has passed.

Mr. ANGLIN. Then he will work in the interests of the Government. The owners of private property feel they have been placed in a strange position. The hon. Minister is entirely mistaken if he supposes that this project has been discussed in St. John, that it has ever appeared in any newspaper, or been heard of by more than a dozen citizens outside of those small bodies who have moved in the matter. When property owners came here they found it difficult to obtain information as to what the effect of the Bill would be. They will be placed in an entirely different position, and if the Bill passes in its present form, those private properties will fall 25 per cent. The House has always shown its care in protecting private properties, and I ask the hon. Minister if he will consent that this measure be referred to a Committee so that representatives of those properties may be heard before it. Some years ago a different proposition was brought forward, under which all private property had to be purchased and all the harbor property placed in the hands of a Commission. That should be the scheme if any scheme had to be adopted. The Provincial Legislature, in authorizing the Common Council to dispose of this money, took steps to see that provision was made for its proper application, and their example should be followed by the Dominion Government. All this money cannot be applied at once to the payment of the debt, because the bonds are not due and the money must in the meantime be paid over to the Corporation and invested until the bonds mature; and therefore the hon. gentleman should see that the money is appropriated in the way in which the Corporation professes their intention that it should be appropriated.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend will allow me to say that he is mistaken in saying that this scheme is unknown in the city of St. John, for it has been agitated there for years. I was in the Common Council, and I waited on the late Government in 1877, and had interviews with them with regard to it, and though the details of this measure may be different, the principle of the scheme is the same. The principle was that the harbor of St. John should be placed under a Commission. Was it necessary that the harbor should be taken out of the hands of the Common Council in order that it might be made more efficient for the public? It must be borne in mind that St. John harbor is not private. It affords the means of access to the back country in several directions, being the mouth of a river which drains a large area. The mud which comes down that river and the difficult tides which we have, together, rendered it necessary that the harbor should be administered under a better system. A great deal of private property is yearly losing in value for the want of dredging, which, of course, private individuals cannot afford to carry on, and the result is that not only the owners suffer but the public of St. John and the country at large. At one end of the harbor there is so much property belonging to the Common Council, and in the centre and at the other end there are small portions in the same position, but between these there are important and valuable private rights. The private owners of wharves may fairly say to those in authority: it is true we own private rights, but the interests of the city, the interests of its trade and of the trade of the whole

Mr. ANGLIN.

Dominion stand above those rights and they are injured because the harbor is not properly looked after. I think it is in the interests of the public that the harbor—should be placed in the same position as other harbors, such as Montreal and Quebec; that it should be made a public harbor, maintained at the public expense. There should be some body who is entirely responsible for dredging it and keeping up the wharves, for St. John is to become, as I believe it will become, one of the ends of the great Canadian Pacific Railway. I for one shall try to have the eastern end of that railway in New Brunswick, and I hope I will have the hon. gentleman's support. We may not get this boon all at once, but if not we must get it in pieces. That is a part of our National Policy; that is what we were pledged to, and my hon. friend is mistaken in saying that putting this harbor under a Commission is not going to help us. I care little where the money goes, because I am sure that the ratepayers and the Government will look out for themselves. To-day the wharves are mortgaged by these outstanding bonds, and before they hand the money over they will see that the liabilities are liquidated. What does it matter what is done with the money if they get the property into their hands at a certain and proper valuation. With regard to the Board of Trade, I have very little commiseration for them. I declined years ago to meet the Board of Trade before the late Minister of Customs and the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries—why? Not because I thought they were not a good body; but I say here is a bargain between the city of St. John and the Government, and the Government having decided that this harbor is to be placed under a Commission, and the city having property to sell, it is for the city fathers, those elected by the people, to deal with the Government, and the Government having completed their arrangements with the Council may turn round to private property holders and carry out the final details. But while the Government were making a bargain with the Corporation of St. John, no one had any right to step in and say anything regarding the city's own property. Of course the Board of Trade, in the interest of trade, have a right to be heard; they may be right or they may be wrong, but while they exist, and while they confine their functions to their proper limits, we should consider what they have to say. The hon. gentleman must not try to make the House believe that this is a new scheme. It has been long thought of, and though I see many difficulties surrounding it, I think it is for the best interests of St. John and the Province generally. But we must have private rights looked after. I am satisfied that we cannot put the harbor into the hands of a Commission without looking after the rights of the private wharf owners. If we were to place a small portion of the harbor under a Commission, the result would be that a portion of the wharves would be free while the rest would not. Would the ships go to the wharves where they would have to pay? No, they would go to the wharves which were free. The whole matter must result in this: that the taxes on the whole port must be applied to meet the expenses of the port; you may put them on tonnage dues, on export duties, or on import duties, but the long and the short of it is that the traffic of the harbor has to pay these dues; and if you improve the harbor so much more has to be paid. We must bear in view that we must not trammel that port with expenses, and make it too dear for the importers and exporters; but I believe that by placing the management of these wharves into one or two hands, instead of having a dozen to make a living out of them, as they do to-day, the expenses of the port will be greatly reduced. With regard to the wharves wearing out, they must be repaired at all hazards, and we must keep the harbor properly dredged. If a certain portion of the wharves are made free, vessels will not go to the private wharves, and the result will be that the private owners will find themselves without a revenue, and will consequently be unable to keep their wharves in repair. Consequently, the question comes down to this: are you going to make this a free harbor under a Commission? If such is the case, then you must deal with it from end to end as one harbor, and not have any sectional divisions. I think we are all agreed on that; and having decided that this harbor is to be placed under a Commission we must respect private rights. My hon. friend says that private rights will be respected. I have not been able to go into the details of this Bill; but I have faith in the Government, that they will do what is right, but I think there should be something put in the Bill to define their rights, and place the private wharf owners on a fair basis. They have no right to ask that their wharves should be taken over at any greater value than could be arrived at by finding out what rental they yield in a certain number of years. Although you say this is a permissive Bill which does not interfere with private rights, yet I say, if you do not make any provision for them, you do a great injustice to the private wharf interest of the city of St. John; and as that interest is a very large one, I know such cannot be the intention of the Government, and I am satisfied that when we come to the second reading of this Bill, our friends will do justice to all parties. I believe all parties are agreed to make St. John a public harbor, and if we admit that, the question of details, I am satisfied, can be settled on the second reading of the Bill.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I was very much surprised to hear the hon. member for Gloucester say that the people of St. John knew nothing about this question. Were I asked to point to one proposition, which more than any other has been under consideration in the city and county of St. John for the last eight years, which has been more prominently before the public, and engaged more of the time and attention of the Common Council and the public men of the city than any other, I should point to this question of placing the harbor of St. John in charge of a Commission. I have two pamphlets, containing the report of the proceedings of the Common Council's delegation to Ottawa, in communication with the then Government, in 1878, on this subject, and of its action from 1874 to 1878, showing the various discussions they had on the subject, the reports after they returned, and the reasons why the propositions made at that time were accepted. The fact is, in 1875 the Corporation obtained legislative authority from the Legislature of New Brunswick to sell to the Harbor Commissioners certain property they owned for $515,000, or some specific sum. That question had been under the consideration of the Council. The chief difficulty was as to the sum the Commissioners were to pay to the city of St. John for that property when transferred. In 1878 the deputation stated that the Government refused to receive the proposition of $515,000, preferring that the value of that property should be decided by a Commission to be appointed. The deputation that waited on the Government offered certain portions of the property for $515,000. The Government's refusal caused the deputation to return greatly disappointed, whereupon they made their report and withdrew their offer of the property to the Commissioners for $515,000. That matter has remained in abeyance down to a very recent date. A month or two ago the subject was brought before the Common Council and the Board of Trade. Why was it brought under their consideration? Some five or six months ago a meeting was called in the county of St. John, to consider the best means of making St. John the winter port for the trade of the great North-West; and after various resolutions passed it was decided that a Committee should be appointed to put itself in communication with the Finance Minister, in order to ascertain what could best be done for the accomplishment of this object. The City Council then renewed the consideration of this subject and passed resolutions. They also sent a memorial to the Government, which was transferred to the Minister of Public Works. The Board of Trade then took up the subject of placing the harbor under a Commission, but objected to certain reservations made with reference to certain properties the city wished to hold, while asking $500,000 for the rest. The Board of Trade thought that this reserved property might be very valuable at a future day and would be used probably, if held by the city and county of St. John, in competition with the Harbor Commissioners. Both memorials, one being from the Board of Trade, taking that exception alone, were handed to the Minister of Public Works, and were brought before the Council. We understood perfectly well, though hon. gentlemen may say in the House and elsewhere that the Board of Trade is not a representative body, that it is; and I, as a representative of St. John, regard it as speaking for the commercial interests of that city. But if we expect to make that port a successful competitor for the North-West trade, we must have it not only put in Commission, but the harbor improved and obstacles removed, while materially increasing the dues. The Board of Trade, having in view the payment of a large sum that might interfere with the value of property, remonstrated against this condition in the proposal of the Common Council. They came to the Government, who said to them: "Unless you can more nearly agree than at present, we shall decline to ask Parliament to take any action in the matter whatever." This resolution was passed by the Council before the elections, and the order for the delegates for the people to come here was made after the elections. Well, those two parties, having agreed upon this subject, both feeling the importance of having this harbor put in Commission, certain results followed; and why? I recollect when vessels could find at certain wharves in St. John twenty-four feet of water where now there is only sixteen. The River St. John carries down earth and mud which tend to choke up the harbor, thus depreciating the value of the property. As a representative of St. John I am prepared to urge upon the House the deepening and improving of the harbor in the interests of its trade. It is said that the representatives of the wharf owners have not had an opportunity of seeing this measure in good time. It was placed in the hands of one of them on Monday, and the Bill is most carefully worded, with reference to their protection. As the hon. member for King's said, the only question now practically in dispute, and it is receiving the attention of the Government, is the meeting of the views, if we can do so, consistently with the interests of the public, of those wharf owners, and as to the mode in which we shall deal with that property. The Government decided they would not force any man to sell his property or take it at a Government valuation; and, therefore, a clause provides that nothing in this Bill shall interfere with the rights of private owners. But while we are anxiously guarding against forcing those parties to sell their property, a proposition has been made by them, saying, we wish you to take it at a valuation. That changes the aspect of the matter. Of course there is some difficulty with reference to the value of the property, and as to the use of the money advanced for that purpose. The Bill contemplates and provides for the acquiring, step by step, any wharf property suitable, if the owners agree to the price offered. Then the Commissioners are forced to buy; but, of course, no sale of that kind requiring money to be advanced by the Government shall be finally settled without reference to the Government here. When the hon. Minister of Public Works was down last summer he was shown the difficulties we had to contend with. He was shown where the harbor was filling so that vessels could not be at certain points, where ten years ago they could come to anchor without difficulty. It is true, the principle laid down with reference to management of harbors is that, as a rule, the keeping of the harbor in repair and making improvement is considered a local charge, except in the cases of the breakwater at St. John and the island opposite Toronto; but when the Government is also interested it may assume a portion of this work. There is great difficulty with reference to deepening the harbor of St. John, in the fact that any expenditure the Government might make, would increase the value of wharves which are private property, and the Government did not feel they could consistently ask an appropriation for the improvement of private property. The only alternative left was to put a Commission in possession and provide it with $250,000 for improvements, without increasing the taxes of the harbor. That could only be done by furnishing the Commission, as this Bill provides, with $750,000 at 4 per cent., which interest could be met by the gross revenue. The Commission will thus be able to pay $500,000 to the Corporation for the property transferred, and have $250,000 to expend in improvements. The hon. Minister of Public Works was pressed very strongly to undertake this as a Government work, but it could not be done by any of the Government dredges. The Commission will have to construct a dredge with longer arms to work where the water is deepest. In addition to deepening the harbor and removing this accumulation of silt that has been going on for years, the Commission will have, under the operation of the Bill, a certain sum of money with which to acquire other properties. The improvements are necessary to be made in order to make St. John the harbor it ought to be, if we are to get a share of the winter trade of the North-West. While these two bodies, the Board of Trade and the City Council, did not agree, we felt a delicacy in asking the House for an appropriation, but when they both came to an agreement, we felt authorized to introduce this Bill which must meet the approval of all who wish to see our harbors throughout the Dominion made available for public purposes. Therefore I believe this proposition is not only in the interest of St. John, but in that of the whole Dominion. If there is one question more than another in which the citizens of St. John are interested, it is this one; and I was surprised that the hon. member for Gloucester should intimate that it was sprung on the House without any consideration having been given it by the citizens of St. John.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). It would be very much better if we had the Bill before us, before entering into a full discussion of the question. This question came before the late Government in 1875 and 1878, but as the Board of Trade and the Common Council of St. John could not come to any agreement together, we were unable to deal with it. I think the harbor of St. John requires to be carefully looked after, and I think that a body specially provided to look after the matter would look after it better than the Common Council. There is no doubt that the trade of St. John has been in a depressed condition for some time. The harbor and shipping are now in a sensitive condition, and it requires great care on the part of the Government and on the part of the Commission that may be appointed under this Bill, that no increased tax is put upon the imports and exports of St. John for years to come. I hope the Government will see that some provision is made to prevent any increase of taxation in that direction. In 1878 we discussed the matter from three points of view: first, with regard to the Common Council of St. John, next with regard to the Board of Trade and the commercial interests, and then with regard to private rights. We had at that time a statement given us of the value of the private property in St. John, which, if I remember rightly, was nearly $400,000. It was our intention to provide for the Harbor Commission, to provide for the paying off of the debt, and also to enable the Commissioners to buy private property when needed and when it could be obtained at a reasonable price.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

I think it is in the interest of St. John that all the property of the harbor should be under one control. The Minister has said that he has preserved private rights. If this be not done no doubt the placing of the harbor under Commission will depreciate private rights very much. In 1878, it was proposed to levy a percentage of so much on the imports for the use of the Commission; that was to be the source of the Harbor Commission's revenue. If you collect the revenue in this way under this Commission, which I think the Harbor Board will adopt, you will find that the wharfage will decrease a good deal, and you will have the revenue collected on the imports and less from the wharves. Therefore the wharves of private owners will contribute not only to the revenue of the Harbor Commission by a percentage on imports, but they will also be compelled to charge a wharfage, which is the only revenue they can get for the private property thereby being under this disadvantage. You will at once see the disadvantage private wharf owners will have, not only in the collection of revenue, but also in the improvement of the harbor. In the discussion in 1878, it was thought desirable that the Harbor Commission should own all the wharves belonging to private owners, and I think that system should be incorporated in this scheme. I think the Commission should own and control all the wharf property in the harbor of St. John. I think that to place the harbor and the Harbor Board in a proper condition it will be necessary, in the interest of both the Government, the Harbor Commissioners and the city of St. John, that the private property should be purchased by the Corporation, and that the Harbor Board should own the whole harbor of St. John.

Mr. DOMVILLE. My hon. friend has spoken about preparing the wharves, about putting a taxation upon trade in order to put the wharves in a proper condition, and at the same time he says that the Government must control this Commission so that they shall not put a tax on trade. If money is to be spent on the port of St. John it has got to be raised from two sources—one is local, the other is out of the Dominion revenues. This Bill proposes to place that harbor in the position that the hon. gentleman undertook to place it in himself in days gone by when I waited on him here as a delegate—that is, place it under a Commission to have control of the port. I do not think my hon. friend is placing the matter properly before the country, when on the one hand he advocates that the harbor of St. John should be placed under Commission, and on the other hand he says it must be done without taxing anybody to pay expenses. Somebody has got to pay that tax. I think my hon. friend is not right in putting it in that way, because we know that if the expenditure is made the interest has got to be met out of what this Commission can collect from the port. Now, if the Common Council on their own account wish to take this harbor and put it into thorough repair and carry out all my hon. friend thinks right, the Common Council would have to pay that tax, the city of St. John would have to pay it; but if, on the other hand, the harbor is put in Commission the city of St. John will not have to contribute the whole taxation, but the port that drains the St. John River and all the trade of the country at that port, will have to contribute a certain portion of the rates required to pay for the improvements. The consequence is that the city of John, being responsible for keeping up the harbor, contributes nothing to the harbor. But my hon. friend places the matter in an unfair position by saying that the trade of that port is going to be unfairly taxed. The city should never have been asked to maintain the wharves for the benefit of the whole country. It is a Dominion port just as much as Halifax, Montreal or Quebec, and when repairs are wanted neither hon. gentlemen opposite nor any New Brunswick member would be justified in saying, you should defray the expenses when we have asked the trade of the port to pay its fair share of the expenditure which is made for their benefit.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). In explanation I desire to say that the Government have the assurance that the revenue raised by the population will be sufficient to pay the interest on the money that is going to be advanced, not only on the $500,000, but also on the $250,000 to improve the harbor. But the progress of St. John harbor will depend as much on private interests as on Government measures. No doubt improvements will be made by the Commission, but it is, after all, on the mercantile interest and on the energy of private citizens it depends for its success.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. Minister of Finance must have misunderstood my remarks, or he would not have argued that the question of placing the harbor in Commission had not been discussed for years. I said it had, but I declared that the present scheme, although I do not yet understand it, is not known to the citizens. One reason given for that action was the desirability of securing the western trade. I am anxious to secure that trade, but to place the harbor in Commission will not assist it in the slightest degree, unless some improvement is necessary which can only be carried out by a Commission. I have already stated that some dredging is necessary, but the harbor is just as deep and in as good a condition as it was many years ago, and is capable of receiving the largest vessel afloat. The reason why a dredge had not been applied was because there was not sufficient work to keep it constantly employed. The importations of the port are not more than what they were fifteen years ago, and that is the reason why the value of property has declined. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) talked of the necessity of making St. John a public harbor. I hardly know what he means. It is now a public harbor, open to all the vessels of the world.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me that the harbor of St. John is a public harbor in the face of our charter, in which we assert that we own the bed of the river, the fisheries and everything else? That is why I made the assertion that it should be a public harbor.

Mr. ANGLIN. Provision is made to levy dues to keep the port in proper order, and that is one of the sources of revenue to be handed to the Commission. It does not make any distinction between a ship from one part of the world and a ship from another. It is simply entrusted with the management of the harbor, because St. John was supposed to have a special interest in its proper management. I believe that on the whole the Common Council of the city of St. John have managed the harbor fairly well. I am entirely opposed myself to putting the harbor in charge of a Commission, and I believe a great many of the people of St. John agree with me on that point; but though I differ from other hon. members on this subject, we are all agreed that if it is to be put in the hands of a Commission then the whole of this property should be under their control. I do not think we will save any money by this transaction, but we will find that we have added enormously to the expenditure by the change, that works will be undertaken which are not necessary, that others will be undertaken which are of a speculative character which will not prove to be useful. If we get the money at a little lower rate of interest so much the better, but as the trade of St. John must pay the cost, whatever money is advanced, we should not be betrayed into expenditures not absolutely necessary, because we are paying less for the money. We are all desirous of seeing the trade of St. John revive and increase, and we are all prepared to make some sacrifices and ask our fellow-citizens to make some sacrifices in order to accomplish these ends.

Resolutions agreed to and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN introduced Bill (No. 163) relating to the harbor of St. John in the Province of New Brunswick.

Bill read the first time.

FRAUD IN CONNECTION WITH PUBLIC CONTRACTS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire again to bring to the attention of this House a measure which I consider of some importance. We are about to entrust the Government with large sums of money, and I think this is the time to bring before the House the principle of the Bill which I had the honor of introducing during the first days of the Session. At this stage of the Session, I do not believe this Bill can reach its second reading and be passed by the House; therefore, I take the only opportunity I have of placing before the House and the country my views upon this subject. Last Session I brought before the House a measure to prevent fraud in connection with the expenditure of money on public contracts. That measure was referred to a Special Committee, which reported it unanimously to the House. The Government have not chosen to take that measure under their own patronage; on the contrary, both last Session and this Session they have prevented it from coming before the public. In order to avoid giving you the trouble, Mr. Speaker, of looking for precedents in connection with this matter, I will state that my desire is not to bring the Bill before the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman refers to a Bill that is on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is only incidental.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman refers to a Bill that was thrown out last year, and he refers to the same Bill which was introduced this year, and the proceedings that have taken place upon it. I think the hon. gentleman cannot refer to that Bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My reference to the Bill is only incidental to the motion I have to make. It is only explanatory of the motion, and is not with the view of bringing the Bill before the House at all; so that my hon. friend may make his mind easy on that point.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have a right to speak to the question of order. My object, as I say, is not to bring this Bill before the House. That has been refused to me, and I understand the Government continues to refuse it, and although I was told a few days ago by the Prime Minister that he would give me a day, he has not done so; but I suppose he would do as he did last year, give me a day after prorogation. Apart from this Bill there is the other question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must rise again to a question of order. Whilst the Speaker is looking over his authorities, I think the hon. gentleman should not proceed. Until the question of order is decided, he should not proceed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You do not know what my motion is. When it comes you will see whether it is in order or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. On the motion to go into Committee of Supply grievances may be placed before the House and the Government. Of course the hon. member cannot make any motion relating to an Order of the Day or a notice of motion, and he may not speak upon questions referred to in them; all he can do is to bring forward grievances.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He may speak on a subject that a Bill relates to.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is a grievance, of course he can do so.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I will show the difference between the Bill and my motion, and I acknowledge the correctness of your decision. At the present moment, when we are about to vote money for public contracts and other purposes, I think we should declare it expedient that a measure of some kind should have been brought by the Government to prevent the expenditure of that money wrongfully, that is to say, to prevent brokerage in connection with public contracts, and to provide that if Ministers, employes of the Government, or contractors, were guilty of any fraud, they ought to be punished. My motion is as follows:—

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That it is not expedient, nor in the interest of the public service, to vote any money for expenditure on public contracts without some adequate measure of legislation to prevent and punish frauds in contracts involving expenditure of public moneys, and that this House regrets that the Ministry did not bring and carry such measure before this Parliament.

Amendment (Mr. Casgrain) negatived on the following division:—

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself in Committee of Supply.

371. St. Charles Branch and Ferry between Lévis and Quebec $536,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. Have the Government determined on building that branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. This sum is intended to cover half the cost of a steam ferry between Quebec and Lévis, for carrying the cars of the Quebec, Montreal & Occidental Railway from one shore to the other, and for the construction of a branch from Lévis up to the Grand Trunk station, and a direct line from Point St. Charles to the Intercolonial, 12 miles distant. The Government of Quebec will pay half the cost of maintenance of this ferry.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What will the ferry cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About $200,000, not including the wharf. There will be two steamers to ship and unship the cars, which work is to be done by cranes lifting the whole car. The Quebec Central Railway is to bear a portion of this expense. They are now engaged in bringing that railway from where it crosses the Intercolonial at St. Henri to the same point; and five miles of the line, from the ferry at Point Lévis to St. Charles, will be common to both roads. They propose for the station accommodation which they are to receive from the Intercolonial at that point, and for the use of those five miles of the road, to pay $12,000 a year, which will cover a considerable portion of the expense outside of what is borne by the Province of Quebec for the establishment of this ferry.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Surely it is not a good plan to build the boats so that the cars have to be hoisted off. Why not have them built like the Great Western Railway boats, from which the cars can be run off?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That subject has been very carefully considered, and it is believed that owing to the rise and fall of the tide at Quebec it would be more convenient to have cranes for lifting the cars into and out of those boats. The whole of the arrangements for the ferry and everything connected with it are to be a matter of a joint arrangement between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of Quebec.

Mr. MACKENZIE. At the Grand Trunk crossing at Sarnia they have an adjustable landing to suit the difference in the water level there, which is between three and four feet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a good deal of difference in the localities, however.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think it would be much easier to cross the trains at certain times and land them by other means than by hoisting.

Mr. ANGLIN. How will the trains run when this new branch is built, so as to suit passengers from the Lower Provinces on their way to Montreal, or passengers from the West to the Lower Provinces—will people not going to Quebec be taken down to Lévis and then back to the Chaudière?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The intention is to make close connection at the Chaudière Junction, as formerly, with the Grand Trunk, and, therefore, the line between St. Charles and the Chaudière will be operated as usual. All the freight and passengers going to Quebec will be carried directly to that city, and all going to Montreal will proceed direct to it also, without loss of time.

Mr. ANGLIN. Will that not be very expensive?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt it would involve some additional expense and locomotive power, but that is inevitable without sacrificing time in the communications between the two.

372. Extension to Halifax..... $37,500

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for the purpose of providing increased accommodation at Halifax. The volume of traffic has been so greatly increased that additional yard room was absolutely required. I thought this expenditure might have been postponed, but in consequence of the very urgent representation of the superintendent it was found absolutely necessary to incur it. The letter is as follows:—

“From what I can learn, the amount for the new main line at Halifax has been struck out of the Estimates. I regret this very much, because it is an improvement absolutely necessary, and unless something is done in that way during the coming season we shall certainly be very much hampered in moving the traffic at Richmond and Halifax next winter. We have had a great deal of trouble this winter, and extra expense has been incurred in order to work the traffic. A considerable portion of the delay and extra expense would have been avoided if the facilities were better.

“The earnings for the month of March were the largest of any month since the opening of the road, amounting to over $199,000, or an increase of $34,000 over the month of March last year.

“There is reasonable ground to expect that next winter here will be a corresponding increase in traffic, and if so we will be but ill-provided for if the improvements spoken of are not made this summer.

“I would, therefore, strongly urge upon you to again submit the amount for consideration.

“Your obedient servant,

“D. POTTINGER.”

So that the hon. gentleman will see that the increased traffic for the single month of March is nearly sufficient to cover the expenditure, and there is reasonable ground to expect that next winter there will be a corresponding increase of traffic.

373. Rolling Stock..... $65,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to provide for the means of removing the traffic in the four months in the year, during which we never had the means either in locomotive power or cars.

374. Cape Traverse Railway $189,200

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. One of the conditions of union with Prince Edward Island was an engagement on the part of the Dominion Government to provide continuous steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the Intercolonial Railway. To carry out that engagement the Dominion Government had the steamer Northern Light constructed; but that steamer, though effecting considerable improvement in the existing communications, entirely failed in maintaining continual communication. The late Government directed a survey to be made between the Intercolonial Railway and Cape Tormentine, on the one side, and Cape Traverse and the Island Railway on the other. This survey was completed, and a report made by the able engineer appointed by the late Government, recommending the best points for railway connection. And we are now carrying out the policy contemplated by the late Government in ordering this survey to be made. This vote is for the purpose of constructing eleven miles of railway, or thereabouts, from the Prince Edward Island Railway to Cape Traverse. It is not settled whether it shall be the county line or another point, the name of which escapes me, as the best means of connecting the Island Railway with Cape Traverse and the construction of such docks as are necessary at Cape Traverse for the purpose of making the communication as perfect and as effectual as possible. I may be asked why provision is made for carrying out this design in Prince Edward Island and not on the mainland. I may say that it would have become the duty of the Government, and we would have been prepared to bring down an estimate for the construction of the connection between the Intercolonial Railway and Cape Tormentine, but for the fact, that in the meantime that service has been provided for by the Government of New Brunswick, who have renewed the charter of a private company who propose to construct that work with the aid of a subsidy. Under these circumstances we felt that we could not ask Parliament to provide for a service which was apparently provided for by the Local Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Under what Bill is this to be constructed? There is no Bill for building a railway in this place that I know of. Surely the hon. gentleman does not intend to build a new railway by virtue of a vote in the Estimates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows that we have power, without even going to Parliament, to build six miles of a branch.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not aware of that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, the hon. gentleman knows that there is a provision to extend railways for six miles. I think the authority of Parliament to extend a branch over a Government railway of eleven miles would be quite as sufficient on Prince Edward Island as it is from St. Charles to Point Levis.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman must be aware that he cannot expropriate land or do anything else merely because he happens to represent the Government. He has no power to touch property.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will look into that point.

Mr. ANGLIN. Will the hon. gentleman state what provision he will make at the terminus of this road to enable the steamer to ply during winter? During winter the solid ice extends out one and one-half miles, and it is necessary to make some provision to enable the steamer to approach some wharf or place connected with a railway, unless he expects the steamer will be strong enough to work her way through the ice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a very important point. It will have to be, to a certain extent, experimental as to the best means of establishing water communication during the severe portion of the winter. A considerable expenditure is involved in the design, both in Prince Edward Island and at Cape Tormentine, to attain such wharf communication as will give the necessary facilities when we are not obstructed by the ice. When the ice forms measures will have to be taken to make the communication which is now regularly maintained by ice boats. It will be to some extent experimental as to how far the board ice will have to be made available on the two sides. It would not be possible to run up wharf communication so as to make a contact with the water without using the ice which forms on the two sides for a portion of the winter.

Mr. ANGLIN. There is great reason to doubt whether the action of the Local Legislature grants a sufficient subsidy—I think it is only $3,000 a mile. My impression is that they had some idea of getting assistance from the Dominion Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I differ wholly from my hon. friend beside me. I think the Government should build no branches if they can get other people to build them. It was the policy of the late Government to get rid of all the branches as soon as possible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a good deal to be said in favor of having this road in the hands of the Government.

Mr. ANGLIN. There is a small piece of line forming a portion of a through line which we are bound by our treaty with the Island to finish if possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think we have done very well by the Island, and we have carried out the terms of Union to the utmost possible extent.

375. Construction of a race-way between the Welland Canal feeder and Chippewa River.....$26,000

In reply to Mr. MACKENZIE,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will remember that when the enlargement of the Welland Canal was proceeded with a deputation waited upon him from the town of Welland, pointing out that the measures required to be taken on that occasion involved the destruction of the water power which they had at Welland. That water power having been destroyed it is proposed now that the supply be obtained from Lake Erie, and we can utilize the water power from the feeder without at all interfering with the supply to the canal, as that will no longer be required. Then it is proposed to restore the water power by bringing that supply from the feeder. This item is carrying out the proposal or application which was made to the hon. gentleman, and is in accordance with what he stated to a deputation who came from the town of Welland, that the subject would receive consideration when the supply from Lake Erie was obtained. It is for the purpose of obtaining that supply that this vote is asked for.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I expressed my opinion some evenings ago about the propriety of giving a supply of water from our canals for manufacturing purposes. I said I thought it was a great mistake, and if I were in office I would not allow it. We have suffered heavy losses on all our canals from this course, and we are sure to suffer more losses. I am surprised to find that this will be done by a wanton act, for it is not connected with the canal, it is a mere scheme to furnish water power to some people there. It may have something to do with the coming election in Welland, but it has nothing to do with the canal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say to my predecessor that this is an entirely different question. I quite agreed with the statement he made on an entirely different subject, that it was improper to draw upon the supplies of the canals for water power in such a way as to obstruct and interfere with navigation. The hon. gentleman pointed out that currents were established which interfered with navigation, and I quite agreed that the primary object of the canals is for the purposes of navigation, and that no question of water power should be allowed to interfere with that primary object. This, however, is not drawing water from the Welland Canal at all; it is drawing water from the feeder which was required until the Lake Erie level was obtained, but it is not now required to supply the canal and does not in the slightest degree touch the use of the canal for navigation purposes, but it restores the water power destroyed by the construction of the aqueduct. It is an entirely different question, but, as the hon. gentleman stated, it could not be taken up until the Welland Canal had obtained the Lake Erie level and enabled that water to be drawn from the feeder without in the least degree interfering with navigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why the Government should undertake to provide, from the Welland Canal, water power for manufacturers, is a matter I cannot understand. We require all the water for canal purposes. We were never under any obligation to furnish water power; we are entering into a transaction to furnish water power to manufacturers. It is no part of the Government's business to do that work, and if it is done on the Welland we must do it elsewhere.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the only case.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I protest against Welland obtaining this concession unless it is made general. I object to the Mr. ANGLIN.

vote as one irreconcilable with the management of our public works.

Mr. McCALLUM. The Government is interested in the welfare of every town and village of the Dominion. The town of Welland enjoyed good water power, but the Government took that privilege from them. With respect to this vote, I believe $26,000 will accomplish all the work required. As regards speculation, it will pay even when viewed from that standpoint, because it does not take any water from the canal, as since we have adopted the Lake Erie level we have the whole of the Grand River for water power, and the Government is acting wisely in assisting the people to take advantage of that power for manufacturing purposes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The deputation that waited on the hon. member for Lambton, when he was destroying the water power of Welland and precipitating the community in grief at what was going to affect them so vitally, went away with the impression that when the hon. gentleman obtained the Lake Erie level he would be prepared to restore the water power from the feeder.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is quite a mistake. I was desirous of complying, as far as the public interest would permit, with any reasonable request, and I could not do anything else but say that the subject would be considered at the proper time; but I never committed myself to furnishing water power from the canal, for such a project would be opposed to the views I adopted from my observations. This is to furnish water power for a particular locality. Why should not some commercial company undertake that duty?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We charge for all the power.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why does not a commercial company take it up?

376. Williamsburg Canal, construction of new weirs.....$4,000

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is this amount for?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that while the Welland Canal has been deepened and measures have been taken to provide for ultimately attaining a depth of fourteen feet, by which vessels will come from Lake Erie to Kingston, and while measures have been taken to enlarge and deepen to the same extent the Lachine Canals, with the exception of the work at Cornwall, it has been proposed to defer the deepening of the St. Lawrence Canals and to depend at present upon the navigation which we have between these points, Kingston and Lachine. But it is found at this point there is not the same depth of water. This is the shallow point, and this expenditure of $40,000 is to give us the same depth of water at that point that we have at all the other locks between Kingston and the Lachine Canal; and it is to overcome the shallowest point there, which is found to be an obstruction to navigation, that the expenditure will take place, in order to provide the same navigation at that point that there is above and below, and the work will all be useful should the programme of carrying out the deepening of the St. Lawrence Canals as contemplated by my predecessor at any time be proceeded with. It is a comparatively small expenditure for a very large and important object.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is the depth of water at the mitre sills.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As near as I can remember it varies from six to fifteen inches shallower than the balance of the canal either above or below.

377. St. Ann's Lock and Canal—Towards deepening the canal above the lock.....$75,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This work requires $75,000 more, making $150,000, to complete it. It is for aqueous rock excavation.

378. Trent River navigation—For the construction of locks and the improvement of navigation b tween Lakefield and Balsam Lake..... $290,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the plan under which the hon. gentleman proposes to improve that navigation, and what is the length of navigation he hopes to get.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that the subject of the Trent navigation has been engaging the attention of the Government for the past year. A very careful survey was entered upon for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of getting a depth of five feet of water throughout the whole system on the Trent navigation. That survey has been vigorously prosecuted during the past season, but it was, owing to its difficult and extended character, impossible to make such an exact and accurate location survey as to give with anything like accuracy what the cost would be. We shall presently come to an additional item of $8,000 to prosecute that survey to its completion during the present season. It was found, however, that by the expenditure of the amount proposed in the Estimates we could accomplish a great object in opening up internal water communications in that section of the country. The hon. gentleman knows that at present there is railway communication from Port Hope to Peterborough, and from Lakefield, near Peterborough, by the expenditure proposed at Buckhorn, Burley Rapids and Fenelon Falls, communication can be obtained from the railway at Lakefield to the railway at Cobocok, from which there is railway communication to Toronto. About sixty-five miles of navigation will be opened in this way, and a large section of country will also be opened up by connection with the lateral waters. These works will open up a navigation altogether of some 150 miles.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. To what point does the hon. Minister hope to extend this system finally.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a question which I would not like to answer, because it will require a survey in order to be in a position to look the question fairly in the face and say what expenditure would be involved in building the line of communication which has been known as the Trent navigation.

Mr. ANGLIN. Nowadays, no one, as a matter of choice, would transfer freight from railways to steamers if railway communication throughout can be had.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the hon. gentleman is committing a great mistake in beginning a new canal in the present state of transportation eastward. We have expended about $12,000,000 on the new Welland Canal, and so far as I know there is only one vessel, and that one on the stocks, at all suitable for the navigation of that canal, showing that progress by rail is reaching a point that sets our canal navigation at defiance. I asked some of the principal shippers how it was that after the Government expended so much money on that work that they did not use it more, and I was told by them that they had great doubts whether it would pay to carry grain by vessels at all or not. At any rate the hon. gentleman should have a completed scheme before Parliament instead of building a canal in the middle of the country, without beginning or end. No man can vote for that intelligently; nobody knows where it is; there is no map before us, no plan, no report of an engineer, nothing on which we can base any argument.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before Concurrence, I will lay upon the Table of the House the report of the engineer and a map showing what is to be done.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not agree with the hon. member for Lambton that the day of canals is past; but I do not intend to discuss that question to-night. The hon. gentleman says that nobody knows where this proposed canal is to be. It seems very strange that such a remark should come from him, considering that for so many years he held the position of Minister of Public Works, and that a large number of these Trent works were done under his charge, and I suppose that with that devotion to the duties of his office that he always showed, he made himself thoroughly familiar with the position and character of these works. The subject has been discussed in this House on more than one occasion, and I think the members know pretty well where the canal is. I look upon it as a most important work in the general interests of the Dominion, and not only to the locality. This canal, when completed, will afford the shortest route for the transmission of grain from the Georgian Bay by way of the Trent River and the St. Lawrence River to Montreal. Grain can be carried from the whole of the North-West and the Western States, through Lake Michigan, Lake Superior and Lake Huron to the Georgian Bay, where there are excellent harbors, and then transhipped to barges, which will be able to pass through this canal without any change of barge till they reach the ships at Montreal. A great portion of the grain trade now carried to American ports would in that way be carried to Montreal. Therefore I say this is a matter in which the people of the Dominion at large are very much concerned. It would afford a saving of some 400 miles of navigation which is necessitated by the present route through Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, and would constitute a far shorter and more valuable route than that now existing by the Welland Canal. With regard to the general policy of building canals, it is to be regretted that the hon. member for Lambton did not long ago come to the conclusion which he has apparently come to now, that all the money that has been expended on the Welland Canal and other canals is thrown away, because if he had acted on that view when he had a large majority at his back in this House he would, if his views are right, have saved to the country the expenditure of a large amount of money. I am glad for one reason that he has expressed himself satisfactorily, because in the newspapers supporting the party to which he belongs in the neighborhood where this canal is proposed to be built, it has been put forward that if the people want that canal built they have to return Mr. Blake and his party to power. For instance, the Peterborough Examiner, which is the organ of the party in the county of Peterborough, and which is edited by a man who stands very high in the confidence of the party in that neighborhood, in an article on the subject, after referring to the fact that the Session has nearly closed, winds up by saying:

"If the Government do not build the work at once, Mr. Blake and his party will. We await the issue."

In an article published on the 31st March, 1881, in the same paper, there is this passage:

"We believe we are justified in saying that nothing would more effectually secure the construction of this important work than the placing of Mr. Edward Blake in power."

I am sure the hon. member for Lambton speaks the opinions of the Opposition generally upon this subject, and if he does it is quite evident that this newspaper does not. If the Opposition take the position that the canal is a useless work, that all the money spent upon it will be thrown away, as a matter of course in the event of Mr. Blake and his friends coming into power we cannot hope that a dollar will be spent upon it or that the work will be continued. I am quite prepared, if necessary, to show the great usefulness which this work will be to the country at large as well as to the neighborhood, if completed. The construction of locks at Fenelon Falls was not much, as a lock exists now at Balsam Rapids, and one at Bobcaygeon will open navigation to the extent of upwards of 100 miles, and by the removal of obstructions at Buckhorn and at Burleigh Rapids, navigation will be opened to Lakefield, and an immense advantage will be conferred on all the inhabitants of that section of country. They feel, and I think with some right, that when the Government is in a position, which fortunately it is, to expend a large amount of money on public works, that district should not be neglected, especially when the work in question is one of great public benefit, not only to the neighborhood, but to the whole Dominion.

Mr. McCALLUM. I am willing to admit that if we were commencing the work of enlarging the canals to-day, we should consider it very seriously. The Welland Canal had a great capacity before; and when my hon. friend from Lambton says that there is only one vessel suitable to the enlarged canal, I am sure he is responsible to some extent, because he gave out that this canal was to be ready in 1876. To-day we have not twelve feet of water in the Welland Canal. We know that ship-building in this country and in the United States is overdone; but people have got their vessels, and they are going to use them till they are worn out. We have only twelve feet of water in the Welland against fifteen feet going into Buffalo. Until we get at least fourteen feet in the Welland we cannot expect to attract this trade. Besides, a change is being made in ship-building. Hereafter vessels will be built of iron, or of iron and wood. If the North-West will turn out anything like we expect, the Welland Canal, if sufficiently deep, will be very beneficial to this country, in carrying a great deal of grain. I find fault with the late Government, that they did not at once, from Thorold down, secure a depth of fourteen feet. It is to be regretted the canal was opened at all until that depth was obtained. The people in the United States who feared that this canal was going to take away the trade of the Erie, when they see we have only reached twelve feet, are no longer apprehensive. We may have a reaction, and the trade going in the opposite direction, and we know how hard it is to divert trade from its accustomed channels. I do not blame the hon. member for Lambton for this policy more than anybody else, but I blame him for not, when Premier, paying more attention to the Welland, and letting first the contracts for the works that required to be first completed, instead of keeping them to the last. I hope that the present Government will carry out this improvement, which is one of the terms of Confederation, and which I believe would be in the interests of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am glad the hon. member for Victoria has spoken, for I have got more information from him than from the Minister. I knew nothing about a barge navigation of four or five feet, but the hon. gentleman has the facts at his fingers' ends.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The report was laid on the Table of the House last Session.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We are not in last Session, but in this Session.

Mr. CAMERON. Another report was laid on the Table this Session.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I never saw it, and I rather think the hon. gentleman's information is private.

Mr. CAMERON. I read the report of last Session. Though I have not read a report for this Session, I am sure there was one.

Mr. MACKENZIE. As regards the hon. member for Monck, he never speaks on public works, but he charges me with having promised to have the Welland Canal opened in 1876. Whatever promises a Minister gives in reference to public works, is based upon the opinions of his chief engineer. I never was in too great a hurry with the canals.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

All public works require a great deal of time, but none more than canals, and I never looked upon such time as lost. But as for the time of beginning and ending of contracts, I acted, as I have no doubt the present Minister acts, on the opinion of the Chief Engineer. What I have found fault with was, that in such a large contract, the Minister of Public Works invited tenders by private circular instead of by public advertisement, as is done in other cases.

Mr. McCALLUM. I would not have said anything respecting the hon. member for Lambton if he had not brought up the Welland Canal. He wanted to show it would be a total loss to the country. I disagree with him in that respect, and I have a right to say so.

Mr. BROWN. This is a work which has engaged the attention of the people in its vicinity for a great many years, and it is one of great importance. I believe the Government of old Canada expended $800,000 on it, and when the rebellion broke out the work was suspended; nothing has been done on it since. It has always been looked upon as a work that would be accomplished some day. It would prove a great advantage to our carrying trade. I do not know of any work of equal importance in Canada that would shorten the distance between Chicago and Montreal 500 miles. It is to be hoped this work will be proceeded with and advanced with reasonable speed. The opening up of the Trent with its train of tributary lakes and streams from the Bay of Quinté to the Georgian Bay, is not only feasible, but a work of great importance to the trade of the country.

Mr. BOWELL. I must express my surprise at the confession of the hon. member for Lambton of ignorance as to this work. A gentleman of his industry, who has given so much attention to public works, should not have forgotten that the first report on this work was made by Mr. Baird, as long ago as 1833. The route has been surveyed a number of times since and several reports have been made as to its utility. The hon. gentleman's ignorance is also strange when we reflect that one of the last acts of his Government was to transfer all those works to the Ontario Government; and when we remember that arrangements had been made with some gentlemen owning lands lying along the line of that proposed work—drowned lands which they had purchased—the dams were to be cut which assisted the navigation along that route, and that they were to make a pretty good speculation out of the transaction. However, when the present Government came into power, always recognizing the importance of opening up that inland navigation, they set aside the Order in Council transferring those works for nothing to the Ontario Government, who, as I have already said, were about having the dams blown out, and the lands which had been paid for by old Canada transferred to private parties. In addition to that there has been portions of that navigation which have been improved by the Ontario Government since Confederation by the construction of some small dams and small canals connecting one or two of the lakes. When this question was before the House a few years ago it met with the determined opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite; I am glad that many of them have been converted to this scheme, either by their silence or by the conviction of its necessity in the interests of the country. When the question was discussed two or three years ago there was opposition to it. I think we know what quelled that opposition, when we reflect that certain influential politicians living along that line intimated to the leader of the present Opposition that it was not in their interest to oppose it. Consequently we had no opposition until to-night from the hon. member for Lambton. I was in hopes that every man on the Opposition side who has given the slightest attention to this matter had been converted to the belief that it was absolutely necessary in the interest of the country.

I am not surprised at the remark of the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown), because when this canal is completed, it will terminate at the Bay of Quinté in his constituency. It must be very gratifying to him to know that the Government since its formation have taken a very great interest in this work. If the Government have had no other support from the hon. gentleman, I am glad to know he is willing to support them in this work, which will be of such paramount importance to the constituency he represents.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The proper course, as I have always held, is, that if works of this kind are to be kept up at all they should be kept up by the Local Government. The Rideau Canal is another case similar to that. We expend $50,000 per year on it, and only receive $6,000 or $7,000 revenue from it. What is the use of that canal to the trade of the country, surrounded as it is by railways. With regard to the transshipment navigation, I was not the first Minister of Public Works that proposed this course; the present Minister of Public Works took the initiative in that matter.

Mr. BOWELL. That is true, but the hon. gentleman should have been candid enough to state that when the late Minister of Public Works offered to transfer them to the Local Government, it was with the distinct understanding that they should be kept up. The hon. gentleman transferred them without any such condition.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). He transferred them, although he had the distinct statement of the Ontario Government that they would not keep them up, and the only Statute authorizing the transfer stipulates that such works can only be transferred for the purpose of maintaining them.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not intend to discuss that matter to-night further than to say that the works were practically mixed up then. They cost $6,000 per year and their revenue last year was $290.57.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As the hon. gentleman has complained of my not giving him sufficient information in reference to this I will read my report to Council. It is as follows:—

"COPY OF REPORT TO COUNCIL, No. 17,495, APRIL 8, 1882.

"(Order in Council, No. 94,566, April 17, 1882.)

"The undersigned has the honor to represent that from time to time during many years past, as shown in successive annual and other reports, the establishment of a line of water communication between Lake Ontario, at the mouth of the River Trent, and Lake Huron, through the utilizing of existing river and lake waters, has been under consideration.

"That in 1833 a survey of the section of country extending from the mouth of the Trent to Rice Lake, was made by Mr. N. H. Baird, and in 1835, a further survey was made by him, dealing with the remaining section between Rice Lake and Lake Simcoe. The contemplated course being as follows:—"Through the River Trent, Rice Lake, the River Otonabee and Lakes Clear, Buckhorn, Chemong, Pigeon, Sturgeon and Cameron to Lake Balsam, the summit water, about 166 miles from Trenton. From Lake Balsam by a canal and the River Talbot to Lake Simcoe; thence by the River Severn to Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, the total distance being about 235 miles."

"That operations were thereupon commenced, but were subsequently in 1839, suspended, owing to lack of funds, and that in 1841 at the time of the Union, the scheme of forming a line of through communication was laid aside. The works were, however, utilized and others were executed to aid in the passage of timber, for which purpose and for what use they have, in part at least, been maintained ever since. The dimensions of the Dominion Locks are 133 feet 6 inches in length, by 33 feet in width, with 5 feet of water on the sills.

"That in consequence of representations made and the reception of various petitions from parties interested, an appropriation was voted during the last Session of Parliament to cover the cost of a further survey and examination of the rivers and lakes lying between the Bay of Quinté and Georgian Bay, and that under date the 20th instant a report has been received from Mr. Thomas Rubidge, the engineer appointed to conduct such survey.

"That under instructions, Mr. Rubidge has directed his attention more specially to the determination of points where the construction of works would afford the greatest immediate advantage to local navigation, such works being at the same time, an integral part of any greater scheme of through communication which may hereafter be carried out. His report accordingly deals exclusively with that chain of lakes designated by him the 'Back Lakes,' which form the head waters of the River Otonabee and extends from Lake Kitchiwanoo to Balsam Lake, the summit waters of the projected canal, this chain forming part of the main line of communication recommended by Mr. Baird.

"That Mr. Rubidge's report favors the construction of the following works, the estimated cost of which is given:

"1. Fenelon Falls, two locks and swing bridge, opening out the route from Balsam Lake to Mud and Scugog Lakes	$100,000
"2. Buckhorn Rapids, one lock connecting Pigeon and Buckhorn Lakes with Deer Bay.....	50,000
"3. Burleigh Chute and Falls, three locks and dam, to connect Deer Bay with Stoney and Clear Lakes.....	140,000
	$290,000

"That by the works named communication would be opened between Lakefield at the head of the Otonabee Rapids, about six miles from the town of Peterborough, and Lake Sturgeon, a distance of 45 miles; thence to Cobocook on Gull River, flowing into Balsam Lake, a distance of 15 miles, a southern route being opened from Lake Sturgeon to Port Perry on Lake Scugog, a distance of 35 miles, by means of an existing lock at Lindsay, built by the Ontario Government in 1879.

"That in addition to the above the construction of these works would open up some 55 miles of lateral navigation, making a total of 150 miles, bringing a very considerable extent of country into direct communication with the western and southern railway systems of Ontario.

"That a report made by the Chief Engineer on the 29th ultimo, shows that the upward route to be followed by a vessel upon the completion of the works suggested, would be as follows:—

"Starting from Lakefield, a lock at Young's Point, built by the Government of the Province of Ontario, gives access to Clear Lake and Stoney Lake, at the head of which the two proposed new locks at Burleigh Falls and the one new lock at Burleigh Chute, would open communication with Deer Bay, a further new lock at Buckhorn Rapids giving a passage to Pigeon Lake; at Bobcaygeon a lock was built in 1857 by the Canadian Government, connecting Pigeon Lake with Sturgeon Lake, while the construction of the two new locks at Fenelon Falls, would afford access from Sturgeon into Cameron's Lake; whence by means of a lock built by the Ontario Government, a vessel could pass up to Cobocook, and so through to Balsam Lake, the summit waters; of the several works specified, the Chief Engineer considers those at Fenelon Falls to be the most important.

"The Minister recognizing the fact that the interests of a very large section of country would be served by the opening up of navigation in this district, and that the works as above set forth are the best calculated to meet immediate requirements, while being at the same time of use in any further development in this direction, recommends that the sum of $290,000 be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the years 1882 and 1883, to be laid before Parliament during its present Session."

Mr. BROWN. There was a Committee of this House appointed and evidence was brought to show that there was nothing like the amount of land affected that was generally supposed—between 20,000 and 30,000 acres; there was nothing like that quantity of land. I recollect the late Mr. Keeler was anxious to have this land reclaimed.

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Keeler was never in favor of the renewal of the dams.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, he was decidedly, as he showed by his report. As to the transfer of the works to the Ontario Government, I recollect the time when the late Sandfield Macdonald was urged to assume those works, and he would have nothing to do with them; the Dominion Government had them and they must keep them.

Mr. HILLIARD. I am sorry to hear the hon. gentleman speak so disparagingly of our waterways; I think they are able to maintain themselves. The fact that we find such a great difference in railway rates between summer and winter should cause us to maintain our waterways. I contend that this waterway is worthy the attention of the Government. If the hon. member for Lambton should visit those water stretches I am sure he would call them magnificent. Between the Bay of Quinté and Georgian Bay we have 160 miles of navigable waters. I maintain that freight can be carried cheaper through this route than by any other route. Here we have complete land-locked navigation perfectly safe and free from storms. It is desirable that the Dominion Government should adopt some plan to avoid the numerous accidents that occur on the larger lakes. Take as an instance the accident that occurred last fall on Lake Ontario, when the Zimmerman was lost. When we consider that the great North-West is opening up, and requires some mode of transporting its products to the east, it certainly behoves us to look to our waterways. The system of farming in the West is different from that in Ontario. In the West they thresh the wheat in the field, while in Ontario they put their wheat in the barn before threshing it, and it there goes through a certain sweating process that prepares it for a long transportation. The wheat of the West, on the other hand, is not in a condition to go into the hold of a vessel to be carried through to Montreal, though it might very well go to the terminus of this canal and pass through the elevator at that point. I contend that by the advantages that this route has to offer, we need fear no competition on the question of transit from the great West. We read in a report of the State Engineer, at New York, that that "miserable ditch," the Erie Canal, is able to compete with their first railways, and I think, therefore, we need not have any doubt as to the success of this route.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wish to correct one error that I think the hon. member for West Hastings has fallen into. I do so out of respect to the memory of the late Mr. Keeler, a friend of mine and a member of this House. I am sure every one knows that if any action has been taken in this matter by the Government, it is chiefly owing to the energy and ability with which he brought the matter before the House. His object was not to take down the dam, but to keep it up. I think the gentleman who represented that constituency in another Legislature, was anxious to take that dam down, but Mr. Keeler's object was to keep it up and to keep these works along with it. He brought the matter not only to the attention of this House, but also before the Boards of Trade of Montreal and elsewhere. The object he chiefly had in view was to prevent these inland waters being placed under the control of the Legislature of Ontario. It was almost complete, I think, and the hon. member for Lambton, long after the 17th September, 1878, passed an Order in Council, transferring these works to the Legislature of Ontario, but unfortunately they had not been formally handed over. From the remarks of the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Hilliard), one would suppose that the only outlet of the magnificent canal was by the Trent and the waters of the Bay of Quinté. He seems to forget that, many years ago, a careful survey was made which showed that a proper outlet, one that would give the greatest accommodation to the trade, would be from the head of Rice Lake to Port Hope. I trust the hon. Minister of Railways will turn his attention to that important route.

Mr. BROWN. The hon. member for East Durham is mistaken regarding the opinions of the late Mr. Keeler. Mr. Keeler was a particular friend of mine, and I know he claimed that there was a large quantity of land there which could be reclaimed if that dam was taken away. People had already been paid for the land by the old Government of Canada when the dam was put up, and who thought they could get the land back again. The hon. member for Victoria, if he was here, could confirm all I say.

Mr. BURNHAM. I think the hon. member for West Hastings is correct to some extent in what he says in regard to the late Mr. Keeler. Mr. Keeler did favor the removal of the lower dam at Chisholm, but only in the event of the canal system not being taken up by the Dominion Government. But he was not in favor of the abolition of those dams, nor was he opposed to the Trent Valley navigation. The hon. Minister of Customs spoke of the ignorance that prevailed respecting the proposed work. If he had taken the same interest in the internal navigation of the country as the present Minister of Railways and Canals, and had visited the country and gone over the route and ascertained for himself whether such a system could not be carried out, he would have been in a better position to have spoken on the matter. After this report was brought in by Mr. Keeler the Government sent Mr. Stark, a competent engineer, and he made a report, which was laid on the Table of the House, in which was given an approximate cost of the canal. A perusal of that report establishes the fact that that canal is a practicable one, and that the system proposed by Mr. Baird was one which should be carried out. I hope the Government will this year carry on the survey, and will be able to show next Session that Mr. Stark's survey on the estimate can be carried out.

Mr. CROUTER. I think it is not correct that Mr. Keeler wanted to get the dams taken away, because I know he was active in furthering the work. For a number of years I was a member of the County Council of my county, and a large portion of the drowned lands were in my municipality. That gentleman came before our Council, and I did all I could to obtain funds to furnish information in regard to the work. I know that his support of that work would have secured him his seat in the county so long as he was disposed to keep it. I believe this canal is of great importance, not only to the local, but to the general interest of the country, and I would be disposed to oppose any Government that would look lightly on those improvements. If carried through it will be one of the great routes for commerce between the West and East, and the canal will be of the cheap kind—a barge canal. It is very well known that a tug can tow a very large number of barges, which will transport a larger quantity of freight than a single sailing vessel. I look upon the project as one of great advantage to the Government, and it will receive my earnest support.

379. Construction of Works in connection with the Tay Canal..... $50,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a work intended to restore the navigation which formerly existed between the Rideau Canal and the Tay Canal. This canal is to connect the Rideau navigation with the town of Perth. The original canal, built in 1831 and opened for traffic in 1834, has long since been abandoned and hardly any vestige of the original works remains. The length of the proposed canal, by way of Beveridge's Bay, and recommended by Mr. Wise, is $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles, which may be reduced to $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles by making cuts across the bonds of the rivers. The locks to be 130 x 30, with a depth of 5 feet of water on sills—it is proposed to build two locks of 13 feet lift each, the width of the canal prism to be in earth 60 feet and in rock 30 feet. The probable cost, as estimated by Mr. Wise, is \$132,660, but this amount does not include the cost of land damages which may arise from the construction of the proposed dams, the extent of which will be known when a contour survey is made.

327. Intercolonial Railway construction..... $10,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is in connection with Mr. Shanly's office, his salary and the salaries of the staff, and to provide for any legal expenses that may be required to be made in question with the investigation. The expenditure we expect will be within this amount.

329. Intercolonial Railway—Completing and fitting up passenger station at Halifax..... $4,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The upper part of the building has not been finished, and an application has been made by the Nova Scotia Railway Company for accommodation there, and the expenditure will be much more than covered by the rent.

333. To pay damages to the steamer M. C. Upper in the Welland Canal..... $8,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What are the circumstances?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The M. C. Upper was in the canal, having paid her dues, and she was properly moored. The schooner Louise came in contact with the gates, broke them away and led to the damage which was inflicted on the Upper. The official arbitrators reported that the Upper was in no degree to blame, and that while there might not be a strictly legal claim there certainly was an equitable one. The schooner Louise which led to the disaster, owing to mismanagement, carried away part of the gates, and bonds were taken for the damage inflicted. Subsequently the amount claimed on the bonds was considerably reduced, evidence having been given that the gates were considerably decayed. Under these circumstances, and considering that the Upper had paid her canal dues and that there was no negligence contributory or otherwise on her part the Government felt that there was a substantial and fair ground for the favorable consideration of the claim.

Mr. MILLS. Who was the owner?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum).

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the legal claim should have been against the other vessel and not against the Government, who were not to blame in the matter. As it is the Dominion loses this money because the Louise broke the gates and placed the Upper in this position. With regard to damages of this kind the principle I laid down was, that they should be paid for according to the age of the gates and their condition of decay.

Mr. RYKERT. I do not agree with the hon. Minister that there was no legal claim. Mr. McCallum paid all the dues and conformed with all the regulations; and he was fairly entitled to go through without interference; and if this damage was caused by another person's carelessness, surely Mr. McCallum should not be the sufferer. The Government were in the position of common carriers, and the claim was legal as well as equitable or moral. It was stated in the report sent to the Department by the superintendent that Mr. McCallum had not complied with the regulations. It was upon that chiefly that the claim of Mr. McCallum was refused. That report was contradicted by Mr. Bodwell under oath. In his report Mr. Bodwell says:

"In the first place the damage sustained was occasioned by no defects in the Government works, nor by any neglect of duty on the part of the officials in charge of the works. * * * It is stated by the lock-tenders that the M. C. Upper's lines with which she was snubbed at the time were not taut, giving the vessel room to get under headway before the strain upon the lines commenced, and it is their belief that if the lines had been taut they would not have parted. Of this I have no personal knowledge as I was not on the spot at the time of the accident. Upon the above considerations I fail to see any grounds for Mr. McCallum's claim. * * * The vessel lay moored within 110 feet of the lock, whereas (see No. 19 of Canal Regulations) it is provided that when several boats or vessels are lying by or in waiting to enter any canal, they shall lie in single tier at a distance of not less than 300 feet from such lock or entrance. Had the M. C. Upper been moored 300 feet above Lock 21, the chances are that if she had parted her lines, loaded as she was, the rapidity with which the water lowered would have caused her to rest on the bottom of the canal before she reached the breast wall, and no damage would have been sustained."

When Mr. Bodwell was on oath he did not make the same statement. Mr. Bodwell says that the M. C. Upper was further from the lock at the time of the break than his officers reported her to be, and that the gate had been two years longer in use. He further says that if the toe-post was in such condition—and as much worn as Bernard Clarke in his evidence represents it—it should certainly have been reported to him by the division overseer; and his omission to do so would be a serious neglect of duty. He says that it is necessary to have the gates strong in all other parts, and to see that a sufficient strength is kept up in all other parts subjected to a pressure of the water. Some of the gates had given way, although they had been in the lock but for a short time only, as in the case of the gates of Lock

22. He had removed nearly half of the old gates and replaced them by new ones; he found it necessary for the safety of navigation to remove the old gates. It turns out that these gates which he reported as being only in use a short time had been long in use, and some of the gates had been carried away before and were replaced in the lock without being thoroughly repaired. The facts are that the vessel was moored in a particular position, and strictly in accordance with the rules and regulations of the canal. The valves of the upper gates were left open nearly a foot by the lock-tender, and the lower gates struck by the Louise were old gates so far decayed that it was utterly impossible to use them with any safety to the navigation of the canal. The arbitrators make this report:

"In coming to the conclusion that the damage to the M. C. Upper was directly caused by the mismanagement of those on board the schooner Louise, and not by the generally defective condition of the gates of Lock 21 on the Welland Canal; still considering the very contradictory evidence, and the fact that the Government virtually admitted the unsound condition of the gates by reducing the amount of Battle's bond in settlement with them—the fact that there is no corroborative evidence in support of either McAvoy's or Ferris's different statements as to the cause of the accident, in consequence of the death of McTaggart, the lock-tender, the only other party present—the fact that the M. C. Upper was moored in the proper place, and the absence of any proof that her lines were not taut—the fact that Mr. McCallum had paid his canal dues, and that there was no negligence contributory or otherwise on his part or on the part of those acting for or under him at the time of the accident; we have also come to the conclusion that there are substantial and fair grounds for the favorable consideration of the claim."

It will be in the recollection of this House that a return was moved for some time ago, and when that was brought down it showed that when the accident took place the late Minister of Public Works ordered a bond to be given by Mr. Battle for $2,000, and when the matter was referred to the Superintendent he fixed the amount to be paid by Mr. Battle at $1,100; but by some strange manoeuvring on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and through the negotiations of Mr. Thomson, then member for Welland, the amount was reduced to $600. The Superintendent did not know the reason of that change. He reported that the amount should be $1,100, but Mr. Thomson, then high in the favor of the Government, came to Ottawa, and by some strange manipulation induced them to reduce the amount to $600, and that amount was paid unknown to the superintendent. I say, I believe Mr. McCallum had a legal claim; he had paid his dues, and did everything he was called upon to do to entitle him to the free use of that canal, and if anything is damaged by the carelessness of the officials the Government are bound to make it good. The evidence shows that the Government were wrong in their action; they were trying to economize, and the result was that the whole canal ran down, and it became in such a bad state that it was almost unsafe for a vessel to enter the locks. Lock-gate after lock-gate was knocked over simply by the touch of a vessel. Had the canal been properly looked after by Mr. Bodwell the result would have been quite different. It was shown by the arbitrators that the lock gates could hardly stand by themselves, the posts were so rotten. If there was negligence on the part of the Government, they are to blame and ought to pay all the damage. Why was not Mr. Battle held responsible for this faulty condition of the work? It was because he was a strong supporter of the late Government. He came down here and got the amount reduced $500 or $600. The less the hon. member for Lambton says about the matter the better, because everybody who knows all the facts will conclude that Mr. McCallum did everything he could, and that the accident was wholly caused by the carelessness of the canal officials.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I utterly deny that the canal was not in a proper state of repairs.

Mr. RYKERT. You deny everything.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will not deny that the hon. gentleman is very insolent. I would admit that at once. The Chief Engineer invariably obtained all the money he demanded for the repair of all of those works. The hon. gentleman's assumption is wholly untrue, that the works were in that bad state; and the other insinuation that some one obtained a favor for some particular reason is quite unworthy of my consideration. I stated that he was required to pay the value of the locks at the time, but not the price of new locks. I do not think the posts were rotten. There might be some decay in the wood and the gates remained tolerably good. Assuming that to be the case, the charge for new gates would be very unjust. The price we charged was thought proper after consulting the officers of the Department.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In any case the principles attempted to be laid down by the hon. member for Monck is entirely untenable. There is not the slightest ground for holding the Government of Canada liable as common carriers. They are only liable if injury results from the action of their own agents. But the position of the hon. Minister of Canals was that this injury was caused by the mismanagement of another vessel, the schooner Louise—that that was the cause of the injury to the vessel of the hon. member for Monck; if so, I fail to see how the Government can be liable for injury to the steamer. The remedy will be clearly against the Louise. It is not the business of the Government, though asserted by the hon. member for Lincoln, when injury has been done by one private individual to another, to attempt to secure damages in favor of one man against another. The decision must be left to the Courts.

Mr. MILLS. I am sure it will strike every one as a singular doctrine that the Government, as the proprietor of a canal, is a common carrier. You might as well argue that a turnpike road company was a common carrier and liable for the damage of one vehicle to another. The position of the Government is wholly different from that of a railway company. A railway company not only owns the road, but the coaches which makes them common carriers. That the Government does not own the vessels that sail on the canals, and therefore are not common carriers. If a collision occurs on a canal, an injury is done to one vessel by the carelessness and negligence of the master of another, it is only the party who caused the injury that can be held liable.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. member for Lambton has told me that I was very insolent. I would like to return the compliment by telling him on this occasion that he often addresses the House, although his age screens him, in the most insolent manner. I wish him to understand that he is not going to cast those slurs and insults at hon. members on this side without being taken to task for it. Though a little older than myself I have been as long in public life as he, and I will not allow him to charge myself and friends with being insolent without resenting it. When making some allowance for the state of his health, he must recollect that we are his equals in this House, and I will not submit to his impertinence in telling me that I have been insolent towards him. Besides, it was not parliamentary to tell me that my statement was untrue, a statement based on evidence. Mr. Bodwell admitted he had stated what was not correct in his first report. He admitted that the canal was in a bad state of repair, and I say, as a matter of fact, the canal was completely run down. All his whole time was taken up in covering up its defects. I said they were in the position of common carriers, but I did not say they were common carriers. They undertook that Mr. McCallum's vessel should be protected in going through the canal, and if injured by their negligence they were liable.

Mr. RYKERT.

Mr. MACKENZIE. When the hon. gentleman says I would deny anything, he must expect to be answered in a very short manner. Nothing could be more improper than to use such an expression, but every time the hon. gentleman speaks he insults hon. members on this side. Such expressions will not be allowed to pass. As for the hon. gentleman's consideration, I do not desire it or need it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In reply to what fell from the hon. member for South Huron, I want to draw his attention to the position of the question, and I think he will see that there is very great force in the point to which I wish to allude. The accident occurred, from whatever cause. The hon. member for Monck's vessel was wrecked, and he made a claim for damages. The Department of Justice, to which it was referred to know whether the claim was a proper one to be referred to official arbitrators, reported that it was, and the official arbitrators, after careful investigation, reported that the accident was entirely due to causes over which Mr. McCallum had no control. The following is in their report:

"Messrs. Compton, Buchanan and Simard report:—

"In coming to the conclusion that the damage to the M. C. Upper was directly caused by the mismanagement of those on board the schooner Louise, and not by the generally defective condition of the gates on Lock 21 of the Welland Canal; still considering the very contradictory evidence—the fact that the Government virtually admitted the unsound condition of the gates by reducing the amount of Battle's bond in settlement with them—the fact that there is no corroborative evidence in support of either McAvoys' or Ferris's different statements as to the cause of the accident, in consequence of the death of Mr. Taggart the lock-tender, the only other party present—the fact that the M. C. Upper was moored in the proper place and the absence of any proof that her lines were not taut—the fact that Mr. McCallum had paid his canal dues, and that there was no negligence contributory or otherwise on his part, or on the part of those acting for or under him at the time of the accident; we have also come to the conclusion that there are substantial and fair grounds for the favorable consideration of the claim."

Mr. MILLS. Has the hon. gentleman the opinion of the Minister of Justice then?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will produce it later, but the hon. Minister gave an opinion also that it was a proper case to be referred to the official arbitrators.

353. Prince Edward Island Railway..... $12,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This expenditure I was obliged to make owing to the unwonted severity of the winter. The storms on the Intercolonial Railway have been very severe, but nothing as compared with those on Prince Edward Island Railway. A succession of snow-storms of the most unusual character have taken place, and for miles the road was buried up to a great depth, and this expenditure is largely caused by the increased cost for removing the snow.

386. To defray expenses in connection with Public Buildings in Manitoba..... $60,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Winnipeg post office is now too small. We have enlarged it, but the more we enlarge it the less is it capable of accommodating the enormous and increasing crowds of people who visit it. The intention is to have a new post office. The lot on which the old post office stands, being on the main street, is of great value; that will be sold and a new lot purchased.

392. Expenses in connection with Harbors and Rivers in New Brunswick..... $12,500

In reply to Mr. ANGLIN,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With reference to the harbor of Shippegan, the Chief Engineer's estimate of $4,000 is for the completion of the first 1,400 feet of the breakwater at Alexander's Point, which was commenced in 1875. The total length originally recommended was 1,750 feet. The first 900 feet of the breakwater, owing to the lateness of the season, could only be secured in a rough manner, and being left in an imperfect state it has nearly disappeared. We cannot do the whole of this with $4,000, but we will secure the work in such a way as to make it serviceable and prevent it being carried away by the waves.

Mr. ANGLIN. The way in which this work has been managed does not reflect much credit on the Government as a whole. When hon. gentlemen came into office the work was discontinued, because the contractor had broke down. I made an application to the Minister of Public Works to expend the balance of the appropriation, but he refused to do more than expend sufficient money to make the works secure. The work is an important one, in view of the large number of fishing vessels in the locality. I hope the works as proposed will be carried out, and that the breakwater will be run out into the deep water.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry I was unable to visit this place last summer, otherwise I would have been more au fait with the situation there. I may be able to judge of the work. This sum, however, will be sufficient to keep the works from being injured.

393. Harbors and Piers in the Province of Quebec$29,500

Mr. ROGERS. I presume the amount of $2,000 for breakwater in Rusher Bay is for the enlargement of the breakwater at Anderson Hollow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for an addition to the wharf.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand that a petition has been forwarded to the Government asking for money to build a breakwater to protect a wharf at another place a short distance from the one already in course of construction.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been such a petition. This grant is for an addition to the one already begun.

394. Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... $138,450

Mr. MILLS. Is it intended to begin the work at Morpeth for which an appropriation was taken some time ago.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention to begin the work.

In reply to Mr. MILLS,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work on the Sydenham River will be the removal of obstructions between Wallaceburg, Dresden and Wilkesport.

Mr. GILLIES. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that some parties in my section of the country expected that an appropriation would have appeared in the Estimates for the improvement of Inverhuron Harbor. The Minister of Public Works promised on a certain occasion that he would keep this harbor in mind, but nothing has been done in relation to it. It requires improvement, and it has been recognized as one which they should take up.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a grant for Warton Harbor, but unfortunately Inverhuron was one of the harbors on the list which was not adopted in Council.

398 Hydrographic Survey, River St. Lawrence, Quebec to Cap à la Roche $7,500

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I thought that had all been done by the British Navy engineer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in consequence of one of the steamers of the Allan Line having been totally wrecked there. A demand was made on the Government to have a careful survey made of that portion of the coast in order that he might see what obstacles should be removed, and whether any buoys or lighthouses should be erected.

403. For erection of Mounted Police Barracks..... $30,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These barracks will all be erected at the capital of the North-West; and as we intend having the capital selected in a short time, we shall be able soon to give out the contracts.

Mr. ANGLIN. You intend to abandon Battleford?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For that purpose.

Resolutions ordered to be reported, and (at 2:20 a.m.,) House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 11th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 158) to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, and for other purposes.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With regard to the 12th section of the 2nd clause, respecting the electoral district of Muskoka and Parry Sound, I should prefer any discussion on some proposed changes postponed for the present. It is thought more convenient that the township of Ridout, which is now in North Victoria, ought to be, for convenience sake, placed in the north riding of Ontario. It is now united for municipal purposes with Maclean. I move that the 12th section be adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not hear anything about an intention to change the connection of the township of Ridout; but an amendment was proposed adding also the townships to the northward of the said electoral district to it. The statement was that that was an undefined enlargement of the electoral district; and it was suggested that an effort should be made to ascertain the municipal limits of Muskoka and Parry Sound. Obviously, when you mention certain districts like this, and in a way which we notice, you are dealing with a wholly undefined area.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It can be provided that certain townships shall form the constituency and such other townships as may hereafter be here laid down to the north of the said electoral district; that must mean, if they lie to the north of any other electoral district. It cannot mean townships lying to the north of Muskoka.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not mean that the extension was indefinite in its latitude, but in its longitude. It does not matter that they are laid out consecutively to the north. If there is a considerable portion of Ontario to the north of this electoral district here defined, then it is quite clear that township will be left out, one does not know where.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I find a good deal of difficulty about that, but if this clause is allowed to pass, by the time of the third reading I will try to define the district. In relation to section 17, some changes are proposed: in the east riding of Muskoka the township of Gibson is left out, and it is proposed to insert these words: "and all that part of the territorial district of Muskoka lying to the south of the township of Hagerman, and east of Medora and Watt." Part of that county is unsurveyed.

Mr. BLAKE. This is including more territory.

Mr. BOWELL. It includes that territory portions of which are un-surveyed, lying westward of Magog and running to Georgian Bay.

Mr. BLAKE. The practical effect of that proposal will be to disfranchise the inhabitants of that territory. Being unorganized, there is no provision for municipal assessments, which is the basis of the voters' list. There is a special franchise for Muskoka and Algoma in consequence of their possessing so much unorganized territory, and if the hon. gentleman withdraws that district which contains that special provision, and inserts another which does not contain it, he disfranchises the population so transferred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, we will add that back to Muskoka.

Mr. BLAKE. Where does Gibson lie?

Mr. BOWELL. It lies in that portion of the territory to which the Oka Indians have removed, west of Medora and south of Grey.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should it be abstracted from Muskoka then?

Mr. BOWELL. We are putting Gibson in Muskoka.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, proposals of this kind, made without previous notice, cannot be discussed with advantage as we have not at our finger's ends the precise location of every township in Ontario, particularly in those new and unorganized districts. The hon. gentleman should give us an opportunity, before the final disposition of this measure, of looking into what is the final effect of the changes, and give us a statement of the reasons why they are made.

On section 22,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I leave the north riding of Wentworth unaltered.

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate the Conservatives of Halton, particularly of the township of Nelson, on the success with which they have impertuned the hon. gentleman to make these alterations.

On section 23,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that section 23 be struck out.

Mr. BLAKE. I renew my congratulations to the Conservatives of Halton.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 26,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that after the word "Puslinch" the word "Erin" be inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate my hon. friend, the present and future member for South Wellington, on the change.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I might suggest that the clause be struck out altogether. I may say that while the township of Erin will be faithful to the Reform party wherever it is, I have no doubt it is better satisfied to remain as it has always been, part of the county of Wellington.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose that the clause be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 38,

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman reserved this clause for consideration, and strong solicitations were made to him to take the Elgins out of this enormous riding and place them where they ought to be, in the north riding.

Mr. SHAW. It must be observed that though the west riding is large, the north riding comprises a great number of townships; there are the townships of Arran, Elderslie, Amabel, Albermarle and Lindsay, and there are five incorporated villages. Now this part of the country is being rapidly settled, there is the rising village of Warton in the north riding, which is rapidly growing, and in a short time the population of the north riding will be equal to that of the east or west ridings. Looking at the number of townships and the number of villages, there is reasonable ground for believing that there will be a large increase in population. There are three of these townships now connected under one municipal corporation, and very soon, no doubt, these townships will be separate municipalities. It is only a short time since the townships of Amabel and Albermarle were connected with the township of Arran. Then Innisfil was separated from Arran, and subsequently Albermarle has been separated from Amabel. Now, with regard to the west riding, I am glad to observe the hon. leader of the Opposition does not seem to consider it incorrect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. SHAW. Well, he has not mentioned it at all events, and I presume that his silence gives consent as to the propriety of the course taken. The hon. leader of the Opposition, however, must bear in mind, and I believe that the people of the south riding will agree with me, that the proper method of dividing these ridings was to divide them into the east and west. There has been considerable discussion in that county as to the mode of dividing these ridings, and the Reformers have maintained that an outside party should be selected as the candidate, because the interests of the east and west were opposed. They have now been separated, and probably it may be said that the Reformers are hived in the west. Well, if that be the case, the Conservatives are hived in the east. You cannot hive Reformers without hiving the Conservatives, and so no great mischief was done. The question then is simply, is the county territorially growing in population? I think it is. I observe that matter has been discussed in the south riding, and only one objection has been taken to it, namely, by the incorporated village of Lucknow. Now, that village is at the very south of that riding. It was comprised of a portion of three townships, two in the north riding of the county of Huron, one in the south riding of Bruce. As that village now stands, a portion of it votes in the north riding of Huron and a portion in the south riding of Bruce for Dominion elections. The present arrangement will do away with that. It will leave the municipal organization of that village within the west riding of the county of Bruce, and a very proper arrangement it is. The same course was adopted with that village when it was incorporated; it was placed in the south riding of the county of Bruce for electoral purposes to the Local Legislature, and as regards that, I might just refer to the question of population. It is said the arrangement with regard to that village will benefit the present hon. member for the north riding of Huron, that it will take some Reformers from his riding and add them to the west riding of the county of Bruce. That is so, but the same course was adopted by Mr. Mowat's Government when that village was incorporated and put into the west riding, notwithstanding that the vote of South Bruce was much larger than the vote of North Huron and larger than the vote of North Bruce. I might also remark that the village of Tiverton, which lies on the border between North and South Bruce, was also brought into South Bruce for the reason that South Bruce was a little doubtful in its vote, while there was no doubt as to the vote of North Bruce. South Bruce was always doubtful, and although its population was nearly double the population of North Bruce, still these villages were both added to South Bruce in order to increase the Reform majority there. That was done by Mr. Mowat's Government, and although that is no argument for adopting the same course in Federal elections, still the Reformers of that riding have no ground to complain if Mr. Mowat's course be followed by the House of Commons. The leader of the Opposition has deprecated interference with municipal organizations, and he has contended that electoral divisions should coincide with county and township divisions. My opinion is that it does not make much difference as regards counties, but certainly it makes a difference when townships are divided, because they would then be required to have two sets of voters' lists. My hon. friend from West Durham referred approvingly to the speech of the leader of the Government in 1872 in favor of maintaining the county organizations the same as the electoral divisions. One would consider, however, that his position, as former representative of South Bruce, was a little different from the position he takes to-day on that question. In that speech the leader of the Government said that a young man first enters the Township Council, and if he there displays some ability he is selected as a reeve, then he graduates into the County Council, probably becomes warden, and finally represents his county in Parliament. Now, it is worthy of remark that the first entrance of my hon. friend into political life was by successfully opposing the warden of that county. That warden was a farmer in the county, he became a councillor, then a warden, then a reeve, and finally warden of the county, and then the hon. leader of the Opposition defeated him.

Mr. BLAKE. And then another of them.

Mr. SHAW. It did not end there, we put forward another gentleman in that riding. He was first a councillor, then a reeve, and afterwards warden, and the hon. gentleman defeated him. The fact was that no municipal officer in that county would be returned by the Conservative party, and it had finally to get a lawyer to try issues with the hon. gentleman. Such were the acts of the hon. leader of the Opposition; but perhaps he is not here to give his own opinions on the matter, but simply to advocate the opinions of the party he represents. It appears to me from the hon. gentleman's acts in connection with South Bruce, that he was simply carrying out the opinions of the party, and whatever the Reform party desired that he sought to carry out irrespective of county or municipal organization. It may be said it was all right that the hon. gentleman should oppose those wardens, and if it had ended with simple opposition it would have been well enough, but when all the influence of a party is brought to bear against the municipal officers who are running for Parliamentary honors, the position is a great deal worse. Those elections, although I do not charge any corruption or impropriety against the leader of the Opposition—

Mr. BLAKE. You had better not.

Mr. SHAW. By no means, I do not mean to do so, and I do not do so; but I do say that a large amount of money was expended in those ridings to carry the elections, and that the hon. gentleman did carry the election by these means, and that he would not have carried it by any other means. I say, further, that managers of money-lending institutions were sent, not gerrymandering through the country, but meandering through it, where they had mortgages—two or three of them—during these elections, and that they did produce an effect in the county, and the result which was intended, the election of the hon. gentleman. I have heard it said, and I believe there is truth in it, that the leader of the Opposition felt some delicacy in accepting the position after he was elected, having ascertained that so much money had been spent there; but party exigencies again overcame the objection and the hon. gentleman accepted the situation. Those things usually have to be done for the purpose of party, it is said, and I suppose the Reformers are not much better than the Conservatives in that respect, although they profess a great deal more. I would not have extended my remarks to such a length upon those clauses, were it not that I heard the right hon. leader of the Opposition say that the division of the Bruces was one of the grossest cases. I am glad he has said that, that he has expressed that opinion, because, when it is committed to the electors of that county, I have no fear of their opinion on that subject if that is the grossest case.

Mr. BLAKE. I never said that was the grossest case. I said it was one of the grossest cases.

Mr. SHAW. If it is one of the grossest cases, I think it will be accepted by the county as about fair and just.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman heard my speech, and he has produced his own speech.

Mr. SHAW. Not from notes at all events.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has endeavored to show that my course is inconsistent, because I defeated two candidates who happened to be wardens. I have always said, and made the statement publicly on the platform, that a local man had many points of advantage over a stranger in a political contest. I stated that I only asked to be judged and voted for, for or against, after a fair and just allowance had been made. I have always admitted that candidates, such as wardens, possessed a great advantage, but the hon. leader of the Government proposes to deprive local residents of those advantages, by abolishing the system of county organization. That did not occur in the case of Bruce, because it was divided into electoral districts, but it applied to the bulk of the changes as brought down. Of course, some clauses have since been altered; within a few minutes three clauses proposing great disruption have been altered for reasons which we all understand. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Shaw) says that the public opinion of the Bruces will approve of this proposed division, and that he is glad to hear that I said it is one of the grossest cases in the Bill, immediately afterwards stating that I had said it was the grossest case, thus contradicting himself. I said it was one of the grossest cases—I think so; it is not the grossest case, but one of the grossest cases. Here is a county which, even under the circumstances of the elections of 1878, under the difficulties in which the elections were run, particularly in Bruce as affecting the south riding, which the hon. gentleman well knows returned a majority of Reform votes. There was a majority in the combined votes of the two divisions recorded for the Reformers as against the Conservatives, and so it has been in preceding elections for a considerable time; and the hon. gentleman says that the honest men of Bruce will approve of the division, the inequality of population, and the design to stultify the voice of the majority, and give the Conservatives two votes out of three in a county, the people's voice from which, even as judged by the elections of 1878, was Reform rather than Conservative. That is the hon. gentleman's opinion of the majority and fair spirit of the electors of Bruce. I do not share it. There may be men there blind to everything but a sense of party advantage, who think politics is a game in which it is proper to strive with the opinions of the majority, and while the majority of the electors under the most unfavorable circumstances goes Reform, they so readjust the representation that two-thirds shall be Conservative and one-third minority. I do not doubt there are such, but many of the hon. gentleman's supporters will say it is not just, fair and reasonable, and since it does not equalize the population it is obvious that the purpose is that which I have stated. Of course, the hon. gentleman considers he has a convenient majority in that portion of the riding for which it is possible he can stand. It was impossible to provide otherwise without taking a portion of a strong Reform county; but the result of the division is to make a middle and two ends, so that according to the returns of 1878, the two ends will be strongly Conservative, and the middle an unfortunately stronger Reform constituency. It would have been more fair and just to have divided the south riding and have left the west riding untouched.

Mr. SHAW. Suppose it were done.

Mr. BLAKE. I will not suppose so, because it is not going to be; but nothing the hon. gentleman has said has furnished any argument for diminishing the population of the north riding to 17,300 as against 25,000. We know the reasons, Sir. The reason is, that because an equalization of the population would have given the north riding to the Reformers, or made the result doubtful, the hope to avoid that result, and a Bill professedly based on equalization, having its justification in the argument that equalization was necessary, contains on the face of it this glaring inequality: that these two townships are taken from the north riding and put to the west riding, making a difference of about 7,000 in population for the sole and only purpose of accomplishing this nefarious result, and stifling the voice of the electorate, and providing that a county, which has a majority of Reformers and a minority of Conservatives, shall give its voice in Parliament for two Conservatives and one Reformer. If the north riding of Bruce increases in population in future years make your readjustment then. Deal with the necessities of the case as they arise. The hon. gentleman talks about the villages and the number of townships, but we know the conditions of the north riding of Bruce and the Indian Peninsula as compared with other parts of the county. We all know that the expectations of the hon. gentleman are not likely to be so extensively realized as he seems to imagine. I say the profession is a hollow one, an unjustifiable one.

Mr. SHAW. The hon. gentleman contradicts himself. He has stated before, that even with the township of Saugeen and the village of Port Elgin, and if the south riding were then divided into east and west, there would still be a deficiency of 163 in the Reform vote, and that simply increases it, so that if divided into east and west the Reformers will still be behind in the north, and the north riding would have a majority of 163 Conservative votes over the Reform votes. So it cannot be placed in the north riding, except for the purpose of increasing the majority. That can be the only argument he can use. The majority is there without the addition of that township. It is, therefore, done for the purpose of giving it proportion in territory as well as in population. He does not deny that the territory is large; that it is unsettled; that these townships will be filled up in the future and that shortly. The hon. leader of the Government has not said that he intended altogether to divide the constituencies according to population, but both by population and territory, and that principle has been kept in view in the north riding as well as in the east. In that respect I deny that there is anything wrong in this Bill, and the hon. gentleman must be aware of it. According to the last returns there were, without Bruce, 163 Conservative majority already. It was unnecessary to divide it the way proposed by this Bill in order to make the north riding Conservative. It would have been a Conservative riding with the township of Bruce annexed to the south riding. In any view of the situation, the hon. gentleman will not deny that the township should have gone to the north riding.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says that the leader of the Government considered territory as well as population. This is the first time we have heard that. We did not hear that from the hon. Minister before, but let me give him an instance of the manner in which territory is considered in this Bill. The county of Frontenac for electoral purposes contains 320 square miles and a population of 14,983, and a very large portion of the municipal territory of the county of Frontenac has been cut off and added to Addington. For electoral purposes the county of Addington contains 2,057 square miles and a population of 23,470.

Mr. BLAKE.

If you wanted to consider territory as well as population, of course, provision ought to be made for subtracting from Addington in territory and population, municipally belonging to Frontenac. But the grossest inequality of territory is preserved in this scheme. Over 2,000 miles is taken from the small and given to the large by the old Bill and unaltered by this. As the hon. gentleman says, look at the returns of 1878, and you will see that there is a majority of Conservatives in North Bruce even with the subtraction of the township of Saugeen and the village of Port Elgin. It is true that is the case by the returns of 1878. As I said before, the voice of the county of Bruce spoke with only something like 100 of a majority on that occasion; but I said it spoke under great difficulties, and the hon. gentleman knows that that is not the present voice of North Bruce. He knows that it would be dangerous to the Conservative cause in the north riding to leave Saugeen and Port Elgin in, and it is because it would be dangerous to leave them there that they are taken from the north riding and put in the other. That is the case I say, and I believe that nine men out of every ten in this country will believe it to be the case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman found fault with the Bill, because it made too many changes, but now we find he wants more changes made. He has alluded to one illustration with which I am somewhat familiar. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the division of the counties of Addington, Frontenac and Lennox, was made some years ago, at the suggestion and with the approval of the hon. gentleman who sits beside him (Sir Richard J. Cartwright). I am certain that hon. gentleman was consulted as to the division of those counties, and why does he find fault now? I have no doubt that a great many more changes might be made, but the Government knew that every additional change would be found fault with by hon. gentlemen opposite, and when we listened to the agonizing shrieks which they sent up, when the Bill was brought down, that the Government had legislated themselves into power for another ten years—

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say so.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The Globe newspaper said so.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You cannot do it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They say so now; they did not say so last week. The Globe said that Sir John A. Macdonald had legislated himself into power for another ten years. These gentlemen say that the people of Ontario are discontented, dissatisfied, impoverished by the policy of the Government; discontented with the Canadian Pacific Railway policy of the Government, dissatisfied with all the scandals connected with them—anxious to turn them out—and yet this wave of discontent has not swept over the country equally. We are told that the rain falls from Heaven upon the just and the unjust alike; but it appears that this wave of discontent has not swept over the country in the same equal manner, but that it has jumped from township to township, and only lighted on a few townships, which the hon. gentleman, with that prescience which distinguished him, finds grouped together in this Bill. I would ask any hon. gentleman in this House, does he think it possible that if the majority of the people of Ontario are dissatisfied with the present Government and their policy, can they be hived together? Can the minority hive the majority? No, Sir, it is impossible. Hon. gentlemen opposite know, and the terror which they display at this Bill shows, that they feel it in the supreme hour of their political existence; just as the last hour before dissolution, when they and we alike are going to meet our judge, the people, that they have to give an account of the policy they have pursued in this House, they have to show whether their opposition to this Government and its policy has been just and fair and proper. They know that all their declarations, all their oppositions, will be regarded by the people as vox et præterea nihil.

Mr. RYMAL. Say it over again.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, I shall say it over again that the people will tell them it is all wind, all gas, all nonsense, what they have been uttering. I do not know whether it would be parliamentary for me to use an expression with reference to the minority here which has been used with reference to a minority elsewhere. We know that lately an Irish member of Parliament was called to account by his constituents for having voted in favor of the cloture resolutions in the Imperial House of Commons, and he wrote to tell his constituents that they did not understand the subject, and that the cloture was necessary as a guardian of free debate, and as a protection of the majority against a "blatherskite" minority. Now, I hope it will not be found that all the opposition to the Government for the last four years has been "blatherskite," and that all the dissatisfied people can be hived together in a few townships, so that their influence will not be felt. I say, again, that it is impossible for the minority to hive the majority, and if the supporters of the present Government are, as hon. gentlemen say, in a minority in the Province of Ontario, then I say it is impossible to so group the constituencies that hon. gentlemen opposite will not have a majority from that Province. But by their language in this House, by the terror they have shown, by the agonizing shrieks they have given, we see that they believe they are lost as a political party. I accept this Bill as the best one which I believe could be produced under the present state of things, although, for my own part, I believe another principle might have been very properly introduced, and that is the principle of grouping together some of the constituencies into districts, so as to give representation to the minority in those districts. I believe that the Parliament of this country should be the mirror of the nation, that it should represent faithfully, all shades of thought in the country, and that the minority in every district should be represented here. I would like to see the city of Toronto, for instance, with its three representatives, made a district in which every man would have two votes, so that the minority would have one representative from that city; and I would like to see the same principle applied to some of the other large districts. That is my view, but it does not receive the weight which I think it is entitled to, and it is useless for me to press it. But under the present system, when we come to divide up the country so that each constituency will have one member, then I say the right hon. gentleman has striven to his utmost in this Bill, to give a fair representation according to population. For the last quarter of a century, hon. gentlemen opposite have been dinging into his ears, and badgering him with resolution after resolution, to adopt the principle of representation by population; and he has striven in this Bill to do so as far as possible. But whatever he does meets with the same opposition from hon. gentlemen opposite. They never admit that anything he introduces can have a principle of right about it at all. When we consider that the Province of Ontario has a right to have four additional members, and consider that the representation of Cornwall and Niagara have been taken away, we must see that the Government has made as few changes in the representation as possible by this Bill, and that they have been guided solely, apparently by a desire to equalize the population. When hon. gentlemen opposite declare that the Bill has done them an injury, they do not think what it has done to hon. gentlemen on our side of the House. There are two hon. gentlemen on this side legislated out of their seats altogether, but we do not hear a word of condolence for them. Because the Bill has not been framed to meet their views, they declare that it is wrong. I do not think the House or the country will regard it in the same light, but every fair-minded man who looks at it dispassionately will say that it is designed to give Ontario a far representation according to population.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I think it is very fit that the hon. member for Frontenac should appear as the champion of this Bill. There were three principles laid down by the hon. First Minister and the hon. Minister of Customs, which they said had regulated their ideas in framing it: one was the principle of equalizing the population, another the principle of having regard to territory, and the third the principle of having regard to growth. Each one of these three principles, in the case of the hon. member for Frontenac, has been grossly violated. His constituency contains 300 square miles as against 120 square miles in the neighboring constituency; it has a population of 14,900, while the constituency alongside has 23,870; his county during the last ten years has lost nearly 10 per cent. of its population, while the county alongside grew nearly 10 per cent. The hon. gentleman is, therefore, the right man in the right place in upholding as gross a piece of trickery as ever was inflicted on any people. There is not one single solitary principle that those hon. gentlemen ever professed, including the principles professed by the hon. First Minister in 1872, which this Bill does not grossly and daringly violate. And naturally the hon. gentleman whose constituency is an example of distinct violation of the three rules which this hon. gentleman laid down, is the first to applaud it. The hon. gentleman spoke of some remarks made on this side of the House, as being vox et præterea nihil. He could not have hit on a better description, not only in his own speech on this occasion, but of his usual speeches in this House. In the present speech there was not one original idea; the only idea uttered was one stolen from the Aurora speech of the hon. member for West Durham—that Parliament should be a mirror of the feelings of the people.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That idea was expressed long before.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. As regards Lennox, I had something to do with arranging that county in 1867; as regards Frontenac and Addington, I do not remember having taken any particular action. But, in 1876, Lennox, which then contained a population of 16,500, was within the nearest fraction of the fair quotient which the several constituencies ought to have contained. But I merely rose to call attention to the extreme propriety and fitness of the hon. member for Frontenac, who in his own person unites all the objections that can well be taken to the measure, being its advocate.

