Mr. POWER: My hon. friend says "Wait and see." I shall be glad to wait and see if I have the assurance of the government or of the Prime Minister that they have no intention of supporting the contention of the hon. member for Dorchester. May I say that the hon. member, during the late ill fated visit to England of the right hon. Prime Minister and the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) was publicly styled in the newspapers the Acting Solicitor General. Therefore, his statement is almost an official or at least a quasi-official statement. He says that he speaks for the members from the province of Quebec and his statement is published in a newspaper owned or at least directed by an important official of this house, the deputy speaker. I believe it is the duty of the ministers from the province of Quebec and of the Prime Minister to take the committee into their confidence in this matter. This should be done before we vote any further sums, and I ask the Prime Minister to give us this information.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I hasten to take the committee into my confidence. This sum of $20,000 was expended last year and this vote is to make good a deficiency caused by an appropriation made by the Civil Service Commission which was used to to extent of $25,000 for printing, payment for which was past due on April 1, 1930. My hon. friend gives point to the argument I advanced the other day when he gibes at the chairman of committees because of his non-partisan character, knowing that the chairman cannot reply.

Mr. DUFF: He may leave the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: He cannot leave the chair.

Mr. DUFF: Oh, yes he can; he can leave the chair and put somebody in his place.

Mr. BENNETT: Not unless the committee gives him permission. It is hardly in accordance with the usual sportsmanlike qualities of my hon. friend. So far as the large question of the civil service is concerned, from the warning which has been given I feel quite satisfied that there will be considerable discussion of this item when the estimates are before the committee. At the moment we are not submitting any estimates of our own, these amounts being necessary to make good moneys which were expended in the manner which I have indicated.

Mr. POWER: With respect to the sneer of the right hon. the Prime Minister—

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no, the sneer was my hon. friend's.

Mr. POWER:—I have this to say with respect to my sportsmanlike attitude. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), after the Prime Minister had indicated to him what his conduct should be, deliberately went out of his way to indulge in a partisan address to this house. I think the remarks which I addressed to him were of a nature which he himself could understand or at which he himself could not take offence. So far as I know he has made no attempt whatsoever to hide his connection with this newspaper, nor has he—I could quote his paper—made any attempt publicly or privately to hide his feelings with respect to the Civil Service Commission. If he so desires, the chairman of this committee may leave the chair and reply to the remarks of any hon. member. If the chairman thinks that I have cast unreasonable or unjust reflections upon him, he can reply.

I resent the attitude taken by the Prime Minister in this respect. We have been in this house together for a great many years and he should know that I have not on any occasion since he has been here taken advantage of my position unfairly or unjustly to assail any hon. member. For the right hon gentleman to say that this is not a matter which should be brought up during a discussion of the civil service estimates—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. POWER: I am sorry.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend must have heard what I said.

Mr. POWER: On these estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: I said there would be ample opportunity.

An hon. MEMBER: Just like the special session.

Mr. POWER: I accept my right hon. friend's statement, as I must, that these are matters which should not be discussed on these estimates, but we in Quebec understood that this was an urgent matter. It is extremely unlikely that the Civil Service Commission's estimates will come up for several months. During the period which will intervene between now and the end of the session when the Civil Service Commission's estimates usually come up there will be hundreds of friends of the right hon. gentlemen, hundreds of friends of the hon. member for Dorchester, of the Solicitor General and of the Postmaster General seeking positions in the civil service but who will be precluded by the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission. A large number of those are my electors, some of whom up until last September were my devoted friends and on their behalf and in order that the position of the hon. gentlemen opposite may be made known to the public, in order that the people of this country outside of their constituencies as well as within may know something of the value of their statements, I think it is the duty, if the Prime Minister does not wish to do it, of members of the administration from the province of Quebec who are specifically mentioned in this article, to express their views on this matter. There should be no question about it and the people for whom I speak should know where they stand.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. POWER: No; I am prepared to stay here a long time. I think the Prime Minister owes it to the house to make some statement on these estimates. We have no desire to be obnoxious, but when our friends were sitting on this side of the house we did the best we could to accommodate them in every way. My right hon. friend will not deny that we gave him and his supporters whatever information was asked for, and whatever questions were asked were answered by the ministers of the then government. I believe it is a duty, at any rate it is a courtesy, to give whatever information is asked for, and I do not believe the Prime Minister would be lacking in courtesy to hon. members. It is only in conformity with the ordinary amenities of public life that he should answer a question put to him in a courteous manner. I do not ask him to give a general statement as to the policy of the government, although I think I would be entitled to do so; but I ask him, if he will not speak himself, to allow his ministers, the Postmaster General, the Solicitor General, or some of his other ministers to do so. Let someone on that side of the house say in the Commons of Canada what they have been saying throughout the country. The hon. member for Dorchester, who was so bold at a banquet, should be willing to explain his views to the house. Hon. members would, I am sure, be interested; I should be much interested and if on this estimate he will move for the abolition of the Civil Service Commission, I promise him my most cordial support. I will support him to the best of my ability. There are on this side of the house a large number of members who, like him, have had to suffer from the Civil Service Commission in days gone by.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why did you not take action in that regard yourself?

Mr. POWER: If the hon. gentleman will look up Hansard of 1923 he will find that a resolution to that effect was placed on the order paper and debated. If at that time we had had the support of hon. gentlemen opposite who to-day would be quite willing to abolish the commission, this infamous commission, composed of imbeciles, would long ago have been abolished. The question is a live one before the public. If the Prime Minister will not give an answer, the Postmaster General should give one. If he will not do so, the Solicitor General should, and if the Solicitor General will not, his deputy, the hon. member for Dorchester, ought to do this.

Mr. BENNETT: Probably no other member of the committee knows better than the hon. member for Quebec South who has just taken his seat, that even observations that are made with respect to items under consideration in the estimates, should be relevant to the question raised. If there is any information which the hon. gentleman desires, or which any hon. gentleman desires, with respect to this item, I shall regard it as my privilege and duty to furnish it to the extent of my ability, but I share to the full the observations with which the hon. gentleman commenced his remarks. He said that he did not know whether this was the appropriate place to discuss the matter or not. I think, being a member of the legal profession as he is, he will agree that neither is this the appropriate place, nor yet can the observations be said to be relevant because they should be directed to the obtaining of information with respect to an expenditure which has been made, and regarding which we shall have something to say later as to the desirability or not of absolutely restricting expenditures to the estimates except there be cases where governor general's warrants may be issued. So far as that is concerned, anything the hon. gentleman asks shall be at once furnished him. As regards discussing the Civil Service Commission, my hon. friend can do that to his heart's content by placing a resolution on the order paper, and I look in vain to find that he has placed on the order paper a motion to have the Civil Service Commission abolished. On going into supply he has, of course, ample opportunity to move an amendment that the house regrets that the Civil Service Commission continues to exist. All those are avenues that are open to him, but no one knows better than he that this is not the appropriate time for such a discussion, and in the best of good nature let me say to my hon. friend that his efforts to draw his compatriots of Quebec will fail.

Mr. POWER: May I say that many of them will not be pleased to be called my compatriots. As to the appropriateness of the time, I am not disposed to enter into a discussion with the Prime Minister. He knows very well that if his prominent supporters wish to abolish the Civil Service Commission, they are quite competent to put a motion on the order paper. They could also, on the house going into committee of supply, move that the Civil Service Commission be abolished. They could, even at the present moment—and I realize I could do this myself if I so desired—follow the constitutional practice which obtains in England and with which, no doubt, the Prime Minister is familiar, of moving to reduce the estimates by one dollar. That could be done; I am glad the Prime Minister brought that matter up.

Mr. BENNETT: This item does not include salaries.

Mr. POWER: That does not matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it does a great deal.

Mr. POWER: I very rarely differ from the Prime Minister on constitutional matters, but it seems to me, unless I am much mistaken, that a motion could be made to reduce this item by one dollar—to one dollar.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, to one dollar!

Mr. POWER: I am glad the Prime Minister indicated that method of procedure. Now I ask the hon. member for Dorchester to follow it. The Prime Minister has said just what he should do. The hon. member should do it before he returns to Quebec over the holidays, or I am sure he will have to find some explanation to give to the people of Quebec why he did not follow his own leader's advice and move a reduction in these estimates. It is no longer a matter of great interest to me: it is of purely academic interest to me whether the Civil Service Commission continues in existence or not. In the better days when we sat on the opposite side, I was in the habit of saying to my hon. friends that the Civil Service Commission appeared to have been created for the Tories and the Liberal back-benchers. I believe in all probability it is now created for the Tory backbenchers and the Liberals. Nobody else that I know ever seems to suffer. If the backbenchers desire to be rid of this institution, they have only to follow the method and advice laid down by the Prime Minister, and for once we promise them our hearty cooperation.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Chairman, in order to elucidate the point raised by the Prime Minister, I should like to have your ruling on the subject matter that can be discussed. I should like to call your attention first to the fact that this is the only item in these supplementary estimates where the name "Civil Service Commission" is mentioned. In the past it has been the rule of the house that when any general estimates of any department came under discussion, hon. members had the right to discuss anything that pertained to that department. I should like your ruling on the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: While you are considering your ruling, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Prime Minister whether or not his government has reached a decision regarding a reorganization of several departments, and whether it is true that many employees of the civil service will lose their jobs within a short time?

The CHAIRMAN: In answer to the hon. member for Rimouski, I am not here to explain the rules of the house, but if the hon. member wishes to raise a point of order, I will give him my ruling.

Mr. POULIOT: Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that my question was not put politely? I was speaking in my mildest and sweetest tones to the right hon. gentleman. If there was something offensive in what I said, I have not the slightest idea what it was. I should appreciate highly receiving an answer from the right hon. gentleman, even if it means nothing.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think, Mr. Chairman, that you have given a ruling already. The very fact that you have given that answer enables any hon. member to go on with the discussion. I am quite satisfied.

Mr. POULIOT: The satisfactory thing about your ruling, Mr. Chairman, is that no one has to pay the costs, and in that respect it is unlike a legal ruling. May I ask the Prime Minister once more, with all the suavity I possess, if he will be good enough to give me an answer to my question. So many civil servants and their families are very anxious to know what is going to happen with respect to their jobs, especially in these hard times. No answer? If there was something wrong with my question, I would ask the Prime Minister to tell me what it was. I cannot answer myself. Will you, Mr. Chairman, please let me know if there is no answer to my question. I am not deaf but I did not hear any answer.

Mr. GOTT: The question is a joke.

Mr. POULIOT: It is no joke. This is a very serious matter to the civil service. We are here representing the people. We have two members in this house representing the city of Ottawa, and every other hon. member represents the country at large. We are all interested in this question. It is no good for the government to say: We are going to do this and we are going to do that; and then do nothing at all; and when something is done, it is most often wrong. I wish to be nice to the right hon. gentleman, but if he does not intend to answer me, I shall have to drop my sweet tones and speak roughly.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. gentleman—

Mr. POULIOT: I think I know why the hon. gentleman is so cross. It is because a dark horse has won the international Bennett race for the ministry. It is very sad, Mr. Chairman. We are travelling on a mystery ship to treasure island. We know nothing, and nothing is told us. The government asks us to vote these items blindly. According to parliamentary institutions that date back to Magna Charta, the representatives of the people are entitled to know what is the policy of the government. Here we are ready to cooperate with the government in all good measures. We on this side of the house are not narrow-minded; we are broad-minded. I have sat in this house for several years on the opposite side, and when hon. gentlemen opposite were sitting over here, never did I see a Liberal minister refuse to give them any information they desired. Very often indeed Liberal ministers have supplied Conservative members with confidential information, trusting them to keep it confidential. The Liberal ministers treated all members of the house fairly, without any distinction of party. The fiscal year ends to-morrow, Mr. Chairman, and there are many people who are anxious to know what is the policy of the government with respect to the civil service. Is the government going to give its policy to the press before advising members of the house. I would not be surprised at that at all. Am I to receive no answer? I wish to be courteous to the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues and supporters in this house, but I say that in this request for information I am backed up by all the electors of my constituency irrespective of political affiliations. Once more I ask the Prime Minister if he has anything to say regarding his policy with respect to the civil service.

Mr. BOULANGER: I should like to get some information from the Prime Minister in connection with this matter. There are rumours that retrenchments are to be made in the civil service, and that the employees of one department in particular, the Interior department, are to be placed elsewhere. I should like to know if, in considering the retention of employees in the service or their placement elsewhere, the government will give a preference to native-born Canadians. I am in receipt of a resolution from the Native Sons of Canada, asking that such a preference be given. I am sorry that I have not the resolution here; it is in my room, but if the Prime Minister will allow me, I will send him a copy of it. This is an influential society, which is taking a great interest in the affairs of the Dominion, and it recommends that so far as possible native-born Canadians be retained in the service in preference to non-Canadians.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman—Central, please get me a connection with the ministry! The line seems to be busy. I want to speak to the right hon. the Prime Minister. Ah, I see the line which was out of order has now been repaired and that I have the attention of the right hon. gentleman. I would ask him once more, what is the policy of the government regarding civil service employees. This question has frequently been discussed in the press, and I would like to know what is going to happen. If the Civil Service Commission is abolished, will all the present employees be dismissed? Will there be a complete change of staffs in the departments?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: Hon. members laugh; but I am serious. The Prime Minister smiles. I like to see him smile. He is at his best then; it is the natural thing for him to do. Apparently, Mr. Chairman, the line has got out of order again. It is very sad, Mr. Chairman, to have such a disgraceful experience.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: Some hon. gentlemen say, "hear, hear." It shows that they understand. They are not deaf, but they are dumb. Yes, they are dumb. La chatte leur a mangé la langue. The cat has eaten their tongue; they do not speak; they have nothing to say. They think a lot; in fact they think so much they have nothing to say. Yes, they think all the time. My hon. friends opposite remind me of a very clever little boy who went to see his grandfather and spoke to him about candy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. gentleman is wasting the time of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, well, listen. The little boy said: "Il ne parle pas." I would say that of the right hon. the Prime Minister. I wonder if the right hon. gentleman said all he had to say during the last election campaign.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I am reminded of the bright sunshine which follows a long period of rain. The smile of my right hon. friend might be likened to that sunshine. However we on this side of the house are just poking little jokes at him to keep him in good humour. As he is in good humour now I would like to have an answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. POULIOT: No, I am not here to sit down. My right hon. friend knows that as soon as he gets up I will sit down. Until that time, however, I will claim my right and privilege as a member of this house to ask for all available information in the matter. To be dumb is a contagious disease, and I am afraid my hon. friends on the other side of the house are stricken with that complaint, except for purposes of heckling. They make no answer. I would like to know if an answer is to come. Will it come? And from where will it come? The hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) who is in charge of the Civil Service Commission is not in the house and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is piloting the estimates. I know very well that the Prime Minister must be familiar with all the details in connection with those estimates and I would be very thankful if he would tell us something about them. The silence of my hon. friends opposite reminds me of a practice which prevailed at college. When I attended school there was a period called le grand silence which extended from eight o'clock in the evening until six o'clock in the morning, and in that time nobody was allowed to speak. To-day we have a similar situation; no hon. members on the other side of the house will speak. Well, we have some doctors in the house. We have the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) who is a doctor. I wonder why he does not cure the dumbness of the Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman is a doctor and I am told he is a very good one. Then there is the hon. the Minister of Health (Mr. MacLaren) and he is a doctor. Is it not a disease to be dumb? The hon. gentleman does not say a word. Perhaps he is suffering from that contagious disease. I think the right hon. gentleman should delegate his first medical officer in the department to cure the dumbness of all the Tories on the other side of the house. I am pleased to bring to the attention of the Minister of Health the illness of my hon. friends opposite. No answer; we must have Rip Van Winkle before us. La belle au bois dormant.

Mr. HEENAN: May I ask the right hon. the Prime Minister if this $20,000 is to pay the printing account; is it going to the Printing Bureau?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, partially, but not wholly.

Mr. BOULANGER: A few minutes ago I raised a point in all seriousness and I would like to have an expression of opinion by the government.

Mr. POULIOT: The Prime Minister is rising from his seat.

Mr. BENNETT: I hold myself in readiness to answer any question which may be directed to an item under consideration by the committee and to furnish all information available in the departments of this country in regard to items in question. This item does not affect the question of employees; no part of the money is to pay the salaries of employees. The balance that was overexpended was with respect to printing and contingencies. The question of reorganization will be made known in due course, but, as my hon. friend will appreciate, a discussion of that question is not relevant at the present time.

Mr. POULIOT: If this commission is abolished it will print nothing.

Mr. DONNELLY: The right hon. gentleman has said that the expenditure is for printing and contingencies; what are contingencies?

Mr. BENNETT: In every department of public service there are contingent accounts to take care of unenumerated items of the public service. They are unforeseen expenditures and sums of money are voted to each department for that purpose. Sometimes it happens that the unforeseen expenditures exceed those which have been foreseen. With respect to this item however there is no such condition. The truth of the matter is that there were accounts amounting to $22,532.50 which remained unpaid from the preceding year. Economies in the department however have been made to take care of the balance so that only $20,000 is necessary to provide for accounts carried over from the preceding year.

Mr. VENIOT: Are there any details concerning the contingent accounts paid?

Mr. BENNETT: The details are in the report of the Auditor General. The accounts have been passed by the auditors, and paid. When we reach the report of the Auditor General which involves a sum of about half a million dollars I think the house will have to adopt a very definite policy which will be spoken of when that item is reached.

Item agreed to.

Insurance — contingencies — further amount required, $11,500.

Mr. BENNETT: That amount is to pay for the printing of the second volume of the insurance report for the year ending December 31, 1929. The carry-forward from the preceding year involved some items but in this item no provision was made. The cost of printing was $11,500.

Item agreed to.

Justice — contingencies — further amount required, $2,500.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is that for?

Mr. BENNETT: First of all, this sum is to cover the expense in connection with some temporary employees, but printing and stationery constitute the major part of it. I think it may be fair to say to the committee that the greater part of these items refers to just such incidents as that in the transaction of the public business. When we reach the large item of $500,000 I shall attempt to make a clear explanation of the whole matter.

Item agreed to.

Marine—salaries—further amount required for an assistant private secretary, $1,710; contingencies — further amount required, $13,000—Total, $14,710.

Mr. BENNETT: The sum of $13,000 represents an over expenditure beyond the appropriation carried forward from the preceding year; $1,710 is to take care of the payment of an assistant secretary for a period of six months, until March 31, 1931. The payment for the current year will appear in the estimates.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does this newly appointed official come under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. BENNETT: All secretaries, private secretaries and assistant secretaries do not come under the provisions of the act. That is one of the difficulties we have had on our hands during the last few months.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Has any portion of this $13,000 been used for travelling expenses of civil service employees and ministers? The contingencies usually include the travelling expenses of civil employees.

Mr. BENNETT: The knowledge which the hon. member has through his experience in the Department of National Defence enables him to speak with much authority about a matter of this kind, but that entire amount of $13,000 represents an over expenditure, representing a carry over from the preceding year which diminished the estimates for the current year by that sum, and this amount of $13,000 represents exactly the amount which had to be paid out of the current estimates because of the carry over from the preceding year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask the Prime Minister if the salary of the assistant secretary is to be $3,400 a year? It is $1,700 for six months.

Mr. BENNETT: It is $3,420 per year for an assistant private secretary, Mr. Laflamme.

Item agreed to.

Department of National Defence—contingencies—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT: That represents an over expenditure in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask in connection with this item—

The CHAIRMAN: The item has been carried.

Item agreed to.

Administration of Justice—Supreme Court of Canada—law books and books of reference for library, and binding of same—further amount required, $2,550.

Mr. BENNETT: That item merely represents the over expenditure to enable the fiscal year to be commenced without a deficit.

Item agreed to.

The Senate—salaries and contingencies—further amount required, $7,296.39.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. COOTE: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Macleod desires an explanation. This item with reference to the Senate represents expenditures in connection with the special session. With respect to the House of Commons the corresponding item represents in part the expenditures incidental to the special session also the expenditures for the payment of sessional clerks and for certain numbers which were carried over, about which there will be ample opportunity for discussion when the Auditor General's report is under consideration by the public accounts committee.

Item agreed to.

Legislation—House of Commons—expenses of committees, clerical assistance, etc.—further amount required, $6,000; contingencies—further amount required, $18,500; estimates of Sergeant-at-Arms—further amount required, $23,000—Total, $47,500.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question I should like to ask my right hon. friend does not relate so much to the item under consideration as to a matter of procedure, which, however, I feel might best be mentioned at this stage. Up to the present, in reference to the explanation of estimates which affect several departments of the government, we have only heard from the right hon. Prime Minister. I am not sure whether my right hon. friend is taking control of the estimates in his capacity of Prime Minister or in his capacity of Minister of Finance, but I wish he would tell us whether the other ministers who are in charge of the different departments are to be allowed to explain their own estimates or whether we are to look only to him for explanations of the items that appear in the estimates which have been presented to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: It has been the practice generally for the Minister of Finance to deal with supplementary estimates because the items have not been numerous, and, as the Minister of Finance is in control of the supply bill when it is ultimately submitted to the house I thought it desirable, and have prepared myself, to deal with them as has been done on previous occasions. There are not many items, and I thought I could furnish any explanations that might be required with respect to them in my capacity of Minister of Finance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Do I understand my right hon. friend desires by his remarks to have it inferred that the ministers who are responsible heads of the different departments are not to be expected to answer questions put to them in regard to matters affecting their departments, where these matters arise out of the estimates which are before us?

Mr. BENNETT: It has not been the custom heretofore, and I have followed that custom.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot agree with that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; that was the procedure followed last year when the supplementary estimates for the preceding year were submitted. These do not involve future expenditures. These are expenditures that already have been made, and I might further say to my right hon. friend that these were largely made before we came into power. The duty is cast upon me, and I think he will agree in a moment as to the soundness of the position I take, of endeavouring to ensure that every minister in his department faces the new year on April 1 without carrying forward a balance which he must pay from this year's appropriation, thereby making his appropriation deficient for the present year. I am endeavouring to do that; I believe it is sound business, and if I might anticipate what I am going to say in a moment, the Auditor General points out that that should be done. I brought with me the volume of the Auditor General's report containing that recommendation. In his report for the year ending March 31, 1930, at page 9, the Auditor General points out what the difficulty has been from year to year. In the year 1928-29 the carry over was $1,572,000, and last year it was $505,000, so there was $1,000,000 appropriated for the current year that had to go for the purpose of paying the accounts of the past year. As these estimates are of that character I assumed that the usual practice of the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the passage of the supply bill, of making explanations, would be the proper one to follow, and I was going to make a little more lengthy explanation in connection with this matter and ask the committee to agree with me that there should be no over expenditure in the different departments. Certainly the right does not exist in any department to over expend money through the officials when there has been no appropriation by parliament. I should think that principle has been clearly laid down, although it has been departed from in some instances without the ministers knowing about it. The time has come when some very drastic action will have to be taken to prevent a recurrence of that condition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I entirely agree with what my hon. friend says about over expenditures on the part of the officials; I think he is right in trying to put an end to that. However, I do not agree with him as to it being the practice for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance to handle all the supplementary estimates. Parliament generally has been accorded the fullest information in respect to all relevant questions which have been asked, and I submit that full information can only be obtained from the ministers at the head of the different departments concerned, with the aid possibly of their deputies.

Mr. BOULANGER: May I get some information in relation to the item of $23,000 for the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. BENNETT: That means the department of the Sergeant at Arms and all that is involved in it up to March 31, and as it involves a large number of items in connection with what might be called the internal economy of the house at the special session and otherwise, details of which are in the Auditor General's report for the current year, I am only asking the house, now that they have been paid, to legalize the payment of them.

Mr. DONNELLY: Does that mean expenses for the special session and up to the 31st of March this year, and this session as well?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: Up to March 31, 1931, being the end of the fiscal year. These supplementary estimates cover expenditures already made, some of them possibly in 1929. They will also cover all expenditures that have been necessarily made up to the end of this year, which is to-morrow.

Mr. DONNELLY: Are there any of these expenditures which go back to 1929? Can the Prime Minister give us any information?

Mr. BENNETT: There is one item that went back to 1929, not in connection with the Sergeant at Arms. Because of the carry forward from 1929 to 1930, there was not enough to take care of the whole of it and a balance was left to 1931.

Mr. DONNELLY: The sum of $500,000 has been expended by the Department of Agriculture since the first of September last. Is not the Minister of Agriculture going to explain how that amount was expended and why? Is he not going to be allowed to say anything about it or give information of any kind?

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure my hon. friend will use different words. He says the minister is not "allowed" to explain. There is no such word as that in this house. The fullest possible opportunity will be given hon. members to ask any questions, and the answers will be forthcoming.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the details of these accounts appear in the report of the Auditor General next year?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—fruit—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is this for? Was the department short to this extent on the original estimate of a year ago?

Mr. BENNETT: The $20,000 was largely owing to the demand made in Nova Scotia and British Columbia in connection with the fruit crop, which was exceptionally heavy. The vote was not sufficient to carry the account, together with the sum that had to be taken from the main estimates by reason of other expenditures carried forward from last year. This is for fruit inspection in Nova Scotia and British Columbia, for reasonable additional work.

Mr. DONNELLY: How much was carried forward from the previous year?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the figure.

Item agreed to.

Live stock — further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The shortage in this case arose because the department undertook additional work in the sheep and swine divisions and assisted in the club work and sow purchase policy of the administration. Then there were increases in the exhibition grants which could not have been foreseen and are not fixed by rule, and an increase in the record of performance policy in cattle and poultry, which hon. members will understand was the policy of the administration when the former minister left the department. There are similar increases in other directions. I can get the details of all these expenditures if it is desired.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) if he would do so—because he is in a much better position, probably, than the Prime Minister to give the information—to tell us just how much of this $100,000 was spent under the swine, sheep and cattle policy. He might also give us the information which has been asked for quite frequently at this session as to just what is the policy regarding live stock.

Mr. BENNETT: We can leave the item and the details will be given to the committee. The item can stand for the moment.

Item stands.

Health of animals—administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act—further amount required, $300,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the committee desires the details of this item. This is largely in connection with the compensation that has to be paid because a larger number of animals reacted than provision had been made for in the estimates. There is a considerable amount of additional money required for the purpose. We may let the item stand and I will see that details are furnished.

Item stands.

Administration of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This is an item with which the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is familiar. It represents the increased activities of the inspectors under the Destructive Insect and Pest Act. The greater portion of the expenditure, if not the whole of it, was, I think, incurred before this government came into power. It was necessary because of the prevalence of larger numbers of insects and pests in some parts of the country, and additional help had to be employed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is a very important item, and I think the committee would like to have a detailed explanation as to how the entomological staff is getting on in the rounding-up of cut-worms which were destructive on the prairies last summer.

Mr. BENNETT: I had not anticipated that the practice which has heretofore obtained would be departed from. This is not the time, in my judgment, at which to discuss the general question of destruction caused by pests and insects. This is money that was expended under the policy of the former administration. I could give the hon gentleman the details, but they are involved in the details of the whole departmental enpenditure. There is no segregation of this $20,000, which is an over-expenditure beyond the appropriation made. The main estimates called for $625,000 and the expenditure was $645,000.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In view of the fact that spring operations are beginning on the farms to-day, I would ask the Prime Minister to let all these items under agriculture stand until the Minister of Agriculture is in his place to carry the estimates through, in order that we might get some information from him. Most of us from western Canada are going home on Wednesday, and we should like to know from the Minister of Agriculture whether he really has an agricultural policy or whether he contemplates doing anything for the farmers. We should get that information from him. It is only fair and proper, even if these items are to cover money already expended, that the committee should be given information such as I am asking for. The house and the country are entitled to it. I should like to be able to tell the people whom I represent, and who are practically all farmers, that the government has some policy which will be of benefit to them.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the members of this committee will agree that it has never been suggested before that the policy of the government should be declared on the voting of supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year. These debts have been incurred largely by appropriations made by the hon gentleman's own administration, and I should think in fairness to those who have to be responsible for their payment that the payment should be legalized without any delay. With the exception of one item, that is all that is involved in these supplementary estimates.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The present session opened rather late and we are already in the midst of our spring operations. Unless I am very much mistaken, during the last ten years hon. members have had the right to discuss the general policy adopted by any department at the time their estimates were being considered, no matter whether it was an item which had been spent or otherwise. I do not desire to embarrass the Prime Minister, but in view of the lateness of the opening of the session and the disappointment of the farmers at receiving nothing of a definite character, after having been prepared for a pronouncement by the Prime Minister at the Regina meeting, a statement of policy should be made by the government. I am making this suggestion in fairness to the people whom I represent and who are very vitally interested in the agricultural policy of this government. I do not claim that governments can do everything for the farmer or for the unemployed, but at the same time these people are expecting something. If we have nothing to give them, let them know it so that they can act accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, stands.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Inasmuch as my right hon. friend has said two or three times that the practice now being followed is what it has been heretofore, and in view of the fact that for some time I occupied the position which he now occupies, I may respectfully remind the committee that when estimates were brought down, whether they were supplementary or other estimates, not only were the ministers expected to be present and to give the desired information, but their deputies were expected to be present in the gallery and to come on to the floor of the house as might be necessary in order to give any information which the committee might wish to have. My hon. friend both in the special session and at this session, has been treated very generously and leniently by the opposition with respect to all matters he has wished to advance, and I think he owes it to the committee to see that a liberal interpretation is given to the obligation of the government and of its ministers to reply to any questions asked with regard to items appearing in the supplementary estimates. When the house began its sittings this afternoon the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) was in his seat, but after the first item respecting agriculture came under discussion in committee he left. I submit that the committee is entitled to more in the way of respect from the hon. ministers. Questions should not be left unanswered and hon. ministers should not deliberately absent themselves from the committee when matters pertaining to their departments are under discussion. If my hon. friend will allow his ministers to give us such information as they are able to, we will make allowance for limitations that may be all too evident.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the last observation is hardly worthy of the right hon. gentleman or of any hon. gentleman who leads the opposition in this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have received no answers to our questions.

Mr. BENNETT: At my request the Minister of Agriculture left the committee to obtain particulars which he thought he had with him. He did not deliberatly absent himself from the committee. It has been and is the practice of parliament when estimates are being voted for the future to allow the fullest possible discussion with respect to policies and everything else connected therewith, but when we are endeavouring only to legalize expenditures which, according to the Auditor General's report were very deliberate, I think another set of considerations prevail. This committee, being anxious to retain some semblance of integrity with respect to its dealings, is now legalizing the unwarranted acts of those who made certain expenditures because they say they were instructed to do so. In my judgment, that is a wrong conception of their public duties by the permanent officials of this country. I am seeking to do only what I think any minister in my place would endeavour to do as Minister of Finance charged with the responsibility of a supply bill—to deal with these items without any undue delay. The sum total of these items is not large, except the one item of $2,000,000 for the Welland ship canal. This item permitted the contractors to continue work in a very open season, but they did so on the understanding that they would not be paid until parliament had voted the money. The amount of $505,510.46 is to cover items which, according to the Auditor General's report for 1930, were illegally and improperly expended.

So far as the inquiries with respect to the item under discussion are concerned, I asked the Minister of Agriculture to obtain from his department the list of expenditures as it has been found impossible to segregate these items from the whole. The original estimate of $25,000 was expanded into $645,000, and the extra expenditure is now being compensated for by this item: it is to take care of the overdraft.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend inferred that these estimates were different from other supplementary estimates in that they were to meet payments for alleged unwarranted acts. I ask my right hon. friend whether he wished to imply by that remark that these estimates are different in any material essential from the supplementary estimates usually brought down at the beginning of each session.

Mr. BENNETT: I will admit that during the last few years they do not differentiate, but now that the right hon. gentleman has raised this question I might as well answer it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to discuss this matter when the item of $505,510.46 was under discussion.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Have the chairman call the item.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is that amount for unprovided items?

Mr. BENNETT: Item No. 64.

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I suggest that the chairman call the item in question; it would be more regular.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be much more regular, but inasmuch as the right hon. the leader of the opposition has raised this question I am ready to answer it. If it is the will of the committee that we take up item No. 64 I shall be very glad to do so, but we have an item under discussion at the moment and I suggest that it should be disposed of first.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. DONNELLY: The question asked by the hon. leader of the opposition is right and proper. We are discussing a vote for the administration of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, and we desire to know what progress has been made in destroying the cutworm. We want to know what progress they have made in overcoming the cutworm, because it has done a great deal of damage in western Canada and has destroyed a number of crops. What progress has been made in fighting that insect? It is right and proper that they should tell the committee what has been done.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the committee going to discuss the present item or have it stand?

Mr. BENNETT: Stand.

Item stands.

Unprovided items, 1929-30. To cover unprovided items, 1929-30, as per Auditor General's report, vol. 1, page 5, 1929-30, $505,510.46.

Mr. BENNETT: Resuming my observations with respect to this item, the Auditor General at page VII of his report for 1929-30 says:

> The unexpended portions of grants for the fiscal year amounted to $73,609,335.23, an increase of $15,353,248.78 over the amount unexpended in 1928-29. The amount by which grants were exceeded was $505,510.46, for which a special parliamentary appropriation will be necessary.
> The following comparative statement shows, under services, the amounts by which grants were exceeded in each of the last three fiscal years.

Then follows the page from his report on the items:

Service	1929-30	1928-29	1927-28
Administration of justice	.....	.....	$ 31 47
Agriculture	$ 6,055 87	.....	.....
Charges of management	21,289 95	$37,799 29	787 95

Then follow, one after the other, down to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police:

Royal Canadian Mounted Police	.....	.....	$8,141 86

Then he goes on to say:

> From the figures given in the above statement it will be seen that, after allowing for the unusual over-expenditure of $1,048,482.21 on account of Pensions in 1928-29, the amount of the over-expenditures of appropriations in 1929-30 exceeded that of the preceding year by approximately $20,000. As pointed out on page V of my report for last year, the responsibility for these over-expenditures rests entirely with the departments administering the appropriations exceeded and especially with the accountants of the departments whose duties in such cases are clearly defined in an executive regulation approved by the Governor in Council on July 7, 1892. The over-expending of appropriations has the effect of lessening parliamentary control over expenditures and, although in very exceptional cases it may have to be permitted, the practice is to be deprecated and means should be taken to prevent it.

No explanations with regard to appropriations not fully expended were furnished by two of the departments. As the amounts voted were based on estimates submitted by the various departments, I consider that the House of Commons is as much entitled to explanations of under-expenditures as of over-expenditures.

Then he goes on to discuss other matters. Each minister, upon asking his department, as the ministers have to do, as to what had to be provided in the way of money in the supplementary estimates to make good expenditures that had been made prior to the 31st March, 1931, was furnished with the details that I have submitted to the house. This item of $505,510.46 is one of them. I know not how long the practice may have continued antecedent to 1927-28, but it is apparent that during those three years it grew from a practice amounting to about $109,000 to one amounting to $1,572,000. The responsibility is, as the Auditor General says, with the accountants of the departments, and if parliamentary control of appropriations is to be maintained except under very exceptional conditions that may sometimes prevail, it follows that discipline must be applied, or the whole system will be wrecked for if accountants and deputy ministers under the control of ministers may make, beyond parliamentary appropriations, expenditures amounting to $1,000,000, they can do it to the amount of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000. All we are doing is to endeavour to start on the first of April with a clean sheet, and every appropriation that the committee is being asked to make to-day is to legalize what has been done and to pay back debts that have been incurred by the departments.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In speaking a moment ago, I agreed with my right hon. friend as to the desirability of having the closest kind of control exercised in order to prevent government officials from sanctioning over-expenditures. What I should like to point out to him is that with respect to the expenditures we are now discussing he has had that control for eight months; the previous government had it for four months. If there is a very large excess of expenditure, my right hon. friend and his ministers are the ones who are primarily responsible for it; they have had the control at the time when its exercise was required. Moreover, I am quite sure, although I have not had an opportunity to secure the estimates, that if we look back for many years in the past, we shall find that the item which is now before the committee is one that has appeared regularly in the supplementary estimates. It does not arise solely from over-payments in the current fiscal year. As my right hon. friend said a moment ago, there are many things which are unforeseen, items that even deputy ministers and ministers have not foreseen and the Auditor General has not foreseen. In a business involving the expenditure of between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 annually, it would be extraordinary if there were not items here and there running into a few thousand dollars that might escape notice in that way. This item is inserted to make good those unforeseen amounts. It need not imply any real neglect on the part of anyone unless it is carried to too great an extreme.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend will find as he continues his administration, that with a great many contracts unfinished, it is very difficult to end a year with a complete payment of accounts covering that particular year. Provision is made for a short period in which to cover those accounts. I am quite well aware of the practice spoken of by my right hon. friend, but may I point out to him that the Auditor General is the individual who is in charge and who has control and can control.

Mr. BENNETT: I know. But the trouble is the money is spent before he gets a chance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That may be; but my right hon. friend will agree with me that the Auditor General has the authority to prevent payment. What happens is that very frequently contracts run from one year to another, and it is difficult to say what the exact amount really is at the end of the fiscal year. The appropriation really ceases at the end of the fiscal year. It is most difficult to have a complete and exact accounting closing out accounts and contracts for the fiscal year ending on the 31st of March.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have been able to secure a copy of the supplementary estimates presented to parliament for the session 1922-23 and which contain the item to cover unprovided items for 1921-22. This would correspond with the session we are now holding. The Liberal administration had come into office and had been in office for, I believe, three months when these excess estimates were presented. The present administration will very soon have been in office for about eight months. The item before us is to make good unprovided expenditures amounting to $505,-510.46. In the supplementary estimates of 1922-23, the item there recorded for unprovided items for 1921-22 which relates to expenditure under the previous Conservative administration is $2,055,030.86. My right hon. friend will see from this to what extent the Liberal administration has exercised care and caution in supervising expenditures in the departments as compared with his friends when they were in office.

Mr. BENNETT: Would my right hon. friend kindly let me have the estimate?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will read the item to the house:

Unprovided items, 1921-22—434 to cover unprovided items, 1921-22, as per Auditor General's report, part b, page, 3, 1921-22, $2,055,030.86.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose my right hon. friend remembers the circumstances in connection with that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are always special reasons.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no special reasons about this one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The same reasons.

Mr. BENNETT: No. My right hon. friend will remember the extraordinary demands made on the treasury in connection with unemployment relief in 1920-21. The supplementary estimates for 1922-23, from which he has quoted, are for the fiscal year ending on the 31st day of March, 1923. They are supplementary estimates for future expenditures, and what my right hon. friend read there was just one block item, instead of giving the details as I have done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am reading precisely the same item that my right hon. friend has here. His item reads:

To cover unprovided items, 1929-30, as per Auditor General's report, vol. I, page 5, 1929-30.

It is an item to cover unprovided items for the previous period.

Mr. BENNETT: The estimates that were submitted for the year ending March 31, 1923, were estimates for that period, not for the period ending March 31, 1922. But I am dealing with items that have been expended, and I have given the details of them. I am doing that, instead of allowing them to run into next year, and putting an item in to cover them. The Auditor General has put in an item of $505,510.46, which compares with the item which my right hon. friend has mentioned. What has not been realized, apparently, is that we are now endeavouring to start the year clear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So were we.

Mr. BENNETT: No, because the next year you did the same thing. What I am trying to do is to avoid this step next year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That has happened every year since there has been an accounting.

Mr. BENNETT: No. There may be a small sum. My right hon. friend says that it was $2,055,000 odd for the year 1921-22. It was $1,500,000 in 1928-29.

The Auditor General directs attention to what must be painfully apparent to everyone. It means that you substitute the minister and an accountant for parliament, because the money has gone and there was no appropriation for it. Instead of doing what I might have done, namely, let this be treated as a supplementary estimate next year, or in the supplementary estimates this year by putting in an item "to cover amount unprovided for", I am giving the details of each department where the overdraft was, so there might be upon the record an indication of what these overdrafts were, and then we would start fair and square with the world. That is what has been done. The question as to policy cannot enter it because I could abandon all these items and treat them simply as one item, as was done in the main estimates. But I am going to endeavour at least—one may fail in the endeavour; an ex-minister says that we will fail, but I do not thing that we will—to see that hereafter there will be no over-expenditures by accountants and deputy ministers in departments, with the aid of a minister, about which the minister may know nothing—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Except under governor general's warrant.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, but that is another thing altogether. Then those over expenditures are legalized in the estimates that come before the house. Once more I desire to make it clear to the committee, although it may be that my conception of my obligations as Minister of Finance is not such that I shall be able to realize it—the hon. member for West Edmonton says that is so—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BENNETT: But this is so. We are asking the committee this afternoon to pass these estimates of money that has been expended so that this house may hold this administration responsible for what happens from the 1st day of April next, after which we cannot say that any part of the expenditures were incurred by the former administration. I think an effort should be made to make it possible for each department to live within its appropriation. If not, some men will lose their positions. That is all I have to say.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Would the minister be kind enough to elucidate one point. He says that these expenditures have been incurred by different departments, but that no payments have been made. The expenditures were authorized but no payments were made.

Mr. BENNETT: In many instances the payments have been made in full.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Speaking from experience, I would say that some of the statements that have been made by my right hon. friend are not exactly—I do not like to use the word, correct—but I remember when I was deputy minister, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) whom I had the honour of having as my minister at one time will bear me out in this—never was any over-expenditure of that kind authorized. The expenditure may have been incurred, but no payments were made before the appropriation was voted. I think that applies in this case also, unless there were extraordinary payments that I am not aware of.

Another thing: In every department, before the accountant or even the deputy minister can authorize any over-payment of that kind, the Auditor General must sanction that over-payment.

Mr. BENNETT: He says not.

Sir EUGENE FISET: He is making a mistake, because in my experience as deputy minister never has an accountant paid out a check without getting the authority of the Auditor General. That is provided by law.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my right hon. friend must be under a misapprehension because there are cases where an appropriation is exhausted, and then either the account must stand until the money is voted or—

Mr. BENNETT: That is what they do not do.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where do they get the money?

Mr. BENNETT: With an overdraft.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I never was able to get it except by a governor general's warrant. My right hon. friend will find that the accounting situation is not quite so loose as he would depict it.

Mr. BENNETT: I would just answer my hon. friend by saying that his own department owed the printing bureau a large sum of money, which we had to pay, thereby reducing by that amount the grant that was available for the purpose indicated. The printing bureau rendered their accounts promptly, and there was no reason why these accounts should not have been paid; but by not paying them you got past the passing of the estimate, and showed just that much less money to vote. If you wish to go on in that way, that is all that it is necessary to do. But the liability has to be met another year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not questioning that at all.

Mr. BENNETT: Let me give the figures. There was over three-quarters of a million dollars owing to the printing department by different departments. Part of that was in consequence of the election, the same as the census vote, which is a large item, but matters of that kind can be dealt with and should be dealt with. My hon. friend says that the Auditor General passes upon the account. All I can say is that he says not.

Sir EUGENE FISET: He is a new man; he has been imposed upon.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not see how the Auditor General necessarily sees the accounts before they are paid. He does not know the sum total. All he passes on is the accuracy of the account.

Sir EUGENE FISET: In my department there was pre-audit, a continuous audit, and a post-audit.

Mr. BENNETT: This is not sufficient to enable him to say whether the appropriation is exhausted. He says in his report:

> As pointed out on page V of my report for last year, the responsibility for these over-expenditures rests entirely with the departments administering the appropriations exceeded and especially with the accountants of the departments, whose duties in such cases are clearly defined.

And then the order in council is given. Since I have been in the Department of Finance I have observed that to be the case and to the best of my ability I have endeavoured and purpose to continue to provide that there will be no over expenditures next year beyond the appropriations.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will the right hon. gentleman allow me to make one more remark? During the war and even while demobilization appropriations were being made my hon. friend will remember that under the War Appropriation Act the audit was changed to the extent of allowing the Auditor General to take charge of audits of the expenditures made by the Department of Militia and Defence. I am more familiar with those expenditures than with the expenditures of the department about which my right hon. friend is talking at the present time. I know however that there is a provision in the audit act that every accountant before incurring any expenditure not voted by parliament absolutely must consult the Auditor General.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Are we to understand that these supplementary estimates are being asked to cover a deficit for which this government is not responsible? Have new policies for which this government is not responsible brought about some of these expenditures? Take for instance the subject of agriculture.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not use the word deficit generally as perhaps the hon. member will follow. I used the word deficit in respect to appropriations in every instance, and the details are given with much greater fullness than has usually been the case. Instead of putting in the supplementary estimates for the whole account under one item we pursued the other course and gave to the committee details of every department as to contemplated expenditures. Some of the expenditures represent a continuation of policies and some of them represent sums already expended. I give the following illustration. We will suppose that the grant is $600 and the expenditure is $700 but exactly the same policy has been followed at which involved the spending of only $600. Extraordinary circumstances however involved the necessity of increasing the expenditure to $700 and we have asked for a supplementary estimate because the money has been paid. I will say to my hon. friend the ex-Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence that in many instances the money has not been paid. In the major number of instances however it has been paid. Despite what the hon. member thinks should have been the practice, and with him I agree, the Auditor General has said it is not the practice and as he is charged with the responsibility I am bound to accept his interpretation and I think my hon. friend will agree there has been no mistake made in the matter so far as I am concerned.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was merely asking for information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. the Prime Minister has given to the house as an explanation of the $2,055,000 unprovided item in the accounts of 1921-1922 the fact that the amount was due to special grants for the unemployed.

Mr. BENNETT: The years 1922 and 1923.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, 1921-22. I quote—

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the right hon. gentleman said 1922 and 1923.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. My right hon. friend had the book before him, and it shows an unprovided item for 1921-22. The sum mentioned is to cover unprovided items for the years 1921-22 as per the Auditor General's report part b, page 3. I have that part of the report in my hand and I will read from it in order to explain how the unprovided items arose. The grant for agriculture was exceeded by $12.72. The charges of management grant was exceeded by $3,088.31; civil government salaries, by $5,416.95; civil government contingencies by $507.22; customs and inland revenue by $167,705.67 and demobilization by $976,322.89.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the item to which I referred.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, demobilization. But that does not account for a million dollars; the amount to which my right hon. friend referred was over $2,000,000. Then, in connection with militia and defence the grant was exceeded by $2,999.14. The grant for penitentiaries was exceeded by $161,738.24; that for pensions by $298,428.06; for post office, outside service $417,935.29; for public works, income, $20,510.36; for the collection of revenue, $350.84; for trade and commerce, $15.17; making a total of $2,055,030.86. If we deduct the amount my right hon. friend had in mind, that for demobilization amounting to $976,322.89, there is still left over $1,055,000 of grant exceeded which appeared as unprovided items for the years 1921-22. That was a period during which hon. gentlemen opposite had been in office for nine months and the Liberal administration in office for three months. The item we have this year arises when a Liberal administration has been in office for four months and hon. gentlemen opposite have had control for eight months. It is not the figure of $2,055,000 but the figure of $505,000. I would ask the house and the country to draw their own conclusion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not wish to leave my hon. friend under a misapprehension that I have made the statement that there was absolute control. I agree that perhaps more control is desirable. In departments there is such a thing as switching votes, and that practice should I think be prohibited. It should not be practised to any considerable degree. I do wish to say to him however that never in my nine years experience have I known the department to pay by cheque out of an appropriation that was exhausted. That is what would have to happen before a supplementary would be required. May I say to my right hon. friend that that cannot be done. Either money would have to be provided by warrant or the practice would have to be adopted to which my right hon. friend has taken exception, the practice of allowing it to run over into the next year and paying it out of the appropriation for the following year. I will admit that has been practised but not to any great extent. I think however that is a practice which might very well be stopped at once and permanently.

Mr. BENNETT: All I can say is that the Auditor General has used this expression:

"the over expending of appropriations." . . .

and it can mean only one thing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not question that.

Mr. BENNETT:

—has the effect of lessening parliamentary control over expenditures and although in very exceptional cases it may have to be permitted, the practice is to be deprecated and means should be taken to prevent it.

That is the statement made by the Auditor General.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He does not refer to payments?

Mr. BENNETT: In some cases payments have actually been made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the point to which we take exception.

Mr. BENNETT: I believe we are not so much at variance. I see the point taken by my hon. friend. The Department of the Interior owes the printing department several hundred thousand dollars. Instead of paying that amount between the end of March and the first of May, thereby incurring an extension of the estimates to that extent, payment was not made. As soon as the estimates are voted however payment is made. That decreases the amount of money available for the estimates.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That undoubtedly is what happens all along the line.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. members will find amounts passed by this house against which I protested to the extent of three-quarters of a million dollars. In tracing the matter I have found that practice has been followed right through the piece. The Secretary of State approaches various departments and and asks for money to which they reply that they have no money, the money having been used for some other purpose, namely to pay deficits of the year before. If that is what the hon. gentleman means then we are one.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no doubt that is what has happened. I do not question that, but what I do question is the statement of my hon. friend. Those moneys we are now voting could not be paid unless my hon. friend had warrants for them, and all the warrants that have been passed are here.

Mr. BENNETT: They have nothing to do with these things.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The amounts for which you are now asking the consent of parliament will have to be paid after the appropriations are made.

Mr. BENNETT: My information is that they have been paid, and the Auditor General says so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They could not have been paid unless the Auditor General allowed them to switch accounts. There is no other way in which it could be done.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture — publications — further amount required, $3,000.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I ask the Prime Minister just what publications are referred to here?

Mr. BENNETT: Publications of the Department of Agriculture, brochures with respect to weeds, seeds, livestock and so on for which the appropriation last year was $28,000. They required $31,000, a considerable part of which was incurred by reason of the fact that a new office was being occupied, and the movement of the publications entailed considerable expense.

Item agreed to.

Pensions—salaries and contingent expenses of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada—further amount required, $40,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This represents a sum for which parliament made no appropriation last session, and which was expended for the purpose of setting up the tribunals under the statute passed last year. There is one chief counsel at $4,000 per annum; seven assistant counsels at $3,600 per annum; one junior solicitor at $2,640; two clerks, grade four, at $1,680 each, and a medical staff consisting of one assistant medical adviser at $4,020; four pensions medical examiners at $3,040; one stenographer, grade two and four additional stenographers, making a total of $59,420. Then there are travelling expenses and the subsistence for six months amounting to $12,600. The total of the items I gave is $59,420, and $40,000 further is required to take care of the service.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think this amount is put in the estimates under a misnomer. It is said to cover salaries and contingent expenses of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada, but the Prime Minister in his explanation tells us that the money is required for the establishment of the tribunals, which is an entirely different thing.

Mr. BENNETT: The Board of Pension Commissioners is the designation under which this is all classed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: No, the Board of Pension Commissioners is the standing board, and this amount is required for the tribunals. I think it is a mistake.

Mr. POWER: I think that item should be divided; that portion which has to do with commission counsel might apply to the Board of Pension Commissioners, while the remainder should be credited to the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is quite correct as to the item covering two services, the commission service and the medical staff. The medical staff which I gave is under George V, chapter 35, section 1051, and the other is under sections 1, 2 and 3 of the same statute, with respect to commission counsel. The one amounts to $23,820 and the other to $35,600.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Perhaps by adding the words "and staff" it might be sufficient.

Mr. BENNETT: It has been all treated in the Auditor General's accounts up to the moment as part of the Board of Pension Commissioners. The setting up of the new tribunals has been carried for the moment in that classification, but the appropriations will be separate in the main estimate which provides for that work. This, I understand, is sufficient to take care of the deficit.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the right hon. gentleman give us the names of the solicitors who have been appointed, together with the salary in each case?

Mr. BENNETT: I have given the salaries. I have not the names at the moment. These items will all be revoted in the main estimates.

Item agreed to.

Railways and Canals—Welland ship canal; construction and betterments—further amount required, $2,000,000.

Mr. VENIOT: The Prime Minister gave a short explanation in connection with this matter some time ago. Would he mind repeating that explanation now?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I should be very glad to do so. The construction of the Welland ship canal, as the committee well knows, is being done under contract. It is usual, weather conditions being as they are, that the work stops at a certain season of the year and is resumed in the spring. Having regard to unemployment conditions, the minister authorized the contractors, who employ several thousand men, to continue their work, it being well understood that this did not increase the cost to the country. They continued their work and gave employment during the winter, but they were informed they would not be paid until parliament made new provision accordingly, and this item is to enable that to be done.

Mr. VENIOT: Then this is at least $2,000,000 for which the old government is not responsible.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; I did not suggest that at all.

Mr. POWER: I am not quite sure that I understood the explanation of the Prime Minister. Am I to understand that the contractors were paid an extra amount to have them carry on the work later in the season?

Mr. BENNETT: No agreement was made to pay them extras, but they were asked to continue the service in view of the fact that a large number of men were unemployed. They have not been paid. This is a case in which they have not been paid, and they were told they could not be paid until provision was made for that purpose.

Mr. POWER: But I understand certain sums of money were voted last year for the Welland canal. Tenders must have been called for and contracts let. Am I to gather from what the Prime Minister has said that these contracts were extended to cover more work, larger quantities of work, or that the units of work were extended?

Mr. BENNETT: The total estimate last year was $7,600,000 and it was anticipated that between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 would be spent. As a matter of fact more than that was spent, and this $2,000,000 is to take care of that sum, which will be available after March 31. That is, they merely had a contract and went ahead with it. There was no money in the estimates to take care of this expenditure.

Mr. POWER: It was really an additional contract which was given, then?

Mr. BENNETT: No, just the same contract.

Mr. POWER: The same contract, but more work was performed than was anticipated at the time the contract was let.

Mr. MANION: The engineers of the Department of Railways and Canals had estimated that the contractors, who have a contract to continue the work to completion, would spend in the neighbourhood of seven million dollars last year. But the weather was so fine, the fall was so open that the contractors had finished that portion of the work for which the seven million dollars was appropriated and would then be obliged to lay off their men. It was in September some time, and the question was whether we should tell them to go on and wait for the passing of this estimate by the house, or allow them to lay off two thousand men.

Mr. POWER: The unit prices were the same?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: Just what period was covered by the work represented by this extra two million dollars?

Mr. MANION: We figured it would take two million dollars up to March 31, and when this estimate is passed the contractors will get their money.

Mr. DONNELLY: How much more money will be devoted to the Welland canal? How far has the work progressed?

Mr. MANION: The work is obviously progressing rapidly or we would not spend the extra two million dollars.

Mr. DONNELLY: How many more millions do you want?

Mr. MANION: There is a requirement of about seven or eight million dollars—in the neighbourhood of seven million dollars—to complete the work. Whether it will be all completed this year or not is not known at the present time.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. VENIOT: As I understand it, under ordinary conditions this work would have closed down at a certain period—

Mr. MANION: That is not quite right.

Mr. VENIOT: —and the appropriation voted last session would have been sufficient to carry on the work up to that period. Owing either to the open season or to the necessity for carrying the work along further than ordinarily, with a view to relieving unemployment, the contractors were authorized to go on with their operations, which would represent an expenditure beyond the appropriation voted last session. In view of that permission given them to go beyond that appropriation, and naturally supposing that, it being out of the ordinary, the work might cost the contractors more per unit at that advanced season of the year, has the department obligated itself to the contractors to pay them anything additional beyond the unit prices of the contract?

Mr. MANION: None whatever. May I point out that my hon. friend's premise is wrong. Under ordinary circumstances, with ordinary weather conditions, the amount of $7,000,000 voted last year would have taken care of the work until the freeze-up. But because the weather was so fine, the season so open, the freeze-up being delayed, the contractors could carry on their work further than they otherwise would have been able to do. Consequently they got through more expeditiously than they had anticipated the work which they had estimated to do this year, and rather than allow them to lay off a couple of thousand men in strenuous times we permitted the contractors to continue operations on the condition that they would not be paid until the estimate was passed by the house. It makes no difference whatever, except that there was performed this year work which, under ordinary weather conditions, would have been held over.

Mr. VENIOT: Suppose we had had the ordinary freeze-up, this work would not have been carried on?

Mr. MANION: That is right.

Mr. VENIOT: I claim that there has been the ordinary freeze-up, to use that term. It has not been as early in the season as heretofore, but there has been a freeze-up and these men have carried on work after that freeze-up.

Mr. MANION: Not the part interfered with by the freeze-up. They got a good proportion of the work done earlier because the freeze-up was so late, but certain other works they were in a position to carry on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister has been speaking of the desirability of controlling expenditures by the government. A fundamental principal is that when parliament votes money for a particular purpose that appropriation should be used exclusively for that purpose, and if a further appropriation is necessary the ministry may take one of two courses: It may ask parliament to vote the further appropriation, or, if parliament is not in session, it may secure from His Excellency a governor general's warrant, should the work be urgent, and the additional expenditure be justified on that ground. The minister has told us that this work was continued in order, as I understand it, to give employment to men who otherwise would have been unemployed. The minister says so. That being the case, I submit that the government should have adopted one of two courses. It might have taken a part of the appropriation which this parliament made for the purpose of relieving unemployment—the $20,000,000—and used it to provide employment in some such way. I am not so sure, there being a contract already in existence, that it would have been wholly proper for the government to do it in that way. But at least there was money voted for unemployment purposes under that specific heading. As an alternative, however, had the matter been one of great necessity, the government might have done what apparently they have done in other cases; they might have secured a governor general's warrant for the necessary amount. But they had no right whatever, of their own accord, to issue contracts to contractors for work to be done on the Welland canal or for anything else without this parliament having in the first instance made the requisite appropriation. In this instance the government has taken upon itself to spend $2,000,000 without having a governor general's warrant for the purpose, or without having an appropriation from parliament. I say that is an entirely wrong method of procedure, and if the Prime Minister is anxious, as apparently he is, to reform the methods of controlling expenditures, he had better begin immediately with his own colleagues and his own administration.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, evidently, this amount of $2,000,000 has been spent to relieve the unemployed in the province of Ontario. That is discrimination. The government has no right to have parliament appropriate $2,000,000, for Ontario, over and above the $20,000,000 voted for all the provinces, in the course of the emergency session. I repeat it, that is discrimination. I think parliament should refuse to vote this amount. Moreover, why should Ontario be more favoured than the other provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: It is well to correct a misstatement on the part of my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King). There was no new contract; the contracts were made by the right hon. gentleman's government. They are contracts that will have to be paid The contractors had exhausted the money voted, and the only question was whether or not they should go on—because they will have to be paid anyway. It makes no difference; they will have to be paid under that contract which the former government made and which we could not break. The only question, therefore, was whether or not they should continue the work instead of laying off the men, as would ordinarily be done. It was the question between discontinuing the work or allowing the men to get the benefit of employment during the still open season. We said, "We have no money to pay you because the government, anticipating the requirements, provided what they thought necessary for the purpose." And the money not being ample to carry on the additional work performed by the contractors under their contract—it was not a new contract but the same one—we allowed them to continue operations on the understanding that they would finance the work themselves and when parliament met, as it was bound to do, the necessary appropriation would be passed. Parliament had to do it anyway.

Mr. VENIOT: They could have carried on under the general estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: They did carry on under the general estimates, but the money was exhausted.

Mr. VENIOT: I mean, they could have carried on under the general estimates for the current year.

Mr. BENNETT: No. It was thought desirable to let the house know what was spent instead of carrying forward into the next year a deficit or over-expenditure on the past year's operations. This committee is being told exactly what the situation is—that $2,000,000 has been spent.

Mr. CARDIN: Told afterwards.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but it was under the contract which my hon. friend's government made and which had to be paid anyway.

Mr. CARDIN: Only as regards that item which was voted last year. Parliament did not pass on the $2,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but it is not referable to any item; the contract covers the work which is to go on from year to year. Money was voted to pay the contractors based upon the contemplated amount of work to be done. That amount of work was finished and then the contractors, having their machinery and plant on the ground, said that they could go along with the work and an appropriation could be put in the estimates. They wanted to know whether they would go ahead or stop work, and we said: Go ahead and do it.

Mr. VENIOT: Why not put it in the general estimates?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not put in the general estimates—

Mr. VENIOT: Put it there then.

Mr. BENNETT: —for the simple and obvious reason that the work was done prior to March 31, 1931.

Mr. VENIOT: The work is done but the contract is not completed.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. VENIOT: Why not put it in the general estimates for 1931?

Mr. BENNETT: The money was expended before March 31, 1930, and we want this committee and the House of Commons to know it.

Mr. VENIOT: It was an accommodation to the contractors to be allowed to go on with the work.

Mr. BENNETT: We do not think so.

Mr. VENIOT: It should not be included in the supplementary estimates. The Minister of Railways and Canals has informed this committee that one of the reasons for allowing this expenditure to be made was in order to help unemployment. I am glad to hear him make that statement and I am pleased to know that at least something is being done in that part of Ontario. Nothing has been done in New Brunswick, and especially in the county which I represent. Money was voted last year by this house for public works in New Brunswick and tenders were called for—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. VENIOT: I am speaking on the question of unemployment and I think I am in order. Money was voted by this house and tenders were called for but contracts were never let.

An hon. MEMBER: The same thing applies to British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER: The same thing applies also to Quebec.

Mr. VENIOT: The attention of the Minister of Labour was called to the fact that unemployment was very acute in Caraquet and Little Shippigan and the government was asked to go on with its work. That work has not been proceeded with and no relief for unemployment has been accorded to the people in those sections. In this instance, $2,000,000 is being expended, although no appropriation has been made, in order to relieve unemployment in some other section of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was an order in council passed appropriating what would be necessary for this work or authorizing the contractors to proceed after the contract had expired?

Mr. BENNETT: The contract has not expired.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: After the moneys which had been voted by parliament had been exhausted.

Mr. BENNETT: Speaking from memory, the order in council provides that they were to be paid when the moneys should be voted by parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we can now see clearly where we are in the matter of how moneys are likely to be expended hereafter. The regular method is for parliament to appropriate a certain sum named in an estimate and when that sum is exhausted the government is supposed to come back to parliament for further appropriations for the particular purpose—

Mr. MANION: They are doing that now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —or if the matter is one of great urgency and work must be completed before parliament can be reassembled, then a governor general's warrant may be issued in order that the work may be carried on. The Prime Minister is adopting a third method under which, when the supply is exhausted before the fiscal year is ended, the government may by order in council direct the contractors to proceed and incur further outlay, and then ask parliament by means of a supplementary appropriation, to make good the amounts thus expended. I submit that that is something which has not been done heretofore, and it is entirely irregular.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no justification for it whatever.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It was done many times by the right hon. gentleman's government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not that I am aware of at the moment, although I speak subject to correction. Since we are seeking to reform the government's method of financing I should like to know if this is to be taken as a precedent. Are we to understand that in the next year when parliament puts through appropriations whether for the Welland canal or for public buildings or for any other service, when those appropriations are exhausted, the government of the day, as of right by order in council, is to order the work to be continued and further expenditures incurred without having any appropriation passed by parliament till after the work is completed.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no doubt that I could cite a large number of cases—I have two or three before me now—where contracts were made and the contractor rushed his work and carried it beyond the appropriation. This applies to the construction of public buildings and other works and the contractor has the choice of making a claim for damages for breach of contract, or relying upon the infallible justice of the crown. The Welland canal is under contract and the contractors could have stopped work last fall. However, the season was good, a large number of men were being employed, the freeze-up was delayed and the minister said: Go ahead. The contractors did not require authorization from the minister, they could have gone ahead themselves. However, they did work certified to by the engineers to the extent of $2,000,000. The same thing has happened in connection with public buildings, one or two cases being right here in this city; the sum expended far exceeded the amount of the estimate. This always will be so. We have come to parliament with a supplementary estimate for the fiscal year in which it belongs. We say to parliament: that much money has been spent on a contract made heretofore and we desire it to be paid and charged against the fiscal year in which the money was expended. The contractors, exercising their choice, have preferred to go ahead with their work and to wait for payment until parliament votes the necessary funds. Either the right hon. gentleman has not examined the files of the Public Works department or he has not checked up with the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) because if he had he would have discovered that in at least five cases out of every ten where a contractor gets his equipment erected he pushes the work with all possible speed and relies upon what was described by a great judge as the infallible justice of the crown to see that his contract is preserved and the balance of the contract price paid.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Will my right hon. friend tell me where there is any difference between the method pursued by this government and that adopted by the preceding government?

Mr. BENNETT: It is being brought down now and the committee is being told that it was an expenditure made during that fiscal year. There is no new principle involved in this procedure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend was inferring there was.

Mr. BENNETT: This procedure is adopted in order that the contractor may receive his money just as soon as possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend lays claim to special virtue for having asked parliament to appropriate $2,000,000 in order to pay for work already performed. By what other means could he hope to obtain the money? There is no virtue in asking parliament to appropriate this money because it could not be obtained by any other means. What I would point out, not only to the Prime Minister but to other hon. members, is this: money is voted not only in relation to the particular project upon which it is to be expended, but with some relationship as well to the work being carried on in other parts of the Dominion. Where large appropriations are made, such as for the Welland canal, where the contract has run for a great many years, my recollection is that it has always been a question of how much the government would be justified in allotting to that particular project having regard to what was being allotted to other provinces and other projects. If the Welland canal is to be picked out as the one favoured scheme of the Dominion, if it is to receive an additional appropriation of $2,000,000 without similar treatment being accorded to other parts of the Dominion, there will soon be a good deal of dissension throughout the country as to the way in which public contracts are awarded.

My right hon. friend would have been in a much stronger position had he held to the ground which his minister took when he rose to speak, and had said perfectly frankly: This has been a hard year; there have been a lot of men unemployed; the contract had expired; we thought this was a way of giving employment to an additional number of men, and we decided therefore that the contractor would be given the work. In other years the contractor has been obliged to cut his cloth according to the appropriations made by parliament. This is a ground which the minister might well have sought to defend, but there is no defence whatever for the government by order in council appropriating $2,000,000 or practically appropriating—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not appropriate any money.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a technical term—by order in council guaranteeing to the contractor and thereby to the men employed that it would come to parliament, ask for $2,000,000, and however irregular the procedure, put that appropriation through by the majority which they have in the house. If justice is to be done to all parts of the country and to all the objects and services for which the government is called upon to make appropriations, public appropriations cannot be made in that way. I say again, I hope the Prime Minister will not feel that he is establishing a precedent at the moment, and certainly we on this side will not countenance as a precedent the step which he is now taking of asking parliament to make good expenditures that have been incurred without any previous appropriations by parliament and no governor general's warrant for the making of them at a time when parliament was not in session.

Mr. POULIOT: There is a point I do not understand in this item. The Minister of Railways telegraphed me with regard to a station that he could not find a sum amounting to a little less than $7,000 to pay the difference between the appropriation and the lowest tender, or the tender that I know of, and yet this is an item amounting to $2,000,000 for which he has found the money. There is not a separate department for railways and another for canals; the department is the Department of Railways and Canals Therefore I believe I am in order in asking the minister how he made this discovery of $2,000,000 for canals when he was unable to find less than $7,000 for railways in order to build a station at Rivière du Loup. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways have full information in regard to the matter because I took the trouble to send both of them some papers and complete particulars. I have appealed to them without success. I am not surprised at that at all, but now I appeal to the House of Commons.

There is nothing like a Tory panic. There was a Tory panic in 1911 about reciprocity, later a Tory panic during the war, a Tory panic accompanying the War-time Elections Act, a Tory panic in connection with unemployment, and to-day it is a Tory panic in rushing through the business of the house. Plutarch says that big men are judged by small actions. To-day we shall judge small men by big misdeeds. I shall arraign several ministers, some as accessories before the fact; others as accessories to the fact, and finally, some others as accessories after the fact. I have a voluminous report that has been sent by the provincial board of health to the railway commission, with regard to—

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. gentleman to confine his remarks to the item under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: I will only say, Mr. Chairman, that you will understand me better, because I am speaking on a question of principle. It is the principle involved in the minister being unable to find $7,000 although he has no difficulty in finding $2,000,000. This is a secret that every one of us would like to know. The report relates to the building of a station at Rivière du Loup.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not mind my hon. friend discussing his principle, but he must confine his remarks to the item before the chair.

Mr. POULIOT: May I read the correspondence with my hon. friend in which he said he could not find money for the building of the station?

The CHAIRMAN: That is relevant, certainly.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you. I will proceed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend—

Mr. POULIOT: I am very sorry to interrupt my leader, but I am sure he will be pleased with my argument. On October 14 —and may I say all the people in my consituency were expecting gold bricks from the Minister of Railways, instead of which they have received Irish confetti—I sent a night letter to the Minister of Railways as follows:

Rivière du Loup, October 14, 1930.

Hon. R. J. Manion,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Canadian National railway officials supposed to have notified tenderers for new station building here that your department has refused to sanction construction of same. Please wire me if such is the case and if so why and at whose request did you refuse your sanction?

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot see that this is relevant to the Welland canal.

Mr. POULIOT: If the Chairman is kind and patient enough to listen for half a minute, the question of money will arise, and he will see how it was impossible then for the minister to find any money. The telegram continues:

May I draw your attention to the fact that the actual station building is condemned by board of health.

This is the reply that I received:

Ottawa, Ontario, October 15, 1930.

Jean-François Pouliot, M.P.,
Rivière du Loup, Quebec.

Yours received. The question of new station at Rivière du Loup like many other matters held up because, of costs involved. Necessary repairs to station have been sanctioned.

R. J. Manion.

The cost involved was about $7,000. I have another letter in which there is a great complaint of poverty. It reads:

Office of the Minister of Railways and Canals.
Ottawa, Canada.

February 25, 1931.

Dear Mr. Pouliot,

I have your letter of February 23 with enclosures. As you are already aware, it has not been possible to provide a new station at Rivière du Loup for financial reasons. As you are also aware, the revenues of the railways, instead of improving, are decreasing—

All the money is spent on canals.

—and these revenues in the case of Rivière du Loup and vicinity are further decreased by the 20 per cent reduction from normal rates accorded shippers in the maritime area. Under the circumstances, I can see no early hope or expectation of the provision of a new station at Rivière du Loup. The railway management is, however partially from revenues and partially by capital appropriation in the estimates, endeavouring to find $15,000 for necessary repairs and improvements to the present structure. I, personally, trust that nothing may occur to prevent this expenditure being made.

Very truly yours,

R. J. Manion.

It is most extraordinary, Mr. Chairman, that the minister can find so much money for the canal and yet can find no money for the building of a station, when it has been said by such a big business man as Mr. Atterbury, the president of the Pennsylvania railroad—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I want to be as fair as possible, but for my hon. friend to be discussing a station at Rivière du Loup is not the same thing as discussing the Welland canal, for which there was a contract. I must ask hon. members to keep to the item before the chair.

Mr. POULIOT: Shall I be allowed to proceed, Mr. Chairman, when the estimates for the railways is called?

The CHAIRMAN: Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: During the last parliament there was an appropriation in the estimates for the construction of a post office building in my district. The Minister of Railways said a few moments ago that $2,000,000 was spent on the Welland canal in order to relieve unemployment. The item I speak of, $10,000 for the construction of a post office building, was urged by the reeve of the municipality where the post office was to be erected, in a telegram which he sent to the Minister of Public Works, urging that the contract be let as soon as possible in order to relieve unemployment. So if the government can find $2,000,000 to relieve unemployment by carrying on work on the Welland canal, and provide the money by order in council, it seems to me that they could have found it proper to construct this building to relieve unemployment. To that telegram of the reeve of the municipality urging that the contract be let as soon as possible in order to relieve unemployment, there was no reply.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot see that this is relevant to the item under discussion.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is relevant if the remarks of the Minister of Railways, who has referred to work for the unemployed, are relevant.

The CHAIRMAN: I think I must keep the committee to the discussion of the item before the chair.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then keep the minister in order, too.

The CHAIRMAN: I am quite willing to do so, if I can.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the minister or the Prime Minister advise the committee who the contractors on the Welland canal are, and when the last payment was made to them under the appropriation made by parliament?

Mr. MANION: The contractors were the Porter people, the Lyall Construction Company, the Canadian Dredge Company, the Atlas Construction Company, and A. W. Robertson. That I think completes the list of the big contractors who were given contracts by the late government. I am sorry that I cannot say offhand when the last payment was made, but it was made out of the appropriations that was voted by the late government. When the appropriation was exhausted, naturally we stopped paying. Now we are asking for the money to pay for the balance of the work. The contractors have carried on of their own free will. They could have retired, but they chose to carry on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is very material to have a statement from the minister as to when the last payment was made. Perhaps the minister will let the item stand, and after recess I would ask him to tell the committee what amounts have been paid to the contractors under the appropriations made by parliament what contractors received payments, and the dates the payments were made.

Item stands.

Ottawa—addition to central heating plant—further amount required, $21,500.
Ottawa—National Research Council laboratories and equipment — further amount required, $41,330.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I should like details with respect to these items.

Mr. BENNETT: This amount of $21,500 is required for payment of balances due on the following contracts in connection with the addition to the central heating plant at Ottawa:

1. Balance due on contract with A. T. Garvock for addition to building, $6,122.
2. Balance due on contract with W. G. Edge Ltd. for alterations to mechanical equipment, $8,217.
3. Balance due on contract with J. Inglis Co., Ltd. for pulverizing and burning equipment, $3,660.
4. Balance due on contract with Canadian Vickers Ltd., for boilers, $1,550.
5. Balance due on contract with Bailey Meter Co., Limited, for flow meters, $1,888—Total, $21,437.

The work in connection with the addition to this plant was commenced in the year 1929-30, and it was expected that $80,000 out of the appropriation of $200,000 would be expended on the above contracts during that year.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The sum of $130,000 was provided in the estimates of 1930-31 to complete the work but that sum was insufficient owing to the fact that instead of $80,000 only $58,500 was expended in 1929-30, thereby mortgaging the appropriation of 1930-31 by $21,500 greater than was anticipated. It is to pay off this obligation that the amount of $21,500 is required.

The amount revoted in 1930-31 was $120,000.

With respect to the contract with A. I. Garvock for an addition to the building, an order in council was passed on September 3, 1929, accepting the tender of Alex I. Garvock at $82,000, for an addition to the central heating plant at Ottawa. There was only one tender received for the work. The contract was subsequently increased by authority granted on October 23, 1929, to accept the tender of Mr. A. I. Garvock, at $4,756. The total contract was for $87,312, and the contractor received $81,190, leaving a balance owing of $6,122.

The other item refers to the laboratories that are being built in connection with the national research council. The particulars are rather extensive, but if the house desires to have them they can be furnished. This amount of $41,330 is required to pay the contractors, Robertson and Janin, of Ontario, Limited, for work performed during 1930-31 in connection with their contract for the erection of laboratories for the national research council, and for which there were no funds owing to the exhaustion of the appropriation of $1,500,000. The expenditure incurred in 1930-31 was $1,541,330, and the amount paid $1,500,000, leaving a balance due of $41,330.

Item agreed to.

Burlington channel—improvements—further amount required, $151,495.
Port Arthur and Fort William—harbour improvements — further amount required, $288,530.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to ask the Prime Minister if this is a case similar to that of the Welland canal. The harbour in question happens to be in the constituency of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I notice that over a quarter of a million dollars is voted to further the work. May I say to my right hon. friend that where there are small amounts, amounts say, of a few hundreds or thousands of dollars necessary in order to complete particular work within the fiscal year there may be a reason why some latitude should be shown. However when we come to items amounting to a quarter of a million, half a million or two millions, special explanations are required and should be given.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure my right hon. friend has observed that in respect to the last item to which I referred the contractor had gone ahead with the work and appropriations had been exhausted. In this particular case the further amount required to pay the balance owing on three contracts for work performed in the years 1930 and 1931 on the widening and deepening of Burlington channel is $151,495. The balance owing to the R. C. Huffman Construction Company Limited on contract number 21051 for the new substructure of the Canadian National Railway bridge and substructure and roadway approach for the new leaf of the Bascule lift bridge is $61,104.90. The balance owing the Hamilton Bridge Company on contract number 21098 for construction of Strauss Trunnion Bascule bridge, the new leaf, including alterations and additions to the existing span, is $75,090. The amount owing to the Canadian National Railway Company for work done in 1930, placing ballast, ties and rails in connection with the new Canadian National Railway spring bridge rendered necessary by the widening of the channel is $15,300. The total amount required is $151,494.90. Those items constitute expenditures under contracts which were not made by the present administration. As far as I know the expenditures were properly made under that contract. The appropriation having been exhausted the companies interested now ask the government to provide for the amount to which they are entitled.

Mr. VENIOT: Have the contracts been completed?

Mr. BENNETT: This particular contract?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: My information is that contracts in regard to that particular work have been completed, yes. There is further work however to be done in that locality. This particular work is completed. The amount of $15,300 is payable to the Canadian National Railways for putting in ties, ballast and rails in connection with the bridge. As I have said the total amount required is $151,494.90.

Mr. DONNELLY: What was the original amount of the contract?

Mr. BENNETT: The original amount was a very large sum of money. The appropriation in 1930 and 1931 was a million dollars. The expenditure was a million dollars. I have before me the report of the officials which I shall read:

When the $1,000,000 was voted in the main estimates 1930-31, it was considered sufficient for all the work expected to be performed during the year, but owing to favourable weather in the fall and early winter, more work was done than expected.

This statement would seem to explain the position in regard to that expenditure. I presume my hon. friend wishes to know the details concerning the balance owing Huffman and Company. I will give the following in that connection:

Amount of final estimate		$505,084 90
Amount paid 1929-30	$113,180
Amount paid 1930-31	330,800
Balance owing		$ 61,104 90

Four tenders were received for this work in answer to public advertisements. The four firms tendering were the R. C Huffman Company Limited, Canadian Engineering and Contracting Company, Port Arthur Construction Company Limited, and Russell Construction Company. The tender of the R. C. Huffman Company Limited was $385,508.30. The Canadian Engineering and Contracting Company asked $360,054.90; the Port Arthur Construction Company Limited asked $404,544.30 and the Russell Construction Company asked $418,566.40. During the progress of the work it was found necessary to authorize an increase in the quantities in the pier foundations, excavation, timber and steel sheet piling. This was authorized by order in council of July 26, 1930,—two days before the earthquake.

Then I have before me a statement showing the balance owing the Hamilton Bridge Company. It is as follows:

Amount of progress estimate No. 5 for work done to end of February 1931.		$248,170
Less drawback		24,810
Net amount earned		223,360
Amount paid		148,270
Amount owing, due to exhaustion of appropriation		$ 75,090

Order in council April 28, 1930, accepted tender of the Hamilton Bridge Company, for the construction of a strauss Trunnion Bascule bridge, including alterations and additions to existing span.

Three tenders were received March 25, 1930, in answer to public advertisement:

1. Hamilton Bridge Company Limited, Hamilton	$236,005 85
2. Canadian Bridge Company, Limited, Walkerville	243,627 15
3. Dominion Bridge Company, Montreal	248,606 00

The contract was let for $236,005.85. The amount owing to the Canadian National Railways after deducting the salvage for old tracks, bolts, nuts and so on in connection with putting in the new rails and tracks on the new bridge was $15,277.

In answer to the question by my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) I will read the following:

It is expected that the two bridges will be open for traffic over the new highway by April 15, and the entire works including dredging, new north pier, et cetera, should be finally completed and ready for use June 15, 1931.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am confused by the statements made by my right hon. friend. Do I understand him to say that only $75,000 of the $151,000 required has actually been spent in the year 1930, or during the fiscal year 1930-31?

Mr. BENNETT: I told my hon. friend how the totals were made up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): From the explanation of the Prime Minister it would appear the actual expenditure was only $75,000.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I am afraid my hon. friend is confused between two things. The first figure concerned the construction company, the second the bridge company and the third the railway company. The sum total of all amounts to $151,495, the figure in the estimates. The sum of $75,090 was the amount due to the bridge company.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my right hon. friend has discovered how difficult it is to deal with contracts. There are many and varied contracts throughout Canada for the construction of buildings and other public works governed by appropriations by parliament. He will have to come from time to time to get those appropriations through.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the explanation of the second part of the item?

Mr. BENNETT: The explanation of the second part of the item concerning Port Arthur and Fort William is a little more lengthy. It is as follows:

This further amount is required to pay amounts owing on three contracts for work performed in 1930-31 for which the appropriation was insufficient, as follows:

Balance owing Messrs. Chambers, McQuigge and McCaffrey on final estimate on contract No. 15,924 for the construction of a section of the rubble mound breakwater in Port Arthur harbour and the extension thereto, to the end of the working season of 1930, $254,308.01.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Balance owing the Great Lakes Dredging and Contracting Company on final estimate on contract No. 22,088 for deepening and widening entrance channel to the dry dock and slip of Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company and removal of part of lot 10 at the confluence of the Kaministikwia and Mission rivers, $29,969.12.

Amount owing to Messrs. Chambers, McQuigge and McCaffrey for rubble mound protection work on Kaministikwia river at Fort William between the Fort William terminal elevator and the consolidated elevator, $4,252.50—Total amount required, $288,529.63—say, $288,530.

Expenditure 1930-31, $140,000.

In other words the whole sum has arisen out of a contract which was made about a year and a half ago. The work proceeded slowly at first and then with greater rapidity, with the result that the balance I have mentioned has become due.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This appears to be a contract similar to that amounting to $2,000,000 in connection with the Welland canal. I point out to my right hon. friend and to the house that the previous administration brought down estimates setting forth certain amounts to be expended on this particular work. When parliament was about to prorogue the government again looked over the estimates to see what was necessary in the way of supplementary estimates in order to conclude the work within the fiscal year. At the time the estimates were brought down we placed on the table an estimate of the amount we believed to be necessary to complete a certain amount of work within the fiscal year or to go the length we thought proper at that time. Most of the estimates now before us are in the nature of amounts to make good additional sums of money the contractors have been authorized to incur without any appropriation from parliament. In fact, they would appear to be in opposition to the sum that parliament had declared was the total amount which should be paid. The matter is entirely irregular and the situation is not made any better by the fact that in some of these cases, as in the present one, the present administration has practically doubled the amount which parliament at its regular session thought would be ample to expend in the present fiscal year on a particular contract. I realize that we are in the hands of the government in the matter of these payments, but I do think the house should understand that what we are doing now means virtually making good large sums of moneys to contractors for public works, none of which moneys have been authorized by parliament heretofore in the regular way but all of which have been incurred by the government's direction to the contractors simply to go ahead with the work and to trust to the government, with its large majority, putting through the accounts when parliament reassembled.

Mr. ARTHURS: In all cases I understand the contracts were let by the previous government, were they not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to make that perfectly clear. These contracts have been running for a number of years, and each year parliament appropriated the money it thought was ample to be spent during that fiscal year. The fact that the contract was let by a previous government does not affect the situation at all. The important fact is how much the government of the day asked parliament to appropriate, and the point which comes up for consideration now is how much the government opposite, of its own volition, has incurred by way of public expenditure by order in council, without any authority from parliament and without any warrant from His Excellency, The Governor General.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: The item under discussion is No. 18, harbours and rivers, $440,025.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I had given a full explanation of this when the committee rose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can my right hon. friend tell us what payments have already been made within the present fiscal year on account of harbour improvements at Port Arthur and Fort William, and when the last payment was made? I understand that the item of $288,530 which appears in this estimate is for payment to be made on work that has been done in this fiscal year but for which there was not available money under the original appropriation.

Mr. BENNETT: That is correct. This case perhaps very clearly illustrates something which my right hon. friend has overlooked, and it becomes essential to take a few moments to clear the situation. In every appropriation of public moneys tenders are usually called for and a contract is entered into. The contract involves, on the part of the crown, the payment of the price agreed upon and, on the part of the contractor, the performance of the service which he undertakes. There is usually in all such contracts a date within which the work is to be completed, and if the contractor finishes the work within the time that is all that can reasonably be expected. But if by pushing the work forward with expedition, he anticipates the conclusion of the contract, it sometimes follows that he is in a position to get his money before he would otherwise receive it, provided that parliament has made an appropriation. If not, he has to wait until the session of parliament before he can receive it. It would be entirely wrong to grant governor general's warrants in a case such as that. Warrants are not issued where contracts have been outstanding. That has been the general principle of governments, because it has been held that the necessity which justifies the issue of a warrant does not arise where there is a contract. That principle has generally governed, although it has been departed from in some cases; for instance, it has happened where there has been a great disaster or any occurrence of that kind, even although there has been a contract, where a particular work has been destroyed. This case amply illustrates the point I was making. The contract was No. 15914, the original amount $472,500, and the contractors Messrs. Chambers, McQuigge & McCaffrey, the date of the contract, September 19, 1928, and the date for completion, July 28, 1930. I wish the committee to bear in mind that the contract was to have been completed by the middle of July last year. The contractor commenced work in September, 1928. This was authorized by order in council passed on August 26, 1928. The work was awarded to the lowest tender. There follows in the particulars I have a description of the work that was done. It was done on the unit basis. In a letter dated October 8, 1930, the minister authorized Messrs. Chambers, McQuigge & McCaffrey to proceed under the terms of their present contract with supplying and placing of core stone and cover stone in the prolongation of the section of the breakwater next adjacent to the section then under contract. This authority was given partly to relieve unemployment in Port Arthur, and was to expire at the end of the working season, the contractors to wait payment and the government to ask parliament at its next session to provide the necessary funds. The above additional work was covered by authority of order in council dated January 28, 1931, after it was known exactly how much work had been performed. The additional expenditure incurred by the above authority amounted to $219,225. The total amount owing the contractors is $254,-308. That is the situation with respect to that item.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the contract finished?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the work was finished. There is no contract outstanding for further work.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Inside the estimate?

Mr. BENNETT: No, not quite, but the difference is not substantial. The amount is about $35,000. There is a balance owing to the Great Lakes Dredging & Contracting Company in connection with the same work. The amount of the final estimate is $62,146.37, the amount paid being $32,177.25; the balance remaining is therefore $29,969.12. The original work under this contract consisted of certain operations which I need not mention. The work was extended on September 19, 1930, to include an additional 100,000 cubic yards from lot 10 at the confluence of the Kaministikwia river and Mission river to give more room for steamers to turn, on condition that the contractor would await payment until further funds had been voted by parliament. I mentioned this in parliament last September, when I made reference to these matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to this point. In a number of localities where there has been public work either contemplated or commenced, the work has been stopped and there has been unemployment. Communications have been sent to the government asking whether it would be possible to have the work proceeded with and replies have been sent by the government to the effect that parliament has not made an appropriation beyond a certain amount and that it would therefore be altogether unlawful to proceed with the work. One case was mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Provencher. That was a case in point. Either this reason is a true one or it is not true; either the condition given in that reply should apply in all cases or it should apply in none. What appears to have been the case here is that in some localities where there have been contracts certain contractors have received, as it were, special favours; they have been allowed to go ahead with the work. They have been given to all intents and purposes new contracts, although they have been told that they would have to wait until parliament reassembled in order to have the money voted to make good what would have to be paid to labour. On the other hand, where other communities have asked that a similar course be adopted, they have been told that it was illegal to proceed in that way. One way must be right and the other wrong, and I submit that the right way is to limit the work to the amount parliament has voted for the contract. I recall several of the contracts which relate to items in the supplementary estimates as having been fully and carefully discussed by the previous government. It was recognized that it might not be possible to have the work completed within the fiscal year, but it was contemplated that it would be continued in the next year. My right hon. friend will, I am sure, agree that when he brings down his main estimate there will be item after item which will read somewhat in this way: To complete work, amount required in addition to—mentioning the previous amount voted. That is the way in which estimates are presented to parliament. A given work or service may involve the expenditure of $1,000,000, and the minister in presenting the estimates to the house will inform the house that while the work when completed will amount to $1,000,000, nevertheless the government is asking only for $500,000 for what is to be done within the fiscal year. The estimate for the additional $500,000, or a portion of it, will appear in the estimates of the next year. That is the way estimates are voted when voted regularly, and I submit again that wherever a departure is made from that course it is irregular.

The Prime Minister has explained to us that this expenditure was made in part to relieve unemployment. That is part of the explanation which he has put on the record. Again I would point out that parliament at the last special session voted $20,000,000 to aid in unemployment. If it was contemplated that these public works would be continued beyond the point at which it was intended by the previous administration that they should be continued, in order to provide work for the unemployed, then hon. gentlemen opposite should have submitted additional estimates at the special session, and have stated at the special session that there was going to be so much unemployment during the coming winter, that they intended to go further with the dredging of harbours, the extension of wharves and the building of public buildings than had been contemplated by the previous administration. The estimates should have been submitted to parliament and we should have been told that they were for the purpose of relieving unemployment. That would have been treating parliament fairly and the public fairly, but the present method is highly irregular and is not at all defensible.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the right hon. gentleman made that closing observation, for it enables me to point out to the committee that at the special session, on September 10, I directed attention to that particular policy as being the policy which the government would pursue. The words I used on that occasion, which appear on page 68 of Hansard, were as follows:

Work is being carried on in connection with the breakwater, we will say, at the head of the lakes—I give that as an illustration—the parliamentary appropriation has been exhausted; the work could be usefully carried on, and give employment to several hundred men for several weeks longer; it would be proposed, at the same unit cost, to continue that work.

But, as I said yesterday, it is proposed to continue existing contracts upon the unit basis upon which they have been let by my hon. friends opposite, in cases where by so doing employment will be provided which might not otherwise be available. And I gave an illustration. It happened to be the illustration of a breakwater which had been brought to my attention. That is, the appropriation for the year is exhausted. The work was let by tender on a unit basis.

Employment could be given to a few hundred men from now until the close of navigation by continuing the present contractors in their work under the same unit basis. That I conceive to be a proper case to deal with, and I mention it as one of those it was proposed to deal with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Out of the $20,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: No. We were asked many questions as to how we proposed to deal with this problem, and we replied that we proposed to extend the docks, for instance, upon a unit basis, and we have done so. There is a clear distinction and there should be no difficulty in the committee's deciding between what is new contract and what is the continuance of existing contract. Had the work at the head of the lakes been terminated the equipment would have been removed. It was admitted that at some time or other this rock breakwater would have to be extended, and the unit cost of the work was fixed by the contract. The equipment being on the ground, the work was extended on the basis of the same unit cost as had prevailed in the original contract.

Some of the matters mentioned this afternoon involved the voting of money for new contracts, and I am sure that when we come to the main estimates my right hon. friend will admit that no government he has ever known has succeeded in extending to the same extent the contracts of the former administration. Case after case will be found where tenders were called for and contracts let for the very reason mentioned by the right hon. gentleman, namely, to endeavour to provide employment for those who might not otherwise be usefully engaged. Many of these cases involved constituencies which had not supported the present administration, and when the main estimates are considered I feel satisfied that hon. members will admit that this government has been extraordinary in that regard. We did not do as has been done at times—cancel contracts on accession to power. A few days before the late government gave up its seals of office they passed many orders in council accepting tenders.

An hon. MEMBER: After defeat.

