Career of a Confidence Man. On the 15th inst., a man, J. L. Davis name, was convicted at the Westmorand County Court for obtaining money under false pretenses. He was a man enlowed with a genius for infusing confidence into people and swindling them, and his range was extensive. His main stay was "advertising agent of the Fall River Line," but he was a contributor to Harpers, and could both write and sketch cleverly. At Parrsboro, he did the man of fashion, but forgot to pay his bills. At Charortetown, he was on intimate terms with the press: he made a handsome contribution to the Press Reception Fund. He also projected a vast hotel scheme, involving the purchase of the Revere House; he got laborers to work, laid in a store of that the attempted sortie of Osman Pache borrowed money and left. At New Glasgow and Picton he was simply advertising with a desperation which has won for head with the desperation which has won for head with the desperation which head with the desperation wh agent of the Gulf steamships. At Harvey, he created much enthusiasm for the Weekly Albert County Citizen, for which people the invested town. They had sufficient paid subscriptions, but were saved the trouble of reading the paper. At Hope-well, he declared he would settle down, rchased the Union House, together with rses, carriages, furniture, etc., took nore subscriptions for the Citizen and left for Hillsboro, leaving Capt. PHIL MULLOY'S WARE AND A DALE POUNDED ON PACE—By George J. Forbes, CHAPTER IV .- Continued. It was three days after Christmas The weather had been unusually cold, by an occasional old fashioned snowstorm. For many miles below the tideway, the estuary was frozen to a dea wide berth. Long rows of bushes planted in Jack Frost's covering, were secure guide to the paths of safety. From two sources only was danger to be apprehended. A man might get lost in a snow-storm and fall into these resources. There were some regrets and lamentations that Phil would not be amongst them at this festive season, and there was some talk of going after the matter of the m and there was some talk of going after him. On consideration, however, this satisfactorily. By two o'clock in the Nobody answers. tunate friend was without means, and would sponge on no man. It was certainly a hard case for those who had counted on and enjoyed his company for years, on every festive occasion, to be thus deprived of their jovial and goodnatured companion. Regrets are vain. Jerry's annual spree, which is always something extra, will scarcely come up to what it used to be.