Mr. GILLIES. I was very much surprised to hear the hon. member for South Bruce bring forward the point he has urged. As to the facts of the case, they are so plain as to require little argument. This county has got 64,000 population, giving 21,000 for each riding. The only point he endeavored to make was that the territory to the north was larger than the territory to the west and south. Now, the Indian Peninsula was offered for sale in the fall of 1855 at Owen Sound, and a very large portion sold. At the same time other portions of Bruce were also offered for sale, and were sold and settled. How was it that the Indian Peninsula in that section, if it was a country capable of settlement, was not settled? The simple reason is that the country is so rocky and difficult of settlement that no people would settle in it. In the days when it was offered for sale, shortly after the Russian war, there was a land fever, and any actual purchasers did not know the quality of the land. Finding it was so inferior in quality people would not settle on it. Of late years some settlers have gone in to take off the timber. The more people know of this region, the more they are inclined to view it as inferior for agricultural purposes. Not more than one farmer in fifteen would settle upon the part yet unsettled; and instead of that country increasing in population, it is more likely to decrease during the next decade. So, if that was the only ground for the argument of the hon. member for South Bruce, it would have been better if he had not presented it. I am somewhat surprised that they desired to push through this measure. It was shown, by the last election, that the Conservatives would certainly have as good a chance as they could have desired or can wish for to defeat any candidate in the Liberal cause for North Bruce, so there are no grounds for saying there should be an increase of the population in the west riding unless it be to make doubly sure of defeating a Liberal in the north riding. The Conservatives will certainly have something in the neighborhood of 150 or 200 of a majority, with which they surely should be satisfied. For their own sake, the Conservatives should show some liberality in this matter; it would certainly be more in their own favor than dividing that county in the way proposed. It will be found, when the redistribution is made, that instead of increasing that section of the country, it will diminish it as compared with the other ridings in that county. The arguments offered by the hon. first Minister, and especially by the hon. member for South Bruce, are simply technical and flimsy, and therefore discreditable to them. If the Government desire to carry this measure through, in its crude iniquity, as seems apparent, there is one thing that will be satisfactory: that it will, to a certain extent, carry its own destruction to this side of the House with it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for the west riding of Durham made a suggestion a little while ago, similar to the proposal of this motion—that Saugeen and Port Elgin should be taken away from the west riding and added to the north. Now, I will meet the hon. gentleman half way; we will take Port Elgin from the west riding and add it to the north riding of Bruce.

Mr. BLAKE. I am delighted to hear the hon. gentleman make that proposal. The return for Port Elgin shows that Port Elgin is about equally divided in political opinion, and that it would not hurt his Tory candidate to put it in the north riding. Why does he not propose that Port Elgin shall be taken into the riding. Everybody knows why. He proposes to leave with us the smaller of the two in point of population, so as to make the discrepancy as much as he can, Port Elgin having 1,100 and the other over 2,200 of a population. He proposes to leave with the north riding that which has a very slight Reform majority, and to take into the riding in which he is living the Grits that have a substantial majority. I am glad the hon. gentleman makes the proposal, because it indicates that in every line of the Bill, and every amendment proposed, he has but one idea, that of strengthening his own friends and weakening his adversaries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was the hon. gentleman, and not I, who made the proposition. To be sure he wanted the two. I made no suggestion, because I was quite satisfied with his division. The hon. gentleman asked for the whole, and we give him the half, and half a loaf is better than no bread. The hon. gentleman would like us to do as Mr. Mowat did in Huron—take Goderich and a slice running along the shore in order to connect it by an artificial connection. Suppose we take a strip of Saugeen and Port Elgin, would that satisfy the hon. gentleman? We have a precedent for it in the Local Legislature.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says he did not propose to add Port Elgin to the north riding. No; he proposed to take it from the north riding, and his counter proposal to my hon. friend now is that he will remit so much population in the north riding as is comprised in the village of Port Elgin, and I say we know the reason. We see from that what the hon. gentleman considers is the political complexion of these two municipalities, and while dealing with it in a way in which he pretends to remedy the evil, he substantially makes no particular change. The majority in Port Elgin was nine, so that the leader of the Government, having looked at the electoral returns, or heard from the hon. Minister of Customs or somebody else, that Port Elgin is about equally divided and that Saugeen is a strong Grit town, takes this process ostensibly to meet the views of hon. gentlemen on this side, while in reality making no material concession to their wishes. By replacing Port Elgin, which is about equally divided, no material change is made, while by not replacing Saugeen, which has a strong Liberal majority, the Liberals are hived as originally intended.

Mr. SHAW. There is one remark I would like to make in reply to the hon. member for North Bruce. He has forgotten to mention in regard to the Indian Peninsula, that no railway has been constructed to run into that district until lately. One is now under construction, and that portion of the county is now being opened up. That accounts largely for the increase of population in late years, and that increase is going on. No doubt Port Elgin is very equally divided. Surely, therefore, there could be no objection to its going into the north riding. If it is considered better, I might make another suggestion, that is, to divide the township of Saugeen and let half go to the north and half to the south riding.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should we divide it?

Mr. SHAW. To come nearer your opinion, that the populations should be more nearly equalized and less regard paid to territory. We believe the present arrangement is fair. It is a matter that has been discussed in that county by my hon. friend and myself. I recollect we discussed representation by population, and I recollect the very last time I met my hon. friend at Port Elgin at a public meeting. I stated I was aware that at this Session the county of Bruce would ask for another representative, and he would be here to assist me. I am sure he does not object to that, but only to the division.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman, in the first instance, was represented by the hon. First Minister as his agent. Now, he makes a proposition in his own name. He tells us he is willing to divide Saugeen. A few moments ago he said that the township and village municipality was a very convenient unit, but very great inconvenience would arise from any attempt to divide township and village municipalities as two voters' lists would be required, and many other inconveniences would result. It is perfectly obvious, from the offer the hon. gentleman makes, that he feels this matter is entirely in his own hands, that he is here as the proprietor of the county of Bruce, and that the hon. First Minister is simply his agent; and the reports we heard of townships being traded off and of the disputes that took place are verified by the proposition of the hon. member for South Bruce. The hon. gentleman stated that there is a prospect of population coming into North Bruce, and that therefore the division of that county into ridings ought not to be equal, and that South Bruce and West Bruce ought to have a larger population than North Bruce. I supposed that, in making a division under this Census, we were acting on the Census taken, and not on some imaginary Census that might exist at some future period. The elections that will take place in the course of a few weeks will be elections by the electors that are in the constituencies at present, and the members returned will be the representatives of those electors and not the representatives of a population likely to be there at some future time. There is a provision of the Constitution requiring us to readjust the population every ten years on the basis of the Census, but that does not prevent readjustment within the limits of each Province at any intervening Session. What we have to do now is to provide a fair representation for the population that now exists. If the population in one section of a county is largely increased because it is rapidly settled, there will be no difficulty in altering the boundaries and redistributing the seats in a manner that will be fair to the population at some future Session. When the inequality arises we will have no difficulty in dealing with it. But at this moment we have to look at things as they are, to the Census that has just been taken; and we find that the hon. gentleman, under pretence of equalizing the constituencies, proposes to create in one riding of Bruce a constituency with a population of nearly 25,000, and in another riding a constituency with a population of 17,000, a difference of nearly 8,000. Now, what justification is there for this? None, except that the hon. gentleman sought to place a great majority of the Reformers of the three ridings in one riding. I say that the proposition under consideration is a monstrous one. It is unjust. It seeks to give to a minority of the electorate in the county of Bruce, two out of the three representatives, and the tenacity with which the leader of the Government and the hon. gentleman who represents South Bruce, adhere to the division that has been made, the care with which they seek to protect the Conservative majority in the north from being turned into a minority, show what the real object is that arrived at by this measure. I do not believe this measure will succeed in accomplishing the object the hon. gentleman has in view, because I have a better opinion of human nature than the hon. gentleman. I do not believe that men are as base as he assumes they are. I do not believe that every member of the Conservative party, because he approves of the general policy of the Administration, is so base, so cowardly, as to seek to secure the control of the Government when he believes the majority of the people do not favor it. There are men opposed to us, who are ready to engage in manly warfare; they are not corrupt followers ready to butcher the wounded and plunder the dead. When the hon. gentleman makes this proposition and undertakes to defend it by such arguments as have been advanced by the hon. member for South Bruce, who knows right well what his object was, and that so far as an Act of Parliament can secure their election, they have undertaken to pass an Act of Parliament with that object. But I believe there is a sufficient number of honest men in the Conservative party to defeat the hon. gentleman's scheme, and I am glad to think so, because it would be a most disastrous thing if a measure of this kind should be approved by the majority of the people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If this measure is not going to succeed, and is going to have all the effect the hon. gentleman predicts, why does he object? Why do they make such a row about it? But there is no satisfying the hon. gentleman. We tried to meet his proposition half way, to the extent of Port Elgin, then my hon. friend from South Bruce makes a further suggestion, and the hon. gentleman had the unparliamentary weakness of attacking him for stating his opinion, and the hon. gentleman stated that I was acting as his agent.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong there. The hon. gentleman has no right to talk that way. It is not right to use the language he did a little while ago. Using that kind of language is not the way to get on in Parliament or out of Parliament, or to increase the respect of the members in Parliament for each other, or of the people outside for their representatives. It is only the violence of a weak nature, of a womanish nature, a disposition to scratch and bite; nothing can be more unmanly, nothing can be more weak, and it is rather a libel on the ladies to say it is feminine, but it leans that way.

Now the hon. gentleman says we want representation by population. But they do not really want it. They want, instead of giving the Grits, that the Tories should be hived, that is all. Then my hon. friend behind me says: "Let us go half way, there is an inequality of population and we will give you Port Elgin." That is his proposition, and he is quite at liberty to move it. We will give you half Saugeen, and you won't accept it. You won't have anything but just your own way. You are not seriously in favor of representation by population, nor will you accept it, nor even an approximation to equality, but you want simply to give the Tories. The hon. gentleman says that it is a mistake to look into the future in readjusting the representation of Canada, that we must take the present population. The hon. gentleman did not say so when Algoma got a representative, or when Muskoka got a representative. That was accepted on the ground that there was a rush of immigration to those two sections—accepted by the whole House, and the result showed it was right. Muskoka, which had 8,000 inhabitants in 1872, has nearly 30,000 in 1882. And so it will be in the north riding of Bruce. My hon. friend has truly said that there has been a large influx of population. The Census shows that the increase of North Bruce has been much larger than in any other part of Bruce. When the railway which is rapidly approaching completion, reaches Warton that county will be pretty well settled, for it is now settling rapidly. The hon. member for North Bruce, who was present at a deputation which came down to see me during the present Session, said that the people were going in there so rapidly that the licenses to cut timber which had been given to Cook & Co., must be stopped in order to prevent the deterioration of their farms. That was this very Session—not for the purpose of re-arranging the representation, but in the interest of the settlers. He stated there was a great influx of population there, and that the railway was going to increase it; but as North Bruce was very large in territory, and was a broken land, not continuously fertile, that the most valuable part would be the timber, and if the timber were cut by the lumbermen, the company that had got the licenses, the land would be so deteriorated that further influx would be arrested. The proposition that has been made is not acceptable to the hon. gentleman, but we cannot help it; therefore we will take it as it is, for the present anyway.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As I understand hon. gentlemen opposite, they object to this particular clause because it gives the political minority in the county of Bruce a majority of the seats. Well, Sir, the answer of the hon. First Minister is sufficient to that. But if that were not so, we have a capital precedent to justify even a proceeding of that kind, a precedent which hon. gentlemen opposite, at any rate, did not complain of. It is drawn from the legislation of that body where Reform principles find their most perfect illustration, I mean the Legislature of Ontario presided over by Mr. Mowat. I find that, according to their Readjustment Bill, but of the territory of fifteen constituencies which returned Conservatives in the Session of the Legislature of 1871 to 1875, twelve of those thirteen were so readjusted as to return supporters of the Government. That is not all. I find in those particular constituencies the Conservative votes polled at the preceding election, were 13,677 and the Reform votes 13,611, some sixty-six less, and yet they readjusted those constituencies so that they gave from that lesser number of Reform votes, nine out of thirteen representatives. The hon. gentleman comes here and tells us that in the readjustment of the representation of the constituency, where there is in one portion of it a large unoccupied territory, which with railways running into that territory and the improvements going on in that country, is certain to become largely populated in the early future, the result of this measure, so far as it relates to that constituency, may be to give the minority, as they call it, a majority of the representatives. Then, as I understand it, they also object to this measure because some constituencies have been left as they were instead of being changed. They refer to the constituency of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), and they say it was not touched, because if it had been touched it would probably either injure him or some surrounding constituency politically, and therefore nothing was done. If that were true—I do not say it is true—we have again a precedent for that to be drawn from the legislation of that body where, as I have said, Reform principles find their most perfect illustration. What do we find? We find that Brockville, in the preceding Legislature, was represented by a Conservative, the hon. member who now represents it in this House. It had a population, at that time, of 10,475. It was necessary to readjust the representation there, and therefore they added some of the surrounding municipalities so as to give it a population of 13,937—of course, entirely with a view of equalizing the representation as compared with the population. But, when we come to Cornwall, what do we find? We find a smaller population, only 7,114. Yet, what was the fact? They left that as it was, and for the reason given in the comments of the press at the time. And in regard to Cornwall, we can find no better justification than that given in the columns of the Globe. On the 15th of September, 1874, that journal stated:

“Cornwall alone is left untouched, in obedience certainly not to any political exigencies, but to the very strongly expressed desire of the surrounding constituencies to remain for the present without alteration. A desire it was the more easy to gratify because there was no reason to suppose a change would be made in the political character of the representation of the district by any reasonable scheme of readjustment that could be devised.”

So that in the case of Cornwall, where nothing could be done to improve things, because nothing could be done to improve things this small borough was left untouched; but in the case of Brockville, where something could be done to improve things, according to the view of hon. gentlemen opposite, a large addition was made from the surrounding district to that constituency.

Mr. BOWELL. What was the result?

Mr. WHITE. A gentleman who is not likely to get a seat in South Grenville, who had worn his welcome out, found a very comfortable seat at Brockville. I do not say this object was to give him a seat, but the object was to give some one who is favorable to the Government a seat. So we have this fact, that in the legislation of the Reform party, when they had absolute control of it, they gave to a minority of votes, nine out of thirteen seats; and in those two boroughs to which I have referred, in one case they readjusted it in order to secure a change, and, in the other case, according to their own statements, they left it as it was, because they could not improve its political complexion. If ever there was hypocrisy exemplified it was in the attempt of hon. gentlemen opposite to raise the cry that political exigencies alone dictated the changes made in this particular Bill.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The last speaker has attempted to prove that political exigencies demanded the measure now before this House for the hon. gentleman quoted as a precedent, and as the authority and warrant for its submission, that the Mowat Government had enacted a measure something of the same kind and for the purpose of securing seats for the supporters of his Government. The hon. gentleman appears to have been cognizant of the fact that this measure had been proposed for political effect, and the defence is that the leader of a Government in another House had committed a similar act. I deem that it is not true, for the leader of the Ontario Government endeavored to preserve county boundaries, a principle which is violated under the present measure. In regard to the equalization of population, it will be remembered there was very little excitement and expression in regard to the Ontario Government. As far as I am aware, little exception was taken to the affair, but the hon. gentleman is aware that there is indignation deep, loud and widespread over this measure, and that it is not confined to the Reform party. Why, to-day, the hon. gentleman has restored South Wellington and North Wentworth, and hon. members on this side of the House think it is in obedience to the demand from political supporters in Halton. The hon. gentleman, exercising a spirit of fairness, should meet the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Gillies) half way. If the hon. the leader of the Government has any sense of fair play left he will accept the proposition of that hon. member. Granting there may be greater increase of population, and, compared with the other riding, the change proposed by that hon. member would still leave his riding with 2,000 more than the other riding. The hon. the leader of the Government having shown his willingness to go so far in amending the Bill, will be guilty of showing the white feather if he does not entertain the proposition. If Saugeen and Port Elgin are added to North Bruce—and it is known that the present member has been already nominated as the candidate for the riding—the change would only give him about one hundred and seventy votes more towards a chance of political existence in the next contest. Let there be some sense of manliness, some sense of fair play. Let hon. gentlemen go into the contest prepared to vindicate their principles of equalization of population as near as possible; accept the hon. gentleman's amendment, for in doing so you will still leave his riding 2,000 less than the other ridings of Bruce.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. I make the numbers 20,735 as against West Bruce, 22,355, but an hon. member informs me I am out 1,000.

Mr. SHAW. Nearer 2,000.

Mr. PATERSON. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that that would equalize the population? Would North Bruce be still less?

Mr. SHAW. A little, I think.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman makes the admission and the point is gained. If they yield to the proposition of my hon. friend, North Bruce will still be in a minority, but hon. gentlemen cannot go on to lay down their high and holy principle of equalizing the population while they perpetrate this inequality. I am glad to notice that the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Shaw) displays at last a little sense of shame—or shall I call it, a spirit of manliness. We heard him rise and defend the Bill as it stood, he defended the monstrous iniquity of allowing a population of 17,000 in North Bruce and 25,000 in West Bruce. But when the hon. Premier was prepared to give a little in a direction which would not hurt him, the hon. gentleman, for the purpose of having his character stand a little better in the minds of the honorable men of Bruce, before whom he is shortly to go, remarked that he was willing to give up half of Saugeen. The hon. gentleman, for the purpose of strengthening himself, though he had a majority of seventy-five, took steps—for he was a party to it—did not we hear him say, “we,” as he spoke of this arrangement? What did this hon. gentleman of the “we” party arrange to do with reference to himself? He was afraid to meet the electors without having 461 votes added to the seventy-five which he had before, and yet he thinks it consistent with the position of an honorable, a fair-minded and a manly man to refuse to give up the township of Saugeen. I say it is lowering the dignity of the House, and one of the worst features of the Bill is that hon. gentlemen, who should regard one another with fair-play and decency, lead themselves to tactics so unfair and dishonorable. I am willing to give hon. gentlemen opposite all the legitimate political advantage to which they are entitled in arranging for four new constituencies, but this running up and down the whole Province, and striking at men whose hands are tied is unfair, unmanly and unworthy of any political party. If, as we have just heard, and for the first time, territory is to be regarded as well as population, I can suggest some interesting problems for hon. gentlemen opposite. For example, if territory is an element in the redistribution, why should the township of Oakland be taken from my riding which comprises about fifteen miles, and added to another which is fifty miles long? If territory is to be taken into account, what shall we say in reference to taking Ancaster out of the county of Wentworth right against the city limits of Hamilton, and taking Blenheim, almost adjoining the corporation limits of Woodstock—points about fifty miles apart—and throwing them into one riding about five or six miles wide? Hon. gentlemen had better, for the sake of their own credit, give up the pretence of paying regard to territory because there are too many instances which show that that consideration had no weight with them. So far as we can judge, if they refuse the motion before the Committee they will show that they have paid no regard to equalization, no regard to territorial arrangement, and that their only desire has been to strengthen their own men in the various constituencies, to use their legislative power to stab their political opponents when their hands are tied. I am sure you, Mr. Chairman (Mr. Colby) as a fair-minded man, will agree with me, as others on that side will, that hon. gentlemen cannot pretend to indicate the principle of equalizing the population unless they accept the amendment. If they refuse, they will simply put in the hands of their opponents another and a stronger weapon which will give additional strength to men whose hands they seek to bind by an Act of this Legislature.

Mr. SPROULE. It is quite evident that if, as the hon. gentleman says, his hands and those of his friends have been tied by this measure, their tongues have not been tied, for they have used them to considerable advantage during this debate. One would imagine to hear them talk that they belonged to a party that could not be accused of any such transaction, and I would like to ask them what was done in the case of the redistribution of seats in the Province of Ontario. The hon. member for Huron East contradicted me when I said that the Government of Ontario had formed provisional counties for the purpose of increasing their political power, though the people did not want them formed. The truth of my statement is proved by the fact that the people of the county of Dufferin refused to pass a vote making it a provisional county. They changed no less than five constituencies for the purpose of redistributing the seats, and, in order to form this county of Dufferin, they rearranged three other counties, and they took one township entirely across the line and put it with North Grey, thinking to get a little increased political strength in that constituency. The people of Dufferin refused to erect themselves into a county until they were served with a mandate, and I would like to know what stronger evidence could be given that political exigencies compelled the Ontario Government to make the rearrangement. If the Government wish to satisfy the people, there is only one way in which they can do it, that is to give their side the political majority in the constituencies. Then they will acknowledge it is right and not till then. I was rather amused at the argument of the hon. member for West Durham. The other day he complained that, in order to give four additional members to the Province of Ontario, the Government found it necessary to change no less than forty constituencies; to-day he grumbles because they have not changed more constituencies. The whole question has been, what is the political complexion of this constituency?

If it only gave a majority to the Opposition it was all right but if it gave a majority to the Government it was all wrong. There is the strongest evidence for their arguments that they are guided by no rule except what would increase their political strength. Their whole objection is to find fault. A great man once said that to criticise successfully, you must find fault. I think hon. gentlemen opposite have adopted that rule. The question is not whether anything is right or wrong, but whether it adds to their political strength. I think no one can look fairly over the Bill without seeing that it is fairly based on the principle of representation by population. To show the growth of population, I may refer to my own county. In 1871, when the Census was taken, it was found that the three ridings of Grey had about an equal population; but we find to-day that East Grey has over 29,000, while South Grey has 21,000, showing that the former has been settled very rapidly. My own feeling is that the Government have rearranged the constituencies in that county fairly according to the principle of representation by population; and both the Bruces and Simcoes are arranged much more fairly than they were before. I am satisfied that within a few years the population of North Bruce will be equal to that of any of the other ridings. But I think it would be unfair to attempt to satisfy the Opposition in the House, because nothing can satisfy them. Their conduct is only a pretext to waste the time of this House from day to day and from week to week; they are only trying to advance argument which they may use again in the country. I think the Government would be derelict in their duty if they attempted to meet them even half way; but they have only to go on in their course and the country will sustain them.

Amendment negatived.

On section 43,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose that the township of Romney be added to Kent from the south riding of Essex.

Mr. MILLS. I think it proper that Romney should be retained in the county of Kent. I do not propose to make any motion while the Bill is in Committee, but I think the county of Kent is wholly inadequately represented and most unfairly divided, and I shall, at a later stage, propose an amendment to this provision of the Bill. The county of Kent, with a population of 54,000, has not been given more than two representatives, while the county of Lambton is represented almost by three. I think the provision is most unfair.

On section 52,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have been looking at the division of the county of Huron for local purposes, and I see that, instead of being divided into North, South and Centre Huron, it is divided into East, South and West Huron. I propose to introduce very much the same division, so that the south shall be called the west, the centre shall be called the south, and the north shall be called the east riding. I propose that the west riding shall consist of the townships of Wawanosh East, Wawanosh West, Ashfield, Colborne and Goderich, and the towns of Goderich and Clinton. I propose that the east riding shall consist of the townships of Howick, Morris, Turnberry, and Grey, the town of Wingham, and the villages of Brussels, Blythe and Wroxeter. And I propose that the south riding shall consist of the townships of McKillop, Tuckersmith, Stanley, Hullett and Hay, the town of Seaforth, and the village of Bayfield. In looking at the map it will be seen that the hon. gentleman has been holding out a series of pictures in regard to these constituencies. It will be perceived that the changes will make them more compact than at present, and that they will be very nearly equal. East Huron will have a population of 21,720; West Huron, 23,512, and South Huron, 21,991.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What about the village of Exeter, which, of course, belongs to South Huron, and makes the population 23,716?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose to put the village of Exeter into the north riding of Middlesex.

Mr. BLAKE. That was not reserved.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It may be as well to supply some facts in regard to these changes which the hon. Minister has omitted, no doubt, inadvertently. This same division seems to have cost him a great deal of mental labor. When the Bill was first introduced, we found the division proposed was not the division now before us; the township of Osborne was attached to South Huron, and several other differences were apparent. Then, at the second reading we had the new divisions, as shown by the Bill, and now at this, the third stage, a total alteration is proposed. The constituency that I represent is lost, so far as its name goes, to the roll of Canadian constituencies, and the other constituency is altered in a manner in which the House will probably better understand from some of the facts from our electoral returns. I find in the division of West Huron, as at present proposed, by the voting at the last General Election, the hon. gentleman opposite would have had a majority of 108 or thereabouts, and in East Huron a majority of about 174, and in South Huron, as at now proposed, the Reform party had a majority of close upon 800. Now, doubtless none of those facts were known to the hon. gentleman or his advisers. This is a pure result of the desire of the hon. gentleman exemplified in so many other places to secure as nearly as possible an equality. But he has succeeded in producing an equality in a curious fashion. He has taken away about 1,000 souls from the county of Huron, as municipally constituted—I think the population of Stephen Village, of Exeter and the township of Osborne amounts to about 10,000. Having taken these people away, he made the division before us. The result has the peculiarity of making the Reform majority not far short of 1,000 in the south riding, about 100 in the west and about seventy-five in the east. Well, it is tolerably clear what the object of the hon. gentleman's advisers was, to whom he, in his ignorance and innocence, has yielded. I am sorry to see Centre Huron thus blotted out of the map. As the fidelity of this riding has been so great to the Reform cause, and particularly in electing myself at a time when this cause was in a very despairing condition, I have no objection to propose, if the hon. gentleman will leave that constituency alone, not to stand for it again. In this riding, for many years, the Reform party have had a majority of 500 or 600; and its local electorate in the local elections of 1879, elected the three Reform candidates by a total majority of 630. There cannot be the smallest possible doubt as to the object of these changes; they are exactly a repetition of the policy attempted to be carried into effect in the county of Bruce. It is a riding which for a great many years had given a decided, though not by any means so large, a Reform majority. But they so manipulated it that there should be nearly 1,000 Reform votes placed in one constituency, so that the hon. gentleman may try to obtain a more moderate majority for his friends in the other. Here we have an exact duplication for the same proceeding, something like 800 Reform voters placed together, and the ridings so divided that the hon. gentleman thinks his friends may secure a considerable majority on the other side. All those plans and purposes are likely now, as in the past, to be frustrated. The hon. gentleman, in former times, found it necessary to create a party constituency so far as the shape was concerned in Centre Huron; but he found that his decision, although no doubt the object was scarcely concealed at the time, failed to give him control of the county of Huron. So he now attempts to reproduce in a different fashion, and by entirely destroying one of the constituencies, the same feat and to obtain the same result. I do not know that is to be altogether regretted. It is desirable that there should be gross and crying cases of inequalities which every man can understand without the slightest difficulty. I will venture to say that in all the Western Peninsula their will not be a single voter on either side of politics who will not thoroughly and fully understand precisely why the Hurons were gerrymandered in this fashion. I am quite aware that there is no great use in remonstrating with the hon. gentleman. I, like my hon. friend, beside me, have considerable faith that when these propositions are fully explained and fairly submitted to the people of Ontario, the hon. gentleman will find that even his own honest supporters will vote against the disgraceful trick he attempts to practice here, and to them I must leave it, not having much hope in an appeal to the justice or generosity, or sense of fair play, of the hon. gentleman and his supporters.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I wish to say a word or two on this extraordinary change which the hon. gentleman has seen fit to make at the eleventh hour. In 1872, the hon. gentleman tried to do precisely the same thing in South Huron. He undertook to elect the Liberal member out by gerrymandering to such an extent that he was left in a minority of 187. The Government at that time detached the same township they are to-day annexing; and their object was the same as it is now, to improve their political prospects. This is the third change the hon. gentleman has made. Is it to be the last? Is the hon. gentleman satisfied that by this third change he has accomplished his purpose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Do you want it altered?

Mr. CAMERON. When the hon. gentleman introduced this Bill first the only change he proposed was to detach from South Huron the townships of Osborne and Stephen, and annex to it the town of Goderich. That left me in a minority of 107 according to the last returns. The hon. gentleman thought he had accomplished his purpose, but on looking over the figures he found that there was an absolute certainty that whoever the Liberal candidate for South Huron might be, he would occupy a seat in Parliament. He set his wits to work and tried his game again. Calling on a council of the Conservative party in the House, he made another attempt, he detached a township that gave me a majority, and annexed another municipality that gave a majority against the Liberal candidate. The hon. gentleman thought he had accomplished everything then, but found he was mistaken. He saw the Conservative organ from the Hurons, which declared that if the Government expected to accomplish what they had in view, by the gerrymandering they had perpetrated in the Hurons, they were mistaken, because instead of weakening the Liberal member for South Huron by attaching Goderich to it, they strengthened his hands. It became therefore necessary to make another shuffle of the cards, and the hon. gentleman was equal to the occasion. On Friday last, a delegation from the Conservatives of the Hurons waited on the Government, and intimated to it that, with the present formation of the Hurons, the whole three ridings were uncertain, and that in two of them the Conservative prospects were so slight as to be hopeless. What did the hon. gentleman then do? He attached to South Huron every single township he could that gave a Reform majority. Thus he hived all the Grits of the three Hurons in the south riding where their majority, by this gerrymandering, ought, according to the last returns, to be 684. By this means, he thinks he has made East and West Huron perfectly safe. According to the last vote, South Huron would now give a Conservative majority of 107, and East Huron, a Conservative majority of 108. I ask you if it is not a gross outrage that a county like Huron which, at the last elections, gave a clear Liberal majority over the whole county of 450 votes, should now be so gerrymandered as to secure, as far as any outrageous attempt of the kind can secure, the return of two Conservative members out of the three. We heard something from the hon. member for Frontenac about Parliament immuring public opinion. Here is a county with a clear liberal majority of 452, which the hon. gentleman has so carved up as to return two Conservative members under the last voting. No clearer evidence could be given that this measure is solely in the interests of party and an attempt to override the opinion of the country. Intimations came from the hon. member for North Middlesex, that his hands required to be strengthened, and, in order to make his return perfectly safe, the village of Exeter, which is the only municipality in the whole of South Huron that gave a Conservative majority at the last elections, a majority of 115, is annexed to North Middlesex. The whole of the hon. gentleman's gerrymanderings in the Hurons is only on a par with that practiced in the other counties of Ontario. My own humble opinion is that the hon. gentleman will signally fail in attaining his object, but it will not be by his fault. He has done all he possibly could to hive the Grits in South Huron. By that process he makes the Reform majority 300 votes over, the Conservative having majorities in the other ridings. Yet the hon. gentleman says this is a fair Bill. I believe the hon. gentleman, despite his gerrymandering, will fail in the Hurons, and that the three members returned from there will be returned to support a Liberal Administration.

Mr. BLAKE, The proposal now before us is to improve for the third time upon the constitution of the three ridings of Huron. In 1872, as we all know, the hon. gentleman for the first time proposed to give that constituency three representatives instead of two. We all recollect the exciting debate which took place on that occasion, in which it was shown that the hon. gentleman's effort was to concentrate as far as he could, the Reform majority in one riding, and to obtain two instead of the three ridings in the county which had a preponderating majority of Reformers. We know the measure was changed with that intent; we know that the figures established that intent on his part; we know that he made one clear Reform riding and two apparently Conservative ridings, and he has since that time succeeded in retaining, by a narrow majority, the north riding of Huron, while my hon. friend's power and capacity of attracting and obtaining popular support, has enabled him to overcome the unfair conduct of the hon. gentleman on that occasion, and to retain the south riding of Huron to the Liberal cause. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman on this occasion had the condition of the Hurons before him for several months, he had before him the geographical position of the Hurons, their position with regard to population, their local divisions, and the election returns as to their political complexion, and with all deliberation he made a proposal to Parliament to destroy the municipal autonomy of the county of Huron, to take away certain townships, to retain a village which was in one of these townships, in the county, while he took away the township to which it belonged, in order, once again, to hive the Grits who had swarmed in Huron, and by that means to increase, taking the figures of 1878, the Reform majority of the centre riding, which was 362, according to that election, to 446. That was the hon. gentleman's proposal. While, of course, you could not increase the Reform majority in the strong Reform ridings in the constituency without weakening in one or other of the two ridings the Reform interest, that was the inevitable result, and at the second reading of this measure we pointed out that the hon. gentleman was repeating his operation of 1872, having found it necessary, in order to have any chance of success, once again to gerrymander Huron by taking a Reform strength from the weaker riding, in a Reform point of view, and adding them to the centre where their effective strength would be useless.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills, (from the Senate), were severally introduced and read a first time:—

Bill (No. 164) to correct certain errors in the French version of "The Dominion Lands Act," and "The Dominion Lands Act, 1879."—(Sir Hector Langvin.)

Bill (No. 165) further to continue in force for a limited time "The better Prevention of Crime Act, 1878."—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 166) declaratory of the meaning of the word "Telegraph" in certain cases.—(Mr. White, Cardwell.)

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. I was observing, when the House rose, that the geographical situation of the different divisions of the county of Huron, the numerical relations of those divisions, the mode in which the county had been divided by the Federal Parliament, and also by the Local Legislature of Ontario, for electoral purposes, were all within the knowledge of the Administration when they selected this particular mode of division which was brought down to us in this Bill; that that had been done after mature deliberation and consideration with various interests, and that the result of this constituency, which had been gerrymandered in 1872, was to produce a very large majority in the then centre riding, was to increase the majority from 362 to 446, thus, of course, taking proportionately from the strength in one or other or both of the remaining divisions of the other. Well, Sir, the hon. Minister who reversed these clauses when the Bill was in Committee before, has come down to-day and proposed a further change in the divisions of the county of Huron, and he asks the country to understand that the reason for the changes he makes is, that he has looked since that time at the divisions made in the Local Legislature, and that he pretty nearly, as he says, adopts them, and he thinks under the present plan the population will be equal. These are the reasons the hon. gentleman gave in Committee. The political results of these changes, to which the hon. gentleman never alludes, are that whereas he had a hive of 446 of a Reform majority in the centre riding, in the south riding, which is, according to the new plan, to be the hive, he increases the Reform majority, according to the same set of figures—those of the election of 1878—to no less than 684, thus effecting a further weakening of the Reform strength in the other two ridings. Coincidentally with this, the hon. gentleman, who, when he was desirous of weakening my hon. friend in the south riding of Huron, thought nothing whatever of leaving the village of Exeter in that riding. Now that he has changed the complexion of the south riding of Huron, and made it a sea in which the Reform strength is to be hived, he takes Exeter out of it and puts it where he thinks it will do more good, in the north riding of Middlesex, thus showing that no principle animated the hon. gentleman, but that he disposes of the different municipalities in accordance with that which is the ruling idea which animates the Bill—the political complexion which he may give to the different constituencies. I say that the changes which are here proposed, are not an act of geographical convenience, not an act of the equalization of the population, not an act of the considerations which were obvious to the hon. gentleman and to the Government long before and at the time when they matured this measure, but the changes are proposed because it has been found, upon examination since the measure became public, that representations are made that it will not be sufficiently injurious to the Reform party. There have been gatherings in the two ridings of Huron which are to be affected by this Bill; there has been a consideration of this question; deputations have been sent down here, and communications have been forwarded with a statement that the results are not what the hon. gentleman anticipates, and what his friends in the localities would desire, and that for this purpose other changes in Huron were required, and the hon. gentleman is now proposing to carry those other changes. He is carrying out the changes which were proposed by the local wire-pullers, and by those who were interested in securing, if they can, the representation of the two ridings of Huron which have, on the whole, a very large Reform majority over the whole county. He has altered this measure, I say, in this way, adding still further to the strength of the Reform majority, in the riding which he must leave to the Reformers, and weakening their strength in the other two ridings—not on account of the geographical considerations which were obvious the whole time, and which the hon. gentlemen knew as well as they do to-day, which could not have been overlooked, which were before those which prepared this Bill, but on account of the political view of the situation which the local persons have taken since the Bill was brought down, and on account of representations made to the effect that the object will not be accomplished; but while the hon. gentleman weakens himself by proposing the measure in the shape in which it is brought down, he does not sufficiently strengthen himself in the county of Huron to accomplish what he hoped to accomplish, and that therefore some further gerrymandering is required; and these alterations to this clause are the product of these representations, and are designed to carry out that object; they are not designed to carry out these obvious considerations which the hon. gentleman referred to, and which were always before him, but they are designed to carry out the political objects which this Bill has in view.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved an amendment that East Huron consist of Howick, Turnberry, Grey and Monas, the town of Wingham and the Villages of Brussels, Blythe and Wroxeter.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) has any observations to make on the substitution of East for North.

Mr. FARROW. I came to the conclusion, when the hon. member for West Durham was addressing the House, that nothing would suit him. If you go on the principle of representation by population, that does not suit him. If you go on the principle of making a riding compact, that does not suit him. If you go to the right he says you should go to the left, and if you go to the left he says you should go to the right; if you go forward he says turn backward. Since I have had the honor of representing North Huron I have found that such has been the hon. gentleman's course in Parliament—no hon. member in this House has greater respect for the hon. gentleman than I have; but I must say that I am speaking consistently when I tell him that he is entirely wrong in his remarks about the division of the Hurons. The hon. gentleman has spoken as if the north riding was in favor of a change, just as if they thought their case was a bad one unless something was done. The contrary is the fact. I can inform the hon. gentleman that there was a convention held at Wingham on the 4th, and from what I could learn they are quite content to leave the riding as it is. No doubt there was some talk about changes as to the compactness of the riding and as to the population. The hon. member for West Durham must know that my riding has geographically increased very largely since the change took place in 1872. He must know that in North Huron there are several villages and one large town that did not exist ten years ago, such as Wingham, which now has a population of nearly 2,500, and the growing villages of Blythe and Russell; and when you take it into consideration it is evident a consideration must be made. I must say, and I say it candidly, and above board, that I have had no hand in this thing. I am placed in a worse position I think. They have given me the township of Grey, one of the strongest strongholds of the hon. member for Centre Huron, a township they say will give 250 Grit votes. If it gives that number I do not want to go into the riding. The hon. member for West Durham will find that the east riding is very compact, geographically speaking, and the west and south ridings are in the same position. The hon. gentleman will not deny that they are compact.

Mr. BLAKE. I am told so.

Mr. FARROW. You will not deny that the populations are nearly equal.

Mr. BLAKE. From what the hon. gentleman says, I cannot deny that.

Mr. FARROW. Then you cannot complain.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; I can.

Mr. FARROW. I say that you cannot please the hon. gentleman, for you cannot divide Huron into three more compact ridings. As regards the effect of this Bill on myself, it will not benefit me at all. Now, I do not know anything about this rearrangement or what hon. gentlemen call gerrymandering. I probably am too humble an individual, but at any rate I have had nothing to do with it, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not blame me, though I think the Government has divided Huron up into three ridings, the most compact and satisfactory that could be obtained.

Mr. BLAKE. The mode in which the hon. gentleman divided Huron into three ridings was, by first of all taking off 10,000 population, putting so much to one county and so much to another county, and dividing the remainder into three ridings, so that now the county of Huron forms part of five ridings. I admit that the hon. gentleman has lost as well as gained. I will be as frank as he. He gains in political strength all the political strength in a new riding, but he loses in his individual strength, because he has less chance for nomination than before. While the hon. gentleman says—and I accept his statement not merely in a parliamentary, but in every sense—that he had nothing to do with the proposed change, he will not deny that the local Conservatives, leading Conservatives in the ridings, have had to do with it; he will not deny that it was discussed at that convention of which he speaks, and which was held a week ago; he will not deny that there were communications with Mr. Gregg, Dr. Holmes, and perhaps some others on that subject by letter or otherwise, and that the change has taken place in accordance with the views of the local leaders of the Conservative party in Huron. If he denies these things he denies statements which I have, on very respectable authority, that is now on the Table before me.

Mr. FARROW. The hon. gentleman ignores the great growth of Huron as a whole. The county of Huron was too large for three members.

Mr. BLAKE. What about the Greys?

Mr. FARROW. I have nothing to do with the Greys. I have plenty of work to look after my own county. My riding had a population of something like 27,500, and therefore, I think the Government was quite right when they saw this great surplus population, in taking some off. They might have taken some off in the north, but there was no chance there, and the only way of equalizing the population was by taking off these two townships in the south. So far as communications may have gone on with the Government from the riding, I am not in communication with the Government. I do not know their secrets; I do not listen at their key-holes or their lobbies, or go into their bedrooms, so I cannot say whether the hon. gentleman is right or wrong. The county of Huron has a population of over 70,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman justifies the division of Huron on the ground that it had a population of something like 76,000, but how does he account for the fact that the county of Grey, with a population of 74,000, is only given two members. It appears that that which has been found to be a justification in the case of Huron has not been found to require similar action in the case of Grey, and the hon. gentleman's suggestion, as to population has not the force, when we consider the whole county, which the hon. gentleman is disposed to ascribe to it when he deals with an isolated case.

Mr. McLENNAN. I think an humble member who has no more relation with the county of Huron than that he happens to be in the same Province, may have a word to say about this matter. This is a question of ridings but it has been made also a question of representatives, and we have had many pathetic appeals from this gentleman and that gentleman who is on the floor of the House, that he must be treated with the courtesy of an appeal, and we have had appeals on behalf of some who expect to be treated as superiors. Now, the chief point in the whole Bill is to give its proper representation to Ontario. Ontario, I think, is admitted to be the heart of this Dominion. It is very important that it should have its proper and full representation. Ontario has, in its time, contributed a great deal to the political history of this Dominion, and it has lately produced, through its representatives, many new and important theories. From this fact, and from the fact that the development of the Dominion must be sustained in a great measure by Ontario, it is important that that Province should be properly represented. It is very uncertain what the future may bring upon us, when that happy millennium comes, when the Reform party will be in power—and I believe it counts on being in power very largely by the influence of Ontario—and it becomes more important what it represents. We are told that when that good time comes we shall have a great many good things; we are to have commercial independence and a representative at Washington; and if we are to have a representative at Washington, it is quite obvious that the present representative for Centre Huron must occupy that position, for the reason that they are very fond of lions at Washington, and the hon. gentleman can roar like Bottom in the play. It is true there are some objections to this; my right hon. friend was not willing to concede, the other night, that we are able to carry out the idea, because we have no army and are not an independent power. Well, we have heard a good deal since then about a little army and its warfare; we had a history the other evening of a war that was fought by our little army, but it was only with beer bottles and jugs, and things of that sort; and I have no doubt that the Premier of Ontario would lend us a legion or two if we required them for our representative at Washington. But when we go back to those whose ancestors a century ago came and took up their homes in Ontario, he will find that they are not identified with independence or with this legendary army of Mr. Mowat's, and our hearts warm to the United Empire; and when we think of 1812, and how our fathers held this country against that theory of independence, again we do not think so much of independence; and if we are to have a representative at Washington, and the question comes up who is to represent Ontario in this House, and who is to be the leader of the Reform party, when that time comes it is very important that we should know now how all these good things are to be brought about. I believe Ontario will be true to its history, its character and its patriotism; I believe there is something beyond the magnificent intelligence of the hon. the leader of the Opposition that will govern the Province of Ontario; I believe Ontario has a heart as well as a head, and every pulsation of it beats in unison with the Empire, and, in order to preserve our proper relations to the Empire, we want now to guard our representation, we want to see that in the future Ontario shall be represented, as it has been, with a proper regard for the feelings of its people, of the people who have made it what it is, and who, I believe, by their loyalty to the Empire, are prepared to continue it as it is.

Mr. TROW. In connection with the extraordinary changes that have taken place in Huron in the last two hours, I think it would be advisable for the Government to make a still further change, and take in the township they have attached to South Perth. It would be more complete geographically. The county of Perth could have been divided properly without interfering with any other county. The population of South Perth prior to the redistribution was 20,778, and that of North Perth, 34,000. North Perth is now over 26,000, while South Perth is only 21,256. Hon. gentlemen during the Session have boasted of their popularity and strength in the country; yet it is surprising, with their extraordinary majority in this House, and with the feeling which they declare is favorable to them in the country, that they would not face the electors, without all this gerrymandering and disarranging of the complexion of the whole country for political purposes. The operation of hiving has been extensively carried on in North Oxford, in which the Reform majority was about 1,500; in Bruce there would be 1,000 Reform majority; in West Elgin, 500; in North Brant, 700; South Oxford, 800; South Middlesex, 500; one of the Hurons, 600; South Simcoe, 600; West Ontario, 500; making a grand total of 6,500 Reform majority hived in those nine constituencies, and absolutely thrown away from the Reform cause. This total would give a handsome majority of 100 in 65 different ridings if it had been distributed properly. I have not looked over the majority given to strengthen the Conservative interest, but I have no doubt it has been distributed so as to benefit a large number of Government supporters. The Government have, in the second reading of the Bill, changed the complexion of some ridings, and as the Premier offered to go half way to meet the views of one Liberal member, I would have no objection to his meeting me half way also. The Government have taken off my majority in the removal of a township that gave a Reform majority of 200. I understand that the opinion was expressed in Stratford by farmers residing in North and South Easthope a few days ago—and I received my information from an influential person, Conservative resident of Stratford—that the people of those respective townships would resent those changes, and that many farmers would carry their produce to Woodstock instead of to Stratford, to punish the member for North Perth and the Conservatives in Stratford for their action in this matter. I have no doubt they will carry that threat into execution. The hon. gentleman has taken great credit to himself for the extraordinary development of the North-West. I have had some little experience of the North-West, and without desiring to boast I take a little credit to myself for having spent, in exploring that country and proclaiming its advantages, $6,000 of my own money. I have been writing it up for the last seven years through the press; and now the hon. gentleman is to a certain extent reaping the benefits of my exertions and sacrifices. I think it is not becoming on the part of the Government to make a dead set at me, making my riding almost an exceptional case in this House as to the extent of the alteration. However, under any circumstance I will face my opponent in my riding, and I have no doubt, notwithstanding that I have 118 votes to make up, that I shall secure my election. If I were only placed on a par with my opponent I would not care who opposed me. I am not discouraged at the loss of this 118 votes. I have every confidence that the people will frown down this gerrymandering scheme, and return me by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. BERGIN. Among the many complaints against this measure, I do not find any as to the wiping out of the counties of Stormont, Cornwall, Niagara and Lincoln. I find, on the contrary, that the hon. leader of the Opposition thinks that Eastern Ontario has too many representatives still, and that the Government have been more than just to it. He seems to think, as has been always the case with his party, that Western Ontario should have everything. Now, we desire to be just to Western Ontario, but it is impossible that we can have a strictly accurate distribution of members according to population. The Bill does not pretend to such a distribution. The hon. leader of the Government has done the best he could under the circumstances. I know he desired to preserve those old constituencies of Cornwall and Niagara with their old historic surroundings, but it was impossible. Cornwall and Stormont were too small, and being adjacent constituencies, they could not be very well annexed to any other; and, therefore, although we lose a representative in Eastern Ontario, to which we were honestly entitled, we submitted with good grace, not complaining like gentlemen opposite. We feel, after all, that the question is not whether this or that constituency has a representation, but whether Ontario has the full quota to which she is entitled under the British North America Act, which provided for an increase of the representation of Ontario proportionate to the increase of her population at the end of each decade. The hon. Premier was obliged to submit this Bill, which I believe entitled it to the confidence of this country. Some of its opponents say the constituencies are too large, others that they are too small; that some are too Conservative; that others are too Grit—that the Grits are hived in some constituencies and entirely driven out of some others. I can hardly imagine what would satisfy them. If we give them a good Grit riding they growl, and if we do not give them one they howl, and when they are heard they do not cease to complain. We have been hived in the county of Stormont, and I am proud of it. We have not only a great county, but a good old loyal Conservative constituency in Stormont, settled by old United Empire Loyalists, like my grandfather, who came from the valley of the Mohawk to live under the British rather than under the American flag. And if the hon. Premier has so arranged the constituencies in Ontario, that they shall be loyal—that they shall return loyal members—men not disposed to vote for Independence, or look to Washington—then, I say, he deserves the thanks of the country and will long live on its merits. Not content with finding fault with the distribution of seats in Ontario, the hon. leader of the Opposition, as he always does, endeavored to provoke sectional strife. He, like many others, who, when they get into difficulty, are anxious to get others into similar difficulties, would tear up by the roots the old Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Although there is no color of law in it, no reason whatever, except that misery loves company, he would do all the injury he could, when he could not get power himself, to those who would not assist him to get power. He would disturb the constituencies in those different Provinces without rhyme or reason. Because we refuse to re-adjust constituencies in New Brunswick, Quebec and Nova Scotia, where nothing of the kind is asked for, and where they are not compelled under the law, to have any redistribution, he calls, with a coolness, that even in him is remarkable, upon the representatives in those Provinces, if they are honest men, to assist him in voting down what he calls an infamous measure. I shall not go over the list of adjectives with which that hon. gentleman favored us in the discussion of this Bill, as he always does in discussing every measure. If I were to go over the history of that hon. gentleman, I could show that he has been guilty, to use his own words, of as mean, low and dishonest political acts, as any man who ever sat in this Parliament. I said a while ago, that it is hard to satisfy those hon. gentlemen. Under the law, they have four new seats, and by the wiping out of Cornwall and Niagara, two other seats, making six in all. If I read this Bill aright, these six new seats have been given to them. I would like to know if they had the power, would they hand over generously the six new seats to us. Far from it. Those who read the history of hon. gentlemen opposite and know how they gerrymandered this country through the instrumentality of the Premier of the Local Government, Mr. Mowat, know that they cannot be honest in their professions when charging us with gerrymandering. We know that the Premier of Ontario always consulted the leaders of the Liberal party in the Federal Government, and that everything he did was done, as it is now, after consulting with them; and we never heard they complained, because he arranged the constituencies so as to give them a majority. If I remember aright, they took thirteen Conservative constituencies in 1874, and gerrymandered them into nine Grit and four Conservative constituencies in the Lower House, yet we did not hear a word from hon. gentlemen opposite about the wrong that was then done. Everything is right when it is done in the interests of the Liberal party; but if not, everything is wrong. With their usual modesty they did not speak so much for the Liberal party as for Ontario. One would suppose that those forty or fifty gentlemen represented Ontario. They are not Ontario; they are only the Liberal party from Ontario. Yet when they are required they presume to say that Ontario is required. If, as has sometimes been the case during the consideration of this Bill, hon. gentlemen opposite had their complaints listened to by the right hon. Premier, and their requests granted in every instance, they would still turn around and whine. We had an instance of an hon. gentleman complaining that Torbolton was added; he would have preferred Huntley. The next day the hon. Premier acceded to his request by taking away Torbolton and giving him Huntley. What a row there then was. It was the most unjust act that ever was perpetrated. They complained about the village of Exeter and about the village of Saugeen—again the Premier was willing to accede to their request; but no, they were not satisfied. Had they supposed he would not have granted them there would have been no end to their complaints. There is another question I would like to put to the hon. leader of the Opposition. Suppose—and I admit it is the most improbable thing under the sun—that, through any misfortune, so dire a calamity should befall this country as that the hon. gentleman should be returned to power at the next election, would he pass an Act repealing this Bill and placing the constituencies in the same position in which they were before? Not at all. He would say: Ontario is all right; Sir John made a terrible mistake, and I made a mistake; the country was sound after all. This Bill up to 1892 would be kept in full force; not a change would be made in the constituencies. He finds it convenient to forget that, in 1872, the Liberal party denounced what they called then the gerrymandering Bill, just as fiercely as they denounce the present Bill, yet we had the spectacle the other night of that hon. gentleman moving an amendment which actually provided that the measure of 1872 was a just and honest measure, and his complaint is that we are not leaving the constituencies in the position in which they were in 1872. If anything could show want of political honesty more strongly than that I would like to hear it. I do not intend at any length to follow the statements—I shall not say arguments—made by the hon. member for North Norfolk, but I must take this occasion to protest against his violence of language. On this side of the House we are neither cheats, nor swindlers, nor political rascals, nor assassins, nor do we believe that any honest man in this country, knowing the measure has been fully and freely discussed, will object to obey the law made by this Parliament and sanctioned by the Governor General. When a man gets up in his place and threatens this country with consequences so dire that assassination will follow, because, forsooth, a few hon. gentlemen know this change may cause them to lose their seats, he is not fulfilling his duty as a member of Parliament, he is not a good subject; and I think that if the Bill could have been altered so as to make it certain that such a man as that could not come back to the House, the hon. Premier would have been justified in making such alterations. I think if the Bill could have been altered so as to make it more certain that such a man as that could not come back to this House, the Premier, after that speech, would be justified in doing it. We want men in this House who will teach the people that their first duty is to obey the law, that their duty is to be good citizens always and not to stir up strife and ill-will, and threaten all sorts of evil for this country, and even to promote assassination. Allusions have been made to myself and to my constituency which I think I can afford to treat with the contempt such allusions merit. But, Sir, before I sit down I may be permitted to say a word in connection with my constituency, because I had hoped that the great growth of Cornwall during the past four or five years might have been of some assistance to me in the effort I was making to preserve its autonomy as a constituency. The House will pardon me if I allude to the growth of that town since 1878. Perhaps nothing can show more forcibly the prosperity of that town than the amounts deposited in the savings bank branch of the Post Office Department at different periods. In 1878 the amount deposited by the operatives in Cornwall, principally boys and girls working in the mills, was $10,183. In 1879 it had increased to $14,559, and last year the amount was $53,980, or an increase of more than five-fold in three years. In the first quarter of this year the deposits amounted to the large sum of $21,181, or an amount more than double the whole year of 1878. The duty on goods imported into Cornwall during the years the hon. member for Lambton was at the head of the Government, was $22,492.93; the gross amount of goods, free and dutiable, imported in any one year, being $297,963. Well, Sir, during the last nine months there have been collected on duties $34,348, or $12,000 more than were collected during the whole five years of the Administration of the hon. member for Lambton. The duties collected during the last three months amounted to $16,783, or more than in any four years of the previous Administration. In regard to exports I have a report here from the United States consular agent; they comprise butter, eggs, cattle, grain, horses, lumber, poultry, sheep, lambs, railway ties, potatoes and wool. Now, the amount of exports during the previous Administration for the five years was $40,014.32, while last year the exports amounted to $143,374.80, or over four times as much as during the whole time of his Administration. During this year, since the first of January the exports have been over $300,000 already. There have been paid in wages this year in Cornwall over $600,000, and during the Administration of the hon. gentlemen opposite the wages did not amount to more than $140,000. So it is with everything else. Why, even in the Division Court, we have only had one suit within the last three months, and during the Administration of the hon. gentleman opposite the Courts were always full.

Mr. RYMAL. There is a falling off in business.

Mr. BERGIN. Yes, because the people have got more money to pay their debts with.

Mr. RYMAL. Do you discard sheriffs and bailiffs?

Mr. BERGIN. I believe the sheriffs and bailiffs are appointed by the Local Government, and I say the pound-keepers will be shortly, in accordance with the hon. leader of the Opposition, whose cry, up to 1878, was that the Executive had too much power, and therefore, he found it necessary to lessen that power, I suppose, by appointing license inspectors, sheriffs, bailiffs, and everything of that kind by the Local Government of Toronto. This is the way those hon. gentlemen have lessened the power of the Executive and added to the power of the people. Well, Sir, though I regret the constituency I represent is to be annexed to the county of Stormont, I am delighted that the county of Stormont is to be rejoined to the town of Cornwall as it was many years ago. I believe the people of the county will be satisfied, because it was a necessity; it was impossible that these two small constituencies, one of them containing only 13,000 and the other 6,000, could continue separate constituencies. Although Cornwall's population is now 7,000, still the Census is the rule by which we are to be judged. Therefore, I think the county as well as the town will see the necessity which imposed upon the right hon. gentleman the duty of joining these two constituencies, and of depriving eastern Ontario of one constituency. I think the people of eastern Ontario have reason to rejoice that the right hon. gentleman is at the head of the Government, because from the expressions that have fallen from the hon. leader of the Opposition, if it had been in his power there would have been a terrible wrenching in eastern Ontario, and instead of having thirty-two representatives we would perhaps have not more than twenty-two.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved to reconsider the 51st section so as to insert the word "Exeter" after the word "Lucan."

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sections 55 to 59, inclusive, contain a description of the electoral districts in Manitoba. The hon. member for West Durham desired that there should be placed on the Table a map showing the divisions of the different electoral districts, and that has been done.

Mr. BLAKE. To a certain extent only. The eastern boundaries of Manitoba are not given in the map. I do not know how far they extend.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot tell where the eastern boundary of Manitoba is, and therefore we provide for a boundary which, without doubt, is within the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that the only provision proposed to be made for the representation of Manitoba?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. There is the township of Varennes in Lisgar which is not indicated on the map. What we desired was some idea as to what were the electoral districts of Manitoba, and they are described, so far as Provencher is concerned, as constituting the municipalities of Ste. Anne, which I presume is wholly contained on the map, La Broquerie, Emerson, &c. Their eastern limits and boundaries should be known and the House should be informed as to how far they go. Many of those townships have been created under Orders in Council passed by the Local Government. So with respect to Springfield and so with Varennes, the Government should state how far they extend eastward.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government cannot be expected to be well informed with respect to municipal arrangements in Manitoba. None of the municipalities extend into the disputed territory.

Mr. BLAKE. On what information is their territorial area placed in the Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government of Manitoba laid out the whole of their territory into municipalities and registration districts. We have had communication with representatives of Manitoba in this House and in the Senate, and also with the Premier of Manitoba when he was here, and the opinion expressed was that it would be well if they could sanction a mode of arrangement. Provencher is a somewhat peculiar shape. That county was originally largely French Canadian and it still contains a large French population, and we thought it well that they should have a county in which the majority would be French Canadians. If they do not emigrate to the North-West in larger numbers in a few years, that district in a few years will become English; but we thought it fair that Provencher should not be swamped by another race. It thus occurs that Provencher is a peculiarly elongated territory, situated along the Red River. The hon. member for West Durham is well aware that when the first counties were laid out we had to make a rough and ready division at the time when the Manitoba Bill was passed.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not at this moment analyzing the particular shape of Provencher or speaking of the nationalities which predominate in that or any other constituency. I want to know the shape of the constituencies.

Mr. MILLS. There must be some Statute of Manitoba fixing the boundaries of those municipalities, and the Government should be able to give the House information on that point. There certainly must be in the Library or in the possession of the Government some indication of the limits of these constituencies, and if so we should have it laid before us.

Mr. BLAKE. If I recollect aright the Consolidated Statutes of Manitoba passed in 1880 with some amendment in 1881, prescribed the number of municipal districts, and I think there are some additional municipal districts established by Order in Council, under the authority of the Statute in connection with the arrangement and extension of the Territory. Of course it is satisfactory to know that the four hon. gentlemen representing Manitoba think that this is a proper division, and if they are attending to their parliamentary duties during the discussion of the question of the boundaries of their Province, perhaps they could supply some of that information with which they supplied the Government, but which the Government seem indisposed to supply to us. I think surely, before the Bill goes through the Committee, we should be informed on the subject, especially as it is a question on which information should not be difficult to procure. What is the territorial size of the various districts, Marquette, Selkirk, Provencher and Lisgar?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the information at hand, and I cannot see that it would do the hon. gentleman or the House any good if we had it. We consider that Manitoba has a right to five members—the whole Province of Manitoba. I do not think that it was ever expected in the world, that in any such measure as this the admeasurement or the territorial extent of the municipality should be furnished. I think the hon. gentleman should be satisfied that the townships are laid out of the usual size adopted in that part of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not ask the size of each municipality of Manitoba. We had information as to the area of every electoral district in this Dominion excepting those for the Province of Manitoba, and it seems to me material that we should have the same information with regard to that Province. I would like to ask how many miles to the eastward of the line laid down on the map these townships come—how close to the disputed territory?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon. gentleman cannot say whether they go to the disputed territory or not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure they do not extend into the disputed territory.

Mr. BLAKE. What is embraced in that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They do not go farther eastward than the boundary line.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say what provision has been made for the representation of that portion of Canada eastward of the line and running down to Algoma?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no provision.

On clause 3,

Mr. ABBOTT. I would suggest that a change be made in the boundaries of the county of Terrebonne. There are three new townships in the rear of Argenteuil recently settled entirely from the county of Terrebonne. They have been settled through the efforts of the Rev. Mr. Labelle, well known for his success in colonization. The population is almost entirely French Canadians, and all its relations, commercial and otherwise, are with the county of Terrebonne. The mails come through that county, and it is impossible to pass from these townships to Argenteuil without going to Terrebonne. It has accordingly been considered expedient by all the public men interested in the matter that these three townships of Rattsbon, Sallaberry and Wolfe should be included in Terrebonne, not only electorally but municipally, and Mr. Chapleau has given notice of a Bill for the change in the Quebec Legislature. The territorial areas of the two counties would be about equalized by the change. They are, therefore, entire strangers to the county of Argenteuil proper, and should be added to the county of Terrebonne. I, therefore, move that these townships be added to that county. I may say there is no political significance attached to this change, as these townships have given a majority to the Conservative member for Argenteuil, and will make no difference, I fancy.

Mr. MILLS. I observe by the Census that Argenteuil has a population of 16,000 and Terrebonne nearly 22,000. How will this change affect the population?

Mr. ABBOTT. It is quite true that Terrebonne has a greater population than Argenteuil, but Argenteuil is rapidly settling up, and will shortly be equal to Terrebonne in population. The population of these three townships is now in the neighborhood of 1,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The shape which the hon. gentleman proposes to give to Terrebonne is not a very compact one; it makes the county very long and very narrow. However, I think if the hon. gentleman's statement, as to the commercial and business relations of these parishes be accurate, as I have no doubt it is, and particularly if it is proposed to attach these townships to Terrebonne for municipal purposes, the proposition ought to receive consideration. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to make a provision that in case these townships become municipally attached to Terrebonne, they should become attached to Terrebonne for electoral purposes. It will be observed that that is the plan adopted in the immediately preceding clause of the Bill with regard to the electoral district of Winnipeg.

Mr. DUGAS. I would suggest that part of the townships of Wexford and Kilkenny should be made part of the county of Terrebonne. By an Act of the Local Legislature passed in 1872, they were annexed to the county of Terrebonne for electoral, municipal, judicial, and registration purposes, and I think they should also form part of the county of Terrebonne for the representation of the House of Commons.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure we must all regret the absence of the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) on this interesting occasion when everybody seems disposed to add to his county. It encourages me to hope that in the future I may have the support of the hon. gentleman who last spoke in reference to the general principles that should influence us in dealing with parliamentary representation. My hon. friend has given as a reason for adding these townships, the expediency of making the electoral limits coterminous with the municipal limits. I do not remember to have received the support of my hon. friend to that principle, which I embodied in a motion an evening or two ago, but on the renewal of that motion in the future I may hope to receive his support on the general principle.

Mr. DUGAS. I was influenced by the statement made by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott), that if any steps were taken in the Local Legislature to annex these two townships to Terrebonne for all purposes, it was but right that they should form part of that county for electoral purposes.

Mr. ABBOTT. As I have been very careful in making this motion to have the entire assent of those who represent Terrebonne, I cannot make any addition to it with regard to the suggestion that the addition of these townships should be made conditional on their being made portions of the municipal county. I have in my hand telegrams from Mr. Chapleau, stating that he has given notice of a Bill to carry this out. I do not know why I should apply this principle to this clause, since those portions of the Bill referring to Ontario do not depend on that principle.

Mr. MILLS. With regard to the Ontario portion of the Bill the hon. First Minister declared that he was adhering to the principle of representation by population. If the hon. member for Argenteuil followed the provisions of the Ontario section of this Bill as interpreted by the First Minister, he would abandon his proposition altogether, because he proposes to take from a county with a population of 16,000, and add to one with a population of nearly 22,000. I am afraid the hon. gentleman will hardly be able to defend the amendment by appealing to the Ontario portion of this Bill.

Mr. ABBOTT. I do not propose to defend it by reference to the Ontario portion of the measure; I merely propose not to make the addition conditional on its being made municipally, by referring to Ontario in that respect. As to the question of representation by population, I do not know that I can go quite so far as to say that this principle is of so sacred a character that nothing else should affect it. Now, in this particular case the question is not a question of political representation at all; it is a question of the convenience of these people who are proposed to be added to their neighbors and friends and fellow-citizens, and people speaking the same language, having the same faith and being of the same race, instead of being added to any new county where they are in a minority, where their ideas are practically of no value, and where the votes will probably be given on principles different from those that regulate the remaining portions of Canada. It is upon those grounds that I think, if the principle of representation by population were a solemn principle, I might claim to have some exemption from its effect. But I can scarcely admit it is of so solemn a character that no exception is to be allowed, and I think that the reasons I have stated for making an exception in this case are sufficiently strong to induce the House to make it.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to make a suggestion which I think of some practical consequence before we proceed to the 5th clause. It seems to me it would be much more logical to put the township of Ashbury, which is in Ontario, in the Ontario section of the Bill, or in the section relative to the county of Addington, and to put the Magdalen Islands, Gaspé and the other Quebec districts in the section relative to the Province of Quebec. There is no general provision, but there is a specific provision with reference to certain electoral districts, and these localities should be incorporated with the other provisions respecting related or adjacent electoral districts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It might be convenient to consider that suggestion.

Mr. FORTIN. I wish to propose a new clause to the Bill relating to voting in the winter season on the Magdalen Islands and the Island of Anticosti, when communication between the mainland and those islands is impossible. Hon. members will remember that I introduced a Bill at the beginning of the Session to carry that into effect, but my hon. friend said I had better introduce it as an amendment to this Bill. The clause is as follows:—

Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, at the time when an election of a member to represent either of the electoral districts of Gaspé or Saguenay in the House of Commons of Canada, is about to be held, that communication by water between the Island of Anticosti or the Magdalen Islands (as the case may be) and the mainland, may probably be interrupted during such election by the severity of the season, he may direct that all necessary instructions and intelligence relating to such election may be transmitted by telegraph to and by the proper deputy returning officer or officers, by and to the returning officer, so that he may be informed of the number of votes given for each candidate, and of other matters relating to the election, and be enabled to return the candidate having the majority, or to make such other return as the case may require; and the Governor in Council may make such order as to the details of the proceedings at such election, depending on such telegraphic communication, as to him may seem proper for best attaining the purposes of this Act.

We do not propose to vote by telegraph, but to carry on the proceedings of the election by telegraph. Instead of sending the proclamations, writs and appointments by letter, they will be sent by telegraph, and the reports will be made by returning officers by telegraph. The most important communications are now made by telegraph and are as sure as if made by letter, because they are repeated, and when a telegram is repeated we have the strongest assurance that it has been sent correctly. The ballot boxes will be made at the Magdalen Islands, bulletins printed there, and the elections carried on in winter as in summer, the only difference being that instead of sending the information by letter it will be sent by telegraph. The telegraph system in those islands is owned by and under the control of the Government. Some people will say that might give rise to fraud, but the candidates will also be able to telegraph for information, so that there cannot be any fraud.

Mr. BLAKE. It appears to me this clause stands on the Orders of the Day, in a Bill which is ordered to be read a second time. Is it in order to propose the clause on this occasion?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There cannot be any exception to this motion, because it is not a Bill but a resolution.

Mr. BLAKE. I find a Bill on the Orders of the Day proposing to carry out the object proposed in this clause. The House has ordered that the Bill be read a second time, and it now stands on the Orders of the Day. The point of order is whether we can anticipate the decision of the House on that question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a Bill on the Orders of the Day, but this is not a Bill. This is a resolution, and, therefore, it does not prevent the Bill on the Orders of the Day being taken up as ordered.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I am not aware that if a private member thinks fit to introduce a Bill and put it on the Orders of the Day, there is any reason why the Government should not adopt a similar clause, and introduce it into a Bill introduced by the Government for a general purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not aware that the hon. member for Gaspé was a member of the Government.

Mr. CAMERON. I did not say he was a member of the Government, but I said: 'That if a private member introduced a Bill, that was no reason why the Government should not incorporate a clause similar to the Bill in a Government measure.'

Mr. BLAKE. The Government is not proposing this amendment, it is the hon. member for Gaspé who is moving it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He introduced it as a member of the House and not as a member of the Government, and the members of the Government have no greater privileges in that regard than any other member.

Mr. BLAKE. The difficulty that strikes me in reference to the merits of the hon. gentleman's clause is one upon which I would like a little further information before giving it my adhesion. Of course we must all be desirous that the difficulties attending the communication with a portion of the county of Gaspé should be remedied if practicable, and the only question is whether we can remedy them and give adequate securities for the results of the election being properly declared. The difficulty that occurs to me is that of identifying in some way the written communication of a returning officer. The hon. gentleman says there will be no difficulty because candidates can send despatches too, but the candidates' despatches will not be authentic records of what has occurred in the Magdalen Islands. You have further to be assured that the despatch which is written on the other side by the returning officer was really signed by him. There is not that evidence. There is no provision which insures its being the act of the returning officer of the other side which reaches the chief returning officer on this side.

Mr. FORTIN. I think that difficulty is very slight, because the hon. gentleman knows that all the telegraph operators are sworn, and if the proclamation, for instance, is sent by telegraph from Percé round to Meat Cove, and then by cable to the Magdalen Islands, it passes through the hands of people who are sworn. One of the returning officers receives that, and some time afterwards he receives a second copy, and if that copy is a fac-simile, then he has got the material proof that it is the proclamation that has been posted at Percé. It is not possible that an election can take place in the county of Gaspé without its being telegraphed by many persons from the Islands to the mainland. Supposing frauds were attempted, the friends of the candidates would have already telegraphed that an election was going to take place, that the proclamation was going to be issued on such a day, and that such a person was to be returning officer. There is no possibility of fraud being practised.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would see the possibility if he were to consider the effects of proposing that all the instructions and all the returns by the different returning officers throughout the Dominion might be transmitted by telegraph. It may be true that the telegraph operators are sworn, but the telegraph operator, when he receives a despatch, never enquires if the signature is the genuine signature of the party who transmits it. There is no security that anything which is despatched as the return of the returning officer is really his return.

Mr. FORTIN. The hon. gentleman has forgotten what I said about all the telegrams being repeated, and that where a second copy is found to be the fac-simile of the first despatch, then it is material proof that it is the genuine despatch. When an election takes place numerous telegrams will be sent from the Magdalen Islands to the mainland, and there will be no chance of fraud being necessarily practised. Moreover, nothing can be gained by fraud. I bring in this Bill in order to give those people a chance to exercise their rights as Canadian voters. I have a special reason for that because the elections in the Magdalen Islands take place after the others on account of the difficulty in reaching them in winter. There is a maximum time and a minimum time, and the Government would consult their own interests in choosing either one or the other. In 1878 I would have come forward for the Local House to defeat for the third time the candidate who opposed me in the Local House, but how could I do it? The Government at Quebec, instead of choosing the maximum time so as to give a chance to these people to vote, they chose the minimum time to exclude these voters, and therefore I did not come forward. In the fall I came forward for the Federal House, and the Government chose the maximum time so as to have the election in the winter in order to disqualify the Magdalen Islands people again. But they could not do it because the maximum time was not long enough. But the voting took place during a storm and I lost about 400 votes, though I still had 900 of a majority.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has not answered the difficulty at all, but he has supplied a very important reason why another portion of his clause should not pass in its present shape. The hon. gentleman has told the House that when discretionary power was in the hands of the Government, it was improperly used, and his late opponent, Mr. Flynn, secured election in Gaspé. The proposal, however, was to place the whole details in the hands of the Government. If it is intended to announce the result of the polls by telegraph it should be surrounded by many precautions. The repetition of the telegram is no security of the correctness of the measure, and among the other safeguards there should be one for identifying the returning officer who sends the telegram.

Mr. FORTIN. The Government will have no discretion. The voting at Magdalen Islands will take place at the same time as on the mainland. The arrangements for voting will be so closely watched that fraud will be impossible. If fraud should take place, nothing would be gained because the ballot boxes would be forwarded as soon as navigation opened.

Mr. BLAKE. If we are going to accept returns by telegraph, the arrangements should be surrounded with every precaution, and these should be determined by Parliament and not by the Governor in Council.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we had better accept for the present an amendment providing that a return shall also be made in the same way as other returns, and that in the case where the telegraphic return varies from the written one the latter shall be accepted. Before the Bill comes to the third reading I shall have the amendment drafted in proper form, providing that the return shall be forwarded to the Clerk to be dealt with by the House in case there is a variation.

On clause 6,

Mr. BLAKE. Why is this change made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reason the change is made is that in the first place the returning officers provided for by the present law are not in any way the servants or officers of the Dominion, but the servants and officers of the Provinces. They are in no way under the control of the Dominion Parliament, except that they may be brought to the Bar of the House and punished for misdemeanors. They are not obliged to perform this duty; they can refuse to do it, and more than that, I mean to say I have no confidence in a certain number of these officers. They are the creatures of the Local Government, and if the Local Government chooses to put pressure on them there is great danger of their being governed by those who appointed them. It is for those reasons that I think the returning officers should be considered in every respect as Dominion officers, that this amendment has been proposed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. How can the hon. gentleman obtain more control over one set of officers than he has over another? What does it matter if they are local officers, he will have the same control over them precisely.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no counteracting influence.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No; the hon. gentleman simply wants to try another dodge in order to appoint men who will make returns such as used to scandalize the whole country. We know what sort of returns were made by his appointees in the past. The system in operation has, undoubtedly, worked well, and I am not aware that any difficulty has arisen.

Mr. BOULTBEE. There is no doubt that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) is fighting for something of great interest to his party. It is of great importance for them to retain returning officers appointed by the Local Government, because in more than one instance, in more than twenty instances in Ontario, the grossest favoritism has been shown by them, and they have thrown serious obstructions in the way of the Conservative party. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Strange) mentioned a case of which I am cognizant in which a registry office was made the Grit headquarters, and the business of the office could scarcely be carried on. In South Wellington, where certificates were being asked from Sheriff Gow for the purpose of enabling certain parties who were agents to vote, he stated, on more than a dozen occasions, in order to prevent them from voting, that he would have to consult his solicitor, who is the present member for South Wellington. I hold that as it is notorious that the influence of these men has been directed to prevent freedom in the elections, in almost in every instance the Conservative party and the Dominion Government should have the power of appointing officers who would do their duty fairly and honorably.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There are certainly as many Conservative registrars and sheriffs, and a great many more in some of the Provinces, I am sure. There was no object whatever in making the present law except to avoid the scandal that had existed of appointing officers who were brought directly under political influences, while these men were not.

Mr. BOULTBEE. It may be that there are more Conservatives than Reformers, but no case is alleged against those appointed by the Conservatives. The case is alleged only in the case of those appointed by the Grit Government, and that is where the trouble is.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This is the first time I have heard any charge of partizanship against Sheriff Gow. I do not believe it, but I believe that the hon. gentleman has been misinformed. Anyone who knows Sheriff Gow knows that he is incapable of doing injustice to any political party. My recollection of his proceedings is that he appointed the same deputy returning officers as his predecessor, the late Sheriff Grange did, unless they were dead or removed. I do not think the hon. gentleman has been correctly informed at all. That is not the sort of man Sheriff Gow is.

Mr. BOULTBEE. I did not say that complaints were made by the hon. member for South Wellington, but I have heard Conservatives complain that he delayed the certificates.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Of course I do not say that he did not, but what I do say is that it is entirely different from the character he holds. I never heard him charged with any misconduct in the performance of his duty as returning officer.

Mr. MILLS. The point to be kept in mind in the consideration of this clause is that the Government are a party in the matter. They will not stand indifferently between those engaged in the electoral contest. The Crown dissolves Parliament on their advice; they go to the country; the Crown makes appointments on their advice, and in every instance they are the parties who appoint returning officers, and there is very much greater danger of abuse, of improper conduct on the part of returning officers who are subject to the influence of one of the parties in the contest, than there is when the returning officers are appointed by some outside party. If the Government cannot trust men in high official positions, who have social and political positions to lose by improper conduct, how much less can those be trusted who will be appointed by the Administration for the time being. If the hon. gentleman is not satisfied to take the sheriffs for returning officers, why does he not designate a class in the Bill? Why does he not give Parliament power to appoint returning officers, who being once appointed by Parliament, would not be under the immediate control of the Administration. We all know how the returning officers acted when the Government appointed them. We know what took place in the representation of North Renfrew. A candidate who was defeated by nearly 200 votes was returned to this House, and the hon. gentleman defended his return. There were Mr. Sheepskinski, Mr. Calfskinski, and many others reported as voting for the candidate; and we know that the gentleman so returned succeeded in retaining his seat until that Parliament was dissolved. I refer to the return of Mr. O'Reilly. In West Peterboro' also we had the returning officer sitting in judgment on the qualification of one of the candidates and deciding that his qualification was not sufficient; and although he received a majority of votes, he was kept out of his seat by the returning officer who sent another gentleman here who occupied the seat during two Sessions. An improper return was made in the same way from Muskoka; and all these cases arose from the partizan character of the returning officers appointed under the law as it existed before 1874. When the hon. member for Lambton went to the country in 1874, he acted upon the principle set forth in the law now upon the Statute-book and which the hon. gentleman proposes to repeal. Was there a single complaint of anyone being improperly returned, of anyone being kept out of his seat in consequence of improper conduct on the part of a returning officer on that occasion?

Mr. BANNERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman name one case. I do not know of one. We know that in many cases in which partizans were appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, they were disqualified by their partizanship from discharging the duties of their office. In my own constituency the hon. gentleman appointed as returning officer one of the most violent political partizans in that constituency. He went outside of the constituency for deputies, so that the Tory party might not lose a vote in the election, and he appointed Reformers as poll clerks, and in this way prevented twenty or thirty persons from voting.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They could vote.

Mr. MILLS. No; under the law they were not at liberty to vote; and I know that these poll clerks were not paid, although, I believe, the returning officer received the money to cover the expenses of the election. It is perfectly obvious that the proposition of the hon. gentleman is utterly inconsistent with everything like fair dealing in an election contest. He knows right well that no one who is not an active and ardent supporter of his own will be appointed. The first qualification that a returning officer will have to possess is that he is a friend of the Administration, and I say the Government is as much disqualified for advising the Crown in this matter as a member is in a question in which he has a personal interest. The hon. gentleman has made out no case. He has not shown that any abuse exists under the law as it stands; he has not shown a single case in which a returning officer has made an improper return in which he has returned the candidate in a minority, or kept out the candidate entitled to the seat. Yet the hon. gentleman, without showing a single abuse, and without any facts to warrant it, proposes this change in the law. What should be the rule to guide the Legislature? That it should make such changes, as experience shows necessary for the removal of real abuses and grievances, is patent to everybody. The hon. member for Lambton has stated truly that the majority of the returning officers belong to the side of the Government, to which a large majority of officials in Quebec, Ontario and the other Provinces belong. But, not satisfied with that, he insists that the returning officers shall be his creatures and appointees. The present law is just and satisfactory to both parties; like the other propositions of this Bill, the present is intended to load the dice in favor of the hon. Premier and his supporters.

Mr. BOULTBEE. The hon. member for Bothwell argues that the returning officers should not be appointed for Dominion elections by the Dominion Government, because they would be subject to its influence, whereas the appointees of the Ontario Government would not be subject to its influence. If the Ontario Government was taking a proper position on this matter, his argument would be good; but they are notoriously not taking the proper position, and the chief opponents of the Conservative party in Ontario at present is the Ontario Local Government. We find its hostility everywhere. It is an open secret that as regards the questions to be brought before the country at the next elections, including the boundary question and the Streams Bill, that the Government of Ontario and the leader of the Opposition have been in consultation for hours, days and weeks, getting up a case—not trying to effect a proper settlement of these questions, but to bring them into a shape by which trouble may be caused for their political advantage. The hon. leader of the Opposition and Mr. Mowat do not want the boundary question settled, preferring it should be a leading question at the next elections. Instead of, as the hon. member for Bothwell says, returning officers who hold offices under the Ontario Government being free and unbiassed, they are the worst biassed men we have to meet, and they are acting in every shape and in every place against us. Why within the last two days, I have learned how the whole pressure of the Ontario Government is being used in East York against myself. The tavern-keepers are being told, that they shall not have their licenses if they do not pledge themselves to vote for the hon. member for Lambton instead of me; and the Division Court clerk is canvassing against me. When we find the tactics so apparent and general—when those men tell you: I cannot vote for you, although I am a Conservative, for I shall lose my license and my bread, it is seen that their action is dictated by the principles of business. And yet we have the hon. member for Bothwell declaring: We want those returning officers appointed by the Ontario Government, and under their immediate control—we want those unbiassed men left in charge of the Dominion elections. If there ever was anything necessary to preserve the liberty of election, it is that the Dominion Government should have the right to appoint men who will conduct them free from party bias, fairly and properly. It has not and cannot be alleged, at least within my memory, that any returning officer appointed by the Conservative Government has acted unfairly. Such officers appointed by the Ontario Government, would, like the license inspectors at present, try to coerce the people and prevent freedom and fairness in the elections. The Commons of Canada should not be governed by the Ontario Legislature, or be subjected to its Ministerial cabals. The Dominion Government should appoint their own officers for this as for other duties.

Mr. BLAKE. The statement the hon. gentleman has just made with reference to myself and Mr. Mowat, is utterly and entirely and absolutely without foundation in fact. Mr. Mowat never consulted me on any one step of this controversy as to what he should do; he never communicated to me his intended course. I never gave him any expression of opinion as to what he should do, and was never aware of any one step he proposed to take through the whole of this controversy until the public became aware of it.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. member for Bothwell stated he had not heard of any case in which a sheriff interfered in the elections. Now, we have in Stratford, I presume, as respectable a sheriff as the Reform party are in the habit of appointing, and without finding fault with him I may give an instance of such intermeddling. We have a police magistrate in Stratford appointed by the Mowat Administration, contrary to the will of the people. We are compelled to pay him $1,200 a year to deal out even-handed justice to all, irrespective of their politics. But the partizan sheriff selected the partizan appointee of a partizan Government, one who went no less than twenty miles to act as deputy returning officer in a division of my county where it was notorious his co-religionists were found to a large extent. It was not for the benefit of the public that he was selected, but to influence voters connected with his own church. In another case, a bailiff was selected for a scrutineer for another division, and who carried into a poor settlement a large number of judgments and executions to influence voters. We know what influence they had on the electors. With such influences as these against us, my friends and myself feel we are unfairly handicapped in the elections. When such cases as that occur, it is high time the Government should take into their hands the selecting of the returning officers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the selection by the Government of a returning officer prevent a police magistrate voting if he pleases? He has as good a right to vote as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HESSON. Does the hon. gentleman approve of the appointment of a police magistrate as a scrutineer for a returning officer? I gave you a clear case of partizanship, and by a respectable gentleman too.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has not made out any case. He has not shown any improper conduct on the part of any officer appointed. With reference to the observation of the hon. member for East York that the sheriff and the registrars are appointed by the Local Government, they are not appointed for this purpose. They are Dominion officers—officers of this Government, and the mere fact that they are discharging the duties of returning officers depends on the Statute which the hon. gentleman proposes to repeal. Sheriffs and registrars being permanent officers of the Local Government are no more under its control as returning officers than would be the judges in any of our courts under the control of the Government. What the hon. gentleman wants is not justice or neutrality on the part of returning officers. He wants them to be violent partizans on his own side, and is, therefore, very anxious that this Government should appoint them. We know how these men act. I have given instances of their returning candidates who were in a minority, and those candidates were enabled, through the influence of the Government, to sit here for two or three Sessions. The hon. gentleman who proposed to change the law has not cited one case where a returning officer acted improperly.

Mr. BOULTBEE. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says that I have not shown a single case. We have asserted, and I do not think it can be denied, that the North York registrar's office was used as a room for committee meetings, and that the sheriff in Guelph delayed people who wanted certificates for voting under the pretence that he had to get counsel's opinion first. Hon. gentlemen opposite say the Ontario Government does not interfere. The Premier of Ontario, in talking on the question during last Session, said he would meet this Government on that question at the polls. What did he mean by that but that we would have the whole force of the Ontario Government against us. Every possible means, every sheriff and division court bailiff and license inspector, and every creature they have, is used against us.

Mr. BANNERMAN. The hon. member for Bothwell said he knew of no case where a returning officer had acted unfairly since 1874. I can show where a returning officer, the registrar of the county of Renfrew, declared on a nomination day that the present Auditor-General was elected through a flaw in our nomination paper; and when appeal was made to Judge Wilson, he in his judgment condemned that returning officer for the action he took. That returning officer, moreover, never appointed a deputy, or a clerk, or anything else, without first consulting the head-centre of the Liberal Association in Renfrew.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We have had under the present system the elections of 1874 and 1878, or, I suppose, about 450 individual elections. In my judgment and experience of twenty-five years I maintain the grievances have been very exceptional and slight, and the present system is the best one. There is no necessity for the change. Because there is some antagonism between Ontario and the Federal Government, why should the other Provinces be interfered with? If we go back to the old system we will have returning officers like the one brought before this House who asked for twenty-four hours consideration to reply to the question as to what was his name.

Mr. LANDRY. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that this law has been in operation since 1874. It was framed after the elections of 1874. The principle was voted upon in the county of Montmagny, where they did not choose either the sheriff or the registrar, but they selected men of their own party to act as returning officers. If the hon. member for L'Islet does not want any changes in his constituency it is because he has a registrar named by the late Joly Government, who is ready to do what he has done already.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I deny that, Sir.

Mr. LANDRY. He did place the polls at the end of parishes, though I do not know that it was at the solicitation of my hon. friend. It was done and he profited by it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire entirely to contradict what has been said. There was no complaint at the last local or Federal election.

Mr. FARROW. In my own riding a partizan returning officer was appointed by the Mackenzie Government—one of the worst partizans that could be found. The village of Brussels belonged half to me and the other half to Centre Huron, and this officer ordered all the votes to be polled in North Huron and they did so, and that same half again polled its vote in Centre Huron. I have often wondered how the late Premier can wear such a long, serious, and sanctimonious face when he knows that such facts took place under his Administration.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can only say that this is the first time I have heard of any impropriety of the returning officer. In large counties where there is only one registrar and one sheriff, of course some one else has to be appointed. I know nothing about the appointment, and have no recollection of the circumstance at all. The fact that we took that function deliberately out of the hands of the Government showed that we had no other object to serve than to have the public work done properly.

Mr. GUTHRIE. If what the hon. member for North Huron told us is correct, it is a very strong argument why we should not adopt this clause. We are told that in his riding neither the sheriff nor the registrar was appointed the returning officer, the reason, no doubt, was that they were acting as returning officers in the other riding. As they had to get somebody else, he tells us they selected a violent partizan, of whose conduct he complains. Now, that is precisely what we wish to prevent by passing this amendment. We want to prevent the selection of strong partizans, and to leave that duty in the hands of men of established character.

Mr. BOWELL. The remarks of the last speaker afford rather an argument that the law should not remain as it is now. If in a county where there are three ridings there are only two officers provided for, under the law, it would follow that the appointment of a third officer would be necessary.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Sometimes there are two registration officers.

Mr. BOWELL. I am speaking of cases where there are not two, of which my own county is one. There are three ridings, and in every case the Government has had to appoint an additional returning officer. In my own riding I am glad to say that the registrar, though appointed by the Reform Government, is a gentleman in whom I have the most implicit confidence. But there is a sheriff in the adjoining county who, in the last Dominion election, gave certificates to doubtful voters and sent them into rural sections of the county to act as agents of the candidates and there depositing their vote. It is men of that kind who should not occupy the position of returning officer. I know it is not the intention of the present Government to overlook the sheriffs and registrars, who are believed to be impartial men, and these will receive appointments. But where cases of the kind to which I refer have occurred, it is the duty of the Government to see that such men do not get a similar appointment again. The hon. member for Bothwell told us he knew of a Tory returning officer who took the trouble to go out of the division to select returning officers who had no votes, and he afterwards told us that, under the law as it then existed, the returning officers had they had votes could have not recorded their votes; and in the next sentence he told us, that by going into an adjoining county and bringing young men who had no votes, he disfranchised thirty or forty returning officers. If that is logic I do not understand it.

Mr. MILLS. I did not say so.

Mr. BOWELL. By what means then did he disfranchise the returning officers, unless he appointed those who had votes? When this question was under discussion in the House I remember calling attention to the fact that in constituencies where the contest was likely to be close, a partizan returning officer, or a returning officer who intentionally appointed friends of one particular party, might by that means carry an election, and the law was then repealed. Now the hon. member for East York referred to a threat on the part of the Ontario Premier. Hon. gentlemen know very well that in discussing the question of the boundary, on which we have not yet had the very valuable opinion of the leader of the Opposition, they stated distinctly and boldly and in a threatening tone that it was at the elections, that they hoped would take place in 1883, that they would test this question. Judging from the character of some of the men whom Mr. Mowat has appointed to the position of returning officers, any honest man would shrink from going through an election if such men were to be returning officers. We know that men who have been appointed sheriffs have been disrobed for improper conduct by the Judges of the Court. They may be perfectly honest, but if they were dishonest in the administration of funds placed in their hands, it is not likely they would be honest if they could serve their masters who gave them a living. I know that in the town where I live the license commissioner, to whom an hon. member has already referred, is known and has been proved to have accepted bribes from different tavern-keepers before he would grant a license; yet when this fact was published, and the Ontario Government knew it as well as the people of Belleville, he was reappointed to the position he had disgraced. The friends of the Ontario Government were so disgusted with this reappointment that they induced his colleagues not to meet at the board with him; and the Mowat Government was again compelled to relieve him of the responsibility, and to prevent him blackmailing persons who desired to obtain licenses. We know that the fact is patent in every constituency, that unless the keepers of licensed houses voted in a certain manner they would not obtain licenses; that men who had been keeping respectable houses, against which no complaint had been made, from ten years to a quarter of a century, were deprived of their licenses because they were Conservatives and could not be convinced into taking political action against their party. If no difficulty has arisen of appointing returning officers in counties in which there were not sufficient sheriffs or registrars, we have as good a right to believe that the men appointed shall be responsible to the Government, will be just as honest in the administration of their office of returning officer, and more so than men who are not responsible to the Government practically, if opposed to them, but rather would be inclined to serve the cause of a Local Government by placing difficulties in the way of any candidate he desired to defeat. I have no fear of any of the results to which hon. gentlemen have referred arising from the appointment of returning officers, nor do I believe the Government will pass over the heads of appointees of the Ontario Government. But where returning officers have been known to act partially it is well that the Government of the day, whether Conservative or Reform, should have power to teach those men that they should not commit acts of that kind in future.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Customs seems to have more to do with the elections than the hon. First Minister, and is in antagonism with the hon. First Minister with respect to this matter. The former hon. gentleman declares that appointees will not be passed over, while the latter thinks that such persons holding office under a Local Government should not be appointed returning officers. It is difficult to know what is the principle which is about to regulate Executive action. We have heard a good deal of the misdeeds of returning officers, but such as have been stated on this side of the House are cases which have been before Parliament or a judicial body, while the cases brought forward by hon. gentlemen opposite have not received any sifting or investigation. The Reform party, for a long time, advocated this proposition. They advocated it a long time ago, when the great bulk of the officers was under the control of the Government of Ontario, holding views different from our own. They were unsuccessful in securing its adoption, because the Government insisted on keeping the power in their own hands. When they came into power it was the rule that registrars or sheriffs should be returning officers, but such officers were equal to the occasion. It was with reference to such a Government, animated by such a sentiment, having appointed these officers and having control of them, that my hon. friend, in furtherance of the general principle to which I have referred, deliberately proposed to Parliament to tie his hands and the hands of any future Government by providing that these officers should be appointed from amongst those ranks. Hon. gentlemen did not oppose it then; they did not object to it then; they thought it was all right, they thought it would help them; but no sooner than they get into power they change their minds. It was a good thing to tie our hands, but a bad thing to tie theirs, and they want to free themselves from the tie the House imposed. My hon. friend tied his own hands, because it was well that all Governments should have their hands tied in this regard, and that we should accept the proposition that the general standing of these officers, the responsibility they were under to the community in which they lived, was a better guarantee, on the whole, for our having good, honest and impartial returning officers, than to place the appointment in the uncontrolled hands and at the uncontrolled disposal of the Government of the day, who would thus be allowed full license to name whom they pleased for the purpose of discharging the duty of deciding whether they or their adversaries were the elected representatives of the people. I admit that there may be cases where the sheriff or the registrar is not the best man. I admit that there are bad sheriffs and bad registrars; but the question is, whether it would not be vastly better, even with these few exceptional cases, to entrust these particular duties to such men than to place their appointment at the uncontrolled discretion of the Government of the day to appoint its own creatures. I think that on the whole you are sure to get as a general rule respectable men for returning officers under the present plan, but you are proposing to substitute the control to the Government of the day in a matter of which the Government of the day is not indifferent, in which it has an interest, in which it is one of the parties and in which their wish will be that a returning officer may be favorable to their own side. The Minister of Customs says he could not understand my hon. friend's argument; but it was perfectly plain. The returning officer in that county wanted to have partizan returning officers, but he did not want to lose any votes in Bothwell, so he took men from another county who had not votes there and put them in as returning officers. He had his creatures there to do his bidding and yet he lost no votes, and he appointed poll clerks, supporters of my hon. friend who were under the control of the deputy returning officers sworn to do their duty, and they did it and they were deprived of their votes.