Mr. BENNETT: No effort was made to cancel those contracts. How unlike the action taken by the former administration. They came into office and found that the Journal Publishing Company had leased a portion of its office space to the Agriculture department. The Auditor General's department decided that other quarters should be found and the contract was cancelled, with a resulting cost to the country of $22,000 in damages and costs. I think it will be found that a very earnest effort has been made by the officials in charge of these contracts to meet in every sense the public necessity rather than to serve any political ends.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has referred to a certain contract and has tried to have it appear that with respect to contracts his government has acted differently from the previous administration. Might I remind the committee that with respect to that particular contract, and other contracts which were dealt with similarly, they were dealt with in the manner in which they were for a very obvious reason; the administration which had been in office prior to the time at which the action was taken was an administration that had never received any authority to act, either from this parliament or from the people of this country. It was a phantom administration which came into being for a short time in 1926 without having the support of the majority of this House of Commons or of the electorate of the country.

An hon. MEMBER: That is quite different.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When that so-called shadow government undertook to award contracts to its friends, it became a first duty of the incoming administration to see that contracts of the character should not be permitted to continue. What my right hon. friend in continuing existing contracts describes as being such a virtuous act upon his part in contrast to what was done by other administrations is in reality nothing of the kind. In regard to what his administration has done in continuing the contracts which were in existence when they came into office, it will be found that in each case tenders had been called for before the elections. Moneys had been appropriated by parliament at a previous session, in all particulars the authority of parliament had been obtained, and the government which held office at the time these contracts were signed simply performed an executive act necessary to complete the will of parliament in regard to these contracts. There is nothing there for which my right hon friend is to be specially thanked.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Live stock—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This vote is required, first, to meet grants to fairs and expenditures in connection therewith, $19,300. Of this amount, $6,000 is needed for four new fairs named by the late administration to receive class B grants, namely Chilliwack, Armstrong, Assiniboine and Waterloo. It might be mentioned that these four fairs were named as B fairs during the elections but that has no reference to the fact that they were deserving. The fair at Valleyfield was changed from class A to class B at an increased cost of $3,500. A winter fair was started at Sherbrooke at a cost of $9,800.

In the cattle division, the amount voted for cow testing service was $55,000 while the total estimated expenditure for the year was $62,500. This is not an abnormal increase, as I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree that when you are dealing with a matter of $55,000, an increase of $7,500 is not out of the way.

The poultry item is the largest of those I am reading. The total expenditure was in round figures $290,000. The appropriation, as will be noticed is $258,000. The departmental officials observe that the increased expenditure is due mainly to the following reasons:

1. Very greatly increased activity in poultry promotion in Quebec, in cooperation with the provincial department. In all, six new poultry promoters were added to the staff and the sum of $3,000 was set aside to assist in cokerel distribution.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

2. The increase in the work of car-lot inspection of dressed poultry in the western provinces, an increase of easily 30 per cent. In this work, fifteen additional men were employed over the previous year. Further, the period in which the men were employed was considerably longer than in previous years, owing to the increased number of killing and plucking demonstrations and the fact that many points were induced to ship their poultry earlier than previously.

For sheep work there is a deficit of $15,000. For sheep promoters the amount voted was $34,000 and the amount expended $42,000, leaving a deficit of $8,000. During the year, the increased demand for pure bred rams, increase in the organization of sheep clubs, increased demand for ewe lambs for breeding purposes, for sheep demonstrations, including demonstrations on wool, docking, castration, dipping and the control of sheep parasites necessitated increased travelling on the part of officers connected with this work. For the ram premium policy the amount voted was $10,000, the amount expended $17,000, leaving a deficit of $7,000.

As I said this afternoon, these policies were not those of the present administration. These items are but carrying out new policies as regards which I am bound in fairness to say the exact amount that would be spent could not with definiteness be ascertained, but the appropriations made were regarded as being sufficient for the purposes. A somewhat larger sum was actually expended.

The vote for the general grant was $10,000 and the expenditure slightly over $37,000, made us as follows:

Manitoulin Turkey Growers Association, $100.
Canadian National Railways (transportation of boys to Great Britain), $600.
Eastern Canada Live Stock Union, $1,000.
Western Canada Live Stock Union, $2,500.
Canadian Cooperative Live Stock Producers, $20,000.
Toronto Horse Parade, $500.
Ottawa Horse Parade, $400.
Ottawa Riding Club, $300.
Montreal Horse Parade, $400.
Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere Horse Show, $450.
Canadian Hunter and Light Horse Society, $5,000.
Maritime Live Stock Marketing Board, $1,000.
Ontario Plowman's Association, $300.
Maritime Cooperative Egg and Poultry Association, $1,250.
British Columbia Plowing Match, $75.
Silver Fox Exhibitors Association, $1,500.
Winnipeg Live Stock Exchange, $455.
Montreal Poultry Show, $1,407.

These make up the sum total of the items which I have mentioned, and I think altogether they make up the whole $100,000.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The Prime Minister stated that there were four class B fairs for which $1,500 each is required, and I believe he said that that indebtedness was incurred by the former administration. We have in western Canada some class B fairs which were discriminated against by the former administration. I happen to know of one particular fair, that of Kindersley, Saskatchewan, which is a class B fair on a par with those which have received the $1,500 each, yet the Kindersley fair has never yet been paid the $1,500. I believe there are two or three others similarly situated. While I know there is not much hope of receiving redress under this item, this discrimination should cease. There is absolutely no reason why one particular district in Canada should be given $1,500 of federal money while another district similarly situated is refused. I believe the present administration wants to be fair, and in fairness to all the districts, when this apportionment is made for the ensuing year, I trust that those which have been discriminated against will be included in the grant to class B fairs.

Mr. VALLANCE: Might I point out to the administration that there are two classes of class B fairs?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is true. The Minister of Agriculture will bear me out. He knows, because he has been written to about the matter. In the class B fair, there is class 1 and class 2. It has been suggested to him, as the hon. member for Kindersley points out, that the class 2-B fair, should receive the same consideration as the class 1-B fair. The four that are receiving the grant have, I think, been accepted as class 2-B fairs. The 1-B class practically controls the B class fair, and they have not seen fit to allow the new B class fair to get into the 1-B class and they propose to segregate them as 2-B class fairs. What the hon. member for Kindersley states is absolutely correct. In my home town we have the same condition as he describes. The minister has been approached regarding this matter by those that are looking for this assistance, and I should like the minister, through the Minister of Finance, to state what position these 2-B class fairs are in.

Mr. BENNETT: I assume hon. members will present in writing to the minister their statements with respect to the qualifications to share in the grant in question. The only difficulty that I had about the matter was in ascertaining just why four should suddenly become entitled to a grant by telegram during the election, but that may have been due to an oversight. Presumably the matter became so pressing because it had been overlooked, as much departmental business necessarily is, and it was taken care of in that way. May I observe in all these matters no new policy has been initiated by the Minister of Agriculture. If hon. members will take the trouble to look at the supplementary estimates presented on May 11, 1922, by the then government with respect to the previous fiscal year, they will find that the late Mr. Fielding, then Minister of Finance, took complete control of the estimates. They will find on column 1662 of Hansard how he dealt with them and got them passed. I am bound to say that no such information was given then as has been given on this occasion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Neither the Hon. Mr. Fielding nor the succeeding Minister of Finance took the responsibility of answering for every department. The ministers were in their places and ready to answer if questions were asked.

Mr. BENNETT: That may be, but all the answers were given by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Fielding.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was present in the House of Commons at the time and have been on every occasion since, and the ministers always answered the questions that were asked. The Minister of Finance of course took charge.

Mr. McINTOSH: Might I suggest to the Prime Minister in connection with his agricultural policy that it may be wise to launch a new policy with regard to these fairs? There are two class B fairs: 1-B and 2-B. I do not know what grants the government is going to give to class 2-B fairs, but I know what grant has been given to the class 1-B fair, and that is $1,500 a year. The class A fair has been receiving $5,000 a year. Regina gets $5,000; Saskatoon gets $5,000, and other fairs are getting $5,000—fairs which in my estimation are not doing as good work for agriculture as those in many of the smaller cities like Yorkton, Prince Albert, North Battleford and so forth. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that when he is investigating policies with regard to agricultural fairs he endeavour to remove that grievance. The class 1-B fair ought perhaps to be put into the same category as class A, and given the same grant, namely, $5,000 a year.

Mr. DONNELLY: Every year during the past several years we members from the west, when the grants to class B fairs came up for discussion, have urged that something should be done about them. These grants to class B fairs were started several years ago under the Union government to promote agriculture, more especially in the outlying districts. A closed list was formed, and if you happened to have a fair of a certain size, you got the grant; and if your fair was not up to that size, you did not get the grant. We contended year after year in this house that there should be some policy laid down with respect to these class B fairs, and urged that any fair coming up to a certain standard should get the grant. I make that same recommendation to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) now, that he decide upon a standard for the class B fairs, and that any fair coming up to that standard get the grant; if the fairs now getting the grant do not come up to that standard, withhold the grant. Assiniboia gets a grant for a class B fair. When these grants were first inaugurated, that was a new country, hardly settled, but it has now a bigger fair than many other towns of larger size. We always contended that we were absolutely entitled to the grant and that we should not be discriminated against just because ours was a young fair, and finally we got the grant. I would again urge the minister to establish a standard for these fairs and that every fair coming up to that standard should get the grant.

Health of animals—administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act—further amount required, $300,000.

Mr. BENNETT: It will perhaps be within the memory of members of the committee that in 1929 it became essential to vote $500,000 in the supplementary estimates for this very purpose. This year the necessity arises out of an increase in the sums payable in the infected areas in eastern Ontario, in the counties of Stormont, Dundas and Russell; in Quebec, in the counties of Stanstead, Sherbrooke, Chicoutimi, and Lake St. John; and in New Brunswick, where the compensation exceeded the anticipation by about $25,000, making in all the sum of $300,000. This is an item which, with the best intentions in the world, it would probably be impossible for any government to gauge very accurately. It turned out that a larger number of cattle were attacked than was contemplated.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have to congratulate the minister upon continuing this good work. I think that the over-expenditure, however, is largely due to new areas being opened up during the period of this government's administration. I noticed by the Gazette during the winter that a new area was opened in Manitoba, another in Quebec near Sherbrooke, and another in New Brunswick. It is all good work, but I believe it will be found that the over-expenditure was due to opening up these new areas. The rumours were that this work was going to be discontinued, but here is evidence that it is to be continued, and I want to compliment the minister upon that. It is of tremendous value not only in that it checks the spread of bovine tuberculosis, but because of direct effect in checking the spread of this terrible disease among humans as well.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is correct. In New Brunswick the compensation was about $25,000 more than estimated, and the expenditure in eastern Ontario was $125,000 more than normal.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There were some new areas established in Manitoba, one adjoining my riding. I have received several letters asking me to ascertain if this good work is to be continued. When I go home at Easter may I assure my people that it is to be continued?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. GRAY: Is the Prime Minister aware that the Department of Agriculture, through the health of animals branch, has sent out a letter through the office of the chief inspector advising that a recommendation has been made by the minister's office that officials when on departmental business in Halifax should stay at the Lord Nelson hotel, and directing them to govern themselves accordingly? I mention this because, as I think this house will realize, there is in the city of Halifax a government-owned hotel, and while I do not urge that there should be discrimination, at least we should not point out to these officials that they should use a privately-owned hotel operating in competition with a government-owned hotel.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to produce the letter?

Mr. GRAY: Does the right hon. gentleman deny that it was sent out?

Mr. BENNETT: He has no knowledge of it nor has the minister in charge. We want the letter that we may deal with the official accordingly.

Mr. GRAY: I have in my possession a copy of a letter signed by A. E. Moore, chief travelling inspector. It is dated December 16, 1930, is sent out to inspectors in the health of animals branch, and reads as follows:

To Inspectors:

Sir,—I beg to advise you that recommendation has been given by the minister's office to the effect that officials of this department when visiting Halifax should stop at the Lord Nelson hotel. Kindly govern yourself accordingly when on official visit at that point.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Chief Travelling Inspector.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the name on it?

Mr. GRAY: A. E. Moore.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the hon. gentleman seen the original letter?

Mr. GRAY: I have seen the original letter.

Mr. BENNETT: That being so, Mr. Chairman, I hasten to assure the committee that the matter will be investigated. The minister himself has no knowledge of it, and had not heard of it until the statement was made by the hon. gentleman. I had not heard of it. No instructions of that character were given by the minister or by the government so far as I am aware.

Mr. DUFF: As shareholder in the Lord Nelson hotel I have no objection to these officials staying at that hotel.

Item agreed to.

Administration of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The information that was given with respect to the other items applies also to this. Increases in salaries and wages account for $9,500, travelling expenses $8,000, laboratory and field equipment, $2,500. These increases were due to an unusual demand for potato inspection for certified seed production in Quebec and Prince Edward Island. As a result of an increase in inspections, there was an increase in the cost of the operation of laboratories and field equipment. The number of plants coming into the country that had to be inspected at ports of entry increased by over nine million. Further, some extensions and improvements were necessary in two or three of the plant pathalogical laboratories. The estimated cost in Prince Edward Island for potato inspection was $30,000, and the actual cost $37,000. The contemplated expenditure in Quebec was $20,000, and the actual expenditure $31,000. The increased cost of laboratory equipment accounted for $2,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Before dinner recess I drew attention to the extreme severity of the cutworm outbreak in the west. I have here a map that was sent out by the entomological branch of the Department of Agriculture, a very efficient branch. I should like to know what success they have met with in attacking this invasion of cutworm on the prairie We would like to know if experiments have been made to show how the cutworm larvae have wintered. We are in hopes that a large number of these larvae will have been destroyed by the intermittent freezing and thawing during the last winter. If some accurate information were given out as to the fertile or non-fertile present condition of these larvae, the farmers would be guided as to their spring sowing. They are advised in this bulletin not to sow their grain until small seeding tests have been made and if on May 15 it is found that there is no cutworm, they may sow their fields. That is too late, however; they will run into danger of frost if they wait until May 15 to sow their wheat. I suggest that the minister take steps to test the topsoil where the larvae are located, incubate them and find out the condition of the eggs. If the eggs are found to be in a dormant and non-fertile condition the farmers may feel easy; if on the other hand the eggs are fertile notwithstanding the exposed winter through absence of snow, the farmers might be disposed to follow the advice given by this bulletin. I can assure my hon. friends opposite, however, that the advice given in this bulletin would mean that wheat sown after May 15 would be too late for many districts. I suggest again that experiments be made by testing the incubatory capacity of the larvae, in the same way as hen eggs are tested in an incubator. A test could be made so as to ascertain the percentage of fertile larvae which develop into cutworms and from that stage into the moths. If this procedure is adopted the results would be of great value to the farmers in determining the date of their spring sowing, because if eggs prove non-fertile, seeding can proceed forthwith as soon as spring opens.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member is aware of the fact that the Department of Agriculture works in conjunction with the provincial departments of agriculture in these matters. At this moment field studies are being carried on for the very purposes mentioned by my hon. friend. Necessarily in a country as large as this those studies must be of local import and are carried on largely through the efforts of the provincial authorities with the aid of skilled and scientific assistants which may be furnished by the federal Department of Agriculture. That work is being carried on, and a brochure is now in process of being printed which will contain the information gathered through the efforts of these provincial and federal authorities. It is believed that the knowledge thus obtained from actual field studies will enable the farmer to be advised as to how best to cope with the evil the hon. gentleman has so properly mentioned.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal; construction and betterment—further amount required, $2,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend asked for some information as to the last payments made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As to the total payments which have been made.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, in connection with the Welland canal. J. P. Porter received his last payment on December 12, 1930; Lyall and Sons, on November 13, 1930; J. P. Porter on his next contract, section (B), on December 12, 1930; the Canadian Dredging Company on November 13, 1930; the Atlas Construction Company on December 11, 1930; the Canadian Dredging Company on section 7, on December 11; A. W. Robertson on November 13. In connection with the powerhouse substructure the last payment is on September 16 made to Messrs. Aiken, Inness & MacLachlan and McLachan. The Canada Cement Company was paid on December 12; payment was made on November 20 for the metal work for locks and installation; payment was made on November 20 for the steel gate, gate machinery and installation and on December 11 for the bridge superstructure. There was a payment made for transmission lines on November 11, and in connection with the Ryan contract $7,200 was paid on November 13.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That exhausted those payments?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So that we may understand the significance to be attached to the main estimates when they are brought down, I wish to ask my right hon. friend if the procedure attempted and being countenanced to-day will be followed by the administration in the next fiscal year. If for example, parliament is asked to appropriate $7,000,000 for the Welland canal in the main estimates, are we to assume that that $7,000,000 is the total amount to be spent within the next fiscal year, or will the total amount to be spent be $9,000,000 or $10,000,000, made so by orders in council passed in order to enable the contractor to continue the work? The reference to the estimates made by my right hon. friend means something or nothing, and I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my right hon. friend in making his observations has done some violence to his own equipment. It must be perfecty obvious that unless there is a contract outstanding there can be no expenditures, and the contractor has the option to finish his work within the time stipulated by his contract. We on the other hand have the option of not paying until there has been a further appropriation. We are bound however for the work done within the terms of the contract. Failure to do so constitutes a breach of contract. Therefore parliament must provide or take the consequences of the breach of contract. That is all that is involved in these payments.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, no.

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend must realize that this is not a new contract.

An hon. MEMBER: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BENNETT: If one could attach any value to what my hon. friend has muttered one certainly would not attach much importance to it as a matter of law.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not mutter anything.

Mr. BENNETT: No, my right hon. friend did not; it was an hon. member. Clause 43 reads as follows:

Should the amount voted by parliament and applicable towards payment for the works hereby contracted for, be at any time expended previous to the completion of the works, the minister or the engineer may give the contractor written notice to that effect. Upon receiving such notice the contractor may, if he thinks fit, stop the work—but shall not be entitled to any payment for work done beyond the amount voted and applicable, as aforesaid —until the necessary funds shall have been voted by parliament in that behalf. And in no event shall the contractor have or make any claim on His Majesty for any damages or compensation by reason of the suspension of payment, or by reason of any delay or loss caused by the stoppage of the work. And in the event of the contractor electing to proceed, or proceeding with such work after such notice—

Such notice was given in this case.

—and before such additional funds are voted, no action of the engineer, or of any other person on behalf of His Majesty, in giving orders, instructions, or directions, or otherwise acting with respect to such work, shall be taken or considered as in any manner improving the rights of the contractor or as waiving in any particular any of the provisions of this section.

In other words this whole contract contemplated the possibility of a contractor being ahead of the appropriations when doing his work, and such contractor took the chances. Further, in five cases out of every ten in this country a similar practice is followed. I could go further and say that it is followed in 75 per cent of the cases. The minister might expect that $25,000 would be sufficient for a particular year but he might spend $100,000. The next year the same thing might happen.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend knows better than that.

Mr. BENNETT: I know just that, and there is one instance in Edmonton at this very time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But my right hon. friend knows that appropriations are made on the recommendation of engineers of the department.

Mr. BENNETT: I know how they are cut down. The engineer may recommend $100,000 but the Prime Minister may cut it down to $50,000 and say that that is sufficient.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite right.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but that does not interfere with the validity of the contract and the necessity of paying the contract price. That is the procedure in most contracts. The complaint made by my hon. friend's leader is that the present practice is so unusual and so unheard of that the whole fabric of government is threatened and all the institutions of this country may be swept away. As a matter of fact what is being done in this case has been done in three-quarters of all the cases in this country. In all the cases I read this afternoon in connection with orders in council which were signed in July these conditions prevailed and they will continue to prevail where there is a time limit for the conclusion of the contract. The contractor takes the chance when he goes forward with his work that there will be a vote from parliament.

Mr. VENIOT: He waits for the appropriation; he does not get it the way my right hon. friend is giving it to him.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there ever a time when there is justification for the payment of the bill?

Mr. VENIOT: Only when his contract is finished, if he takes upon himself the responsibility of going ahead with the work.

Mr. BENNETT: The clause I read provides that the contractor will get his money but in the meantime he must spend his own.

Mr. VENIOT: That clause provides also that there is no possibility for payment on the part of the government unless money is voted.

Mr. BENNETT: Unless it is voted, of course not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All that my right hon. friend has read only goes to confirm the contention which we who sit on this side have made, namely that the contractor has no claim against the country for any work for which there has not been special provision made by parliament. That is the essence of the clause which my right hon. friend has read.

Mr. BENNETT: No, just the opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No matter what work he proceeds with, unless parliament has made the appropriation for that work he is not entitled to any claim whatever and, as I say, it simply confirms the statement that the ministry in this action has been taking an entirely wrong course.

Now may I come back to the Welland canal. That contract has been continuing for many years; I think it runs back ten years or more. This house has been voting a certain sum year after year for a certain amount of work to be done. I do not recall any previous year in which any of the contractors on the Welland canal ventured to go beyond the amount of work for which this parliament voted money, but this year, when parliament has appropriated $7,000,000 my hon. friends, after they come into office, say to the contractors, "Parliament has voted only $7,000,000, but you are at liberty to go ahead and incur an expenditure of $9,000,000. We have a majority in the house and we will see that you get your extra $2,000,000, if you wait until parliament reassembles." What I want to ask my right hon. friend is this: If that is the proper and legal way of proceeding this year it will be equally proper and legal next year, and if my right hon. friend comes to parliament with his estimates after the Easter recess and there is an amount included therein of $7,000,000 for the Welland canal, what guarantee has this house that this amount of $7,000,000 will represent what the government proposes to spend on the Welland canal next year? If they follow the course they are adopting now it will not be $7,000,000; it will be $9,000,000. If we allow this matter to pass and this action on the part of the ministry to become a precedent there is no reason why it should not be $10,000,000 or $11,000,000. In other words the whole principle involved in the appropriating of public moneys by vote of parliament is of no value; it becomes null and void. I say, Mr. Chairman, this is wholly irregular. I cannot understand what my right hon. friend can have in mind when in one breath he talks about the necessity of reforming the financial methods of the country, and the next moment comes before parliament and asks us to make an appropriation of $2,000,000 for work which already has been performed under order in council and not in any particular by authority of parliament.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No, Mr. Chairman; I cannot let the erroneous statements remain without making a proper explanation. Once more I say to the right hon. gentleman that he does not seem to appreciate or understand the value of a contract. According to his statement all you would have to do would be to let the contractor go ahead and finish his work and then find no money for him, and he could not get it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would not allow him to go ahead; I would have him stop when the money was used up.

Mr. BENNETT: You cannot make him stop, because you have entered into exactly the opposite kind of contract.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What was the meaning of what my right hon. friend read a moment ago?

Mr. BENNETT: That provides for this very case.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Read it.

Mr. BENNETT: I will read it again:

> Should the amount voted by parliament and applicable towards payment for the works hereby contracted for, be at any time expended previous to the completion of the works, the minister or the engineer may give the contractor written notice to that effect.

Any one who is familiar with the interpretation of contracts knows that this merely means that when the appropriation is exhausted, the contractor is so advised. Then it proceeds:

> Upon receiving such notice, the contractor may, if he thinks fit, stop the work,—but shall not be entitled to any payment for work done beyond the amount voted and applicable, as aforesaid—until the necessary funds shall have been voted by parliament in that behalf.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: What does that mean?

Mr. RALSTON: No liability until parliament votes the money.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly; the liability is there, but there is no claim. May I say to those hon. gentlemen who happen to be lawyers that in the Windsor v. Annapolis railway case the authority is contained for what I have said. If that is not sufficient authority, there is the case of Onderdonk v. the King. The third case is McEwen v. the King and the next is the case of Creelman v. the King. I happen to know about these cases because I had something to do with two of them. This paragraph which I have read merely provides that upon receiving such notice, the contractor may, if he thinks fit, stop his work. If he stops, then well and good, but he cannot stop; he must go ahead to complete the work within the time limit.

Mr. RALSTON: He does not have to go ahead if he is notified to stop.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is not what he is notified. If in a court of law counsel made a statement like that I know what the judge would say. He is told that he will have to wait for his money until parliament provides it, and that is all. All that is suggested from the other side is this: never provide him with that money and never pay for the work. In other words we are told that we should repudiate the contract by not appropriating money. Do hon. gentlemen opposite mean to say that any contractor could not get a fiat for that?

Mr. RALSTON: You do not repudiate the contract if you act according to its terms.

Mr. BENNETT: But you do not act according to the terms of it.

Mr. RALSTON: If my right hon. friend will permit me to finish, I was going to say that the contract contemplates the giving of notice and the stopping of work, and the fact that the contractor shall not be entitled to his money unless that money has been voted by parliament. He therefore does take the risk, but he knows he takes the risk when he enters into the contract. Therefore there is no repudiation.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend realizes what it says: it says he may stop work if he thinks fit. If he goes on—

Mr. RALSTON: He takes the risk.

Mr. BENNETT: The risk of what?

Mr. RALSTON: The risk of the vote never being made.

Mr. BENNETT: I had some little respect for my hon. friend's legal ability, but surely he does not mean that.

Mr. RALSTON: I say that is the risk he takes, the risk of the money never being voted.

Mr. BENNETT: The risk of parliament never voting the money?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: It is the risk the Postmaster General takes—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: I think junior counsel will add nothing to the argument. May I venture to say that my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth will remember the old maxim, "the infallible justice of the crown." The crown cannot repudiate a contract by failing to do what parliament is bound to do, having entered into a contract for a party to finish work within a fixed time, and not having voted enough money to finish it within the first year, or within the term fixed for its completion, if the contractor goes ahead and does it at this risk, the risk being that parliament must vote the money. The crown cannot escape its responsibility by failing to discharge the obligation imposed upon it by this contract, the obligation being to pay the amount required. That condition does not relieve the crown from paying.

Mr. RALSTON: The contract says he is not to be paid.

Mr. BENNETT: No, quite the opposite.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Then what was the object of the order in council?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has not read the clause which states that a definite time has been fixed within which this work is to be completed. That is the vital point in his present argument. In that connection may I remind him of what the minister in charge of this department has said. The minister told us that this additional work was gone on with in order to furnish work for the unemployed. The two statements do not hold together. The minister on the one hand says: "We spent $2,000,000 additional on the Welland canal because there were men unemployed this winter, and the government thought this was a good way to give them employment." The Prime Minister now says this $2,000,000 is required because the contract has to be completed within a specified time and it has not been so completed. I say that either one of these explanations is the correct one and the other is incorrect, or maybe both of them are incorrect. The point I should like my right hon. friend to clear up now is where in the contract the clause is which states that this work must be completed within a certain time.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid few things better illustrate the attitude of mind of the right hon. gentleman that what he has just said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Never mind my attitude of mind; let us have the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: Do not get excited; possess thy soul in patience. The illustration I had in mind with respect to a contract in which a certain time was named was given this afternoon—I had the date before me, July 30, 1930. That was the contract for the central heating in this city, and that is the case to which I referred. I had not the papers with respect to the Welland canal. I was illustrating my point and I did not say there was a definite date or that this work was done for that purpose. I said, "assume that the contractor desires to do it." Last fall, on September 7, in this house, in the remarks I then made, I pointed out that if favouring conditions made it possible the government would, on a unit basis, proceed with the work if it added no extra cost, for the purpose of providing employment to people in a given area, and I took Port Arthur by way of illustration. This, as a matter of fact, affords a second illustration, and as it happened, at the unit cost the contractor went on with his work and gave employment, to a thousand people in one instance, and several hundred in another. I cannot see that anything I have said detracts from the general principle that, in the extraordinary circumstances that arose in connection with the unemployment situation, which was a national problem, where a unit cost was fixed for the construction of works under an outstanding contract, and it was within the time fixed for the completion, if the work were expedited by the contractor for the purpose of supplying employment to a large number of people it was a perfectly legal and proper exercise of power to allow the continuance of operations. And upon parliament devolves the legal obligation, the infallible justice of the crown, at the first moment that the house meets afterwards, to supply the contractor with the money to compensate him for the work he has done. I do not think there is any doubt as to that being the practice followed in this country from time immemorial, and it will be the practice in the future. Wherever work is done within the time fixed for the completion of the contract and the contractor goes forward, takes his chance and does his work, the crown is bound at the first session to provide the money he has expended to prevent him from going into bankruptcy, as one contractor did because of the failure of the crown to supply him with the money he had expended.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We now have a third reason for the expenditure. My right hon. friend says that parliament should make provision in this way in order to prevent a contractor from going into bankruptcy.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Of course he said it; they were the last words he used before he sat down.

Mr. BENNETT: Not this contractor.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not this contractor, no. We have had three separate explanations. One is that the contractor may go into bankruptcy—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If hon. gentlemen are not anxious to have the estimates passed they may proceed as they wish. These are not our estimates; I wish to make that clear. The late Liberal administration when in office presented certain estimates to the house in the form of main estimates. They were carefully reviewed before parliament prorogued and a supplementary estimate was brought down. Hon. gentlemen opposite were then on this side and they were free to criticize the estimates. We made the statement that according to our best study—

Mr. BENNETT: There was no criticism of this item.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —what we were asking for was all that we considered necessary. With respect to the Welland canal, which is only one case in point, we asked for an expenditure of $7,000,000 for the fiscal year. That was the extent of our estimate. Now we are confronted with a supplementary estimate for $2,000,000 for the Welland canal in addition to the $7,000,000 which we said was sufficient and all that should have been expended in the last fiscal year having regard to what was being spent on other public works in other parts of the Dominion. The question which many hon. members opposite as well as members on this side are asking themselves is this: Why should the contractors on the Welland canal and up at Fort William and Port Arthur be specially favoured in one case to the extent of an additional appropriation of $2,000,000 and in the other of a quarter of a million dollars, while the contractors in other parts of the Dominion receive nothing additional and even in some cases, where we had unemployed walking the streets and parliament had made an appropriation for buildings, contractors should receive no authority even to proceed with work for which parliament had made appropriations. The excuses and circumlocutions of my right hon. friend up to the present are not adequate to satisfy us on this side of the house as to the wisdom of voting this amount at this time. I want to get from my right hon. friend before this item is passed the clause in the contract which provides that the work must be completed within a period of time.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I wish him to say that there was not such a clause.

Mr. BENNETT: I said I did not know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will wait until my right hon. friend gets the information. We are entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stands.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This house is entitled to the information. Last session we voted $20,000,000 without question for unemployment relief and now we are told that there is in connection with the Welland canal $2,000,000 spent in addition, according to the minister, for the relief of unemployment. The Prime Minister gave the explanation that it was because of some legal requirement which obliged him to see that the contractor was paid if the work was done within a certain time. And he said that no contractor should go into bankruptcy. This country is entitled to know the terms of the contract in its entirety and on what grounds we are asked to vote this extra $2,000,000. I therefore ask the Prime Minister or the minister to give the house the terms of the contract with respect to the matter, indicating the time limit within which the work should be done, together with a copy of the order in council which was passed.

Mr. BENNETT: It is within the right of hon. gentlemen if they desire to delay this estimate, and I wish them much joy in so doing. I think this country will properly appraise their value. The truth is that these men have spent this money, they have done the work. The reasons moving towards the doing of the work are matters of record. It helped unemployment and enabled them to keep their crew together. The freeze-up was later than usual and the fall was open. Not a single cent more has been expended on this work by the country on this account, and the leader of the opposition, who at one time led a government, comes into the house and tries first to raise the sectional issue. He says, "How is it that this much has been spent here and not elsewhere?" That is the sectional issue. Year after year millions of dollars have been voted in connection with the Welland canal, which is a link in a great chain of transportation. This is a very ambitious undertaking on the part of a population of less than ten millions and at a cost of $100,000,000 or more; and it will cost probably $125,000,000 or more before completion. When the minister said that the work was gone on with because it would furnish employment, that was perfectly correct; and I pointed out, as I repeat now, that this item is in the estimates because it represents toil, labour, material furnished by the contractors under the contracts—because there are many contracts, as the house knows, covering various sections of the canal. I say, therefore, that the contractors are entitled, at the first session of parliament after the work has been done, to the provision of the money necessary to compensate them for the services which they have rendered. This must be done or parliament ceases to keep faith with its own contractors.

Now, I said this afternoon that there was an order in council with respect to the matter. The minister tells me that no order in council was passed. No authorization by order in council was required for the work to be proceeded with and none was passed. They merely went ahead with the work, because there was no limitation imposed upon them to stop. They went ahead knowing that the appropriation had not been made, but they took their chance. The illustration I gave, happened to have reference to the Welland canal. Hon. gentlemen know that it is an old device to endeavour to divert an illustration to a particular case before the house. As a matter of fact, no such effort was made on my part, for I had no figures indicating when the contract was to be completed. It may have been that it should be completed years hence or when all the work was done. I did not know; I was not concerned about it. But I did give an illustration, one in which the Public Works department provided a date within which the work was to be completed. I showed that on July 26 last an order in council had been passed by the late administration. I did not for a moment suggest that it was passed improperly—in my judgment it was properly passed—because if business is to be carried on in a proper and legitimate manner work should be done without adding any cost to the public or increasing by a single cent the money that must be paid for the service rendered. This is especially so in cases where the work will give employment to several thousand people at a time when employment is at a premium. At such times it is not the privilege but the duty of a government to afford a contractor the opportunity to do the work. When, as in this case, the contractors signified their willingness to take the risk in the good faith of parliament, then I submit that it is only a proper exercise of its power that parliament should grant supply for that purpose. If this committee desires further information and asks for the production of contracts which might be brought before it when the general estimates are under consideration, that procedure will have to be followed. If it is desired to hold up this estimate for the Welland canal until to-morrow, it is always within the power of the opposition to do so. Whether or not that power is properly exercised is not for me to say; that is for them to determine. The general estimates will afford an opportunity to consider this matter in its entirety, as well as every matter which we have been discussing. Of course the identical items will not be before the committee, but so far as any discussion upon the principle of appropriation and expenditure is concerned, the general estimates will provided a most ample opportunity to secure from the ministers in charge of the respective departments such information as is desired. I submit that it has never been the custom for the house to pursue the course which my hon. friend suggests should be pursued in this case. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has said, the discussion on similar estimates in the past does not seem to have been carried on by any minister other than the Minister of Finance. They were passed very rapidly in bulk, and that seemed to be the end of them. I did think at that time, and I still think I was right in suggesting, that the widest possible explanation be given in the estimates themselves so that the members of the committee might have before them such reasonable details as it was possible to give as to how the moneys were to be made up. When the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) inquired as to this matter, I thought reasonable explanation should be forthcoming with respect to this item, as to how much each contractor earned as certified by those who checked their work. This is merely an effort to relieve them in respect of the liabilities necessarily incurred in carrying on work of this kind, and also to keep the good faith of the country with the contractors.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has referred to the opposition as having certain powers. May I remind him that the opposition has also certain duties, and the first duty of an opposition is—

Mr. BENNETT: To oppose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —to safeguard public expenditures; to see that the moneys of the people are expended in accordance with the methods provided by the constitution, and that the requirements of the law and the practices of parliament in all particulars are fully carried out. In view of the latest explanations which have been given, the situation seems to be going from bad to worse. The Prime Minister admitted this afternoon that no appropriation had been made by parliament for this purpose, and we assumed naturally that in that event there had been a governor general's warrant. My right hon. friend then said that no warrant had been issued, and we began to consider how these contractors came to have the right to receive $2,000,000 from the public treasury for expenditures incurred in connection with the construction of the canal. We assumed that the government as a whole had some responsibility in the matter, and I asked my right hon. friend how that responsibility had been assumed. I received from him the reply that an order in council had been passed. He now tells us that no order in council was passed. If we had left the matter where it was this afternoon, where my right hon. friend thought we ought to leave it in order to save time, the record would have been to the effect that an order in council had been passed and the public would have assumed that the members of the government, who have a collective responsibility, had known something of this transaction. I submit that parliament and the country have a right to assume that the Prime Minister would be very careful in making a statement of that kind. The right hon. gentleman found fault with me because I complained—I complained in the interests of the country—of his taking upon his shoulders all the work of government. If there ever was a reason why each minister of the crown should explain his own estimates, we have it in the remarks of the Prime Minister this afternoon when he, as president of the council and the one who signs the orders, told the country that an order in council had been passed authorizing this expenditure, and then comes back in the evening, after further consultation with the minister of the department, and tells us that no order was passed. What are we now reduced to by way of authority for expenditure of this $2,000,000? It has come down to the mere word of a minister. In other words, the precedent being established at this time is that under the present administration—this is the first opportunity we have had to question them on their methods—all that any contractor who has a contract for any given amount appropriated by this parliament needs to do in order to go ahead after that amount has been fully expended, is to have the direction of the minister in charge of the department to go ahead; then parliament will be asked to vote the money and because the government has a majority he will receive it in due course. My colleague to my right tells me that he does not even need that, and when I reflect upon the Prime Minister's words I am inclined to think that he is correct. From what the Prime Minister told us, all the contractor has to do is just go ahead and spend as much money as he likes and then it will be up to the infallible justice of the crown—to use the phrase that was used—to see that the amounts are paid. If that is the way in which public moneys are to be appropriated by this administration, the sooner we understand it the better, because it is altogether contrary to the proper method and it should not be sanctioned for one moment.

I have no desire to delay my hon. friend in getting his estimates through, and I think I have done as much as any one in this parliament to facilitate the passing of estimates. However, I am going to see to it that in attempting as I shall to facilitate the business of the house we receive the information to which we are entitled and that nothing is going to be put over by mere bluff.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are going to ascertain the facts and we are going to understand them.

I would ask my right hon. friend to let us have this contract and a statement of the expenditures which have been made under it so that we may consider it. In the meantime, the item might stand over until to-morrow.

Mr. BENNETT: It was my impression that an order had been passed. Upon inquiry, I found that although preparation had been made for an order in council the legal advisers of the department were of the opinion that it was unnecessary. Whereupon the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals wrote to each contractor, in the following words:

It is the desire of the Department of Railways and Canals that the construction of the said works be continued, without suspension thereof, pending the voting by parliament of the necessary funds therefor, and, in the event of your electing under the provisions of clause 43 aforesaid to so continue the construction of the said works, I have to assure you that early in the coming session parliament will be asked to vote an additional amount to make payment under the said contract for the construction of the works so continued.

That was signed by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Addressed to whom?

Mr. BENNETT: Addressed to each of the contractors.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That makes it worse than ever.

Mr. BENNETT: That letter was dated December 27, 1930. The contractors had represented that owing to the conditions then existing they could continue the work without cessation at the same unit price, supply some employment to the unemployed, and carry forward their undertaking. That is the contract which has always existed with reference to that work; there was no change. I regret having made the statement that an order in council had been passed. The question was asked and I answered as I did knowing that the material for an order in council had been prepared by the minister. I recalled later that the legal opinion was that it was unnecessary to have an order in council. The terms of the contract were such that it was sufficient that a notice be given by the deputy miinster, and the letter I have just read contains the terms under which they continued their work.

I would be the last person in the world to suggest that an opposition should fail in its duty, but I find it difficult to understand just what is involved in the production of a dozen contracts that I have not seen, that were made, as the right hon. gentleman said, at least ten years ago, and that are still in force and effect and will be for some time. I am not conscious of endeavouring to withhold from the committee any information and I think I have given it somewhat fuller information than ever before has been placed upon the records in connection with supplementary estimates, not for a further year but with respect to a period that has passed. I think in previous years you will look in vain for details with respect to similar estimates.

Mr. POWER: Was the letter which has just been read written at the request of the contractor?

Mr. BENNETT: It was written after the contractor and the deputy minister had had a conference, in order to regularize a matter having regard to section 43 of the contract, which section I read a few minutes ago.

Mr. POWER: Does that not put a different interpretation on the matter from the one the right hon. gentleman has given? We find now that a new contract has been entered into between the Department of Railways and the contractor; or rather, it is not a new contract but they have authorized an obligation binding upon the so-called infallible justice of the crown, because it is a written contract. As the Prime Minister explained his position to us, he stated that under the old contract as he read it to the committee, the crown was bound to make payments for this work provided that the contractor decided to carry on, and this was at the contractor's option. Now we find from the letter which the Prime Minister has read that these contractors, as a result of conference with the deputy minister, exacted from the deputy minister a letter regularizing their position.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps it would help the matter if the hon. gentleman had the other part of the letter. I was directing myself entirely to one portion of it.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. gentleman will not put all the facts before us, how are we to judge?

Mr. BENNETT: The other part shows the contract that was referred to. I did not think it necessary to read it, and I do not think my hon. friend would have done so had he been in my place. It is as follows:

In accordance with the provisions of clause 43 of your contract No. 24275, dated the 18th day of August, 1921, entered into with His Majesty the King, therein represented by the Minister of Railways and Canals, for the construction and completion of sections Nos. 1 and 2 of the Welland Ship canal, I hereby give you notice that the amount voted by parliament and applicable towards payment for the works thereby contracted for has been expended.

Then came the second part which is exactly within the terms of section 43.

Mr. RALSTON: No. The second one is not within the terms of section 43.

Mr. BENNETT: The second paragraph quotes it.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the paragraph not suggest that the contractors go on with the work and promise to get a vote of parliament? What the minister is doing is asking parliament to make good this letter written by the deputy minister.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. MEMBER: Another legal mind.

Mr. DUFF: No it is not a legal mind. Perhaps it is just as well for the lawyers to let the rest of us have an opportunity to discuss the matter. Am I right in assuming that the Deputy Minister of Railways wrote that letter to the contractor on the advice and instruction of the minister?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): If the letter had not been sent, would that money have been due to the contractors, according to the contract?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, the money would still be due without the letter.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Were there accounts still pending?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, there are large accounts pending and the country would still be liable. The contractor chose to go on.

Mr. DUPUIS: I would ask the Prime Minister to produce the letter and give the date of it.

Mr. BENNETT: I did. It is dated 23rd December, 1930.

Mr. DUPUIS: I understand a large part of the $2,000,000 was already spent at that time.

Mr. MANION: None of it.

Mr. BENNETT: Not at that time. I gave the date of the last payment in answer to a question of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DUPUIS: That is not the date the work was done.

Mr. BENNETT: The work was done subsequently to that and the amount of work done by Porter came to $40,000, that done by Peter Lyall and Sons to $203,000, and so on, making a little over $2,000,000.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. POWER: Would the hon. gentleman put on Hansard the names of those who are to profit by this $2,000,000?

Mr. BENNETT: I gave them to Hansard a moment or two ago in answer to my right hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It seems to me that this is a most extraordinary situation. As I understand it—and I trust the Prime Minister, or his deputy, the Minister of Railways and Canals, will correct me if I am wrong—last year at the regular session parliament voted the sum of $7,000,000 for the Welland canal. I understand there is on record a letter from the deputy minister to the contractor, advising him that that amount of money was exhausted, that is, the amount legally and properly voted by last year's parliament. I further understand that the Prime Minister, in explaining the matter to parliament to-day, said that in speaking of the $20,000,000 voted last year at the special session for unemployment relief, he referred to certain possible undertakings, including perhaps the undertaking which we are now discussing, which might have to be resorted to by the government in order to relieve unemployment throughout Canada. If this amount of $2,000,000 had been taken out of the unemployment relief fund regularly voted by parliament, I would raise no objection whatsoever. But the point is this: it is much worse than proceeding by order in council. Here you have a contractor or a number of contractors carrying on public undertakings in the Dominion of Canada on the signed letter of a deputy minister of the crown without ever having received the authority of parliament. That is the situation and I suggest to the Prime Minister that these contractors financed their undertakings from the banks on the authority of a letter from the deputy minister, which letter has been produced by the Prime Minister. Therefore we are in the position to-day that a letter from a permanent official of the crown is supplementing the regular authority of parliament when a vote becomes a grant. During the special session of parliament, the Prime Minister took away from parliament its power over taxation. He is now taking away from parliament its control over public contracts throughout the Dominion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Do I understand that two letters were written by the deputy minister to the contractor, one stating that the amount of money appropriated was exhausted, and the other advising the various contractors that they could go on with their work and be paid afterwards by amounts of money that would be voted by parliament? If there are two such letters, I ask the government to produce them.

Mr. MANION: There was just one.

Mr. BENNETT: I said there was only one, and I read it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Both statements, I understand, were in the same letter.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): In view of the anxiety regarding unemployment, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the policy followed in connection with the Welland canal was the policy followed by this government after July 28 last, in connection with other government contracts?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Prime Minister has, of course, taken the leadership with regard to the supplementary estimates, but every minister of the government of which I was a member used to be instructed to be in his place in the house and to be prepared to answer any question which might arise in respect to his department. It has taken a long time to produce this letter, but we know now that this government is irrevocably committed to paying this two million dollars.

Mr. MANION: So was your government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not necessarily. I beg to differ.

Mr. MANION: The contract was there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The contract was there, I admit, but parliament up to a recent date had authority even over contracts. If the situation is to be changed, we had better know it. If the government of the day and contractors are to be all-powerful and to supersede parliament, the sooner we know it the better. But the government of which I was a member did not proceed in that way. I do not suggest that governments can repudiate contracts, but it surely would be a nice thing to have a progressive contract running over two or three years and parliament having no control over the expenditure until the work was done.

Mr. MANION: We have control. We are dealing with the matter now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg to differ. Year after year estimates were brought down for the Welland canal and voted by parliament. The expenditures were made under those estimates, and when the estimates ceased, the work ceased. That has been the system pursued with respect to work on the Welland canal. I am willing to admit that last year was an exceptional year, and if our hon. friends opposite had told us that this work was undertaken for the purpose of giving employment, and if the letter binding the government had been produced, I do not think the government would have had as much trouble as they are having this evening over this particular item.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member for Northumberland has asked a question to which I think he is entitled to an answer. I confess that we are still a little in doubt as to what the attitude or policy of the government is in this matter. As I said a moment ago, the Prime Minister has indicated that in some way or another it related to the time factor and to legal conditions of the contract, but I am prepared to take the word of the minister of the department, who was of the view which the Prime Minister subsequently veered round to, that this work was in part gone on with because of the unemployment conditions existing. I shall not inquire too far, but will say that apparently such was the policy, to provide work for the relief of unemployment. The question which the hon. member for Northumberland has asked is whether that policy was adopted with respect to other works in Canada or whether it was confined to work on the Welland canal. If that was the policy, and it applied to other works, what were the other works to which it applied? I think we are entitled to an answer to that question.

Mr. McGIBBON: As a member representing largely a labour riding I am very pleased indeed at the attitude of the opposition tonight on this question. The leader of the opposition has just stated that in his opinion the government did this work to relieve unemployment, and yet we find him and his own party condemning the government for having spent two million dollars to help relieve the unemployment situation in this country.

Mr. DUPUIS: We are not condemning the government. We are asking for information.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are camouflaging. For hours this evening the party opposite has been condemning the government for spending this two million dollars, and it was not two million dollars of their own money. The contractors spent the money, and it did not cost the Dominion government one extra dollar. The party opposite has objected to paying the contractors for the money they spent on that work. That is the situation we find in this house to-night, and as a member representing to a large extent a labouring constituency I am glad that the opposition have made their attitude known.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I ask if the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario was speaking for the Prime Minister or for the Minister of Railways?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know how carefully the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has been following the discussion, but certainly he has heard no word from my lips condemning any assistance given to relieve unemployment. What I have been trying to ascertain, and am still trying to ascertain from the government, is whether this work was undertaken for the purpose of relieving unemployment. If that was part of the government's policy, I am asking whether that policy was confined to the work on the Welland canal or extended to other public works in this country; and if so, what those public works were. I am asking for that information and would like my right hon. friend to give an answer.

Mr. BENNETT: I did state to the committee this afternoon that the government had taken the estimates prepared by hon. gentlemen opposite, and so far as was reasonably possible, where the situation warranted it, the government called for tenders and carried on contracts for the purpose of supplying the public works required; and especially was that so where by so doing employment would be furnished to anyone. That is what was done. If hon. gentlemen, when the main estimates are before the house, will take the estimates of last year and compare them with the expenditures made during the year, with the contracts outstanding and the sums of money that it will be essential to vote in the main estimates to carry to completion the works thus started, I think they will agree that, to a very large degree, a real and earnest effort has been made to carry out wherever possible undertakings that would not only meet the public demands but help also to supply employment to those who needed it.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): I am not satisfied from the evidence I have at hand that the policy referred to by the Prime Minister with regard to the Welland canal was made applicable to other government contracts.

Mr. RALSTON: I understood the Prime Minister to say that the committee would be given the benefit of a copy of the order in council. I presume he will bring down also whatever other documents are relevant.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. BENNETT: I said there was no order in council.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg pardon—the contract.

Mr. BENNETT: Do not have any misunderstanding. I did not say the contract. I said that the production of it would serve no useful purpose.

Mr. RALSTON: If my right hon. friend has not already agreed to that, I do wish to point out that enough has been revealed in this discussion, I think, to show that we cannot be perfectly clear as to what is in the contract or what documents are on file without having them produced.

Mr. BENNETT: You ought to know what is in the contract. You made it ten years ago.

Mr. RALSTON: We do not carry the details in our heads.

Mr. BENNETT: But you expect other people to do so.

Mr. RALSTON: Probably if we had been as close to it as my right hon. friend we would have remembered whether there was any time limit, which is, I understand, one of the essential points which was suggested by my right hon. friend as constituting a ground for liability. We do not know whether there was a time limit or not.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not suggest that there was a time limit, because I said that I did not know what was in it.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend was giving that as a reason generally why there was liability under these contracts and why we had to pay a contractor because, he said, there was a time limit in most of these contracts, and if the contractor did his work on time we were liable to him whether parliament voted the money or not. I understand now that the Prime Minister does not know whether there is a time limit in the contract or not. That can only be decided by an inspection of the contract itself. Secondly, it was thought that there was an order in council extending the time and asking the contractors to go ahead. Apparently that is not correct; there was nothing more than a draft order in council which it was not considered necessary to pass in view of the advice of the law officers of the crown. But the remarkable thing that has come out in this discussion is the letter which my right hon. friend has read. The term of the contract is that if the appropriation has run out the government may give notice that the appropriation has expired and then if the contractor goes on he does so at his own risk. Apparently the government wanted the contractor to go on notwithstanding the fact that the appropriation had expired. If they wanted him to go on why did they give notice at all? What is the use of this stop and start notice—and that is all it is—all in the same breath? One minute the government says the appropriation has expired, with the consequences which the contract specifies but, the next minute it says in effect: "Even though there is no appropriation and even though the contract says you go on at your own risk, go ahead; we shall be very glad if you will go on and we will put a vote before parliament at the next session." That is the situation as it appears so far from the documents we have heard, and I feel, as do many other hon. members, that we ought to see the contract and ought to see all the documents just to ascertain the real attitude of the government in regard to the expenditure of this money. It is not a question of criticizing the expenditure if made for the purpose of unemployment; it is a question of the regularity of expenditures and the policy which this government is following in connection with expenditures without previous parliamentary authority. We want to know when we enter into a contract whether the contractor must stop if the money runs out, or if he goes on, does he do so at his own risk. We want to know whether the deputy minister can simply write a letter and do away with the express provision of the contract, and make it absolutely obligatory under the principle of the "infallible justice of the crown" which so often this evening has been invoked that parliament should vote this money. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that you should not press the vote and that your repeated suggestions that the vote "carry" might perhaps be discontinued, if you do not mind. I would suggest that the vote be not carried until the Prime Minister brings down the contract and other documents.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I ask the Prime Minister if it is possible with the documents he has in hand to tell this committee how much of the $2,000,000 was paid as salaries to ordinary working men?

Mr. BENNETT: Roughly speaking I would say in reply there were 2,000 men employed. They were employed during the months of December, January, February and March. The major part of the money expended would be for wages.

Mr. DUPUIS: The amount is not available?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On behalf of the opposition I am asking the Prime Minister to produce the contract under which these moneys are being paid. Do I understand that he refuses to produce the contract?

Mr. BENNETT: This is the contract under which the right hon. gentleman has for a period of nine years made payments. It is a contract with which every member of his government is thoroughly familiar. It is not here. It is dated August 18, 1921, and there have been no alterations whatever in it. I refer to one of the Porter contracts; the others may have been on different dates No possible purpose can be served in having it here, and it is not sought for any useful purpose.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The last remark of my right hon. friend is altogether gratuitous and very much out of order. May I say to the Prime Minister that it is quite conceivable that the original contract might contain in it clauses which would prohibit anything in the nature of the action he has taken, and that may be the reason he is trying to keep from this parliament and the country the contract in question. I venture to say my right hon. friend cannot suggest an instance in the history of this parliament where parliament has been asked to vote money under a contract and has been refused the right to see the contract itself. My right hon. friend knows very well that hon. members on this side of the house do not remember the terms of contracts which were passed many years ago. He knows also that no one on this side of the house has attempted to manage the affairs of all the departments of government, or to carry in his mind all the particulars referring to all matters in all departments. We are entitled to the information. I hope the Prime Minister will realize the seriousness of declining to give to this house a contract under which he asks us to vote the sum of $2,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I know, Mr. Chairman, there has never been a case in which a contract upon which payments have been made for ten years has been sought by the opposition. Does the right hon. gentleman remember any such contract?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No payments were made by the opposition in this matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Did anybody ever hear of such a thing? What relevance has it to this issue? What relevance has it to the payment of $2,000,000 for services rendered and work done?

Mr. RALSTON: Why did my right hon. friend bring down the clause in the contract?

Mr. BENNETT: It was obtained by one of my hon. friends at dinner time for the purpose of indicating that there was authority to pass the amount.

Mr. RALSTON: It is remarkable that we are not entitled to see the other clauses of the contract.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point; the contract is not here and the offices are closed. If it had been asked for before dinner it would have been here.

An hon. MEMBER: Get it to-morrow.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be obtained for to-morrow if the hon. members wish to tie up the estimates. The only question in my mind is whether or not it is right and in the interests of the country to tie up the country's business in this way. This is a contract in connection with which the previous government had knowledge and under which money has been paid for nine years; yet my hon. friends opposite want the people to understand that their solicitude for the public interest is so great that now, on this last day of the fiscal year, they must have the contract before payment upon it can be made. My hon. friends talk about their solicitude for the public interest; yet they want to see a contract nine years old. May I ask the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) who has become so virtuous in his observations in reference to parliamentary institutions and payments from the federal treasury, if he got a governor general's warrant to pay the cost of putting in certain flooring for a political favourite just before the last election? Did he or did he not? Was a governor general's warrant laid upon the table of the house in the early days of the session concerning Mr. Marshall, a former resident of Edmonton and a contractor, giving him money as a gift, by warrant, just before an election?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For doing what?

Mr. BENNETT: For doing certain work in connection with an elevator in the city of Edmonton.

Mr. DUPUIS: Amounting to about $25.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is not clever.

Mr. DUPUIS: The Prime Minister says I am not clever.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. DUPUIS: I rise to a point of order. I think the right hon. gentleman has no right to say that.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman is rising to a point of order he must state the point of order, and the Prime Minister will sit down.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the point of order?

Mr. DUPUIS: I would like to know if the right hon. gentleman, who has the reputation of being a one-man government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUPUIS: Just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN: What is the point of order?

Mr. DUPUIS: I would like to know if he is so much a judge as to reflect on an hon. member of this house in a way that is not parliamentary.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must state his point of order and not make a speech. While I am chairman the rules of the house must be observed, and if hon. members are not satisfied let them appeal to the house.

Mr. DUPUIS: My point of order, Mr. Chairman, is this: I protest, not because of myself—

The CHAIRMAN: That is not a point of order.

Mr. DUPUIS: I protest against the term used by the right hon. gentleman, and I ask him to withdraw it, not because of my humble person, but because I am one of the representatives of the people here and he has no right to say that about me. I remember that the right hon. gentleman was called a humbug, and he did not like it, so I do not like him to say that about me. I would like the right hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

The CHAIRMAN: Will the hon. member state his point of order?

Mr. DUPUIS: I would like the right hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement.

The CHAIRMAN: To withdraw what?

Mr. DUPUIS: That expression.

The CHAIRMAN: What expression? My hon. friend must understand I cannot hear everything that goes on in this house. If the hon. member will state which expression he wishes to be withdrawn I will decide on the matter, but I do not know to what expression he has reference. If he does not know himself I cannot guess it.

Mr. DUPUIS: Of course I do not want to go very far with this matter, Mr. Chairman, but you know very well that this expression is not parliamentary.

The CHAIRMAN: What expression? If my hon. friend will state it I will be able to give a ruling. If it is not parliamentary I will ask the right hon. Prime Minister to withdraw it, but the hon. member must state which expression he means.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am very sorry that the Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot hear everything.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am very sorry—

The CHAIRMAN: I will ask the hon. member once more to state his point of order, and if he does not do so I will ask him to take his seat.

Mr. DUPUIS: If the chairman will allow me to speak I will state my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot allow the hon. member to make a speech; he must state his point of order, because he has risen to it.

Mr. FAFARD: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, if I were to say that the deputy speaker of the house was not clever, would I have to withdraw that expression?

The CHAIRMAN: Is that the point of order my hon. friend is raising? If so, I would not consider it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. BENNETT: After these interruptions, Mr. Chairman, I will proceed. I can quite understand, as I said, the solicitude for the public interest which is shown by hon. members opposite, but I find it a little difficult to appreciate in view of the fact that this is a contract under which, according to the statement which was just made, over $7,000,000 was voted last year. It is the same contract with the same people; payment is to be made to them for the same class of services, certified by the same inspectors. The only difference is that they continued their work beyond the appropriation that was made by parliament at the last session.

Mr. RALSTON: And that is the difference.

Mr. BENNETT: Just what does that involve? Every contract made in this country is open to that construction, and in five cases out of ten that has been done. Looking through the parliamentary proceedings I see no record of any effort to challenge that procedure in respect to contracts sanctioned by parliament. If this contract had not been sanctioned by parliament I could understand it, but under the circumstances hon. members will agree that the time of the house is being needlessly taken up. What will the production of the contract do? What purpose can be served by it? That is the real point. The house has a right to cognizance of the contract. In the main estimates we must vote further moneys for this canal; there are balances still due, and the house once more will determine whether the contract in respect to which the Liberal government voted money for nine years will continue to have money voted under it for two years by a Conservative government. All the hullabaloo has been raised on this point. To quote the language of the right hon. leader of the opposition, is this elevating to the reputation of parliament? Is this calculated to enhance its value in the minds of the public? Is this giving a finer appreciation of the value of parliamentary institutions to those who look on from afar? These are questions which the right hon. gentleman asks so frequently that I may be pardoned if I venture now to make the same inquiry. Apparently the idea is to tie up parliament, to prevent the business from being transacted, because you cannot have brought before you to-night a certain document to which no reference was made before six o'clock. Hon. gentlemen opposite knew the offices would be closed after six, that there would be no opportunity to get the document after that hour, but now they ask that the contract be produced. They gave no notice of such a wish before the dinner adjournment; they indicated no desire of that kind in all the time they had at their disposal. Now, when the vaults are closed and the offices empty, they wish to get the contract in order to delay this item. Well, they can get the delay they desire; I can wait as well as they can wait. I am not in the least worried about it. I hope they will enhance their position before the people of this country, and that my right hon. friend will have the opportunity of referring to the high place that parliamentary institutions must hold in the minds of the people. He should have ample opportunity for making such references, in view of the scenes we have witnessed during the last few minutes. An hon. gentleman opposite rose to a point of order when I remarked about his reference to a governor general's warrant that paid Mr. Robert Marshall something over $25 for work done. I said the hon. gentleman was not clever when he made that reference. Does anyone say he is clever in making an observation of that character? I will leave it at that. Five or ten minutes go by; a whispered consultation is held; the rear troops are brought up; the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) tells the hon. gentleman what he should do in order to put himself right. The spectacle goes on, and we are told that this is a sign and a symbol of cleverness in the parliament of Canada. Well, Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned I think this item should pass. We can stay here for another hour, however, and let the people see the spectacle if hon. gentlemen opposite insist.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister is fond of using the expression "what a spectacle" and of referring to the amount of time consumed in unnecessary discussion. If my right hon. friend will take time to look over Hansard to-morrow he will be surprised to see the spectacle he has made of himself during this evening, and the amount of time he as Prime Minister has taken up in the house in regard to this one particular item, giving first one version, then another, none of them correlated or consistent one with the other.

May I make our position very clear. We are asked to vote $2,000,000, which is not a small sum, under a contract the terms of which are not known to this house at the present time.

Mr. COTNAM: You had them under your fingers for nine years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. gentleman's government has had them recently in the council chamber, and I venture to say he does not know anything about them.

Mr. SPENCE: You must be in the same boat; you do not know anything about them either.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is why I am asking for them. The Prime Minister has said he does not know what they are; the Minister of Railways does not know the terms of the contract, and there is not an hon. member of this house who knows those terms. All we are asking now is to be permitted to see the contract in order to learn what are the terms.

[Mr. Bennett.]

An hon. MEMBER: But you voted money on it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and it has been stated that we entered into the contract at the start. If a Liberal government entered into that contract, if I am not mistaken, it will be found that there is a clause in it providing that unless the moneys are appropriated by parliament they shall not be available for any of the work. And if that clause is there it furnishes a very good reason why my right hon. friend may not wish to produce the contract to-night or at any time. I am not asking him to discontinue the whole discussion until the contract is produced. I said fully an hour ago that I thought it would be well for the item to stand until the contract was produced, and I am still of the opinion that it should stand until then. Obviously it cannot be produced to-night. But there are a good many more estimates still to be discussed. If the Prime Minister refuses to produce the contract and wishes to have the discussion continue until it is produced, that must be his responsibility. We are anxious to facilitate the business of the house and get on with the items, but we are going to know the terms of that contract before we vote $2,000,000 under it.

Mr. BENNETT: Had the request for the contract been made before six o'clock the contract would have been secured, but the staff of the Department of Railways and Canals does not work at night, and these contracts are treated as having some value. One of the deputies hearing the discussion this afternoon obtained a copy of the letter and also section 43 of the Porter contract which I read to the house, believing that these were the only important clauses to read. This matter must come before the house on the main estimates, and I will undertake to produce the contract and, if desired, have copies made before that time. But so far as this item is concerned I cannot see that it has reference to it at all. I do not think any purpose can be served, so far as the passing of this item is concerned, by the production of the contract, and it would be very much to be regretted if the House of Commons took the attitude of one party saying, "We will not go on until you produce the contract," and the other party saying, "We will." I am perfectly frank in saying that the house has a right to the contract and we shall be glad to table it. But I cannot produce it when I have no notice, and did not know that it would be called for, seeing that it is a contract which has been nine years in force and under which my hon. friends have voted very large sums of money indeed. The relevant section—at least the section which I thought relevant—the minister got one of the deputies to get for him. He sent word out as soon as the question was raised, hoping that he might procure it, but he has not got it. It cannot be produced at the moment. That is what I am informed. I shall be very glad indeed to lay on the table of the house copies of the Welland canal contracts, and before the main estimates are considered there will be ample opportunity to do so. The truth is, I am sorry to say, that I treated these supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1931, in perhaps a much more casual way than I should have because I had been under the impression that the expenditures having been made and the obligations incurred, parliament as a matter of course would authorize them. In connection with the main estimates there will be every opportunity for discussing any question involved, or giving any information desired. If I were in the position of the leader of the opposition I would endeavour to obtain all the information that might possibly be procurable; but no one has ever heard me suggesting that we should ask for information with respect to a contract if it were merely a contract upon which payment had been made for seven or eight years. The time to do that is when the contract is first brought to the attention of the house, and usually this is done. I believe, in this case, the same thing occurred. The contract, I think, was made in August, 1921. Perhaps it was after the government came in, but I believe I read that it was made in August, 1921. That was one contract, because there are various contracts in connection with the various sections, bearing different dates. I can only say that the items are here and to-morrow is the last day in the fiscal year in which these moneys can be paid. That is all there is about it, and if the opposition takes the view that they should not be paid, we will endeavour to do the best we can. In the past, however, it has been customary to pass these estimates without much discussion. It is true the pages of Hansard will show that I took a great deal of space making explanations, but these explanations were made not because I desired to give them at length but because I was asked by the house itself to make them. And if the reasons I have given lack coherence I can only say that there were many considerations that led to our purpose, which we believed to be in the public interest, to vote the money to which the contractors are entitled.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend has made reference to some contract undertaken by one Mr. Marshall for which I am accused of getting a governor general's warrant to pay for the work done. He has not offered any explanation. I am bound to say I do not remember the matter at all, but if Mr. Marshall was paid by order in council, undoubtedly the government knew all about it, and I cannot see why my right hon. friend should at this time make reference to this particular question. So far as my memory serves me, I never asked the government to grant me a warrant which was not justified and necessary in the public interest. Let me say to my right hon. friend that if he expects to get estimates through he will find that the quickest way is to produce all papers asked for, or to allow an item to stand until they are produced. Nor was he recreant in his duty in asking ministers, when we were on that side, to produce papers before an item was passed. We are well within our rights in asking for all information and for all papers, and it will not hurt my right hon. friend to allow the item to stand until to-morrow, seeing that he still has a great many more items to pass.

Mr. BENNETT: The sage observations offered by my hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and the advice tendered may be most excellent; I fancy they are. But they have no application to this particular case, because this afternoon when the question was raised I asked that the item stand and I supplied in detail the information requested. Had the opposition asked for the production of the contracts they would have been here to-night. But we were not asked for their production.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No sage observations have been made. So far as I am personally concerned I do not like references to past actions on my part without full opportunity being given to review them, when an impression is left or sought to be left that there is something wrong somewhere about the transaction. I may say to my right hon. friend that any time he attempts that with me he will not get away with it without a reasonable explanation. There is nothing sage about that statement. May I observe, however, that he, himself, tendered some sage advice across the floor when we were sitting on the side he and his followers now occupy. And we were bound by what he at that time decided was in the best interests of the public—we produced whatever was asked for.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will have, produced from the files and laid on the table of the house, the original with respect to the matter. He brought the criticism on himself.

Mr. IRVINE: I have been listening with great care to the discussion that has been going on between the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition. I have been doing my best to discover what the real issue is and to endeavour to come to some conclusion respecting it. The whole spectacle this evening proves the contention I have often put forward in this house, that the committee of the whole is not a very good place in which to discuss any estimate. I hope some day we shall have more adequate facilities provided. It is significant that for very many years money has been voted by parliament in connection with the contract at present under discussion. The challenge that no one knows what is in that contract has been issued and no one has taken it up. Having voted so much money during all these years without knowing what is in the contract, I do not mind doing it once more. I do not see that we will be doing more harm than has been done already. To me all this discussion seems to be nothing more than red tape. The declaration has been made that this vote is irregular. If I understood the Prime Minister correctly, he said that it is not irregular, it has been done before by hon. gentlemen on this side. That has not been denied, and therefore I can only conclude that if it is irregular it has been done before. Having been done before, why not go ahead and be irregular some more? This discussion is simply red tape. The amount will have to be paid. If it is authorized by the contract it will have to be paid; if it is authorized by the government apart from the contract it will have to be paid, and so it does not make much difference to me personally whether we vote this to-night or to-morrow.

Something has been said about the authority of parliament being jeopardized by this vote. Parliament never had any authority except the authority of the governing party. That authority comes from the cabinet, and that has been the only authority exercised by this parliament ever since I entered this chamber. I see no reason why we should object to following the same system. Perhaps we should have a better one, but although I have contended for a change, the right hon. leader of the opposition did not see fit to bring that about when he was Prime Minister. I see no reason for holding up this vote, particularly when we are advised that under the contract the company was authorized to carry on because of unemployment conditions. We know that such conditions existed and we know that such work would give employment to many men. We know they got work and in view of that I think this is an excellent time for conciliation. I enjoyed the speech of the leader of the opposition on conciliation in connection with the Imperial conference; if that is good for the Imperial conference it is a most excellent thing for the parliament of Canada. Let us have some conciliation and let us have it now and get on with the business of the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: The original Johnston P. Porter contract has been secured by the Minister of Railways and Canals. It being an original document, obviously it cannot be laid upon the table. However, I will pass it over to my right hon. friend. The contract which is dated August 18, 1921, was authorized by order in council dated August 13, 1921. It calls for the construction of sections 1 and 2 of the Welland ship canal to be completed by March 31, 1925. Security of $400,000 was furnished. This matter is covered by departmental records file No. 14902, and the insurance policies required by section 125 were filed. The time for completion was extended to March 31, 1927, by a supplemental agreement which is attached to the contract. It was later extended to March 31, 1929, by order in council. It was again extended to June 30, 1930, by order in council dated March 16, 1929. It was finally extended to March 31, 1931, by a supplemental agreement dated January 8, 1931, which is attached to the contract.

Mr. POWER: A great deal of this information is new to us, especially that in connection with the supplemental agreement dated January 8, 1931.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the same as those of 1927 and 1929.

Mr. VENIOT: Why have not we the right to see that?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not dispute the hon. member's right to see it.

Mr. POWER: We have been told all afternoon that there was no new contract.

Mr. BENNETT: Neither there was.

Mr. POWER: I should say that a supplementary agreement would be very similar to a contract.

Mr. BENNETT: It merely extends the time for completion.

Mr. POWER: It is a new condition.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. POWER: The time was extended. Although it may have no great bearing, I think we have occasion to resent the right hon. gentleman's manner towards us during the course of the afternoon. No one on this side of the chamber had an idea other than that this contract had been authorized by order in council, and so we did not ask for its production.

Mr. BENNETT: The original contract was authorized by order in council.

Mr. POWER: I am sorry if the right hon. gentleman misunderstood me. When the matter was being under discussion this afternoon we were given to understand that this $2,000,000 vote was an amount authorized by order in council. Before six o'clock we did not ask for the production of the contract because we did not think it was necessary, but after the dinner recess the right hon. gentleman moved from one position to another. He then proceeded to cite one clause of the contract without laying the complete contract upon the table of the house as he should have done. He knows very well that had we raised a point of order and asked the Chairman to require the production of the contract he would have been obliged under the rules of this house to produce it.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Mr. POWER: As the right hon. gentleman thinks not, the next time a similar question arises we will ask for a ruling from the Chairman. In any case it was only after the dinner recess that this matter of a contract came up. A clause from the contract was cited and a letter was read, and now we find that there was a supplementary contract. I submit that events have shown that we were perfectly justified in requesting the information which we have received from the right hon. gentleman. He has laid great stress upon the fact that this contract has been in existence for nine years, and that millions of dollars have been voted under it, but I would call his attention to the fact that on every occasion upon which moneys were voted on this contract there were in their seats some responsible ministers who were prepared to give explanations. To-night we had the right hon. minister stating that he knew nothing about a contract; he gave us to understand that the Minister of Railways and Canals was not familiar with the details—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—and he said: You must vote the money under this because you have voted money already. I submit that we are entitled to differentiate between the manner in which this contract has been treated in other years and the manner in which it should be treated this year.

A further reference was made by the right hon. gentleman which might be rather annoying to hon. members on this side of the chamber. He has intimated that on the last days of the fiscal year we are endeavouring to obstruct or to retard the progress of this estimate. The right hon. gentleman could have brought these estimates down last week.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he could not.

Mr. POWER: Why could he not?

Mr. BENNETT: He could not bring them down until he obtained the consent of the house.

Mr. POWER: He could have obtained that consent last Monday; there was no necessity for waiting until the last days of the fiscal year in order to bring them down. We are being asked to vote $2,000,000 without having any information or without being permitted to have the documents to which we are entitled.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my right hon. friend for having produced this contract. The production is all the more remarkable because the Prime Minister told us only a moment ago that the vaults were locked and the clerks were in bed and therefore it was impossible to get anything. However, it is here and he has been kind enough to give it to us. I believe I have discovered the reason why my right hon. friend did not wish to produce this contract. The latest version with respect to the matter was that there was no order in council. I find here a definite contract reading:

> This agreement made the 8th day of January, 1931, between Johnston P. Porter, of the city of Halifax, in the county of Halifax and province of Nova Scotia, of the first part, and His Majesty the King represented herein by the Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, of the second part.

This is a formal contract signed by Mr. Porter, the contractor, and the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, but in this formal contract there is reference to an order in council in virtue of which this present contract has been entered into.

Mr. MANION: Is that not just an extension of the contract?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but it is in virtue of an order in council granting an extension of time that it has been possible to make a new contract. I hope the hon. member for Wetaskiwin will not hold us lacking in any desire to be conciliatory when we are simply endeavouring to get at the terms of contracts which are for expenditures involving millions of dollars. One of the reasons given for this contract is as follows:

And whereas, under and by virtue of an order in council (P.C. 2303) dated the 30th September, 1930, authority has been given to the further extension of the time for the completion of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275, by the party of the first part, to the 31st day of March, 1931.

Mr. BENNETT: That was not the order in council my right hon. friend was talking about.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is an order in council pertaining to the contract and in virtue of which the contract was made.

Mr. BENNETT: Not for $2,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In virtue of which the agreement respecting the $2,000,000 expenditure which we are being asked to make good to-night was entered into.

Mr. MANION: The right hon. gentleman's own government during its regime extended the contract three times, and since we came in we extended it once. This is just an extension of the contract. There is no change in it. The ex-Minister of Marine nods his head. He agrees with me.

Mr. RALSTON: It is quite right that we extended the contract.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I come to the original contract. We have now an order in council which extends the time under which this work is to be done, an order in council of which the house up to this moment had received no information and of which it would have had no knowledge but for the production of the document in consequence of all the efforts we made this afternoon and evening to obtain it. In virtue of the extension of time given by order in council of September 30, the Minister of Railways and Canals subsequently had a contract entered into between the contractor and his deputy.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the date of the order in council?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The order in council extending the time is dated September 30, 1930, a rather significant date. After we had had the special session of parliament, after parliament had voted $20,000,000 to aid unemployment, and after my right hon. friend had had an opportunity to ask parliament for any privilege or right which he wished to have with respect to meeting the unemployment situation, it is then that the government by order in council extends the time of this contract. Then we come to the month of December.

Sir EUGENE FISET: When the appropriation voted for that same year had expired.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On September 30 there still was some of the appropriation, but after that the appropriation had expired—

Mr. BENNETT: The appropriation had not expired.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not the whole of it in September, but my right hon. friend and his colleagues were paving the way for this further amount to be authorized later on.

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister was away.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not imagine my right hon. friend's colleagues did anything without his full knowledge. Even if he were away, I think he knew all about it. But this agreement is dated the 8th day of January, 1931, a formal agreement signed by the contractor and the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BENNETT: Merely extending the time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, authorizing further expenditures. This is not even the letter to which reference has been made. All we were told of was a letter written by the deputy; there was nothing about a new contract, but this is a contract, signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of Mr. F. S. Lazier for the party of the first part, and in the presence of Mr. J. Proulx for the party of the second part.

Mr. BENNETT: Will my right hon. friend read the operative part of it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall read the whole of it. It reads:

This agreement made this 8th day of January, 1931, between Johnston P. Porter, of the city of Halifax, in the county of Halifax and province of Nova Scotia, of the first part, and His Majesty the King, represented herein by the Minister of Railways and Canals, of Canada, of the second part:

Witnesseth a contract bearing No. 24275, dated the 18th day of August, 1921 (hereinafter referred to as "contract No. 24275") was entered into by and between the party of the first part and the party of the second part for the construction and completion of sections Nos. 1 and 2 of the Welland Ship canal, for the considerations and subject to the terms, covenants, provisoes, agreements, conditions and reservations as in contract No. 24275 set out, which, by reference thereto, will at length and more fully appear;

And whereas the time for the completion, by the party of the first part, of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275 was therein fixed for the 31st day of March, 1925, as in clause 3 of contract No. 24275 set out and provided;

And whereas the time for the completion of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275 was extended by supplemental agreement dated April 20, 1925, to the 31st day of March, 1927;

And whereas the time for the completion of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275 was further extended by order in council (P.C. 395) dated March 14, 1927, to the 31st day of March, 1929, and by order in council (P.C. 448) dated March 16, 1929, to the 30th day of June, 1930;

And whereas the party of the first part has not yet done, furnished, performed and delivered the works contracted for under contract No. 24275;

And whereas, under and by virtue of an order in council (P.C. 2303) dated the 30th day of September, 1930, authority has been given to the further extension of the time for the completion of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275, by the party of the first part, to the 31st day of March, 1931.

Witnesseth that, in consideration of the premises, the parties hereto have mutually covenanted and agreed as follows:

1. That the time for the completion, as set and provided in clause 3 of the contract No. 24275, by the party of the first part for the party of the second part, of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275 and as extended by supplemental agreement and orders in council aforesaid is hereby further extended to the thirty-first day of March, 1931, and that each and all, except and subject as hereinbefore set out and provided, the terms, covenants, provisoes, agreements, conditions and reservations in contract No. 24275 set out and provided shall be and continue in force and effect between the parties hereto in as full and complete a manner as if the date (the 31st day of March, 1925) set out and provided in clause 3 of contract No. 24275 for the completion of the works contracted for under contract No. 24275 had been the 31st day of March, 1931 (the date herein named and fixed) named and fixed in contract No. 24275 in the first instance instead of the date therein so named and fixed.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have executed these presents the day and year first above written.

Signed, sealed and delivered by the party of the first part in the presence of F. S. Lazier.

J. B. Porter.

Signed, sealed and delivered by the party of the second part in the presence of J. Proulx.

V. I. Smart,
Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

J. W. Pugsley,
Secretary.

In other words, the amount of $2,000,000, which we are now being asked to appropriate, is in virtue not of any estimates submitted to the house by a previous administration nor of any act of a previous administration at all, but by virtue of an extension of time made by the government of the day opposite on the 30th September last and in virtue of a new contract entered into between the contractor and the present government in January of this year for which at the time there was no existing appropriation. That is the position. It is in respect of moneys that were not voted previously. May I quote to my right hon. friend what he himself had to say in parliament at the special session with respect to appropriations that had not received the sanction of parliament? He was referring to remarks of the ex-Minister of Justice in the debate on unemployment relief, and he will find his own words at page 91 of Hansard of the special session as follows:

> Having regard to the attitude taken by the right hon. gentleman as to the desirability of having antecedent parliamentary sanction for expenditures—
> Not post-parliamentary sanction of expenditures, but antecedent parliamentary sanction of expenditures such as we are now discussing.
> —I am sure that he will agree that any effort to appropriate so substantial a sum as that mentioned in the resolution should have parliamentary sanction before the money is expended.

And my right hon. friend adds these words:

> I think that is a cardinal principle of representative institutions and of responsible government.

Those are the words of the Prime Minister on the 11th of September, before this extension of time was granted with reference to this $2,000,000 contract that we are now discussing, and three or four months before the actual contract itself was entered into with the contractors for the additional $2,000,000. So I say to my right hon. friend that out of his own lips he stands condemned. I am prepared to leave the matter at that.

Mr. BENNETT: Now that the contract has been produced, I do not intend to take up very much time beyond saying that the general principle upon which I have always proceeded is that there should be antecedent authorization by parliament of public expenditures. There was in this instance antecedent parliamentary authorization because parliament had approved of the contract and of its terms by voting money for the work for nine or ten years in succession. It will be remembered that this contract was to be fulfilled in March, 1925, and when the right hon. gentleman's government went out of power in July, 1930, the contract had not been completed. Therefore there were extensions, three in number, and a further extension was made until the 31st of March of this year. There had been an antecedent approval by parliament of the contract that involves this large expenditure, but parliament had voted part of the money only.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But not approval of the expenditure itself.

Mr. BENNETT: Parliament had antecedently approved of the contract and of the whole of the expenditures that were to be made for the purpose of carrying into effect the terms of the contract. Only part of the money, however, had been voted. It would be incumbent upon the crown to make good the moneys due for the work that was performed. I am not going to discuss that further.

When the right hon. gentleman and those associated with him were so insistent that they had never done such a thing, might I ask them whether, in 1928-29, the government of that day did not authorize work on the Hudson Bay railway, and that it be proceeded with after the appropriation for the year had been expended? Afterwards the sum of $1,700,000 was included in the 1929-30 estimates for that work. Let hon. gentlemen look up the estimates and see. The situation that arose then was not one of grave unemployment. It was simply a question of carrying on the work, and the government of that day arranged to get the money without coming to parliament. The Canadian National Railways put up the money in the meantime and parliament voted the money later. That hon. gentlemen will find by looking at the estimates for those two years.

I have endeavoured with a good deal of difficulty to get the contract for the right hon. gentleman and his friends. There is nothing about this matter that is irregular or improper or in any way at variance with the principles which I laid down. That is the reason why in respect to some new works to which reference has been made expenditures were not carried on: because it was felt—I have a very strong opinion about it—that as some of these works could not be completed before the end of this month, no start should be made upon them, the moneys voted being wholly insufficient for the purpose. So instead of calling for tenders and letting contracts, we decided we would do the best we could under the circumstances then existing, and I do not believe that there is any member of this house who will say that if the right hon. gentleman opposite and his friends were in power and confronted with the same situation he would not have extended the contract for the same purpose, to enable the contractor to complete his obligation within the time mentioned and to take care of the problem of unemployment.

My hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power), who has referred to the order in council, knows perfectly well that the order in council read this evening was not the order in council to which reference was made this afternoon, nor was there in point of fact any new contract made. There was merely an extension of time granted, the only change made being in the date fixed for the completion of the contract by March 31, 1931. If there has been any violation of the principles of responsible government or representative institutions it certainly has not been in this case, because all that was done was to permit the contractor to go forward and finish his work, and he had to finish it by March 31 anyway.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it finished?

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I know, it is not finished.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The contract will go on.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes. It will continue.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend would take the position that the government are in duty bound to let that man finish the whole contract.

Mr. BENNETT: If they extend the time for completion by order in council, which has always been done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend was arguing the opposite to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Until this contract that was entered into in 1921 is completed, the government will feel under obligation to allow the contractor to complete the contract.

Mr. BENNETT: Not beyond the time fixed for completion, unless there is an extension.

Mr. POWER: I do not wish to delay the committee further. We have now got what we have been looking for all day. The Prime Minister has been kind enough to produce the contract, and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly satisfied. But I desire to point out that we now find that this vote of $2,000,000 is authorized under some specific instrument, namely, a contract that was entered into, or an extension of contract if the right hon. gentleman prefers it that way, on September 30, 1930. That puts an entirely different face on the situation. First we were told that there was no new contract. We were told that there was an order in council, and then we were told that there was no order in council. We were told that is was an old contract which had been in existence since 1921, that it had been let in our time, and then we found that it was let under the Conservative regime. We are now told that there have been three or four different extensions of the contract, and the last one that was made was made since the right hon. gentleman came into power. That puts an entirely different construction upon it, and shows that we were at any rate amply justified in insisting upon having the fullest information.

Item agreed to.

Quebec—Ville Marie—public building—further amount required, $14,370.

Mr. POULIOT: When an amount is voted and not spent, does it lapse or is it applied to another item?

Mr. BENNETT: It lapses.

Item agreed to.

Sturgeon Falls — public building — further amount required, $1,873.95.

Mr. HEENAN: Would the Prime Minister or the Minister of Public Works state the rate of wages that the ordinary labourers were paid on this work at Sturgeon Falls?

Mr. BENNET: Forty cents an hour, I am informed.

Mr. BRADETTE: Will these rates apply to all works done by the federal government? I refer to the rate of forty cents an hour for common labour.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot answer that question, because the fair wage clause is inserted in contracts and my hon. friend knows the meaning of it as well as I do.

Item agreed to.

Saskatchewan: Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc.,—Further amount required, $3,500.

Mr. TOTZKE: What public buildings come under that item?

Mr. BENNETT: There was an appropriation for repairs and matters of that kind of $17,000. The expenditure amounted to $3,500 in excess of that sum.

Mr. McINTOSH: Will the right hon. gentleman give us the names of the places affected?

Mr. BENNETT: There are many places where small repairs were made; I have no names here.

Item agreed to.

Alberta — Delia — public building — further amount required, $2,000.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There is no over-expenditure in the province of Manitoba, some of the money voted by the last parliament having not been spent?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa public buildings and grounds—
Elevator attendants—further amount required, $2,700.
Departments generally—char service—further amount required, $23,300.
Repairs, improvements, additions and maintenance—further amount required, $17,000.
Water—further amount required, $2,250.
Rideau Hall—amount required to complete payment for additional furniture and furnishings, including the purchase from the retiring Governor General of the Chinese gallery, $15,000.
Dominion public buildings—

Light and power—further amount required, $40,000.
Supplies for caretakers—further amount required, $12,000.—Total, $117,250.

Mr. POWER: I would like some explanation concerning the purchase of the Chinese gallery. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether or not that is an expression of good will so that we may sell our wheat to China?

Mr. BENNETT: That item represents a sum which the government agreed to pay Their Excellencies for the Chinese gallery at Rideau Hall and the furniture at the citadel which was not taken away. The Department of Public Works had the articles appraised before it was agreed to make the contract in question. Inasmuch as it was felt that a sum would have to be expended for the purpose of furnishing that particular part of Rideau Hall, and considering that the price was reasonable because of the fact that the pieces were of very great value, the contract was closed and the arrangement made.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Was the appraiser a Chinaman?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I hate to use the expression "I told you so," but hon. members must recall that two or three years ago the right hon. gentleman and his friends while sitting in opposition took serious objection to further expenditures on furniture, trappings and draperies for Rideau Hall and the Quebec citadel.

Mr. BENNETT: This is neither for draperies nor trappings.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is for furniture.

Mr. BENNETT: One of two things had to be done; either the furniture in the buildings had to be purchased or other furniture bought.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, some reference was made earlier in the evening to myself as a lawyer. I would like to ask the Prime Minister a constitutional question: Under the constitution can the government pay the Governor General the moneys set down under this item?

Mr. BENNETT: I am advised the Governor General can be paid after he has ceased to hold that office.

Mr. DUFF: By whom?

Mr. BENNETT: He shall have ceased to be Governor General on Saturday.

Mr. DUFF: Was not the contract made by the Governor General when he was acting?

Mr. BENNETT: The contract was made with his representative. I am advised such representative was perfectly competent to make the contract and the money will be paid after His Excellency has ceased to be Governor General.

Mr. VENIOT: Could not this item stand until the general estimates are considered without doing an injustice to His Excellency?

Mr. BENNETT: Under the circumstances I think it would be unfair to let the item stand.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Does the Prime Minister think the new Governor General will want the Chinese gallery?

Mr. BENNETT: I feel there will be no difficulty in disposing of the furniture.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

New Brunswick

Fairhaven—wharf repairs—further amount required, $2,218.12.

Mr. VENIOT: Was this work done under contract or by day labour?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is referring to the work which cost $2,218.12. This amount is required as a balance due on repair work to the wharf at Fairhaven. The work was performed under contract.

Mr. VENIOT: That was under contract?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Ontario

Cobourg — harbour improvements — further amount required, $48,995.40.
Port Elgin — breakwater repairs — further amount required, $2,909.93.
Sarnia — harbour improvements — further amount required, $11,770.
Sault Ste. Marie—harbour improvements—further amount required, $56,556.58.—Total, $120,231.91.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not rise to object to the items but I should like to direct your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that it is customary to call the individual items. If we are allowing them to pass in this collective fashion it is simply in order to save time. The practice however is not to be taken as a precedent when we come to the general estimates, or for any future time.

The CHAIRMAN: The right hon. gentleman is quite correct. However, I have been asked to call out the number only.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree with the remarks of the right hon. leader of the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN: Item No. 29, is it the wish of hon. members that I read the whole item?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

British Columbia

Comox—wharf repairs,$2,200.
Fraser River—In full and final settlement of claim of Coast Quarries Ltd., Vancouver, B.C., in connection with their contract No. 15,942 for section 5 of the north jetty at Steveston, B.C., $12,260.16.—Total, $14,460.16.

Mr. REID: Would the Prime Minister give particulars regarding the second item in this estimate?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I will give the hon. member the information he desires. The statement reads as follows:

In full and final settlement of claim of Coast Quarries Limited of Vancouver, British Columbia, in connection with their contract No. 15,942 for section 5 of the North Jetty at Steveston, British Columbia, $12,260.60.

This amount of $12,260.16 is asked to be provided in full and final settlement of claim of Coast Quarries Limited of Vancouver, British Columbia, in connection with their contract No. 15,942 for the construction of section No. 5 of the North Jetty at the mouth of the Fraser river at Steveston, British Columbia.

In memo of November 25, 1930 chief engineer Cameron states as follows:

Under authority of order in council of August 16, 1928, contract was entered into with Coast Quarries Limited of Vancouver, British Columbia, for the construction of Section No. 5 of the North Jetty at the mouth of the Fraser river, at Steveston, New Westminster district, British Columbia.

Contract was dated October 1, 1928, and called for completion April 1, 1930.

The contract provided for the supply and placing of rock to form a continuation of the existing Steveston North Jetty. The length of the section No. 5 proposed to be built was 5,000 lineal feet, and the estimated quantity of material under the contract was 41,300 tons of 150 lb. rock at 1.72½ per ton; 106,200 tons of 500 lb. rock at 1.67½ per ton which involved an estimated expenditure of $249,127.50.

Final estimate was forwarded March 24, 1930 and paid. It certified to

24,093 tons at $1.72½..	$ 72,610 42
105,164 tons at $1.07½..	176,149 70
and involved a total earning of..	$248,760 12

Which, it will be observed, is within a few dollars of the amount mentioned in the estimate.

In transmitting that final estimate I observed that Coast Quarries Limited had filed a claim for additional payment. This report deals with that claim. The contractors' solicitor, J. E. Bird, of Vancouver, wrote on February 3, and 13, 1930 setting out the grounds on which the claim was based. These letters were followed by numerous interviews in Ottawa with W. A. Bickwell of the contracting firm, and with district engineer Worsfold who was in Ottawa on departmental business.

The amount asked by the contractors as additional compensation is—for extra dolphins..	$ 3,036

for rock dumped by hand 10 August to 31st December 1929, 43,700 tons.. ..	17,480
for rock dumped by hand 31st December 1929 to completion 17,000 tons..	6,800
	$27,316

A report to council was prepared February 26, 1931 recommending that an amount of $12,260.16 be paid the Coast Quarries Limited.

Mr. REID: What was the date of settlement?

Mr. BENNETT: The report to council by the department was made February 26, 1931.

An. hon. MEMBER: Was this settlement accepted by the contractor?

Mr. BENNETT: The department determined on the report of the engineers that this was all they would pay, and so advised the contractors. This item is for that purpose. I am advised that they would have liked to get something more, but they cannot get it.

Mr. MacLEAN: Before these public works items are passed, could the minister give the house the amount of money voted at the last regular session for public works that was not expended? If I understood the Prime Minister correctly a short time ago he said that no contracts that were entered into, for which money was voted by the late government, were cancelled by the present administration. I wish to say that, speaking for my own county, I know of two contracts that were entered into but which were cancelled and the work under which was never carried out.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to give the names?

Mr. MacLEAN: One public work was the Summerside wharf, amounting to $7,500. Not only was the contract not carried out, but the cheque of the contractors was kept at Ottawa until just about a month ago, when it was returned to them. They were told then that the contract had been given to another party, and as far as I know that party did not even put in a tender for the work. These men were given a small cheque to pay the interest on their deposit cheque, which has been held here since last July. I think in all fairness, when money was voted at the last regular session of parliament, when there was unemployment in the country and a special session of this house was called during which $20,000,000 was voted for unemployment, that the $25,000 which was voted for the county of Prince should have been spent, especially when tenders for these works were called for and accepted. That amount of money would have been a great help to the farmers, fishermen and labourers of that county last fall, when unemployment was rife. Instead, the cheque of the contractors was held here and the work never was proceeded with. I submit further that if the government, for political reasons or otherwise, did not wish to allow the contractors to go on which those contracts, they had plenty of time to call for new tenders and to allow some of their own men to get the contracts and proceed with the work. We worked for years in the house to get those votes through, and they were very important. One concerned a harbour for poor fishermen along the shore. They have been fighting for that harbour for thirty or forty years. The item was supported by the Minister of Fisheries and put through this house, and the contract was awarded. The work was never proceeded with, and I want an explanation from my good friend the Minister of Public Works as to why the deposit cheque was held here at Ottawa for four or five months and the work never proceeded with. I think the government has some explaining to do to square itself with the people of that county with regard to these two contracts.

Mr. BENNETT: The information the hon. gentleman seeks will be supplied in due course, either when the main estimates are under consideration, or through answer to a question put on the order paper. It is obvious that the information is not available at the moment. It will be supplied, in the one way or the other, by the Minister of Public Works. I may say that I am advised that there must be some mistake in my hon. friend's appreciation of the facts.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) has made a very serious assertion with regard to the Department of Public Works. He has stated that a contract was cancelled and that the Minister of Public Works or his officials entered into a contract with new contractors without calling for tenders. I think we should have some explanation of this matter before going any further.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough realizes that this has nothing to do with the item under consideration. We are considering the British Columbia item now.

Mr. DUFF: As the deputy speaker would say, it is a matter of principle.

Mr. BENNETT: We are now considering the British Columbia item.

Mr. MacLEAN: The reason I brought it up on this item is because we are now considering the public works for the various provinces, and there is no estimate for Prince Edward Island. If I brought it up at all I had to bring it up when we were considering the public works estimates. The only other estimate on which I could have discussed it was the dredging estimate, and I might have been shut out under that. I am willing to let the matter stand for now, but we should have an explanation why these contracts were handled in this way.

Item agreed to.

Public works—roads and bridges—Dominion roads and bridges generally—further amount required, $10,100.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Interprovincial bridge over Ottawa river at Hawkesbury, the Quebec government to contribute one-third of cost of construction only, the Ontario government to contribute one-fourth of cost of construction and to pay annually one-fourth the maintenance costs—further amount required, $28,300.—Total, $38,400.

Mr. BERTRAND: How much money has been paid to the contractors on the Hawkesbury-Grenville bridge so far, and how much money has been collected from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. BENNETT: The amount earned by the contractors is $96,340; the amount paid by the Dominion government is $35,926, and by the Quebec government $32,114. The balance due is $28,300. Of that amount of $28,300 asked for, the provincial governments will eventually refund their portions.

Mr. BERTRAND: I would like to ask also if there will be a further sum in the main estimates with regard to this bridge, because there is additional information I would like to secure.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, there must be another estimate because the contract is outstanding for $150,000.

Mr. BERTRAND: Then there will be another amount in the main estimates?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—MR. LAVERGNE

Mr. ARMAND R. LAVERGNE (Montmagny): I rise to a question of privilege. My good friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) said this afternoon that I was owner and director of a paper in Quebec called Le Franc-Parler. I wish to say that while I write in that paper I neither own nor direct it. My hon. friend also cast a sort of aspersion upon me, implying that I might be a partisan. I understand that so long as you do not lay flowers at my hon. friend's feet you are supposed to be a partisan, but I appeal to the loyalty of my hon. friend from Quebec South: he knows better than anyone else that I am not a partisan.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I hate to detain the house at this late hour, but may I be allowed to explain why I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman was particularly interested in this newspaper to which he refers. I have here a section of the newspaper in question bearing the following:

"Le Franc-Parler"
Armand LaVergne, C.R., M.P., Président.
[Vice-Président de la Chambre des communes]
Eugène-F. Dussault, Directeur.
Hormisdas D. Langlais, Administrateur.
Publié par la Compagnie "La Publication Laurentienne, Limitée" 105, Côte de la Montagne, Québec, P.Q. Tél. 2-6203.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the date?

Mr. POWER: December, 1930. However, if the house is not convinced, I could possibly make—

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not see that the representation now being made to the house by the hon. member constitutes a question of privilege. It can be made on the proper occasion. The deputy speaker addressed himself to what was plainly a question of privilege, which is not a matter for debate.

Mr. POWER: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is all very well for an hon. member to say that he rises to a question of privilege, but if in fact he is not doing so he should not rise.

Mr. POWER: I quite agree with your honour that perhaps there has been too much of that sort of thing in the house, but I wish to state my point.

Mr. SPEAKER: Up to the present moment the hon. member has said nothing that affects privilege.

Mr. POWER: My point is that my word has been brought into question by the deputy speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I cannot accept that. The hon. member did suggest that the deputy speaker was a director of or was interested in a certain newspaper, but the deputy speaker has just stated that he is not. Surely that is an end of the matter.

Mr. POWER: I am explaining why I made the statement I did.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member has done so.

Mr. POWER: I wished to read from the newspaper in question to make my point still clearer and in order to explain to the house why I stated that the deputy speaker was connected with this newspaper—was a director of it. I propose to read a letter published in the paper. Surely I am entitled to explain my position.

Mr. BENNETT: That was December, 1930.

Mr. POWER: This letter—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must disagree with the hon. member. He has not spoken to a question of privilege and in what he is now saying he is not addressing himself to a question of privilege.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, March 31, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE

REPORTED PROPOSAL FOR INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION TO REGULATE EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, a Canadian Press cable which arrived this morning states that Mr. Howard Ferguson has made the following proposal in Rome:

> That it is desirable that delegates of countries exporting wheat, namely Argentine, Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Hungary, India, Poland, the Union of Soviet republics, Roumania and Jugoslavia should meet together as soon as possible to organize on an international basis the exportation of the crop year of 1931-32.

I should like to ask the government if Mr. Ferguson is authorized to make a proposal that involves negotiations with the Soviet government. If so, it is the best news we have had for some time.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. member's inquiry will be taken as a notice of motion.

UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

MOTION TO ADJOURN TO DISCUSS MATTER OF URGENT PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under standing order 31 to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, to call the attention of the house and the government to the acute distress existing among large numbers of industrial workers throughout the Dominion.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the form of the motion but judging from what the hon. member has said it would not be in order inasmuch as this matter has been under debate and is mentioned in the speech from the throne.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May we have the motion, please?

Mr. SPEAKER: If any hon. member desires to speak on the point of order as to whether or not the application is in order, he should do so before I give my ruling.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will Your Honour read the application?

Mr. SPEAKER: The application is by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and asks for leave under standing order 31 to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of public importance, namely, to call the attention of the house and the government to the acute distress existing among large numbers of industrial workers throughout the Dominion.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say just one word on the point of order? Without disputing the importance of the subject raised by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, I submit that the interpretation which always has been placed upon this rule has been that it must be a matter of recent occurrence. Furthermore, it must be of such urgent character as would create an injustice were hon. members of this house precluded from discussing the subject matter. I submit, first, that it is not a matter of recent occurrence, and, second, that it would be open to hon. members to discuss this question during the debate which is now before this house. Therefore, the hon. gentleman is not in order in asking permission to discuss this subject as a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. HEAPS: In moving this motion I was guided by the actions of—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member should speak to the point of order.

Mr. HEAPS: I am speaking to the point of order raised and I desire to call the attention of the house to one precedent. In 1926, when the present government was in opposition, I find the following action taken by the house. It was moved by the then hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. L. W. Johnstone), that leave be granted under rule 39 to adjourn the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, to call the attention of the house and the government to the acute distress existing among the coal miners of Nova Scotia, many of whom were actually on the verge of starvation. My motion follows almost word for word the motion made in 1926.

I might state also that in the speech from the throne delivered in 1926, reference was made to the conditions in Nova Scotia, as follows:

> With a view to affording such remedies as may appear to be practical and appropriate, the government also propose to appoint a royal commission to inquire fully into the claims that the rights of the maritime provinces in regard to the operation of the Intercolonial railway have not been observed, and that in regard to transportation, immigration and other economic factors these provinces have suffered prejudicially, in their position under confederation.

At that time the condition of the miners in Nova Scotia was not a matter of recent occurrence. I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that in 1926 this motion was made during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. My motion is on almost all fours with the motion made in 1926, and I submit that I should be allowed to proceed.

No direct reference is made in the speech from the throne this year to any action which the government intends to take to deal with unemployment. We should not at this time insist on technicalities as I consider there is no more important question to be dealt with by parliament. The speech from the throne makes a certain vague reference to the economic conditions which prevail at the present time but there is no reference at all to any definite action which the government intends to take in order to meet the existing situation. In the rules of procedure the word "definite" is used, and we have to deal with a definite rather than an indefinite matter. May I point out also that the appropriations which the government has voted will expire to-day and there will be no further funds available for the municipalities or the provincial governments with which to cope with the present conditions.

Therefore, I consider thare is an urgent need for a discussion of this question which, as I have stated before, I believe to be the most important question that can come before this house.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on the point of order it seems to me that this matter involves the rights of the members of this house. In stating the procedure subsection 3 of standing order 31 reads as follows:

He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken, Mr. Speaker requests those members who support the motion to rise in their places and, if more than twenty members rise accordingly, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who has asked for leave.

I submit that the mover of this resolution (Mr. Heaps) has complied with the rules. He has handed to the Speaker a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed. I realize that the next clause of the standing order is to the effect that if the Speaker thinks it in order it is read out, but I take it that that is only a formal matter. The proposed motion might not be formally in order; then it is for you, Mr. Speaker, to say that it is not in order and to reject it. But we are here dealing with another matter. With all deference to Your Honour I do not think it can be said that the possibility of the introduction of a motion of this kind is dependent upon the decision of Your Honour as to what is an urgent matter; that is dependent upon the twenty hon. members who may rise and support it. I do not think there can be any question that the motion is formally in order. Several years ago a motion in precisely the same form was introduced upon a like occasion and no question was raised by the Speaker as to its being out of order. A precedent was established and I do not see how it can be said that this is not in order. The only ground upon which he can rule that it is not in order is as to whether it is a relevant matter or not, and that depends on the decision of twenty members. I claim that it becomes your responsibility, Mr. Speaker, to ask whether or not twenty members believe that this is a matter of urgent public importance.

The suggestion has come from the opposite side of the house that already a reference along this line has been made in the speech from the throne. It must be conceded, however, that that is a very general reference, and my colleague has more than answered that when he has shown that similar action was taken on a previous occasion when the members of the present government were in opposition. As to the urgency of the matter, may I emphasize that the grant runs out today and that already a number of municipalities are cutting off direct relief to large numbers of men and women? The municipalities take the ground that they have no help from the Dominion government. What is to be done in such a situation as that? The Dominion government has given no indication of what its policy is to be and tomorrow these men will be on the streets. I have to-day from a western city a letter along that line.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member confine himself to the point of order?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am submitting that the matter is urgent and I do not know of any way of putting it more strongly than that unless some action is taken before the Easter recess, there is very serious danger that riots will occur.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nonsense!

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Hon. members may say that is nonsense, but if it is desired to have the urgency emphasized I cannot put it more strongly than to say that thousands of men are without work and without food, and inevitably there will be riots. For that reason I urge that before the Easter recess some action be taken to meet this emergency situation.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): On the point of order, may I say that the 1926 case cited may or may not have been quite appropriate at that time, but the point of order was not raised then. Now the point of order is definitely raised for Your Honour to decide. I submit that the motion is out of order. Standing order 31, section 6, subsection (c) provides:

> The motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session.

And the following subsection provides that the motion must not anticipate such a matter. My submission is that the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) raises this very question. It has been under discussion in the house since that amendment was moved, and it will continue under discussion until that amendment is voted upon. The amendment reads:

> We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that this house, while recognizing the serious economic conditions prevailing throughout the world, regrets that the policies of His Majesty's government have not only failed to afford a remedy for employment and agricultural distress, as pledged by the Prime Minister and his colleagues, but have served further to prejudice the deplorable position of the agricultural interests, thereby causing additional unemployment and substantially reducing the national revenue.

The whole question of present-day unemployment is specifically raised in the amendment now under discussion in this chamber, and, that being the fact, I submit that the motion is distinctly out of order.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I do not know of any matter of greater national urgency than the question raised by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). Probably the reason why no objection was taken to the matter being discussed in 1926 was that the government of the day invited discussion on unemployment as well as on any other subject. I am surprised that the present government would raise any technical objection in order to shut off debate on this particular question, because during the election campaign they themselves said that it was—

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member confine himself to the point of order? The question as to the policy of an opposing party during a previous election has nothing to do with the point whether this request is in order or not.

Mr. HEENAN: If Your Honour will allow me to finish my sentence you will see the objective I have in view.

Mr. SPEAKER: Why not let us have your objective first?

Mr. HEENAN: I could not turn my sentence around. As I said, the government of the day claimed during the election campaign that this was a national question, and inasmuch as the situation is worse now than it was then, it is more of a national question now than it was at that time. I submit that without regard to whether the motion is in or out of order, the unanimous consent of the house should be given to the hon. member for North Winnipeg to proceed with his motion.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Speaking to the point of order, I find myself in absolute agreement with the motives behind the motion submitted by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). On the other hand, I find myself in substantial agreement with the point of order raised by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) and spoken to by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). The house is therefore confronted with what is largely a question of policy, and although this is not distinctly on the point of order, I think it is important at the present time that the supplementary estimates should be disposed of, as hon. gentlemen opposite realize. The leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) should, however, give an opportunity to the house to have a discussion raised by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, if it cannot be raised in this way. During the debate—and this is only on a question of policy—we asked for a statement of policy from the Acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) in regard to labour and agricultural conditions. If this statement were given, it would do a great deal towards meeting the wishes of the hon. member for North Winnipeg. I am compelled on the point of order to agreement with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. SPEAKER: This application is made under standing order 31, which reads:

(1) Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house (when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance) must be asked after the ordinary daily routine of business has been concluded and before notices of motions or orders of the day are entered upon.

(2) The member desiring to make such a motion rises in his place, asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and states the matter.

(3) He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to the Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house.

In the first place, before the matter is read to the house, the Speaker must consider that it is in order and of urgent public importance. Perhaps I cannot do better than to read to the house the written opinion I gave to the hon. member for North Winnipeg this morning when he kindly notified me that he was going to make this application. I said:

Since discussing with you your proposal to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely—to call the attention of the house and the government to the acute distress existing among large numbers of industrial workers throughout the Dominion, I have carefully considered the same and it seems to me the matter to which you propose to call the attention of the house is now actually being discussed in the debate on the address, and is a matter specifically referred to in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth paragraphs of the speech from the throne and in the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition.

For the moment the house has laid aside the debate on the address to deal with supplementary estimates required for the administration of government. Within a few days the debate will be resumed and if the house considers that the matter you propose to call to its attention should be discussed forthwith, it has only to revert to the debate on the address for that purpose.

If it is suggested that the members now seeking to move the adjournment have already spoken in the debate on the address, I might point out that it is open to a member to move a sub-amendment to the amendment to the address and to then discuss the matter, and that when the amendment now before the house is disposed of there will be a further opportunity to speak on the main motion.

The reason for allowing such a motion for the adjournment is to afford members an opportunity of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance which they could do in no other way, but as the matter has been, and will continue to be very thoroughly discussed in the debate now in progress, I am obliged to decide that the application is not in order at this time.

In support of this decision I would quote May's Parliamentary Practice, 13th edition, page 248:

Motion for adjournment regarding matters for the discussion of which the committee of supply or other appointed business—

The appointed business in this case being the debate on the address:

—would afford an early opportunity, or a matter which is under the consideration of a select committee, have been ruled to be out of order.

I therefore rule that the motion is out of order on the ground as stated in that letter, and on the ground taken by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) under paragraph (c) of section 6 of rule 31. That the motion anticipates a matter which has been previously appointed for consideration by the house, and particularly by the amendments to the address moved by the leader of the opposition.

PERMITS TO KILL BUFFALO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I notice in the western press that permission has been given to missionaries to kill barren buffalo cows in Wood Buffalo park. I would like to know if this permission has also been given to travellers, traders, Indians, prospectors and inhabitants in the district, and also how in the heat of the chase, the missionaries are to determine just which animals to kill.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): If the hon. member will put his question on the order paper I shall be pleased to answer it.

PEACE RIVER OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. HANSON (Skeena): I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) if he has yet received the joint report of the railways on the Peace River outlet, and if so, whether it will be presented to the house before the Easter recess.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I did not quite catch my hon. friend's question, but I think it was in regard to the same report that was asked for by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). I wrote to the premier of British Columbia asking him if they had had their report tabled, but I have not yet received a reply.

EXPORT BOUNTY ON GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): I have received several telegrams during the past few days with reference to resolutions passed at farmers' meetings in my constituency. I shall read one and ask a couple of questions based thereon:

At a meeting held in Glidden, 150 present, resolution passed that we demand an export bounty of fifteen cents wheat, ten cents rye, five cents oats, be put by the government.
F. B. Hailes.

In view of the present financial distress existing among agriculturists, will the government give favourable consideration to an export bounty on Canadian grain; or failing that, has the government any substitute plan for giving financial relief to the farmers?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the question be put on the order paper.

CIVIL SERVICE

REPORTED RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF INTERIOR AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): In view of persistent rumours and newspaper reports with reference to retirements and superannuation of civil servants, more particularly of the Interior department, and the resulting apprehension and unrest, I desire to ask the Minister of the Interior what action is presently being taken or will be taken by the government in reference to the employees of that department.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): The question which my hon. friend has raised is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due time.

RETENTION OF THE SERVICES OF NATIVE-BORN ASKED BY NATIVE SONS OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): I have received a letter enclosing copy of the following resolution which was adopted by the Native Sons of Canada:

In view of the persistent public rumour that it is the intention of the government, in the near future, to dispense with the services of many permanent employees, it is recommended by the executive of Capital Assembly, No. 86, of the Native Sons of Canada, that if such rumour be true, the government consider the retention of the native-born in preference to those of other countries, all other considerations being equal.

If the government is going to make retirements from the civil service, will it start with officials not native-born?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The government will be governed by the statutes of the country.

PENSION EXAMINER AT SASKATOON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): May I ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health a question based on telegrams and other communications that I have received from northern Saskatchewan in connection with political pressure that I understand is being brought to bear on his department with regard to the removal of Dr. Cox, pension examiner at Saskatoon. The minister made a statement on this question to the house about a week ago, and I thank him for that declaration of policy. I should like to hear from him to-day, however, if his policy as then announced is still his policy to-day, or whether he has something to add to his statement of last week.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): The policy as announced a week ago still stands, and the position remains the same.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is all right.

AUSTRO-GERMAN CUSTOMS UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): I have in my hand a newspaper report of the tariff agreement between Germany and Austria, and I notice that section 2 of article 1 reads as follows:

> Both parties specifically declare themselves bound by this contract to negotiate with any other nation desiring to enter a similar agreement.

In view of the fact that Germany at one time was one of our best customers for wheat, and is not now, I would ask the Prime Minister if he would be willing to take advantage of this offer and negotiate a treaty with these countries?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman's observations will be treated as notice of a question.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow the advice that you gave when you ruled on my motion a few moments ago. You stated that that motion was not debatable, but that other opportunities would occur when the question of unemployment could be raised, and I now take this opportunity of raising it on the motion for going into supply.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It is hardly competent, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. gentleman to discuss a question that is now before the house in an amendment, and with respect to which you have already ruled.

Mr. HEAPS: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that on the motion for supply every member of this house has the inalienable right to discuss any grievance that he wishes to bring before parliament.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that a member cannot on the motion for supply make a motion of any kind that he sees fit. He cannot, for instance, discuss a question that is on the order paper; he cannot discuss a question that is under consideration by the house; he cannot anticipate a motion standing in his name on the order paper. Your Honour has directly ruled that this question is under consideration by this house, and I submit that your ruling applies to the hon. gentleman's present remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER: On the motion to go into supply the ordinary rules of debate are applicable. For instance, I quote the following from Bourinot:

> A matter already decided by the house or of which notice has been given, or which stands upon the orders of the day, cannot be discussed nor can any subject or matter of detail which should be discussed in committee, be debated in these occasions.

The question which the hon. member for North Winnipeg has undertaken to discuss undoubtedly stands for discussion on the orders of the day, because it has been brought before the house through the amendment by the leader of the opposition and also by reference to it in the speech from the throne which is now being discussed in debate before this house and which stands for further discussion.

Mr. HEAPS: May I interject Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am discussing a matter—

Mr. HEAPS: Have I not the righ to speak?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: I wish some of the hon. members opposite who last year were so enthusiastic in the discussion of the matter of unemployment would show the same enthusiasm at this time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: Have I not the right to move an amendment on going into supply? That is what I am going to do.

An hon. MEMBER: Not that amendment.

Mr. HEAPS: Hon. members cannot restrict the character of an amendment. No ruling of the house can restrict the character of the amendment I intend to make. I have an amendment to move if it is necessary to move it.

An hon. MEMBER: Move it then.

Mr. SPEAKER: Such an amendment as that sought to be moved by the hon. member is not in order.

Mr. GARDINER: May I call the attention of hon. members to the fact that no amendment has been moved. Any member of this house has the right upon going into supply to discuss any matter and to move any amendment, and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not your duty to rule against an amendment which has not yet been moved.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member to say he moves an amendment to the same effect as the matter I have already held to be out of order.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member said he was going to move the same amendment.

Mr. HEAPS: I will place my case and my grievance before the house and then I shall state my amendment. At the moment there is no amendment before the house; last year I took exactly the same stand when the house was going into committee of supply. Certainly at that time there was no objection from any place in this house, either from the government or the opposition. From the opposition in the year 1930 we had a great deal of support in the discussion of certain matters when going into supply. Up to now Mr. Speaker, I have not taken up any time of the house with the exception of asking two questions. In connection with one question I had the honour of receiving an answer and the other question I was asked to place on the order paper.

I feel Mr. Speaker, that I would be recreant to my duty towards those people I represent in this house if I did not take the opportunity before the adjournment for Easter recess of drawing to the attention of the house some of the conditions which at the present time prevail in the Dominion of Canada. Those conditions are of such a nature that I feel parliament ought to take some definite action before we adjourn to-morrow. Following the adjournment a great many of us will be going back to our constituencies and will be meeting the people who sent us here. There is hardly a constituency in Canada at the present time which is not suffering from some form of economic distress. The first question which will be asked by our constituents and the first question we will face when we return to our home is, "What has parliament done to cope with the existing crisis?" Hon. members in this house with the possible exception of some members of the government, know nothing of what the cabinet has in mind to meet the conditions which now prevail. We had a special session of parliament. In July last year a change of government took place and at that time the opposition thought it was right and proper immediately after the election to summon the parliament to deal with the then very serious unemployment situation. Now, if there was a condition in September last year with which this house should deal, I say that at the present time it is much more necessary. There is no hon. member of this house who will claim that conditions are not worse now than they were in September last year. If conditions are worse in the month of March than they were in the month of September then I think it is high time that parliament had before it certain definite proposals to deal with the existing emergency. When we go to our respective homes at the Easter recess we feel that half of the parliamentary session has expired. Up until this time however nothing has been done; not one worth while action has been taken by this parliament and no inkling has been offered to the people of this country concerning what action is likely to be taken. After all, Mr. Speaker, I believe the cabinet should have taken the house into its confidence and told the people of this country what it intends to do in order to deal with the present emergency. This is the 31st day of March and money voted in September last practically ceases to exist because parliament is not in a position, except by another act to vote further sums of money. Apart from that, the whole of the $20,000,000 voted by parliament has been more or less used up by municipalities in dealing with the unemployment situation. At the present time, Mr. Speaker, I find a worse condition of unemployment in this country than I have ever known in the past. We could travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific and find these same deplorable conditions prevailing. I have before me certain communications to which I wish to refer to briefly. Here is one from Calgary which reads as follows. It is from the Mine Workers' Union of Canada:

> In view of the deplorable conditions which exist in the mining industry throughout Canada.

Another one comes from the province of Nova Scotia. The statement is contained in a report of a special committee of a conference held on January 20 in Halifax. The report reads in part as follows:

> Conditions of grave and calamitous unemployment have for some time existed and are at this time prevalent in the coal fields of Nova Scotia.

What else do we find? In the city of Vancouver 10,000 people have registered as being out of work. The number who have registered does not of necessity indicate the total number of people out of work because there are thousands who refuse to register but who nevertheless are unemployed. I could travel to Calgary, Edmonton and Winnipeg and find a similar condition. In the city of Winnipeg we have had more than 7,000 men who have been actually receiving relief from the city. In the cities of Fort William and Port Arthur the same deplorable conditions prevail. In the city of Toronto vast numbers of men are out of work. In fact only last week in that city a crowd of unemployed men looking for work were actually clubbed because they dared to look for jobs.

An hon. MEMBER: That is wrong.

Mr. HEAPS: Just a few day ago in the city of Montreal a large number of unemployed men trooped into an office and the man in charge actually shot one of the men who came in looking for work. Apparently the man who did the shooting was afraid some harm might befall him. The man was shot right through his body.

[Mr. Heaps.]

These are the conditions prevailing throughout Canada, and I feel that this parliament ought not to adjourn for the Easter recess until the government brings down immediate measures to cope with the situation. The excuse may be offered that we have been in session only since March 12th. But there is no good reason why the house could not have met two months earlier to deal with the problem. If parliament could have met in September in an emergency session there is no reason why it could not have met at the ordinary time this year so that we could have done something to meet existing conditions.

In the last session of parliament the government adopted three measures which they claimed would in some way alleviate or possibly put an end to unemployment in this Dominion. I never expected for one moment that the party now in power could end unemployment, and I am not going to blame them if they do not end unemployment in this country. The only blame I attach to this government is that hon. members opposite made such wild and rash promises to the electors, representing that they were the only ones who could solve the problem.

I have said that we could have met much sooner so that we might have dealt with the unemployment situation. I was very sorry indeed, Mr. Speaker, when a few weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) what action the government intended to take to meet this serious state of affairs, the only reply I received from the right hon. gentleman—and then it was only after he had been requested by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) to do so that he replied—was that I should put the question on the order paper. I was to put the question on the order paper and then it might be answered. That may be a way of evading a question, but it is not the way to reply to an important question asked in the House of Commons. If the Prime Minister had answered my question in the way in which a question of that kind should be answered, I might probably not have found it necessary to get up in my place to-day and insist upon some action on the part of the government. When the Prime Minister of the government evades the answering of such a question, it seems to me the only resource we members have is to bring to the attention of parliament and the country the situation as it actually exists. In fact, when the Prime Minister made that reply to the question I asked him, he said he was going to follow in the footsteps of the former government. Now that is a rather unusual attitude for a Conservative Prime Minister to take in this house. But I have noticed of late how eager the Prime Minister is to follow Liberal practices. Upon his return from the Imperial conference he intimated that he was following in the footsteps of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And when the right hon. gentleman was in opposition he used to quote continually from Lord Morley's Life of William Ewart Gladstone. He seems to have quite a tender spot for such quotations, a desire to follow in the path of Liberals of the past. I sincerely trust, however, that the Prime Minister will not follow entirely in what the Liberal party has done in the past, but will branch out into new lines in order to meet the problems we have, with new ideas, because the old ideas cannot solve the problems of to-day. It is no use attempting to deal with twentieth century problems with nineteenth century ideas; it cannot be done.

In September last the government had three proposals for dealing with the unemployment situation. The first was the prevention of dumping into Canada. That was one of their proposals and it became law. But not only did it become law; the government took upon themselves the right and prerogative which for many years parliament has exercised There is therefore no excuse to-day that foreign goods are coming into competition with Canadian manufactures. That, as I say, was one remedy. The second remedy was the voting of $20,000,000 to give immediate relief where that was thought necessary. And the $20,000,000 more or less has been spent. Now I want to lay down, first, the maxim that capital expenditures are no remedy for unemployment. In fact, the more capital expenditures are made for unproductive works, the more we aggravate an already serious situation. Consequently the mere voting of sums of money for the carrying on of certain public works will in no way settle the problem of unemployment. Now we come to the third remedy offered by the government—and this was their trump card. They claimed that if the tariff were raised extremely high so as to prevent the importation of goods it would provide work for people at home and practically solve the unemployment problem. To-day, after about six months' experience, we find that none of these so-called remedies are in any way a solution for unemployment.

I wish to show, by the figures supplied by the government, the extent of unemployment in Canada at present. I find there were 228,351 persons who received work as a result of the emergency vote passed by parliament last September. They worked a total of 3,975,355 days; that is to say, they worked on an average, approximately 18 days during the last five or six months. Now, the average wage they would receive from those who employed them would be approximately $60. In other words, they earned an average of $60 under the emergency legislation passed last year. What do we find further? In addition to the numbers who received work, there were also large numbers who received relief by way of groceries, meals and so forth. I find on page 11 of the report of 1931, dealing with the unemployment situation that there were 49,946 families and 64,728 individuals who received relief. In other words, over 130,000 persons received direct relief in addition to the 228,351 persons who were given employment during the past few months. This will give some indication of the serious unemployment situation which exists to-day.

I find that the index for employment on August 1, 1930, was 118.8, and on February 1, 1931, it had dropped to 100.7. If we deduct only a proportion of the number of people who were employed on emergency work, working under some form of government assistance, we find that in that same period the drop in unemployment was in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent—certainly a very grave state of affairs and one that demands the attention of parliament. Then we have to consider the vast numbers of men who at present are on part time employment. We find that throughout this country men who formerly worked on full time are working three or four days per week, and they have a most difficult struggle to make both ends meet. What have the unemployed to look forward to? In previous years, in the spring men would look forward to being able to go on the farms and find employment in that way. This year those men will not be able to do so; in fact I am inclined to believe that instead of men going from the cities to the farms there will be people coming from the farms to the cities to look for work. Consequently the already bad situation which prevails in our industrial centres is likely to become much worse through that reverse movement. I find, Mr. Speaker, that in the few times the Prime Minister has spoken in public since the emergency session of last September he has made special reference to what he would do if the conditions were not changed when parliament again met. Speaking in Regina on December 30, the Prime Minister said:

> I tell you that when parliament meets, if there is not then evident further increase in employment, additional steps will be taken to meet the situation.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, we have a right to know what those additional steps are to be.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If any.

Mr. HEAPS: Yes, as the hon. member for Bow River says, what additional steps there are to be, if any. The hundreds of thousands of men and women who at present are out of work and who are marching through our streets in demonstrations, men and women who are hungry and many of whom are starving, have their eyes fixed on this parliament, and they expect us here to take some action that will in some way deal with this very pressing problem. At the present time, on this 31st day of March, we do not know what parliament is likely to do in an attempt to meet the situation, and we are not likely to meet again until April 13. There is involved in this question something which I regard as of very great importance. As I have already said, I believe there is no question that ought to challenge the attention of members of this house and the attention of parliament collectively more than the question of unemployment, yet I see scant attention paid to-day to this important problem. I noticed that when my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) spoke on this question recently practically the whole Conservative party walked out of the house, and it just makes me wonder how much hon. members really care for the men and women who happen to be out of work and suffering at the present time. When my hon. friend from South Vancouver (Mr. MacInnis) spoke on the same question he was met in exactly the same way; he found complete indifference to the suffering of our fellow-Canadians.

Mr. SPOTTON: You never propose anything.

Mr. HEAPS: It is for the government to bring proposals before the house, and when the government will come to the house with concrete proposals I will be willing to give them all the support of which I am capable, if I believe those proposals will help the situation. If the government will listen to what I have to tell them and will adopt my proposals, they may be equally sure of my support, and perhaps before I get through to-day I will bring forward a few suggestions which they might do well to adopt.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But there are only forty-six members of the Conservative party to listen even now.

Mr. HEAPS: Well, that is nearly three times as many as were here when my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre spoke the other day. When the hon. member for South Vancouver dealt with this question he was met with jeers by hon. members opposite when he attempted to tell of the sufferings of the unemployed in the city of Vancouver. It is all right for the party in opposition to show sympathy for the men and women out of work, but it seems another matter when that party happens to attain power.

There is a rather strange coincidence which came to my notice to-day, Mr. Speaker. On March 31 of last year I rose in my place to call the attention of parliament and particularly of the government to this question of unemployment. On that day I brought forward a motion asking the government to take immediate steps to deal with the then existing unemployment situation. The Conservative party was in opposition at that time, and the opposition benches were pretty well filled on that occasion. There were no jeers, and there was no question of my bringing forward certain proposals. The Conservative party insisted on the government of the day bringing in their proposals to deal with unemployment, and I hope that party to-day will be just as consistent in their attitude and will take immediate action to deal with the situation.

I said this parliament had a collective duty in connection with this question. We have a responsibility, and we cannot evade it either individually or collectively. The main responsibility, however, naturally rests with the government, and the responsibility of the government is to deal with this very grave menace that is confronting us. We must bear in mind that the people of this country look upon this parliament to govern, but if we allow hundreds of thousands of workers and their dependents to go without the bare necessities of life I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, what kind of confidence, if any, can those people have in our parliamentary institutions. I claim that the very fitness of this parliament to govern the country under such circumstances is at stake to-day. If we do not live up to our responsibilities we will deserve everything the people of this country may hurl at us.

We claim that we are living under a form of political democracy; I have heard the Prime Minister speak about the dignity of parliament and the respect with which it should be looked upon by the people throughout this country. The degree of respect we receive from the people of this Dominion will be only in proportion to the way in which we give the people the things to which I claim they are fully entitled. I want to say in all seriousness that parliament is losing its grip upon the people, because while we have a form of political democracy we have allowed to grow up side by side with it a financial autocracy, which to-day is more powerful than the democracy. The question now arises whether we are to be subordinate to these economic forces which seem to have a strangle hold upon the very life of the millions of our people. That is the question, and to-day the problem arises, in dealing with the unemployment situation, what steps parliament will take to meet the conditions which exist throughout the country?

It has been claimed by some hon. members opposite that the unemployment situation is due first to the Liberal government which was previously in power, and secondly to the fact that certain economic conditions have been experienced throughout the world. To overcome the maladministration of nine years of Liberal rule, and to give additional employment to the workers of this dominion the Conservative party set about the task of increasing tariffs. If world conditions are responsible for unemployment no local application of a tariff will improve them; that goes without saying. If we are faced with world conditions, a tariff is no remedy for unemployment existing in Canada.

It would seem that the causes of unemployment lie far deeper than can be reached by a tariff and I think this matter should be considered from that angle. In our collective capacity as a nation we are not suffering from any shortage of goods; we have more than we know what to do with. Our elevators are choked with wheat and so much grain has been produced that it does not pay the farmer to ship because he will receive nothing for it. Yet, side by side with that condition, we have vast numbers of people in our cities who are without the bare necessities of life. How are we going to bring about a more equitable distribution of the goods produced? The tariff policy of the government is based upon the assumption that production must be increased. If production is increased how can the people consume that increased production if to-day they are unable to consume our present production? The great masses of the people must be given that purchasing power which will permit them to consume far more goods than they are allowed to at the present time. Production has been increasing by leaps and bounds for a number of years yet side by side with this enormous increase we find that the purchasing power of the masses has remained practically stationary. If that purchasing power remains stationary and production increases it means that commodities will be piled up, and as that process continues sooner or later men find themselves out of work because they are unable to consume the goods they have produced.

Wages, based upon purchasing power, have remained practically stationary. To-day the human being is being exploited by the machine for the benefit of those who own the machine. Henry Ford said some little time ago that the machine was to be the slave of man. However, what has happened is that man has become the slave of the machine. From a governmental standpoint, we have not the faintest idea of how to cope with this situation. It is claimed that the labourer is a partner in industry, but that is not so. He is only a drudge who receives a mere pittance for his labour.

I have been asked, what have we to offer as a remedy to meet the situation? I submit that capital to-day is taking too great a toll out of industry. If statistics were consulted I have no doubt that they would show that the amount of money paid out per annum in interest would equal the total payroll of the country. Unfortunately, we have not those statistics from our own Bureau of Statistics, but those of the United States show that that is the case. Industrial conditions in both countries are on a par, so the same would apply to Canada.

I claim that industry ought so to adjust itself as to guarantee to the labourer a fairly steady annual wage. At the present time a man receives so much per hour when there is work to be performed; if there is no work, he receives nothing. A man with $10,000 to invest receives an annual return on his investment and I claim, Mr. Speaker, that a human being who invests in industry all that he has to invest is entitled to an annual return. He is more deserving than is the man who invests a few thousand dollars.

In times of national emergency the government mobilizes our national resources. This is a time of great emergency with many thousands of our people facing starvation, it is an emergency for the meeting of which the government should mobilize all national resources. As I said before, we have in our warehouses more commodities than we know what to do with and side by side with that aggregation of wealth and commodities we have hundreds of thousands of Canadians who do not know where their next meal is coming from. That is the problem facing the government. It may be very well for the leader of this government to offer certain nebulous proposals as outlined in the speech from the throne, but what we need are definite proposals to meet the present situation. Something is said in the speech from the throne about returning to normal and prosperous conditions the like of which we have never seen in the past. Let me tell the right hon. the Prime Minister that such fine phrases as those contained in the speech from the throne will not fill one empty stomach. We want such action as will return us to the right kind of prosperity. We do not want a prosperity which is reflected in the bank clearings and in the annual statements of financial and industrial concerns, a prosperity affecting only the few and not the many. We do not want a prosperity which will make millionaires out of the few and paupers out of the millions. We want a prosperity which will give to the man on the farm and in our industrial centres a decent livelihood, a prosperity which will afford an opportunity for his children and all those dependent upon him and give that security of life which to-day is denied him.

To-day the responsibility is on the government. The Prime Minister said that they were going to deal with the question or perish in the attempt. The time has come when he must deal with it, and although we are a small group, although there may be only three labour members in the house, we are to-day speaking for hundreds of thousands of people throughout the whole length and breadth of the Dominion. As hon. members know, when any matter arises pertaining to labour in various constituencies represented by members who are now in the house on the government side or the official opposition side, resolutions which are sent to those members are also sent to the Labour members. Those working people, whether they live in Nova Scotia or in the central provinces or in the western provinces, look to the small Labour group to bring these questions before the house, and as the government and the members generally deal with those questions, so shall they be judged by the working men and women in those constituencies.

When my colleagues, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for South Vancouver (Mr. MacInnis) and I raise questions in the house, we feel that we are speaking for far more people than our own immediate constituents. By resolutions which have been sent to us and by dozens of letters which we have received, we know they are looking to us to raise this question; they are demanding of us that we impress upon the government and the house the urgency of the matter. Therefore I hope the government will rise to the occasion, and will not deal with this question as if it were of no importance, for never has there been before the house a question of equal importance to that of unemployment at the present time. From coast to coast we have vast numbers of men asking for action from the government and I hope the government is not going to disappoint the workers or the agriculturists of this country.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to assure the house that we have raised this question to-day, not with any desire to delay the ordinary business of the house, but because unemployment throughout the country at the present time is so serious that we could not allow the Easter holidays to pass without at least making an effort to have some definite pronouncement from the government with regard to what they intend to do in this matter. It may be very important that the estimates should be considered before the Easter holidays; it may be important that the contractors on the Welland canal should be paid, but it is equally important that the unemployed of this country should be cared for during the next two weeks.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A great deal more important.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My hon. friend from Bow River says that it is a great deal more important. I quite agree with him, because, after all, some of these contractors can manage in one way or another to get along for a few weeks. On the other hand, many of the unemployed are on the bread line and within a day or so they will be on the verge of starvation. It is tremendously important that this matter should be attended to without delay.

There are in the house members who claim to stand for the ancient rights of the British people. I am glad indeed that parliament has throughout the centuries permitted the ordinary members to voice their grievances before supply can be granted, and I am pleased we have this opportunity to-day of voicing what I believe are the real grievances of a large number of people in Canada.

When the question of the point of order and the introduction of the motion was before the chair, I ventured to say that I thought this matter was urgent and among other things I suggested that unless it were attended to, we might very easily have riots within the next two weeks. I think those who have been in the house for any length of time will agree that I am not in any way inciting to riot, but I should like to point out that the very first responsibility of the government is to make such arrangements as will at least allow the people to live, to eat, and to-day there are many people who are not in a position, unless something is done in an organized way, even to obtain an existence. I am glad to notice many hon. gentlemen on both sides are giving attention to this matter to-day. I know quite well that as individual members they are very much interested in this subject and I would hope that a subject of this kind could be taken out of the range of party politics. I do not know how many other members feel about it, but the other day, although I have been in the house for ten years, I could not but be rather shocked at the levity that characterized the discussion on unemployment. It seemed to me that we were footballing it back and forth in order to obtain some party advantage and were not dealing with the question as its merits would warrant our doing. I know members individually would take a great deal of interest in any poor person who came to their doors, but a large majority of the members have not been quite so fully in touch with labour as some of us have, and from day to day they are perhaps not besieged as we are by unemployed people seeking relief. Under these circumstances I think they will pardon us if we stress more than they feel like doing, the importance of the question. Someone during my colleague's speech atempted to throw discredit upon his statement with regard to certain unemployed being clubbed. I happen to have in my hand a clipping from the Evening Citizen of March 28, 1931, and in it I find this statement contained in an editorial entitled "No Slave Labour in Canada.":

> From Toronto, last Thursday, came word of the mayor's stand against the clubbing of unemployed men when they crowd eagerly before an unemployment portal in search of work.

I think no discredit should be thrown on the statement of my colleague. Further the editorial states:

> In Montreal on the same day, revolver shots were fired at a crowd of free but unemployed Canadian workers when they surged around the office of a private contractor.

The editorial proceeds in discussing these two news items, to say:

> The wisdom of the law may have to be invoked in Montreal to determine how far the freedom of the Canadian workless is to be observed. They are free to starve, as this winter has demonstrated.

Again it says:

> But the limit is being reached. The line is drawn at the portals of employment offices where men go to seek work. They must apparently be satisfied with freedom to starve. They cannot have employment. It is just a question how long this superior freedom of the Canadian workless can go on.

I do not think I need to spend much time to-day in stating the actual facts of the situation. In this corner we were glad last year to have the support of the Conservative party when we introduced the question of unemployment and urged that the government do something about the matter. The situation is worse to-day than it was a year ago. I think that will be frankly admitted. I am not going to discuss the question whether the onus for that should be placed upon the government or not. I do not think the government is primarily to blame for that, but I do say that if we obtained support from the Conservative party last year, we ought to obtain support this year when we introduce the question again and urge immediate action.

Mr. SPENCER: The conditions are worse.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, the conditions are worse.

I do not propose to deal with the government's own report on the Unemployment Relief Act of 1930, but I would like to emphasize one statement made by my colleague, that we succeeded in providing for less than eighteen days' work, or three weeks' work, for the unemployed. Here was the special session called; we sat for two weeks and voted twenty million dollars for the relief of the unemployed. As a matter of fact, all that effort succeeded in providing only three weeks' work for a very limited number of individuals, 228,351, a smaller number than are now unemployed. That is an astonishing situation, that with all the effort we have made we have provided less than three weeks' work for less than the number of unemployed to-day.

In some way they have been looked after during the past winter. What is to happen after to-day when the relief is cut off? That is the emergency. I do not think we ought to go home for the Easter recess without provision being made to carry them for at least a few weeks longer because the ordinary spring work will not open up before that time and it should be remembered there will not be anything like the amount of spring work this year which there has been under normal circumstances.

I take just one or two items almost at random from the government's own report. In Manitoba, for example, there were 36,968 individuals granted direct relief. I turn to the note at the bottom of that same table on page 11 of the report and read:

In addition to above, the city of Montreal reports having given 178,659 nights' lodgings to single men and 1,063,034 meals.

And so on. These extracts are simply indicative of the conditions that prevailed. If one wanted to go outside of the government's own reports, there are abundant evidences of the seriousness of the situation. There came to me the other day the March number of Social Welfare, a social workers' magazine, in which an account is given of what is being done by churches and philanthropic societies outside altogether of the aid which has been given by the government. One article concerns Winnipeg, and in this particular case includes what is being done by the government. It says:

The employment service of Canada reports no farm, camp or bush work, and the situation has been in the same condition since the early autumn of 1930. Since September 1, 1930, 4,012 married men have applied for assistance, 347 of whom have been placed in work on bridge and subway building, in which the provincial and Dominion governments participate, and 320 of whom have been given work in street cleaning, which is financed entirely by the city.

Or I turn to Montreal, and I find this statement by Dr. F. G. Pedley:

In the vicinity of Dufferin square, where five thousand idle men are registered, our slums are an eyesore to the community. Throughout the country there are countless level crossings where citizens of the Dominion are daily imperilled. In our own city there is great need for a subway to meet the ever-increasing traffic. The excuse that there is no work to do cannot stand in the face of these facts. If social work is to be constructive in this community and this country, it must carefuly consider ways and means to overcome such economic conditions as we are afflicted with this year.

I could turn to Hamilton or to the capital city itself, or Toronto. Let me quote a paragraph in regard to work that is being done by the United Church in the city of Toronto:

In these institutions 85,000 free meals were supplied, and 30,250 free beds provided. Clothing—including boots, socks, underwear, suits of clothes and overcoats, totalling many thousands—was distributed free to homeless men.

Take St. John, away down in the maritimes. From an article by Clarence Smith I quote:

On January 15, 728 men (25 non-residents) were registered, about 80 per cent of whom were day labourers. When the registrations at the labour unions' headquarters were added, between 1,000 and 1,100 was the estimated total. The population of Saint John is about 60,000.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

I could proceed to read extracts from papers from coast to coast, but as I said I do not consider that it is necessary. We are all receiving daily, at least I am, letters and resolutions telling about the appalling conditions that prevail.

Now, what is being done? For one thing, the government is deporting a large number of the unemployed. Whilst I agree that it is a considerable relief to the individual municipalities to have these men deported, I think it is a serious state of things when men who have come to this country in good faith to settle here, and have attempted to get work, should be deported just because they are unable to get work. I have had scores of examples of that character. The way it is done is this: A man cannot get work, and he then either has to starve or commit a crime, or apply for relief. If he obtains relief, he is then a public charge, and on the ground of being a public charge he is deported. I think that is hardly fair to the immigrants that we have begged to come to this country. The older members of this house will remember that year after year I have stood in my place and protested against immigration to this country. I thought that we were bringing in more people than we could take care of. I thought these people were tending to crowd the local labour market, and that they themselves were being exploited. Now I urge that when the government has definitely adopted a policy of bringing people to this country and has definitely promised them work, as has been done through the various agencies, it is not for us immediately work is slack to deport them to the countries whence they came. Many of them have broken all their home ties in the old country. Many of them have spent all they had in order to pay for their passage to this country, and many of them would be excellent settlers if they got half a chance in this country. I would suggest that after we have spent millions of money in trying to advertise this country in Great Britain and Europe, it is, to say the least, very poor policy for us to return a great many of these disgruntled people to the old country suffering from what they regard, and I think rightly, as a substantial injustice. From that standpoint alone it seems to me we ought to look after these people.

There is a tendency at the present time to turn off all the single men. We have in the past had so many opportunities for work that it was considered that a single man could get out and rustle for himself. That is not true to-day. A single man is almost as helpless as a married man so far as obtaining work is concerned. Of course, the unmarried group are a little more mobile and can drift more readily from place to place than can the married men, but it is no easier for them to get work. In fact, in nearly all our municipalities a preference is given, and perhaps quite rightly, to married men, but that means that when a single man is turned out of one city he simply drifts to another, and he finds it next to impossible to obtain work. I think of the situation as it was presented to me only a week or ten days ago when I happened to be back in my own city for a day or so. A young man whom I have known for several years came to see me. He was an Englishman. He had been employed on the provincial telephone lines. His work had stopped and he had been unable to obtain work since. He was forced to accept city relief. One day he objected to the treatment a fellow citizen was receiving. He considered the treatment was brutal and whether or not he was right he objected to it. As punishment relief was immediately cut off. "Now," he said, "what am I to do? I have not anything behind me; I have no resources whatever; the city refuses to give me relief; I am ostracized and I am driven to become a criminal." I gave him a small sum of money to tide him over for a day or two. I want hon. members to know that he was not begging but I gave him a small sum; then I came down to Ottawa. Mr. Speaker, I ask hon. members of this house what there is for that man to do? There is absolutely no work in the city for him; there is no work that he may get throughout the province. The only thing he can do is to smash a window.

Mr. SPENCE: No, no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The only thing he can do is to become a criminal in order to live.

Mr. SPENCE: It is such members as my hon. friend who incite them to do it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am not inciting them.

Mr. SPENCE: Yes, my hon. friend is doing it right along.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am not. I am putting the predicament of that man before hon. members of this house and I ask what there is for a man in that position to do. In the city from which I come during the last winter many men begged to be allowed to sleep in the jails, and they have done this for several years. Those conditions were reported a year ago before our industrial relations committee in connection with the unemployment investigation. So we have it that this man is put into a position whereby he is forced to become a criminal in order to obtain anything to eat. I do not know what he is going to do. Of course he may beg. He is likely to be arrested for begging, because it is a crime. However, he is only one of hundreds across this country who find themselves in similar positions. If we go on in our present course without announcing any definite way to take care of these people there will be a great many people who will practically be forced into crime. After all it is a fundamental principle that people have the right to live; I repeat, they have the right to live. Each person feels that right. For the life of me I cannot see how any government can claim the loyalty of individual citizens if it does not in some way provide for them a means of livelihood. In the absence of some such provision the very basis of organized government is swept away.

At this time I would like to call the attention of hon. members of this house to other classes who have not been provided for. Let us for instance consider the imperial veterans. We are endeavouring and are succeeding fairly well in providing for our own returned men. However, there are a great many people who were encouraged to come to this country after the war; they were imperial veterans. They came to our land with the intention of making it their home and for a year or two they did very well. Then there came the present depression. What are they to do? Our laws are not sufficiently wide to cover those people. Our own veterans are being cared for but the imperial veterans are not. Perhaps hon. members might say that they should look to Great Britain. However, they broke their relationships with the old land when they came to Canada. As individuals they are helpless. Hon. members can readily understand that the individual imperial veteran cannot write to Great Britain in the hope that he may receive relief. It would seem to me therefore that we should make special provision for the care of this group of people.

Then there is a large group of people who have been in the country for a period less than five years, or in individual cities for periods of less than one year. In many cases the period of one year is taken as the period necessary to establish residence. These people cannot be blamed because they found it necessary to drift from city to city. The fact is that a very large number of our transient labourers must move from place to place to find work, so they cannot establish residence in any one city. The governing body of the individual city however feels that it is not under any responsibility to take care of such transients. I sympathize with the ratepayers of those cities. In the city of Winnipeg we have had thousands of people crowd in upon us from every quarter and we as citizens have felt that we have been asked to carry an unjust burden. Yet the indvidual unemployed transient is helpless; what is he to do? He has been in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and in a dozen places of northern Ontario getting jobs for short periods of time. In the proper sense of the term he cannot establish residence in any one of these places. I say it becomes necessary to take care of that group of people. Because of the fact that the relief is being cut off at the end of this month by a great many municipalities it seems to be that some provision should be made for those people, at least for the next few weeks.

The most serious aspect in this whole situation is the fact that the unemployed man is regarded as a near criminal. I take it that that mode of thinking is a relic of the old pioneer days in which most of us Canadians have been brought up. Undoubtedly in the old days any man who wanted a job could readily find it. If he could not find it on his own farm he could go to that of his neighbour, and in those days they were anxious to have hired men. If he could not find employment on the farm he could go back to the bush; most of our people did go to the bush for several months during the winter. If a man could not find work in the city he could go out on construction work, but to-day construction work is very limited in extent. The days of the rapid building of our railroads are past. There are not the possibilities for work which existed at one time when the west was so rapidly opening up. Now, what are we to do under these circumstances? If a man cannot obtain work in Winnipeg he may go to Regina, but he may probably find more unemployed men in Regina than there were in Winnipeg. He could go up to the Pas and as happened last spring he would find himself stranded with several other hundred men waiting to go up to Churchill. He may return from the Pas by freight train, as hundreds of them did, and go to Saskatoon. That is the situation with which we are faced to-day. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we can deal fairly with this question until we clear our minds of the conception we gained in our earlier pioneer days regarding unemployed men. We must recognize frankly that to-day it is not a crime to be unemployed; it is no crime whatever. It is not even an indication that a man is of low mentality, that he is lazy, useless or anything of that character. Many of our best men are caught at this time. That fact ought to be recognized and we ought to treat those unemployed men as self respecting citizens. Of course I would admit that if a man has some weakness, if he drinks or is lazy he might be the first to be turned off. The fact remains however that he has been doing work and that if suitable work were provided he would be at work again. I think we ought not to treat our unemployed men as criminals or near criminals.

I do not wish to expect too much from the government with regard to this question of unemployment. It may be true that the Prime Minister said that he would abolish unemployment. Well, if he expected to do that he was evidently mistaken; if the electors voted for him on that ground they also were mistaken. The very worst that can be said is that the government occupies its official position more or less under false pretences, or because they themselves were not apprised of the significance of the situation. I am not going to go into the political side of the question however; probably we have had enough of that. To-day we are actually facing a very serious situation and I ask: "What can be done about it?" For several years we in this corner of the house have urged that provision should be made in the form of unemployment insurance. Unemployment insurance has been ridiculed as a dole. If one can properly interpret the speech delivered not long ago by the Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson) it would seem that we were not to have anything in the form of unemployment insurance in the near future. I have never suggested that unemployment insurance was a solution of our difficulties. The only solution is to find employment; and behind that, the still more fundamental problem the distribution of what is produced. But in the meantime I do suggest that unemployment insurance might help to tide over the present extremely critical situation. It has been despised as the dole; but I submit that nothing is more degrading than our present system, or lack of system, in providing relief. This practice of turning people out into the streets to stand in queues before soup kitchens; turning them out to beg until they are passed over to some mission which may keep them overnight; this practice that prevails in my own city, of giving relief tickets and sending men to all sorts of places to tide them over a day or so—this is all absolutely demoralizing. I ask the government therefore to consider most seriously the question whether it would not be possible in the near future to institute some form of unemployment insurance.

I do not want to be hypocritical in suggesting this, because I know the difficulties with which the government would be confronted. This is not a time when there could be any reserve piled up through contributions. We are in a period when the majority of people think it is a time to economize. I do not agree with that policy, but the majority of people take that position. I know the government would face grave difficulties in instituting unemployment insurance at this time. More than that, I am doubtful—and I say it frankly—whether unemployment is not so great that it would almost swamp the resources of any government that might attempt to relieve it in any adequate form. Nevertheless, it is at the same time incumbent on the administration of the day at least to make an effort to do something of this character, even though a full-fledged scheme might not be feasible.

Some of us perhaps are a little handicapped in advocating reforms of this kind, simply because we have come to the conclusion that the present economic system under which we are living is not capable of maintaining itself and at the same time taking care of the people. I think we shall have to face this fact in the near future. I know that when I make a statement of that kind many people think that I am simply ranting. When I cite the evils of the capitalistic system they say, no doubt, that I am simply taking advantage of an opportunity to voice a little cheap socialism. But we have reached the stage of the world's development where we have to face great economic facts; and even though some of the remedies may not be quite to the liking of some of those who in the past have advocated the present system and benefited by it, I submit that if such people want to maintain that system—I will put it on that ground for the moment—they will have to take some action of this kind. You can blow up a balloon to a certain limit, but if you blow it up too far, as we used to do as children, we know what the result will be. The balloon bursts. Now I suggest that the balloon is pretty nearly at the bursting point, and if you really want to maintain the system as it is to-day I suggest that you let out a little of the air in the form of some relief to some of the people; otherwise there is apt to be a catastrophe. The balloon is apt to burst. I do not think that this danger can be simply swept aside as chimerical. If one looks at the financial system to-day, at the enormous dividends on which we are expected to pay interest, watered stock, and all that sort of thing, taxation and the international debt responsibilities we have, I think it must come home to every thoughtful member of the house that we cannot stand a great deal more, unless indeed the system is considerably more elastic than most of us imagine.

It would seem to me that we have almost reached the point where we shall have to face the issue frankly. To which are we going to give priority? Dividends, profits, vested interests of all kinds, or, on the other hand, the needs of men, women and children? There are those who say it is quite possible to pay large dividends and high wages. There are some who say it is quite possible to maintain our banking reserves and at the same time take care of unemployment. Well, I would suggest that now is an excellent time to try it out. I doubt very much whether it can be done. The overhead has become so great that we cannot very well carry that overhead and at the same time look after immediate needs. If you say we can, then we agree at least on this: You look after the immediate needs in the meantime, with the idea that it may be one way of perpetuating the system, and I will look after those needs with the idea that this is only the beginning of a break up of the system, being convinced that human needs ought to come before so-called property rights.

Going into various municipalities and in my own city, I find on every occasion that it is taken for granted that the bond interest is the first claim, and that if you cannot pay bond interest there is no use talking about helping unemployment. I may be heretical; you may call me bolshevist or whatever you like; but I say that caring for the needs of men, women and children in the community ought to have precedence over bond interest. We shall have to face that sooner or later, and in that connection I am tempted to say this. When we remember that most of the bonded indebtedness was incurred at a time when the buying power of the dollar was approximately twice what it is to-day, I would say that in all justice you should at least cut the bonded indebtedness in two in order to give even the most fundamental justice to those who have to pay the taxes to pay the bonds. There is the situation as we have it to-day, and in this house we have that alternative presented to us. We come to vote estimates and I find a considerable amount which has to be paid by the government on account of our public debts; or the amounts to be paid are statutory, and that settles it. If it is statutory it goes through without even consideration by the house; it goes through as a matter of course. And immediately we are told, "Well, we cannot provide for any of these fancy schemes, in relation to unemployment for instance; we cannot provide for unemployment relief or insurance because we have not revenue enough to go around." And the bugbear is held up, that we shall have to pay greater taxation, of which we are all afraid. There is enough wealth in this country to enable us to stand a great deal more taxation, if that taxation were upon the great corporations and were not levied, as it is to-day, upon the rank and file of the small people of the country. So long as there is wealth which is being invested in foreign countries by people who have made it in this country, I say there are sources from which we can obtain greater funds. So long as we in this country are allowing the greater part of the wealth to pass down to the next generation, there are sources from which we can obtain increased taxation. After all, it seems to me that we have to get behind these financial questions to the real fundamentals.

We have enough wheat in this country to feed the people; we have enough timber to build all the houses; we have enough clothing to clothe all the people. At the moment I cannot think of a single commodity produced in this country of which we have not a sufficient supply to-day. There is no use telling our people to go out and work harder; we should tell them, from an economic standpoint, that they should work a fewer number of hours per day. There is no use telling our people we should lay up more goods on the warehouse shelves when the fact is that we should enable them, in some way, to get the goods off those shelves. The fact, as recognized by every economist to-day, is that the question now is not one of production but one of distribution, but most of us are still living in the earlier pioneer days when we had to produce more as the only way in which we could eat anything at all.

We are living in an age of surpluses; the question is not to get more but to distribute what we have. The unemployment we have to-day is a result of the labour saving devices which have been introduced during the last few years and the labour saving organization that has taken place, which together have resulted in greater efficiency. Unemployment has resulted from these causes, yet we turn around and treat the poor unemployed almost as if they were criminals. If we, as a community at large, have in any way benefited by all this wonderful development of the past hundred years it seems to me that the very least we can do is to care for those individuals who through the maladjustments of our system are thrown out of work.

I would ask the government and the Prime Minister to give the most serious consideration to this question, and I would point out again that if there was any occasion to call a special session in September to deal with this question, there is an equal or greater occasion for dealing with it at this stage of the present session.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to speak on the address, and had listed this question of unemployment as one of the matters which I wished to take up, but I am glad to take advantage of the occasion and present my remarks to the house now. This was the one policy amongst all the policies of the government on which I felt compelled to unhesitatingly and unqualifiedly criticize the government, the lack of any mention in the speech from the throne of any preparation for meeting the unemployment situation not in the past but in the future. I admit that if you look at the speech from the throne with a microscope you will find a very delicate reference to it, but a very cautious reference indeed. I find that the reference is to suggested > . . . . possible safeguards against a recurrence of the present subordination to world forces.

That is a very mild way to refer to the unemployment situation. The other references to unemployment in the speech from the throne all deal with the past, as to what has been done and with what success those measures have met. The speech contains nothing whatever to give us any hope or any anticipation that the government intend to bring forward at this session any proposals to deal with what is immediately, or very soon will be, in front of us. I refer to the destitution which will be in evidence next winter.

I believe that next winter the unemployment situation will be worse than it was last year, and I have several reasons for making that statement. The reserves are all gone. The workingman, the small man who had put aside a little sum of money in order to allow his daughter to go to normal school to become a teacher, or to help his son go to technical school, has had to use that sum of money in the support of the family. The car has been sold, and so on. Then again, the municipalities, and especially the smaller ones, are in the same position. They thought they had an unusual condition to contend with last winter and stretched their resources. They spent money when they had to perhaps borrow it in order to help the situation. They were compelled to do so or they would not have received the assistance of the government in unemployment relief. These municipalities will not be in a position to do the same thing next winter. Even the railways will not be able to help as they have last winter. The big railway companies have been subsidized by the government, at enormous expense, to anticipate their building programs. They can hardly be expected to project their developments so much further ahead in order to do the same thing again this coming winter.

We find that other bodies take a similar view of this matter. I have in my hand a column out of the Vancouver Daily Province dealing with conditions in that city. A special meeting of the city council was called to consider this question of the conditions which will prevail next winter, and one of the prominent aldermen said:

> But we must have concrete proposals for next winter, and not just drift along.

I am afraid we are just drifting along here, and will continue to do so until a desperate situation faces us. Then we find, as one of the hon. members who preceded me said, a reference to a small riot that took place last week in Vancouver. There were over 1,500 unemployed men engaged in that riot, in the middle of spring when there should not have been any person out of work. God knows how many more unemployed men were not engaged in that demonstration. In the same paper we find that a delegation went down from Nanaimo to Victoria asking the government what they were going to do to relieve the situation in that coal mining area, which is very bad at the present time. Again, in the last paper I received from home I find that Premier Tolmie is coming down here—and this may be news to the Prime Minister—to ask that $100,000 be given to the city of Vancouver to help out their present unemployment situation without the city being asked to match it dollar for dollar, because the city frankly state they have followed that policy up until now, but that the civic funds for relief purposes are virtually exhausted. What are they to do unless Premier Tolmie can get that $100,000, and not on the basis of dollar for dollar?

As I say, now is the time for us to make preparations for next fall and next winter. We do not want to have to call a special session of parliament to deal with the situation, so now is the time for us to consider what plans can be made to meet the inevitable destitution that will ensue next year. I saw the case of the unemployed summarized in a couplet the other day, and with the permission of the house I will place it on Hansard. It was as follows:

> Five wolves hunt for the soul of men
> And all have hunted me.
> Hunger and cold and fell disease,
> Aloneness, misery.

I think that puts the situation in a sentence. I might go further than that and say, "Let us beware lest we allow these wolves to be turned loose on society." They have tasted blood, so to speak, in the sufferings of the unemployed, the destitute unemployed and their wives and children, but suppose they are not satisfied and want more. What a feast they would have if they were turned loose on the leaders of society, the big magnates of business, these people who feel secure in their wealth and position, some of them fortified by having it handed down for a generation or two. These people have acquired a sort of smug, contented outlook on life; they have really come to believe that they are of finer clay than the common run of humanity, and they think that no matter what suffering may come to the submerged masses, as the saying is, it never can come to them. I would suggest, however, that they be not too sure, because what has happened in the past may happen again in the future. We admire the massive bulwarks of the great concrete dam, which holds back waters which have a potential energy of a million horse power. But dams have been known to crumble and the greater the dam the more disastrous its death-dealing capacity, the more terrible the onrushing force of the water which overwhelms the whole community.

In our day and generation it is not good to permit dry matches and powder to be too close together. It has been said that the cause of the French revolution was a remark made by a gentleman of high rank to the effect that if the common people were starving they could eat grass. Of course, that is quite wrong because a silly remark by an ignorant man was not the cause, but only the match which set fire to the powder, which was the realization by the people of the great chasm existing between what were called the upper and the lower strata of society; the utter lack on the part of the ruling classes of comprehension of, let alone sympathy with, the misery and degradation suffered by the masses of the people. The result was that the dam burst, and out rushed the pent-up forces of these desperate people, just like the water, careless of where it went, striking recklessly and wildly, doing great harm in the manner perhaps least calculated to produce the needed reforms of which the people themselves were only imperfectly aware. So, Mr. Speaker, I might warn the wealthy, ruling classes.

An hon. MEMBER: Where are they?

Mr. NEILL: We should take steps now, not to prepare against a revolution but to prevent the causes of revolution. An hon. member asks: Where are the wealthy ruling classes? They are to be found in almost every country of the world in spite of our supposed democratic systems of government. If you doubt it, Mr. Speaker, obtain Bradstreet's report on the financial resources of the federal cabinet ministers. Or, if you like, do the same thing with reference to the cabinet ministers of the province of British Columbia. If that does not satisfy Your Honour, go to the big moneyed companies of Canada and inquire if they do not expect something in return for their large campaign fund contributions. Were those contributions made simply from a love of humanity? I rather doubt it.

It behooves us to consider how we can meet this situation or overcome these conditions. Remedies will have to be adopted and policies considered which are of a far-reaching character. Greater cooperation than that which now exists will have to come about between capital and labour. To-day some of the far-sighted industrialists of the United States are looking towards that greater cooperation. I will not use the expression, "production for use and not for profit" because that would hurt the sensibilities of some hon. gentlemen opposite, but perhaps some of the best ideas conveyed in that phrase will sooner or later have to be adopted in our economic system. However, that is for the years to come, and in order to meet the situation which we will have to face for the next ten years there should be some form of unemployment insurance. As the hon. member for Winnipeg said, that cannot be brought about in a day because it would necessarily take time and be a contributory scheme which would have to be worked out by the best actuarial ability we have. The only thing we can do meantime is to make some provision for the emergency which is confronting us and provide work for the coming winter. That would mean the voting of money and the laying out of a program possibly somewhat similar to that carried out at the special session.

Let me conclude my remarks with a quotation from a hymn. I will mention that this is taken from the hymn book of the United church, because otherwise it might be thought that I was lending myself to communistic or bolshevik propaganda. This hymn is as follows:

> When wilt Thou save the people,
> Oh, God of mercy, when;
> The people, Lord, the people,
> Not crowns and thrones but men.
>
> Lord save the people, Thine they are,
> Thy children like Thine angels fair.
> From want, oppression and despair
> God save the people.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, the matter which has been brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) is one of great importance to every hon. member of this house and to the country as a whole, but I regret very much that it should have come up in the manner in which it has. The government and the house being very anxious to get certain business completed, I shall occupy only five minutes of the time of the house. This subject is of such importance that I could not sit quiet without taking part in the debate.

I desire to suggest what to me seems to be the practical thing to be done under the circumstances. If the distress in the country is as great as hon. members have represented it to be, there is no doubt that the government will have to take similar action to that taken last year. There is no doubt that had that action not been taken conditions to-day, bad as they are, would have been worse. It will be necessary to dip into the treasury and spend some money if present conditions continue and I suggest the following, not as a solution for unemployment, but as a practical proposition for immediate relief. The farmers are in need of relief. The hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) is asking that certain definite relief be granted for agriculture, and the government may have to do that. My suggestion is that the government purchase so many thousands of bushels of wheat, the eggs that are now rotting without a market, as well as the meat impossible of purchase by hundreds of thousands, and establish in every city a distributing food centre for those out of employment. That would settle the grub-stake of those people and with the same money would provide a certain amount of relief to the farmer.

I would suggest also that the government build highways and undertake other public works as quickly as possible so as to create employment. In order to do this, the government should issue treasury notes which could be taxed back again when times improved. Times will become better; we will have another of those funny things they call cycles no matter which government is in power, and then these notes can be taxed back and no increase will be incurred in the national debt. Those are my suggestions and I will not stop to develop them. I am sure that the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is listening, as well as the hon. ministers on the front benches, and probably they will do something about it. Hon. members who have spoken during this debate have spent too much of their time in discussing fundamental problems without considering the matter of immediate relief. I hope if any more speak they will be more specific as to what should be done after to-morrow when the relief will be withdrawn.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, when a similar debate took place at the last regular session I recall that I was criticized by the then opposition, now the members of the government, for having allowed so many speakers sitting on the opposition benches to discuss this important question without my making a reply on behalf of the government. Several hon. members of the opposition have urged to-day that something be done for the relief of unemployment, and yet not one member of the government has risen to state the case of the government. At that time I had to confess that although I was vitally interested in the question of unemployment, I had not suggested and could not suggest a cure for it; but the present government, during the last campaign, assumed the responsibility of ending unemployment. Therefore if the members for the Winnipeg constituencies and the hon. member for Vancouver South, the three Labour members, urge upon the government of the day to do something towards relieving unemployment, the responsibility is one which the government has taken upon itself. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) when speaking at Regina on June 10 last, as reported in the Leader-Post of June 11, had this to say, referring to the government of the day:

> They play with the lives of men and women. What for? Do they realize there are lives that they are playing with, food for wives and children, hunger? Nine years of wasted effort before the great betrayal. It did not take Judas that long.

Again, speaking at Regina on the same day, as reported in the Toronto Globe of June 11, he said:

> When you gamble with a nation's prosperity for power the result is inevitable. The government of to-day has not seen the to-morrow,—they have only thought of to-day and thinking only of it the result has been that now we have unemployment, people walking our streets, men and women hungry,—we have all these things in this great rich country.

Again, speaking at Moncton on July 10 last, the present Prime Minister had this to say:

> The Conservative party is going to find work for all who are willing to work, or perish in the attempt. It is going to call parliament at the earliest possible date after July 28 and take such steps as will end this tragic condition of unemployment and bring prosperity to the country as a whole. . . . Mr. King promises consideration of the problem of unemployment. I promise to end unemployment. Which plan do you like best?

Again, speaking at Quebec, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of July 14 last, the present Prime Minister said:

> There was no necessity for a conference on unemployment, he continued. The solution was too apparent. "What you want is work," he exclaimed, "not conferences, and you are going to get work." Unless his promises to the people of Canada were kept if elected to office, Mr. Bennett said he wanted Quebec and other members of his party to vote him out of office.

There are other promises along those lines, but I am not going to take up the time of the house in quoting them. In view of these statements it seems strange that not one word with respect to how the government proposes to end unemployment is contained in the speech from the throne. It was not surprising, therefore, that the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) should inquire a few days ago as to what the government proposed to do with respect to the relief of unemployment. I am sure every hon. member was astonished that the government made no answer to his question. Under the circumstances it was the duty of the hon. member for North Winnipeg to bring the question before the house in the only way that I suppose he could do so. It was also surprising to find that instead of inviting suggestions from the opposition or from members sitting behind the government, members of the government rose in their place in order to endeavour to prevent a discussion from taking place. I consider it is the duty of the government to make a statement to the house and to the country as to how they propose to end unemployment.

There is no question that the unemployment situation is far worse than it was when the Prime Minuister made those promises to the people. One has only to take the figures supplied us over the signature of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) as of March 1. Hon. members will find that when my hon. friends took office in August last, the index of employment reported by over 7,000 firms in Canada stood at 118.8, and that a decrease occurred every succeeding month until on March 1 it stood at 100.2, or more than 18 per cent fewer employed in those industries than when my hon. friend took office. That is a confession of failure. I do not know what opportunity my hon. friends from Quebec and other districts who are sitting behind the government are going to take advantage of in order to do as the Prime Minister invited them at Quebec to do, namely, vote him out of office. But while they are considering that matter, we might point out that under the measures brought down during the special session, the government appropriated $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment and made contributions to the municipalities and the provinces, with great beating of drums and blowing of trumpets, but they actually withheld public works for which appropriations had been made by the preceding Liberal government and which would have employed workmen throughout the country. According to the report of the Department of Labour, work amounting to 3,975,355 days' work was supplied to 228,355 men, an average of sixteen days' work per man from the time the act went into force until the first of March. Under what conditions? The conditions set out in the regulations and under which the grant was made to the provinces and the municipalities, provided that the prevailing rate of wages should be paid to the workingmen, and that the same working conditions should apply. Nevertheless we have in northern Ontario, of which I am most conversant, men working to-day at starvation wages, not at prevailing rates that obtain in the district, and under such conditions that if they open their mouths for a minute they are deprived even of the pittance they are receiving.

Mr. ARTHURS: What are the railway companies paying for the same class of labour?

Mr. HEENAN: Forty-three cents an hour for the lowest paid men they have. Does the hon. member want me to show him the contract indicating what the men are receiving?

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. ARTHURS: I do not think the ex-Minister of Labour is correct in that.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be interrupted. One of the ministers of the Ontario government, after I spoke at Hamilton, stated that in northern Ontario they were paying the same rate of wages that obtained on the railroad. I have in my office a schedule of wages and working conditions showing that the wages of the sectionmen on the railway run from forty-one to forty-three cents an hour.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am talking about the extra gangs.

Mr. HEENAN: Why does the hon. member not raise the question as to what they are paying in Russia instead of looking for the lowest wages in Canada?

Mr. ARTHURS: We are talking of conditions in Canada.

Mr. HEENAN: I have in my hand a schedule showing the prevailing rate of wages in northern Ontario. When I had the honour to be Minister of Labour, we had public buildings under construction in northern Ontario and we had officers who went out and secured figures showing the prevailing rates of wages. according to the Labour Gazette for December, 1930, the prevailing rate of wages paid on the public building at Keewatin was 42½ cents an hour for common labour and 50 cents an hour for skilled labour. In the same territory, an Indian public school was being erected at Kenora, and the rate of wages paid on that building for common labour was 42½ cents an hour, as reported in the Labour Gazette for February, 1929. On a public building at Fort Frances, according to the Labour Gazette for October 1929, common labour was paid 40 cents an hour and skilled labour 50 cents an hour. The Labour Gazette for August, 1930, reports that on a public wharf at Kenora common labour was paid 42½ cents an hour.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the prevailing rates of wages in my district, and yet in spite of the agreement that was made between this government and the government of Ontario, the provincial government is denying to its labourers a proper scale of wages as provided for in that agreement. I was very glad to hear the Acting Minister of Labour in this house (Mr. Gordon) say in reply to a question I put to him the other day that if any provincial government or other body was not paying the prevailing rate of wages the federal grant would be withheld until the wage rate was adjusted. I thank my hon. friend for saying that; it is what I expected him to say. I would point out to the minister that it really means the holding back of thousands and thousands of dollars of which the workingmen of this country have been robbed up to the present time, and in that connection I would suggest that as there have been three million working days up to the present, and I am satisfied that in many instances as much as one dollar a day has been withheld from these men, say three million dollars, a royal commission should be appointed in order to see that these men get justice. I know the conditions that prevail all through northern Ontario, and I know that if any of these men had complained that they were being deprived of this pittance, they would have felt the heavy hand of the Ontario government, acting for its own selfish ends. I do not intend to take up more of the time of the house; I think that we should have some answer from the government.

I could go on and advocate a policy of unemployment insurance. I am satisfied that if the government of the day will follow up what was done by the late administration, we shall have unemployment insurance in this country before very long. This house has already gone on record as endorsing the principle of a contributory system of unemployment insurance. The house did declare that under our constitution it was a matter coming under provincial jurisdiction, but declared further that the matter should be taken up with the provinces at the first Dominion-provincial conference. We were in touch with the provinces in connection with the matter before we left office. Some of the provinces have endorsed that principle. I noticed that only the other day the premier of Manitoba stated that that province was in favour of unemployment insurance and had conveyed its ideas to the Dominion government and asked for a conference, but as yet had not been advised as to any such conference. I consider that it is the duty of this government to state, not only to the hon. members from Winnipeg, but to the whole house, what they propose to do, not simply to end unemployment but to relieve immediately the present urgent conditions.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): I have a few remarks to make, Mr. Speaker, before the end of the fiscal year Yesterday I asked the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if the items in the estimates that were not expended during the fiscal year lapsed to-night at twelve o'clock. He said, yes. I am very glad to see my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) in his place. I am very sorry that the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) is not present, but I would ask the Prime Minister to ask the faithful messenger who brought down the Welland canal contract last night to look after the Minister of Marine this afternoon.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways are both familiar with the question which I am about to bring before the house. I have already supplied them with all the facts relating to the non-building of the station at Rivière du Loup by the Canadian National Railway.

There was first a report by the director of the provincial board of health, dated December 21, 1928. It is in French, but I will read it for the benefit of my hon. friends who both understand the French language very well. It is addressed to the Acting Chief Commissioner of the railway commission, and reads:

Quebec, December 21, 1928.

Mr. Thomas Vien, K.C.,
Acting Chairman,
Railway Commission,
Ottawa, Ont.

My Dear Mr. Vien:

Complying with my instructions, Doctor A. Barabé, medical officer of the Sanitary Unit of the county of Temiscouta, accompanied by Doctor Dumais, District Inspector of Health and Mr. Labelle, Inspector of the Unit, inspected the station of the National Railways, at Rivière-du-Loup.

I have just received their report and I deem it my strict duty to forward you a copy without further delay.

The perusal of this report will acquaint you with the unwholesome sanitary condition in which the Rivière-du-Loup's station is kept. This railway centre is the most important existing between Levis and Moncton, and I hardly can understand why the public place herein mentioned is so neglected.

On many occasions we notified the officials of the Canadian National Railway, from Sir Henry Thornton down to and including the Divisional Superintendent, of the deplorable condition, not to say unwholesome in many instances, of the station under the management of the Canadian National Railways in our province, and invariably we received the answer "That they would look into the matter, that the lack of appropriation had prevented them, heretofore making improvements, that certain reports received by us were exaggerated, etc," with the result in the end that nothing or little is ever done to meet our claims.

In no way, do I wish to impute to anybody intentions or dispositions which he has not, but I wonder how it is having visited many places in this country, that in other provinces we see tidy stations where hygienic precautions exist, while in the province of Quebec, some stations are in a deplorable state.

I am very sorry to trouble you, but in dealing with dilatory methods to which some have recourse in order to evade our requests, I cannot do otherwise than calling your attention to this matter. I hope you will forgive me and trust that I shall not have to publish the report in question in order to obtain satisfaction.

The conditions prevailing in Rivière-du-Loup exist in numerous stations in the Lake St. John and Chicoutimi districts, and in many other stations under the Canadian National Railway system, and to which I have already drawn the attention of the official authorities.

I feel confident that in bringing to your notice the state of things of which I am complaining you will find means to help us in the best interests of the population which the National Railway system serves in our province.

Your obedient servant,
The Director,
Dr. A. Lessard.

The conclusion of the report is as follows:

After reading this report, it seems to us that the conclusions are easy enough to draw. The fault lies in the condition of the building which is very old, and poorly kept. Adequate repairs would be difficult to carry out and with perhaps doubtful results.

Without being taxed with exaggeration, we wish to state that only a new building would answer the purpose, if the officials of National Railways have at heart improving this station to the satisfaction of the travelling public.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): What is the date?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I have not the date, but I may say to my hon. friend that it was sent by Doctor Lessard at the same time as the letter of December 21, 1928, to Mr. Thomas Vien, Railway Commissioner.

Last year during the special session, Mr. Speaker, I brought the attention of this government to the fact that before any further money for unemployment was spent the appropriations which had been made during the regular session of 1930 ought to be exhausted. Of the amounts allocated to the use of the Canadian National railways nearly $80,000 was put aside for the building of a new station at Rivière du Loup. That station, one of the oldest in the province of Quebec, was built by the old Grand Trunk Railway Company. The Canadian National Railways decided that it was time to build a new station. After conditions were explained to the railways and shipping committee, the money was voted by the house, but since this government took office nothing has been done. Money was voted for the improvement of the wharf at Rivière du Loup, but, on account of some strange circumstances which I explained to the Minister of Public Works the other day, only part of it was spent. There was money for the building of a post office at Trois Pistoles. The sum of $20,000 was set aside for that purpose, but nothing was spent. Money was set aside for improving the wharves at different places, but only a portion of that money was spent as a measure of unemployment relief.

A resolution was passed by the chamber of commerce of Rivière du Loup on April 19, 1929, asking for the building of a new station. Also on April 22, 1929, a resolution was passed by the town council of Rivière du Loup to the same effect. On May 1, 1929, the general manager of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National railways, Mr. Appleton, wrote as follows:

May 1, 1929.

Louis S. Pommet, Esq.,
Secretary,
Chamber of Commerce,
Rivière du Loup, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—This will acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 22nd ultimo, enclosing copy of resolution passed at a meeting of the council of the Chamber of Commerce of Rivière du Loup, held on Friday, the 19th day of April, 1929, respecting Canadian National Railways station building at Rivière du Loup and would advise that this matter is receiving our earnest attention and the necessary arrangements are being made to include an item in our budget for 1930 covering the construction of a new station building and appurtenances, for the consideration of our executive officers.

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. U. Appleton,
General Manager.

The deputy minister of railways wrote me thus on May 10, 1930:

In answer to your letter of May 5, I wish to advise that there has been included in the Canadian National Railways budget for 1930 an item of $77,136 for the construction of a new station at Rivière du Loup, P.Q.

This detail is taken care of by section (d) of vote number 323, 1930-31 estimates.

Yours faithfully,
V. I. Smart,
Deputy Minister.

The total amount voted was $52,870,000. The amount necessary for the building of a station would be only a small sum as compared with the large sum I have mentioned. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no pressure brought to bear by politicians in connection with the building of this station. The matter was pressed upon the railway commission by the board of health, and following that the Canadian National Railways took action by putting an item in their budget for the building of the station. On May 28, 1930, Mr. L. V. Hummel, principal assistant to the president of the Canadian National Railways, wrote me thus:

Dear Mr. Pouliot:

In reply to yours of May 19, I beg to advise that plans are now being prepared for a new station at Rivière du Loup.

As soon as these plans are ready, it is the intention to call for tenders, and have the work done by contract. In view of the size of the building, it is impracticable for us to construct the station with our regular B. and B. forces.

Yours faithfully,

L. V. Hummel.

On July 14, 1930, Mr. I. C. Rand, general counsel of the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways, wrote thus to the city of Rivière du Loup:

We are anxious that the work be proceeded with without undue delay.

He was speaking on behalf of the Canadian National Railways. I have in my hand a poster published by the Conservative candidate. This poster is full of promises and in section (e) of article 6 the promise is made to build the new station so long expected at Rivière du Loup. This poster was published on July 24, four days before the election.

I now come to the words used by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. During the campaign my right hon. friend spoke at Brandon, the constituency of the former Minister of Railways. What did the present Prime Minister say upon that occasion? In the Winnipeg Evening Tribune of June 23, 1930, I find the following:

Again declaring his opposition to an amalgamation of Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, Mr. Bennett said he had just heard a new canard to the effect that if elected he would appoint one of the Canadian Pacific Railway officers to the presidency of the Canadian National. "Can you imagine anything so ridiculous?" he asked. "I want to say that the Conservatives in power will give the Canadian National management a stronger support and a more disinterested support than they have had under the King administration. There will be less log rolling and interference. The management will be better able to carry out their policies without politicians butting in and trying to stop them.

On August 22 the hon. Minister of Railways wrote to the perpetual Conservative candidate in my constituency. That gentleman stated that he was independent from our leader and from Mr. Meighen, when he supported Mr. Patenaude. Later he became a partisan of Mr. Meighen and afterwards of the right hon. the Prime Minister. I hope his fidelity to the latter party will last long.

An hon. MEMBER: He polled a big vote.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, but since then some of the people who voted for him have been operated on for cataracts. The hon. the Minister of Railways wrote to that gentleman. The information I have in my hand is in the French language, but with your permission Mr. Speaker, I will translate it.

I have received your favour of August 20, with enclosures. I shall be pleased to do all I can with regard to your proposals or suggestions.

I believe I am properly quoting my hon. friend.

On September 19, during the short session, I asked concerning the prices submitted by each tenderer for the work on the Riviere du Loup station. The reply was that it was not in the interest of the public or the railway to divulge any information of this character. Then I asked two further questions: What tender was accepted, and on what day; and on whose recommendation would this work immediately be carried out. The answer was that no tender had been accepted and the matter was under consideration. That was several weeks after the tenders had been received in Moncton. I am told that those tenders reached Moncton on August 26. The government were then studying the matter very carefully; I believe they were thinking about it. On October 3 my hon. friend the Minister of Railways was on his way to Hudson bay. He was replaced by the acting minister, the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley), who was sworn as such on October 7. I am sure the Prime Minister will admit that the hon. member for Argenteuil was sworn in as acting Minister of Railways in order to put into effect the policy of this government to take a million and a half dollars from the unemployment relief fund in order to pay the interest on the proposed work of the railways, amounting to $21,000,000. That is the reason why the hon member for Argenteuil was appointed acting Minister of Railways. The Prime Minister is in the house and he will not deny it.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. POULIOT: I beg your pardon.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know what the hon. member is talking about.

An hon. MEMBER: Neither does he.

Mr. POULIOT: I will repeat my statement for the benefit of the right hon. gentleman. That is the only statement I shall repeat on account of the limitation of time. I wish to set for him a good example by answering him, so that he may answer me when at a later time I put some questions to him. The point is this, that his colleague the acting Minister of Railways, the hon. member for Argenteuil, was appointed temporarily to that office in order to carry into effect the policy of the government to take $1,500,000 from the unemployment fund in order to allow the railway companies to undertake new expenditures with a view to relieving unemployment. My hon. friends know it is true.

Mr. BENNETT: I know nothing of it.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, I am dumbfounded if the Prime Minister does not know anything about it. I would ask the Minister of Railways whether it is not a fact that the reason the hon. gentleman was appointed acting Minister of Railways at the time was as I have stated.

Mr. MANION: I presume he was appointed to act as Minister of Railways for all purposes. What the hon. member mentions is only one of them. The government dealt with it.

Mr. POULIOT: Was he appointed acting Minister of Railways in order to refuse to sanction the construction work at Rivière du Loup?

Mr. MANION: Certainly not.

Mr. POULIOT: I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say he was not, but as a matter of fact it was the first thing the acting minister did, because he was sworn in on October 7 and his first act was to send a wire to the Canadian National Railways informing them that he had refused to sanction the building of that station.

Yesterday I read two telegrams and I asked my hon. friend who had recommended to the acting minister that he refuse to sanction the carrying out of that work. He did not answer me, but he said that the cost involved was the reason why the station had not yet been built. The decision was arrived at under instructions from the acting minister, because the Prime Minister is enough of a business man not to allow any department to be carried on without one of his colleagues in charge when the minister of that department is away from the capital. October 7 was the very day the newspapers announced that the Canadian National Railways were starting this program of construction throughout Canada from ocean to ocean. I have many clippings here, but I will not quote them now; I have not the time at present.

There is another point which I wish to mention. It was understood that there would be no politics in connection with the unemployment fund, and this is the presumed intention of the order in council of Friday, September 26. There was some correspondence between the Board of Railway Commissioners and the railways, who said that the repairs mentioned by my hon. friend in the telegram which I read to the house yesterday were sufficient. But they said something further, insulting to my constituency. In a letter dated January 23, 1931, Mr. Alistair Fraser makes this statement:

> The floor area is slightly over one-third of the area of the whole building and is ample to take care of all purposes.

There is no cellar in that building, it is falling to pieces; but it is good enough for the people of Temiscouata county.

I have another communication, a report from the medical officer, which was forwarded by him to the secretary of the railway commission on January 30, 1931, by the director of the provincial board of health:

> Dear Sir,
> I deem it my duty to forward to you the enclosed further report of the Sanitary Medical Unit Officer of the county of Temiscouata with reference to the unhealthy state of the station, at Riviere-du-Loup.
> As you will observe on reading this document, a building of such importance should have a cellar of equal dimension. As regards the sewer system, it is certainly defective and of a nature to be noxious.
> It would be desirable that your Commission make the necessary representation in this matter with the Canadian National Railways.

My time is limited and therefore I will not read the report just now; I will read it tonight on the railway estimates. I brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways, to whom I despatched the following telegram on February 25, 1931:

> May I draw your attention to my letters of 16th and 23rd instant. As proposed repairs to Rivière du Loup station do not include construction of basement therein nor improvement to sewer system nor repairs to foundation. Will you sanction same as satisfactory although condemned by board of health? If you do not approve proposed repairs will you reconsider decision regarding immediate construction of new station building?

The reply was this:

> Your telegram received in absence of honourable Dr. Manion. Minister acknowledged your letter 23rd before he left city yesterday.
> F. T. Collins,
> Private Secretary.

No further answer came. There is another letter from the assistant general counsel Alistair Fraser, dated March 3, 1931, in which the following statement is made:

> In stations it is not customary to construct basements the entire area of the building, and the basement area is generally confined to a size suitable for the requirements of the heating apparatus and coal bin.

This is the policy of the Canadian National Railways. Now let me read to the house this excerpt from the Montreal Gazette of February 25, 1931:

W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, announces that the company's $175,000,000 improvement program, which includes the erection of new stations, will cover a period of two and a half years. In the United States, as in Canada, it is evident that the railways have great faith in the future. They are giving tangible proofs of this and are furnishing extra employment when it is most needed.

Mr. Atterbury, as everyone knows, was the mentor of Sir Henry Thornton, in his younger days.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to sum up the matter. First of all, the board of health condemned that station as unhealthy and recommended the building of a new station; and the chamber of commerce—and city council of Riviere du Loup, supporting the report, passed a resolution which they sent to the railway officials. Moreover, the general manager of the Atlantic region declared that it was important to build a new station at Riviere du Loup. And as a matter of fact the Canadian National Railways included in their budget, without any undue interference on the part of politicians, an item from that building. The Conservative candidate promised that that station would be built as soon as my right hon. friend came into power. And now, first of all, he asks the minister not to take any decision in the matter until he comes to Ottawa. That must be so, because the railway was anxious to have the station built. But we find that no action was taken on the tenders for the reason that all expenditures on railway capital, and otherwise, have to be approved by the minister. But this course would be followed in any case, as the minister knows. I say that in the first place there was interference in the fact that the Department of Railways did not go on with the matter, as it should have done, in accordance with the views of the Canadian National Railways.

A resolution was passed by the city council of Riviere du Loup on November 3, 1930. It is quite lengthy and if my hon. friends wish to have it I will read it on the railway estimates to-night. But my hon. friend the other day said that the Conservative candidate had been working as hard as I have done for the building of the station. Why have I worked hard for it? First of all, because I am proud of my constituency. I believe such a shameful building as the present one is a disgrace to the community, and all thought that last winter, when times were so bad, would be the proper time to have a new building constructed.