Mr. BOWELL. They need not have taken the office unless they liked.

Mr. BLAKE. No, of course, they need not, had they cared to forfeit £10 each as that is the fine for refusal. I know a case in which a most active supporter of mine in one of the townships I was contesting was chosen the day before polling. He was the gentleman upon whom I mainly depended for organization in that particular township, and the £10 had to be paid in order to release him. In other words, he was fined £10 because he was an active supporter of mine.

Mr. BOWELL. I had a case in which they served the papers after 12 o'clock in order to compel him to serve the next morning.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly; abuses have occurred and they do occur. I do not suppose that abuses will be altogether avoided under the law as it now stands. I do not say that the sheriffs and registrars are in every case the pick and lead of the community, but on the whole you have better securities by this plan than by a plan by which you make a party to the contest judge of who shall decide between the parties as returning officer. One word with regard to a particular feature of this debate. We have, on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite in this discussion, a dead set against the Ontario Government, against the appointment of their officers and the conduct of their officers. I do not know about these transactions, and I shall not discuss them, but I say it is most extraordinary conduct to impugn a Provincial Government as their conduct has been impugned in this House. It is a course which has never been taken before with reference to any Provincial Government; and whether the Ontario Government be right or wrong, hon. gentlemen should remember that it commands the esteem, the respect and the confidence of a large majority of the people of Ontario, and I believe Ontario will resent such conduct on the part of hon. gentlemen.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I am surprised that the hon. gentleman looks at this provision of the Bill as a new one, and when I say it is not I will not speak on my own authority, but I will give an authority which I believe is worthy of the respect of hon. gentlemen opposite. I look upon the old law—the one passed by the late Administration—as not being imperative. It was not imperative on the part of the Government to address the writs of election to the sheriff or registrar. In 1878, in a contest which then took place in my own county, the writ was addressed, not to the sheriff or the registrar, but to a notary of the county. The sheriff, it is true, had sent a letter to the Government saying he would not act, but the registrar did not do so and he was willing to act. This was done under the authority of the then Minister of Justice, who is an able lawyer; so that I do not regard the principle of the Bill as a new one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish to make another amendment, providing that the elections in Muskoka shall take place on the same day, as in other parts of Canada. This change is made at the request of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Cockburn), and I think it is a proper one, as there is no necessity for having the elections on a different day than in the case of the Province.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree that this change is quite correct, and I believe that Mr. O'Brien, the opponent of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Cockburn), agreed in that view. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether, in the present state of things, Manitoba might not also be brought within the same provision, as we are now within three and a-half days of that Province, and it is quite as accessible as many points of the Dominion. It is nearer in fact, than Cape Breton or the Island is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know how it would affect the outlying districts, but I will consider it before the third reading.

Mr. BLAKE. Even if exceptional time were given for the return of the writs, there would be no reason why the elections should not be held on the same day.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I wish to allude to an anomaly which exists in the Dominion Election Law, and which has been complained of almost every Session since the law has been enacted. The law imposes a tax of $50 upon each candidate, the object being to prevent bogus candidates from interfering in an election contest. But this amount was not deemed a penalty to a man who would put a constituency to the trouble of an election uselessly; and there was a Bill proposed this Session by my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), who is unfortunately absent, and I think the present occasion is favorable for introducing the provision of his Bill as a new section in this Bill.

I will therefore move that the following clause be added to the Bill:—

Section 19 of the Act last cited is hereby amended by striking out all the words after "nomination paper," on the fifth line of the said section, and by substituting the following:

Nor unless a sum of $200 be deposited into the hands of the returning officer at the time the nomination paper shall be filed with him. And the receipt of the returning officer shall in every case be sufficient evidence of the production of the nomination paper, consent of candidate and of the payment herein mentioned:—The sum so deposited by any candidate shall be returned to him in the event of his being elected or of his obtaining at least one-half of the votes polled in favor of the candidate elected, otherwise it shall belong to Her Majesty for the public uses of Canada; and the sum so paid and not returned, as herein provided, shall be applied by the returning officer towards the payment of the election expenses, and an account thereof shall be rendered by him to the Auditor-General of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. This amendment has taken us very much by surprise, and I regret that the hon. gentleman has not seen fit to have given some notice of it; and I invite the attention of the Government to the fact that this very important question was postponed at their own suggestion at an early period of the Session, in order to give us an opportunity of considering it. It does not seem to me that there is now an opportunity of debating it. I myself stated my views at that time, and they are not at all changed. I have never very much favored a deposit at all. I have never very much favored the view that if a deposit is put in, it should be irrevocably lost to the candidate, and I so far agreed with the views of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe as to assist him to secure a change in the law by which the deposits should be returned. But to increase that deposit may place a very serious practical check upon the freedom of the people in the nomination of the candidates. I object to increasing it to a substantial sum like $200. I believe we never had any deposit at all until it was proposed to substitute a written nomination for an open nomination. In the open nomination there was nothing to prevent a bogus candidature and that sort of public opinion which gathers around the hustings; and when it was proposed, on the adoption of the election by ballot, to substitute written nominations for oral nominations, it was said: "You have not got the check of that public opinion which surrounds a public nomination on the hustings, and, therefore, it may be, if the nominations are to be made privately by a written paper, that bogus nominations will be put in." Then it was said that the number of voters required might be increased, and it was increased, I think, to twenty-five. It now requires twenty-five electors to sign and file a written nomination paper, and the consent of the candidate, if in the country, shall also be filed. I am also inclined to think that an ample security, quite as good without any deposit, speaking for the feelings and social action of the people of our Province with whose political modes of thought I am more acquainted, without anything more. But it was proposed to do something more to prevent a few persons eager for a contest from embarking in it—to put a legal check upon them, this deposit of $50 came into the Bill as a further security. As I said already, I do not admire very much that principle, and now to increase the amount to $200, I think, would be a great mistake. But to provide the $50 deposit shall be returned in the event in which the hon. gentleman proposes the $200 should be returned, seems to me not unreasonable. It seems to make the law less absurd than otherwise it would be and to place less of a restriction to people who nominate candidates. I therefore propose to amend this clause by substituting $50 for the amount of $200.

Mr. BUNSTER. Early in the Session I announced my wish to amend the clause by proposing that the sum of $250 be deposited by each candidate, the successful candidate to receive the money. I would like now to make the deposit $500 for the benefit of the successful candidate. I will move an amendment later.

Mr. OUIMET. It seems to be admitted by the hon. leader of the Opposition that there must be some check on bogus candidates, since we have no longer open nominations. During the last contest I had an opponent in my county, who vanished before he could get twenty-five electors to sign his paper. But there were bogus candidates in the counties of Terrebonne, Two Mountains and Beauharnois, one in each who did not poll ten votes each. This abuse should be terminated. I think the deposit of $200 not too high, as any bond fide candidate can raise it, either himself or by his friends. It would not prevent any good man from coming forward, but would prove a bar to bogus candidates.

Mr. MILLS. It would be rather extraordinary if the hon. First Minister supports this proposal to discourage the nomination of candidates, after expressing the hope at Toronto that his friends would permit no Opposition candidate to be elected by acclamation. We have two great parties in the country; but there may be a number of electors in various constituencies who do not agree with either when they wish to put a candidate in the field, not with the expectation that he will succeed, but in order to have their views proclaimed on the hustings and propagated throughout the country, and they ought not to be hindered from doing so. Now, this proposition is a proposal to fine men, who, though they should be in a large minority, undertake to express their views on the hustings, and before the candidates in the field. That would be a restriction upon freedom of election, and wholly at variance with the spirit and principles of representative Government. How is a candidate to know what the chances may be at an election, and why should he, if he does not poll a certain number of votes, be subjected to a fine of $200. It is the right of a minority to nominate and elect a candidate if they can; and if there is any class that ought to enjoy the special protection of the law it is the minority. What was the object in requiring twenty-five electors to sign a nomination paper? To settle the bond fides of the candidate who seeks election. If twenty-five are not enough increase it to fifty or 100; but there is no reason shown for requiring a deposit to be forfeited if a certain number of votes are not polled. I believe the choice of the electors should be as free and unrestricted as possible. I am opposed to the proposition and will support the amendment of my hon. friend in preference. I am in favor of removing the provision of the law relating to money deposits, either absolutely or conditionally, from the Statutes.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon. member forgets that the law was enacted by the late Government.

Mr. MILLS. I know that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. According to this amendment the unsuccessful candidate must have one-half the number of the successful candidate. Suppose there are 1,000 votes and four candidates, and the successful candidate gets 501. These then will have 163 each, or together half the votes polled, yet each one would have to forfeit his deposit.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill reported.

CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At this late hour of the night I do not intend to occupy much time in placing this resolution before the House. The whole question is so thoroughly familiar to the members of the House, and is so fully set forth in the papers which have been distributed, and the subject, in one form or another, has so long engaged the attention of Parliament, that I do not think it will be necessary to detain the House very long in explaining the proposal of these resolutions. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that in 1871, a Commission, composed of gentlemen well qualified to deal with the question of trade communication, was appointed to consider the enlargement and extension of the canal system of Canada. That Commission, after very careful consideration, embodied their views in a report which was adopted by the Government and received the unanimous approval of Parliament. I do not now remember that any gentleman on either side of this Parliament took any exception to the conclusion to which that Commission arrived. I will remind the House that in proposing to enlarge the Welland, St. Lawrence and Lachine Canals their attention was directed to the question of the Baie Verte Canal. They divided the different canals upon which they reported into three classes—those that were considered most important in the interest of the whole Dominion were placed in the first class, those which were next in importance in the second class, and the others in the third; they placed the construction of the Baie Verte Canal in the first, as they regarded it of the greatest importance to the interests of the Dominion. I will read a brief extract from this report which will show the importance they attached to the construction of that canal:

Mr. BUNSTER.

“Inseparately connected with the growth of intercolonial trade is the construction of the Baie Verte Canal across the isthmus connecting the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

“The advantages that must occur, not only to the Dominion as a whole, but to the commerce of the Maritime Provinces, are so clearly pointed out by the Boards of Trade of all the leading cities of Canada, and by men largely interested in the development of our growing commercial interests, not simply the merchants of St. John and other places in the locality of the proposed canal, but merchants of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec, that it is superfluous for the Commissioners to do more than briefly to refer to a few features of the scheme.”

Now, Sir, I may say that this question also engaged the attention of the Boards of Trade in the various cities referred to. Those of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and others took the question up, and having examined in the light of the commercial interests of Canada, resolved with great unanimity that it was of great importance to the trade and commerce of Canada that that canal should be constructed. The Government adopted the policy suggested by the Commission and brought it down to this House, and I believe it received the unanimous sanction of the House. In connection with other appropriations for the enlargement of the canals to which I have referred, $1,000,000 was appropriated by Parliament for the commencement of the Baie Verte Canal. The Government had surveys previously made for the purpose of ascertaining the cost. Messrs. Keefer and Gzowski reported, after a very careful survey had been made, that it would cost between five and six million dollars to construct the canal on the line they proposed, a line that is absolutely the same as that which is now proposed for this ship railway. The Government, under the belief that the canal could be constructed for $5,000,000, were planning to place that work under contract when a change of Government took place in 1873. The hon. member for Lambton, then at the head of the Government, embodied the views of his Government in the most formal and authoritative manner in the speech with which Parliament was opened in the Session of 1874, and a clause of that speech reads as follows:—

“Canal and harbor improvements are being regularly prosecuted with a view to ensure adequate accommodation for the rapidly growing trade of the country. The report of the Chief Engineers of the Department of Public Works on the proposed canal between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy will be submitted for your consideration.”

Mr. Page, the Chief Engineer of the Canals, as here stated, had been called upon to take up the estimates and survey that had been previously made. In the Estimates of that year $1,000,000 had been voted, and that was repeated in the Session of 1875, although the hon. member for Lambton is aware that at the time Mr. Page had made his report that this canal would involve an expenditure of eight or nine million dollars on the route that he considered best. The large increase over the appropriation which it was found necessary to ask for caused some further examination, and the hon. member leading the Government, having given this subject consideration, stated in very emphatic terms that if the canal could be constructed for the estimate of Messrs. Gzowski and Keefer, he should consider himself bound to proceed with the work, and he proposed to test that question by asking for tenders for the work in order to ascertain whether it could be constructed for that amount, and if the result showed that it could be, he was prepared to go on with it. Subsequently, however, Government sought to institute by a Commission to ascertain whether the commercial features of the work would warrant so large an expenditure as eight or nine million dollars. Under these circumstances a Commissioner was appointed. They reported adversely to that. The same Commissioner would have been prepared, if the work could have been accomplished for the sum, a little over $5,000,000, to have concurred in the proposition to go on with it; but under the impression that it would cost a larger sum, a halt was called and the work was abandoned by the hon. member for Lambton, because, as I have said, he had given the strongest evidence, after carefully examining the subject, of his desire to proceed with it. The work remained from that time to this in abeyance, until a proposal was made by Mr. Ketchum, an engineer of ability who had turned his attention to the question of substituting a ship railway for a canal, and he placed himself in communication with the Government in order to ascertain whether they would be disposed, if a ship railway, performing this service equally efficiently, or more so, than a canal, could perform it and at a smaller expense to the country, to consider a proposal. Having received assurances that the Government were alive to the importance of securing the object to which Parliament had pledged itself in connection with the work, surveys were instituted and road plans prepared, and ultimately Mr. Ketchum made a proposal to the Government which has been concurred in and embodied in a Minute of Council and laid on the Table for consideration, the substance of which is embodied in this resolution. I may say that I am now reading from the Order in Council. The proposal is to accept an offer for the construction of this work at the risk of private capitalists. It is proposed by Mr. Ketchum and his associates in this country and the Mother Country, and who he believes, from communications he has had with them, will be prepared to give their support and who, besides furnishing the capital, will assume the risk of placing the work in a position to discharge all the service to the country that the canal which, under Mr. Page's estimates was to cost $8,000,000 or $9,000,000, would accomplish, and to ask nothing whatever from the country until the work was in position to discharge all the service required. It is proposed to carry ships of 2,000 tons weight from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Bay of Fundy or vice versa, and as it is believed that as this work can be constructed at a much smaller cost than would be involved by the canal, while the transit would be cheaper and occupy less time, it would be more valuable than a canal which would be blocked by ice, and it could therefore be operated earlier and later in the season. Under these circumstances the Government believed that assuming it to be practicable to accomplish the work in this way, to obtain all the advantages that would be obtained by constructing the canal, it could be executed at a less cost than the smallest sum to which the Government, after full and careful consideration, could commit the country. The proposal to pay $150,000 a year after the work is placed in an efficient and thorough operation and only continue the payment so long as the transit is efficiently operated, is one that the Government believed would commend itself not only to the hearty and cordial approval of all members of the House, but to the people of this country who take such great interest in promoting its trade and commerce. I do not intend to go into an elaborate statement as to the practicability of the work for the reason stated that Parliament is not asked to incur any liability or risk in the construction of the work. Were we to ask that this should be proceeded with as a Government work it would become a most vital and important question as to whether it was possible to accomplish it; but when the parties are assured of its practicability that they are prepared to accept all risk, it becomes unnecessary to detain the House with any elaborate argument in regard to its practicability. I have no doubt as to its practicability. The principle of hydraulic lifts by which ships are to be raised at one end or the other to the railway and placed on the track has been applied at the London docks for a number of years, and ships of greater burden than those that will require to move across the Isthmus and raised to as great a height as in this instance. The question has been settled. There is scarcely an important harbor here we do not see ships hauled up a steep incline by means of stationary locomotive engines, and if that be the case we can see that in regard to this marine railway, which will be about 18 miles in length, no difficulty can arise in carrying vessels across after landed on the rails. I have the most ample evidence and testimony of the most eminent engineers in the world of the entire practicability of the scheme; and were I submitting this as a Government work, I would feel justified in detaining the House while I read from these authorities. The Congress of the United States have examined the question thoroughly and express their entire confidence in the possibility of carrying ships up greater inclines and for longer distances than is proposed here, and Congress are prepared to expend a large sum of public money to accomplish a similar work in another place. I may first refer to the importance of this undertaking. I will quote from a statement made by the hon. member for Lambton, then leader of the Government, delivered in 1878, when he was reluctantly compelled by the large cost estimated as necessarily involved to change the policy which up to that time he had pursued with respect to the construction of the Baie Verte Canal. He said:

"The Government had acted in perfect good faith. They considered, if it was possible to execute the work at prices corresponding somewhat with Mr. Keefer's estimate, which originally was three and a-half millions, and subsequently five millions, it might be a very considerable advantage to do so. . . . In the meantime, they proposed as soon as the plans were ready to call for tenders, and if these tenders bore any reasonable relation to the estimates that were formed by the gentleman whom the hon. member for Cumberland had characterized as a hydraulic engineer of very high character, they might be able to act on the authority which the House would give them."

In 1874, when the subject was discussed, in a very able speech, by the hon. member for Sunbury, he quoted a number of authorities in relation to the work, and he placed these authorities in very convenient form for me to refer to. He said:

"The advantages to be derived from the Baie Verte Canal were unquestioned at the time of Confederation. Scarcely anybody raised a voice against it, and Mr. Young, at the meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade in 1871, spoke as follows:—

"But there can be no doubt that the inland propeller can descend the St. Lawrence and go direct to Halifax, in Nova Scotia; and this fact brings up other important considerations. Among projected canals there is the Baie Verte Canal, to connect the Bay of Fundy, on the Atlantic, with the Straits of Northumberland in the Gulf, and the Murray Canal, to connect the Bay of Quinte with Weller's Bay on Lake Ontario. If the Baie Verte Canal is possible of construction, the work will be highly important, and, in its results, of a truly national character in all its respects. The City of St. John, in New Brunswick, as well as all other places on the Bay of Fundy, would be brought 430 miles nearer Montreal, Quebec or Toronto for the water-borne vessels, than at present; and if such a canal were constructed, the propeller of 900 tons sailing from Lakes Superior, Michigan, or Ontario, could proceed direct to Halifax or St. John with Western States or Canadian products.

"It would be difficult to point out all the advantages which would result to Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, by the construction of the Baie Verte Canal. If the 900-ton propeller could deliver western or Canadian products at Halifax or St. John, these places would thus become cheap depots for such products. Assorted cargoes of fish, hoops, shooks, lumber, &c., could be made up at these ports of the West India Islands and South America, and could bring back return cargoes from these countries of sugar, coffee, hides, tallow, etc., to be again re-shipped as return cargo to Canada and the Western States by the inland propeller, and thus be delivered at less cost by such means than by any other possible route."

"He also quoted from the report of Mr. Patterson, in his report of the commerce of Montreal, for 1869, as follows:—

"The value of the proposed canal, in more intimately connecting all the Provinces, must be evident to all who have examined the geographical situation. At present there is little or no community of interest between the portions of the Provinces on the Bay of Fundy and those on the Gulf,—although separated by but a narrow strip of land. For want of a few miles of canal navigation, a profitable development of the fisheries by the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is seriously hindered; the fishermen of Cape Ann, in Massachusetts, being nearer the valuable mackerel fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence than the Canadian fishermen who live on the Bay of Fundy. By means of the proposed canal the waters of the Bay and Gulf would be united, and the fisheries brought within the reach of the fishermen of all the Provinces;—passing easily, so to speak, from one sea to another as the fishing season might render necessary."

"In 1870, Messrs. Allan, Gzowski, Calvin, Laidlaw, Garneau, Stairs and Jardine, were named, by the Dominion Government, Commissioners to institute and make a thorough enquiry on a comprehensive improvement of the canal system of the Dominion, and were instructed to report "On the construction of a canal through the Isthmus dividing the Bay of Fundy from the Gulf St. Lawrence and Baie Verte."

"Those gentlemen in their report stated:—

"Inseparably connected with the growth of intercolonial trade is the construction of the Baie Verte Canal. The advantages that must accrue, not merely to the Dominion as a whole, but to the commerce of the Maritime Provinces, are so clearly pointed out by the Boards of Trade of all the leading cities of Canada, and by men interested in the development of our commercial cities—not simply the merchants of St. John and other places in the locality of the proposed canal, but merchants of Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec—that it is superfluous for the Commissioners more than briefly to refer to a few salient features of the scheme.

"A steamer laden with flour for St. John, N. B., now goes down the Gulf as far as Shediac, where the cargo is transported by rail to its destination. The total distance by water from Shediac through the Gut of Canso and round the coast of Nova Scotia to the Bay of Fundy, as far as the commercial capital of New Brunswick, is about 600 miles, and the consequence is that there is little or no direct communication between the Bay of Fundy ports and those of the River St. Lawrence.

"By a canal through the Isthmus, from Shediac, the distance to St. John will not be more than 100 miles. This fact will show the insuperable obstacle that now exists to anything like extensive commerce between Montreal and the Bay of Fundy ports of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the great impulse that must necessarily be given to the trade by the opening out of a route which will shorten distance so considerably, furnish an inland navigation from the lakes to Boston, and consequently lessen freights between those points at least twenty-five per cent."

The Boards of Trade to which I have referred spoke in the warmest terms of the great advantage to the whole business of the country of the construction of that work. I may say it is also believed that so far from there being any difficulty in the carriage of the ships across the canal, there will really be infinitely less strain upon the ships than that to which they are subjected in stormy weather on the ocean. The proposal is, as I said, to give in all a subsidy of $150,000 per annum for a period of 25 years. At 4 per cent. that amount capitalized would be $2,343,312, or about one-third of the estimated cost of the canal, which was at least between five and six millions, or according to Mr. Page, between eight or nine millions, besides the cost of maintenance afterwards. As the hon. member for Lambton remarked the other evening, the operation of our canals is not at present a source of profit to the Dominion, and if, as I said, this work can be accomplished by the expenditure of so small an amount comparatively, and the service can be performed better than it otherwise could, I think the House which again and again, with entire unanimity, voted to sustain this project when it was to cost so much larger a sum, will not hesitate in providing the smaller sum by which it is believed such important commercial results will be secured for the country. I do not propose to detain the House at any length, as the pamphlet which has been distributed to hon. gentlemen supplies any further information that may be necessary. It has been shown that there is a tonnage on the Bay of Fundy and the Gulf ports of something like 2,687,550 tons entering and leaving those ports per annum, which would receive the advantage of this work. Then there is the fishing fleet of not less, I believe, than 600 vessels, and who can estimate the value to the country at large of having the means of crossing from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Bay of Fundy by means of this ship railway, enabling vessels to carry two cargoes and make two voyages from Boston to the Gulf for every one by the existing mode of communication. It would not only afford access to the large American fleet of fishing vessels that would be passing across the Isthmus to the fishing grounds, but our own fishermen would be able, by obtaining access to the American ports, to carry on their business with a vigor and success which are impossible at present. It is estimated that there would be traffic over this canal of something like 600,000 tons per annum; the distance saved is detailed in the pamphlets which have been placed in the hands of hon. gentlemen; the length of the canal is between 17 and 18 miles, it is practically a dead level, the highest incline being something like 10 feet per mile, which is an inappreciable incline and only sufficient to afford drainage for the canal. When the House is told that all these resolutions asked is that authority may be given to the Government to make a contract with responsible parties, who will be prepared, at their own risk, to furnish all the money required to put the work into efficient operation, and at the end of the first year's efficient operation, to pay them a subsidy of $150,000, and to pay them that amount only so long as the work is efficiently operated, and in that case for twenty-five years only, I think the House may safely pass these resolutions and place it in the power of the Government to secure objects of such great importance at such a comparatively small cost to the country. I do not intend to occupy the House longer, because I have no reason to believe that this will become a subject of controversy, but, on the contrary, that every hon. gentleman who has been committed to this policy, whether under the previous Government of my right hon. friend or under the Government of my hon. friend from Lambton, will be only too glad to adopt the means of securing such great results in the interests of the trade and commerce of the whole country at a cost so comparatively small.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I have no intention of opposing the resolutions for the reasons the hon. gentleman has given. I have not had time, since the subject was submitted, to give much attention to the reports and the evidences of success that the projector mentioned briefly before the Railway Committee. I have already complained that we were not aware, when the matter was before that Committee, of the intentions of the Government relating to it, and gave it the less attention on that account. Had the hon. gentleman at that time informed the Committee of the full proposal of the Government it would have received much more searching criticism than it was proposed by anyone to give it. It was looked on, in short, by the members of the Committee as a thing that might possibly succeed, but of which there was no great likelihood. A similar proposal has been before the people of Ontario for several years in connection with Mr. Capreol's scheme of building a ship canal to connect Toronto with the Georgian Bay; but whether it is that the project does not commend itself to engineers, or whether there is no faith in the canal system, Mr. Capreol has been unable to obtain any real support for his scheme. Now, while it is said that a canal at this point would be of great public service, I am bound to say that our experience for two or three years leads to the conclusion that the traffic which would pass through it would be very small. The hon. gentleman says that it would be used by some five or six hundred fishing vessels. I recollect, when the subject was discussed in this House in 1875, getting the opinions of many of the Nova Scotia members, and the universal opinion was that it would be of no service to the fishing fleet. The navigation of the Bay of Fundy is not suitable to fishing vessels; they have to accommodate themselves to the tide, and when it fails them they must wait until they can get it again. As the tide is very high in the Bay of Fundy, difficulties in this respect are more serious there than in perhaps any other part of the world.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regard the tide in the Bay of Fundy of the greatest possible advantage, because it does not leave a vessel dependent upon the wind to the same extent as elsewhere. The vessels go up with one tide and down with another.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They go a certain distance with one tide, no doubt. The tide would, no doubt, be of service if used judiciously. I do not say that the scheme is impracticable, but I doubt very much its utility from the reports made from time to time by maritime men on the subject. My recollection is that several New Brunswick members, and those from the neighborhood of St. John especially, were warm in favor of the construction of the canal, while those from Nova Scotia were entirely hostile to it, believing that the trade which would pass through it would be very much less than was anticipated by its friends. I think it was rather conclusively proved that vessels passing to the West Indies would never seek that route, but that it would be much cheaper and better for them to take a straight line eastward until they reached the open sea and got into a direct line to the West India Islands. The trade from Prince Edward Island and any trade from the Lower St. Lawrence to Boston would undoubtedly be benefitted by a short course there; but that trade is comparatively light. With regard to the cost, I think the projector estimated it at from three and a-half to four millions, and he will be able no doubt to obtain the money in the English market with the guarantee of the Canadian Government to pay 4 per cent. interest upon it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Page places it at over $4,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course I have no means of ascertaining the probable cost of the work, which is perhaps speculative to a great extent. It is the first work of the kind to any great extent. Although the principle is applied in dry-docks, that is a very different thing from hauling vessels over a distance of 20 miles; and the grade must be greatly against the possibility of taking heavy vessels over it. No doubt it can be done; because railways of this kind have been constructed in other places, including one at Ste. Marie, to take vessels into Lake Superior. But will it pay for vessels to go into Baie Verte, a somewhat difficult navigation, and pass over the railway to the waters of the Bay of Fundy? It is very doubtful. I am not inclined to oppose the resolution, mainly on account of the scantiness of substantial information in regard to the scheme. But I doubt very much if it can be made a success. The money, no doubt, will be raised by the projector, but there is every danger that you may have a repetition of the Grand Trunk experience—a declaration that the work will stop, after the expenditure of the first subsidy, till more assistance be given. I fear much of Mr. Page's opinion is what the Minister states, that when the work proceeds a certain distance we shall find difficulties interposed, which we shall be called upon to make good. At the same time I would prefer doing the work this way to having it undertaken by the Government, which would be much worse.

Mr. KILLAM. Upon an engineering question of this magnitude I do not pretend to express an opinion to which any particular weight would attach. Anything I say must be regarded purely from a commercial or political standpoint. We have had the subject of the Baie Verte Canal before us for a number of years, and we understand that the Minister of Railways has made it a subject of great consideration as one not only concerning his county but the whole Province of Nova Scotia. But it was supposed by all of us that when the National Policy came into force, and the public Treasury was reinforced by the immense sums raised by the Finance Minister, that some decided step would have been taken before this either to ascertain what was practicable in reference to transmission across the Chignecto Isthmus, or taken in pursuance of the votes given by the House previously for the construction of the Baie Verte Canal. $500,000 were placed in the Estimates once for its construction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $100,000 three years in succession.

Mr. KILLAM. No portion, however, was expended. I suppose full consideration had not been given the scheme, and the money was merely placed in the Estimates for the purpose of going on with the work if found practicable, or for other purposes. I am not prepared to say that I believe the expenditure of $12,000,000, or $8,000,000 or $3,000,000 by the Dominion is a legitimate expenditure. I speak of those different sums because about $12,000,000 was the estimate for a canal available at any time of the tide, while $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 was thought enough for a canal available at half tide, according to the estimate of Mr. Keefer. The Minister now proposes to spend $3,000,000 for a substitute scheme, a ship railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A little over $2,000,000.

Mr. KILLAM. I consider the capitalized value of this sum, supposing the scheme really practicable, and that men with capital, energy and skill are prepared to proceed with it, cannot be far from $3,000,000. But these $3,000,000 would be spent merely for an experiment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman loses sight of the fact that we pay nothing if it is an unsuccessful experiment.

Mr. KILLAM. As to the commercial merits of the scheme I claim, speaking with all modesty, to be as fair a judge as any hon. gentleman on either side of the House. I leave all the statements of the Minister of Railways as to the number of fishing vessels which may use this railroad, the tonnage of the vessels entering the Bay of Fundy and likely to use this railway, with his conjectures as to whether a vessel could be carried up by the tide, to the public who are better qualified to judge than the hon. gentleman. But I do not believe his statement to-night that the railway has the commercial value he attaches to it. I believe any sort of transmission would have a certain amount of local commercial value, but not that general commercial value in which he believes. I do not believe it would have that general commercial value which he believes. It might be possible to have some mode of crossing the Isthmus, which would save time and thus induce owners of vessels to pay some toll for crossing it. The commercial value of the work must be estimated by what those vessels would be willing to pay. Not one of the 600 fishing vessels spoken of bound for the United States ports could be expected to pass through the canal and be transported over the ship railway. With a fair wind they would square away to get out of the Gut of Canso, preferring to take their chances upon the open sea outside the Bay of Fundy than to go into the Bay of Fundy where fogs and difficult navigation render the course more dangerous and necessitate their paying a higher rate of insurance. Nothing has been done since I have had the honor of representing a constituency in this House, to show any serious intention of going on with the Baie Verte Canal. This canal will not be of very general commercial—but may be of considerable local—value. This proposal to vote $150,000 a year for twenty years may be regarded as simply a means of attracting offers from capitalists, in order to get their idea as to what might be done. I do not see why, if the Government have deliberately adopted the intention of substituting the scheme of a ship railway, they should not have informed the House that they assumed the responsibility, because the distinguished engineer who had this subject under consideration will be in a difficult position when he attempts to borrow money to proceed with its construction. It may be said to him, that the Canadian Government do not in any way endorse the scheme, that they did not think it was of sufficient commercial value to make it worth while to construct it, but are willing to say: If you will take the whole risk, you may do so, and if you succeed we will give you this annual subsidy. This indicates that the hon. Minister of Railways has abandoned the scheme which for years he pretended to regard with so much favor. He gives it up and says that if Mr. Ketchum or somebody else will find the money to build it, and make it a complete success, the Government will then pay the money. I look therefore, upon this as an abandonment of the project which the hon. Minister pretended he had at heart.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I must congratulate the Government upon the manner in which they have taken up this question. They have shown their very great wisdom in the precaution they have taken with respect to the carrying out of this scheme. They have taken the precaution of saying that this work shall be fully carried out before they guarantee to pay the money, and the gentleman who has undertaken to carry out this scheme guarantees to carry it to a successful issue before requiring any money. I think this undertaking will be of very great benefit, to the Maritime Provinces especially. It will give them very easy access to the United States via the Bay of Fundy, and more especially will that be the case in respect to the people of Prince Edward Island and the northern portion of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Consequently cargoes of potatoes, being a perishable article, suffer very materially. If this railway was constructed they would be able to avail themselves of this much shorter route, and also to take advantage, when they got into the Bay of Fundy, of the prevailing westerly winds with which they have to contend in the Gut of Canso. In that way it would be of great advantage to the people of Prince Edward Island; not only that, but I believe that the general shipments from all the principal ports in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, bound for southern ports, could take advantage of this route. I must say that I think we have rather gained than lost by the delay in this matter. Had the work been begun at a previous time we would have been expending a very large amount of money, whereas the amount we are called upon to expend is comparatively small, and we are not called upon to expend that until we have an assurance of success. I think the Government is to be congratulated in taking up this matter the way it has.

Mr. DOMVILLE. At this late hour of the night I shall not make any remarks on the resolution, but reserve what I have to say on some other stage of the Bill.

Resolutions agreed to and reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 167) to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company.

Bill read the first time.

Mr. KILLAM.

PILOTAGE ACT, 1873.

The Order for the third reading of Bill (No. 142) to amend the Pilotage Act of 1873, being read,

Mr. McLELAN. When this Bill was last under consideration it was brought to my notice that apprentices to pilots had certain rights by the payment of fees. I had not been able to discover from the regulations of the pilotage authorities that such was the case, but I have ascertained since that, although there are no regulations compelling the payment of dues, it has been the practice that each pilot in his turn shall have the right to name an apprentice, and for that right the apprentice pays a sum ranging from two to four hundred dollars. Consequently, all these young men who are apprentices have paid this in, not to the authorities, but to the individual pilots who have nominated them, and therefore they have acquired a right to a sum of money which it may be difficult for them to obtain. In consideration of this circumstance, I thought it but justice to those young lads to amend the clause so as to allow all apprentices who are on the list now to come in and receive licenses whenever they have completed their seven years' term. I therefore move that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending clause eight in the sense I have indicated.

Bill again considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 106) repealing certain provisions of the General Inspection Act of 1874.

Mr. KILLAM. I desire to ask if it is the intention of the Government to change the law in respect to the inspection of fish in districts where inspectors are appointed?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not proposed to introduce any other Bill this Session with respect to the inspection. In Committee I intend to propose a clause making a change, owing to the imperfect inspection in Newfoundland. Fish inspected in Newfoundland can be sold in Canada without being re-inspected. It is found that fishermen have been appointed, and a good deal of dissatisfaction has taken place. Since the passage of the resolution, telegraphic communication has passed between the Government of Newfoundland and the Dominion, and I shall propose, as a result of that provision, that this Bill shall be brought into force by proclamation of the Governor in Council. The members of the Newfoundland Government state that they will make satisfactory arrangements.

Mr. KILLAM. The hon. gentleman misapprehended my remarks. On a former occasion I called the attention of the Secretary of State to the subject as to whether the Government proposed to remove the fee for the inspection of fish. If the Government does not care enough for the interests of the fishermen to take the subject into consideration, and if they are not ready to give an answer I will leave the matter with the fishermen to decide.

Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. KILLAM. I give notice that I will move on the third reading an amendment to provide that the inspection of fish shall not be compulsory in any part of this Dominion. We have arrived at a late period in the Session, and we were to have had something important from the Finance Minister upon his proposal to grant a bounty to the fishermen. When he makes his explanations I shall take further occasion to say something on this subject. I give them fair warning that if they are not disposed to consider this question I will give them ample time to consider it before prorogation. I hope they will accept the motion in such a way as to do justice to the people whose rights I consider myself bound to advocate here.

Bill reported.

INSOLVENT BANKS, INSURANCE COMPANIES, &c.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 145) respecting Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies and Trading Companies.—(Mr. Mousseau.)

On clause 122,

Mr. MOUSSEAU. When this Bill was first under consideration I asked that a section be struck out and another inserted in lieu thereof. I now beg to withdraw that amendment, and restore the original clause.

Bill reported.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. I ask leave to withdraw Bill (No. 123) concerning the Inland Revenue and to introduce a new Bill (No. 168) to amend the Act concerning the Inland Revenue, 1880.

Bill read the first time; and (at 2.20 o'clock, a. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 12th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL DEBATES.

Mr. STEPHENSON moved that the second report of the Official Debates Committee be adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing, as far as I am concerned, the recommendations made in this report. I place confidence in the Committee, and am quite disposed to support those particular recommendations; but I take this occasion to say that I believe the arrangements which have been made by the Committee, and which it is proposed to continue, are inadequate for the proper reporting of the debates—not that the reporters employed are not competent to discharge their duties, but, as far as I can judge from results, there are not enough reporters on the staff to render an efficient discharge of their duty possible. I have more than once pointed out how grossly inaccurate are the papers submitted to us, and I believe the inaccuracies are due, not to the want of ability and skill on the part of the reporters, but to the circumstance that more work is given them than they can get through. I have had no communication with the gentlemen on the staff on this subject, but such is my conclusion from the character of the errors. The errors, from their character, are evidently attributable, as a general rule, to too great haste and absence of proper revision. There are repeated instances of words which are alike in sound but not in sense, and repeated errors occur in figures and punctuation which often entirely destroy the sense of that which was said. I observe evidence also of the absence of an intelligent reading over of copy by those who have written it; and I believe that both in the extension of the notes, in the punctuation, in the printing, and in the proof reading, there is a want of accuracy which renders the result not creditable, and not by any means a substantial representation of what the speakers have said. My own idea is that the pressure is too great. It looks to me as if the reporters were obliged to transcribe their notes as rapidly as possible, and have no opportunity to make proper connections between the different parts taken by different reporters, or seeing that their own work is correctly transcribed. With reference to the editing, it seems to me that if the editor is responsible, as I understood from members of the Committee when Hansard was last spoken of here, for seeing that the general substance of speeches is set down, he ought to be here. It is extremely difficult for one who has not been present during a debate, and has, therefore, no idea what was said, to properly discharge the duty of supervising the reports. That is, perhaps, only a minor point, but I do say that we should have, not a verbatim report, but a report which, at any rate, would give us the substance with reasonable accuracy, of what is said by the speaker. With the present scanty staff, that result is not attained.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I consider the reports are a marvel and the printing almost a miracle. Considering that the reporting costs but $7,000, as originally estimated, its being done so successfully as it is, is a wonder to every pressman and reporter throughout the country. I think the hon. gentleman is about the only gentleman in this House, or at least one of the exceptions, who has not given a great deal of trouble to the reporters. He speaks very correctly, and is one of the easiest hon. members of this House to report; but I think when he complains about the punctuation, the figures, and that sort of thing, the fault is his own. Every hon. member has a right to revise his speeches, and if the hon. gentleman opposite has not taken the trouble to revise his speeches, then I must say that he is scarcely in a position to blame the reporters for the clerical errors of which he complains. I think we have an efficient staff of reporters, who have done their duty with thorough impartiality; no matter on what side of politics these gentlemen may be outside of this House, in the performance of their duties there is not the slightest trace of a party bias. I think the reports we have had have been fair and equitable towards all parties who have spoken, no matter from which side of the House. So far as the number is concerned, I do not think that, starting under the circumstances in which Hansard was started, it would not be at all prudent for us to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. We have secured, I believe, the best reporters, for an equal number, that can be found in America, and we are paying them the smallest possible salaries for the amount of work they perform. We have taken occasion in this report to increase their salary, and it is the smallest increase we could give them and retain their services. Everybody is proud of the Hansard, the House is proud of it, because in many cases the reporters give to members better speeches than they have delivered themselves. So far as the salaries are concerned, that is a matter deserving of consideration, and if it is thought proper to increase them, I, for one, would be willing to vote for it.

Mr. AMYOT. I would call attention to the fact that there is only one French reporter, and it is altogether impossible for him to report in proper time all that is said in French. It would be better to dispense with the services of the French secretary and employ two French reporters.

Mr. STEPHENSON. In reference to that, I may say that one member of the present staff has sent in his resignation, and another gentleman has been appointed in his place who is able to report both in English and French, and hereafter we shall have two gentlemen on the staff who will be able to report in both languages.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. member for Kent has entirely mistaken the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition. My hon. friend did not complain that the reporters were not efficient, and were not doing their work properly under the circumstances, but merely that the Hansard that was laid on our tables was not so accurate as it might be. We know that the reporters have been compelled to sit and report these debates some times for fifteen or sixteen hours in succession. The number of men who are employed is altogether inadequate for such a Session. Now, it is quite impossible when men are so much hurried that they can extend their notes with perfect accuracy. I know myself, in reading over the reports of the debates, that I have seen occasionally, one word put for another which it resembled in the stenographer's notes, a mistake which would not have occurred had the reporter had more time to do his work. The observations of my hon. friend pointed to this: that the staff is too few in numbers. If we had reasonable Sessions, if we adjourned here at ten o'clock in the evening, so as to give those gentlemen an opportunity of extending their notes with more care, I have no doubt the reports would be more accurate. But such an opportunity is not given them when we are sitting here until four o'clock in the morning, in which case it is quite obvious that the present staff is not at all adequate to the work they are called upon to perform; and unless we are prepared to shorten the sittings so as to give the reporters a reasonable opportunity of extending their notes, we must increase the staff.

Mr. STEPHENSON. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell, I may say that probably he takes more care in revising his speeches than the hon. member for West Durham. I believe it is a fact known to most of us that the hon. member for West Durham hardly ever looks over his speeches, and therefore he has probably occasion for complaint, but those who have plenty of time upon their hands are accustomed to revise their speeches with care, and they have the least reason to complain. As to an increase in the staff, it would involve some additional expense, but if it is the wish of the House that the staff should be increased, nothing will afford the Debates' Committee more pleasure than to take steps to increase its efficiency by that means. I think the House will agree that, so far as the present staff is concerned, the work they have been doing is a marvel, and the printing of the debates is also a marvel for our small country, and in a small city like this. I think the members of the staff are entitled to every credit, and, perhaps, we ought to give them more consideration than they have had yet, for I know that many members of this House have had their speeches reported in a manner superior in every way to the speeches as they were actually delivered, the members getting the credit of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot speak with any authority on this matter as I never read the Hansard, so I cannot say whether I am reported or misreported. But I have heard from many members that the accuracy of the reports of this Session has been marvellous. I have heard so from hon. gentlemen who have gone over their own speeches, and who are therefore apt to be critical, whilst we are all aware that a person speaking on the nonce, without previous consideration or preparation, very frequently says things that he forgets afterwards. There is one great disadvantage in our present system, and that is the practice of allowing members to amend their speeches, which destroys the value of the Hansard. Hon. gentlemen who have made mistakes, or who repent of having made certain statements, and who are replied to at the moment, when they correct their speeches they leave out that part or modify it, and the consequence is that the person who replies to him actually appears to make a fool's speech, because he is firing against nothing; and for that reason I think that members should not be allowed to correct their speeches.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I thought they had not that right. I thought they were only allowed to make verbal corrections.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have known it to occur—at least I have had representations made to me—that speeches have been altered completely, that the written speech is not a reflex, even in substance, of the spoken speech, which is unfair to the House, unfair to the country, and especially unfair to the gentleman who has made the reply. I have no doubt the hon. leader of the Opposition has found that.

Mr. BLAKE. I have found it, and have myself made observations in response to statements which I did not afterwards perceive in the Hansard.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That must be the case so long as individual members have the power to correct their speeches, and hence the great value of the remark made by the leader of the Opposition, that in addition to accurate reporting—the stenographer being guided by the ear and not by the sense—there ought to be some person of literary attainments, who, for instance, can understand the value of a quotation, and who has some considerable acquaintance with the general run of political affairs in the country. This gentleman should sit in the gallery and listen to the speeches, as I am told the hon. member for Gloucester used to do, who with his marvelous memory, was able to report verbatim every word that was said, and as others with the same happy faculty have been known to do in England—Mr. Black, for instance, of the old Morning Chronicle and others, who were able to report verbally almost from recollection. There ought to be some such person, a superior person who should be well paid—you cannot get such a person without his being very well paid—who should undergo the wearisome task of sitting in the gallery and listening to the general current of the debate, and thus be able to read it over with intelligence. If there was such an officer, then there should be a most strict rule, that no hon. gentleman should be allowed to correct his speech, for the corrected speech is nothing more nor less than a garbled speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not like to differ with my hon. friend with whom ordinarily I see eye to eye, but I do not agree with him in saying that no alteration should be permitted in the report of the speeches that hon. members deliver. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman in the statement that as a rule the reporting, in my judgment, of some very long speeches, has been exceedingly well performed and reflects the very highest credit on the reporters; but I can take the Hansard of the present Session, and show where it was absolutely necessary to make slight corrections, or otherwise, on the most important questions, hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House would be made to say the very reverse of what they said; and while I think it is impossible to prevent such corrections being made, I think such should be done under great limitations. Under the present system we are furnished with a report of the speeches, as first taken down and put in print by the reporters and by the editor of the debates, and before it has been seen by any person, and, by referring to the corrected Hansard, it is very easy to compare and see whether an hon. gentleman has been permitted to change his speech, which I quite agree is utterly opposed to the system. No hon. gentleman should be permitted to make any change in his speech, but he should be permitted to correct any obvious inaccuracies in the report; or otherwise, as I have said, instead of its being a record of what took place, it would be in some instances, and those most important instances, a record of what did not take place. You must permit corrections of obvious inaccuracies to be made before the record goes into the permanent Hansard, but you must not permit any change in the construction of the speeches, or in the speeches themselves; but you must permit those corrections, for otherwise a slip of the tongue might not be corrected. In speaking the other night I used the term train mileage, instead of car mileage. I was speaking hastily and dealing with a mass of figures; the hon. member for Lambton corrected me, but I thought I had said car mileage. In such a case, hon. members must be permitted to make an obvious correction of that kind, as it is necessary. But these instances in which, notwithstanding the great accuracy with which very long speeches have been reported, even when dealing with a mass of figures; certain corrections must be permitted, or we would have Hansard a record of what did not take place, instead of what did take place.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Unfortunately, it is not possible to accept Hansard as a perfectly reliable report of what passes here. I think myself that the Hansard reporters have done as well as they could possibly be expected to do; but I have observed on many occasions that words somewhat similar in sound but wholly different in sense, making in fact absolute nonsense, are introduced by the stenographic process. You may read for a long distance in the report what is evidently a very accurate verbatim report, and then you come on half-a-dozen sentences which are absolutely nonsense, which has been caused by the fact that there was a great deal of disturbance in the House, and the reporters could not hear. I do not know whether it is possible to adopt the suggestion of the hon. First Minister and have a supervisor or censor of the speeches, so that Hansard should be accepted as an accurate record of what passed; but I do say this: that I should object very much to be held bound by everything put down in Hansard in my own name, as would hon. gentlemen opposite, unless they took the trouble to revise their speeches. That is not possible in a great many cases. It is possible in the early portion of the Session when hon. members are not very fully occupied, and the House is not sitting very late; but no one who knows the trouble and labor of revising, can pretend to say that a long speech can be revised when delivered at three or four o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps I may be allowed to say that the hon. gentleman, from the tone of his reply, somewhat misunderstood my observations. I did not intend to say anything in the slightest degree derogatory to the manner in which the reporters discharged their duty; on the contrary, what I said was, that they were placed in the painful position, from my point of view, of it being impossible for them to discharge the duty they are asked to do, for it was more than it was possible for the staff to do. They are over-worked, because there is not enough of them; that is the difficulty of which I complain. My view is, in accordance with the hon. First Minister, that it would be better if the speeches were taken entirely out of the hands of hon. members; but I do not believe—I suppose, at present, from the consequence of not being able to look at my speeches—that anything like a correct report of what has been spoken would result with a staff so scanty in point of numbers though adequate in point of ability. But having an official report, it should be a respectable and adequate report, and one free from errors, in which the utterances of the hon. members are correctly represented; and in order to secure this all the House has to do is to add, perhaps, two more reporters to the staff.

Mr. STEPHENSON. If that is the view of the House, the Hansard Committee will be very happy to present another report, in accord with the suggestions of the leaders of both sides of the House. The Committee felt the responsibility placed upon them; they felt the necessity of having an enlarged staff, but at the same time they felt that, under the circumstances, they would not be justified, and they did not feel themselves strong enough to make those recommendations, because they thought the House might not sustain them. Therefore the Committee went as far as they could reasonably go; but if the House is of opinion that the staff should be increased, the Hansard Committee will be very happy to act on the suggestions made.

Mr. SCRIVER. In all the deliberations of the Debates Committee, the idea of the inadequacy of the staff has hardly ever been brought into consideration. I think the general impression among the members of the Debates Committee was that the work this season and last season was much harder than it had usually been, and harder, perhaps, than it is likely to be again. I do not understand, myself, that any complaint was made on the part of the staff, that the number was inadequate for the work, except in a few instances where there were all-night sittings. As the Chairman of the Committee has stated, the members of the Committee felt that they were placed in a somewhat difficult position. They were obliged by the great stress in the state of affairs to recommend considerable increases in the disbursements connected with the Committee, and they felt fearful that if they recommended some other changes that did seem judicious to them, they would not be sustained by the action of the House, and, therefore, they came to the conclusion that matters had better remain as they were, with the exception of such changes as they have recommended in the way of increased compensation to the reporters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I used to be very much surprised at the wonderful accuracy with which the speeches to which I listened in the English House of Commons were reported in the Times newspaper the next morning. I wondered how it was possible to attain such accuracy and precision in reporting those speeches, but I was somewhat undeceived when, after a very important debate in which it was necessary for me to furnish a leading member of the House of Commons with information in reference to the subject under discussion, before he had resumed his seat half an hour I was sent for to an ante-room of the House of Commons and his speech was submitted to me in type for my correction. I learned on that occasion the mode in which they attained such remarkable precision and accuracy in reporting the debates of the House of Commons; that measures were taken before the House rose by which the member, or some other person, equally familiar with the subject of the speech, would have an opportunity of correcting it. So far as my observation goes, from speeches submitted to my notice, the reporting in this House will compare favorably with that in the English House of Commons.

Mr. KILLAM. I should be the last one to complain of the Hansard reporters. I believe, as a rule, they have done their duties efficiently, especially when we consider that during the last part of the Session they have had to work as long as twelve or fifteen, or even eighteen hours at a stretch. Of course they are human.

Mr. MILLS. And the House was inhuman.

Mr. KILLAM. Yes, and the Government too, though I will not say anything on that point at present. These gentlemen have done as well as they could, but it is impossible for them, under such circumstances, to report every speech fully. My own opinion has always been at variance with that of the hon. Minister of Railways, as I do not believe in an official report of the Debates. I think the reports had better be left to newspaper enterprise. The hon. Minister of Railways, in his official position, of course speaks with advantage. He is able, in making official explanations, to say what he has to say from the book deliberately, and he is well reported. I consider the hon. gentleman a master of amplification, and that pages of his speeches as they appear in the Hansard might be well condensed, so that his ideas might be apprehended much more readily in an ordinary newspaper report. Measures are brought down at a late period of the Session when late sittings are necessary, and when the official reporters are tired out, so that it is impossible to discuss them, and impossible for the Hansard reporters to report fully the speeches of hon. gentlemen on both sides, on subjects which they consider as very important. It is impossible to report them in such a way as to have the views of hon. members conveyed to the country through the medium of the official reports. The other evening, as an instance, I had the honor to make some remarks on a subject of immense importance to my own county. I spoke, perhaps, for half an hour, and spoke purely to the question before the House, as the leader of the Government knows. I referred to the comparative necessity of providing public buildings of a certain kind in my own county. I spoke on the subject with considerable earnestness, and I thought with considerable force, but in the Hansard report there was not a single word of what I said on that occasion. That may have been all right. I know, at the same time, that remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite, and the criticisms of members of the Government who did not agree with me entirely, were not reported. I only refer to the matter to show that speeches made in the early part of the day may be thoroughly reported, while, owing to the Government's delay in bringing down important measures, and the consequent lateness of the sittings, there are many speeches that cannot be reproduced in the pages of Hansard.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENSON moved that the third report of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the debates of the House be adopted.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that the report with reference to the contracts.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman should give us some idea of the comparative cost of the service as involved in these changes.

Mr. STEPHENSON. The same contractor has the contract for the composition as this year, but the composition will be 60 cents instead of 40 cents a thousand; the press work per token is 30 cents; folding per sheet one-tenth of a cent; alterations per hour, 25 cents; extra copies of speeches per thousand, 75 cents; the binding is less than it was before, being 90 cents per volume; the translation costs $1.75 per page, compared with $2.50 under the present contract.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The composition seems high.

Mr. STEPHENSON. The hon. member must bear in mind that the work is all night work, and if we are to have the daily issue of the Hansard laid on the Table of the House at three o'clock every day, we need not expect to get the composition done for the ordinary day rate. The regular trade rates in the city are, I believe, 33½ cents a thousand, and when you take into consideration—to use a printers' phrase—that there is no "fat" in this matter, that it is all "solid" matter, I think the price cannot be regarded as excessive, considering the rate paid to printers for ordinary day work. Moreover, there was only one tender put in, which we did not accept on its first presentation; but we had a conference with them and arranged prices and terms, so that they are made the most satisfactory we could possibly make them, and I think they will be satisfactory to the House and the country.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman say that the general result is that the cost of the service remains the same.

Mr. STEPHENSON. About the same.

Mr. KILLAM.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DECOSMOS. Chinese immigration appears likely to become a very serious matter. From time to time, the question of Chinese immigration into the Province of British Columbia has been brought before the House; from time to time, the Legislative Assembly of that Province passed resolutions and sent Addresses to the Governor General, asking the Government here to take some measures to stop the flow of Chinese laborers into that Province; but, up to the present moment, no action has been taken by the Government whatever. A recent telegram, however, brings the matter more forcibly under our notice, and it is a matter of pretty general comment by the press throughout the Dominion, that the Chinese are flowing into British Columbia in such numbers as to prove destructive, in all probability, to white labor. A telegram, dated Victoria, May 9th, states:

"24,000 Chinese in all are expected before August. The Chinese in the Province will number 32,000, and will outnumber the whites."

Now, Sir, when we recollect that the United States Government recently enacted a law to prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers for ten years; that along the coast of Mexico there is little or no employment for Chinese; that when we come to the Central American States, there is none, or very little; that when we go to New Grenada, Peru, and Chili, we find that there is little or nothing for them to do; that when we cross the ocean to the Hawaiian Kingdom, we find that they are driving out the native population, and the other population too; that when we go to the Australian colonies, we find that the colony of Queensland has for some years had two Acts on its Statute-book, sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government, in order to keep out the Chinese—one of which imposes a poll-tax of £10 sterling on every Chinaman who enters the country, and the other a tax of £3 sterling on every Chinaman who enters the mines—we can easily understand that these countries are vigorously protecting themselves against Chinese immigration. Last December, I wrote to the Agent-General of New South Wales in London, and I received the following reply:—

"WESTMINSTER CHAMBERS,
"VICTORIA STREET, 9th January, 1882.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your note of the 16th ultimo, asking for a copy of New South Wales Act respecting Chinese immigration, I regret my inability to comply with your request. There has not been time for copies to reach me from the colony. Immediately I receive them I shall have great pleasure in sending a copy for your acceptance. I know by a newspaper telegram that a poll-tax of £10 has been determined upon, and that ships arriving in the colony are not allowed to carry more in proportion to tonnage than, I believe, one for every one hundred tons.

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours very truly,

"SAUL SAMUELS,

"Agent-General for New South Wales."

The great object of the Chinese in coming to British Columbia will be, failing to get employment there, to make their way across the border to the United States. The United States, however, by the recent Act has prohibited them. The New York Times of May 9th, states:

"The President has signed the new Bill to suspend the immigration of Chinese laborers for a period of ten years. It is to be hoped that this will settle the much-vexed Chinese question for a time at least. The Bill was drawn with special reference to the objections raised by the President in his message disapproving the first Bill passed by Congress. As it now stands, the law suspends the immigration of Chinese laborers, whether skilled or unskilled, or employed in mining. It provides for a system of certificates, to be issued on the identification of Chinese persons now living in this country, or who may hereafter arrive here under provisions of the law authorizing them to come. The naturalization of all Chinese is expressly forbidden. Various fines and penalties are imposed upon the masters of vessels who shall bring unauthorized Chinese persons in this country, and upon any who shall forge, alter or make fraudulent use of the certificates to be issued to Chinese who are allowed residence in the United States. The Bill, as it has become a law, does not infringe upon any of the rights of China as defined in existing treaties. The people of California will probably be satisfied with all its features, unless they may object to the shortness of the term during which immigration is to be suspended."

Now, I would ask the Government whether they are prepared to introduce any measure this Session, no matter how brief, with a view to repress the immigration of Chinese into British Columbia? There has been a general feeling abroad that in the absence of white labor in that country a certain number of Chinese would be admitted into the country to work on the railway; but even that the people have objected to. But, under the circumstances, I believe the general feeling would be to allow a certain number in for this purpose. If, however, they are to come into the country, by the middle of August, to the number of 24,000, the country will be overrun by Chinese, as it will then have 32,000, who will, as stated in the telegram, outnumber the entire white population. It strikes me that in view of the action of the United States Government, some action ought to be taken by the Canadian Government to repress that immigration; and I put it to the hon. gentleman opposite, in the common interest, as well as in the interest of the country, whether or not something cannot be done to relieve British Columbia from the Chinese difficulty?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is rather inconvenient that this subject should be brought up without notice of any kind; and the hon. gentleman must be satisfied with a very brief and perhaps unsatisfactory answer. No complaints have reached the Government of serious interference with white labor in British Columbia, from the influx of Chinese labor. In fact, there is such a want of white labor in British Columbia, that if you wish to have the railway finished within any reasonable time, there must be no such step against Chinese labor. It is certain that British Columbia suffers very much from the want of a steady flow into it of white immigration; and until the Pacific Railway is finished, I fancy that difficulty will always continue. It is of very great importance, in order to enable British Columbia to get the advantage of the flow of emigration from Europe, that the railway should be finished as early as possible. When Mr. Onderdonk was here in the beginning of the Session, he told me he employed every white man he could get, and that he tried to get every white laborer from Canada that he needed. He asked me, for instance, if I could recommend to him a reliable, a respectable man, a master builder or carpenter, who might get him the carpenters he wanted. I found him such a man, and he took over from Canada fifty or sixty carpenters to help him. Mr. Onderdonk said also that he expected at one time to be able to get sufficient white labor from the United States; but such was the extent to which the construction of new railroads were proceeding in the United States this year, that he could really get no satisfactory labor, but only the culls and refuse, persons who could get no employment at San Francisco, to work on the British Columbia Railway. I presume that this influx of Chinese is greatly caused by the demand for labor for the construction of the railway. Whether the hon. gentleman is correctly informed as to 24,000, or 10,000, or 5,000 Chinese coming into British Columbia, I have no means of knowing. But if they are coming, it is merely to work on the railway, to finish it as soon as possible, and we may well put up with the temporary inconvenience, as I understand it, of the presence of these Chinese. A good many people in Vancouver Island, who keep house, tell me that if they had not Chinese servants, they would have none at all; and I have no doubt things are still worse on the mainland. The Chinese bring no women to British Columbia with them, and are not likely, therefore, to be permanent settlers. Nor do I hear that there is any danger of miscegenation or a mingling of the races. So that after they have finished this particular work they can go back to China again. Whenever a practical difficulty arises, it is quite in the hands of the Legislature to deal with it, in the manner in which it has been dealt with, after a great many years experience, in the United States, and as it has been dealt with in the Australian Provinces. At present every white man can be employed in British Columbia at good wages. The Government have had no information of an alarming influx of Chinese. This is the first I heard of these 24,000 Chinese immigrants, and I think the report must be mythical. I have seen in the newspapers, however, a statement that several vessels had been chartered to bring over Chinese laborers to work on this railway, to which I think there can be no objection. I share very much the feeling of the people of the United States, and the Australian colonies, against a Mongolian or Chinese population in our country as permanent settlers. I believe they would not be a wholesome element for this country. I believe that it is an alien race in every sense, that would not and could not be expected to assimilate with our Arian population; and, therefore, if the temporary necessity had been overcome, and the railway constructed across the continent, with the means of sending the European settlers and laborers into British Columbia, then it would be quite right to join to a reasonable extent in preventing the permanent settlement in this country of Mongolian, Chinese or Japanese immigrants. At present it is simply a question of alternatives—either you must have this labor or you cannot have the railway. The Government have not had their attention called to this subject of late; but it is a matter of so great importance that it will engage our attention, and that of every public man in this House, to discover how far we can admit Chinese labor without introducing a permanent evil to the country by allowing to come into it, in some respects, an inferior race, and, at all events, a foreign and alien race. Of course, British Columbia, from its geographical position and proximity to the ocean, is that portion of the Dominion that will chiefly suffer from an influx of this description of settlers.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I am glad to hear the hon. leader of the Government express an opinion favorable to repressing Chinese immigration at some time in the future; but I believe it will be found, by the experience of the present year, that that future will not be very distant. The point, however, to which I wish to draw your attention is this: The hon. gentleman has intimated that the Government has had no information bearing on the question of Chinese immigration. I have only to draw his attention to this fact: that at almost every Session of the Legislature of British Columbia since 1871 resolutions or addresses have been passed by the Legislative Assembly and forwarded to the Secretary of State of Canada dealing with this question. The hon. gentleman remarked that Chinese were useful as servants in Victoria. No doubt they are used as servants there, and are appreciated, but the number of servants in Victoria altogether would not probably amount to over 200, which is a very small number in comparison with the 4,000 or 5,000 Chinese in British Columbia, as shown by the Census report, and since that Census 4,000 or 5,000 more have been added to enter into competition with white labor. With regard to the point raised that Chinese labor on railways would be very acceptable in the absence of white labor, I believe that as a choice between evils the Province would accept Chinese labor for the purpose of constructing the railway; but, at the same time, the Legislature and the people are looking anxiously to this Government to take some action to put down Chinese immigration, and such action would be the more easy now since there is a ten years limit put on such immigration in the United States.

Mr. ROCHESTER. I do not know what the difficulty is with regard to Chinese labor in British Columbia, but I do know the people of Canada would be glad if they had Chinese or other labor. Agriculturists in Ontario, find it utterly impossible to procure labor. During the last few days, a few batches of immigrants arrived in Ottawa, and they were only a few hours here when they were carried off to different parts of the country, and ten times as many more would have been employed had they arrived. We are in the same position with regard to our mill work. Mill hands are very scarce, and it is almost impossible to get a supply of laborers to do the work required to be done. British Columbia has so much work to do in building railways, that she ought to be thankful to get in Chinese labor, or the labor of any other country, to do it. The people of Ontario would be very glad if they could have an opportunity of employing Chinese labor.

REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the third reading of Bill (No. 158) to readjust the representation in the House of Commons and for other purposes, said: The point reserved was whether we could not make the elections in Manitoba the same day as in the other Provinces. On making enquiry I came to the conclusion it would not be safe to alter the law as it is now.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It will be remembered by the House that in discussing this Bill in Committee yesterday, when the electoral division of the north riding of Bruce was under consideration, the hon. the leader of the Government stated, in response to the motion made by the hon. member for that riding, that he was willing to adopt some change with reference to that division so far as regarded its population. Though not entirely satisfactory to my own views as opposed to those of hon. members opposite, yet there is no doubt it would tend to equalize the population in a greater degree than they are equalized in the Bill as it now stands. It would be without any great political consequence it is true, but it would, notwithstanding, in a degree, remedy the great inequality of population that exists between the west and north riding of Bruce in this Bill. I therefore beg to move the following amendment, which I am sure the hon. the leader of the Government will accept:—

That the Bill be not now read a third time but be re-committed to the Committee of the Whole House, with instructions to amend the same by providing that the village of Port Elgin shall form part of the electoral district of the north riding of the county of Bruce.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When the hon. gentleman said, last night, that Saugeen and Port Elgin should be added to North Bruce, I said the Government was prepared to go half way and give Port Elgin. Is the hon. gentleman serious in proposing to take away Port Elgin from Saugeen and put it in North Bruce, or does he propose that the strip of land lying between Port Elgin and the present southern boundary of North Bruce shall be added to North Bruce?

Mr. PATERSON, With the view of meeting the hon. gentleman, and taking what I could in the way of carrying out the principle of the Bill, I move this amendment first, and then, having given the hon. gentleman an opportunity to yield gracefully on this point, in favor of which he has expressed himself, I will give him an opportunity to go the proper length by attaching the township of Saugeen to North Bruce as well.

Amendment (Mr. Paterson) agreed to, on the following division:—

Amendment considered in Committee and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. PATERSON. I desire to follow up this amendment with another motion I had prepared with reference to the matter, and which the First Minister will agree with me is a necessary motion to be made. I could not think, of course, of detaching Port Elgin from the township of Saugeen, and therefore, the hon. gentleman agreeing with me in that view, as he did, I am happy to say—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONAD. Not by a long chalk; that will not do.

Mr. PATERSON. I am now about to follow it up with a motion that the township of Saugeen in which is the town of Port Elgin, shall also be added to the north riding of Bruce. I am sure it will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the House. Consequently, I beg to move:

That the Bill be re-committed with instructions to provide that the township of Saugeen shall form part of the electoral district of the north riding of the county of Bruce.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think this amendment shows to what extent hon. gentlemen are willing to go—I was going to say they are factious. Last night it was proposed that Saugeen and Port Elgin should be put into the north riding. Well, I suggested that we would go half way and put in Port Elgin. That was scouted by the hon. gentlemen opposite, but to-day we have just voted for it. The hon. gentleman's proposition is factious. The hon. gentleman said: "Let Saugeen go, we will go half-way;" and therefore the Bill passed as it was originally introduced. The hon. gentlemen changed their minds, and they now want the full loaf. We offered half a loaf by adding Port Elgin to North Bruce, and they voted for it. Now they want me to give them the whole loaf and allow Saugeen to go into North Bruce. I shall vote against that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. While this Bill was under consideration in Committee, I made some observations with regard to changes that were made in the county of Oxford. I now consider it my duty, as representing one of the divisions of that county, to protest against and point out the objections I have to these changes. The north riding of Oxford, as it is at present formed, has a population of 25,361. This Bill proposes to change that riding by withdrawing the township of Blenheim from North Oxford, which has a population of 5,937, and adding from the county of Perth the townships of North and South Easthope, having a total population of 4,966. The total difference in the population of the riding, as is proposed by this Bill, is only 925. The changes in South Oxford are made by withdrawing the township of Dereham and the village of Tilsonburg, with a total population of 6,359, and adding from the county of Brant the townships of Burford and Oakland, with a population of 6,405, thereby increasing the population by 46. The principal objection I have to these changes is this: The county of Oxford, ever since Confederation, and in fact for some time before, has been divided into two divisions for electoral purposes, and each division has been represented in this House by one member. As the county is at present constituted, each riding is well formed. By withdrawing the township of Blenheim from the north riding of Oxford, you place the electors in another riding with which they have no municipal or commercial relations. The farmers of that township at the present time sell all their produce and buy what they require in the town of Woodstock, which is situated about the centre of the riding. The people in the townships of North Easthope and South Easthope, which are added to the riding, have no connection in that way whatever with the county of Oxford. The people are connected municipally with the county of Perth and do most of their business and trading in the town of Stratford, which is situated in quite a different direction from any town in the county of Oxford. It is just the same with the south riding. The people in the township of Dereham do their trading and sell their produce in the town of Ingersoll. They are now cut off and added to the county of Norfolk. The two townships added, Burford and Oakland, are in the same position as regards South Oxford. The people in those townships are connected municipally with the county of Brant, the farmers go to Brantford to do their trading and sell their produce, and I think it is an injustice to the people of those townships to sever their old electoral associations for no better reasons than have been adduced in this House. I do not see any reason or necessity, in order to create four or five new constituencies, that a large number of the old counties should be broken up as is contemplated by this Bill. It is a bad precedent. If it is adopted we may expect future Governments to readjust matters; it is a precedent that should not be set in this House and should not be sustained if no better reason than that which has been adduced before the House can be given. The townships of North Easthope and South Easthope to which I have referred might easily have been added, if it was the desire to equalize the population, to South Perth, which would then only have a population of 23,500, and it would have left the people in connection with the county with which they already have municipal relations. Just so is it with respect to the townships of Burford and Oakland, which have been added to the south riding. It would have been far better, if it is necessary to make a change, to have placed the townships in the county of Brant, it would have equalized the population much better than the present plan. As I believe it is the wish of the electors of the county which I represent that they should be left for electoral purposes as at present constituted, I beg to move the following amendment:—

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of Oxford, with a population of 50,093, is divided into two ridings each returning one member; that by the proposed Bill, the two ridings of Oxford will have a population of 49,168, but to effect this change the townships of North Easthope and South Easthope are taken from Perth and added to North Oxford; the townships of Burford and Oakland are taken from Brant and added to South Oxford; the township of Blenheim is taken from North Oxford and added to North Brant; Dereham and Tilsonburg are taken from South Oxford and added to North Norfolk.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the municipal county of Oxford shall be divided into two ridings, each returning one member to Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. I propose that the plan adopted the other morning should be followed, and that in the record the votes shall appear as in the last division.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the proposition. I presume there will be some more amendments, and I think we had better have all the members summoned in, and this first vote will be taken as guiding all subsequent amendments.

Mr. MACKENZIE. At this stage of the Session I do not propose to waste one moment's time in discussing the amendment which I propose to offer for the purpose of indicating what I believe to be a correct principal, that is, to maintain the ordinary municipal boundaries where that is practicable, and as a protest against the needless and, in my opinion, reckless interference with county boundaries I move :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of York is divided into three ridings, each returning one member, with an aggregate population of 66,618, or an average of 22,304 for each member, divided into

East York	23,312
North York	24,502
West York	18,504,

that any inequality which it may be desirable to correct in the population of the three ridings can be adjusted by a transference from one to the other, without interfering with the present county boundaries; that the proposed re-adjustment leaves the west riding of York, having the smallest population, untouched, and transfers part of the village of Stouffville in East York to the west riding of Ontario, the township of Whitechurch, the town of Newmarket and part of the village of Stouffville in North York, to the west riding of Ontario, and the township of Gwillimbury and the town of Bradford from the south riding of Simcoe, to the north riding of York.

That the proposed re-adjustment is objectionable; that the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that three ridings, to be formed out of the county of York, shall each return one member.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I wish to submit a motion with regard to the county of Wellington. Two complaints existed with regard to the original arrangement of this county. One of these—the transference of Erin to the county of Halton—has been rectified, while the other—the taking of Wallace from North Perth and adding it to North Wellington, remains. The result is to give to the county of Wellington, which has already a much larger population than the quota, viz., 73,445, an additional population of 4,795, making the total population of this county, 78,240, or 15,240 in excess of the quota. The motion is to restore Wallace to North Perth, and it should commend itself to every one who favors the principle of equalizing the population. I move :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of Wellington at present comprises a population of 73,445, divided into three ridings, each returning one member, with an average population of 24,461; that by the said Bill it is proposed to add to the north riding of Wellington the township of Wallace, part of the county of Perth, and to transfer the township of Maryborough from North to Centre Wellington, and to make other changes, thus increasing the population of the electoral county of Wellington, now beyond the quota by 4,795 souls; that the proposed addition of Wallace to North Wellington is objectionable.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by withdrawing Wallace from North Wellington and re-transferring Maryborough from Centre to North Wellington.

Mr. FLEMING. The principle upon which this Bill is supposed to be based is the equalization of population; but it is somewhat singular that the county of Welland, which has a population of 5,142 above the quota, is left undisturbed, while the neighboring electoral district of Monck, by the provisions of the Bill, is re-adjusted so as to give it a population of 4,968 below the quota, or a difference in population in the two constituencies lying side by side of 10,120. From what the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) said the other evening, this discrepancy cannot be justified even on political grounds. He said that he would be quite willing to take a portion of Welland, for he believed that it would increase his majority, and I am very sure that the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Bunting) cannot very well offer any objection to sharing with his neighbor a portion of his county. I move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the electoral district of Monck comprises a population of 17,145 or 3,763 below the quota; the proposed re-adjustment withdraws from Monck with a view to attaching it to South Wentworth the township of Caistor, belonging municipally to the county of Lincoln, and withdraws from Haldimand the township of South Cayuga, belonging municipally to that county, in order to add it to Monck; that by the change the population of Monck is reduced to 15,910, or 4,968 below the quota.

That the said Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the proposed changes in the electoral district of Monck.

After Recess.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to move an amendment respecting the county of Ontario. The north riding of Ontario, as proposed by this Bill, is, I think, the most unshapely riding in the Province of Ontario. It is about 90 miles long. I think the Government, before the Bill is passed, should detach the township of Seugog from North Ontario, and add it to South Ontario; it is about 9 miles from the nearest point of the north riding, and it is connected with the township of Reach by a floating bridge about one-third of a mile long on Lake Seugog. In the north riding, I find the townships of Morrison, Ryde, Draper, Oakley, Maclean, and Macaulay, and the village of Gravenhurst, have been taken from Muskoka, and which make the constituency a very unwieldy one. I think it would be much better if the townships of Maclean and Macaulay were added to Muskoka, and the township of Muskoka and the village of Gravenhurst added to North Ontario. This would make the constituency much more shapely than it is at present. The objection to that is, I suppose, that they give a Reform majority. The population of the township of Muskoka is 1,135, and that of Gravenhurst village 1,015, making a total of 2,150. If these were added to North Ontario and the townships of Macaulay and Maclean taken away, the population of the riding would be increased by only 500. But I find by the returns of the last election that the township of Muskoka gave a Reform majority of 59, and the village of Gravenhurst a Reform majority of 62, making a total of 121; the township of Maclean gave a Reform majority of eight, and the township of Macaulay a Conservative majority of 13; so that the change adds 115 or 120 Conservative votes to North Ontario. The resolution I propose to move is to leave the county as it was before, and to take the township of Reach from North Ontario and add it to South Ontario; this would leave the constituencies much more shapely than they are now, and would give them 23,000 or 24,000 each. To show the inconvenience of the present division of the county, I may refer to a bill which I have received, calling a meeting of the electors to organize this new constituency of North Ontario, which states that the distance the electors will have to travel to attend the meeting will probably not exceed fifty or sixty miles. I move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of Ontario is divided into two ridings, with a total population of 49,142, giving an average of 24,571 for each riding and the inequalities between the two ridings can easily be adjusted by a transfer from the north to the south riding of a portion of the county territory; that the proposed Bill leaves the south riding of Ontario with a population of 20,241, as against a present population of 20,348, and the north riding 20,828, as against a present population of 28,434, and creates a new riding of West Ontario with a population of 19,730. That for these purposes the south riding of Ontario is changed by transferring the township of Pickering to West Ontario, and by transferring the township of Reach and the village of Port Perry from North Ontario; the north riding of Ontario is further changed by taking Oakley, Macaulay, Morrison, Ryde, McLean and Bracebridge from Muskoka and transferring Uxbridge to West Ontario and the new riding of West Ontario is created by taking Whitechurch and Newmarket from North York, Stouffville from North York and East York, Uxbridge from North Ontario and Pickering from South Ontario, being thus composed of parts of two municipal counties and four ridings; that the said plan is objectionable.

That the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the county of Ontario be divided into two electoral districts each returning one member.

Mr. TROW. I wish to move an amendment as regards the county I have the honor to represent, more for the sake of the people than for myself, because it is a matter of indifference to me whether I shall continue to represent it or not. I think it is generally known that it was to oblige the people and not myself that ever I came to Parliament. However, the Government have seen fit to disarrange that riding in such a manner as to disfigure it. This is probably as bad a case as there is in the whole Province of Ontario. There is no necessity of changing the population, because the two ridings of Perth would have made two very nice constituencies with similar population and about the number requisite to return a member. There was no need of disarranging the whole county for the purpose of forming four or five new constituencies, and these two ridings more particularly. Had there been a change either north or west there would not have been such a difference. But to place those two old townships that have been side by side so long in the positions proposed, and which have rolled up majorities time and again for the Liberals, is rather unfair. They have not now any power when thrown into a riding with 1,000 of a majority of opposite opinions. If the township of South Easthope was not taken back from Oxford, why not return the township of North Easthope to the south riding of Perth? It would not disarrange the smaller county by letting North Easthope return to the county from which it was taken, and it would not disturb Oxford or Huron. I noticed in one of the most ultra-Tory papers in a western county that they have predicted my defeat. They have arranged for that result, I presume. The editor goes on to state that his friend in North Perth is now secure. I know there was no possibility of his securing his election had those changes not been made. I have no particular objection to the Government securing the election of their friends; but I do not see why they should go out of their way to defeat an opponent like myself. I should like very much to have a vote on my amendment, as I have heard at least a dozen Conservative members express sympathy with me, and express the opinion that my seat should not be put in danger. I have no fear of not securing my election, but at the same time these changes cut up the riding in a very improper manner. I move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by attaching North Easthope to the electoral district of South Perth.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to propose a motion in relation to other changes made by this Bill. The right hon. gentleman, in moving the second reading of this Bill, declared his object was to establish the principle of representation by population, and make the electoral districts nearly equal in population. I undertook to show that he could not make a very much more equal division than existed in the constituencies included in my motion, without a violation of the principle he laid down in 1872, in reference to maintaining the boundaries of the municipal counties intact. In taking off the township of Romney from the county of Essex and putting it back again in the municipal county of Kent, to which it belongs, the motive may not have been a very excellent one, but the fact itself was capable of defence. I mentioned before, and I state now, that the county of Kent is very inadequately represented by the provisions of this Bill, that while the county of Lambton has two distinct electoral divisions within its limits, and forms a large proportion of a third and a fraction of a fourth electoral division, Kent has the election of but one representative within its limits, the remaining portions of it being tacked on to adjoining constituencies. If the hon. gentleman were to take the township of Harwich and the village of Blenheim from Kent, as it now stands, there would still remain 20,572 of a population within the limits of that county. The eastern division of Kent might be formed, with a population of nearly 20,000, and within the limits of Kent and Bothwell an electoral division might be formed containing a population of 22,000, which would be a very much more equal division than that which the hon. gentleman has made and which would not interfere with the existing divisions. I beg leave to move:

The the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the municipal counties of Kent and Lambton comprise the electoral districts of Kent, Lambton and Bothwell, with a population of 106 344, making for five members an average of 21,268 per member.

That the electoral district of Lambton comprises 42,619, and may properly be divided into two ridings.

That the electoral district of Kent comprises 36,626, and may by the restoration from Bothwell of some of the municipalities of Kent, be divided into two ridings of about 21,000 each, leaving Bothwell with about 21,000.

That the proposed Bill needlessly disarranges the existing organization for Kent and Bothwell; takes from Kent and adds to Bothwell, Chatham and Wallaceburg; takes from Bothwell to add to West Elgin, Oxford, Howard and Ridgetown, and takes from Bothwell to add to West Middlesex, Euphemia.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the provisions for the representation of Kent, Lambton and Bothwell in Parliament.

Mr. CASEY. I have to make, with regard to my county, objections of a similar character to those made by many other hon. members in regard to their counties. The general objections made to the scope of the Bill itself have been justified and strengthened in the course of this debate. As one change has followed another in this Bill, it has become more and more apparent that the Bill is the production of continued caucusing, and that the caucusing has not stopped yet. Local districts have sent down their representatives and those representatives have been heard, and while the country at large is refused an opportunity of properly understanding this Bill and of expressing their opinions upon it, the supporters of the Government have been heard on every point, and at their dictation and representation alterations have been made to meet exigencies not at first provided for. A still further proof that the Bill is indefensible is the fact that hon. members opposite do not, as a rule, attempt to defend it. The occasional speeches that have been made in favor of the Bill have not been made by the members of the Government or their leading supporters, but by junior members of the party, who have perhaps escaped the party reins and talked when they were not wanted to talk. The rule seems to have been promulgated by the leaders of the opposite side that the Bill shall not be discussed on that side, because the more it is discussed the more indefensible it must appear. This very afternoon one portion at least was made to appear so indefensible that the Government had to give their influence and votes to the removal of that provision. With regard to Elgin, the population of that municipal county is almost the exact quota for two members, viz., a little over 21,000 each. The difference between the two ridings is very considerable as they are now arranged. That difference, of course, it was part of the declared policy of the Government to remove as far as possible; but it was also part of their declared policy not only to remove the difference, but to reduce the average of these ridings to as nearly the quota as possible. I have pointed out that in the case of the two Elgins they could not reduce the average to a point nearer the average quota of the Dominion than as it stands, but they could have removed the inequality of the two ridings by making the changes within the boundaries of the county itself. But instead of doing so they have seen fit to begin a series of changes affecting several of the neighboring counties, by adding to the county of Elgin at one end and cutting it off on the other, something on the principle of the Irishman who found his blanket was too short, and he cut off a piece at one end and added it to the other end in order to make it longer. The Government have done so with the county of Elgin; they have cut off one township at one end and put two new townships on to the other end, and they have succeeded in making it a little longer than it was before. They have given the county a total population of 49,000, which is considerably more than the required quota for two members. They have disarranged the representation of those two ridings in such a way as to give the individual electors of Elgin a much smaller share of representation than they had before. They had already, on the average, just the share they should have had, compared with the rest of the Dominion—one member for every 24,000; they have now only one for every 24,500. The hon. Minister has disfranchised the two townships added by putting them in a riding where their vote will have no effect on the result. They have not succeeded yet in reducing the population of East Elgin to nearly the point of the required quota. When East Elgin is reduced it contains nearly 26,000 people, and is larger than Carleton, East Peterborough, Muskoka, South Simcoe, South Huron, South Wellington, or North Bruce, all of which were found to be so large that the Government declared it necessary in the interest of fair representation to reduce these ridings; and yet by the changes they have made, they have left East Elgin much larger than any of those constituencies. It is therefore quite clear that equalization was not the object in the arrangement of that riding, at all events. I might further point out that the two ridings of Elgin as now arranged contain a somewhat larger population than the two ridings of Ontario before they were re-arranged, and yet the Government declared that, in the interest of fair representation, they were compelled to reduce the representation of the Ontarios, notwithstanding which they have increased the two Elgins from having exactly the proper quota up to a point above that at which the Ontarios stood before they reduced them. I therefore move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of Elgin contains a population of 42,361 souls, and is divided into two ridings, each returning one member to the House of Commons, with an average population of 21,180 per member, which is very near the average quota for the Dominion.

That by the proposed Bill the township of South Dorchester and the village of Springfield are transferred from East Elgin to East Middlesex, and the town of Ridgetown and the townships of Oxford and Howard are transferred from Bothwell to West Elgin for electoral purposes.

That by these changes the population of East Elgin becomes 25,806 and that of West Elgin 23,477, being a total of 49,277 for the two ridings, or an average of 24,638 per member, which is much further from the quota for the Dominion than the present average.

That by the transfer of the city of St. Thomas from the east riding to the west riding, the population of each riding would be as follows: East Elgin, 19,780; West Elgin, 22,581.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the municipal county of Elgin be divided into two ridings, each returning one member.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It will not be necessary for me to detain the House with any remarks with reference to the iniquity in the Bill which I propose to remedy by this amendment, as it is fully set forth in the document which I will read and place in your hands. I beg to move:

That the county of Brant with a population of 33,869 is at present divided into two ridings, each returning one member, with an average population of 16,934, or a population greater than the population assigned to many ridings by the said Bill.

That any inequality between the two ridings of North and South Brant could be easily adjusted by transferring some part of the south to the north riding.

That the proposed re-adjustment transfers from the smaller riding North Brant, to the larger riding South Brant, the town of Paris and the township of Onondaga, and takes away from the south riding of Brant and adds to another municipal county, that of Oxford, the township of Burford and Oakland, and takes away from Oxford, and adds to the proposed new riding of North Brant, the township of Blenheim, and takes away from Wentworth and adds to the proposed north riding of Brant the township of Ancaster, thus making a north riding of Brant, so-called, composed of parts of Brant, Oxford and Wentworth.

That the proposed changes are objectionable.
That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by dividing the municipal county of Brant into two ridings, each returning one member.

Mr. MACDONELL (North Lanark). The hon. First Minister the other evening, judging from his remarks, thought I was in favor of changing Torbolton for Huntley. Had the hon. gentleman been in his place when I made my remarks in respect to the Bill he would not have been under that impression. At that time I asked the hon. Minister of Customs, in the absence of the hon. First Minister, why the Government did not add Huntley, and I said the reason why they did not do so was because the people of Huntley objected to its being added to Lanark. I, moreover, say that objection might be taken to Huntley on the same grounds on which objection was made to Torbolton. I regret the hon. member for Carleton has not raised his voice in regard to attaching the township from his riding to Lanark. It was at his suggestion that Huntley was added to Lanark. I hope the hon. First Minister will accept the suggestion of dividing Carleton into two ridings by the addition of Gloucester and another township. I protest in every way against the townships added to North Lanark, and I hope those ridings will be allowed to remain as at present. I beg to move in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the municipal county of Lanark at present returning one member for each of two ridings, contains a population of 33,975, equal to 16,937 for each member, or within 1,615 of 18,552 being the average number of souls to a member for the thirty-two seats in the eastern portion of the Province, and largely in excess of the proposed population for eight of the seats in that district, namely:

South Grenville.....	13,256
North Leeds.....	12,423
Brockville.....	15,207
Frontenac.....	14,993
Kingston.....	14,091
West Peterboro'.....	13,310
Ottawa (2 seats).....	27,412 giving an average per seat of 13,946.

That the disproportion between the north and south riding of Lanark can be easily adjusted by transferring from South Lanark one of the municipalities adjoining the north riding. That the proposed re-adjustment separates from the municipal county of Lanark, Smith's Falls, in the south riding of Lanark, and attaches it to North Leeds and Grenville, part of another municipal county, and separates from the municipal county of Carleton the townships of Fitzroy and Huntley, and attaches them for electoral purposes to the north riding of Lanark.

That the proposed re-adjustment is objectionable.
That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by creating out of the municipal county of Lanark, two ridings for electoral purposes.

Amendment (Macdonell, Lanark) negatived on the following division:—

Mr. THOMPSON moved the following amendment :—

That the County of Haldimand has at present a population of 18,619 or more than 2,000 under the quota.

That the proposed Bill reduces the population of Haldimand to 17,667, by withdrawing the township of South Cayuga and adding it to Monck; that there is no ground for such reduction.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the County of Haldimand, as at present constituted for electoral purposes, shall return one member.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. In the absence of the hon. member for North Norfolk, I beg to move the following amendment :—

The county of Norfolk, with a population of 33,593, is divided into two ridings, each returning one member, with an average population of 16,846, a population greater than assigned to many ridings by the Bill.

That it is proposed by the Bill to take away from Oxford the township of Dereham and the town of Tilsonburg, and to add them to North Norfolk.

Mr. MACDONELL (Lanark).

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the county of Norfolk be divided into two ridings, each returning one member of Parliament.

Mr. TROW. I beg to move an amendment :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of Middlesex and the city of London contain a population of 93,081 souls; that any substantial inequality in the division of this population can be easily adjusted within municipal bounds; that by the proposed Bill the township of Stephen is taken from the municipal county of Huron and added to North Middlesex, the township of South Dorchester is taken from the county of Elgin and added to East Middlesex, the township of Euphemia is taken from Bothwell and added to West Middlesex, and numerous other changes are made.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the provisions for the representation of the county of Middlesex in Parliament.

Mr. BAIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up the portion of time to which I am entitled to discuss this question to-night, but at the same time I feel disposed to say that I think the old municipal and county boundaries have a strong claim for consideration in any re-adjustment measure, and I think that the right hon. leader of the House, when he made the arrangement after the former Census certainly he had much more respect for that principle than he has at the present time. I have simply to say in connection with the motion I propose to make, that while the present adjustment of Simcoe disturbs, not only the municipal boundaries of the county, but also of the two adjoining counties, the division is still very far from a fair average. The average I find to be 25,342, varying in population from 22,000 in the south to 27,000 in the east. Under the arrangement which I propose, these ridings would have an average population of 22,607, which is much nearer to the average representation of the Province as a whole, besides preserving to a greater degree the municipal boundaries. I move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, That the North and South Ridings of Simcoe comprise a population of 76,129, giving an average population if divided into three Ridings of 25,376, and that a portion of the population is comprised in the municipal county of Dufferin to which the said Bill does not assign a Member.

That it is proposed by the said Bill to create the East Riding of Simcoe partly by withdrawing from Muskoka the municipalities of Wood, Medora, Monck, Muskoka and the Town of Gravenhurst, and by transferring from South Simcoe to the North Riding of York the Township of West Gwilliambury and the Town of Bradford.

That the said re-adjustment is objectionable.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the Municipal County of Dufferin shall return one Member and by dividing the remainder of the south riding of Simcoe and the north riding of Simcoe into three ridings, each returning one Member, and by making other consequential changes.

Amendment (Mr. Bain) negatived on the following division:—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to get the attention of the Chairman of the Committee which was charged with the preparation of this Bill, and I shall be obliged to him if he will indicate his consciousness by looking at me. I see he keeps his head down, however, but I wish to say to the hon. Minister of Customs that I do not want the resolution which I am about to move voted down in silence. I think we have a right, if we cannot have any attention, at least to have an explanation of the arrangement made in South Brant and South Oxford. I desire to ask, whoever is in charge of the Government at this moment, if it was the principle of equalization of the population, that was the basis of this change, and if that was not the principle, I think I have a right to know, and the House has a right to know under what principle it was made? They took from South Brant two townships, and they annexed them to the riding of South Oxford. Now, I do not lay much stress with regard to the case of Burford, from a geographical point of view, though there was no necessity of disturbing that riding at all, as it had the proper number of inhabitants; but let me point out to you that in taking the township of Oakland from South Brant and adding it to South Oxford, you are taking a population of 930 from a riding which has only a little over 20,000 and attaching it to a riding which has a population of nearly 25,000. The township of Oakland does not belong geographically to the south riding of Oxford at all, for if it had not been attached to Burford on one side, which you are now attaching to South Oxford, Oakland would be twelve miles away at its nearest point from the county of Oxford, and as the township is three-quartered—is three-correred—the result of the change is to leave that county anything but symmetrical. This township comes within eight miles of the city of Brantford, the county town, where its inhabitants do all their business, and the town of Ingersoll, which is the main town in South Oxford to which it is now attached, will be something like 40 or 50 miles distant. I move :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the township of Oakland shall form part of the Electoral District of the south riding of the county of Brant.