My hon. friend the minister was fair to me in saying that I have been working very hard for that station. That is true, and I thank him for that remark, but he was very unfair in stating that the Conservative candidate has been working just as hard. The hon. gentleman himself has written to the contrary to the city council of Rivière du Loup. In a letter dated November 6, 1930, to the secretary-treasurer of the city of Rivière du Loup, he said:

Votre cité ne fut pas proposée d'une manière spéciale lorsque la question fut posée.

The translation is: "Your city was not proposed in a special manner when the matter came up." How did the matter come up? On October 7 the Department of Railways and Canals and the Department of Labour were joining together to give millions of dollars to the railways in order to allow them to spend a great deal of money to relieve unemployment. At that very time the Conservative candidate and his assistant were in this city. They did not go to see the Acting Minister of Railways, the hon. member for Argenteuil; they could not see the Minister of Railways, because he was on his trip to Hudson bay. They did not even see the acting minister, who perhaps has been exiled in disgrace to Buenos Aires because he stopped the building of the station at Rivière du Loup. The acting minister wrote the Conservative candidate and said, "You certainly did not come to see me during the past six months, nor have I had the pleasure of meeting you since the election last summer." If that gentleman worked so hard for the station how was it, when he came to Ottawa on October 7, Christmas Day for the unemployed, that he did not even go to see Santa Claus in the Department of Railways and Canals? Perhaps that was the reason why the right hon. Prime Minister chose one of the oldest members of the cabinet to represent Santa Claus, who was to give so many gifts to the people in order to help them. What has happened to bring about this discrimination against my constituency?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, on October 7, 1930, Mr. H. P. Hazen, assistant chief engineer, Operation department, Canadian National Railways, wrote the following letter to those who had sent in tenders for this station:

Montreal, Que., October 7, 1930.

File 1920-217

Gentlemen:

With reference to your tender for the construction of new station at Rivière du Loup.

The Department of Railways and Canals has refused to sanction the construction of this new station, and all tenders and deposit cheques have been returned to the railway.

I am therefore returning herewith your deposit cheque for $8,398.30, and if you have not yet returned your set of plans and specifications, I would suggest that you do so at an early date, so that arrangements may be made to also return your deposit cheque for $50.

That letter would go to show that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was wrong when he stated that his department had nothing to do with that. The letter shows that the department refused to sanction the building of the station and that is why it was not completed.

Mr. MANION: May I interject a few words in an attempt to clear the air? This station was dealt with, as were other matters in the constituencies of other hon. members on both sides of the house, as a building program which could not be gone on with because of the decreased earnings of the Canadian National Railway and because of the large amount of money which this government had to raise for the purposes of the railway.

Mr. POULIOT: When this matter was decided by the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, the minister himself was not in Ottawa, neither was the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré), who has spoken along somewhat the same lines. That is why I have been indulgent so far with the hon. minister, but I will now inform him that he should speak only of things whereof he knows.

Mr. MANION: I do, but my hon. friend is not so particular.

Mr. POULIOT: When I make a statement it can be proved. I speak the truth. What about what my hon. friend said in Toronto in December, 1927:—"I believe the Conservative party has been too honest in the past. Our party in the past has been too honest in strictly defending its position and policies on controversial and sectional questions." The Liberal party has been honest in the past and will be honest in the future, and that is the difference between the Liberal and Conservative parties.

I have been courteous enough to give two minutes, or one fifth of the remainder of my time, to my hon. friend, and I desire to proceed with my argument. My hon. friend has stated that the two travellers have been working to have this station completed, but he knows that that is not the case.

Mr. MANION: It is the case.

Mr. POULIOT: If the hon. gentleman does not know it, then he should not speak.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Dubé has been working just as hard as or harder than the hon. member.

Mr. POULIOT: Can my hon. friend speak of things about which he has no knowledge? Did he have a special channel of communication with his department, which was kept open while he was on his way to Fort Churchill?

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman called on me a number of times and discussed this matter; that is how I know.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the Tory candidate knew the amount of the tenders he still expected that his partisan protégé or partner would secure the contract and thus benefit both of them to the prejudice of the people in my constituency. Then when my hon. friend found that he could not satisfy the greedy appetites of his Tory friends in my constituency, the population as a whole were forced to suffer.

I have a high regard for the Prime Minister and he knows it. I have high respect for the Minister of Railways and will continue to hold that feeling so long as he does not repeat the erroneous utterances made by the Tory candidate in my constituency.

The Canadian National Railways intended to build this station at Riviere du Loup; the money was voted by parliament, but the elections came along and when the minister was asked to hold up this matter he did so. The department has refused to sanction the building of this station, which is a direct interference with the decision of the railway officials. It is "log-rolling and butting in" of the worst kind. The department was told: "If you cannot give this contract to my protégé who submitted one of the highest tenders, do not give it to anyone else." The people were made to suffer because that man could not obtain the contract. I will say this to the right hon. the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways: I have no desire to cause them any inconvenience, but I want to know what is going on. I promise them that if I do not receive a satisfactory answer I will demand an explanation for every dollar in the Canadian National Railways estimates. Those estimates will not pass before the coming recess if that explanation is not given to the house. If such action is taken in connection with $100,000, what would be done with $13,000,000?

I believe the Prime Minister was sincere when he expressed such lofty ideals at Brandon. I trust that he will stand by those ideals, and that is one reason why I have attempted to let him know what is going on within the ranks of his party in order that he may have an opportunity of putting a stop to these practices.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased that the unemployment problem was debated, in the house, from the very outset of the session, because it is precisely the one to which our good Conservative friends resorted most during the last campaign in order to win the election. Since the very beginning of the session, I have closely followed all the very interesting speeches which were delivered in the house. However, I wondered why the hon. ministers of the crown seemed to neglect this matter. Seldom have ministers so persistently absented themselves from the house as has been done since the beginning of this session. They could certainly profit by the nice things we have said and show some gratitude for the good advices we offer them, with all due courtesy and consideration so as not to wound their susceptibilities.

Up to the present, only one or two of them have been bold enough to rise in their seats in order to uphold their policy. I well understand their bashfulness, considering the numerous pledges that they and their friends made during the last election campaign. They had to face a situation which, instead of improving became considerably worse, and, having no excuse to offer for their inability to remedy the ills which they pledged themselves to cure should they assume power, they preferred to remain silent. It is now, sir, eight months since the present government took over the administration of this country. Have we witnessed any change in the economic crisis under which we have been suffering for more than a year? Is unemployment still with us? Have our workers been able to get work to provide for themselves and their families? Have the farmers of the province of Quebec and other provinces found more remunerative markets for their products? Did the Prime Minister, while in England, find markets to facilitate the wheat sales of the western farmers who are grievously suffering because of this handicap.

I can positively state, sir, that the present government has done nothing to relieve the economic depression which we are undergoing. It was nevertheless a pledge given during the last election campaign: In three days it was to relieve unemployment. The latter still exists, even to a greater extent than in July, 1930. The government failed to carry out its pledges. However, to be fair to our friends on your right, sir, I must admit that there is one pledge they carried out: that of having parliament meet immediately after the elections. The session took place in September last, at this emergency session the government had an amount of $20,000,000 voted to relieve unemployment, and thereby give work to our working classes. It was a splendid deed, and I shall not deny, sir, that the impression created among our distressed workers, was one of satisfaction. It is now more than six months since we voted that amount and I find, in a report published lately, that Quebec heretofore, received, out of the total amount, but $155,414, this includes $36,455 which was given as direct aid.

I wonder, sir, whether the act was of great assistance to the 30,000, or more, unemployed that we had during the winter, in Montreal? Can the government boast of having in any way relieved unemployment? I think, sir, that this legislation—like all their election pledges—was designed to lure the Canadian people.

The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) feels quite hurt when we charge the government with not having fulfilled its pledges and shown incompetence by not putting an end immediately to unemployment which existed and still exists in this country; a crisis which they were to relieve in three days. On the contrary this crisis is, to-day, more acute. Our workers, in Montreal, are unemployed and I can state that the satisfaction which they felt in September last, has entirely disappeared. They are unanimous in stating that the government deceived them and are not worthy of the trust placed in them. In no way do I wish to put the blame on the Quebec government or the municipal administration of Montreal, but I state that from September to the beginning of this month no work has been carried out to relieve the unemployed. How are we to explain this delay? I, for one, find no other reason than the red tape to which were subjected our provincial government and municipalities previous to receiving the grants. I think, sir, if the present government had been sincere in having those $20,000,000 voted, a sum which was to give the unemployed a ray of happiness and prosperity, they could have handed over this sum to those interested in a more expeditious way, so as to have it distributed during the winter. No doubt the law had to take its course. For the time being, I do not object, provided however, that all the provinces be treated on an equal basis. That is not what happened and I intend to prove this fact immediately. In their eagerness to help Ontario—the latter having nearly always shown sympathy for the Tory policy—the present government authorized an expenditure of $2,000,000 over and above the amount allotted to her from the $20,000,000 appropriated by parliament, in September last, for the relief of unemployment. And this was done without any other authority than that of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), who told the contractors:

> Owing to the unemployment crisis, you may carry on the work, I grant you $2,000,000 more. The province or the municipalities will not be called upon to contribute their share in carrying out this work.

What became of the authority of parliament? They scoffed at it, ignored it. To-day, in their meek way the government asks parliament to legalize an act the purport of which is to favour Ontario to the detriment of all the rate-payers of this country. I state again, it is always the same Tory policy, "favouring their friends."

Just think, only one job has been started in Montreal out of the grant voted to the unemployed—I mean the tunnel of St. Hubert street, under the Canadian Pacific Railway. Nothing else heretofore has been started. There is of course a shovelful of earth which was dumped into a small pail by a member of the Executive Committee of Montreal, at the Wellington street tunnel, under the Lachine canal, this is kept as a souvenir of this wonderful feat. Moreover the work has since stopped owing to some difficulty which arose between the Department of Railway and Canals and the city of Montreal. If this can be called a remedy to unemployment, then I state, on behalf of the numerous workers of St. Denis riding who suffered extremely from the crisis, that you have not lived up to your pledge and responsibilities, and I charge you with having failed to carry out your duty. You are too incompetent to remain at the head of the administration of this country. You now come and beg of us to give you an extension of time. Our answer is: what you were unable to carry out in eight months, you will not be able to accomplish in a year or more. Your policy rests on absolutely false economic principles. The high tariff changes adopted in the course of the emergency session have not resulted in the benefits hoped for. Quite the contrary the working classes which form the larger part of the consumers are still obliged to pay for the necessities of life, prices which are not in keeping with their wages. Worse than that, your high protective tariff, sir, has been profitable but to one class of people: the large financial and industrial interests. You have deprived the working class of the benefit of this fair and legitimate competition that we, the Liberals, were happy to grant through a moderate tariff, and which was detrimental to nobody. Both consumers and producers were fairly and equitably dealth with. That is why, Sir, that under the late administration, union and harmony always existed between capital and labour. Our country witnessed happy and prosperous days; now, I fear that under the present regime depression will increase and that the worst calamities are yet to come.

Eight months of administration, is too short a time to relieve unemployment! Yet, it is long enough to increase the public debt by more than $100,000,000, and too brief a time to find markets for the sale of our western wheat. Did not the Prime Minister, as well as his friends, state, that if the people sent them to the Imperial conference, they would force England to purchase our wheat? Did they not state that if dynamite were needed, they would make use of it to blast their way to success? The Imperial conference took place. The Prime Minister, together with some of his ministers were delegated to attend this conference, and they also returned but disconcerted and downhearted. No markets were found for our wheat.

The British government looked upon the proposals made as absurd, and they discovered that a Bennett was not a King or a Lapointe, and still less a Laurier. The government hide themselves under the mantle of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and try to impress on the people the idea that the proposals made in London by the Prime Minister were about the same as those made by our great leader in 1902 and 1907, at the conferences which he attended. Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked that a preference be given to colonial products, leaving, however, Great Britain free to grant it or not. He did not ask Great Britain to tax her food products so as to favour those of Canada. This, however, was done by the right hon. Prime Minister. Laurier would never have been so bold as to proclaim "Canada First" at a conference where all the delegates from the various dominions were convened to discuss the interests of the whole empire.

It is the first time that a Canadian Prime Minister made such a blunder, and I hope it will be the last time. Canada on that score was subjected to the worst humiliation. I am amazed, sir, that the members of the cabinet do not realize the great blunder which the Prime Minister of Canada made. I heard, the other day, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) apologize, saying: "After all, the proposal of the leader of the government was not so bad as our opponents contend, since all the delegates of the Dominion gave him their support." Did the hon. Postmaster General take the trouble to study and does he realize what is the total amount of business each Dominon does with Great Britain? Is he aware that Canada alone among the British dominions has a favourable trade balance—and does not this fact give him some matter to ponder over? If we sell to England for nearly $100,000,000 more than we purchase from her, is the Prime Minister jutified in stating: "Canada First"? It might, perhaps, have befitted the other dominions to express such a thought, exactly for the reason just given, as England was justified in her reply to the right hon. Prime Minister, "England First".

There is to be another conference this year. No doubt, the Prime Minister, profiting by past experience and remembering his "flop" in England, will not be guilty of the same sin. This will be in the best interests of Canadians. No doubt, he will carry out the policy which has been followed up to the present by the Liberal party, and which gave such excellent results. In order to derive the best possible benefit from this conference, I think that the remarks of the Postmaster General should now find their application: "Should not the interests of the country, especially in the present crisis, have precedence over party interests?" The country needs markets to sell its surplus products; home markets are inadequate as an outlet for its products, and in order to engross such markets, we should avoid surrounding ourselves with a prohibitive high tariff, so as to prevent foreign products from reaching us. How do you expect to sell without purchasing from any one? That is, however, the exact policy followed by the present government, and it has been the cause of our export trade decreasing by nearly $94,000,000. Carry on, gentlemen, things are coming your way! In four years, our country will have lost its place of honour among the trading nations of the world to return to the rank of an inferior nation.

I hear it said by our friends on your right, sir, that since they are in power a great change has taken place in trade and industry. How wonderful they are! They have no fear of ridicule! But truth tells a different story.

Everything is tottering! Everywhere threats, brawls and revolutions appear. Only last Saturday, over 2,000 unemployed tried to enter the city hall at Montreal, to ask for work. They were prevented by the city police. Being unsuccessful, they marched to the Champ de Mars where speeches were made, begging the authorities to put an end to their hardships and privations by giving them work. The working classes are tired of waiting. Again last week, in Montreal, hundreds and hundreds of workers invaded the municipal work-yards. They were seeking work but could not secure any.

This is, sir, the situation as it exists to-day. Not only in Montreal but throughout the country. Is the government aware of this? How can they find an excuse for delaying repair work to the extent of $1,500,000—amount appropriated by the late government—repairs which were to be carried out to the wharf of the Pointe-du-Moulin-à-vent? Our unemployed would have been much relieved by such work during the cold winter days, bread and butter would have been thankfully received. The government cared not, the fate of the poor people seems indifferent to them. They preferred to delay this work because the lowest tenderer was not a favourite of theirs. The crisis which we are passing through matters little to them. The hardships of the unemployed matters little to them; what matters to the Tory government is protection to their friends. Let the country perish, providing that millions of dollars fill the pockets of their friends! The same old Conservative and Tory policy. People of Canada, my country, my cherished land, you must bear up, be patient. You are at the beginning of your hardships and troubles. Pray to God that He may enlighten the government in order that, at least, the evil done against our country be not irreparable.

Previous to resuming my seat, allow me, sir, to inform the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Laurin), and all those who think like him, that Quebec is not a Conservative province; it was so at one time, previous to 1896, when education had not spread among the people. To-day, thanks to the education received, Quebec knows better, it has become Liberal, and it will remain such.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is why the Conservatives carried off 24 ridings.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Your hopes are but wild dreams. You are in the opposition at Quebec and you will remain there for a long time, in order that justice and liberty may always reign in our province and the rights of minorities be respected. Harmony exists among all the races which make up its population. May its example be followed by the other provinces of confederation.

The recent events which have taken place in Saskatchewan—among others the disallowance of French in public schools—are not of a nature to cement harmony and union which should exist among us, and such means will not help in making a great and prosperous people in this country. Let us resolve to cease our appeals to race and religious prejudices. Let us be fair and generous in everything and everywhere. We shall thus end by understanding and knowing one another better. It is by concerted action that our country will more quickly and easily reach its noble destinies.

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. Johns-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I owe it to my constituents to apprise you that I represent the finest riding of the province of Quebec and of Canada, because, since confederation, it has always remained loyal to the Liberal party—this is evidence of the foresight and enlightened patriotism on the part of the true Canadians of both sexes whom I am privileged to represent in the house.

My riding is both agricultural and industrial. The farmers carry on mixed farming and endeavour to improve their flocks. They have always been satisfied with the policy of the Liberal party and they understand that in a world-wide crisis the farming class may suffer like other classes in the community.

I listened closely to the speech delivered by my neighbour, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) who contended that the trade conventions of Canada with Australia and New Zealand were detrimental to the Canadian farmer. The farmers of his riding like those of my own carry on mixed farming. They therefore meet with the same conditions.

Last September, sir, we were called to attend an emergency session in order to vote $20,000,000 and thus settle the question of unemployment; that is, to fulfil pledges made by our opponents during the election. In answer to my hon. friend, the member for Missisquoi, who stated the other day, in the house that the city of Farnham, which is located in his riding, had recently made great progress, I have a letter here which reads as follows:

Farnham, Que., March 21, 1931.

Mr. Martial Rhéaume, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:—

With reference to our conversation by telephone, this afternoon, I wish to inform you that two new factories were established here, in 1929, about the month of March: one the Collins & Aikman Company Limited, manufacturers of plush, etc., and the other the Dewey & Almy Company Limited, manufacturers of chemical products. In 1930, as I had recently the opportunity to inform you Barry & Staines Linoleum (of Canada) Limited, established themselves here, also about the month of March, 1930.

J. E. Lefèbvre,
Secretary-Treasurer,
Town of Farnham, Que.

No other factory has since been established. I must point out, sir, if the town of Farnham has progressed, if these factories were established there, it is due to the Liberal policy. I may add, if my hon. friend the member for Missisquoi is among us to-night, he owes his mandate to the pledges he gave during the last election. This gentleman with his friends went from door to door telling every farmer who had lost cattle as a result of the tuberculine test, that he was authorized by his leader, Mr. Bennett, to promise $20 for each animal killed within the last three years. I know farmers in that riding that have lost as many as 30 head. It was certainly an alluring offer.

As to the question of unemployment, I wish to state that in St. John we have an industry which employed, in 1929 and 1930, 1,400 people. Since September 2, 1930, to January, 1931, this factory worked 32 hours per week, and since then 24 hours per week; in the week ending March 21, 1931, 42 persons were dismissed. There only remains at present about 900 people working at this factory. I ask my friends the Conservatives where is to be found their success in relieving unemployment? The hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Laurin) stated the other day that the government had fulfilled all their pledges; that he himself had obtained the construction of two tunnels; I do not intend to further discuss this subject because my hon. friend the member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) discussed it at length.

I do not wish, sir, to miss the opportunity of answering a remark made a short while ago by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion); he stated that the Conservatives had carried off 24 ridings in Quebec. I think, sir, that the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency—I do not know what pledges he made to his constituents—must have taken his cue from the other Conservative candidates of Quebec. I cannot resume my seat without answering a remark made by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), member for Laval-Two Mountains, who in his speech on Thursday last, rebuked the Liberals for not having made any suggestion. I think, sir, if the hon. Postmaster General had remained in his seat from the very outset of this debate on the address, he would certainly have heard suggestions made by members on this side. He was conspicuous by his absence. I well remember that last year he taunted the ex-member for Laval-Two Mountains for having been indifferent to the debates in this house. The hon. Postmaster General at present seems to exhibit the same failing. I think that this indifference at times applies to him.

I also recall the pledges of the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) the member for Chambly-Verchères—my neighbour—during the last election. I realize that his success in the election was somewhat of a surprise, like that of many Conservative members from Quebec. I know that the hon. Minister of Marine made numerous pledges, especially to some of my personal friends whom he persuaded to vote for him because of the advantages and favours that he would grant them. Since parliament was convened I know of no bill introduced aiming at fulfilling the pledges that the Minister of Marine gave. He also promised an indemnity to the farmers who had lost cattle, owing to the tuberculine test; he promised that they would be paid at the rate of $2.50 per hundredweight; that their butter would sell at 45 cents per pound, and that the bridge between Longeuil and Montreal would be exempt of tolls. Conservative candidates throughout the country made numerous pledges to the electorate, however, if to-day new elections were held the result might perhaps not be the same.

I do not wish to delay the house any further; I only wanted to take this opportunity of expressing my views. In the course of this debate on the return of prosperity in this country, the hon. members on your right, sir, censured us and at times these gentlemen told us: "Do give us a chance." A few days ago I had the privilege of listening to the speech of the hon. Postmaster General. I am not aware that he has prepared any program, he who always proclaimed himself, when in Quebec, the champion of the farming class. I think that he will take his cue from his leader whose policy is rather to favour manufacturers and industrialists.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): I should like to say a few words in connection with the question raised by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). Probably like many other members representing an urban constituency, I have received during the last few days many letters and resolutions from various organizations in reference to unemployment in the part of the country from which I come. Sharing a room in this building with my hon. friend from North Winnipeg I took these resolutions to him in the hope that out of his wealth of experience he could tell me what should be done. He told me that he would move the adjournment of the house to bring the question before it. I asked him what support he expected to get. "Well," he said, "last year we had the whole Conservative party with us." "That looks very good," I said, "because there are a whole lot more of them in the house this year, so we ought to make quite a showing." But to my painful surprise, when the question was raised this afternoon it met with the active opposition of the Conservative party, who were so sympathetic when the same question came up last year, and that notwithstanding the fact that the situation at the present moment is worse than it was on the 31st of March last year. In my innocence I could not understand what had caused such a change. Is it possible that to move from one side of the house to the other can change men's minds so radically, although the outward circumstances have not changed in the slightest, in any event not for the better? When the house is not sitting I intend to sit for a few moments on the other side just to note the psychological effect.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is the only way you will ever get here.

Mr. MacINNIS: Perhaps, but you may get over here.

In discussing this question, Mr. Speaker, I shall not approach it in a critical spirit. It should be dealt with, I think, from at least four points of view. We should consider, first of all, the extent and the seriousness of the present conditions; secondly, what steps should be taken to meet the present pressing situation; thirdly, desirability of a full investigation of the causes of unemployment and of the economic depression; and lastly, what permanent steps may be taken to meet the situation generally and provide against these ever-recurring periods of depression.

Touching first on the seriousness of the situation, I am continuously in touch with my own city of Vancouver. Although perhaps there are not so many unemployed there now as a month ago, the number is very much greater than it was a year ago. Not only that, but the city's resources to meet the situation are not nearly so great as they were a year ago. A deputation from the city of Vancouver met the cabinet of the local government at Victoria on the 23rd of March last. The chairman of the relief commitee pointed out to the government at that time that the city could not meet any funds that the government might have left over from the appropriation voted last September, and therefore the making of provision for the unemployed at Vancouver was up to the provincial government. On the same day a deputation waited on the city council to arrange for the reinstatement of 1,500 single men who had been cut off from relief under the act. On March 18, just a few days ago, 6,064 married men were securing unemployment relief. In view of a situation of that kind I think it rather strange that we have not heard a word from the government side of the house as to their intentions in connection with unemployment.

My hon. friend from North Winnipeg pointed out at the beginning of his remarks to-day that he had referred to this question about a year ago. May I quote a few words from Hansard of April 2, credited to the present Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member who introduced this resolution that it is the most important problem facing our country to-day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the subject of unemployment was an important problem facing our country in the year 1930, when the situation was not as bad as it is to-day, when the financial resources of the municipalities were not depleted to the extent they are to-day, and when the financial resources of the people themselves were not depleted to such an extent, how much more serious must that problem be now? Yet we do not hear a word from the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. SPOTTON: He does not get a chance to say anything.

Mr. MacINNIS: He may speak when I sit down.

> I do not think any one in this great land of promise—
> And it is mostly promise.
> —can realize that in the cold, cold northern winters of Canada there are times—and this applies particularly to the present—when men and women and innocent little children are suffering from the lack of food which is necessary to keep their bodies and souls together, without feeling a very deep and abiding sympathy for the cause which has been advocated by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps).

We have the same conditions to-day in this "cold, dreary, northern clime" which we had in 1930, except that they are worse. Then the hon. gentleman makes some further remarks, and I am wondering whether he holds the same point of view to-night that he held at that time. I quote the following from Hansard:

> I listened with respect and attention to the theories for a permanent solution of this problem proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) as well as by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, . . .

To-day the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) spoke very feelingly on the resolution. I have no doubt that his remarks on this occasion were very much along the same lines as those he made a year ago. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals if he is as much interested to-day and if he listened with as much respect and attention this year as he did a year ago. The hon. minister goes on to say:

> . . . . but while I agree that some day a permanent solution must be found, I would point out that at the moment the fact is that we have a very severe unemployment, and temporary measures of some kind should have been brought forward long ago by this government in order properly to deal with this problem.

That is what we are asking for at the moment; there should be temporary measures to meet a situation which is beyond the control of municipalities. It is the bounden duty of this government to make such temporary provision as under the circumstances may be required.

I will quote a few more lines from the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals:

> I submit to the Prime Minister that the people of this country are anxious for frank and candid statements from the government at present on all matters of public policy.

The other day I drew the attention of hon. members to the fact that we were entitled to a little more frankness than we were receiving. If the hon. Minister of Railways has any influence with the leader of the government of which he is a member he might suggest that a little more frankness would be appreciated on this side of the house. The hon. gentleman said further:

> They are tired of political humbug; they are weary of the political shell games played with the idea of catching votes in the various parts of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary that I should draw to the attention of this house the promises which were made to the people of this country during the campaign last year. I know that the Prime Minister, like myself, is not in the habit of making rash promises, and possibly if he had consulted me he would not have made the promise last year to end unemployment. However he has made the promise and I do not think under the circumstances we should try to make him keep it. There are certain things he could do, however, even if he cannot fulfil his promise. He could help to relieve the unemployment situation by utilizing the resources of this Dominion. The labour members in this house, and I think many other hon. members, take the position that a serious situation exists in Canada, an economic condition which affects so profoundly a great many of our people that we consider it as a national emergency. To meet a national emergency extraordinary measures should be taken.

May I invite the attention of hon. members in this house to exactly what the situation is. I think we are agreed that as a conservative estimate there are about 300,000 unemployed in this Dominion. Estimating that in respect of each of these 300,000 there are two dependants, there would be a total of 900,000 people suffering because of unemployment. That constitutes an emergency. At least so far as 900,000 people are concerned there is an emergency. If the Dominion were engaged in a war of destruction, probably in a war about which we knew very little, all the resources at the disposal of the Dominion would be used. The men who are to-day going without food, poorly clad, walking the streets with the soles worn off their shoes, would be clothed and fed and equipped with ammunition to cause destruction. Yet they cannot be put to work to provide for themselves or to add to the wealth of the Dominion. That is the situation and this government cannot very well get away from it.

Arising out of the election last year a special session of parliament was held and the government at that time made an appropriation of $20,000,000. May I say that we in this corner of the house appreciated that measure; we felt that the government was making a generous gesture in order to relieve a condition arising out of unemployment. Not only that, but by the same policy I believe that they have shut out from Canada all, or practically all, immigration. We thank them for that also; we appreciate it. But the point I wish to make is this. If they think that this $20,000,000 is going to do for all time, when conditions are steadily getting worse, they are badly mistaken. As a matter of fact, unless that $20,000,000 is followed by constructive effort towards reducing unemployment, it is so much money wasted. It is just the same as giving a meal to a man we meet on the street. What the people want is not that kind of help, but to be put in such a position that they will be able to help themselves; and anything that has not that end in view will not permanently help the unemployment situation. I know that this relief was extended as a palliative. But palliatives have a tendency to create the conditions they are supposed to relieve. I would respectfully invite the attention of the Prime Minister to that fact.

I gave a few figures—I had not time to give more—when I spoke on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should like to give a few more to show that there is no indication at the present time that the conditions through which we are passing will very shortly be improved. The general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Mr. F. H. Logan, at the general meeting of the bank on January 13 of this year, said that in the year 1930, when they made a survey of industrial projects which were likely to be carried through in the current year they found there was available some $500,000,000, and he stated that nearly all the work represented by this sum had been done; but this year, 1931, upon a similar survey having been made, they could find only about $325,000,000. That is to say, construction and development in sight from 1930 to 1931 had decreased by about a little less than two-fifths.

I find, according to the Financial Post, which gets its figures from the Labour Gazette, that:

> Employment statistics as of February 1, 1931 show a continuation of the decline that began in July, 1930. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics index, based upon the 1926 average at 100.7, is stated at 107 as against 101.7 in the preceding month. In the past the employment situation has generally improved during January, and the decline in employment during January, 1931, as reflected in the index is the first in many years for this period on February 1, 1930. The index for Canada was 111.6.

This, I submit, would indicate that conditions are not improving; they are really getting worse. But we can give a few more indications still. Under the heading "Business Conditions in Canada," in the same issue of March 5, we find conditions stated thus:

> Commodity prices: textiles show strength; building materials lowest since 1916. Iron and steel: construction contracts awarded presage improved demand for structural steel. Foreign trade: remains slack. Wheat shipments are sole factor of strength. Car loadings: normal season of gain is absent; no change in total for six weeks. Employment: no sign of improvement as industrial activity lags.

With a situation such as this, how can we account for the silence of the government on this particular question?

> Stock markets: Period of profit taking causes indefinite trend. Credit: demand slightly stronger. Bank debits reflect greater activity.

Now we turn to what the Financial Post calls the best indicator of improving conditions or otherwise. This is in connection with car loadings.

Car loadings are another indicator which would seem to prove beyond question the lack of an ordinary seasonal upswing in Canadian business. For the first time in a great many years, the charted record of weekly loadings up to and including the week ending February 21, reveals a uniformly flat picture in contrast with sharply upward curve which is usual at this time of the year. Total loadings are running 17 per cent behind the corresponding 1930 record.

I contend that there is nothing there that would indicate that we can expect an early improvement, or that there is any prospect of an early recovery in our economic conditions.

Let me for a moment look at the other side of the picture. This is a point we should keep in mind; it is a point we should try to harmonize with the conditions which we are discussing to-day. I believe we are agreed that never in the history of this Dominion has the wealth of Canada—that is, wealth in usable form—been more abundant than it is at the present time. Not only that, but there need be no disputing the point that the machinery of production which we have at our disposal for the production if necessary of more wealth is greater to-day than ever before. Going further, we can rest assured, and we have every evidence of it, that we have the advantage of a more scientific understanding of things, a greater technical knowledge, increased man power, and greater ability on the part of labour, if need be, to put this machinery into operation than ever before in our history. Yet, in spite of all that, we have a condition of unemployment and of distress not only in the city but in the country as well, such as we have never heretofore experienced. And in face of this my hon. friends opposite sit silent, having not a word to say as to what they are going to do, and no suggestion to offer with regard to meeting the situation.

In this connection I should like to quote briefly from the Commerce of the Nation, the official organ of the Canadian chamber of commerce. This article appeared in the October 1930 edition and was written by the late Angus MacLean, who at the time was president of the organization. He said:

> Previous to last fall we had for a number of years enjoyed a period of unusual expansion and prosperity. Many of our people came to the conclusion that so long as we could continue this production from our farms, forests, mines and fisheries, this expansion and activity would continue.

I think that was a logical conclusion to come to; He goes on:

> Conditions existing to-day show quite clearly that this opinion was wrong. Our farms from the Atlantic to the Pacific have produced an excellent crop. Our elevators are full of grain, our barns and warehouses are bursting with plenty. Our mines are as productive as ever. Our pulp and paper mills are turning out more than they ever did, and to-day are the greatest in the world, and our catch of fish is unusually large.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, the picture is not overdrawn. With the wealth of Canada, as it is pictured here by the late president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, what excuse can we offer for this condition to men walking the streets without shoes, to men going without bread and men sleeping in box cars and under bridges at night? This wealth is not confined to this Dominion; other countries have had equal wealth during the last few years. May I quote once more from the Glasgow Evening Citizen, which is a very respectable Tory paper which I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will say is worthy of being cited. It says:

> Yet in this same world the valleys stand so thick with corn that they laugh and sing—the granaries are overflowing with grain, the factories are capable of turning out colossal supplies of every sort of commodity, and the waters teem with food that can be had for the taking. The abundance of the earth and sea and sky is incalculable; the bounty of nature is without limit. The world is our cocoanut, and yet we starve!

That is rather peculiar; it seems the more cocoanuts we have the more hungry we become.

An hon. MEMBER: We are not as wise as the monkeys.

Mr. MacINNIS: I quite agree that we are not as wise as the monkeys, in this particular at any rate. I suppose we think we have progressed very considerably since our savage ancestors roamed the forests, but if it were possible to bring one of those ancestors back to the world now, where he could see the hungry, cold, unemployed, with all this wealth at our disposal, he would rightly think we have not progressed so far after all. I continue quoting from this newspaper:

> Instead of cooperating men separate themselves into groups. They build walls round these groups and sometimes one group will go mad and begin to throw stones at another. They have not yet learned to regard the earth as belonging to their whole race in common; they have not discovered how to organize themselves—their nations, their classes, their sects are not less quarrelsome and hardly less foolish than the gulls or the tomtits, which are very foolish little birds!

I think that is along the lines of cooperation which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been advocating in this house for many years, and surely it is time we began to have that cooperation in view of the fact that our efforts along other lines of endeavour have failed to assure the great majority of people in this country any decent share of the wealth which we are producing in abundance.

What is the reason for all this? The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers)—and I refer to this partly because Prince Edward Island happens to be my native land—stated the other day that no one seemed to know what was the cause of unemployment. I have been wondering whether no one does know, or whether possibly some people do know and do not like to state the cause for fear of hurting somebody's feelings. I believe I know the cause, and in order that my hon. friend from Queens may go away from this house a little wiser than he came I am going to tell him, whether he believes me or not. The cause of unemployment is private ownership of the means of production. That is the one and only cause. Hon. gentlemen may ask for the proof of that statement, and I will give it. Let us suppose all the people in the world were gathered together in this room. I admit that it would be quite a dreary place in which to live, but for the sake of argument let us suppose all the people in the world were gathered together here and that we owned everything in common. Could you imagine one of us going cold or hungry while we had all this wealth at our command? But supposing Mr. Speaker or someone else owned all the wealth, and the rest of us could have access to it only whenever he wished to let us do so whenever we paid tribute to him for doing so. You could well imagine our going hungry and cold in circumstances of that kind. That is the only cause of unemployment, and it will not be remedied until the machinery for wealth production is socialized and put in the hands of the people to be used for the common good.

Hon. members may think this is a wild statement to make, but we are not alone in that opinion. I hold in my hand a resolution which was passed at the regular session of the Alberta conference of the United Church of Canada, held in McDougall United Church, Edmonton. According to the Parliamentary Guide this is the church to which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister belongs, and for that reason if for no other he should give some consideration to the resolution, which states:

> Whilst we endorse and approve the Remit, in that it states certain items of advancement and improvements in reference to industrial conditions, and the increasing recognition of human rights, yet we are convinced that such a statement is inadequate for the present time, and that the church should express itself in terms other than those which simply endorse principles that have for some years been gererally appreciated, even though the principles involved have not thus far become fully operative;
> We believe that, in harmony with the teachings of Jesus, we should proceed as rapidly as may be possible to the creation of an order based on cooperation and service, which would displace the present competitive, acquisitive social order.

That is not my statement; it is the statement of the Alberta conference of the United Church. The resolution continues:

> In the centre of the thinking of Jesus was man and his need, as a contrast up to the present the essential feature of the economic system is profit.

That is what we have been contending for years; that is what the hon. member for North Winnipeg and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre have been telling this house for several sessions. The resolution continues:

> The present system has now been under trial for a sufficient period of time to lend itself to fair criticism, and the present unhappy condition of over-production, under consumption, unemployment, and attendant uncertainties, is its condemnation.

We certainly never used words any harsher than those in connection with the system under which we live.

> We are convinced that in the Father's world there is a sufficient abundance of necessary commodities to meet the needs of His children. The demand of the day is to bring these commodities under Christian control and distribution, a result which finance under private control as the connecting link between production and consumption has failed to secure.
> In the meantime, we advocate such methods as unemployment insurance, contributory old age pensions, along with a program looking forward to social control of the means of production, distribution and exchange.

We have never advocated more than that; we have never asked anything more than recognition of the fact that under the present system the more we produce the less secure is the position of the individual. All we are asking is that means be taken to change the system as quickly as possible to one that will give us a standard of living according to our ability and wilingness to work and produce. Just imagine the amount of wealth that could be produced with modern machinery by the 300,000 unemployed who are walking the streets of this Dominion to-day, if they could only have access to the means of life. Just imagine it, and tell me what it would mean. Why cannot we have access to these means of life? As I said before, the reason is because these means are in private hands and we cannot get to them without paying tribute to some private person. There may be half a dozen or probably less than a hundred people in this Dominion who exact tribute from all the rest of the people for everything they eat or wear and for every move they make. The resolution continues:

> We believe that society should regard enforced unemployment as an intolerable menace, producing an unemployable class with slum conditions, wastage of human energy and personality, and threatening war or revolution. We believe that governments should grapple with the problem with energy similar to what would be used in a national emergency.

I do not believe that the members of the government are alive to the present situation. We have similar conditions in every city, town and country district in the Dominion. The following is a portion of a letter I received from a gentleman residing near Saskatoon:

> There is no money wherewith to pay taxes, store bills, interest on loans, etc., and the people in the north, while having produce from gardens, etc., to live on have not any money wherewith to buy clothing. One school teacher has asked for clothing for 57 children; another for 40; another for 34 and another for 16. Children cannot attend school because they have nothing but last summer's cotton underwear and canvas shoes to wear.

I think the suggestion made this afternoon by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) would help us considerably. Much more could be said as to why we are faced with these conditions and why we cannot expect any improvement in the near future. I have here some statistics given by Sir John Aird at the annual meeting of the bank of Commerce held in Montreal, as follows:

> From the period between 1926 and 1928 the population increased by two per cent, food production increased by 8 per cent and the production of raw materials by 11 per cent.

The people are much worse off in 1929 and 1930 than they were in 1928, although there was an increase of eight per cent in the production of food and 11 per cent in the production of raw materials as against an increase of two per cent in population. We should have some explanation from hon. gentlemen who pretend to run the government of this country.

In conclusion, I beg leave to move—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacINNIS: I beg leave to move that all the words after—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member's time has expired.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacINNIS: I was just about to move an amendment.

An hon. MEMBER: You are too late.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I point out that under standing order 37—

An hon. MEMBER: Wasting the time of the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am not wasting the time of the house; I am within my rights in speaking on a point of order. Standing order No. 37 reads:

> No member, except the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, or a minister moving a government order and the member speaking in reply immediately after such minister, or a member making a motion of "no confidence" in the government, and a minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than forty minutes at a time in any debate.

My colleague was about to make a motion and he is therefore entitled to speak for more than forty minutes.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not do it in time.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member gave no intimation that he was about to make such a motion. He completed his speech when he spoke for the forty minutes.

Mr. MacINNIS: I move—

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the hon. member to order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If Your Honour rules that we are to be tied down to the forty minute rule when an hon. member was in the act of reading a motion, I must appeal against that ruling.

An hon. MEMBER: Go to it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member had forty minutes in which to make his motion; he did not do so and he cannot exceed his time limit. Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Mines branch—for maintenance of the peat plant at Alfred, Ontario—further amount required, $1,450.

Mr. REID: Is this vote a supplementary amount, or is it the full amount to be voted for the entire year?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): As the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) will be able to tell the committee, this matter has engaged the attention of successive governments. It has been the hope to establish a supply of fuel at this point. The plant is practically closed down and is in charge of a caretaker, and this amount is required to pay him up until to-day.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Annuities Act—further amount required, $30,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. the Prime Minister was to give the house some information as to what this amount is required for.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as the Annuities Act is concerned, this amount is required to liquidate liabilities already incurred for the advertising of annuities and the payment to representatives and postmasters of commissions and allowances earned in getting business for which the appropriation in the main estimates was inadequate. A question was asked as to the change in advertising. The present administration continued until January of this year, the plan which had been carried out by the former administration. At the end of that month the contract with McConnell & Fergusson Limited was terminated. The real fact is that a deficit was carried over from the preceding year with respect to advertising and it became necessary to secure a larger sum to liquidate up to to-day the accounts that have been rendered for the service carried on in accordance with plans created by the former Minister of Labour as indicated in the memorandum which he left with the department, which memorandum I will not take the time to read, but which I will send over to my right hon. friend in order that he may see it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Who are McConnell and Fergusson?

Mr. BENNETT: They are a firm of advertising agents who do business at London, Ontario, and contract for advertising throughout Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The information for which I asked specially was the amount of advertising that had been given since the present administration came into office, with the names of the firms to which the advertising was given, and the amounts paid.

Mr. BENNETT: The conditions that existed at the time the present government came into power were continued till January, when the advertising was discontinued, and so far as I have been advised by the department—and I have inquired—no plans for advertising on a large scale have been made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That does not answer my question. As I understand the matter, the Department of Labour, through an advertising agency, has contracted for advertising in connection with the annuities branch, with certain firms in Canada, certain newspapers and journals. I should like to have a list of the papers to which this advertising was given, and the amount of money that has been paid to each of them.

Mr. BENNETT: As regards the present estimates, there are no such accounts that I know of beyond those contained in the statement which I made a moment ago. In the main estimates of last year the expenditure under this classification was $75,000. The estimate now submitted is for $30,000 more, making a total of $105,000. The details are as follows:

Salaries, $4,952.51.
Travelling expenses, $1,331.16.
Sundries, $2,665.86.
Telephones and telegrams, $1,055.33.
Printing and stationery, $11,309.65.
Advertising, $18,049.37.
Commissions and allowances to agents, $52,671.13.
Total expenditures up to date, $92,035.01.

Between the twenty-seventh and the end of this month there are outstanding accounts to be taken care of amounting to $12,000 more, making the total of $105,000, including temporary salaries, $240, annuities advertising, $9,338.75, and commissions to agents, $3,386.24, the commission to agents being, as the right hon. gentleman will observe, $55,000 of the whole. That is the position so far as I know. I have not a list of the newspapers in which the advertising occurs, but I have one showing the number of contracts that have been made for annuities. I have a statement giving the amounts of money received and a list of the representatives in the various provinces, with the amount of money received from them. That is all the information I have upon the point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Last night, before the house adjourned, I said, as my hon. friend will see on looking at page 501 of unrevised Hansard:

I understand that the Department of Labour gives advertising through an advertising agency. If so, I should like my hon. friend to give us to-morrow a statement of the papers which have received advertising or printing in connection with the annuities branch of the Department of Labour since the present administration came into office.

I asked that question last night so that we would have the information before this item was passed, and I should like to have it.

Mr. BENNETT: Very good. No new contract has been made. The old contract runs out because it has been terminated. The papers that received advertising not from this government but from the former administration, acting through McConnell and Fergusson, are as follows:

Then I have the rates, and in addition to that the magazines. Does my hon. friend desire me to read the names of all those magazines?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to do so, although it has never been done before in this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What nonsense! I take exception to my right hon. friend's statement.

Mr. BENNETT: It has never been done before in this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will be done now.

That exhausts the list.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend tell us how much was paid in advertising to the last six journals he mentioned?

Mr. BENNETT: The last six journals seem to have received sums as follows:

Montreal Federated Railwaymen, 300 lines (100 lines each in January, February and March), $75.
Toronto Labour Leader, 400 lines, $57.
Estevan Canadian Postmaster, ½ page, $20.
Winnipeg Western Catholic, 100 lines, $12.
London Catholic Record, 1,650 lines, $198.
Montreal Commerce of the Nation, 100 lines, $25.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend advise me whether or not special consideration was promised to any of these publications by the Minister of Labour through advertising from the annuities branch?

Mr. BENNETT: Since July?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Not so far as I know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Could my right hon. friend state, as a matter of fact, that special consideration was not promised certain of these publications in the matter of advertising?

Mr. BENNETT: I have read the list, which is very long. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would say to what ones he refers, and I will get the information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I prefer to put the question as I have put it, as to whether any publications were promised by the Minister of Labour special consideration in the matter of advertising under the annuities branch.

Mr. BENNETT: Not so far as I know. But what does the right hon. gentleman mean by special consideration? Special prices for their services?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am using the words I am using advisedly. Perhaps I shall let my right hon. friend know why a little later.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know what the right hon. gentleman means.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know. Will the right hon. gentleman say for the Minister of Labour that no special consideration was promised any publication in the matter of advertising by the annuities branch?

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman will have to be much more specific than that. I have never heard of it, and my colleague (Mr. Gordon) tells me that he has never heard of it. It would be very desirable for the right hon. gentleman to explain what he means by special consideration, so that we may inquire.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might explain that a form of special consideration would be that a publication might receive an extra amount of advertising from the annuities branch and would receive it because it was that particular publication that was getting it.

Mr. BENNETT: My information from the minister is that no such promise was given. It is very important that there should be no misunderstanding. Perhaps my right hon. friend would say just what he means by those words, "special consideration." If he means that a promise was given of additional advertising, certainly there is no evidence of that that I know of; I have never heard of it. If he means that they were to get a higher price for the services rendered, I think that also could not possibly arise because the advertising is in the hands of an agency which makes the rates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would ask my hon. friend to ascertain from the Minister of Labour whether he gave to any publication or to anybody on behalf of any one of these publications an assurance that it would receive special consideration. I am using the words that the minister is supposed to have used; that is the reason why I have used the expression "special consideration." I should like to have a definite reply.

Mr. BENNETT: If those are the words the minister is supposed to have used I certainly will make inquiries and advise the right hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Combines Investigation Act—further amount required, $15,000.

Mr. REID: What portion, if any, of the $15,000 was spent in the recent investigation into the prices of bread, and does this amount include the whole cost of the investigation? What does the $15,000 include?

Mr. BENNETT: There was appropriated in the main estimates the sum of $30,000; by governor general's warrant $50,000 was provided, and this estimate provides for an additional sum to make a total of $95,000 in all. The total expenditures up to March 27 amounted to $77,938. There was the Amalgamated Builders Council prosecution, which absorbed $25,784. There was the motion picture inquiry, which absorbed about $20,000; the bread inquiry; and sundry items to be made up by this estimate. There were the expenses incurred in connection with the payment of counsel for the case which went to the privy council determining the validity of the Combines Act. The bread inquiry accounted for $1,728.15. The total includes a sum not contemplated last year when the estimates were passed, necessitating a further sum being obtained for the purposes mentioned.

Mr. HEENAN: The other day I asked the Prime Minister a question. Probably the fact that I did not give notice of my question resulted in the Prime Minister not doing himself justice in his answer. I referred to a combine which according to reports is to be consummated within a few days, involving about $690,000,000 invested in the pulp and paper industries of Canada. The report went on to say that if this combine took place high priced mills would be closed and low priced mills would be kept open. As my right hon. friend knows, the Combines Investigation Act is more often used to prevent injury to the public than to remedy a grievance after the occasion for it has arisen. I was wondering if the Prime Minister would think it advisable to make some kind of inquiry to learn whether or not this combine is likely to injure the public interest. I am sure my right hon. friend will realize that if this combine is allowed to take place and results in high priced mills being closed down and low priced mills being allowed to operate, the effect will be detrimental to the towns and villages which have been established in the vicinity of these so-called high priced mills. If the combine is likely to injure the public generally, and especially the people in Quebec and northern Ontario, there should be some interference by the government.

Mr. BENNETT: I did endeavour to explain to the house, as I do now to the committee, that the question of the jurisdiction of this parliament in the matter would certainly be a controversial one. The authority of parliament concerning the application of the Combines Investigation Act in such a case could not be antecedently determined; whether or not a combine exists is a matter to be determined after the combine forms. At the present moment no such combine as that described by my hon. friend exists. If a company were incorporated in which these enterprises to which my hon. friend refers were merged, I hold grave doubt as to whether the Combines Investigation Act would apply to such a company. That certainly has not been determined. So far as the court decisions go, such a condition would not amount to a combine within the statutes. So far as property and civil rights are concerned, the closing of mills and dealing with property and questions of that sort can be determined by the provinces in which the crown lands are situate and from which the timber is taken. If it be private timber the same observation applies, except in the case of the province of Manitoba where crown lands were leased to private enterprises. If such lands have been transferred to the crown in the right of the province of Manitoba they are subject to the laws of that province rather than the laws of the Dominion. I repeat that the question whether or not a combine exists is a matter which can be determined only from the facts of the case as they arise, and not antecedently. I assume no company would be created which would contravene the laws of the Dominion.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and National Health—unemployment relief—further amount required, $90,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I asked the minister whether he had had any correspondence with soldier organizations or any persons with respect to the matter here referred to, and, if so, to have the correspondence tabled, or to advise us what it is.

Mr. BENNETT: I have copies of the communications and telegrams furnished by the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the Prime Minister indicate whom they are from?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The first letter on this file is the one from J. W. McKee, assistant deputy minister, addressed to Major-General Ketchen, instructing him, in reply to a telegram received with respect to the reduction, that the relief would be continued at the old rate. That telegram to which that is a reply is one from Major-General Ketchen to the minister. Then there is a reply to Mr. Sharpe, of the Earl Haig Memorial Branch at Toronto, in the same sense, answering a telegram sent by him; a communication to Mr. Nash, of the district command, in reply to a telegram from him, and a letter in reply to a telegram from Mr. Morris, who is secretary of the legion. Also a letter from Mr. Meehan, of Toronto, acknowledging receipt of a letter sent by the minister with regard to the matter. These are the communications.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend place them on the table?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I was going to give them to my right hon. friend.

Mr. GRAY: I rise not to object to item 51 but rather to ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health—if he may be allowed to answer, because he has borne the brunt of the attack in connection with this matter—for an explanation as to why this relief to pensioned soldiers, from an emergency relief fund granted by this parliament, was cut off without a word of warning, and restored only when such a strong protest of public opinion swept the country, the pressure of which not even this government could withstand. Why were the soldier organizations throughout the country not consulted before this step was taken? It has been stated—and I should like an explanation as to this—that the cut was made in order to effect economy in the administration.

We have heard a good deal to-day with respect to the unemployment question. We know that for the ordinary unemployed the emergency relief measure did not expire until to-day, and it does seem to be due to the returned men of the country, and to the people of Canada as a whole, that some explanation should be given as to why, without a word of warning, the pensions of these men, whose very existence was dependent upon this relief, were cut by the Minister of Pensions and National Health.

I would also ask the returned veterans in the cabinet to give an explanation, because there are some veterans here in the cabinet before me. The hon. the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), and the Minister of Pensions and National Health

(Mr. MacLaren) are all returned veterans. I have here a statement given out to the press by the Mail and Empire as follows:

> In justice to the other war veterans in the cabinet it can be said they were not aware of Dr. MacLaren's proposal and it is doubtful if any of the other ministers were consulted.

I am going to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he was consulted in this matter. Did he consent to the pensions of these returned men being cut? If he was consulted what did he do in the matter? I pause now for an answer. His silence apparently would imply that he was consulted and is not going to say what he said. I will ask the Minister of National Defence: was he consulted by the Minister of Pensions and National Health, and if so, what did he say with respect to the cutting off of these pensions to returned men? Is he not going to be allowed to answer either? I would ask the Minister of Railways, who apparently is the only one in the cabinet who has been allowed so far to speak: was he consulted by the Minister of Pensions in the matter of having these pensions cut at the time they were? Was he consulted? If so, what opinion did he give in that regard? All I can say, then, is that it does seem strange to me that parliament should be witnessing the spectacle of members of this government, three or four of them returned veterans, remaining in their places and not offering any explanation to the house with respect to this matter. I have nothing but the kindliest feelings towards the Minister of Pensions and National Health. I believe he has the interest of the returned veterans at heart, and I believe it was his desire to do justice to them. I should like also to have an explanation as to why, although that minister bore the brunt of the attack, when it came to restoring the order, the right hon. the Prime Minister attempted to take all the glory, boldly announcing the pension would be restored. In fact there was no glory about it; he was merely performing a duty which should have rested upon the Minister of Pensions. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the country awaits some explanation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAY: This is not a laughing matter. For the benefit of some who may be ignorant of exactly what this pension meant, may I say that the relief allowance was granted only to pensioned soldiers. These soldiers whose pensions were not adequate to meet their needs were granted something extra in order to carry them through the winter. Single men were granted $30 per month and the allowance was graded from that amount up to some $67, but whatever pension they were receiving was deducted from that amount, so you will see that these men were receiving barely enough to allow them to exist. This is what the Minister of Pensions cut, and I want the country to know that that is exactly what was done by this cabinet in order to effect an economy. That is where they began.

Mr. BENNETT: May I inform the committee that the amount was never cut? Perhaps if the hon. gentleman had been a little more careful of his facts he would not have fallen into the error of making the statements he has made. He must have known that no pensioner ever received a lesser sum than the sum which is now being paid and which was paid at the time.

Mr. GRAY: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon; I never suggested it was cut or that a pensioner received anything less, but the order went through cutting these amounts from coast to coast.

Mr. BENNETT: No order went through; no order was made.

Mr. GRAY: Then why did the right hon. gentleman say he had restored it?

Mr. BENNETT: There was a misapprehension on the part of those who, like the hon. gentleman, conceived that what they saw in the press was an authentic statement of what had happened. It was not. What happened was very simple, and I should like to explain it to the hon. gentleman. This is not something out of which political capital can be made. In 1928-29 there was an appropriation of $250,000, and there was $378,987.86 expended. Last year $550,000 was voted and only $517,000, in round figures, was spent. This year we originally voted $250,000, and in November of last year $275,000 in addition was obtained by governor general's warrant. I assume it is known to hon. gentlemen in this committee that to obtain a governor general's warrant there must be urgent necessity. The minister obtained the $275,000 in November, and in February of this year $225,000 further was sought. It was represented that the urgency was not sufficient to warrant the payment of the sums that had been paid and it was suggested that a smaller sum would meet the necessities of the case.

The provisions with respect to relief are as follows: Relief may only be granted to a pensioner provided the amount of pension which he receives on his own behalf and that of his dependents, combined with earnings or other family income, is not in excess of the maximum rate issuable in his particular category. Where the need of assistance has been established the combined income may be augmented by the issue of relief orders to the maximum rates set out. They are as follows: Single men, $30 per month; man and wife, $45 per month; man, wife and one child, $57 per month; man, wife and two or more children, $67 per month. It was believed by officers in the department concerned that the payment of the smaller sum would meet the situation at that season of the year, and for some reason it was represented in the press that an order had been made accordingly.

As the hon. gentleman knows, no such order was ever made, nor were any payments at the reduced rate ever provided by the department. The minister obtained a further governor general's warrant for the $225,000, and on March 6 of this year an additional governor general's warrant was obtained for $75,000, making a total of $825,000. To maintain the payments up to date will require an additional sum of $90,000. Up to the date of the meeting of parliament on March 12 of this year, expenditures had been authorized which would amount to approximately $901,000 in all, and the additional sum required will carry it on until midnight to-night, as I have said. I may say further, for the information of the committee, that the number receiving aid increased very considerably this year over last year, hence the anxiety of the minister to be certain that there was the urgency for the warrant which I have mentioned. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, the number of times relief was issued was 36,002; the number of men who received relief was 4,647; those eligible for disability pension numbered 50,620. For the year ending March 31 last the number of men eligible for disability pension had increased to 57,044, and at the present moment the number stands at 65,332. The number of men who received relief increased, up to March 31 of last year, to 5,548, and this year to 8,222, and the number of times relief was issued increased to 51,000 for the year ending March 31, 1930, and to 79,380 for this year.

It was under those circumstances the relief was granted, and the reason the statement was made by myself rather than by the minister was because a delegation waited upon me, and they asked that the statement be made in the terms in which it was made, because there had been no change nor had the minister contemplated a change unless the circumstances warranted its being made.

Mr. POWER: I am not quite sure that the right hon. gentleman has stated the facts as they became known to the public through the press.

Mr. BENNETT: That is another thing.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would permit me to discuss the matter for a moment. My recollection is that a statement was given out by the officers of the department to the various branches throughout the country, to the effect that after a certain date the payments under the unemployment relief provision would be reduced. No sooner was that statement issued than telegrams began to pour into Ottawa. I am quite sure the right hon. gentleman will not say these telegrams were based on nothing, or on vague rumours. They came from such important men as the president of the Canadian Legion at Winnipeg, or perhaps it would be the president of the Army and Navy Veterans' Association. He stated:

> Winnipeg branch, Canadian Legion, in general meeting, protest very strongly action of Department of Pensions in reducing allowances to pensioners at this season of year.

He had been advised by someone in the department—

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend should not add those words "in the department", because I received just such a telegram as that and at once sent back a reply that no such action, so far as I knew, had been taken by the department, and I am informed that no such action was taken.

Mr. POWER: I am quite willing to admit that the statement of my right hon. friend is quite correct, but it so happened that I came to Ottawa at just about that time and a statement was issued either by the department or by the minister himself to the effect that there were no longer any funds available. That appears to be borne out by the fact that the governor general's warrant was issued about that time.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. POWER: The statement was that there were no longer any moneys available and consequently a reduction would have to be made. I have not before me the statement made by the minister but I can easily obtain it by sending to the library for copies of the press of that day. I do not think the Minister of Pensions and National Health will deny that he made such a statement to the press in which he said there were no longer any moneys available and that the matter would be discussed by the cabinet. Am I right in making that statement? The right hon. gentleman apparently nods, so I take it he nods in acquiescence.

Mr. BENNETT: I read it in the paper.

Mr. POWER: Do I take it that the right hon. gentleman says he read a statement purporting to emanate from the Minister of Pensions and National Health?

Mr. BENNETT: I read in the morning press, I think it was in both papers, the statement to which the hon. member has referred and I was advised by the minister that it did not interpret correctly the remarks he had made.

Mr. POWER: I find now that the hon. minister, who apparently cannot speak in this house for himself, can speak to the newspapers and be misinterpreted. Apparently this is becoming a habit of the government, and it is one which should be corrected. I suggest that the schoolmaster upon all occasions when his ministers speak—they will not speak in this house—be given a copy of their statements in order that he may correct them, cross all the t's and dot the i's. Otherwise similar mistakes will occur.

The right hon. gentleman admits that a statement purporting to emanate from the Minister of Pensions and National Health was issued to the press. He claims that the press misinterpreted that statement, but surely the minister himself could have contradicted it. However, one or two days went by and then the Prime Minister said: These moneys will continue to be paid. Would it not have been possible during that time for the minister to have made a statement to the people of this country, to the ex-soldiers, that he had no idea of refusing payment, and that his statement had been misunderstood? I feel sure that if the minister had felt that his statement had been misinterpreted or that an incorrect version had been given of it, he would have been the first to tell the newspaper men of their mistake. He is a man possessing broad sympathetic views, he has a kindly heart and is particularly well disposed toward the soldiers of this country, and he should have been the last to permit himself to be misinterpreted in this way. I think if I ask him now to tell the country and this committee whether or not he issued a statement which could be understood to mean that the relief to pensioners was to be reduced in some degree, he will answer. If he does I promise to take his word for it and I will not check him up even by reference to the newspapers.

Mr. BENNETT: The money had been exhausted.

Mr. POWER: I will take the hon. minister's statement and I will not press the matter further.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. GRAY: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. MEMBER: Let the minister answer.

Mr. GRAY: I would like to follow up the statements made by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) by reading the statement issued to the press by the minister and asking him whether or not it correctly interprets what he intended to say. The following appeared in the Mail and Empire of February 18, 1931, under the name of a very reputable member of the press gallery, Mr. Blacklock:

To-day Dr. MacLaren said the reduction "is regarded as a somewhat temporary measure and it is hoped an improvement in the rates will be effected before long." The text of his statement reads:

"The issue of relief by the department of Pensions and National Health was always regarded as an emergency measure. It was never intended that it should constitute a permanent addition to pensions. The relief issue through this department is restricted entirely to pensioners."

"This year the demands have greatly exceeded the appropriation passed by parliament and much more. The number of applications for relief have more than doubled as compared with previous years. At January 31 last, the amount expended was something more than double the amount expended during a similar period last year."

"Complaints have been made as regards the distribution of this relief, and the relief has been placed on the minimum scale pending investigation. Consequently, the administrative officers of the department were informed that, pending further instructions, a reduction would be made in the amounts issued. This reduction is regarded as a somewhat temporary measure, and it is hoped that an improvement in these rates will be effecter before long."

"In no case will hardship result, for there will be such readjustment as will meet the circumstances."

I now ask the minister whether or not that correctly interprets the statement given to the press, and I plead with the Prime Minister to permit the minister to answer for himself.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, one would think it was more important that justice should be done by voting this money which will enable payments to be made, rather than to make political capital out of the need for the payments. Those of us who have listened to the speech of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) must be struck with the fact that it was a palpable effort to make political capital.

Mr. GRAY: Mr. Chairman, I take serious objection—

Mr. BENNETT: No one can have any doubt as to that. It was couched in language which left no doubt as to its purpose. A statement was read in connection with which I stated a moment ago the minister could claim a wrong interpretation. The minister had no money and a governor general's warrant had not been issued. The law is that governor general's warrants are to be issued only in urgent cases and that the money is to be treated as a trust fund. The language of the statute leaves no doubt as to its meaning, that at least a matter of necessity must arise. It is not a case of simply issuing a warrant when one feels like it, there must be occasion for it. The exact language with respect to governor general's warrants, must, I fancy, be known to every hon. gentleman here who has had anything to do with the administration of affairs in this country. The money having been exhausted, it became necessary to issue a new warrant, and complaints were made that there had been abuse of the moneys that had been paid. The minister made that perfectly clear, and said that pending an investigation he proposed to carry them at a lower rate. This was construed as meaning that actual payments were to be made at a lower rate. I do not say that the statement was not open to that construction, but no such payments were ever made. The payments were continued because it was apparent from the statements received by the minister from every part of the country that a lower payment would not in any sense meet the demands of the situation. Therefore a governor general's warrant was at once issued and another one has been issued since. With the house in session, no warrant can now be issued, and if this sum is not voted, the payment cannot be made.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We are not opposing it; we are only asking for information.

Mr. VENIOT: We are not opposing the voting of this sum. We have a right to the information.

Mr. BENNETT: I am endeavouring to supply all the information asked for. Before a governor general's warrant is issued, the minister must first satisfy himself that there is not the ordinary, casual necessity for it, but the real necessity that warrants the substitution of the executive for parliament, beause that is what a governor general's warrant means. In the exercise of that power the minister made inquiries and I think as the hon. member for Quebec South has said, very few days had elapsed. It may well be, as the hon. member for West Lambton has said, that the matter was hurried by reason of the manifestations of disapproval. No one doubts that, but the minister was seeking to ascertain exactly what the situation was, not to create a prolonged carry-forward of the reduction of the amount to be paid, but to determine whether or not there was any warrant for the statements that had caused the investigation to be made, and whether or not the conditions were such as to entitle him to ask a further warrant as he did. He obtained it and payments were made as I have indicated.

Perhaps it is not quite fair to the house to suggest that members are not allowed to speak. I have undertaken the carriage of these estimates through the house and I shall endeavour to discharge that duty. When it is suggested that hon. members are not permitted to speak, of course that is entirely erroneous. No such relations exist between my colleagues and myself. We had an understanding, believing these estimates would be treated as estimates of this character for the period ending the current fiscal year would be treated. We believed the course followed in the past would probably be followed in this instance, and that they would be through in a few hours. We were disappointed in that regard; but having undertaken this duty, and having been supplied with the necessary information, I am endeavouring to carry it out in my capacity as Minister of Finance in charge of the supply bill. I am not complaining, but I do not think it is creditable to hon. gentlemen to suggest that any member of the administration is not permitted to speak. Any member of the house may freely express his opinion; but having undertaken to deal with these estimates, I shall continue to deal with them as long as the house permits me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As regards the concluding remarks of my right hon. friend, I may say that he can scarcely wonder that we on this side have the impression that members of the ministry have been forbidden to speak, since it has not been possible, with one exception, to secure a reply from a single minister of the crown with respect to any matter affecting his department. The Prime Minister may arrogate to himself the right to handle all the estimates, but to do so is not following British parliamentary procedure. It is not treating the House of Commons as it ought to be treated. It is not fair to his cabinet, and it is not fair to the country. He may say that his ministers are free to speak, but the impression the country is getting of the ministry is that it is composed of a number of nonentities.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The right hon. gentleman was a nonentity last summer.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am expressing the view that the country has of the ministers, in the light of what has taken place in the course of the discussion on these estimates. I do not say that hon. gentlemen are nonentities. I know some of the ministers very well and I know they are perfectly well able to take care of themselves in discussion. Moreover, I know many of them have a very wide parliamentary experience and might not only have contributed valuable information in the course of the discussions but have done much towards the proceedings of this house in having them conducted in the manner in which hon. members generally would have liked to see them conducted. I submit it is not treating the House of Commons as it should be treated, for the Prime Minister to take upon himself the work of the entire ministry in the House of Commons in connection with the explanation of matters affecting different departments. The Department of Pensions and National Health is one of the most important departments in the government. The war veterans throughout the country wish to hear what the minister in charge of that department has to say with respect to a matter which vitally affects them and their families, and they have a right to hear him. When the Prime Minister begins to lecture the opposition for assuming a certain attitude toward himself, he is entitled to know what the opposition thinks and what the country thinks. What we have been witnessing here looks more like procedure in a kindergarten than what is to be expected of the government of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course I do not intend to reply to language such as that. If the right hon. gentleman thinks that in so expressing himself an ex-prime minister is adding to the dignity of the House of Commons, I am content. This I will say: when he undertakes to speak for the country he seems to think he is still in power; he is not in power.

Mr. POULIOT: The Prime Minister seems to be very easily offended to-night, and I shall have to bring back again his wonderful smile. I am much surprised that the Prime Minister takes exception to the word "kindergarten." It will be remembered that a former prime minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, who is still alive and is a distinguished man, at a lecture given in Ottawa said that the League of Nations, which is an international institution, was just at the kindergarten stage, and no one was insulted.

Item agreed to.

Post Office—outside service—miscellaneous—for printing and stationery—further amount required, $375,623.18.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This amounts to over one-third of a million dollars. Perhaps the Postmaster General or the Prime Minister would advise the committee why this large amount is needed.

Mr. BENNETT: Neither the Postmaster General nor the Prime Minister will advise the committee, but the Minister of Finance has much pleasure in advising the committee that this sum represents the accumulated deficits from overdrafts commencing in that department in 1927-28. It is moneys owing to the king's printer. This sum will take care of those overdrafts and square the Post Office Department with the king's printer up to the 31st of March, 1931; that is, this day. The real fact is that additional stationery and supplies were required and an overdraft was created in 1927-28 and carried forward to the next year, and every time the Post Office Department was billed it had not the money to pay the additional sums. The Secretary of State requested that payments be made from the Post Office Department, and the accumulation, with what is necessary for this year, amounts to the figure stated in this vote which is inserted in the estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask whether any printing has been given by the Post Office Department to any firms in London, Ontario, since this government has been in office, and if so, to what firms, and what amount has been paid or indebtedness incurred.

Mr. BENNETT: Not under this item, so far as I know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That does not quite give me what I wish to ascertain. The Postmaster General knows, or ought to know, what the facts are in this matter. I would like to find out what moneys have been paid or are due by the Post Office Department to any firms in London, Ontario, for printing during the present fiscal year.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot supply that information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend undertake to have it supplied to the house to-morrow?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Mr. HEENAN: I would like to know from the Finance minister or the Postmaster General what has been the average cost of the commissions which have been appointed since this government took office to investigate charges of political partisanship against postmasters and postmistresses.

Mr. BENNETT: These commissions are appointed on the same terms as set forth in the order in council that was passed during the regime of Sir Robert Borden after a conference between him and the then leader of the opposition. If charges of political partisanship are preferred, commissions issue. My memory is that the sum paid is twenty dollars per day. The Postmaster General, of course, has nothing to do with the issue of these commissions. They are issued by the government as a whole. Should charges of political partisanship be made and sent forward to any minister, he submits them to council, and a commission is issued by council accordingly.

Mr. VENIOT: What provision is made for the payment of the commissioners holding these investigations up to the end of the present fiscal year? How are they being paid, and what provision is being made for that purpose?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot answer that question.

Mr. VENIOT: Evidently there is no provision in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: No. I do not think any accounts have come in as yet.

Mr. VENIOT: It is an over-expenditure, and according to the principle laid down by the Prime Minister the other day, no over-expenditures should be chargeable to next year.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no over-expenditure in the department. This sum will take care of any expenditures of the department to the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. VENIOT: I am well aware of that, but there must be an over-expenditure in the Post Office Department to meet the very numerous investigations that are going on now, and have been going on for the last couple of months at least. According to the principle laid down by the Prime Minister the other day, there should not be any over-expenditure in any department. But I cannot see that any provision is being made in the estimates either through the Justice department or the Post Office Department or any other department for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: I will ascertain and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. RALSTON: I wish to refer to a matter which I called to the attention of the Minister of Justice the other day, and concerning which I have had no further reply from him. At that time I called his attention to the fact that some of the departments —I mentioned particularly the Post Office Department—had been sending out circular letters to officials enclosing an affidavit and calling upon the official to sign the affidavit to the effect that he had not been guilty of any acts of political partisanship. The letter also went on to intimate that if the official did not sign and return the affidavit, his dismissal would be proceeded with. I asked the Minister of Justice if he would look into the matter, and, if these letters were being sent out, take steps to bring the matter to the attention of the various departments and see that the sending out of such letters was discontinued, for the obvious reason that it is directly contrary to the practice which has existed, and to which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has referred. The principle has been clearly laid down that except where there is a certificate by a member of parliament cases of political partisanship shall be tried and investigated in the regular way, and that the ordinary principles shall apply that a man is presumed innocent until proved guilty, and is not called upon to make an extraordinary affidavit of this kind. The Minister of Justice promised the other day that he would look into the matter and bring it to the attention of the departments, but I have not had any further word about it.

Even at this late hour and so near the Easter recess I feel that this matter is of sufficient importance to bring to the attention of the committee because I am satisfied that a number of these letters have gone out. It seems to me that it is not fair to the civil servants to put them in any such position and they should know the true situation at once otherwise the whole service will feel that they are under suspicion by being called upon, as I said a moment ago, to prove themselves innocent instead of the usual procedure being followed of their being presumed innocent until found guilty. I want to put on record a copy of the letter which has been sent out. It is addressed to various postmasters, and reads:

Dear Sir,

Representations have been made to the department to the effect that during your term of office as postmaster you have been guilty of acts of political partisanship. It is provided in the Civil Service Act that any government employee who is guilty of political partisanship in connection with any federal or provincial election shall be dismissed from the service.

As this charge has been made against you the Postmaster General is desirous of giving you an opportunity to state your side of the case.

The Prime Minister will note that there is no suggestion as to who makes the charges, but the intimation is that somebody has made representations to the department and the only trial is to require the civil servant to make an affidavit without knowing who charges him or the particulars of the charges.

Mr. GOTT: That did not make any difference at all to the late government.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend cannot point to a single instance of a dismissal under the late government without an investigation and the regulations being carried out.

Mr. GOTT: I can point to one in the town of Leamington, Ontario. Let the ex-Postmaster General look it up.

Mr. JONES: And I can point to one in the town of Cambridge, New Brunswick.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is talking about cases that are not under the Civil Service Act at all. The Prime Minister has already intimated that the government are pursuing the course which has been laid down, and which has been the practice for a number of years.

Mr. GOTT: This was a case under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. RALSTON: The letter continues:

If you have been guilty of acts of political partisanship it would be advisable for you to send in your resignation forthwith; otherwise the department will be compelled to take immediate steps looking to your dismissal.

That means: If you do not sign the affidavit declaring your innocence, though you do not know the charges or who makes them, you are going to be dismissed. The letter continues:

If, on the other hand, you are prepared to take an affidavit to the effect that you have not committed any act of political partisanship whatsoever in connection with any provincial or federal election since your term of office, you will find attached a form which is to be duly signed and properly witnessed.

Failure to sign this affidavit will be looked upon as an admission of political partisanship activites on your part, and the department in that event will have no other alternative than to conclude that you were guilty of the charges made against you and proceed accordingly with your dismissal.

This letter and affidavit are being forwarded to you by registered mail, and unless you admit the charges made against you it is essential that you should return the completed form of affidavit by return mail.

Yours sincerely,

Deputy Postmaster General.

This is the affidavit:

Solemn Declaration made by virtue of the act respecting Extra-Judicial Oaths

I, the undersigned Postmaster of
Do solemnly declare:

1. That I was appointed postmaster in the year.. .. ..

2. That since my appointment as postmaster I have taken no active part in federal or provincial elections. I have not canvassed or taken any voter to the polls, nor have I offered or given money or liquor, or represented any candidate at any polling division. I have not checked or verified any list of voters outside any polling station, neither did I take part in any committee of organization or address a meeting in favour of any candidate. I did not interrupt any public speaker during the course of any meeting, nor commit any other act which could be construed as an act of political partisanship.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

And I have signed

Declared before me
this.. .. .. .. day of .. ..

I have reason to express the hope that the paragraph which is contained in that letter and which intimates that the official is to be dismissed if he does not return the affidavit is not going to be acted upon by this government. I cannot bring myself to believe that they are going to violate the regulations which have already been made. What I am asking at this time is that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister assure us that the usual practice will be observed and that the official will not be dismissed without a fair investigation in which he will be presumed innocent until he is proved guilty.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, my attention was directed to the observations made the other day by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and to the reply made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie). I know that certain letters similar to that mentioned by the hon. gentleman were sent but they were sent only to those against whom charges of partisanship had been made. So far as I know in no case where they have declined to act upon them, unless they have written a communication in which they have admitted their guilt, has dismissal followed. I am bound to say to my hon. friend that there was a suggestion that if they declined to answer their action should be taken as an acquiescence and that they should be dismissed. Needless to say that suggestion was not acted upon?

Mr. VENIOT: And will not be acted upon?

Mr. BENNETT: Was not and will not be acted upon. There are cases in which, to save the expense of having a commission with all the attendant troubles, and where it is well known that there has been partisanship on the part of the individuals charged, that communication has been sent. I think the form of that communication leaves much to be desired. I believe if a suspected person were advised that a charge had been made against him indicating that he had been guilty of partisanship and saying that it might be advisable for him to resign rather than put the country to the expense of an investigation, no objection could be taken. However, I wholly agree with what the hon. gentleman has said. Strangely enough in the Civil Service Act reference has been made to both provincial and federal elections. I never knew just why provincial elections were mentioned in the statute, but the statute as it reads makes the incumbent of an office appointed under the act guilty of partisanship if he takes part in either a provincial or a federal election. That is why the word "provincial" is put in the statue. I think hon. gentlemen opposite can rely upon there being not attempt to treat unfairly those who are charged with partisanship, and certainly no effort will be made to relieve them of their positions because by mere silence they are regarded as acquiescing in charges made against them.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to say to my right hon. friend that we appreciate the assurance he has given. One thing further I would like to say: I suggest that in a letter of this kind it is not quite fair for a superior to suggest to a subordinate that it is advisable for him to do so and so. That is to say, I think that the farthest one can go is to say that the charges have been made and if those charges are not admitted an investigation will be held.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend would not consider it as at all improper to say, "If you regard these charges as being warranted, your resignation will be in order," or something to that effect?

Mr. RALSTON: I submit not. I think the official is entitled to be told what the procedure is and the principles which have been laid down here, and it would be left to him to decide the course he wished to take rather than being advised by a superior. I suggest to my right hon. friend that the word "advisable" be left out.

Mr. NEILL: In view of the procedure indicated I would like to take this opportunity of putting in an early plea for forgiveness of one particular postmaster. I never have been in favour of allowing a man's politics to interfere with his right of being a postmaster, and I would not like to see it happen in the future. The postmaster to whom I refer was the campaign manager for my opponent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POWER: While we are on this matter perhaps it would save a great deal of trouble and time if the Prime Minister would make an authoritative statement with respect to complaints made by members of parliament asking that public officers be removed from office. He might give an outline of what these complaints must contain, and just how far such statements of members of parliament should be taken. I would ask the Prime Minister to go one step further than he has already gone when answering the question of my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and explain the custom in respect to the question I have asked.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman think at this hour of the night it is desirable his question should be answered? If some of these estimates do not pass there will be no cheques for those requiring relief, and I would remind hon. members opposite that the hour is now within a few minutes of eleven o'clock. In the main estimates these matters will again be traversed at greater length and perhaps we might save a lot of trouble and expense if my hon. friend's question was allowed to stand.

Mr. RALSTON: The only reason for taking time with regard to this question is that when people get these letters they become panicky. They seem to think they are slated to be dismissed anyway, whether they are guilty or not, and therefore since they do not understand what their rights are they may do themselves an injustice which would be avoided if my right hon. friend would make a statement now. It would not take long for him to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: I have made a statement.

Mr. RALSTON: I would ask my right hon. friend to make a statement with regard to complaints by members of parliament.

Mr. McINTOSH: I know of an instance in the constituency of North Battleford where the procedure described by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth was actually followed. The man resigned when he received this threatening letter.

An hon. MEMBER: He must have been guilty.

Mr. McINTOSH: He says he is not guilty, and personally I do not think he is. A petition has gone to the department asking that the man be restored to his position. In the event of the resignation of a man followed by a petition and an investigation to learn whether or not that man is guilty of partisanship, will an investigation be conducted and the man be restored to his position if it is proved that he is innocent?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the committee will recall that this matter was thoroughly threshed out last year in connection with a case in which the then Solicitor General had laid a charge of partisanship. The man was found not guilty of partisanship and it was determined by the Civil Service Commission that there was no power to restore the man to his position.

Mr. POWER: There was no question of the man having been found guilty or not guilty?

Mr. BENNETT: He was removed.

Mr. POWER: He was removed. But the right hon. gentleman said he was not found guilty of partisanship. There was no finding.

Mr. BENNETT: He was charged with partisanship.

Mr. POWER: And dismissed on the word of a member of parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: And the evidence indicated that there had been a mistake.

Mr. POWER: To whom did the evidence indicate that? To the minister, not to the House of Commons.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman judicially was satisfied.

Mr. POWER: I do not think any one was.

Mr. BENNETT: Then we will withdraw the question of his being satisfied. But it was determined by the Civil Service Commission that once a man resigns his position, even though he may not desire to do so, or once he is removed from his position, he cannot, though he vindicates himself thereafter, be restored to that position. That has been the finding in that regard. I tried to assert that it was an improper appreciation of the position, but they satisfied me that, as the law stands, they were right.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that the infallible justice of the crown?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, under the statute.

Mr. VENIOT: There is a misapprehension. Where an official is dismissed for cause he cannot re-enter the service, even if he qualifies under examination. But where an official resigns he has the right, a vacancy being created, to apply again and undergo the qualifying examination.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. VENIOT: But the right hon. gentleman's statement did not leave that impression.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. He has the right to apply, the same as any other citizen, but he starts all over again.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He loses his standing.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman,—

An hon. MEMBER: Let us get through.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have a right to address the committee without back-benchers interfering. We do not hear much from the front benches but a good deal from the back. There is in my riding a case which comes within the discussion that has been going on for the last fifteen or twenty minutes. There is in a small village in my riding a postmaster who received one of these letters read by the hon. member sitting in front of me, and also the form of an affidavit, and I advised him neither to sign the affidavit nor to resign. I took the ground that until that postmaster was proven guilty he was innocent. I also took the matter up with the Postmaster General and received a letter in reply. I am sorry I have not that letter before me. It is in my room.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. It is now almost eleven o'clock, and if the committee desires to proceed beyond that hour it can do so only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to ask, Mr. Chairman, that the ordinary rule of moving the Speaker back to the chair be dispensed with by unanimous consent, and that we sit another half hour.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the motion carried?

Mr. BENNETT: Is that acceptable?

Mr. POULIOT: I would be willing to agree to it if I got my statement. Otherwise no unanimous consent; I object.

Mr. SANDERSON: The letter, if I remember it—if I am wrong the Postmaster General, if he is permitted to answer me, will correct me—intimated that the fact that I had advised this postmaster not to resign or to sign the affidavit was really evidence of guilt.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. SANDERSON: "Hear, hear," my hon. friend says. Surely no hon. member in this house will say that because a postmaster refuses to resign, or refuses to sign an affidavit, he has been proven guilty. And mark you, in this particular case I tried to find out the names of the parties who laid the information, and apparently there has been no information laid at all. It is only a matter of rumour and hearsay.

Mr. BENNETT: Has he been dismissed?

Mr. SANDERSON: He has not been dismissed, and in his letter the Postmaster General stated that if the postmaster in question had made up his mind that he would not resign, or if he would not sign the affidavit, a commission would have to be appointed to take evidence. I do not object to that, but if this is done the names of those who laid the complaint must be made known and a full investigation instituted. But I claim that to ask this postmaster, or any other postmaster, to allow himself to be clubbed into a resignation, or clubbed into signing the affidavit before anything is proven, is at least not British justice.

Mr. HEENAN: Is the Postmaster General prepared to give the name of the informant, or the names of those who complained against the postmistress at Vermilion Bay, Ontario?

Mr. BENNETT: The case was investigated, I believe, at a public hearing and a report made.

Mr. HEENAN: I am asking whether the Postmaster General will give us the name of the person who laid the complaint in connection with the matter in the first instance.

Mr. BENNETT: That has been held to be unnecessary in cases that occurred under the late administration and the one previous to that, provided there is an investigation in which the accused makes his defence. Then the matter can be discussed in parliament in the light of the investigation and report.

Mr. POWER: Now that we have decided to sit an extra hour, surely the Prime Minister will give the explanation for which I asked and which he said he could not give by reason of the shortness of time. I am not endeavouring to stir up trouble, I am trying to get from him his interpretation of the rule which has always been followed—

Mr. BENNETT: Not always.

Mr. POWER:—that a public officer may be dismissed on the personal certificate of a member of parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: The matter was placed on Hansard last year by the Postmaster General, and I should not care to make a statement without looking up the strict terms of the order in council. My memory of it might be defective as to the exact words used. I might send for Hansard, or if my hon. friend would do so himself, he would find the statement to which I refer. I shall be glad at the proper time to accommodate the hon. gentleman in that regard.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not wish to interrupt anyone but I rise to a point of order. According to the rules, the house cannot sit after eleven o'clock except by unanimous consent. I am not going to make trouble or threaten the government, but I wish to have a satisfactory answer to my question regarding the building of the station at Rivière du Loup, and I have—

The CHAIRMAN: What is the point of order?

Mr. POULIOT: The point of order is that the house cannot sit after eleven o'clock except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN: I rule that the house is not sitting; it is the committee, and there was unanimous consent.

Mr. POULIOT: No, Mr. Chairman; you have not mine.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I said that a condition was to be fulfilled.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order has been decided. If the hon. member is not satisfied he can appeal to the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: In view of the statement which the Prime Minister has made, and the concurrence he has given in the terms he has used regarding the letter I have read, I wish to ask him whether instructions will be given to withdraw these letters and if desired to have amending letters written omitting the objectionable portions to which I have referred. He will agree that the letters are not such as should go to civil servants.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the Postmaster General has already directed that no further letters of that kind are to be sent out.

Mr. RALSTON: That is not quite enough.

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly is not writing further letters to the people to whom they have been sent, but that form of letter has been discontinued.

Mr. RALSTON: I express the opinion deferentially that that should be done, and I think my right hon. friend, who understands as well as anyone in this house, and perhaps better than most, the general principles which govern the investigation of charges, knows that is not a letter which ought to be allowed to stand as coming from a senior to a subordinate. I want to ask my right hon. friend if he will not have these letters withdrawn and cancelled, and such letters sent out if desired as are appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. RALSTON: The other matter I had in mind was with regard to what my hon. friend from Quebec South said. Can we at least have this understanding, that dismissals will not be made on the so-called certificate of a member of parliament unless the member of parliament certifies that the acts of partisanship are to his personal knowledge?

Mr. BENNETT: As I said a moment ago, whatever has been the practice heretofore has been observed. The exact procedure I do not carry in mind at the moment, hence I do not care to make a statement without looking up the order in council to find the exact language.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to ask the Prime Minister what attitude the various ministers will follow in cases where complaints are made by defeated candidates of acts of political partisanship.

Mr. BENNETT: They are not dismissed without an investigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister referred to an order in council a moment ago. Does he mean the order in council which was in force under the previous administration? That is satisfactory if that is what he meant.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I mean.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Relief of fire sufferers at Hebertville Station, Quebec—governor general's warrant of September 26, 1930, $5,000.

Mr. POWER: I should like to ask, purely out of curiosity, how it happens that the federal government has come to the relief of fire sufferers. Is this something new?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is not something new. The province of Quebec made an appropriation and an application was made to the administration for assistance. It was found that in similar cases sums had been paid by previous administrations, and accordingly this amount of $5,000 was paid.

Mr. POWER: The circumstances must have been very unusual.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the place was wiped out.

Mr. POWER: It seems very extraordinary that the federal government should pay sufferers from fire. Surely the circumstances would have to be very exceptional.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly the position I took.

Item agreed to.

Relief of pensioners — governor general's warrant of November 20, 1930, $275,000.

Mr. POWER: On this item I should like to say a word which I assure hon. members will not be of a controversial or political nature. In common with a great many others who are interested in returned soldiers and in pensions I am beginning to fear that the pension legislation of last session may not be as effective as those who took part in the preparation of it had anticipated. I do not propose for a moment to discuss what may have been the reasons which bring this legislation almost face to face with failure. It may be and probably is due to the fact that there were inherent defects in the legislation; it may be that the proper precautions were not taken to see that it was carried out in every particular.

That is not the question I wish to raise to-night, however. I wish to ask the Prime Minister to consult with his colleagues, with the members of these boards and with the officers of the department during the recess with a view to some attempt being made to modify or alter or if necessary to crap the legislation in order that we may be able to dispense that justice to the returned soldiers that those of us who served on the committee as well as the members of this house hoped we were dispensing throught the legislation of last year. I am not making this statement by way of criticism; I think the right hon. gentleman understands that, and I think those members of the house who were on the parliamentary committees of last year will understand the position I take. I make this suggestion in order that something may be done at the earliest possible moment to remedy any defects which may exist in the present system so that we shall not be face to face, in a short time, with an agitation throughout the country which might make it impossible for the members of this house and the government to deal with the situation without taking radical steps in the way of granting pensions in a wholesale fashion, which none of us desire.

I am asking the Prime Minister particularly to direct his attention to this very serious and urgent matter of national importance during the recess so that he may come to parliament after Easter with some solution for it. Personally I may say that whatever experience I have acquired during the past few years in dealing with this question is at the disposal of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Pensions and National Health. I do not propose now, any more than I did in the past, to deal with this matter in any political way whatever. I have already offered privately to cooperate with the minister. I make that offer again and I sincerely hope, in the interests of the country at large as well as in the interests of the government and of the opposition, that something may be done in the shortest possible time to deal with this matter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to say just a word in support of the hon. member who has just spoken. No one who has worked with the hon. member can help realizing that in dealing with this subject he has been indeed absolutely free from any taint of partisanship or politics. I have worked with the hon. member many years in connection with this matter and always, as chairman of our committee and as its representative here in the house, he has been absolutely fair.

I have placed a number of questions on the order paper, having that same situation in mind, because with many others who have been interested in the matter, I am impressed by its urgency. Possibly there are defects in the legislation, but certainly consequences have arisen already which are going to make for great difficulty in the very near future. I too would ask the Prime Minister and his colleagues to look into the question, and like the hon. member who has just spoken, if there is anything I can do I shall be only too glad to do it.

Mr. BENNETT: In answer to the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken I should say that the same considerations which have influenced their judgment and brought about the statements they have made have been apparent to the government for some time, and already the matter is being looked into. We shall be very glad indeed to avail ourselves of their mature advice and generous assistance.

Item agreed to.

Removal, ordnance stores from Ross Rifle factory buildings, Quebec—(governor general's warrant of November 27, 1930), $26,000.

Mr. POWER: Mr. Chairman, if the Prime Minister will give me the undertaking that at some future time I shall be permitted to discuss this matter, I will be prepared to do so and shall be glad to point out to the house and to the country what I consider has been a serious defect in administration and what has been very nearly a scandal in the Department of National Defence. However, I have neither the time this evening nor the necessary information to carry on this discussion. If the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of National Defence are willing that the matter be discussed when the main estimates are being considered, I shall have no objection to this item being passed.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will have that opportunity, but I would point out to him that this probably comes within the terms of the order in council passed on January 9, 1928.

Mr. POWER: No, it does not.

Mr. BENNETT: It is thought that the terms of that order are broad enough to cover this matter.

Mr. POWER: If the terms of that order passed in 1928 had been broad enough to cover this matter I do not think a governor general's warrant would have been necessary. Under the terms of that order in council an amount of $100,000 was placed in the estimates to cover the removal of the Ross rifle factory. I take it that the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) advised the right hon. gentleman that the terms of the order did not cover the removal of stores at this time and that therefore it was necessary to issue a governor general's warrant. However, that is a matter to be discussed at the proper time. There will not be an item in the main estimates covering the removal of these stores, but there will be other items covering the demolition of the factory itself, and I take it that I shall be permitted to discuss the whole question at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Item agreed to.

Relief of pensioners (governor general's warrant of March 6, 1931), $75,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, with the permission of my right hon. friend I would like to comment upon certain of his remarks which appear on page 408 of Hansard, as follows:

This committee, being anxious to retain some semblance of integrity with respect to its dealings, is now legalizing the unwarranted acts of those who made certain expenditures because they say they were instructed to do so.

I hope that my right hon. friend did not mean to imply that the alleged unwarranted acts related to the previous administration. He must realize that many of the expenditures which he classes as unwarranted because they are included in these estimates to which his remarks refer, as for instance the Welland canal item of $2,000,000, were due to actions of his own administration with which the previous government had no connection whatever.

It is desirable at this time to make very clear the course which should be followed in order to secure effective parliamentary control over expenditures. In this connection I would say to my right hon. friend that what he has said with respect to civil servants is equally applicable to the ministry as a whole. The right hon. gentleman quoted from the report of the Auditor General as follows—the quotation will be found at page 409 of Hansard:

The over-expending of appropriations has the effect of lessening parliamentary control over expenditures and, although in very exceptional cases it may have to be permitted, the practice is to be deprecated and means should be taken to prevent it.

Most if not all of the items we have had under discussion cover matters of over-expenditure. My right hon. friend continued as follows:

The responsibility is, as the Auditor General says, with the accountants of the departments, and if parliamentary control of appropriations is to be maintained except under very exceptional conditions that may sometimes prevail, it follows that discipline must be applied, or the whole system will be wrecked for if accountants and deputy ministers under the control of ministers may make beyond parliament appropriations, expenditures amounting to $1,000,000, they can do it to the amount of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000.

At page 411 the right hon. gentleman continues:

The Auditor General directs attention to what must be painfully apparent to everyone. It means that you substitute the minister and an accountant for parliament, because the money has gone and there was no appropriation for it.

And again at the bottom of the page:

I think an effort should be made to make it possible for each department to live within its appropriation. If not, some men will lose their positions. That is all I have to say.

I agree with my right hon. friend's point of view as here presented. What I would suggest respectfully is that what is true as regards the permanent officials of the government in the matter of preventing over-expenditure and not going beyond appropriations is applicable in even greater measure, and applies with greater force to the ministry itself. There should not be occasion again to have to draw attention to the fact that a ministry of its own volition has exceeded an appropriation or has permitted expenditures to be incurred for which no appropriation by parliament has been made.

I wish to join with the Prime Minister in seeking effectual control by parliament over expenditure. I believe that to be one of the most important functions of parliament, effectively to control the expenditures of the country. This can be done only by restricting expenditures to such amounts as have been provided for by appropriations made by parliament in the regular way.

May I add this word in regard to governor general's warrants. I have stated frequently that the government might have obtained a governor general's warrant for the purpose of unemployment relief. I hope that my right hon. friend and members generally will appreciate that when I made that statement I had reference to the fact that an Imperial conference was to be held last year in London and that it was recognized by everyone that the Prime Minister and his colleagues would wish to attend and should attend that conference. Under the circumstances it was hardly possible to have parliament meet in time to pass the appropriations necessary for the year and a governor general's warrant would, I think, have served the purpose as regards what was necessary for unemployment relief. I would not like it to be thought for one moment that I favoured the issuing of such warrants except in circumstances which are most exceptional or where the deferring of the meeting of parliament can be justified only by circumstances which are apparent to everyone as reasonable.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom that the right hon. gentleman and myself agree, but this is a matter upon which we do agree and have agreed for many years. I do not agree wholly with his view with respect to governor general's warrants, for I do not believe that circumstances arising within an administration constitute a necessity for the issuance of such warrants. There is that difference between us. There are circumstances such as the destruction of a bridge, the burning of a building or the establishment and maintenance of the government itself where warrants should be issued, but there must be satisfactory evidence to warrant this action being taken. May I say this to the committee: These estimates have been introduced for the purpose of enabling the government to start with a clean sheet. That is, where over-payments have been made, and some of them attributable to the present administration, as the right hon. gentleman says, on the 31st day of this month, that is to-day, if these estimates pass, there will then be established a clean sheet and a new leaf will be turned on the book enabling the government to do what, I believe, should be done by all governments, namely, to maintain its expenditures within its appropriations. I am sorry to say to the committee that despite the efforts that I made personally, there is one item that has not been brought into the house. It is a small item, it is true, but it was overlooked by the minister in charge. This shows how difficult it is to follow these matters. As I say, it is not a large sum, but we could not insert it in the estimates without a new message which could not be secured. An effort will be made, commencing the new year on April 1, to keep expenditures within the appropriations and we shall ask the house and the country to judge us by our performance in the light of the statement of the principle which, I submit, should govern our actions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am anxious that the clean sheet of the right hon. gentleman, when we see it next year, shall not have any spots upon it. For that reason I should like to draw his attention to what I believe caused the confusion last evening when we were discussing the unprovided items. They do not relate to the fiscal year in which the supplementary estimates are being presented; they relate to the year previous. As a consequence I say that despite my right hon. friend's good intentions, when we are discussing the estimates at this time next year, he will find he will be obliged to bring in further unprovided items for this very fiscal year 1930-31, that is to say, for the fiscal year which he now thinks he has cleaned off so completely. He will find that the Auditor General will present to him a report to the effect that several of the departments have not paid some outstanding accounts; that they have been overlooked by ministers or deputy ministers or accountants, and he will ask that an item be inserted in the estimates to cover those unprovided amounts. I hope with my right hon. friend that the amounts will be small, but I am afraid that despite his efforts and good intentions one corner of the sheet will have a spot upon it.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman has had more experience than I, and I daresay his suggestion is sound; but the ministers, if they were permitted, would tell the committee that they have been asked and asked again as to any over-expenditures, and a very earnest effort has been made to cover every item up to the end of the present fiscal year. I hope—and I thank the right hon. gentleman for extending the information to the government—that such a condition as he suggests will not arise.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Has the Auditor General been asked not to over-spend in his own department?

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say that that step has been taken.

Item agreed to.

Railways, Canadian National Steamships and Maritime Freight Rates Act

Loans to Canadian National Railway Company

Amount not exceeding $11,410,400.85 to meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient) by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railway Company, herein called "the company" or any company specified or referred to in chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, and chapter 13 of the statutes of 1920, or any company formed by way of amalgamation or consolidation of any such companies, or now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian National Railways or by the company in respect of any railways, properties and works entrusted to it from time to time under the provisions of section 19 of chapter 172 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, or any one or more of such companies, on any or all of the following accounts, such expenditures or indebtedness being herein called authorized expenditures:

(a) Interest on securities, notes and other obligations: rentals for lease of lines and equipment;

(b) Equipment principal payments; sinking funds; miscellaneous maturing or matured notes and other obligations secured or unsecured;

(c) Operating income deficit, whenever incurred or ascertained;

(d) Construction and betterments, including coordinations; acquisition of real or personal property, and working capital;

(e) Acquisition of stock or securities of the Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company when duly issued under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The stock or securities so acquired to be deposited with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to be disposed of only when thereto authorized by the governor-in-council.

(f) Acquisition of stock or securities of the Central Vermont Railway, Inc. when duly issued under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The stock or securities so acquired to be deposited with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to be disposed of only when thereto authorized by the governor-in-council.

The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time to meet authorized expenditures in the discretion of the governor-in-council.

(a) In respect of railways, properties and works entrusted to the company as aforesaid;

(b) In respect of railways, properties and works not so entrusted;

by way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other, subject, however, as follows:

If by way of loans from His Majesty, the amount or amounts advanced to any one or more of the said companies shall be repayable on demand, with interest payable half-yearly at the rate fixed from time to time by the governor-in-council, secured if and when directed by the governor-in-council by mortgage or mortgages upon such properties, in such form and containing such terms and conditions, not inconsistent herewith, as the governor-in-council may approve.

If by way of loans from persons other than His Majesty (without the guarantee of His Majesty) the amounts, terms and conditions of such loans shall be such as the governor-in-council may from time to time approve.

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be either a general guarantee covering the total amount of the issue, or by a separate guarantee endorsed on each obligation, and may be of the principal, interest and sinking funds (if any) of the notes, obligations or securities of one or more of the said companies specified by the governor-in-council, which notes, obligations or securities the companies so specified are hereby authorized to make and issue from time to time, provided that the total principal amount thereof at any one time outstanding shall not, together with any part of the loans represented by cash, exceed the total amount mentioned in this vote,—namely $11,410,400.85, and any such guarantee may be signed by the Minister of Finance or such other person as the governor-in-council may authorize on behalf of His Majesty, in such form and on such terms and conditions as the governor-in-council may determine to be appropriate and applicable thereto. Any guarantee so signed shall be conclusive evidence for all purposes of the validity of the guarantee and that the provisions of this enactment have been complied with.

Should temporary loans be made or negotiated before the lapse of this appropriation either from His Majesty or other persons, guaranteed notes, obligations or securities may subsequently be issued under the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this enactment to renew, refund or adjust such loans, or any part thereof.

Each company herein mentioned or referred to is hereby authorized to aid and assist, in any manner any other or others of the said companies, which expression as used here and hereinafter shall include the Canadian Government Railways, entrusted as aforesaid, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may for its own requirements and also for the requirements of any or all of such other companies from time to time:

(a) Issue notes, obligations or other securities, joint or several, at discretion, for the purpose of any guarantee made or to be made under the provisions of this enactment;

(b) Apply the proceeds of any such guaranteed issue, or the amount of loans received by virtue of this enactment, in meeting authorized expenditures on its own account or on account of any or all of such other companies.

(c) Make advances for the purpose of meeting authorized expenditures to any or all of such other companies, upon or without any security, at discretion.

No purchaser of such guaranteed notes, securities or obligations shall be under any obligation to inquire into the application of the proceeds of any guaranteed issue.

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, this appropriation shall not lapse before May 31, 1931.

Further amount required, in addition to the sum of $51,600,000 already appropriated, due to increase in the amount of deficit arising from operations in the year 1930, $11,410,400.85.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I can make a short statement to the committee. The form of this estimate is one settled by eminent counsel who had to do with passing upon the validity of securities issued by the railways. Part of it is not relevant to this particular estimate, but the railway counsel desire that the form followed heretofore should be used in this particular instance. The amounts are made up as follows:

Net income and profit and loss requirements after interest charges, $28,327,463.50.

Cash discount and issue expenses paid during the year, $1,167,833.15.

Retirement of capital obligations, $4,667,120.

Sinking fund requirements, $2,957,280.06.

Acquisition of securities, $19,197.

Net financial requirements, $37,100,499.71.

Capital Requirements

General additions and betterments (less retirements), $19,679,172.24.

Equipment trust issue series "L" 25 per cent, $5,251,143.85.

Equipment trust discount and issue expense, $483,379.10.

Total cash requirements, $62,514,194.90.

Discount on securities—non cash, $496,205.95.

Total, $63,010,400.85.

Less authorized under vote 323, $51,600,000.

Supplementary vote required, $11,410,400.85.

It therefore requires $11,410,400.85, the amount mentioned in the estimate, to provide for what was expected would be provided for by the $51,600,000 voted. In other words, the estimate was $11,410,400.85 less than the actual expenditures. It therefore becomes necessary to add to the $51,600,000 that I have just mentioned, the sum of $11,410,400.85 provided for in this estimate.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Before the right hon. gentleman sits down, will he explain the only new feature, that is the extension of time?

Mr. BENNETT: The ex-Minister of the Interior asks why under this estimate the moneys may be spent prior to the 31st day of May. In the accounting of the railways, the very difficulties that have been experienced in government have arisen, and the auditors desire that this sum which is now known to exist, but all of which has not been audited and settled in the ordinary course of transactions, should be made available for the purposes up to within a reasonable time. The principal reason is that they have no money with which to pay this now and that they may not get the money for some little time, because we have to provide it. It is rather a large sum of money, so they suggest that if the 31st May be fixed, this would enable them, without question, to treat the accounts in the manner I have indicated.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I suppose the right hon. gentleman realizes that the statement he has just given to the committee is rather extraordinary. This is the first time in my experience I have seen a supply bill used to amend the Audit Act. The matter is a serious one. The Audit Act is the root and basis of our financial structure and I do not believe it is proper to use it in this manner.

Mr. BENNETT: Why?

Sir EUGENE FISET: I will tell the right hon. gentleman why. I wonder that the Prime Minister who, I think, is more familiar than I am with the Audit Act, realizes that section 49 of that act not only enables the government to spend all moneys voted by parliament on the main or supplementary estimates, but also authorizes the government by order in council to extend the time of any such payment for exactly the period he is now asking parliament to extend the fiscal year, namely, from April 1 to May 31. This is provided under section 49 of the Audit Act, if there are any payments pending that have not been specifically and in exact amount provided for by this vote—though the vote as I said a minute ago is extremely explicit, though it is couched in precisely the same language as the main estimate for the capital expenditure of the Canadian National Railways. This is the first time these means have been used to modify, by a supply bill, an act of parliament. I think the Prime Minister has the power under section 49 of the Audit Act and strongly advise or request or beg him to strike out of the supply bill the words—

> Notwithstanding the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, this appropriation shall not lapse before May 31, 1931.

I think the right hon. gentleman has the power to do that under the Audit Act.

Mr. BENNETT: The question raised by the hon. member for Rimouski is one that has been considered by the government. Section 39 of the act provides the method whereby it may be done. It provides:

> When any sum of money has been granted to His Majesty by parliament to defray expenses for any specified public service, the governor general may, from time to time, under his sign manual, countersigned by a member of the treasury board, authorize and require the Minister of Finance to issue out of the moneys in his hands, appropriated for defraying the expenses of such service, the sums required, from time to time, to defray such expenses, not exceeding the amount of the sum so voted or granted.

This means that the Minister of Finance must send the recommendation to council; secondly, that it must be considered by council; thirdly, when adopted, the governor in council releases it; and fourthly, letters of credit are issued with respect to it.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will the right hon. gentleman read the second paragraph of section 49?

Mr. BENNETT: I have it beside me, but I do not want to take up time in reading it. This is not our money for the purpose of expending it as we please. It is required to meet specific deficits in the operation of the railway; and their audit is made, not ours. All we do is to pass it out of our hands under the circumstances to which I have alluded. I desire, inasmuch as it may be difficult under present conditions to raise the sum of money required in a moment or two, that we and the railway company both should have an extension of time until the 31st of May in which to deal with the matter. It is unusual, I admit. It has been done only once before, but that was on an occasion somewhat similar to this. If the committee thinks that the public interest is not being as well served in this way as in some other, I am content; but it might result in the sum of money not being made available at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The usual practice is to borrow from the bank when you have authority.

Mr. BENNETT: Suppose the bank will not lend it; that is the trouble.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not think that the bank would refuse to lend money to the government.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am not criticizing; I am simply calling the attention of the house to what is being done. I am firmly convinced that you have the power to exercise your rights under section 49 of the act. I would like the Prime Minister to consider for a moment the four modes provided for raising these loans; first, by direct loan; second, by loans from the public; third, by guarantees; fourth, by temporary borrowing. More than that, these four methods must be approved by the governor in council. So you have there all the necessary machinery to raise the money immediately, and in addition you can provide money by governor general's warrant. It has been the opinion of the committee in the past that the way in which we have allowed these loans to be floated by the Canadian National perhaps has not been the proper method, and I think that when the question of adjusting the general finances of the Canadian National comes up for consideration, there will be a considerable body of opinion that the present method is not the proper way of doing it. I certainly believe that you have all the necessary power under this appropriation and under the Audit Act, without creating this precedent. That is only my opinion, but I felt in duty bound to express it.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to say to the committee that I am informed, and my own judgment is, that this is a simpler method of dealing with the situation. It only asks that this sum of money shall, notwithstanding the fact that it would ordinarily lapse by twelve o'clock to-night, be made available to the 31st. day of May.

Sir EUGENE FISET: With this special provision my right hon. friend must realize that it is immaterial whether the money is voted to-day or to-morrow, because you have until the 31st of May.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the date provided here, and those who are charged with the responsibility think it desirable that a provision of this sort should be inserted in the act. I am bound to say that in my judgment it is a sound provision in this particular instance.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is really the auditors of the company who are anxious.

Mr. BENNETT: But we also are concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot understand where your concern is.

Mr. BENNETT: I will tell you: We cannot find the money to-morrow or the next day.

Mr. RALSTON: The act provides that the credit shall lapse at twelve o'clock to-night, but the general act, without this special provision, provides that the government may extend the time of credit for a period of two months.

Mr. BENNETT: This is not the kind of case that is meant by that at all.

Mr. RALSTON: This is a vote made by parliament for a particular purpose. The money may eventually go to the Canadian National Railway, but for the present it goes to the government and is paid out by government cheque.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend does not mean that. This is a credit not for the government but for the railway, and so far as we are concerned this is the last time we propose to submit it in that form. I repeat, this is not a credit to the government; it is merely a credit to the railway company.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will admit that the government can secure the money from parliament for that particular purpose as for any other purpose. There is really no difference. The government could not, of course, divert the money from the railway, but the government is responsible for raising the money for the railway and passing it on to them. I cannot understand why the government should require any extra time. There may be reasons why the railway may require extra time.

Mr. DUFF: Before we carry this item and the two items following, one for the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and the other for the Canadian National Steamships, is it understood that if these three items are passed to-night we can discuss, either in this committee or in the special committee on railways and shipping, everything in connection with these items when we are considering the general financial structure of the Canadian National Railways, the merchant marine and the Canadian National Steamships?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: It is nearly twelve o'clock, and if the appropriation is to carry to-night—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Unless we can have the money appropriated in the regular way, I am afraid it will not be appropriated by twelve o'clock. When the Prime Minister spoke with respect to this matter in the house on the 27th of March last, he evidently had in mind that the course he is proposing here was not wholly regular and might be open to some exception.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: His words I took to imply that, because he said, at page 355 of Hansard:

> That has been done before, and the reason is that the obligations have been created. The bills are not all in and will not be in by Tuesday next, and therefore it is desired to have until May 31 to audit the accounts and make the payments. When the bill comes before the house, if the house thinks such a provision—which is purely a matter of bookkeeping to facilitate the operations of the company—should not be there, it can be dealt with later. The estimate does not bind the house.

I took those words to mean that the Prime Minister would defer to the wishes of a considerable body of opinion in the house if it expressed itself as being opposed to this particular course. May I say to my right hon. friend that our desire in this matter is to further what he a moment ago expressed himself so strongly as favouring, namely effectual parliamentary control over expenditures. The Audit Act relates to the payment of accounts. My right hon. friend drew attention, in a way that perhaps the house did not observe, to the fact that what is being asked is something more than permission to make payment of expenditures already made. What he is seeking, or perhaps I should say what the officers of the company appear to be seeking through this provision, is authority not only to have expenditures already made regularized, or payment made of services already performed, which is all that we should be asked to sanction, but that payment may be made of obligations incurred but which are not in the nature of services already performed and payment with respect to which as a consequence may be made only at some future time. That is a wrong principle for the house to sanction. The whole purpose of the Audit Act is to see that accounts, where services have been performed, are paid within a certain time. If we pass this item in the form here proposed we will be opening the door to an entirely new principle in government auditing which will mean that the government, despite an act of parliament passed in order to prevent anything of the kind, will be saying to a corporation that it may incur obligations to-day but that it need not fulfil the obligations within a given time, but may make payment of them within several months after the fiscal or financial year has elapsed. My right hon. friend used the following words:

> Perhaps my right hon. friend will observe that there is a provision making this estimate available until the end of May, although practically all sums have been expended already.

With respect to all sums already expended no objection is being taken, and without the clause to which exception has been taken all such sums will be paid. But my right hon. friend adds the following:

> . . . . or the liabilities have been incurred for which the money is required.

I do not think that we should be asked to repeal a part of the audit act so as to allow payment of liabilities which have been incurred to be made beyond a period of time never contemplated when parliament was surrounding the expenditure of public monies with the safeguard which the audit act places about it. On the following page my right hon. friend said:

> The amounts covered by these estimates have been spent, or the deficits have arisen, but all the bills have not come in as yet.

The purpose of an audit is to see that accounts are sent in within a certain time and that the audit will cover expenditures which have been made, but that it shall not be extended so as to permit commitments to be made to-day to be met several months after the termination of the financial year. When during the special session the government introduced the Unemployment Relief bill it was pointed out that it was desirable that the provisions of that act should expire with the fiscal year. However, my right hon. friend then adopted a new method of permitting payment of public moneys for a period beyond the fiscal year. I should like to read his words as they are found in Hansard, page 164:

> However, I would add by way of amendment that any moneys that have not been expended, or that are not liable to be paid under obligations already created, shall lapse on March 31, 1931.

Upon that occasion my right hon. friend was introducing an entirely new principle with respect to appropriations by this parliament. He was not appropriating moneys required to be expended simply within the year but he was appropriating sums of money which might continue to be paid out long after the fiscal year had expired, running on possibly indefinitely into another fiscal year so long as the obligation might be said to have been incurred within the fiscal year in which the act was passed. That is a very serious departure and a departure which is being emphasized and repeated by what is being proposed at the present time. I would humbly suggest to my right hon. friend that he defer to the wishes of a very considerable number, if not a majority in this house, and adhere strictly to the provisions of the audit act with respect to all government financing and particularly financing with respect to the National Railways.

Possibly I may be permitted at this point to add a word which may help to regularize matters and at the same time help to avoid the embarrassment my right hon. friend fears. Undoubtedly he will be asking parliament for a percentage of the main estimates immediately following the Easter recess. If he finds that the railway company is going to be embarrassed through not having the amount of money that is needed to meet obligations which will be coming due in the new fiscal year, and some of which may be included in the amount which is set forth in the present estimate of $11,410,400.85 I think I can say to him on behalf of the opposition that we will offer no objection to an estimate applicable to the new fiscal year which he may present at the same time to make good that particular difference so that there will be no embarrassment occasioned the company. Under the circumstances I hope my right hon. friend will feel that he might properly ask the chairman to strike out the clause which if it remains would oblige us in connection with this estimate to all intents and purposes to repeal an important provision of the audit act and establish a precedent which I believe he would greatly regret immediately it had been established.

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly do not purpose to take up the time of this house in traversing the observations made by my right hon. friend. The hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) must have overlooked paragraph 4 of section 49 of the audit act.

> No such order shall be made or credit issued thereunder, if parliament shall in the meantime have granted an appropriation out of which such outstanding debts may properly be paid, or such outstanding obligations be properly met.

Sir EUGENE FISET: That is exactly the appropriation that is proposed to be made.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: The rights cannot be exercised for two months. The very minute it is passed it takes effect.

Mr. RALSTON: That means if there is a new appropriation the next year?

Mr. BENNETT: No; I shall read it again.

> No such order shall be made or credit issued thereunder, if parliament shall in the meantime have granted an appropriation. . . . .

Mr. RALSTON: After the order in council is made?

Mr. BENNETT: No,

> . . . . have granted an appropriation,—

—for these particular purposes. So far as I am concerned this is a matter of supreme indifference. As a Minister of Finance I am endeavouring to discharge my duties and to proceed in fairness to the corporation for which this money is voted. If hon. gentlemen opposite desire to take a different attitude they may do so. However, I have stated my position. I believe I am taking the position that any lawyer or any business man would take, namely: Can the public interest be adversely affected? Is some audit to be held? Is some supervision of accounts to be made? If the answer to these questions is in the affirmative there can be no possible harm done to the public interest; if otherwise, some harm might be done. When I hear hon. gentlemen opposite talk about departure from precedent I say, "Certainly, that is what laws are for." That is what parliaments are for—to make precedents when occasion arises. The fiscal year of this railway company ended December 31. We have now reached the end of March and they require $11,000,000 to meet the deficit in operations for the year ending December last. Through this estimate we are given the opportunity to provide money until May 31 under the same sanction, with the same provision and the same audit, and it is idle to talk of any other feasible means being provided to supervise this expenditure.

Now, if my right hon. friend thinks that in the public interest this item should be stricken out I am content; take it out. I am not at all concerned about it. I will say however that it will work a great injustice on the people concerned; it will cause needless hardship and needless delay, and parliament with its plenary power should see to it that as little inconvenience as possible is caused to businessmen in the discharge of their obligations.

Mr. POULIOT: Might I ask my right hon. friend a question? What amount has been spent on vote 323 of last year?

Mr. BENNETT: What is that?

Mr. POULIOT: What amount has been spent from vote 323 of last year?

Mr. BENNETT: The whole of it, $51,600,000.

Mr. POULIOT: No, I think my right hon. friend is not correct, because that amount included an expenditure for the station at Rivière du Loup which has not been spent. Does my right hon. friend mean that the Minister of Railways and Canals has just wired to the Canadian National Railway officials advising them that one of the tenders has been approved?

Mr. BENNETT: It means that the Canadian National Railways through their vice-chairman in charge of finance, as well as through direct supervision and inspection by representatives of the Department of Finance, have certified that the whole of the $51,600,000 has gone, and $11,000,000 with it. That is what it means.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, part of the station must have been stolen away. In order to finish the year well the Tory delegation came to Ottawa to ask the government for a favour, as the Minister of Railways has said. Some people must have blocked the action of that delegation because they did not get what they wanted. I ask no favour of this government; I do not need any favour from them. I claim justice for my people and that is why I stand up now and ask the Prime Minister to be kind enough to give me an answer.

Mr. BENNETT: May I suggest that every member of the committee hopes that the hon. member does not receive justice.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it would be doing this house a great favour were we to provide the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) with the necessary terminal facilities.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I heard the Prime Minister direct Mr. Chairman, that a particular paragraph should be struck out.

Mr. RHODES: I move that the paragraph at the top of page 3 be deleted.

Mr. POULIOT: Before it is adopted—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. RHODES: The first three lines of the resolution on page 3.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In view of the fact that all this money will not now be required, might not the minister wish to reduce the item?

Mr. BENNETT: It is already spent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some of it is incurred.

Mr. BENNETT: Incurred means spent.

Item as amended agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1931, the sum of $19,842,664.22 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Bennett thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 17 for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1931.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. BENNETT moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have no desire to delay the passage of the bill, but it is after midnight and I would ask my right hon. friend whether he has considered the possibility of adjourning over the recess when we get through to-night.

Mr. BENNETT: I think we shall have to meet to-morrow because the Senate is no longer sitting and it will be necessary now, in view of the fact that it is past the 31st of March, to make some provision, by means of a section added to this bill, that cheques may be issued against it for a certain number of days, four, five, six or whatever number may be agreed upon. Otherwise the appropriation lapses before it is made. That is what I was urging upon my hon. friends. We can go into committee now, but that will not dispose of the matter, because I desire to look into the question of an amendment to provide that the fund voted may be made available in proper form. What I was going to propose was that:

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, the amounts appropriated by this act may be paid at any time on or before the 11th day of April, 1931, and such payments shall be deemed to have been made in and be chargeable to the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1931, but this shall not be construed to affect the special provision relating to the lapse of the appropriation under vote No. 65 as set forth in schedule B to this act.

There is a regulation, which has not the force of law, by which cheques have been dated back to the 31st March.

Sir EUGENE FISET: With the approval of the Auditor General.

Mr. BENNETT: I am talking about that; that does not give it any sanction. Surely the hon. gentleman knows that. The statute which he has been reading to-night, and to which he attaches so much importance, should inform him of that. I believe that in departmental accounting they have followed the custom of most businesses and accounted as liabilities those that come in up to within the first fortnight. Cheques issued up to April 11 would be ample for the purpose. Under the circumstances, the house will adjourn until to-morrow, when we shall dispose of the amendment. The committee may have an opportunity to think about it in the meantime. I have not been able to get it printed, but it merely provides that cheques may be issued up to April 11, 1931, and chargeable against the year ending March 31, 1931. Without that this would be a needless expenditure of labour.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the motion to adjourn before the house?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and we will finish this business to-morrow.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand we are still on the second reading of this bill.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the second reading was given.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think it was carried. May I suggest, in view of the fact that it is now April 1st, that we might very well go into committee of the whole and finish this matter, and then the house could be adjourned until after the Easter recess. That would be preferable if the Prime Minister has the information available.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is that this bill be now read a second time.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. BENNETT: Schedule B contains the words which were struck out in committee. They will have to be struck out in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Schedule B is amended by striking out the words:

Notwthstanding the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, this appropriation shall not lapse before May 31, 1931.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to propose an amendment to section 4, but in view of the fact that the words in schedule B, to which reference has just been made, have been struck out, I should like to settle the terms of section 4 absolutely between now and to-morrow, so there may be no question as to their correctness. I think this is a better course to pursue in view of what has transpired here, so I now move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again for the purpose of adding an amendment.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett, the house adjourned at 12.10 a.m., Wednesday.

Wednesday, April 1, 1931

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE

ACCEPTANCE OF PROPOSAL OF CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR MEETING IN LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have to advise the house that I have received from the High Commissioner in London a telegram which is dated at Rome and which reads in part as follows:

After days of discussion I submitted resolutions providing for conference of all exporting countries. Motion unanimously endorsed and representatives export countries organized conference last night. As Canada's representative I was selected permanent chairman. Invited conference to Canada and pressed strongly for acceptance. All expressed desire for Canada but felt distance and time made it impossible. As next best I suggested London with Canada House meeting place. Unanimously approved and conference meets there May 18.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Has Russia also been invited to this conference that is proposed to be held in London?

Mr. BENNETT: A Russian delegate was present at the selection of London as a meeting place and expressed his intention of being present at the conference.

Mr. POULIOT: Did he shake hands with Mr. Ferguson?

ROYAL GRAIN COMMISSION

EXPECTED ARRIVAL IN CANADA OF SIR JOSIAH STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): A few days ago I promised that before the Easter recess I would make a short statement regarding the proposed commission that is to be appointed to look into matters connected with the grain trade. For some years past there has been prevalent amongst the agricultural class, especially the grain producers in western Canada, the opinion that the sale of grain futures was detrimental to the producer. There is also a certain body of public opinion that holds the exactly opposite view. It is regarded by the government as important that the question should be authoritatively determined. The government has asked the three western provinces to agree on the naming of a representative of the agricultural interests and the grain exchanges to name another, and the government has requested Sir Josiah Stamp, who is the chief executive officer of the London, Midland and Scottish Railway and who is regarded as one of the most eminent living economists, to come to Canada as chairman of that commission. Sir Josiah Stamp has consented to undertake the work, although it will entail some considerable inconvenience to him. He will sail this week, and if nothing happens to the contrary he will arrive in Ottawa about the ninth day of April. He will proceed west and determine with his colleagues the simple, single question: Does the sale of grain futures operate to the detriment of the producer? It is hoped that the finding of that commission will lay at rest the difficulties that have so long been present in the minds of agriculturists of western Canada.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) the other day made an observation with respect to a "Canada first" policy. Owing to the fact that there has been a sharp difference of opinion on this continent with respect to the desirability of maintaining markets for the sale of futures, it is believed that the purpose which we have in mind will be best served by securing the services of a chairman entirely removed from the scene of those conflicts of opinion on the American continent. Accordingly, Sir Josiah Stamp has been asked to come, and he has accepted the task.

LAUZON DRY DOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): I would like to put this question to the Minister of Public Works: Is it true, as reported in the press, that the government is going to lease to a private company one of the government dry docks at Lauzon?

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): All I have to say is that an application for a lease has been made, and the matter is under consideration.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): I should like to ask a question based on a report which appears in the Ottawa Journal of this morning, and in order to place my question properly before the house I beg leave to read an excerpt from the statement which appears in the Journal. The statement is headed:

Federal relief to be continued. Minister of Labour issues statement that money is available.

The words which purport to be a quotation from a statement of the Minister of Labour are as follows:

The statement in part concluded: "No portion of the moneys appropriated for the carrying on of improvement works throughout Canada, amounting to $68,980,999, will lapse until June 1 next in Ontario, and July 1 in all other provinces, by which time it is expected the public works authorized by municipal, provincial and federal authorities will have been carried to completion."

With reference to direct relief, the sum of $4,000,000 was specifically appropriated by order in council on September 26, 1930, to pay one-third of the expenditures of municipalities for direct relief where suitable work cannot be provided for the unemployed.

On March 8, 1931, another order in council set aside $4,000,000 for direct relief.

"The estimated expenditure for direct relief to March 31, 1931, is about one and one-half million dollars," continues the statement. "There, therefore, remains available from the federal government's contribution for direct relief, the sum of two and one-half million dollars, which, it is intended, shall be used for the purpose outlined so long as the municipalities and provinces who are under agreement with the federal authorities to each bear one-third of the total cost, consider conditions of relief measures necessary."

My question is: Does the representative of the Minister of Labour in the house know whether or not this statement was given to the press by the Minister of Labour, and is the statement correct?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (for the Minister of Labour): The statement given by the Minister of Labour to the press, and which has just been read by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt), is correct. I do not think that the hon. members for Winnipeg yesterday intended, in making the statements they did, to create any false impression, but apparently they were themselves labouring under a false impression when they stated that at midnight the moneys would lapse and there would be no further expenditures, or words to that effect. The expenditure will go on in accordance with the plan outlined by the Labour department; the works which have been initiated will be carried to their conclusion, and the services of those who have been employed on these works will be continued.

Mr. BOURASSA: To complete the minister's statement, would he explain why the extension is for one month less in the case of Ontario as compared with the other provinces?

Mr. GORDON: I can only state in reply that those arrangements were made with the provinces and with the municipalities, and I presume that it suited the purpose to have it so arranged.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I had been about to rise, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, to refer to the despatch which has just been quoted by my hon. friend from Selkirk. The statement as handed to the press by Senator Robertson also included a statement that the impression conveyed by our speeches yesterday was wholly misleading. After the words of the minister speaking for the Minister of Labour in this house (Mr. Gordon) there is perhaps no very great need for us to state that we did not intend to mislead the house in any way. We had had no statement before the one read to-day from any member of the government as to the real situation; and, let me add, in some of the provinces at least the date of the 31st of March was definitely fixed as the date beyond which relief would not be given. I am informed this morning by the department that that is an arrangement as between the provinces concerned and the municipalities. That may be so, but I had had communications from outside that the relief was being cut off on the 31st of March and that in a number of municipalities there were no funds with which to pay relief under the arrangement beyond the 31st of March. So I hope the house will accept my statement that we had no desire whatever to mislead the house with regard to the urgency of the situation.

KENORA-FORT FRANCES HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Might I ask if the Minister of Labour will not interest himself in a work up in my riding? Two highways have been under construction under the unemployment relief fund, but the work has been closed down, throwing hundreds of men out of employment. The province of Ontario states that there are no more funds available for the work. I would ask the Minister of Labour to take an interest in this question and see that the people in that part of the province of Ontario are not discriminated against.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (for the Minister of Labour): I do not think I need declare to my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) my interest in the part of the country to which he has reference. I am very well acquainted with it and he need have no fear that my interest will not be sustained or that that part of the country will suffer through any lack of interest.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY RESPECTING ANNUAL FINANCIAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): May I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) when we may expect the annual financial report of the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I made the same inquiry myself of the management the other day, and they told me it would be ready about this time. It is not yet to hand, but I expect it here in a few days.

FRASER RIVER DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I have a few questions to ask of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart), in view of a communication that I received this morning in connection with dredge No. 303. Can the minister give the house the reason for tying up this dredge and throwing men out of work when the dredge is required to operate before the freshet season commences on the Fraser river? I should also like to ask whether, when the dredge is again put into operation, the minister can give us the assurance that the same captain and crew will be re-engaged.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): As the hon. gentleman did not advise me that he was going to ask this question, I have not the information with me. If he will put his question on the order paper, I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. REID: As a new member I did not know that it was necessary to approach the minister first.

NEW WESTMINSTER PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Can the Minister of Public Works advise the house why the laundry work of the Dominion buildings in New Westminster was taken away from New Westminster and placed with a Vancouver laundry?

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I really do not know. I am not running the laundry out there.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Sir,—

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Mr. Justice Newcombe, Acting Deputy Administrator, will proceed to the Senate chamber this day at 3.30 p.m. for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

James F. Crowdy,
Assistant Secretary.

SUPPLY BILL

The house in committee on Bill No. 17, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1931—Mr. Bennett—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 4—Amounts chargeable to year ending March, 1931.

Mr. BENNETT: Since last evening I have arranged to have the amendment printed in the bill, and I suggest that the Chairman read it so that hon. members may know the exact terms in which it is worded.

The CHAIRMAN: The amended clause 4 reads as follows:

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, the amounts appropriated by this act may be paid at any time on or before the 11th day of April, 1931, and such payments shall be deemed to have been made in and be chargeable to the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1931.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 5—Account to be rendered in detail.

The CHAIRMAN: The new clause, No. 5 is as follows:

A detailed account of the sums expended under the authority of this act shall be laid before the House of Commons of Canada during the first fifteen days of the then next session of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the bill reaches a stage beyond that of the committee of the whole may I remind the right hon. the Prime Minister that I asked for some information last night. I asked him to ascertain from the Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson) whether he gave to any publication, or to anybody on behalf of any one of these publications, an assurance that it would receive special consideration. My question refers to certain papers and journals enumerated by my right hon. friend and he said he would give me the information to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I have explained to my right hon. friend that there are no such documents or communications, at least upon the public files. I was permitted to read a letter written by Senator Robertson to the Hon. Charles McCrea. It was a personal letter in answer to a personal and confidential communication. I cannot give to the house the information contained in that letter. As it makes no commitment so far as the government is concerned, and was a personal communication, obviously I cannot communicate its contents to the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My question was whether or not the minister had given an assurance to anybody, not merely a written communication, but an assurance that certain of these papers or any one of them would receive special consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I know the answer must be in the negative. As I intimated to my right hon. friend however that construction might be placed upon a personal communication. Obviously I was permitted to read the letter only as a personal communication between two gentlemen one of whom is not a member of this house and so far as I know is not connected with any newspaper.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has referred to communications. I should like to know whether an assurance was given to anybody on behalf of a paper. Assurances can be given by a minister verbally as well as in writing.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure that he did not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right. Then I asked for some information in regard to printing.

Mr. BENNETT: I have that information before me. Officials of the Post Office Department state the only printing that was done was done through the King's Printer and not otherwise, and the only direct contract for printing was made with the King's Printer. The King's Printer, referring to the inquiry made by the right hon. gentleman, states in a memorandum which I have before me that the only printing order for the Post Office Department placed by or for the King's Printer with a London firm during the fiscal year 1930-31 was an order made under date of July 9, 1930, to Lawson and Jones, Limited, London, Ontario, for 274,500 arrow stickers, in English and French, for the mail service branch. This was a lithographic job. The work was duly executed and the account for $137.25 was approved and paid by cheque No. 3551 under date of August 29, 1930. So far as the records show that is the only evidence of any printing done in London, Ontario, which found its way to the Post Office Department.

Section agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. BENNETT: The schedule has been amended, Mr. Chairman, by deleting certain words.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Schedule as amended agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: At this moment I should like to avail myself of the opportunity of thanking hon. gentlemen opposite for having by consent permitted the passing of the supply bill. We were entirely in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite and they have enabled us to proceed with as little difficulty as possible, having regard to the circumstances.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his generous remarks and also wish him a pleasant Easter vacation.

ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Administrator had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bill:

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1931.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 4.15 p.m.,

Monday, April 13, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

HON. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH

MESSAGE OF CONDOLENCE FROM SPEAKER ON DEATH OF LATE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that during the Easter adjournment I sent the following telegram to the widow of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States:

Ottawa, April 10, 1931.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth,
Washington, D.C.

On behalf of the House of Commons of Canada I tender you sincere sympathy on the passing of your husband whose record in the public life of his country merited the admiration of all.

George Black,
Speaker.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Marine whether he is aware that on the very day the house adjourned for the Easter recess many returned soldiers were dismissed from the Vancouver harbour board police force. If this is so, will he consider the reinstatement of these men?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I have no official knowledge of the fact referred to by my hon. friend. I will inquire and report.

UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): May I ask the Acting Minister of Labour a question based on two statements that appear in the Ottawa Journal this morning? On page two of the Ottawa Journal of April 13, I find this:

> Montreal, April 12—Canadian Press dispatch. About one million people found employment under the joint federal, provincial, municipal relief fund last winter, declared Hon. Alfred Duranleau, K.C., Minister of Marine, addressing electors of Chambly-Vercheres county at a large sugaring party to-day.

Then I turn to page five of the same newspaper, and I read this:

> The passing by parliament of the twenty million dollar unemployment relief fund in September last has resulted in employment being given to 248,274 persons, according to a statement issued by the Department of Labour covering the period to the end of March.

May I ask the Acting Minister of Labour which of the two statements is correct?

Hon. W. A. GORDON: I trust I am not responsible for what appears in the press.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does the Minister of Marine deny the statement or is it true?

CIVIL SERVICE

REPORTED RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I should like to make this inquiry of the ministry through the Minister of the Interior:

First, is the newspaper report of Saturday true that there have been approximately one hundred positions of the Department of the Interior abolished?

Second, if so, is it the intention of the government to keep on the eligible list the civil servants formerly occupying these positions and at the first opportunity to transfer them to positions in other departments for which they can qualify?

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): The answer to the first question is in the affirmative. As to the second question, I can only say that the department are working in cooperation with the Civil Service Commission, who are cognizant of what is being done. As to what will be done in the future, that of course will depend upon a further conference with the Civil Service Commission.

PRIVILEGE—MR. POWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I desire to draw the attention of Your Honour and of the house to a question of privilege. In an edition of a newspaper called Le Journal, published in Quebec city on the 4th April, there appears the following:

> Le docteur Duguay se signale par ses paroles opportunes.

That is to say:

> Doctor Duguay, the member for Lake St. John, makes very opportune observations.

It goes further and says that the Benjamin of the house paints a soul-stirring picture of the history of Canadian politics, and so on through four columns of what purports to be a report of the speech by the hon. member for Lake St. John.

In Le Petit Journal, published in Montreal on the 5th of April, 1931, the following appears under the title of the Hon. Mr. Dupré, Solicitor General:

> The speaker of the day on Thursday was the Hon. Maurice Dupré, minister of the district of Quebec. It was his parliamentary debut. He did very well. An eloquent speaker, a delicate littérateur, he examined the political situation and corrected the mistakes of the opposition.
> He was loudly applauded by the right.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Go on with the question of privilege.

Mr. POWER: I would suggest that my hon. friend do not talk too much or they will make a minister of him and keep him even quieter.

Referring to May's Parliamentary Practice, twelfth edition, page 75, I read:

> The publication of the debates of either house has been repeatedly declared to be a breach of privilege, and especially false and perverted reports of them; and no doubt can exist that if either house desires to withhold the proceedings from the public, it is within the strictest limits of their jurisdiction to do so, and to punish any violation of their orders.

Going back as far as 1641, it was ordered by the commons of England:

That no member shall either give a copy or publish in print anything that he shall speak here, without leave of the house; and that all the members of the house are enjoined to deliver out no copy or notes of anything that is brought into the house or that is propounded or agitated in the house.

This question of the publication of the debates has been discussed at great length, and through succeeding parliaments since parliaments have begun in Great Britain. At page 75 of May I find that the commons have permitted the publication of debates:

So long as the debates are correctly and faithfully reported the privilege which prohibits their publication is waived: but when they are reported mala fide, the publishers of newspapers are liable to censure.

The point to which I wish to direct the attention of the house is this: I do not desire to make any reflection on the members who were inadvertently falsely reported, but I submit that the Speaker of the house, and particularly the Prime Minister in whose custody are the privileges of the house, should in some way call to the attention of these newspapers the breach of privilege which they have committed. I put the matter to the Prime Minister first because, as I have said, he is the guardian of the privileges of the House of Commons, and, secondly, because I suspect that he has perhaps given his blessing on more than one occasion to some of the newspapers. I also suggest very humbly that if the right hon. gentleman permitted his members to talk more often in the house they might not require to have recourse to publications in the newspapers. If it were the sense of the house I could make a motion that these articles be regarded as breaches of privilege. I am satisfied however, if the house has no objection, to leave the matter in your hands, sir, and in those of the right hon. the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid times have changed considerably since the year 1600 and to my knowledge within the past hundred years there have been thousands of such breaches of privilege. I do not condone them, but in this case I do not see that any particular harm has been done. I think the hon. member is wise to leave the matter as it is.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. POWER: I am complaining not of the publication of speeches but of a false report made of the proceedings of this house. I consider that a very serious matter. No speech was made; the hon. member (Mr. Duguay) made no speech, and neither did the hon. the Solicitor General.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member suggest any harm has been done?

Mr. POWER: I suggest that to say something transpired in this house which as a matter of fact did not transpire constitutes a breach of privilege.

WORLD WHEAT CONFERENCE

REPRESENTATION OF CANADA AT MEETING IN LONDON

On the orders of the day.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): In view of the fact that the date has now been fixed for the wheat conference at London I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Is the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson to be the only Canadian representative at that conference and if not is the right hon. Prime Minister in a position to state what the representation will be?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no report other than a cabled report has yet been received. The chief statistician of the Dominion who has been absent in Rome is returning to Canada. When he arrives and when we receive by mail a despatch from the High Commissioner at London I will be in a better position to inform the hon. member.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE TREATY

On the orders of the day.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I would like to ask the Prime Minister who is acting for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) whether a statement which appeared in this morning's paper is true. I have not the article before me but the effect of it was that shortly there would be introduced into this house a trade treaty with Australia. This is a very important matter and a rather unusual way to announce a government policy. No mention of such a treaty was made in the speech from the throne and such action by the government would greatly affect the province of British Columbia. I would like to ask if the statement as reported in the paper is true?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Once more perhaps the house realizes that statements of intended policies of happenings frequently appear in newspapers. The newspapers using their best judgment have conjectured that many things may happen. The hon. gentleman will have to attach to such a statement such weight as he thinks proper. At the present time the government has no intention of discussing the matter.

Mr. NEILL: I wanted to know what weight the government attached to it?

Mr. BENNETT: That will appear in season.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

VISIT TO WASHINGTON OF THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

On the orders of the day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I have in my hand a statement not of an intended happening but of an actual happening. It refers to a policy which may be intended but which up to the present is not an actual policy. Perhaps the Prime Minister would give the house some information with respect to the facts. The Ottawa Journal of this morning prints a despatch from Washington by Ken Clark, a Canadian Press staff writer. It is as follows:

> The United States government expects it will very soon receive a note from Ottawa favourably replying to the suggestion contained in Washington's note of last September that now is the time to go ahead with the St. Lawrence waterway.
> Hon. R. J. Manion, Canadian Minister of Railways and Canals, told Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, Saturday, that it is understood that while he could not speak for the Ottawa government, it was his impression that a reply might be expected in the near future. Dr. Manion pointed out, it is said, that Premier Bennett had favourably mentioned the St. Lawrence in his campaign speeches.

I need not quote the remainder of the despatch, but I would like to learn from the Prime Minister whether or not the Minister of Railways and Canals was authorized in the absence of a minister plenipotentiary at Washington to call upon the hon. the Secretary of State of the United States and to discuss with him matters pertaining to this country. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister himself will give the house any assurance as to the hope expressed in this despatch that the St. Lawrence waterway project will be proceeded with very shortly.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I, too, saw the despatch to which the right hon. gentleman has referred. I was aware that my colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals had accepted an invitation of the Gridiron club to attend a dinner at Washington.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But he never attended it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that; there was no dinner. The Minister of Railways and Canals travelled to Washington with the American minister to Canada. However, owing to the death of Mr. Speaker Longworth of the House of Representatives, the dinner was postponed. My colleague assures me that he was asked as a matter of courtesy to call upon the President of the United States and several of the public officers. In accordance with that invitation he called but no matters of public business were discussed. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman had no authority to discuss these matters or any matters of public concern on his visit to Washington. It was purely a social and personal visit to attend a dinner which did not materialize. However the minister was enabled to enjoy a very pleasant ride to Washington by air and thus to realize the advances made in scientific travel during the last few years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the Prime Minister if, when the dinner is held, the Minister of Railways and Canals will be permitted to fly over again?

Mr. BENNETT: While I know my right hon. friend does not intend me to take that question seriously, I have no doubt that if an invitation were courteously extended to him by the American minister who accompanied him to Washington by air flight, the Minister of Railways and Canals with his usual courtesy would feel honoured to accept such an invitation.

Mr. POULIOT: There were contrary winds at the beginning of the flight.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D. Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King.

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, with your kind permission, my first words spoken within these walls, filled with memories of the deeds of our great parliamentarians, will be in the French language. My first wish is to convey, in peace and harmony, to you, Mr. Speaker, to my distinguished leader (the right hon. Mr. Bennett), to the distinguished leader of the opposition (the right hon. Mr. Mackenzie King) and to all my colleagues on both sides of the house, the cordial and fraternal greetings of the province of Quebec. However, I wished to make my bow in the house, in the language of my forebears who have been, so to speak, rooted to this soil for more than ten generations, in the language of my father and mother, in the tongue spoken from childhood by my better-half and our children, before any other language. We cherish that language because it is part of our heritage, part of ourselves, and never shall we permit it to be threatened by whomsoever it may be, whether he be a constituent, a member or even a prime minister of a province.

May I here address a few words of thanks and gratitude to my constituents of Quebec West, who, after fifty-two years of allegiance to the Liberal party, have returned to the Conservative policy.

I equally extend my congratulations to my hon. friends from Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), Regina (Mr. Turnbull), Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier) and North Grey (Mr. Porteous) whose debut in the house this year and last year have been most promising.

May I at this time be permitted to continue in the other official language because the ideas I wish to express I have already dealt with in my own province. My first remarks apply to maiden speeches. Worse than the torture of the dark ages is the torture of the maiden speech. I submit such a practice should be abolished and that we should all make our debut with a second speech.

In passing may I congratulate all those who before me have gone through such an ordeal. Every one of them on both sides of the house has come out with flying colours; although at times some of the colours were a little too red for those sitting on your right, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to congratulate my distinguished friend the honourable ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on his recovery. We are very happy to see him back in the house with his old fighting spirit. He likes to fight; so do we. And since my hon. friend told us in a very stern and tragical voice that he was going to continue his speech some time, somewhere, may I reply to him that we shall be very glad to answer him any time, anywhere. In his eloquent address he said:

> The government is the by-product of financial depression. My hon. friends opposite are its offspring.

These are nothing but witty remarks. If I wanted to follow my hon. friend on this ground I would recall the nine years of the Liberal regime, and, imitating him, I would say: Here are the idle talkers of Canada, here are the apostles of power at any price. And if I wanted to recall the prejudices and cries of war raised against the Conservatives in the elections of 1921, 1925, 1926 and the roorback of Friday 25th of July, 1930, I would say, always imitating my hon. friend; here are the by-products of war; here are the political and electoral war babies.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Will my hon. friend tell me if he was defeated on that account in 1925?

Mr. DUPRE: I am afraid so, and by the hon. gentleman himself. I could recall his story about the Germans and the Conservative party, which story was repeated in every address he delivered in the constituency of Kamouraska over a period of thirty days.

May I be permitted also, Mr. Speaker, to tell this honourable house of my first impression when I took charge of my department. I was amazed by the increasing number of prisoners in our penitentiaries and gaols This is not the proper time to decide on whose shoulders the responsibility lies, but I submit that the practice of importing a certain class of immigrants without proper and severe selection should be corrected. The restriction on immigration imposed last August must be welcomed not only because it relieves unemployment, but also because it will tend to curtail the importation of a few undesirable elements. But in making these remarks I want it very clearly understood that I realize the important contribution made to our Canadian life and culture by the great majority of those who have come from other countries to establish their homes here.

Now, I pass to the Imperial conference. May I congratulate the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) on his recent speech in this debate. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will long remain at the head of the opposition. He is not a constructive, but quite a literary critic. He is still working on lines of approach. He ought to write more books; and more books should be dedicated to him.

In his remarkable speech my right hon. friend sought at length to demonstrate that the attitude of the right hon. Prime Minister at the Imperial conference was not well received in Great Britain, that the relations between our country and Great Britain are not of the most harmonious character; that the policy submitted by the Prime Minister was wrong, and that his methods were wrong. May I say to the right hon. leader of the opposition that while I believe he is quite sincere in his criticism, I am afraid that his contentions are a little at variance with reality. May I quote to the house a few expressions of opinion on the attitude of our Prime Minister at the Imperial conference.

The London Times, one of the world's great newspapers, said, and I think this will interest my right hon. friend:

> The country will insist that the proposals now made by Canada shall be thoroughly examined. It is tired of empty rhetoric about mutual help and understanding and is determined to give sympathetic consideration to a concrete plan for practical cooperation now that such a plan has been definitely put before it.

The Scotsman had this to say, very likely answering, in anticipation, the remarks of the hon. the ex-Minister of Justice:

> An offer was made to the mother country by representatives of the dominions, which, if accepted, would go far towards knitting the Empire together as an economic unity and so assuring its permanence and prosperity.

Now may I draw the attention of my hon. friend the brilliant ex-Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) to my next quotation; I am afraid my hon. friend was not very happy in referring us to the Manchester Guardian. This is important because I have been told that he had been designated as the probable successor to the right hon. leader of the opposition in case any political accident should happen to the latter. Of course, I hasten to add that I sincerely hope no such accident will ever occur. But my hon. friend in a moment of absent-mindedness seems to have forgotten the following statements which appeared in the Manchester Guardian. Harold Cox in the Manchester Guardian of October 10th recalled Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposal in 1902 and commented:

> This is exactly what Mr. Bennett proposes to-day, and he states his attitude with commendable frankness.

The same issue of the Manchester Guardian contains a statement by the National Council of Industry and Commerce from which I quote the following passages:

> The dominions have given the mother country a great and a courageous lead by putting forth constructive proposals in clear and unmistakable terms. We are convinced that the great majority of the British people are with them. The dominions have made a frank offer in clear and business-like terms. The policy suggested spells union and prosperity for all parts of the empire. Have we the sane business sense to accept the offer or must we permit the real wishes of our nation to be smothered with the obsolete dogmas which for successive years have proved their utter uselessness to all except the unpractical theorist and doctrinaires.

Not only the newspapers of the largest centres commented favourably, but the Bristol Evening World of October 9 in its its leading article, which might well be read by those two friends of the Liberal party, Orestes and Pylades—the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) and the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset)—says:

> Business men will appreciate the practicality of Mr. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, who, at the Imperial conference, got down to brass tacks and made a definite proposition to Britain and the dominions.
> Theories that in the atmosphere of debate appear desirable may be exploded by such methods. The great value of Mr. Bennett's definiteness is that theorizing must now end, and action take its place.
> Mr. Bennett's problem is not a sentimental one. He wants to sell Canadian wheat in the British and empire markets. He wants to do this not for the good of Britain or the empire but for the good of Canada. He admits he places Canada first and he expects a similar attitude toward their own country on the part of other delegates.

The Bath Chronicle and Herald of October 9 states:

> Mr. Bennett, the Canadian Premier, has put to the conference a proposal which does indicate a way to the solution of the big empire problem.

The Evening Sentinel of Hanley, in its leading article of October 13, says:

> No truer phrase has been uttered than that of R. B. Bennett, the Prime Minister of Canada. The time for action has come.

The Nottingham Guardian, in its comment of October 9, says:

> It is to be hoped that the government will give their fullest attention to Mr. Bennett's remarkable proposal, for, in the earnest words with which he closed his speech, the time is now at hand when the doctrine of closer empire economic association must be embraced if we would not have it slip forever beyond our powers of recall.

The Bristol Times and Mirror, in its issue of October 10, 1930, says:

> Mr. Bennett, however, has cut into the extreme of compliments and vague aspirations with a practical proposition which he desires to be examined thoroughly by experts.

The Brixton Free Press comments in its issue of October 10, which might be interesting to my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), as follows:

The dominions know what the empire needs, and now they have made a definite proposal to show how an all round betterment can be secured. There is no excuse for them now. The lead has been given by the Canadian Premier.

Just to please my hon. friends opposite perhaps I might quote one of the greatest journalists of the empire, Mr. J. L. Garvin, whose comment appears in the Observer of October 12, 1930. I might direct the attention of one of the great journalists and orators of the province of Quebec, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), to this quotation:

On Wednesday the conference assembled at the Foreign Office to get down to business. The overseas statesmen spoke with the unprecedented frankness required at this juncture. One and all, they explained the only policy that can be useful to them and us—extended preference for British manufactures in their markets and broad reciprocal preference for Dominion staples in ours. Other methods may be supplementary, but they must be subsidiary. Nothing but preference all round can establish a foundation for the closer economic cooperation of the empire. Mr. R. B. Bennett, for Canada, led the line. The vital thing now is acceptance or rejection of the principle. Mr. Scullin, for Australia, spoke with thoroughness and decision for the principle. Mr. Forbes, for New Zealand, Mr. Havenga, for South Africa, Mr. McGilligan, for the Irish Free State, and Sir Richard Squires, for Newfoundland, followed in the same sense. India is more reserved. But why? Because India means to be more and more protectionist. There is absolute unanimity outside the Mother Country that nothing can be done on free trade lines.

Now I should like to refer the house to a remarkable article appearing in the National Review for October, 1930, written by Right Hon. Mr. Amery, former Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, who says:

Great, however, as was the individual and cumulative effect of the other speeches, Mr. Bennett's speech was undoubtedly the outstanding feature of the discussion in its directness and in its insistence on a decision. If he had been dealing with some new proposal his attitude might have been open to criticism as too peremptory, but on a subject discussed at imperial conferences for over forty years, and an issue in British politics for nearly thirty, Mr. Bennett was fully justified in insisting that this country must now make up its mind one way or another without further delay.

During the last election campaign, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen opposite were saying sometimes, somewhere, "Why vote for the Conservative party on the eve of the Imperial conference? If elected to power, who would the Conservatives send to the Imperial conference?"

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to ask a short question of the hon. gentleman. I should like him to be good enough to answer the article published by that good Tory paper, the Montreal Gazette, on November 12 1930, in which it is said that the members of the Imperial conference have succeeded in doing nothing in particular and in doing it very well.

Mr. DUPRE: I admit, sir, that I was the weak member of the delegation, but I will say this: The Liberal party was very fortunate in having such a great statesman and high personality as Sir Wilfrid Laurier to represent Canada at several imperial conferences. However, while Canadians have every reason to be proud of all past Canadian delegations, whether Liberal or Conservative, the general opinion in London was that never did Canada send a stronger and more competent delegation than the one composed of the right hon. Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. All Canadians abroad were very proud of the enthusiastic and hearty reception given our Prime Minister either at 10 Downing Street, the Foreign Office, the Guildhall or any other public meeting. This hearty and enthusiastic reception extended not only to the individual personality of our Prime Minister but also to the doctrines by him propounded. The point I wish to emphasize, however, is that public opinion in London favoured our chief doctrines, as did the industrial, financial and commercial institutions throughout the country.

Now would you like to know the explanation of the Liberal press as to this unanimity of opinion among the dominions? Here is a translation of an extract from Le Soleil, the paper of my hon. friend from Temiscouata, Mr. Pouliot) under date of Wednesday, March 18:

To these definite charges Mr. Bennett replies by two childish arguments. To begin with, he says that all the representatives of the other dominions approved of his attitude. Could they do otherwise? For the sake of solidarity, through ordinary courtesy, they could not raise any objections to the imperious, even dictatorial proposition which Mr. Bennett offered to England. The Prime Minister of Canada had taken the lead. He had charged bullheaded upon the English section of the conference. The others had to follow through esprit de corps.

The representatives of our sister dominions will surely be flattered at Le Soleil's conception of the motives which inspired their representations on behalf of their respective countries. The leading statesmen of the great British commonwealth of nations, or British Empire, call it whatever you like, are pictured as a bunch of cowering school boys, ready to do or say anything in order to cover a break made by the head boy.

I wish now to refer to a very unpleasant matter. Questions of race and religion must be debated with the greatest care, and I realize that I am treading on very delicate ground. But since this is my first appearance on this great scene of our parliamentary life, I feel it is my duty to say how much I regret the attitude taken recently, and even during the last eighteen months, by a coalition government in one of the western provinces. The laws enacted against the French language—one of the two official languages—by the government of Saskatchewan are an insult to the true Canadians established here for fourteen or fifteen generations. It was in the name of God, but in the French language, that the first cross was consecrated on Canadian soil. Against these laws I must protest, and I hope they will be repealed.

May I remind public men generally that in the long run the only school which will always triumph is the school of justice, fair play, tolerance and broadmindedness.

The Canadian of French descent is the most thorough Canadian of the land; his only home is Canada. In Canada he was born, and in Canada he desires to die, faithful to his king and proud of British institutions: "Pro rege, lege, grege." But he cannot stand being molested.

Just one word now about the Russian embargo. Let us assume that thereby Canada may lose a few dollars. I submit, sir, that this question should be envisaged from the point of view of Christian morality and civilization, and may I say that I am very much surprised at the attitude taken by such important and well-written Liberal papers as the Ottawa Citizen, the Manitoba Free Press and a few others.

I see also that the Liberal party, through one of its outstanding lieutenants, my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), has taken a stand in this matter. In his most able address my hon. friend said this:

> I wish to say a word or two in regard to the Russian situation which has been mentioned so frequently during the debate. Frankly I may say to the administration that possibly I appreciate very fully the motives which underlie the adoption of this policy. On the other hand, sir, in view of statements we have heard during the debate I think it is the most fatuous policy ever adopted by a supposedly sane and sensible administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUPRE: I notice the applause which greets this quotation from my hon. friend's speech.

But you see, on the other hand, the provincial Liberal party in Quebec declaring itself in favour of our policy. It means this: It is the old game of the Liberal party—for the embargo in Quebec, against it in Ottawa; free traders in the west, protectionists in the east; for and against conscription at the same time. On the contrary, sir, the Conservative party is unanimous in proclaiming the Russian embargo, at the present time and under the present circumstances, and on that question we are ready to stand or fall. Now we know where we are. Now you see, sitting at your left, Mr. Speaker, not the prophets, major or minor; they could not even see the unemployment crisis when it was under their very eyes. But there, at your left, sir, you see the protagonists of Russia's policy and the unconscious or conscious agents of soviet propaganda.

As already said, this is a business government for business men, for the working man and the farmer. At your right, Mr. Speaker, you see a party ready to act, to master problems, not to avoid them—a party who preach and practise one doctrine in which they believe. On the other hand, to your left, is another party which belongs to the old school of laissez faire—avoid issues.

Mr. POULIOT: No, we do not practise "laissez faire."

Mr. DUPRE: I think my hon. friend has talked enough since the beginning of the session. I contend—and the electors with us—that our policy is the best one. Time will tell.

May I thank both sides of the house for the patient and cordial hearing given me. My desire is to do something for this land, my country. To this task I shall consecrate my heart and soul. But to succeed I need, and I respectfully beg for, the cooperation of my hon. friends on both sides of the house.

The Quebec solid bloc, engendered by appeals to prejudice and—

Mr. ST-PERE: Is my hon. friend making a sweeping statement?

Mr. DUPRE: —maintained by—

Mr. ST-PERE: Is my hon. friend making a sweeping statement? If he is, he is wrong. I never appealed to prejudice in order to be elected in my riding.

Mr. POULIOT: Neither did I.

Mr. DUPRE: I am glad that there are at least two at your left, Mr. Speaker, who did not do so. I say, however, thank God, that that bloc, engendered by appeals to prejudices and maintained and strengthened by detestable manoeuvres, is a thing of the past. And I say that a solid bloc, whether in Quebec or in Ontario, whether Conservative or Liberal, is a danger to unity and bonne entente in Canada. To my distinguished chief we now come, for the first time since 1917, a loyal Conservative contingent from French-speaking Quebec, and we come here to work with the great successor to Macdonald, Cartier, Thompson, Tupper, Borden and Meighen and, with him and my hon. colleagues of the cabinet, to serve the cause of prosperity.

The home has to be built. The materials are ready and the builder has been chosen by the electors. Let us work and build. If we start to discuss the rights and wrongs—and the country knows how much we, the Conservatives from Quebec, could say on the question of prejudices and cries of war raised against us—if we try to discover who have made more appeals to prejudices during the last campaign, or during the campaigns before, there will be no end to the discussion; and during such a harmful controversy the working men will be waiting for more work and the poor will be eager for additional relief.

Let us have less discussion and more action. The burden is heavy and the task formidable; but French-speaking Quebec which has known hardship and even persecutions will not shirk its duty.

Now that Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Bessborough are here, representing as they do the union of France and England, those two great nations which have played such an important part in the history of the world, let us join hands in a friendly clasp and try to solve the tremendous problems that confront us, solutions for which must be found.

Let us, the offspring of worthy sires from both sides of the channel, recall and apply to our own beloved Canada the words which Shakespeare, in Henry V, puts in the mouth of the King of France as he grants the hand of his daughter to the King of England:

> Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up
> Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms
> Of France and England, whose very shores look pale
> With envy of each other's happiness,
> May cease their hatred; and this dear conjuction
> Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord
> In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
> His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

[Mr. Dupré.]

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, this would seem to be an opportune time to give a short resume of the general characteristics and high lights of this interesting debate. I think I am within the facts in saying that the general tenor and character of the debate have been on a par with the average of similar debates during the last ten years, and have been characterized by such moderation as is consistent with the bringing out of the facts.

Hon. members supporting the government, especially the colleagues of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), have seemed to be in difficulty in defending their leader. During the first two weeks of the debate not one colleague of the Prime Minister rose in his place to defend either his leader's policies at home or his remarkable performance abroad. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauve) made a very nice speech which we all liked, but he offered no defence of his leader. The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) made a very excellent speech, but he quoted from newspapers which were many months old. If he would peruse the press of to-day he would find that the view taken is entirely different.

Another outstanding feature of the debate is the suddenness with which the Prime Minister makes a buck dart for the curtains and lobby the moment the debate commences. In these exits he is usually accompanied by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) and it is anything but inspiring to have to speak to these two empty seats.

Only recently the ministerial press has been complaining that the opposition has offered no alternatives to the program presented by the government. I think that is the greatest tribute which could be made, in having the government appeal to us for an alternative policy. It is a striking admission, however, of shortcoming on the part of the government when they are forced to throw up their hands and admit a breakdown in their defences.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friends laugh, but that is as I see it. No defence has been offered by any colleague of the Prime Minister while abroad, up to this, the fifth week of this debate.

In replying to the complaint which has been made that no alternative suggestions have been offered, I would refer to the most excellent, comprehensive, telling and impelling speech made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). The right hon. gentleman offered the suggestion that possibly the wheat exporting countries would get together to discuss the disposition of their surplus wheat, and pointed out that at such a conference we would be at a disadvantage because of the embargo which has been placed upon Russian goods; and now a conference has been called.

The hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) made some valuable suggestions. He asked for the production of the papers in connection with the disposition of our wheat surplus during 1917 and 1918. A large surplus was disposed of at that time, and the production of the correspondence between Mr. Whiteside and the then Minister of Trade and Commerce would show that some $80,000,000 went into the treasury of the Dominion of Canada. We want to know what became of that money. We want to know also what action is being taken in connection with the representations made by hon. members from the west and by the provincial premiers with regard to the pegging of wheat for the purpose of stabilizing prices. In 1917 and 1918 the government had no hesitation in pegging wheat prices in order to prevent their going too high, but this government seems to hesitate to peg prices when they would seem to be going too low. However, they have no hesitation in pegging the prices of eastern commodities. Scarcely a week passes but the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) pegs the prices of such commodities as gasoline, coal, and so on. This government has no hesitation in pegging prices for the eastern industries but will not take any action which would benefit the farmers of the west. What is sauce for the eastern goose should be sauce for the western gander, and the gander needs it pretty badly just now.

A number of other recommendations were made. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) made a suggestion with respect to the establishment of an experimental packing plant in the west and another one in the east. This matter has been considered on many occasions, the last being last year when a conference was held in the department over which I presided at that time. The general feeling was that before any permanent policy was laid down there should be an investigation into the whole live stock industry. In the last supplementary estimates an item of $25,000 was included for the purpose of prosecuting such an inquiry, but the net result is that we have three different policies, a federal, a provincial and a Canadian Credit Association policy. Three different policies cannot be carried out concurrently without considerable conflict.

I would suggest that the Minister of Agriculture give more consideration to the establishment throughout Canada of additional cold storage plants. The producers of fruit and other perishable commodities, especially in British Columbia, all will testify to the value of these cold storage facilities.

In the various manifestos issued by my good friend, my successor in office, I see no reference to cooperative marketing. He should not be discouraged because there is at this time a great world wide depression adversly affecting all methods of marketing. This type of marketing will eventually offer one of the greatest hopes to the farmers of Canada. I have made a few suggestions and I hope some of them and also some of those made by other members will be found worthy of consideration. If need be, further suggestions may be made as regards desirable policies to follow.

If the Prime Minister were in his seat I should like to address some remarks to him. He has launched into the field of international affairs and diplomacy and his first experience has been quite a hectic one. Somebody has defined a diplomat to be one who could bring home the bacon without spilling the beans. If that were the correct definition I am afraid my right hon. friend would not qualify, because no other Canadian coming back from any conference has brought back less bacon and spilled more beans than my right hon. friend as he blundered abroad. I think my hon. friends opposite, by their silence, indicate their assent to that. As was pointed out by my leader in his excellent address, the mission for which they went overseas was foredoomed to failure because of the large increases in the British preferential rate. This conference, as they said, was to be a good will affair; it was to promote inter-empire trade by putting up a tariff wall. With their voice the government professed to be strongly attached to the principle of inter-empire trade, and then by their actions they banged up the tariff door against British goods as a starter. Having done that and foredoomed their case, they proceeded debonairly across the water to engage in a conference with the other members of the British commonwealth of nations.

We thought this was to be a conference, but apparently it was a speech-making proposition. One week after his arrival the leader of the government made a pronouncement, not to the conference only, but to the gallery of the entire world. I remember when this speech went over the wires and the radio to the west. We had never before heard anybody speak like this at a conference. This was, as the New York Times indicated, like an ultimatum. We wondered whether anything had gone wrong with the Prime Minister, whether there was such a thing as political rabies, and whether he had contracted it while crossing the waters. We were astounded and then someone feeling a little charitable said that perhaps the newspaper was wrong and we had better wait until to-morrow. The newspapers seem to be always getting my right hon. friend wrong, and we accordingly waited until the following day When the following day arrived the confusion was still worse; nobody knew what this ten per cent was. But the clouds soon rolled away and Mr. Thomas was apparently right in describing the whole proposition as humbug. Let me quote the way in which the Prime Minister of Canada put his offer to the conference. The Solicitor General did not refer to this; he did not defend it; he quoted merely one or two of the least objectionable paragraphs of the flamboyant statement of the Prime Minister. This is what the Prime Minister said:

First, we must approve or reject the principle.

The principle has been approved and enforced for a long time by the British government in regard to some of our products and those of other dominions. He continued:

I put the question definitely to you, and definitely it should be answered. There is here no room for compromise and there is no possibility of avoiding the issue. This is a time for plain speaking, and I speak plainly when I say that the day is now at hand when the peoples of the empire must decide, once and for all—

One would think that was the last opportunity on earth. Something terrible was going to happen unless this was immediately considered and accepted.

—whether our welfare lies in closer economic union or whether it does not. Delay is hazardous, further discussion of the principle is surely unnecessary. The time for action has come.

I wonder whether this sounds the same to my right hon. friend's ears as it does to mine. I do not hear very well, but I hear this well enough to know that it is entirely out of place in a conference among kinsmen. It is flamboyant, belligerent, bellicose and pugnacious, and in fact, worse, if I could think of anything further to add. As bad as that is, it is not as bad as the next paragraph:

Projects other than the one I propose have been placed before you. They have been carefully canvassed by our delegation, and, while we would avoid anything which might savour of premature condemnation, we are constrained to state that none of them can be accepted by Canada as alternatives at all likely to achieve the purpose we have in mind.

The proposition was off then. They might as well have quit right there. Nothing but tariff proposals would suit the Prime Minister and all else he dismissed with an imperious wave of his lordly hand. According to him there was nothing doing, while everybody knows that the very essence, the soul of a conference, is compromise. The moment one participant takes a mulish stand like that, the proposition is off, because of the absence of give and take.

Just a word as to what will have to be done if anything is to come out of the adjourned conference to be held in Ottawa. Of course the adjournment came in handy to save the face of the government; it enabled them to go along for a little while longer. But if the Prime Minister will take a little different attitude from that which he took at the conference last September, there is no reason why some progress cannot be made. The British government and their friends are talking about the quota that my right hon. friend arbitrarily dismissed. If anything is to be done, he must back down. I know how hard it is for a man in the Prime Minister's position, when he makes a mistake, to admit it; but if he wants to obtain results he will have to assume a different tone and also be prepared to discuss other proposals that are laid before him. A quota will be better than nothing. There is no reason why we should not have a quota with the proper proportions to the dominions. It will need to be a good quota to come up to what we are now selling to the old country. For the last five years on the average we have been selling to Great Britain 170,000,000 bushels per annum. That is as much as the rest of the world buys from us, so that any quota that is adopted will need to be at least as good as that. If it is greater, so much the better, but there will need to be a tremendous transformation in the Prime Minister before he can get anywhere. There is no reason in the world why we cannot through the quota system make some progress towards solving the problem which is facing the dominions in regard to their wheat. As things stand now there is a cloud on the horizon in connection with the competition of Russian wheat and our embargo against Russia. What is going to happen in the west if the Russians decide to throw more wheat into British ports next fall at the same time that ours is ready to enter also? If they choose to do that in retaliation against our embargo, the competition that we had last fall will be as nothing, and it is high time that we got on to a safer road than the one on which we are travelling at the present time.

With regard to the conference, there were many interesting incidents at it and after it.

I recall that the first trip the Prime Minister took afterwards was to Paris. How often have we heard his voice ring in this chamber with statements as to how he was going to renounce the French treaty the first time he got his hands on it, and what an excellent salesman he was going to be! Having been chaperoned by the Solicitor General he got away from Paris without any casualties, but he did not sell as much wheat by half—9 millions to 19—to France as was sold the previous year. The Prime Minister got a promise that 9,000,000 bushels of wheat would be sold to France in the following year. The records showed however that in the previous year Canada had sold 19,000,000 bushels to France. There we have an actual sale of 19,000,000 as against a promise of 9,000,000 bushels. If the hon. gentleman continues in that way he will soon sell our wheat won't he? In the meantime Hon. Mr. Thomas had been acting up. The Labour government was under criticism by the opposition and Hon. Mr. Thomas was defending the government. An hon. member asked why he did not accept the offer of the Prime Minister of Canada and in reply he stated that such an offer was the greatest conceivable humbug. His statement set the whole newspaper world agog. My hon. friends have read many newspaper clippings but I think I will have to beg the indulgence of the house to read one or two newspaper observations. I have before me an extract from the Morning Express:

Very Simply Constituted

Mr. Bennett must be very simply constituted—

I do not think it means however that the right hon. gentleman is simple minded.

Mr. Bennett must be very simply constituted (says the News-Chronicle) if he imagines that any intelligent Englishman would be deluded by the proposal that we should tax our food in return for Canada's generosity in putting another tiny brick on her tariff wall against foreign imports and keeping the wall at the same effective height against British goods.

If that proposal is not humbug what is it? The Dominion premiers like to claim the right to "speak plainly" and like to exercise it. They should be able to keep a stiff upper lip when an English statesman for once in a way speaks plainly, too.

What kind of a stiff upper lip did my right hon. friend the leader of the government keep? I understand he got in touch by phone with the acting Prime Minister; if he did not he should have done so. It was his intention to learn what was to be done about the Thomas incident. If he did not get such advice he should have got it. Instead of stiffening his upper lip and taking a mild little swat like that, the Prime Minister squealed like a stuck porcine and was heard all over the realm. That is the kind of stiff upper lip kept by my right hon. friend when he was away from home. I will not follow this incident any further as my time is limited, but in that connection I would add that Hon. Mr. Thomas might have gone much further and been quite within the truth. This offer, so-called, was the finest exhibition of doubled dyed, twice distilled hypocrisy and humbug of which I have ever heard. No wonder they were disgusted with it overseas; no wonder the Prime Minister of Great Britain said that it could not be done. No wonder these newspapers which I might quote for an hour referred unfavourably to his proposal. In the meantime his colleagues had fled to Canada. At all events the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) returned. In connection with the Minister of Trade and Commerce I am pleased to note that he is returning to the house. Apparently they wanted as quickly as possible to place the Atlantic ocean between themselves and their rampaging Prime Minister.

Consequently when the right hon. gentleman journeyed to Belfast he was alone, with the exception of his personal retinue. He was invited to the city of Belfast, that great city of education and industry, where he was to receive a degree. The degree was well bestowed quite properly, I think, on a very distinguished gentleman. My remarks however will be confined to statements made by my right hon. friend after he had received the degree. In this country we have made a practice of tendering banquets or luncheons and the government of Northern Ireland followed that custom by giving a luncheon. The visit of the Prime Minister of Canada seemed to well warrant such procedure on their part. In the publication which I have in my hand there is the picture of the right hon. Prime Minister wearing his university robe. This picture and several comments which I intend to read are contained in the Northern Whig and Belfast Post. There are not now many whigs in Northern Ireland nor have there been for some time past. It is a Conservative paper; certainly it is not Liberal. Apparently it hates the Labour government like poison so that it must be Conservative. Its editorials clearly indicate the political leaning of the newspaper. On the front page I find our Canadian Prime Minister's reported words "Empire ties must be economic." The next paragraph in the newspaper to which I shall refer is as follows:

"I am satisfied," he said, speaking at the luncheon, "that if we do not avail ourselves of the matchless opportunity that we have by reason of our far-flung empire, our fate will be the fate of other great empires of the past."

Here the Prime Minister seems to be speaking in the role of a prophet, and a most dismal one at that. Apparently it was the opinion of the right hon. gentleman that everything would be lost unless he had his way in economic and tariff matters as they affect the other units of the British commonwealth of nations. And to rub it in good and plenty the right hon. gentleman reminded his hearers at the banquet of the ill-fated Boston tea party which every British historian knows was not brought about by the fault of the American colonies but by just such that-day Toryism as my right hon. friend still represents. What excellent taste the right hon. gentleman showed when he so spoke to the people in Northern Ireland! I quote again the following from this paper:

When you are spoken to in terms of sentiment it is always well to remember that the greatest break that ever took place in our empire commenced not over sentiment—most of you will recall the tea that found lodgment in Boston harbour. It was more than sentiment—it was economics, it was business. It was the question of the entry of products and the taxation of products that went from these islands to the land now known as the United States. While sentiment, he asserted, must always blaze a pathway, the ties that bound peoples to one another at the present day must be ties of material strands of economic strength.

Everything in the mind of the right hon. gentleman seems to be reduced to mercenary and monetary terms; all the old ideals we were taught since childhood were discarded. Why did we send so many men to the war? Was it to sell wheat or was it because of kinship with other nations embroiled in that terrible struggle?

Probably I should not take the time of the house to read further from the paper, but for fear I might be accused of putting a wrong interpretation on the remarks of the right hon. gentleman I shall read from the editorial page. These observations appeared in the Northern Whig on the occasion of the visit to Northern Ireland by the Hon. Mr. Scullin and the Hon. Mr. Forbes, following Mr. Bennett. The remarks by my right hon. friend were delivered on November 19. It took the people in Northern Ireland apparently quite a while to recover from the shock they received following the visit of the Prime Minister of Canada. However after the visit of Mr. Scullin they became greatly heartened. I quote the following from the Northern Whig of December 3, 1930:

Mr. Bennett, who led the way, perhaps unconsciously interposed a discouraging note in suggesting that the old bonds of blood and kindship are broken, and that unless commercial ties are substituted the empire will be in danger. In all probability, however, the Canadian premier would confess to-day that in his anxiety to impress the vital importance of closer commercial ties he rather over-stated the case.

That observation of course is quite mild. Later on the editorial is as follows:

Mr. Scullin, who followed Mr. Bennett as a visitor made it abundantly evident that Australia does not support the idea of broken or even weakened bonds of blood and kinship. He declared that these bonds are the real strength of the empire, and that without them the most powerful commercial ties might prove powerless to hold its members together. Mr. Scullin's assurances dispelled the temporary cloud which Mr. Bennett's suggestion had brought up on our horizon.

Should not the two honourable ministers who struck for Canada have remained with their honourable leader? Apparently this malady of political rabies is not quarantinable. The hon. gentlemen returned to Canada leaving their leader behind. On November 28 I find the following in an editorial of the Northern Whig.

After the cold and didactic speeches in Belfast a few days ago of Mr. Bennett, the Canadian premier, who asserted that the old ties of blood and kinship between motherland and dominions were broken, and that if not replaced by commercial ties "the empire would share the fate of the great empires of the past,"—

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that that means the Roman empire, the Persian empire and the other empires of the past that dwindled and decayed. The right hon. gentleman conceived the British empire as dwindling and decaying if something did not happen along the lines that he was proposing at the conference. No wonder he spoke of the sands of time running out and was terrified at the prospect of even six months delay. Then the editor goes on:

—it was heartening to hear Mr. Scullin speak of those old ties as still existent and still strong. "The unity of the commonwealth of nations," he declared, "lies in the blood ties that exist between the various parts."

Then the paper said:

We would much rather take that hopeful view than the gloomy one of Mr. Bennett.

It is not surprising that our leader was wondering who the Tories were going to send to this conference. We are still wondering why they sent the ones they did send.

Well, how is the situation to be retrieved? The trip to Paris did not help any. The Belfast experience made things even worse. Now the Prime Minister had to come home. In the meantime the great and faithful of the Conservative party in Toronto and Ottawa were preparing banquets to welcome the returning hero bedecked with laurels—or at least they thought so. But evidently wiser counsel prevailed—I do not know whether from here or from Toronto—because it was realized that if they banqueted their leader he would have to make a speech. And if he made a speech what was he going to tell them? Well, a bright idea occurred to somebody. Last summer the west had been pretty well stuffed with these bedtime and fairy stories of what the government was going to do to help the farmers out there. The bright idea occurred that the Prime Minister would pour down a second dose of promises and that the west would probably gulp it as some had gulped the first dose. The Prime Minister accordingly boarded the train for the west and at every divisional point a telegram would go forward to tell them that the great emancipator was on his way to the west to bring them hope and courage to hold on. We had no snow there and cars were run all the winter. Every farmer who could scrape together a dozen of eggs—I don't think a dozen would be sufficient—or a pound of butter, and buy a gallon of gasoline, cranked up his old Lizzie and headed for Regina. All roads led to Regina because a second Abraham Lincoln, a great deliverer, had come. They had a magnificent meeting, there is no question about that, and those who could not be present heard the address over the radio. The address was so well given that you could not tell it was read. My right hon. friend claims that the reporters sometimes do not get him right, and he took the precaution on this occasion to read his address. As I say, it was well read. It differed vastly from his speech of the previous summer; I suppose that was natural. The meeting was packed to suffocation; people were sitting on their toes rather than on the chairs, with expectancy. The meeting was opened by the premier of Saskatchewan and the address of welcome was seconded by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull)—I notice he is not listening with any great pleasure now—and everything was fine—everything but the goods; that was the trouble. Well, I will not attempt to tell you, sir, what a lot of the farmers said about the speech, but I will tell you what the farmers' union said about it. Here is the heading, "Premier Bennett Speeding West." The train could not move fast enough to get him there. Now, for fear I might not summarize the speech correctly, I had my Ottawa Journal forwarded to me. Here is the summary which appeared in its issue of January 1, 1931. No doubt the paper was supplied with a copy of the speech before the Prime Minister went west. The speech is divided under seven headings. The first three deal with emergency measures, one of them being to supply seed grain for needy farmers—something that has been done for the last forty years. The other four deal with Mr. Bennett's hopes for the west. Let me quote:

So far as the future is concerned, Mr. Bennett's hope for the west was summed up in the following:

These are hopes held out to the farmers of the west:

4. He has succeeded in securing better wheat marketing arrangements with France.

I have just told the house what those arrangements developed into—assuming his hope is fulfilled the promised market there will not be half as good as it was the year before. Now the next heading:

5. He has opened negotiations with the Chinese government for the marketing of wheat in China.

Oh, I remember that night. Right then the Prime Minister proudly said that the Hon. Herbert Marler was on his way to China to negotiate a tremendous transaction with the Chinese government for the sale of Canadian wheat. It was a wonderful story. It is not surprising that he had hope of the Hon Herbert Marler doing something when we recall how anxious the right hon. gentleman was to have him established there in the first place. How these rafters rang when the appointment was made! His faith was well-placed, but unfortunately something went astray and we are not likely to see any immediate transaction for the exportation of Canadian wheat to China. Then the next heading is No. 6:

6. He has several trade treaties under review with the object of securing better wheat markets with the countries concerned.

The Prime Minister did not say where these countries were, but when your back is up against the wall you will catch at anything. That was not very heartening for the farmers out west. But the best is kept for the last:

7. He promises that when grain rates are fixed on the Hudson Bay railway they will be on the basis of the Crowsnest pass rates.

That must be balm to the soul of those waiting farmers. Why, no other rates but the Crowsnest pass rates could apply. Think of any government daring to put up any other rates on their own railway after the decision of the Hon. Mr. McKeown and the Hon.

Frank Oliver in the Vancouver rate case, when they decided it would be unjust discrimination to Vancouver if the Crowsnest pass rates were not applied. And undoubtedly it would be rank discrimination against Churchill if the Crowsnest pass rates were not applied. That assurance of the Prime Minister is just so much more humbug and piffle, Mr. Speaker, take it from me. I wish parliamentary procedure would allow me to say what I feel with respect to this subject. Then think how ardently the Tory party all through the years worked for the reestablishment of Crowsnest pass rates! They the Conservatives suspended those rates in 1919, and when the King government restored them in 1922 hon. gentlemen opposite fought like wildcats against the restoration. Now they have the gall to talk about that as something they did themselves. And what of Churchill itself? The Hudson Bay Railway would terminate to-day at Nelson if hon. gentlemen opposite had had their way, and it would have been a blind alley and no good to any one. There is an untold story about that Nelson business, and I hope I shall live long enough to see it revealed. We all know that Churchill would not have been selected as the terminus for the railway if my hon. friends opposite had had their way. And yet my right hon. friend and his supporters talk about Crowsnest rates being applied on the Hudson Bay railway to Churchill and expect the farmers of the west to swallow that down without a wink!

Well, the United Farmers must have sat up nearly all night, because the meeting did not close until about ten o'clock and after that they drafted a reply which appeared in the morning issue of the Leader, together with the report of the Prime Minister's speech. Here is what it says:

"Stunned and amazed" was the description which George H. Williams—

Who I understand was a former Conservative but then was president of the farmers' union.

—president of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, applied to the audience which listened to the address delivered by Premier R. B. Bennett at the armouries, Tuesday night. Mr. Williams declared that the show of enthusiasm which had marked the opening of the meeting dwindled away towards the close to perfunctory applause.

Further on in the same article I find the following:

Disappointing Pronouncement

"Mr. Bennett's address was to my mind the most disappointing pronouncement that any prime minister has ever made in a time of crisis in western Canada, and this in the face of press forerunners which led people to believe that Mr. Bennett would offer some solid and substantial policy," Mr. Williams declared.

This is the statement of the head of the United Farmers of Saskatchewan, who recently was in Rome, presumably helping our High Commissioner to stir things up, We hope, however, this proposed new London conference eventually will turn out all right.

That was the Regina frost. You would think there could not be anything worse, but the Prime Minister returned to Ottawa and shortly afterwards we heard of the Russian embargo. I must admit that my first reaction to the Russian situation was a shrinking away. I do not like their form of government; I do not like their attitude towards religion, or at least I do not like what that attitude is said to be. I have, however, no evidence before me upon which I can intelligently consider Russia, either as to the form of government, the attitude towards their schools or the attitude towards religion. Let me appeal to your, Mr. Speaker; you feel keenly on this matter, as I do. You cannot, however, base business transactions on prejudice, and I will admit that my first feeling was prejudice. One must let his judgment have sway, if one has any, and my judgment told me that by Canada so acting we were simply cutting off our nose to spite our face and incurring a great risk. Surely if there is any use in having a British Empire, and I claim there is much use in it, we should have consulted the other parts of the empire before taking action ourselves. Surely this is a question big enough even to go before the League of Nations; but instead of following some such course of action, we madly slap Russia in the face and put on the embargo. If he is correctly reported, the Minister of National Revenue takes the ground that Canada would not stand for that kind of government. I have the report of his remarks here, but it is not worth reading. It is an offence to a great nation with which we have to live as neighbours.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you, sir. Like my colleague to my right I will continue this in my next speech, possibly on the budget.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Avoiding the morass of political partisan controversy, Mr. Speaker, which has already engulfed too much valuable time this session, I propose to lay before the government and the house a plain, businesslike statement, so far as I am capable, of the condition of the leading industries in the district which I represent and throughout British Columbia generally, and if possible to suggest some constructive ideas to improve the conditions of those industries. That, I take it, is the primary purpose for which my constituents sent me here.

The major industries in my district are the basic ones of farming, fishing, lumbering, coal mining and the manufacture of pulp. If we are committed to a system of protection and higher protection, I submit that these basic industries demand that protection now, rather than that we should continue to give higher protection to the combines of wealthy manufacturers of the east, who already have more than is coming to them. As proof of this I might refer to a statement which already has been put on Hansard several times, showing that the prices of the basic products of the soil and the sea have fallen from five to eight times more than the prices of the manufactured products of the eastern factories.

Dealing first with farming, the dairy industry was materially helped when Hon. Charles Dunning cancelled the New Zealand agreement with respect to butter. The dairy industry will reap the benefit of that action more fully in the future, when the supply of butter which was rushed into Canada before the legislation became effective is exhausted. Credit must be given also to the present government for making a temporary arrangement with Australia under which butter from that country does not come into Canada except at a price of 31 or 32 cents per pound. This arrangement is temporary, however, and the dairymen are looking anxiously for the new treaty to discover what is going to be done about imports of butter, mutton, tallow, honey and so on. Four or five months ago we heard a great deal about this Australian treaty; to read the press at that time one would think the treaty was practically negotiated. But I find nothing whatever about it in the speech from the throne. Goodness knows there is not so very much in the speech but that it would have been strengthened by a statement as to the Australian treaty. I am quite ready to remember that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), who was negotiating the treaty, has been ill. We all hope for his speedy return to the house, but reports as to this treaty appeared in the papers long before his illness overtook him, and in any case the government goes on as a whole and it should have been possible to make mention of such an important matter in the speech from the throne. From what the leader of the government said to-day, however, it would seem that we cannot look for any action in that regard this session.

The poultry industry, which is important in British Columbia was helped also by Mr. Dunning when he raised the duty on eggs coming from the United States to 10 cents per dozen, through the countervailing duties The present government, while repealing the countervailing duties, confirmed that rate of 10 cents a dozen and made it a permanent item in the tariff. That has been a great help to the poultry industry and has practically stopped the importation of American eggs. It might be easy for me to say now that the present low price of eggs has come about because of the tariff, but that is not the fact; it has come about in spite of the tariff. However that does show that the tariff is not a panacea for every ailment from which the body politic can suffer, especially when we run up against high production coupled with low consumption.

What can be done to help these two major branches of agriculture? I would suggest three things, not as cure-alls, but as proposals which, in my opinion, would substantially help the situation. The first is a material advance in cooperation. The late Minister of Agriculture introduced into his department the beginning of a branch having to do with cooperation, and secured a capable man to attend to it. That should be largely developed; farmers should be encouraged, informed and trained, so to speak, to go into cooperation much more extensively than is the case at the present time. They should be educated in cooperation in the selling of their products, which is more important perhaps, than cooperation in buying. They should be trained also in cooperation in buying and in the processing of their products, in order to get them to market more cheaply. Above all, they should be educated in cooperation in the distribution of their products, because that is where a great loss occurs. As one man said, we want to cut the costs from the land to the larder. Cooperation would do away with a great deal of our present trouble.