I want an answer to my question.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Surely, after so pointed and repeated a request, an answer should be given.

Mr. PATERSON. Is there no hon. gentleman on the other side with sufficient spirit to answer ?

Mr. RYMAL. The appeal I made on a former occasion when the House was in Committee, to replace the township of Ancaster where it properly belongs, where it has been for the last 70 years, proving ineffectual, as the Government are exhibiting a determination that no amendment shall be made to the Bill as it at present stands, I have only to renew my former protest against the action of the Government. It is clear to me that the object which they say they have in view is not the true one. The equalization of the constituencies has been, not entirely, but to a very great extent, disregarded, and the political complexion of the constituencies has been the sole, the guiding motive of their action in changing the bounds. Now, when we come to realize the fact that in some fifteen constituencies—no, in ten—yes, in nine—there are 6,500 Reform electors who are virtually disfranchised—who have no influence whatever in this country—who might just as well be politically decapitated—we have some idea of the nature of this Bill. Now, these 6,500 Reform electors, who have been thrown into these nine or ten constituencies, from perhaps eighteen or twenty others, would have been sufficient in many cases to have turned the tide of the political battle, and it was for this reason only that this wicked, this tyrannical change has been brought about. Why, Mr. Speaker, every Tory wire-puller or prospective candidate, who fancied that his chances of election would be improved by having his constituency or those adjoining it changed, has been consulted day after day and week after week, and, although I am not a very observant person, I have seen these delegations here enquiring for certain gentlemen, who I do not hesitate to say were agents in the gerrymandering business. So the Government were well posted; but when the Bill came down, it was found that those who first acted did not complete the job to the satisfaction of some who did not appear here, and the business had to be gone into again. One change after another was made, and I do not believe they were all made with the approval of the Chairman of the gerrymandering Committee; I believe there is too much honor and fair play in him to stoop to some of the mean tricks which have been resorted to in order to defraud the Reform electors of their representatives. When we consider that in the Tory constituencies of Lincoln, Monck, South Norfolk, East Elgin, East Middlesex, North Middlesex, North Huron, North Perth, South Bruce, North Wellington, Centre Wellington, North York, East York, South Lanark, Brockville, and Stormont and Cornwall, the prospects of the Tory candidates have been materially improved, and that in South Wentworth, South Brant, North Norfolk, North Perth, West Middlesex, Bothwell, North Ontario, South Ontario, North Lanark and North Bruce, the Reformers have been decimated and weakened, the result is that the Tory party has been strengthened in everyone of these twenty-six constituencies. But the equalization of the population has not been secured. In my own constituency, where we were 6,000 below the quota, we are now 5,400 below the quota; and, in the case of my own riding, I feel as sure as that I am a living man that there was no other reason for removing the keystone of that old municipal organization of Wentworth than the fact that for forty-five years at least it has had much to do with returning a Reform representative for that riding. I quite understand the animus which inspired the hon. First Minister when he said to me privately on the floor of the House, a night or two ago, with a pretty hard expression at the commencement of his sentence: "We meant to make you howl." Well, he has made us howl; but we have not begun to howl yet, and some of us will do some howling before the next election; and I venture to predict that although the hon. gentleman has done such an infamous act, although he has attempted to strangle the voice of the people, although he has changed the constituencies for the express purpose of bringing his creatures into Parliament, it will be as on a former occasion when he attempted something of this kind—that he has overshot the mark, that an outraged people will resent this act; and I am glad to know that some of his Tory friends in the township of Ancaster, who have been added to a county 45 miles away, are telling their comrades and the Reformers that they are not slaves or serfs, to be placed here and there at the whim of a Minister, although they have, in times gone by, supported his general policy; and I venture to predict that there will be some disappointments in the returns when the next general election is over. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not made of such material that I can beg for justice. I can ask you plainly and in a manly way to do what is right, but I cannot beg, I cannot fawn and be a sycophant. I can play a fair, honorable part. If the tyrant tramples upon me, if he binds my people's hands so that I or some one else holding the same views may not be their representative, my indignation rises and I feel a great deal like the chained gladiator:

"I loathe you petty tyrants,
I scorn you with mine eye,
I'll curse you with my latest breath,
And fight you till I die;
I will not beg for quarter,
I scorn to be your slave—
No, I'll swim the sea of slaughter,
Or sink beneath the wave."

This diabolical act of the Government is a fitting climax to the many corrupt and wicked acts perpetrated under the Government of the present Prime Minister. I wish he were here that I might the more fully express my thoughts; but there are some instances of his political career that in his absence I shall not refer to. I do not wish to appear to make a cowardly attack on an absent member. I have never yet been branded as a coward, and I do not wish to speak behind a man's back what should only be said to his face. I have no doubt the hon. First Minister desires to go down to his grave honored and respected; and gladly would I see any man who has devoted so many years of his life to the public service, depart in that way. But there are some acts of the right hon. gentleman's career to which I must refer. His leadership of the Tory party was obtained, as I was told, by the man he supplanted, by intrigue and deception. The man he supplanted told me that he had warmed a viper in his breast that turned round and stung him. Having obtained power in that way, by a cunning and deceptive heart and mind, he signalized his public career by acts that are not unworthy of notice. The double-shuffle of 1878 signalized the cunning of the man; for he led the Liberal party into a trap most completely. He allowed them to take office, and in two days afterwards he and his friends voted them out without even allowing them an appeal to the people. When resuming office he swore he would perform his duties, never intending to do so, for the day after he swore to perform the duties of another office, an act characterized by the late D'Arcy McGee as gross and deliberate perjury. The Pacific Scandal also marked his administration of public affairs as that of a man ready to corrupt the electorate, to buy the constituencies, and to sell a great public contract to obtain the funds for the purpose. The organs of public opinion in this and the adjoining country, and at home, almost without exception, stigmatized that act as unworthy of the character of a Canadian statesman; and the apologetic and whining manner in which he attempted to justify that transaction—the pity-the-sorrows-of-a-poor-old-man style in which he addressed the House in his defence, showed he felt the humiliating position in which his wicked conduct had placed him. The Pacific Railway contract and his subsequent conduct marked his subserviency to that great corporation; for I do not believe that any demand the Syndicate might make on the Government dare be refused. They have handed over to the tender mercies of a grasping monopoly the heritage of the people of Canada; and to-day the men who are going into the great North-West to develop its rich soil, meet with a great many obstructions which, under a paternal Government, they would never have been subjected to. I always believed there was a spirit of manly pride in the Premier, and something like moral and political courage—that he was not afraid to meet his opponents in a fair field and on equal terms—that he was willing to be tried by an unpacked jury. But, able as I acknowledge him to be, he seems to have shrunk from the discussion of the public questions, and the verdict which an impartial jury would render, and for that purpose he has placed the issue before a jury of his own packing. Can anyone expect justice at the hands of such a tribunal as this? And is it not cowardly, after all the boasts from hon. gentlemen opposite that the country had become so prosperous under their Administration that, day by day, the public heart was being drawn towards them and that they only wanted an opportunity to convince the world that that Administration for the last three or four years had won for them the unbounded confidence of the people, to bring forward such a measure as this. There never was a more vainglorious boast; and the Bill now before the House is the most conclusive evidence that there was a coward's heart in the breast of every one of them, for no fair-minded honorable men would have attempted to so gerrymander the constituencies, had they at all been sure of their seats. No fair-minded honorable man would have attempted to gerrymander the constituencies as to make the seats sure. I suppose the die is cast, and we shall have to appeal to these gerrymandered constituencies, to plead our cause before a tribunal formed in such a way as to render it a biased one. In many cases, no doubt hon. gentlemen opposite will succeed in their efforts, but in many others I am sure they will not. We shall go into the fight terribly handicapped, and if they win a verdict under such circumstances, they will have nothing to boast of. They should rather blush for shame, to think that they are retained in place and power by means so base, by appealing to a jury so partizan in its character. I may ask whether there is any redress for this. From this House I expect nothing. The die is cast. The partizan character of the majority will cause them to support the measure irrespective of its merits, and the character of the other branch, the Senate, precludes any hope that they will not affirm what has been passed in this House. The only appeal left is that to the representative of the Sovereign. For what else can a Governor General be here if not to stand in the breach when a gross outrage is being perpetrated, when a corrupt Executive, backed by a subservient following, use their legislative power to prevent the free expression of popular opinion. I have thought, in my simplicity and ignorance, perhaps, that this is a function which the representative of the Sovereign might properly exercise. I wonder whether he will take the task of asking some very pertinent questions of his tyrant Minister as to the reason why he did this thing. I think that he might properly do it, and I think that the son of the noble house of Argyle, unless he has forgotten the traditions of his family, will ask some such pertinent questions.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. RYMAL. May I not speculate as to what is to occur? I bow to the Speaker's decision. Speaking for myself, perhaps this is the last time my voice shall be heard here. I have a personal regard for every man in this House, and I have been assured by a number of my Conservative friends of their regret that I should disappear from the public stage. They assured me of the value they set upon me, and hoped I would forego the determination I have made and still continue to be an ornament, I suppose, to this House. Well, in my simplicity I believed that these men were speaking truly what they felt, and not until they, as it were, took me by the throat and assassinated a goodly number of my electors had I any doubt of the truth of what they said. I cannot, in fitting language, describe what I believed them to be, or you, Mr. Speaker, would call me to account again, but I think I can give you a pretty clear idea. I will suppose that the hon. First Minister was about to organize his followers into a great band of musicians, and he were to ask me what instruments they should play, I would say to him: Let everyone play the lyre because the bandmaster would not have much trouble in making experts of them. The moment they had the instruments in their hands they would be accomplished musicians. I trust that good will come out of this. I hope that the people will arise to the necessity of the occasion, and teach an unjust, unfair, corrupt Minister that he may not trifle with the dearest rights of Britons, that he may not ruthlessly disfranchise 7,500 of the loyal subjects of Canada just because they happen to be Liberals in principle. Fair play and justice hides its head at such a scene as this, and the Goddess of Liberty, clad in mourning, weeps over the wrongs he has done to his countrymen; but we shall see what we shall see. On looking over this Bill I do not consider it complete, and have drafted an additional clause which I will read to the House and send over to the First Minister, in order that he may judge for himself whether it is not a fitting clause to add:

Should any county or electoral division in Ontario except North Brant, West Elgin, South Middlesex, North and South Oxford, South Huron, West Bruce, South Huron, East Simcoe and West Ontario, contrary to the interest and meaning of this Act, nominate and elect any person known by the name of Grit, Reformer, or Liberal, to be a member of the House of Commons, the election of such member so elected may by Order in Council be declared null and void by disallowing the same, and in like manner such member so elected may be declared ineligible to sit and vote in the House of Commons of Canada; and the county or electoral division so disregarding the intention and purposes of this Act shall be disfranchised and not entitled to elect a member of Parliament, and the seat so forfeited may by Order in Council be conferred on some defeated candidate in the Tory interest at the coming election, preference being given to those who have longest been subservient followers of the Tory Government and supporters of Pacific Scandals and known as the "Old Guard," the present members for Niagara and Cornwall, whose seats have been abolished, being first of all provided for.

I beg to move the following amendment:—

The County of Wentworth comprises a population of 30,991, divided into two ridings, with an average population of 15,495, which is higher than the average population for eight of the seats proposed under the said Bill.

That by the said Bill it is proposed to withdraw from the south riding of Wentworth the township of Ancaster and attach it to the north riding of Brant, another municipal county; to withdraw from the electoral district of Monck the township of Caistor and attach it to the south riding of Wentworth, another municipal county; to withdraw from the county of Lincoln the township and village of Grimsby and add them to the south riding of Wentworth, another municipal county, with the result of increasing the population of the electoral division of the south riding of Wentworth by only 546 souls, making it 15,539 souls, as against 14,993, its present population.

That the said re-adjustment is objectionable, and the Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that the municipal county of Wentworth shall be divided into two ridings, each returning one member.

I call for the yeas and nays. I have a particular desire that the yeas and nays shall be taken on this occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the last time I shall trust to an arrangement made with the leader of the Opposition. He has broken his word.

Mr. BLAKE. Did the hon. gentleman say I had broken my word?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I did say so.

Mr. BLAKE. Why, Mr. Speaker, I am amazed the hon. gentleman has made such a statement.

Mr. RYMAL. I understood the right hon. gentleman to suggest that if any member particularly desired it it should be done.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly, that is what the hon. Minister himself said.

Mr. RYMAL. There is no contract between the hon. Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition that I know of, and I heard him say it might be done if any one desired it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said nothing of the kind, not a word.

Mr. RYMAL. I heard him say so.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, yes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I deny it distinctly. Any body who says I did, says what is not true.

Mr. BLAKE. I say I heard him say so.

Mr. MILLS. I say so, too.

Mr. BUNSTER. I consider the Government in this gerrymandering business has not gone far enough. The hon. Premier, as well as the junior member for Victoria, will probably have to endorse the remarks I am going to make. The electoral districts of Vancouver, according to the returns of the British Columbia Government, contains 1,384 votes; that is more than Victoria has to-day. While the hon. Premier does not, as a matter of course, like to relinquish any part of the seat he now occupies so worthily; I have a right, in justice to British Columbia, to demand from the Government that the constituency of Vancouver Island shall be divided. I am not asking for any additional seat, I am merely asking for what is fair to the Island, which is, that all north of Nanaimo, including Comox and Queen Charlotte Island, shall be entitled to one representative, the constituency to be known as the Nanaimo electoral district; and that all south of Nanaimo shall have one representative, save and except the city of Victoria. The city of Victoria shall have one representative, leaving three representatives the same as we have now. I do not see why the Government should not grant this request; inasmuch as it is just and reasonable. But it is very hard to get anything from the Government; they know their great strength, their great majority, and they generally answer, no. I am now alluding to the hon. Minister of Customs, who, as the hon. leader of the Government justly stated in the last campaign, knew how to say no, and he has not forgotten to say no yet. I am speaking now for only a part of British Columbia. I laid the matter privately before the Government, but could get no satisfaction from them. As to the Chinese, I understood that the junior member for Victoria brought up the Chinese question without giving any notice of it, and the leader of the Government snubbed him for it. I have spoken of the Chinese question, year in and year out, and I can safely say that no Government in Canada can stand unless they make the Chinese question a plank in their platform. The present Government has carried out the wishes of the people, I believe, in regard to the National Policy as well as with respect to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but they will have also to assist the people of the Pacific Province in preventing the Chinese from landing on our shores. They have a good precedent in the action of the people of the United States, as exhibited in California, in respect to this question. We have present the senior and junior members for Victoria, and when they come to consider the representation of Vancouver Island they will no doubt approve of the proposal which I now submit to the House.

Mr. DECOSMOS. How many voters have you?

Mr. BUNSTER. 1,134. How many have you in Victoria city? I will read from the most energetic paper we have in that Province, the Nanaimo Free Press, which, speaking upon the question of representation, urges me to ask justice for the Province in the following terms:—

"That it is urgently required on this Island cannot be safely disputed. Look at the present anomaly of Vancouver District extending from one end to the other of Vancouver Island and from one side to the other thereof and only return one member, while Victoria District, a radius of two or three miles from the centre of the city, sends two members. We hope to see Mr. Bunster moving energetically and intelligently in this matter, for he is sure to meet the opposition of the Victoria element. In political matters, Victoria has ever claimed to be the entire Island, oftentimes the whole Province. It is high time this anomaly was wiped out, and the country more fairly redistricted and represented. We have frequently urged that Vancouver Island should be divided into three electoral districts, each returning a member to the House of Commons, and we have heard no arguments to the contrary (except selfish ones from Victoria). The suggestion made by us was that Victoria city and district return one member; the farming settlements between Victoria and Nanaimo, another; and the coal mining districts of Nanaimo and Comox the third. This would give a fair and equitable representation, not only as to population and importance, but of the different industries of the Island. The Provincial Legislature have partly acknowledged our importance by giving a second member to this district, to take effect at the coming general election. It is a matter of paramount importance that the interests of each district should be properly represented, but that is impossible while the entire influence is centered in and around Victoria; for in nearly all cases the interests of Victoria are considered first and the others last. The same principle permeates almost every Department of the Government. Why, for instance, should Victoria get all the credit for the exports and imports of Nanaimo, for in all the reports Victoria is the only place mentioned. We are pleased to see that the Government have taken the general question of representation in hand, and it is to be hoped that at least justice will be done to the Western Island of the Dominion."

I do not expect to meet with the opposition of the hon. leader of the Government; though I may meet with the opposition of his colleagues. Nevertheless, I think they are disposed to agree to my request; but if we have the support of the hon. leader of the Government we are secure. I beg to move in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the Island of Vancouver, in British Columbia, having three seats in Parliament, be divided as follows: Nanaimo city and all north, including Denman Island, Hornby Island, Queen Charlotte Island and Taxada Island form one electoral district known as the Nanaimo district, and shall be entitled to one member; and all south of said district, excepting the city of Victoria, shall be entitled to one member and shall be known as the electoral district of Vancouver; and the city of Victoria shall be entitled to one member for the House of Commons of Canada.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I must crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments while I reply to the hon. member. I have no doubt the hon. member is perfectly correct in stating that a portion of the population of Vancouver Island district desired to have that section of the Province redistricted; but I am not aware that it extends beyond Nanaimo. I am not aware that the district of Comox, the far northern district, desires such a change. I am not aware that the district of Cowichan desires such a change, or any other portion of Vancouver. It is practically confined to Nanaimo alone. Nanaimo is in favor of Free Trade and wants a member to represent that view of public policy. The hon. gentleman has stated that in his district there are 1,134 electors. I am not aware that that is correct. I find the number of voters in his district is 1,043. In the city of Victoria there are 1,134 voters. If the district should be divided as proposed, Victoria would have one member for 1,134 voters, the district he would call Vancouver one member for 558 voters, and the district of Nanaimo one member for 635 voters. Now, Sir, that would give to Victoria nearly double the number of voters of any of the other districts. Speaking, Sir, for the people of Victoria, so far as I know their views, they have no desire that the country shall be redistricted, but that it shall remain as it is. The arrangement has worked very well during the last twelve Sessions it has been represented in Parliament, and I believe it would work well in the future. I do not think it desirable that an antagonistic element should be introduced in our country. I do not wish to see the people of Victoria taught Free Trade doctrines, nor that the people of Nanaimo should be induced to cultivate Free Trade candidates. I am one of those who believe in Protection as the sound fiscal policy for this country, and I believe that by uniting the towns of Nanaimo and Victoria with the farming districts, that fiscal policy which has attained such success in this country in the last four years has a better chance of contributing to the advancement of the western Province. I trust my hon. friend will withdraw his motion, as I presume it is rather presented to meet the views of some of his constituents than really to carrying out his own opinion as to the necessity of redistricting the Province.

Mr. BUNSTER. Victoria has a vote of 1,095, according to the Sessional Papers of British Columbia as recorded for 1880.

Mr. DECOSMOS. I will show the hon. gentleman the last Sessional Papers, 1881.

Mr. BUNSTER. The hon. gentleman being agent of the Government, probably has access to later information than I have, but these were the latest I could procure in the Library.

Mr. DECOSMOS. These papers are from the Library.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is one of the representatives of Vancouver, while the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and myself also hail from that Island. Now, there are two to one against him, for I agree with my hon. friend and colleague representing Victoria; so I hope my hon. friend will graciously yield to the majority and withdraw his motion.

Mr. BUNSTER. If it is a question of two to one, of course I might as well subside, but I would ask the hon gentleman if this is fair. I suppose the hon. gentleman, if he gave the order to hang a person, would be able to do it.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have a motion to make with regard to one more county. It relates to a matter which forms a striking example of what we have been complaining of as a defect in the Bill before the House. One hon. member—I think the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick)—told us that it was impossible to arrange the constituencies so as to enable the minority to return a majority of the members. Now, the county of Huron is arranged to accomplish precisely that result. At the last election for this House in the ridings of Huron, the total majority for the Liberal candidate was 452, and in the elections for the Ontario Assembly the Liberal candidates had a majority in that county of 630. But the arrangement proposed for dividing the county of Huron, if hon. gentlemen get the result which they anticipate, according to the last vote, will enable the Conservative party to secure two of the seats for Huron, and only leave one for the Liberals. They have fixed the whole of the Liberal strength in one riding, so that a county which is Liberal by from 400 to 700 would only have one representative, and a minority of consultation will have two from that county, if their calculations turn out to be well founded. I therefore move:

The population of the county of Huron is 76,970 or an average of 25,656 for each of the electoral divisions into which the said county is divided.

That the township of Stephen and the village of Exeter are detached from Huron and annexed to Middlesex, and the Township of Osborne is detached from Huron and annexed to Perth. That the population of the municipalities so detached is 9,303.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the provisions as to the Parliamentary representations of the county of Huron.

Hon. MEMBERS. Lost on division.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Of course if the names are received there is no objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was an arrangement made, and that arrangement was broken. The arrangement was that after a certain vote was taken there should be the same division for all the resolutions which should be moved against the third reading. It arose in this manner: The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), who happened to be on the other side of the House, came over to me and said he had a proposition to make from the other side of the House—that at a certain time one vote be taken, and that vote should govern the subsequent motions on the third reading of the Bill. He said that proposition came from the hon. leader of the Opposition through the hon. member for Laval. There had been a vote taken before the communication was made, but it was proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition that the divisions on the subsequent motions should be the divisions on the motion next to be taken. I said, "No; let us take a vote on this one motion, and let that govern all the subsequent resolutions," and it was so finally agreed across the floor.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that there was a consultation with the hon. member for Laval, the result of which was the communication made by the hon. member for Laval, in the terms he mentions. The arrangement, however, that was made was one made openly across the floor. I made the suggestion, and the hon. gentleman made the modification, according to the recollection of myself and several other hon. members; that, of course, if any hon. member objected on any occasion, a division would have to be taken. Of course it is quite obvious that any hon. member who desired to vote against a particular motion and vote for another could not have his name recorded against his will. Any suggestion I made was made in my place here for the information of those who agree with me and those who are opposed to me; and any statement the hon. gentleman made, was made in the same way; and as far as each of us could, we expressed our desire that such an arrangement should be made. I take this opportunity to refer to a phrase the hon. gentleman used intimating that I had broken my word in this connection. I say no word more than that I did all I could do to carry out the arrangement in the sense of the modification, and I have nothing whatever to do with the action of my hon. friend from South Wentworth in suggesting a division; I did not know that it was his intention to propose a division, and I did not propose, any more than the hon. gentleman himself, to bind all the members of this House. All I said was what I said openly, and I think the observation of the hon. gentleman was uncalled for and contrary to the facts of the case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can quite understand, as the hon. gentleman states, that neither he nor I can govern any particular vote, and if any hon. member wishes to vote contrary to his previous vote, he has a right to do so. But there is no pretence that on the motion made by the hon. member for South Wentworth any one person desired to change his vote. The supposition is that it was known that a good many of our friends went away, and that that was the motive and the reason this motion was made. It was thought there would be a catch vote, which would reduce the majority. That was the obvious intention. There could be no sense in making the motion except for that object, and the hon. gentlemen got a just reward for what I say was a piece of parliamentary treachery by having a larger majority recorded against them than on any previous division to-day.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We would much prefer seeing every hon. member on the hon. gentleman's side recording his vote on these motions.

Mr. RYMAL. I understood, when the conversation took place between the hon. First Minister and the hon. member for West Durham, that as far as they could influence it the arrangement they made would be observed. But I also understood the hon. First Minister to say that if any one desired a vote on a specific motion, they could not prevent him from having it. When the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) asked for a division the hon. First Minister did not say it was contrary to the arrangement, but he informed him that no five members had asked for the vote.

Mr. BLAKE. I would ask the hon. member for South Wentworth to say whether I had the slightest intimation that he was about to propose the motion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No one says the hon. gentleman had any previous intimation; but the hon. gentleman cannot say what he did with regard to the motion of the hon. member for South Perth. He asked the hon. member for South Perth not to press for a division, to which the hon. member agreed. The hon. gentleman did not even turn round to ask the hon. member for South Wentworth to do the same.

Mr. BLAKE. I believed that any motions that hon. gentlemen might desire to have divisions upon had better be taken at the end of the proceedings, and the hon. member for South Perth having made his motion at a very early stage, I thought that if we began the system of dividing the practical result of saving time by this arrangement would be altogether gone. There is the whole of it. But to impute to us the unworthy suggestion that we desired to catch a vote, is beneath the hon. gentleman's position. I agree with the hon. member for Centre Huron that we would infinitely have preferred that every supporter of the hon. gentleman had been here to record his vote against these motions.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The very object in asking for the votes to be recorded was to show the electors of the country who supported the Bill; and I understood the motive and object of the hon. member for South Wentworth simply to be this: that he thought the case he presented was such a glaring one that he would have an exception made with regard to it, and would, as he said, test the feelings of the members who had professed personal friendship for him, and see whether they would vote him out of Parliament.

Mr. McCALLUM. I would like to ask the hon. member for South Wentworth if he was in the House when the arrangement was made?

Mr. RYMAL. I was.

Mr. McCALLUM. Then I say that was the time for him to state that he would not be bound by the arrangement.

Mr. RYMAL. Not at all. Because I understood the First Minister to say that any one specially desiring a division should have it.

Mr. McCALLUM. I remember, on a former occasion of a similar kind, I rose in the House and said I would not be bound by the arrangement, and the hon. member for South Wentworth should have done the same thing.

Amendment negated on a division.

Mr. GILLIES. Before the Bill is finally passed I desire to say a few words. Perhaps there is not, within the range of this Bill, a case that is more grievous than that of the county I represent. That the Government in power should be inclined to fortify itself is reasonable to suppose, if it should do it consistently with the interests of the country; but a re-adjustment, such as that contained in this Bill, done with the intention of disfranchising many of the electors, is of itself unfair, and is discreditable to the party in power. There is no less discrepancy between the populations of the west riding of Bruce and the north riding of Bruce than 5,573. There is no reason, then, for taking 487 votes of the Liberal party from the north riding and putting them into the west riding. By allowing the township of Saugeen to remain in the north riding, the Conservative party would still have a chance beginning with a majority of 160 in its favor, which surely ought to be satisfactory. If they cannot win on that ground, they certainly belie their own boasts; for we hear from them constantly that they are perfectly satisfied with their position in the country, and sure of winning in the next elections. If so, why seek so unfair advantage of members in a position like myself? This is not my case, but the case of the people of Bruce. I would scorn to ask favor in my own or their behalf, but I am here to ask their rights before the measure passes. Perhaps there never was a Government in this country that had a better opportunity of acting an honorable part than the present. In a House of 206 members, they have had a majority of from 60 to 85 during the whole Parliament; and they predict now their great success in the future. They surely, then, can afford to allow the division of Bruce to be made on reasonable terms. We have a population of 64,000 in that county. There is nothing simpler or easier than to divide it and give 21,000 to each riding. But what is the object of the Government? It is to put the Conservative party in such a position that it will be impossible for the people to have an opportunity of expressing their views by means of their franchises. The hiving of the Liberals in the west riding affects no less than 1,000. The leader of the Government yesterday said that our object was to hive the Conservatives; but if we were to be hived in that county as the Conservatives are we would be perfectly satisfied. Surely then the leader of the Government should have sufficient liberality to suggest to his friends behind him to allow this division to be made in a way to reflect some credit on himself. He can surely afford to allow the people of this county an opportunity of expressing their wishes adequately. In Huron and Wellington there is a Liberal majority, but such is the redistribution that it is impossible to return more than one Liberal from each county. It is most unfair to gag the majority in that way, and prevent its fair representation. I move in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved, that the county of Bruce comprises a population of 64,774 souls, or an average for three ridings of 21,591.

That the said Bill detaches from the north riding of Bruce so large a population as to reduce North Bruce to 18,645, giving West Bruce, 24,218, and South Bruce, 22,355.

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the boundaries of the proposed three ridings of Bruce.

Amendment (Mr. Gillies) negated on the following division:—

Gigault,

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call the attention of the House, before the third reading, to the provision with reference to the communication of the result of the voting in the Magdalen Islands. Objections were taken to the adequacy of the provision against fraud, and the Government declared that they were inadequate, and the First Minister attempted to prepare a clause which would render it more perfect; but he said he was not quite satisfied with this amendment, and, therefore, the clause prepared by the hon. member for Gaspé was laid over, the promise being given that a proper clause would be brought up on the third reading—a clause to perfect the precautions against fraud. A portion of this provision that the hon. Minister proposed was that the telegraphic returns should be subject to correction by the written return, and if the written return reached the returning officer before he needed it the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery might make up his report from that return; and if it came afterwards he should send it to the Clerk of the House, or some other officer, who should have power to deal with it. On that understanding it was that the clause passed. I invite the attention of the Government to the necessity of carrying out the arrangement and remedying those defects as soon as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I certainly thought, last night, on the motion of the hon. member for Gaspé, and after his statement, that some means should be used against possible fraud; and I attempted on the spot to prepare a resolution with that object. I found it very difficult to do so and was not satisfied with my work. I then said I would endeavor to prepare another clause to prevent such fraud as a stranger sending a false telegram to the returning officer. But in consequence of our late sitting last night, when I went home I had not time to prepare an amendment. I do not now feel inclined to delay the passing of this Bill, which has been so much obstructed yesterday and to-day, in order to introduce such a clause.

Bill read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT, 1874.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the third reading of Bill (No. 157) to repeal certain provisions of the General Inspection Act, of 1874.

Mr. KILLAM. I beg to move that this Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of providing that mackerel be not subject to inspection if exported within two months before the 1st of August in the year in which they are caught. I was inclined to move that the whole system of fish inspection should be done away with; but I explained my views on this subject at length in the early part of the Session, and, at this period, I would not like to press them too strongly on the consideration of the Government. I beg leave to move this amendment:

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same, by adding a clause to provide that spring mackerel exported, or intended for export before the 1st of August in the calendar year, in which such mackerel were caught, shall not be liable to compulsory inspection.

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

INSOLVENT BANKS, INSURANCE COMPANIES, &c., BILL.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved the third reading of Bill (No. 145) respecting Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies and Trading Corporations.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I beg to move the following amendment:—

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend Sections 25 and 36, by providing that the powers therein given to the Court shall be exercised only upon such notice to the creditors, contributories, shareholders and members, as the Court may order.

Amendment agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. The clause as to set-off or compensation having been struck out, the Bill is defective as it now stands, in that it contains no provision in lieu of the law of set-off in the various Provinces.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. My hon. friend will recollect that we excluded in that Bill all societies which are entirely of a civil nature. We might perhaps insert a clause relating to the mode of compensation in all the Provinces, as regards insurance companies and trading corporations, but I think we cannot deal with loan companies and building societies.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I entirely object to a set-off, whether applied to banks or building societies. I believe the law of set-off and compensation is exclusively a civil right which belongs altogether to Local Legislatures, and I do not think we can, under pretence of making our insolvent law, change the civil laws of the Province.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If we have a right to legislate with regard to these companies, we have a right to select the way in which the claims of the creditors shall be settled. A clause of this kind ought to be inserted, otherwise it will leave the administrator of the company uncertain as to how he ought to act.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). This is not a question of formal claim at all, it is a question of right between two creditors. If, under pretence of making an insolvent law, you change the law of set-off, why not change the other civil laws of the Province?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is an incident.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). We have no power to deal with the question.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—CONCURRENCE.

On item 35 of resolution 2,

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury.) The effect of the change in the second paragraph of this resolution will be to impose a duty on all fine salt. Of course the amount collected will not be very large, but the amount of duty imposed as compared with the cost of the article will be quite large, reaching 50 per cent. This is another step in the direction of taxing a great many, and farmers in particular, in the interests of a few salt manufacturers—in the interests, in fact, of one county in this Dominion, and of a very few manufacturers. It is a branch of manufacture so limited that they can at any time combine to put their prices up, and the plea that competition will regulate the market does not apply in this case. In fact, if I am correctly informed, the salt manufacturers at Goderich have already put up the price of their salt 20 to 25 cents per barrel; and if the farmers have the same facilities for combining which the manufacturers of that article have, I firmly believe that no such imposition would be made. The duty proposed to be levied is 12 cents per cwt., and in the following section a duty is imposed on the packages or bags in which fine salt is imported, which will amount to about 2 cents per cwt., making in all, 14 cents per cwt. The object is to give a larger market to the manufacturers of salt, but while it would be a tax upon the farmers who use this fine salt largely in the making of butter and cheese, I do not think that they will be able to send this salt to the Maritime Provinces and consequently will be of no benefit to the manufacturer. The duty is 14 cents per cwt., and at the lowest freight rate on the Grand Trunk Railway and Intercolonial it will cost about 25 cents per cwt. to take it to the Maritime Provinces. They may extend their market further east than at present, but I do not think they will extend it as far as the Maritime Provinces by imposing a duty of 14 cents per cwt. The salt generally used in the Maritime Provinces is the imported Liverpool fine salt, and the price of that salt at the ports of St. John and Halifax will not average over 20 or 25 cents per cwt., and that is just about the price of the same quality of fine salt at the Goderich mines. This tax, as I say, will have to be paid entirely by the consumers. There is no competition to regulate the price, and the farmers will have to pay this tax. Let us just contrast the duties imposed upon articles which the farmers have to consume and the duties imposed upon articles which they produce. Upon agricultural implements they pay 30 per cent., upon waggons and carriages 25 per cent., upon sugars between 50 and 60 per cent., upon cottons and woollens from 30 to 70 per cent.

Mr. RYAN (Montreal). They are cheaper.

Mr. BURPEE. That does not prove anything in favor of protection; and it cannot be proved that the articles would not be cheaper if there was no duty imposed. On paraffine oil the farmers have to pay between 80 and 100 per cent., and this may be placed in the same category with salt, because there is no competition and the consumer has to pay the whole of the duty; we can purchase paraffine oil on the other side of the line for about half the price we pay on this side. On rubber boots and on boots and shoes the farmers have to pay 25 per cent. The fact is the farmers have to pay dearly for all they use and all they wear. Now, let us consider what protection is afforded to the farmers. I do not admit that upon the whole it is possible to frame a tariff that can protect the farmers; they are so situated that they can be protected in very few articles and some of those few articles are not protected. How to protect farmers, lumbermen and fishermen is a difficult problem. The farmers have about 30 per cent. on bacon and ham, and on some fruits and early vegetables; and on these two articles the farmers have been benefitted to some extent I admit, but they are about all. We import a large amount of pork, but there is no increase of the duty on that article, except on the packages, and we only pay about 10 per cent. as the price rules now. Last year we imported $1,000,000 worth of pork. Now, I contend that if the farmers are to be protected, a duty should be placed on pork. I do not admit that it is a proper principle, but I say that if we are to have protection the farmers should have their share, and there should be an increase in the duty on pork in the interest of the farmers. It may be said that this would interfere with lumbering operations. I admit that it would, but if we are to have a protective system, we should not protect one industry at the expense of another, but give all the protection we can to all the industries alike. There has been no increase in the duty on butter and cheese, and I do not think any increase of duty would increase the price of butter and cheese, because we export butter and cheese. There are two other articles which should be protected if we are to have protection, viz.: hides and fine wools. We do not import coarse wool on which a duty is imposed, but of fine wool we import largely, and on it there is no duty. I contend that the farmers are not fairly dealt with by this Tariff; while you are endeavoring to protect all other classes you neglect them. To the fishermen you are proposing to distribute $150,000 as a bounty, but there is no bounty for the farmers. Shipbuilders have a drawback farmers have none; they are harshly and hardly dealt with in every way. It may be said that the duties have been increased on cattle, horses, sheep, coarse wool, oats and potatoes; but all these articles we export and do not import as a rule, and therefore the duty can be of no service; it is entirely delusive. I am surprised that it should be contended that a duty put on articles which we do not import but export largely, should be of any benefit to the producer. I know it is said that it is for the purpose of giving to the farmers the home market which will be opened from the establishment of manufactures in the country, and that this is their compensation for the duties they have to pay upon manufactured articles. This Tariff has not increased the home markets in New Brunswick. We export now more than we did before it came into operation. I had hoped for an increase of this home market, but it has diminished. St. John, which is our principal market has decreased for several reasons. The fire hurt it somewhat; but a portion of the wholesale trade has left the city through various causes, including the departure to Montreal of our manufacturers that we had in St. John a few years ago. The boot and shoe manufacturer has to a certain extent removed to Montreal. We do not manufacture as much now in St. John or New Brunswick as before the Tariff went into operation; and we also import clothing from Montreal. The decrease of our wholesale trade is one reason why the population has not increased. But there are many other elements that have contributed to this decrease. The Tariff has not increased the population in New Brunswick, nor the home market for the farmers. It is said the Tariff is in the interests of inter-provincial trade. Before Confederation I did expect a great deal for this trade, which it is desirable to encourage; but from one cause or another it has not been encouraged, or encouraged all on one side. We buy largely from Ontario and Quebec, but do not barter our products in exchange. We have to sell our farm produce and lumber in England, and the United States for coin with which to pay for the goods of the western Provinces. The Tariff has effectually crippled our trade with the United States, or prevented a mutual exchange of goods, and therefore has reduced our exports to that country than which, for some of them, we have no other market. I know the purpose of the Government is to prevent a foreign trade or our getting a market in the United States. What, then, are we to do with our surplus? We have to buy our flour, as a rule, and other products in Quebec and Ontario; but we have nothing to exchange for them except our gold. I maintain, therefore, that this Tariff is injurious to our farmers, and in their interests I object to this tax on salt. The hon. member for North Huron is very anxious that this new impost should be placed on this trade in the interest of his constituents. That is very natural. But I think he was not polite when he said in his own emphatic way that if we did not choose to buy the Goderich salt we might take a rolling-pin and crush our own salt. I think that was hardly a kindly remark, or gallant to the daughters of our farmers. That is not the spirit that should animate the people of one Province as regards another, and it is not in the interest of the Dominion that such sentiments should go abroad. I would not advise him to visit our Province and repeat that remark, for he might find such an application of the rolling-pin as might make his head considerably flatter than at present. The Government might spare us this imposition on the salt used in the Maritime Provinces. The duty of 14 cents a cwt. cannot bring down the Goderich salt to the Maritime Provinces. We can import foreign salt as cheaply as they can manufacture it at Goderich. The cost of freight on the salt from Liverpool to the Maritime ports is almost nominal, the vessels that come out to these ports for lumber often bring out salt for ballast, for which they get very little or no freight; and the price of salt at the Maritime ports is as cheap as in Goderich. In most cases, the freight, at its cheapest, to bring salt from Goderich down to the Maritime Provinces, is 25 cents per 100 lbs. The duty is an imposition, pure and simple, on the former.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hon. member said he would be brief, but his brief was not as brief as he led us to expect. I must congratulate the hon. member upon his becoming an advocate of the National Policy. He complained in the first place that we had not increased the duty on pork. Now, practically, we have increased the duty on pork, because, previous to the passage of the Tariff, it was 1 cent a pound on 185 lbs., and now $2 per barrel is collected instead of the $1.85. The rate of duty during last year collected on pork was about 20 per cent., and during 1880 it was 20 per cent. On hams, shoulders and bacon, we added 50 per cent. to the duty collected before. Still the hon. member stands up here an advocate of the farmers, and complains that we did not impose a higher duty on these articles. I think, therefore, I have a right to claim him as an advocate of the National Policy. He also discussed paraffine oil. It is well known that the reduction of duty on paraffine oil was made under pressure from hon. members now in the majority, but there is a minority. Therefore, there is no increase of duty in the matter. With reference to the salt duty, the hon. gentleman says it is an imposition on the Maritime Provinces. A short time ago, a party in the city of St. John started the business of grinding coarse salt, and manufacturing it into butter salt; therefore, there is a competition between salt coming into the country under the Tariff and the salt from the west. Everywhere the grinding may not be done with the rolling-pin, but it could be done everywhere. It is done in Yarmouth.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was done in Yarmouth, but it is not done there to-day.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is a greater inducement to-day to do it. The hon. member says the importation on oats has not increased the prices. In this we differ with the hon. member on his right who says that oats being taxed has increased the price of taking out lumber.

Mr. IRVINE. Will the hon. gentleman tell me how a duty of 1 cent. per lb. on pork is equal to 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Take the returns of 1880, and the hon. gentleman will find that the duty was equal to 20 per cent.

Mr. IRVINE. I have no recollection of any time during the past year when pork was sold for $10 per barrel. The price to-day is $22 per barrel, and at that rate the duty would be less than 10 per cent. Again, he says that people roll coarse salt into fine salt. The hon. gentleman ought to know that the salt ground for dairy purposes is pure rock salt. It is imported in 10 or 20-lb. boxes, and if the Ontario salt were given to me for nothing I would not use it in the dairy. I have read essays from men who have analyzed the article, and they pronounce the article unfit for dairy purposes at all; rock salt ground is far better for dairy purposes. Again, the hon. gentleman says that he has not put an additional duty upon dry ham and bacon. I ask the hon. gentleman if any sensible man in this country would dry meat for the purpose of sending it across the border and pay an additional duty on it, when he can send hams green for 1 cent. a lb., and thus save the trouble of drying.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The hams are no better whether they are green or not.

Mr. IRVINE. It is not green hams, it is only the dried hams, that are mentioned. That is a great protection to the farmers. The hon. gentleman must have a vast amount of intelligence to say that you can take dried hams across the line by paying 1 cent per lb., when you can take green hams across for nothing, that you dry them for the sake of paying 2 cents per lb. on them. That argument is of a piece with all the rest. They insult the farmer and then they try to humbug him. It is bad enough to go out into the streets and talk such nonsense to an ordinary beggar, but it is worse for the hon. Minister of Finance, who understands figures as well as he does, to try to stuff this House with it. When he says that 1 cent per lb. duty, or $2 on the barrel, is equal to 20 per cent., you ought to laugh at him. There has not been a day for ten years in any market in Canada, when our pork has sold for $2 a barrel. Those are reckless statements which I thought ought to be named at the very time. If the hon. gentleman opposite cannot make truthful statements, he had better make no statements at all.

Mr. FARROW. Coming from a salt-producing county I cannot allow these arguments to go unchallenged. We ought to be proud of the natural resources of this country, proud of our coal in the East and of our salt beds in the West, and I look forward to the time when we shall have a large inter-provincial trade in the articles of coal and salt. I wish particularly to insist upon one characteristic of our salt, and that is its purity. I am astonished at the assertions made here to-night by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Irvine). He ought to know that our salt is the purest in the world. He can laugh, but he laughs at the best intelligence in his country, at the best chemists and analysts. The matter has been proved by experiment. In one of our cheese factories, they salted three different cheeses with Liverpool salt, with some of the best salt manufactured in Syracuse, and with salt from Mr. Colman's well in Seaforth. The curd for all these cheeses was taken from the same vat. Then three of the best experts in Canada were brought on to test these cheeses, and they gave the first prize to the cheese salted by the Huron salt. Next it is contended that this duty increases the price of salt. The duty on salt is 8 cents per 100 lbs. in bulk, and 12 cents when it is barrelled up. Now, if a farmer had to buy 100 lbs. of fine salt he would only pay 12 cents duty, but that salt would salt all the butter made on a large farm in one season. The hon. Minister of Finance shows there is competition; they are grinding it up in the Lower Provinces and thus avoiding the duty. What benefits have we derived from the discovery of salt in this country? I hold in my hand a letter from a gentleman who says that before our salt was discovered the Americans charged us $1.65 a barrel, but since we manufacture our own salt they have diminished their price to $1.32. During the last ten years we have saved $300,000 a year, or $3,000,000 altogether, but the hon. gentleman, following the gospel proclaimed by the hon. leader of the Opposition, does not believe in trading with his own people. He says to the people of the Maritime Provinces: "Your trade does not lie in the direction of Ontario, it lies in the United States, send your money over there." That is the very doctrine which drove these gentlemen from power in 1875, and as long as they cling to that doctrine they cannot come back to power. The hon. gentleman talks about the duties increasing the price, and he mentioned agricultural implements. Just consider the testimony given by the farmers of Ontario to Dr. Orton's Committee, farmers who knew well what they were talking about. Agricultural implements were cheaper. Such were the opinions of practical farmers who knew what they were talking about. What is the use of hon. gentlemen talking about this small duty; it is not going to do us much good. I would rejoice if by levying a coal duty the Lower Provinces could be benefited. I do not think they have much to complain of.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I took down the statement made by the hon. member for Carleton. I will not say the hon. member, in which he said I made an untruthful statement.

Mr. IRVINE. I said so in regard to 20 per cent.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is difficult to make the hon. member understand anything. I have here the value of pork imported in 1879: it was $375,923, on which a duty was collected of $30,468; in 1880, $663,166, duty collected, $124,764; the average of these two years being 20 per cent. Here the hon. gentleman said I made an untruthful statement and did not know what I said. The hon. gentleman said the only duty on shoulders was on dried shoulders. Why, here is the Tariff in which it says shoulders, fresh, salted or dried, are subject to a duty of 2 cents per lb.

Mr. ANGLIN. According to the Trade and Navigation Returns of 1881, the quantity of pork imported was 13,322,639 lbs., of the value of $898,947, on which a duty was paid of $133,226, or about 15 per cent. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Irvine) is correct in saying that pork has not been purchased for $10 per barrel for some years past.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I took the two years previous.

Mr. ANGLIN. Pork has ruled exceptionally cheap for the last year or two, but when we speak of this duty we do not refer to a year or two, but to its general effect. The hon. member said the farmers were not protected as are other classes, that they do not enjoy a full share of such benefits. With respect to oil: it is true the duty on oil has not been changed in one sense, but a material change has been made as to test of quality, and American oil has been almost excluded from our market by the operation of that test. The price has been increased very materially because it was necessary that a high rate must be paid to the Americans. The oil that enters into consumption in the United States is not of an explosive character or dangerous in the household, but under this protective system it has been shut out. With respect to salt the Ministerial proposal would afford no protection to Huron salt, it will not force Huron salt in the Lower Provinces markets, but it will make the article dearer there. It is not necessary to discuss the Huron salt. It may be the purest in the world, but there is an opinion—a prejudice, if you wish—against the use of Ontario salt for dairy purposes, and the people do not care to be forced against these prejudices by Act of Parliament. In the Old Country salt for dairy purposes is obtained from the salt rock. It will cost 25 cts. per 100 lbs. for the carriage of Huron salt to King's or Queen's County in New Brunswick. With respect to the remark of the hon. member for Carleton, the hon. gentleman's remark that the hon. Minister made an untruthful statement was rather an unparliamentary expression, or an offensive expression.

Mr. SPROULE. I beg to direct the attention of hon. members to the report made by the Ontario Government in relation to an investigation on the question of salt in the Goderich and Kincardine districts. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) considers it impossible to get two kinds of salt out of the same well.

Mr. ANGLIN. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SPROULE. He did not exhibit a proper knowledge of the question, because in Goderich there are five different strata, and out of each of these strata different kinds of salt may be obtained. I have here the report of the celebrated analyst, Sherry Hunt, and he rates its purity at 97.30, which we know, from the reports of the United States and Europe, is a very high percentage of chloride of sodium. If you compare the proportion of the chloride of calcium and of other salts, you will find that the Canadian salt is especially good as compared with that of other countries. The hon. gentleman has only to go to the Geological Museum and look at the specimens of salt there, to convince himself that Canadian salt, from the coarsest rock salt up to the finest dairy, is of the very best quality. Before the development of the Canadian salt industry we used to have to pay $3 a barrel, whereas now we can get it at 16 cents per barrel by the carload, or at retail for $1 a barrel. When the gentlemen engaged in this manufacture were becoming successful, the Americans came here and tried to buy them off, and failing in that forced their salt on the Canadian markets at prices which made competition impossible, being sometimes 25 to 50 cents less than the prices for which it was sold in their own country. The result was to break down the men engaged in the business and the loss of a large amount of capital; and then they applied to the Government to do something for them, to give them a chance to develop the resources of the country, and they would engage to supply a better quality of salt at a cheaper price. That promise has been kept, so far as western Ontario is concerned, and if this protection is continued, with the assistance of inter-provincial trade, we can supply the

Mr. ANGLIN.

Maritime Provinces with every quality of salt at the lowest price, taking in return the products of these Provinces. The hon. member for Sunbury (Mr. Burpee) made some remarks with regard to farm produce, which, if he had made them in western Ontario, would have exposed him to a charge of being more ignorant than farmers usually are. He ought to know that in the West we had rattlesnake pork, as it was called—the worst kind of pork—brought in and sold at $10 per barrel. I know that hundreds of barrels were bought by the lumbermen at that price, and that their extensive use of it had a very bad effect on the Canadian market. The same was the case with regard to American oats bought by lumbermen, whose operations are generally along the frontier, the result being that the price of Canadian oats went rapidly down. To-day, however, the very reverse is the case. Our lumbermen are buying Canadian products and spending their money among the farmers, who are receiving full return for their labor. If these hon. gentlemen should travel through western Ontario and use the arguments which they have employed to-night, they would be open to either of two charges—either that they were absolutely ignorant of the subject, or that they were so dishonest, so blinded, that in the interests of their party they would deny what they know to be true. They can take which horn of the dilemma they please, but I am quite certain that when the time comes for the people to sit in judgment upon them, they will return the same verdict that they returned in 1878; they will say that they have no confidence in these gentlemen, because either they do not know what the country wanted, or, knowing it, failed to give it.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I wish to make an explanation. I gave the percentage on pork at 10 per cent. and I wish to say that I took the prices in St. John at $22.50 and deducting $2.50 for freight and charges. I took the prices at the present time and did not speak of any past period.

Resolution carried on a division.

On Resolution 2,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. When this proposition was introduced, it was proposed, with the view of meeting the requirements of several of the leading educational institutions in the country, that they should be permitted to import books, maps and charts, not exceeding two in number, free of duty. It was thought that this would be a considerable advantage to these institutions, and would not injure the book trade. But upon enquiry, we find that the practical advantages to these institutions would be small, because when they import in small numbers they have to pay the retail price, and we found that we would interfere materially with the book trade, because these articles form a large item in their importations. These views having been presented to the Government, we have decided to ask that that portion of the resolution be struck out. I move that it be so amended.

Amendment agreed to; and remaining resolution concurred in.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) to amend the several Acts imposing the duties of Customs now in force.

Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 28,

Dorchester Penitentiary $42,245 30

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We do not see our way to making special provision for the one female prisoner in this penitentiary, but during the recess we shall consider some way of providing for the female convicts, perhaps at Kingston or somewhere else.

On Resolution 35,

Publishing Debates..... $20,000

Mr. BLAKE. We will require some information on that subject also.

Mr. BOWELL. After this item was reserved, and the hon. leader of the Opposition asked for information in regard to it, I applied to Mr. Hartney, who supplied me with a statement. Of course the House understands that certain amounts were paid after the sums voted by Parliament lapsed. The Clerk tells me that they have been in the habit of using the money, or obtaining the money, either by grant or from whatever funds they had at their disposal for the year, for the printing, afterwards paying it back again after the appropriation was made for the following year. The total amounts expended for reporting, printing, for paper and miscellaneous services for the years from 1875 to 1881, were as follows:—

TOTAL COST.
1875.	1876.	1877.	1878.	1879.	1880.	1880-81.
$12,329	$12,280	$15,356	$19,007	$16,130	$16,286	$24,099
APPROPRIATION.
$8,000	$15,000	$25,000	$20,364	$19,425	$25,000

These sums vary from $10,000 to $30,000, and in the Public Accounts appears as if the printing, &c., for 1881 cost $30,725, while the expenditure for that year's work was only $24,099. A delay sometimes took place in completing the work of the year until after the financial year had ceased. Consequently the money has to be paid after that, and gives an apparently larger amount of expenditure that year than the work really done entailed; while in other years the amount stood as low as $8,000 or much less.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the figures shown as the expenditure for the next two or three years will be very considerably under the expenditure, and that this expenditure was settled on the figures of the first year upon which there was a large vote, $20,000.

Mr. BOWELL. That was in 1878. The first year the cost was but $12,000, while the vote was not taken until afterwards. The Government took the responsibility for the expenditure for that year, with the consent of the House, ordering the printing of the debates without any appropriation, but to be paid for afterwards.

Mr. BLAKE. It would appear as if the votes for the earlier years had been inadequate or the expenditure excessive—in one year there was an outlay of $25,000; one should understand how those accounts have been balanced. I suppose that this last year, in which $30,000 apparently was expended, it would have covered some arrears. It would be important to prevent the recurrence of those irregularities in the payments, so that the work of one fiscal year might be comprised within that year.

Mr. BOWELL. That is almost impossible unless we insist on all the work being completed, including the printing and binding, before 30th June. In many cases it runs over into July before the binding is done; and as the binding is part of the expenditure, it would really appear to be an expenditure ascribed to the year in which the money was paid, while it is not. As I have already stated, for the year ending 30th June last, it would appear as if the debates, &c., cost $30,725, while the expenditure was $24,099, and it is just so with the other years.

On Resolution 37,

Grant to the Parliamentary Library..... $7,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. As to this item also we should have some information.

Mr. BLAKE. Since this item was reserved, a report of the Library Committee has been presented, from which it appears we are once again in a position of difficulty as to the Library grant. There was an expenditure by the librarian, under the expectation of a large grant, which expectation was not afterwards realized; so that the allowance for the year is once again to be starved. The views of the Committee cannot be carried out, if the vote be as limited as this amount. The report contains the report of the librarian, the substance of which is that he applied for a grant of $3,000, and an increased grant of $10,000; that he had reasons to believe that those proposals would be complied with, and bought a large number of books in consequence; that the first grant of Estimates was sent to them with the proposed estimate of $10,000, which amount was subsequently struck out, when he found himself without those resources, and after spending one-half of the grant for the year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry to see this statement is made by the Library Committee. Of course, it is true, but it shows that the librarian continues to do, year after year, what we have been complaining of year after year, exceeding the sum placed at his disposal. The Government have remonstrated several times, but that officer is especially under the control of both Houses. The Committee should adopt some rule by which the librarian will be prevented spending more money than he is authorized to spend. A great many of the books purchased for the library are books that ought not to be there. There seems to be on the other side booksellers who take a pleasure in sending us a great deal of trash with which to fill our shelves.

Mr. BRECKEN. The proportion of light literature in the library was enquired into by the Committee, and the librarian said there was a smaller percentage than in any other library of the same size. The pecuniary difficulties have been caused by the very large outlay in the purchase of law books.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a special vote for that. I understood from the discussions in Committee that a portion of the funds for general literature had to be expended on law books.

Mr. MILLS. The difficulty is due to some extent to the fact that the appropriation is made by the Government, instead of being recommended directly by the Library Committee. I know that the librarian stated that the estimate of the hon. Finance Minister had been submitted to him, and that he concurred in it, but that afterwards a wholly different estimate was brought down.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The librarian wrote to the Hon. W. H. Odell. In his communication he states that in November, 1881, he applied for an immediate advance of $3,000 over and above the vote of Parliament to cover existing deficiencies in the library. Of course no such amount could be given, as it would be a violation of the standing order. Shortly after that he says a clerk from the Finance Department brought him a proof-sheet of the Estimates, by order, which included this amount, but that afterwards the Government revised the Estimates and only gave the ordinary grant. No man in the Department had the right or authority to submit this estimate to the Librarian. Well, Sir, I must say this is an extraordinary letter, and I feel it my duty to ascertain if any official in my Department gave to Mr. Todd a statement that that was the revised addition of $10,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I presume he did not suppose the clerk brought it without an order.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I see there are no proof-sheets with $10,000 on them.

Mr. BLAKE. My object was to call the attention of the House to the condition in which we stand with reference to the library. The Minister of Public Works has perhaps suggested the condition of things that formerly existed. About two years ago a difficulty arose from its being ascertained that there had been a system of purchasing on credit which had gone on for some years—not that the grant itself had been overdrawn in the sense that Parliament had been asked to give more money, but that there had been some purchases on credit, the ultimate result being that the library was about $7,000 short. We proposed to settle this $7,000 by reducing our grant to $3,500 a year for current purposes for two years. That being paid off we now recur to our ordinary $7,000 grant. In the meantime the librarian appears to have found that the $3,500 a year was inadequate, and he appears to have made this proposal to the Government upon which the purchases have been made. The result is that for the year for which we are now voting these estimates we are to have but $3,500. That is the condition of things in which we are when we know that for law books, publications, binding, &c., something like $1,000 a year is required, so that we shall only have $2,500 for the next year for the purchase of books. It seems to me that the library will fall into a disreputable and improper state of arrears as to current literature.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Not if they anticipate the expenditure.

Mr. BLAKE. For the last two years we have only had $3,500 a year, of which only $2,500 have been available for making additions to the library.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They have anticipated the next year. We have the books ordered and they are here. The hon. gentleman will observe that if the librarian expects there will be $10,000 available he would obviously order a class of books to an extent which would not be ordered if he had only $1,000 instead of $13,000. The difficulty is that on the first of July next we shall only have available $2,500.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is the fault of the librarian, who, instead of doing his duty by confining himself to the vote of the current year, expends half of the grant of the following year. He continues that from year to year. We condoned the offence once by giving $3,500 for two consecutive years, and he still goes on in the same way. I say he should be called to account and be made to limit himself to the vote of Parliament. Now we are voting $7,000, and we find that half of the money is gone already, because the librarian took upon himself to expend the money before Parliament gave the vote.

Mr. BLAKE. The librarian says that he made application, that a proof-sheet of the Estimates was brought to him containing these two items, and he made these purchases. My proposition is that we ought to consider whether only $2,500 should be expended in additions to the library.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not think we can ask Parliament to increase the appropriation this year. But suppose the librarian had not spent a dollar beyond what Parliament had voted, we would still have $7,000 to expend next year. Practically he has expended $3,500; the books are there, the money has not been thrown away. The library will receive the benefit within the twelve months of the $7,000.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think we will ever be able to make a satisfactory selection of books, with the amount of money we appropriate from year to year. If the members of the Library Committee were furnished during the interval with a catalogue of the publications as they appear it would be quite possible to assist the librarian in making a selection. But as it is now the purchase of publications takes place during recess, and necessarily so, as often the additions would otherwise be exhausted. When the Library Committee meets, they find purchases have already been made. This cannot be avoided unless different steps are taken.

On Resolution 23,

Contingent expenses of the High Commissioner of Canada at London $4,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I understand when the High Commissioner, Sir Alexander Galt, sailed on the 4th instant, for this country, and when this item was under discussion before, the Finance Minister informed the House that the First Minister would state what the policy of the Government was, whether Sir Alexander Galt had resigned, and if it was intended to obtain a successor, or any other information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Sir Alexander for private reasons has offered his resignation, but it has not yet been accepted, and the subject will be a matter of discussion between him, myself and the Government when he arrives here. He sailed on the 4th instant, as the hon. gentleman has said. The Government have no intention to do away with the position. In case Sir Alexander's resignation is accepted and a vacancy takes place, the Government will endeavor to fill it.

On Resolution 128,

To provide for one year's subsidy, to be granted at the rate of $50,000 per annum, to a line of steamers to trade between Canada and the West Indies and Brazil, provided a like amount be paid by the Brazilian Government $50,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this item, we were to be informed as to the position of the subsidy to be granted by the Brazilian Government, and as to whether it had been so granted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The grant of the Brazilian Government has not been made to this Government, but to the steamship line. The Brazilian Government give the same bonus as we do, and the line is now in operation, and we hope it will be successful.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The point is whether the grant was made by the Brazilian Government, as our grant is made dependent on the sum granted by Brazil.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So we understood. There has been no official communication from the Brazilian Government in respect to the matter, but the contractors have established a line of good steamers, and we are informed by the proprietors that they have succeeded in obtaining the same subsidy from the Brazilian Government. I have no doubt that is true, but we have no official communication from the Brazilian Government to that effect.

Mr. BLAKE. Did the contractors not offer the Government any proof that they had obtained a subsidy from the Brazilian Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They started the line.

Mr. BLAKE. Parliament was asked to grant, and did grant, $50,000 on condition that a line was started, and the Brazilian Government supplied an equal amount. The Government should have obtained evidence that the conditions on which Parliament made the grant had been fulfilled. The statement of the contractors is not a sufficient guarantee. Some documents establishing the fact of the grant having been made by the Brazilian Government should have been obtained and laid before the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman is hard to satisfy. The contractors were informed by the Government in writing that they had received a grant from Brazil, and that the line had been established, and that we had given over $50,000. If they return the $50,000 to the Brazilian Government we still have the line. I have no doubt that this amount has been paid by the Brazilian Government. We have the ships and trade.

Mr. MILLS. The vote passed on the condition that Brazil should contribute a like amount. Not only should the Government have had evidence conclusive to that effect, but it should have been brought before Parliament in order that Parliament might know the conditions on which the money was being granted, and whether these conditions were actually complied with.

On Resolution 132,

For steam communication from Port Mulgrave, at the terminus of the Eastern Extension Railway, to East Bay, Cape Breton..... $6,000

Mr. ANGLIN. I think an hon. gentleman stated that another party had offered to do this service for a much smaller sum, but for some reason the offer was not accepted. It was understood, I believe, that some papers were to be brought down.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Enquiry was made at the Department, but no such application has yet been received. If these parties should yet write to the Department, their applications will be considered. I think one of the hon. members from that district said that a letter had been received by a member—now deceased—saying that they would do the work, but it was not sent to the Department.

On Resolution 115,

River Saskatchewan, examination and improvement of..... $20,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amount is for the purpose of building a wing dam and removing boulders at Cove's Falls and Tobin's Rapids, $10,000 each. The Hudson's Bay Company, who are interested in the work, have offered on their part to build a pier at each of two other places at $6,000 each.

On Resolution 118,

Dredging..... $128,000

Mr. ANGLIN. In Committee I asked the hon. gentleman whether he did not intend to do some dredging at Bathurst, and he said he thought he would have a special item for that work. I notice that there is no such item.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say whether I shall be able to do anything more or not as we have only a certain amount of time and a certain amount of money to do the season's work. We try to use the dredges along the coast in such a way that we may reach a certain point at the end of the season without returning to do any work. If I can do anything for the place in question I will endeavour to do it.

Mr. KILLAM. I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that while the House was in Committee I asked about the work of the dredges. He gave me a fair explanation, which I thought would have been taken down by the Hansard reporters. The fact that it was not reported only bears out what I said to-day, that the staff have been overworked.

On Resolution 179,

Culling timber..... $67,000

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. From 1872 to 1878 the total receipts from this source were $525,647, and the expenditure, $559,828. Last year the receipts were $36,000, and the expenditure, $51,000.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There appears to be a heavy falling off in this item. It appears to me objectionable that we should have to pay $20,000 or $30,000 to maintain a Cullers' establishment, and on the measuring of timber, which timber pays dues to one or other of the two Provincial Governments, especially when there is such a discrepancy between the receipts and expenditure. We are simply paying out Dominion money for the convenience of the Provincial Governments, and for a service which specially belonged to them.

Mr. ANGLIN. Formerly there was usually a small surplus in this service every year. Years ago I took objection to our acting in a matter which should be left to the local authorities, but it was said then that it would be difficult to have it managed by the local authorities, because a large quantity of this timber went from Ontario to Quebec, and there would be difficulty in entrusting the culling to either the one Government or the other. Afterwards some members of the House, interested in the timber trade, clamored for a re-adjustment of the rates, alleging that the amount levied on the timber for the amount of these cullers was exorbitant. We find out how these men have been satisfied. Instead of paying the cost of the culling, the revenue does not pay more than half of it. That should not occur any longer. The Government should increase the tolls, so as to raise money enough to cover the expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite true that the expenditure exceeds the receipts, and an attempt should be made to make the receipts and expenditures balance. But this is a matter which must of necessity be under the charge of the Dominion Government, as it is like the inspection of flour, a matter connected with trade and commerce. At the same time it is quite true that the timber comes from one Province or another, and if the timber is cut from Government land, the revenue therefore goes to the Local Treasury. If there should be a casual falling off in the receipts in any one year, it cannot be helped.

Mr. CARON. The arrangement under which the sum of money is now paid to the cullers was arrived at when Mr. Lafamme was Minister of Inland Revenue, and after most of the gentlemen engaged in the lumber business, who were sitting in this House as members, had met the Minister of Inland Revenue and had arrived at the conclusion that the amount the cullers are now receiving was the smallest amount that should be paid to them. To-day at Quebec, where most of the culling takes place, the cullers are complaining that this $700 which they receive is not sufficient, because out of that they have to pay about $250 for attendants. This is the smallest amount that can be paid to these cullers, who have to give particular care to the study of their profession, and I think every gentleman engaged in the lumber trade will say that it is fairly earned by the cullers.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). I do not see how it is that the revenue which was collected in 1875-76 was larger than it is to-day. The revenue and expenditure for the several years past have been as follows:—

	Revenue.	Expenditure.
In 1874.....	$92,000	$82,000
1875.....	89,000	81,000
1876.....	81,000	76,000
1877.....	74,000	68,000
1878.....	53,000	49,000
1879.....	24,000	44,000
1880.....	27,000	44,650
1881.....	36,000	51,000

Up to 1878 there was a surplus to the credit of this fund, and the expenditure has almost doubled in the last three years. While the receipts and expenditure balanced each other, of course there was no complaint; but now it is a question whether the charges have not been largely increased during the last two or three years.

On Resolution 270,

To provide for expenses in connection with the training ship Charybdis..... $12,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. We were promised, after a long and protracted discussion on this item, that the Government would endeavor to make up their minds as to what was to be done with this remarkable vessel, and would give us some information on the subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government do not intend asking any sum of money for the establishment of a naval training school. The Government are considering what they will do with this vessel, and when they have reached a decision they will make it known.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed to incur any further expense for this vessel?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no expense to be incurred except for caretaking until she is finally disposed of.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Various items have been asked for expenses in connection with the training ship Charybdis. She is designated a training ship, and the money seems to be wanted for training ship purposes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. She is called a training ship, and was loaned or practically presented by Her Majesty's Government to Canada for the purpose of making her a training ship; but she has not yet been made that, and I am inclined to think never will be.

Mr. BLAKE. What is her total cost to us including the proposed vote?

Mr. McLELAN. About $13,000 has been spent up to the present; and it is estimated that $12,000, and the $10,000 granted last year, will cover all the expenses until a decision is arrived at as to her final disposal.

Mr. BLAKE. Will $22,000 cover all expenses up to the 30th June next?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. What is on the other side of the account?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The ship.

On Resolution 333,

To pay damages to the steamer M. C. Upper, in the Welland Canal..... $8,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The letter of the hon. Minister of Justice, under date of October 10th, 1881, distinctly does not recognize it. The letter of the hon. Minister of Justice, under date 10th October, 1881, and addressed to Mr. Braun, Secretary of the Department of Railways and Canals, is as follows:—

"Re claim L. McCallum.—As regards the question in your communication of the 29th September, I have considered this case with respect to the liability of the Crown for the claim. In my opinion, the Crown is not liable, viewing the case as one between subject and subject, giving the claimant the same justice against the Crown as he would have against the subject; and it is clear that unless the accident was caused by the imperfect state of the lock gates or by the officers of the canal there would be no liability to indemnify Mr. McCallum for the loss sustained. The services of the arbitrators seemed to be unanimous that the accident was caused by the negligence of those in charge of the steamer Louise and not by the defective condition of the gates. The Crown cannot be made liable for the management of the Louise.—Z. LASH. 'I concur in this opinion.—ALEX. CAMPBELL.'"

This is a different state of affairs than that which was stated in the Committee when the hon. Minister of Railways informed it that the official arbitrators had been of the opinion that something was due on the score of defective management. The House will observe that the finding of the official arbitrators seems to be unanimous, namely, that the accident was caused by the parties in charge of the steamer Louise, and not from the condition of the lock gates.

Mr. BURTON (St. John).

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. What is the date of that opinion?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. 10th October, 1881. There is also a letter of 29th May, in which the opinion is expressed that the case might go to the arbitrators as regards certain questions of fact. They went to the arbitrators and reported as stated by the Deputy Minister of Justice. I know that this claim was brought before the hon. member for Lambton and was not adopted by him in view of the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice as set forth in the letter read.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Is there not some subsequent report and evidence? The case was heard before the official arbitrators, and the evidence proved that the accident arose in consequence of defective gates, and when that evidence was given the liability of the Crown was established.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. These are the papers brought down in answer to a motion for papers. It appears that those papers were placed in the hands of the hon. gentleman. The first is a letter from Mr. Lash to the Department, dated May 29th, 1879. The letter which my hon. friend has read and incorporated in his motion is dated 10th October, 1881, two years and a-half after mention is made of a reference to the arbitrator. It will be observed that he gives Mr. McCallum the benefit of any question which might arise as to the Crown being free from liability to the subject, and assumes that the Crown would be liable if the subject were liable. These are the two papers brought down by Government in order to prove that the Crown was liable to pay this demand; but they prove that the Crown was not liable. The Minister of Justice reports that the arbitrators were unanimous in the conclusion that the damages were not caused by the defective condition of the lock gates, but that they were caused by the mismanagement of the Louise, and therefore that the remedy of the owner of the Upper is against the proprietors of that boat, and not against the Crown.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. According to the best of my recollection, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways went into this case very fully in Committee, but as I am not sufficiently well informed in the circumstances to reopen them, I move that the item stand for the present.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I have taken the trouble to read over the whole of the evidence submitted to the official arbitrators, and now I come to the conclusion that that evidence before any Judge or jury is overwhelmingly in the direction of showing that the cause of the accident was the defective state of the lock gates. I have no doubt that the negligent management of the Louise contributed to the result; but if the lock gates had been in proper condition the accident would not have happened. I have all respect for the Deputy Minister of Justice, but so far as I myself am concerned, as a member of Parliament, I prefer my own conclusion after reading the whole of the evidence.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman must remember that the House has not got before it those materials which the hon. gentleman was fortunate enough to get, and which he was assiduous enough to peruse. We have not been generally fortunate, but I observe that the report of the arbitrators is unanimous in the conclusion that the damage was not caused by the defective condition of the gates.

On Resolution 394,

Harbors and Rivers of Ontario..... $138,450

Mr. GILLIES. The other evening when these items were before the Committee, I remarked that the hon. Minister of Public Works, during this Session, promised myself and others who attended his Department, that he would submit to Council a recommendation for an expenditure on the harbor of Inverhuron. This harbor is on the coast of Bruce, and it is under the control of the Government. It pays dues to the Government, and it requires a number of improvements from time to time. The Government is in receipt of the moneys collected at that harbor. The hon. gentleman gave us to understand that he would bring the matter before the Council, and the other evening he stated that this was one of the items that was not brought before Council. The hon. gentleman is the representative of the Government as the Minister of Public Works, and if he slights matters of this kind, I think the people to whom he made the promise should know it, as it is not very satisfactory. That part of the coast of Bruce is exposed to a great many storms, and the harbor urgently requires a breakwater or something of that sort.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman has asked this question, as I answered it the other evening. I said positively, I had fulfilled my promise by submitting the matter to Council, but that of the items which went before Council, those now submitted to the House are the ones which passed.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the fact, as appears by the daily papers, that there has been a very serious breach in Toronto harbor, and that it is said to be now in a rather precarious condition. The account I noticed in two of the daily papers is really alarming, and I would ask the hon. Minister's very earliest attention to the matter, because it does seem to me that if it is possible to do anything to arrest the deterioration of the harbor which has gone on through the recent storm, it should be done at once.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My attention has been called to the damage done to the harbor of Toronto quite lately, and it is my intention to ask my colleagues to allow me to anticipate the vote of Parliament for the next year, and go on with the work immediately. Of course, we will do what is absolutely necessary at first to save the island, and then we shall go on with the works. I think it is absolutely necessary to go to work at once.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad indeed to hear the announcement of the hon. Minister.

Mr. GILLIES. There is another matter I wish to bring before the hon. Minister of Public Works. There is a harbor on the coast of Bruce called Sable River. A deputation came to Ottawa during the Session to see the Minister about the harbor, and it was shown that there were large exports and imports of timber at that place. The gentlemen interested in that harbor are lumbermen, who carry on a very large amount of work, and they agreed to contribute $15,000 in the event of the Government undertaking the work. The hon. Minister agreed to bring the matter before the Governor in Council. I would like to know whether he has done so or not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I fulfilled my promise also in that case, but as the Government could not recommend the construction of all the numerous works that were asked for from all quarters, this item does not appear to have remained on the list accepted by the Council.

House adjourned at 3.10 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 13th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAWSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to draw the attention of the House to the anomalous position in which members might be placed by such a system of recording votes as was followed yesterday. It was arranged, as the House is aware, that the division on the motion of the hon. member for South Brant should be taken as the division on the subsequent motions to be made by hon. members on the Opposition side, in amendment to the motion for the third reading of the Bill for the readjustment of the representation. The hon. member for Bothwell made a motion which, in as far as it affirmed that certain settlements east of Manitoba should have a voice in the elections, I would have supported, but the division on the motion of the hon. member for South Brant was taken in this case, without the yeas and nays being called. I mention this, lest it should be supposed that I was opposed to votes being taken in the settlements in question, whereas I am strongly in favor of it, and see no reason why they should not be represented, and, indeed, there is nothing in the Act to prevent them from having a voice in the elections, for they are, of course, in some electoral district.

BANK OF UPPER CANADA.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY, in moving the second reading of the resolution reported from the Committee of the Whole on the 24th March instant, to increase the sum placed at the disposal of the Governor in Council for the purpose of paying off any claims on the Bank of Upper Canada, from two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to two hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars, said: I now lay upon the Table of the House a statement which has been prepared for me, being a memorandum on the estate of the late Bank of Upper Canada:—

"On the 30th June last the balance at the credit of the liquidation account stood at $332,437.28, since that date there are receipts for $18,809.25, total $348,746.63; and the mortgages not matured and other securities will, by the latest estimate, fetch probably $60,000 more; this would make a total realization of about $408,000 or thereabouts.

"On the 1st of August, 1870, the estate was taken hold of by the Government, previously thereto an advance was made by the Government to the trustees of $150,000.

"Up to the 30th June last the amount advanced by the Government, in addition to the above $150,000, was $102,370.78, making in all $252,370.78, or $2,370.78 in excess of the amount authorized by Parliament."

"I find that on the 1st August, 1870, in addition to a debt to Messrs. Glyn, Mills & Co. of $74,416.20, there were other liabilities of the Bank amounting to $117,988.73, it was estimated that the demands against these liabilities would aggregate $88,110, as under:

	Liabilities.	Estimated demands.
1. Bank notes in circulation	$43,301 50	$10,000 00
2. Due as suspense account	250 10	250 00
3. Current Accounts	4,511 56	4,000 00
4. Deposit receipts	7,243 21	7,500 00
5. Bank drafts	6,869 93	21,750 00
6. Trustees' certificates	56,961 43	65,500 00
	$117,987 73	$88,110 00

"This estimate with a possible payment to Messrs. Glyn, Mills & Co., would if it was anticipated absorb $100,000, and hence authority was procured to advance in all $250,000.

"In November, 1872, the securities held by Messrs. Glyn, Mills & Co. were transferred to the Government and a settlement was made in full of all demands by a payment of $30,000, this only left $70,000 for the other liabilities, and whilst the estimate was not so far out in the other items, that for redemption of the note circulation was greatly under estimated, as since that date notes to the extent of $390,000 have been redeemed, and but $4,000 apparently remain in circulation.

"Judging from the past two years I do not anticipate that any demands will arise from the liabilities above cited beyond that for redemption of notes, as in 1879-80 and 1880-81 nothing was paid except for that purpose, and then only in small amounts.

"The claim referred to by Mr. Hesson arises out of another matter entirely; the claimant states, that in 1861, he had assigned to him a judgment obtained by the Bank and that upon endeavoring to realize the same he found that the Bank had released the parties. The case is extremely complicated, and will probably have to be transferred to the Department of Justice.

"In asking for $5,000 I have made up the figures as follows: $2,000 already advanced, $1,000 for note redemption, and $2,000 for a margin.

"Respectfully submitted.

"(Signed) J. M. COURTNEY, Deputy Minister of Finance.

"FINANCE DEPARTMENT,
"OTTAWA, 28th March, 1882."

Then I asked the Deputy Minister of Finance to give me a further memorandum, which contains some of the particulars which the hon. member for West Durham was desirous of having. The following is the memorandum:—

OTTAWA, May 12, 1881.

Bank of Upper Canada—Liquidation Account.

1879.

June 30. The amount received at this date, from all sources, on account of liquidation, since August 1, 1870, was..... $317,577 11

1882.

May 12. Since the above there have been received from the sale of the Lyn property.....$15,000 00
From the Christian Brothers of Toronto..... 8,000 00
From instalments on mortgages, &c..... 8,169 52
31,169 52
Making a total to date of..... $348,746 63

Advance.

1879.

June 30. Amount of advance made prior to 1st August, 1870..... $150,000 00
From 1st August, 1870, to 30th June, 1879..... 101,528 53
$251,528 53

1882.

May 12. Notes redeemed from June, 1879, to date, $1,123 at 75 cts. on the dollar.. 842 25
Making a total to date of..... $252,370 78

This memorandum has been handed to me, which will perhaps cover part of the ground to which the hon. member referred:

"Canada Central Railway stock, $9,000; mortgages, estimated at $35,000; judgments, &c., $16,000; making $60,000 as the estimate of the sums yet to be collected from those sources."

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that these three small items are the only assets still in possession of the trustees of the Bank of Upper Canada?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Of course, the other items may not all be bad, but are there no unsatisfied claims of any kind beyond the three which the hon. member has read?

Resolution agreed to and reported.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

Mr. BUNSTER. I rise to a question of privilege personal to myself. A paper in this city known as the Free Press, has made a personal attack on me. It alludes to the fact that 32,000 Chinese are on their way to British Columbia, and it holds me responsible in not having done my duty in drawing the attention of the Government to it. That journal has persistently tried to traduce me, but this is an attack that I cannot stand. You, Mr. Speaker, are well aware, from the many occasions on which I have addressed you on the subject, that I have drawn the attention of the Government repeatedly to the infliction to which the people of our country are subjected from the Chinese. Still nothing has been done any further than to encourage them. The hon. Finance Minister even took the duty off rice, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, I have protested against; while he has not taken the duty off powder so as to allow the miners to develop the mines. I draw the attention of the House to the matter. I now repudiate the idea that I encouraged Chinese immigration to this country. I have directed the attention of the Government to this question, and it is well known that the people of the United States have suffered a great infliction from the landing of Chinese on the Pacific shores, and I am satisfied the leader of the Government should have taken into consideration the Chinese question as well as the Pacific Railway and the National Policy. If the right hon. gentleman adopts a National Policy, he has also, in my opinion, to protect white labor.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

316. To cover additional expenditure for the High Commission, including disbursements at Paris, in connection with the Trade negotiations..... $ 1,250

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has any further information been obtained as to these negotiations with the French Government?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The proposition made by the High Commissioner to the French Government was not accepted. The proposal was not considered sufficient to induce them to grant what we ask, and the result was that the correspondence was communicated to the Government here, and so it stands at the present moment. Nothing final has been done, and the matter stands open for the consideration of the Government.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. Minister able to make any statement as to the nature of those matters, or are the negotiations in such a shape that it is impossible to communicate them?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The proposition was that upon the removal of the ad valorem duty of 30 per cent. on French wines, certain articles, if my memory serves me, including agricultural implements, leather manufactures, paraffine oil and one or two others should be admitted in France on favorable terms. The question of tonnage duties on vessels, of course, did not arise because that was disposed of in another way, and the French Government stated they did not consider that proposition was satisfactory but asked for a reduction of the duty on silks and one or two other articles. That is the position in which the matter stands at present. It was also proposed that the French Government should contribute $50,000 a year for a line of steamers running direct from Canada to France. That proposition was favorably received, but it was left open in connection with the other proposal.

Mr. ANGLIN. Then no idea is entertained at present that we shall be able to obtain the admission of our vessels to the markets of France on reasonable terms.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Our vessels are admitted on the same terms as English vessels, namely at the two franc duty, and, as stated by the hon. member, the effect of that was largely interfered with by the subsidy given to French vessels. Practically they are in the same position with regard to our ships built in Canada as those built in England and sold in that market, but the value of both is materially affected by the bounty given.

Mr. ANGLIN. Of course, it could not be expected that the French merchants would purchase our vessels, take them to France, and run under what are practically disabilities, but I would like to know if there is any hope of our inducing the French Government to readjust that matter so as to permit the possibility of our selling ships there.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The odds are certainly against us, and there is not much hope unless the subsidy now given to their steamers is so much that they will have to curtail it. With regard to wines there is now a specific and ad valorem duty, but in our negotiations, for which we have the authority of Parliament, it is proposed that the ad valorem duty shall be dropped on Spanish and French wines.

321. Manitoba Penitentiary—To provide for difference in exchange..... $1,000

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It appears that a certain person owns some land adjoining the penitentiary, and adjoining this property is that owned by the Dominion Government. It is proposed to exchange the lot owned by the Government for the other, as it will make the property more compact, and this sum is for the purpose of paying whatever difference may be necessary to pay in the exchange.

325. Immigration expenses..... $28,000

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. POPE. The new sheds at Winnipeg erected by the Government, are expected to accommodate above 400 immigrants. There is also an old shed, which is not convenient, but which could be used in case of necessity.

343. To provide for the payment of claims for improvements made by squatters in the Indian Reserve, in the township of Gibson $5,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is known that in order to settle the dispute, which seemed to be interminable between the Seminary and the Indians of Oka, an arrangement was made by which the Seminary purchased a large tract of land in the township of Gibson, for the purpose of placing the Indians there. The purchase was made through the Ontario Government; but there were some French Canadian squatters on the land, whose rights the Ontario Government held should be respected. When the Indians went there, the religious difficulties broke out as they did at Oka, the French Canadians, who were Catholics, coming into collision with the Indians who were Protestants. In order to put an end to the trouble, the Government desire this $5,000 to remove the settlers. This sum will be a charge upon the lands which have been purchased by the Seminary, and will eventually be recovered.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What information has the hon. gentleman as to the position of the Indians, and as to how far they are satisfied with the land assigned to them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand that on the whole the Indians are very well satisfied. They suffered some inconvenience in going up too late in the autumn, but they are now well satisfied, and I believe the remainder of the Indians will be removed this spring. The land is well situated on the lake, there is plenty of fishing and shooting, and the soil is fit for agricultural purposes. The gentlemen of the Seminary behaved with the most wonderful liberality, and expended a very large sum, infinitely more than they were obliged to expend, in buying out their houses and helping them to migrate.

Mr. SCRIVER. Are the Indians to hold their now lands in severalty or as a tribe?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are to hold the land as other Indians do, as an Indian reserve. The tribal system will still be continued. We think it would be rather a dangerous act to treat the Indians as whites and vest in them the land. It would be found in a very few years that they would have no land left. As they became educated, they can at any time become enfranchised and get their freeholds.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is the land secured in the Muskoka district sufficient to provide for the wants of the Indians who have not gone there, but who may yet decide to go?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is much more than sufficient for all the Indians who have gone, and who may yet proceed to the new district. If every Indian family moved from Oka to Gibson, there would still be a large surplus of land.

405. To cover expenses in connection with the International Fishery Exhibition..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. How is this money to be expended?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was a fishery exhibition in Berlin two years ago. It was successful excepting in one regard: France could not exhibit in Germany, and there was a very poor exhibition from the Mediterranean. Another international fishery exhibition is announced to be held in England. Holland, Germany, France, Italy, and the United States have agreed to exhibit there and to contribute to making the exhibition a great success, not only showing the various modes of preserving fish, but all the articles of fish food, and the various fish implements, and models of boats, with all the specimens of fish fit for food. It promises to be a most interesting exhibition. When I was in England last summer, there was a great meeting called under the auspices of the Fishmongers' Guild, to help on the negotiations. We were asked whether Canada would contribute, and we said we would aid the enterprise, subject, of course, to the approval of Parliament, to the extent of the fishmongers' subscription, namely, £500 sterling, and we agreed to subscribe the additional amount as well. That is only in order to initiate the exhibition. We propose to appropriate a sum for the purpose of preparing specimens and getting them ready for this exhibition in 1883.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is this to be an annual vote?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it is asked only for this exhibition.

Mr. ANGLIN. Has the hon. First Minister made up his mind as to the person he will entrust Canada's share of this work? We shall want an expert acquainted with everything connected with fisheries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have not yet decided on the parties; we are still considering the subject. There will be more than one man's work. Canada has large fishing interests yet in their infancy, and I think that no pains nor expense should be spared to enable Canada to make a creditable exhibition, as regards her Atlantic, Pacific and fresh water fisheries. That will involve the employment of a good many experts. Mr. Wilmot, who is well known in connection with our fisheries, was obliged to go to New York the other day, and I advised him to go to Washington and see Professor Baird on the subject. We have engaged several men who fully understand the subject. They will be distributed in such a way that every portion of Canada will be creditably represented in regard to its wealth in fish.

354. Salary of Inspector of Indian Agencies in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces..... $1,600

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is proposed to appoint an Inspector of Indian Agencies over the older Provinces, and as the Government are breaking up the establishment at Toronto, which is rather an impediment than an advantage, Mr. Plummer will come down here and be the Inspector.

Mr. MILLS. This proposition shows that the hon. gentleman's views have been considerably modified since he divided the House on the appointment of the first Indian Agent appointed in the North-West. The late Administration proposed to appoint an Inspector as an experimental appointment, and the hon. gentleman divided the House upon the appropriation for that purpose. Now he thinks Inspectors are highly desirable. I concur in his opinion, but very much more is required. I called the hon. gentleman's attention last year to the fact that the Indians who have not been emancipated have no power to dispose of the profits of their industry, and have, therefore, when they find a purchaser, to sell generally at much less than the actual value of their property. The hon. gentleman does not undertake to relieve the Indians. There are serious impediments in the way of Indian industrial problems. How is an Indian to succeed in his farm operations when he cannot get a buyer for his produce, because laboring under the disability of a minor, his property, if he sells it is liable to be claimed back at any time.

360. To provide for the salary of one Chief Clerk to 30th June, 1883, Post Office Department..... $1,800

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. There is an item of $1,800 for Chief Clerk in the Post Office Department. Where is he to act?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That has become necessary owing to a combination of the functions of the inspector of Post Offices with those of the manager of the Savings Bank. One of these officers died, and it is proposed that one person perform the functions of both, and this is for an additional chief clerk necessary under the readjustment.

362. To meet the amount required to make payment to those officers in the Savings Bank Branch of Post Office and Finance Departments engaged in balancing accounts and computing interest in Depositors' Accounts..... $ 1,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. Minister intend to make this an annual charge, because if so why not put it in the ordinary place with the salaries instead of in the contingencies?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is very difficult to do that. Down to 1880 these officers were paid extra for the extra work necessary in order to conduct the business of the Department. A good deal of extra work was required to be done, and instead of appointing additional clerks, for which there was no authority, they have been paid extra for doing extra work.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. This looks like interfering with the statutory provisions that we should not pay for extra work. I am aware it has been done, but the matter has been commented upon two or three times in the public Acts and elsewhere, and I think it is against statutory declarations in such case.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I know it is against the principle of the Statute, and I quite agree with my hon. friend in that respect. But unless you double or treble the staff it is necessary to employ the present staff extra time. When the quarterly, and sometimes the monthly, returns come in the work is much heavier, and at certain periods circulars have to be sent out to every depositor showing the state of his account, like a bank examiner who examines the accounts of the bank, and all this requires much extra labor. We either have to double the staff or require extra labor of the present staff.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, no one can object that a public officer should be paid higher, whose services are specially arduous, but the difficulty is as to what shall be called extra labor. The hon. gentleman has on his staff certain officers who periodically perform extra work, and he says the most economical way for the public service is to arrange that the existing staff shall work over hours. Now what is contemplated by the Civil Service Act is not that we should pay them extra for extra work, but on the contrary, it expressly provides that their salaries shall be graduated to the arduous character of their labors. That is, that an officer who has to discharge more arduous labors is rated higher than another. But here we find a sum which is allocated to be disposed of at the discretion of the Ministers, paid to whom we know not, for services which we do not measure. We have here all the evils which were sought to be got rid of by abolishing the system of extra pay. I do not propose that this item should be struck out, but I ask the Minister to consider whether it is not possible to comply with the letter as well as the spirit of the Civil Service Act, while doing full justice to the officers.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I admit it is very desirable to avoid it if possible.

363. Increase of salaries of three Trade Instructors at the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary..... $480

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. If I recollect aright these men are already paid $700 each, which is the highest amount paid in the Kingston Penitentiary to the trade instructors of the first class, while a considerably smaller sum is paid to those of the second class. It seems the hon. gentleman proposes to pay these trade instructors of St. Vincent de Paul $860 each, as against $700 paid at Kingston. That seems rather a serious inequality, and will doubtless lead to demands for further increase from the trade instructors of every other penitentiary.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In the Estimates for 1881-82, two of them are paid $700 each and two $560. The hon. Minister of Justice reported that they demanded an increase of salary, and could not be retained in the service without that increase was granted.

Mr. BLAKE. This is in fact a proposal to increase the salaries of second class trade instructors at St. Vincent de Paul by a sum in excess of that which is paid to first-class instructors at Kingston—$180 to be added to $560. There can be no more difficulty in getting trade instructors for St. Vincent de Paul than in getting them at Kingston. We know that the expenses of St. Vincent de Paul are disproportionately large to-day, every allowance being made, as compared with those at Kingston. The salaries are disproportionately large, and in excess of the second-class paid at Kingston.

368. For collecting and compiling agricultural, industrial and other statistics, in Manitoba and the North-West Territory, and also for acquiring and compiling such statistics elsewhere..... $20,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. POPE. I intend to appoint officers to collect these statistics. It is admitted that it is of great importance that the Government should collect statistics in regard to Manitoba and the North-West. Ontario has already provided means of collecting their statistics, and we have made an arrangement to obtain these statistics in relation to that Province. As far as the other Provinces are concerned, I am not able to say what we shall be able to do.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion of the vote will be expended in Manitoba and the North-West?

Mr. POPE. The larger proportion will be expended there. The obtaining of Ontario statistics will cost nothing more than the expense of collating them.

Mr. BLAKE. It is highly desirable to provide some means of ascertaining the statistics in the North-West. I am pleased to know that the Government proposes to take this step but the House should be made acquainted with the Minister's plans. At the same time the number of the population should be obtained. It depends on the mode in which the Minister disposes of this vote as to whether we should advance in this direction. I think it would be of great consequence, particularly with reference to immigration and settlement and a good many problems which will be constantly coming up in regard to the North-West, that we should have some indication not merely of the gross progress of settlement, but also distribution of settlement oftener than is to be obtained by the decennial Census. These statistics might not be thoroughly accurate, but any information that could be obtained would be of high consequence.

Mr. POPE. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it would be desirable to have as much information as possible of this kind oftener than once in ten years, but I did not expect to provide for that in this vote. This vote, as the hon. gentleman knows, is experimental. I cannot say how far I may be able to utilize the municipal institutions of Manitoba and the North-West, but I will utilize them as far as possible and get the information as correctly as possible, because incorrect statistics are worse than none at all, as they are liable to mislead.

370. To provide for the purchase of four guns with 400 rounds of ammunition from the British Government..... $2,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. CARON. These are siege guns purchased from the British Government, and I consider we are getting them almost for nothing. The ordinary net cost of these guns with a hundred rounds of ammunition, wrought iron cartridge, and one hundred shot of solid iron, is $1,027.37. We got the four guns complete in England at £100 each. They are siege guns, and looked upon as very perfect. It is not yet decided where they will be placed, but probably one will be put in Montreal, one in Quebec, one in Kingston and one in Halifax, or probably two in Quebec and the others divided.

Mr. BLAKE. What place does the hon. gentleman propose to besiege with these guns?

Mr. CARON. I do not intend to do any besieging, but if any body besieges me I intend to be ready for them.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought that perhaps the hon. gentleman might place them at a convenient point near St. John, and fire at the Charybdis.

Mr. ANGLIN. What weight of ball do these guns carry?

Mr. CARON. They are 40-pounders, Armstrong guns, and are 3,200 lbs.

Mr. ANGLIN. Have you masonry sufficiently strong for such guns?

Mr. CARON. I think the Citadel of Quebec would be sufficient to carry one at least, and that there would not be any danger even with two.

Mr. BLAKE. How about those guns which we are manufacturing ourselves?

Mr. CARON. The completion of the contract was delayed in consequence of experiments going on in England before Sir William Palliser died. It was found that the breach which he applied to the converted gun was not as perfect as it was first supposed to be and the work was delayed on his part, and in consequence on our part so as to be able to get the most perfect improvement possible.

Mr. BLAKE. They are not yet converted?

Mr. CARON. They are all converted, but they are not perfected.

Mr. BLAKE. So that in case of war they would not be used.

Mr. CARON. In case of war I will take care that other guns will protect us until they are completed.

406. To assist in promoting the purposes of the International Circumpolar Observations, by contributing towards the expenses of transporting the British Party from Halifax to the Hudson's Bay Station, on Great Slave Lake, and return..... $4,000

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Mr. McLELAN. We have been asked by the British Government if we would contribute anything for transporting this party from Halifax to Slave Lake; and as it is through our own territory, and these observations are to be made in the Dominion and will be of great value to us, we ask for this amount. The Royal Society pay the salaries and the maintenance of the party and their expenses to Halifax.

Mr. BLAKE. That is not the British Government.

Mr. McLELAN. But we were asked through the British Government.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the scientific object of the expedition?

Mr. McLELAN. The object is to obtain a better knowledge of the atmospheric laws and magnetic forces which are supposed to affect the state of the weather. It is supposed that this will enable the observers at Toronto and elsewhere to better prognosticate the weather, and that we shall gain largely in that respect.

342 To defray the expenses in connection with the Geological Survey..... $14,409

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That item was allowed to stand for some explanations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The following letter from Dr. Selwyn will give all the information required:

"GEOLOGICAL AND NATURAL HISTORY SURVEY,
"OTTAWA, 12th January, 1882.

"Sir,—I have the honor to call your attention to the present state of the appropriation for the Geological Survey, and to point out that the available balance is not sufficient to meet the current monthly expenditure and pay-list salaries to the close of the fiscal year, and pay outstanding liabilities.

"This has been occasioned by the unavoidable heavy expenses in connection with the removal from Montreal. In consequence the whole of these expenses have been paid during the past six months from the ordinary Survey appropriation.

"Under these circumstances, and in order that I may not render myself liable to the charges of incurring on unauthorized expenditure, I would respectfully request that such authority, as may be required, should be issued, to enable me to pay outstanding liabilities and current expenditure to 30th June next. This, as per statement annexed, cannot be estimated at less than $13,520.71, required to be provided for by supplementary estimate, would be provided on the civil list. This was not carried out, and hence the deficiency which has arisen.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I took occasion, when the item for the Geological Survey was under consideration, to call the attention of the hon. First Minister to the desirability, if the funds permitted, of causing more systematic borings to be made in the North West, and which he promised to consider. Incidentally the matter was brought to my attention in this way: Parties who were desirous of making explorations for minerals in this country applied, I believe, to the Minister of Customs for permission to import diamond drills free of duty. No doubt the Government are aware that they are not manufactured in Canada, and are not likely to be, and that it would be very largely for the benefit of the country that they should be more largely used in borings. I would therefore suggest that if, as I think is the case, it is in the power of the Government under the Statute that enables them to limit duties on such instruments as may be greatly wanted in this country, and which are not made in it, they should allow explorers to import those drills untaxed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it is quite likely we will not make diamond drills in Canada very soon, and considering their usefulness, I think the hon. Minister of Customs will do all the law enables him to exempt them from duty.

Mr. ANGLIN. Some days ago a gentleman in Ottawa asked me to obtain information for him as to the regulations regarding explorations for minerals in the North-West, especially coal. I obtained a copy of the regular report before the House, and by it I observed that no protection is afforded the explorer; that if he employs some person to assist him, that employe may get the start of him by a prior application for the district in which the coal was discovered. The gentleman suggested it would be much better if the Nova Scotia system was adopted, under which applications are made in the first instance for a license to explore. That gives a person a special right for a short period to explore in a district; and if he discovers a vein of coal he has the prior right to apply for a lease of the district. The Dominion regulations do not afford the explorers such protection, and, therefore, an explorer may be discouraged by the prospect of being deprived of the fruits of his labor and expenditure by an employe making an application.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought there was an objection on the part of the gentlemen opposite to our having any provision of that kind; that they argued we should put it up to tender. There can be no difficulty about providing against the evil mentioned. If he goes to the Department—he can do that at Winnipeg—and states the fact that he is going to take out his party, he would be accepted as the explorer and no application from any member of his party will be entertained. All he has to do is to give a list of those who are to go with him.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the negotiations will bear any such construction. There is nothing whatever to show that the explorer will have a prior right at all. The statement is that applications will be granted in order of their priority. No statement exists that the person who comes in first, if he be not the discoverer himself, or his agent, will have his title voided in any way.

Mr. ANGLIN. The explorer may obtain remedy by application to the hon. Minister, but that may be a tedious process. He might be out in the far West long before he had a suspicion of any application being made, and the titles might be perfected before he could apply for redress. He would have to produce also, proofs to show he was the original explorer. That is a discouraging prospect and may discourage explorations being made. An explorer, on giving notice of his intention to explore a particular district, might have the right to a lease, provided his exploration be successful.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The remedy would be worse than the disease. There would be a rush to any district supposed to contain coal or minerals, and notice would be given of intended explorations, and if those claims had priority, other people would be kept out.

Mr. ANGLIN. The claim might be confined to a limited area.

351. To provide compensation to Jean Louis Legaré. $2,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Legaré incurred a great deal of trouble and expense, and no little danger, in his successful attempts to get Sitting Bull to surrender himself to the American authorities. I will read Mr. Dewdney's statement which is based on the report of Col. Irvine, the Commissioner of Mounted Police, who knows all about it. He says:

"I cannot vouch for the statement made by Mr. Legaré as to the expense, labor and time incurred in the matter, but I have from time to time heard of Mr. Legaré and the efforts he was making to advance the surrender of the Sioux.

"Mr. Legaré's reputation for rectitude and honesty is well known in the Territories, and I have no doubt his statements are correct. Under these circumstances I think he is entitled to remuneration. The good effects of the surrender were felt very shortly after Sitting Bull left our Territory, as buffalo came in and our Indians have been getting a few ever since.

"I also think that should the Government remunerate Mr. Legaré, who is an Indian trader and has great influence with the Indians, it would have a good effect, and be the means of obtaining like assistance from others in his position, should it be required at any time."

Col. Irvine says :

" I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter. I concur most fully with your recommendation in which you suggest that $2,000 be paid Mr. Legarée."

Mr. ANGLIN. Would the Minister say whether Mr. Legarée acted voluntarily or under the authority of the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At their special request. Resolutions ordered to be reported.

BUILDING SOCIETIES AND LOAN AND SAVINGS COMPANIES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 131) to further amend the law respecting Building Societies and Loan and Savings Companies carrying on business in the Province of Ontario.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The object of this Bill is to allow building societies to issue preferential stock, subject to such conditions with regard to specifying a limited rate of dividend as may be agreed upon by the stockholders. An amendment will be proposed that the issue of this new stock shall be offered in accordance with the law, as it is at the present time among existing shareholders, pro rata as nearly as possible without fractions; and in case such new shares be not taken up within thirty days, the said shares, or preferential shares, shall be disposed of as the directors may from time to time determine. While I do not deny that under certain circumstances, the company should have power to increase the capital stock as proposed, I yet entertain some apprehension less the creation of different classes of stock of different denominations should not swamp wholly the different classes of stock paid up. The building societies of Toronto have cognizance of this Bill, and with the amendment which I intend to propose, it will be acceptable.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think the difficulty in the case is, that it is proposed to give to newly issued preferred stock the same voting powers as are possessed by paid-up stock. It seems to me it would be quite practicable to put in a clause securing them the voting power pro tanto, according to the paid-up stock. Otherwise a nice little game might be played by some of the interested shareholders, by taking up the stock and overbalancing and controlling the affairs of the company for themselves.

Mr. BLAKE. I recollect that a case of that kind was very widely referred to in the newspapers in which a majority, which did not at all represent the paid-up capital, controlled the affairs of the company.

Mr. PLUMB. The shareholders have the matter in their own hands, and there is no reason why they should swamp their own holdings; if there is there should be an issue of stock, under such regulations as they choose to make.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The trouble is that the existing shareholders may not find it convenient to take up the new preferred stock; that a few of them may do so, and if there is to be the same voting power for unpaid or partially paid-up stock, as for that which is paid, it will probably open the door to such a state of things as I have indicated.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In accordance with the remarks made before the Hon. rose, I propose an amendment providing that the new shares to be issued in pursuance of this Act shall only have voting power according to the proportion the amount paid thereon bears to the stock issued irrespective of this Act.

Bill amended and reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE SEAMEN'S ACT.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 110) to further amend the Seamen's Act, 1873.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Mr. McLELAN. Under the Act at present the offence is punished by five years imprisonment in the penitentiary; but this Bill proposes to give the judge discretionary power to impose a penalty of not less than two or more than five years imprisonment.

Mr. ANGLIN. The Act of which this Bill is an amendment was passed at a period of very great excitement, after a seaman had been murdered on a vessel in the harbor of Quebec, and it was thought that very severe repressive measures were necessary to put an end to the carrying of dangerous weapons. But I think we went entirely too far on that occasion, and I think we ought to go further in the opposite direction than this Bill does go. It is the policy of our whole criminal law to place discretionary power in the hands of the Judge. We all know that there will be very great differences in the nature and character of these cases, and the mere fact that when a man is arrested some weapon happens to be found upon him, should not be held as conclusive evidence that he intended to use it for some unlawful purpose. Some persons carry weapons as a habit, and not with any evil purpose or intent, and it should be left to the Judge to determine whether the evidence showed that there was any unlawful intent in carrying the weapon. If the Judge finds that it was intended to use the weapon he might impose a heavy penalty; but if no such intention was apparent he should be at liberty to inflict only a small penalty. While fully protecting the officers and owners of vessels from parties who want to carry off their sailors, let us not run to the extreme of inflicting unnecessarily severe punishment in cases where no good reason exists for it.

Mr. McLELAN. This Act was passed under extraordinary circumstances, but it has effected an extraordinary cure. I shall add the words suggested by the leader of the Opposition, to amend the clause.

Mr. BLAKE. I certainly feel that the penalty proposed in the case on which my hon. friend has commented is extremely severe. It is provided a penalty shall be inflicted in the case of parties boarding a vessel without the permission and against the orders of its officers. Such a proceeding may subject a party to confinement in the penitentiary for three years, and to five years if an offensive weapon is found on him. This seems a tremendous penalty.

Mr. McLELAN. The law was excessively severe before.

Mr. ANGLIN. It was Draconian before.

Mr. McLELAN. It has not worked any great evil.

Mr. ANGLIN. I have heard of cases where it did. I would not except from severe punishment any party endeavoring to bring off sailors from a vessel, or interfering with the master's control, or a party in whose case there was anything to indicate an intention to draw a weapon to intimidate the officers. I only advocate a discretionary power with the Judge when the offence was of a much milder character, the offender being found with the weapon which he had not attempted to use; the Judge should be able to inflict less than two years imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Mr. CARON. I must admit that this is a very stringent law. But crimping had become the curse of the harbor of Quebec; sailors had often been carried away from vessels, to their great loss and the injury of the trade, and much personal violence and sometimes murder resulted from crimping. The Act has abolished this evil, and I think the clause as it now stands is not at all too stringent.

On clause 2,

Mr. BLAKE. I have the strongest objection to the second clause. Under the Act which is sought to be amended there was a recent case in which the Stipendiary Magistrate or Judge of the Sessions tried a man and inflicted upon him a very severe penalty. The case was brought before the Court of Queen's Bench of Quebec, and there was a difference of opinion between the Judges as to whether the true interpretation of this Act did permit the trial, without a jury, by an inferior magistrate, of a subject, for an offence of this description and the imposition of a penalty like this. The majority in the court were of the opinion that the law authorized that, but the minority, consisting of the Chief Justice, Sir A. A. Dorion, and Mr. Justice Ramsay, were of the opinion that the law did not authorize it. My opinion is, and in this I agree with Mr. Justice Ramsay, that if the law did authorize it, it ought not to have authorized it. The second clause proposes to authorize this. If you are going to impose so severe a penalty as you have provided by the first clause, a penalty of five years imprisonment, in respect of which the maximum penalty in England is, I believe, three months, the subject ought at least to have the benefit of a trial by jury; and to provide that an inferior magistrate such as a Judge of the Sessions, a Police Magistrate, a Stipendiary Magistrate or a Judge of a County Court, shall have authority to try and determine in a summary way an offence which you have made so serious as to be punishable by five years imprisonment in the penitentiary, is nothing less than monstrous. I maintain that our criminal law has not gone beyond the trial by jury. There are certain cases of a very minor character which are to be tried by Police Magistrates summarily, but our law, so far as we have interfered with graver offences, provides a summary mode of trial, at any rate in the Province of Ontario and some of the other Provinces, with the consent of the accused; but here it is proposed to try cases summarily without his consent, without giving him any option. This is contrary to the spirit of our criminal law and all sound views. The following is the language of Judge Ramsay:—

"Now, we are invited to declare that these words oust trial by jury, and place the liberty of any person accidentally going on board the wrong ship, at the mercy of two justices of the peace or of a stipendiary magistrate. It is not contended that these words are those ordinarily used for conveying jurisdiction; but, if I understand the respondent's pretension, it is assumed, that some of the dispositions of the Act are of a character so contrary to the general spirit of criminal legislation and to the institutions of this country, that we must be more readily disposed to admit it to be the intention of the Legislature to create a new jurisdiction than if the law were of a usual character. Such a doctrine appears to me to be intolerable—a monstrous law, which, in its eagerness to reach the guilty, confounds innocence and guilt, has no spirit, and its operation must be confined to the narrowest interpretation of its words."

The Hon. Chief Justice Dorion said:

"In a matter like this, where the punishment cannot be less than five years, I am not disposed, even if I felt that I was permitted by law to do so, to extend, by way of interpretation and by doubtful inferences, the jurisdiction of the Judges of the Sessions of the Peace, so as to deprive any accused from the invaluable privilege of being tried by his peers, especially when I find that in England, where these laws are administered by men well versed in the practice and with the principles of the criminal law—an advantage which we do not always possess here—the penalty for similar offences under the Act already cited, is three months' imprisonment, and the extreme punishment which a stipendiary magistrate can in any case inflict is a penalty not exceeding $100 or imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months." (17 and 18 Vic., Cap. 104, ss. 237, 518 and 519.)

Mr. ANGLIN.

"If the Legislature wishes to abolish the trial by jury in any particular case and to leave the citizens to be tried by an exceptional tribunal, especially when their liberty for such a period as five years may be in jeopardy, it must say so in clear and unmistakable terms; and I shall not deem it my duty to assist in such a work by any decision which is not clearly justified by the very letter of the law."

Mr. McLELAN. The cases here dealt with are altogether exceptional. The man must persist in remaining on board the ship against the orders of the captain or other person in authority. Unless you make the trial summary, you are liable to detain the ship, which would entail very great expense. No cases of hardship have arisen under the present Act, which is much more stringent than it is proposed to make it now. We have provided that a Judge of the Superior Court may try such cases, in addition to a Police Magistrate or a Judge of the Sessions. I think that Judge Ramsay's objections arose from having a doubt whether, under that Act, we had authority to inflict punishment when it was limited to the infliction of necessary penalties. Therefore he was of opinion that Mr. Justice Chauveau should try cases when pecuniary penalties only were provided.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says that no cases of hardship arose under the law. I should think it is a case of hardship that a man should be tried summarily before a magistrate and condemned to five years imprisonment for going on board a ship without the permission of the master.

Mr. McLELAN. Remaining on board.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all. That was not the law. The hon. gentleman proposes to alter the law. He confounds the whole law with the Bill now before us. The charge against this man was that he unlawfully did go on board the ship Cavalier without the consent of the master, Mr. Jackson. This man was tried and convicted in his absence by a single judge, Mr. Chauveau, and condemned to five years imprisonment because he went on board the ship without permission. If he is not convinced that it is a case of hardship I would feel it useless to attempt the task of convincing him that it is.

Mr. McLELAN. If a man violates the law.

Mr. BLAKE. Under these circumstances, there could be no hardship under any law. You have before you the case in which a man was tried and convicted in his absence, under the law as it stands, and sentenced to five years imprisonment for going on board a ship without the master's consent. In the Court of Appeals, a doubt existed as to the interpretation of the law. You propose now to make it clear, that a trial, in the case mentioned, can take place without a jury. The hon. gentleman is not cognizant of the principles of jurisprudence when he says it must be a clear case because there must be permission of the master. He forgets that one of the questions to be determined is, whether it was against the orders of the master. It is a trial as to whether the law has been violated or not by going on board without the consent of the master, and we require the assistance of a jury before coming to a conclusion which may temporarily subject the accused to the loss of his liberty for five years in the provincial penitentiary. Having before us now plainly and clearly what the consequences of this legislation would be, we are face to face with this question: Is it necessary to establish so severe a penalty? If it be necessary you preclude yourselves from the proposition that the subject that you expose to so severe a penalty shall be exposed to it without the advantage of a trial by jury. If the penalty were lighter, three or six months, such as the English penalty, there would be less objection to a summary trial, though it would be in its measure foreign to the spirit of criminal law. But when you determine that the ends of justice require a penalty so severe as this, you determine also that the ends of justice exact that the sentence should be upon the verdict of a jury and not upon the verdict of a single judge.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman says that this offence is visited in England by three months imprisonment, but I must tell him that there is no similarity at all between the English offence and the Canadian offence. In England the crew are discharged in the port as a rule. In Canada seamen arrive here with three or four pounds, and when they return to England, their wages amount to six or seven pounds. There is a strong inducement for the seaman to desert his ship, a strong inducement for the crimps to take possession of the seaman and sell him to another ship returning home to England, while their increased wages, as a rule, go into the pockets of the crimps. Speaking of the principles of law, is not a captain the master on board his own ship? and is he not in his castle? Has he not the same right to be protected as any other man in his own residence from trespassers going on board that ship, and even, as it has happened at Quebec, shooting down men who would desert their vessel? I consider that this law is not at all too stringent. In the case to which the hon. gentlemen has referred, Judge Chauveau had no discretion, because the law fixed the penalty three years for some offences and five years for others, and the case being proved he had no power to exercise a discretion. It would be impossible to prove a case against a prisoner by the witnesses on the ship, who alone could give the necessary testimony, if the case was postponed until the Quarter Sessions, and the only way to deal with such cases is to deal with them summarily. It is true the punishment may appear excessive, but considering all the circumstances, the difficulty of preventing this crime will justify it. That crime has now altogether disappeared from our harbor in consequence of the stringent laws which were passed and which protected private property and protected the ship-owner and captain. It was only in consequence of such laws that the captain was able to control his crew and protect his ship.

Mr. BLAKE. If the crime has already disappeared what was it for which Michael Clarke was sent to the penitentiary last September for five years?

Mr. CARON. That is only one case.

Mr. BLAKE. It is only one man. I admit that the difficulties are serious and that they may require exceptional provisions, but I maintain that that exceptional provision is to be obtained not at the sacrifice of the sacred rights of the subject to trial by jury, but by providing for an expeditious trial. Let the hon. gentleman, if it requires an immediate trial, make a special provision under which a jury may be secured at once and the trial take place immediately. There is no impossibility in that; there are judges of sufficient rank always in the city of Quebec to try those cases. The hon. gentleman tells us, first of all, that the crime is more grave than many others, and that the consequences are so much more serious that we must stamp it with the degradation and the severity of a five years' imprisonment as a maximum punishment; and then to tell us that we can find no means whereby the usual safeguards of trial by jury can be secured, is something that cannot be listened to. If the hon. gentleman wants to make the penalty so severe and to have an immediate trial, let him combine these things by providing special jurisdiction for the trial of this offence with the immediate summoning of a jury, and so get over both difficulties; but do not tell us in the first place it is a very grave crime, and in the next instance that we must deprive persons charged with it of the right of the trial by jury.

Mr. ANGLIN. The mistake both Ministers make is in imagining that only the rights of property are to be guarded, and that the rights of an individual man are of small importance, that because a man happens to be called a criminal he is to be deprived of all the rights which we profess to hold so sacred everywhere—the right of trial by jury. That is a right of which we should not rightly deprive any one of Her Majesty's subjects. The hon. Minister of Marine talked as if the very moment a man is arrested on a charge of this kind he should be treated as a criminal. The principle of English law is that every man is to be treated as innocent till he is convicted of a crime. Police Magistrates, though they may be respectable men, are usually men of small experience and capacity, and from a habit of dealing with criminals of the lowest class, they usually have small regard for individual rights. We are treating this matter too lightly. We are interfering with the most sacred rights—rights which ought to be held the most sacred in those who are meekest and most humble. It is not because you choose to call a man a criminal that he is therefore to be held as having no such rights as the rest of the community are supposed to be in the full possession and enjoyment of. A prisoner must be held to be an innocent man until after he has been convicted by a jury of his peers, and a Stipendary Magistrate should not have the power to commit a man for five years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. After listening for some time to the very strong terms in which the hon. leader of the Opposition denounces this measure, I was startled lest some great innovation was being made; but I was surprised to learn that all the hon. Minister was doing was to propose an amelioration of the law as it was in operation during the time the leader of the Opposition was Minister of Justice. I feared the proposition was to impose a most stringent penalty, but I find it to make it less stringent and to give a discretion to reduce the penalty from five to two years.

Mr. ANGLIN. What does the hon. gentleman say in regard to summary procedure?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not proposed to make any change in that particular. Have such offenders had trial by jury during the last five years?

Mr. ANGLIN. This Bill will remove doubts and establish the power of the magistrate to try and convict and impose such penalty.

Mr. McLELAN. The doubt expressed by the Judges was as to whether they had the power to impose punishment. I have a letter from Mr. Chauveau.

Mr. BLAKE. I have the opinions of the Judges. I did not consider it within my business as Minister of Justice to have enquired into all the enactments passed while the gentlemen opposite were in power; and that because my attention was not called to this fact when I was Minister, that therefore my mouth should be shut now. The Judges of the Superior Court of Quebec had the statement before them during the last two or three months. They were divided on the question whether the Act had the interpretation that was generally placed upon it; but they decided the question—the Chief Justice, a man of great ability, and Judge Ramsay composing the minority. That is the present state of the law; and this Bill proposes to settle the question.

Bill reported.

BOUNTIES TO FISHERMEN.

Sir Leonard Tilley moved, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a certain proposed resolution to provide for an annual grant of $150,000 to aid in the development of the sea fisheries, &c.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In submitting for the consideration of the Committee the resolution upon the subject of the bounty to the fishermen, I desire to say that it is exceedingly difficult, with the information we have before us at present, to state specially the nature of the bounty to be given to the vessels or boats employed in the fisheries. All that we propose to do at the present time is to state, upon the information, on data, we have at command, what we think will be the probable amount to be appropriated in the distribution of this $150,000, per ton, per vessel, and per boat engaged in the sea fisheries. It will be found by reference to the report of the Marine and Fisheries Department for 1830-81, as well as other data that we have been able to command, that the average number of men employed in the fisheries during the last two years was 60,589. The average number of vessels engaged in the fisheries was 1,150, the average tonnage 46,856, and the average number of boats 26,106. It is intended for the first year to administer the distribution of the money by arrangements made by Order in Council, after the fullest information has been obtained, and it is proposed to give $2 a ton for the vessels engaged in the fisheries. Of the tonnage of 46,856 some are vessels engaged for a short period in each year, and they would not be entitled to any bounty on that account. On the best information we have before us there will be about 42,000 out of the 46,000 entitled to the bounty. It is proposed, for example, that a vessel shall require to be at least three months engaged in the fisheries each season, or probably four months, and it is proposed also to divide the bounty between owners of the vessels and crew. That is the proposition at present. With reference to the boats we find some little difficulty at the present moment in stating the nature of the boat, because they vary so much in size and value, and the number of men employed. For instance, there are many boats employed in our fisheries manned by two men; others engaged with the seine or net, and others with only one man. Then there are a number entered in the returns who are owned by men who are not fishermen, farmers and others on the coast of Nova Scotia frequently going out at certain seasons of the year to catch fish for their own use. It is not intended that they shall partake of the bounty. Out of the 22,000 boats employed, we take 10,000 of the larger size and allow them $4, and 12,000 of the smaller size, $2 each. This is the approximate estimate, but, of course, the arrangement is only of a tentative character. After enquiring, we have decided that boats less than fourteen feet long should not receive anything. By giving $2 a ton for an aggregate of 42,000 tons, part to the owner of the vessel and part to the crew, $4 each to 10,000 smaller boats, and $2 each to 12,000 of the smallest size, we make up $148,000. The subject having been discussed by Government before my visit to the Maritime Provinces last summer, I took occasion to enquire into the condition of the fishermen, especially in Nova Scotia, and I learnt that a large portion of the fishermen, previous to the Washington Treaty, were in the habit of going to Massachusetts in ships belonging to Massachusetts. They have there a very superior class of vessels, which are built especially for that trade. From the habit of their going there previous to the treaty, I was told that they still go there; and I was told, especially in Yarmouth, that if the bounty was given in such a way that the owner of a vessel would receive a certain portion, it would be an encouragement to persons who had capital to construct the class of vessels used by these people in Nova Scotia, so that they would not be compelled to go to the United States. That was one object we had in view. It was also considered that the interest on the $1,500,000 awarded by the Fishery Commission should be distributed among the fishermen who, under its operation, had been compelled to give up the advantage of having access to the American market for their fish. We hope, within the next month or so, to be able to pass the Order in Council based upon this resolution, to an extent that will very likely be about the $150,000 asked for.

Mr. KILLAM. I do not think the hon. member could have more thoroughly convinced the House than he has done by his eloquent speech, that the distribution of this bounty cannot be intended for anything else than a political bribe. This is one of the most crude propositions ever submitted to a Legislature. It has been submitted without any consideration or any knowledge of the facts; and it has been laid before us at half-past nine on the second evening preceding the prorogation, of what we are led to suppose, is the last Session of this Parliament, when it is entirely out of our power to consult with our friends in the different parts of the country as to whether this proposition is a sound one or not, and when we have not time to consider the provisions of the measure. The hon. gentleman tells us that the matter is to be settled by Order in Council. No doubt, as in many other cases; he would like to have the matter settled by Order in Council and not by such an Act of Parliament as would make it clear to those interested. The fishermen know how they have been taxed by the hon. gentleman, and how he voted against giving them a fair share of the Fishery Award; and they do not thank the hon. gentleman for bringing down, at the last stage of the Session, a half measure of this kind, for returning to them a portion of the money which he knows has been withheld from them for so many years. The fishermen will not give the hon. gentleman the credit he expects to obtain by this measure. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman has investigated this matter, or if he is at all conversant with it; or is he bringing down this measure because he thinks it is a popular thing to give a bounty to the fishermen? After having taxed every article which the fishermen use for the last three or four years, he goes to them and says: "Although we have been taxing you, we have been looking after your interests, and we propose to return to you part of the taxes we have taken from you. As soon as the turmoil of the elections is over we will settle with you by Order in Council." Sir, I profess to be conversant with this subject; I know something about the tonnage of vessels and about fishing boats; I have taken the trouble to post myself with regard to the catch of fish, and I believe there will be no trouble for the hon. gentleman to distribute $150,000; but it will be very difficult for him, with the knowledge he has acquired so far, to discuss this subject properly. It would have been in order for the hon. gentleman, when he proposed to levy a duty upon the necessaries of life used by these people, four years ago, to have taken that matter into consideration. But he never thought of it then. Now, when the unpopularity of that policy makes it necessary to him to try to redeem his character in some way, he comes down with this proposition. But he knows nothing about the subject. If he took into consideration the question of the fish caught, the risks incurred in taking different kinds, and the revenue the Dominion derives from the catch of the different sorts, he might with some degree of knowledge distribute this bounty in a way to acknowledge the most deserving. But that is not within the scope of his knowledge. He does not understand how to deal with that part of the subject. He submits this proposition, I unhesitatingly assert, solely as an election kite, because he has not considered the interests of those people the last three years. He is pretending now to make some amends to them without a proper knowledge of the subject, and without a consideration of the proper method of dealing with it. And what we shall find out when the elections are over is, that it will be perhaps one or two years before he will be able to distribute his first year's award, and afterwards that the distribution has been an improper one, occasioning the utmost dissatisfaction; and that the proper way, as everybody contends, to deal with the fishermen is to release them from unnecessary taxation, and not by taking $2 from them and giving $1 back, and so try to make himself especially popular with these people.

Mr. ANGLIN. How small a vessel will be entitled to this $2 bounty—will vessels of five or six tons be? Will those five or six ton vessels be entitled to $2 a ton or only to the $4.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I cannot say at this moment; because all the vessels are registered, and their register will be the guide as to the payment on the tonnage. The law, I think, speaks of registering all vessels of ten tons; any smaller tonnage is not registered, and that is where one of the difficulties arise in reaching a decision. The hon. member for Gloucester says no time was given. We gave notice a long time ago. Many hon. members have furnished the Government with information—members of practical experience; and many have been in communication with their constituents, and have placed in the hands of the Government the returns made. The statements I have made are based on recommendations to a large extent of members, either the results of their own personal experience or of information from their constituents. One of the matters that will have to be investigated concerns that class of vessels between the size required to be registered, of ten tons, and an ordinary boat. Some scale will have to be fixed, based on either length, breadth or capacity; therefore I cannot state any general rule for vessels under the regular tonnage.

Mr. FLYNN. I am not disposed to question the motives that have animated the Government in giving these $150,000 as a bounty to the fishermen. I have said, and still think, that if the taxes were lightened, it would be to greater advantage to them than any bounty. It was quite within the power of the hon. Finance Minister to obtain that information, which I regretted to hear him say he did not possess, to enable him to make the best distribution of this money to the fishermen in the Maritime Provinces. This information could as well be obtained between the day of his Budget Speech and to-day, as it can be procured hereafter. I presume the most competent authorities will be the officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department. I am not satisfied with the proposed $2 a ton. I only hope, however, that the fishermen themselves will get the benefit of the grant and not the owners of the vessels to a large extent. The hon. Minister proposes to give a certain class of boats $2 and another $4. In every part of the Maritime Provinces there is a different class of boats varying in size from 12 and 14 feet, flat-bottomed boats up to 35 or 40 feet in length. Some of those boats of a very fair size would have only two men. Therefore, if a boat of thirteen feet keel got $2 with two men and one with 30 feet keel only got $2, that would certainly not be a fair proportion. I think it should be so arranged that the bounty would be distributed according to the number of men in each boat and not according to the size of the boat.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The difficulty is to know how many men are engaged.

Mr. FLYNN. You will have to get official information. You could have a register of the boats and a return to the Department of the size of each boat and the number of men employed in it. No doubt many difficulties surround this question, and a good deal more care and time will be required to settle it satisfactorily than the hon. Minister has been able to bestow on it. The fishery overseers would be the proper persons to visit the districts and obtain the information required in order to distribute this sum in an equitable manner.

Mr. BRECKEN. I agree with the hon. member, that it is a matter of very great difficulty to distribute this bounty in an equitable way. I should like to see it distributed according to the number of men employed in the boats irrespective of size. In some cases the boats are owned by the fishermen themselves, but, in others, by the proprietors of fishing stations, and they vary a good deal in size. I know it was impossible for the hon. Finance Minister, in the pressure of time and business, to have propounded a very clear and distinct plan, but I look at it in this light—that the poorer the men, the greater the necessity they should receive assistance out of this bounty. I do not see why it should be distributed according to the size of the boats, because, after all, the men who are in a position to purchase and own larger-sized boats with more efficient gear are the men who stand less in need of the bounty than those who are struggling to make a livelihood in the smaller boats. Men should be appointed in the neighborhood of these fishing stations to issue licenses to those engaged in the trade, and see that that they are bona fide engaged in it so as to prevent men pretending to be fishermen for the purpose of getting a share of the bounty. In this view a minimum catch would have to be established. Some scheme of that kind would be more acceptable to the fishermen than that proposed by the hon. Finance Minister.

Mr. ANGLIN. It is much to be regretted that the hon. Finance Minister should not give earlier some outline of his plan for the distribution of this bounty, and so enable us to consult in our constituencies the leading men in that industry so as to obtain information which would probably have enabled the hon. Finance Minister to arrive at a more definite and fair conclusion than he has been able to reach. I agree with the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken that it would be better to apportion this bounty according to the men employed rather than to the size of the boat, because the smaller the boat and the poorer the outfit the greater the need of this assistance. If you divide the money according to the length of the keel there will be great jealousy aroused among the men, who will not understand why one should get more than another. I endeavored to ascertain from my constituents their views exactly, but I had so little information as to the views of the hon. Minister that I had but little to work on. Some wanted to know if the money was to be voted altogether for the encouragement of deep sea fishers or whether the inshore fishers would also be aided, or whether the ordinary boat was to be distinguished from the vessel thoroughly equipped for fishing; but I could not give any information on those points. There are difficulties in the way, and I am sure we would all have been delighted to assist the hon. Minister in arriving at a proper conclusion. If we are determined to divide $150,000 amongst the fishermen it should be done upon some fair and equitable basis. This is not a case where party interests or political considerations should have any weight. I am only sorry that I cannot now afford more information on the matter.

Mr. DECOSMOS. This discussion has so far apparently been confined to the eastern Maritime Provinces. The hon. Minister of Finance, in introducing his resolutions made no distinction, however, between the eastern and western Maritime Provinces. Now, Sir, allow me to draw your attention to one or two facts with respect to the fisheries. The total exports of fish for the last fiscal year was about $6,867,715. The total take of fish in British Columbia during the last calendar year, according to the report of the Inspector of Fisheries for the Province of British Columbia, was $1,454,321.

Mr. ANGLIN. Does that include salmon?

Mr. DECOSMOS. It is quite immaterial whether they are salmon or codfish. If we have a salmon aristocracy you have a codfish aristocracy. The produce of British Columbia amounted to nearly one-fifth of the total exports of fish. Now, I would remind the House of the fact that under the fifth article of the terms of Union between Canada and British Columbia, Canada agreed to protect and encourage the fisheries of British Columbia, and I take it that in any distribution of this $150,000 among the fishermen, and for the encouragement of the fisheries; the Province of British Columbia should receive its due share.

Mr. OGDEN. Not much.

Mr. DECOSMOS. Now, Sir, let me draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to this fact; that when the treaty of Washington was made it was stated by the present hon. Minister of Railways, and by the hon. Premier to myself personally before that treaty was adopted by this House, that Columbia was included. It turned out afterwards that Columbia was not included in the treaty, although Prince Edward Island, which was not in the Union, was included. As a consequence our fishermen have not been able to send their fish into the United States free of duty; we have not been able to send our oil or anything else that is produced from the sea, into the United States under that treaty. I think that in distributing this bounty the Province of Columbia should share man for man with the other Provinces. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn), as well as the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Brecken) is inclined to the view that the distribution of this award should be given as a poll bonus. Now, let us see how the Province of Columbia stands in regard to the fishing industry. Last year she had eight steamers of from five to fifty tons, ten schooners of from fifteen to eighty tons, 335 fishing boats, thirty-five flat boats, 146 canoes, with a sealing fleet, sixty-two sailors and 2,831 fishermen and shoremen. An hon. gentleman remarked that this was a salmon fishery, but I submit there is no difference between taking salmon in Columbia and taking fish off the coast of Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island in boats. Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia have no large rivers, though there is the Avon, the St. Croix, the Shubenacadie and others; but they are comparatively small. In framing this scheme we should take into consideration the character of the country. What may satisfy the small Provinces east may not satisfy the great Province west, and if the salmon fishery is at this moment the chief industry the salmon fishermen should be just as much entitled to a bonus as the cod fishermen in the Gulf of St. Lawrence or on the coast of Nova Scotia. We have also the seal fishery, which has grown up during the last few years. Last year there were ten schooners engaged in it and 146 canoes, which took 13,541 seals worth $170,242. Now, here is a deep sea enterprise that deserves encouragement. It is the same class of seals for which the United States Government receives over $250,000 of royalty from the Alaska Fur Company. My intention, in making these remarks, was to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to this point, that as Columbia contributes her share for the protection of the fisheries east, I take it she is entitled to her share of the money given for the encouragement of the fisheries; and I would like to hear the hon. minister state whether it is the intention of the Government, in the distribution of this bonus, to include Columbia. From the utterances we have already heard, it seems to be the opinion that this money is simply going back to the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces as a portion of that which was paid over to the Dominion by the United States. Now, that question was discussed here before, and the majority of the House expressed the opinion that that money was the property of the Dominion, and not the property of the Maritime Provinces alone, consequently we are entitled to our share of the money from the fact of our being a partner in the Dominion. I would now formally request the hon. Minister of Finance to state whether he intends to include the Province of Columbia in this matter.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The proposition is to reimburse the fishermen of that portion of the Dominion who have had taken from them by the treaty exclusive privileges which they formerly enjoyed. It is to compensate them for the competition which they are now meeting with from American fishermen. British Columbia does not come within the terms of the treaty, and American fishermen are not competing with them. The hon. gentleman says the people of British Columbia have contributed to the maintenance of the fisheries in the east and have a right to their share of consideration. That is quite true. Officers have been appointed there by the Dominion Government, and before the Session closes an appropriation will be asked for fish-breeding establishments and the encouragement of fish-breeding in British Columbia, recognizing the right they will have to the protection of their fisheries, the amount to be paid out of the general revenues of the Dominion. A number of communications have been received through members of the House representing fishing districts. There have been propositions to pay on the fish exports. It was felt that the amount would not reach the parties engaged in the business. Another proposition offered was that every man engaged in the fishing business should receive a certain sum per head. That, however, would be a difficult undertaking, although from a political point of view it would be advantageous. But there are two objects in view in the propositions submitted: first, to encourage the construction of a class of vessels that is much needed; second, to compensate the fishermen. It is the intention of the Government to use the fishery officers for the purpose of granting licenses and looking after this matter, but it would be a difficult matter to distribute the amount according to the number of men in a boat. The point with respect to which there is at present some difficulty is as to the size of the boat, but we may arrive at that by the length of the keel and the dimensions of the boat. The proposition now submitted to the House in its brief form has been the result of the recommendation of members connected with the fishing counties, and correspondents to whom they have written.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed to found a Bill on the resolution?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No, we propose to place a vote in the appropriation.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed to define the mode of distributing the money?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Not for the present year—not until we have had a year's experience.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has adduced, as a reason why Parliament is asked to pass upon this measure at this late period of the Session, that hon. members wish to give him the result of enquiries made during the Session. I feel it is to be regretted that the Government, who took up the subject so long ago, did not take it up in a manner to enable them to make a more equal distribution in connection with the grant. It is obvious that Parliament is being asked to vote this money into the hands of the Government. What the Government was bound to do was this—to have acquired information to have enabled them to go before Parliament, which would pass upon it. It might be said that it will not be necessary to retain the plan for more than the first year, and that therefore, the plan should be tried. The plan is to be tried after the Session, and the money will be distributed for the first year according to the views of the Government and not with the sanction of Parliament. This proposal is contrary to the two principles which should regulate a Government holding office under our Constitution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman loses sight of the fact that my hon. friend stated that the mode of making this distribution is to a certain extent experimental. What Parliament is asked to do is to appropriate $150,000 per annum for the benefit of the fishermen of this country. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance has taken Parliament in the fullest degree into his confidence by giving it all the evidence he has been able to gather on the subject. He has explained in the fullest possible manner to Parliament the mode in which it is proposed to deal with that which is obviously at present an experiment, and when we come to devise the means of making that $150,000 per annum useful for the fishermen for whom it is intended, when we crystalize that appropriation into an Act, the Government will have the advantage of possessing a year's experience and will be able to judge by a year's experience and the information which will be acquired on the subject, as to how they can best permanently provide for the administration of that money — what scheme they can submit to Parliament for the permanent appropriation of that money. I think the hon. gentleman is unreasonable in asking that more shall be done than to bring forward our determination to appropriate a specific sum, and outline the mode by which it is proposed to expend it. The hon. gentleman has left no vagueness as to the mode in which it will be expended, or as to how it will be appropriated, so far as we are able to form a judgment at the present time. The hon. leader of the Opposition does not go so far as the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Killam), who did nothing but fling taunt and insult and obloquy across the floor to my hon. friend the Finance Minister, because he comes down with his proposal to appropriate $150,000 for the benefit of the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces. The hon. gentleman represents a Province which has thousands and tens of thousands of hardy fishermen to whom this money will be a great and well-deserved boon, and has nothing for the Government and for my hon. friend who brings down this proposal, but the strongest imputations of the most dishonorable motives. He denies that the fishermen will accept this as a boon; and I say, Sir, that if he were accepted as the mouth-piece of the fishermen of the country the Government would at once withdraw the grant and the hon. gentleman would be in a similar position to that which he occupied when upon an appropriation for his own county appearing in the Estimates, he asked that the item be struck out. I repeat that if the hon. gentleman was the accepted mouth-piece of the fishermen, the Government would not retain this item on the Estimates for five minutes. Does not the hon. gentleman know that a large deserving body of the population of this country will gratefully receive this evidence of the fact that the Government are prepared now, as they always have been prepared, to give that consideration to them which is due to men engaged in an arduous, toilsome and dangerous profession, and a consideration which they have never received from hon. gentlemen opposite. How is it, I would ask, that we have $150,000 to appropriate to this object? Where does it come from? Who was it that opened the markets of the United States to the fishermen of our country? Who took away the prohibitive tariff which prevented the fishermen from getting access to the large markets of the United States? I say this boon was obtained by gentlemen sitting on this side of the House, despite the efforts of the leader and of the body of the Opposition to prevent it. A measure was brought down by which the markets of the United States were to be opened. The hon. gentleman sustained that proposition, but in sustaining it he condemned the attitude of the party with whom he is acting to-day, and in overwhelming numbers did what they could to prevent that market from being opened for the fishermen of our own country. Not only so, but in the first efforts of the Conservative party to protect the fisheries of this country they were met with nothing but taunt and insult and obloquy from the friends of the hon. gentleman, just as they have met with here to-night. When we submitted to Parliament large appropriations for the protection of the fisheries, we were ridiculed, and, had the policy of the hon. gentleman opposite been adopted, the whole fisheries of our country would have been left open as a prey to the United States fishermen, who would have gone upon them and absorbed those fisheries to the exclusion of our own people, while, on the other hand, our fishermen were shut out of the markets of the United States. But the Conservative party went on in their policy of protecting those fisheries, and the result was the accomplishment of the Washington Treaty, and the result was that we attained access to the markets of the United States as a quid pro quo from the use of our waters to which the hon. gentleman would have given them access without a policy of compensation. When my right hon. friend came back with this treaty in his hand and submitted it to Parliament, what did hon. gentlemen tell us in regard to that provision of the treaty providing for the appointment of arbitrators, of ascertaining how much money should be paid by the United States? That provision was treated with ridicule. They said that not a farthing would be obtained from the United States; that the treaty was a piece of waste-paper; but, under that treaty, the markets of the United States were opened to our fishermen, and under it we have received $4,500,000, or $5,500,000 if Newfoundland be included, as compensation to this country for rights which the American fishermen enjoy, and which, under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, they would have enjoyed to the same degree without compensation to the amount of a single dollar, and without giving our fishermen access to the markets of the United States. But in spite of the hostility, in spite of the efforts of these hon. gentlemen to prevent the fishermen of our country from having access to the markets of the United States, the proper compensation was got for the use and enjoyment of our fishing grounds by the fishermen of the United States. The hon. gentlemen opposite were in power when this award was made and this $4,500,000 received, and had they been able to prevent the adoption of that treaty the markets of the United States would have been closed to Canada and we would not have had in our coffers the $4,500,000 we received under that treaty. While they were in power this award was made, and it was known that $4,500,000 were to be paid out of the exchequer of the United States to the coffers of Canada. What did hon. gentlemen do with that money? Did they propose to give any consideration to the fishermen of this country? No, not a dollar. The hon. gentleman says we voted down a proposition that that money should go to the Maritime Provinces. Who voted it down? Why, Sir, only thirty were in favor of that proposition, and fifteen out of the thirty were from this side of the House. The hon. gentleman knows that all the leaders of his party, with perhaps the single exception of the hon. member for Gloucester, voted against that resolution; and yet, Sir, he taunts my hon. friend the Minister of Finance with having voted it down. What has the hon. Finance Minister done? The moment the financial condition of this country has improved, the moment we are in a position with this great and important interest, he comes down here and says that the proceeds of the $4,500,000 which has been obtained under the Washington Treaty, under that system of protection to the fisheries which the Conservative party adopted, shall inure to the fishermen of this country and are annually to be expended in their maintenance and support; and yet the hon. gentleman, associated with the party which has never raised a finger, which has never attempted to do anything to raise this country, when the hon. Minister of Finance comes down with a proposition to give to the fishermen of Canada all the benefit of that award, the hon. gentleman has no word of gratitude. He does not say, as the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Flynn) said, that he would not question my hon. friend's motives. How could he question the motives for an action which is so obviously a matter of justice and propriety? But the hon. gentleman not only does that, but he treats my hon. friend's proposition with obloquy and insult. If the hon. gentleman were trusted as the mouthpiece of the fishermen of the country, there would be a short story to this effect to give to that great and influential class of our countrymen that consideration to which they are entitled. I believe the hon. gentleman has greatly mistaken the intelligence of the fishermen of this country and the county he misrepresents, if he thinks he will not be held to a strict account for the manner in which he has endeavored to obstruct the final effort of my hon. friend to do justice to a body of deserving men. I would ask him to put alongside of his language the language of a man elected to represent that county in the Legislature of Nova Scotia—a man who has turned his back upon the party whom the hon. gentleman is associated with because of their utter indifference and neglect to the great interests of that constituency—and a man who has himself declared that there was no measure that would so entitle the Government of this country to the support and confidence of the county of Yarmouth as the very measure brought down by my hon. friend.

Mr. KILLAM. The hon. gentleman is a good hand at the use of adjectives. I care very little for his abuse. My own position on this subject is perfectly clear, and between my action and his I leave the people to judge at the proper time. The hon. gentleman says that an annual grant of $150,000 is provided. This is not the first time that I have had to contrast the opinion of the Minister of Railways with that of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance said that he did not intend to provide in the Bill for an annual grant, but to put it in the Supply Bill for this year.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I said no such thing. The question was asked by the late leader of the Government, if we intended to embody this vote in a Bill; and I said not until we had the experience of a year and knew what to embody in the Bill.

Mr. KILLAM. When the hon. gentleman made his proposition the hon. member for Richmond asked if he was going to make an annual grant, and he could not get a straightforward answer.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That statement is as incorrect as the other. There never was a statement from me to the effect that it was not the intention of the Government to continue it more than a year.

Mr. FLYNN. It was Sir Albert J. Smith who asked the question.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Sir Albert J. Smith asked some particulars of the details, and I said they would be given when the resolution was moved.

Mr. KILLAM. I am glad that we have been able to get the statement from the Government that it is to be an annual grant.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The resolution states so.

Mr. KILLAM. It does not alter what I was saying, such a Bill introduced which will provide in a clear and distinct manner, that this will be an annual contribution of what is due to the fishermen. The hon. Minister of Railways says this was fully explained by the hon. Minister of Finance. My opinion is different; no full explanation was made at all. He made a general explanation, which conveyed the idea that after he thought the subject over, he would fix the mode in which the money was to be paid by Order in Council; and we are now no more sure of the way this is to be done, and no fisherman is any surer of the amount he will receive than before the hon. gentleman made his explanation. The ground I take is perfectly clear. I say that by their financial policy hon. gentlemen opposite have taken unnecessarily out of the pockets of the fishermen of my Province during the last three years at least $500,000 to form part of his boasted surplus; and now he comes down, owing all this money and trying to compromise with his creditors by asking the fishermen if they will take back so much in full payment of all their demands. I do not profess to be an organ of the fisherman, but I feel bound to stand up here and proclaim the cause of truth and justice, and support those things which I believe to be morally right. I believe the course of the hon. gentleman in this matter to be morally wrong in not proposing to grant the whole of this award in such a comprehensive way that the fishermen will know it is granted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BRECKEN. I believe with the hon. Minister of Finance that this resolution has settled great difficulties, and I believe the plan proposed is perhaps suitable to the greater number of the fishermen. The reason I offered the remarks I did was not to catch a vote, but was owing to the peculiar position in which our fishermen are placed. They fish upon what is called half-line; the owner of a station or one of the neighbors owns a boat, and the crew fish on half-lines. This bounty must necessarily be small, and it is not likely to warrant them in altering their mode of business. I listened with great pleasure to the hon. Minister of Railways. We have recently had an election in Prince Edward Island, at which, to a certain extent, Dominion questions came up, and this Committee will hardly credit the fact that one of the cries of the Reformers against the supporters of the Government was that we had not obtained for them a share in the fishery award, had turned our backs on the fishermen in this important matter, and that the only men who, had they the power, would secure us a share of that award were our political opponents. The Finance Minister has placed that matter honestly before the Committee, and I wish his speech had been set before the electors of Prince Edward Island, where our opponents had the unbounded coolness and audacity to stand up as the champions of the revision of this award. When I contended some time ago in this House that we were, if not on legal, on equitable grounds, entitled to a division of this award among us, it was contended that the award was made on other grounds than the theory of territorial property. But when the question was put to the vote, did my opponents say that this property was particularly territorial property? But when you gave $1,000,000 to Newfoundland, you acknowledged that principle. On that occasion were the leaders of the Liberal party in this House found the friends of the Maritime Provinces? No; although it is true that the hon. member for Gloucester and other Reform members in the Lower Provinces voted for us. The Reform leaders, however, voted with the Government. And yet I repeat, the Liberals of the Island had the assurance to declare that if the Reform party had been in power at Ottawa the $4,500,000 would have been divided among the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces. If my memory serves me the hon. member for Lambton was First Minister when the award was made, and his Government had the power, had they had the will, to divide it.

Mr. ANGLIN. It was not paid over then.

Mr. BRECKEN. No; but you had the credit of the American Government that it would be paid, and you should have been thorough in your distribution, carefully considering whether the other Provinces were not as well entitled to a share as Newfoundland. I held the opinion three years ago that this fishery privilege was territorial property, and whatever injury was inflicted on British fishermen by the Americans coming within three miles of our coasts, was suffered by the people who lived on the shores of the Maritime Provinces. I accept this grant of $150,000 as a great boon to the fishermen, and I believe under all the circumstances that it was as much perhaps as the Finance Minister could accomplish. As he properly said, it is not a party question. I hope that this grant will be distributed mainly among the poorer fishermen, whose business needs a fostering care not necessary in the case of the classes in better circumstances. It is the poorer fishermen who ought to be helped by this timely grant, for which the Government deserves great credit.

Mr. RICHEY. Having been associated with a number of my friends on the opposite side of the House, as well as with many on this side, in the vote to which reference has been made more than once this evening, I feel called upon to disavow all participation with the sentiments expressed by many of them on this occasion. I am so far from holding with the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Killam), that the fishermen of Nova Scotia and other Maritime Provinces will disregard this vote, or consider it as one which is not given to them frankly by the Government, that I believe it would be received with that gratitude that ought to be evinced. Had I at the time when the resolutions were brought down, and which I felt it my duty to support, had an assurance that a solution of the question so much more favorable to the fishermen of my Province as this proves to be, would have been submitted by the Government. I should not have been found among the number who made the claim set forth with regard to the Provinces of the Dominion. Whatever may be my views as regards the territorial rights of the several Provinces, I believe that as regards the fishermen themselves, they must derive vastly more benefit from having this fund administered by the Government of the Dominion. My hon. friend has referred to the question of taxation. I would remind him that there is not a class of persons in the whole Dominion for whom specific exemptions have been made to such an extent as the fishermen, and when he speaks of this measure being brought as an electioneering trick to overcome difficulties arising from the unpopularity of the National Policy, I tell him that just because of the popularity of the National Policy, which is daily increasing, the Government might have taken their stand on that in safety and refused us the justice which I am glad to see they have concluded to render us. I believe I speak not only for Nova Scotia, but for all the Maritime Provinces, when I say that they will recognize in this act of the Government, not only the desire, but the most astute endeavor to provide in the very best way for the compensation of those engaged in the fisheries.

Mr. ANGLIN. It is to be regretted that at this late hour on Saturday night the National Policy and the Washington Treaty should be dragged into the debates. The hon. member for (Queen's, P.E.I.) knows best what promises and assurances he and his friends gave to the people of Prince Edward Island with regard to the disposition of what they consider their share of the award. He knows best whether or not he led them to expect that they would obtain that portion of the money to which they believe they are entitled. I am not aware that on this side anything was said to justify any unreasonable expectations on that score. As to the question whether this was or not to be an annual appropriation, let me quote from Hansard what the hon. Minister of Finance said:

"Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the $150,000 proposed to be given as bounties to fishermen is simply a grant for a year, or whether it is proposed to ask a similar grant every year?"

"Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not proposed by Act of Parliament to take an appropriation year by year."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Exactly, by Act of Parliament.

Mr. ANGLIN. That justified the conclusion on this side that the Government did not wish it to be understood, at all events, that they pledged themselves to make this a regular annual appropriation, but that it was merely a tentative proceeding. I do not think the hon. Finance Minister had a right to become so angry a while ago when it was said he had denied it was to be an annual appropriation. With regard to the Washington Treaty the hon. Minister of Railways went out of his way to make a violent attack on this side of the House, as to the position we have taken toward the fishermen from time to time. He alleges that we never did anything for them. We never taxed them. As to the National Policy there is no class of people on whom that policy presses more heavily. They buy large quantities of the heaviest woollen cloths and cottons, and have to purchase nearly all their provisions, so that there is no class who pay so much under the National Policy as the fishermen. I quite agree with the hon. member for Yarmouth that the $150,000 will go a very short way towards counterbalancing the taxes imposed on the fishermen under the National Policy. With regard to the treatment of the fishermen, the hon. Minister of Railways says that when hon. gentlemen on that side undertook to protect the fisheries their efforts were scorned and scoffed at by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. After their old treaty expired, the Provinces not being then united, we in the Lower Provinces endeavored to protect our fisheries. We undertook to enforce a system of licenses, but each year the demand considerably diminished. We found great difficulty existed in preventing Americans fishing on our territory without paying even a nominal compensation. Hon. gentlemen opposite did make an extraordinary effort to protect the fisheries; they employed small boats and crews at certain points along the Gulf to prevent the Americans from fishing within our limits, but they never succeeded in driving off one American vessel. The display was not one of strength, but one of pitiable weakness. When the hon. Minister of Railways pretends that one result of that action by the Government was to bring about the Washington Treaty, he goes a little too far even for him. That matter was discussed years before, and was used merely as a pretext by the British Government to bring about a treaty with the United States, which they desired very much at that time. I read a speech of a member of the British Government in the House of Lords, in which he stated how negotiations were opened in regard to this matter, and one of the means was the fishery question, which was used as a pretext for opening negotiations that led to the Washington Treaty. It is something new for the hon. Minister of Railways to defend before this country that treaty in which we gave a great deal more than we received compensation for, either directly or indirectly, even taking into account the $1,000,000 or $5,000,000 received for our fisheries. We accepted it under compulsion, because we were told that it was necessary for the welfare and security of the Empire that it should be ratified. I for one protested against it, chiefly because this reason was not stated as plainly as it ought to have been, and because some faint attempt was made to persuade us that on the whole the treaty was a pretty good thing. The hon. gentleman claims credit for the amount received, but when the treaty was of such a character that we would not willingly have ratified it, nobody is entitled to credit for having received this money since we have given more than we received. But who really is entitled to any compensation we have received? Is it hon. gentlemen opposite, whose speeches were quoted by the American Commissioner in his case as supporting his contention, or is it the hon. gentlemen on this side, then forming the Government, who insisted that despite the declaration made by hon. gentlemen opposite there was real value in our fisheries for which we were entitled to compensation, and succeeded in establishing our claim.

I find here a speech of the leader of the Government, a large portion of which was actually incorporated in the case prepared by Mr. Foster. Let me read a few pages from it where the hon. gentleman stated :

"I may be liable to the charge of injuring our own cause in discussing the advantages of the arrangement, because every word used by me may be quoted and used as evidence against us hereafter."

Even then he felt that he was saying what might be used against him, but he felt by a high sense of duty, by a regard for truth and justice, he proceeded to speak of the great advantages we would derive from having the markets of the United States open to our fishermen. There is no doubt that some advantage would be derived by our fishermen from opening the markets of the United States, and from the removal of the duty on mackerel. The whole of his remarks are well worth the attention of the House, but I will only read the following :—

"Those opposed to the treaty seemed to set great value upon it, and we were asked by it to surrender. 'Oh,' said they, 'why should we give up our valuable fisheries, such important privileges, and for so small a consideration?' Had those who talked in this way studied the case, I believe they would not, else they would form a different opinion. That our fisheries are valuable, I am well aware. Their value under favorable conditions could not be overestimated; but that value would be great or small just in proportion to the markets we possessed. By this treaty we surrendered very little, and gained in many ways; for, in addition to our own fishing grounds, which we still retained, we had the privilege, if we chose to avail ourselves of it, of going into the United States waters to fish, and would gain a free market, which would have the effect of increasing the value of our own fisheries to a most important extent."

There was a declaration immediately after the treaty was made that by that treaty we granted very much and gave away very little. I find the hon. Minister of Railways himself is credited with having made a similar declaration that went to destroy the value of the fisheries altogether. He is reported to have said also:

"Was there any one who could doubt that the practical result would be to leave the Canadians, in a very short time, almost without any competition at all? The Opposition, for a long time, had held out the idea that Parliament and the Government must protect the poor struggling and industrious fishermen of Nova Scotia and the other Provinces against the operation of this treaty, which, it was held, would be ruinous to them in every way."

Why, years ago, he charges us on this side with being most solicitous for the welfare of the poor struggling fishermen, sneered at us then because we were so solicitous for them, and now he says we never did anything for them:

"Gradually, however, light began to break upon them, until, at last they discovered this extraordinary fact, that while the clauses of the treaty which related to Canada, were held by every intelligent fisherman to be a great boon, as something which would take the taxes off them, and relieve them from hundreds of thousands of dollars tribute that they were now compelled to pay to a foreign nation, the fishermen of the United States were, on the other hand, just as much averse to the treaty as our own people were anxious that it should be carried into effect."

Well, Sir, Mr. Foster believed, and reasonably believed, that if these declarations were to be taken as evidence before the Commission, the Commission were forced to the conclusion that our fisheries were of very little value, and if the Government had not taken other means to establish that these statements were ill founded, that our fisheries were of real value, we should never have received a single dollar of that money. Now, Sir, it is said the fishermen ought to be very grateful for this bounty—a bounty in a double sense, if we are to take the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Richey). Grateful for what? Does not this money belong really and equitably to the fishermen? Why, we have declared that it did; the hon. Minister of Finance himself has said so. If money is being paid to them which has been taken from them, why should they be grateful for receiving their own? Why should they not rather resent the fact that they have been kept out of their own for so many years? Three or four years have passed since this money was paid over to the Dominion Government. Once or twice in this House the demands have been made by hon. gentlemen representing the Maritime Provinces for a distribution in some way of this money. Some hon. gentlemen insist that it ought to be divided among the Provinces territorially. I agree that that claim was not well founded in law, and I went further and contended that such a distribution would not be best for the fishermen, that it would be better for them if the money were held by this Government and administered on behalf of the fishermen, and I suggested several modes by which the interest annually might be expended for their benefit. I am glad to find now that the Government are acting to a great extent on my views, that they now acknowledge that this money belongs equitably to the fishermen. But the fishermen will owe no gratitude to the Government for it or to anyone else, they are but getting what is now due them. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Brecken) asks why the late Government did not apportion this money in some way between the Provinces, or appropriate it for the benefit of the fishermen. The reason is that they had not obtained the money when they went out of office. They had succeeded in obtaining the award, but for some time there were grave doubts as to whether the United States would recognize the validity of that award, and the money was not paid over until some time after the present Government came into office. The first Session of Parliament after that money was paid over was under the control of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and if the distribution should have been made then, as I believe it should, the fault rests upon the hon. gentlemen opposite. From first to last we have defended and asserted the full rights of the fishermen, and I am sorry the Government have so long delayed the justice which it owed to them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he agreed with the hon. leader of the Government that this money ought not to be distributed to the Provinces?

Mr. ANGLIN. No, I did not say that. I agreed with the hon. Minister to this extent, that the Provinces had not a right to a division of this money territorially. If it did not belong to the Imperial Government in strict law, then it certainly belonged in strict law to the Dominion. In that view I fully concurred with the hon. leader of the Government.

Mr. OGDEN. I cannot allow these resolutions to pass without offering a few remarks. I was not in my place when the resolutions were introduced, but I am glad to know that the Government have taken this matter into consideration, and that they have resolved to place $150,000 per annum in the Estimates to be distributed among the fishermen as a bounty, which I suppose is about the interest of the $1,000,000 of the fishery award. If I remember correctly, in 1879, when the late Minister of Finance delivered his speech on the Budget, he said he left in the Treasury $1,500,000 of the fishery award to pay off the national debt. It was evident that it was not the intention of that hon. gentleman to distribute that amount of money among the fishermen. I do not pretend to say that I am a prophet, but in this House I have been fortunate in my predictions. I said on the 7th April, 1880, that I would oppose the giving of this money to the Local Governments, that I believed it should be in some way distributed among the fishermen, and as it came from the sea the fishermen should receive the benefit of that money. I thank Parliament for having carried out the suggestion which I made on that occasion. I take to myself a certain amount of credit, but the minds of honest and great men always move in the same channels, and no doubt the hon. gentlemen were acting on the idea I put forward then. The hon. gentlemen opposite did not intend to give the fishermen $1. While the late Finance Minister said the amount should be used to pay the national debt, the present Government are resolved that the interest on the fishery award shall be given as a bounty to the fishermen. When the hon. leader of the Government moved a resolution that this should not be set apart as a fund for the Maritime Provinces but should go into a general fund, how many hon. gentlemen opposite voted on that question? I believe the only ex-Minister who did not shirk the vote was the hon. member for Lambton; and to the hon. member for Gloucester, the late Speaker, I give him credit for having stood up and voted that the money should be distributed to the fishermen or to the Provinces. It was certainly not the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to give $1 of that money to the fishermen, but the hon. gentlemen now occupying seats on the Treasury benches have looked fairly on the claims of the fishermen, and whenever I have spoken in their behalf I have said I had implicit confidence in the Government, that they would deal justly and generously with the fishermen, and I am happy to say that to a very great extent my expectations have been realized. I would not bind the Government to say how much they will give to each boat, but let Parliament leave it to their own good judgment to distribute the money in the way they think best; and I know they will call to their assistance men competent to assist them in carrying out their scheme. I would not like to bring the Government down to any particular method of distributing the money, because it may be advisable, and I believe it will be, to pay the fishermen a certain amount upon each barrel of fish caught, and the matter should be left in the hands of the Government at least until we have had a little experience. Some hon. member said the fishermen are very heavily taxed under the present Administration. They, however, obtain tea much cheaper than they did under the late Government. Coffee is also cheaper; molasses, which is largely used by them, is also obtainable at a very much lower price than formerly. Rope is free; fishermen's salt is free. My reason for making this statement with respect to salt is because it has been asserted by certain gentlemen who are opposed to me and by a gentleman who is travelling through the county which I represent, that fishermen's salt is taxed. I say before this House that it is free, and I challenge any hon. member to deny that statement. I thank the Government for submitting a policy which is going to be so warmly supported. I thank the Government for not forgetting my constituency, and I represent a very large fishing constituency. Certain hon. gentlemen have sought to make the House believe that fishermen are a poor and miserable race; I am a fair representative of the fishermen. The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) on one occasion described the fishermen of my county as pale, wan, starving men. He said: "The hon. member for Guysboro', whose eyes stand out with fullness, does not properly represent his starving constituents." The policy of the late Administration did not put much fat on his ribs, and I would not exchange policies with the hon. member for Charlotte. I sincerely hope hon. gentlemen opposite will offer no obstruction and will say nothing against these resolutions, but allow them to pass and leave the matter in the hands of the Government, and next year when they come down fully acquainted with all the details, they will be prepared to take into consideration any suggestion which may emanate from either side of the House, and I have unbounded confidence in them. I believe they will deal fairly and generously with the fishermen, as they do with all other classes of the community, and I feel confident that they are coming back in 1883, after the general elections, with a stronger support than they have now—"of whom"—as Mark Twain said—"I expect to be one of which."

Mr. ANGLIN. I see by the Votes and Proceedings that Mr. Richey, of Halifax, moved a resolution affirming that the Provinces should receive the full benefit of the award. To this Sir John A. Macdonald moved an amendment, setting forth that, among other things, "such expenditure and the public advantage to be derived therefrom are correlative, and that the portion of the fishery award paid over to Canada constitutionally and of right belongs to the Dominion of Canada." It was against that proposition that I voted, and I said that I always maintained that the money should go to the fishermen.

Mr. GILLMOR. I may say that any reference to the fishermen of Guysboro' was because the hon. member for that county (Mr. Ogden) said they were so poor that they had to get from the public chest an item of $1,000.

Mr. OGDEN. Does the hon. gentleman say that they got $1,000 from the public chest?

Mr. GILLMOR. Well, provisions to that amount were left there.

Mr. OGDEN. The hon. gentleman is in error, $1,000 was advanced on a public work, and repaid every cent of it in labor and material, by the fishermen. They are not indebted to this country a single dollar.

Mr. GILLMOR. I presumed that they were in poor circumstances, or they would not have asked for help. I remember the discussions with regard to this award. I remember that the advocacy of the views of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Richey) was very able and convincing, and I also remember the speech by the right hon. leader of the Government, and I was troubled to know who had the best of the argument. I think that, legally speaking, perhaps the hon. leader of the Government was in the right of it, but I also believe that, in equity, the fishermen were entitled to the money. It was, however, the decision of the majority of this House that this money should go into the Treasury, and I never expected that it would go to the fishermen. I am now rejoiced to learn that the Government have come to the conclusion, whether from the reconsideration of the arguments or not I cannot say, that the fishermen are to get this money, for I believe they deserve it. I think that this is a question upon which there need not be a party fight. I do not wish to criticise any hon. member, but I rather think my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Killam) was to a limited extent the aggressor in his encounter with the hon. Minister of Railways, though I must say that the latter is always only too willing to accept a challenge, and I also notice that he is always more eloquent when he begins to fight than when he reasons a question. I think the statement made by the hon. Finance Minister was such as I could accept under the circumstances. I confess, however, that I think, in fairness to myself and to the question, he should have intimated to me that he desired to obtain such information as might be of assistance to him in distributing the money. All the information we had from him was what he said in the Budget Speech, that he intended to appropriate $150,000 as a bounty to the fishermen. I believe that the subject is a very difficult one to deal with, and that even when they go on the ground, the division will be attended with great difficulties. I am satisfied that even if the members from the different constituencies representing the fishing population were to sit down themselves and deliberate upon the matter, they could not agree, and, therefore, I maintain that unless the question had been taken up last season, it would be impossible to give any better idea of the division of the money than that given us by the hon. Finance Minister. I think he has a general idea of how the money should be expended, and that on the whole he is not very far astray. As he has stated, there is such a variety of fishing craft, from the smallest boat, managed by only two men, up to schooners of 100 tons or more, that it is almost impossible to know how to distribute the money. I think, on the whole, the most equitable plan is to divide it among the fishermen, though even then it is difficult to decide who are fishermen and who are not, or to say how many months they should be engaged each year in fishing in order to constitute them fishermen for the purposes of the bounty. Then, again, the habits of fishermen and the construction of their boats, and so on, in one part of the Dominion are quite different from those in another part. I think any evils or mistakes that may arise can be remedied, but that the details cannot be embodied in a law at the present time. The question must be investigated to a greater extent than is possible at the present time. A great deal of nonsense is talked on this subject by those who do not know anything about it. For example, I am satisfied that those who will get most money under the proposed system will be those who suffer least. Those vessels which are able to engage in deep-sea fishing, such as schooners of 50 or 100 tons, are not those which suffer most or are most ground down by the American fishermen. It is those who do the in-shore fishing—those who, in rough weather, cannot go far from shore, that suffer the greatest inconvenience. The fishermen suffer the greatest inconvenience from the American fishermen, who come with their large vessels and stretch miles of net across the channels where the fish play, greatly to the injury of those who are obliged to fish nearer shore. But with the disadvantages there are certain advantages in the American fishermen coming to fish off our coasts. There is the winter fishing. We can remember when the fishermen in the winter season could not get more than $8 or $10 a month and when they had just to take their pay when they could get it; but now it is difficult to get a man for less than $30 or $40 a month. Just as soon as winter sets in the American fishermen come there and hire our fishermen at good wages, and they derive considerable advantage also from the Americans coming to buy our fish. I believe I am not exaggerating when I say that they leave in my county in one season $150,000, $200,000, and sometimes as much as $300,000, on the whole. I think the Government have come to a wise and just conclusion in deciding to distribute among the fishermen the interest on this money, and I believe they are adopting the best mode they can in distributing it. I only hope they will see that it is distributed in such a way as to give satisfaction, and so far as I can aid them I will do so. I think I know perhaps as much about the matter as the hon. gentleman who spoke about his poor fishermen. No one ever heard me say my fishermen were poor fishermen. I represent a county in which lumbermen, farmers and fishermen reside, and there is as much money, intelligence, comfort and every luxury enjoyed by the fishermen as by any other class of the people. This money fairly belongs to them, and I congratulate the Government on having done one thing I can approve of—I think the very best thing they have done since I have had a seat in this House.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have listened with a good deal of attention to the remarks which have been made by the various speakers on this subject, and I quite agree with them that it is very difficult to formulate a scale for the equitable distribution of this fishery award, with the limited knowledge we have at present on the subject. Whilst listening to the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite, it struck me very forcibly that in all their murmurings and complaints (not in the interests of the fishermen certainly) with regard to this grant of $150,000 to the fishermen, they have not advanced one practical view, or suggested one idea, with regard to this distribution. Hon. gentlemen opposite having failed to show how it ought to be distributed, and with a knowledge of its being a difficult problem, I quite agree with the hon. the Minister of Finance, and it shows the wisdom of the Government, that delay should occur in order that he may be able to obtain all possible details, and be better advised, before deciding how this grant should be distributed. The complaints made by the Opposition, and their statements as to how the fishermen are taxed, is hardly worthy of comment, as it is well known they are intended to deceive and mislead the honest electors, more particularly the fishermen of the country, without there being a shadow of truth in them. The fishermen, and in fact every elector is aware that if the fishermen were taxed it was under the late, not under the present, Government, as was shown by the hon. member for Guysborough, who referred to tea and coffee, now on the free list, whereas under the late Government they were taxed; molasses lower than under the Mackenzie Government for domestic purposes, but free to the fishermen; and salt free; but he omitted to include in the free list nets, lines and twines. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite what other articles the fishermen are taxed upon? With regard to the principle of the distribution, I will ask the hon. the Minister of Finance to be careful to see that the poorer class of fishermen receive their just quota. It is that class who would more highly prize the portion of the bounty they receive than those who are better able to do without it. I feel, however, every confidence that when the hon. the Minister of Finance has enquired fully into this matter, he will make such a distribution as will leave no cause for complaint or dissatisfaction on either side.

Mr. GILLIES. Before this measure is passed I desire to bring to the recollection of the hon. Minister of Finance that at the time this item was brought down I had a question on the paper, asking whether the fishermen of the lakes in the interior of the country should participate in the grant. The hon. Minister stated that when the matter should be brought forward for discussion at the present time, an answer would be given. There are a great number of fishermen on the coast of Lake Huron, in the riding I have the honor to represent as well as in neighboring ridings. There are no less than about 100 fishing boats engaged on that lake, distributed as follows: Kincardine, 10; Inverhuron, 3; Port Elgin, 5; Southhampton, 15; Cove Island and the Indian Peninsula, 20; Owen Sound, 10; Meaford, 15; and Collingwood, 20, approximately speaking. That would bring up the number of boats to about 100. Now, these fishermen on the lakes depend upon the proceeds of their labor as much as the fishermen on the Atlantic and Pacific coast. I think it would only be reasonable then that the circumstances and claims of the fishermen in question should be considered as well as those of the fishermen on the Atlantic Coast. [Great noise and interruption from the explosion of fire-crackers.]

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I am very nearly 40 years in Parliament, and I have never known anything so disgraceful as the noises this evening.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad to hear the First Minister make that statement. I do hope the gentlemen indulging in this practice of exploding fire-crackers will cease at once. It is discreditable to this assembly.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Some members say it is the pages. It is not the pages, it is members of the House who are misbehaving.

Mr. GILLIES. The fisheries along the coast I have referred to, employ about 294 fishermen. Estimating the tonnage at ten tons per boat, there will be a total of 980 tons; and I should imagine that the proceeds of the industry of the fleet would be at least $124,000 in the aggregate per season. This matter deserves the attention of the Government in order to come to a decision as to whether these men are not entitled to a share of this bonus equally with the fishermen operating on the coast of the Maritime Provinces.

Resolutions agreed to and reported.

THE ONTARIO BANK.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would ask the indulgence of the House for leave to introduce a Bill necessitated by the length of the Session. In the earlier part of the Session, a Bill intituled: "An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Ontario Bank and change the nominal value of the shares thereof, and for other purposes," was introduced and passed through this House and the Senate; and in it it is provided that the shares therein remaining unconverted on the 15th of May shall be disposed of by the directors. Well, as the Bill cannot become law until after the 15th of May, the action of this Bill is postponed until the 15th May next year; and as this delay would tie up the affairs of this financial institution, unduly. I move for leave to introduce Bill (No. 170), intituled: "An Act to amend the Act of the present session, intituled: 'An Act to reduce the capital stock of the Ontario Bank and to change the nominal value of the shares thereof, and for other purposes.'"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In order to prevent a failure of legislation, I should be very glad to see this Bill passed at once.

Bill read the first, second and third times, and passed; and (at 11:45 o'clock, p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

MONDAY, 15th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were severally introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 171) to increase the amount placed at the disposal of the Governor in Council by the Act 34 Victoria, Chapter 8, for claims on the Bank of Upper Canada.—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

Bill (No. 172) further to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1880.—(Mr. Bowell.)

TENDERS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to be permitted to lay on the Table, instead of a return made to the motion of the hon. member for Yarmouth, an abstract of the papers which, I think, will substantially convey all the information that the hon. member for Yarmouth required. It has been impossible to obtain that return in a form more complete than this in time to lay it before the House. The hon. gentleman seemed to insinuate on one or two occasions that I was not using due diligence in bringing down this return. The hon. gentleman shakes his head—I am glad he does not insinuate that, but he seems to think that it was desirable to have them laid on the Table more promptly than has been done. I will, therefore, ask permission to read a letter addressed to me by the Chief Engineer, Mr. Schreiber, dated 12th May, 1882:

"SIR,—On the 27th February there was an Order of the House of Commons passed for copies of all advertisements or circulars asking for tenders for the supply of iron and other stores during the period from the 30th June, 1880, to the 31st December, 1881—and also for the year ending 30th June, 1878. I beg to inform you that copies of the abstract of the tenders received during this period are being made, and also a list of the persons who were asked in each case to tender. Even these will take a long time to prepare, and will not likely be ready for this Session. I therefore send herewith the lists of persons asked to tender, and abstract of tenders received for the period from the 1st July to 31st December, 1880. The accepted tenders have been marked in the abstracts thus, †. I would recommend that these portions of the return be laid before the House in order that it may be seen that the list is being done under the circumstances to furnish the information, and some idea may be formed of the voluminous character of the returns asked for and the labor there must necessarily be in presenting such a return.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER,

"Chief Engineer of Government Railways."

Now, when I state that this abstract, simply giving the names of the persons who were invited to tender for these stores, and an abstract of the amount of tenders that were sent in, are as voluminous as this, the hon. gentleman will see that it will still require months of time to complete the return in the form in which the motion was made to the House. The hon. member for Yarmouth will have an opportunity of perusing it, and if he finds in it all the information he desires, I shall be extremely glad to be relieved from the labor and the expense of preparing so voluminous a return as would be required to cover the motion as set forth. This return will give the hon. gentleman information of the number of persons who in each case, for each class of supplies, were invited to tender, and I think he will find from them the evidence that a sufficient number of parties were invited to tender to insure the Government obtaining the supplies at the lowest possible rates, and he will also find that these tenders came from Halifax, Moncton, St. John, Montreal, and some from Toronto. The hon. gentleman will also find the prices at which parties, in response to those tenders, sent in application, and he will find marked with a cross the tenders that were accepted. He will also find evidence that, having regard to the quality of material, the Government have in every case taken the lowest tender, and having regard to cheapness they have actually taken the lowest tender in every case. If the hon. gentleman finds that this return contains all the information he desires, I would be glad if he would let me know it, because it would save the necessity of carrying on the preparation of the return.

Mr. KILLAM. I appreciate the diligence of the minority, but when so many returns are asked for, some of them may, perhaps, be forgotten even by so diligent gentlemen as those occupying the Treasury benches at the present time. If the hon. Minister thinks that, in anything I have said, I was mentioning anything improper, personally, I now withdraw it. I merely stated that I was asked by different individuals to apply for this information, and I told the hon. gentleman that the public might judge in the way I suggested the other day. I am very glad we are going to get even the partial information the hon. gentleman has offered us, and I hope it will cover the ground. If there is anything in the motion I made which required a more voluminous return than was necessary, I told the hon. gentleman the other day he could condense it to suit himself, but to give us the information as soon as possible.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned toward the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned; that is to say:

For a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, both in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....$ 660,000

For a railway from St. Raymond to Lake St. John, both in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....	384,000
For a railway from River du Loup, in the Province of Quebec, to Edmunston, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....	240,000
For a railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, both in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....	224,000
Total.....	$1,508,000

The said subsidies to be granted to such Companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to complete the said railway respectively, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by Order in Council, and according to descriptions and specifications to be approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made by the Company with the Government, and which the Government shall be empowered to make, and to be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments on the completion of each ten miles of railway, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with the whole work undertaken, such proportion to be established by the report of the said Minister.

He said: It will be found upon reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway Act of 1874, that it was therein contemplated that aid should be given to the lines of railway connecting railways in Ontario and those in Quebec with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The 14th clause of that Act provides:

"The Governor in Council may also grant such bonus or bonuses, subsidy or subsidies to any company or companies already incorporated or to be hereafter incorporated, not exceeding $12,000 per mile, as will secure the construction of the branch lines extending from the eastern terminus of the said Canadian Pacific Railway to connect with existing or proposed lines of railway; the granting of such bonuses or subsidies to be subject to such conditions for securing the running powers and other rights over and with respect to the whole or any portion of the said branch railway, to the owners or lessees of the main line of the said railway, or of any section thereof, or to the owners or lessees of any other railway connecting with the said branch railway, as the Governor in Council may determine; but every Order in Council granting such subsidy shall be laid before the House of Commons for its ratification by resolution of the House."

Under that authority, and in accordance with the proposal to subsidize lines of railway to connect the railways of Quebec and Ontario with the Canadian Pacific Railway, a subsidy was proposed of $12,000 a mile for 120 miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway extending from Pembroke to Nipissing or the point now called Callander Station. The object of this portion of the resolution is to provide the same facilities for connection with the lines of railway connecting the great commercial centres of Ontario, and the existing lines of railway permeating the Province of Ontario with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will be at once apparent that no steps could be taken more calculated to promote the industries of that Province, or to subserve the railways of that Province, or develop the North-West itself by furnishing the most direct, cheap, and easy means of communication between the North-West and these great commercial and manufacturing centres. The provision itself is entirely within the scope of the provision of the law, and there is no doubt it was in contemplation at the time that policy was adopted, that aid should be given to the trunk lines of railway connecting with the Ontario railway system, in the same manner as was done in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, connecting in a direct line with the railways in the Province of Quebec. It will be seen, by reference to the discussion, that when my hon. predecessor was introducing this Act and submitting his policy to the House, I took the liberty of asking the question as to whether it was intended to subsidize one or both lines, and the answer showed the hon. gentleman then had in view the subsidizing of both lines of railway. It is possible that the then financial condition of the country induced the hon. gentleman to pause and hesitate about carrying out the original proposal of giving the lines of railway in Ontario the same facilities for connection with our great national line of railway to the Pacific as has already been provided by Parliament for connection with the East. I may say that the Government have been solicited by the Company, the Northern and North-Western, for a subsidy of $12,000 a mile, for these 110 miles, or thereabouts, between Callander Station and Gravenhurst, but the Pacific Junction Company having also sent a large deputation to the Government with the proposal to secure the construction of that portion of the line from Gravenhurst to Callander for a subsidy of $6,000 per mile, the Government, in submitting their proposals, have taken the lowest amount which we have any reason to believe would secure the construction from Gravenhurst to Callander. Very great interest is taken in this measure throughout Ontario, and a very great desire is felt to have the railway system of that Province placed in the most direct, cheap and rapid connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is also almost impossible to overrate the importance to the North-West itself, to have the competition in furnishing supplies to that country that will be thus given, between the industries of Ontario and Quebec. I do not imagine that any difference of opinion can exist in reference to the proposal contained in that resolution. The next proposal is for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile for a railway from St. Raymond to Lake St. John, both in the Province of Quebec. At first sight this may appear to assume somewhat the character of a local Provincial railway, but there are features connected with that work that take it out of that category and place it on a broader and more substantial basis that will commend it to the approval of this House and the country. The undertaking to connect the harbor of Quebec, the ocean outlet of the Province of Quebec, with Lake St. John, is an undertaking of considerable magnitude. The Province of Quebec has contributed very largely to that railway; private capitalists have come forward and placed a large amount of private means in this important work. Having given to this subject for a long time the most careful and thorough consideration, having gone over that portion of the line which is built from Quebec to St. Raymond, about thirty-five miles, and having studied carefully the statistics in reference to this section of the country around Lake St. John, the Government have come to the conclusion that almost Dominion objects will be obtained by the construction of that work. The country around Lake St. John is said to be the most fertile of any section of country, certainly of any undeveloped section of country in Quebec. I am aware that the Eastern Townships are admitted to be a very attractive and fertile section of the country, but they are already well supplied with railway accommodation; but this section of country remaining in the Crown and possessing such a degree of fertility, if access could be obtained to it, would prove a most effective means of repatriating the Province of Quebec, that in no other way can we so effectually secure the bringing back that portion of the population of Quebec that has gone across the frontier than by giving access to a very large fertile section of the country. We believe, therefore, the object of the Government will be regarded with favor by both sides of the House and by the people of the country, as a means of bringing in a large part of the most industrial population of Quebec, and no method can be more effective than to grant the aid now found to be absolutely necessary in order to supplement the efforts of the Province and capitalists who have undertaken the work. In addition it is contemplated to extend this line of railway, when it is found practicable to do so, to James' Bay, for there is a large section of undeveloped country there, and when this is accomplished it will give another ocean outlet to the Old Country. But irrespective of that larger view of the subject, the claims of the proposal are ample to justify the Government in asking this small subsidy to this important work. I may state the principle on which the subsidy has been arrived at and the amount placed at $3,200 per mile. All we propose to do in regard to this and the railways to which I shall subsequently call attention, is to furnish the means for providing the superstructure. It takes about 100 tons of rails and fastenings to finish a mile of railway, and those can be purchased at Montreal for about $32 per ton; this sum will provide the superstructure, leaving it to private enterprise and the Province of Quebec to implement that sum by the additional means required in order to secure that object which we believe to be a very important one, of opening up that fine and extensive wheat growing country. In fact, if reliance is to be placed—and I have studied the matter with the greatest care and attention, and I believe reliance can be placed on the representations made—on the statistics furnished, the wheat growing power of all the country around Lake St. John is scarcely to be surpassed by the fertility of the North-West itself, and under those circumstances we feel we are justified in asking money aid to the extent of furnishing the material to lay the track. So it will be seen it is proposed to furnish that subsidy as the work advances. The next resolution is to aid the construction of a railway from a point between Rivière du Loup and Rivière Ouelle to Edmunston, in New Brunswick, which also takes it out of the character of being a section of provincial railway. In the first place it is inter-provincial. It connects Quebec and New Brunswick; but it is not on this ground I give it the character of a Dominion work. It is known that Canada is most anxious to find the means of furnishing an open winter port for Dominion trade without having recourse to neighboring territory in the United States. It is known that the laudable efforts made to have Canadian trade pass through Dominion channels and to Canadian ports at all seasons of the year, has been hindered by the short distance to Portland, and we believe that we will furnish an additional means of competition against the United States ports if by this means we provide a connection between our own country by the shortest Canadian route to an Ocean port; and when I mention that St. John and St. Andrews, both open ports at all seasons of the year, will be brought 158 miles nearer Quebec, than by the Intercolonial Railway, the importance of furnishing a small amount to aid in attaining that object will at once become apparent. We may now practically take Quebec as the starting point for our traffic, because, as I have stated to the House, the Canadian Pacific Railway having purchased the line from here to Montreal, and thus having a through line to Montreal, and having made traffic arrangements over the line from Montreal to Quebec, Quebec now practically becomes the ocean terminus of the Pacific Railway, because they not only have traffic arrangements but are entitled to make a rate to Montreal and also to Quebec itself. When you have reached, therefore, the port of Quebec, which, under existing arrangements, is the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is a matter of no small moment to know that by this short route we will be able to make the distance from Quebec to Liverpool almost equidistant, whether you pass through Portland or St. John or St. Andrews. I know there will be no difference of opinion in this House as to the importance of increasing by every means in our power, our ability to compete with the ocean ports of the United States, to which otherwise a good deal of our traffic must be expected to flow. Not only so, but the distance from Montreal to Liverpool will be only about three hours longer via St. Andrews, or St. John than via Portland, and I am sure it is the wish of the House that such an object should be gained if it can be accomplished for $240,000. That amount has been arrived at in the same manner as in the former case, it being the sum required for the superstructure, for the steel rails and fastenings, leaving it to the Company to provide everything else in connection with it, and limiting the liability of the Government to that comparatively small sum. With reference to the next resolution for the railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, both in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $224,000, I may say that the House is aware that a charter was granted during the present Session to Mr. Blackman, who is engaged in the project of reducing the ocean voyage to some 1,600 miles from the west coast of Ireland to Newfoundland by constructing a railway across the island of Newfoundland for 300 miles to Cape Ray, establishing a ferry for fifty-two miles to Cape North, building some hundred miles to the strait of Canso, running from the eastern extension, now in operation, to New Glasgow; and we have authorized the construction of seventy miles between New Glasgow and the Intercolonial at Oxford, as a means of furnishing the shortest and most direct line of communication that can be found between our great commercial centre, Montreal, and consequently our whole western country, and Liverpool and London. I may say that the Government of Newfoundland have given him all the aid he has asked in reference to the construction of 300 miles of road, on that island, and I have been assured by him, that if this Government would furnish the steel rails and fastenings for seventy miles, from New Glasgow to the Intercolonial, he would, at once, proceed with the construction of the work. But, supposing this scheme were to fail, that it should prove to be chimerical—if it should turn out that there was any difficulty in crossing the strait between Cape Ray and Cape North, we shall still, by the continuation of this line, obtain the most direct line of communication between our great commercial centres and Europe that it is possible to obtain. The Nova Scotia Railway Company have bound themselves to construct a line from the Strait of Canso to the harbor of Louisburg, which is an open harbor at all seasons of the year, and the nearest open harbor, before Cape North was mentioned, to be found in Canada. The construction of this short line of seventy miles by this limited amount of aid will have the effect of shortening the distance between Montreal and the harbor of Louisburg by some thirty-eight miles, which is at present involved in going to Truro in the first instance, and New Glasgow in the second instance. You have at present two sides of a triangle, of which the proposed railway will be the hypotenuse. Not only so, but the great coal fields of Pictou and the rising industries of that country are brought thirty-eight miles nearer the west than they are at present, which is a most important element in connection with this branch of the subject. I may remark that Mr. Blackman believes that by carrying out the scheme he is engaged in he will bring Montreal forty-eight hours nearer to London, than it can be brought by any other means. He believes he is going to be able to bring all the mail and a large portion of the passenger communication of a larger part of the United States, by Cape North and the Strait of Canso, and then by this short line across to St. John, and so, by the nearest means possible, the city of Montreal. He believes the mails of Chicago and the north-western States, if not those of New York, will be almost entirely brought by this line, and there is every reason, I think—and I have looked very carefully into his figures and calculations—to believe that this scheme can be carried out in its entirety, so that Montreal will become the thoroughfare of communication between Europe and Chicago, and I am sure if that can be done, anything this House can do to promote that object, will be giving a great impetus to the travel and commerce of the world, and especially to that mail communication to which rapid transit is now considered of such importance. I think, therefore, no difficulty will be felt by any gentleman in this House, on these grounds to furnishing the means—as the subsidy practically will do—of providing the superstructure, as the remaining portion is provided for by other means. I may say, Sir, that I am afraid we are not entitled to claim any credit for the novelty of this proposal; I am afraid I must give it to my hon. friends on the other side, for the policy which has led up to this proposal. It is well known that the late Government adopted the policy which had then my heartiest sanction and co-operation, and I have since had no reason to doubt that the policy they adopted in that respect was a wise and judicious one—I say they adopted the policy of furnishing lines of railway connecting or communicating with the Intercolonial, with the means of providing the superstructure with the iron for the road. Under that policy some seventy-five miles, which I have reason to believe would never have been constructed otherwise, has been constructed, most of it in the Province of New Brunswick, furnishing communication to a number of important districts of the Intercolonial Railway; and the policy we now propose is simply a slight extension of the policy of the late Government. While all those results are based on Dominion rather than sectional questions, it is a very slight advance on the policy adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite, when in power, of aiding in the development of the country by furnishing the superstructure of these roads. I believe it is a wise policy to aid in the construction of these lines. Although these are private enterprises it is impossible to build these railways in Canada judiciously in any section of the country by means of either subsidies from the Local Government or private enterprises without enriching the Treasury of Canada. Who receives the benefit from all the increased trade which flows from the increased development of the country by the construction of these roads? Certainly the Dominion Treasury. Every mile of road constructed puts a certain sum into the Treasury. In Nova Scotia when we were an isolated Province we involved ourselves in a heavy indebtedness for the purpose of constructing railways which gave no direct return to the Treasury, but after careful consideration it was found that the entire money expended in this way by the Province was returned year by year from the increased revenue arising from the increased development of the country. I think, therefore, that in that respect this policy is based on a sound and legitimate foundation. I wish to mention one word with reference to what is not contained in the resolution. My hon. friend for the county of Ottawa (Mr. Wright) has placed before me a pressing application for aid to a work which I have no doubt is of great importance in developing an important section of country. I refer to the Gatineau Railway. His colleague, the member for the city of Ottawa (Mr. Currier) and some other gentlemen have placed an application in my hands for an extension of the line from Gravenhurst to Callander, opening up a valuable timber section to the north of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and there is a scheme proposed of a stronger character in connection with an application for a road from the Intercolonial from Edmunston, with regard to which I have had some urgent communications with my hon. friend the member for Queens, New Brunswick (Mr. King.) I may say, in addition to that, that there has been an application made by parties interested in the construction of a line of railway from the Intercolonial Railway to Paspébiac, about 100 miles in length, which it was stated would not only furnish a means of communication with a very large and important section of country, but would also become a very valuable feeder to the Intercolonial Railway. The line, however, to which I particularly refer now, is one with which I regret I have not been able to deal at present, is a line from St. Marys, just opposite the city of Fredericton to Apohaqui on the Intercolonial Railway, or that portion that runs between Moncton and St. John. It is claimed that this road about seventy miles in length, would open up a very valuable section of country which at present is in want of railway communication; and it is further stated—and it is a very important statement, if it proves to be well founded—that a line of railway between St. Marys and Apohaqui would intersect a coal section where valuable bituminous coal could be obtained, which would greatly facilitate the operation of railways in that section of country, because it would be nearer than the Springhill coal mines, which are the nearest point of supply at present. I may say, with reference to these applications, that the Government have not felt able to go further than the resolutions which are submitted to the House; but during recess careful investigation and examination will be made by the Department into all these applications, and we shall be very glad if any of them can be placed on such a footing that we can ask the House to aid them as we have those which are embraced in these resolutions.