The second grievance under which we are suffering is an old question, but it is extremely important; I refer to freight rates. We pay $4.20 per ton more for bringing wheat from the prairies for consumption in British Columbia than is paid for wheat which is to be shipped to China or Great Britain. The high rate is put upon the low grade wheat for domestic use and the low rate upon the high grade, exportable wheat, making it doubly unfair. We used to hear about the railways putting on all that the traffic would stand, but in this case they are putting on more than the traffic will stand. This question has been before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and has been carried to the Canadian privy council, which is the government. It was taken to the privy council nearly a year ago, or perhaps more than a year ago. The last government dallied with it and did not give a decision, and the present government seem to be doing the same thing. It is time they took some action. If they do not feel called upon to deal with the matter on their own initiative by order in council, then they can bring down legislation as was done in the case of the Crowsnest rates.

It has been asserted, whenever this question has come up, that it is customary to give a preference to exportable produce of any kind. Yes, that is so in many instances; but you will find it is nearly always so when there is an alternative water route to compete, and when it is necessary to make one route compete against the other. There is no water route betwen the prairies and British Columbia, and if anything else were needed to show the injustice of the thing it is this: Since the Hon. John Oliver took up the question twelve or fifteen years ago—he fought it at every stage of the game—twice in that period there have been reductions in the export rate, but he did not succeed in getting a corresponding reduction in the domestic rate.

We will say for the sake of argument, but only for argument, because I do not admit it, that the spread fifteen years ago between the export and the domestic rates, was a proper one; but by no reasoning or logic, or lack of logic, can it be argued that the spread is right and proper now, because the export rate has been reduced twice while the domestic rate has not been reduced at all in that period. We find nothing of this in the speech from the throne, and it is a subject of major importance and one which should find a place there. We can only suppose—I hope I am wrong—that it is not the intention of the government to deal with the matter in the immediate future.

These two things, the development of co-operation to a large extent, and the question of rates, would help the dairying and poultry industry very considerably. It would enable them to produce cheaper and to cut the cost in the world's market, at a time when the purchasing power of ordinary people has been much reduced.

There is another item I would suggest although it is perhaps more confined to British Columbia. It is this. A great deal of the coast country of British Columbia and Vancouver island, is or has been heavily timbered and before the land can be made available for agriculture it has to be cleared and stumped; and even under present scientific methods this is very expensive. It costs roughly, to clear it, five times what it is worth after it is cleared, because it is not first class land, although it is good second class land. Consequently it naturally holds back enormously the development of the country.

I discussed the matter with the late government last year and got from them some promise that they would try to induce the National Research Council to investigate whether some method could not be devised of providing a cheap chemical which would enable these stumps to be burned out. A chemical of that kind can be obtained now, but it is too costly, and some tentative promise was made that the matter would be investigated. But little has been done. They tell me that there are other projects showing more promise of achievement which they think should be given attention first. That may be; but I would urge the government to consider the question. It would be of enormous benefit. There are a large number of soldier settlers just on the verge of insolvency, under debt to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and a chemical such as I suggest would help them to get out of their financial difficulties. Furthermore, the government owns areas of these reverted lands, and there is going to be a great loss on them. It would enable the government to sell these lands at a reasonable price and, moreover, it would be a very substantial contribution to the relief of unemployment, because it would furnish a great extent of fairly cheap land. One has no idea of the large area which is in that condition, logged-off lands with stumps in them, which could be immediately available for people to make a living on them. At the present time it is little better than a crime to invite people to go on that land, and ask them to clear it at a cost five or six times what the land is worth after it is cleared. If this land could be cleared as I suggest, it would materially help the agricultural situation.

I come now to another industry which is absolutely unprotected, that of coal. It is suffering from competition with fuel oil. It is suggested that we should have a duty on fuel oil. At one time that would have been immediately effective, but it is somewhat doubtful whether it would work at the present time. In days gone by, all fuel oil used in British Columbia was imported, and a duty on it would have restricted its use. Now it is nearly all—and it will apparently soon be all—manufactured in British Columbia. It is manufactured through the production of gasoline out of crude oil. It is a by-product, and it is doubtful whether a duty would have the desired effect, because the manufacturers treat this oil as a by-product. They make their money on gasoline, and it might be that if a duty were placed on fuel oil they would sell it for whatever they could get for it and they would cut the price to the extent of the duty. That would mean that the government would get an income, but it would be of no benefit to the coal industry, which is what we want to help. That is a matter which the government experts might inquire into.

Now there is an immediate and certain remedy. I emphasize those words because it cannot be denied that it would have an effect the moment it was put into force, and I urge the necessitiy for immediate action inasmuch as the industry is in a desperate condition. What I suggest is this: that the government grant a bonus of $1.50 a ton on all coal mined in Vancouver island for export purposes other than to the United States. I leave out the east of British Columbia because they share in certain favourable rates granted Alberta. I leave out coal for domestic purposes in British Columbia and also coal for export to the United States, as there is a reciprocal condition there which would not benefit us. I am speaking merely of coal for other export. There is a precedent for it. Nova Scotia gets a railway rate to allow it to get into the markets of Ontario, and Alberta gets a rate which is sometimes quoted as $1.25, although it is $1.48, and it is apt to be more than that because it is on a sliding scale. That is what the country at large pays to make up the difference between the rate granted Alberta and eastern British Columbia coal and what it costs the railway company. The first period calculated, as I say, came to $1.48 a ton. And what is it for? To enable coal to be moved to the desired market in Ontario. Now, we suggest that a bonus of this description would enable us to export coal to the markets of South America—Peru, Chile, Valparaiso. It would not be a great drain on the treasury to begin with, and we believe it would develop more trade.

In this connection we also ask for some cooperation from the government, more particularly from the Department of Marine. I am sorry the minister is not present. A father can flog his child for lying to him, but unless he sets an example of personal rectitude he will not do much more than make the boy a hypocrite. And this is the situation here. There is a boat called The Lillooet, under the control of the Marine department. It has been operating on the Pacific ocean on a hydrographic survey. Some years ago the department proposed to turn it into a oil burner and I opposed this. With the help of the late Hon. Mr. Sloan, a member of the provincial government and a representative of a coal-mining district, we got the government to abandon the idea. Now this last fall the Department of Marine decided to build another hydrographic survey ship, and the moment I heard that tenders had been called for I wrote to the minister. I wrote at once, not after it was too late, and urged him to see that the boat should be a coal burner. I am sorry to say that I have not received a reply to my letter—of such are the children of Ammon! My appeal certainly fell on stony ground, because a notice appeared in the papers a few weeks ago to the effect that the ship would be an oil burner. Then Sir Henry Thornton, the president of the Canadian National Railways, informs us that he will not allow the hotel which is being built in Vancouver to use anything but oil. And worse than that, we find them building a great tank of a million gallons capacity at Port Mann, with a view to changing a good many of theiir engines on the Canadian National Railways from coal to oil, in startling contrast with the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is not under government control. A meeting of the coal operators was held last fall, at which I was present, and the agent of the Canadian Pacific promised that their switching engines in Vancouver would be changed back from oil-burning to coal-burning. This means a coal consumption of something like 20,000 tons per year. The government should continue the experiments made by the late government in the use of pulverized coal. At a recent sitting of the provincial legislature, a member moved a resolution along these lines, but the government moved an amendment suggesting a survey.

If there is one thing we do not want in this connection, it is a survey. The Government in British Columbia have gone crazy over surveys. It does not matter what the trouble is, whether it is cut worms or currency, whether it is railway rates or rabbits, if you complain the government finally says: "We will give you a survey." The hon. members from British Columbia know what that means; it means a lot of fat jobs for political heelers and it means the postponement of action dearly beloved by the provincial government When we ask for anything during the sittin of the legislature we are promised a survey to be made during the recess. Upon one occasion we endured such a survey and we came back at the next session and said: You have had your survey, give us action. What did they do? They ordered another, a second survey. We do not want stone, we want bread. I have argued this matter for ten years both in and out of this house, and now with desperate earnestness I say to the government: It is now or never for this industry. I have a local paper which announces that two large mines have been closed and other mines are operating on a part time basis of two and three days per week. That practice has been carried on all winter, which season is the harvest time for the coal miner. If they can only get two days work a week in winter what will be their condition in the summer? I tell the government that if no action is taken in this matter, 5,000 miners counting those dependent directly and indirectly upon them will have to be supported by relief measures. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) will give us some action. He has never been accused, even by his worst enemies, of not being a man of action, and surely he will do something to relieve this desperate condition.

The next matter I would draw to the attention of the government is the lumber and pulp industry. This industry has reached a state where many operators are indifferent whether or not they run their camps. When the camps are run, the work is speeded up, sometimes through the efforts of the men themselves in an attempt to keep the camp going, and such overspeed means danger. The equipment is not being kept up and in many cases has reached a state where it might be called haywire. That class of equipment and speeded operations mean but one thing—increased danger, more accidents and, alas, more deaths, because in many instances the accidents prove to be fatal.

This industry sent a delegation to Australia some years ago and they received a promise of preference in the treaty soon to be negotiated. An Australian paper says that a preference on lumber as well as on fish has been given to us, and we are very anxious to see what is to become of that treaty. Up to the present, all that we can find is that nothing is to become of it. A very substantial preference was granted, something like $5 per thousand on lumber. Unfortunately, their currency has depreciated and this preference does not mean nearly as much as it would seem to. A mistake has been made in Australia, apparently through lack of information, in that while a preference has been given on Douglas fir, none has been given on hemlock and spruce, both equally important to the industry. I hope the government will keep this fact in mind in negotiating any treaty.

The government should continue the payment of a bonus to ships on the Australian route. Because of conditions in Australia, this trade has dropped considerably and the government should do everything to encourage it.

The Commercial Intelligence Journal contains a statement that the sale of Canadian lumber in Great Britain is being handicapped because other nations are selling their lumber as Canadian. The suggestion is made that it soon may be too late to make an effort to have Canadian lumber marked as such. One of the lumber associations in British Columbia has arranged to mark their product with a trade mark, but that is not what is wanted. We want government action which will guarantee that all lumber from Canada will be marked under government control with the word "Canada" or some similar word. An attempt should be made to get the British government to make it compulsory that other lumber be marked with its country of origin. Some publicity should be given to the superiority of our Douglas fir over other competing woods, which superiority is not generally understood. Perhaps the High Commissioner, after he has completed his self-imposed task of reforming the sentiments, morals and economics of the British people, will find time to advertise Canadian lumber.

Fisheries are very important to British Columbia. The market and prices have both almost disappeared, but we are living in the hope that world industrial conditions will improve and that we shall be able again to find a reasonably profitable market for our fish. Australia has recently given us a preference on salmon amounting to something like $2.50 per case. The government should take steps to implement this preference and see that it is included in the next trade treaty.

When assistance for the fishing industry in British Columbia is mentioned, one's thoughts naturally turn to the regulations, which are changed once or twice each year. If I may suggest to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes), we would like a holiday on regulations—leave us alone for a time. We are like the soldier who lay wounded in hospital. He was being fussed over by well-meaning society ladies until finally he put up this notice: " I am too sick to be nursed to-day." I think I speak for the great majority of the working fishermen when I say that there is one exception to this rule; we do not want the minister to abandon the system which he inaugurated of either he or his deputy or both visiting British Columbia every fall. That is one of the finest things ever started by the department. In the old days the fishermen had no voice; the big interests formulated the policies in the minister's office. They could come to Ottawa, but the fisherman was never heard of. Some hon. member might make a protest from the floor of the house, but it was then too late. This holding of meetings of fishermen in Vancouver, Nanaimo and Prince Rupert has been of great benefit to both the industry and the department. The fishermen feel that their complaints are being listened to and that if they are reasonable, some relief will be given. I strongly recommend that these meetings be continued.

I wish to thank the minister on behalf of the industry for coming out last fall, and I desire to thank him for what he did not do on that occasion. In making this statement, I do not want it to be taken as cheap sarcasm. A small section of the industry made up their minds as to what he was going to do; every political, financial, economic and social influence was brought to bear. He was not to be allowed to take a bath without being accompanied by some of the elect. Banquets were held which only the elite were permitted to attend; he was to be supplied with food, flattery and fiction, and it was determined that he was to see only through their eyes. But what did they get? The minister turned out to be, in the vernacular of British Columbia, a wise guy, almost as wise as he looks. He sat and listened and drank it all in, and looked wise and the more he listened and the more he drank, the wiser he looked. That is about all they got out of him. A few days later he insisted on attending an open meeting of fishermen held in the same town, where there were no flourishes, no sycophancies, no banquets, no flowers, but he listened to the orderly presentation of the views of twenty thousand working fishermen. He listened attentively and courteously. He did not promise anything, we did not expect that; we wanted only a hearing. He went away. When the regulations came out, he had not given us much we asked for, but he had rejected the views put forward by the vested interests. There were three major proposals presented to him by them, and he was to be compelled to adopt them. He turned them down. I am prepared to say, without fear of contradiction, that if he had granted any one or all three of those things it would have spelled disaster and ruin to thousands of working fishermen. I must admit that the minister did fall from grace in one respect, or rather I will not say "fall", I will just say, "slipped". It was just a cog. He gave way in his regulations on two small points, unfortunately in the district which I represent. This will inure to the benefit of a gentleman who was the campaign manager of my opponent. While I chronicle that side slip, so to speak, I must admit that as regards the general industry as a whole, it was in two entirely minor matters.

If I have time there are two or three suggestions I should like to make. I have the backing of meetings of fishermen and boards of trade in asking that the minister should not give more power to the chief supervisor of fisheries in British Columbia. He has too much power already. We do not want any Mussolinis in British Columbia. Give power and authority to some officials and they rise to the occasion and become bigger and better men. Others merely—swell. Again I would say, as the minister values his reputation, let him refrain from having any part or lot with the Hon. Mr. Howe, Commissioner of Fisheries of British Columbia.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. NEILL: I see these words awake an echo amongst British Columbia members. He is a very nice gentleman, but his ignorance of fishery matters is appalling and his credulity is colossal. About a year ago the privy council in London gave the provincial government power to regulate the manufacture of fish after they were caught, not before. This gentleman was induced in his innocence to formulate a series of quibbling regulations by means of which he was going to wrest the power from the minister who sits opposite; he was going to take away our jurisdiction over the catching of fish. The result as regards the condition of the common fisherman would have very much resembled that in Russia. It certainly would have been economic slavery. The members of the local house, Liberals and Conservatives alike, united to fight the proposition in a committee of the local house. At last the Commissioner threw up his hands and admitted that the whole thing had been conceived by arrangement and born in ignorance. That was the end of that. A few weeks afterwards I read in one of his party papers—and I suppose it was correct—that he said his scheme was getting along nicely, but the member for Comox-Alberni had gone up and down the coast "sowing his poison" and he himself had "reaped the whirlwind." I did not know that reaping the whirlwind was the repercussion of poison; I thought that the first reaction would be a tummy-ache. The gentleman's metaphor was very much mixed. It suggests that he has little knowledge of medicine, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that his knowledge of medicine is profound as compared with his knowledge, or lack of knowledge, of fishery matters. Defeated in that attempt, he has adopted another line of procedure, and is now trying to work up propaganda to get this government and parliament to hand over to him the whole of the rights over the fishing industry. All I say to that is: God forbid. We do not know very much about the minister at Ottawa, but what little we do know is rather to his credit, and I think we will take this position, that we would rather have the devil at Ottawa—he will excuse the term; it is used as one of endearment—of whom we know little, than the devil at Victoria of whom we know all too much.

I do not know whether I have time to say a word on the question of fishery guardians. They are temporary men appointed for from two to five months every year. They are not Civil Service Commission appointees, and therefore they are not entitled to the soldiers' preference by law, but surely the government will admit that they are entitled to the preference in so far as it comes under political patronage. That is to say, these men will be appointed by patronage in accordance with the custom but I hope they will give a preference to present employees and to the returned men. The system I followed in days gone by was that if a man had been employed for two years and there was no kick from the department as to his work he should be left on, no matter what his politics were. This gave the department good servants, efficient men, because they knew that it was not politics but attention to their duties that kept them in their positions. What is to be done to-day? I very much fear they are going to revert to a system of political appointment only. I know a man who has given six years' good service and who has been told that he will have to apply for the endorsation of the local Conservative Association. That means that some political appointee, and not even a returned man, will get the job. That is not going to make for good service. I should like to read part of a resolution passed by a soldiers' body, which, after reciting the facts outlined above, says:

> Therefore the Courtenay branch of the Canadian Legion beg to recommend,—
> First, that where men have held such positions for two or more years without complaint from their superior officers, they should be reappointed.
> Second, that when there are vacancies, the branches of the legion in the districts where the vacancies occur (or the nearest thereto) be asked to nominate returned men suitable for the position.

[Mr. Neill.]

I think two or three of these resolutions have been sent to the minister and I would suggest that he take the stand that those who have done good service, who have not taken any part in politics, and especially those who are returned men, should be left alone.

I have just time for a word more regarding the Imperial conference. I regret the failure of that conference. Criticism has been made of the methods of approach and also of the result. A great deal of it I fear was true. I fear that the wisest methods were not adopted, but behind and beyond those methods is there not this fundamental cause, so to speak, namely that Canada rejected the British preference? If she had not done that the result might have been different. At least it appeared to Great Britain that we rejected the British preference, although I do not think we did. The issue was so involved with other things that it was not possible to state the situation clearly. But Great Britain saw it in that light, and that was primarily the cause of the non-success of the conference. More diplomatic methods might have been applied. I believe in "vox populi, vox dei," in accepting the decision of the people. Nevertheless it is possible to say that I regret the decision if it was clearly against the British preference, because I think that was a mistake. Speaking from an entirely selfish, mercenary point of view and for the moment as one whose horizon is bounded by a Canadian aspect, I think it would have been better for us, better for Canada, if we had united ourselves along those close and intimate lines that trade produces, with our own kith and kin across the water rather than with the country to the south of us, who, however friendly for the moment, may at any time—and this has happened—cut all those bonds of trade and turn us loose with a disorganized trade condition on our hands from which we cannot recover for many years. Apart from any sentimental regard whatever, I think it would be better if we dealt with our own breed. I hope the day will come soon when we may secure a greater measure of British preference, which cannot but be to the mutual benefit of Canada, Great Britain and the British Empire itself.

Mr. L. DUGUAY (Lake St. John) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with previous speakers in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I especially want to congratulate the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier) for having stood up as the representative of the Acadian minority. With reference to the question of minorities, permit me to go back to March 20, 1931, when the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) stated in the house, "If Mr. Anderson is allowed to do to-day what he intends to do out west in Saskatchewan, where does the fault lie?" I answer that the fault rests not only on Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but also on the Liberal party as a whole. Last year, that party had the opportunity of proving its sincerity in connection with the rights of the minority, but instead of vindicating here in this House of Commons, the rights which it haughtily proclaims in the province of Quebec, it is content to take a different attitude as I shall show by referring to last year's Hansard, at page 1699:

I think the hon. member for Labelle and the house as a whole can trust the sense of justice and fairness of the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan and their respective governments to deal generously and fairly with every class of the community.

Mr. Lapointe: That is really what is being done.

Mr. Speakman: I quite appreciate that in the terms of the argument. I am applying my remarks rather to the argument of the member for Labelle.

Mr. Lapointe: That is really what is being done. It is a mark of our confidence in the two provinces instead of keeping this endowment fund here we are transferring it to them.

They then expressed their confidence in the Saskatchewan government which is the same one in power to-day. For instance, in the last general election, the Prime Minister of Quebec himself, according to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), took advantage of these prejudices against the Conservative party in Quebec. Fortunately, many Quebec ridings gave little credence to them, and, to-day, more than twenty members from that province are here to straighten things out and tell the house that Conservatives deal with the French language with equity and are happy to proclaim that, under the present government the rights of minorities are as well safeguarded as they were under the previous administration. Moreover, sir, I may state that personally I am entirely opposed to Mr. Anderson's policy and that I would never sacrifice the rights of minorities for political gain, because to me principles are above party interests.

Some hon. members opposite shouted: "Shame, shame," when they were unmasked by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne). But what do they think, for instance, of Mr. Olivar Asselin, chief editor of the Canada, a Liberal newspaper of Montreal, who wrote in his pamphlet entitled: "Sir Wilfrid Laurier", at page 8:

The Dominion cabinet, in which were still to be found a few of the fathers of confederation, for decency's sake, hesitated to definitely break off with the traditions of Macdonald and Cartier, and became alarmed. They wished to gain time, consult the courts with reference to some terms which to all men of good will seemed quite clear. The courts having acknowledged the rights of Catholics, after years of delay, the government decided to act. The cabinet divided. Mr. Laurier might, by adhering to the right cause have assured its triumph, and thereby might have helped in guiding the federal authorities in the right path whence they had been drifting away for ever so long. However, the opportunity of being raised to power was too alluring, it was he on the contrary who, the first, declared war, siding with the government despoiler, shouting: "Hands off Manitoba!" He was the first in this crisis, and the first since 1867, with the exception of a few fanatics whom all parties had always kept at a distance, he laid down as a principle the absolute sovereignty of provinces in matters of education. All whose sentiments were anti-Catholic and anti-French, in Canada, grouped around him.

That is what the chief editor, himself, of this Liberal newspaper of Montreal wrote at the time. When a Conservative, not long ago, stated very similar views, they shouted: "shame", yet, the author of this article, is given high praise for his editorials in the Canada and they feel proud in handing over to him the management of this partisan newspaper.

If this is the way, sir, that the Liberals protect the rights of minorities, I am glad to see the Conservative party in power, because I am convinced that these rights are better safeguarded under Conservative than under Liberal rule.

Let us, sir, broach another subject. May I ask what in substance has been advised by our opponents since the outset of this session? They delivered many speeches. They especially proclaimed that the Conservatives had not fulfilled their pledges. May I, previous to indicating how the present government fulfilled their pledges, state what the Liberals did with theirs? At the opening of the first session of the Liberal government on March 9, 1922, the following words are put in the speech from the throne:

Whilst of the opinion that unemployment relief is fundamentally a municipal and provincial responsibility, my government has felt that as conditions have arisen in a measure out of the late war, they would be justified in continuing for the period of the winter months the expedient of supplementing by grants from the federal treasury the relief or contributions of provinces and municipalities for the purpose of alleviating actual distress.

A little further in the same speech from the throne, we find:

The stream of immigration to the Dominion was much interrupted and restricted during the war. Now that the blessing of peace is with us, a renewal of efforts to bring in new settlers must be made. My government are fully alive to the importance of this question and will use every reasonable endeavour to attract to our country people of the most desirable class with particular regard to settlement on our undeveloped lands.

The Liberal government alleviated unemployment which existed in 1922 by bringing to our shores, in the space of 9 years, from 1921 to 1930, more than 1,150,000 immigrants who cost the country $20,000,000. Under the Liberal regime, the right hon. Mr. King absolutely stated that he had wiped out unemployment. Yet, a year ago, the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) requested the government to take immediate steps to relieve unemployment. What was the government's answer? I shall quote, for the benefit of members on the left who shouted: "No, no", when the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) told them that they had denied there was any unemployment, the baffling statements of their leader, on April 3, 1930, at page 1226 of Hansard:

. . . . we have no right to say that there is any national unemployment problem in this country.

He went further and stated:

. . . . that there is no way in which you can more effectively defeat the possibility of investment of capital in your country than to seek to create the impression in other lands, and throughout your own, that conditions are not prosperous, that they are bad and that there are within this country large numbers of unemployed.

Last year, mention of unemployment was not permitted, however, this year they are in the opposition and last year's scruples are set aside.

In 1922, the government wished to relieve unemployment by bringing immigrants to this country. What was the policy of the Conservative government in 1930? They admitted that unemployment existed and their first step was to stop immigration; secondly they called a conference of delegates from all the provinces; thirdly they convoked an emergency session—which was never to take place according to our opponents—and lastly they appropriated an amount of $20,000,000, thereby giving work to thousands of unemployed. Yet notwithstanding all this, we have done nothing according to our hon. friends, to alleviate the present crisis! Hon. members in the opposition, sir, in order to belittle the acts of the present administration, unceasingly lay stress on the pledges which we made. These pledges, neither the government nor the people will forget and they will be carried out for the greatest welfare of the country.

What is very interesting also is to remind the opposition of their 1921 pledges and find out what became of them. They were, first, to force people of means to pay the war expenditure in the shape of an income tax. This tax, in 1922, brought in a revenue of $78,000,000; in 1929 under the Liberal regime, it had already decreased to $69,000,000. Instead of increasing this tax they decreased it. This was in violation of their first pledge. Then, the war expenditure was to be paid by business profit taxes. In 1922, this brought in $23,000,000; in 1929, it gave but $450,000.

The sales tax was to be abolished to help the poor ratepayers. The tax amounted to 5 per cent in 1922. The Liberals increased it to 6 per cent, to reduce it later to 4, 3 and 2 per cent. But thanks to these increases, the Liberals drew from the people $180,000,000 more than the Conservative administrations.

The cost of living was also to be reduced. In 1922, the weekly family budget for five people was $21.52. After nine years of Liberal administration it fell to $20.21, that is a decrease of $1.21. Labour wages are considerably lower so that living conditions are harder to-day than they were at that time. One wonders what would have happened in Canada had the Liberals remained in power.

We have been listening to their complaints, since the opening of the session, that we are doing nothing to alleviate unemployment. But what suggestion to alleviate unemployment have they made to the government? Very seldom since confederation has a government, presenting its first speech from the throne been subjected to such an avalanche of criticisms. If they are truly desirous as they proclaimed during the elections, to promote the welfare of the people and remedy unemployment, why do they, to-day, oblige the government to listen to these lengthy speeches which are devoid of all suggestion tending to alleviate unemployment? It seems to me that the best way to prove their sincerity would be to curtail the number of their speeches and ask the government to act immediately.

I should like to make suggestions, but under the present circumstances, I shall desist seeing that I expect the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) to enact measures which will be very helpful to farmers.

The Quebec farmers especially are suffering from the unemployment crisis. The majority of them had no crops last year, the consequence is they feel very depressed. I hope that the measures brought down by the hon. Minister of Agriculture will be a boon to all farmers. The Lake St. John county which I am privileged to represent is anxiously awaiting these measures.

In closing my remarks, sir, I wish to state that the government may depend on my entire support and that it rejoices me to think that some day prosperity will return again to this country under the standard of the Conservative party.

Mr. J. R. HURTUBISE (Nipissing) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, my first thought is to express a feeling of diffidence in the presence of hon. ministers of the crown and members of this house, who for the most part are my seniors in parliamentary experience. I therefore, sir, beg your indulgence. At the outset, allow me to make use of the French language, it being a privilege for which I am indebted to a large number of my constituents who were the pioneers of New Ontario; settlers, artisans, manufacturers and professional men. In spite of many adversities they succeeded in having their language, usages and customs respected, and in reaching an enviable place in the community. I shall thereafter speak in English; I owe it to my English-speaking friends who have been kindness itself towards my compatriots and with whom also we form a large family, working harmoniously together for the common weal. Ho! there are among us, like in Saskatchewan, extremists who preach hatred and discord, but their number is limited and sensible people pay no attention to them. It would have given me much pleasure to be one of those who congratulated you, Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of your election to the speakership of this house. I have full confidence that you will, sir, continue with all fairness, dignity and ability to direct the deliberations of the house. My congratulations extend also to the hon. members who moved and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It was a credit to them and I wish them success in their future career. I also want to extend my congratulations to the leader of the opposition for his splendid speech which will be handed down to posterity as the most complete, up-to-date and to the point speech in the present crisis. It will be looked upon as a "vademecum" by the Liberal members and perhaps also by the members on the opposite side. Speeches both well thought out and instructive have been delivered since the opening of the session, however, I wish to mention particularly that of the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bertrand)—the riding in which I had the pleasure of polling my first Liberal vote. He vividly pictured the decline of agriculture, made worse by these few months of protection under the present administration, and he suggested the remedy for these ills. Then I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien), who gave us an outline of the situation on the western farms. I entirely agree with these hon. gentlemen and I trust the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) will not turn a deaf ear to those appeals and that he will soon acquaint us with the measures which, in his opinion, will remedy these conditions. We have already been waiting a few months. After all the pledges made during the last election, and especially the one with reference to the immediate relief of unemployment, what do we see? The $20,000,000 are spent; unemployment is very much in evidence everywhere the price of farm products is ever on the decrease; the elevators are still overflowing with grain, the granting of old age pensions is made conditional on the state of our finances; the highway from coast to coast which was to give work to hundreds of thousands of men has not been decided upon. To shelter themselves the Dominion government blame our provincial governments and vice versa; the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel is still under consideration and as things stand it will yet be for some years to come. The partial tariff revision enacted last session has been so unpopular that the government has been obliged to amend or cancel almost all their decisions. Every day, through correspondence, conversation and the press protests are lodged against the raising of the tariff and we are earnestly entreated not to allow the government to have their own way during the present session. Since July, 1930, sir, the Canadian people have been expecting a well-defined policy in all the various departments, yet the ministers of the crown travel about, deliver speeches and lectures, sometimes are even present to listen to the debates in the house, but remain dumb. When shall we expect the next sequence of pledges? The hon. ministers of the crown have the floor.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to make a few remarks in English as I feel it is my duty to present the views of my constituency, which is composed of a considerable number of farmers and also a large number of labourers employed in the mining, lumber and railway industries.

I have listened with great interest to the speech of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), which I believe—although its length and content and preparation did not suit the government—was the most comprehensive, detailed and elaborate that I have heard. I have also listened to the answer of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who spoke more laboriously than during the last electoral campaign. Many other well-prepared and interesting speeches were made by hon. members on both sides of the house. The trend of those speeches has been along the line of the promises made by the government last summer, its legislation passed thereafter, and the benefits derived therefrom.

In my part of the country the people—although the majority had great confidence in the late government's policy, and did not let themselves be humbugged by the alluring promises made my opponents—have yet to see the fulfilment of most of the promises and to experience the benefits to be derived from the legislation passed by the government since its advent to power. The farmers, who have been toiling under great difficulties for several years on account of the lack of encouragement from the provincial government, had hoped to have some temporary assistance from the $20,000,000 voted last session; but the benefits received have been far from what was expected.

I congratulate the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bertrand) upon the very valuable information contained in his speech. He dealt with the question of farming as a man who knows something about the cost of farm production and farm revenues. I congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) on his splendid speech. I happen to know a little about the difficulties encountered by the western farmer as I have a brother in Alberta whom I visit regularly. I fully concur with the hon. member because I too believe that agriculture is the basic industry of the country, and unless something is done to check this state of marasmus—and it is not exaggerated as we were led to believe by the right hon. Prime Minister—general conditions, I submit, will continue to be more and more embarrassing for those that have the duty and the responsibility to guide the destinies of this country.

I cannot see how our farming industry can be helped otherwise than, first, by lowering the tariff and increasing the British preference, for the British market at present is the best outlet for Canadian trade since the United States and other countries have closed their doors by high tariffs; secondly, by lowering the freight rates which are such an item of cost in some parts of the country; third, by giving the farmers a low rate of interest on loans, not only to carry them over the crisis, but for an indefinite time until a change in rate is judged necessary; and, fourthly, by representation of agriculture on the Canadian National Railway board on account of the farmers being particularly concerned in transportation.

In northern Ontario the farmers are leaving their farms every year, not on account of extravagance in living, but on account of the high cost of production and of the high cost of living. They have to pay more and more every year for their farm implements, automobiles, trucks, household equipment, groceries and clothing. At the last election they were led to believe that good times were around the corner and that the only way not to miss the opportunity was to vote Conservative. Then they would be able to sell their farm products at almost any price that they might ask, and in their spare time they could work on that famous trans-Canada highway and participate in the large sums of money to be voted for that purpose. Some believed it, but the majority in my county did not. To-day the farmer can get hardly anything for his butter and eggs, and the trans-Canada highway has been undertaken only at points where a few men can get a few days work at a wage that is next to slavery, as was said by my hon. friend from Kenora (Mr. Heenan) Yes, since last fall I have received letters from some describing the conditions under which they were working, and from others asking me if it was reasonable to work at wages so low as 30 cents an hour—eight hours a day, $2.40, $14.40 a week. In other places the men were employed only three days a week, thus earning only $7.20. I know a man who is taking legal proceedings against the northern development branch for money earned and refused to him. I have proof of this under my hand.

Labour conditions in northern Ontario have been going from bad to worse. To-day I have received my home paper, the Sudbury Star, of April 8, which contains a long statement by the chairman of the local relief committee. Let me quote the following extract:

> An idea of the situation this winter may be had from the records of the relief committee. On the first of November there were 415 married men registered out of work. By December 31, this number had increased to 1,226 and on April 3 it was 1,693. On the first of November there were 498 single men registered, on December 31 there were 3,052 and on April 3, 3,438. Of this total registration there were, of course, a large number of men given part time work throughout the season.
> Since the soup kitchen opened in November there have been 90,329 meals given out at an approximate cost to the city of $5,419. The kitchen is still in operation, serving an average of 425 meals a day, and the city is at present caring for 170 families.

This expense is not borne by the government, but by the local authorities. I submit this confirms my statement that labour conditions in northern Ontario have been going from bad to worse.

In 1919 there was an understanding between the Minister of Lands and Forests of Ontario and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, who was then member of the provincial legislature representing the Constituency of Kenora, that in northern Ontario the wages whould be 35 cents an hour, that is, $3.50 a day, or $21 a week for all government work. At the last session, there was a promise by the government, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Kenora, that the prevailing rate of wages would be adhered to. Although this was provided for in the Unemployment Relief Act, we find that those rates have been cut down. I say that the government is in duty bound to refund the difference to the employees. We have reports from papers of March 6, 1931, that labour conditions in northern Ontario are good. Those reports are not correct. Every day I receive letters, some are anonymous, because the writers do not dare sign their names for fear of losing their pitiful jobs—describing the favoritism practiced by the friends of the government and the hardship the writers have to endure. When the Minister of Labour reports that conditions in northern Ontario are good, either he is misrepresenting the facts personally or he is being misled by his friends. The Prime Minister says conditions are improving all over the country. While this may be so in a few isolated places, in the majority of cases they are going from bad to worse. During the last campaign the Conservatives said that the federal government, which then was Liberal, would not cooperate on a fifty per cent basis, but there is nothing in the sessional papers to show that a province ever asked for help.

When I consider the psychological effect created by the propaganda of our Conservative friends during the last campaign; the unrealizable promises which were made; the policies advocated which thereafter proved impracticable and even noxious to the consumer while beneficial only to the few, it is not surprising to see so much unrest in this country and to hear so much talk about communism. I do not want to refer to the matter of trade between this country and Russia, where at present communism is being tried out, because this trade proposition seems to be a debatable question. This is proved by the diverse expressions of opinion by financiers and leading men of Canada, and even by some hon. members of this house. Sudbury, through publicity, has the name of being a centre of communism. Probably that is so, but let me say that of the large number of immigrants who have come to our city representing many nations, a great many have been naturalized, have adopted the laws and the ways of living of the Canadian people and to-day rank among our best citizens. They are industrious and law-abiding citizens, to whom I owe this tribute of consideration.

If there is such a state of unrest and such an attraction to communistic ideas, it is due in great part to the lack of foresight in the province in not preventing part time work in many of our industries, such as the pulp industry. It is also due to the fact that, particularly in this present crisis, the people of Canada have been living on promises. When these promises have not been fulfilled or, having been fulfilled, have proved worthless and even injurious to the mass of the people and had to be changed or cancelled, we have been told to be patient. We have been waiting, waiting and waiting, but hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

Since the opening of the session some hon. members have referred to Canada, in the present crisis, as a very sick patient. As a doctor myself, I believe the patient is very sick. In this world-wide epidemic of markets crumbling, industries closing and people walking the streets waiting anxiously for the proper advice and treatment to save them from disaster, Doctor King said, "This is going to be a serious epidemic. Let us confer so as to not make a blunder. We shall see what germs are the cause of this disease, what are the reasons for these clinical symptoms and what treatment we will then apply." But Doctor Bennett came rushing in, saying, "This is no time to confer; this is a time to act. We shall use an empirical treatment. We shall first give the patient a good dose of some preparation of opium, such as 'a special session', immediate disappearance of unemployment', 'good markets for the western wheat', 'good markets for the farmers' eggs and butter', 'pensions for old age', 'the immediate construction of a trans-Canada highway which will give work to thousands and thousands of people,' 'a St. Lawrence waterway which will take care of our farm and manufactured products' and then we shall give him a good rubbing with the famous salve called 'protection', the great panacea which has been advocated for so many years."

The patient, eagerly looking for help in order to be spared from this great world-wide epidemic, believed in Doctor Bennett's marvellous cure and said, "I think I will have you treat me from now on." So Doctor Bennett began to apply his treatment. He went to the pharmacy, at the short session, and bought $20,000,000 worth of work for the unemployed but he found this, even mixed up with the provincial and municipal contributions, a very small amount to throw to the people, especially when we consider the voracity of some and the weakness of the great number. So the masses continued to walk the streets and that sedative, instead of putting the patient to sleep, made him scream more loudly than ever.

The next dose of dope he gave his patient was "a market for the western wheat." After a few months of treatment on promises the patient said, "Help us or we will starve," and to quiet his hunger the doctor gave him stones instead of bread. The farmer called more loudly for help; the doctor paid a special visit and told the farmer he was exaggerating his pain, and he recommended patience.

To the east he applies the plaster "things are a little better" and he tries to make his patient believe that he would have been much worse had he continued under Doctor King's care. In the north, where he was to give a bottle of that famous trans-Canada tonic, there was a misunderstanding. The doctor says he cannot send any of that tonic now because his manufacturer, the provincial government, is afraid it may hurt some part of the system. So the prescription or plan is still under discussion and the patient is gradually getting weaker.

The patient is asking whether he will be cared for when old age comes, and the doctor says, "I will look in my pharmacy, and if I have any dope left for that I will let you have some." Then the doctor wants to apply his famous panacea, protection, or tariff increase salve. The first time he tried to rub it in the patient screamed and said, "Take it off, you are killing me." The doctor is thinking of applying another dose, but he seems nervous as to the results of the first application. During all this time the patient is moaning, worrying, starving and becoming emaciated, and is wishing he could go back to his old family doctor, Doctor King. I hope Doctor Bennett will change his empirical treatment and stop and confer before he goes any further, because the patient is about to die.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the people of Canada have been waiting anxiously since July 28, 1930, for a definite policy in the administration of the different departments. The cabinet ministers have been travelling about, making speeches at banquets, attending conferences and occasionally listening to the debates in this house, but as yet nothing constructive or definite has been offered to the people. I believe the only way to save our country from further disaster is for our Prime Minister to modify his empirical views before the Imperial conference is resumed next summer.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Hurtubise.]

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): In rising to make my first speech in this house I am perhaps in the mental state of Macbeth, as described by Master William Shakespeare when he said:

> My functions are smothered in surmise, and nothing is but what is not.

The House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, is a strange place to a new member, and although it is called parliament it is perhaps the last place in which a new member, even if he be a lawyer, desires to speak. I spoke to the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. White) before the house met this afternoon and he advised me that whatever I had to say perhaps I had better first try it out on the dog; but as I have no dog I am sorry to say that I shall have to try it out in the first instance and inflict it upon this parliament.

It is a very strange thing indeed for me to be here this evening. It is rather in the nature of a prophecy and also rather in the nature of the realization of a dream. Perhaps I shall discover it is a nightmare. But about sixteen years ago there was a young friend who, with myself, was preparing to go overseas. We came up to this hill one evening about 1915 when parliament was in memorable session. We stood overlooking the Ottawa river, and my friend, who is no longer here, turned to me and said: "You know, I have often dreamed that some day I shall be here in parliament. I don't know that I shall ever realize that dream, but if I am not here perhaps you will be." Mr. Speaker, it is one of the mysteries of mysteries that my friend, William George McIntyre, now lies asleep on Vimy Ridge, while I am here speaking in his place and, I hope, in the same spirit in which he spoke when he thus addressed me some sixteen years ago. I have wondered, especially since coming here, just what was in my friend's mind. I believe it was this: I believe he felt, as we all did in those days, that the unity of our country was the great thing; not only the unity of our country but the unity of the world. It was that principle for which we fought, and it is that principle for which I trust I am here now.

Reflecting on that sentiment, I am prompted to make a protest. I desire here and now, as a young member, to protest against the kind of utterances that were made prior to the last election by certain hon. members then supporting the Liberal party. I refer by name to the Hon. Senator Lemieux, the Hon. Senator Casgrain and the Hon. Senator Dandurand. I say that I believe it becomes me to protest on this occasion against the utterances which were made by these gentlemen just prior to July 28 last when, in the frenzy of fear lest they be driven from power, they tried to divide Canada again, in spite of the principles of unity which they had advocated at other times and which they should have advocated then. I did intend, Mr. Speaker, to bring their words here before parliament, to register them here in the records of this house, and protest against this sort of language as the kind of thing that ought not to be in this country. But I do not believe they deserve that much notice. I think, it would be far better for us and all Canada to remember the words and the work of Thomas d'Arcy McGee, the great patriot orator and martyr of confederation. Perhaps I can indicate to the house better what I mean if I quote what Thomas d'Arcy McGee said in 1861:

> We Irishmen, Protestants and Catholics alike, born in a land of religious controversy, should never forget that we now live and act in a land of the fullest religious and civil liberty. All we have to do is each for himself, to keep down dissensions, which can only weaken, impoverish and keep back the country; each for himself to do all he can to increase its strength, its wealth and its reputation; each for himself, you and you gentlemen, and all of us, to welcome every talent, to take every invention, to cherish every gem of art, to foster every gleam of authorship, to honour every acquirement and every natural gift, to lift ourselves to the level of our destinies, to rise above all low limitations and narrow circumscriptions, to cultivate that true catholicity of spirit which embraces all creeds, all classes and all races, in order to make our boundless province, so rich in known and unknown resources, a great, new northern nation.

When I quote the words of Thomas d'Arcy McGee I cannot help reflecting and wondering why he who was once the hon. Speaker of this house should forget that spirit and should propagate in the province of Quebec words animated and conceived against that very spirit.

There is an incident which Mr. McGee quotes in his confederation addresses, where he speaks about the establishment of the first Protestant church in Montreal. He said that about the year 1790 the Presbyterians, both Canadian and American, organized themselves into a religious community in Montreal. They had no church, but they were given quarters by the Recollet Fathers there. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, a situation like that, a situation where the disciples of John Knox were given by the Recollet Fathers in Montreal quarters wherein to carry out their religious observances. There was recorded in the minutes of that first Presbyterian organization their thanks to the Recollet Fathers, and it is recorded that they presented them with fifty-six pounds of wax tapers and one hogshead of wine as a thank offering for what they had done for the First Presbyterian communicn in Montreal. Thomas d'Arcy McGee in speaking of that said:

> Gentlemen, I think this is an incident which could not be recorded and is perhaps not recorded in the annals of any other country.

I stand here a supporter of the Conservative party in this house and I am pleased and gratified beyond expression that we have supporting this government so many hon. members from the old province of Quebec. I am unable to speak their beautiful language; but I say to them as a British Canadian that I am glad they are here; I am glad that the long night is over and that the harvest has come to those who have stood for Canadian unity and for a union of the two races. Not only am I pleased, but I know the country is pleased and I believe it is a great thing for Canada.

If Your Honour will permit me, I desire to comment on the remarks of the right hon. gentleman, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). In the great oration which he delivered he seemed to have the fervour of Edmund Burke, but I believe he had also the satire of Sheridan. The right hon. gentleman spoke for four and a half hours, and it is remarkable to me, representing as I do the constituency of Selkirk, when I recall that the communist candidate in that riding also spoke for four and a half hours. I believe he was just about as successful as was the right hon. gentleman in his diatribe against the Prime Minister. I do not believe it to be incumbent upon me, nor should I deem it wise, to analyze too freely or too carelessly some of the utterances made by the right hon. gentleman, but there is one in particular to which I desire to make reference.

I believe he was quoting the words of Sheridan when he said:

"I think, father," said he, "that many men who are called great patriots in the House of Commons, are great humbugs."

Perhaps it would be invidious for me to analyze that statement or to ask this house if it believed that there is any hon. member here who is a humbug, or if it is quite sure who are the patriots.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Patriotism always means sacrifice, and I make that statement in spite of the laughter of the hon. gentlemen from Manitoba. I repeat again, patriotism entails sacrifice, but I do not know that the right hon. gentleman who used that term has made that sacrifice usually coupled with patriotism.

The implication contained in the remarks of the right hon. gentleman were nothing more than this: that the Prime Minister and leader of this house made proposals at the recent Imperial conference which were humbug.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): If my wits do not leave me altogether, I believe before I have finished that I will be able to prove that that term has boomeranged back to the leader of the opposition. I believe it will be made plain to everybody that the man who introduced that word in this house was himself the humbug.

With Your Honour's permission I would like to quote from an article by Mr. John L. Garvin, which appeared in the London Observer of October 12, 1930. Speaking of the Imperial conference, Mr. Garvin said:

On Wednesday the conference assembled at the foreign office to get down to business. The overseas statesmen spoke with the unprecedented frankness required at this juncture. One and all they explained the only policy that can be useful to them and to us—extended preference for British manufacturers in their markets and broad reciprocal preference for dominion staples in ours. Other methods may be supplementary but they must be subsidiary. Nothing but preference all round can establish a foundation for the closer economic cooperation of the empire.

Will hon. members please note these words:

Mr. R. B. Bennett for Canada led the line.

Then all the other prime ministers of the self-governing dominions were behind him. I would much rather take the word of Mr. John L. Garvin, the greatest living journalist, than I would the word of the right hon. gentleman opposite. In the issue of the Observer of the following week, Mr. Garvin says:

[Mr. J. H. Stitt.]

The Daily Herald's proclamation does not mean the cabinet's no to Canada, it means the government's no to all the dominions. It is the dead hand of the old doctrinaire Liberalism laid upon the life of the empire and upon all that is fresh and growing and creative in the life of labour. Mr. Bennett of Canada is a Conservative appealing for change; Mr. Scullin, the Australian premier, is as good a labour man as any of them. Every child knew that reciprocal preference for Dominion staples in the mother country and for British manufacturers overseas, would be the fundamental proposition of the conference.

Will hon. gentlemen opposite please note the words:

The Daily Herald's proclamation does not mean the cabinet's no to Canada, it means the government's no to all the dominions.

There was a time in the history of this country when Canadians led the line. As one of those Canadians who had a humble task in the line, I am happy to state that I followed the right hon. the Prime Minister and he certainly led the line and showed that Canada was the foremost of the overseas self-governing dominions.

Who was it used the word "humbug" in the first instance? If he will listen to me, I will direct my remarks to the right hon. the leader of the opposition. I believe it was Mr. Thomas, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, who used this word, and I would ask to be permitted to quote from pages 30 and 31 of the Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire. The following are in part the words of Mr. Thomas:

You do not render them a service by running away from the facts. They—

Speaking of the dominion prime ministers—

—are prepared as we are prepared, to face them. They value these things and say so, but they much prefer to face the facts. We do not discuss these matters with them as partisans. Mr. Bennett did not come here as a Tory leader. Mr. Forbes did not come as a Liberal leader. Mr. Scullin did not come as a Labour leader. They all came as representatives of the dominions prepared to subordinate their particular party advantage and to examine the whole thing in the light of what is best for all.

Would you please note these words, which are those of Mr. Thomas:

The idea that they went away bitterly disappointed only exists in the minds of those who know nothing about the matter.

I believe that is almost sufficient criticism of the diatribe that was offered against the Prime Minister. Mr. Thomas continues:

It is not true, and I still say that whenever it opens, the Ottawa conference will have the benefit of the examination of a hundred and one matters which will be to the advantage of all concerned. We have said that we will go there free to examine every proposal on its merits and not blindly say we accept it before we know what it is. That is not the way to run a government.

The best evidence that we have is that of Mr. Thomas himself who compliments the overseas prime ministers upon the manner in which they presented their case. If the attitude of the Prime Minister and his supporters at the Imperial conference was one really inimical to the welfare of the empire, and if hon. gentlemen opposite are real patriots, if they really have at heart the welfare of the empire, would they stand there hour after hour and day after day trying to engender in the minds of the people of Canada and possibly in the minds of the statesmen overseas the idea that the action of our representatives there was inimical to the welfare of the empire? Is that conceivable? It is not logical. The Prime Minister's admirable defence has been heard by all in this house. May I refer again to the words of Mr. Jebb, the historian of the Imperial conference, who said that the policy of the present Prime Minister was practically the same as that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I notice that hon. gentlemen opposite took umbrage at that statement. The ex-Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) devoted almost his entire speech to an effort to explain to the house that the policy of the present Prime Minister was not that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but I refer the house particularly to the words of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I believe he knows something about imperial affairs. What were his words? As reported at page 87 of this year's Hansard, the hon. member for Labelle said that the Prime Minister was right when he said that he practically imitated the policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Does that not reduce the whole argument of hon. gentlemen opposite to an absurdity? If what the Prime Minister proposed was humbug, then if Mr. Scullin and the other prime ministers stood behind our leader they were all humbugs, and if, as the hon. member for Labelle says, the Prime Minister's policy was practically an imitation of that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, we have this unwitting comment of the present leader of the Liberal party in this house, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposals were humbug. That is analyzing logically the attitude of the right hon. the leader of the opposition.

When one considers the argument presented by the leader of the opposition, it is best described by a story told by Mr. Peter McArthur some years ago in Toronto. When I heard this lengthy speech of the ex-Prime Minister I said to myself: It must be a phenomenon; it is absolutely phenomenal, with the country in the state in which it is, that a man charged with the responsibility of leading His Majesty's loyal opposition should stand up for four and a half hours in the house and criticize, criticize, criticize, the policy of the Prime Minister, and notwithstanding the extremity in which we find ourselves, offer practically no remedy for the solution of our ills. Let me give the house the story of Peter McArthur. He was a good Liberal, and he was relating the story of a coloured preacher who was fond of using the word "phenomenon." After he had preached a rather lengthy discourse, he was proceeding home with one of his parishioners, and he said to his parishioner, "Did you notice the use of the word phenomenon?" The parishioner replied, "I sure did, but I do not know what it means." The preacher said, "I will tell you what it means." He put his hand into his pocket, and took out a nickel, saying, "That nickel is not a phenomenon." He pointed to a cow in the field and he said, "That cow is not a phenomenon." He also pointed to a thistle and he said, "That thistle is not a phenomenon. Do you hear that lark singing? That is not a phenomenon. But if that cow should try to chew the cud on that nickel and sit down on that thistle and then try to sing like a lark, it would be a phenomenon." It occurs to me that that definition of the word "phenomenon" accurately describes the attitude of the leader of the opposition towards the Prime Minister in his work at the Imperial conference.

I heard the words of the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) when he almost shed tears over the British Empire. I believe he said in effect that the British Empire was a soul, a spirit, and he practically wept tears over it. I could not help thinking that if the right hon. gentleman's leader had been in his true preelection frame of mind he would have stood up, taken his pocket handkerchief from his coat-tail, wiped the tears from his face and said, "Me, too, I stand first for the British Empire." Then, perhaps, in order that the right hon. gentleman and the ex-Minister of Justice might be consoled, I thought in imagination possibly the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) would rise in his best sepulchral manner, hold his hands over the two distressed hon. gentlemen weeping for the British Empire, and say, "Hush ye, hush ye, little pet ye, or the Black Douglas, he will get ye."

It seems to me that some of the addresses which have been presented to the house are very much like the bushel of chaff that contained a couple of grains of wheat which, after you searched for them through the bushel of chaff and found them, were not worth the finding; they were full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. Perhaps one of the most remarkable spectacles that we have had in the house was the leader of the opposition working up his eloquence in his apostrophe to freedom in support of his friend the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) who, I believe, is now famous in the house for his pair of white socks. Sometimes it occurs to me that I can express myself a little better in rhyme than in prose. I thought that the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Weyburn were on a rocky shore with tall cat-tails growing round and the evening falling about them. These would probably be the appropriate words of the right hon. gentleman in his apostrophe to freedom—and hon. members must realize of course that the hon. member for Weyburn would be there acting as flag boy with the right hon. gentleman:

O Freedom, sweet Freedom, we weep dear for thee,
We're driven, marooned on the Loyalist rocks,
We fly in high heaven our flag dear for thee,
How bravely it floats—'tis a white pair of socks.

I think, Mr. Speaker, as the black mantle of night fell over the hon. gentlemen in their rocky island that the frogs in the adjoining waters would take up the call, and probably a very large old bull frog as he jumped into the water would say, "Hoom-bug! hoom-bug! hoom-bug!"

Mr. VALLANCE: I wonder how Hansard will take that down?

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that much of the speaking in this house is of no avail.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Representing as I do the great constituency of Selkirk I wish to make some small contribution towards a solution of the problems which beset this country. In my constituency of Selkirk there is being worked out the problems of the new Canadian nation by representatives of almost every race we have in this country. We are all poor people. During the election campaign and since I have been in this house, by word, letter, telegram I have heard nothing other than the still, sad music of humanity. These people work with their hands. I want to thank, if I may, the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) who said some years ago that there was a great deal said in parliament which to her mind did not touch the real points at issue. It seemed to her that we should be here honestly and sincerely trying to solve the problems of the country and trying to represent those people who worked with their hands. There are no millionaires in my constituency, not a single one. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, as a Conservative—

An hon. MEMBER: Make it a Tory.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): All right, a Tory if my hon. friend wishes. I want to thank the right hon. gentleman who leads this government and to thank the government for the magnificent, direct and quick way in which they tried to grapple with the serious problem of unemployment.

An hon. MEMBER: "Tried" is right.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): A courageous effort was made, Mr. Speaker, and made by a gentleman whom many people have called a millionaire, a man who in the minds of many people in my constituency would not be able to grapple with the problems of the poor. I say this government is here to-day and that we hon. members on this side of the house are supporting the administration because there was a courageous and heroic presentation made before the electorate, and because there was a man who would make a promise and at least endeavour to carry it out.

There has been a lot of talk about a one man government. Well, I am pleased to support this government even if it is called a one man government, rather than a government which might adequately be described as a no man government. The great difference, Mr. Speaker, between the right hon. gentleman who leads this house to-day and the right hon. gentleman who led the house in the last parliament is the difference between five cents and twenty million dollars. I make this statement in dead earnest.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): My hon. friends on the other side of the house may laugh. I want to say however that the poor in this country were crying for bread. In my constituency during the last winter there would have been many cases of starvation and privation had it not been for the courageous attitude of this government and the vote of $20,000,000. When I appeared before my constituents asking for a brief I said that I believed in the principle that a lawyer should never ask for a brief. On that occasion however I did ask for a brief, the greatest brief a lawyer ever had, the brief to represent and plead the case of the poor in the temple of the people. The case of the poor has been heard and I hope will continue to be heard by this government. Look at the position of agriculture in western Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, look at it.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Yes, what would it have been if hon. gentlemen opposite had been sitting on this side of the house? My hon. friends talk about losing the market for wheat. During the last parliament a member named Mr. Fansher rose in the house and said to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, "What about our wheat?"

An hon. MEMBER: Well, what about it?

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): What about it? The answer at that time was, "It can look after itself." My hon. friend however got the answer of the Canadian electorate at the last election. What were the economics of the ex-Minister of Finance and the economics of Mr. Crerar? They said, "These are world conditions; we cannot do anything about them. All we need is another 500,000,000 bushels of wheat." That is a sample of the economics preached on the opposite side of the house. Those are the economics hon. members preached to the people of this country, and they received their answer. The answer is that there is a government in power pledged to deal with these problems directly and in a practical way.

I notice that some of the hon. ex-ministers opposite are laughing. As I have listened to this debate I have realized, that particularly by the ex-ministers, the problems of this country are not taken seriously. They are treated as a joke. Our problems were so treated before the last election and that is one of the reasons why the hon. gentlemen are out of power to-day. I wonder how the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, had he been in this house to-day, would have described the four and one-half hour speech of the right hon. the leader of the opposition. I think he would have described it something like this, that it was the distressed and dismal diatribe of a disappointed and dispossessed demagogue. I have listened to speeches by the United Farmer members in this house and in my opinion they have made a real contribution to the debate. Following the long speech of the right hon. gentleman I looked at that honest corner of the chamber and there was not a smile on the face of any hon. member there. That is how the speech of the right hon. leader of the opposition was received.

A few days ago I visited my old home at Smith's Falls. I went to the gentleman who gave me my first shave, and may I say that that is quite a few years ago. He said to me, "Jim, are you in parliament?" I said to him, "Yes, I am." He said "Do you listen to all those speeches?" I said, "Yes, I do." He said, "And did you listen to that four and a half hour speech?" I said, "I did, every word of it." What was his answer? He said, "It is no good for the country; it is not human; it is not human." I do not know whether my time has expired or not—

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, go ahead.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I want to say that I am here to support the government. I am pleased to be in a position to support it and to be a follower of a man of the calibre and character of the right hon. gentleman who went over to England and led the line. In the words of General Jan Smuts, "Humanity has struck its tents and it is on the march." If we are to solve the problems of this country, if we are not to have to scrap all our forms of democracy, call them Liberalism or Progressivism, or whatever you like; if we are to overcome our difficulties we must realize that humanity has struck its tents and that we are on the march. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is impossible for me to answer the letters of my constituents clamouring for work. In the course of his speech, the right hon. leader of the opposition, pointed his finger at the Prime Minister and said: "Remember how we handled the affairs of the country, remember how we balanced all our budgets out of taxation. Don't you dare do anything else, don't you try to solve the problem now confronting the Dominion by means of a capital loan." I say to the right hon. leader of the opposition that that is the dead hand of laissez-faire Liberalism, and if the Prime Minister of this country is to be guided by it I do not believe that our problems will be solved. I speak as an honest man. I hoped if I had time, to plead the cause of agriculture and labour as reflected in my constituency.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, last July, in the middle of a year of commercial and financial distress and of world-wide political upheaval, the King government appealed to the people. It was of course defeated. The Conservative party won success by insisting that its chief, now the Prime Minister, had a cure for unemployment, that he had a stimulant for the restoration of industry, and that his agricultural policy would enrich the wheat producers and the farmers to the extent of making them millionaires.

Eight months have gone by. Has unemployment been cured, or has it reached its maximum? No. In Canada, as in the countries of Europe, the year 1931 presses forward with its train of financial and political difficulties, and harassed by storms. Everywhere the number of unemployed is increasing; in Great Britain, in Germany, in Italy, in Belgium, in Holland, in Czechoslovakia, in Poland, in the United States, in Australia; and even in Canada, under a Conservative government that promised so much, our unemployed still represent about 25 per cent of the membership of the labour unions. Is it not true that agriculture is in a precarious condition, and that manufacturing industry also is endangered by the fall of prices? At this very moment the Canadian farmer is obliged to sacrifice his commodities at prices ridiculously low, so low as not to meet the cost of production. What will become of him? Where do the Bennett government and its supporters stand with their promises to help agriculture, to bring it back to a degree of prosperity even greater than that which it enjoyed under the Liberal government from 1922 until the sad hours of the worldwide economic crisis of 1930? What is the farmer going to do next summer to meet his farming expenses? He finds it hard to get the kind of labour necessary to carry on his farm, and by that time, without foreign markets in prospect in which to sell his crops, and with his local market crowded, he will be in an even more desperate condition than he is at the present time.

And what about our manufacturing industries? Is not the manufacturer to-day sacrificing his surplus stocks on the home market, stocks which he has been holding in his warehouse for a better price? For the past two months he has been throwing his goods on the domestic market at a constantly receding price. Everything is being sold at a sacrifice. As a consequence our industrial plants are not working full time. The budget soon to be brought down will enable us to judge whether the government will be able to give to Canada that era of prosperity promised by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his supporters during the recent campaign. We very much doubt if that promise will be redeemed. Certainly within the next month we shall be given the opportunity of discussing our friend's budget innovation, called high protection. I am one of those who believe that Canada, from a moral, social and commercial point of view, should be part of the whole civilized world; our country should follow the wide road travelled by humanity, and not isolate itself; we should cooperate with the nations of the world in a spirit of good will; we should obtain commercial exchange of products in order to revive our export trade which shows a constant decrease. As proof of this may I quote the latest official figures of the National Revenue department. These figures constitute a barometer of our commercial condition:

(a) Net decrease in customs and excise revenue for October, 1930, $11,168,474.04.
(b) Net decrease for November, 1930, $7,756,012.61.
(c) Net decrease for December, 1930, $7,570,034.71.
(d) Net decrease for January, 1931, $4,590,119.12.
(e) Net decrease for February, 1931, $6,775,145.91.

What will be the net decrease for the past month? Our two railways and our maritime transport companies are looking for more business, which is absolutely needed. Our government railway and merchant marine showed a total deficit of $13,694,008.93 at the end of their last fiscal year.

Hon. gentlemen opposite contend that prosperity is coming back. I see it in their speeches, Mr. Speaker, but it is in no way an accomplished fact nor is there any likelihood of that statement becoming true for some time. Are not the incomes of our professional and business men decreasing? Have not the stock exchanges in Canada been visited by violent declines and real hurricanes which have taken away, piece by piece, the fortunes of the rich, the savings of the professional and business men and even the savings of the imprudent workingmen. The Prime Minister has announced through the press of this country that this year, under his administration, Canada will have a deficit of $100,000,000. With a policy of protection and isolation, Canada, an industrial and farming nation, now enters into a period of budget deficits, unfortunately, to replace the surpluses of the King government from 1924 to 1930. When the Liberal party relinquished power in 1930 the government showed a surplus over all expenditures of $44,506,000. During that period of Liberal administration there was also a reduction of the colossal debt contracted by the Conservative party from September, 1911, to December, 1921, so surely it is time to say: Is it not evident that, at times, false doctrines appear to be true?

On reading the newspapers, or European, Canadian and American reviews we see that the anxious world has turned its eyes towards

New York and that land of high protection, the United States. Even with the high tariff protection existing in that country, the condition of the United States has become worse Bankruptcies have increased by 46 per cent; iron production has decreased by 37 per cent; steel production has also decreased by 35 per cent; the consumption of cotton has declined by 37 per cent and salaries have been decreased by 28 per cent. These are the consequences to-day of that high United States tariff protection. What are we to think of the future of our Dominion now that we are to have a similar protective policy which will be applied by the present government, after the experience at the special session of last September? The Canadian people will have the opportunity to pronounce themselves again and will find the proper remedy. Then the Liberal party will receive the justice it deserves, and which it did not receive in 1930 because the people were deceived.

The people of Canada are now asking the Bennett government to end unemployment as the Prime Minister and his elected candidates promised to do, because unemployment is financially ruining Canada as a whole as well as the individual provinces and municipalities, which are obliged to help the unemployed. The Prime Minister, who is also Minister of Finance, has answered and will answer again with an increased tariff. He administers a non-patent medicine which is being used at this time by almost all countries. I refer to increased duties, the closure of our border lines to individuals and to merchandise, the laws against dumping and the artificial increase in prices, which is a temporary source of greater profits. These expedients are only attempts to cast off on someone else the weight of the evil which affects Canada as well as the other peoples of the world All the nations are using these expedients at the same time. They have not been useful to any nation, and the situation will be the same in Canada. Increased duties will be of no avail; at the most they will bring about an artificial prosperity which will last only for a few months. Time will soon tell.

Canada, with a higher tariff, inaugurated at the session last September, is isolating itself. We are witnessing the disappearance of the equilibrium between production and consumption. That can mean only failure. The Liberal party believes in the bringing together of Canada and the other nations of the world; a policy of cooperation must prevail. May I quote, in the French language, the appropriate words of a well known economist, Mr. Guglielmo Ferrero:

Il est évident qu'aucun peuple ne pourra à lui seul, en s'isolant, rétablir l'équilibre entre la production et la consommation. C'est encore un problème universel. Les cinq continents souffrent d'une maladie commune, et ils ne guériront qu'ensemble. Nous vivons dans une époque où la misère et la prospérité font avalanche. Le problème économique n'est pas d'ailleurs isolé; il est, lui aussi, lié étroitement à la paix.

Détruit violemment par la guerre, l'équilibre entre la production et la consommation ne pourra se rétablir sérieusement qu'à la suite d'une longue période de paix. Or la paix est aujourd'hui le plus universel des problèmes.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I leave to the right hon. Prime Minister for study and consideration some verses by Sully Prud'homme, a great French poet, which would seem to apply now. I will read them, as they were written, in the French language:

Viens! ne marche pas seul dans un jaloux sentier;
Mais suis les grands chemins que l'humanité foule;
Les hommes ne sont forts, bons, et justes qu'en foule.
Ils s'achèvent ensemble, aucun d'eux n'est entier.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Toronto-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I congratulate you on your elevation to your new position as first commoner among us. For some nine years I have had the privilege of being associated with you, sir, and during that time, in common with other members of this house, I have learned to love and admire not only you but the good lady who is so much thought of by members on all sides of this house. Your legal attainments, your soldierly bearing and your friendliness in days gone by to those of us who were somewhat younger, will not be forgotten, and our fondest hope is that you may be spared for many years to serve us in your present capacity.

With regard to the mover and the seconder of the address my position is rather unique. For four years I had the pleasure of sitting in this chamber with the member for North Grey who represented that constituency before the election of the young man who now occupies that position. I learned a great deal about North Grey; I had the privilege of speaking there on several occasions and of mixing with the people, and I came to know the hon. member (Mr. Porteous) long before he entered parliament. I say, sir, that we are happy to have him with us, and as one year succeeds another he will prove to be a valuable acquisition to this chamber.

In like manner, for some years I had the pleasure of being a seatmate of Mr. Doucet, a man from the land of Evangeline, from which we now have the present member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier). I learned at that time, sir, that what we had read of the great Canadians coming from that district was true, and I say to hon. members of this chamber and to you, Mr. Speaker, that what we have heard so far merely presages what we will hear in the future from the hon. member, whom I congratulate on the message which already he has left with us.

It would be nice to go on in this manner for some time, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I might congratulate the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) on the four and a half hour marathon speech which he delivered, and so on. But unfortunately the rules of the house restrict us to forty minutes, and if I might make a suggestion to the government in this regard it would be that on the clerk's table there might be a clock, divided into forty segments, so that those who have a peroration could time themselves and get it off their minds before the expiration of their time. I felt sorry the other day for the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart). He took over forty minutes and said little, and he found he did not have time for his peroration. We waited for it, and the probability is that in it he might have had something real to say.

One or two other members who have participated in the debate, are really the cause of my now saying a word or two. I would ask that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Blair) be paged, because I am going to say something in reply to him, inasmuch as he made a reference to Toronto. The hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor) is not in the chamber; I should like to see him too. And the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) also had something to say about Toronto; I should be glad to have him paged. But while we are waiting for these hon. gentlemen I might say a word or two in reference to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and what he had to advance in the interests of the country in this debate.

A good deal has been said about the days of prosperity during the regime of the government he led; a good deal has been said by the leader of the opposition about deficits and so forth. Let me ask this house one question: On whose budget has this country been operating up to September of the fiscal year just closed? Was it the May day budget that laid down the system of taxation from which revenues were going to be derived—revenues which were to take care of the running expenses of the country? Whose is the responsibility in this regard? Taxation measures should have been in the May day budget. I say to the leader of the opposition that we have not had a real budget in this house since the days of the late Mr. Fielding. The budget we had on May day last year was purely and simply a political budget. There was in it no estimate of the proposed expenditures or the proposed revenues, and this country found itself operating under that budget and heading for a deficit from the very day it came down in this chamber. And no one knows that better than does the leader of the opposition. He gave us statistics, lots of statistics; and he ended up his period at a very convenient point for himself, namely, the end of the fiscal year, March 31, 1930. But he had in his possession the figures up to the end of February of this year. If he did not want to use them why was he not fair, not only to his own members but to Canada, and give the figures he had at least until the end of July? Why stop a year ago? The leader of the opposition said, as reported at page 18 of Hansard:

> In short, a condition exists in this country at the moment the like of which, fortunately, it has not witnessed at any time heretofore in her history.

He was asked when he first noticed it, and he replied:

> It has been noticed by everyone since this administration came into office.

He knows in his heart that this is not a fair statement. He knows that these conditions were brought about to a large degree by a world situation. If he does not, let me refer him to some of the statements of his own followers. The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) says, as reported at page 236 of Hansard:

> I frankly and freely admit that the Conservative party in power to-day is not and cannot be held wholly responsible for the unhappy conditions that exist at the present time both in the matter of the lack of market for our farm products and in the matter of unemployment.

And the hon. member for Toronto West Centre had this to say:

> Whatever unemployment, whatever suffering exists in this country was due to world conditions. . . .

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) also had something to say. We are glad to see him back in the chamber again, restored to his usual health and vigour. He is reported:

> I have been asked many a time, is it the fault of the present government. Well, Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly frank I will say, no, in the main it is not. . . . They have been in power only a few months and they had neither the time nor the opportunity to go into the present situation in any large way.

These are the statements of hon. gentlemen surrounding the leader of the opposition, and he knew better than to make the statements he did make. World depression is with us; we all admit that. It is a cycle and seems to come after great world events. Go back to the days of a hundred and fifty years ago in the time of the Napoleonic wars and you will find the fact illustrated graphically in Goldman's Graphic Charts giving statistics with regard to world conditions. The year 1790 is used as the base in connection with wholesale commodity prices of all sorts of goods on the London auctions. The Napoleonic wars came on two years later, but using 1790 as the base, with the figure 100, we find that in 1800, after eight years of war, it had risen to 175. By 1809 it was 195 and by 1830, at the conclusion of the wars, it recedes again to 100, and lies along the base of 100 for some years until the advent of the Civil war, 1861-65, when it again moves from the figure 100 to as high as 215, receding again in 1875 to 100, and remaining pretty well on that base—a a little below at times, and occasionally a little above it—until 1912, when it moves to 110, and we find that with the advent of the great world war the wholesale commodity prices again reach the figure 215. And now they are receding.

These charts show that the same state of affairs has prevailed in each of these three periods, with this difference, that to-day we have the advantage of more than 100 years of modern civilization. We must be guided very carefully in getting back to pre-war conditions, and it is the duty of the government to see to it that they are so guided. We have a condition of cartels in the eastern hemisphere of Europe and Great Britain, in the lines of nearly all manufactured goods, these countries dumping their surplus on communities such as this. We have a condition of trusts in that gigantic nation to the south of us, which have a tendency to hold up the prices of nationally advertised goods and to control them. These conditions make it difficult for us to recede to the position to which we shall have to get back, which is something similar to pre-war conditions. Our people themselves, we find, are accustomed to the new luxuries they have had and will be slow to give them up. But little by little we shall have to get back to that pre-war state.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) a few days ago gave us a chart showing that products had receded in the agricultural line much faster than in other lines. It is true that agriculture is one of the first industries to suffer in our economic system; and when it does, the effect seems to permeate the whole country, bringing distress with it. But fortunately in this country the people of strongest fibre are to be found among the agriculturists, and you will find them to-day getting ready to put in their crops once more as they have done in years gone by. And with the fortitude and courage characteristic of them, assured that this country is guided by a strong government such as we have to-day, Canada, as no other country can, will come through this depression. Throughout my entire remarks, if I cannot do anything else, I wish to leave this one impression, that this Canada of ours is a grand and glorious place to live in, and I am very optimistic with regard to the future.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in the chart to which I have referred, showed that western grain prices had receded 59 per cent while the price of farm products had gone down 34 per cent. The right hon. leader of the opposition gave us figures with regard to our export trade and he would lead this country to believe that all our export trade is demoralized. Mr. Speaker, export trade is not always measured in dollars and cents; there is volume, there is the pounds, the barrels, the bushels and so on. Might I bring to the attention of this house the fact that Canada is still doing a very large volume of export trade and will continue to do so. I would like to put on record a few figures which I have obtained from the latest publications. These figures reveal that for the twelve months ended February, 1930, 1,679,740 barrels of apples were exported, while the total exports for the same period of this year amounted to 1,928,659 barrels. The total exports of fruits for last year amounted to $8,807,844 while this year they amounted to $9,506,360.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that the value?

Mr. HARRIS: Yes, that is the value. My wheat growing friend has asked a question and he will be interested to hear that for the twelve months ended February, 1930, the exports of wheat amounted to 186,621,084 bushels while for the twelve months ended February, 1931, they amounted to 215,939,942 bushels, a really substantial increase.

Mr. YOUNG: Would my hon. friend give us the price received?

Mr. HARRIS: The same increase applies to newsprint, lead, silver ore, silver bullion, zinc ores, nickel and so on.

My hon. friend from Winnipeg mentioned the reduction in the wholesale commodity prices, but when the factor of tonnage is considered I have no hesitation in making the assertion that in spite of the present world depression and the barriers which are being erected against our natural products, Canada's export trade for this year will equal in volume that of all other years. Our products are finding a place on the markets of the world and will continue to do so.

I am sorry the hon. member for Toronto West Centre is not in his seat because I believe a reply should be made to the statements he gave to this house. He complained about the unemployment situation and stated that it had not been relieved to the degree to which he would like to see it relieved. On page 309 of Hansard he says:

> In the latest official information furnished the press on March 11 we find that 228,351 individuals have been given employment and 3,975,355 man-days have been afforded to them from the commencement of operations under the Unemployment Relief Act up to February 28, 1931.

The hon. member stated that unemployment was just as acute as it ever has been, if not in fact worse. The hon. member who has just taken his seat made a similar statement and said that it was still down 25 per cent, or some such figure. My answer to the hon. members who sit behind the leader of the opposition is this: where would this country have been, how much more acute would have been the situation, had the people through a mistake put into power last july the "not a nickel" government? We know that the people realized that what was needed in Canada at that time was a man at the head of our democracy who would give action instead of platitudes, who would give work instead of statistics and who would give real leadership instead of imbecility and non-leadership.

The right hon. leader of the opposition had something to say in this regard, and in reply I would say that I was reminded of his stand while trying to put the children to bed after church on Sunday evening. We were singing that little nursery rhyme, "Ding Dong Bell, Pussy's in the Well," but I would like to change that to:

> Ding dong bell, Canada's in the well
> Who put her in? Little Willie King.

We might go a little further and say:

> Who'll pull her out? R. B. Bennett, no doubt.

The right hon. gentleman complains bitterly that we are not making haste. He wants to know where is the national highway, or what progress is being made with the St. Lawrence development. He did not think so much about that during the nine years he was in power. He asked: Where is the aid to agriculture, technical education, old age pensions and so on? Little by little these things are coming.

The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) made an interesting contribution to this debate the other day. He mentioned the city of Toronto and said he regretted that one hundred mechanics, carpenters, bricklayers, technicians and contractors had been guaranteed employment in soviet Russia. Arrangements for their sailing had been made, this party being composed of Russians, Canadians, Frenchmen, Finlanders and others—one hundred men out of a population of 600,000. It might be just as well for Canada if a few more people possessing the idea that civilization would be best benefited by the ideals worked into the fabric of the present Russian constitution would take a trip abroad and stay there. Perhaps we could suggest a few hon. members from the other side who might go along. I hesitate to suggest that the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) might even go as a chaperone. Then, in order to make sure that he would be right with his own constituency, the hon. member said: Most of us in the province of Quebec felt as proud as did the Prime Minister when he heard that he was breaking off trade negotiations with Russia. Consistency, thou art a virtue, but where is the virtue in that statement of the hon. member? Then the same hon. gentleman—I do not seem to be able to get his attention—said: We ought to have some real economy in this government, we should get rid of some of these departments, the Department of the Interior, for instance. He did not think of that when the natural resources were being turned back while his old administration was in power. He did not think of that when the charwomen were drawing their last pay envelopes. The hon. member—he still will not give me any attention—went on to say that we were going to have a new tariff board.

An hon. MEMBER: He cannot hear you.

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Mr. HARRIS: He said that he was afraid there might be some partisanship in the formation of that board. He did not think of that when the late administration chose as chairman of its tariff advisory board the present partisan incumbent for Ontario (Mr. Moore). Consistency, thou art a virtue, but I would like to know where the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay keeps his consistency.

We have his attention now. We have also the attention of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). Among other things the right hon. gentleman had something to say about old age pensions. I was sorry to see a man of his calibre stoop to this method of insinuating in the way he did when, as is reported on page 21 of this year's Hansard, he made this statement in regard to old age pensions:

> Every old man and old woman who had a vote was made to believe that he and she were going to get full pensions as soon as this parliament met, but now they are told that they will get it as soon as the current economic situation warrants.

Let me couple with him on that occasion the hon. member for North Wellington, who seems to know a good deal about old age pensions. In this regard I want to be kind to the honourable, ethical doctor. I am referring now to the speech he made away back last September. If he thought he was wrong, he had plenty of opportunity to square himself with the public. I waited, listened to another speech by him in the house, and still he did not correct himself. Therefore to-night I shall have something to say on the subject of his ideas on old age pensions. As reported at page 134 of Hansard of September, 1930, he said:

> I do not think any persons in my district received an old age pension without being distinctly led to understand that they would lose it if they voted the wrong way.

This was playing on the feelings of those of our citizens who have given of their best to further the interests of Canada, many of them during the pioneer days in different parts of the country. This sort of appeal does not in my opinion find a response on the part of the real Canadian people. He was a new member, he used the privileges of the house and he had a score or more of editorials in his local press brought to his attention, giving him an opportunity to retract statements he had made. As reported on page 133 of Hansard of last session, he said:

> The widows' and orphans' fund was interfered with. I do not believe such statements were true, yet the influence came, as it were, from Toronto; that idea seemed to permeate the riding and it was very hard to offset it.

He said that when they wanted to get votes in North Wellington, they had to go out like Nicodemus in the dark, and try to secure them. Then he goes on to speak about the condition of the farmers. He also said:

> In the district which I represent are a great many comparatively poor farmers. Many farms are being sold for tax purposes. The farmers are in extreme need.

The hon. gentleman, when he made these representations, was from one end of his constituency to the other the subject of editorials. The Palmerston Spectator had this to say to him:

> Doctor Blair, member of parliament for North Wellington, was telling the members of the House of Commons that intimidation was practised in this riding during the recent election. Citizens of all political shades will oppose those practices. It is not common knowledge that such conditions as stated by Doctor Blair exist in this riding and they will await with interest full particulars regarding the charges which he has made.
> We believe the electors of this riding have a right to a full knowledge of conditions as they actually exist and we believe it is up to Doctor Blair to fully explain his remarks in the house.

In the Fergus News-Record they say:

> These charges are serious.

And so on. I have not time to read all these editorials, but I have them under my hand. In the face of this accusation the old age pension board for the county of Wellington makes this reply:

> That in view of the alleged serious charges made by Doctor J. K. Blair, member of parliament for North Wellington, on the floor of the house during the recent emergency session, as reported in the public press of the county: "that he did not think that any persons in his district received an old age pension without being distinctly led to understand that they would lose the pension if they voted the wrong way," we the members of the old age pension board for the county of Wellington feel that the above allegations are a very grave reflection on the integrity or uprightness of the county representatives on the local board, and the secretary is hereby authorized at this our first meeting since these charges appeared, to request Doctor Blair to substantiate his statement or publicly apologize to the board.
> Old Age Pension Board for the County of Wellington.
> Udney Richardson, Chairman.
> R. J. Holtom.
> William Whitelaw.
> George W. Dodge.
> James Beattie, Secretary.

I say to the hon. member that he has privileges in the house, but those privileges are not here to be abused. He has the right when he makes reply to back up his statements with real facts. I rather thought he was going to do that a day or two ago when he again spoke in this chamber, but he followed the same line of attack as he had done before, offering no apology in the face of all these editorials. But something was forthcoming afterwards. It was a letter written to his constituents. I have a copy of it in my hand, and it is headed, "House of Commons, Ottawa, March 23, 1931," and addressed "Cheer up Henry." It reads:

Dear Sir:

We are having lovely weather here, and we sure are having a lively session. We are working real hard, and there is plenty of work to do, but I enjoy it very much.

I have a lot to learn. I have a considerable advantage over some because of my education. I do not require to have problems worked out for me that arise in mathematics, but in questions of opinions and logic the answer is not quite so plain as it is in arithmetic.

I spoke for 35 minutes the other day to the speech from the throne. I was requested to do so by the Hon. Mackenzie King, and after I had finished he came back and shook hands and congratulated me, remarking that I did real well, and that he saw in me some splendid timber for new debates, so that cheered up my drooping spirits, because I was not too well pleased with my own remarks. I tried to lay Mr. Bennett's promises before him regarding agriculture, and I appealed to him to help the farmers in whatever way he deemed best.

The room and crowd is so large here, it is not like speaking in Arthur, and it takes some nerve. Mr. Sinclair was here the fourth year before he gave his maiden speech. I am too impetuous to remain that long, especially as I think the people are not getting a fair deal.

I will drop a line again later. Hoping you are all well, I am,

Yours truly,

Jno. K. Blair, M.P.

I rather apologize for occupying the time of the house with this particular matter, but statements of this kind, which have no basis in fact, should not be made in the house. A member should not exercise his privilege in the house in that way. When the hon. member says that the former member did not speak in this chamber for four years, that is not a fact. The hon. member says that he is good at arithmetic, but his arithmetic is all wrong. The gentleman who formerly represented North Wellington took his seat on February 5, 1925, and he spoke on a budget debate on March 6, 1928. Is that four years? He raised a question in the house in 1927. Does twenty-five from twenty-seven leave four? He spoke in the committee on agriculture the first time he was on that committee. Is that four years? I say to the hon. member for North Wellington: Your arithmetic is wrong. You have got a very wrong conception of your duty in this house to your constituents. I say to the hon. member for North Wellington that he will learn before he is here very long that there is a time to speak and a time to bridle his tongue. You will learn that there is a time to give service to your constituents in committee as well as an opportunity to waste the time of this House of Commons. You will learn there are common decencies in vogue in this chamber; you will learn that your constituents expect nation-wide views as well as picayune local politics; you will learn we expect statements backed by facts; you will learn that it is undesirable to inspire or inculcate into the minds of your constituents a distrust in democratic forms of government. You will learn that there are some ethics in politics as well as in the medical profession. You will learn, sir, that your wonderful educational attainments which were of such great advantage to you over other hon. members in this chamber are outweighed many many times by the small picayune frame of mind in which you address yourself to the problems which come for attention in this chamber.

An hon. MEMBER: So will you.

Mr. HARRIS: My hon. friend from North Wellington will probably learn to accept congratulations in modesty from his leader. He will learn that perhaps the real timber is not all found in this chamber but that some is still in the maple bushes back in North Wellington. Concerning the hon. member who on a previous occasion occupied the seat of my hon. friend I doubt if there is one man who will rise in his place and say that that member was not the image of the best in Canada. Was he not the mirror of his own constituency? Was he not beloved by all members who sat on both sides of this house? To reflect on a former member is in my humble judgment a misdemeanor for which the hon. member at present, representing the constituency of North Wellington will have ample opportunity of making amends; or, as his own newspapers ask him to do, he should either substantiate his statements or apologize for making them.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have trespassed on the time of the house so long in this regard. Let me say that so far as Canada as a whole is concerned this government is making rapid progress with its great task. Canada is the only country in the empire, yea I believe in the civilized world, in which to-day industries have taken on new hands. Old factories are being renovated and enlarged; vacant buildings are being rehabilitated for new lines of production and enterprise. Our good farmers, even those in North Wellington who are so afraid of being sold for taxes, are planning to put in as big a crop as they have done before. I would say that sixty per cent are not worrying about this parliament and perhaps do not know that it is in session. They are plowing their furrows; they are hoeing their rows, and they have faith in the country which has done so much for them. There is in their breasts and in the breasts of all Canadians to a greater degree than in any other part of the civilized world a hope and courage that in that final analysis will weigh heavily in the economic plans of world affairs. We see to-day processions of new industries coming not only from the United States but from the mother country. Employment has been extended to a quarter of a million of wage earners. Sixty-five American manufacturers are establishing branches in the Dominion and many other negotiations are in progress. Time and again the statement is made that these industries are located here on account of the policy of the present administration. Canadians are returning from the republic to the south and side by side with them are others coming to this land of opportunity. Since the beginning of the economic depression the development of Canada has far surpassed that of any other country. We are seeing the beginning of greater things. Step by step we are fast getting out of the present depression and side by side with the mother country and other parts of the empire we are making real, genuine, sound progress. So long as this party is in power we will not only see the empire retain its place in the sun but we will see our glorious empire go on from point to point, as she has done in the last thousand years, continuing to be the greatest agency for good that civilization has ever known.

Mr. L. DUBOIS (Nicolet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have this opportunity of raising my voice in the midst of this imposing assembly, as one who speaks for the tillers of the soil. You will allow me to repeat, after one of our great men, that my first speech in this house will be made in the language of my forefathers; thus, in my turn, I acknowledge the principle of the official status of the French tongue, immortalized in the statutes of our Dominion and to which a fitting monument has been erected in the Baldwin-Lafontaine memorial which adorns the northern corner of Parliament Hill. This monument must guide us, like the polar star, in all matters of language and of race between the two important elements who go to make up the Canadian nation.

Like those who have preceded me I find it my pleasant duty to congratulate, in their excellent effort, the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I trust it will not be held against me if I congratulate in a special way the mover of the address, my hon. friend from Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier) for having delivered the first part of his speech in our mother-tongue. What deep pleasure he must have afforded his illustrious forebears; how they must have thrilled with joy on hearing within these portals the resonant syllables of the tongue they loved so well; what pride they must have felt, they who had strewn with shattered hopes the bitter road along which, with faltering steps, they straggled into exile. And the hon. member has not lost any of the typical characteristics of his ethnic group: listening to him I recognized the accents heard on the shores of the Madawaska, at Grand-Pré, at Pubnico and at Shédiac I have but one regret, that I cannot congratulate him on his political allegiance.

My next duty, before going on with the debate, is to offer my sincerest congratulations to our worthy Speaker in his efforts in the study of French, since the special session. Last fall, Mr. Speaker, we all considered you a distinguished gentleman; to-day we realize that the distinguished gentleman is, moreover, a broad-minded Canadian. You are deserving of the highest praise for undertaking the study of French at your age; and your study of our tongue will go much further towards the maintenance of national unity than the last speech of the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull).

It seems to me that our problems of domestic economy are sufficiently burdensome without launching into debates like that instigated by the hon. member, and without entering into disputes that may prove too forceful for both groups. I do not intend to dwell at any length on this question; without giving answer to the untruthful charges of fanaticism levelled at my party by the hon. member for Regina, I send this bugle call to my fellow French-Canadians in Saskatchewan: "My compatriots, 'way out there, fight on, with all your ardour and with all your courage. But let the fight be waged with loyalty. It is not only your right to struggle, it is your duty, for three centuries of Canadian history look down upon you. You owe it also to your persecutors who, sooner or later, will be forced to recognize the importance of French culture in the western provinces. You will meet with still other obstacles; but they will come from merely a few narrow-minded men without vision. Do not forget that beside this small group of meddlers there are, thank God, a very large number of Anglo-Canadians, and I say it to their credit, who not only admire you and like you, but are broad-minded enough, and patriotic enough, to help you in your struggle for the defence of your rights and your liberties."

The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), on the floor of this house, used certain regrettable words concerning Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I owe it to the memory of our great compatriot to accept that challenge to-day. The hon. member charged Sir Wilfrid with having betrayed the province of Quebec. Let us open the newspapers of 1905, Mr. Speaker, and we shall discover that impartial history throws on events a light that will astonish certain contemporaries of that time. While Sir Wilfrid waged his unrelenting fight for the cause of the minority in those parts, demanding separate schools for the new provinces, another man was denouncing this system, rational though it were.

During the bye-election of Mr. Hyman, in a speech delivered in London, Ontario, and reported in The Free Press of May 31st, 1905, Mr. Bennett said what follows,—I quote in English:

> The parliament of Canada has fastened on the northwest a separate school system. It had said they could do what they like: in many other things but they could not interfere with the rights of the minority to a separate school system.
> In 1891 and in 1901 the parliaments passed further school ordinances, but still they were given no right to say what school system they were to have. They might legislate as they might, but they could never free themselves from separate schools, even if they wanted to.

Let us continue—we are still quoting Mr. Bennett:

> If you turn down Mr. Hyman on the 13th of June, I think they will withdraw that clause. Never in the history of Canada have men had so great responsibility as is thrust upon you, electors of London. Once this act goes upon the statute book, it cannot be withdrawn. They say they will go to London and get an act endorsing it before we may do so. I tell you, the west will never stand that. There will be a revolution before the west will submit.

And, on June 5th, 1905, the Free Press carried this:

> Mr. Bennett said it was stated upon authority that Sir Alexander Mackenzie had not intended to place the provision for separate schools in the North West Territories Act. But a certain province that proposed now to control the educational policy of all the other provinces—this great province said to Sir Alexander Mackenzie: You just grant separate schools or go out. And it was the regret of Mackenzie to his dying day that he did not go out.
> I defy any man to say we are given any right to do other than to forever and forever maintain that baneful restriction that says we must have separate schools.
> Sir Wilfrid Laurier says that separate schools are the best thing for the state. I deny that. No Church or creed has a right to ask for special privileges. We must stand together. How otherwise may we work out our destiny?

Who betrayed the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker? Who betrayed not only the province of Quebec, but common sense, harmony and the spirit of justice, if not the Prime Minister of to-day (Mr. Bennett)? And why hold Sir Wilfrid Laurier responsible for the present difficulties in Saskatchewan?

Our dear departed statesman must have been great indeed, since envy still strives to belittle him. Yes, he was truly great, whose personality traced a path of glowing splendour across the firmament of our history; he was truly great, whom a whole people still mourns; he was truly great, who followed in the footsteps of Disraeli and of Gladstone; he was so great that even those who deserted him at a certain turning in their careers and who found themselves unable to hold their ground, feel the need to-day of trying to cast a shadow on his glory, the better to excuse their betrayal. He was so great that whoever attacks his memory in the terms used by the hon. member for Montmagny, merely succeeds in proving his own smallness, his political insignificance.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne has many remarkable analogies with the election campaign of 1930. We find there the same muddled expression of the means to be employed for ridding us of the economic crisis, which is still with us, and going from bad to worse. The same uncertainty, the same vague, nebulous language which, even to the most practised eye, yields no tangible conclusion. But the speech differs somewhat from the campaign of last July inasmuch as the bell, which has passed into the government's hands, does not give out the same note to-day. In July, 1930, the battle began to the strains of the mournful chant: "The Liberal administration has ruined the country; Canada cannot escape bankruptcy."

In the speech from the throne, fourth paragraph, first line, the leader of the government has this to say of the economic crisis:

> The fact that in this period of universal distress Canada has been spared the same acute degree of hardship which many other nations have been called upon to bear.

Only eight months of administration and can we not already feel the magic power of the dictatorial wand?

"Put me at the head of the government," said the present Prime Minister in 1930, "and I will bring prosperity back to you. Put me in power and a new day will dawn for our Dominion." With disconcerting cocksureness he led the voters of this country to believe that he had fathomed the causes of the economic depression and found a remedy.