The question having been put,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman opposite will allow me, I will take the resolutions to-day, and introduce a Bill to-morrow, on which any discussion could be taken. This would save time.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt it would save time; that is to say, it would shorten the interval of time during which hon. members of Parliament might consider the hon. gentleman's measure. At this stage of the Session, when many hon. members have left, and many others are about to leave, so that the hon. gentleman's suggestion is practically one which would enable more hon. members to be present than otherwise, would be possible during the consideration of the measure; but that is an indication of the extreme inexpediency of having to deal at this period with the hon. gentleman's proposal. It is not my intention, at this time, to enter into any very lengthened discussion of the observations he has made. We received the first intimation of this Bill on Saturday, and we are called upon to take the first step upon it—and the hon. gentleman proposes several steps—to-day. The hon. gentleman has informed us that he has received communications from various persons in reference to this and other applications. He has not brought down a single one of these papers; he has not given a single item of information which would enable us to judge how far he has reached right conclusions on these things. With reference to the proposed railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, we know from the newspapers that there had been applications from two corporations, that deputations had been here, and that the hon. gentleman had been interviewed. We learn now that he received considerable information and written proposals from these companies as to what they would do; but the hon. gentleman has not laid them on the Table so as to enable us to judge whether his proposals are expedient or not; it is impossible, if he had, that they could be accessible to hon. members, because it is impossible that they can be printed. The hon. gentleman has informed us that one Company has made application for $12,000 per mile, and another for $6,000, but I think that hon. gentleman, before disposing of this question, should know what these proposals are, and what the various considerations suggested by the rival applicants are, on the obvious questions which arise on these applications. There are questions of policy, questions of route, questions of running power, questions of the efficiency of connection, all of which it is obviously intended Parliament shall not deal with at all, but shall leave absolutely to the discretion of the hon. Minister, without having seen any of the papers. So with reference to the St. Raymond and Lake St. John Railway, the hon. gentleman says he has carefully studied the statistics and enquired into the matter, and has reached certain conclusions; but I ask whether Parliament should not be supplied with this information in order to enable us to form an intelligent view. So, again, with reference to the railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, the hon. gentleman tells us that this is, in fact, part of a great line which some Mr. Blackman is likely to construct in order to shorten the route to Europe by twenty-four hours, and to secure that portion of the American passenger trade which passes by Chicago. The hon. gentleman has pointed out that he has received a good deal of information from Mr. Blackman, that Mr. Blackman's figures are very important and very interesting, and that they lead to certain conclusions; but where are Mr. Blackman's figures? Why have we not got the papers so as to enable us to judge whether Mr. Blackman's views are sound, and if sound whether they support the conclusions which the hon. gentleman has arrived at. Then the hon. gentleman says he has received applications from other companies, one of which he mentions as being very important—that of the Grand Central Railway Company—but he is not able to deal with that application this Session. Why do we not see that application, which, I understand, is one conjoined with that which the hon. gentleman proposes Parliament shall deal with this Session, namely, the application for aid to a railway from Edmunston to Rivière du Loup. I say the hon. gentleman ought to have been prepared, in bringing down these propositions, to give Parliament a full opportunity of dealing intelligently with the facts as they have been presented to him, or of ascertaining what the information is on which he bases his conclusions, both as to the absolute and the relative importance of the various lines. I will only say just now, that the subject the hon. gentleman proposes is one of the very greatest importance, as being, however he may disguise it, very largely a proposal that the Dominion Parliament shall grant aid to local or provincial enterprises. It is of the greatest importance, both as regards the enterprises which it is supposed to assist, and the principle of the rate of aid which it is proposed to apply, and the money assistance which it proposes to extend, and above and beyond all, in the precedent which it proposes to create. Under these circumstances, looking at the fact of the novelty of the proposition, and the advanced hour of the Session, I think it is deeply to be regretted that the hon. gentleman should not have brought it down at an earlier period.

Mr. CIMON (Chicoutimi), (in French.) Mr. Speaker, as I am about to leave to-morrow, the House will allow me to say a few words, to thank the Government for the grant just made to the Lake St. John Railway. I must tell you that I am perfectly astonished to see the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) oppose it on the futile grounds that this road is a provincial one. Still, in opposing this grant, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) is merely acting as did his party when it was in power. You will recollect that during the five years that the Liberal Reform party was in power, I annually asked for a grant for the railway from Quebec to Lake St. John, and that, every year, the Liberal Government met my demand with an unqualified refusal. Yet I did not lose courage; I continued to speak in favor of that road. The first time that I broached the subject, Lake St. John was derided as an unprofitable and frozen up district; but I persevered, and by dint of speaking about it, the question became a popular one in this House, and it is a satisfaction for me to-day to see the members from Ontario and from the Maritime Provinces as well as from Montreal, display an interest in Lake St. John, and speak in its favor. My voice is no longer the only one to make itself heard in this House in favor of Lake St. John. This is a great triumph for me. But the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) surprises me from another point of view; he is opposed to the grant to Lake St. John because, says he, there is no information before the House to show what that railway is. How can that be?

Does the leader of the Opposition not know that the Government instructed an engineer to gather information on the Lake St. John Railway, and to submit it to the Minister of Railways? At the last Session the report of that engineer was laid on the Table of the House; it was a detailed report giving all the required information, and it was printed among the documents of the Session. I am quite surprised that the hon. leader of the Opposition should come and tell us to-day that he is unable to form an opinion on the question, as he has not read the documents. I see that he makes little of the Province of Quebec. He who works so hard, who shuts himself up in his room every day, surrounded with documents to facilitate the study and discussion of public affairs, I am surprised that notwithstanding all this love of work, he has not found time to cast his eyes over the documents concerning the Lake St. John Railway, on the very documents that would give him most important information. Assuredly, Mr. Speaker, had the hon. leader of the Opposition taken the trouble of reading this important report, he would have seen that the construction of a railway from Quebec to Lake St. John was not of a local, but of a general interest, that it will open to settlement an immense and fertile territory, capable of feeding a population of from 200,000 to 250,000 people, who will contribute to the national wealth and help to fill the public coffers. I thank the Government, Mr. Speaker, for what it has done for the Province of Quebec; I thank it for its grant to the St. John Railway, for having given that road to the Province of Quebec, and assuring us that it is to be built ere long. I have always had faith in my leaders. I said last year I felt confident that if the Government found an opportunity of aiding that important enterprise, it would hasten to give it a grant. I continued to agitate the question, and my faith has not been disappointed. I am glad I had such faith in them. Last year the leader of Lower Canada (Sir Hector Langevin) told us to be hopeful, that for the time being he could not give us a grant, but that next year we might have a chance. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) did not put faith in that promise, and said: "I have no faith in the words of the hon. Minister of Public Works; next year again you will get but promises. I do not think that the Government will come to the aid of that enterprise." And yet he, too, was of opinion that the Government should grant a subsidy to the road. We have more faith in our leaders than the Opposition have in theirs. We know that they have at heart the interests of the country. Our faith has not been deceived. I knew that the leader of Lower Canada would not break his word. I renewed my efforts this year, and it took some time to gain the point, but at last we have this grant. Once more I thank the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways for the aid they have given the Province of Quebec by granting a subsidy to the railway from Quebec to Lake St. John.

Mr. WRIGHT. The resolution introduced by the hon. Minister of Railways is one of great importance, and will receive my support. The policy inaugurated by the Government is one calculated to advance the best interests of the Canadian people. It is admitted on all hands that a good system of railways is calculated to promote the prosperity and develop the resources of the country. I am satisfied, that in aiding the enterprises mentioned in those resolutions, the Administration is advancing in the right direction. While they have secured the construction of the main trunk lines, it is of importance that aid should be given to feeders of those main lines. Therefore, while I am in favor of granting the aid asked for in those resolutions, I would hope the Government would see its way clear of aiding another enterprise of an equal, if not more important character. I allude to the Gatineau Valley Railway, and its mineral branch. The reasons for asking for this aid may be briefly stated. A charter has been granted to a company for the purpose of constructing a railway from Hull to the Desert, through the Valley of the Gatineau. It is also proposed to build a subsidiary branch through the mineral region. An application has been made to the Quebec Government for aid, which I have every reason to believe will be granted. I have received a telegram from the Hon. Mr. Chapleau, from Quebec, in which he assures me that his Government takes a great interest in the project, and suggests that we should apply to the Dominion Government for aid as well. The reason for asking for this grant may be briefly stated. The construction of this Gatineau road will create a most valuable feeder for the Occidental and Intercolonial systems of railways. It will also prove of the greatest importance from a colonization point of view. One hundred miles due north from the city of Hull, I am assured, are millions of acres of good agricultural and timber lands, on which millions of Canadian people could find happy homes. I was informed by the Rev. Father Deleage, who for many years was missionary for the Indians of that region, that so fertile was the soil that from one bushel of fall wheat he had repeatedly reaped sixty bushels in return. I was so much impressed with his statements that I induced him to form them into a memoir which I presented to the hon. Minister of Public Works, and they now form part of the Archives of the Dominion. He also assured me that the lands of that region would also afford homes for millions of people. The construction of that railway would also add another Province to the Dominion. The Gatineau River extends 400 miles into the interior of the country, taking its rise in the vicinity of that great affluent of the Saguenay River the St. Maurice. It drains an immense tract of country richly endowed with agricultural and mineral wealth. The lacustrine system of this region is one of the finest in the world, the whole of it teeming with trout and all the other fishes found in our Canadian waters, which alone would prove a great attraction to intending settlers. The Gatineau River is composed of a series of water powers which would literally drive the spindles of the whole world. The mineral resources of the county of Ottawa are of incalculable value. Immense deposits of the richest iron ore can be found in many places. There are also immense deposits of galena, asbestos, and all the other minerals to be found in Canada. The phosphates alone are of the greatest value, and, to my mind, will prove of more importance to Canada than are the silver mines and guano deposits of Peru. One cannot but hope that at no distant period, those fertilizers will be manufactured in our own country. The Gatineau Valley Railway will pass, for 150 miles, through a country which is settled by a most active and intelligent population. The way traffic alone would justify the construction of this road. The Gatineau region has contributed more than any other section to the revenues of the country, by the payment of timber duties, and has received nothing in return. I trust that at least some measure of justice may be meted out to this section of the country, and that this railway will receive some aid from the Government in its endeavor to develop its resources. The argument in favor of granting aid to this railway may be briefly stated. It will form a most important feeder for the Occidental and Intercolonial system of railways; it will open up a vast tract of country for settlement and colonization; it will develop the mineral, lumbering, and agricultural resources of the Gatineau section; it will practically add another Province to the Dominion; and it will afford railway facilities to a most active, intelligent and enterprising people. Under these circumstances, I submit that the Government should grant a subsidy in aid of the construction of this railway through the Valley of the Gatineau.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will only say a single word with reference to the objection of the leader of the Opposition, that information on this subject has not been submitted to the House. The hon. gentleman knows that the usual course is that in matters of general interest papers are asked for and brought down. And as has been already remarked by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Cimon), so far as Lake St. John is concerned, the papers were moved for on a former occasion, by parties taking an interest in this scheme, and everything respecting this road was laid on the Table of the House. The hon. gentleman knows that in the Railway Committee the subject was discussed very fully, when a charter was applied for by Mr. Blackman, and that charter was granted. I may read a very short despatch from the Globe which embodies a description of this project as follows:—

“St. John’s, N. F., May 8.—On Saturday night the Assembly passed an Act incorporating the Great American European Short Line Railway. Large and important concessions were made to the Company. They receive from the Newfoundland Government 5,000 acres of select Crown lands for every mile of railroad they construct. They are conceded the exclusive monopoly of the country for railroad purposes for forty-five years, and are to enjoy during that term immunity from taxation on all material required for railway construction. The question of an annual subsidy to the Company or endorsement of their road-bed bonds to the extent of $3,000,000 has been left to the constituencies, as the current term is the last of the existing Legislature, and the General Election takes place in the autumn. The new railway syndicate is composed of New York and London capitalists. The object of the Company is to establish more rapid, safe, and certain communication between America and Europe across Newfoundland. The outline of the scheme is the construction of a railroad from the most eastern point of the Newfoundland coast across the island to Cape Ray. The western terminus will connect by steam ferry with the railway from Cape North over the island of Cape Breton to the Straits of Canso, the straits to be crossed by ferry. The line will traverse the north shore of Nova Scotia, and form a junction with the Intercolonial Railway, from which connections will be effected with railways communicating with Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Montreal, Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco. From the east shore of Newfoundland the Company will establish a line of ten powerful, swift despatch steamships to connect with the west coast of Ireland, and thence by fast express trains with London and all continental cities. The minimum saving of time between London and New York is estimated at forty-eight hours. The whole sea voyage is reduced to 1,700 miles between these great commercial centres, and the dangerous coast, a thousand miles in extent, between Cape Race and New York is completely avoided. The Company anticipate carrying annually across the Atlantic 200,000 passengers. They are sanguine they will completely absorb the transportation of mails for the Government of America, Europe and Asia. Construction will be proceeded with immediately.”

That gives, in a condensed form, the information on this subject which has been before us for some time in the Globe. I want, before sitting down, to say that in reference to the application for a line of communication from St. Mary’s to Apohaqui, it was simply a case in which the member for Queen’s has taken a warm interest, using every effort in its behalf. Both the hon. member for Queen’s and the member for King’s have used very powerful arguments to show why this line should be taken up, an investigation will be made with a view to ascertain what it was the duty of the Government to do at the ensuing Session.

Mr. MILLS. I think the House has reason to complain that an important measure such as this is should be announced for the first time at the close of the Session. It involves the very important question of public policy, and should have been disclosed to Parliament at an earlier period of the Session, so that the representatives of the people might have had ample opportunity to consider it in all its bearings. It is practically a proposition to aid railways generally throughout the Dominion. I am not, at this period of the Session, going to enter into a discussion as to whether this is an improper course to pursue or not, but it is highly improper in these last days of the Session, when more than half of the members on each side have left for their homes, to bring forward a proposal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Those members did not leave before these resolutions were on the paper.

Mr. MILLS. Before they had an opportunity of considering them, and when they had made up their minds that the Government were about to close Parliament and ask for a dissolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Every hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who has left has endorsed the resolutions.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think the hon. gentlemen has the right to make an assumption of that kind. I do not think Parliament has before it the information to enable them to come to an intelligent conclusion. This is another instance of the improper policy which the administration has pursued this Session. They have withheld every question of public policy and legislation until the last hours of the Session; they have ceased in a great measure to be a representative body, or to discharge the duties of such a body, and we simply register the decrees of the Government and hand over legislation and everything connected with government to the hon. Ministers for the time being. I protested when the hon. gentleman brought down a resolution similar to this one reserving 100,000,000 of acres at the close of the Session, two or three years ago, and I do not think hon. gentlemen are called upon to enter into a discussion of the policy involved in these resolutions. In my opinion the Government have treated the House in a most improper manner in submitting a question of such importance as that involved in these resolutions at the last moment of the Session.

Mr. KING. The subject now before the House is one in which I feel deep interest, and I take this opportunity to enter my protest against the scheme adopted by the Government. I protest against the unfair manner in which New Brunswick and the county I represent has been treated in this measure. During the early part of the Session the hon. member for Sunbury and myself asked for an interview with the hon. Minister of Railways, and pressed that the road, which had been recognized by the late Government as an important feeder of the Intercolonial, should be aided if aid were granted. The hon. Minister informed us that it was out of his power to comply with our request, and that he was not in a position to furnish rails; and that the most he could do, as there was no precedent under which he could grant a cash subsidy such as is now proposed, was to give a subsidy for carrying mails. On the strength of that declaration, we thought it was useless to press our claims, but later on in the Session we understood a new departure had been taken. The Government were to adopt a new policy, and intended to introduce a measure such as that now before the House. The members from Quebec and New Brunswick met and appointed a Committee, and decided to ask for an extension from Rivière du Loup to Edmunston, and also an extension to the Intercolonial between Salisbury and Norton some seventy miles in New Brunswick. In order to save the time of the House, I will read the memorial that was presented to the hon. the Minister of Railways as this points out the merits of the road:

"To Sir CHARLES TUPPER,
"Minister of Railways and Canals.

"We, the undersigned members of the House of Commons would most respectfully call your attention to the fact that at the time union of the Provinces was consummated, provision was made for the construction of a line of railway between Halifax and Rivière du Loup.

"That in the selection of a route for said line of road in order to avoid the great military objection to any line in close proximity to the American boundary, it was deemed advisable to locate it via north shore of New Brunswick, adding very materially to its length.

"That so urgent have the demands since been for a shorter commercial line that the Local Government of New Brunswick have been forced to give aid to the extent of 2,000 acres of land per mile, to a line running from St. Mary's in the county of York via the Valley of St. John, to Edmunton near the Quebec boundary. That said road covers a distance of 160 miles, and is at present in good condition, and being operated by the New Brunswick Railway Company. The requirements of inter-provincial trade demands an extension of said road north-westwardly a distance of seventy-five miles to form a junction with the Intercolonial Railway, between Rivière du Loup and River Ouelle as provided in a charter granted to said New Brunswick Railway Company. And also an extension south-eastwardly from St. Mary's, county of York via the head of Grand Lake, an equal distance to a point on the Intercolonial Railway between Salisbury and Norton, as provided in a local charter granted to a Company known as the Central Railway Company.

"The westerly extension of said line will enable the inhabitants of the upper St. John to reach the markets of Quebec and Ontario by a direct route. The southerly extension will pass through the coal mines of New Brunswick, which are the nearest known coal areas to Quebec, and which are capable of furnishing an inexhaustible supply of coal suitable for railway, and superior to any yet discovered for ordinary forge purposes. It will also afford a direct line between the capitals of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The extensions referred to will aid materially in developing the sections of country through which they may pass and give to their inhabitants much needed railway facilities.

"Their completion will, at the same time, afford to the people of this Dominion the shortest possible all-rail line to the seaboard on Canadian territory. Will do much to promote reciprocal inter-provincial trade, and help to cement the bonds of union between the different Provinces. Asking your consideration of the views here presented, and hoping that you may be disposed to look upon the work referred to as one, the promotion of which would be to the general advantage of the Dominion of Canada, we would earnestly request that you may be pleased to use your influence to obtain a subsidy from the Dominion Treasury, which, added to the aid it is confidently believed will be given by the Local Governments of Quebec and New Brunswick, will ensure the early completion of a through line of road between the points named.

"(Signed) 80 TORY, 40 LIBERAL."

That memorial was signed by 120 members of the House of Commons, eighty of whom were Government and forty Opposition supporters. I took some trouble to obtain signatures from hon. members on this side of the House, as did the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) those of hon. gentlemen opposite. I listened with interest to the speech of the hon. the Minister of Railways, in which he attempted to point out to this House that the extension from Rivière du Loup to Edmunston was in the interest of St. John. I am not prepared to differ from the hon. gentleman in his views with regard to this matter. I agree that the extension of this road would be in the interests of the Province of New Brunswick, but I wish to read what the St. John Sun, the organ of the hon. the Finance Minister in that city, said of this matter on the 28th of January, 1882:

"The extension of the railway from Edmunston to the St. Lawrence would mean for St. John the loss of all the up-river trade above Woodstock. Business men in St. John have in many instances come to believe that the railways built in New Brunswick have each and all been the means of drawing trade from St. John. Whatever foundation there may be for the statement as regards existing railways, there need be no doubt as to what will follow the building of the road from Edmunston through. The cities of the Upper Provinces will supply all the upper St. John. Why should flour come from Ontario to St. John by the Intercolonial or via Boston, to be sent up the St. John river, after this road is through? What St. John merchant will sell a barrel of flour on the upper St. John? Take beef, pork, iron, heavy hardware—why should these go to the Upper Provinces from this city after the opening of this road? Why should lumbering supplies be sent from here? Will anybody explain how St. John can hope to retain this trade? Having suffered this loss, what is St. John to gain? Some one may suggest: 'Why, we shall get through freight and we can load steamers for Europe!' But not a barrel of ordinary freight from any point west of Quebec will come by this route that will not come more cheaply by the Megantic 'short cut' from Montreal. In fact, there is no advantage whatever, promised or hoped for by means of this route, which will not come to us in greater fulness and more speedily by the Megantic, while by the latter we are in little danger of losing the trade we have already. Whatever advantages may accrue to Quebec or Montreal from the building of this extension from Edmunston, in the light of past experience St. John merchants and people will see few that are likely to come to them. The business of the Upper St. John is something to this city; divided among the cities of the Upper Provinces it would amount to very little for any of them. The additional trade to be thus divided above is not a sufficient incentive to induce them to promote the building of the extension, but the loss of this trade to St. John is a strong reason why this city need not help it. In this position St. John will have the sympathy of the bulk of the population along the St. John River, whose market for their agricultural produce is largely in St. John. Whatever helps to build up St. John helps the farmers along the river; whatever tends to injure St. John goes to destroy the farmers' market here."

I confess that, in my humble judgment, this is a sectional view; but I think the manner in which the Government have dealt with the extension of the Rivière du Loup line, both north and south, is on the whole most unfair to New Brunswick. I find, on looking at the proposition before the House, that it is proposed to aid a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, in Ontario—a line which, I understand, is controlled by a company, and will act simply as a feeder to a line already subsidized by the Dominion Government.

Then there is the road from St. Raymond to St. John's, Quebec, to which a subsidy of $384,000 is to be given. We have heard that this is to be a part of the great line to St. James' Bay, but I find that no such claim is made for that road. In an article which appears, to-day, in the Gazette, the organ of the Government in Montreal, it simply said that this road will open up for settlement one of the finest districts in the Province, and, as a colonization work, is second, in importance and the benefit it will confer, to none in contemplation, in progress or in operation in the country. Then we have the road from Oxford to New Glasgow, to which it is proposed to give a subsidy of $324,000. The hon. Minister of Railways has informed us that this is to be part of the Great European and North American Short Line Railway; but if so, this is the first we have heard of it, and there is no argument which will apply in favor of this road which will not apply with equal force in favor of the other. The hon. gentleman says it will shorten the distance between Montreal and certain points in Nova Scotia by some thirty-eight miles; but the line I advocate will shorten the route that distance if the shortest possible line in Canadian territory is to be adhered to between these points and Montreal. I could wish that at this moment the hon. the Finance Minister was free from the responsibilities of office, that he was free from the trammels of party, so that he might stand up and advocate in more eloquent terms than I can command, the claims of the Province of New Brunswick and his native county. I am certain that he would point out to the Government that the line I am now advocating is one which is entitled to the recognition of the Government, especially as it is a line which, when he was endeavoring to enlist the sympathy of his province for Confederation, he assured them it would be one of the results of the Union. I think he would point out that while it was highly desirable to aid in the development of the coal mines of Nova Scotia, yet that New Brunswick had coal mines which though not very extensively mined, produced coal equal and in some cases superior to any discovered, and that it might be mined sufficiently for the purposes of our local railways. It might be said that New Brunswick had received compensation elsewhere, but some advantages that St. John, for example, is it receive, are more for the benefit of Halifax than of St. John itself; while, as to other supposed advantages, she is paying fully what they are worth. I would like to ask, though I scarcely expect an answer, if the speeches made by the hon. Finance Minister in this House and out of it, have influenced the Government in dealing so harshly with us. He has been in the habit of saying that we get more than our share of aid from this Government, but I think it can easily be seen that, in comparison with Nova Scotia, we are not getting our share. The hon. gentleman could point to the fact that the hon. the Minister of Railways had provided liberally for his own Province. We have first, the Chignecto Railway; then we have the road from Oxford to New Glasgow, $224,000; then the Intercolonial extension to Halifax, the increased passenger accommodation at Halifax. Then when we come to Quebec: we have the St. Charles embranchment, which rendered a portion of the Intercolonial comparatively useless, $536,000; St. Raymond to Lake St. John, $384,000; and Rivière du Loup to Edmunston, $240,000. Then we go to Prince Edward Island: we find a new road there, which is being subsidized by the Government, so that, on the whole, when we compare the treatment of New Brunswick with that of the other Provinces, we have a right to complain. We are told that the matter will receive the attention of the Government during the recess, and that, perhaps, some time or other, we may get our share. I heard a report, that one gentleman was stating throughout my county that he had had letters from the hon. Minister of Finance to the effect that this proposition was to be considered along with others when he next visited Queen's. I scarcely believe that report, but if it is not true the hon. Finance Minister will have the opportunity of contradicting it. If, however, he did make such a statement to influence the electors in his native county, I beg to assure him that he much mistakes the temper and spirit of the people if he supposes he can influence them by such considerations.

Mr. IVES. I had not the pleasure of hearing the hon. Minister of Railways when he introduced these resolutions. I am therefore unable to say whether he has announced as his policy in the future the aiding of railways of provincial importance by the general Government. I have been somewhat surprised, however, at the disinclination of the hon. the leader of the Opposition, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to discuss the merits of this policy as a matter of principle. It looks to me as if the question embodied in these resolutions is one of as great importance as any railway question which has been brought before this House during the present Parliament. I had understood that the policy of this Parliament was to build and assist railways of the Dominion, and that it was not the policy of this House to aid railways of local or provincial importance, no matter how great that local or provincial importance might be. However important may be the roads mentioned in these resolutions, it seems to me that their adoption practically amounts to a new departure in policy—practically to the adoption of a policy of building or assisting to build, by Federal subsidies, any railway in any Province which is of local importance in its neighborhood or locality. If this is the policy, I think it would be well for the hon. leader of the Opposition and the right hon. leader of the Government to discuss this matter before the House, and that the House should, before adopting these resolutions, decide whether so important a departure should be made in the policy of the country. One thing appears to me to be certain, and that is, that if we aid these railways this year, we should have no reason for refusing to assist railways of equal importance which may hereafter apply for similar aid—and we have already heard two applications in the course of the last fifteen minutes, one very ably presented by the hon. member for Ottawa, who has certainly given as good reasons as any I have heard for aiding the other schemes, and another by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. Other railways could be mentioned, which are important to their localities, which it is difficult to construct, which it is important should be constructed, and which it is impossible can be constructed without provincial or Dominion aid; and if we are prepared to assume the construction of the whole railway system of the country, provincial and Dominion, we should not do so without understanding what will be the natural consequences that will flow from that step. I have nothing to say against the construction of the Lake St. John Railway or the other railways that have been mentioned; they are important; but other railways have been constructed already by capitalists in the different Provinces, and I would ask the hon. gentlemen who are pressing for assistance for the Lake St. John Railway, or the Edmunston Railway, what reason is there for the construction of these railways that does not apply to the North Shore Railway, which is certainly a very important road. This measure is going to have a retroactive effect; we are not merely providing for the construction of railways in the future, but we must go back and assist in defraying the cost of those railways which had already been built but which are in debt; we must help, both directly and indirectly, to relieve the Provinces of these debts. If we start we cannot stop; it may be well enough; I do not know that it is proper to stop; I believe in aid to railways, although I would hesitate to adopt this principle; but, if we have any ambition to reduce our national debt, though I am not a prophet, I can say that if we adopt this policy of building Provincial railways with Dominion subsidies, it will be a long time before we shall be able to talk about applying any surpluses to reduce the debt. I am surprised at this proposal, and it seems to me that the hon. leader of the Opposition is abrogating his functions, is deserting his post in not challenging in some way or other, either approving or disapproving, so important a principle as that involved in the proposition to construct railways in the several Provinces with Dominion money. For my own part, I have so much doubt that before I vote on the question I would like to hear it discussed as a matter of principle.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I purpose approaching the matter with delicacy and moderation—delicacy, because I may offend some hon. gentlemen on this side, and moderation, because I feel so bitterly disappointed at the result of all the negotiations we have had, that I hardly know how to take this matter up. I cannot help feeling that, though supported by the Government, there is a higher duty imposed upon me, even than supporting a party, namely, that of looking after the interests of the Province and the county that sent me here and the country generally, in connection with the construction of any works of public improvement, such as I consider the extension we ask for, which would benefit not only the locality interested, but the country generally. Not upon any personal ground do I urge this matter; not with any view of helping the Opposition in any complaints they make; but simply because I feel it hard, in voting for this resolution—which I certainly shall vote for, because I think it is a step in the right direction—that we, in New Brunswick, have not had the aid granted to us which we desired. While the hon. the Minister of Railways was giving his reasons for subsidizing these lines, I felt that every mile shortened between Montreal and Liverpool was something to the advantage of Canada; I saw that by the construction of a railway in Newfoundland, and the establishing, so to speak, of a bridge of steamboats, we were going to shorten the distance to Liverpool by forty-eight hours, and that in order to do that we should endorse this scheme of building a line from Oxford to New Glasgow. My hon. friend also pointed out that by aiding the road between Megantic and Rivière du Loup, we would again shorten the distance to such an extent as to be justified in making the expenditure of public money which is proposed. I approved of that, and I agreed with the hon. the Minister; but I hold in my hand a map, taken from the Sessional Papers of 1867, showing all the routes of the Intercolonial Railway laid down. I find that if we follow the line from Rivière du Loup to Edmunston, coming down on the west side of the River St. John, we have to follow two sides of a triangle; but if we come down by the route which I and others ask to be subsidized, we would cut off forty-four miles of the Intercolonial Railway between St. John and whatever point the proposed line intersects the Intercolonial Railway. Then, taking up the argument which I find in this pamphlet, the central line No. 5, will require three enormously expensive bridges. The passage thus reads:

"The Central Line, No. 5, will require two enormously expensive bridges over the St. John, and as it will neither open up a new country, nor give railway facilities to population now destitute of them, its claims are too small to merit much consideration. The means of communication with St. John by the river and western extension with the town of St. Andrews by western extension and the St. Andrew's line is quite sufficient to meet all the wants of the inner counties. As this divergence from the Central Line proper has no particular merits to recommend it over that line, but has several strong objections, besides that of running too near the American frontier, it may safely be put aside with the frontier line."

I wish to show that if we are to accept this as the shortest line, and even through every part, it will give forty-four miles. Then we have got to understand the difficulty of the bridging of the St. John at Fredericton. It will take $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 to do it properly; and it is doubtful if a bridge would stand, owing to the great body of ice that comes down in spring. If connection can be made at that point, the Local Government cannot bear the expense, and will have to be aided by the Dominion Government. The two bridges, including the suspension bridge from Carleton to St. John, would require an expenditure of $1,000,000—I believe will be nearer $2,000,000—which will have to be expended before this through short line can be achieved. Now, on the other hand, if my hon. friend had followed out my views and his views in regard to shortening the distance, and he had subsidized these seventy miles south to St. Mary's, opposite Fredericton, south and east of the Intercolonial, with an expenditure of about $3,000 a mile, we should have had an outlay of $210,000, seventy-five miles more railway, and should have saved the expenditure of $2,000,000, while obtaining the shortest route to Europe. Taking my hon. friend's estimate of $210,000, it would necessitate a further expenditure by the Company, because a railway cannot be built for $3,000 a mile. We are told, on good authority, that every mile constructed put into the Treasury interest on the entire expenditure which is returned by the increased revenue. Now, supposing that it had not shortened the route much, still there would have been a great expense in that country, from the public and private purse; but it would have opened up all central New Brunswick, and it would have furnished the northern section of the Province with means of getting at its coal, and would have assisted it to develop and open up that beautiful valley through King's County, known as Mills Stream Valley. The road would have come out at some of the little villages, either Apohaqui or Sussex. We find we are not to have this work. We cannot get it on the argument of its being shorter—because it is shorter; nor on the argument that it is a necessity. My hon. friend read something from the Sun newspaper, I presume—but I do not know whether it is correct or not—and argued that it is against the trade of the Province and St. John to construct that road. Then we should not have that railroad at all. We should go back to the old times, when there was a wall around that city, and let nothing in or out. I cannot agree with them; because I see, taking up the very elaborate report of the Intercolonial Railway, when it was built, it carries conviction to my mind that the central route was the correct route and the only one in the interest of New Brunswick. The writer already referred to goes on to say:

"The Northern Central Line combines all the advantages of Major Robinson's line, with several others, not secured by the latter. It is about the same length to build, gives King's, Queen's, and Sunbury the advantage of the railway without depriving Kent of the privilege, and opens up the coal regions of Grand Lake, Salmon River, and Coal Creek. This being the case, we shall consider it as essential. Major Robinson's line, though, preferable to it in all respects."

We have also this further statement:

"In this connection it must not be forgotten that the Northern Central line, which we are now examining, starts from Apohaqui, and passes through the populous counties of King's and Queen's, and touches both Sunbury and Kent. If the populations of these be taken into account, it would give our northern line as many inhabitants per mile, as Mr. Fleming's figures show for the frontier line."

I shall read this further extract:

"But we think we have shown beyond a doubt, that St. John, in this matter of the route, will be fairly dealt with by adopting the northern central, striking Apohaqui. And if more is done in her favor, it must be done not only at a greater cost and to the total destruction of the military character of the road, but also at the expense and sacrifice of the interest of the whole northern part of New Brunswick, and of the eastern part of Lower Canada."

Now this pamphleteer, who has gone thoroughly into the subject, says that St. John will not be benefited by the opening of this branch line. I entirely agree with him; but it would bring more business to St. John by opening a route to the back counties in winter and enabling the central counties to send out in winter, boards, shingles, hay and oats, which is not now practicable, and to buy and bring back goods from St. John. In summer there is traffic up that line at places where the steamboats does not touch. This road would better develop those back counties and increase the trade of St. John. If the argument of the Sun is correct, this line is going to cut off the trade of St. John. A good road should be built to compensate St. John for that loss. It is clearly a question of national importance that we should have a shortened line through all Canada to the sea-board. I was pleased to hear the hon. the Minister of Railways say that that was the tendency of their policy. It will enable me to say, when I go home, that we may look for a winter port at St. John, without which the National Policy would be incomplete. I cannot but think that works of such great necessity as this should be proceeded with, and I am sorry they have not been taken up earlier this Session. My hon. friend has told us the matter should be investigated, that he had not sufficient particulars before him to conclude to give this grant. I gave a silent vote when the Chignecto Railway grant went through. Though I knew very little about it, I had faith enough in the representations of the hon. Minister to believe it was a step in the right direction, and submitted my judgment to his. But when I see a grant given for a speculative work of this kind, I say we should have our portion of the line through the centre of New Brunswick, which we know is not a speculative line and will build up that section of the country. I cannot see what further investigation is required. We have all the information required; we have got the population and trade from the Census, and have the thorough and complete surveys of Mr. Fleming and others. The plea of want of information for not giving this grant, cannot be sustained in this case. I do not wish to attack the Government, but simply to stand out in an independent position, and say: "I am much grieved at the course adopted." If the Government give us the road in the future I shall be pleased. I know we cannot look to any pledge, because Governments are influenced by many considerations. As a man said who was going to be hanged: "If you put it off one year, I will accept the sentence." If the Government are in earnest, the hon. Minister of Railways should tell us, that not only are they going to investigate the matter, but if there is a just and proper claim the Government will grant the subsidy on its own merits, and not take this up in connection with other railways, because if that principle is established every claim will be as good as ours and every railway will make a claim. Unless we have some expressions to show that our appeals will not be thrown aside, because of the claims of St. Andrews or St. John, but that our claim will be judged on its own merits and we will be given what we are entitled to, I shall not be satisfied. I shall not submit to any course now or in the future that will cut off from us what we are entitled to, whether it pleases my hon. friends or not, but will take an independent position and fall under it or survive.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I only wish to emphasize what has been so well said by the hon. members for Queen's and King's. I am equally disappointed with them at the resolutions brought in by the hon. Minister of Railways. The fact is, this line of railway has been well investigated. It is the old proposed route of the Intercolonial Railway, which the new counties thought would have been adopted, or they would never have voted to come into Confederation. They think they were deceived on this subject, and they feel the deception deeply. This is the only inter-provincial route, and the action of the Government in taking a portion of it and leaving the other destroys the inter-provincial character of the road. The road as it stood before, as it was memorialized for, was the old Intercolonial road, and was of a national character. It was memorialized for by 120 hon. members of both sides of the House, and the Government is without excuse, because the resources of that section have been proved to be abundant enough to justify a subsidy, even giving it a local character. Last Session the local Government gave a subsidy of $3,000 per mile to aid this branch road, so that it is considered of very great importance. The iron ore in that locality and the abundance of coal of a superior character are awaiting development, and our National Policy is founded on the fact that we had coal in Nova Scotia and flour in Ontario. Here the deposits are lying comparatively idle for want of development, yet the Government shows no consideration in the matter, though, to develop the coal of Nova Scotia, the rates on the Intercolonial Railway have been reduced one-half. The coal in Nova Scotia has been subsidized in more than one way, not only has a duty been imposed to force it on the west, but the rates of carriage from the coal pits of Nova Scotia to St. John have been reduced almost one-half, from $1.50 to 82 cents. In that respect they are subsidized for the same coal for which we are now refused a small subsidy to build a railway to develop it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to complain of the reduction of the coal rates to St. John?

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I only wish to emphasize what has been so well said by the hon. members for Queen's and King's. I am equally disappointed with the resolutions brought in by the hon. Minister of Railways. New Brunswick has been ignored. The fact is that the line of railway in which we feel a deep interest, and for which over 120 members of this House memorialized the Government for aid, is in one of the routes of the old Intercolonial Railway promised New Brunswick before Confederation, and if the river counties in New Brunswick had suspected that that road would not have been built, they would never have voted to go into the Union. They were deceived by our leader, and they feel the deception keenly. This Central New Brunswick road is inter-provincial in its character when connected with the New Brunswick road, and the proposed road from Edmunston to Rivière du Loup as asked for by us. But the Government have provided for the western portion only in the resolutions, and the action of the Government in taking a portion of it and leasing the other destroys its inter-provincial character. Let the hon. Minister of Railways veil the resolutions as he may, they now partake of a local character. The line we applied for was, as I said, on one of the proposed routes which had been surveyed for the Intercolonial and thoroughly investigated, and its resources had been fully put before the Government by the hon. member for Queen's and myself. The Government have no excuse on that score, because we had proved that the resources of the eastern section which has been left out are abundant to justify a subsidy in order to develop the coal fields and other industries, even were it entirely of a local character. There is iron ore in the vicinity of the eastern portion of the said road, as well as an abundance of coal of a superior character for some purposes awaiting development. Of such importance is this road that the New Brunswick Local Government offer a subsidy of $3,000 per mile for its construction, and it only required a moderate subsidy from this Government to secure its completion, and yet this Government have refused that small consideration, which would develop those important interests. The National Policy was said to be founded upon the development of, and encouragement to, the coal interest in the east, and the wheat-growing interest in the west. Nova Scotia coal interests have been aided by railway accommodation as well as reduced rates on the Intercolonial Railroad to St. John, and comes into competition with the coal I am now speaking of, and which has been deemed fair consideration. The rates on Spring Hill coal to some ports on St. John have been reduced from $1.50 to 82c., or almost one-half, and this coal competes with New Brunswick coal. I ask why has New Brunswick been denied consideration in developing her coal mines?

Mr. ANGLIN. There is no doubt this is one of the most important questions that has come before the present Session of Parliament, since it forms an entirely new departure in regard to the railway policy of this country. It is the beginning of a policy of the construction of railways of a purely provincial character on the Dominion credit. It may be all right or it may be very wrong, but there is not time now for a reasonable consideration of the policy in all its scope and effect. Looking at the proposition before us, the people of New Brunswick see reason to complain of its unfairness. What has been said of the railway from Rivière du Loup to Edmunston and St. John, and of the probable commercial effects, is unquestionably true. No one who has studied the history of our Province and has observed the effect of railway construction upon its business, can have the slightest doubt that the business of St. John will be very materially lessened by the construction of the road, and that it will be all the more injured had the railway not been completed, had the track not been permitted to go in that direction to the city of St. John. The opening up of the country at the head of Grand Lake and along that district up to St. Maurice near Fredericton, would in itself very materially tend to bring much of the trade to St. John, much more than comes at present. The coal fields there are very extensive, and the country is said to be fertile and inexhaustible. These facts furnish an additional reason why, if we undertake the development of the country at all, this portion of the railway should be built. The hon. Minister of Railways stated correctly that building the portion from Rivière du Loup to Edmunston does not by any means effect the object the hon. Minister expects. They must cross the River St. John at Fredericton by an expensive bridge to connect with the system of railway now in existence on the other side of the river; then, having come down on that side of the river by a devious route you find yourself at the city and harbor of St. John, while coming down by the other direction you come on to the Dominion line of railway. But I rise specially to speak on behalf of that portion of the country which I represent. Baie des Chaleurs has been shamefully neglected in this scheme. For many years past the representative of the county of Bonaventure in this House has labored to obtain railway communication for the people of that county. The present Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, while in this House, did all in his power to obtain railway communication for that part of the country, and was always met there, I presume, with the reply that it was contrary to the policy of the Government to subsidize lines of railway running in that direction. Well, Sir, to-day we find that the several lesser lines which are essentially of a local character, lines which all the eloquence of the hon. Minister of Railways cannot deprive of their essentially local character—though they may be very important in themselves—yet we find them subsidized, railroads which will not feed the Intercolonial Railway in any way whatever. We find these railways assisted, but we are refused assistance to lines of railways along the Baie de Chaleurs. Down through the county of Bonaventure to the county of Gaspé there is a large tract of fertile country and a considerable population. The whole Baie de Chaleurs is well known as one of the finest fishing grounds in the world, but its almost untold wealth is scarcely as available as it might be for want of sufficient railway facilities. For a great part of the year they are quite out of the world. In my county there is a district in which a line of railway is projected of such importance that the Local Government last Session granted it $3,000 a mile. When that is built it will lead directly to the Intercolonial Railway and put a population of 15,000 in connection with that road with all their considerable trade. That line also we find entirely neglected. There is no doubt that if we enter upon this policy the Government, whether the present one or their successors, will find it to be absolutely incumbent upon them that if money can be raised by any process of taxation not much more onerous even than that which now burdens the business of this country—they will find it absolutely necessary to extend the system inaugurated by these resolutions, and to assist lines of railway up the Gatineau, to open up the country on both sides of the Baie de Chaleurs, and to develop many other portions of the country. I believe a railway through King's and Queen's has a special claim on the Government and on its individual members. Something has been said in respect to promises made, not quite directly, but by implication by the hon. the Finance Minister, as to the route of the Intercolonial, and if the hon. members for Sunbury and other New Brunswick constituencies, believe, if that hon. Minister were free from the shackles of office, he would use his eloquence and power to advocate the immediate opening of that part of the country and the construction of that line. The enterprise halts and is inconclusive, unless this other portion of the road is built.

Mr. SCRIVER. I listened with close attention to the remarks that fell from the hon. the Minister of Railways upon the resolutions which have been introduced to the House. We heard the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), in whose remarks, upon the whole, I cordially agree, and I feel that these resolutions are of the greatest importance, as indicating, on the part of the Government, a departure from the established rule which has prevailed up to this time in the Government of this country that Government aid should not be extended to provincial undertakings or even to inter-provincial works. The discussion which has been continued with such earnestness since the introduction of these resolutions, show how great is the principle involved in these resolutions, and they show that the view taken by the hon. leader of the Opposition that it is very unfortunate indeed that these resolutions have been introduced at so late a period of the Session, is of great force and great truth. For myself, I am free to say that I regard the departure which these resolutions indicate on the part of the Government, from the established rule which has hitherto existed, of extending aid to works solely of a Dominion character, as of great danger. I regard the departure from that principle with the greatest apprehension, and I am well satisfied that, however, with regard to the importance of the enterprises referred to in these resolutions, no good reason has been given by the hon. Minister of Railways for regarding those enterprises as any other than private. The hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay (Mr. Cimon) seemed disposed to cast great blame on the Administration from the fact that they had not been led to give aid to the Lake St. John Railway. I remember very well the argument that hon. gentleman made several Sessions ago in favor of that enterprise, and I remember distinctly the reply the hon. Minister of Railways made to that argument on that occasion. The hon. Minister admitted the importance of the enterprise, but said that it was purely local only, and that the Government of the Dominion are not prepared to extend any aid to it. It is rather a suspicious circumstance, that just on the eve of a general election this departure from the established policy of the Government has been enunciated. Judging by the discussion that has occurred we have reason to suppose that the applications for aid, if this grant for this aid should be granted, as I suppose it will, will be legion in their number, and I do not see how this or any future Government can draw such a line, if they once depart from the rule to which I have referred, between enterprises of a private and those of a Dominion character. With the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe I would have been glad to have heard this question thoroughly discussed. It is one of sufficient importance to warrant such a thorough discussion, and I would have been glad to have heard the hon. Minister of Railways, in introducing the resolutions, not confine himself, as he did confine himself, to remarks to show the importance of the enterprise it was supposed to aid, but to have gone further and given some good reasons why he now advocated a departure from the policy hitherto followed.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Hon. members referred to this as being a new departure. It is an extension of an old policy. During the late and the present Administration assistance was given to branch railways connected with the Intercolonial to the extent of the iron for those branches. The extension in this case is not confined to branches of the Intercolonial, but the policy has been recommended by both Governments and aid given. The branches thus referred to may be feeders of the Government Railways, but I admit the branches that were constructed and to which aid was given were direct feeders of those railways.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the rails were only lent.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A supporter of the Government, who obtained some of them, expected they are more than lent. They have been retained until now, and I doubt if they shall be returned very soon. There has been a recognition of certain principles. I am not surprised that the hon. members for King's, Queen's and Sunbury should have expressed their views so emphatically, because they are interested in this question; but I was surprised that hon. gentlemen who have never failed, since the line of the Intercolonial was established, to denounce me for having assented to remaining in the Government, to the construction of the line of railway on the north shore. A proposition is now made to this House for the purpose of giving the shorter line to St. John within Canadian territory, giving practically the central lines of railway, and the shortest route to St. John for the western trade, it being one string to the bow, and we hope soon to add a second string to the bow—the hon. member shakes his head—and we have been pointed to the fact, that a portion of the trade of the Upper St. John will be carried free to Quebec. We recognize that fact. No man who has been in that section of the country, even before railways were constructed, and has seen the way in which business was conducted in the neighborhood of Little Falls, but must feel that a considerable portion of that business must go to Quebec, but at the same time its value to New Brunswick, and especially to the port and harbor of St. John, is that it gives on Canadian territory the shortest line of railway to the nearest open port in the Dominion of Canada. I have balanced the account and have found that its advantages are so much greater than the loss which will be sustained in that particular section of the country that I think, on the whole, it will be of the greatest possible value to St. John. I am free to admit that I am in sympathy to a considerable extent with the proposition to construct the other line which has been proposed by hon. gentlemen, because it will bring an additional portion of the Province of New Brunswick in contact and communication with St. John, but so far as the direct trade from the west is concerned the city of St. John does not depend upon that line. It has been said that it will cost $1,000,000 to construct certain bridges, and I know that there are physical difficulties in the way of ice at Fredericton; but we know that a line has been subsidized from Woodstock to Harvey by the Local Legislature, and that would make the most direct line possible between Woodstock and St. John or between Rivière du Loup and St. John. Still, as I have said, I am in sympathy with this proposition and endorse the statement of my colleague that it is entitled to receive and should receive, as it undoubtedly will, the most favorable consideration of the Government. I would remark, however, that when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power they did not give any iron to that particular road.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). On the contrary, it was the only road to which they did give iron.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Was there any legislation on record to settle that question? I think, though I was not here at that time, that a Board representing the county of Queen's, notified the Government in very strong terms what they would do if they did not take a certain course.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). There was a resolution passed in the House giving aid by loaning old rails to certain feeders of the Intercolonial, and a Minute of Council, which the hon. gentleman may find, specified that road and that line.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But they were taken back and appropriated to other roads.

Mr. BURPEE. Not the ones for that road.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. My impression is that the rails at the disposal of the Government at that time were appropriated to other roads. However, I do not desire by any word or action of mine to detract from the merits of the application which has been referred to. Then there are the local advantages to be derived from the construction of a railway through a section of country where there is a deposit of coal, which it is very important to develop, and which, though not valuable for household purposes, is a very excellent coal for steam and smith purposes. An hon. member referred to a gentleman in the county of Queen's having some letter of mine. If my memory serves me, that gentleman wrote to me. I had hoped to have an opportunity of addressing the people of Queen's last summer. That opportunity was not afforded to me, however, and I promised, if spared to the spring of this year, to make that visit; and this gentleman wrote to me to say that when I did make that visit, a strong demand would be made upon me to state whether that should be done. I stated to him in reply that when I made my appearance I should be able to state the policy of the Government in reference to it; but the Minister of Railways has already stated it, and therefore that statement shall have to be mine when the question is put to me. There are other reasons which it is not necessary for me to enumerate, why I feel this proposal has its merits; but there are other questions of a Dominion character in reference to that road, which necessarily require a little more consideration than the Government have been able to give at present. I may say here, that with reference to the statements of the very limited advantages which we would derive from the road from Rivière du Loup to Edmunston, I say that, as we will have by its construction the shortest route to the sea, where we have open water during the whole year, that proposition is, in my judgment, surrounded with vast importance, not only to the Dominion generally, but especially to the constituency I have the honor to represent.

Mr. OUIMET. I have been rather surprised to hear some hon. members of the House say that these resolutions make a new departure in the policy of the Dominion. As I understand it, the policy of the Conservative party is the development of the trade, the increase of the population, and the increase of the prosperity of the whole country and every part of it. That is the policy upon which we have been establishing our popularity in the country, and it is to the interest of the Dominion that this policy should never be lost sight of. By spending millions of money in developing the North-West, we have felt that we were promoting the prosperity of the older Provinces; and shall we say now that we have not the means to provide for the wants of these Provinces, which are not provincial wants, but Dominion wants. Shall we say that the old Provinces do not form part of the Dominion, when it is proposed to spend a few thousand dollars to increase the prosperity of some of these Provinces? It is said that the great valley of the St. John, for instance, can support millions of prosperous people. When we are spending millions in the North-West, are we going to grudge a few thousand dollars for the valley of the St. John, or the Gatineau Valley or any of the valleys of New Brunswick? This is not national policy; it is anti-national policy; and I congratulate the Government on having confirmed their policy by taking this step to develop the resources of the Dominion, instead of striving to pay the whole debt, because it is too soon to do that until the North-West is more fully developed. I concur very heartily in the policy which has been promulgated in these resolutions, and I think this provincial cry is not the cry that ought to be raised to-day. I agree also with what has been said by the hon. member for the county of Ottawa (Mr. Wright). He says very properly that we are now adopting a policy which will warrant him in coming next year and claiming a subsidy for a railway which will open up the great Ottawa Valley; and next year, if I have then the honor of a seat in this House, I shall be very happy to endorse that proposition. If the people of New Brunswick wish to develop the resources of their Province, whether their fisheries or any other of their resources, we in the Province of Quebec shall be glad to help them. Only a few days ago we voted $150,000 to enable the fishermen of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Gaspé—not to prosper, because it is too late to hope for them to prosper, but only to live. Did anyone raise the cry then that that grant was for the purpose of assisting individuals? No, Sir, they were interested in concealing their feelings, because they had fishermen among their constituents. We have been almost every day voting much larger sums of money than these resolutions and for the purpose of helping anybody in the country who appears to be suffering. Well, we have suffering people in the Province of Quebec; we have in the valley of the St. John thousands of settlers who have been suffering for years; we have men there who have gone into the unbroken forest, and have not yet been able, for want of railway communication, to establish prosperous homes. It is right for this Dominion to tell these men that we are willing to help them on their own account, although I believe the development of the St. John Valley will promote the general trade and prosperity of the Dominion. The proposed railway will be an important feeder to the Intercolonial Railway; and every man who will be induced to go there and settle, instead of going to the United States, will add to the wealth of this country, and more than repay the interest on the paltry sum of $384,000, which we are proposing to give. I did not intend, Sir, to make a speech; but I desired to express, as strongly as I could, my disapproval of the provincial cry which has been raised, and the attempt to distinguish provincial interests from Dominion interests. I say they are one and the same thing; if the Provinces prosper—and I hold that the older Provinces more than the newer Provinces have a right to ask us to aid them to prosper—the whole Dominion prospers; and I believe the new provinces will not be those to grudge the paltry assistance which it is now proposed to give to our own citizens.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. SPROULE. I have much pleasure in supporting these resolutions. I cannot coincide with the views of several hon. members opposite that it is not legitimately within the province of this Parliament to subsidize those railways. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) said he looked upon it as a baneful principle to establish a precedent of this kind at this particular time. But this is not the establishment of a precedent, it is the carrying out of a principle established some time ago. The hon. member for West Durham said, in reference to the loan of rails to a provincial railway, that it was not establishing a principle. He must have forgotten that those rails represented a considerable value, were of use to the railway, and if returned would necessarily be greatly deteriorated in value, else there would be no reason for loaning them, consequently this loan was equivalent to a grant. I hold it is within our province to deal with this question. Those railways are under Dominion charter, and it is within the duty of this Government to deal with it. Why do we charter those railways, while provincial railways are chartered by the Provinces within which they lie? Because those Dominion chartered railways extend outside a Province or run to another country, and are recognized as of Dominion importance. This railway connecting the Ontario system with the Canadian Pacific is specially important. It represents the outlet of some fifteen or sixteen Ontario railways, including the Great Western, Grand Trunk, Whitby and Port Perry, Wellington, Grey and Bruce, and a number of others embracing the minor railways. It is the outlet also of the richest part of Ontario and the Dominion. But it is important to the whole Dominion for another reason—it is an advantage to the new country into which it leads. Ontario must, in the future, be more of a manufacturing centre for the supply of Manitoba and the North-West, and it is of the greater importance, therefore, that we should have an outlet by the shortest possible route, so as to keep down the cost of freight and give the North-West people our products at the smallest prices. The railroad would be of importance, again, by opening up a new market, and the older the country becomes the more important it will be. Ontario will manufacture the more for the North-West. Hamilton sent lately to Manitoba and the North-West $500,000 worth of manufactured goods; but this railway would be an outlet, not for one town only, but for London, Hamilton, Guelph, Toronto, Meaford and many other important towns. It will prove the outlet to that section of the country that supplies agricultural implements, cattle and horses to the North-West. I think then it comes with very bad grace from the hon. leader of the Opposition to throw cold water on this scheme. I do not agree with him that there is not sufficient time to consider this question, which is neither intricate nor difficult. A gentleman of his clear and comprehensive mind would not need more than five minutes to understand it thoroughly. But his depreciation of it is based on the fear that it will make more popular a Government that has done so much for the country. He wishes to make a point against the Government in view of the approaching elections. So far as the western members are concerned, this opposition, instead of doing the Liberal party good, will do it harm, because we all recognized the merits of a Government, and especially of a Minister of Railways who has shown such a strong and commendable desire to do even this much in the interest of a Province that is contributing so much towards the opening up of this great new country. Supposing, as has been objected, that other railways should apply for a subsidy, there would be nothing wrong in that. I think the hon. member for Ottawa can, with equal reason, apply for Dominion aid for his railway. I believe that if members consider it in the interest of the country, they would not go wrong in supporting it. If members opposite recognize the importance of assisting a provincial railway by lending it rails, as already mentioned, how much more reasonable is it to assist railways which will work in the interest of the whole country.

Resolution agreed to and reported.

THE WORD TELEGRAPH.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 166) declaratory of the meaning of the word Telegraph in certain cases be transferred from Public Bills and Orders to Government Orders. He said: The only object is to declare that telephones are not telegraphs.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. OGDEN. The Free Press this evening has the following item:—

"On Saturday night there occurred in the House of Commons one of the most disgraceful scenes ever witnessed there. A number of that class of members who find the work of attending to public business for which they were elected too irksome, amused themselves by setting off 'torpedoes' or sand-crackers in the House. For several hours a perfect fusillade was kept up to the great annoyance of the speakers and all the sensible members of the House. Sir John Macdonald said that during the forty years he had been in Parliament he had never known anything so disgraceful. This remark was greeted with another volley of crackers. Mr. Blake also protested, and the chairman repeatedly called order, but the schoolboy M.P.'s kept up their 'fun' until adjournment. Principal among the offenders were Messrs. Ogden, McLeod, Manson and Landry. These gentlemen, beyond their ability to register their votes with their party, are about as much good in Parliament as chips in porridge. Not content with neglecting their parliamentary duties, they feel it incumbent on them to act the baboon and prevent other members from attending to theirs."

All I have to say in regard to this matter is, that I entered the Chamber at about ten o'clock on Saturday night, and the first remark I heard was from the hon. leader of the Opposition, to the effect that the action was disgraceful, and that the torpedo shooting should be put a stop to as one hon. member had been struck by one of them. There was at the time a question before the House in which I was very much interested, and I took my seat behind the hon. Minister of Railways, and remained in that seat until I left the Chamber. Several hon. gentlemen who sat near me can corroborate the truth of what I say. There is not a word of truth in the charge against me contained in this article. I had not in my possession one solitary torpedo, nor did I throw anything across the floor of the House. The statement is a falsehood. I was as innocent as either the hon. leader of the Opposition or the hon. Premier. Why this man—I will not say gentleman—should publish this falsehood, I cannot understand, unless it is that this Opposition press, being unable to bring anything against my public character that will injure me in my constituency, resort to lying and slander. I defy any hon. member to say that I have ever, since I have been in this House, acted discourteously or ungentlemanly in any manner. As regards my attending to my parliamentary duties, every hon. member knows that I am always to be found in my place, or, if not in my own particular seat, perhaps, sometimes on the other side or at other times close to the Treasury Benches when I have information to get from the hon. Ministers. If I were to mention some scenes that occurred in this House in which some members of the staff of this paper were prominent, you, Mr. Speaker, might feel it to be your duty to summon them before the bar of this House or have them ejected from the gallery. I trust the editor of this paper, with whom I am acquainted, is not responsible for this and will not allow this matter to go uncontradicted in his columns.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I sat by the side of the hon. member for Guysboro' from the time those torpedos were used in this House until the House adjourned. Neither directly nor indirectly was he connected with anything of the kind. He was anxious to make a few remarks on the fisheries question, which affected his constituents, and appeared very much interested in the debate. One remark of the hon. gentleman should be looked to. The editor of the paper in question, a few evenings ago, in the Senate Chamber, or in the saloon of this Chamber, choked an hon. member of this House and not a word was said about it. Neither the Mail nor the

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Globe nor the Witness said anything about it, because, forsooth, he is a member of the staff. Because he is the editor of a newspaper, he can do just as he pleases, but an hon. gentleman is published as a blackguard on the slightest provocation. Why should a newspaper man be allowed to enter the Senate and choke an hon. member for this House? These members of the press who are so very anxious to show up hon. gentlemen who do wrong, why do they not expose one of their own associates? No; we have to put up with what those men see fit to do. I am sorry I had not the pleasure of being in the saloon: I would have had my hand in and helped my hon. friend who was used so roughly by this great and good man, the editor of the Free Press.

Mr. McLEOD. I wish to make a few remarks in reference to the proceedings on Saturday night and to disclaim all connection with them. I may say that when these explosions were going on within this Chamber I was not within its precincts. I had not in my possession a single torpedo and I did not throw any. It is not necessary for me to enlarge upon this subject, because the hon. member for Guysboro' who has just taken his seat has referred to it in the terms it deserves.

Mr. LANDRY. The Toronto Globe contains an indictment against me, beginning with the words: "Mr. Landry is a Tory," which are the only true words in the article. I will read the article:

"Mr. Landry is a Tory from the Province of Quebec, who gives about the same attention to most of the questions which come before the House as do the majority of those with whom he acts. Last night, while the fishery bonus was being considered, he amused himself by getting up a 24th of May celebration, and throwing schoolboy torpedoes about the House. Such an exhibition was very derogatory to the dignity of the House, but yet it was allowed to go on unchecked by those whose duty it was to interfere, until Mr. Blake insisted on its being stopped. Even the temporary restraint thus given did not last long. Mr. Landry's example was followed by other members, and for the rest of the evening miniature explosions were to be heard in all parts of the Chamber, much to the annoyance of those members who were desirous of taking part in the important discussion then in progress. At the close of the sitting, just as Sir John and Mr. Plumb were leaving the Chamber together, one of the pages threw a torpedo at their feet. Sir John turned angrily around, and Mr. Plumb valiantly caught a youth whom he thought to be the offender, with a 'Here is the boy, Sir John!' The chieftain did not say much, and turned and walked away; but Mr. Plumb gave the boy, who pleaded that he had got the torpedoes from a member, a very severe lecture, winding up very emphatically with 'I will have you turned out of the House.' Had half as much attention been paid to the Tory M.P.'s, who were the real offenders, instead of permitting the indecency to go unrebuked, the dignity of Parliament would have been better preserved."

Well, Sir, I have only one word to say. While that noise was going on I was very quiet, as usual, standing at the bar of the House, and every hon. member may have seen me there. I was very much annoyed myself. Torpedoes were thrown at me, and I found the position so dangerous that I was compelled to go out. It was only because that I was taking care of my own life that the Globe has seen fit to insult me in this manner. I stand in just the same position as the hon. member for Guysboro', and it is because the Globe has nothing to say against me in my public life that it tries to injure me in my constituency. But if I really have torpedoes I will keep them for the next election, and we will see in my constituency what use I will make of them.

Mr. MANSON. I have only to say, in reference to the charge made in the Globe, that I had none in my possession nor anything of the kind, nor did I take any part in the disturbance complained of.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that next Session if any gentleman pleases to use crackers he may add cheese with them.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

LORNE,

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of the amounts required for the service of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1883, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 15th May, 1882.

SEAMEN'S ACT, 1873.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of Bill (No. 110) further to amend the Seamen's Act, 1873.

Mr. BLAKE moved:

Amendment negatived on the following division:—

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House resumed the consideration of Resolution 333,

Damages to the M. C. Upper..... $8,000

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister, when he proposed this item, said it constituted a moral claim against the Government. I understood him to indicate that the arbitrators had recommended the payment of this sum, and the hon. Minister of Justice said there was no legal claim. In reading over the papers I do not find any statements to bear out the observations made by the hon. Minister. Such is not done either by the letter of the Deputy Minister of Justice on the 29th May, 1879, or by his communication of 10th October last. Those statements having been made to the House, it is obvious that the Minister has no grounds on which he asks the House for an appropriation. It will be a gross abuse of the power of the Government, especially when the proprietor of this vessel is a member of this House, to pay him a sum of money to which he has no legal claim and respecting which the arbitrators concurred in the decision arrived at by the hon. Minister of Justice and his Deputy; except it be that Mr. McCallum is a supporter of the Administration, and because he is a supporter of the Administration he is to be dealt with in a way different from other claimants. I therefore move:

That the said Resolution be not concurred in, but that it be resolved, that the question of the liability of the Crown for injury done to the M. C. Upper was reported upon by the Minister of Justice as follows:—

OTTAWA, 10th October, 1881.

Re claim L. McCallum.

SIR,—As requested in your communication of the 20th September, I have considered this case with reference to the liability of the Crown re this claim. In my opinion the Crown is not liable. Treating the case as one between subject and subject, and giving to the claimant the same rights against the Crown that he would have were his claim against a subject, it is clear that unless the accident were caused by the defective state of the lock gates or by the negligence of the officers of the Canal, there would be no liability to indemnify Mr. McCallum for the losses sustained. The finding of the official arbitrators seems to be unanimous that the accident was caused by the negligence of those in charge of the steamer Louise and not by the defective condition of the gates. The Crown cannot be made answerable for the mismanagement of the Louise. Papers returned.

(Signed) Z. A. LASH,
"D. M. J.

"I concur in this opinion.

(Signed) A. CAMPBELL,
"M. of J.

"To F. BRAUN,

"Sec. R. & C. Dept.;"

And that the proposals under these circumstances to pay the sum of $8,000 to L. McCallum, the owner of the said steamer M. C. Upper, is wrong and would establish a dangerous precedent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am much surprised that the hon. member who has put this resolution should have made a statement which I think was unworthy of him, and that is that the claimant in this case being a member of this House had influenced the appropriation which has now been submitted to Parliament. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would consider me unwarranted in the statement that Mr. Thompson, a late member of this House, had influence enough with my predecessor to reduce a charge for damage done by the schooner Louise, about which there was no question, from $1,100 to $600. That is on record. It is to be found in the papers laid on the Table of the House, that Mr. Bodwell, superintendent of the Welland Canal, estimated the damage to Mr. Battle, owner of the schooner Louise, at $1,100, and that after a long, deliberate and careful examination of the question the Minister of Public Works, my predecessor, directed the Inland Revenue to collect that sum. Was the Minister of Justice so instructed to collect it? It was not collected.

"In the matter of the Queen vs. Battle for Lock Damages.

SIR,—I herewith enclose you, certified, a check for $600, being the sum agreed upon between you and Mr. Thompson, M.P. I regret not having sent it sooner, but things have been very hard on shipping and money very scarce.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
JOHN BATTLE,
"per Son.

Hon. ALRX. MACKENZIE,
"Minister of Public Works, Ottawa."

If I should say there is clear and positive evidence from the hon. gentleman's own Department that a man who legitimately owed the Government of the country $1,100, upon whose claim the Minister of Justice, after careful consideration, reported estimating that he had inflicted $1,100 of damage, was able, through the influence of a supporter of this House, to take off $500 that was due to the public, while the Minister of Justice had been instructed to recover the whole amount; yet, Sir, I would have a great deal more reason to make that statement than the hon. gentleman to make the statement which he has made. I do not make it; I do not assume for a moment that the hon. gentleman who was then Minister of Public Works was influenced to act unfairly and unjustly to the Treasury by a supporter in this House. I believe he was convinced by the evidence submitted to him that the charge against Mr. Battle had been overestimated, because, on careful consideration, he found from the testimony that there was reason to believe that the defective condition of the lock gates was such as to compel the Government to assume part of the damage; that if the lock gates had been in a sound and perfect condition, they would have withstood the contact of the schooner and the damage would not have occurred, and in consequence of that belief he reduced that amount, and that had great weight in the subsequent consideration of this question. Under these circumstances the gentleman who had suffered a loss, which is not disputed in consequence of this action, of $8,000—for there is no dispute about that—all the parties are agreed that the damage sustained by the M. C. Upper was $7,997 or about $8,000. That is admitted.

Mr. BLAKE. Who admits it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Every person who has examined it. I read the arbitrators' report, and on that point there is no doubt. It is claimed in this case that the Government themselves had admitted the defective condition of the lock gates by reducing the claim which the Minister of Justice of that day had him instructed to collect. The claim was put in and it was sent to the Minister of Justice. Here is his report, which is to the effect that the question is an appropriate one to refer to one or all of the arbitrators. The hon. gentleman has read the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice who, instead of saying that there is no ground for the claim, says this is a proper case to refer to arbitrators. We took the proper course of getting the testimony, and the most convenient mode; we referred the case to one of the arbitrators, Mr. Buchanan, who made an elaborate report. He gave the whole of the testimony and the report of Mr. Bodwell, and he reported against the claim. The matter would have rested there, but for the fact that I sent Mr. Buchanan's report to the Deputy Minister of Justice? And what did he say? Did he say that he quite agreed upon the soundness of Mr. Buchanan's report? Nothing of the kind. There is his report declaring that Mr. Buchanan had come to his conclusion in the face of the testimony, that if it was a case before one of the arbitrators he had a right to appeal to the whole Board. He says:

"If it was a case before the courts, between subject and subject, the finding of Mr. Buchanan is so obviously in antagonism with the facts that the Court would at once set aside the decision and give Mr. McCallum the right to have it tried over again. I have the declaration of Mr. Lash, in the first place, that this is a fit case for arbitration; and I have the express declaration from him, in the second place, that the finding of one arbitrator is wrong, and consequently I am bound under that declaration to send it to the full Board."

And what was the result? The majority of the arbitrators came to the conclusion that as the claimant had sustained a loss without any negligence on his part, amounting to $8,000, and that he is not in the slightest degree to blame, that he had paid his dues, and that he was entitled to expect that his vessel would go through in safety. The hon. gentleman says they did not find in favor of the payment of the claim. They say they are unprepared to deal with the question of loss, but they declare that Mr. McCallum has suffered a loss of $8,000, and they recommend that loss, under all the circumstances, to the favorable consideration of the Government. The hon. gentleman will see that by the statement of the Deputy Minister of Justice, it was a proper case for arbitration, and according to his opinion the finding against Mr. McCallum was contrary to the testimony, and he ought to have an appeal to the full Board. We gave him an appeal to the full Board, and we now submit the question for the consideration of Parliament. I am a good deal surprised, after looking carefully over the testimony, that the Board did not distinctly find that the rotten and defective condition of the gates caused the accident, and that Mr. McCallum had a strictly legal claim. Mr. Bodwell, on further examination, very largely modified his testimony in the matter. I shall lay upon the Table of the House Mr. Buchanan's report against the claim, the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice that Mr. Buchanan's finding was contrary to the evidence and that it was a case to refer to arbitration, the testimony taken, and the opinion of the full Board. Mr. Lash said:

"I may mention, however, that Mr. McCallum, the owner of the M. C. Upper, had an interview with me on the subject. He states that the accident was caused, not by the carelessness of those in charge of the other vessel, but because the gates of the canal were rotten, and not fit for their purpose. He further states that he can show that those in charge of his vessel were in no way to blame for the accident.

"These are matters of fact upon which I can offer no opinion; but I think the case is one which it would be proper for the Minister, should he think fit to do so, to refer to one or more of the official arbitrators for examination and report under the 3rd section of the Act, 41st Vic., ch. 8.

"It is evident that the true facts of the case can never be known by the Government unless they are enquired into by some tribunal having power to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath."

Well, witnesses were called, Mr. Buchanan reported his finding against the claim, and with reference to that Mr. Lash says:

"I have carefully considered the evidence taken by Mr. Buchanan, one of the official arbitrators in the above matter, and his report thereon.

"The reference which you have made of the case does not specify any particular question upon which my opinion is asked.

"I presume, therefore, that an opinion is desired upon the whole matter.

"Treating the Government as if they were a private company owning the Welland Canal, with authority to collect tolls from vessels using the same, and treating this claim as if it were an action brought by Mr. McCallum in Court against the owners of the canal for the damages sustained by his vessel, and treating Mr. Buchanan's report as if it were the verdict of a jury, I have come to the conclusion that under the evidence in this case, the Court would set aside the verdict and order a new trial before another jury.

"Mr. McCallum's claim is based upon the contention that the lock gates which gave way after being struck by the boat Louise, were not reasonably fit for the purpose of the canal, and that had they been in proper repair, they would not have given way under the blow from the Louise, and that consequently the injury to his boat would not have been caused, and that the blow from the Louise was not greater than the gates, if in a proper state, should have withstood.

"The Government base their defence upon two grounds:—1st. That Mr. McCallum's boat was moored in an improper place in the canal, and contrary to one of the canal regulations. 2nd. That the gates were in good order and reasonably fit for the purpose of the canal, and for the safety of vessels therein.

"Upon the evidence taken before Mr. Buchanan there seems to be little doubt that the first contention of the Government was not sustained.

"Had the reference to Mr. Buchanan been made to him for an award instead of merely for an enquiry and report, Mr. McCallum would, under the statute in that behalf, have been entitled, without the consent of the Government, to appeal to the full board of arbitrators.

"Were I quite satisfied with Mr. Buchanan's finding upon the evidence, I would not recommend the reopening of the case. I think, however, that the Department would hardly be justified without first obtaining the report of the full Board of Arbitrators upon the question of fact involved in absolutely repudiating Mr. McCallum's claim on the strength of Mr. Buchanan's report alone, because as abovementioned. I think, had it been the verdict of a jury, the Court would have set it aside and ordered a new trial. In making a new reference to the full Board of Arbitrators for enquiry and report, the Department will be doing no more than Mr. McCallum would have had a right to do, had the case come before Mr. Buchanan in a different shape. I think, therefore, that if the claimant desires it, a reference to the full Board should be made."

After the statement of the Deputy Minister of Justice, I think every hon. gentleman will see that the Government had no other alternative but to refer the question to the full Board; and I would ask what position would we occupy if, having made this reference under the strong statement of the Deputy Minister of Justice, that the finding of Mr. Buchanan was contrary to the evidence the full Board had found, that Mr. McCallum had sustained damage, had not contributed to it himself and was fairly entitled to be paid. I do not intend, at this late period of the Session, to occupy much time; but I will read that portion of the testimony upon which I expressed my surprise that the Board could have found otherwise than that the defective condition of the gates had largely contributed to this accident. Having gone carefully into the evidence, I have not the shadow of a doubt that the gates were not in a proper and efficient condition to resist such contact with the schooner Louise which, if sound, they would have resisted; and if that is the case it is unquestionable that Mr. McCallum's claim is not only just and equitable, but a legal claim as well. The arbitrators say:

"As to the first grounds taken by Mr. Bodwell we respectfully refer you to the evidence itself, and to that particularly of Bernard Clark with respect to the condition of the gates. With regard to there being no neglect of duty on the part of the officials we are not in a position to form any entirely satisfactory opinion."

The official report says further:

"In this connection we desire to call your attention to the evidence of McAvoy and Ferris as to the direct cause of the accident, each assigning a different cause and one contradictory of the other. It is unfortunate that the only person who could corroborate either McAvoy or Ferris is the lock-tender, McTaggart, who was in charge of the lock at the time of the accident, and who has died since it occurred, and sometime before the investigation was held. Coming now to the second and third grounds taken by Mr. Bodwell, it will be found that they are not borne out by the evidence. All the witnesses testify that the M. C. Upper was in her proper place, and where vessels are regularly moored, and there is no evidence to show that the men in charge of the M. C. Upper were in any way contributory to the damage she sustained. Mr. McCallum, moreover, contends that by the Government's redeeming Battle's bond, and by the giving it up, and the payment of the small sum of $600, they virtually admitted the unsound condition of the gates of lock 21. There is no doubt whatever upon the minds of the arbitrators but that Mr. McCallum has sustained a loss of nearly $8,000 by the damage caused to the M. C. Upper. We have, however, thought it desirable to group together in this report those portions of the evidence bearing upon the cause of the accident, and of the condition of the gates prior to its occurrence."

Mr. John D. Smith, a man thoroughly competent and able to speak on the subject, says:

"He remembers the break in the Welland Canal in 1874. He noticed the condition of the gates. Took notice of one gate which was jammed between the M. C. Upper and the lock and noticed a portion of the gate decayed and rotten. He saw that portion of another gate on the heel-path side was decayed, and he could pull out rotten timber of the heel-posts with his hands. Formerly, the practice was to let the gate go until knocked out, and some vessel pay for them. Within the last two or three years, they take them out and replace them with new ones. Has known gates to be in such a decayed condition as to fall out of their own accord. Has known the upper gates of a lock to be forced open by a vessel striking them and then close again without doing any damage. If the gates were rotten and a vessel was to strike them they would be liable to go out."

"John Battle says he noticed the condition of the gates at the time the Louise struck them or broke through. Saw the balance beam and heel posts of two of them, which were decayed. This is where the collar or anchor comes around the heel-post, and it is a very important part of the gate, from the strain coming upon it. He noticed the head gate of the heel path side particularly decayed. He says that he contended before the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie that the gates were rotten; that Mr. Mackenzie reduced the amount of the bond to $500, and he made this reduction on the representation that two or three of the gates were carried away by the schooner Louise in 1874. The gate could be very much decayed and still stand up. He discovered that the heel-post of the lower gate was shattered by reversing and considerably decayed. In answer to the question, 'Is it not at all likely that the gates spoken of would have remained useful for years had it not been for the collision?' he replies: 'I think one of the foot gates should have been removed before. With this exception, the gates might serve the purpose for some time.' He speaks also of a portion of the lock gates that were as rotten as punk and dozey."

"Mathew Battle swears that the accident would not have occurred had the gates been sound. From the general appearance of the gates it would not take much force of a vessel to break them."

Now, I need not trouble the House any longer with the evidence for the claim. I will now briefly refer to the testimony of some parties who were examined for the defence.

Jas. Dill, called by the Government to resist the claim, says:

"Has been employed on the canal since 1850. Both upper and lower gates were all broken in two and held together by the irons. They were broken between the second and fourth girths and one of the heel-posts was broken off short at the collar—twisted off or shivered about two feet from the top. This heel-post was a little affected, but sound at heart. It was affected about two or three inches deep from the outside—it was kind of dead like and spongy pretty much all the way around the post from the collar up. This would materially weaken the gate above the water. The collar is right at the water's edge or surface. There is stress or strain upon the heel-post above the collar on a vessel entering the lock, or in settling down in the lock. If the gates had not been struck, thinks they would have lasted. Does not think the gates were broken by reason of their own defects. The late Robert Collier was superintendent at the time of the break, and witness was in no way responsible, he thinks, for any defects that might exist in the gates of the lock. On being examined, this witness says there is a constant strain on the gates in the ordinary locking of vessels; that every vessel coming into the lock strikes the gate more or less—they could not come in without doing so. Gates have to be built very strong to stand the wear and tear and be safe. The size of the heel-post is sixteen inches. If a sixteen-inch heel-post was rotten all round for two or three inches on the outside, it would weaken it to the extent of two-thirds. It is important that every part of the gate should be in good condition for the safety of navigation. The principal cause of the gate being taken out of lock No. 21 was on account of something being wrong with the valve, and it was somewhat defective otherwise. Did not consider it fit for anything after being taken out except for the old iron. This is not worth a great deal when in the lock, but could work the lock with it. It was taken out for the safety and despatch of navigation. If the lower gates were chained to the coping so as to keep them in the recess until a vessel was snubbed, think it would prevent their being carried away in the event of the upper gates being carried away. He understands there is an invention of this kind, but has not seen it. If this arrangement had been in use at the time of the break, there would not have been more than one pair of gates carried away. The expense of such an arrangement to each gate would be $5.00. A gate in use for ten years would be worth nothing but the old iron; gates last from ten to fifteen years; some not so long. The gate first taken out of lock 12 in 1878, was only a little rotten above water; the second gate was perfectly sound where it was broken. These gates could not have been broken if properly mitred. Considers these gates were fit for navigation if properly handled. The foot gates put in at the same time are there yet. No record has been kept of the age of gates prior to 1873, and of his own knowledge could not tell the age of any gates on the canal previous to that year. The gates in lock 12 broke without, to his knowledge, being struck by a vessel. Examined the gates in spring of 1874 and reported them all right. Mr. Collier told him that it would not pay to put a new valve in the gate broken out of lock 21 in 1873, and put it in again, as it had been in use seven or eight years."

The reason why he did not put back a gate seven or eight years old was because it was Mr. Collier's orders. Mr. Collier was a good judge whether the gate was fit to go back in the lock again for use. John McAuley, lock-tender on lock 21, was sworn. In reply to the question:

"Did you have a great deal of trouble during the ten years that the head gates were in lock 21 up to the time of the second break in July, 1874?" he said: "It was hard on account of the leakage of the lower gates, which would not mitre close at the bottom, which accounts for their defective condition."

Bernard Clarke, of Merriton, lock-tender, said:

"Has been lock-tender and working in yard for twenty-three years. Remember the break in the gates in July, 1874. Was there soon after and helped to take the gates out. He found them in a half-worn state. In his opinion three of them would have stood for some years with ordinary care, but the fourth was pretty much worn. The one spoken of was an upper gate. Did not particularly notice what portion of that gate was broken, but gates generally break in girths above the valves or bottom girths. The tow-post and the gates generally were in a bad condition when he helped to repair them. Had to put on repair bands to hold the gate together. In his opinion the gate spoken of should have been taken out for the safety of navigation. If the canal had been his own he would have taken them out."

And that is one of the witnesses brought by the Crown to resist the claim, and I think the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with that evidence. I am sorry that it was not before the House sooner. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw the motion he has made, on reading this evidence, and on the fact that the Board concluded the accident was entirely caused by the rotten condition of the gates. Mr. Bodwell says:

"Saw some decay in the heel post of the head gate on the heel-path side and in the balance beams or fillings. The decay was mainly above the collar and the heel-posts were split or broken. As far as the decay in the balance beams and fillings are concerned it was in both gates. If the gates were mitred, the posts would not have likely given way with the pressure of the water; but if the gates were not mitred they would have given way under any circumstances."

It appears the gates were not mitred. Further on he says:

"Believes three of the gates would have been in two or three years and not eight years as stated in his report of October, 1874, that is to say, the two upper gates and the lower one. Says that the evidence indicates to him that the M. C. Upper was farther from the lock at the time of the break than his officers reported her to be, and that the gates had been two years longer in use."

He corrects his first impression as to the contributory negligence on the part of the M. C. Upper and corrects his first impression as to the sound condition of the gates. What was the result of all this? The hon. gentleman said that the Board had not found in favor of the justice of this claim. I ask him again, what other construction can possibly be given to this statement? They say:

"In coming to the conclusion that the damage to the M. C. Upper was directly caused by the mismanagement of those on board the schooner Louise and not by the generally defective condition of the gates of lock 21 on the Welland Canal; still considering the very contradictory evidence—the fact that the Government virtually admitted the unsound condition of the gates by reducing the amount of Battle's bond in settlement with him—the fact that there is no corroborative evidence in support of either McAvoy's or Ferris's different statements as to the cause of the accident in consequence of the death of McTaggart, the lock-tender, the only party present—the fact that the M. C. Upper was moored in the proper place and the absence of any proof that her lines were not taut—the fact that Mr. McCallum had paid his canal dues and that there was no negligence contributory or otherwise on his part or on the part of those acting for or under him at the time of the accident; we have also come to the conclusion that there are substantial and fair grounds for the favorable consideration of the claim."

This is signed by those present, Messrs. Compton, Buchanan and Simard. After every means was taken by the Government to resist the claim, after hearing the full evidence on the whole question, I ask the hon. gentleman whether, with the declaration of the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Lash, assuming that a purely legal claim was not made out that could be sustained, the Government could do otherwise, as an honest Government, than come here and present the claim. The arbitrators had found that fair and substantial grounds existed for the payment of the loss sustained. Had the loss been incurred by a gentleman on the other side, the Government would have no alternative than to do what they have done, to do that fair and substantial justice, that their own officers—not an ordinary arbitration in which the claimant names one arbitrator and the Crown another, but an arbitration conducted before the officers of the Government, men entirely independent of any influence that could be brought to bear on them by the parties—declared should be done. Our own officers declared it was a question of arbitration, and the arbitrators unanimously came to the conclusion that there were fair and substantial grounds for the payment of the loss sustained, which loss occurred without the slightest contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has placed before the House partially, by reading, some of the papers which he did not submit to its consideration at an earlier period. I need hardly say it is utterly impossible to analyze those papers, from the hon. gentleman's perusal of such parts as seem to him to be material to the question. The report of the Department of Justice—the last papers so far as we know on this subject—is dated as long ago as the 29th October last. The hon. gentleman did not bring down this amount in the original estimates. It came down about the same time as the Redistribution Bill, very late in the Session, and when it was brought forward in Committee, where we had the only opportunity for discussion, the hon. gentleman was not prepared with any papers, so far as I am aware. I was not in my place at the time, but the information I received was that there was a discussion, and the hon. gentleman promised to place some papers at the disposition of the hon. member for Centre Huron.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I was asked for certain papers, and the papers I was asked for were given.

Mr. BLAKE. This side of the House did not know what papers were material. The hon. gentleman knew, and he sent across the House and placed at our disposal two papers and no more. When the item came on for discussion the hon. gentleman was not in his place, and an amendment was asked on these papers that were here. It was pointed out distinctly that all the information furnished to this House did not justify, but on the contrary rendered wholly improper this item in the Estimates. Then the hon. First Minister proposed that the item should stand, inasmuch as the hon. member was not in his place. To-day, without laying the other papers on the Table, the hon. Minister of Railways causes concurrence to be moved on that item. He takes advantage to read part of the arbitrators' report and argues from that he justifies his position. I say that is a wholly improper mode of dealing with this House. If the material on which the hon. gentleman relies is not to be submitted to us, except by his reading such parts of it as he deems fit to read, it is obvious we are asked to concur in an item of the particulars of which we are not fully cognizant. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has agreed that the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice suggesting a reference justifies his action. I deny it. The Deputy Minister of Justice says that upon the papers before him there is no claim, but he says: "Mr. McCallum had an interview with him, and represented to him that the accident was caused, not by the carelessness of those in charge of the Louise, but because the lock gates were bad and not fit for that purpose, and he can show that those in charge of his vessel were in no way to blame." There was the issue. What appeared to the Deputy Minister was that this accident was caused by the accident of the Louise; what Mr. McCallum said to him was: "That is not the case, this accident was caused by the defective condition of the lock gates, not by the mismanagement of those in charge of the Louise." Well, says the Deputy Minister, "It is a question of fact upon which I can offer no opinion, and I suggest a reference to one or more of the official arbitrators in order that the evidence can be taken, and that they may have the facts properly brought before them upon which a conclusion may be reached." The hon. Minister was perfectly right in referring the case, in order that the suggestion of the Deputy Minister might be carried out. I agree with that. Then the Minister says that he referred it to the Board of Arbitrators, who found in a manner that was not satisfactory to the Deputy Minister. We have not that evidence before us, we have not got that report, but we have the hon. gentleman's perusal. Well, I assume for the purposes of the case that the report warranted a reference back to the full Board on the question. Then we have not got the evidence which was taken before the full Board; but the hon. gentleman reads only a portion of the report of the full Board, extracts from evidence tending to show that the condition of the lock gates was bad. Well, now, suppose they were bad, that is a matter wholly immaterial if this accident was not due to that but to the mismanagement of the Louise. The question is whether the accident was due to the mismanagement of the Louise or to the defective condition of the lock gates; if it was due to the mismanagement of the Louise, then the question ends. Although the hon. gentleman read the evidence, and extracts from the reports bearing on the defective condition of the lock gates, he does not read any portion of the evidence, and but a scrap of that part of the report which deals with the mismanagement of the Louise. We did not hear that. It is not told us what the arbitrators found. What do they say? Once again I will read over the conclusion, but before doing so I will ask why these papers were referred to the Department of Justice? What was the object of sending this whole budget of papers to them? The hon. Minister holds that he was absolutely bound in the earlier stages of this matter to do just what the Department of Justice said he should do. But he does what the Department says he should not do, and he has not uttered a single syllable with reference to that which forms this motion. He has not said one word upon that report of the hon. Minister of Justice which is embodied in the motion in your hands. He has ignored it as completely as if there was no such report, as completely as he has ignored those portions of the report of the arbitrators which speak of the conduct of the Louise as I assume. I have not had the opportunity of reading them, and have not had these advantages which the hon. member for North Victoria has had of reading the evidence and the reports. To certain favored members of this House that information is communicated, but not to the hoi polloi, not to the rank and file, not to the general mass of us; but from the information which is vouchsafed to the bulk of us, we hear nothing in particular about the mismanagement of the Louise. Now, once again, let us read that document which, though read and re-read by hon. friends in their argument, read by you, Sir, when you read the motion, seems to have escaped attention to-night, as it seems to have escaped the attention of the Minister of Railways. Let us read it once again, so that it may be impressed upon his mind, so that it may be answered by somebody as requested in your communication:

"Re claim L. McCallum.—As regards the question in your communication of the 29th September, I have considered this case with respect to the liability of the Crown for the claim. In my opinion the Crown is not liable, viewing the case as one between subject and subject, giving the claimant the same justice against the Crown as he would have against the subject; and it is clear that unless the accident was caused by the imperfect state of the lock gates or by the officers of the canal, there would be no liability to indemnify Mr. McCallum for the loss sustained."

Now, there Mr. McCallum is put in as favorable a position as it is possible for the Department to put him. A grave question immediately arises as to his being put in so favorable a position, because the Crown not infrequently occupies a position more favorable than the subject in such cases. But to avoid all questions on that subject, to avoid all doubt, the Department of Justice, for the purposes of the case, waives any consideration of the point whether the Crown occupied a higher position in resisting the demand of Mr. McCallum than a private individual would under like circumstances, and he says: "We put aside all considerations of that kind, and we supposed it was Mr. McCallum or Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith that were here contesting." And the question is whether if it had been Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith instead of Her Majesty, Mr. McCallum would have had a legal demand against him. Well, what do they answer:

"The finding of the official arbitrators seems to be unanimous that the accident was caused by the negligence of those in charge of the steamer Louise and not by the defective condition of the gates. The Crown cannot be made answerable for the mismanagement of the Louise.—Z. LASH. 'I concur in this opinion.—ALEX CAMPBELL.'"

Now, Sir, I claim that the hon. gentleman, even in his early exposition of the case, has not read that portion of the report which tends to establish this statement of the Deputy Minister, concurred in by the Minister of Justice, which states that the unanimous finding was because of the mismanagement of those in charge of the Louise and not of the defective condition of the gates. "The Crown," he says, "cannot be made answerable for the mismanagement of the Louise; papers returned;" and the Deputy Minister and the Minister concur in that view. Now, Sir, I maintain that that opinion, based upon the assumption upon which it is based, but which we have nothing to contradict, is obviously correct, and the steamer Louise was so mismanaged as to cause this accident to the schooner. Then Mr. McCallum has a remedy against the owners of the Louise, but he has no remedy against the Crown, no matter how defective may have been the condition of the gates. I care not how defective the condition of the gates may be; if this accident was not due to that but to the mismanagement of the Louise, then he has his remedy against her and not against the Crown. I have before me a statement of the Minister of Justice, of a Minister of this same Government, who brings down this vote, to the effect that it is the unanimous finding of the arbitrators that this accident was caused by the mismanagement of the Louise and not to the defective condition of the lock gates. Now, Sir, that finding is entirely consistent with the gates being defective. What is material is to ascertain what caused the accident. Now, that was the issue at the start. Mr. McCallum tendered that issue to the Deputy Minister. When he first saw him he said it was the defective condition of the gates, and not the mismanagement of the Louise, that caused the accident. Then he goes to the arbitrators, and they find unanimously it was the defective condition of the gates and also another cause, namely, the mismanagement of the Louise, to which the accident was due; and it being the mismanagement of the Louise the Crown is not liable, as of course it is not. Well, the hon. gentleman has said that the circumstance that there was a reduction in the assessed liability of the Louise to the Government is an indication that the gates were defective.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The arbitrators say that unanimously.

Mr. BLAKE. I said the hon. gentleman made that statement. It may be so, but the hon. gentleman confounded the two questions. I dare say that the hon. Minister of Public Works of that day was of opinion that old debts were not equal to new ones, that old gates were not equal to new ones, and that the ordinary assessment of damages was not sufficiently taken into account. That has nothing, however, to do with the case. It is a question how much damage was done by the Louise to the lock gates. What took place forms an important element in determining the amount of damages; and if it was found that much damage was done by that vessel the damages to be paid by the Government should be so much less. It will be remembered there was a reduction in that assessment, and that fact was attributed to the political relations existing between the hon. member for Welland and the Government. I recollect that letter being read, and that hon. gentleman being charged with being guilty of prostituting his office. What is really before this House is whether on the papers upon which we have to form a judgment—as we have not had the advantage the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) had of perusing all the papers—we are able to arrive at a conclusion in accord with the Board of Arbitrators, that they found that the accident was due to the Louise and not to the circumstances that the lock gates were defective. That being so, it is immaterial whether the lock gates were defective or not. I say that the Minister of Justice found—the hon. gentleman has not given me an opportunity of contrasting the reports as he has not read the parts which bear on the case, but he has read those parts which do not bear on the case and which he wants to bear on the case, and he finds he cannot tell about a question of negligence, but the arbitrators have found the cause of the accident. They found unanimously it was due not to the mismanagement of officers of the Government, but to those in charge of the Louise, and that the accident was not due to the defective condition of the lock gates. I presume the hon. gentleman agreed with his colleagues. If the Government had disagreed they would have referred the report back for a reason, as was done by the Minister of Militia towards General Luard in the Ross case. The report of the arbitrators in this case, however, stands as a final document. The Deputy Minister of Justice had the claim early before him. The answer is given that there is no claim in the evidence before him, but Mr. McCallum says that circumstances exist, including the defective condition of the lock gates, which demanded investigation, and the Deputy Minister recommended the investigation. The Government proceeded to investigate. The report was not satisfactory and it was sent to the full Board. After all the facts had been investigated the arbitrators decided that the loss was due not to the circumstance that the lock gates were defective, but that it was due to the mismanagement of the Louise. Upon that report this item is indefensible, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Reference has been made by the hon. leader of the Opposition that I possessed the advantage of having read through the evidence of the three arbitrators. I have read that evidence very carefully and also the evidence taken before the single arbitrator, and also the reports made by the hon. Minister and Deputy Minister on the subject, and I have no hesitation in expressing the conclusion to which I have arrived in my own mind, that a clear and valid claim was established by the evidence of Mr. McCallum. The hon. leader of the Opposition no doubt evidently has laid down perfectly correctly the rule, that if the accident was caused by negligence on the part of the officers of the Louise, Mr. McCallum's claim would be against the proprietors of that vessel. But the evidence shows not only that there was carelessness on the part of the Louise, but also that the lock gates were so defective that except for that negligence on the part of the officers of the Louise no injury would have occurred to the Upper. That is the real point in the case. Here is a matter in which two cases of neglect were shown, first, on the part of the officers of the Louise, and second, on the part of the Government in allowing the lock gates to be in such a condition that they could not resist any great pressure. If the lock gates had been in a proper condition they would have been able to resist the pressure and no injury would have occurred. It was the negligence of the Government officers in having defective lock gates that really caused the accident. The hon. leader of the Opposition has referred to the finding of the arbitrators, and has charged the hon. Minister with garbling it, and reading only those parts that suited his purpose. The whole of the finding of the arbitrators, except what is a mere recital of evidence, was read by the hon. Minister.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but he did not read any evidence as to the mismanagement of the Louise.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). That is beside the question. Nobody denies that there was negligence on the part of the officers of the Louise, but the point is whether the mismanagement of the Louise was such that if the lock gates had been in good condition the Upper would have been damaged, and the evidence shows that it was the defective condition of the lock gates which caused the damage, though it originated in the first place by the mismanagement of the Louise. I will again read the whole finding of the arbitrators:

"In coming to the conclusion that the damage to the M. C. Upper was directly caused by the mismanagement of those on board the schooner Louise, and not by the generally defective condition of the gates of lock 21 on the Welland Canal; still considering the very contradictory evidence, and the fact that the Government virtually admitted the unsound condition of the gates by reducing the amount of Battle's bond in settlement with them—the fact that there is no corroborative evidence in support of either McAvoy's or Ferris's different statements as to the cause of the accident, in consequence of the death of McTaggart, the lock-tender, the only other party present—the fact that the M. C. Upper was moored in the proper place, and the absence of any proof that her lines were not taut—the fact that Mr. McCallum had paid his canal dues, and that there was no negligence contributory or otherwise on his part or on the part of those acting for or under him at the time of the accident; we have also come to the conclusion that there are substantial and fair grounds for the favorable consideration of the claim."

Mr. BLAKE.

Now, I should like to ask the House if that report by the arbitrators, that there was substantial and fair ground for the favorable consideration of the claim, was not sufficient to justify the Government in arriving at the conclusion at which they arrived. The witnesses examined in both cases were the same, and there were no material variations in the evidence they gave. Now, what was the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice on the evidence taken before Mr. Buchanan? It was as follows:—

"Treating the Government as if they were a private company owning the Welland Canal, with authority to collect tolls from vessels using the same, and treating this claim as if it were an action brought by Mr. McCallum, in Court, against the owners of the canal, for the damages sustained by the vessel, and treating Mr. Buchanan's report as if it were the verdict of a jury, I have come to the conclusion that under the evidence in this case, the Court would set aside the verdict, and order a new trial before another jury."

My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the Court never sets aside a verdict and orders a new trial, unless they come to the conclusion that the evidence does not support the verdict that the jury has arrived at. Mr. Lash reports that the evidence does not satisfy him that Mr. Buchanan's finding was correct, and that if it was before a court they would unhesitatingly order a new trial. That trial was held and the arbitrators made the report which I have read. On these reports, on the evidence which was read by the Minister of Railways, on the recommendation of the three arbitrators that it was a proper case for the favorable consideration of the Government, it seems to me that they were fully justified in making this reparation to Mr. McCallum for the undoubted injury he had sustained and the amount of what was clearly proved to be within a few dollars of $8,000 and for which damage he was entirely innocent.

Motion agreed to.

MARITIME COURT FOR CANADA.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in asking the House to consider the message from the Senate on the subject of the establishment of a Maritime Court for Canada, said: I do not know that I can do better than read the Address which the Senate have adopted to Her Majesty on the subject. The address explains its object. The Vice-Admiralty Courts are branches of the High Court of Admiralty in England; the Judges are appointed from England, and we pay them; the process of these Courts is the same obtained in the Court of Admiralty. But their numbers, their form of procedure and their expenses are not at all adequate to our system. The address mentions the fact that there is already a Maritime Court for our inland waters, and states truly enough that we have the power to establish a Vice-Admiralty Court within our own limits, but that we have not the power to try cases on the high seas without special authority from the British Parliament. For these reasons, this Address has been carried in the Senate, and I move:

That this House do concur in the Address of the Senate to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen on the subject of the establishment of a Maritime Court in Canada, by filling up the blank with the words 'and Commons.'

Mr. BLAKE. To the general proposition, Sir, that it is expedient to move in the direction indicated, I have not merely no opposition to offer, but I give my hearty assent. In point of fact, when I was charged with the duty of securing the assent of the Imperial authorities to the establishment of a Maritime Court for our inland waters, I took occasion, as will appear from the printed documents now on our records, to represent that the circumstances of this country called for early attention to the subject, by our own authority, of our maritime jurisdiction by the establishment of courts in substitution for the Vice-Admiralty Courts. I agree with the hon. gentleman in the statement that these courts are anomalies; they are anomalous in that while we pay the Judges, they are nominally, at any rate, appointed upon the advice of the Imperial advisers of Her Majesty, though I believe the course taken is always to accept the suggestion of the authorities in Canada as to the person named for the office. They are anomalous in their existence here at all; and they are even worse than the hon. gentleman has said in practice, because there exists in them the older, more cumbrous, more antiquated, and more expensive system, which has been for a long time got rid of in the Vice-Admiralty Courts of the United Kingdom. Under these circumstances these courts have been practically a blot on our administration of justice. I am told that the business done is very trifling, except in the one at Quebec, which is naturally the seat for a Vice-Admiralty Court—that the business is much smaller than it would be if the process were more modern and the expenses lighter. Because there is a practical grievance, and because we ought to exercise our own powers, I agree in the step; but whether the manner in which that step is to be accomplished is the best manner I may be permitted to express a doubt. My own opinion is, that it would have been better for us to have passed a law—if we were going to address Her Majesty otherwise than by means of the intermediate executive power—to go into force by proclamation, which would have intimated what we believed our degree of jurisdiction was, and then to address Her Majesty to withdraw the Vice-Admiralty Courts. Of course I do not at all mean to say that we should put into force our law while the courts exist, which would be attended with obvious inconvenience. I apprehend, however, that the course now proposed to be adopted is one that will not be attended with very speedy result. The second point to which I take some exception is this: My belief is that we have, for practical purposes, all the necessary jurisdiction. I am now referring to civil jurisdiction, not to maritime jurisdiction, because that I think we should not ask for; it would be exercised only in time of war, and should belong to an Imperial Court. But if our power be defective, as this Address admits, my opinion is that we should specify in the Address what powers they are which we do not possess, but which we think we ought to possess. The invitation to Her Majesty to grant us such further powers as Her Majesty thinks expedient is not likely to have any very abundant fruits. We leave to the Colonial authorities and the Admiralty authorities to decide what in their opinion they ought to grant us. Now, that is a very difficult investigation, and an uncertain manner of disposing of the question. I think it will be found, when we come to deal with the answer to our action upon this Address, that the circumstance that we have not fully considered what the extent of our own jurisdiction is, that we have not decided wherein, if at all, it is defective, and that we have not asked plainly and definitely for instructions, if any, as we require, in order to make a Vice-Admiralty system for civil jurisdiction, will lead to delay and still more unsatisfactory results.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, and it might be subject of consideration whether the two steps could not be taken together; whether, when the Address goes to England, the hon. Minister of Justice could not address himself to a specification of the jurisdiction which such a court, if established, ought to possess in Canada. The great advantage of, it seems to me, the necessity for an Address to Her Majesty is this: that supposing we have all sufficient jurisdiction with reference to the Maritime Courts, that does not do away with the Vice-Admiralty Court, or with the right of the Admiralty to establish those courts; and if we should have two jurisdictions vicious parties might go into the old court for the sake of delay.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly. I do not object to that.

Mr. MILLS. We ought to distinguish between asking Her Majesty to withdraw this jurisdiction, exercised by the Court of Admiralty, and asking for permission to establish such a court ourselves. In my opinion we have that power already. The British North America Act contains a provision that we should provide for military and naval defence. It is perfectly obvious that the power of legislating as to what any Canadian colonist may do, beyond the marine league, is vested in this Parliament. While I, therefore, concur in the object of the Premier, to get rid of the Imperial Courts and their jurisdiction here, and that jurisdiction should be exercised on all those subjects by courts established by the Parliament of Canada, I do not feel disposed to ask for powers that we already possess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Suppose the English Attorney-General should disagree with you?

Mr. MILLS. That is a fair subject for discussion; but it would be inconvenient to give up your own case and admit that you have no right. It would be very much easier to give up the English jurisdiction than to acquire jurisdiction from England, if we were to admit we do not possess it. We should say to the Imperial Government: "We have power given us by you, but we cannot exercise that power conveniently so long as your Imperial Courts remain with us. We ask you, therefore, to withdraw your authority that we may exercise the authority already given to us."

Motion agreed to.

NORTH WEST TERRITORIES ACT, 1880.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 149) to remove certain doubts as to the effect of the North West Territories Act, 1880, said: This Bill is to amend the Act in connection with the establishment of the Government, including the 38th and 39th Victoria, and the North-West Territories Act of 1880. They are all the same Act, in fact, and may be considered as consolidated. But, rightly or wrongly, some of the Stipendiary Magistrates have come to the conclusion the last Act only has effect, from the time it was passed—that there is no consolidation. The 3rd section is to correct the 9th sub-section of the 9th clause of the last Act, by striking out the words “having jurisdiction in the North-West Territories.” These words “having jurisdiction in the North-West” are not necessary. It should run: “before any Stipendiary Magistrate or Justice of the Peace,” otherwise a Justice of the Peace of the District of Keewatin would be excluded.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say what would be the practical effect of this?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was held that the previous Acts were repealed by this Act, that the Act did not apply to any transaction that occurred between the passing of the first Act and the last.

Mr. BLAKE. What the hon. gentleman wants, I suppose, is not to apply the provisions of the North-West Act of 1880 to those old transactions, but to keep the old law for the old transactions and the new one for the new.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the object.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

PATENT ACT OF 1872.

Mr. POPE, in moving second reading of Bill (No. 155) to amend the Patent Act of 1872, said: This amendment is simply to place a patentee, in respect to importing into Canada the thing patented, in the same position as that in which he was placed by the amendment of 1875, in respect to the manufacture of his patent, by extending the time.

Mr. BLAKE. The same reason does not, to my mind, apply to the question of importation as to the question of manufacture. Considerable time and expenditure of capital are required to establish a manufactory, and it was, perhaps, not unreasonable that when the condition was that a manufactory should be established in the country, there should be discretionary power given to the Commissioner to extend the time, but I do not see that the same reasons can apply to a simple case of importation.

Mr. POPE. If it is reasonable to give an extension for two years to enable a patentee to manufacture his patent, it is just as reasonable to give him an extension of time to import it. I am trying to avoid the very things the hon. gentleman speaks of. Under the amendment I propose he cannot start for three years. Then is it not right, and is it not in the interest of the country, that until he can get that started we should also extend the time?

Mr. BLAKE. My opinion is that the practical result of the hon. gentleman's proposal, as he now explains it, will be that he will have a great many more applications for extension of time to manufacture than he would have had otherwise, because he will find men saying: “Now I find it extremely difficult to create a manufactory in Canada, and I know if I find it difficult I will get the consent of the Minister of Agriculture to allow me to go on and import a few years.”

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. POPE. I have confined it to this fact, that the man must show a good cause before he can get an extension.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Have there occurred any cases of inconvenience or difficulty?

Mr. POPE. There have been applications. There are certain things patented in this country that it is almost impossible to manufacture in sufficient quantity, from the fact that there is only one manufactory, and consequently the article has to be imported. There have been three or four cases of that kind brought to my attention.

Mr. BLAKE. I recollect to have heard that there was one machine in connection with woollens, and that there was a difficulty that the goods could not be imported and manufactured so that it would be profitable for the patentee to make them here. Now, that is just the class of cases in which it does not seem to me that it is important to take a patent out at all.

Mr. CAMERON (North Victoria). I may mention to the Committee that my attention has been called to another class of patented articles that it was desirable to have this Act passed with a view to apply to—that is some parts of the machinery used in the production of electric lights. I believe Mr. Osler has been acting for the Edison Electric Light Company, and he informed me that this Bill is very desirable. It seems to me questionable whether the Bill goes far enough. There may be some cases in which the year allowed for importation has expired, and this Act would not apply to these cases. Now, if the law is to be altered, it seems to me that these parties who have made application within a year, should be allowed a certain time within which they may make application after this Act is passed. I, therefore, propose, in amendment, to add after the 12th line: “who may also grant a like extension not exceeding two years from the date thereof, in cases where the patent was granted two years prior to the last day of May, 1882.” Of course, it is only a discretion that is given to the Commissioner of Patents, it is not an arbitrary extension. I may say that I have been requested to introduce this amendment by Mr. Osler, who informs me that in reference to one of the patents connected with the Edison Electric Light, some fifteen months have elapsed, and the amendment would meet this case.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman's argument for the Bill is that it is applied to a class of inventions for which the demand is so limited in this country that it would not pay to manufacture them here. Well, this would be a good reason for allowing a man to import during the whole period of the patent, unless he supposes that while it would not pay at the end of two or three years it might begin to pay after that to build a manufactory. But a class of machines of a very rare description, of which the quantity for this country would be so small that it would not pay to establish a manufactory for them, is not likely to be so much required within three years that it will pay at the end of that time. There is a natural protection because if it does not pay the monopolist, who is protected against all the world, to put up a factory, it will pay nobody else to take out a patent, therefore he does not want a patent in this country. I believe eventually that patentees will make representations to the Minister, and that what are known as patent affidavits will be put in to support them, and we will be told in scores of cases in which, but for this, there would be no factories built, that it would not pay to build a factory for the small demand in this country, and therefore the extension should be asked for.

Mr. POPE (Compton). I think I can make it clear that the logic of the hon. gentleman is not very good. In 1875 the hon. gentleman came down to the House and asked it to pass a Bill by which two years more would be given to inventors to establish the industries in this country. The hon. gentleman says to-night we must not allow them to bring in a machine after twelve months. It is evident the hon. gentleman has gone back on his opinion of 1875.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is incorrect in supposing that I brought down the Bill in 1875. I had no more to do with it than had the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not quite agree with the hon. Minister as to there being no distinction between the foreign inventor who desires to patent an article in this country and the Canadian inventor who manufactures nowhere else than here. In the case of the Canadian inventor, in cases of difficult inventions involving the building of a factory, it may be said that a longer time should be allowed to them than to the foreigners who have no claim on us. We give that advantage to inventors who manufacture in this country; but if they do not do so, I do not see why any one who desires an implement or patented article may not go into the United States and bring it here according to the usual practice. This is a radical deviation from the practice, and while I do not oppose the Bill I regret giving those privileges unless we adopt the other principle that foreigners shall have the same rights as Canadians. That is done in England.

Mr. POPE. It is also done in the United States.

Mr. WHITE. The policy of this country is different, and it is an unnecessary infringement of the policy which we have always followed.

Mr. POPE. It is no infringement, but simply an extension of the policy. All patents are open in England and the United States, but we felt in 1872, when we tried to meet the wishes of the United States as far as possible, and when they were allowed to come in here and take out patents, that we inserted a clause which forced them to come in here. We must not draw a line, under this Patent Act, between Canadians and inventors who come from the United States and take out patents.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

WINDSOR BRANCH, INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 156) an Act respecting the Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway. He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill I may briefly state that in 1867 an Act was passed incorporating the Windsor and Annapolis Company for the purpose of constructing a railway from Windsor to Annapolis. The Government had already constructed a railway to Truro, and a branch about thirty-five miles from that branch from the Truro line to the town of Windsor. This was an Act for the purpose of incorporating a company for the construction of the intervening portion between the terminus of the Government Railway at Windsor and the town of Annapolis. That road was largely subsidized by the Government, and it was provided for the purpose of enabling the line to be effectively operated, that mutual running powers should be enjoyed by the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company and the Government of Nova Scotia, who were then operating the line from Halifax to Windsor. The Bill also contained a provision that whenever the Government of Nova Scotia wished to acquire the road they should have power to do so by paying the value to the Company, and it was provided that the value should be ascertained by the appointment of an arbitrator by the Company, another by the Government of Nova Scotia, and a third by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. In order to provide for that part of the charter which gives mutual running powers to the Government of Nova Scotia and the Railway Company, an agreement was come to under which the Company were allowed to operate what is called the Windsor Branch with running powers into Halifax, the Government maintaining the road and receiving one-third of the gross proceeds and the Company operating it and taking the other two-thirds. That arrangement was entered into in 1871. In 1873, the policy was adopted of utilizing the Windsor Branch for the purpose of extending the railway from Annapolis to the town of Yarmouth, and an Order in Council was passed, and in 1874 an Act also passed for the purpose of conveying the fee simple of the Windsor Branch to the Company, provided they would extend the road from Annapolis to Yarmouth, a certain reasonable and limited time being fixed. Under that arrangement and under the Act, the late Government took the road from the hands of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company and transferred it to the Western Counties Railway Company as a consideration for their extending the road from Annapolis to Yarmouth. The Western Counties Railway Company failed. They operated the Windsor Branch under the power given them by the late Government until after the present Government came into power. When the period elapsed, about October, 1879, during which they were required to extend the railway to Yarmouth as a condition of the agreement which declared that they should give up the peaceable possession of the road, it was taken from the Western Counties Railway Company and held by the Government pending certain litigation which had been entered into between the Western Counties Railway Company and the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. Since that period, the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, under the agreement to operate it by the month—an agreement that was terminable at thirty days' notice on the part of the Government—have operated it practically under the same arrangement as the original agreement, they retaining two-thirds of the proceeds, and the Government one-third. The Government of Nova Scotia have passed legislation, providing for the consolidation of the railways in that Province that are not the property of the Dominion Government, and providing for the carrying out of the design which this Parliament had when they passed the legislation of 1874 giving this road to the Western Counties Railway Company, in consideration of their extending it to Yarmouth on the one side by the completion of the link between Annapolis and Digby, and completing the communication with the Strait of Canso on the other. Under the clause in the charter of this Company, which enables the Government of Nova Scotia at any time to become the owners of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, on payment of the amount found by the arbitrators to be the value of the road, this Government has been notified of the determination of the Government of Nova Scotia to become the owners of the railway, and it consequently becomes necessary to have legislation here which will accomplish that which the Act of 1874 was intended to accomplish, but which was not accomplished by it. The Western Counties Railway Company brought this matter into Court, and it has ultimately been decided by the Privy Council of England that the Act of 1874 does not contain the power necessary to do that which Parliament intended to do, viz.: to vest the Western Counties Railway Company with the absolute ownership of the Windsor Branch of the Railway. It is therefore proposed to pass this Act, which will enable the Government of Nova Scotia, upon assuming the ownership of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, to take possession of the Windsor Branch; and this Act provides that that may be done if they carry out, what Parliament intended in the Act of 1874, the construction within a reasonable time of the railway from Annapolis to Digby. The Bill and the schedules, which have been some time in the hands of hon. members, contain a full statement of these various agreements, and also what is proposed to be accomplished by this Act. I may say that a petition has been placed in the hands of hon. members by the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, objecting to the passage of this Act, on the ground that it interferes with certain rights they possess. I do not see how any rights they possess can be interfered with by this Bill, because the Government of Nova Scotia has power under the original charter to become owners of this road whenever they please, and the tribunal is provided for to fix the value; and although they refer to their "undertaking," whatever that may mean, I suppose they would hardly claim that as the Windsor Branch was conveyed to them by an agreement for a specific purpose, that that which was given to them, and which was incident to the operation of this line of railway under their charter, should be continued. Whatever rights they have will be submitted to the arbitrators provided for by the charter, and they will only be called upon to part with their property on receiving full value for it. That, briefly, is the object of this Bill, and the necessity which has arisen for submitting it to this House.

Mr. BORDEN. Before entering into a discussion of the question involved in this Bill, I desire to call your attention to a point of order. This Bill is one which the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company claim interferes with their rights, in fact, takes away certain private rights which they hold; and they claim that they have had no opportunity of stating their case before the Government, and if this Bill is passed, will have no opportunity of appearing by counsel in defence of their rights. It seems to me, therefore, that this Bill should be referred to the Railway Committee of this House, and to show the practice in the British House of Commons, I will read from May's Parliamentary Practice, edition of 1879, page 693:

"And in 1862-63, Bills for the embankment of the Thames were brought in as public Bills; but, as private property and interests were affected, the standing orders were complied with, and other proceedings taken, as in the case of private Bills. The same course was adopted in 1867 and 1876 with the Metropolis Gas Bills; in 1874 with the Metropolis Water Supply and Fire Prevention Bill; and in 1877, with the Metropolitan Toll Bridges Bill. Such Bills, however, appear among the public orders of the day, and are treated in the House as public Bills; and petitions against them are presented to the House and not deposited in the Private Bill Office. In 1857, the Thames Conservancy Bill was introduced as a private Bill; and in 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1877 for giving further powers to the Metropolitan Board of Works (chiefly in respect of local improvements) were introduced and passed as private Bills."

I take the opportunity now of calling attention to this, in order that you may consider it before the time that you move its reference to Committee of the Whole. The petitioners state:

"Your petitioners have seen a Bill introduced in your House this day intituled: 'An Act respecting the Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway,' but have no opportunity of seeing the same, or of becoming aware of its contents until after it had been introduced; and the said Act, if it should be passed, would seriously prejudice the rights and property of your petitioners, and the interests of their shareholders and bondholders in respect to the said railway. And your petitioners would be justly aggrieved by the provisions, and, therefore, strongly object to and protest against the passing of the said Act."

Now, with regard to the Bill itself the hon. Minister of Railways has stated the facts correctly, I think. The agreement with this Windsor and Annapolis Company, I believe, was made in 1871 between the Company and the Government of the Dominion, and it was based upon a right which the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company claimed to have under their original charter. The Company was incorporated by an Act of the Nova Scotia Legislature in 1867, before Confederation. That Act involved an agreement made in 1866 and the previous Act of Nova Scotia of 1865. Those three measures went to make up the Act of 1867. Now, Confederation intervened between the time of the grant of that charter and the completion of the road, which was completed in 1869. After Confederation the Company found they were called upon to treat with the Government here, in order to get the use of their chartered rights. I think I cannot do better than read one or two extracts from the decision of the Privy Council referred to in this petition, which is also referred to in the Act to which the hon. Minister has referred. This decision was the result of litigation arising out of an Act of this Parliament passed in 1874, upon which the Government of that day dispossessed the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company of the Windsor Branch. The judgment reads thus:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

"THE WINDSOR BRANCH RAILWAY.

"The Windsor Branch Railway became the property of the Dominion upon the 1st July, 1867, being the day appointed by Her Majesty, in terms of section 4, of the British North America Act, for the provisions of that Act coming into operation. And, on the 22nd September, 1871, the Government of Canada, as the owners of the railway, and an implement of the obligation to make a 'traffic arrangement' which is contained in the agreement with the respondents, the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company.

"The 108th section of the 'British North America Act, 1867,' which must be read in connection with the third schedule of the Act, had the effect of transferring on the first day of July, 1867, to the Dominion of Canada all railways which were the property of the Province of Nova Scotia. Their Lordships are of opinion that it had the effect of vesting in Canada any other or larger interest in these railways than that which belonged to the Province at the time of the statutory transfer. Accordingly the Dominion took the property of the Windsor Railway, subject to the same obligation by which the right of the Provincial Government was effected, viz.: To enter into a traffic arrangement with the Respondent's company in terms of the agreement confirmed by the Provincial statute of the seventh day of May, 1867, and it was in pursuance of that obligation that the Dominion Government entered into the agreement of 22nd September, 1871. The agreement thus made was valid, and must continue to receive effect until it has been terminated by the default of the Respondent company, by the mutual consent of parties, or by the action of a competent Legislature."

Now, the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company contend that the agreement is as much a part of their property as any portion of their road, and that in having their property taken from them the Company claim that their rights in the Windsor Branch should be considered as well as the road itself which they constructed. The result of the passing of this Bill would seem to deprive them of that right. The Minister of Railways has not seen fit to enter at length into a discussion of that particular point, and I think I cannot do better than to remind him of his own remarks, upon this question made in this House in 1878. At that time the Windsor Branch Railway had been taken away from the Company, and the Minister of Railways, referring to that subject, made the following remarks:—

"Let them take, for instance, the position in which the western portion of Nova Scotia stood to-day. Nova Scotia obtained the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, 85 miles in length, by granting a large subsidy out of the public money, and by providing by law that that railway company should have running powers over the Windsor Branch and main line of the Intercolonial into Halifax, some 45 miles. The late Government gave the Windsor and Annapolis Railway a 21 years' lease of the Windsor Branch, on the condition that they paid one-third of the earnings to the Government. They failed, however, to pay that third of the earnings and the late Government having given them notice that they would cancel the lease if they did not comply with the terms, passed an Order in Council just before going out of power, cancelling the lease to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, and agreeing to transfer the line to the Western Counties Railway upon evidence being furnished that they could complete the railway from Annapolis to Yarmouth. The late Government had never contemplated giving to the Western Counties Railway what they did not possess. They had no power to take away the running powers of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway over the Government Railways in Halifax. This right was guaranteed by an Act of Parliament, without which the money could not have been obtained to build the road. If the hon. the First Minister desired to hand over the fee simple of the road, he must do it subject to the law of the land, as by an Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia the right to run had been previously transferred. In 1875, the Minister of Public Works renewed the lease with the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. He had passed an Act giving him power to transfer it to the Western Counties Railway Company; but with that on the Statute-Book he renewed the lease, making an engagement with them to change their gauge, involving an expenditure of $50,000 or $60,000, and making a binding contract with them renewing their lease. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Brydges was authorized to go by force of arms and wrest that line out of the hands of the Company which had it under lease from the present Government, and on the faith of which they were induced to change their gauge, and hand it over to the Western Counties Railway. In England the Government of Canada had been held up to public obloquy, for having induced men to come into this country and spend money on the faith of an Act of Parliament which had been disregarded. The best English advice had been obtained, and the Windsor and Annapolis Railway had taken this case into the Court of Chancery, in Nova Scotia, and the Judge in Equity had given judgment that the Government had violated their lease and exceeded their powers, and that the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company had, at present, the right to running powers over the road, which was given to it by Act of Parliament. He had, in his possession, extracts from the London Times in reference to the bad faith shown to capitalists by the Government of Canada—a most damaging thing to be going about in the journals of Great Britain."

This speech was made at a time when the matter was in litigation. Then the hon. Minister took the ground that this Company had the right under their original charter, and that the Government had never intended to take their rights away from them. Now that the case is finally decided by the Privy Council, he proposes an Act which will have the direct effect of taking away those charter rights. I think this House is entitled to have a clear statement from the hon. Minister as to what the effect of the Act will be, and I think if there is any doubt as to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company having the right of compensation for the loss of any rights they may possess, the Bill should be so amended as to secure them that right of compensation. I suppose there can be very little doubt but that Parliament has power to appropriate, in the public interests, if they think necessary, private property; but surely there can be no doubt that compensation should be given when private rights are forcibly appropriated. We had, during this Session, a question of private rights brought up in the disallowance of the Streams Bill. Not one hon. member opposite denied the power of the Legislature of Ontario to pass that Act, but it was claimed that it interfered, in a single instance, with private rights, and it was disallowed on that ground, although it provided for compensation. I did not believe, after the position the hon. member then took, that he would introduce a measure of this nature without guaranteeing, to the fullest extent, the rights of this Company, which are interfered with. I know that during the early part of this Session, the parties immediately interested in this legislation, the Government of Nova Scotia, a certain Railway Company, that was formed there recently, and the manager of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway and his counsel, met here on several occasions and tried to arrange some basis of agreement. The difficulty which stood in the way of their coming to an agreement was this: This Company insisted as a basis of arbitration that their rights in the Windsor Branch which they now hold, under the agreement of 1871, should be considered in the arbitration, and the Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia and the representatives of the Nova Scotia Railway Company refused to accept that as a basis of arbitration. In this Bill it is very clear an injustice will be done to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. I shall not detain the House longer, but will commend your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the point of order that I have raised.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the hon. Minister will make some explanation in reply to the statement of the hon. member for King's. The hon. Minister, when he introduced this Bill, said that it did affect private rights, that the various parties interested had been heard before the Privy Council and that there were conflicting interests, and that the Government had thought that the position assumed by the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company was an extreme one. I would like to understand more clearly than I have been able to gather from the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways, to what extent private rights are interfered with, and what was that attitude of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company to which the hon. Minister referred as being that to which the Government could not accede. The circumstance was admitted, on the introduction of the Bill, that there are private rights to be dealt with, and this renders it peculiarly important that we should have an accurate understanding of the situation as to that. From a cursory perusal of this Bill, and without that fuller knowledge which the hon. gentleman's statement ought to impart to us, it appears to me that the Bill has affected a declaration and enactment of fact. It declares and enacts that certain rights, privileges and powers are acquired by the Windsor and Annapolis Railway as owners of the line from Windsor to Annapolis, &c. Now that either is or is not the case; if it be the case it is necessary for us to declare and enact that it is the case, and therefore the enactment is useless; if it be not the case, or if it be open to contention on the part of the Railway Company that it is not the case, then we are, so far as we can make that law, stating that to be the case which is not the fact. So much of the law therefore as declares and enacts that these rights were acquired by this Act in a particular capacity, is either useless or improper, useless if it simply states that to be fact and law which is a fact and law, and improper if it proposes to make that fact and law which is not fact and law. Then, Sir, it seems to me subject to correction, but I do not believe that is a question that we ought to settle one way or other, that whatever rights the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company were entitled to under their original charter in the other railway, whatever the rights they were entitled to or may have acquired by virtue of, or not by virtue of, that original charter, are part of their undertaking, and form part of that which ought to be measured and estimated as the value of their undertaking when they come to be settled for. It is one proposition to say that these running rights are a graft upon their original enterprise, and are not to continue to be enjoyed by them when the Nova Scotia Government has assumed, if it has power to assume, the enterprise; but it is altogether another proposition to say that that circumstance alters the right of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company to claim that their undertaking is in fact in part composed of these running rights. I say that these running rights add value to their enterprise, I say it is proper that if the share capital and the loan capital, if there be any, which was raised on this charter of incorporation, was raised by virtue of the circumstance that the railway company was to have certain running rights or powers over another railway, that that circumstance rendered the enterprise worth more money and would actually enter into the consideration of those who would subscribe for shares or take bonds in the enterprise, and that the power, although contained in some instrument, of taking possession at a price of the property of the Government of Nova Scotia, must include the value of all the elements of the property, of which this was one. That is the view I take of the position of the Company. But it is not enough for the purpose of this legislation to say that that is open to argument, because it is obviously clear that if we have power—and we are assuming to have power—to deal with this subject, we ought to be careful in the last degree not to do or say anything which may impair the right of that Company to set up a claim. I do not propose that we should adjudge that they have such a claim, but I propose that we should, in the clearest manner, enunciate that we are not attempting to interfere with the assertion by them of that claim in the reference; and I maintain that the language of this clause is ambiguous and doubtful. It has created a doubt in my own mind as to the real object of this, and as to how far it may complicate the position of this Company in claiming compensation for the whole of this undertaking, including these running rights of this lease which is said to be a graft on, or a substitute pro tanto for these running rights. Now, I say we have no authority to adjudicate one way or the other between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Railway Company on this subject, and our duty is to leave it just exactly where it is. But before we say that the Railway Company shall not have as full right as it would have but for our legislation, unaffected and unobstructed by our legislation, to aver before the Board of Arbitration which is to be constituted, that in the elements of compensation are to be included those running rights, and the arrangement which is said to be an arrangement pro tanto in substitution for them, we should not aver that this position exists as against the Government of Nova Scotia, we should not put any obstacle against its operations as against the Railway Company. These are two points on which I desire further information than has yet been given to the House, the first one as to the necessity and propriety of the clause which declares the mode in which and the circumstances under which the grant for twenty-one years is held; and the second one as to the intention of the Government with reference to the claim of compensation; and in the course of these explanations I should desire to learn what those points of contention were before the Privy Council, between the parties, which the Government heard, and upon which they disposed of, as the hon. gentleman says, in part or altogether, adversely to the Railway Company. The circumstance that the Government heard counsel on the subject is a strong support to the position of my hon. friend that there are private rights involved which we ought not to lose sight of, because it indicates that the Privy Council thought there were interests which were proper to be represented by the very exceptional course of hearing counsel before themselves. But this Bill, which does not become law by the will of the Executive—at any rate in theory, it becomes law by the will of Parliament—and if it was essential that the Privy Council should hear counsel argue in support of private rights which were alleged to be affected by the proposed legislation, it would seem, as my hon. friend has observed, to be at least equally essential that we, who are, theoretically speaking, the moving power in this thing, without whose consent the legislation cannot become law, we should put that matter in a similar train of discussion, and give to these parties some opportunity of presenting to our mind the argument upon which counsel reached one conclusion, but not on which it is just possible that Parliament might reach another.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume the point of order the hon. gentleman has taken is not pressed with the idea—

Mr. BLAKE. That point of order could not rise till after the second reading.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But as the hon. gentleman has raised the point on the second reading—

Mr. BLAKE. He mentioned it at the opening of his statement, because he said it would rise after the second reading and the reference to the Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not hear the hon. gentleman's statement, and I do not know whether he raised the point of order or not.

Mr. BORDEN. I asked the hon. Speaker to consider that when the reference was made, I mentioned this in the meantime, so that he would have an opportunity to consider it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question is whether this is a Bill that ought to pass. It is a measure affecting Government property and affects the Windsor Branch, and on that account only it is dealt with as a Government measure. The hon. leader of the Opposition said it is, in fact, a private measure affecting private rights, and that is shown by the fact that the Privy Council have heard arguments upon it. He says it is an exceptional case; it may have been when the hon. gentleman was a member of the Cabinet, but it is a common course with the present Government. We have heard discussions of both public and private interests. Sometimes we hear parties by deputation or Committee of Council, but when the question is one involving considerable interest, it is frequently heard before the whole Council. In this case there was a question in which the Government of Nova Scotia, with a public measure passed by their Legislature, and other parties assumed to have rights as to engage to press their claims. This is a measure to ask Parliament to supplement the legislation of May, 1874—a measure passed when the hon. gentleman opposite was a Minister of the Government.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was a public Bill dealing with a public matter on public grounds, and was for the transfer of the Windsor Branch to the Western Counties Railway. The necessity of this measure arose from the fact that what was intended by Parliament in 1874 failed to be carried out. The intention was obvious, but the mode of expression was defective, and this measure is nothing more or less than a declaratory Act to supplement and cure the defects of the original legislation. The hon. gentleman opposite urges quite correctly that whether this is a public or private Bill it affects certain private rights. There are few public Bills that do not do so, and the question is whether this Bill is just in itself and does not deprive any persons of their rights. The hon. gentleman says that the original running powers conferred by the Canadian Government belong to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, that these powers were to enable the railway to make certain connections, and the moment they cease the Windsor and Annapolis Company cease to be owners of it. In fact, the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company cannot give any power of running powers if it ceases to be owned by the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. The hon. gentleman says the language is ambiguous, and that it is not clear that the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company are not deprived of some of their rights which they now possess, or claim to possess, under the running powers which continue for twenty-one years with power of renewal. The ownership of a line of railway in Nova Scotia cannot be taken away from the railway without receiving compensation for their rights, whatever those rights might be, at the time they surrendered them. The law there is this: the Government of Nova Scotia can, with respect to certain railways, of which this is one, by giving notice and submitting to arbitration the question of the value of the railway—of course such arbitration must include any rights and property of this kind—arrive at the value of all the property direct and contingent and ascertain what the value of the property to be surrendered is. I do not think this clause has any effect or restrains in any way instructions given to arbitrators; but I see considerable objection to any claim by which it would be held that this legislation affirms what the rights are either in its original charter or as a railway company.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not suggested that. All I am anxious for is that we should make it perfectly clear that we do not make a statement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that is quite clear. There is nothing in this Act that in anyway restrains the arbitrators or restricts them from finding the value of the property with its attendant easements as they existed at the time of the surrender.

Mr. LONGLEY. Were it not that I doubt whether I should have another opportunity of making any observations on the Bill before the House, I would not ask the House to listen to any remarks, but under the circumstances I feel myself called upon to make a few observations. The Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company came before this House by petition, in connection with which demands have been made to represent that undue advantage has been attempted to be taken of them. There would have seemed to have been no further remarks called for after the detailed statement made by the hon. the Minister of Railways. I venture to say, as far as I have been able to apprehend the claims of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, and the condition of things generally in reference to this Bill, that not only has there been no unjust attempt to do injustice to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, but I hold if an attempt were made it would not succeed, because, under the circumstances, no injustice could be done to that Company simply because the charter itself in the Bill provides for the adjudication of their claims by arbitration. But, of whatever value their present franchises are, the value of those franchises must, as a matter of necessity, be taken into account. Now, I will endeavor to explain what I mean. The Windsor and Annapolis Railway, as I understand the terms of the Bill of 1867, were entitled to running powers over the Windsor Branch under certain conditions. In other words, arrangements were made in the Bill for mutual running powers. I am not aware that the Government ever had any privileges in that way from the Windsor and Annapolis Railway. Had they enjoyed these privileges then the matter would have stood about this way: The Government would have enjoyed any advantages under that arrangement derivable from eighty-five miles of railway. The Government would have conceded the road over forty-five miles. In that condition of things the balance of advantage would have been with the Government, and inasmuch as the Government never exercised any right of running powers over the railway, it seems to me that any privileges conceded in that way would be all on one side and to the advantage rather than to the disadvantage of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. Now, on the 1st of January, 1872, an arrangement was made with that Company by the then Government under which they were allowed to operate on terms which have been already stated, namely: they were to pay to the Dominion Government one-third of the gross earnings of the road, the Government being obliged to maintain it. The Windsor and Annapolis Company enjoyed that privilege for five years and seven months or thereabouts, and according to statements which have been made, the accuracy of which I am not prepared to vouch for, that was considered a considerable privilege, an advantage that transcended any advantage which could possibly accrue under mere mutual running powers. Now, I assume from the references which have been made recently by the Western Counties Railway respecting the value of that privilege to them, that the value of the privileges accorded to them under the terms of the agreement of 1872 were less than $20,000 per annum. If that is an extravagant estimate then I have to make whatever reduction might be considered fair, and if that privilege was worth $20,000 a year, then during the five years and seven months the advantage to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company amounted to $111,000; and assuming the net advantage to have been about half that sum, then the advantage of that privilege was worth $55,000 during the five years and seven months. In August, 1877, the road was forcibly taken out of the hands of the Company, and it was thought that on the part of the Government of the day this seemed harsh, not justified by the circumstances, but the Government thought otherwise. At any rate that condition of things obtained until the last of October or the 1st of November, 1879. From that time to the present the Windsor and Annapolis Company enjoy the privilege for nearly three years, at the low estimate of $10,000 a year—though I believe it has been worth a good deal more—that would be in the neighborhood of $25,000, in addition to something like $80,000 advantage which that Company has enjoyed under the favorable conditions or means which they have obtained from two successive Governments. Now, suppose that my calculation be correct. When the arbitrators come to take this matter up they will ascertain—I apprehend as almost the first duty they will have to discharge—what the Windsor and Annapolis Railway with all its franchises is worth; and as a rule we do not expect any higher value put on any property than the net income which that property yields, so that as I look upon it it would be impossible to deprive that railway of any franchise which they possess at the present time, or which they possessed during the period of which I am speaking. I think any company which brings its capital into a country, with the view of promoting the public works of that country, and necessarily developing its resources and affording conveniences to the people, is entitled to liberal treatment; and I think the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company has had every liberal treatment—first at the hands of the Nova Scotia Government, which gave it a subsidy of $1,089,000, or $12,000 a mile; and everybody knows that it would be hard to find a section of country where a road could be built more cheaply than down the Annapolis Valley, and many think that the $12,000 per mile went a large way in meeting the cost of that line. That Company obtained other concessions; it first asked and obtained from the Nova Scotia Government legislation, which had for its object the promotion of its interest at that particular time, and the Government afterwards, on two separate occasions, guaranteed the Company's bonds for considerable amounts. It will not be pretended that the privileges of mutual running powers enjoyed under the Bill were at all commensurate with the privilege of operating the Windsor Branch and paying to the Dominion Government only one third of the gross earnings of that line. I think about the year 1875, I heard something, also, about new trucks being given that Company for old ones, and about other important concessions having been made to it to off set the change of gauge. In these several instances my impression is that the Dominion Government dealt very liberally with the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. But I waive all these circumstances, and I say that as the matter presents itself to my mind there is no possible injustice being done to that Company. Whatever may be the value of the agreement or the lease, and whatever may be the value of the promised extension of that lease, it must, as a matter of course, be taken into account; and if the Company is entitled to any consideration for the increased value which that lease might have acquired had it gone on for twenty years longer, the arbitrators will take that into account also. I should like my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden) to show in what respect any advantage has been taken of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company, or how it is possible any advantage can be taken of them in the future. If I felt otherwise I would not on any account give utterance to the views I have just expressed. If I have any sympathies they are in favor rather than against that Company, and to-day I would very much sooner do it a good turn than a bad turn. But after all, I think the Company itself has almost forced us to speak out the sentiments we entertain, and show just what the facts of the case are. I would have been glad if this matter had been settled amicably among the Nova Scotia Government, the Western Counties Railway Company, and the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company; but I hold that the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company was a little exorbitant in its demands, and the fault must rest with it if a settlement is not reached in accordance with its demands. I suppose no hon. member need be told of the scope and bearing of this Bill, or its value to Nova Scotia. Its effect is to make sure the proposed consolidation of all the railways in Nova Scotia, which gives us promise, not only of having the roads more efficiently operated, but also of having about 131 miles of new road built. And if so large advantages can be secured to the country without doing injustice to any interest, Company or individual, I see no reason why a scheme so full of promise should not be consummated.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. SPEAKER. The fact that the Bill is read the second time is an admission that it is recognized as a public Bill. As for its reference, the House has power to refer it to any Committee it likes.

Mr. ANGLIN. May I be permitted to say that the authorities distinctly lay down that certain Bills are public in their character, and yet partake so largely of a private character that they should be treated as private Bills in this respect: that the individuals interested should have power to appear before a Committee of the House to maintain their rights. When private rights are affected, individuals may appear before a Committee, in person or by counsel, to maintain what they believe their rights as affected by the measure, and to satisfy Parliament, if they be able, that the measure should not be passed, or should be first amended.

Mr. SPEAKER. The cases quoted by the hon. member were of a local character, and legislation upon such cases has always been considered as public legislation. As for the want of notice, if some private rights were interfered with, of course I have nothing to do with that matter. Committees are appointed by the House to look into such matters. As the Bill is considered as of a public character, and has passed its second reading, the House has power to refer it to any power it likes, but the rule is to refer public Bills to a Committee of the whole House.

Mr. ANGLIN. I think we ought, as a matter of justice and fair play, to refer this Bill to a Committee, and allow the Windsor and Annapolis Company to be heard before it. The First Minister is of opinion that this Bill will not impair in the slightest degree any of the Railways' Acts, or in any way obstruct or prevent a fair estimate of those rights by the arbitrators as a portion of the property of the Company. There can be no doubt this lease is as much a portion of the Company's incorporate property, as the railroad itself is a part of its corporeal property, and that their interests ought to be held as sacred in the one case as in the other. The Company differ from the First Minister, believing that their rights and interests are being impaired. I think they have reason to claim that this Act has been deferred so long as to leave little time for its discussion. The Company came to the conclusion that their property would be materially affected by the passing of this Bill. Under these circumstances, I think they have a right to further consideration, and of being heard before a Committee of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. The right hon. gentleman has informed us that counsel has been heard before the Privy Council. It would be of very great consequence to us, under these circumstances, if the hon. gentleman would inform us what were the views put forward, what were the contentions of the parties before the Privy Council who believed their interests were about to be prejudicially affected by the legislation proposed.

Mr. DALY. It would be as well to remind hon. gentlemen opposite that the Bill of 1874, which was passed during the late Administration, went very much farther than this Bill proposes, with regard to affecting the rights of the Windsor and Annapolis Company. That Act which was proposed and carried during the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite and was supported by, I believe, the hon. member for King's, went so far as to take away the right of the Windsor and Annapolis Company and convey to the Western Counties Railway the right of running over the Windsor Branch hitherto enjoyed by that Company. It appears to me the hon. member for King's is going back on his record in proposing now to throw obstacles in the way of this Bill which does not interfere with the rights of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway as the other one did. The subject of this Bill has been already so fully stated that I do not intend to detain the House at great length, but wish to observe that in the Acts of Nova Scotia of 1865 will be found an Act to provide for the construction of two other sections of the Provincial Railway. Sec. 7 of that Act provides:

"The Governor in Council may at any time before or after the said sections, or either of them are or is completed, by Order in Council, assume on behalf of the Province the ownership of the said sections, or either of them, by paying to the owners thereof the value of the same—to be ascertained as hereafter provided."

Section 8 provides:

"The amount to be paid under the next preceding section shall be ascertained by the decision of the arbitrators, one of whom to be appointed by the Governor in Council, one by the owner or owners of the section, and one by the principal Secretary of State for the Colonies."

After that the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company was incorporated by an Act which includes among its provisions the following clause:—

"The several conditions, agreements, provisos and terms contained and mentioned in the said contract or agreement entered into by the Commissioner of Railways and the said W. H. Princhard, J. Barry and Ed. Clark, dated 22nd November, 1866, and the Act 28 Vic., cap. 13, so far as the same is not altered or modified by this Act, and each and every of them, shall be incorporated into and made part and parcel of this Act."

I assume, therefore, that the charter of the Windsor and Annapolis Company incorporates in its provisions the provision of the Act of 1875, which gave to the Nova Scotia Government the right to assume this road. It will be noticed in this agreement between the Dominion Government and the Windsor and Annapolis Company there is no mention made of the assigns of that Company. It conveys to that Company alone, and not to its assigns, any right of transfer of that agreement. I take it that this agreement was entered into between the two contracting parties with the distinct understanding that the charter incorporating the Windsor and Annapolis Company, and the previous Act left in the hands of the Nova Scotia Government the power to assume that railway. Therefore I contend this agreement was subject to be cancelled on the assumption by the Nova Scotia Government of that railway; and I believe that this Act, in terminating that agreement, is merely giving effect to carrying out the law as it was intended it should be carried out. I believe the whole value of the road now held by the Windsor and Annapolis Company should be considered as a matter for arbitration; and I do not think the Windsor and Annapolis Company should throw any obstacles in the way of referring it to an arbitration which would take into consideration the whole value of their undertaking. It has been said that this Parliament has no right to deal with civil rights. In this Bill we are dealing, not only with civil rights, but Dominion property, and this Government has power and jurisdiction over Dominion property, and it cannot be maintained that because civil rights are relegated to the jurisdiction of Provincial Governments this Bill should come before the Provincial Legislature and not before this House. We are dealing with the larger subject of Dominion property and if in dealing with it we also deal with civil rights we are entirely within our jurisdiction. This Bill is eminently in the public interests of Nova Scotia. Every facility should be given to the Government of that Province to carry out the scheme of the consolidation and amalgamation of all the railways of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BORDEN. The last speaker has charged me with having gone back upon my previous record. The hon. member for Halifax says that the Act of 1874 is more stringent than this one; he differs from the hon. First Minister, who said, in introducing it, that it was to supply certain defects in the Act of 1874. With regard to my going back on my own record, I may say that when the Act of 1874 was passed, although a member of this House, I was not here. But I never was in favor of that Act, I was always opposed to the transfer to the Windsor Branch, and did my utmost to prevent the late Administration from transferring that branch from the Windsor and Annapolis Company to the Western Counties.

Mr. DALY. I did not say the hon. gentleman was not in the House. I simply observed that he was supporting the Government which had carried out that legislation.

Mr. BORDEN. He said I had gone back on my own record, and I make this statement with regard to that. The hon. gentleman refers to my putting obstacles in the way of this legislation. I do not think he has any right to make such a charge. I do not desire to put obstacles in the way, but I do desire that private rights shall be respected. I have as much interest as the hon. gentleman can possibly have in the scheme for improving the railway system of my own Province and of seeing railway amalgamation successfully carried out, and the unfinished lines in that Province completed; but I do not think it is fair to take away private rights from one company for the advantage of another, because that is what the Bill amounts to.

House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. member for Halifax throws new light on the whole question. If his contention is correct, the arbitrators have nothing to do with the value which these running powers give to the property of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, because they would be really no part of that property. If that is so, then this Bill assumes a more objectionable character than it had before. We are assuming in this Bill that that is the actual condition of things, that the running powers would not press the railway with the Province, and that it is absolutely necessary that we legislate here to give the running powers, that we become owners of the railway. I am told that the Act of 1865 was materially altered as to its effect by the agreement made between the Province and the Railway Company in 1866, and that in 1867 legislation passed which virtually surrendered the right previously held by the Government to assume the ownership of this road whenever they chose. If that is so then this act of assumption of ownership does not place the Company just in the position they would be in if they sold the railway to other parties.

Mr. BLAKE moved the addition of the following proviso:—

Provided nothing in this Act contained shall have the effect of interfering with or altering any legal rights of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, or affecting the elements of the valuation of their property in the preamble mentioned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I consider the proviso decidedly objectionable, as it conveys a sort of assumption that the Bill affects the rights of the Railway Company. The Bill has been carefully drawn in this respect. It asserts nothing, it assumes nothing, it simply states that if by the law of Nova Scotia the Government become the owner of the railway then the legal consequence ought to follow that the running agreement should go to the owners.

Mr. BLAKE. I fail to see, if the Bill is not intended to affect the rights of the Company, that any objection can be taken to stating that fact.

Amendment negatived, and bill reported.

HARBOR OF ST. JOHN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 163) relating to the Harbor of St. John, in the Province of New Brunswick.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 164) to correct certain errors from the French versions of "The Dominion Lands Act," and "The Dominion Lands Act, 1879."

Mr. BLAKE. I am informed that the passing of this Bill, which is retroactive, would affect some cases pending in the Supreme Court, which cases are supported by the French versions of those Acts affected by the Bill. Now, while I have no objection to errors being corrected, I think that existing rights and pending litigations ought not to be affected by those corrections.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I admit the principle that we should not prejudice cases pending in Court; but I do not see how any would be affected by this Bill, because the sense of the law is certainly changed altogether—the clauses in the French translation not having at all the meaning of the English clauses, and not the meaning intended by Parliament. The English version is right, but the translator for the French version has given the very opposite rendering of the words in French, and which are wholly wrong and misleading.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have a number of corrections to make in different clauses, so as to make the French readings correspond with the English version. From beginning to end the translator has taken opposite meanings from those intended by Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no objection to the correction of errors; but of course the English and French versions are of equal values in elucidating the law. And if cases are being maintained in Court with the assistance of the French version, we should be interfering with the rights of certain parties by changing the phraseology of the Act, unless we provided that those amendments should not affect pending cases. The member for St. John said that he was in Court and heard of cases depending on certain French constructions of the Act.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I did not hear of any such cases, though the Bill has been on the notice paper for a long time.

Mr. BLAKE. For four days.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Bill has gone through the Upper House and has been for some days on the Order paper of this House, but no representations as to its prejudicially affecting any pending cases have been made to us.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 167) to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is proposed to make a contract on the terms of the proposal, taking every guarantee that the work shall be done in a proper manner and binding the Government, should the work be done to their entire satisfaction and the work satisfactorily performed, to pay the subsidy and to continue paying so long as the service is efficiently performed.

Mr. ANGLIN. Why is such a contract necessary? Does not the Act on the one side and the charter on the other constitute a contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All that this Act does is to authorize the Government, if they are satisfied with the resources of the Company, and the Company will accept the terms, to make the contract according to those terms.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the contract will enable the Company to raise capital more easily. But the terms of the agreement may be such as may entangle us, inasmuch as capital is to be raised on the strength of them. Hence may arise some such kind of obligation as is sometimes recognized by Governments to pay the subsidy, inasmuch as capital was raised on it, although the conditions might not have been fulfilled.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The terms of the contract are limited to the bills and resolutions. Any capital subscribed will be subscribed with the fact distinctly stated that obligation of the Government depends on the contingency of this work being successful.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 169) to further amend the several Acts imposing Duties of Customs now in force.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and reported.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were considered in Committee, read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 159) to make further provisions respecting Lighthouses, Buoys and Beacons.—(Mr. McLelan.)

Bill (No. 160) to amend the Act respecting the Harbor of North Sydney, N.S.—(Mr. McLelan.)

DRY DOCKS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a resolution respecting the construction of Dry Docks by incorporated or other Companies. He said: I will read for the information of the House the following memorandum in regard to this subject:—

"Copy of a Report of a Committee of the Honorable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 17th April, 1882.

"On a memorandum, dated 12th April, 1882, from the Minister of Public Works, submitting that applications have been received from certain of the residents of Halifax, Pictou, St. John, Rimouski and Kingston, for assistance from the Government towards the construction of Dry Docks at the several localities named.

"That the construction of Dry Docks would be of great importance to the shipping interest of the Dominion. That an Order in Council was passed, dated 11th June, 1881, recommending that a Bill should be submitted to Parliament at its next Session for the granting of a subsidy to a Graving Dock Company at Halifax, such subsidy not to exceed $10,000 a year, nor to continue for a period exceeding 20 years.

"The Minister recommends that the Order in Council, dated 11th June, 1881, be cancelled, and that a resolution be submitted to Parliament during its present Session for the granting of a subsidy to any Dry Dock Company, to be bonâ fide established with the sanction of the Governor in Council, of two per centum per annum on the cost of the dock, so that the said cost does not exceed the value of the work as estimated by the Department of Public Works, or if it should exceed such value, then such two per centum shall be calculated on the value only—such subsidy to last for twenty years, that the amount of the subsidy to be paid annually for any such dock do not exceed $10,000 (ten thousand dollars) and be paid semi-annually on the 2nd days of January and July in each year during the term herein mentioned, or so long as any such dock is kept in order and duly worked, and that the first payment be made so soon as the said dock has been completed and is in working order.

"The Minister furthermore recommends that all plans, specifications and estimates be submitted for the approval of the Governor in Council, and that the works during construction be subject to examination and inspection by an officer of the Department of Public Works, and at any time during the twenty years or so long as the payment of subsidy may take place, and further, that these docks shall be free for the use of all vessels and dr-dges owned by or in the service of the Dominion Government.

"The Committee submit the foregoing recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

"Certified.

"JOHN J. MCGEE,
"Acting Clerk, P. C.

"The Honorable
"The Minister of Finance."

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In regard to the Halifax Dry Dock the difficulty exists at the present moment between the corporation and the parties who made the proposition. The conditions were that there should be a deposit of $20,000 within fifty or sixty days after the grant of $10,000 a year for twenty years had been passed. The party who had made the proposition had not complied with the conditions. A new proposition had been made by another party, but the second party had not complied with the conditions.

Resolution agreed to and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 173) to encourage the construction of Dry-Docks, by granting assistance, on certain conditions, to Companies constructing them.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

TRANSMISSION OF NEWSPAPERS BY MAIL.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY, in the absence of Mr. O'CONNOR, moved the second reading of Bill (No. 161) to provide for the free transmission of Canadian newspapers by mail within the Dominion.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed and (at 2:30 a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

TUESDAY, 16th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. LANDRY (in French). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Government if it has the intention of introducing in this House the Bill promised in the Speech from the Throne, with regard to the amendments to be made to the Act establishing the Supreme Court, so as to make that Court acceptable to the Province of Quebec and to the other Provinces? If I am well informed, a draft of such a law was introduced in the Senate, but no more has been heard about it. On the 8th March last, I had myself the honor of asking the permission of this House to introduce a Bill, the object of which was to repeal the Act establishing the Supreme Court. The Government requested me at the time—and it put the request in the light of a matter of courtesy—not to press my measure, as it had the intention of bringing forward its own in a few days, and that I should have every opportunity of introducing my own were I not satisfied with theirs. The Session is now drawing to a close, and I have not been afforded the opportunity to introduce that measure in amendment to the one which the Government had the intention of introducing. I think that since I have been courteous enough of acceding to the wishes of the Government, as well as to those of the hon. leader of the Opposition, not to press my measure, the Government might act likewise towards me, and if it does not determine upon introducing its measure it should at least allow me to introduce mine in order that we may ascertain the opinion of the House on the subject.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (in French). Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. member should not have waited till the Prime Minister should be in his seat before making these remarks, and I will ask him to reserve his question till his arrival. I can tell him, nevertheless, that a Bill has been introduced by the Government in the other House, but that it has not yet reached us.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read the third time, and passed:—

Bill (No. 156) respecting the Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

Bill (No. 169) further to amend the several Acts imposing duties of Customs, now in force. (Sir John A. Macdonald.)

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 168) to amend the Inland Revenue Act, 1880.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On sub-section c, of section 2,

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I wish to have that sub-section amended, in order to enable manufacturers to put up fine cut chewing tobacco in packages of 5 or 10 lbs., instead of only 2 lbs., as the Bill provides. When the tobacco is put up in such small quantities it is liable to mould, and the consequence is that large quantities are returned to the manufacturers as unsaleable. Manufacturers in the town of Windsor have told me that they have lost thousands of dollars in consequence of this restriction, and if the concession I ask is not granted, some of these manufacturers will be driven out of the country. A manufacturer who was induced by the National Policy to come from Detroit and establish a factory at Windsor, informs me that if the Government refuse this concession he will have to close his factory and go back to Detroit. In the United States the manufacturers of fine cut chewing tobacco are allowed to put it up in packages of 5, 10, 20, 40 and 60 lbs. I accompanied a deputation of tobacco manufacturers from Montreal to the hon. Minister on the same subject, and they are unanimous in asking for this concession. The Windsor manufacturers manufacture not only for the Dominion, but for the European market, and they afford employment for a large number of people not only directly in their factories, but indirectly in the manufacture of paper and wooden boxes. The only ground the Department have for not granting this concession is that they are afraid that retail dealers, after the boxes are emptied, will fill them with Canadian leaf tobacco; but it is very unlikely that any person who has been in the habit of using fine cut chewing tobacco, which requires very expensive machinery in its manufacture, will be imposed upon by the Canadian article. I have the authority of experts in the Inland Revenue Department, who are inspectors of tobacco, for the statement that it is impossible to imitate the fine cut tobacco with Canadian leaf, as the Canadian leaf is coarser Amendment agreed to, allowing 5 lb. packages.

On clause 84,

Mr. MILLS. The word "occupy" has a particular meaning in law. What of the tobacco grown on the farms he does not occupy? This clause states further that he may sell to any person licensed as a dealer in leaf tobacco, or as a manufacturer of tobacco, or to anybody else. Why not simply say he may sell to everybody?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. The word "occupy" means to occupy either as owner or tenant or farmer, in any capacity whatever. He may reside in a village and grow the tobacco at a distance from his residence.

Mr. MILLS. That is not the meaning of occupation in English law.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. And he may sell to any licensed dealer in tobacco in the market or elsewhere.

On section 18,

Mr. BUNSTER. I would ask the Government to take into consideration the question of the repeal of this section. They have already done the people of the Dominion considerable justice by reducing the Tariff in different respects, but the great injustice under which we suffer to-day in respect to malting is the extra labor imposed in weighing the grain, also in the extra labor involved in taking the different measurements imposed upon them. I propose to substitute in lieu of a maltster's license, a duty on beer, of 2 cents a gallon, which, as any one can see, will yield more money to the Government than they receive under the present system.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. It is not the policy of the Government to accept such a change.

Mr. BUNSTER. Unfortunately we have not got what I consider a practical maltster in the Cabinet, but we may have one later on, and then the request may be complied with.

Mr. TELLIER (in French). I would ask to be allowed to amend the first section of the Bill by adding the following words:—

"This exception to be likewise applicable to each and every person who shall have bought from the grower, leaf tobacco grown in Canada, merely for his private use and for that of his family, and not for the purpose of selling it."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BOURASSA (in French), on motion that the Bill be read a third time, moved that it should not be read a third time, but be referred to the House as a Committee of the Whole to be amended, and that for paragraphs one and six the following be substituted:—

"The grower of Canadian tobacco may take to market and freely sell, there or elsewhere, to all and every one and free of duty, leaf, twist and rolled tobacco, grown by him on his farm or on land occupied by him."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must first express my satisfaction with the concessions made by the Government in this direction. Yet I think it is still but half a measure. If all the hon. members of this House knew the fatigue and the enormous amount of labor demanded by the cultivation of Canadian tobacco, I think we would give the growers more liberty. Canadian tobacco does not keep if it is left in leaf; as soon as it is dry enough to be rolled, if it is left in leaf, be it only for a fortnight or three weeks, it decreases considerably in value. On the other hand, the growers of tobacco are generally not rich men; the majority are young men who have been to the States to learn that cultivation, and after having earned a few hundred dollars, they have come back here and have taken up the cultivation of tobacco rather than that of grain, in order to make a little money out of it. It seems, therefore, to me that we should allow growers to make up their tobacco in twist and roll, so as to preserve it and sell it more easily.

Mr. AMYOT (in French). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just moved this amendment forgets that the present law already allows the free sale of leaf tobacco on the market and elsewhere, and it is utterly useless to try and amend the law in that direction. It is employing an unjust mode of fighting the Government. Secondly, with regard to the duty on Canada twist, it has been understood in this House that this restriction should exist for the very protection of the grower, because the making up of tobacco into rolls allows growers to introduce a bad quality of tobacco, and as a result when tobacco is offered in that shape on the market, the good pays for the bad. The object of the present law is to do away with the fraud existing formerly. I can conceive the satisfaction felt by the hon. member, but he should see that in making that motion, he is moving a vote of censure against his friends when they were in power, and he tells us that by this amendment that the policy of his leaders with regard to Canadian tobacco has ever been contrary to the good of the country, as well as to the welfare and wishes of the grower. The amendment which he proposes is a slap in the face to his hon. leaders; and he gives us the right of saying to the growers, when we shall go to render an account of our parliamentary stewardship, that the present law is so good that all the hon. members of the Opposition gave it their approval, and that the Government has settled that question to the general satisfaction owing to the splendid condition of the finances and owing to its policy of protection.

Mr. BOURASSA (in French). I must say that all the hon. members of this House know that I look to measures first, whether they come from one side of the House or the other. I take their worth into account, and if they are good I approve of them. I repeat that the Government has taken a step in favor of the grower, but it is only half a measure, and it should have gone a step further.

Mr. HOUDE (in French). I would ask the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Bourassa) whether he thinks that if we were to allow growers and all those who buy from them, to manufacture tobacco under the different forms suggested by him, it would have the effect of encouraging capitalists to invest their capital in establishing new manufactories for the manufacturing of Canadian tobacco. Were that amendment agreed to, it would have the effect of preventing the establishment of these manufactories. The hon. member has told us that tobacco was cultivated by young men who have returned from the States after learning its cultivation there. I must tell him that if there are in his county any young men who have learnt the cultivation of tobacco in the States, they have learnt it badly. The tobacco which comes to us from the United States, is leaf tobacco put into boucault; all the tobacco that we manufacture here as coming from the United States is leaf tobacco, and it is the best way to prepare it and keep it in good condition.

Mr. TELLIER (in French). I have some difficulty in understanding the amendment just proposed by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Bourassa). We have often heard this question of Canadian tobacco discussed, but it has always been handled from the grower's point of view. The hon. member forgets that the grower has just received considerable protection. The cultivation of Canadian tobacco is now entirely free. The grower is no longer compelled to take out a license to cultivate tobacco, and he has the right to sell it in the leaf without paying any duty. The hon. member seems also to have forgotten that by the amendment which I moved just a moment ago and which was agreed to by the Government, the right which the grower possessed, to manufacture tobacco for his own and that of his family, is extended to the consumer. Thus, according to the law, such as exists to-day, the grower has the right to sell his tobacco in leaf without paying any duty, and the consumer who buys that tobacco on the market may make it up into rolls if he sees fit. The hon. member did not speak on a point which, in my mind, is an important one, and that is that Canadian tobacco enjoys considerable protection to-day. According to the law such as it was formerly, the duty on Canadian and foreign tobacco being the same, the manufacturer had no interest in manufacturing Canadian tobacco, but under the present law, he will find it more to his advantage to employ Canadian tobacco, and, on the other hand, the grower will have a market to dispose of his tobacco. Consequently, I say that the hon. member's motion has merely for its object to curry popular favor, and no one will argue at public meetings in favor of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend. The slight duty of 4 cents per pound placed on roll tobacco falls on the consumer and not on the grower.

Mr. BÉCHARD (in French). I do not understand how a tax on Canadian tobacco can be construed into protection for the consumer any more than a tax on flour is a protection for the consumer of flour. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Tellier) and a few others contend that a duty placed on roll and twist tobacco will have the effect of protecting the grower against certain producers who introduce a bad quality of tobacco into their rolls. Well, I repeat what I have already said, that he who sells bad tobacco soon becomes known, and like he who sells bad hay or bad grain, he soon loses public confidence. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Bourassa) asks that not only should the grower be allowed to sell his leaf tobacco without paying any duty, but that he may be allowed to do so in the case of twist or rolled tobacco, and I am of opinion that, were that right granted to him, it would be greatly to his advantage. For, if the grower has the right of selling twist or roll tobacco without paying any duty, he can obtain a higher price for it than if he sells it in leaf only. There are growers who sell excellent tobacco in that shape, and that protects them against the manufacturer, for having the advantage of selling it dearer, if it is made up into rolls or twist, he can obtain a higher price for his leaf tobacco. Consequently, I think that the repeal of the present duty such as proposed by the motion of my hon. friend, would be a protection for the grower instead of for the manufacturer. And I maintain that by preventing him from selling his tobacco freely, whether in twist or in roll, one is giving protection to the manufacturers, because one is preventing the grower from obtaining as high a price as he otherwise might obtain for his tobacco.

Amendment (Mr. Bourassa) negatived on a division.

Mr. LANDRY (in French). Before this Bill is read a third time, I would ask the Government if it will be subjected to any amendment in the other House, I mean with the consent or at the suggestion of the Government?

Mr. HOUDE (in French). I think that that question is unfair. We cannot ask this House to control the doings of the other House.

Mr. SPEAKER. We cannot speak here of what may or may not be done in the other House.

Mr. LANDRY (in French). May I ask the Government whether it will or not sanction the changes which might be made to the Bill in the other House?

Mr. MOUSSEAU (in French). The Government has defined its policy in the Bill such as it has just been agreed to.

Mr. VANASSE (in French). Before this Bill is read a third time, I wish to propose that section 84 be amended by adding the following words :

"All persons thus buying leaf tobacco from the grower may retail it without paying any duty to the Inland Revenue."

Mr. MOUSSEAU (in French). Were the Government to consent to such an amendment, it would be establishing a new meaning with regard to the different classes of people who might buy or sell tobacco.

Mr. VANASSE (in French). The law, such as it stands, seems to me to be a general one and can cause such difficulties to arise, that I think it would be good to adopt a clear and precise meaning, so that there should not be any ambiguity.

Amendment negatived on a division; and Bill read the third time and passed.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. AMYOT. In the Free Press of this afternoon, under the title of "Sessional Jottings," appears the following:—

"Mr. Ogden assures us he had no share in the fire-cracker business. We accept his word. Mr. Amyot and Mr. Bergeron were the principal offenders."

When the Session commenced, I was most disgracefully attacked in that infamous and low paper, in which there is never a word of truth, and which abuses the hospitality it receives in this House by its constant, disgraceful attacks upon hon. members on this side. I treat the accusation with the most profound contempt. I was in one of the rooms outside with an hon. Minister discussing the tobacco question when these torpedoes were being thrown. I tell the Free Press and all newspapers of that description, that though they may be circulated in my county, they will meet with that contempt which such disreputable rags deserve, and find that their words are judged exactly for what they are worth, and that is nothing at all.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on a certain proposed resolution to provide for the granting of subsidies for the construction of certain lines of railways.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to say a few words with reference to the first proposed grant, and to the form in which it is proposed to be made. Not long ago, it was the opinion of Parliament and of the public that the connection, for the purposes of Ontario, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, was necessary to be made at or near Callander station, but that opinion was changed by the utterances of the hon. the Prime Minister last fall. When the proposal was that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be constructed through Ontario, far from the seaboard of Lakes Huron and Superior, it was one thing; but when the proposal came that the Canadian Pacific Railway should rapidly reach the shore of the Lake, the hon. Minister announced that plan in words which verify the statement I have made. In the Mail's report of the speech delivered by the hon. gentleman, at Toronto, on the 24th of November last, these words occur:

"I may add that the proposed alterations in the line will be of great and special advantage to Ontario, and the cities and commerce of Ontario, and to no place will this advantage be greater than to the great city of Toronto. (Cheers.) The road will run from Callander to near the Sault Ste. Marie. It will not touch that place, however, but strike near there, and run along the coast, and the effect of that is, by the construction of the road to Lake Nipissing, the supplies of the great North-West will in a great measure come from Toronto and London; and Ontario, which was in a considerable degree to have had the go-by, if the road had run to the north of Nepigon, and gone straight through the wilderness to Montreal, will have its fair chance and full opportunity in trade and commerce, and manufactures, to supply all that great North-West country."

Now, Sir, if the connection for Ontario purposes, with the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be made at Callander, it is clear that this glowing anticipation of the hon. Minister as to the useful results of the change of line will not be realized, because it is of little consequence by what mode or route, whether along the shore or through Ontario, Callander is reached, if it be at Callander that Ontario is to tap the traffic of the North-West. The hon. gentleman's statement, therefore, obviously pointed to an improvement to be given to the condition of the Province of Ontario, and particularly of the city of Toronto by the change, because the go-by, which, as he says, would otherwise have largely been given to that Province had the route remained in the interior, to the north of Nepigon, would now not result, and it would be able to get the trade which it would not, to a large extent, have been able otherwise to secure. How is that to be secured if we are to tap the railway only at the old tapping point at Callander? Obviously the advantage the Province is to derive from this new departure mentioned by the hon. gentleman, that a shorter distance is to be found by this means from the chief centres of Ontario to the North-West, and that is to be found only if we strike the Canadian Pacific Railway, not at Callander—although I do not object to that—but at some other point on its way towards the shore of Lake Huron from Callander. By that means, by crossing the French River at another point and striking the Canadian Pacific Railway either on the shores of Lake Huron or before it reaches the shores of Lake Huron, a considerable distance would be saved, and the chances of Ontario to reach that traffic would certainly be increased. It would take less mileage to go from Toronto, Hamilton, London or Port Hope, from the various points we have to deal with, to Thunder Bay and so further westward, than the route by Callander. But I would like to ask how the benefits are to be realized to Ontario if, after all, we are still to tap the Canadian Pacific Railway at Callander only? What is the gain? The mileage by the proposed route will be a little longer from Callander to Winnipeg, than it would have been by the old route, so that we gain nothing in shortened mileage; and if we are to tap the longer main line at some point, as was before calculated upon, where is the gain? There is none at all. Now, Sir, it seems to me that the Administration ought to have considered this fully, and have come down with a definite policy upon it. The hon. gentleman may answer me, we have that definite policy, and it is that the only tapping point shall be Callander. If so, I regret it. I would prefer that the question should be left open as to where the point shall be, whether Callander or some other point, which would give a still shorter line for the trade of Ontario, and strike the Canadian Pacific Railway higher up, or whether arrangements should be made to tap both points. As far as I am able to understand the proposal, it has been made to cover both points, or either of them. It is announced that the definite determination of the Government is that Callander is necessarily to be the point of junction, and therefore I would ask an explanation of the reason why any of the gains stated by the Minister to accrue to Ontario from the change of route—what that gain is, wherein it exists? And I would also ask the reason why the proposed plan of uniting with the Canadian Pacific Railway at a point higher up, which would shorten the mileage considerably for all Ontario, has been unfavorably considered and disposed of by the Government?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The resolutions state the policy of the Government, and that is the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander. I stated, in submitting these resolutions, that the Government had considered the representation of both companies, the Company proposing to go from Gravenhurst to Sault Ste. Marie, or rather to cross the French River and extend thence to the Sault; and also the same Company has a charter by which they can go to Callander. That Company, which proposes to make what is called the shortest communication to Sault Ste. Marie, or the Canadian Pacific Railway to the westward of Lake Nipissing, made a distinct proposal to the Government to construct this line, for which a subsidy was asked to authorize the Company, now called the North-Western Company, which had proposed to construct it for a subsidy of $12,000 a mile; the proposal made by the other Company for a line from Gravenhurst to Callander for a subsidy of $6,000 a mile, when, as I suppose, nearly half the line from Gravenhurst to Callander is common to both lines. You do not pass from the branch crossing French River and running to Sault Ste. Marie until you have gone half way from Gravenhurst to Callander. The hon. leader of the Opposition asks why we struck for Callander. It was regarded as the distributing point for the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Ontario system of railways in the Bill of last Session, providing for communication at Callander. The distance will be fifty-five miles shorter, but at the same time the country is a much more difficult one for railway construction than the direct line to Callander, both lines being, however, somewhat difficult. The present proposal is simply to take power to secure the construction of the connection of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Callander, without conveying it to any one company, as the matter was left entirely open, and we have proposals from both companies.

Mr. BLAKE. How, under these circumstances, will Ontario be benefitted by a change of route shortening the distance from Callander, as was stated by the hon. First Minister on 24th November?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The distance is much shortened. It is practically the same, because the distance from Callander to Thunder Bay is assumed to be as nearly as can be ascertained, the same by either line; but two objects are attained by a change of route, and both are very important to Ontario and its commerce. Toronto, Hamilton and the railway system generally of Ontario will be brought by this change of route into more direct communication with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also into communication with the connection at Sault Ste. Marie with the Northern Pacific Railway and the north-western States. In this case you accomplish, by the construction of one line, what might be expected to be furnished by two lines, and, at the same time, secure much more rapid connection and at a much earlier period. Toronto by the change of line will be brought thirty miles nearer the Sault, and will secure, at a much earlier period, connection with the American lines at the Sault, as well as with the North-West, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, than would otherwise be secured.

Mr. BLAKE. What I want to know is, in what way Toronto and Ontario will be benefitted by the proposed change of route.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot answer that.

Mr. BLAKE. That point is now settled. I observe no provision is made in the resolutions indicating that running powers will be imposed on the favored Company. It is quite clear that the favored Company will occupy a very important position, and it seems to be absolutely essential, in order that fair play may be extended to other companies, that there should be some arrangement for exchange of traffic and running powers over that portion of the line which is to be subsidized.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All parties have agreed that the line should be available to all railways; I quite agree with the hon. gentleman on this point.

Mr. BLAKE. In the measure there should be a general declaration that the favored Company should submit to such running powers as might be decided by the Governor in Council. The hon. gentleman referred to the railway to Oxford, and made a very long and glowing statement with regard to Mr. Blackman's project, but he did not say whether this particular railway was part of Mr. Blackman's scheme.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it is.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any particular object to be gained in adopting Mr. Blackman's offer in preference to others?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, not necessarily.

Mr. BLAKE. Because I understand there is embraced in the traffic, powers of another railway, the Nova Scotian railway, the operations of a line from some point on their railway to Oxford.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not aware if it covers that. There is a branch to Pictou from the Intercolonial, and I hope there is one to Oxford, because that would give us another chartered company with whom to secure the construction.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed to invite tenders or proposals or plans from the various companies, or to deal with a particular one?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Whoever the Government can make the best terms with.

Mr. BLAKE. The amount per mile is fixed, so how do you expect to improve the matter?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will be the question of facilities, for the proper and efficient discharge of the work.

Mr. BLAKE. Have any proposals been made up to this time?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. None, but with Mr. Blackman, who said that, with a subsidy to this extent, he would be prepared to construct the work properly.

Mr. BLAKE. The construction of this road has been agitated a good deal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I think not.

Mr. BLAKE. Part of it I think has.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Only in general terms for some time.

Mr. BLAKE. It was discussed in general terms last summer I believe?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. BLAKE. Whence this measure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will allow me to say it for him.

Resolution agreed to and reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 176) to provide for the granting of subsidies for the construction of certain lines of railway therein mentioned.

Bill read the first and second times.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BERGERON. I notice that the Ottawa Free Press of to-day has a paragraph in which my name is mentioned. It says:

"Mr. Ogden assures us that he had no share in the fire-cracker business, and we accept his word. Mr. Amyot and Mr. Bergeron were the principal offenders."

The editor of this paper seems to be trying to learn who the offenders were, because he first mentioned a number of names, and four gentlemen yesterday denied the accuracy of his statement. He now takes back every word, and throws the blame on Mr. Amyot and myself. I was sitting in the House while this firing of crackers was going on, and they were flying all around my head as well as others. I could not ascertain where they were coming from, and they might have come from the gallery, from the editor of the Free Press, as likely as from any other place. While I was here I was in respectable company, namely, that of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the hon. Secretary of State, and I had nothing to do with the firing of these crackers. This is the second time I have been mentioned in abusive terms by this newspaper: In the first Session I was here I was referred to by it in slanderous terms; but I would not have mentioned it on this occasion had not its previous statements about me been repeated in a low, contemptible way by a paper of about the same calibre as itself, and that is the reason that I rise to make these remarks.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE FISHERIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced Bill (No. 177) to authorize an annual grant for the development of sea fisheries, and the encouragement of the building of fishing vessels.

Mr. BLAKE. I understood that while the hon. Minister of Finance said he could not at this Session arrive at a definite plan for the distribution of this money for the want of sufficient information, it was his intention not to make any proposition for the permanent disposition of the fund. Would it not be advisable that an Order in Council for the allocation of the fund in subsequent years should be laid before Parliament, or that some provision of that kind should be made? I think that would be better than placing it at the absolute disposal of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right, and we may be able to introduce a clause to some such effect.

Bill read the first and second times.

THE OFFICIAL DEBATES.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented the fourth report of the Select Committee on the Official Debates of the House, and moved that it be concurred in.

Mr. AMYOT, (in French.) I take the opportunity afforded me by this motion in which I concur, to add a few remarks to what has already been said in this House with regard to the Hansard got up by Mr. Desjardins for the Parliament of the Province of Quebec. I think that we have far from done justice towards so important a publication which is approved of and praised by the two political parties of the Province. I shall read an extract from a letter of Mr. Desjardins, which will give an idea of the extent of the work:

"My work is in no wise the reproduction of newspaper reports. On the contrary, the speeches published in extenso in the newspapers are prepared by me ninety-nine times out of one hundred and given to members in order that they may have the advantage of handing them over to friendly sheets for publication. What was said by Mr. White is consequently not exact, and the same applies to what was said by Mr. Plumb, who considerably improved in inaccuracy on the speaker preceding him. As to the particular instance referred to by Mr. White with regard to the debate on the disallowance of the Mining Bill, here are the facts of the case: That debate lasted but a few minutes, and I took down the speeches verbatim. In conformity with my system, which is so good a one that it is in force in Ottawa to-day, I submitted the result of my labors to those who had spoken on the subject, and they themselves reduced my manuscript to the proportions complained of by Mr. White, so I am clearly not to blame for this. It is also untrue that members hand me their speeches ready written out, and that those who do not give them to me are omitted in my work. As an instance,

I did not receive more than a total of 160 pages of manuscript out of 1,000; this is an infinitely smaller proportion than in Ottawa. Believe me, I have positive information on the subject. Now, my system is a good one, and I have the proof of it by referring you to what has been done in England during the past eighty years. There, the Hansard is left to private enterprise and has always been so as it is in France, where it remained so from the revolution of 1789 to 1843, when an opportunity was sought of making it a matter of patronage, and no other system has ever been used in England (you know how fond Englishmen are of precedents). There too they abridge more than I do; consult any volume and you will see this. Questions of the highest importance are cut down, a thing I do not do. But what I do, is to cut out repetitions, and the Lord knows how numerous they are. Mr. Plumb stated that from what Mr. White had said, that my report was not worth that given by the newspapers. This is quite untrue, for I make it a point of submitting my work to every member; and one of the greatest merits of my publication in the eyes of Mr. Joly, is its clearness, accuracy and absolute impartiality. So much is this the case that during the important debate which has just taken place in the Legislative Assembly on the railway question, that both sides have vied in giving their testimony to the impartiality of the 'Debates.' As a matter of fact, it is greatly through my volumes that both sides argued the question. Mr. Chapleau himself has on every opportunity since the beginning of the Session praised the work, and so have Messrs. Marchand, Shehyc and Gagnon. I am mentioning these names from memory, but I may say that no member has ever cast any doubt on the accuracy of my work. I am afraid of tiring you with these details, but I beg you to excuse me."

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we shall soon find copies of that publication in the Library of Parliament.

Report concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills (from the Senate) were introduced and read the first, second and third times, and passed:—

Bill (No. 174) to further amend the Indian Act, 1880.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 175) to provide for building certain branch lines of railway from points on the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway, respectively.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

The following Bill was considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 177) to authorize an annual grant for the development of the Sea Fisheries.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 176) to provide for the granting of subsidies for the construction of certain lines of railway therein mentioned, said: I wish to draw the attention of the leader of the Opposition to an amendment I propose to make to the general provision, which is as follows:—

The said subsidies to be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to complete the said railways respectively, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by Order in Council, and according to descriptions and specifications to be approved by the Governor in Council on the Report of the Minister of railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made by the Company with the Government, and which the Government shall be empowered to make, and to be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments on the completion of each ten miles of railway, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with the whole work undertaken, such proportion to be established by the Report of the said Minister.

I propose to add to that provision an amendment, to meet the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, which is as follows:—

Provided always that the granting of such bonuses or subsidies shall be subject to such conditions for securing such traffic arrangements to other roads as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting therewith.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

In reply to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have left out purposely the words "running powers." Perhaps you might have it optional to say running powers or traffic arrangements such as the Governor in Council may require. There is great difficulty in giving them to a large number of railways. I am providing that all the railways connecting with these roads should have equal facilities.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman believe those words are wide enough in case the Governor in Council should deem it proper to include running powers?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think they are. I therefore suggest the provisions shall be amended as to include running powers or such traffic arrangements as may be deemed proper.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be better to include those words.

Amendment agreed to and reported.

On motion for third reading.

Mr. BLAKE. I move in amendment

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions to insert after the word "Callander," the words "or to some other point on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

410. To defray balance of travelling expenses and indemnity of the late L. A. McConville, Esq., M. P., to be paid to Mrs. McConville$761 80

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish to take this opportunity of expressing on my part, and on that of my colleagues our deep felt regret at the death of our colleague, Mr. McConville. That gentleman had only been a very short time with us, but he had shown, once or twice, when he spoke in this House, that he had great aptitude and ability, and would certainly have made his mark in this House. We all regret his untimely death, and his memory will be cherished by us, as it is by his family, who cannot fail to profit by the good example he has always shown. I am sure the Committee will agree to this proposal.

412. { Barrie Post Office, &c..... $8,000
{ Por Hope do 8,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This will not cover the whole expense.

413. Jordan Bay..... $5,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to provide for repairs at the breakwater required for the safety of that harbor.

414. Newcastle harbor improvements..... $5,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in the county of West Durham. It is about half the amount that will be required. The locality will furnish the balance.

415. To aid corporation of Emerson in building a bridge over the Red River. The plans, &c., to be approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council..... $30,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is about half the expected cost; the town furnishing the other half.

416. Fish Hatchery in British Columbia..... $4,000

Mr. HOMER. During my short visit in Ottawa, I find that it is the general opinion in the eastern Provinces that
Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

the resources of British Columbia are confined principally to the salmon fisheries. Our fisheries are very extensive but that is not our only source of natural wealth. We have no difficulty in finding a market for our fish, and we could dispose of five times as many if we had them. Therefore it seems highly proper that the Government should do something towards developing the fisheries. Among the other products of our country, we have gold, silver, copper and iron mines. We have extensive coal products and also cattle which are being shipped to the north-western States. The country is also belted with timber on the northern and southern boundary, our markets for which are in France, Mexico, South America, the Australian Colonies and China, to which ports cargoes are leaving every week in the year. The coal beds are very extensive, and the quality is such that it commands a higher price in San Francisco markets than any other coal. That market consumes 700,000 tons of coal annually contributed by the different coal beds of the world, and when I say that British Columbia coal brings a higher price than any other, that is sufficient evidence of its superior quality. Our country is penetrated with streams and rivers, and the coast is indented with the finest harbors, which, with the protection which this Government is now proposing to extend, will become among the finest in the world. This is the general character of the natural resources of our country. We have a comparatively small population of 50,000 inhabitants, yet we exported last year products of the value of $3,100,000, of which $1,400,000, according to the fishery reports, were for products of the fisheries, being nearly one-sixth of the whole amount of fish exported by the Dominion. Last year, the Customs Department alone contributed $61,000 of revenue, over one-third of the amount contributed, and about one-half of the amount contributed by New Brunswick, the former containing a population of 450,000 and the latter a population of 350,000. This House has already appropriated this Session the sum of $150,000 for the fishermen, and $30,000 for hatcheries in the eastern Provinces. We ask now for $4,000 which, in addition to a previous appropriation, amounts to $6,000 or thereabouts, which sum, I think you will all agree, is reasonable, when we consider the amount it contributes towards the exports of the Dominion. Some complaint has been made that the Government are appropriating too large a sum for the fisheries, in view of the large appropriation for railway purposes in our Province, but I think it would be a very unwise policy on the part of the Government to refuse to assist these young and growing industries in any of the Provinces. I may, however, say that the Government have taken a course which will be satisfactory, not only to British Columbia but to all the eastern Provinces, in assisting these industries. We admit we are deriving great benefit from the Canadian Pacific Railway, but at the same time we cannot admit that British Columbia is the only Province that derives a benefit from the construction of that road, or its extension from the east base of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific coast. We believe the eastern Provinces are equally benefitted, if not more, than British Columbia. The people of the eastern Provinces do not seem to realize the important fact that upon the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Port Moody the markets of the whole Pacific coast as well as those of the Australian Colonies, China, Japan and the whole Asiatic coast, will be open to their markets, and that a very efficient and intelligent staff of commercial travellers in the Lower Provinces will soon put them in commercial communication with 700,000,000 souls. But to recur to the fisheries. There are three distinct runs in British Columbia. The first makes its appearance about the first of April, and continues to run in limited numbers until the 30th of June; these are called spring fish or large salmon. They again make their appearance about the middle of August and run six weeks in limited numbers. These two runs of fish are of a very superior quality, and if they could be appropriated for canning purposes the Government would realize a large amount of revenue from that branch of business. The third run, or the middle run, which makes its appearance in the river about the 10th of July, runs in great numbers for thirty days, and every fourth year this fish runs in immense numbers. The second year the run is increased about one-third, while the two next years they run in such limited numbers that they are barely profitable. It is in this run that seven-eighths of the fish are obtained for packing purposes. This large run of fish which we wish to develop is the same kind which is caught in the Colombia River and the Sacramento River of California. Last year the Colombia River packed 550,000 cases, the Sacramento River 200,000 cases, and the Fraser River 160,000 cases. We are third in the order of fish producing countries. Six years ago the fishing on the Sacramento was greatly reduced, but with the establishing of hatcheries they brought the supply up last year to 200,000 cases. If the hatcheries were so successful there it is easy to see that they would be still more successful in the Colombia River. By establishing hatcheries we would extend the fishing season over a period of five or six months, while now it only lasts about thirty days. It gives employment at the present time to a population of 3,500 for a period of thirty days, 3,000 for forty days, 2,500 for fifty days, and 500 for the balance of the year. If fish hatcheries were established and the canneries could extend the fishing season over six months, we could have such a population as I have mentioned for six months, half of it for the balance of the year. We experience great difficulty yearly in obtaining men to work the fisheries. One of the difficulties arising from the fishing season being so short, is to obtain a sufficient number of hands to do the work. If those hatcheries were established, large numbers of Indians would obtain employment who otherwise might become a burden on the country. The position of the whites would also be improved, and all classes of the community would derive more or less benefit.

Mr. PLUMB. As this is one of the last requests I shall ever make, I desire to call the Government's attention to the need of providing a small fish hatchery in the town of Niagara. I had intended to refer to the subject when the Estimates were being discussed, but I did not happen to be in the House at the time; and I wish to enquire from the acting Minister of Marine, whether he will not find it possible, out of the moneys for fisheries in the hands of the Department, to devote a few hundred dollars for the purpose of establishing a hatchery there. Niagara River is a habitat of the white fish. The white fish there are of fine quality and are found in large numbers, and the fishing is greatly benefitted by stock supplied from the hatchery at Newcastle, but in order to bring fry from there, great expense has to be incurred. It has to be brought down in cases either from Windsor, where there is a hatchery, or from Newcastle, and in either case the expense is great, and an economy would be effected in having a small hatchery at Niagara to supply the river and the lake. An arrangement has been made there—and if the hon. Minister is not aware of it, the Commissioner of Fisheries is, at all events, aware of it—by which a small sum appropriated would be acceptable to my former constituents, who will be my constituents no longer after Parliament has prorogued.

Mr. McLELAN. Since the matter was strongly pressed on me a short time ago, I have given it a good deal of consideration, but I have not reached a decision. The Government will be unable to accomplish the object this year, but I think it is desirable from the recommendations that have been made to me, and I will endeavor to give it attention, and I hope another year a sum will be placed in the Estimates.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the hon. gentleman has had time to consider it, and it is a small favor to have asked.

Mr. McLELAN. It is only recently it was brought to my notice. The hon. gentleman asked me for fry from the hatchery in-operation, and I believe he obtained it.

Mr. BANNERMAN. In looking over the appropriation brought down by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I observe only $1,000 in the Estimates for protecting fisheries in the North-West. Before the next five or six years will have elapsed members from that territory will be asking for grants for the protection of fisheries in Lakes Winnipeg and Manitoba. The fisheries of those lakes are destroyed by thousands, and hundreds of thousands of fish being taken out of season. To my knowledge last year in Lake Winnipeg alone there were between 700,000 or 800,000 white fish caught out of season; and I was told by factors and traders of the Hudson's Bay Company that where they were accustomed to catch an unlimited quantity of fish fifteen or twenty years ago they were unable to catch one, and for fishing purposes they had to go forty or fifty miles further up the lake. I would suggest to the Government that it would be in the interest of the country, especially as the supply of fish is limited to the four large lakes, to have a proper staff of officials appointed to protect the fisheries, so that no applications will be needed for hatcheries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not surprised that the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) has made a strong appeal in respect to the propagation of white fish in the Niagara River, and I think I can suggest a mode to the hon. gentleman that will be effective in convincing the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he will be doing no more important service to the country than in taking measures to propagate and increase the white fish found at the mouth of the river. I once had the good fortune of having breakfast at the residence of the hon. member for Niagara, and I shall never forget the delicate white fish that I enjoyed at his table. I have eaten white fish in other places, but I had no idea, until that morning, what a delicate fish it was; and I am quite sure that, in addition to the admirable manner in which the fish was prepared, there must have been special excellency in the fish itself; and I am quite certain the hon. the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries would do no more acceptable service to the country than to endeavor to make provision for the increase of the fish to be found in that locality. I may say, however, in reference to the statement of my hon. friend from Niagara, that this will probably be the last occasion on which he expects to present the claims of Niagara, that I differ from the opinion he has expressed on that point. I believe that for many long years to come the hon. member for Niagara will be found here the representative of a larger if not a more interesting constituency than Niagara. I am certain that for years to come he will continue to adorn this Chamber, and that his friends in Niagara will find him as zealous and steadfast in advocating their interests as he has been in the past.