In 1931, in the speech from the throne, still the same fourth paragraph, the leader of the present government tells us that the obstacles which bar our way to prosperity are numerous and important. In order to arrive at a satisfactory solution of these difficulties we must first of all understand them. So the right hon. gentleman did not understand them during the campaign of 1930?

Last July, our opponents promised to cure all our ills; to-day, face to face with the failure of these so-called remedies, our friends of the government no longer promise a cure; they have come back to earth and, like everybody else, they hope the situation will improve. It is not necessary to recall all the pledges made during the campaign to prove to the voters of Canada that the government has failed all along the line.

The right hon. Prime Minister knew very well that he could not rid us of the crisis Why did he promise to do so? He swindled the voters; but the voters have the right to demand that he fulfil the mandate given him in accordance with the terms and conditions under which he received it. Let him remember the words he uttered in Quebec city, and which were reproduced in the Ottawa Citizen of July 14th, 1930:

> I ask the candidates who are elected from the province of Ontario, and the other members of my party to throw me out of office if, after having been victorious at the polls, I fail to keep the promises made to the Canadian people. I will not climb into power over violated pledges.

The leader of the present government promised prosperity and the people will never forgive his failure to provide it.

What should we say of the Imperial conference? On this matter I do not speak with authority; nevertheless the government leader's attitude appears strange to me. He was evidently not taken seriously in London. He left Canada in a miniature whirlwind which had become a hurricane by the time he landed on Britain's shores. He believed himself a lion, but he could barely imitate the lion's roar. After several days of fruitless negotiations, like the fox in LaFontaine's fable he turned his face toward home and Canada; no doubt he swore, on the deep blue sea, but a little late, that he would not be caught again.

The ninth paragraph of the speech from the throne touches on a question of principle which I am proud to emphasize. Like all those who interest themselves in the welfare of humanity I believe that the doctrine upheld by soviet Russia is thoroughly opposed to the moral, intellectual, and even material progress of a people. You have only to read the contemporary history of Russia to become convinced that the present day leaders of this gifted people are making Russia into a pitiable outcast among the nations of Europe.

But I am in a hurry to come to the false attitude of the present prime minister as regards the agricultural industry. I note that this government has not given the farming community all the assistance they were fully entitled to expect after the fine phrases used by the prime minister on occasions like the following:

At Woodstock, N.B., on July 2nd, 1930, Mr. Bennett said:

> I declare here and now that if I am elected on July 28th my first duty will be to see to it that all the resources of Canada are used to uphold the agricultural industry. I would believe myself unworthy of presiding over this country's destiny if I did not do that.

This is what he told us on June 13th, 1930, at Calgary:

> We pledge ourselves to encourage agriculture, stock-raising and the dairy industry all of which the farmer has got so sadly neglected. We must train our young people in agricultural schools and, for this reason, I promise to continue the federal grant to the different provinces; for it is only from a rural population that is educated, in the broadest and best sense that we may expect the results we hope to attain.

At the special session of last September the right hon. Prime Minister insisted still further on the needs of agriculture and in unbelievably highfalutin' language set forth the capital importance of this basic industry. The result of all his fine words has been tariff meddling, and that carried out in such a way as to stabilize the price of all manufactured products and to increase the taxes borne by the farming class. Out of a total of 130 tariff items amended last fall, a mere 28 had to do with agriculture, despite the high-sounding phrases of the prime minister. Moreover, of these 28, only 14 were helpful to the farmer: the other 14 levied tribute on him. On close analysis of these tariff increases, we find that when the farmer, whose interests the prime minister has so much at heart, pockets $1 as a result of the first 14 items, the other 14 make him part with $1.50. And they call that protecting the agricultural industry.

What rural members sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker, have risen in this house to protest against such senseless and deplorable mistreatment of agriculture? Have any among them remembered their leader's own words: "I will not climb into power over violated pledges"?

The members for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) and Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) sought to excuse their leader by claiming that the Liberal administration had never done anything for agriculture. But a glance at the records will show that the King government did more for the farmers than will probably ever be done by those now in power.

May I be allowed to give a short synopsis of what was accomplished along this line; hon. members can check up on my statements at the federal department of agriculture here in Ottawa.

The main features, from 1922 to 1929 were the following:

1. The establishing of a research laboratory at Winnipeg for the intensive study of cereal rust and the best means of combating it.

2. The promotion of tobacco-growing in south-east Ontario and in Quebec through the enlargement of the substations at Harrow, Ontario, and Farnham, Quebec, and their establishment as experimental stations specializing in tobacco culture; also the purchase and establishment of a new tobacco culture station at L'Assomption, Quebec.

3. The development of research facilities at Swift Current, Saskatchewan, relative to cultivation without irrigation.

4. The establishment of a demonstration farm at Manyberries, Alta., for the furtherance of the solution of the problem of feed conservation so vital to the rancher.

5. The establishment of the new demonstration farm for irrigation culture at Windermere, British Columbia.

6. The establishment of 133 demonstration stations throughout the country for the purpose of acquainting thousands of farmers, through practical object-lessons, with the value of the methods, varieties and practices followed and recommended by the experimental farms.

7. Cooperative experiments along the Hudson Bay Railway route.

8. Small demonstration linen-mills were established in Quebec and in the maritime provinces; thanks to which these districts are to-day in possession of a prosperous home-spun industry.

9. An inspection service was established for all export honey.

10. A new bacteriological branch was inaugurated at the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, for the study of agricultural problems which must be solved through the application of bacteriological methods.

11. The Elwood farm was purchased at St. Catharines, Ontario, so as to provide the laboratory of plant pathology with more complete facilities for the treatment of fruit diseases, particularly those which attack peaches, grapes, tomatoes and strawberries.

[Mr. Dubois.]

And the Liberal government did nothing?

The most effective method yet for combating tuberculosis among cattle is the slaughter of all animals that react positively to the tuberculin test, within certain well-defined zones, following the system established in 1924. Since that date more than 800,000 cattle have been tested in the nine zones and extension already established, or about to be; 45,000 positive subjects have been slaughtered. At the present time there is at least one of these certified zones in every province of the Dominion.

This system of certified zones has provided absolutely healthy districts for immune herds. It facilitates cattle-raising, reduces to a minimum the danger of reinfection, induces the farmer to provide more hygienic housing for his cattle, and creates a more active demand, at higher prices, for milch cows.

The erection of a modern and thoroughly equipped experimental and research station at Hull, Quebec, completed in 1927, is a most important step towards the establishment of facilities for research work on the diseases of animals.

Experiments and research work on swamp disease were conducted in the prairie provinces, at Saskatoon and at Lethbridge; and at the agricultural laboratory of the experimental farm at Agassiz studies were made of the incidence and cure of hematuria.

And the Liberal government did nothing?

The following developments may be noted as results of the Live Stock Act:

1. The remarkable improvement in the quality of Canadian hogs resulting in large measure from the application of modern systems of grading which guarantee to the producer himself the premium paid on high quality animals. This system has brought about a very great improvement in the quality of our bacon which to-day is almost on a par with Danish bacon on the British market, except in the matter of quantity; the Canadian consumer can now buy much better bacon and other pork products than was formerly possible.

2. A registry system for thoroughbred hogs was inaugurated early in 1929; already twenty-three herds have been registered.

3. In 1922 were adopted the rules governing the inspection and grading of all eggs imported into Canada. All eggs exported from Canada are graded; since this grading system was adopted there is a big demand for Canadian eggs in Great Britain.

4. The department insisted that all commission houses having to do with our Canadian stockyards keep a shippers' guarantee account so that the producer who sold his animals through commission merchants should run no risk of losing the product of his sales.

5. Since the department organized calf breeders' clubs in 1923 great progress has been made in the growth of clubs among young breeders of cows, sheep and hogs. The encouragement thus given to the younger generation and the lively interest the young folks have taken in these clubs have borne fruit in the general and far-reaching improvement to be noted in all breeding activities wherever these clubs have been organized.

6. The animal husbandry branch inaugurated recently a system of approved incubators, which provides for the farmer a trustworthy source of baby chicks. The poultry pens which furnish hatching eggs and the incubators themselves are inspected. The incubators which come up to standard are authorized to sell certified chicks.

One of the main objects of the Seeds branch of the department is to promote the use and the production of better quality seeds and with this end in view the department, in 1929, increased by $3,000 its grant to The Canadian Association of Seed Growers.

In 1921 there were only some 40,000 bushels of registered seeds on the market. In 1929 the quantity had risen to 952,215 bushels. And the Liberal government did nothing?

The following are among the chief efforts made by the Entomological branch in recent years to assist agriculture through the destruction of insect pests.

After exhaustive experiments and research work for the purpose of effectively combating the European maize borer, work undertaken and accomplished in co-operation with the Ontario Department of Agriculture, the branch Ontario department of agriculture, the branch made certain recommendations which were enacted into law by the provincial legislature; there is no doubt that as a consequence of these accomplishments the extinction of this pest in the most infested regions is assured and the growing of seed-corn in Ontario will once more come into its own.

Measures instituted as a result of co-operative research work undertaken by the federal and provincial branches of entomology enabled us to repeal the invasions of the black beetle in the yellow pine forests of British Columbia.

In 1924 the agents of the entomological branch discovered in Quebec province a certain number of masses of nits laid by the dangerous sponge-worm. Since then the invasion has been repelled, thanks to the co-operation of the Department of Lands and Forests in Quebec.

The main accomplishments of the dairy branch since 1922 have been the grading of dairy products and experimental work concerning dairy produce.

The grading of dairy products has brought about a very great improvement in the quality of these products and the publicity given to quality through the grade certificates has been responsible for a new attitude on the part of both producers and manufacturers. Grading has been very beneficial to the dairy industry. Thanks to this system our Canadian dairy produce is more sought after on the markets of the world. If our Canadian cheese is quoted a little higher than others on the British market it is chiefly due to this system of grading. The improvement in the quality of our butter and of our cheese was most marked, and I speak now not only of the export market but of the home market also: to-day the Canadian housewife buys dairy produce with much more confidence than formerly.

Co-operative sales, etc., etc., etc., etc.

The Liberal government was going to keep up the good work.

And this government of dreamers and idealists did nothing for agriculture?

What has the Conservative government done for the farmers during the past eight months? What are they going to do this year? If we read the speech from the throne, paragraph 12, we find that this government, with a view to protecting agriculture, which it rightly calls the basic industry of this country, has inserted in its program only three words: "Aid to agriculture." As though the farming community were a class of beggars to whom one throws a meagre pittance when one has the time. As if our farmers, who go to make up some 52 per cent of the entire population of Canada, were a negligible quantity!

Far be it from me to incite my own class against the other classes of the community. I know that it is only through harmony and concord that lasting things are accomplished; but I have faith in my profession and representing, as I do, a constituency which is 95 per cent agricultural, I owe it to my electors to demand for them all the consideration and all the protection they are entitled to. Tireless and peaceful workers, they contribute more than any other class to the development and to the maintenance of our country's prosperity.

For the past eight months the present government has striven in vain to cope with the economic depression and with the unemployment crisis. Why do they not try rather to encourage the farmer, to find profitable markets for our farm products, to favour agriculture as much as possible, to make the farmer feel contented with his lot, become attached to the soil which feeds him, and thus become an apostle of the Back to the Land movement. Is it not a fact that if this Back to the Land movement were to succeed, our cities would be relieved of a number of the jobless who swarm into them? I believe that if the government were to act in this way they would do much more for the people of Canada than in dallying, in theory and in practice, with an excessive protective policy which favours only a very small group of capitalists.

May I be allowed to quote the opinion of M. R. Levrault, French economist, on this matter of protection that is made so much of by our friends opposite:

> People do not know what protectionism has done to Europe. Everybody is aware that most of the ills that beset us are derived from that source: it is responsible for the high cost of living and for our staggering taxes.
> Protection begets higher and higher protection. When every country is protected none enjoy its advantages any longer. Then starts a race in the building of higher and higher tariff walls. Each country strives to be the first to profit, be it only for a few years, even a few months, by tariff increases.

You are looking for ways and means to cope with the unemployment problem. Would you permit a young man who has spent thirty-seven years of his life on our Canadian land to suggest to you what he believes to be a good way to discover the real cure for our present economic ills? Every democracy must beware of one danger: the sovereignty of wealth. Capitalists of every description, capitalists forever insatiate, follow the lead of certain capitalists in my riding: come down from your pedestals, come out of your ivory towers! If you really wish our people well, rub shoulders with our workers, in the city and in the country; their contact will teach you more than all the shallow generalizations of arm-chair sociologists.

Mr. Speaker, I end with these words: At the special session allusion was made on the floor of this house to the Unknown Soldier. Like all good patriots I bow, and deeply, before him who sheds his blood for his country. But there is another unknown soldier: his work is less in the limelight, but it is none the less deserving. This unknown soldier is the settler in the northern parts of Ontario, the settler in the northern regions of my own province. This unknown soldier is the farmer in the western provinces, the farmer in the maritime provinces, the Ontario farmer, the Quebec farmer, the farmer in my county. We bow low before the soldier armed with the sword. What must we not do in the presence of the soldier who guides the plough? Before him, as before the other, we should bow. But one thing must be borne in mind: this soldier does not live on fine words alone; he must have acts, he must have substance.

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like first to congratulate the mover (Mr. Cormier) and the seconder (Mr. Porteous) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne on their splendid efforts. They did credit not only to themselves but to the constituencies which they have the honour to represent. I had been given to understand that a new member was generally granted considerable indulgence by the older members when making his maiden speech, but after listening to the gibes and jeers that have been hurled across the floor during this debate I find that that is not always the case. However, on this occasion I would ask indulgence for myself. It has been very interesting to me to listen to the many excellent speeches that have been delivered during the course of the debate, and if I had time I should like to make some observations on those speeches and to state how they have impressed me as a new member. I will mention briefly one or two.

I think the speech of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was worthy of note. He apparently has a style all his own and speaks with considerable force. I may say to him that while he chooses to devote the greater part of his time to reading speeches of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) he will always have a careful hearing and considerable applause from this side of the house. I might reply at length to some other speeches from across the way, but time does not permit. The clear cut and business-like statement by the right hon. Prime Minister is in my opinion the outstanding speech yet delivered in this debate. I wish also to refer briefly to the very careful and thoughtful speech delivered by my deskmate the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Beynon); also to the speeches delivered by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull); the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan); and the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks). I imagine it must be very pleasant to our friends from Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes after many long years to hear the Conservative voice from Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it might be well for me to state a few particulars with respect to the constituency of Qu'Appelle which I have the honour to represent. It is situated in the central and easterly part of Saskatchewan. The foundation of its fine citizenship is the stock of the pioneers from old Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes, although of late years we have had a cosmopolitan addition from foreign countries. I wish to bring to the attention of the house four things which I think are a great credit to my constituency. First, we have there the third prize winner in the competition organized last year by the Canadian National Railways, known as the foreign community progress competition. I refer to the Hungarian colony south of the town of Kipling. It is a fine colony of foreign citizens, and they are doing wonderful work. They have fine houses, schools, churches and public buildings and would be a credit to any part of western Canada.

Then I want to refer briefly to the fact that in my own constituency I have one of the master farmers of Saskatchewan, selected through the master farmer movement inaugurated by the Northwest Farmer, an agricultural journal. I refer to George Stutt, of Vandura, who was selected as one of the three master farmers of our province. I might state briefly to the way the points were scored. The inspection had to do with five branches of farm life: First was the operation and organization of the farm; second was the general appearance and upkeep of the farm; third was the business methods, fourth the home life, and fifth the citizenship of the farmer. Any man who could secure a sufficiently high percentage to be classed as one of the three master farmers under those conditions is a credit to any constituency.

I wish to mention also the fact that on the border line between the constituencies of Qu'Appelle and Assiniboia is a farmer whose name is George Avery and who, at the last international grain show, secured the grand championship for durum wheat. That is a point worthy of mention, and I would like also to place on the records of this house the fact that at the annual live stock association meeting in the capital city of Regina the boys' judging team from the agricultural society of Fairmede secured first place, both collectively and individually. Those are four facts I should like to place before hon. members of this house.

While we have in my constituency these four distinguished examples, Mr. Speaker, yet we are feeling the depression which is being felt all over the west as a result of conditions for which the farmers are not altogether responsible. Last winter I attended many meetings held by farmers, at which they discussed their problems and passed certain resolutions which were forwarded to the government, yet in spite of present conditions I did not hear a single word at any one of those meetings with regard to secession. During this debate we have listened to many speeches dealing with conditions as they are to-day in western Canada. I agree with a great deal of what has been said, and some of the hon. gentlemen in the far corner of the house, particularly the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), have shown a very clear grasp of the situation and have made clear and careful statements of the facts. I understand the hon. member succeeded the late Doctor Clark as member for Red Deer. Doctor Clark was one of the outstanding orators of this house, but I think the constituency of Red Deer will be equally well looked after by its present representative.

I have outlined as carefully and as concisely as possible what I consider to be the exact condition of affairs in western Canada, and my conclusions are these: A very large percentage of the western farmers are heavily in debt. I believe that is generally admitted. Their ability to pay is a very serious consideration, and not one in a hundred, in fact not one in five hundred of the western farmers is deliberately or willingly trying to evade the payment of his indebtedness. Under existing conditions, however, the debt is growing out of all proportion to his ability to pay, and the mental and moral effect of this situation is exerting a tremendous influence on the farmers of the west. Under existing world conditions not more than the cost of production can be realized from the 1931 crop.

That is the condition as I see it, but I would like to ask if there is one member of this house in his right senses who thinks that this condition has arisen in the west during the last six months. It took years to bring it about, and while I would not care to charge the late government with the responsibility for all our ills and troubles, yet I think when we compare the situation as they found it when they came into office in 1921 with the conditions which existed when the present government came into power on August 7 last, you cannot help but charge the late government with a great deal of the responsibility. This point was very well covered by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) in his first speech, and I will not go into further details at the moment.

There are certain causes for the present condition, Mr. Speaker, and I have tried to group them in four classes. I believe the western farmers are anxious to be fair in considering the situation, and I may say that now I am speaking as a farmer from western Canada. If you will pardon a personal reference, I have been farming in the west for thirty years on rather a large scale—too large, no doubt, under present conditions. I am not going to say to what extent I have been farming, but when I left home last Wednesday we had in our bins on the farm 6,000 bushels of clean grain waiting for the seeder, so you will see how I am involved in the farming game. I say the farmers are prepared to be fair, and they are responsible for a small part of the present situation. I come to that conclusion from the fact that it has been stated in this house that the greatest purchasing power in Canada is the western wheat crop, and during the last ten years we in the west have produced and marketed six billion dollars worth of grain. Some hon. members from the east might ask where all that cash has gone, and my reply would be that one of the reasons is that the farmers have allowed themselves to be exploited. They have been easy prey for expert salesmen, particularly those handling American made machinery and other products. Farmers sitting in this house know they have been guilty of this; I have been guilty of it myself. The expert salesman comes into our yards and easily makes us believe that the old binders, seeders or tractors, only half worn out, should be replaced by new, up-to-date and more expensive machines. That is what has been happening.

Another minor cause is the banking system and the way the banks have been dealing with the farmers of the west. Much has been said with regard to the banks. I am not going to add a great deal to that, only to say that I believe hon. gentlemen who have spoken on that point are correct in nearly every particular. As I see it to-day, the great effect of the banks is that they are taking away the morale of the people of the west. A year or so ago a farmer would go to the bank and ask for $200 or $300 of a loan. The banker would say, "Mr. Smith, you do not want $200; you should have $300 or $400." The farmer would take the money on a straight note, without security. Now these men go in and find their credit gone and their securities of no value. The morale of these men who have been farming in the west for thirty or forty years is being wrecked.

There is a third reason. Our method of marketing grain for the last six years has been such that it has demoralized the whole grain trading system, not only in Canada but throughout the world. I do not find fault with the pool or with cooperative marketing; far from it. Any man would be crazy to do such a thing. But their sales agency made a mistake, and when they did so I claim it was the business of the Department of Trade and Commerce of the late government to know that that mistake was being made. If I understand it, the Department of Trade and Commerce should know what is going on in the game of international trading. The department exists for that purpose, and when the markets were slipping they should have known the reason and taken steps to meet the situation. They should have advised the great marketing agency in western Canada of the mistakes they were making. That was the duty of the department. However, we have a situation there; it is on our hands, and the very uncertainty at the present time as to the whole marketing of the next crop is affecting the price very materially.

Fourthly, and this is the major count: The fiscal policy of Canada, the whole of Canada, for the last ten years—yes, for the last twenty-five years—has been wrong; and I think we can charge that to the late government more or less. For instance, take agriculture in western Canada. We have been developing one line of industry, that of agriculture and that alone. An industry which employs peak labour for only two months of the year—and this is the case in this industry, as farmers all know—cannot satisfactorily build up a great country. We must develop other lines of industry.

I have tried briefly to set out one or two of the causes of the present condition, and I consider it my duty to offer one or two constructive suggestions. We have had some from both sides of the house, but I do not think anyone has gone far enough to meet the emergency. One suggestion has been made from this corner of the house, that the 1930 crop be subsidized, and another suggestion is the amortization of capital debt. I am going to make my suggestions under two heads—a long-range policy and a policy which will have immediate effect. I believe the Department of Agriculture will do much towards improving the present situation. We have a new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) from the province of Saskatchewan, and we are very proud of him. He is an expert agriculturist, a man who is sincere in purpose, and who I know will do much to inaugurate a new agricultural policy for the whole of Canada. Much can be done along that line. The Department of Trade and Commerce can do much in the way of merchandising, or assisting in merchandising the crop. Canadian wheat is recognized in the markets of the world as the best wheat produced anywhere. It has been used primarily for mixing purposes, and it has been proven conclusively by experiments that Canadian wheat will do more for a loaf of bread than any other wheat grown. That is to say, 15 or 20 per cent blended with other grains will do more than 15 or 20 per cent of any other wheat similarly blended. So that we have something special to merchandise. If any factory or company or organization producing a certain article or line of goods discovered that they had the best product in that particular line they would immediately go out and sell it. Now we have the best wheat in the world, and it is up to the Department of Trade and Commerce to assist in selling it; the department should make a greater effort in this direction than has been made heretofore.

Secondly, I think we should have some scheme put into practice—and I believe the Minister of Agriculture will see that this is done—to take advantage of the expert advice which is available to our farmers. I believe that one of the greatest wastes which we have seen in western Canada in the last fifteen or twenty years has been the failure to benefit from such expert advice. There is no district in the west wherein you will not find an expert farmer, an outstanding agriculturist who has made a success of his particular line of agriculture; while you will find his neighbours, for miles around him, failures or partial failures, notwithstanding that they operate under the same climatic conditions and in the same soil. We find one expert, outstanding man and the rest largely failures. Now I suggest that we should adopt some system whereby each district might make use of the advice and experience of such experts. That is something that could be worked out—a campaign of education and educational leadership.

Next I would suggest a rigid enforcement of the Bank Act. I will not enlarge upon that question or go into details just now: sufficient has already been said in that regard. I will, however, say this: that the implement concerns in the west have been allowed in many cases to sell their goods on notes bearing 8 or 9 per cent, and 10 per cent interest after due date, something which should not be permitted.

Then again I would suggest a duty on corn imported for feed purposes. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) made a clear case in favour of western coarse grains. I will not discuss that matter because the figures are in Hansard and, as I say, the hon. member made an able case in support of coarse grains. There should also be a development of our great natural resources, the vast potential wealth of the western country—mines, forests and lakes.

These suggestions which I have outlined constitute what I might call a long-range policy; that is to say, there is nothing in them which can have an immediate effect, although their development will be fruitful in the future. But what the farmer of the west needs to-day—and having just returned from Saskatchewan I know what they need—is something in the nature of direct relief. The present government has done much; it has seen to it that no farmer in the west will be without seed. It has seen to it that gasoline will be made available to the farmer to enable him to put in his crop. But this is not even meeting the situation, because there are many farmers who, if they had a little direct assistance, would employ one or two more men. If you will pardon me for speaking personally again, I have five tenants, and I know that if they had some assistance they might each employ another man. And I venture to say that if assistance were forthcoming from the banks, if the banks would loosen up and give credit in the west where credit is needed and should be given, fifty per cent of the farmers of western Canada would employ an extra man. What would that not do towards solving the unemployment problem?

As I say, these are long-range policies. I will now offer a suggestion by way of affording direct assistance. It has already been stated by one hon. member that capital investment by loan companies amounted to $215,000,000, while interest due and in arrear is in the neighbourhood of $20,000,000. I suggest that if we want to save agriculture, if we want to show the farmer that we are all interested in keeping him on his land—and that is the important thing for us to consider at the present time—there must be no change of tenancy in the farms of western Canada. To keep the farmer on the land is the important thing to-day; and if the loan companies pursue the policy which they have followed promiscuously, of foreclosing on farms, the tenancy of a great many farms in the west will be changed. I would suggest that the government call a conference of the loan companies and make the proposal that should the loan companies write off forty or fifty per cent of the interest in arrears, the government will pay them the balance and thus place the loans upon the basis they were when first placed upon the farms. This would re-establish the confidence of the farmer and he would realize that no interest in Canada was working to put him off the land. I do not suggest that as a hand-out by the government to the farmer, but it could be considered on an amortization of some kind extending over a period of from ten to fifteen years.

My next suggestion may be considered a little drastic, but I offer it by way of immediate relief. I think a suggestion that the 1930 crop be subsidized has been made by one hon. member on this side of the house. I do not intend to go that far, but I think the 1930 crop should be subsidized to the extent of the government paying the freight on all grain sold since the price dropped below 70 cents per bushel. That subsidization would involve only about 50 per cent of the crop, as considerable of the crop was shipped during last September, October and November before the price got below 70 cents per bushel. This would not involve the expenditure entailed in pegging the price at 70 cents per bushel, which has been requested generally by the farmers of western Canada. Certain opposition may be offered, and there might be considerable detail in the working out of this system, but I believe it would be equal and fair to all concerned. Perhaps the railway companies might be asked to bear some part of this burden.

I now come to the last and most important of my suggestions, and that is that we have a complete policy of protection such as has been inaugurated by this government. During the campaign of last summer the people accepted the proposition outlined by the Prime Minister. One policy was offered from one end of Canada to the other. The voice in Halifax was heard in Vancouver, and the voice in Vancouver was heard in Halifax. The people accepted that policy because they wanted to know what the policy of Canada was to be. The hon. member for Southeast Grey made a statement the other day with which I agreed; she said that she wanted to know what was the right tariff policy for Canada. Canada wants to know, but if this country will give this government the support it deserves, then Canada will know.

I do not think that any reasonable person ever expected that the critical condition of affairs and the depression and unemployment found in August last when the present government took office would be corrected in six short months. If this government is allowed to put its policies into force conditions in Canada will improve and the east and the west can join hands in making Canada the great industrial dominion she should be.

Considerable has been said about the Imperial conference and I would not endeavour to answer the many speeches we have heard from the opposition in criticism of the attitude taken by the Prime Minister. To do that would take more time than I have at my disposal. The right hon. leader of the opposition seemed to be very much concerned about this matter, and he objected to the method of approach adopted by the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) proceeded very reasonably when he asked the hon. leader of the opposition to indicate why he thought a different approach to the British people would have resulted in their paying better prices for Canadian wheat. The answer made by the right hon. gentleman was not very definite, he seemed to be satisfied with mentioning a conciliatory method of approach and making reference to the Dunning budget.

The very mention of the Dunning budget gives me pleasant memories and recollections, for it was in my constituency in the province of Saskatchewan that the Hon. Charles Dunning made his first pronouncement in the last campaign. I had the pleasure—it was a pleasure because I think every time he spoke he assisted me—of having him speak at three meetings in my constituency out of seven or eight in Saskatchewan. I had the pleasure also of having the former Minister of Railways, Mr. Crerar, speak at two meetings. At Broadview, at the Liberal nomination, speaking before eight or nine hundred people, Mr. Dunning stated that his May day budget had been framed for the purpose of selling Canadian wheat. He said: We asked no preference but we gave a preference, and he suggested that the British people would feel it to be a duty and responsibility to buy our wheat in greater quantity. What was the preference given? It was a preference in our markets for their cattle and horses, and a preference in our markets for their carts and perambulators, cut flowers and cast iron pipes.

Since coming to Ottawa I have been asked why the Hon. Charles Dunning was defeated. Perhaps the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) is better able to answer that question, but I think the principal reason was this: We had known Mr. Dunning in the provincial legislature when he was a private member, we had known him when he was a member of the cabinet and when he was the premier; we knew that at every session of the provincial legislature he had spoken in favour of the resolution which was always introduced asking for free trade. On many occasions he had stated that he was an avowed free trader, but when the people of western Canada examined his May day budget they said: Our Charlie has betrayed us, and they voted accordingly. They thought the May day budget was humbug. The hon. leader of the opposition took about twenty minutes during his speech in the early part of this session to explain the meaning of the word "humbug", but I think that every definition given to that word by the right hon. gentleman could be applied to the Dunning budget.

The hon. leader of the opposition seems to be very much concerned about this being a one man government. I prefer to follow a one man government, if you like to call it such, when the policies announced by our leader are those I have been looking for for the last fifteen or twenty years. The Prime Minister proved to the people of Canada that he was a man of courage and conviction. He announced a policy which he would enforce if given the opportunity. On July 28 the people said: Canada wants to know, and Canada will know.

The right hon. leader of the opposition stated in his speech that the greatest purchasing power that we had in Canada was the western wheat crop. Does he hold the present Prime Minister responsible for the loss of that purchasing power? What did they do about the matter? I think the hon. member for Regina referred to that in his speech. When the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) last year was asked about wheat, they said that the wheat would take care of itself. We know they did not do very much about it.

The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) spoke about false fiscal policies. I should like to ask him what they did during the last nine or ten years that they held office. I think we are all agreed that this is not the time for idle talk; that it is the time for action. The people of Canada have decided to give the Prime Minister and his government an opportunity, and I think it is the duty of every good Canadian citizen who realizes the meaning of the term "citizenship" to give at least reasonable support to the present government to inaugurate policies of protection and other policies, to develop our industries and to make trade agreements that will help us to sell our natural products. Canada has an opportunity to go forward. It is up to us to be ready, a united, prosperous and contented Canada under the leadership of the greatest prime minister that Canada has had since the time of Sir John A. Macdonald.

On motion of Mr. McIntosh the debate was adjourned.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1931-32

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1932, was presented by Right Hon. R. B. Bennett (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m

The house met at three o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

AUTHENTIC TEXT OF DRAFT CONVENTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table of the house the authentic text of the draft conventions and recommendations which have been adopted by the tenth, eleventh, twelfth and fourteenth sessions respectively of the International Labour conference in accordance with the provisions of article 405 of the treaty of Versailles and the corresponding provisions of the other treaties of peace. Also the text of certain orders in council which have been adopted dealing with the competence of parliament and of the provincial legislatures respectively with regard to the subject matters of these draft conventions and recommendations. The text of the draft conventions and recommendations and the orders in council which have been mentioned have been transmitted to the lieutenant-governors of the various provinces.

CANADIAN NATIONALS ACT

PROVISION FOR LOSS OR RENUNCIATION OF CANADIAN NATIONALITY

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 24, to define Canadian nationals and to provide for loss or renunciation of Canadian nationality.

An hon. MEMBER: Explain.

Mr. CAHAN: This bill is to revise chapter 21 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, which is entitled an act to define Canadian nationals and to provide for loss or renunciation of Canadian nationality. Upon assuming the duties of Secretary of State I found that investigations had been made with respect to the application of the existing statute by the permanent officials of the State department and the permanent officials of the Department of External Affairs. I found also that during the regime of the previous government the then Prime Minister, the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) had procured from Professor W. P. M. Kennedy of Toronto university a very lengthy study of the essentials of Canadian nationality. With the assistance of the permanent officials of the State department and of the Department of External Affairs I have drafted this bill in order to express in appropriate terms for legislative enactment what I believe to be the essential qualifications for Canadian nationality. For instance in dealing with the claims for reparations under the treaty of Versailles some hundreds of claimants are compelled in the first place to prove that they are Canadian nationals. Many of these claimants have found themselves in extreme difficulties when they were asked to determine whether or not they were Canadian nationals within the scope and the meaning of the treaty of Versailles. Since the treaty of Versailles was ratified the government of Canada with the approval of parliament has entered into a series of international treaties and conventions, and with respect to the administration for Canada of those treaties and conventions it is necessary in many, many cases arising in my department daily and weekly to determine whether certain residents in Canada are Canadian nationals within the meaning of these treaties and conventions. Then, in respect to the administration of certain acts, such as the Copyright Act, and to a lesser degree the Patent Act, it becomes necessary daily to determine whether or not the applicant is a Canadian national. The two primary qualifications of course are first that the applicant is a British subject and second that he has a domicile in Canada. There are, however, certain variations which must be determined. This bill is an attempt, with the aid of such expert assistance as is available in the various departments and the assistance of the reports of experts which were received by the previous government, to determine and to express in simple language who are Canadian nationals within the meaning of our statutes and of the conventions and treaties above mentioned. I think it is absolutely necessary for the proper administration of the affairs of the State department that Canadian nationals should be clearly defined so as to avoid the difficulties which from day to day are arising in the administration of that department. I have not introduced this bill as a partisan measure. In the Department of State we are really attempting to carry into effect the result of investigations and reports made to the previous government which have been amplified somewhat since the present government took office. I desire to have the bill read in order that it may be distributed to members of the house, and I ask from hon. members on both sides of the house serious consideration of the elements of this bill. Such a measure should not be passed for partisan purposes or as a party measure. It is a measure which if it is to be enacted should receive the approval of a majority of members on both sides of this house.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

REPARATIONS COMMISSION

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF COMMISSIONER CONCERNING PRISONERS OF WAR

On the orders of the day.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the hon. the Secretary of State if, during the present session of parliament, he expects to be in a position to present to the house a supplementary report of the reparations commissioner dealing with the cases of soldiers who were prisoners of war?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): That will depend entirely upon the progress which the commissioner makes. I have already presented a report of the decisions up to the date of the report. If it is possible to secure hearings and decisions in other cases which are before the commissioner I shall endeavour to comply with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

SALMON FISHERIES REGULATIONS

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING EFFECTS OF PROPOSED REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): May I be permitted to draw the attention of the hon. the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) to a situation which has arisen in the maritime provinces and especially the province of New Brunswick in connection with salmon net fishing. Recently regulations were passed which if put into effect immediately, it is argued, would cause a grave injustice to the salmon net fishermen of the province of New Brunswick. Especially would the injustice be felt where net fishing is carried on along the shore of the open bays. I do not wish to argue the merits of the regulations but I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries concerning them. I have no doubt he has received some protests and I would like to know if having received those protests he will thoroughly investigate the complaints before the regulations are put into effect. Will the minister have his officials report upon the advisability of postponing for one year the operation of these new regulations to give time fully to investigate all phases of the situation, in case such investigation cannot be made before the opening of the season this year?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries): In reply to the question of my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) I may say that the regulations in question were proposed following a conference which was held at Ottawa in February. That conference was attended by upwards of thirty persons representative of every phase of the fishing industry, and the conclusions reached are substantially those embodied in the regulations. It has transpired that objections have been raised since the regulations have been announced due I think chiefly to objections arising with respect to the date of the opening of the fishing season. The question has become more acute by reason of the fact that this year promises to be an earlier year with respect to fishing than has any year within the last fifty. In view of objections which have been raised the deputy minister has been instructed to proceed immediately to the province of New Brunswick for the purpose of a further conference with those representing the industry. If it appears after such further inquiry that any hardships will result to the fishermen and to the industry, the question of modification or of postponing the application of the regulations as proposed will be favourably considered.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Will these regulations apply to the province of Quebec as well as to the province of New Brunswick? Was the province of Quebec represented at the conference?

Mr. RHODES: The province of Quebec was represented at the conference by F. M. Gibaut, Superintendent of Maritime Fisheries, Department of Colonization, Game and Fisheries of Quebec. The regulations were made in conformity with his view as to their acceptability to the province of Quebec.

CIVIL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION ARISING OUT OF TRIAL OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): In view of the stigma attached to the administration of the Civil Service Commission as a result of evidence brought down in the recent trial of two civil service employees does the government intend to investigate the commission?

Mr. POWER: Abolish it.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): As I presume to represent in this house the Civil Service Commission I would suggest that until the evidence in that case is thoroughly digested by the government it would be impossible to give a definite answer to the inquiry of the hon. gentleman.

REPORTED RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of the Interior with respect to the abolition of positions in the Department of the Interior. In this morning's issue of the Ottawa Citizen I notice that a change is to be made in the arrangement concerning motor cars which were formerly supplied to ministers, and they are now to be granted $2,000 in lieu of motor cars. But what I am particularly interested in—if the information is correct— is the fact that those chauffeurs who have been employed for more than three years are guaranteed positions in the civil service. In reply to my question yesterday, the hon. Minister of the Interior stated that those civil servants whose positions had been abolished in the Department of the Interior were being given consideration for transfer or otherwise, and that the matter was under discussion with the Civil Service Commission. I was somewhat astonished last night—I hope it is not true—to read in the Evening Journal a statement, purporting to be made by Dr. Roche, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, in which he said that the matter had not been referred to the commission. I say at once, Mr. Speaker, that I am prepared to accept the statement of the minister. I hope that the same consideration which is being granted to the chauffeurs will be extended to those civil servants who find themselves without positions in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why did'nt you take care of them?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did, and I shall be very glad to discuss the matter with the hon. member to-morrow when the estimates are under consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have directed a question to the Minister of the Interior, and I think I should be given the courtesy of an answer.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): I did not hear the question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I expressed the hope that the minister would be able to assure me that the same treatment would be meted out to the officers of the Department of the Interior who found themselves out of positions as was being given to the chauffeurs in the employ of the government.

Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the hon. ex-Minister of the Interior put his question. He made a statement. Then he expressed the hope that the same consideration or treatment would be given to the employees who might lose their positions in the Department of the Interior as was being granted to chauffeurs who might be dismissed. The statement, I think he said, appeared in the Journal.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. MURPHY: The statement was that this treatment was being accorded the chauffeurs—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg the hon. minister's pardon. I did not say that. It was so reported in the Citizen.

Mr. MURPHY: I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not responsible for what newspapers may state as to the policy of the government in that regard.

AIR MAIL SERVICE

POLICY OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING ROUTES IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I desired to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) but since he is not in his seat, I think—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. McINTOSH: It may be all right; I understand it is impossible for him to be in the house at the moment.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. McINTOSH: I will put the hon. member on the order paper before long.

Mr. GOTT: Where will this take place?

Mr. McINTOSH: I thought, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) or the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) might answer my question since the right hon. Prime Minister is not present.

Mr. GOTT: You are all excited.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not the slightest. It is a perfectly legitimate question, Mr. Speaker; I just want some information.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. McINTOSH: All I want to know is this. There have been reports in the daily and weekly press that a substantial reduction would be made in the appropriation for civil aviation, and we find in the main estimates tabled yesterday that that reduction amounts to two and a third million dollars. My question is in regard to the air mail lines of western Canada. Many of our western centres, cities large and small, are gravely concerned as to what is the policy of the government with respect to this service. What is the government's policy in this regard; are they going to continue or discontinue the existing air mail lines in western Canada? If they are going to continue them, are they going to develop and make them air mail lines that will be really effective in the building up of real air mail facilities in western Canada?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member ought to know that a question so put is not in order.

PRIVILEGE—MR. DURANLEAU

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege in order to correct a statement made in the house yesterday. On that occasion the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) read a Canadian Press despatch to a local paper stating that I had said at a public meeting that last winter about 1,000,000 people found employment under the joint federal-provincial-municipal relief fund. I wish to declare, sir, that the statement is not correct. I never stated any such thing. I desire to repeat the substance of what I said, namely, that in round figures 250,000 people, men and women, had found employment under the Unemployment Relief Act of last session, and that owing to the fact that the greater number of the men so employed were the heads of families, we might infer that about 1,000,000 people had received food, lodging and so forth under that legislation. I think my statement was quite in accord with the facts.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I accept the hon. minister's statement. I read the despatch from the newspaper in good faith, and I did so because I thought the public should know the facts.

Mr. POULIOT: Unborn children were included in the statement.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Monday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D. Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few remarks in this debate may I say that last night I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley), when he presented what he considered to be some of the causes for the present commercial and industrial depression. He made a statement to the effect that the farmers were being exploited. As I listened to him I was wondering just when the farmers were not exploited under our present fiscal system, and I was surprised that he did not realize that the policy for which he and his party stand, the policy of raising the protective wall higher and still higher, will result in our farmers being exploited more and more as the years go by. He dealt also with the banking system and said it was not perfect. Of course we know it is not perfect. I understand the Bank Act will be revised in the session of 1932, and then we shall see just how far the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and his party will go in so revising the statute that our farmers will no longer be exploited nor the national prosperity menaced. My hon. friend also dealt with the wheat situation. He said he did not want to blame the pools, but he stressed the fact that the sales agency was to blame for the abnormal carry-over of wheat. So far as the pools are concerned, I believe that those in western Canada who are standing for a 100 per cent marketing proposition and those who are in favour of a voluntary organization will decide the issue among themselves and decide it correctly. Apparently the hon. gentleman also accepted the fact that the fiscal system under which we are labouring in Canada is perfect; he believes that all we have to do is to apply it more equitably to all Canada, and he is quite certain that agriculturally and industrially by means of it we are going to have a great dominion built up, with a complete organization of industries all across Canada, and that everything will be fine.

The hon. gentleman also said he would make certain suggestions which might remove these causes and improve conditions commercially and industrially, and among his suggestions was one that the Department of Trade and Commerce should be more active. He tried to throw the blame for the present industrial crisis in Canada on that department under the Liberal government. I think the Department of Trade and Commerce was quite active from 1922 to 1930; in fact it was more active during those years than it ever had been in the history of Canada. The trade returns prove that statement. In 1922 the aggregate trade of Canada was $1,502,000,000, or a per capita aggregate trade of approximately $1,500. What was the situation in 1929, seven years later? Our aggregate trade amounted to $2,655,000,000, or a per capita aggregate trade of $2,655, almost double that of 1922. These figures prove, I believe, that the department was active, and it does away with the argument that under the previous government the Department of Trade and Commerce was responsible for present conditions. It was not.

Then the hon. member said that the way to build up our agricultural life was to build it up around expert farmers in western Canada. That has been the policy of the Department of Agriculture almost from time immemorial, so far as I can see—at least since confederation. We have been building up experimental and demonstration farms to show the way in scientific farming; we have been carrying on this program from coast to coast, so there is nothing new in that argument. Then the hon. gentleman said a duty should be imposed on corn for feeding purposes. I would suggest that he and other Conservative members from western Canada who agree with that argument should get together with government members from central Ontario and Quebec and present a solid front. When they do this the rest of us might be able to meet them.

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, we may expect to have our ups and downs industrially and agriculturally. We may naturally expect to have to meet major problems arising out of our national, our imperial and our international existence. We may expect that through these problems governments will rise and fall. Under these conditions parliament has assembled again this year, and I take it for granted that our objective is to evolve a legislative program for Canada that will benefit this country from coast to coast. We listened to the speech from the throne, and I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier) move the address in reply. I have known the hon. member for several years; I first became acquainted with him seven years ago, when we were crossing the north Atlantic in order to visit the British Isles and the battlefields of the empire on the continent. On that occasion the bilingual ability of the hon. gentleman saved the party of which he was a member a great deal of trouble and inconvenience, and through his proficiency he was able to do away with a great deal of red tape which otherwise might have interfered with the enjoyment of our visit to continental Europe. Now I might suggest to the hon. gentleman that, having proved himself so helpful seven years ago on the continent of Europe, he should prove as helpful now on the continent of America, right here in Canada, by restraining his leader and those who are supporting him in the House of Commons from enacting any extreme legislation that may have the effect of dismembering Canada in time to come, that may have the effect not of building up a prosperous dominion but rather of developing a sectionalism that will not do any good at all. May I therefore ask him to use all the influence he has in this very helpful direction. It is greatly needed.

The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Porteous), who seconded the address, represents in this house the county and constituency in which I was born, and I compliment him upon the observations which he made during the course of his speech. I was interested in the gesture he made to the French-Canadian members of this house and also the French-Canadian people throughout Canada, when he said we ought to have a national vision big enough, broad enough and deep enough to include the two major races in Canada, the British and the French. I would say we must have a national vision broad enough for that, of course, and we should have a national vision broad enough to include not only the two major races but also all the people from the continents of the world and the isles of the sea whom we have invited to come to Canada to help us build up a new nation on the northern portion of the North American continent. I would like to see the hon. member for North Grey get in touch with members of his own party from western Canada, so that those who do not follow that vision in that part of our country will be big enough, broad enough and tolerant enough to stand for such a vision throughout the west. During the last two or three years the leaders of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan have been standing for something which is anything but truly national or soundly imperial, something absolutely intolerant and impossible of acceptance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the speech from the throne. On close examination I find it to be divided in a triangular way. It has three sides, which are very unequal; it has unequal angles, and everything about it is unequal, leading one to conclude that in framing it the right hon. Prime Minister looked at the big questions of Canada from a lop-sided point of view. Therefore I have not much hope that out of this speech from the throne will come a program of legislation that will unite all parties and all sections of this Dominion in order to build up a great, united nation. For instance, we know that a triangle is made up of lines and points. A line has length but no breadth, and the same definition might be applied to the speech from the throne. It has lots of length, lots of words and lots of lines and paragraphs, but when you come to examine its width, which it should have if we are to have breadth in our national vision, we find there is none. It does not apply as it should to the maritimes; we have heard hon. members on this side of the house find fault with it in that respect. It does not apply to central Canada as it should; it does not apply to the middle west or to the far west. Consequently, though it has length, which is the simplest measurement anything can have, it really has no breadth of thought or vision or determination, and not having breadth of thought there is no pronounced area to it. We must have more than length and breadth in Canada with regard to a national policy; we must get under the soil and go down deep. We must have volume. Any policy that is to be beneficial to Canada must scale the heights and plumb the depths of Canadian national aspirations. If it does not do that it will be a failure. I am afraid that the program of the last special session, coupled with the one we have based upon this speech from the throne, will in time prove a failure so far as successfully meeting the exigencies throughout the country is concerned.

In the first part of the speech from the throne we find the leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) trying to sell to the people of Canada what we might call an artificial Canadianism. I fancy this is an example of what they call their Canada first policy. We have in Canada to-day canned foods, canned music and canned propaganda, and we have in the speech from the throne an example of a canned or restricted Canadianism. And hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to sell to the people of Canada this canned Canadianism. That is to say, they tell us that if we tie up the national qualities of the Canadian people to the Tory program we shall have prosperity and happiness. Tie up the program of the government to the faith, the fortitude, the honesty and the industry of the Canadian people and it will not be long before we have Canada actually and ideally bridged when all will be well, and we shall never have to submit again to world depression. Now that is all nonsense; it is simply an impossible viewpoint. The Canadian people will judge for themselves what party and what policy they will support in the years to come, and I only hope the people of this country will do their best to become thoroughly posted on national problems—so thoroughly posted that when they go to the polls every four or five years they will make no mistake, but will decide squarely on the issues before them. If they do so I am satisfied that we shall not have the mistake repeated which was made last July, when a government that was progressive in every sense of the word was torpedoed and an opposition without much history behind it was returned to sit on the right of Mr. Speaker.

With regard to the second part of the speech from the throne, figuratively speaking, so far as the triangle I mentioned is concerned, we have the portions dealing with the special session of parliament, the Imperial conference, and one or two other things. At the special session of parliament we dealt with unemployment and the sum of $20,000,000 was brought down with the idea of wiping out unemployment. The Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers and all their followers in the election said, "If you just give us one chance we will wipe out unemployment; we will do away with it. We will not discuss it or consider it, but will absolutely eliminate it." And the people of Canada took them at their word. I do not believe that one unemployed person in Canada voted for the present opposition in the election. Practically every unemployed man and woman in Canada went to the polls and voted for our friends opposite. Those hon. gentlemen therefore are absolutely on trial, and unless they can fairly and squarely face this issue and remove it from the arena of party politics, standing true to their promises, I am afraid their political stock will go down considerably during the next few years.

What do we find with regard to unemployment? We find that in 1930, August 1, the employment figure was 118·8; on September 1, 116·6; October 1, 116·2; November 1, 112·9; December 1, 108·5; January 1, 101·7; and February 1, 100·7. That means that the employment index of Canadian industry has dropped from 118 to 100, a decline of 18 points in nine months; that is to say, 2 points per month. If that is not mathematical proof that hon. gentlemen opposite are not facing fairly the issue of employment and unemployment, I should like to know what they desire in the way of proof. Take again the unemployment situation. Unemployment on July 31 stood at 9·2; August 31, 9·3; September 30, 9·4; October 31, 10·8; November 30, 13·8—you will observe it is steadily increasing—December 31, 17; January 31, 16. In other words, the unemployment index has increased from 9·2 to 16, which is an increase of 7 points in practically nine months, or almost 1 point per month. That is another proof, so far as unemployment is concerned, that the situation has not improved. It is the duty of hon. gentlemen opposite to face the music and have this stigma removed from our national life, as they promised to do.

The other part of the speech from the throne deals with the present program of the government. We can neither analyze nor criticize it until it is brought down. When it is before us we shall study it. Now, face to face with the speech from the throne, with these three aspects of it, is the amendment moved by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). That amendment, I think, is very effectively arranged. The first part of it deals with the fact that the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite has not proven any remedy in the way of putting an end to unemployment; that agricultural conditions are worse than they were nine months ago; that industrial unemployment is worse than it was nine months ago; that our revenues are decreasing, and unless we do something Canada is in financial danger. The second part of the amendment deals with the fact that the Imperial conference was not a success; and that the policy propounded, the way in which it was presented, and what was done to defeat a freer trade budget in the election and, in its place, to erect high tariff walls in the House of Commons before the Prime Minister went to London, rendered the Imperial conference not only a farce but an imperial blunder. In this regard, then, the conclusion is reached that our trade relations with the motherland have been adversely affected, and until something is done conditions are not going to improve. And the last part of the amendment expresses the hope that the Prime Minister and his party, when the conference re-convenes in Ottawa, will do better than the right hon. gentleman did in London; because the situation in Canada is serious and all Canadians are looking to hon. gentlemen opposite for guidance through the depressing conditions now prevailing.

May I now deal briefly with certain matters touching the riding I have the honour to represent in the House of Commons. Before leaving for Ottawa in March I thought it would be wise to have a certain number of public meetings in the constituency in order to find out just what the people were thinking about in the way of a national policy and the record of the government. To this end meetings were held at eleven or twelve different points. One meeting was held at Whitkow, and at that meeting the people went on record 100 per cent as being opposed to high protection and in favour of freer trade. At Turtleford there was only a small minority in favour of high protection; the meeting went by a large vote in favour of freer trade for Canada. At Edam the meeting voted in favour of three important resolutions. One of these resolutions was with regard to the Hudson Bay railway, the Hudson bay port, Churchill, and trade between Canada and the motherland via Churchill. The idea was expressed that the lower the rates we had across the north Atlantic, the better the port facilities, and the more the Crowsnest rates were applied to the Hudson Bay railway, the greater success that artery of traffic would be. Another resolution went in favour of a bonus to wheat farmers in order that they might get cost of production out of the 1930 crop. The third resolution was in favour of freer trade as opposed to high and higher protection in Canada. This was the sentiment by almost a straight 100 per cent.

The next day another meeting was held at Medstead which went on record as being opposed to the drastic action of putting tariffs higher and higher in Canada. At Borden also the meeting went on record as being in favour of freer trade as opposed to protection. At Maymont the same thing took place. At Speers there was the same result. At Krydor, where 350 people were present, the meeting went on record as being one hundred per cent in favour of freer trade as opposed to higher protection. At Hafford the following night the meeting went on record as being in favour of freer trade as opposed to higher protection.

At Glaslyn the meeting went on record as being in favour of a fiscal system along the line of freer trade as opposed to a fiscal system which afforded higher protection and which would in time divide Canada and ruin her export trade.

Previous to these meetings being held I had received resolutions from all sections of my riding, and I believe this to be the proper time to bring them to the attention of this house. This is the time when all hon. members should be given an idea of just what is taking place and the conditions which prevail in the different ridings of Canada. This is about the only way in which an hon. member can find out exactly what the conditions are industrially and commercially. The first resolution was received from Meota, a few miles out of North Battleford, and reads as follows:

1. That we advocate government supervision of the grain exchange.
2. That we ask the federal government to guarantee a minimum fixed price of seventy cents for the 1930 wheat crop.

The resolution received from Turtleford reads as follows:

Resolved that the Dominion government be requested to set a minimum price for wheat of seventy cents per bushel basis No. 1 northern, Fort William or Port Arthur.

The resolution received from Speers reads as follows:

In view of the very serious situation that has developed as a result of the collapse of the wheat market:—

We the members of the wheat pool—"Speers local" urgently request that the Dominion government guarantee a minimum price of seventy cents a bushel at Fort William for No. 1 northern wheat grown during the season of 1930.

These resolutions contain many suggestions including a fixed price for wheat. The resolution received from Rabbit Lake reads as follows:

Resolved: That this council demand that Dominion government take steps to stabilize the wheat market so that a minimum price of at least seventy cents be maintained.

From another point in the north, at Edam, the following was received:

1. That the Dominion government be strongly urged to set a price of seventy cents per bushel basis No. 1 at Fort William.
2. That the Dominion government are hereby requested to supervise the Canadian banks with regard to interest charges and have same reduced to a maximum of seven per cent.
3. That in the opinion of this meeting it has become necessary and expedient for the Dominion government in the interests of the farming community to declare a moratorium until such time as conditions affecting agriculture shall have sufficiently improved to warrant its removal.

4. That whereas the price to-day is approximately 56 cents Fort William for one bushel of No. 1 wheat, and whereas the price to-day is approximately $3.35 per 98 pound sack of flour. This meeting is of the opinion, and strongly urges the Dominion government that a price be set on all wheat used for consumption in Canada of one dollar and twenty-five cents per bushel. And further that the price of flour per 98 pound sack should also be set at a reasonable price, which should not exceed present prices.

5. That all freight rates be lowered twenty per cent.

These resolutions have been received from points in northern Saskatchewan and they give a resume of the conditions prevailing in western Canada. They were received from pool and U.F.C. locals, the members of which know what they are talking about. When they say that conditions are serious, they are serious. I would like to know what the government intends to do. Resolutions were also received from Spiritwood, about eighty miles north of North Battleford, reading as follows:

(a) That a moratorium be asked for embracing a period of one year at least, or for such time as is necessary to give facilities to the farmer to revert to his accustomed prosperity.

(b) That all interests and indemnities on taxes be cancelled until a fair measure of prosperity be restored.

(c) Failing a moratorium, the meeting asks that no pressure be brought to bear against those persons upon whom debts are pressing heavily.

(d) That all debts owing by farmers to banks, machine companies or any wealthy corporation be treated in the same manner as shown in resolution (b).

(e) That a set price be established on wheat and other agricultural products, and in the event of the selling price falling below this set price that the difference be met by general taxation.

(f) That all banks, natural resources, timber, mines, oil wells, and water-powers be nationalized.

(g) That the extension of credit should be through the banks alone, controlled by the government, with a suitable provision made for those in distress for whom the said credit was rendered necessary.

I notice the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) is not in his seat, but that is nothing uncommon. Throughout this present session the members of the cabinet seem to be always absent. They are the ones individually and collectively responsible to Canada, but they absent themselves when important discussions are taking place. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that although he and his department, as well as the right hon. the Prime Minister have been telling us during the last six months that mixed farming would be the saving grace of western Canada, such statements do not apply to the constituency of North Battleford nor to northern Saskatchewan. That part of Canada has been carrying on mixed farming for the last fifteen or twenty years. It has the best water and feed facilities for that class of farming and is also benefited through having more natural protection than have the prairies.

The people too possess the determination to go ahead, and they have gone ahead. They have worked by day and by night; they have toiled late and early; they have done their utmost; they have economized as best they could but they find their position to-day to be a precarious one. They find they are in financial difficulties; they find that their farms and the equities they have in them are slipping away from them, they find that they cannot pay their debts and that they owe the banks and the machine companies, and consequently something must be done. When a whole community or a whole industry finds itself in danger, naturally it looks in all directions for help. The farmers of northern Saskatchewan and of the North Battleford federal riding have been looking to the Agriculture department, to the Minister of Agriculture, to the Prime Minister and to his cabinet for many months past to see if any help was forthcoming. I read resolution after resolution which shows that the farmers think they ought to have a fixed price for their wheat. They think that because parliament met in special session in September and the government pegged the price of 170 articles which the farmers have to buy, the Prime Minister should in the name of justice come as well to the aid of agriculture. Although the system of pegging the price of wheat or any other product may not be a sound one economically, is there any reason in the world why a government which would go to the rescue of the manufacturers and the industrialists, should not come forward and extend equal help to the farmers? These men constitute the foundation of agriculture, the basic industry of Canada, they make the wealth upon which Canada prospers; they cultivate the soil upon which all secondary industries are based and unless they succeed our industrial fabric will fall to the ground. Is there any reason why this government should not do something? Is there? I understand that these resolutions were most carefully forwarded to the Prime Minister and his colleagues but not one cabinet minister has dared to bring a solitary one of them to the attention of the house. Not one has been read to the house, and that is the reason I am bringing them to light and asking this government to take immediate and constructive action upon them.

The Prime Minister came out to Regina and said that nothing would be done, but I tell him this afternoon that that does not satisfy the western agriculturists; they are going to see that something will be done or something will be doing. They are going to carry on the fight and if they do not obtain redress, we all know what is going to take place when the next elections occur—there are not going to be as many votes cast in western Canada for Tory candidates.

An hon. MEMBER: We will take a chance.

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, it will be a chance, and a very slim one.

The Minister of Agriculture has been doing considerable advertising. I believe in advertising if you have a good thing to advertise, but it should be remembered that every time you advertise you have to make good or else you will fall behind. The hon. minister has been telling us what he is going to do, he has told us about the wonderful national agricultural policy which he is going to evolve. We have not seen it as yet. I would like to have him bring that down with the other resolutions that were spoken of. Let him bring it out of the closet even for half an hour. Let us examine the creature. The day has gone by for talking theoretically about mixed farming, for promises, discussions, mere conferences, announcements, commissions, theories, departmental propaganda, press despatches and statements of policy in magazines and weekly and daily newspapers across the country. The time for action has arrived. The time for fooling, twisting, backing up and turning, and doing nothing practical is over, and I should like to see the government sitting to the right of you, Mr. Speaker, do something. If something practical were done in the way of proving to Canada that agriculture and particularly wheat growing under present conditions and under the present extremely capitalistic fiscal policy, cannot prosper, that would at least be a constructive proceeding.

For instance, I would like to see the Minister of Agriculture, backed up by the government and their supporters in the house, start say two or three practical farms in Saskatchewan, in order to prove this. Let him pick out a farm in northern Saskatchewan, another in the centre and a third in the south. Let him make the farm whatever size he likes. Let him appoint a manager, select his working crew, and secure machinery. Let them start to cultivate the soil scientifically, with all the energy they have. Let the head men be selected by the Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister of Canada, and let them go to work and try to demonstrate to the people of Saskatchewan, north, south, east and west, whether agriculture can prosper under the fiscal system of higher and higher tariff as we have it to-day in western Canada. I venture to say that such an experiment cannot succeed, but I would like to see a real business test made to find out just where agriculture stands.

A farm managed in that way would have a system of accounting and would be expected to pay operating expenses, wages of the help, interest on capital invested, depreciation, repairs and dividends. If it cannot pay these items as big business, industry and commerce pay them, then it will be amply demonstrated to all Canada that with the best of virgin soil, the best of management, the best of equipment and everything in its favour excepting a false fiscal system, agriculture is in the doldrums and cannot be gotten out without some help. It is in a slough of despond. Something practical and constructive ought to be brought forward to prove that under present conditions the problem of farming must be faced resolutely and courageously, with no more theories and mere discussions, and without any more promises made to the people. The time for correlated action has arrived, and the people of Canada are anxiously awaiting for the government to do something.

We have heard from time to time from hon. members opposite that the farmers of western Canada do not know their business; that they do not know how to cultivate the soil; that they are not practical.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That they are lazy.

Mr. McINTOSH: They tell us they are not thrifty enough. They tell us that they do not go at the problem of agriculture constructively as our railway authorities and commercial experts do in their particular lines.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) has accused them of being lazy.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes. They tell us that the farmers of western Canada are lazy and that no matter what you do with those at present farming in western Canada, they cannot get anywhere. I resent that unfair imputation. Let the Prime Minister, who is a man of big business, and other hon. gentlemen who are men of genius, so we are told, get behind these practical farms. Let them give these farms their united support and let us see what they can prove to the people of Canada with regard to the farming situation. If they can prove that such farms can be made a success, their political future is made. If they cannot do so, their political future is not made; it will be doomed to dire failure, and something constructive for agriculture will have to be undertaken from coast to coast.

May I give some figures just to illustrate the present serious agricultural situation? I have under my hand a trade chart, and I find that price trends are all against the agriculturist and in favour of the industrialist. The figures are as follows:

Price Trend

Declines in commodity price levels from November, 1929, to January, 1931

Iron and steel	5 per cent
Pipe	2.2 per cent
Scrap	19.4 per cent
Hardware	1.6 per cent
Wire	no change
Manufactured Products	14.5 per cent
Flour and milled products	39.5 per cent
Textiles and fibres	15.9 per cent
Raw cotton	41.3 per cent
Cotton fabrics	10.1 per cent
Raw wool	37.4 per cent
Wool cloth	14.0 per cent
Carpets	no change
Farm products across Canada	49.7 per cent
Field crops throughout the Dominion	54.6 per cent

The price of grain in western Canada has declined practically 60 per cent; in other words, wheat is worth now only 40 per cent of what it was a year ago, and the farmer is caught betwixt the upper and nether millstone, —between the price of the industrial products he has to buy, which has been pegged by the present government, and the price of the farm products he has to sell. Consequently, there should be no misunderstanding as to the reason for his present serious economic condition.

Mr. J. A. BARRETTE (Translation) (Berthier-Maskinonge): Mr. Speaker, I first wish to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. In carrying out their task they made use of very appropriate language and their eloquence did them credit.

I wish also to refer to the sudden demise of two colleagues who were still with us at the emergency session in September last. I mean the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Rennie) whom I had not the privilege of knowing personally, but my recollection of him is that of an upright man, who has known but the path which leads to honour. As to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bettez), I knew him intimately and he frankly welcomed me to his friendship. The member for Three Rivers was truly one to emulate, he was a conscientious worker and the result at the polls on July 28, 1930, was ample proof of his popularity. Yet, the old Liberal guard was hostile to him. The leader of this faction was the hon. Senator Jacques Bureau, who openly opposed Mr. Bettez, and that surely was the cause of bitter feelings and heartburns in the ranks of the Liberal party, and I hope the effects will be apparent shortly; when the by-election takes place.

Mr. CARDIN (Translation): That remains to be seen!

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): It affords me much pleasure to welcome back my friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), following his illness; I knew him on the benches of our university. He is a fine specimen of our race and certainly does us credit.

May I state, sir, that following the elections of 1911, I had the privilege of visiting western Canada. In passing through Calgary I was the guest of honour of the member who then represented that riding, at Ottawa, the right hon. Mr. Bennett, and on that occasion I predicted that he would one day become Prime Minister of Canada. My prophecy has come true. I was a guest at dinner that night of the Prime Minister of to-day.

In 1911, I was elected as member for the riding of Berthier, and from 1911 to 1917 my contentions are that I conscientiously fulfilled my duties as the people's representative in this house. I honestly admit that, at times, it was a real hardship to detach myself from my party, especially on questions of the utmost importance. On imperial questions—those of a higher order—I almost invariably took issue with my party. I obeyed in this the voice of my conscience and justified the expectations of those who had done me the honour of electing me in 1911. I always stated openly what was in my mind and I shall continue to abide by the same rule.

In 1921, I was a candidate in the riding of Berthier. In 1925 and in 1926 I was a candidate in the riding of Berthier-Maskinonge—there was an increase in the family. In each of these elections, you must recall the fact, you gentlemen of the Liberal party, an appeal was made to fanaticism, to public passions, and it was stated that all the leaders of the Conservative party then and in the past, were dangerous imperialists. To be an imperialist meant to foster the interests of England in preference to those of Canada: all for England and nothing for Canada. You will recall, sir, that in all those elections, in the Liberal shops new wars were being turned out. In 1921 it was in Japan. In 1925 and 1926 it was in Russia. In 1930 it was in India. The latter being a dangerous and a serious one. The following manoeuvres were concocted in Liberal clubs: we shall organize, we the good Liberals; once more shall we frighten the people, we shall wave the flag of conscription and with such phantoms we shall win the elections. They succeeded in 1921; again they did the trick in 1925 and 1926, but in 1930 they missed their shot. To prove to you how well their manoeuvres were planned, may I tell you that the Liberals organized an extraordinary press campaign, threats of conscription were resorted to by a leading newspaper of Montreal, three days previous to the 1930 elections:

Threats of Conscription

The English Imperialists rely on the Conservatives of Canada assuming power in order to submit at the next Imperial conference in London the question of the empire's defence and a project of military conscription extending to all dominions.

They made use of such an item to further their end, this newspaper was distributed in large numbers in the most remote places ot all French speaking counties in Quebec, and even in other provinces where French Canadian parishes existed. This means that absolutely nothing was neglected to influence public opinion, everything was permissible, even the waving of the flag of conscription, in order to secure a victory similar to those of 1921, 1925 and 1926.

To show you how little consistent were these prophets of calamities, may I ask what happened to the amendment of the member for Yamaska, which was moved on December 3, 1912, when the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne took place? Did those who were then members of this house, support this amendment worded as follows:

That this house is ready and willing to adopt, at any time, efficient measures for the defence of Canada, an autonomous colony under the British crown; but that this house is nevertheless of opinion that the Canadian parliament has no right to impose on the Canadian people responsibilities in regard to the general defence of the empire, as long as under the present statutes of constitutional relations between Canada and the United Empire of Great Britain and Ireland, the government of His Majesty responsible to the people of the United Empire alone, will reserve for itself the exclusive management and control of Imperial and international questions.

This amendment was opposed by the Prime Minister of that date. He stated that he could not accept such an amendment maintaining that its adoption would prevent Canada of even raising a finger in defence of the empire. I notice that, of all those who are in the house, I am the only one who supported that amendment. No one else here now gave it their support. As to the result of the vote, you may refer to the debates of 1912, page 590. The only members, at that time, who voted in favour of this amendment were Messrs. Achim, Barrette, Lamarche and Mondou.

In the course of the same session, Sir Robert Borden moved that an amount of $35,000,000 be appropriated to increase the empire's naval forces. I supported the leader of the opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who opposed this measure which fortunately was rejected in the Senate.

On June 20, 1917, I had the privilege to move in the house a subamendment to Bill No. 75, known generally as the Conscription Act, and which is as follows:

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "this bill be not now read a second time, but it be read a second time this day six months."

The following were the views of the director of the Devoir, at that time. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), at a large meeting which he held on the following night, June 21, 1917, in the St. Henry Hall, stated:

A subamendment has just been moved by a member whom I cannot exactly place and whose intentions I do not wish to know, but which should oblige everybody to vote by a straight "yes" or "no."

It is the sub-amendment of Mr. Barrette, member for Berthier, who moved the six months hoist of the bill, in other words, its death without a murmur.

Mr. Georges Pelletier, one of the principal editors of the Devoir, wrote:

The proposal of Mr. Barrette, member for Berthier, to give the Borden bill a six months' hoist, is rational, from whatever quarter it may come. It will have the advantage to show to the people who is for and against conscription. Everybody will have to vote on the principle itself of the bill. This will seem somewhat embarrassing for many politicians, but one must bear in mind first that the interest of the country as a whole passes before those of private individuals. Those interested will come out from their hiding places—and that is what the electorate demands.

And the vote was taken. Nine members supported the subamendment.

The following were the views, at the time, of the editor of the newspaper La Province, and who, is to-day the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé):

The six months' hoist is nothing less than a motion to kill the bill. It is a parliamentary way of strongly opposing a bill. We regret that Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not see fit to have his followers vote in favour of Mr. Barrette's subamendment. Would not this have been the means of proving his sincerity and firm determination of opposing conscription?

May I point out to the house that after voting for the subamendment, I gave my support to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's referendum. I also wish to point out that I voted later, against the conscription bill.

The Liberal party, in voting against my sub-amendment, accepted the principle of conscription, according to the evidence just quoted. The leaders of the Liberal party who had the privilege of travelling through France after the war had quite a different story to tell over there. They stated that here, in Canada, we were all of the same mind and that the Canadian people had made an extraordinary effort in the war.

Some with mezzo-soprano voices, but all with unusual glee proclaimed that we were ready to make any sacrifice for England, for the defence of the empire and to help France. Shortly after, we read in the press of this country that Messrs Dandurand, Lemieux, Taschereau, Béland had been awarded decorations by the French Republic for services rendered to France.

And, I do not wish to omit the provincial secretary, the Hon. Mr. Athanase David, who while in France had himself dubbed "Ministre des Beaux Arts." He also was given a little button-hole rosette for his devotion to the cause of the defence of the national policy. I could mention many others who were thus awarded decorations.

Once back on this side, these people still proclaimed: "We are still against all participation in the war, against any Canadian effort." They once more appeal to prejudice. And why? Did they intend thereby to prove their sincerity? Had France known of this deception would she still have awarded decorations to these gentlemen? I have my doubts.

I am not aware that the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), whose presence in the house I heartily welcome, has been awarded any decorations. If he has, he does not attach to them as much importance as ro his other hon. friends. If he has not, then I congratulate him, because it is well that France should know her true friends. After pointing out these facts, I wonder who will truly prove themselves to be real national heroes.

I shall add a word about that Senator prisoner. From 1914 to 1918, Senator Béland was a prisoner of war. The Conservative party did its utmost to come to his rescue. He was even paid his parliamentary indemnity during his entire absence from the house; he was paid the sum of $16,000. The hon. Minister of Justice of that day, Mr. Doherty, offered to exchange two German prisoners, known as Baron Von Polenz and Baron Mundheim in order to have our Canadian prisoner set free. On his return to this country, in his native village of Louiseville, the hon. Senator declared that the Canadian government had carried out their entire duty in the Great war. But when the elections were in full swing, he held public meetings and appealed to prejudice so as to rouse public opinion against the Conservative party which previously, according to his own words, had fulfilled their entire duty. Those were his thanks to his friends who had come to his rescue during the war.

At the last general elections, the leader of the Conservative party carried on a very remarkable campaign. He pledged himself to work out a national and truly Canadian policy, that of "Canada First." Tariff protection was to be given, for the first time, a place of honour in this country. The leaders of the Liberal party never were sincere in applying the policy of protection, and each time the Liberal party endeavoured to deal with this economic problem, the people always withdrew from them their confidence. Thus, in 1911, one of the principal factors of the Liberal party's defeat was—in addition to the naval question—the fiscal policy advocated by the hon. Mr. Fielding. In 1930, the Dunning budget was equally rejected by the popular vote. The results of the last election has wholly changed the appearance of this house. My eyes are resting on my friend the ex-Minister of Justice who sat on this side of the house, and because of his personal charm, I feel sorry to see him sitting on the opposition benches. All is different, "toto coelo differt." A great change has taken place. However, I trust that the change is for the best and in the interest of the Canadian people.

The Right Hon. Arthur Meighen stated one day:

> I have no fear of going before the Canadian electorate when an actual question of protection arises, because the Canadian people are protectionists.

The Prime Minister also promised, to the farmers and industrialists, the old age pensions, unemployment relief and cessation of immigration. Having assumed power on July 28, what did our government do? They first stopped the flow of immigration in order to protect the Canadian workers. They called an emergency session and appropriated $20,000,000 to help the unemployed. They then appreciably increased the tariff on foreign products so as to help the farming and industrial classes.

The leader of the Liberal party, when in power, made the following statement:

> The government cannot be held responsible for this economic crisis: it is word-wide and unemployment exists mostly in our opponents' imagination.

Now that the Conservatives are in power if anything goes wrong, they say: The fault lies with the Tories. You may judge, sir, how rational these gentlemen are!

Truly, could we have done more? Since our party assumed power, we have had an emergency session, an Imperial conference and prepared the program of an important session in the course of which we shall enact measures with the view of bringing back prosperity to this country.

The Liberals contend that butter still sells at low prices. That may be. They filled our cold-storages with foreign butter from the very first year of their administration up to October of last year. We have butter to last a year. It is therefore not astonishing that butter sells cheap.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): There is no more.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): To realize how popular protection was, even among the Liberals, ask the ex-ministers, those who wield the greatest influence in the Liberal ranks, such as the ex-minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler), the ex-minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). Did they interfere with the tariff affecting the principal industries existing in their ridings? I do not think so. Were tariff changes made on boots and shoes in the riding of Quebec East? Were tariff changes made affecting the industries which were operating in Huron and North Bruce? I am not aware of it.

The Liberal, moreover, contend that the Conservative policy tends to protect private interests. What is the nature of these private interests and whom do they affect? Are they referring to the Canadian Pacific Railway whose president, Mr. Beatty, is an intimate friend of the hon. leader of the opposition, the former having been appointed chairman of a royal commission to inquire into the salaries of the civil servants and make suggestions? Do they refer to the bank of Montreal, where the government make their deposits? Are they the textile companies? Are those industries too highly protected?

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): They are too highly protected?

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Yes.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): In what respect?

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): We shall prove it.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Does the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition suggest any remedies? No, sir. That amendment simply express regrets of not being any longer in power; that the present government has done nothing so far and has greatly increased the unemployment crisis. Again do I state that the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition suggests absolutely nothing which can be of any help to the farming class or even to the unemployed.

What do we find in the speech from the throne? A pledge is given that special arrangements will be made with foreign countries and that a tariff board will be appointed.

I could enumerate many good results accruing from a protective tariff. In my own riding, in the town of Louiseville, the Associated Textiles is in operation since a year and employs 400 people, next autumn it will employ 800, and this is due to tariff protection as advocated by the right hon. Prime Minister. The following is an extract from the newspaper The Drapeau, dated March 24, 1931:

> Deeds Speak Louder Than Words
> As Le Drapeau announced last week, the Nash Company will establish an automobile factory in Canada.
> On his return to the United States, after having made here the necessary arrangements for the organization of a new company to be known as the Dominion Motors Limited, Mr. Nash made the following statement:
> 1. The aim of the Nash Motors Company, in this new enterprise, is to serve the best interests of Canadian distributors and salesmen of the Nash car pursuant to the new tariff regulations of Canada;
> 2. Owing to my long experience and my practical knowledge of leaders among Canadian business men, I must acknowledge my deep admiration for their manufacturing ability and their spirit of progress in industrial matters.

These are two instances which cannot be invoked in support of the old policy of Mackenzie King. The first company mentioned states that it is the Bennett tariff that put them under the necessity of establishing a factory in Canada.

This is a statement which further strengthens others of that nature and is a clear proof of the beneficial effects of the policy which Mr.

King persists in regarding as detrimental. The American workers who are employed in the manufacture of motor cars, which Mr. Nash sells later to Canadians, also find this policy disastrous, since it will deprive them of work which will hereafter be done by the artisans of this country.

Mr. Nash's statement has almost the same importance, for we must not forget that Mr. Bennett stated at the short session of September, 1930, that it was recognized that Canada possessed the natural resources and the technical business equipment to supply all its requirements in manufactured products. The American and English industrialists are acknowledging this fact. In less than eight months Mr. Bennett gave work to more than 200,000 people. Mr. King will have to make many speeches before this is forgotten.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I do not like to interrupt the hon. member who is speaking, but through an agreement by all parties I must call your attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that it is now six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): When the house, sir, took recess at 4.30 o'clock this afternoon so that we might attend a lovely wedding, I was just going to discuss the Imperial conference. Our opponents were inquiring: who will represent Canada at the Imperial conference? They felt anxious about the fate of Canada. Yet, time has shown that our delegates did as much credit and lived up to the expectations of the Canadian people. Our Prime Minister played one of the leading parts at that conference. He proclaimed the policy "Canada first" in the presence of our King, George V, and the Prime Minister of England. This policy met with the approval of the dominions and also that of the leader of the Conservatives in England. I am pleased to quote in this connection the views of the director of the Devoir:

"In my opinion," he says, "and I state this after giving it full consideration, the Prime Minister took the right attitude at the opening of the conference."

The ex-Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) devoted the greatest part of his speech to the Imperial conference. He seems to attach much importance to the fate of the empire. How things have changed! To-day, our leader returns more Canadian and our good friends in the opposition find that the Prime Minister of this country is not sufficiently English. Quite the contrary to what had been contended that all the leaders of our nation were avowed Imperialists, to-day it is thought that they are not imperialist enough.

The leader of the Liberal party in his splendid speech on the address in reply to the speech from the throne stated:

I never thought the day would come in this parliament, Mr. Speaker, when it would fall to the lot of any member of this House of Commons to protest against an attempt on the part of a Canadian ministry, to force the hand of a British government but since that day has come there appears to be an element of poetic justice in the circumstance that I have the privilege of being the first to make that protest. I do make it very strongly indeed, that any ministry from Canada should seek, by means of coercion to influence the government of Great Britain with respect to any matter of policy which is entirely within its own rights.

Recently an order in council placing an embargo on Russian products was passed by the Canadian cabinet. For that act the Prime Minister received congratulations from the whole country. Among the high dignitaries in religious and civil life who approved of such action, I must especially quote an extract of an article by the Rev. Abbe Omer Valois, editor of the Action Populaire, dated March 5, 1931:

All will admit that Mr. Bennett's government has just made a decision which will have a great social bearing. By Order in Council, he has prohibited the entry of Russian products into Canada: lumber of all kind, paper-pulp, pulpwood, asbestos and furs. Our natural resources are unrivalled and as unemployment exists, this is not the time to import things which God has placed at our disposal. We must protect ourselves—as the United State have done by prohibiting the entry of Russian lumber in their country—against a nation which has virtually reduced the workers to the state of slavery.

May I now, sir, make a few comments on the wheat crisis. I lately cut out an article from the Action Catholique quoting the Oservatore Romano, which suggested a solution to the wheat crisis. If you will permit me, sir, I shall read this article, it is interesting:

"Store up the wheat in the years of abundance, by withdrawing from the markets its surplus so as to return to the market in lean years." This solution written in biblical style is suggested in the present wheat crisis, by the "Oservatore Romano" the Vatican organ, on the eve of the International wheat Congress which opens to-day in Rome.

"The newspaper adds:" thus the price of wheat could be controlled, and, to attain this end, a small proportion of the world's gold resources would suffice.

The present surplus of wheat is 420,000,000 bushels. If this wheat was bought at a fixed price of two shillings and nine pence per bushel, that would only call for 2½ per cent of the world's gold reserves.

This brings us back to the time of Pharaoh's regime, the latter had as his administrator Joseph who was sold by his brothers. I shall not refer to the wife of Potiphar. If you remember this narrative, Joseph had been appointed superintendent by Pharaoh; the former had accumulated in the granaries of the country the entire surplus of wheat accruing from years of abundance and the legend tells us that—

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): History.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): History, not the legend.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): History tells us that in the lean years Joseph's policy rendered great service to humanity. I do not see why we should not adopt the same policy in this country.

One third, sir, of the population of Canada speaks the French language, and I think that proportionately to the total population, we are responsible for one third of the country's debts, we should, therefore, on the same basis, equally enjoy its privileges. I have always felt independent in parliament. The leader of the Conservative party stated, at the last elections, that Quebec would not be neglected and nothing would be too good for her. I heartily and joyfully endorsed such a statement. I am aware that the Prime Minister has been too busy to look into this matter and grant what we have a right to expect, however, I hope that the day is not far off when we shall receive all that we have a right to, when we shall hold the position to which we are entitled in this country. Under the late administration we were neglected; we must be better dealt with and I feel certain that the leader of the government will be lavish in his grants.

As long as I occupy a seat in this parliament, rest assured that I shall be the champion of our rights, race, language and creed.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, seeing that the bird of time has but a little way to flutter and the bird is on the wing, I hope the hon. gentlemen who moved and seconded the address to His Excellency will take the amenities for granted.

The speech from the throne which is now being discussed by the house is, I think, characteristic of most of such speeches which it has been my privilege to hear. It of course claims a great deal more to have resulted from the actions of the government than the facts would warrant; in order to give much needed inspiration to the nation it indicates hopes of prosperity which really have no basis in economic reality; and it is as vague as to the scope and the nature of the legislation which is proposed as speeches of this kind usually are. With regard to the amendment, I think we may describe it as being cold cabbage from the table of the Liberal defeat which is no more acceptable after being warmed up than it was when first served.

I want first of all frankly to recognize the colossal task which confronts the administration. There were no doubt tremendous difficulties to be overcome at the time of Confederation; in 1914 when this country entered the Great war the government of the day was faced with great tasks; but perhaps no government in the history of Canada has ever been called upon to grapple with problems so pressing, so baffling in their nature, so complex in their ramifications, and so fraught with possibilities both grave and hopeful as has the present government. I shall in a few moments attempt to describe very briefly the economic crisis through which we are passing. But before doing so let me indicate that so far as I can be of any assistance as an individual member of this house I desire to offer to the administration that cooperation which is embodied in the principles of the movement I represent. It is essential to my mind that the government should be successful. I notice that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) already has branded the government as a failure before it has fairly got its toes in the stirrups of power, but I am rather inclined to think that the wish is father to the thought. What will happen if the government is a failure? If this government is a failure it will be the failure of Canada, and the people of Canada will suffer accordingly. I would like to suggest to the opposition that it will show a greater fitness for power when it has indicated to the people of Canada that it has given assistance to the government in order to make it truly successful. Let it be said that the government has shown some action, as was stated by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). Whether that action meets with the approval of all members of this house or of the country at large remains to be seen, but at least the government has acted. It did relieve some of the distress caused by unemployment last winter; it did try to secure a market for Canadian wheat at prices higher than those prevailing in the markets of the world; it has checked immigration; it did guarantee the wheat pool to the banks, and it has raised the tariff. I presume that the raising of the tariff was the real policy of the administration. That was the policy upon which the government based its hopes for the wiping out of unemployment; that was the policy by the introduction of which the government hoped it would bring prosperity to Canada. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the hopes of the government were much too sanguine in that respect, but that was its policy and let me say again that if the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in his nine years of power had reduced the tariff as much as the present government has raised it in eight months, his attack with respect to the keeping of promises would have had a great deal more force than I think we can attach to it.

Let me now for a moment glance at the economic situation. I would like to commend once more to the house the perusal of the speech made by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) and also the speech of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman). These hon. gentlemen have not been accustomed to use hyperbole in their descriptions of the situation in western Canada. They know what they are talking about; they do not overdraw the picture. I shall not waste any of my time in giving more of the harrowing details to which this house has listened with respect to the conditions which exist at the present time in western Canada. Those hon. members who are in touch with public questions, as I am sure all members are, have noticed in the daily press that at meetings and conventions of farmers and before agricultural committees of the various legislative assemblies of the western provinces we have had voluminous evidences of an economic situation the like of which western Canada has never before experienced. This is not a criticism of the present administration; this is merely a statement of fact, and I shall indicate to you how it comes about.

The western farmers have not been put in a bad position just during the last year; the western farmers have been suffering from unjust burdens for generations. It is sometimes said that it is a strange thing that agriculture in the west could not stand one bad year, and it is a marvel to some people in the east that the west is in such a plight when only 1930 is regarded as being a bad year. The situation is not so difficult to understand if we examine it carefully. Up to 1930 the farmers had been working from hand to mouth, as the saying goes. They had been burdened with more than their share of taxation through the tariff; they were burdened with a higher rate of interest than is charged anywhere else in Canada; they were burdened with a heavy freight rate both coming and going on all the business which they had to do, and then, as now, they found themselves trying to sell wheat in a market that was really a dump market. They never had anything left over; they had no resources upon which they could fall back when a year like 1930 came along, and the result was that when it did come along they were in a very poor position to meet it.

I think it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who remarked, in effect during the course of his speech, that while the world is passing through an economic crisis, if the Canadian government had applied proper policies during the last decade or so Canada might have escaped this crisis. I do not know to what extent it would have been possible for Canada to escape a condition which is world-wide, but I do know that certain things could have been done by previous governments which would have made a vast difference to the economic life of Canada at the present time. I will not forego this opportunity of laying at the door of the previous government one of the greatest crimes against Canada that ever has been committed by any government. I refer to the return to the gold standard which, either by their failure to understand or through their disregard of consequences, they deliberately perpetrated upon the people of Canada, more than doubling not only the national debt and the provincial and municipal debts, but all private debts contracted under the inflation which took place during the war, and by so doing they placed the farmers of the west in a position which is hopeless.

The government were well warned. I presume they did not think the warning was sufficiently backed by the intelligentsia because it happened to come from this corner, but the question of finance is not beyond the average intelligence, and in this corner of the house we have spent some time on it. We know it was wrong to go back to the gold basis; we warned the government not to do so. By so doing the government have defrauded the entire public of Canada in the interests of a few bondholders. By a proper policy on that one matter alone the previous government would have saved Canada from a great deal of what this country is suffering from at the present moment.

Added to the burdens which come from an overstocked wheat market and the burdens which come from a tariff which is borne more by the western farmers than by any other class in Canada; added to the excessive interest charges and the doubled war debt brought about by going back to the gold basis, is the world situation. Of course none of us blames either the present or the previous government for the world situation, but we must not allow that world situation to excuse us from getting rid of it, as far as Canada is concerned, as speedily as possible. The depression is world-wide, and I do not know that we would be wise in blaming any particular government, because in this world of ours we have a great many different kinds of governments. We have Labour governments, Socialist governments, Communist governments, Fascist governments, Conservative governments, Republican governments, Liberal governments and even U. F. A. governments, and yet no government has been able to avoid its share of this world crisis. As a matter of fact, in my view the plain truth is that no government in the world knows exactly what to do at the present time. The present situation demands a new type of statesmanship; a vision which partyism seldom breeds, and a courage that may not be conducive to large majorities.

I believe that we are witnessing to-day throughout the world the disintegration of our economic system. I believe that, however long a time it may take to accomplish the transformation, we are passing out of the capitalistic stage into what we sometimes call the cooperative commonwealth. I believe that the sooner governments appreciate that fact and, to the best of their ability, adjust themselves to the conditions as they exist, with that fact in view, the better it will be for every country concerned. I believe that nothing but disaster can come if we stand in the way of changes which are imminent, and try to carry on the old system in the old way. I believe, as I say, that we are witnessing a disintegration; and integration should certainly take place along with that disintegration if we wish to avoid greater difficulties.

Now let me turn for a few moments to a consideration of the government's policy in so far as it directly affects the agricultural class which I represent in this house. Protection for Canada is not a cure and never can be made a cure for any of our fundamental economic ills. Nevertheless it is in my opinion a necessity—a necessity in view of the laws of national existence, which are as rigorous in their demands upon nations as is the law of life upon the individual. Either adaptation or death is the law of life, and Canada must obey that law, just as the individuals composing her citizenship must obey it.

[Mr. Irvine.]

What then is the condition to which Canada must necessarily adapt herself in relation to tariffs? The position may be stated very briefly. Practically every country in the world has barred its doors against the importation of Canadian goods. They did not wait for us to raise our tariffs; they raised theirs. That is the first fact. They may have been stupid in doing so, and I think that subsequent history will show that they were. But we cannot speculate on what might have been or what ought to be. It is what is that we must face. And that is the fact: they have actually raised their tariffs against Canada, not only with respect to her manufactured products but also with respect to her raw products such as wheat and every other kind of farm produce.

It has been very truly said by hon. gentlemen to my right that if we do not buy from other countries we cannot sell to other countries. Very true. But it is surely equally true that if we do not sell to other countries we cannot buy from other countries. And other countries have already said, "You cannot sell to us because we will not allow you to do so." They have already put up their tariff walls. In this connection, let me quote a statement made at the Imperial conference. We have had a good many quotations from that memorable conference, and this is one of the memorable statements which we ought to notice. It is from a speech delivered at the conference by Mr. Thomas, the right hon gentleman whose famous phrase has been discussed at such length in this house. I quote Mr. Thomas:

> I therefore, sir, on behalf of the United Kingdom government, want this morning to look at the cold facts as recorded in our trade returns. In 1928 the volume of the world's trade was, roughly, 20 per cent greater than in the pre-war year, 1913. In 1928 the empire trade as a whole had also increased by just about that amount, so that we find ourselves in this position, that, taking the British empire as a whole, its share in the world's trade marches as it were equally with that of the rest of the world. But when we come to the United Kingdom's share of the world's trade for the same period, 1913-1928, the United Kingdom's share of that trade is less by 20 per cent. Now, sir, those are very remarkable figures, and they clearly indicate that, whilst the empire as a whole has shared in the general world development in that period, so far as the United Kingdom's portion is concerned, we have not only not held our own, but we have very much gone back.

In other words, while the protected world gained 20 per cent, while the protected members of the empire gained 20 per cent of trade in that given period, the only free trade country in the world lost 20 per cent, making a difference of 40 per cent between that country, the only example of free trade the world has, and the protected countries. I am not saying for a moment that this disparity was all due to the fact that she had free trade; there are ten thousand different things that enter into consideration. But the fact is that her free trade did not prevent her from dropping behind all the others in her trade returns. Hon. gentlemen to my right insist —when they are out of office of course—that it would be to the best advantage of Canada if we opened our door. Well, Britain opened her doors and lost 40 per cent more trade than the rest of the world. That is the fact; there is evidence from Mr. Thomas in support of it. Why was that so? Because, while Great Britain opened her doors to other countries, other countries would not open their doors to her; and since trade was made impossible by the refusal of one party to bargain, nothing else could result than what actually did ensue. That is what I mean by saying that, however stupid tariffs may be, however uneconomic, however much against the best interests of mankind, however much they may stand in the way of internationalism, the fact remains as I have indicated. And it is a fact with which we must square ourselves, and with which we must deal.

That is what I mean when I say that for Canada to exist in a protected world she must have protection. If you want any further proof of that, turn to my hon. friends to the right. For a while they sounded the death knell of protection on the hustings, though they never tolled any of its knells in legislation. Why? Was it because the manufacturers ruled that government? I know that some people say that, but I will not say it. Or was it because the Liberals deliberately set themselves to deceive the people of Canada? I know that some people say that, but I will not say it. I do not think the Liberals deceive the people any more than I do.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: I might tell my hon. friend that I am giving him perhaps a higher recommendation than I have a right to; but for the moment I am generous. I believe the reason really was that they discovered that, whether protection was a good policy or a bad policy, they could not interfere with it in Canada, but had to continue it. And they did continue it.