417. To provide for the purchase of a collection of coins and medals illustrating remarkable events in the history of Canada, from its discovery by the French, with a full descriptive catalogue of the same.....$2,500

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. From whom was this purchase made? And are the coins to be placed in the library?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. From Mr. Hart, of Montreal, a gentleman who is well known as a numismatologist. It has been a labor of love with him to collect a series of coins and medals altogether connected with the Province of Canada. I have not seen the collection myself, and I would not be a very good judge if I should see them, but I am told and know from the various reports that it is really a valuable and almost unique collection. It has been valued several times, and the present sum is much less than Mr. Hart thinks it is worth. The Library Committee this Session, and for several Sessions, strongly urged the acquisition of this collection at this very moderate price, and it will be placed in a position of the library or such other place as Parliament may wish. We have an opportunity of getting this very fine collection which we may never have again. There are Indian and Canadian medals, all early ones, I believe, connected with the history of Canada, besides coins of every description that have been made in Canada.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any idea of the number?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not. I am sorry that my time has been so occupied that I have not looked through the catalogue, which, since last Session, has been made very complete.

Mr. DAWSON. I saw the collection some time ago. It has been made by the Hart family, one of the oldest in Lower Canada, who have been collecting for many years. It is really a most valuable and interesting collection, and I do not know where any such other collection could be found.

418. Unexpended balance of vote of 1880-81 for travelling expenses, Niagara Falls Commissioners (revote) $699 15

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the exact position in which this Commission stands? I suppose the Dominion has not much to do with the project which was initiated by the State of New York. I think it had rather been taken up by Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By both.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Is there any idea of carrying out the idea suggested by Lord Dufferin, of making an International Park?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was at one time a good prospect, but upon an economical turn in the Legislature of New York, the vote for the appropriation was defeated. The Province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada acted very promptly, and desired to act liberally for what I think is a very laudable purpose. The Dominion of Canada is directly interested in securing the land, the whole bank or a great portion of it, having been reserved for military purposes, and this strip of land the Dominion will be very glad to have planted and otherwise fitted up for a park. The Government of Ontario have, I believe, no land there, but Mr. Mowat took a very active interest in the matter. As the hon. gentleman will remember, there was a deputation came here some years ago, and there was at that time a good prospect of the project being successful, but a difference of opinion arose in the New York Legislature, and the vote was defeated by a small majority. We have good hopes, however, that some day or other the appropriation will be carried in that Legislature.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I would be glad to see something of the kind carried out, if it could be carried out on fair and reasonable terms, because, I regret to say, the last time I was there I was disgusted to see the extent to which the banks of the stream had been disfigured by buildings and excrescences of other kinds, and I think it is a shame and a scandal to both countries that it should be so. The difficulty will be that the sum involved on the American side will be very large. I believe they intended to take in a considerable extent of land, and the proprietors have been making so much money out of it that if you capitalized all their incomes the sum would be a formidable one. I am glad to hear, however, that there is some prospect of the project being successful.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that the people and the Legislature of New York were exceedingly willing and desirous to preserve that land as a park, but when the Bill was in the Legislature it was vetoed by the Governor. The member for the county of Niagara, which is along the river towards the lake, informed me that he thought there would be a large vote in favor of it, and that when the new Governor was elected, he had no doubt that almost the first thing done would be to make an appropriation for that purpose. He said further, that they would be willing to expend a large sum of money for the purpose, and that it would be expended solely by the State of New York, as they were so jealous of their rights that they would not accept any aid from the United States Government. On this side a plan was made, and an engineer drew the necessary profile of the property which it was proposed to take. It extends from the upper Suspension Bridge to the smooth water at the head of the rapids, including part of the property which formerly belonged to my late brother-in-law, the islands below, and the property upon which the Clifton House, the museum and other buildings now stand. That would cost a sum which was not considered excessive. I think all the Commissioners were convinced that the project was a feasible one. Several attempts have been made by private companies to carry out this project; but I think it would be very unfortunate if it fell into the hands of private speculators. I think there will be a feeling on the part of the Government, and that it will be responded to by Parliament, that if anything could be done within reasonable limits to preserve the Canadian side, it should be done; and I think it could be arranged that the sum required for the purpose would be recouped; at any rate the interest would be paid, so that there would be no charge to the general public. I am glad, however, to see this sum continued, and I hope the project will receive further attention in the future.

419. To settle claim of Reuben Lunt for damage to steamer St. John..... $15,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What are the particulars of this claim?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The following memorandum from the Department of Justice has been placed in my hands:—

“DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
“OTTAWA, 16th May, 1882.

“Lunt & Burpee vs. Lloyd.”

“This action was brought to recover damages for loss of steamer City of St. John, sunk in Bathurst harbor. It was alleged that the accident happened by reason of the St. John striking on the anchor of the dredge Canada. This case was tried before Mr. Justice Weldon, at the November Circuit in St. John, 1878, when the jury disagreed. It was tried again at the York sitting in January, 1879, before Mr. Justice Fisher, when a verdict was given for the plaintiff for $45,720. A new trial was granted by the Court, and the case now stands in that position. The reason of the Judges who granted the new trial were not given.”

The solicitor for the plaintiffs, Mr. Thompson, had to leave to argue a case before the Privy Council in England, and died there. From 1880 to the present time Mr. Lunt has been in communication with the Government, urging for a settlement without carrying the case into Court; and the Government decided to ask Parliament to appropriate $15,000 in full payment of the claims for the loss of the steamer, alleged to have been caused by the neglect of the captain of the dredge. This amount covers everything, and Mr. Lunt has agreed to accept it.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 319.

To pay balance due to S. L. Bedson, on account of travelling expenses to and from St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary from and to Manitoba..... $400

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister promised to let us know exactly what Mr. Bedson's expenses were.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have a memorandum as follows:—Salaries—Acting Warden McKay, $1,432.61; Wm. B. McDougall, $165; total $1,597.61. Travelling expenses—Warden Bedson, $675; Acting Warden McKay, $539.95; total $1,214.95. Expenses—Private quarters for Mr. Bedson, the Warden's house having been handed over to the Department of Public Works for repairs, $173.59. These items make a total of $2,986 15. All that is asked for in the different estimates.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Were Mr. Bedson's travelling expenses to and from Manitoba $675, because that appears a rather large sum. I imagine one third of the sum would very fairly cover all the expenses of such a journey.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume the $600 covers all his expenses from the time he left the penitentiary in Winnipeg until he returned to his home. You can hardly expect to take an officer from his home, and send him travelling, without paying some additional expenses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose I must ascertain the nature of his expenses, and see that they are not excessive.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. That is scarcely the way to put an item through Committee except on the last night of the Session. I think the hon. Minister ought to look into it and see that it is all right. I call attention to the fact that it is expressly set down on the score of expenses to and from—it is entered wrong.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will make a note of it and see that it is entered right.

On Resolution 321,

Manitoba Penitentiary—to provide for difference in exchange of land $1,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. What is the quantity of land?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The lot on which the penitentiary stands is 160 acres; immediately in rear of it is the lot owned by Mr. Bedson, 160 acres, upon which they are laying out town lots. He owns the lot that is proposed to extend from the Government lot lying alongside, but not exactly connecting, touching the corner and the lot leading to the penitentiary. It is proposed to exchange Bedson's lot for the lot owned by the Government, and the correspondence shows that $1,000 is asked besides for the exchange. The owner himself proposes to leave the matter to arbitration, and $1,000 is the sum mentioned as necessary to be paid in the meantime. The final payment will be the sum named by the arbitrators.

In reply to Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The property is twelve miles out of Winnipeg, and the railway runs within a quarter of a mile of the building.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There are two tracks—one running across one portion of the Bedson lot, and another running across another.

On Resolution 345,

To reimburse to Mrs. Diana Fox the sum of $390 22, fraudulently obtained at the Post Office, Ottawa, in October, 1881, by a person representing herself to be Diana
Fox..... $390 22

Mr. BLAKE. There ought to be some further explanation of this item. I do not understand how it was that this sum was obtained in the way described. The provisions respecting the Post Office orders are extremely stringent.

They provide against any liability being incurred by the Post Office in the case of money being paid to a wrong party; and inasmuch as a very large and continually extending business is being done in these offices, care should be taken not to establish evil precedents.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think I stated that some person stole the book of Diana Fox and personated her, producing what was considered evidence to lead the authorities to suppose she was Diana Fox. It was not until some time after, that Diana Fox found she had lost her book, and on enquiry that her money had been paid to another. Efforts have been and are being made to find out the offender, but so far without success.

On Resolution 370,

To provide for the purchase of four guns with 400 rounds of ammunition from the British Government.....$2,000

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that unless for the purpose of training, these guns are of very little use. In the present days of heavy artillery they would be but a very small defence.

Mr. CARON. All the military authorities I have been able to consult, look upon them as very valuable guns. The latest calibre of artillery would cost an enormous amount of money. For placing upon a citadel or any fortified place in Canada, these guns would be very valuable, and are obtained at a very cheap rate. We could not have obtained them so cheaply, except through the interference of persons who have considerable influence with the Home Government, and who take great interest in our militia.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved.—That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1882, the sum of $2,185,799.78 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.
2. Resolved.—That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1883, the sum of $3,365,754.69 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions agreed to, reported and concurred in.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 178) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public Service for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1882, and 30th June, 1883, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.

Bill introduced, read the first, second and third times and passed.

THE EXTRADITION ACT, 1877.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 154) to amend the Extradition Act, 1877, said: The Parliament of Canada passed an Extradition Act in 1877, and yet Her Majesty's Government have not yet suspended the operation of the Imperial Extradition Act. In consequence of our adopting the Dominion Act, a lengthy correspondence has taken place and it has arrived at this stage: the reason why Her Majesty's Government has not advised the suspension of the Imperial Act and brought the Dominion Act into force, was in consequence of one or two reasons given by the Minister of Justice. It is important to bring our own Act into power, as it is better suited to our circumstances than the Imperial Act. This Bill enacts that the words "that for any other reason he ought not to be surrendered" shall be struck out of the Act of 1877. In other respects the Act was to remain without changes.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not rise to object to the second reading of the Bill, because I think, under the circumstances in which the Government are placed, it is desirable to yield to the wishes of Her Majesty's Government, and that the Extradition Act shall be amended in that particular. But it has not been observed that the design and scope of the Act was to place the Minister of Justice in a position as nearly as possible the same as Her Majesty's Secretary of State in regard to the English Act. Important steps may be taken with or without the warrant of the Secretary of State. Under our system they are to be taken without any warrant of the Minister of Justice.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions on the subject of the salaries of Judges.

Mr. BLAKE. I understood some papers were to be brought down to the House.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. A communication signed by all the members of the Bar, except Mr. Wedderburn, the present Secretary, was addressed to the leader of the Government, asking that Mr. Wedderburn be appointed County Court Judge. It was placed in an envelope addressed to the hon. First Minister, but it cannot be found.

Mr. KAULBACH. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of occupying the valuable time of this House with any lengthened remarks upon this question, but I think, in my humble opinion, it is due from every member of this House that he should, in the interest of this Dominion—comparatively as yet in its infancy, and with a limited exchequer—give a frank, free, and unbiassed expression of opinion with regard to this branch of the public service. I have no hesitation in stating that this branch of the administration of justice is a most extravagant piece of machinery, some parts of it utterly useless, and the outlay or cost very largely in excess of the exigencies of the country. The Supreme Court of Appeal, and the County Courts, a sort of luxury to some, is unquestionably what we can very well dispense with and save so much to the country. I can arrive at this conclusion, more particularly, when I consider that previous to the creation of these Courts, under the practical working of the Court of Queen's Bench—better known in the Province to which I belong, as the Supreme Court, no discontent nor dissatisfaction was expressed by the people—the ends of justice were fully met, and suitors well satisfied. Establishing the County Courts literally means relieving the Supreme Court of the major portion of its work, giving the Judges of the latter heavy salaries with comparatively little or nothing to do; worse still, taking the petty or minor cases from the Magistrates' Courts where they could be disposed of at a trifling expense, and running poor suitors into said County Courts to be subject to the costs, in some cases of hundreds of dollars, and often in fact to the sacrifice of all they are worth, is a state of things greatly to be deplored. We are expending a large amount of money, as I conceive unnecessarily every year, in this service, and I certainly do think that it should be the desire—nay, it is the duty of every member of this House—to promote a spirit of economy in this branch, and curtail an outlay exhibiting such immense proportions and such a degree of extravagance. The Supreme Court of Appeal, I don't scruple to state, is most unpopular, and was established by the Mackenzie Government without asking the people—by your leave, and without any public opinion having been given in its favor. The lay portion of this Dominion are opposed to a multiplicity of tribunals when they consider that the administration of justice can be so well rendered within a narrower compass, the machinery lessened, the cost reduced, and thus necessarily become less complicated, at least it is manifestly the case in the Province to which I belong. There was no necessity for the creation of the Supreme Court of Appeal, as the Federal Act of 1867 does not require it—it simply says: "Canada might," mark you it says "might, notwithstanding this Act, from time to time provide for the constitution, maintenance, and organization of a General Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada." I contend that it would have been quite time enough for the late Government to have created this costly and useless appendage when the country expressed themselves in favor of it. Nothing would afford me greater pleasure now than to see both the Supreme Court of Appeal and the County Courts abolished, and the work performed by the Supreme Court, or Court of Queen's Bench, of the respective Provinces, and the Chief Justices of the respective Provinces to meet as often as required, as a body, and substitute the present Court of Appeal, clothed with the same functions as the present Court of Appeal, for the purpose of hearing and determining all important questions, whether constitutional or otherwise, that may be brought before them, from which appeal can be had, if suitors are not satisfied, on reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England, which costs this country nothing. All petty and minor cases could be disposed of in the Magistrates or Stipendiary Court, by giving it extended jurisdiction. The amount the Judiciary system cost Canada, for the year ending the 30th of June last, was $583,957.46, and for Nova Scotia, $52,694.55 which I feel satisfied could have been applied better to other purposes. I certainly do hope that this House will look favorably upon the views I have just expressed, and arrange to abolish both these Courts, more particularly the latter, which I have no hesitation in stating is a snare and a deception to the country, and a means in the hands of many unscrupulous and merciless attorneys to bring a poor man to ruin. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word as to salaries. I have been curious to know, for some time past, why it is that the salaries of Government officials in the various branches of the public service throughout this Dominion, have been, and still are, so unfairly distributed among employees; and if I am not out of place at present, in making the enquiry of this House, I would desire an answer. It would appear from the public reports that from the Judges down to the lowest employee, those of Nova Scotia are more poorly paid than their brethren of the same class in Ontario and Quebec. That a difference of this kind should exist and without any cause, so far as I am aware of, being assigned, is what I cannot understand. It cannot be that the labor is less arduous in Nova Scotia than in Ontario; on the contrary, it can be shown that in Nova Scotia it is considerably greater. I will instance the Customs Branch, where it will be generally admitted, and which can be shown by the reports, that whilst the officials of Ontario and Quebec are only employed in summer, and can, in consequence of their navigable waters being closed for at least five months of the year, enjoy ease and repose beside their comfortable firesides with their families, with comparatively nothing to do; the officials in the Maritime Provinces have to endure the rigour and exposure of the bleak searching winds of the Atlantic without any respite whatever. A still stronger reasoning can be offered as respects light keepers who are subjected to greater exposure during the inclement season of winter, being placed in the most exposed positions of the coast, and yet the officials of Ontario receive larger salaries per annum, than those of the Maritime Provinces. I can multiply instances and show that the principle is wrong. I repeat again that the highest salaries are paid in Ontario and they decrease as they approach Nova Scotia. As it is not the over-excess of work in Ontario, as I have clearly shown; and it certainly is not from incapacity or lack of ability, intellectually or physically on the part of Nova Scotians, to perform the work; nor that the officials in Ontario are so much superior; for if the latter were set up as a reason I would have no difficult task to prove to the contrary, as we see Nova Scotians taking the foremost rank in nearly every position in the Dominion, and in many instances outside of it,—then, I ask, why not have the employees in the Maritime Provinces placed on a par with their neighbors in the Upper Provinces, and thus avoid the unjust discrimination that has hitherto offered? I observed by one of the city papers some few days ago the unequal distribution of salaries to the messengers of this House compared with those on the Senate side, and from what I can gather am of opinion that it is not without just cause. The messengers of this House are on duty every day from 8.30 a.m., till very late at night, and at times till day dawn in the morning, whereas their neighbors are often free at an early hour in the evening, and notwithstanding this difference, the messengers on the Senate side receive $50 more per Session than on this side. These grievances have not only existed since the present Government came into power, but long previous, and have been suffered to exist ever since. I am a friend of the employee, and ask for tribute to whom tribute is due, believing it to be but just and right, and hope that the Government will take such steps as to extend a fair distribution to all.

Motion agreed to; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On Resolution 4,

Mr. BLAKE. So far as I can judge, the proposed Judgeship of the new County Court for the counties of King's and Albert I do not think it is required for the administration of justice. I remember to have read the statement of Judge Watters, made after this proposal was introduced into the Legislature of New Brunswick, that it was not required at all, but that the business could be easily disposed of by the existing staff. The hon. gentleman has stated that the jurisdiction of the County Court Judges has been increased; but my opinion is, that it will be found to be much less on the whole than the jurisdiction of the County Court Judges of Ontario, where, in many instances, one Judge does the work of a much larger population than the aggregate population of these two counties. The information I have received from various quarters is that this new Judgeship is not required; that it is, in fact, what has occurred on more than one occasion since we have been called upon to deal with the subject under the existing state of things, which gives one Legislature the right to create a Judgeship and imposes upon another the duty of paying the officer. If the Legislature which created the office had the responsibility of paying the salary of the Judge, there would be a check; but there is not at present any check, because the Local Legislature says: "We appoint the officer, but he is paid by the Dominion Government out of Dominion funds." I say it is utterly wrong for us to assume that we are under the obligation, because a Local Legislature creates an additional Judgeship, to pay the salary of the officer; and when there is published in a New Brunswick newspaper a statement of Judge Watters, and when there is, as I believe, a concurrence of opinion, that the existing County Court staff of the Province of New Brunswick is adequate to discharge the whole of the judicial functions likely to devolve upon the County Court Judges.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If the hon. gentleman will compare the number of Judges according to the population in New Brunswick with the number in Ontario, I think he will find that there are as many in Ontario as in New Brunswick. But there are some districts possessing the Judge and the County Court, which have more population and are larger than united counties in Ontario. But in addition I have in my hand a report of the changes made in our legislation during the last Session increasing largely the powers given to those Judges. In the first place it seems they are not to deal with cases where the title to land is brought in question; nor, in the second place, in cases where the validity of any deeds, requests or limitations is disputed, and certain exceptions are done away with. Besides, where they dealt previously with this Act with cases of debt to the amount of $200, they can now deal with cases of $100; and in actions of Courts where damages are claimed, their jurisdiction is extended from $100 to $200, thus increasing very largely the extent and nature of the duties. It has been urged that the Local Legislature provides for the appointment of the Judges, and that in the Provinces people want Judges, but are not called upon to pay for them. But they are called upon to pay for them in increased taxation. There is that check upon improper appointments. So long as certain rights and duties are thrown upon the Local Legislature, as in this case, it is exceedingly difficult for the Dominion Government or Parliament, the responsibility of the administration of justice resting with them, to say how many Judges should be appointed. Of course the case of an excessive number of Judges would be another matter.

Mr. ANGLIN. We have been called upon every Session the last four years to increase the judicial staff somewhere, and we increased it some time ago in New Brunswick by adding an additional Judge to the Supreme Court Bench. It is only in St. John that the judicial business is large and likely to fall into arrears; but I can see no necessity whatever for the creation of this additional Judgeship. Mr. Wedderburn is an estimable man, but his appointment is unnecessary and it imposes an additional burden on the people. He is appointed, not because another Judge is required to do the work, but because a Judgeship is required for him.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I desire to have the provision as to salary read thus: $2,000 per annum for the first three years, and $2,400 per annum afterwards.

Resolutions agreed to and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 179) to fix and provide for the payment of salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Ontario; and of certain Judges and County Court Judges in Manitoba and New Brunswick.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. BLAKE moved in amendment

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to strike out the provision for the salary of $2,000 a year, increasing to $2,400 a year, for a new County Court Judge for the Counties of King's and Albert, since the Public Service does not require any such Judge.

Amendment negatived on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 158) to re-adjust the representation of the House of Commons and for other purposes, be read the first time.

Mr. BLAKE. What are the amendments?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The seventh section is amended by striking out the words "Muskoka and" and that involves the necessity of making the same correction in the twelfth, second and third sections. The amendment is simply to allow the election to be held the same day in Muskoka as in the other Provinces. The ninth clause is amended by striking out Ridout from North Victoria and adding it to Muskoka in the thirteenth clause. This is evidently a mistake of the Senate. It should be added to North Ontario, but we can amend the Senate's amendment.

Mr. BLAKE. That comes of the Senate meddling with what concerns the representation of the people in this House.

Mr. MILLS. Better drop the Bill and ride out without it. Amendment struck out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then there is an amendment to the third section relating to Manitoba. It is apparently describing the boundary of Provencher.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman moves that amendment, it will be a very serious departure from the policy of the hon. gentleman announced to the House on the second reading, and during all the progress of the measure. He stated it was not intended to interfere with the disputed territory at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is an amendment which relates to the Province of Quebec. About twelve or fifteen electors residing in the county of Bellechasse, were in the habit of voting in Montmagny, but by law they had no right to vote there. In order to avoid possible future electoral contestations on account of this state of things, it has been thought proper to transfer the territory where these men reside to the county of Montmagny.

On amendment No. 5, to extend the territory eastward,

Mr. BLAKE. It is a most extraordinary procedure that the Senate should interfere in a most important matter and deal with the disposition of a considerable territory and number of votes on which this House had determined. The conclusion reached was not satisfactory to myself, but this is still more unsatisfactory, and I take the objection that it is not the province of the Senate to deal with the deliberate judgment of the House of Commons on matters affecting the representation of the people; and if they do so they should do it to settle something and not unsettle everything. The Government felt the difficulty of the question. They dealt with it in a way by which the inhabitants of the disputed territory were omitted, inserting in Manitoba those territories which were recognized by both parties to be within the Province. The Senate proposals, however, bring several new territories within the Act, which would lead to inextricable confusion. As there is no opportunity for full and fair discussion now, the Government should allow the Bill to remain as it left the House, and if they are adverse to such a policy, they should define definite bounds showing what should comprise the limits of the different districts, so that the inhabitants, the returning officers and the county may know what the electoral districts may be at the next election.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) himself proposed that those settlements eastward of Manitoba should be included in the district of Algoma.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no.

Mr. DAWSON. But this is practically the same thing, only we do not refer to the word at all in the Bill as it comes from the Senate.

Mr. BLAKE. What my hon. friend proposed was a definite boundary. He proposed that for electoral purposes

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

there should be attached to Algoma all the territory to the eastward of the limit fixed by the award of that Government, a fixed and definite boundary. It gave for electoral purposes that territory and those voters in the Province of Ontario to the district of Algoma. What the Senate proposes is that everything should be set at confusion and that we should have no notion where the limit should be.

Mr. DAWSON. I think it might be arranged that the electoral divisions shall not come east of the Lake of the Woods, and that the electoral division of Algoma shall not come west of that. That would not touch the lines fixed by the award.

Mr. MILLS. Under the Bill it is declared that the boundaries of these particular districts shall extend eastward to the boundaries of Ontario. Now, the Government must act on their own contention as to the boundaries of Ontario, and what would make a line drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi at the boundary of the District of Provencher and the district north of it. Now, it is obvious that a large section of territory in the District of Algoma, as hitherto recognized, will vote in one or the other of those two districts of Manitoba. It seems to me a monstrous proposition. You are undertaking to take from Ontario a portion of her population and assigning it to Manitoba. In addition to that there is another amendment proposed particularly inconsistent, for it proposes to extend the district of Algoma westward until it reaches these two particular districts in Manitoba. The Government must either act on their own contention or on the award of the arbitrators. We proposed, when the matter was before the House, that the award of the arbitrators should be acted upon, but the hon. gentleman refused to recognize the proposition, and he has allowed Manitoba to extend eastward to this undisputed limit, and now the Senate proposes this amendment. It seems to me that the Senate has completely transcended its functions, and that it might as well undertake to amend the Supply Bill or interfere with any of those matters which particularly belong to this Chamber, as to interfere with the representation of the people in the people's House. Who made the Senate? Who made the hon. members of the Senate judges of how the people should be represented in this House, or how a particular district should be divided, or how far the limits of Manitoba should extend? These are the propositions which we have before us, and that have been brought before us by the improper interference of the Senate.

Mr. McDougall. It seems to me that we are unnecessarily getting into a position of considerable difficulty. I quite agree with the opinion just expressed, though perhaps the word is not the most proper that could be used with reference to the other branch of the Legislature, but I cannot see any just grounds on which the Senate should amend a Bill like this, dealing with the representation of this Chamber, except, of course, in a matter of mistake or grammatical error, or something of that kind; but to undertake to change the boundaries of the constituencies, or amend the Bill in that respect, without having that information and that right discussion that members in this House have in dealing with a question peculiarly their own, it seems to me as a matter of principle an interference with our rights, and that we should vindicate our rights to control matters of this kind. I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that they might as well undertake to amend the Supply Bill, for I believe it stands on the same footing. I hope the hon. leader of the Government will not complicate the boundary question by undertaking to decide or fix the limits of the Province, by agreeing to an amendment of this kind, after the matter was brought up in another House and in another form. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be disagreed to. I think we have made the Bill workable and that the Act leaves Manitoba as it was before the Bill was introduced. The people of that Province will, therefore, vote in their respective districts as they would have done if there had been no dispute about the boundary. It seems to me that those who occupy this unsettled country and whose right to vote depends on a freehold title, would have no vote because their titles are uncertain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am obliged to differ wholly with the two hon. gentlemen who have last spoken on the constitutional question. There is no doubt in the world that the House of Lords has a right, and has exercised the right to deal with the question of the representation of the House of Commons. The House of Commons admitted that right by the manner in which the Reform Bill of 1832 was dealt with. That right was never disputed until it was disputed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to-night. This matter stands upon a different footing entirely from the Supply Bill. The hon. gentleman's memory and reading will tell him that the House of Lords did deal most independently with all matters of representation, that they have a right to protect the people in those matters, and I defy either of the hon. gentlemen to say that the House of Commons of England have ever denied to that branch of the Legislature the right to intervene and express their opinion legislatively on the question of representation. There can be no doubt about that question, though of course it may be a matter of expediency as to the extent.

Mr. McDougall. They may have the power, but not the right.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Legal power is right, but the expediency of exercising that power is a different affair. The only matter in which the House of Lords cannot interfere is the Supply Bill. We know that when the Senate threw out the Tuckersmith Bill, the hon. gentleman did not deny the constitutional right of that House to interfere in the matter; and they interfered rightly and well on that occasion, because they prevented a breach of the British North America Act, by so doing. However, I have no desire—far from it—to complicate this Bill with the Boundary question. At the same time, it is quite clear that the Senate desired no portion of the people of this country should be disfranchised.

Mr. Blake. So did we.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But the action of this House was to deprive of the franchise all Her Majesty's subjects residing in the disputed territory.

Mr. Blake. Contrary to our view.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose to amend the amendment in such a way as to give the people of that territory the right to vote either in Ontario or in Manitoba.

Mr. Blake. With the exception of a very small area, the hon. gentleman's proposal is practically that proposed by my hon. friend from Bothwell the other day, and I for my part will not object to it, as the hon. gentleman is practically acceding to our view.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With reference to the amendment touching the franchise of the employes on the Intercolonial Railway, I am quite certain the hon. member for West Durham will at once see the propriety of it when the facts are stated. The hon. gentleman is a strong advocate of a measure by which the Local Legislatures shall establish the franchise for members of this House of Commons, and he is also a strong believer in a Local Legislature being composed of one Chamber. The hon. gentleman is aware that the Government of Nova Scotia, following the practice of Ontario, has propounded the policy of abolishing the Legislative Council; and when I tell him that the amendment which is proposed here was carried in the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia by a majority of 23 to 7, and that it was defeated by a Legislative Council which is in a moribund condition—because it is only awaiting the change of two votes in order to be abolished altogether—I think the hon. gentleman will be satisfied that what is now proposed is quite right, and quite in accordance with the views he himself holds. This amendment does not go so far as that Bill. That Bill applied to all officials who were disfranchised by the Act of 1871. What I propose to do in this amendment is to provide that the Intercolonial Railway officials in the Province of Nova Scotia shall enjoy the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed in the Provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick, and on all other railways in the Dominion, who are entitled to vote if they have the property qualification under the law. All this amendment does is to enable those who pay the amount of taxation the law requires, and whose names have been left off the electoral list in consequence of the local Act of 1871, to exercise the franchise upon being prepared to take an oath that they have been omitted from the list in consequence of the Disqualifying Act of 1871. I am quite certain that every hon. gentleman will see the propriety of having the officials on the Intercolonial Railway in all the Provinces, enjoy the same privilege, especially when it is demanded for them by an overwhelming majority in the Assembly of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Blake. It certainly is a most extraordinary course on the part of the other Chamber to propose to us at this time this amendment. We now know whence it comes. "I propose," says the Minister of Railways "such a change;" but he might have added: "I did not propose it in the Chamber to which I belong and where on every ground it should be discussed. But I have it introduced into the Senate and brought down here within a few hours of the close of the Session." And this a Bill affecting the question of the franchise, affecting the principle as to the distribution of the franchise, and proposing to affect it in the most harsh and unsatisfactory manner. I think that if there is anything of which the House ought to be jealous, it is the consideration of the question of the franchise. If there is anything we ought to discuss, and to have the usual opportunities of dealing with, and the usual stages of deliberation with regard to it, it is the question of the franchise. The question of who should vote in the election of members is certainly and peculiarly and specially within our own province, and ought to be dealt with by us deliberately. I am not concerned to consider whether the Upper Chamber might not properly interfere with a franchise Bill. This is not a franchise Bill. The Bill sent to the Senate dealt with the redistribution of the seats and not with the question as who is to vote within the different constituencies. But there is interpolated into this Bill, by the other branch, a proposal to alter the law as to the franchise. We are asked then on the last night of the Session, when we are but a handful, and without any opportunity of discussing this amendment, to make an important alteration in the measure. I hold that it is uncalled for, and that the hon. gentleman should have proposed this amendment in this House, as part of the Government Bill, when we should have an opportunity of discussing whether we should infringe upon the rights of one of the Provinces with regard to the settlement of the franchise, and whether, if we chose to infringe upon it, we should do so in the manner proposed. What principle is there in the proposal that Intercolonial officials should have the right to vote in Nova Scotia, and not other Dominion civil servants? The hon. gentleman knows there are many other civil servants.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Many of them have the right.

Mr. Blake. And many of them have not. And the hon. gentleman knows that because they are civil servants of the Dominion that those railway officials have not the right to vote. The hon. Minister of Railways says that the Intercolonial Railway officials ought to have the same right in Nova Scotia that they have in New Brunswick and Quebec. But so ought the other Dominion officials who are disqualified in Nova Scotia, but who have the right to vote in New Brunswick and Quebec. There is no distinction there. But the hon. gentleman is Minister of Railways, and supposes himself to be master of the employes, and he extends his patronage just so far as he is. He proposes that we should adopt, at the instigation of the other House, not conversant with the election matter nor with the facts that might arise on such a subject, that we should accept the expedient of an oath taken by the voter, swearing he believes he was left off the roll because he was a Government official, and this oath is to be taken as a qualification, notwithstanding the law in Nova Scotia and the Dominion against a Government employee voting. He is not legally qualified under the law of Nova Scotia or under the general law, but this oath is to qualify. He is not to swear that he has a proper qualification; and there is to be none of those precautions of care applied in the case of all other voters on all the other lists of all the other Provinces of the Dominion. He has to come to the polls and swear that he is legally qualified, without giving more particulars, and to say: "I truly believe that my name was omitted from the voters' list by reason of my being an employe of the Government, on the Intercolonial, and for no other reason." I hold then that we ought not, being so few in numbers, and at this stage of the Session, to interfere with the franchise, a question not involved up to this time in this Bill. In the second place, we ought not to interfere with the question as to the franchise at the instance of the other branch at all, and on a form of procedure which gives us but this one stage in which to deal with it. I say, in the third place, we ought not to interfere with the question of the franchise in a partial or perfunctory manner, conferring the franchise on one class of Government officials in Nova Scotia and leaving disfranchised the other classes to whom just the same reasoning will apply, except that the hon. Minister of Railways has not got them under his particular control. I say, in the last place, we ought not to interfere by an operation which proposes simply, by an oath at the polls, to prove the qualification of an elector—a general oath that he is legally qualified—instead of providing some means of putting him on the lists in some way or other, so that there may be the same classes of security which are given to other votes. For these several reasons we shall act a just, dignified and proper part in disagreeing to this amendment, in declining to accept the suggestion of the Senate that we should engraft on this Bill such a proposal with reference to the franchise; and I move that the amendment be not agreed to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad that at the outset the hon. gentleman has abandoned the ground taken by two former speakers as to the right of the Senate to deal with the franchise.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not abandoned it at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is compelled to admit in the fullest sense that the upper branch of the Legislature has a perfect right to deal with the question of the franchise.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not admit it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What did the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. ANGLIN. He said nothing about it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He did say something about it. He made the distinct admission that he was not going to question the right—

Mr. BLAKE. I said I was not going to discuss it.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For a sufficient reason. He knew this was not the first time that the Senate had earned the gratitude of the country for interfering with the franchise. He did not forget that he and the Government of which he was an associate—

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Undertook to disfranchise a large body of the people of Prince Edward Island. They thought to strangle at the polls a large body of persons who enjoyed the franchise. The hon. gentleman did not forget that in that hour the Senate came to the rescue and prevented the Statute-book of this country from being blotted, as the hon. gentleman and his associates attempted to blot it.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Senate earned the gratitude of the independent electors of this country, for the manner in which they came to the rescue and prevented the interference, just previous to the elections, by a partizan majority with the rights of a great body of the free and independent electors of this country. What objection has the hon. gentleman to urge against allowing these people to exercise their franchise? The Government own the railways on Prince Edward Island, and every railway official who has the other qualifications required can exercise the right of a free citizen, and the same right exists in Quebec and Ontario. The Senate only asks that this class of people in Nova Scotia should be put upon the same footing as they are on in other parts of the country. The hon. gentleman says this is a branch of the Civil Service and these parties are civil servants. They are not under the Civil Service Act, and there are not a dozen employes on the Intercolonial Railway who are civil servants in the sense in which Customs and Excise officers are. That Act, which was passed by a partizan majority, for a partizan purpose, deprived the franchise of those people to the extent of preventing any man employed by the day—after thirty days consecutive labor on the Intercolonial Railway—from exercising the franchise that under the law he previously enjoyed. There is a sufficient reason for confining this Bill to these officials. In regard to the way housekeepers, lighthouse keepers, and post-masters who were disfranchised by that same Act, they have all been relieved and the franchise restored to them, excepting, I think, the Inland Revenue and Customs officers in Ontario and Quebec. These officials are not allowed to vote. All that is asked here is that the same class of officials in Nova Scotia should enjoy the rights and privileges that are enjoyed by them in New Brunswick, Quebec and Prince Edward Island. There is not a fair-minded man on either side who will not say they are entitled to have restored to them their franchise, especially when in the very Province in which they are disfranchised an overwhelming majority of the people's representatives have endeavored to remove that disability from them and to place them in the position in which this Bill places them.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman discussed this question as if the Government had no responsibility whatever with reference to this measure. This is a Government measure, and the hon. gentleman knew of the disqualification of those parties in Nova Scotia. He has had ample opportunity for considering the question, and should have, at an earlier period, introduced a measure to give those people their franchise. They preferred to wait, however, until this measure had passed through the various stages in this House, and after the large majority of the members had left, this extraordinary provision is inserted by the Senate and the hon. gentleman defends it in this House. He overlooks the fact that the franchise is not uniform in the various Provinces. Because those parties are entitled to vote in other Provinces, they should, he said, be allowed to vote in Nova Scotia. On the same principle he ought to make the franchise uniform throughout the Dominion. In British Columbia and Prince Edward Island they have manhood suffrage. Why should not the hon. gentleman extend that suffrage to the other Provinces? Why should he take so special an interest in those railway men in Nova Scotia? We have, rightly or wrongly, adopted, for the election of members of this House, the qualification adopted in the various Provinces for the election to the Local Houses. Now, the hon. gentleman wishes to make a special exception to that, and waits to make it until all opportunity for fair discussion has gone by. He had not the courage to propose this amendment in this House, but had it proposed in the Senate. He has not the courage of his convictions, or he would have introduced this provision in the measure itself. The hon. gentleman has referred to a provision or departure from the rule made some time ago in the case of Prince Edward Island. We know why the late Administration proposed to adopt the qualification of the voters for the second Chamber instead of the first in that Island, because in one case they had a voters' list and in the other they had not. But if I remember rightly the Bill provided that as soon as provision was made for the preparation of the voters' list the qualification in the popular branch should be adopted. Why was it not adopted in the first instance? It was because we were informed by the various representatives from the Island that a large number of our fishermen came forward at every election and voted for the election of members for the Legislature because they had no voters' list. But we know why the hon. gentleman desires to have this provision inserted; we know why so loose, so extraordinary a provision as this is placed in this Bill; we know that this provision is intimately connected with the sixth section of this Act. The Government have provided that they shall appoint whom they please as returning officer, and we know whom they would recommend to have appointed in Nova Scotia, and we know who will be permitted to vote under the provision of this Bill. The hon. gentleman has had it suggested in the Senate that any person who would come forward and declare on oath that he is qualified, shall be entitled to vote. How is his vote to be questioned? Why, the vote is recorded, and any number of men may vote in this way; a member may be improperly elected to this House. We know the difficulties we have had under the law as it stood, and the hon. gentleman now proposes a return to the condition that existed many years ago, so far as it is possible for him to do so. It is a highly improper provision, and I say again that the Senate had no right to insert it. I repeat, notwithstanding the observation made by the right hon. gentleman, that the Senate Chamber has no right whatever to determine the limits of electoral districts and the qualifications of voters. This measure was properly introduced and considered in this House, and it was open for the other Chamber to accept the Bill or reject it; but what have they to do with the limits of electoral districts and the qualifications of voters, and beyond everything else what right have they to import into a Bill, redistributing the seats of the House, a clause which is not an amendment to this Bill, but is an amendment to the qualification of voters in a wholly different Act?

Mr. BRECKEN. The hon. member for Bothwell, in speaking about the case of Prince Edward Island, has made the same mistake that every gentleman makes who attempts to speak of a thing he does not understand. The facts are these: The franchise for an election of a member to the General Assembly approaches very closely to manhood suffrage. The qualifications are, British subjects, twenty one years of age, a residence of twelve months in the district and a liability to pay a poll tax. The qualification for an elector to vote for a member of the Legislative Council requires that he shall have £100 worth of real estate in freehold. But here was a mischievous Act that was attempted to be perpetrated in Prince Edward Island by a party who called themselves Liberal. Prince Edward Island was represented here by four or five gentlemen, and there was an attempt made by the Liberal Government of this Dominion to confine the franchise only to those possessing £100 of real estate to enable them to vote for members of the House of Assembly.

Mr. ANGLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. BRECKEN. Yes, that was the case, and there was an electoral list. I was the man who introduced the Bill for vote by ballot in Prince Edward Island, in the year 1876. Previous to that we never had a list, and it was a dark design on the people of Prince Edward Island, in 1878, when an opportunity occurred to disfranchise more than one-half of the electors of the Island and send them to their homes; and when we go to the hustings, as I suppose we shall in a few weeks, they will be reminded of that Liberal enactment. In standing up here and making this statement I know what responsibility rests upon me, not to misrepresent anything but to state the facts as they exist, and I do not hesitate to say that it is one of the most infamous, one of the most tyrannical, one of the most diabolical Acts that ever was perpetrated by a so-called Liberal party, because they were under the delusion that the people were at their backs. The young men of the country who are now growing up to take upon their shoulders the duties of citizenship were tempted to be disfranchised unless they had £100 of real estate. The hon. member for Bothwell may say that his Government did not understand the thing, but the man who was sent to the North-West knew it well enough, and if he withheld the facts from them it was a disgrace to the name of Liberal. I remember the time when he was a Conservative, and I know he sold himself for the purpose of power, of pelf, when he stood up here and attempted to disfranchise so many of his fellow-countrymen. There was a new electoral list on the basis of manhood suffrage, and we have had it for many years. I am not an Ultra-Radical, but I will say that the men who voted upon what we call the franchise as distinguished from property qualification, have ever intelligently discharged their duties, and they have always been Conservative—the young men, the rising men who take an interest in the country, have always supported the Conservative candidates, and that in the estimation of the Liberals was a reason why they should be disfranchised, why they should occupy the same position as the negroes in the Southern States did before Abraham Lincoln enfranchised them. Where was the Hon. David Laird when this thing was attempted, where was Donald McIntyre, where were those men who came from Prince Edward Island as representatives of the people whom they attempted to disfranchise? The hon. member for Bothwell gets up here and talks about some little irregularity in the electoral districts. There was nothing of the kind, there was no electoral districts in Prince Edward Island till the year 1876. And yet, nearly one-half of the people, the intelligence, the industry and the education of the Island were to go for nothing unless they had £100 worth of property. I do not hesitate to say that if the Government were deceived, they were deceived by the representatives of that Island, and we would like to see these men come back here if they can. It was a dark, it was a disgraceful, it was a dishonest scheme, and the people of Prince Edward Island have determined that the men who sold them once shall not have an opportunity of selling them a second time.

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I did not observe that the hon. Minister of Railways said one word as to whether those men's names were really on the list or not. That undoubtedly is an important matter. If the names are not on the list it is quite possible that confusion and very great room for irregularity must of necessity arise. I do not see how names are to be added to the list under the circumstances narrated by the hon. gentleman himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will explain. The list of electors is established from the Assessment Roll. Those are public property; and a man who is placed on the Assessment Roll for a certain amount of property, whether real or personal, or both, is entitled under the law to be placed on the list of electors. This amendment will allow parties whose names are on the Assessment Roll, and have the amount of property required by the law, to be placed on the list of electors, but who were left off on account of the Act of 1875, declaring that employes on the Intercolonial should not be placed on the electoral list, who are left to take the oath. If any person doubts the right of an individual to vote, they have to swear that they possess the property qualification; and if they are not on the Assessment Roll for property qualification, they have got to commit perjury, and that can be established against them by most clear and decisive means, because, in order to have the right to vote they must have a property qualification under the amended rule.

Mr. ANGLIN. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Brecken) has made an extraordinary statement in regard to the measure passed by Parliament some years ago, which provided for a property franchise of £100. I do not remember the precise wording of the measure, but it is not supposed to convey any such meaning as the hon. gentleman has attached to it. The reason assigned for its submission was that it was necessary in order to prevent fraudulent voting. It was thought necessary, on extending the ballot system to Prince Edward Island, to have some such proposal as that adopted. It was a strong statement for the hon. gentleman to make that the effect of such a measure had been to reduce the people to a condition similar to that of the negro slaves in the Southern States before emancipation. There are thousands of respectable people in New Brunswick who have not the franchise to-day, because they do not possess the necessary property qualifications, which is $100 in real estate or $400 income. With regard to the measure now before the House, it is true the other House has the power to meddle with a measure of this kind, but circumstances must be very grave before the Upper House should interfere as to the mode by which hon. members are to be returned to this House. * * * An hon. member. That may be the case in Nova Scotia, but it is not the law in our Province. They are required to post up the name, and the law requires that others may apply to have the list corrected. A great many months must pass from the time the assessment is made until the list is completed, and it is not to be expected that these employes will examine whether they are on the list or not.

Mr. BOWELL. Are they not served with a notice of the amount they are assessed with?

Mr. ANGLIN. No.

Mr. BOWELL. Then how do they appeal?

Mr. ANGLIN. It then becomes their duty to go and enquire about it.

Mr. BOWELL. How is it remedied?

Mr. ANGLIN. There is a Board of Appeal before which they appear. They have a right to make a statement on oath, and the Board is required to accept that statement and to alter the assessment accordingly. It is not to be supposed that these men who are employed everywhere examine the rolls and are aware whether they are assessed for the amount named or not. If it were provided that these persons should go to some proper officer to get their right to vote and have their names placed on a list, these voters could go to the poll like others. I do not think it is right to provide for any such disfranchisement as this unless it is applied to everywhere. Some public officers are deprived of their votes in Ontario, and why not make this provision apply equally all over?

Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. BRECKEN. We have two franchises in the Island, one requiring $100 worth of property, either household or real, and the other manhood suffrage. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) made a remark about the American fishermen coming in, but I wish to say that I represented Charlottetown for thirteen years, and will the hon. gentleman take my word for it when I say that I never heard, from one end of the Island to the other, either party complain of the interference of American fishermen; and I must say that the man who wanted to stuff the hon. gentleman was one he apparently wanted to betray, the man who put him in the Legislature. I am the oldest politician in the Island with the exception of my colleague who is on a bed of sickness, but I say that no such case has occurred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish that hon. gentlemen opposite would come to some common agreement on this subject. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) approves of a diversity of franchises. In British Columbia there is universal suffrage. There is one degree of property qualification in one Province, and another in another. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) say they object to this provision because it does not apply to everybody, but only to the Intercolonial service. There is no agreement between these hon. gentlemen. It is quite clear that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) assumes the responsibility which primarily falls upon the shoulders of his former colleague, Mr. Laird, for wilfully depriving the fishermen the right to vote in Prince Edward Island, because some American fishermen had voted. We did not hear any excuse of that kind urged when the Bill was before this House. The Bill was run through at the point of the bayonet for the purpose of depriving the working people and the fishermen of their votes, and confining the franchise as much as possible to the property holders, who were supposed to be more favorable to Mr. Laird than the mass of the population. The hon. gentleman complains that these electoral clauses are forced into this Bill, which is merely a Bill for defining the bounds of constituencies and adding one or two members; but we must remember that this House itself altered the original character of the Bill, in providing for votes to be taken by telegraph in the Magdalen Islands, and in increasing the amount of the deposit to be made by candidates from $50 to $200. This House dealt with a variety of subjects cognate to the division of the country into electoral districts; and the object of defining the electoral districts is to show where the franchise shall be exercised. But it is very remarkable that these hon. gentlemen who call themselves Liberals and Reformers, who say that they inherit the traditions of the Reform party, whenever they have a chance of showing that they are Liberals and Reformers they do it by restricting the franchise instead of enlarging it. Well, they are Liberals after a fashion, but not after the fashion of the old Whigs, the old Liberals, or the present Whigs or Liberals of England; they are of the Canadian type, the genus Americanum. It is quite true there is a varying qualification in the different Provinces; and the inconveniences which have arisen from these variances, and which will increase every year, show me that this Parliament must, sooner or later, assume the control of its own franchise, declare what people have a right to vote, and not leave it to every Provincial Legislature to settle whether men, women or children shall vote. We might have, in some Provinces, women voting, and in other Provinces, aliens voting; we might have all kinds of diversities of the franchise—and we have seen sundry alterations in the franchise by the different Provinces since the Confederation—showing that no member elected in any Province by a given body of electors, has any assurance that he will go back to the same body of electors—to people having the same qualifications. Just see the peculiar hardship of the men on the Intercolonial Railway. That railway runs through three provinces. If a man happens to be a French Canadian having his house in Quebec, or if he lives in New Brunswick, he has a vote; but if he happens to live in Nova Scotia, although he goes over the same ground, associates with the same people, has the same rights, official and social, yet, because he happens to belong to Nova Scotia he is to be placed in a position of political inferiority to those from the neighboring Provinces. That is a humiliation to the men from Nova Scotia; and hon. gentlemen opposite must admit that if these men are deprived of the franchise, it is a hardship for them. Why, then, should the hardship continue to exist? You may find the conductor of a train, if he happens to be a Nova Scotian, without a vote, while every brakeman, every baggageman, every man who carries the oil to grease the wheels, may have a vote, and therefore be politically superior to the head of the whole train. This is a practical hardship, and it ought to be cured; and why not have it cured? It is quite clear that these men ought to have a vote; and why not give it to them? The hon. gentleman says there may be a difficulty in establishing their title. I hold in my hand the official printed voters' list, a copy of the Sheriff's roll, in which a number of names are marked as those of Dominion officials, and therefore they cannot vote. These men can go up and swear that they are entitled to vote; and why should they not? Why should the hon. gentleman get up in such a storm and object to these men, who have the electoral qualification, from exercising the franchise? Why, the reason is clear—because, forsooth, these men are Government employes—because, forsooth, this tyrannical Minister of Railways is going to whip in these men to vote whether they will or not, and watch their ballots and see whether they vote right—simply because these men are Government officials, and hon. gentlemen opposite are not in the Government. There can be no other reason for taking this objection. The amendment is a wise and liberal extension of the franchise, and which morally and legally ought to have been made, and there can be no difficulty, no embarrassment, no confusion by giving those men the vote proposed.

Mr. RICHEY. The burden of the grievance on the part of the Opposition seems that the Senate has interfered in this case to pronounce on a matter which seems to come peculiarly within the province of the representative body. What will hon. gentlemen opposite say to the second Chamber in Nova Scotia giving a veto to a Bill passed almost unanimously by the Assembly of Nova Scotia? To me there seems to be something peculiarly appropriate and opportune in the fact that the Second Chamber of Parliament should step forward to remedy a grievance that has been perpetrated by the Second Chamber of Nova Scotia, and I am very thankful that this amendment has been made for the reason that I have a recollection of the course pursued in the elections of 1878, when numbers of railway employes were discharged, and contracts were provided for them in order that they might be employed, though not immediately under the direction of the Government—they were set to work to operate in those elections, and immediately after the elections of 1878, they were restored. As to the alleged inconvenience that will result from the new provision, it is quite as great under the present law. The First Minister has produced one of the voters' lists, on which men are marked as Dominion officials. Under the law by which these men are prohibited from voting, all employes within thirty days before the elections are restricted from casting their votes. The lists are made up every year by the middle of May. Take an election occurring in January of the following year, or in September, as it did in 1878—the whole body of Dominion officials might have been changed; and those then marked as Dominion officials and eligible for voting, might not be entitled to vote, and a large number of those on the list marked as entitled to vote might, by virtue of their having been since in the employ of the Government, be disqualified. The objection is taken that we are to rest simply on the affidavit of the man. Under the Statute of Nova Scotia, that is precisely the provision made in the case of an employe being discharged from the service of the Government after the electoral lists are made up. I think that on all the points raised by hon. gentlemen opposite, the very facts of the case fully meet their objections.

Mr. MILLS. I did not say I was in favor of varying the franchise, but that I was in favor of accepting the franchise of the Local Legislatures. I would be very glad if all the Provinces adopted manhood suffrage.

Senate amendments amended and agreed to.

PROVISIONAL DISTRICTS IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the consideration of a Message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting for the information of the House, the copy of Minute of the Privy Council of Canada, dated 8th May instant, on the subject of the establishment of the Provisional Districts in the North-West Territories, as shown on the map accompanying said Message. He said: As the report laid before the House in the Message states, this arrangement is required for the convenience of the settlers in the North-West—that the region should be divided into four districts having their boundaries settled. A copy of the map has been hung up in the House for the last nine or ten days. Great inconvenience has been found in the want of geographical or topographical sub-divisions of that country, especially as regards settlers or intending settlers. Therefore it has been thought well to provide, provisionally, that the portions of the country which most likely will be supplied ere long, to which there will be a considerable emigration, should be thus divided. Of course it is not proposed to establish an organized Government among them. There will still be portions of the North-West governed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the North-West. These are simply topographical divisions. But as it might result in those divisions becoming hereafter Provinces, if it was thought right and respectful to the Parliament to proceed in the present manner, no important step in regard to them to be hereafter taken without first submitting it to Parliament. The first division is called Assiniboia, containing about 95,000 square miles. It is bounded on the south by the international line, on the east by the western boundary of Manitoba, and it runs north in the manner described in the measure, and contains 95,000 square miles. To the north of that lies the provisional district of the Saskatchewan, which contains about 114,000 square miles. They are pretty nearly of the same area. But it does not bind Parliament in any way. They can sub-divide them into Provinces or do as they please. It does not affect the North-West Council in any way, and it will be found to be a great practical convenience.

Mr. MILLS. I am not speaking of the convenience, but I am questioning this being the proper mode to take, because a Department regulation would have just as much force as an Order in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. If I rightly recollect the North-West Territories Act it contains power to make advances for the sub-division of the territory into districts, and it is possible therefore, we are here conflicting with that power. Having given that power one could, of course, trench upon it by passing another Act, as we did when we subtracted from the North-West Territories the district of Keewatin by Act of Parliament, which it was held convenient to place under a different arrangement for a provisional Government. I dare say it was hardly worth while to bring down an Act of Parliament to name this country, and I have no doubt, that an expression of opinion by the House of Commons that these names are very proper and mellifluous names, would be quite as decisive as an Act of Parliament. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the choice of the names, and I hope his wisdom in the geographical division of the district will be verified by events. As I said in discussing the Address, nobody can forecast where the principal settlements will be, or what ultimately may be the most convenient divisions.

Motion agreed to; and it was resolved:

"That this House concurs in the memorandum contained in the minute of the Privy Council, transmitted by His Excellency the Governor General, in his gracious Message dated the 8th of May, viz.: that for the convenience of settlers and for postal purposes, a portion of the North-West Territories should be divided into four Provisional Districts—to be named respectively Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Athabaska;—and this House further approves of the boundaries of the said several Districts, as described in the said minute of Council."

SUBSIDY TO THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 162) for increasing during a certain time the yearly subsidy for the Province of Manitoba.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. BLAKE. I have not heard from the hon. gentleman, as I wished to have heard, some further statement with reference to the basis of this measure. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to place in my hands, in partial fulfilment of the promise he made, some statement of the estimated expenditures in the Province of Manitoba for a few years back, but the hon. gentleman agreed to accompany that with some general calculations upon which they base this measure for the proposed subsidy.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not know that I can give anything more than the hon. member has in his possession, except to point out to him some calculation that was made upon the basis of 1880. For instance, the legislative expenses for 1880 were $15,600, and we added 50 per cent. to that as the probable increase for the next five years, owing to the increase of population and the extension of the boundaries. Expenses for Civil Government for 1880, were $17,150, and it was thought the expense would be increased by about one-third. Then the estimate for that year for the Administration of Justice, was $15,000, and it was thought proper to add one-third for the next five years. Education was placed at $18,000, and in view of a probable large increase in population during the next five years, reaching perhaps 200,000, and taking into account the cost for other parts of the Dominion, we increased that amount 50 per cent., or to $27,000. Then the estimate for Roads and Bridges was $30,000, which we have doubled. The municipalities then received $25,000; one-third has been added to that. In 1880, there was a vote for Drainage of $50,000. There was a considerable sum of money spent in that year and the year following, but that was not taken into account as a permanent expenditure to that extent. We thought that might be reduced, and probably removed altogether, and therefore that was omitted. The estimate for Printing was $4,000; probable increase, one-half. Government Buildings were $5,000, and in the memorandum I prepared I thought might be only $3,000 for the future. The estimate for Emigration was $5,000, which has been continued. Expenses of Government House, $4,000, continued the same. There was an estimate for Miscellaneous, in 1880, of $19,600, which we have increased by $10,000. Basing these items on the estimate of 1880, the expenditure would amount to $251,183, not allowing anything for drainage for some years. Then it was found that while calculations were made of an expenditure of the sum just mentioned, the estimated income would be about $242,000, against which they claim would be their necessary expenditure of $286,000. I find that the expenditure of 1880 was $201,000, and in 1881 it went up to $221,000, Education, $23,892; Government and Legislation, $48,461; Public Works, &c., $85,167; Administration of Justice, Agriculture, &c., $64,000; so that, taking the basis of 1880, the amount reached $251,000; but the sum provided by the proposition now before the House will be $240,000 or $250,000, Manitoba asking that it shall be provided with means to meet an expenditure of $286,000. In view of the rapid increase of expenditure on education, we felt that some such basis should be arrived at; and probably it will require great economy before 1890 is reached, and an increased subsidy is allowed on the larger population.

Mr. BLAKE. Not having had these figures before me, it is impossible for me to give them an analysis or consideration worthy the attention of the House. I admit the subject is largely a speculative one. I believe the condition of Manitoba, the time it was organized, and by which it was somewhat prematurely made a Province without having much regard to the population, was such that the system applicable to the older Provinces was utterly inapplicable to it. The question of a subsidy based on population is not unreasonable in dealing with Provinces that have attained a considerable extent in the national development. It is entirely different with a very large area, and with a small and increasing population. Then again with respect to lands, I consider each condition was exceptional. I agree it was impossible to propose to hand over lands and at the same time carry out for the territory great public works; but I contend that no satisfactory conclusion will be arrived at until those subjects shall all be taken into consideration and we deal with the questions of public advances and of the lands. With respect to the hon. gentleman's suggestion as to the finality of these arrangements, I am sorry there seems to be a grave misunderstanding between the Government and those with whom they have negotiated. The hon. Minister of Finance said the other day:

"As this arrangement is intended to extend over a period of ten years, until the Census of 1891, &c. &c." (Page 1.) "We took up the different items of the expenditure and estimated that the sum of $225,000 would, with the greatest economy on the part of the Manitoba Government and Legislature, enable them to pay the expenditure for the next ten years." (Page 2.)

And again on page 4 he says:

"The hon. gentleman says that this action we propose will prevent future Governments from interfering in the matter for the next ten years. The very object of this Bill is to close the question so far as we can, and we gave the Government of Manitoba to understand, as stated in this resolution, that this agreement was to stand as a contract until 1891."

I find in the Manitoba Legislature debates on this question that the Premier made this statement:

"It will be found that the arrangement effected is not of the permanent character to which members allude, that it is only to meet a temporary emergency, and that it is perfectly understood by the Government below that they will meet the exigencies of the Province as circumstances warrant."

Referring to the $45,000 in lieu of lands, he said:

"And were that amount granted by the Dominion Government and accepted by the Local Government, in lieu of all our land claims, I would myself feel constrained to concur in some of the remarks of the hon. member for Mountain, but the grant has not been given or accepted in that way."

The arrangements are defective and unjust. The hon. gentleman has stated that 150,000 people is a fair average of the population of Manitoba for ten years; they assume that 90,000 is the present population, including the immigration for the year. Taking that increase at 12,000 a year, the immigration pouring into Manitoba for five years will bring the population up to 150,000. In regard to the suggestion of 12,000 a year for Manitoba, is one that hon. gentlemen should not regard as extravagant. I think to apply the system of a decennial census to a country like this which has grown from nothing in 1877, to its present dimensions, which the hon. gentleman expects to more than double in ten years, and which from present appearance will more than double, as far as we may judge, in five years, would be inadequate. I think the circumstances of the Province would require a shorter period than ten years, and I think that the interests of the country, of the whole Dominion, demand that we should revise the settlement at quinquennial periods at any rate. I therefore move in amendment the following:—

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same, by striking out the words "during the ten years next after 1881," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "during the five years next after 1881."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the parties themselves asked that the calculation should be made on 100,000. That is their application. Our experience was this, that they asked that they should be allowed to increase the debt at the present population of 90,000. The hon. gentleman knows right well that by the Constitution it is provided that they shall enter the Dominion at a certain rate of debt per head of population. In my opinion, there is just one defect in the arrangement we made in reference to that, and one which affects the smaller Provinces of the Dominion coming into the Union. I have no doubt that it will have the same effect on the districts which are now provided for, viz., that they will not be in a hurry to come into the Union as separate Provinces, but rather remain as districts until the population increases, so that they are enabled to come in at a larger rate of debt. However, this would be breaking away from the principle of the Constitution. In order to meet the requirements of the delegates on that occasion, although they asked for 80 cents per head on 100,000, it was well known that the population would increase during the next ten years, and the Government felt that they could meet their requirements by increasing the population upon which the debt was to be calculated. The population was calculated at 90,000. They made it 100,000, which gave them within 30,000 of what they asked.

Mr. BLAKE. But they asked for the lands besides.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They asked for the lands what the additional lands for the next ten years would not make, $45,000 a year, on account of interest, because they have been losing on the lands. The Government thought it would be the most liberal policy to give them the $45,000, than to give them the lands, and tell them to make up that amount from the lands if they could. It is time the population is estimated in the Provinces on the Census of 1881. The Census of 1881 gives a population to Manitoba of about 65,000, and if we include persons who cannot be taken into account and who came in since, the number will probably be 90,000, and the proposition was that it should be taken at 150,000, in order, if possible, to meet the expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In this amendment it appears to me that the hon. gentleman is rather misusing Manitoba. The Bill provides that the Province is to receive a certain yearly sum for ten years, but the hon. gentleman will not allow them to have the money for but five years, or half the time. The hon. gentleman thinks to make a bid for Manitoba, but he does not do it artistically. He says:

"They give it every ten years, and we will go on better;" but the people of Manitoba are practical people, and they would rather have a bird in the hand than two in the bush. They would rather have this money secured by law for ten years than have it for five years in the hope that they would get better offers from my hon. friend or some one else. In the interests of Manitoba, I call upon my friends to stand by that Province. This amendment will not do. It is a glaring injustice that at the last moment of the Session an amendment of this kind should be presented—presented to a moribund Parliament trying to ruin one Province for five long years. It is a monstrous proposition, and I call on this House to adhere to this offer and to give this benefit to the people of Manitoba for ten years; and if we are in power at the end of five years, as we shall be, we will be able, perhaps, to deal more liberally with them than circumstances allow us to do now. It has also to be remembered that these sums are such that the people of Manitoba accepted them gratefully, and that the hon. gentleman seeks to deprive them of that benefit by offering this amendment.

Amendment negatived on a division; and Bill read the third time and passed.

BETTER PREVENTION OF CRIME ACT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the reading of Bill (No. 165) further to continue in force for a limited time the better Prevention of Crime Act, 1878. He said: The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) knows that this Bill was proposed in 1878, and has since continued in force. We think it should be continued, because there are a great many works going on in the unprotected parts of the North-West to which the Act should be made to apply.

Bill read the second and third times, and passed.

THE WORD TELEGRAPH.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 166) declaratory of the meaning of the word Telegraph in certain cases.

Bill read the second time; and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I think we require some explanation of this Bill. It appears to me that it may affect very important private interests.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The object of the Bill is simply to declare that the telephone is not a telegraph. The Anglo-American Telegraph Company, which has a telegraph line in Prince Edward Island, will not allow any telephone to be erected on the Island without receiving tribute therefor; and as the telegraph company, under its charter, has exclusive power to build telegraph lines on the Island, and as the telephone was not known then or discovered, they will not allow any telephones to be established there without paying tribute to them. This seems to be an extension of their powers, and this Bill is brought forward for the purpose of allowing telephone companies to establish telephones there as well as elsewhere by simply stating that telephones are not telegraphs.

Mr. BLAKE. But for this Bill telephones would be telegraphs—and I believe it has been so decided in the English Courts of Justice in cases in which it was contended that the creating of telephonic arrangements was an infringement upon the exclusive right of the Crown to the telegraphs. It may be that by this wide measure of legislation we are giving rights to the assumed patentees of telephonic rights, which do not exist under the law; it may be that we are creating monopolies even more extensive than that which the hon. gentleman says exists on the Island by the telephone and telegraph being held to be identical. I should prefer very much at this late stage of the Session, unless there is some necessity for it, that some more limited measure of legislation might be devised which would not be so likely to produce such far-reaching consequences as might arise from this Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter was investigated by the Senate before they passed this Bill. The Bell Telephone Company have tried to introduce their telephones on the Island, but the Anglo-American Telegraph Company prevented them from doing so unless they paid them tribute. Some time ago, when we had to lay cables in the Gulf from the Magdalen Islands, we intended to go to the Island of Prince Edward to connect with the telegraph system of the country, but we could not do so because this Company wanted to impose on the Government conditions which we could not respect, and I directed that the telegraph, instead of going to the Island, should go to Cape North, in Cape Breton. Under these circumstances this Bill was introduced in the Senate and passed. Their Honors thought it was not an infringement of the charter of that Company to declare that telephones were not telegraphs.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know how that was done. It is not from that aspect of the question that I am discussing the Bill; I was much more interested in the other aspect and which deserves our most serious consideration. If it be the case that under the English decision telephone is included in telegraph, and if it does follow from that—because these telephonic arrangements were all patented in England—that there is an exclusive right to the patentees, it may be to the greatest possible advantage to the telephonic proprietors; and if the proposition to create a legislative distinction which does not now exist between the telegraph and the telephone, and if it be useful to create that distinction for the purpose of permitting telephones to be erected in Prince Edward Island, can not some declaration be made in the Bill that this definition is not to confer on the patentee of the telephone any other or greater rights than they might possess but for that, so as to preserve the interests of the public in not creating a right which would be created by the opposition of this law, so as to give an interpretation to the word telegraph different from that which according to right and justice does not belong to it. It is very important we should not step hastily in this matter.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The decision of the Court in England turned to a very great extent upon the construction that applied to the Statute applicable to telegraphs.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). From a perusal of the decision lately, I repeat my assertion. I admit there was a large amount of scientific evidence from eminent electricians and others, including Sir William Thompson, to the effect that inasmuch as electricity was used to a limited extent in the telephone system, telephones came within the particular definition of the English Statutes relating to telegraphs. Of course, the position of Prince Edward Island is very peculiar. The people are strongly under what may be termed, I think, without exaggeration, a monstrous monopoly, which, no doubt, they were foolish enough to enter into. They are, no doubt, suffering under a grievance; and, if it is legitimate and proper legislation, as to which I say nothing now, to interpret any Statute already passed in reference to the matter—if it is within the function of this Parliament, I would think we were not exceeding proper functions by doing anything we can in reason to relieve Prince Edward Island of the incubus under which it is undoubtedly suffering. We should thus be doing a public good by putting the people of that Island in a position to obtain modification of the hard terms which the monopoly are now administering to them.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. MILLS. When I dissented from the hon. member for Victoria I did so from the recollection of the decision of the English Judge. I think it was Justice Stephens who was the presiding Judge, and who gave an elaborate judgment after men of high scientific attainments were examined, and after learned counsel were heard, to the effect that not merely upon the provisions of the Statute, but also from the nature of the two inventions that a telephone was a telegraph, and the control of the telephones in England was upon their scientific identity.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I omitted that the telephone company had given notice of an appeal, and when about appealing an arrangement was made between the telephone company and the Government, whereby further litigation was avoided.

Mr. MILLS. The Government may have felt some hardship in the case of the telephone company, and may have agreed to a compromise based on moral and not legal considerations. Assuming that the English decision was correct, was law—what does the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill propose? By an Act of Parliament to divest parties in this country of property without any consideration. I may call the hon. gentleman's attention to the communication made by the hon. Minister of Justice to his colleagues, on the Streams Bill, in which the hon. gentleman complained that the Local Government were depriving certain parties of property without any consideration. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do in this case? The Courts have decided that a telegraph and a telephone are the same, and the hon. gentleman proposes to say they are not the same. With what purpose? To deprive certain parties of rights which he says they have got.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Our legislation has always recognized the distinction between telephones and telegraphs. In the Bills incorporating telegraph companies we have given them limited powers for telephone purposes, and in those incorporating telephone companies limited powers for telegraphy. The policy of this Parliament has always been to recognize those two systems as distinct. This Bill proposes simply to carry out that same idea; to declare, as a general proposition, what we have already declared in nearly every Act relating to telegraphs or telephones that has passed this House since the invention of telephones. The object to be obtained by this Bill is one of very great importance, and since we have recognized the distinction all through our legislation we ought to declare that distinction now so that there can be no doubt that telephones and telegraphs are separate and distinct things; and if by a cable from Prince Edward Island to the mainland telephonic communication may be had between the two, and the messages transmitted from the mainland over the telegraph wires, the people shall have the right to establish that telephonic communication. I will not venture for a single moment to dispute the argument of the hon. member for West Durham, but as I understand the hon. gentleman he does not object to our taking this course so far as the avowed object is concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. I rather said I would not discuss it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). But the hon. gentleman suggests another difficulty, that by declaring these two things to be distinct in the way proposed, we, in that way, give to certain telephonic inventions a value they would not possess if what is generally accepted to be the decision of the Courts in England obtained. I venture this opinion with great deference, that there is nothing in that, for this reason: Assuming they are the same, the telephone is simply a distinct invention for transmitting messages by sound and is an improvement upon the telegraph. So far it may have a distinct patent and distinct value which will not be increased or diminished by the fact that you separate it from the telegraph altogether. The interests involved in this are so great I sincerely trust the Bill will pass and thus enable the people of Prince Edward Island to have a cheap mode of transmitting messages to the mainland and thus get rid of the monopoly under which they labor at present.

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. MILLS. I beg to move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee with instructions to amend it by adding to the end of the second clause the following words: "or any right now existing."

Amendment negatived on a division; and Bill read the third time and passed.

PETROLEUM INSPECTION.

Mr. BOWELL, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 172) further to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act, 1880, said: This Bill is to prevent the importation into the country of an article which is called high test petroleum, or in other words sperm petroleum. It has been imported under two or three different names. It is put up as having a very high fire test, but its gravity is much greater than that which is prescribed by the Act, therefore, it could not be admitted under the Act as it stands. Under the existing law petroleum having a greater specific gravity than .845 cannot be lawfully sold or used for illuminating purposes in Canada, but an oil has been imported under the name of mineral sperm which has a specific gravity of from .825 to .830, and a fire test of about .280. This product is used almost exclusively now on board ocean steamers and outward vessels in inland waters. It is also used by railways from the fact of its being much safer than ordinary petroleum. The law provides that this must stand a fire test of .180, while the fire test provided for the other is only .150. That is the only change.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the annual Petroleum Bill, without which, I suppose, every Session would be incomplete. I believe there has been one every Session of this Parliament, and it has always come down about this period of the Session when it was impossible that it should be examined by those who are interested in the trade. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press the measure, because I am expecting to receive an intimation on the subject in the course of the morning from a person interested in the trade. The Bill, in several respects, indicates the imperfection of preceding legislation. In the first place you have got here a condemnation of your specific gravity test, because you are proposing a different test from that heretofore used. In the next place you are proposing a mode of applying the flash test which has been condemned by the Minister and officers who have introduced the new test. We have a new, extensive and complicated test; I think it takes two or three pages of the Statute-book to describe the mode in which the test shall be applied. We are coming back again in this Bill to an old test about which we can read statements of Ministers and experts that it was so very imperfect that they could not tell, after a long examination, whether the oil would stand the test or not. You are applying here a different range of fire or flash test, and you are restoring this particular application of the fire test and the old open cup, displaced by the more extensive machinery. I have been unable to find out, as on former occasions, from whom this Bill really comes; I do not know whether it comes from importers or manufacturers of the article, whether it is intended to make the article here or whether it has been found that under the law as it at present exists, it is imported under some other name. So far as I know there is no such name known in the trade now as high test petroleum. I am aware oil has been imported and sold under the name of mineral sperm. I rather suspect that if the hon. gentleman searched to the bottom he is really proposing that this article shall in future be designated a high test petroleum.

Mr. BOWELL. I have the best authority for saying that this does not interfere with the ordinary petroleum trade in the least. When the Bill was introduced last year and the year before, this class of oil was not known in the trade. It came first under my notice in Prince Edward Island, where the steamers running between Boston and Halifax, and touching at Charlottetown, applied for permission to import this oil, its specific gravity being so much greater than that provided for by the Petroleum Act that they could not import it under the law. It has been found that the Grand Trunk Railway has been purchasing it in the United States and using it on the through lines, and also the steamers on the lakes import it. I have had a long telegram from oil men in Petrolia and the West in reference to this matter, and so has the Minister of Inland Revenue, pointing out that it did not interfere in the least with their trade, and there has been no protest entered against the passage of the measure. The suggestion did not emanate either from the manufacturers or importers, but simply from the fact that we found that under the law the article was safer to use by railways and steamboats; although imported it proves to be a much safer article than that which was produced in the country. I will also inform the hon. gentleman that this kind of petroleum has not hitherto been made in Canada, but they have discovered a mode by which it can be manufactured from the Canadian crude petroleum, and they are commencing to manufacture it in this country. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman desires that this article, which is safe in its character and certainly not explosive, should be kept out of the country, because if it were we would have to prevent under the law its use in this country, though it might be manufactured. There is no objection to allow the third reading to stand till to-morrow.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING INDIANS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have to crave the indulgence of the House while I introduce a Bill (No. 174) from the Senate to amend the Indian Act. It has been represented to me as requisite in consequence of some decisions and doubts that have recently taken place in the North-West. I will not go over the clauses, as I have shown the Bill to my predecessor (Mr. Mills) and he concurs in all the clauses, with the exception of one, which will be omitted.

Bill read the first, second and third times and passed.

BANK OF UPPER CANADA.

Bill (No. 171) to increase the amount placed at the disposal of the Governor in Council by the Act 34 Vic., Cap. 8, for paying off claims on the Bank of Upper Canada.—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

AMERICAN TELEGRAPH AND CABLE COMPANY.

On the order to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 17) to grant certain powers to the American Telegraph and Cable Company being read,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). With respect to one of the amendments the Company are unwilling to agree to it, and at this late period of the Session I shall not ask the House to dissent from the amendment. I prefer to adopt the alternative of moving the withdrawal of the Bill. The reason why the Bill is withdrawn, I may briefly say, is that the amendment made by the Senate will place the Company at a disadvantage as compared with other cable companies. I move therefore:

That the consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill No. 17, to grant certain powers to the American Telegraph and Cable Company, be deferred for three months.

Mr. BLAKE. I think my hon. friend cannot move the discharge of the Order after it has come down from the Senate. To accomplish his object he had better move that the amendment be considered this day three months, and he can make a separate motion as to the return of the fees.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that would be better.

Mr. CAMERON, moved:

That the consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill No. 17, to grant certain powers to the American Telegraph and Cable Company, be deferred for three months, and that the fee and charges paid thereon, be refunded, less the cost of printing and translation.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2:25 a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 17th May, 1882.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REMUNERATION OF THE MESSENGERS.

Mr. ROYAL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to lay before the Government a class of claims to their favorable consideration, which appears to me, as well as to others, as being overlooked. I mean the humblest class of officers of this House, the messengers. During this Session we have thought of remunerating very largely, but not too much, the highest class of our civil servants. We have not neglected to take care of the Deputy-Heads of the Departments. We have provided fully for every class in the various Departments of the Civil Service; but I believe we have to a great extent, if not neglected, overlooked at least the rightful claims of a most interesting class of our employees. This is, perhaps, owing to the fact that they are the humblest in the scale of officers; but I believe that we must not close the labors of this Session without attempting at least to call the attention of the Government to the claims of these officers. They are poorly paid, as they only get $200. This Session has lasted about a hundred days, so that their pay amounts only to the small pittance of about $2 a day, out of which they have to pay their expenses and provide themselves with decent clothing. The same class of employees in the Senate, whose duties are much less onerous, are paid $250. When we consider, also, that the pages receive $1.50 a day, the claims of our messengers should not be overlooked, especially when we have an overflowing Treasury, and when the Government, with judicious generosity, are providing for all the requirements of the public service. I can speak disinterestedly on this subject, because Manitoba is too far away from Ottawa to have any people from that Province appointed on the staff of messengers of this House; and I am sure that our hon. friends on the Opposition side will join me in urging upon the Government the claims of our messengers on their favorable consideration.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I think the House of Commons should pay the same salaries to its messengers as the Senate pays. It is well known that they do three times the amount of work. They are here about a hundred days, and when they pay their board and expenses and return to their homes they have very little left. There is another class of our officials who are hardly worked, and that is the sessional clerks. There is no class employed about the buildings who put in more hours of work, and, I think, in addition to the three dollars a day, they ought to get a bonus of $50. I do not think anybody in the House or the country would object to that being done. These men have to work sometimes from eight or nine o'clock in the morning until two or three the next morning. I hope the Government will see their way to granting this bonus; I do not think any hon. member will oppose it, and, as the hon. member for Niagara says, a year from now, whoever rules this country may make the increase permanent, and put it in the Estimates.

Mr. BERGERON. I entirely concur in what has been said. I do not see why our messengers, who have ten times the amount of work to do, should not be paid as much as the messengers in the Senate.

Mr. GUILLET. I desire to say a word on behalf of another class—of those in the paste-room. We know that a large number of documents have been sent away this Session, and that these employees have had a great deal to do. All hon. members will sympathize with them I believe, because all have availed themselves of their services.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt you, Sir, and the Commission of Internal Economy who assist you, will take all these matters into consideration.

Mr. ORTON. I thoroughly endorse the views expressed by other hon. gentlemen, especially with regard to the sessional clerks. I know of one sessional clerk who gave very valuable services to the Committee of which I was Chairman, working night and day, sometimes until two or three o'clock in the morning. I certainly think that the House would do well to reward those who have labored so well in the public service; and I think the suggestion, that a bonus should be granted for this Session, and the matter of a permanent increase left for future consideration, is a very good one.

Mr. TASSÉ (in French). I hope that it will be found possible to grant the increase asked for by the sessional messengers, and that during the recess the Government will take into consideration the increasing of the salaries of those messengers from $500 to $600 per annum. These employees render valuable assistance to the Government, and I think that their services should be rewarded as fully and as generously as possible. I am glad to see that hon. members who spoke before me on this question have all declared themselves in favor of increasing the salaries of sessional messengers.

INLAND REVENUE ACT.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 168,) to amend the Inland Revenue Act of 1880.

Mr. BLAKE. The amendment that seems to be material, as far as I can judge, is that on page 4, line 32, providing that when manufactured into common Canada twist the Canadian tobacco may be sold by the grower, when grown on premises occupied by him, to any person for his own use, to the extent of 30 lbs. for each male member of the purchaser's family, and limiting the time of selling to two years after the passing of the Act. That provision conflicts with the third clause of the Bill, which gives absolute power to sell to anybody at any time, whether leaf or twist. These are very important modifications of the right of the cultivator to sell tobacco. You have two inconsistent clauses inserted in the Act. The second clause obviously modifies the other clause which gives practically unlimited right. It modifies it in point of time—it gives the right to sell the leaf only for two years; it modifies it in point of character—it gives the right to sell only to any person who requires it for his own use; it modifies it in point of extent, entitles you to sell the leaf only to the extent of 30 lbs. for each adult member of the purchaser's family; so that the change which is proposed is a very important one. Well, then, you have repealed the clause as to the manufacture and sale of the twist. It leaves that in this way: "The cultivator may also, during the set period of two years, manufacture into twist, the surplus tobacco grown," so that as to the sale of Canada twist, and the manufacture of the leaf into Canada twist by the cultivator, instead of being an unlimited and permanent privilege, is restricted to two years, so that if the hon. gentleman adopts the amendment it will be observed that, both with reference to the sale and disposal of the leaf and also with reference to the disposal of the common Canada twist, very important restrictions are laid upon the privileges accorded to the cultivation of tobacco by the Bill as it passed this House.

Mr. HOUDE. I would ask whether there is not a change affecting the cultivator for two years to come?

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, there is. The effect of that is, first of all, that the privileges are by the Bill, as it passed this House, general and unlimited, while they are now limited to two years. The effect, secondly, is, that whereas there is a general power to sell the leaf now, it is only for two years, and the power to sell the leaf is only to any person who wants it for his own use, and the power to sell is limited to the quantity of 30 lbs. for each adult male in the purchaser's family. This is a most serious departure, and I hope the hon. Minister will change his view and disagree with the amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the amendments be not concurred in, and the reason for such non-concurrence is, that the said amendments are contrary to the general policy of the Bill.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 172) further to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act.—(Mr. Bowell.)

THE WINNIPEG POST OFFICE.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether there has been any enquiry by Post Office Inspector Dewe on the subject of the Winnipeg post office; whether any report has been made; whether the report recommends the removal of any, and which officers of that post office, and on what grounds; whether the report will be laid on the Table?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow this question to stand for a few minutes until the arrival of the hon. the Postmaster-General, who will shortly be here.

BOROUGH OF NIAGARA.

Mr. PLUMB. I had hoped that upon the consideration of the Redistribution Bill, I might have again appealed to my right hon. friend the leader of the Government, in respect to the constituency of Niagara; but I now desire, in regard to the changes made in that constituency, to appeal to the right hon. gentleman to say that I had endeavored as far as I could to discharge my duty to my constituents and endeavored to preserve the constituency intact. I trust, on some other occasion, I may be exonerated from any neglect of duty in respect to my constituents at Niagara, and I hope that the right hon. gentleman will say that I did endeavor, as far as in me lay, to prevent the sacrifice, as it will appear to them, by annexing that old constituency to the county of Lincoln. I think my right hon. friend scarcely understands the deep feeling that exists among the inhabitants of that loyal borough, on finding themselves deprived of a representative, but I trust they will follow my example in still remaining loyal to the Conservative cause, which they have often done on hard fought fields in the past.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hoped to have had an opportunity of saying something on this matter; what I say in these few words I shall perhaps have an opportunity of repeating at greater length on some future occasion. The hon. gentleman waited on me not only in season but out of season, day and night, sometimes when I was particularly engaged, in order to preserve the right of representation to the borough of Niagara, which he has represented so well, ably and fearlessly on the floor of this House. I hope to have an opportunity of speaking of this matter by-and-bye. In the meantime I would say on behalf of my colleagues and friends in this House, that we will view with great regret any accident which will prevent my hon. friend from any longer assisting in the Government of the country as a member of the Legislature. I do not believe such a fall will happen to him or any such misfortune will happen to the party, which would lose a valuable friend and adviser, and I have full confidence—perfect confidence, that the hon. gentleman, if his life be spared, will come back to the next Parliament as the representative of an Ontario constituency.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). Having heard what was said by the hon. First Minister in regard to the probable retirement from this House of the hon. member for Niagara, I trust I shall have time enough to express my sympathy for the hon. gentleman; and my admiration for the eloquent valedictory speech on which he the other day closed his address in bidding good-bye to the old loyal borough of Niagara. I regret very much that the hon. gentlemen opposite in their speeches on that occasion did not meet my hon. friend in the kindly spirit which his admirable and feeling speech deserved. I am sure we all admire his chivalrous spirit in which he placed his seat in the hands of his chief. But I for one am glad to hear that political retirement is not to be the fate of my hon. friend, for I have the pleasure of knowing that his political career will not be ended with the present Parliament. I think the leader of the Government, when he was giving my hon. friend a bill of health, might have said a word to a few other of his supporters; and I would be glad if he would say something for his opponents too, for I would be sorry to see their number lessened, I would rather see it increased. I do not think it would be in the interests of the country that their number should be reduced; and I am quite satisfied, notwithstanding their professed alarm, that every leading member of the Opposition will be found back on that side after the elections. No doubt oppositions are very useful to the country.

Mr. PLUMB. Therefore we always want to keep them there. I think, Mr. Speaker, I may also add what might have been more appropriately said by a member of greater experience, that this House ought to express its great appreciation of the able manner in which you have discharged your duty as Speaker this Session. Having the peculiar advantage common to all your race of that courtesy and politeness characteristic of French Canadians, and the ripe experience gained as Speaker of a Provincial Assembly, you have discharged your duties with an amount of tact and success highly creditable to yourself as well as useful to this Chamber. I desire, on behalf of what I may call the inexperienced parliamentarians, to express our grateful appreciation of the great encouragement you have always given us, and of the experience you have placed at our disposal when questions involving parliamentary practice have arisen from time to time. I am sure that all of us who have had the privilege of sitting in this Chamber, over which you have so happily presided, will look back with pleasure to your career as its presiding officer, and will always remember cordially and kindly the personal hospitalities which you so lavishly dispensed, and the character which you kept up, not only as a French Canadian gentleman, but as a Canadian and as the Speaker of the Commons of Canada.

Mr. ROYAL (in French). Mr. Speaker, I think it my duty, as one of the Junior members of this House, to unite with the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) in his expression of praise and regret with regard to the leave-taking of the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb). It is always an advantage for a young member to listen to speeches as instructive and as full of new ideas as those made by the hon. member for Niagara during the three years that I have occupied a seat in this Parliament, with the greatest profit to himself and, I am sure, to those who will, in the future, read the debates of this House to seek in them the necessary elements for writing the parliamentary history of the country. As for me, I have ever admired the varied eloquence, the extensive knowledge and the rapidity of conception of the hon. member for Niagara. Although advanced in years, his mind has remained young and fresh. More than once have we enjoyed the vivacity of his answers, whilst at the same time we may sometimes have regretted that he should have abused the too great popularity he had acquired in this House. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, no one more than myself has admired the hon. member for Niagara, and it will certainly be a loss for this House and for the country that a man should disappear from the parliamentary precincts who has been such an ornament to them by his extensive knowledge and his talents of a high order. Now, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba was formerly in the habit of electing the principal men of the country, whom the older Provinces, in a moment of spite, had refused to elect. In 1873, Manitoba had the honor of electing Sir George E. Cartier, after his defeat in the Province of Quebec. In 1878, it had the honor of electing Sir John A. Macdonald, the Prime Minister of the Dominion, who had been beaten in a city of the Province of Ontario. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that Manitoba, which has only young men to send to this Parliament, has given a proof of its wisdom by electing eminent men unjustly rejected by the older Provinces, and if the hon. member for Niagara is cast out of the political arena because the county of Niagara has disappeared, I think he will be welcomed and will triumph in one of the districts of Manitoba or of the North-West. I also join the hon. member for Essex in what concerns you personally, Mr. Speaker. I might be taxed with being too favorably inclined towards a fellow-countryman, but I cannot refrain from praising the cordiality of your receptions as well as the lively interest you have shown in making agreeable the long sittings we have had to spend in this House. I am sure that if the young ones are those who must praise their elders, I could not select a fitter subject to allow me to express on this occasion my sympathy with the hon. member for Niagara, and my admiration for the hospitality and impartiality with which you have presided over the deliberations of this assembly during the three Sessions I have had the honor of being in this House.

INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Mr. SPEAKER stated that the Master in Chancery had come from the Senate to say that the Senate doth not insist on the amendments made by them to the Bill (No. 168) to amend the Inland Revenue Act, 1880, except the 7th of the said amendments, upon which the Senate doth insist.
Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved that this House do not insist on disagreement with the 7th amendment, but agree to the same.

Mr. BLAKE. I really do not think this will do. It is proposed to strike out the clause which is substituted for clause 146, in order to provide for the new state of things supposed to be created by this Bill. It therefore leaves alive clause 146, which provides that every person who offers for sale, or has in his possession, except on the premises where tobacco is grown, or in a licensed manufactory, any unstamped tobacco, shall pay a penalty. This clashes with the permission to sell uninspected tobacco, which you intend to give to the cultivator.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I would suppose the last provision made by Parliament in this matter would be considered, by the interpreters of the law, as nullifying this clause 146 in the old Act. We are satisfied the law will work well without that amendment, and would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the motion to go as it is.

Motion agreed to.

Then the Honorable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:—

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

"The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required by the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

"In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency a Bill intitled: 'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1882, and the 30th June, 1883, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service,' to which I humbly request Your Excellency's assent."

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:—

"In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill."

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Fourth Session of the Fourth Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the earnestness and assiduity which you have shown in the performance of your parliamentary duties, and I am glad to believe that on returning to your homes you will find the country everywhere enjoying a large measure of prosperity.

The Civil Service Act will, I trust, be productive of the best results. It will improve the organization and add to the usefulness of that service, already so efficient.

The measures relating to the extradition of fugitive offenders, to the winding up of Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies and Trading Corporations, and for amending the Criminal Law, are all of an important nature.

The appropriation in aid of Railway enterprise will tend greatly to open up vast tracts of fertile country hitherto almost inaccessible to the settler.

The annual grant for the encouragement of the Sea Fisheries and the improvement of the condition of the fishermen will be of great value to that important branch of the national industries.

The removal of the duties on tea and coffee will lessen the cost of these important articles of food to the people, and the repeal of the Stamp Tax on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes will be appreciated by the commercial community as a relief from an irksome burden, while the transmission of newspapers and periodicals free from postage will be accepted as a boon by the whole country.

Our manufacturers already in a prosperous condition will be further aided by the abolition of the duties on metals and other raw materials used in their several productions.

It is satisfactory to know that the buoyant state of the revenue will permit these reductions, amounting to about a million and a quarter of dollars, to be made without inconvenience.

During the recess my Ministers will continue their efforts to secure favorable commercial arrangements with France and Spain. In these endeavors the High Commissioner will receive the same hearty support from Her Majesty's Government and the Imperial diplomacy as has already been given to him.

Such support must greatly strengthen Canada in any negotiations entered into for the improvement of her trade with foreign countries.

It has been the more readily accorded that Her Majesty's Government rely on no preference being given by Canada against the trade or products of the Mother Country.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you in Her Majesty's name for the Supplies you have granted, which will be expended with all due attention to economy.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I heartily congratulate you on the rapid and successful development of our manufacturing, agricultural and other industries.

I am, however, advised that their progress would have been still greater were it not that capitalists hesitate to embark their means in undertakings which would be injured, if not destroyed, by a change in the trade and fiscal policy adopted by you in 1879. In order, therefore, to give the people, without further delay, an opportunity of expressing their deliberate opinion on this policy, and at the same time to bring into operation the measure for the readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons, it is my intention to cause this Parliament to be dissolved at an early day.

The Speaker of the Senate then said:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Monday, the 26th day of June next to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Monday, the 26th day of June next.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to the 26th day of June next.

INDEX.

FOURTH SESSION — FOURTH PARLIAMENT, 1882.

PROCEDURE, QUESTIONS OF— Con.

- Prevention of Fraud in Public Contracts—Con.
Speaker decided that only grievances could be placed before the H. and Government on M. for Com. of Supply, and that a M. cannot be made relating to an Order of the Day, 1435.
- Readjustment of the Representation B. (Sir John A. Macdonald). M. for 2° objected to by Mr. Blake, the B. which was prop. for 2° not being the same that was submitted to the H. for 1°, quoting English authorities to sustain his objection. The Premier submitted that the objection taken by the leader of the Opposition could be taken in Com. of W.; but the Speaker sustained the objections and discharged the Order. B. withdn., 1330—1332.
- Stadacona Ins. Co. B. (Mr. Casgrain). Constitutionality of B. questioned (Mr. Vallée) as the legalizing of such a measure would interfere with the Civil Law of Lower Canada. Ruled (Mr. Speaker) that the constitutionality of a B. is not decided by the Chair but by Com. to which B. might be referred 48.
- Steamboat Inspection Act: M. (Mr. McLelan) for Com. of W. to consider Res. Objected to by Mr. Mackenzie, the proposition not having first been submitted to Com. of W. as laid down by the Rules of the H. Mr. Speaker decided that the prop. M. came sufficiently within the meaning of the Rule as generally understood and interpreted by late English practice, 1546.
- Trust and Loan Co. of Canada B. (Mr. Kirkpatrick). Amt. (Mr. Béchard) to M. for 3° objected to by Mr. McCarthy under the 67th Rule of the H., one day's notice not having been given; objection sustained (Mr. Speaker) 1080.
- Windsor and Pictou Branches of the Intercolonial Ry. B. (Sir Charles Tupper). On M. for 2°, Ques. (Mr. Borden) as to B. affecting private rights. Ruled (Mr. Speaker) that the B. having passed the 2° it was recognized as a public B., the H. having power to refer it to any tribunal it likes, but generally to Com. of W., 1544—1549.
- PRODUCTS OF THE FARM, IMPORTATIONS OF: M. for Ret. (Mr. McCarthy) 327.