I am merely interested in this fact. I do not think protection is a good policy as a world policy; I would rather incline to world free trade if anyone were working at it. But there is no one working at it. The world is not interested in free trade, and the world is too far away just now. I am living in western Canada and I see the ravages of economic difficulties, which by the way are made worse by this tariff. Nevertheless I can see the eastern problem and the problem of Canada as a nation in relation to other countries, and I am here reluctantly admitting the fact as it actually is. We must therefore find other policies to deal with agriculture to recompense it for a tariff policy which is inevitable in our relations with other nations. Eastern Canada, then, by virtue of the history of the Liberal party, by virtue of our relationship with the world, must have a tariff. The industrial east insists upon it and is getting it. But just as far as the industrial east needs a tariff, to that extent a tariff is disastrous to western Canada as things now stand. That is the problem which confronts us, the problem of adjusting the rights of one class in the community to the rights of another class. The solving of this problem should engage the very best attention of parliament; it should be taken entirely out of politics. I have often said in this house, and I say now, that it is a disgrace that two historic parties such as we have in Canada should divide the nation on a question in respect to which they both follow the same policy, hopelessly alienating one section of the country from another in the hope of obtaining power. The time has come when we must deal with this question, not as an abstract one but as one of practical necessity for the internal wellbeing of the state. The west cannot go on with the tariffs as they are to-day, just as the east cannot go on without them.

Reference has been made in the past to the possibility of secession. Those references may have been made rather lightly but I want to say that I do not think they can be regarded too lightly. I happened to be at the United Farmers of Alberta convention last year when a resolution was moved to that effect. I spoke against it to the best of my ability, as I believed it would be a disastrous move to make. I do not think it would bring any benefits, but that is not the point. The point is that a distressed, discouraged people will try anything, and if we at this esssion of the house—not at the next session or the one after that—do not find some means of compensating agriculture for the extra burden which the tariff has imposed upon it, we shall have to face the disintegration of our Dominion.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. IRVINE: I hear protests from the other side, but I can protest just as loudly. I was careful to point out that I argued against this resolution to the best of my ability, and I would do the same thing again. However, such things have been argued against in other countries in times past, but it was of no avail. The economic pressure in western Canada to-day is of such a nature that it will drive the people to adopt similar action to that taken under similar conditions in the past. The western farmer cannot stand and will not stand another year like 1930. I want that point to be brought home to the parliamentarians in this house; the western farmer cannot stand this hopeless burden any longer.

An hon. MEMBER: Lots of other people are standing it.

Mr. IRVINE: Other people may have burdens to bear, but they are not the hopeless burdens of the farmer who has been carrying them all along.

Tariffs have presented a problem to Canada since confederation, or at least since the national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald was adopted. That problem has never been solved; it has been simply a political football during all these years. No serious attempt has been made to face it, although it threatens to divide the east from the west.

The farmer does not want everything his own way; he is not opposing the benefits which may accrue to the manufacturer from the tariff; all he asks is that he be not left to pay the whole bill himself. I hope the house will consider this point seriously and will do its best to bring about a more cooperative attitude between the manufacturer of the east and the farmer of the west. Methods of compensation present almost insurmountable barriers, but some way must be found or else we shall have to face something much worse than we face at present. It may be accomplished by means of export bonuses, by pegging the price of wheat, by giving a subsidy or by some other method; it may be that you can do something by adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), but it is imperative that something be done.

My next point is in regard to the grain trade, which brings into focus the much discussed Imperial conference. Perhaps I could find no better way to approach this matter than to give a few facts with respect to how other countries deal with their wheat. For instance, Germany imposes an import duty of $1.62 per bushel. France, in addition to an 84 cents import duty, enforces milling quotas of 90 per cent domestic wheat, and the customs collected on importations are used to pay premiums on French wheat which is exported. Greece imposes an import duty of 55 cents per bushel and compels her millers to purchase domestic wheat at a fixed price. Switzerland has a government monopoly of wheat with a maximum price of $2.32 per bushel and a minimum price of $2.11. Sweden has a fixed price with an import duty of 27 cents per bushel. Norway has a government monopoly which controls all grain, domestic or imported, requiring a budget of $32,000,000 annually to carry on the business. Poland pays a bounty of 18 cents per bushel on wheat exported and imposes an import duty of 53 cents per bushel. Spain prohibits the importation of wheat until the domestic wheat exceeds $1.75 per bushel, then imports are regulated by the government as it sees fit. Twenty-two out of twenty-six European countries have adopted one or all of the following measures:

Import duties.
Export bounties.
Price fixing.
Milling quotas.
Financial guarantees to marketing agencies.
Subsidies to growers.
Governmental monopoly of the trade.

Policies of the above nature, being followed so universally, have had the effect of increasing the output of wheat in the different European countries, thus reducing the amount required from the world's exportable surplus. In addition to that, the mechanization of agriculture has made it possible to increase the output of wheat throughout the world. These European countries having practically barred the importation of wheat, it leaves Great Britain as the only free market. When we consider how much Great Britain can take from us, it will bring us to the true problem of the Imperial conference. In 1930 the world's marketable surplus was 1,200,000,000 bushels, and the total of imports into Great Britain for that year amounted to 196,000,000 bushels, leaving over a thousand million bushels of wheat running around the world looking for consumers and unable to find them. The point is that Great Britain is simply a dumping market for wheat, and even if the Prime Minister had been successful in securing for Canada the entire market of Great Britain it would have been of little use to us. I will go so far as to say that it might have been harmful, because we would have had to sell our wheat in Great Britain, as we are doing to-day, at about 50 per cent of the cost.

We cannot afford to do that, neither for Great Britain or any other country. The Prime Minister tried to accomplish the one thing that would have been of any use to us, namely, to induce the British government to put an import duty on foreign wheat, thus increasing the price of empire wheat in the British market. He cleary saw that if we cannot get a little more for our Canadian wheat in the British market, there is not much use in getting that market. He has failed in that so far, but it is hinted that if he had gone overseas with a tie of the right colour or had filled his mouth with maple syrup and dipped his words in honey, the result might have been very different. But Great Britain does not buy goods for such reasons. We do not expect her to do so. We know that Great Britain, like every other country, will buy goods where she can get them the cheapest, and unless a quid pro quo of some sort can be offered, the whole thing is simply hopeless. Therefore what we have to face is the fact that at the present time there is no market for wheat on this planet. Hon. members talk about finding a market for wheat as if it were something they expected to discover under a little rock which they might turn over. There is not such a market anywhere, and therefore it is necessary for Canada to work out an entirely different policy in respect to her industries.

I noticed that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) rather sneered at the idea of Canada becoming so far as possible a self-supporting economic unit. In fact he said that the Prime Minister had adopted that idea as a policy. I was not aware that he had done so, but personally I believe in that policy. Not that I am unaware of the economic organic unity of the world; not that I am unaware of the great possibilities of an ultimate federation of the world in the parliament of man. Those things I am looking forward to, and I hope to live to see them, but I hae ma doots about that. I agree that such things are very hopeful and desirable, but I hold to the view that the world being as it is, and since we are charged with the first responsibility of at least feeding, clothing and giving shelter to our own people, we must find a policy that will enable us to do that whether anybody else in any other country can do so or not. It is preposterous that in a country like Canada we cannot at least feed, clothe and shelter ten million people. I have referred before in the house to the comet which Huxley hoped would some day hit the world if it did not show a little more intelligence in human affairs. I want the house to imagine that comet has come, hit the world and left just Canada. Imagine the plight we would be in! No foreign markets anywhere! Do you think we would sit down and die? Do you not think we would get along fairly well? We might have to do without a few of the luxuries, and subsequently that might be all the better for our manhood, but we could get along very well. I am not suggesting that we try to alienate ourselves from the rest of the world; but I do want to point out that simply because we cannot sell wheat to Great Britain is no reason why people in Canada should starve; and simply because our manufacturers cannot ship boots to Great Britain or to Europe is no reason why our people should not have boots to wear. What we require more than anything else is a plan.

I was going to say something about the great challenge of Russia to the capitalistic system. I think there is a challenge. I think Russia presents a challenge, but the greatest challenge that is presented to Canada to-day, the challenge to the system of which this institution is an expression, is the challenge of our debt-burdened, distressed farmers, of our thousands of hungry unemployed, of our thousands of merchants who have upon their books millions in debts that they cannot collect. That is the challenge to capitalism in Canada, and I say to this institution which is an expression of that capitalistic system, that you will have to make it work or quit it. You may criticise Russia just as much as you please, but Russia stands first in the world in one thing, and that is that she has a plan. It may be a bad plan—I am not discussing the virtues of it—but it is a plan. Canada to-day is a planless country. We plan nothing; we drift, drift, drift, and nobody knows where we are going to land; the shoals are breaking to lee at the moment, and the lowering sky bespeaks a storm. We cannot longer drift like that. I ask that the house devise an intelligent plan to make Canada as far as possible a self-supporting economic unit. There is no time to lose; no time to dilly-dally about fighting for power.

In conclusion, I submit that it would be an excellent thing if the government would appoint a committee of the house to inquire into all these economic facts in Canada, and when these facts have been found, then to proceed with an intelligent plan and policy in relation to those facts, disregarding party-ism and many of those preconceived ideas which, falsely understood, are sometimes called principles.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to take part in this debate, but having in mind that one-half of the constituency which I have the honour to represent is rural, and having in mind also the fact that Ontario produces 29 per cent of the agricultural wealth of the Dominion, I feel I would be remiss in my duty did I not rise in my place to protest against the silence and the apparent refusal of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) to participate in the debate. His silence is the more surprising when he must realize that the whole country awaits some pronouncement on his part. Instead of that, what do we find? Silence in the House of Commons, and a so-called exclusive article on agriculture in MacLean's magazine.

I feel also that I would fail in my duty did I not protest as vigorously as possible against the fact that, although this government came into office on a promise to end unemployment, no statement on labour conditions or on the remedy proposed to relieve unemployment can be made by a responsible minister in the house. This is not fair, and it does not speak volumes for the opinion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) of his elected followers, whose sole duty appears to be to applaud loudly his every move and action.

Some six months have passed since the special session of parliament, and as one sits on this side of the house he is struck by the changed appearance of the ministry opposite. They have now been guiding the destinies of the country for something over eight months. In September last we saw them smiling, happy, confident. Their modern Moses had led them into the promised land, and I think we could go one step further and say that they must have found it a land full of promises. To-day we see them silent and unsmiling, all except the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) whose smile lights up an otherwise drab picture of the cabinet as we see it from this side, and one might be pardoned for suspecting that that smile is in anticipation of the three thousand dollars extra salary which according to a resolution which appears on the order paper, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has promised him.

I have referred to the silence of the Minister of Agriculture and to the absence from the house of the Minister of Labour. Where are our Ontario ministers in this debate? The Prime Minister has honoured my native province by appointing to his cabinet six men from that province. Not one of them has participated in this debate. What about the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion)? Here may I say to him we are grateful at least for the interest he has taken in this debate by listening with an attentive ear to practically every speech. But should we not have expected more from this red-blooded Canadian who is now clothed in all the might and strength of a cabinet minister? In view of his campaign utterances I would think he would have risen in his place and struck old man hard-times a blow in the jaw and with a few strokes of his mighty pen have restored prosperity. What about the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe)? The hon. gentleman went up and down the province of Ontario telling the farmers that their sole trouble could be attributed to the fact that there was a Liberal administration in power. Where is he in this debate? And what about the member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) who on July 8 last issued a manifesto consisting of three pages? On the first page there is a full page cut of the illustrious gentleman himself, and he is quoted as follows:

> None realized my position in the opposition better than I did as I fought for the farmers alone.

Is he doing that to-day? And a little further on he is quoted as follows:

> Canada is facing an economic crisis to-day, second only to the Great War. Under proper administration the unemployment problem that we are facing should be impossible in a country such as ours so rich in agricultural possibilities and undeveloped natural resources, the greatest in the world.

May we take it that from his point of view the proper administration is now in office? Yet the unemployment situation grows steadily worse. Then follow further modest statements by the hon. gentleman, and when we come to the third page we find this paragraph:

> People cannot live on budgets—no matter what they promise. Whoever lived on promises?

Well, Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a time when the hon. gentleman's question might be put to the test it is under the present administration. Speaking of promises, someone has dedicated a few lines of poetry to the right hon. the Prime Minister. The poem is called "I Promise You," and the text is as follows:

> I promise all things, great and small,
> East, west, north, south, to each and all—
> Or perish in the attempt.
>
> I promise proofs to make it plain
> That all old shibboleths are vain—
> I promise my full strength shall bend
> All unemployment quick to end—
> Or perish in the attempt.

I promise that a seaway wide
At once be built to ocean tide—
I promise quickly and engage
To pensions pay for all old age—
I promise that, without delay,
I'll build trans-Canada highway—
Or perish in the attempt.

I promise that each mill and loom
And factory will forthwith resume—
I promise that all ills endured
By farmers will at once be cured—
I promise, too, when overseas
To bring opponents to their knees—
I promise that I'll make the grade,
And blast a way for world-wide trade—
Or perish in the attempt.

I promise that I'll show the cause
Of Britain's failing trade and laws—
Or perish in the attempt.

I promise—but why specify?
Just mention what you want—and why;
For all you ask I will comply
(A superman indeed am I)—
Or perish in the attempt.

The hon. member for South Essex closed his remarkable manifesto with these words:

Thanking you for your forbearance in me and in my shortcomings.

To which I think this whole house might rise and say, "Amen." When the right hon. the Prime Minister is displeased about something we hear him making use of the expression "what a spectacle; what a spectacle." Mr. Speaker, I ask if there could be any greater spectacle than the sight of a cabinet unable to speak on the two great questions of agriculture and labour. I say that this statement applies equally to the two excellent speeches which we have already heard from cabinet ministers who have failed to touch on either of these great problems.

Various western members have already brought to the attention of parliament the very serious condition of agriculture in the western provinces. I feel sure they have succeeded in convincing those of us from the eastern constituencies that there must be complete cooperation between the east and the west if we are to find a way out of the difficulty. I have already referred to the fact that Ontario produces 29 per cent of the agricultural wealth of the Dominion. This fact must not be disregarded. Sometimes I feel that we Ontario members do not sufficiently emphasize that important fact. Farming conditions in Ontario, and I speak particularly of western Ontario, are not good. Farmers are in a serious plight to-day. Mortgages are being foreclosed not because of a failure to pay the principal but because the farmer has been unable to meet his interest payments. It is not simply a question of low prices; prices have been low in the past. To-day we find that the increased cost of production, increased taxes, increased interest rates both to chartered banks and to mortgage companies, make conditions such that unless something is done to relieve the situation there will this fall be more assignments in bankruptcy, more mortgages foreclosed against farmers, than ever before in the history of the province of Ontario. Take for instance the question of taxes alone. During the Easter recess I was told by one farmer that he had been through a similar period of depression when prices were about the same. While at that time it took only four pigs to pay his taxes, now it requires twelve. I cannot speak as a practical farmer, but I was born and raised on the farm and I think I know something of the problems of the farmer. I do not believe the suggestions I have read and which have purported to come from the lips of the Minister of Agriculture will solve the problem. Many of them are not new. For instance, the suggestion that the farmers should allow a more general introduction of high grade live stock is by no means new. It has been advocated for years. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite, however, that it would indeed require a brave man to accept the suggestion at this time without more encouragement than he has been receiving, realizing it would take four or five years before his stock could possibly be developed. What is required is immediate relief. We hear men say that prosperity is just around the corner, but may I say to them that when the manufacturers, the bankers, the railway corporations, the professional men—yes, in many cases even the wage earners themselves—are prepared to make the same relative sacrifice that the farmer is making to-day, we will have reached a basis upon which reconstruction can start. Then in truth will we be in a position where we may say prosperity is just around the corner.

I would like to say a few words in connection with the Canadian National Railways. During the past few months there have been rumours of political interference with the management of this railroad. If there is any way in which these rumours can be stopped, if by speeches of hon. members or by a statement from the hon. the Minister of Railways these rumours can be nailed, now is the time to do it. Coming as I do from a city where there is a large Canadian National terminal I may say that there is a feeling of uneasiness among employees that has not been noticed in many years past. During the years when the railway company was able to announce surpluses everybody wished to be known as a supporter of the Canadian National system. As in the case of the removal of the embargo on cattle, there were many hon. gentlemen who tried to take credit for bringing into being the Canadian National Railway. Now with falling revenues in the railway as in other departments there are those who would seek to impede the progress of that railroad and even to bring discredit upon it. There is some evidence that politics have been allowed to obtain a foothold. We had the evidence given by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) and we have what to my mind is most significant, the reference back to the Board of Railway Commissioners of the question of the Montreal terminals at the instigation of Camille Houde, leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec. Those who sat in previous parliaments and on the special committee on railways and shipping will remember that the matter was thoroughly discussed and that the president and his experts were convinced that their plan, as presented, was a proper one. We have already voted some fifty million dollars for that project. A statement of the reasons for referring this matter to a board, reorganized under this government, is certainly forthcoming from the Minister of Railways. Apart from this, however, I believe it is our duty at a time of falling revenues to reiterate our faith in Sir Henry Thornton's management of the Canadian National Railways and to say as emphatically as we can that this parliament will not brook any political interference with his management.

I do not propose to discuss in detail the ills we find ourselves subject to at this time, but to address myself in a broad general way to the attitude taken by the government, and in particular by the right hon. Prime Minister. The policy of the government may be summed up in one word—protection. The hon. ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), speaking in this debate some two weeks ago, said that we had been given a dose of the medicine, and instead of effecting a cure the disease had spread. I would say rather that we had been given an overdose of the medicine, and that paralysis had already set in. I propose to show how this paralysis is affecting our national revenue and trade. I have in my hand a statement of the net customs duties collected during the last five months, October, 1930 to February of this year, as compared with the same period for 1929-30. May I call this fact to the attention of the hon. member for Toronto-Scarborough (Mr. Harris), who complained that the figures we had quoted were only up to March 1930. The decreases in the customs duties from October 1930 to February 1931 as compared with the similar period for 1929-30 are in round figures as follows:

October	$6,920,000
November	3,936,000
December	3,425,000
January	1,833,000
February	4,574,000

These give a total decrease during those five months of $20,691,000. Now let me take our trade figures. Our imports during the same period have decreased $160,565,000; our exports have decreased $147,833,000. These figures startle and alarm us. But what can we expect when we find that the right hon. Prime Minister has ignored the wide tendencies which make for world progress and has ranged Canada on the side of those destructive tendencies which will operate to bar her progress? The world to-day is suffering from artificial barriers to trade which everywhere have been erected by nationalistic groups. Since the treaty of Versailles there has been an intensified fostering of a spirit of nationalism. Tariffs have been initiated and increased against international trade where heretofore no barriers existed. Every country has had visions that it could become great industrially. The result has been to put barriers in the way of international trade, to prevent the peoples of the world from trading with each other as freely as they did. And the greater the number of tariff walls and the higher they are built the more difficult it becomes for exchange to take place. We have ceased to realize that the world cannot be prosperous unless the nations will consent to trade with one another and help to build up such trade. It was the policy of the late Liberal government to extend the channels of trade through the seven seas, to encourage trade with those who would trade with us.

What the business world appears to need more than anything else is not any additional encouragement in this modern game of ardent nationalism, but the courage and leadership to combat it, to encourage the countries of the world in the vital necessity of increasing international trade. Signs are not lacking that this is gradually being brought about. The countries of Europe have been discussing the possibilities of an economic union and the lowering of internal tariff barriers. In the United States the present depression has caused the government and business leaders to discuss the advisability of some adjustment regarding their policies in respect to war debts and high tariffs with a view to facilitating instead of obstructing world trade.

This being the world situation, what did the right hon. Prime Minister announce as the policy of Canada? Not a policy of cooperation; not a policy which attempts to take some share in the curing of the world's financial ills. Instead, still another policy of ardent nationalism, of world sectionalism, of reactionary selfishness, which said to the empire and to all the world "Canada first", and at the same time "we will blast our way into the markets of the world." Do you realize, you men who hold the destiny of this country in your hands, the utter impossibility of doing this? Do you realize that international highways of exchange cannot be made into one-way streets? Compare the action of the right hon. Prime Minister in his attempt at salesmanship with that of the empire's premier salesman, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as he graciously opened the British Trade Exhibition in the Argentine on Saturday, March 14. He said, as reported in press despatches of the following Monday:

> Failure to recognize trade as interchange, obstacles placed in the way of reciprocal trade, are perhaps the main causes of the world's present troubles. If, as we all hope, the response of the Argentine purchasing public to the appeal of the exhibition leads in some measure to the revival of industrial prosperity in Great Britain, and consequently to diminution of industrial unemployment, a reciprocal result in British conumption of Argentine meat and Argentine cereals is certain.

At the Imperial conference, Canada, as a young and vigorous country, as a country which had withstood the onslaughts of world depression perhaps better than any other, as a nation which had resolutely refused to raise its tariff barriers against the world until the special session of parliament, could have been a leader in this work of promotion of world harmony, and in the promotion of cooperation among the units making up the British commonwealth of nations. The right hon. gentleman had a great opportunity to begin such work by making a generous and intelligent gesture at the Imperial conference. The eyes of the empire were on him and the ears of the people were listening for what he would have to say. What did they hear? Nothing but the reiteration at this late date of the same old cry of selfish nationalism which has already brought the nations of Europe and practically the world to the point where they must find a new way.

Then the Prime Minister returned to Canada, and one of his first acts was to appoint a new crusader to take up Canada's cause at the court of St. James. Although previous speakers have mentioned it, in view of the manner in which the right hon. Prime Minister has treated this gentleman's utterances, and his failure to give any explanation for them, I propose to deal for a few moments with the Hon. George Howard Ferguson in order that we may have a picture of the man whom the government has appointed to represent Canada's interests in the heart of the empire.

On the 28th of November, 1930, the Hon. George Howard Ferguson was appointed High Commissioner for Canada in London. On the 4th of December, at a banquet of the Technical Service Council of Canada, held at the Royal York hotel, Toronto, the ambassador, following the example set by the Prime Minister of this country at the special session of parliament, began to lay a foundation for his work in the old land. He said, as reported in the Mail and Empire of December 5th, 1930:

> I am not going over there to sell wheat particularly. I am going over there in the hope that I may do something to remould and revive the spirit of the British people. My observation—and it has been very brief and perhaps not entirely reliable—teaches me that the old patriotic fervour for British ascendancy and British development is, to a large extent, broken down.
> You know, and we all know, the pride the Britisher once took in his country's production, its exports, and its position in the world. Unfortunately, the fact that they have tens of thousands of grown men over there who have never done a day's work, the fact that they are paying what is called the dole to children of 15 years and up, is contributing to the destruction of the morale of the British people.
> I think that is what is wrong with Great Britain more than anything else. I assure you I would never have thought of leaving this happy hunting ground that I have been enjoying here, I never would have thought of leaving friendships of a lifetime, if I did not think there was a need of someone to try and revive that old spirit of pride and respect in the country, its outlook and its purpose. I don't know if I am the man. I don't think I am because my sphere has been puttering around with little things in the province of Ontario, and when you get over there you are in big international affairs. I am going to England to try to do something to revive that invaluable stimulus that for centuries has been the basis of British progress and British ascendancy.
> He referred to the recent British education bill by which parents were subsidized for keeping their children an extra year at school and continued: "That" he asserted, "is how far the drift of that extreme Socialist doctrine has gone in England to-day. It has continued until they are living out of their capital. Think of it, an income tax of four shillings and six pence on the pound. And the death dues are destructive of the greatest institutions England has, the great estates. It makes one's heart ache to see those great estates being cut up."

I ask hon. members of this house how Ottawa would have received Sir William Clark if he had made such comment upon the Canadian industrial and political situation before sailing from England to assume his duties here as British High Commissioner.

How did the press view the speech of the High Commissioner? I quote but one comment which is typical of the majority. The Ottawa Citizen of December 9 described it as follows:

> The comical little man capped the performance by describing himself as an imperial missionary, sacrificing himself on the altar of patriotism. He is laying down the cares of state in Ontario to save the British Empire, and particularly to remould the spirit of the British people.

How did the right hon. Prime Minister handle the situation? The new Albany club was opened in Toronto on January 19, 1931. The great and near great of the Conservative party were present. The Mail and Empire, reporting the meeting in its issue of the following day, said:

> Bennett and Ferguson engaged in witty repartee as new Albany club is dedicated
> Premier provokes laughter with threat to recall new High Commissioner
> Reference by Mr. Bennett to some of ex-Premier Ferguson's recent speeches started the fun. Mr. Bennett jocularly reminded the new High Commissioner of the recall suffered by Sackville-West. Saskville-West was British ambassador at Washington from 1881 to 1888, in which year he retired after what history records as "an unfortunate interference in American domestic politics."

Sackville-West was recalled. Hon. G. Howard Ferguson never should have been allowed to start until he had been rebuked to a much greater extent by the leader of this government.

His arrival in England was marked by another outburst. Speaking before the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in London, England, Mr. Ferguson said:

> When I see in England such slogans as "Buy British goods made in England by British labour" it seems to me to be forgotten that goods of Canada and other parts of the empire are equally British. Imperial consolidation cannot be effected on the lines of discrimination.

Does he forget that the policy of the government he represents is "Buy Canadian goods made in Canada by Canadian labour?" Does he forget entirely the part played by the Empire Marketing Board, which costs thousands of pounds annually, which amount is largely paid by the British taxpayer, and which is used in advertising in that country and throughout the whole empire Canadian apples, Canadian cheese and other products? Why should he complain of a slogan of that kind when the policy of the government he represents is to bar from Canada British goods by the erection of high tariffs?

What are the results of the speeches which have been made by these two hon. gentlemen? Through the methods adopted by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson and by the right hon. Prime Minister, who made an offer to Britain supposedly based upon mutual advantage but which asked for much and gave nothing in return; by the tenor and method of that offer, I say they have weakened our position and placed a wholly unnecessary and unwarranted stigma on Canadians in the eyes of the British people.

In spite of all that has been said and done, however, I am firmly of the conviction that if the Prime Minister of Canada will approach the conference which is to be held in Ottawa in a different spirit, much good will result. I do not mean the spirit in which he proceeded to the Imperial conference at London, where he said in effect, "Here is my plan. Make up your minds once and for all." I do not mean the spirit in which he rose to reply to the right hon. leader of the opposition, after his speech, in which he declared frankly that he had nothing to withdraw, " not a word, not a syllable, not a line," but rather in the spirit in which he announced the policy of Canada, speaking at Regina on December 30 last. I wish to read from the report which appeared in the Manitoba Free Press of the following day:

> On the day after the session of parliament ended, I sailed for England to attend the Imperial conference. I left Canada determined to do my best to foster and support a plan for greater empire trade based on mutual advantages. With that purpose in mind I made a proposal to the conference for closer empire economic association based on mutually advantageous tariff preferences. I frankly stated my position. I said that the motive which governed my proposal was the interest of Canada first, and I said our primary concern at that time was to secure a more stable market in the United Kingdom for our wheat. How that market is to be secured to us as against the foreigner is naturally a matter to be determined by the government of the United Kingdom. For my part I expressed my entire willingness, having regard particularly to the Russian menace, to accept in lieu of a price preference a quantity preference, called the quota, which would guarantee us a minimum export of wheat to the United Kingdom. To say that this offer has been definitely declined is to unjustifiably anticipate the outcome of the continuing deliberations of the government of the United Kingdom.

Does that speech indicate a change of heart? Is the Prime Minister now willing to approach the conference which is to be held in Ottawa prepared to give to Great Britain something which will be really of mutual advantage, whether it is decided that the best plan is a quota, an import board or bulk purchases? There are those on the opposite side of the house who ask, "Why do you not suggest something? Why do you not cooperate? Has the Prime Minister, through his actions in this debate, shown any desire to cooperate? Even though he has not done so, I say to him now that if he will assure this house that he meant what he said in Regina; if he is prepared to retreat from his "once and for all' attitude and trade with the mother country on some basis of mutual advantage; if he will realize when he uses the word preference that the greatest preference we can have for the mother of the empire is the preference which we hold in our hearts, then I for one am willing to do my share in cooperating to bring about the success of that conference, and thus restore in some part at least that measure of prosperity which the Canadian people so richly deserve.

Mr. W. A. HALL (South Bruce): Mr. Speaker, at this late stage in the debate may I be pardoned if I forego the oft repeated and well deserved congratulations that have prefaced almost every speech and proceed at once with what I have to say?

The speech from the throne, though like its author in many respects, is lacking in that brutal frankness and explicitness in which the Prime Minister prides himself. As is the custom, the speech foreshadows a number of measures which the government proposes to present to parliament, but it does more; it insinuates that the late administration had no eyes with which to peer into the future and that as a consequence no measures were advanced which would have relieved the present distress. In effect the speech from the throne says that if there had been adequate protection in past years the present depression would have been prevented, yet strange to say the speech also admits that Canada is better off than most countries. If that means anything it means that Canada, without a high tariff wall, is much better off than those countries which have built up high protection, such as Australia, the United States and other high tariff countries. That being the case, why raise the tariff wall?

The reference in that speech to agriculture is not very encouraging, especially to the western farmer, as it is a wait-and-see policy, leaving conditions pretty much alone and watching developments.

This reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of a case of acute blood poisoning to which I was called in consultation. On asking the attending physician his treatment, the answer was, "I am leaving her pretty much alone and watching developments"—effective and heroic treatment, indeed. But the critical depression of the west ought to be a challenge to this government to do something. But what it has done by increasing the cost of production and by losing their markets, has added greatly to the distress of the west, besides destroying the morale of the people.

According to the speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, the country is every day in every way getting better and better since the first dose of the Tory patent medicine at the special session in September, and all that is required now to bring about complete recovery is a larger does of the same medicine. This high tariff medicine is rather nauseating and languishing to some of us, especially to the agriculturists, but wonderfully delicious and invigorating to many others, particularly to the manufacturers and some deluded farmers. As a proof of this improvement the Tory press is printing stories of factories humming that were closed or languishing during the late administration but now have long payrolls instead of bread lines as before.

But what are the facts? According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the industrial production of Canada in 1930 fell by 14 per cent as compared with 1929. The fall was chiefly after July 28. The corresponding decline in Britain was only 10 per cent. In Canada from 1924 to 1929 inclusive, there was an annual increase in production of 10 per cent. What a striking contrast in the volume of output during the administrations of the low and of the high tariff medicine men.

Doubtless, Mr. Speaker, there are some industries that have been revived by the Prime Minister's stimulant and are being nourished on the fiscal dole. Yet these gains are offset many times by other productions being slowed down. Manifestly this government realizes that the symptoms of depression have been growing worse, with a consequent increase of unemployment, notwithstanding what they say to the contrary; as a result they are preparing a strong and drastic dose of stimulant in the shape of higher and higher customs taxation. But the primary reason for this is to reward those money interests that had spent so much in the recent campaign to elect the present government. However, the first dose of medicine satisfied the capacity of only a few of the great multitude clamouring for reward. Doubtless these increased duties will impose additional burdens on the people for whom the depression of general business was otherwise bound to reduce the cost of living.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the chief task of this session is a general upward revision of the tariff. I need scarcely say that the main concern of the government will be the interests of the manufacturers. But there seems to be no one in this government to care for the consumer, although he is everybody. The staple argument just now is that the provision of work for our own people justifies all increases. Apparently no account is taken of the fact that there is no real market for what is produced, as exports are greatly reduced because imports are blocked. Besides that, the high cost of living reduces the power of buying and so lessens the home market. Also, in these days of less and less hand labour, it is the machine chiefly and not the man that finds more employment. But who controls the machine? It is he who gets the profits—the manufacturer.

Notwithstanding this condition of things, there are daily bulletins in the Tory press showing how business is humming as the result of the new duties which the people now have to pay to keep certain helpless industries alive. The speech from the throne also smacks of the same boast. It was part of the bargain that they should get going and expect further tariff increases during the present session. This looks bad for the farmers, especially for those in the prairie provinces. These men of the west, almost in despair because of unsold crops, or of low prices for what they do sell, or of excessive rates of interest, or of high rates of transportation, or of many other difficulties of which the rest of Canada has little conception, are compelled to buy much of what they need from the very interests that seek the higher taxation. This increase may force prices up or at least prevent their decline, while all other prices are being reduced. As a consequence, the manufacturer, without raising the price of his goods, is, by increased protection, making a much larger profit. Thus he is able to hide the real benefit that increased protection gives him behind the pledge that he will not raise his price but just increase his profit. It will be noticed that this pledge fixes the manufacturer's prices, at least indirectly. This is preposterous. What other classes have their prices fixed? The prices cannot go up and will not come down although everything else is down. What about the agriculturist?

I have always sympathized strongly with the farmer. No one is more resolutely opposed to tariff raising, such as was so recklessly practised at the first session of this parliament and such as seems likely to take place this session, according to the speech from the throne. May I say that secession talk is of little advantage as a threat, whether its origin is in the maritimes or in the west?

However, Mr. Speaker, I frankly confess that this government has a strong mandate from the people of Canada to do what they did at the emergency session as well as to carry out what is promised in the speech from the throne. But what is strange is the fact that this mandate came from many of the rural districts. Apparently the farmers of the Canadian west were hypnotized by the Prime Minister through his nostrum of duties against the other countries of the world as well as by the hope of getting local industries at their doors on account of protection. Besides, the Prime Minister assured them that this nostrum was a good old family medicine, tried and proved, and must be all right. Indeed, Sir, John A. Macdonald had dispensed the same kind of medicine fifty-three years ago, with wonderful results—yes, with wonderful results for the Tory party, but with disastrous results for the country. By the way, it was first compounded and dispensed on the American side.

The manufacturers at that time succeeded in getting trade barriers built to protect themselves in overcharging the Canadian consumer, as doubtless they will succeed at this time. Indeed, the present day tactics are very similar to those employed fifty-three years ago. They won the support of the press by revenue from advertising. They won the votes of the workers by promising fatter pay envelopes as part of their share in the general hold-up. They won the dairymen by a tariff of eight cents per pound on butter. They won the western fruit farmers by taxing the prairies for them. They won the prairie farmers by promising them local industries. But, Mr. Speaker, the real reason came from the feeling that things could hardly be worse than they were last summer and a change of any kind might be better. Besides, the Prime Minister was full of promises for an immediate deliverance from all their troubles. He pledged himself many times during the campaign to find a job for every Canadian or perish in the attempt. He said a young country like Canada had no right to have unemployment. Why, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) claimed that the unemployment problem could be solved in three days by the return of a Tory government. Well, a Tory government was returned, and $20,000,000 was voted as temporary relief, with the result that unemployment has been almost doubled.

Has the Prime Minister delivered the people from all their troubles as he promised everywhere before the election? No; on the contrary, he has increased them many times. He even raised the tariff walls much higher against the mother country—Canada's one good customer, indeed her best; and after thus refusing to accept her commodities in payment for Canadian products, he bullied her for not preferring our wheat, with the consequent reaction against the Canadian wheat grower, leaving him without a market for his wheat.

The most absurd thing any country can do is to make that which the farmer has to purchase, including his hired help, as dear as possible by means of a tariff, simply for the sake of carrying on an unnatural business at a loss to the country. This is especially so in view of the present condition of the producing industry upon which all the artificial industries have been feeding and will continue to feed. No doubt this will blast or destroy the selling market by excluding all products sent in return, as well as increase the cost of transportation through having only one way cargoes.

Apparently the government has no misgiving in carrying out any atrocity it may desire to perpetrate, feeling as it does that it has a docile and unshakeable majority—a majority obtained, strange to say, with the assistance of one-third of the farmers of Canada. Apparently the government thinks that the jacking up of the tariff is the panacea for Canada's commercial ills as well as the only cure for unemployment. The Prime Minister seems to be bound hand and foot to the manufacturers. This was quite apparent at the farcical inquiry in connection with the proposed tariff changes, where he and some of his colleagues constituted themselves as special pleaders for the privileged interests. I need scarcely say that there was little pretence of openmindedness.

The greedy and privileged classes which were instrumental in putting the Prime Minister into power look upon him as being at their service. As a recognition of their legitimate claims he gave them a hurried but lavish luncheon with the special session of last September. This was to tide them over until dinner-time, which, according to the speech from the throne, is set for this session. It would seem that each claimant got just enough at the special session luncheon to whet his appetite. Why should those who put the caterer into power with a large majority not get what they want? They were promised it, and who should now object? Not the opposition at any rate, because the Prime Minister has the country's mandate although it may have been obtained by questionable means. Until the people express at the polls a change of mind, they have every right to get what they asked for at the last general elections, namely, high protection and riches for the manufacturers and bondage and poverty for the farmers.

Under such conditions what need is there for a tariff board? Retaining it would be humbug and needless expense, as its findings would be totally ignored; abolishing it would be but brutal frankness and economy under a one man ruler such as the Prime Minister. It is simply for the hungry ones to say how much they want, and who else can say that so well? It is for the caterer to fill the orders with a free hand. He does not have to pay, because that is added to the daily cost of our living. In gorging his masters he is carrying out with all haste the mandate he received from the country on July 28, 1930.

Some time ago the Prime Minister was considering the adjournment of the demands for further protection until the Imperial conference to be held in Ottawa next summer. Few if any of the promises made to gather in the votes have been fulfilled. About the only thing which has been realized is the payment of $20,000,000 for the promised temporary relief of unemployment. The Prime Minister seems to be endeavouring to find some way to cover his dire failure. The postponement of action would give him time to fill other orders on the program and allow him to distract the country's mind with such contentious matters as the St. Lawrence waterway. But apparently the privileged classes would agree to no adjournment of action on tariff matters. They saw that their chance was now or never. So once more the Prime Minister has to cater to his masters and we have the proposed increases in the tariff indicated in the speech from the throne. This will give the mother country another slap in the face in forestalling and frustrating the purpose of the coming conference at Ottawa, a similar result to that accomplished at the London conference by the Bennett ultimatum. It is another case of blasting.

It must be remembered that the Prime Minister has a docile majority to which he will be true as well as to himself. He will always be true to the outside privileged classes whom, though the heavens fall, he will feed on the blood of the nation. The alacrity with which the Prime Minister has acted in certain matters since gaining power has given rise to the cry: Give Bennett a chance, he does things.

Since assuming office he has had as free a chance as that given to Mussolini, but what has he done? Permit me to mention some of his achievements.

1. He raised the duties on imports from Great Britain to such an extent as to amount practically to an embargo—in the case of cheap tweeds the increase from 22½ per cent to 96 per cent.

2. He has almost doubled unemployment since taking office.

3. He has blocked our trade with New Zealand.

4. He has antagonized the buying public of Great Britain by his "blasting" speeches made in the old country.

5. He has blocked imports and so has decreased exports, reducing our trade to a pre-war level.

6. He has increased the cost of transportation by permitting only one-way cargoes.

7. He has lowered the price of farm products from 20 to 40 per cent, but has kept up the manufacturers' prices at former levels.

8. He has decreased the price of farm lands through reducing the price of farm products.

9. He has decreased the industrial production of Canada.

10. He has decreased the revenue of Canada.

11. He has lowered the moral tone of the country by promises that might be intended to bribe.

12. He has barred trade with Russia, thus depriving Canadian workmen of considerable employment.

While the Prime Minister has been adopting this course of action, the farmers in the west have been talking secession instead of protesting against the legislation which permits the manufacturer to plunder by not reducing prices commensurate with the prices received for farm products. Evidently the pledges given seem to have pegged the manufacturers' prices, so why not peg the farmers' prices, especially for wheat? If the government has secured profitable prices for the manufacturer at the expense of the people and primarily of the farmer, it is only right that it should secure also fair prices for the farmer. Any subsidy given would have to be paid out of the public treasury, and it must be admitted that that would be very unpalatable to the country, but the nation could take any amount of that sort of medicine if it were mixed up with its food and drink, that is, in the daily cost of living. The Prime Minister should treat all classes alike.

The Prime Minister has the support of a majority in this house in any action he elects to take, because hon. members opposite were elected for that purpose. The incident of the glass firm at Hamilton is a case in point. At the request of this firm parliament voted at the special session to increase the duty on window glass to such an extent as would double the cost of glass to the consumer. This would have cost the country over $1,500,000 in order to give work to about 150 men, or over $10,000 per workman. Fortunately for the country this factory did not reopen, the firm simply doubling the price on their imported glass. This brought forth such a protest that the minister, exercising his autocratic power, revoked the duty and down came the price. So the Bennett government was lauded by its political admirers for having shut down on this bonused firm because it had failed to perform the reopening trick. It must not be forgotten that this same government was willing to take over $1,500,000 from the country each year in order to keep this glass factory running and employing only 150 men.

As I said before, the first thing this government did was to reward its benefactors or those who had put it into power. This was done at the special session by the jacking up of the tariff on about 170 different articles out of a total of 1,188 items in the Canadian tariff schedule. Then followed an effort, through preferential trade agreements with the other members of the empire, to increase imperial trade and unity. This was undertaken at the Imperial conference at London when the Prime Minister presented his offer or "ultimatum." In effect he said: The time has come—and it will not brook delay—to decide between Britain sacrificing herself to the dominions or losing them. Such was the import of the Prime Minister's speech at the conference, supported, as the report shows, only in part by the representatives of the other dominions, and apparently by a sweeping election majority in Canada. But this issue was neither before the people of Canada nor before parliament. It had its origin and development in the Prime Minister's brain, of which it is quite characteristic, although it should have been decided by the people at the polls on election day and afterwards approved by parliament. Doubtless the Prime Minister considered these things as useless formalities when he, the Prime Minister, was Canada.

But as the demand was that Britain should tax her food, thus throttling her commerce and so reversing the policy that had made her famous and prosperous for almost a century, Britain's answer, through Mr. Thomas, to the representatives of the dominions, was that she was still a part of the British Empire and might also be allowed an equal right to say "Britain first," just as the Prime Minister had claimed that his proposals were inspired by the principles of "Canada first"—or, more accurately expressed, the principle of "some Canadians first." I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that these "some" do not include the farmers for whom he professes that his heart is bleeding. His policy is high protection for the manufacturers, especially for the manufacturers of textiles, but the farmers are hurt instead of helped by the heavy duties on everything they have to buy, nor are they ensured any better price for their wheat in Great Britain by the Prime Minister's scheme, as the suggested preference is an increase of only 10 per cent of the duty. This scheme has few of the advantages of empire free trade.

As soon as Britain gives the dominions a worth-while preference, she imperils her food supply and increases the cost of the raw materials for her industries. But more important is the fact that the Prime Minister's proposed scheme would most likely provoke endless jealousy and friction within the empire as well as increase hostility without the empire. Moreover, it is a one-man scheme, the Prime Minister's, endorsed by neither the people nor the parliament of Canada. Consequently, let all lovers of the empire, by whatever names they are known, oppose this scheme with might and main both in and out of parliament, in season and out of season, and thus maintain unity and concord among all parts of the empire as well as the goodwill of all the nations. May all such selfish schemes as this be aborted or perish at birth. As the Prime Minister himself would say: I will cause the abortion or death of any such scheme or perish in the attempt. Indeed, many times during the recent election campaign he made a number of such declarations or promises, but as yet he has refused or at least has failed to carry them out or even to perish. As, however, he is a man of action as well as of many words, it makes one wonder whether these promises were intended only to bribe or to deceive. Let the Prime Minister answer.

Mr. JULES DESROCHERS (Portneuf) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, all my thoughts apparently have already been expressed by previous speakers in this debate on the address. I therefore have the easy task of repeating what others have said. Whether it be as regards form or substance, all is exhausted and I even think the whole musical gamut has been put to use.

After the splendid speeches of our older parliamentarians, I did not wish to miss the opportunity, perhaps unique, of joining the ranks of the younger members.

I associate myself with those who have praised your remarkable impartiality, sir, and I bear witness to that kind yet firm nature of yours which is in strict keeping with your dignified bearing.

Should I congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) for having changed his attitude, so energetic and triumphant of the first days—when he was so sure of solving the economic problems which were responsible for his assuming office—into a stoicism which hardly allows him to appear in the house and, to-day, only draws from him the statement that he is convinced of having done his duty as an excellent servant of this country. He was to conquer or perish at the task. I simply congratulate him on having survived.

I congratulate my leader on the great skill with which he handled the hot iron over and within the sores inflicted by the new administration which acknowledged the powerlessness to relieve a single one of the ills that already exist: unemployment and economic depression, the fruits, it was said, of a poor Liberal administration.

Our good friends living in the riding of Portneuf who, at the elections, polled their votes in favour of your political program are always and more than ever proud of being Liberals.

On their behalf and that of the entire riding I offer you the tribute of 49 consecutive years of loyal support to the great party of which you are the so distinguished leader.

Before proceeding further, sir, permit me, as a newcomer to this house, to express my amazement and to strongly protest against the tactics employed by our opponents at the last election, tactics again resorted to in this honoured chamber. Such tactics as shouting and interrupting are so in contrast with your dignified example and British fair play that we trust they will soon be things of the past.

What shall I say now with reference to unemployment, the tariff and the Imperial conference, if not that all these measures enacted to improve our lot were rather detrimental to the country and that we shall soon find the proof of this in the budget speech.

Unemployment—a spectre much exploited in the last election—became a reality by dint of talking about it, and our friends on the government side seem to have lost much of their enthusiasm in this respect. We stated that it was world-wide, they considered it as local. We contended that it was beyond the control of the ordinary economic laws, they insisted that it was due especially to the deficiency of government methods. The government has since changed and they are now forced to admit that it is world-wide, that all countries suffer somewhat more than we do, and that time only will find a remedy. Did the special session and remedies administered have any other results than to definitely graft it upon us? That is what we have reason to fear. There are unemployed people who are paid at a fixed rate of 30 cents per hour, when in my district the genuine unemployed are willing to accept 20 cents and would have preferred to work for a longer time and complete the work left unfinished. Is this not encouraging idleness? Is it not wasting private and public money to oblige municipalities to undertake work—very strictly specified in the regulations referring to unemployment—such as digging up frozen earth or breaking the ice so as to lay foundations of wharves and bridges which in certain localities are already crumbling, work which cost double because of climatic conditions.

Mr. DORION (Translation): In what localities are bridges falling down?

Mr. DESROCHERS (Translation): There are wharfs in my own riding which are already giving way in many places. It is not necessary to go any further than St. Raymond.

Is it not, to a certain degree, an attempt against our provincial and municipal autonomy to make it imperative to pass unusual by-laws in order to participate in a small federal grant? I agree with a newspaper whose sympathies are with our friends opposite, the Evenement of Quebec, dated February 20, 1931:

> If we can judge, says the Evenement, by the meagre results obtained from the assistance given to the unemployed in Quebec, it would be wise for the Prime Minister to assure us that he will no longer have recourse to this system of aid.
> It will have cost more than what it is worth it would therefore be better not to recur to it again.
> On that score the opposition could render a public service by obtaining the publication of all the good and bad features in connection with the Unemployment Relief Act, and, by also inviting the Prime Minister to state that the comparative uselessness of this policy is officially acknowledged.

I could not better express myself than this newspaper which is in sympathy with our friends opposite.

Would not the policy advocated by my leader, during the last elections, have been fairer and more expedient? Grant, to a certain extent, the requests for help, provincial or municipal, without burdensome restrictions.

Permit me, sir, to extend all our sympathy to the western farmers and especially to those who specialized in growing wheat. Let me tell them that we suffer with them, for them and like them. Our banks, with the 68 or 70 million dollars which they have hoarded out there have become commonplace saving banks. Our farmers are not granted any credit. Our manufacturers and merchants can no more depend on any margin of credit. They are helpless owing to prevailing conditions.

I do not wish to enter into details and figures as regards the tariff question, because our leader discussed it as a practical business man and not as an idealist or partisan of a sect or class. I will take the liberty of quoting in this respect the words of His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, who, although as amicable as he may seem, is not without representing the views of the crown and British government, when he travels abroad as representative of his country. I quote a despatch of the Associated Press at the opening of the Buenos Aires exhibition.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): It is more respectable than the Evenement.

Mr DESROCHERS (Translation): No doubt. Both speak well and do not follow your example.

> The Prince gives as his opinion that mutual trade exchanges have been responsible for the success of that country, and that the word-wide depression is due in a great measure, if not entirely, to a lack of a friendly business intercourse.

In brief, the economic crisis is the fruit of an economic war. Is this not a fatal consequence of high protection, a plank dear to our opponents, a policy which encloses us in a fortress where nothing enters and whence nothing comes out? On the summit of this fortress, the Prime Minister raised his standard with the motto: "Canada First."

Canada First! Sir, for over three centuries this sentiment or cry has been engraved in our hearts from birth, it grows in our soul with the years. But must we as a conqueror cross the seas and fling it with closed fists at our mother country? Canada First! with the plea that we have followers—Australia and New Zealand. "It is up to you to accept or refuse; there is no need of arguing over it," those are the words of Mr. Bennett.

The answer to an extremist in a sad plight; who has no regard for the sad lot of others, was soon forthcoming: "We cannot!"

Often have we seen our representatives go overseas to attend Imperial conferences and always return with substantial concessions, in keeping with the development and progress of our country. Never in our history have we suffered such rebuke!

Never, sir, have Liberal principles and doctrine been to such extremes, and we are ready to fight as long as our voice can be heard in this house, conscious that we are working in the best interest of our country and fellow-citizens.

The Liberal doctrine, thank Heaven, can adapt itself to all circumstances—to depression as well as prosperity—to all provinces, all nationalities and all creeds. It respects itself and respects others. That is our way of shouting: "Canada First"!

Before resuming my seat permit me, Sir, to extend my congratulations to my old friend and University fellow student, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), on his complete recovery from his illness, I also wish to express the pleasure we feel in finding him as bright and active as we have ever known him. His eloquence finds admirers on both sides of the House.

I want to sympathize with my friend the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Barrette). He complained of his colleagues of both sides of the house. He did not receive a fair deal. Monuments were raised to the unknown soldier.

Perhaps the time has come to present a medal to this gentleman who should be better appreciated. He has all my sympathies.

As to my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne), after the debate in which he figured prominently and his great oratorical effort for which I cannot congratulate him, since he attacked our great Liberal leader.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): That was awful!

Mr. DESROCHERS (Translation): It was dreadful. His speech reminded me of a passage in my old classic books. A Greek author has said somewhere: "One day, the handsome Alcibiades, in quest of fame, had the tail of his dog cut. It was a great event in Athens". The embargo against Russia gave my hon. friend the opportunity of covering himself with fame and to again embrace the Conservative party. He was once more found among the extremists, where we have always thought he belonged. I think that by the brilliancy of his intellect and the subtlety of his wit my hon. member was really born a poet—"nascuntur poetae—and that he should never have become an orator.

Mr. J. A. VERVILLE (Lotbinière). (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not here for the hon. Solicitor General's (Mr. Dupré) speech yesterday afternoon. He honours me with his personal friendship—

Mr. DORION. Hear, hear.

Mr. VERVILLE: I read the report of his speech in the papers this morning. I was very much impressed with the fact that he had spoken, that he had given expression to ideas and thoughts,—by the way, they are not mine. At least one minister of the crown has had the courage to speak out on the floor of the house! Which adds one more quality to those my hon. friend already had. A minister who dares to speak up when he is under the thumb of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett)!

Mr. Speaker, Lotbinière county, which I have the honour to represent here, is a rural county where conditions are perhaps no worse than elsewhere throughout the country but where, nevertheless, a pronounced spirit of unrest has already gained a foothold. The people of the country are hard-working folks, labour is plentiful and the relations between the classes are of the very best. Naturally our people feel the effects of the present crisis; for the most part they are working twice as hard and making more sacrifices than ever in the hope that, thanks to their labour and their thrift, they will succeed in weathering the storm.

The election of last July brought to these folks, as it did to all the taxpayers of this country, a multitude of promises, each more appealing, more alluring than the other. If the majority of the voters in my riding did not yield to these promises I beg of you to believe that it was because their political virtue was strong enough to resist the temptations dangled before them by our conservative opponents. Allow me to add, Mr. Speaker, that since July 28th last our people have seen their condition go from bad to worse because our friends to your right, once they had won power, caused very deep, almost heartbreaking, disappointment. You remember, Mr. Speaker, that Voltaire was a reformer full of overweening pride. And you remember that he used to advise his followers thus: "Keep on lying, tell lie after lie: some of them are bound to stick." Far be it from me to draw any comparison between the right hon. Prime Minister of the day and Voltaire; but I must confess that, during the last campaign, I was not far from thinking that Mr. Bennett had given Voltaire's slogan to his followers. You know that the public, if they hear the same thing often enough, and in the selfsame way, finally begin to believe that after all it might be true, despite all appearances to the contrary.

During the last campaign we witnessed a bewildering succession of promises. Our opponents never stopped saying: "This is not a world crisis; Canada alone is affected, owing to the maladministration of the King government. Drive them out of office, put me in their place and rest assured that the day after election you will find yourselves better off." And they added: "Farmers, your plight is scandalous, you are taxed on all sides—

Mr. DORION: Just like Mr. Taschereau.

Mr. VERVILLE: —you cannot sell your produce any more, except at famine prices. The policies of the Liberal government have made your lot an unhappy and difficult one. The friends of this government will tell you that at the last session the Hon. Mr. Dunning brought down a very good budget, well adapted to our present needs; but do not be misled now any more than you were taken in by the fake measures passed by this government during the last nine years."

The Dunning budget, Mr. Speaker, afforded the country reasonable protection, having regard to the needs of Canadian industry, without neglecting the interests of the other classes of our population: with its countervailing duties it kept the American market for us and it retained the European market for our natural products. On the other hand what has the present gouvernment done? What did Mr. Bennett do in London when he suggested to the British people that they tax their own food so as to buy our wheat? On the one hand you have the Dunning tariff: protection for Canada and for all Canada's citizens; on the other, Mr. Bennett, whose sole object is to protect a privileged group at the expense of the Candian people.

And our friends would go on: "It is true that the liberal administration has shown a surplus nearly every year; it is true also that they have paid off a goodly part of our national debt; it is true that they have considerably lightened the burden of taxation; but after all what good is all that to you if you cannot get a better price for your butter?"

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The potatoes are rather small.

Mr. VERVILLE: I even heard one speaker say before an audience of several hundred people: "If it really is true that the government has these surpluses why don't they distribute them among the people instead of paying off the country's debts?" What a pitiable thing to hear from the lips of a man whose mission was most assuredly to pacify the people rather than incite in them feelings that are unworthy and that bear the closest resemblance to the Russian revolutionary attitude which we are striving to overcome. It would take much too long to even begin a recital of the things our opponents did and said in appealing to the worst instincts and prejudices of the people.

Unfortunately some of the public were taken in by these untruthful statements; but, like those who were wise enough to avoid the trap, they are still awaiting the fulfilment, I do not say of all, but at least of some, of the promises made them. But like Sister Anne,—to borrow the expression used the other day by my good friend from St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Fontaine)—they strain their eyes in vain; they see nothing on the horizon.

That is why I said a moment ago that the plight of our farmers is getting worse instead of better; on top of all they have been sorely disappointed, particularly those who put some faith in the promises made by our opponents. You can imagine the look on the faces of those farmers who had come to believe, because it had been told them times without number, that after July 28th, if there were a change of government, butter would be selling at 40, 50, even at 75 cents a pound—

Mr. LAVERGNE: The "assiette au beurre" is changed.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): That is why there is nothing in it.

Mr. VERVILLE: —that eggs would bring 50, 60 and 75 cents in the month of February—

Mr. LAVERGNE: You control the hens.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): If we happen to need roosters we won't look for them over there.

Mr. VERVILLE: —and so on without end for all other manner of produce. Mr. Speaker, I ask you, and I ask my friends to your right—

Mr. DORION: Ask, and you shall receive.

Mr. VERVILLE: Very well, I am going to ask you a few questions. Is it the fault of King and of his government—

Mr. DORION: Yes.

Mr. VERVILLE: Wait. Don't answer the question before I have asked it. Is it King's fault, is it his government's fault, if butter is being retailed to-day at 32 cents a pound in our country districts—

Mr. DORION: Yes.

Mr. VERVILLE: Yes? Wait.

—while at the same date last year butter was selling in the same places for 35 and 36 cents a pound? There has been a drop of 5 cents in the price.

Are King and his government to blame—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. VERVILLE: Wait. —if eggs are selling to-day for 15 cents, while last year at the same date they sold for 45 and even 50 cents throughout the countryside?

Mr. DORION: The Chinese eggs had not come in yet.

Mr. VERVILLE: We are not dealing with them: we are speaking of Canadian eggs, laid by Canadian hens. I am not speaking about Chinese eggs, it is you who go outside of Canada for your arguments. We stay at home.

Are King and his government to blame—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. VERVILLE: Will you wait? You always answer before I ask my question. That is because you always have the same answer ready. Interrupt me as much as you please. Four years from now you will no longer be there to interrupt.

Are King and his government to blame—

Several hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. VERVILLE: Your answer is so intelligent that it pleases me. Keep on repeating it throughout the session.

—if our farmers are obliged after eight months of an administration that was going to make them all rich—that is what you promised—to sell their produce for the lowest prices obtained since before 1914?

Mr. Speaker, in so far as the farmers are concerned, they cannot be satisfied with the present administration because this government promised to relieve them of all their ills and instead of that they have added the further pain of profound disappointment.

Mr. LAVERGNE: They are not angry; they went to war.

Mr. VERVILLE: What is that? Will you repeat your question?

Mr. LAVERGNE: The farmers are not angry; they fought in the war.

Mr. VERVILLE: Yes they are angry; all the farmers are angry against you who promised all sorts of things you were not able to give them.

Mr. DORION: It must be the farmers of Lotbinière who are angry at having re-elected the hon. member.

Mr. VERVILLE: No; the farmers of Lotbinière are much too decent for that. They are not so angry as the farmers of Montmorency who will put you where you belong the next time.

Other speakers have told us what took place during the last campaign. I wanted to emphasize what happened in my county in order to show that our opponents' tactics were the same all through the country, particularly in Quebec province. You made capital out of the unemployment issue in the cities and out of the butter issue in the country districts.

As far as my own electors are concerned I must say truthfully that unemployment was a side-issue with us. The main issue had to do with butter. Lord, Mr. Speaker, what quantities of butter we had to make during the few weeks that preceded the election! The quantity of butter we made was extraordinary!

Mr. LAVERGNE: The taste of the tub isn't noticeable.

Mr. VERVILLE: There were plenty of them.

Mr. DORION: And you are still well-buttered.

Mr. VERVILLE: You are covered with butter yourselves.

Long beforehand public opinion had been prepared, not to say poisoned for months and months, with all sorts of circulars, well got-up—I grant you that—well got-up, but deceitful; and well distributed. That is where I admire your organization.

An hon. MEMBER: The man was Moraud, from Lotbinière.

Mr. VERVILLE: A good fellow; he has had his reward.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What did he get?

Mr. VERVILLE: Hasn't he been appointed to the railway board? You were against that.

We have the right to ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, if a government that got itself elected to office by speculating on the sufferings of the people and on the hard times which the country was experiencing in common with the rest of the world, we have the right to ask ourselves if such a government is deserving of our confidence. Does such a government deserve the people's confidence which it won through lying and deceit, and after making promises which it cannot keep.

I ask the question and for my own part I reply that we have not the right to put any faith in the present government. I do not wish to be unjust towards the present prime minister, nor towards our opponents, several of whom are my very good friends; I am willing to give them whatever credit they deserve; I will go further: I will even allow them all the credit they give themselves. First of all I agree with the government that the unemployment question is settled.

An hon. MEMBER: Ah! Ah!

Mr. VERVILLE: You are laughing? But I tell you the unemployment question is settled.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): In what way?

Mr. VERVILLE: Last September the representatives of the people were called here to parliament and the prime minister declared: "Vote $20,000,000 and I'll solve this unemployment problem. I made the promise during the election campaign; and I intend to settle this question. Just vote the $20,000,000." We agreed to vote the twenty millions; we voted them. And there you are, the problem is solved!

Does Mr. Bennett give a thought to the people, Mr. Speaker? Mr. Bennett is busy acting the tyrant; like Mussolini in Italy he busies himself with reigning over all his subjects; his ministers are his vassals. The unemployment problem is solved! It is so far settled that we had a special session for that very purpose. That is what you call final! And if the government is willing to consider the unemployment question as settled, I agree.

We had proof the other day in this house that the unemployment problem is solved when an hon. member moved the adjournment of the house on a matter of urgent public importance so that we might settle the unemployment question all over again. That was the second time, but it was more urgent this time because we have reached the spring of the year. Last winter these people counted on unemployment relief, but now all that money is spent. Yes, certainly, I am willing to admit that the unemployment question is settled.

The government promised a special session. We held it. The government kept its promise: the special session took place. The government had $20,000,000 voted, and that settled the problem. What a farce, Mr. Speaker, what a farce, what a sinister farce!

To take $20,000,000 from the public treasury, to put our provincial legislatures and our municipalities under the obligation of spending three and four times that sum, for works that in many cases might very well have been postponed; to increase the country's indebtedness, to exhaust the credit facilities of our Canadian municipalities—after that, can anyone say that the unemployment problem is solved? No, Mr. Speaker. Jokes may be all right in their way; personally I have no objection to them. But I say that when the country's money is being spent its a poor sort of joke.

This question is not settled; I am even beginning to wonder, after what we heard in this house a short while ago, whether we will not be called upon again this year to vote more millions in an effort to solve the problem. If the government intends to settle all our problems by voting millions of dollars I would like to know if they are going to vote several millions for agriculture. In the speech from the throne I find only three words concerning this industry. Three words; that is good enough for the farmers. The farmers have as much right to the government's attention as has any other class of our community. All we find in the speech from the throne is "Aid to agriculture." I represent an agricultural county; that is why I ask the government just what assistance they intend giving this industry and if they will spend millions for the purpose. I ask the member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) to tell me if there are several millions for agriculture. Without doing any injustice to the rights and needs of the workers in our cities and in our country districts—for the country has its workers too—it seems to me that a government with any real sense of its duties and responsibilities, is bound to take an active, a serious interest in the farming class who form a very large part of our country's population, who are absolutely necessary to us, being the backbone of the country's wealth.

During the last campaign our opponents—most of them are our friends—made believe they knew nothing about what the King government had done for agriculture; they promised to do much better. The speech from the throne is not very reassuring on that score; there is very little substance to what it has to say about the agricultural industry.

I would not want to pass judgment on the ministry before knowing just what it intends to do. I shall merely make certain suggestions which arise out of the present situation in Quebec, and among my electors in particular. The government has at its disposal unlimited resources for assisting our farmers. They were not lacking during the campaign; they cannot be exhausted now. I ask the members of the government to make use of some of these resources right now. I expect them to give us that promise, and to keep it. Let us hope that they will better the condition of this very numerous and very interesting part of our population. Give the farmers your attention, gentlemen; they are an interesting class. They may be helpful in keeping you in power.

During the last campaign our opponents tried to mix federal and provincial politics; and since Quebec has had a Liberal administration for the past thirty-three years, according to some papers—

Mr. DORION: This is the last year, though.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Do not be too sure about that.

Mr. VERVILLE: They are coming to life. Since, at the same time, a Liberal government was in office at Ottawa—unfortunately that has been changed; the people have been punished—they claimed that if the people were suffering it was because these two governments were overburdening the country with taxation. For a number of years the provincial government of Quebec province has made every possible effort to lighten taxes. Everybody is well aware of that, even the Conservative members in this house. Whether you admit it or not, the people know it for a fact; that is sufficient. Quite recently the Quebec government, with its customary generosity, gave the taxpayers of the province, the rural population especially, the benefit of $16,000,000 in taxes that had been levied to meet the indebtedness of the government and of the municipalities in the matter of road construction. I see the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) in his seat. That is one of the things you asked for. I hope you are pleased; the government has done what you asked. During the past nine years the federal government considerably reduced the taxpayers' burden. Even our opponents admitted that during the last campaign. I ask the present government to follow the same policy; and on this point may I be permitted to draw their attention—I mean the attention of the government, not of the ministers who come and go—may I draw the government's attention to the fact that if they wish to relieve our agricultural classes they can do so by reducing or abolishing certain taxes, particularly the contributions levied on municipalities for the organization of sanitary units. This system of sanitary units has been very successful in the province of Quebec for a number of years; so successful, in fact, that the provincial authorities of Ontario, and even the American authorities, have become interested—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has exhausted his forty minutes.

Mr. L. E. PARENT (Terrebonne): In rising for the first time to address the house it affords me great pleasure to congratulate Your Honour on the ability, judgment and impartiality with which you discharge the important functions of your high office. It also affords me great pleasure as a Canadian of French descent to congratulate Your Honour on the progress which you have made in the French language since you have occupied the chair. May I be permitted to express the hope that this good example will be followed by your co-nationals on both sides of the house, for it would be a step to strengthen the spirit of cooperation and bonne entente between the two great races that compose the major part of our population. I desire to extend my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for the ability with which they have discharged their task, for it is recognized that it was a pretty hard task. Of course, I do not agree with all that they said.

In deference to my province and my constituency, and also in memory of my ancestor, who, for over half a century took a prominent part in all debates for the defence of French-Canadian rights, I will now continue my speech in my mother tongue.

(Translation) Mr. Speaker, the county of Terrebonne which I have the honour to represent, has its own political history, thanks to its spokesmen of the past, some of whom have left their names on the annals of our nation. Without taking up too much of the time of the house I would like to mention a few:

In 1930, long before the Union, the county of Terrebonne elected one of our great Canadians, Sir Louis-Hippolyte Lafontaine, a stalwart champion of the rights of his race. Louis-Michel Viger and Norbert Morin were also in the forefront of the struggle for the rights of our fellow French-Canadians. Gédéon Melassippe Prévost, one of the pioneers of northern Quebec. Sir Adolphe Chapleau, who gave twenty-five years of his life to the service of his country. Sir Louis-François Rodrigue Masson, who was appointed lieutenant-governor. But a man who played an important part in the public life of our country, a man whose name I am particularly happy to mention, is the Hon. Raymond Préfontaine, former minister of Marine in the Laurier cabinet: in 1900, rallying round him the Liberal youth of the time, he laid siege to the Conservative fortress that the county of Terrebonne had always been up till then; he forced it to capitulate, and since that day the Liberal banner floats over the Laurentide hills, in Terrebonne county.

All these men did a great deal for their province and for their country; it is fitting that their names should be recalled to the memory of the members of this house and of the Canadian people.

I find my inspiration, Mr. Speaker, in the Latin words: "Ex Alto Lumen." The public conduct of certain of these great departed is to me a source of patriotism which will light my way in the accomplishment of my duties as a public man, as a member of this house.

Experience has taught me, Mr. Speaker, that to be successful in business one must enjoy the trust and confidence of one's fellow-citizens. And this trust is won through honesty, fair-dealing, respect for one's given word and for one's fellow-man. What applies to the individual applies also to the group; what is true of the business-man is equally true of a political party and of all governments.

What confidence, or what measure of confidence can the Canadian people have in the present government after having elected it to office on July 28th? If the people grasp the contradiction between what was said, before and after the election, by the members of this government and notably by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett; if they analyse their pledges, fulfilled or disregarded; if they analyse what has been accomplished since, what a disappointing performance the Canadian people have witnessed since the 28th of July. The people certainly did not expect to see a ministry formed of such a large number of speechless men who refuse to discuss, each in turn, as parliamentary custom demands, the pregnant issues that confront the government. The people surely did not expect a one-man government; which offers us the spectacle of such a large number of Conservative representatives and ministers being treated as the "enfants terribles" of the big family to your right, Mr. Speaker; they must not open their mouths doubtless so as to avoid any risk of compromising or entangling their leader.

At yesterday's sitting the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Duguay) confirmed what I have just said when he stated that since the opening of the session he has been awaiting the Minister of Agriculture's statement of policy so as to pass along the information to the voters of his riding. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are waiting and we are anxious to know how long we must wait for the government to tell us, in the interests of the country, how it proposes to solve the important problems before the house. Such is the spectacle the Conservative government has offered the Canadian people since its accession; it was the same during the special session of September; it is the same during the present session.

I mentioned contradictions, Mr. Speaker. I turn now to the speech from the throne, from which I quote the opening lines. His Excellency said:

> I welcome you to your duties at a time when the nations of the world are passing through a period of great economic depression. Canada has not escaped it.

These words spoken to the Canadian people, put into the mouth of His Excellency, give the lie direct to the campaign of falsehood indulged in by the Conservative candidates during the last election when, prompted by their leader, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), they told the voters from one end of Canada to the other that the Liberal administration was to blame for the crisis which had come upon the country.

I continue my quotation, Mr. Speaker:

> In prosperity they were united. In adversity that union is made still stronger by the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding which is the surest bulwark of the nation's welfare and happiness.

I repeat: "In prosperity the Canadian people were united." Indeed, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be truer than these words addressed to the people of Canada by His Excellency. This union had its roots, in and owed its vigorous growth to the wise, considerate and enlightened policy of the Liberal administration.

But since the accession of the new Conservative regime there are mutterings of discontent; in certain parts of our country this spirit of unity appears to be seriously threatened.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, April 15, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

IMMIGRATION ACT RETURNS

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table a list of people admitted to Canada pursuant to P.C. 183 and 534, passed under the authority of the Immigration Act; also a list of people admitted to Canada pursuant to the resolution of the select standing committee of this house dated June 6, 1928.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the Speaker do now leave the chair that the house may resolve itself into committee of supply.

By consent, of course.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Would not the appropriate time be after the orders of the day are reached?

Mr. BENNETT: This is not down as a special order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I rise, not to delay the proceedings, but rather to have it distinctly understood that in consenting to the grant of any interim supply, it is without prejudice to the rights of members to discuss fully any and every item of the main estimates now presented when they again come before the house; also that the passing of any item does not in any way commit us to the principle underlying any item. I should like to ask my right hon. friend that it might be also distinctly understood with respect to the portion of moneys now to be voted, that except such portion as may be necessary for salaries and other immediate purposes, those moneys do not become available for the purpose contemplated by the estimates until the full amount is appropriated by parliament in the regular manner.

Mr. BENNETT: I had intended when making the motion to indicate just what the right hon. leader of the opposition has said, but I thought it would come more appropriately from him than from me. It is the usual reservation made by the leader of the opposition when interim supply is being secured as is now proposed. I fully agree with the condition he has imposed upon consent being given to enable the civil service and other services of the country to be provided for. With respect to the last observation of the right hon. gentleman, I can assure him that we will follow the usual practice. I understand there are some difficulties in knowing just where the line is to be drawn in connection with many matters which will suggest themselves to him. I will make inquiries and whatever has been the practice will be observed, and I will report to the house later.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RIVIERE DU LOUP STATION

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I desire to bring to the attention of the house a recent decision by the Board of Railway Commissioners with respect to the proposed location of the Canadian National Railways new station at Riviere du Loup. H. A. McKeown,
Chief Commissioner,
Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Order No. 46476 mentions submission filed by the city and the board of trade of Riviere du Loup. I propose to read the resolution which was passed by the board of trade.

At a meeting of the executive of the Rivière-du-Loup Chamber of Commerce, held on Wednesday, 19th April 1929, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Whereas, on several occasions, representations have been made to the Chamber of Commerce concerning the unsanitary conditions in the railway station at Rivière-du-Loup and the exiguousness of same;

Whereas the present building no longer meets with the requirements of the travelling public and of the ever increasing tourist traffic.

Whereas the Chamber of Commerce has investigated the means of developing local tourist traffic by rail;

Whereas Rivière-du-Loup, including the surrounding district, is a large trade and summering centre;

Whereas the only remedy to the present situation lies in the erection of a new station;

Whereas the present building has been found unsanitary by the province of Quebec Board of Health, which body reported accordingly to the Board of Railway Commissioners, in Ottawa;

Resolved unanimously by the executive of this chamber that application be made to the management of the Canadian National Railways for the erection of a new station at Rivière-du-Loup and to replace the present station by an up-to-date building that would meet more efficiently with the traffic requirements; and that copy of this resolution be sent to Sir Henry Thornton, K.B.E., president of the Canadian National Railways; to Mr. W. U. Appleton, general manager of the Atlantic division of the Canadian National Railways; to the secretary of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada; to Mr. Jean-François Pouliot, member for Témiscouata and to the city council of Rivière-du-Loup.

(Signed) L. P. Lizotte,
President.

(Signed) Louis S. Pommet,
Secretary.

There are also the resolutions passed by the city of Rivière-du-Loup to the same effect. One of these was passed on the 19th April, 1929, that is the same day as the resolutions passed by the Chamber of commerce, It reads:

At a meeting of the municipal council of Rivière-du-Loup, held in the city hall, Monday, 22nd April, 1929.

Were present:

His Worship mayor Chs. E. Dubé.
Aldermen, J. G. Parent, deputy mayor.
Ad. Marquis.
J. H. Mailloux.
V. Dionne.
L. P. Lizotte,

the above forming the quorum of the said council, with His Worship the mayor in the chair.

Whereas this council has received from the executive of the Rivière-du-Loup Chamber of Commerce a resolution, dated the 19th April, 1929, in connection with the Canadian National Railways station at Rivière-du-Loup;

Whereas the Rivière-du-Loup station has become too small for the requirements of the travelling public, the sanitary conditions of the building are poor and the taxpayers have cause to complain of the present state of affairs;

It is unanimously resolved by this council that it concurs in the application made by the Chamber of Commerce of Rivière-du-Loup for a reconstruction of the present station and the replacement thereof by an up-to-date building more suitable to the requirements of our city; and that copy of this resolution be transmitted to Sir Henry Thornton, K.B.E., president of the Canadian National Railways, to Mr. W. U. Appleton, general manager of the Atlantic division of the Canadian National Railways, to the secretary of the Board of Railway Commissioners and to Mr. Jean-François Pouliot, K.C., member for Témiscouata.

(Signed) J. Lebel,
Secretary-Treasurer.

(Signed) Chs. E. Dubé,
Mayor.

I also have in hand another resolution to the same effect from the city of Rivière du Loup. Those are public papers which I am pleased to lay before this house. The latter resolution was passed on the 3rd November last.

Whereas on the 22nd April last the municipal council of Rivière-du-Loup passed the following resolution:

Whereas this council has received from the executive of the Rivière-du-Loup Chamber of Commerce a resolution, dated the 19th April, 1929, in connection with the Canadian National Railways station at Rivière-du-Loup;

Whereas the Rivière du Loup station has become too small for the requirements of the travelling public, the sanitary conditions of the building are poor and the tax-payers have cause to complain of the present state of affairs;

It is unanimously resolved by this council that it concurs in the application made by the Chamber of Commerce of Rivière-du-Loup for the reconstruction of the present station and the replacement thereof by an up-to-date building more suitable to the requirements of our city;

Whereas, on the 21st December, 1928, the chief officer of the Provoincial Board of Health submitted to the Board of Railway Commissioners a report following an investigation of the sanitary conditions at the present station, which report concluded as follows: Without fear of being charged with going too far, we must say that the only proper thing to do would be the erection of a new building if the management of the Canadian National Railways really cares to improve this station in a manner satisfactory to the travelling public.

Whereas the letter from the chief officer of the Provincial Board of Health accompanying the report sent to the Board of Railway Commissioners, included the following paragraph: "The contents of this report shall inform you of the pitiable conditions in which the Rivière-du-Loup station is kept from a sanitary standpoint. This railway centre is the most important between Levis and Moncton and I am at a loss to see why that public place is neglected to that extent."

Whereas, upon representations having been made both by the Provincial Board of Health and the Board of Railway Commissioners, the Canadian National Railways have included in their estimates for the current year the amount required for the building at Rivière-du-Loup, of a new station such as would afford the travelling public the proper guarantees as to healthy conditions and comfort.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. POULIOT: I hear the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Spotton) whispering.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say to the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) that if he expects to get into Hansard the material which he is now reading he must read it audibly, because the rule that documents cannot be placed in Hansard en bloc cannot be evaded by reading them in an inaudible tone. It is a physical impossibility for the Hansard reporter to take down what the hon. member is now reading to the house. I say this for the benefit of the hon. member himself; if he wants this material to appear in Hansard he must read it audibly.

Mr. POULIOT: I have a point to make, Mr. Speaker, but before making it I must lay the foundation. That is my reason for reading these papers which I wish to appear in Hansard, because I do not believe it would be possible for me to hand them in by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEAKER: It cannot go in Hansard unless the Hansard reporter can hear it.

Mr. POULIOT: What I wanted to say to my hon. friend from North Huron when he whispered was that this is the first time in my life I have seen a mountain in labour pains giving birth to a mouse.

Mr. SPOTTON: Bring on the mouse.

Mr. POULIOT: It is louder now; it is no longer a mouse but a big rat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentlemen do not know how stubborn I am. The more they shout the longer I will stick to it.

Whereas the parliament has voted the estimates of the current year for the Canadian National Railways;

Whereas the Canadian National Railways have called for tenders in connection with the erection of a new station at Rivière-du-Loup;

Whereas the honourable Minister of Railways has withheld his approval of the said construction because of its cost;

Whereas, on the other hand, the Canadian National Railways have been empowered to undertake this year works that call for the expenditure of several millions of dollars and that are not more urgent or essential than the erection of a new station at Rivière-du-Loup;

Whereas at the present time unemployment prevails throughout the country the building of a new station at Rivière-du-Loup would help to remedy the conditions in this district;

There is, Mr. Chairman, another reason to the effect that the government should have taken from the unemployment fund a certain sum to cover the difference between the amount voted and the lowest tender.

It is moved by Mr. Lizette, and seconded by Mr. Marquis, and resolved that this council request the provincial Board of Health to make new representations to the Board of Railway Commissioners and to the honourable Minister of Railways asking the latter to reconsider his decision and approve the erection of a new station at Rivière-du-Loup so that work may be proceeded with without further delay, and that copy of this resolution be sent to Dr. Alphonse Lessard, chief officer of the provincial Board of Health, to the secretary of the Board of Railway Commissioners and to the honourable the Minister of Railways.

I have produced official documents, resolutions passed by the board of trade and city council of Riviere du Loup on behalf of the people of that community recommending the construction of a new railway station at that point. The last order of the railway board mentions that submissions had been filed on behalf of the board of trade and the city council of Riviere du Loup, and these were the submissions. The same order mentions submissions filed by the provincial hygiene service. The other day I read a letter from Doctor A. Lessard, superintendent of the board of health of Quebec, and also a report sent to the railway commission under date of December 15, 1928, signed by Doctor Alphonse Barabe, medical officer of health of the city of Riviere du Loup. This report is quite lengthy. There is also a letter from Doctor Lessard to Mr. Vien under date of December 21, 1928, which I will not read to-day because it was placed on Hansard previously. There is also an answer filed by the railway under date of February 11, 1929, and a second report by Doctor Barabe under date of March 13, 1929. If the house will give unanimous consent I will put those documents on Hansard, but since that consent does not appear to be forthcoming I will read them. The first is a letter dated December 15, 1928.

15th December, 1928.

Dr. Alphonse Lessard,
Chief Officer of Provincial Board of Health, Government Buildings,
Quebec.

Dear Sir,—I beg to submit to you my report on the sanitary inspection of the Canadian National Railways station at Rivière-du-Loup. That inspection was made by me on the third instant, with the assistance of Dr. Chas. H. Dumais, divisional inspector in the district, and of Dr. E. C. Labelle, M.V., sanitary inspector of this unit.

I am, dear Sir,
Sincerely yours,
Alf. Barabé, M.D.

The station building points to the north and south in its larger dimension. The railway track runs parallel to the eastern side. The total length is of 128 feet and the mean width of 27.5 feet. The ground floor is entirely surrounded by an 8 feet wide veranda. The building is of red painted brick.

Starting at the northern end, we find the ladies' waiting room, marked room A on the sketch. This room measures 23 feet 6 inches by 23 feet 10 inches and by 11 feet 10 inches in height. The lighting is provided by seven large windows and a small one over the door leading to the station platform. Altogether there are sixteen glasses of 18·5 inches by 36 inches, two of 24.5 inches by 17.5 inches and six of 30 inches by 36 inches. The floor area of the room is 560.8 square feet, and its cubic contents of 6,627 cubic feet. The lighting surface is of 124.96 feet, with a ratio of 0.22.

The heating system is composed of three radiators of eight sections each. In the centre of the room, and around a central pillar stands a circular table the lower part of which is open. The floor is dirty and it could not be otherwise, every piece of flooring being out of joint and giving way under one's feet. The angles formed at the foot of the wall are rounded with accumulated dirt and the space behind the radiators filled with rubbish of all description. The walls, made of painted boards, are also out of joint.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

W.C.: next to room A is the ladies' toilet room. The following are the measurements of that room: 13·3 feet by 6 feet and the height . . . .

An hon. MEMBER: Translate.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member wishes me to translate it because he does not understand French. If he were clever enough to follow what I am reading he would find it interesting. Anyway, I am speaking of the place where he should be at present—and he would fill it too.

The area is 80 square feet, the cubic contents, 946·67 cubic feet, its lighting area 7·5 square feet, and the ratio 0·09. There are 3 water-closets which are separated by partitions reaching half way up, they are all of the same dimension, 3 feet by 3½ feet. The height of the partitions is 7 feet. There are three round wash basins sunk in a marble slab with each a cold water tap. The toilet basins are of the Richelieu type, "wash out." The radiator is in three sections. There is a small ventilator of 6 inches in diameter, not in good working order. The flooring is in a bad condition, the angles of the walls are filled with dirt, there is a rat hole above the wash basins. There are no towels, no soap, no hot water, only individual cups without receptacle to receive those which have already been used, the latter are to be found all over the room. One lamp suspended above the central water-closet provides light at night. The window is above the door communicating with room A, and measures 35 inches by 25 feet 5 inches.

Room B: This room, although without partition, includes the public waiting room and smoking room. The partition however between the ladies waiting room and room B consists of a large door continuously opened. Owing to its irregular shape and to facilitate the calculation of its dimensions, we have divided room B in five rectangulars. We shall in succession give the dimensions of each rectangular. R-1, 16 feet in length, 10 feet 9 inches in width, 11 feet 10 inches height. R-2, 24 feet 9 inches in length, 18 feet in width, 11 feet 10 inches in height. R-3, 11 feet 10 inches in length, 13 feet in width, 11 feet 10 inches in height. R-4, 24 feet 10 inches in length, 20 feet 8 inches in width and 11 feet 10 inches in height. R-5, 10 feet 8 inches in length, 5 feet 2 inches in width and 11 feet 10 inches in height. The total area of room B is 1,549 square feet and the total cubic contents is 18,325·85 cubic feet. Fifteen windows provide the light in this room, they contain in all 30 panes of glass of 30 inches by 25 inches, six of 14 inches by 13 inches and two of 20 inches by 30 inches. this includes the windows above the doors. The total lighting area is 247·47 square feet giving a ratio of 0·5. Here the flooring is worse and dirtier than in the previous room described. The flooring at the doors is so out of joint that the tongues and grooves do not join, also very worn out and gives way as one walks over it. The angles of the walls are filled with dirt and the space behind the radiators overflows with rubbish of all kind. The main door leading to the street is located opposite to the ticket office wicket. The protecting railings are 8 feet 8 inches distant from the door. In the northern portion of room B there are three night lights. The southern portion, known as the smoking room is particularly dirty, the condition of the floor here is still worse than the other rooms, it is uneven and black with dirt. The boards close to the walls are very out of joint leaving, in many places, an open space between the tongues and grooves. There are benches along the walls capable of seating 49 people, that is for the whole room B. There are two night lights and 4 small spittoons in the smoking room. In the southern extremity of room B is located an opening for a ventilator measuring 14 inches in diameter and entirely closed by a tin cover. There is consequently no ventilation in the room. In the month of December, 1927, 3,753 tickets were sold in that room. There is on an average, $11,000 worth of tickets sold per month.

Water-closet 2: This is the public toilet room. This room measures 13 feet 3 inches in length by 9 feet 3 inches in width and 11 feet 10 inches in height. A window pane 30 inches by 26 inches provides the light. The area is 123·33 square feet, the cubic contents 1,453·07 cubic feet. The lighting area is 12·08 inches and the ratio 0·09. There are three water-closets each measuring 3 feet by 3 feet 10 inches in length, separated by partitions 7 feet in height. On the left of the entrance is located a large urinal, the water reservoir of which has been out of order for a long time. Opposite the urinal are the wash-basins. The marble slab in which they are placed had been cut out for two; one having disappeared the hole was covered with a piece of board, the other has only a cold water tap. The toilet basins are of the Richelieu type "Wash Out"...

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Like the government.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation):

The seats of the three toilets are soiled. Apart from the sanitary cups, there is no soap, no towels and no receptacle for the used cups. The angles of the walls are rounded with dirt. The ventilation system consists of a ventilator of 6 inches in diameter located in the centre of the ceiling, and of an air-hole level with the ground and floor, measuring 12 inches by 6 inches. This toilet room reeks with the smell of ammonia and filth. A lamp suspended to the ceiling provides light at night. One of the toilet basins is broken at the top. Both walls and flooring are very out of joint.

W.-C. 3: This is the smoking room toilet. This room measures 13 feet 2 inches in length by 9 feet in width. The total height being decreased by the casing of the stairs, what remains has an average height of about 9 feet. Two panes of glass 17 inches by 36 inches provide light. The room area is 118·5 square feet and the cubic contents 1,066·5 cubic feet. The lighting area 8·5 square feet, the ratio 0·06. The ventilation system consists of a ventilator 14 inches in diameter and is vertical, it extends to the roof of the building, being located in the south western corner of the room. Another ventilator of 6 inches in diameter has its opening in the middle of the ceiling. The air-hole consists of a grate communicating directly with outside and level with the floor and ground. The grate measures 12 inches in length by 6 inches in height. This room contains two water-closets, an urinal and a wash-stand. The toilets are of the Richelieu type "Wash Out". Each water-closet measures 34 inches in width by 46 inches in depth. The water tank for the flushing of the urinal is completely dry and has not been in use for a long time. This means that the urinal is particularly filthy. The floor is black with dirt and very uneven. Here, like in the other rooms, the angles of the walls and the cracks in the floors are filled with dirt. There is a public cup, with parts of its enamel gone, attached to the wall by a chain. The sink is of granite and enclosed in a wooden box. There is but one cold water tap; there are no towels, no soap and no receptacles for rubbish.

Room C: In the centre of room B, facing the east side, is located the ticket office. This room measures 15 feet 6 inches in depth by 12 feet in width and 11 feet 10 inches in height. It contains a safe, a desk, two closets and a large chest. The area which can be utilized is 151 square feet, the total cubic contains 2,064 cubic feet. Light is provided by five windows having 4 panes of glass of 15 inches by 36 inches and 6 panes of glass of 30 inches by 36 inches, giving a lighting area of 60 square feet, the ratio being 0·32. Here the floor is clean as well as the walls, the boards like elsewhere are very out of joint. The radiator has six sections, no system of ventilation exists. Four lamps provide light at night.

Room D: This room is a hall giving access to the stairs leading to the upper story and to the cellar. It is a room of 8 feet in width by 5 feet in depth and 11 feet 10 inches in height. It is lighted by 4 panes of glass of 19 inches by 35·5 inches and 4 other panes of glass of 13 inches square. The area is 40 square feet and the cubic contents 446 cubic feet; the lighting area is 192 square feet, the ratio being 0·2. This room is in a very dirty condition. The dust and smell from the furnaces penetrate through the door and partition of the cellar. The flooring is in a bad condition and out of joint, the same may be said of the walls.

Room E: Operator's office. This room measures 16 feet in length by 11 feet in width and 11 feet 10 inches in height. The area is 176 square feet, the cubic contents 2009.33 cubic feet. Light is provided by 4 panes of glass of 17 inches by 36 inches giving a lighting area of 17 square feet The ratio being 0.09. The radiator has seven sections. Three lamps supply light, they must be kept continuously burning. The flooring and walls are in the same condition as the other rooms. No ventilation.

Room F: Conductors' room. The rooms E and F are divided by a glass partition. Room F measures 7 feet 4 inches in width by 16 feet in length and 11 feet 10 inches in height. Light is provided by two panes of glass 17 inches by 36 inches. The lighting area is 22.2 square feet. The area is 62.67 square feet and the cubic contents 1,248.44 cubic feet. The ratio being 0.4. The walls are in a bad state, the flooring very dirty and also in bad condition. No ventilation.

Room G: Yard office. This room measures 18 feet 10 inches in length, 10 feet 4 inches in width and 11 feet 10 inches in height. Light is provided by two windows with eight panes of glass of 36 inches by 17 inches and four panes of glass of 12 inches by 18 inches. The lighting area is 40 square feet. The area is 173.75 square feet, the cubic contents 2063.75 cubic feet. The ratio being 0·2.

Mr. IRVINE: Is the hon. gentleman saying his prayers, or just what is taking place?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not saying prayers, but perhaps I should for the benefit of the hon. gentleman who does not understand the French language.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not understand what the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) said.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It was not worth listening to.

Mr. IRVINE: I was asking for information; I asked if the hon. gentleman was saying his prayers or what he was doing. I could not understand him.

Mr. POULIOT: Both languages are official in this house. I do not pretend to speak good English but we French-speaking members pay a courtesy to the English-speaking members when we endeavour to speak in a language which they can understand.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member should seek to take offense at what has been said; the remark of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin was more in the way of a compliment than anything else.

Mr. IRVINE: I did not know that the hon. member was speaking in French; he was mumbling so that it was impossible to hear.

Mr. POULIOT: After I have completed reading this report I will be glad to teach the A.B.C'S of the French language to my hon. friend. I might call the attention of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin to the fact that on Monday next he will find in Hansard a translation of my remarks. If he will take the trouble to read this report, which is very interesting, I will be thankful to him.

If the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) or the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) will assure me that an item will be included in the next budget of the Canadian National Railways for the building by the lowest tenderer of a station at Rivière du Loup, I will drop this matter. As there is no answer, I will continue to read:

There are constantly 6 employees in this room. The radiators have in all ten sections. No ventilation system. The flooring is dirty and worn. Four lamps provide lighting. The lamp desks are kept lighted all day.

Cellar. The cellar contains, in the centre of the building the furnaces, the coal-bunker and also the wet-battery room. These cover a space of about 40 feet in length by the whole width of the building. The remainder of the cellar is not excavated, the space between the floor and the ground level is about 2 feet on an average. First story. The floor of the first story—

The cellar is only one-quarter of the floor area, and there is a two-foot space between the ground level and the first floor level. It has been found that the sewers offer great danger from infection.

Mr. MANION: What condition was that cellar in during the five years of the Liberal regime when my hon. friend was sitting behind the cabinet? Why did not my hon. friend have things fixed up during that five years?

Mr. POULIOT: I am delighted to have this opportunity to give some information to my hon. friend. If he will be good enough to wait until I have finished reading this report, I will give him a full explanation. I asked the former Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Dunning, to modify the law in order to put the Canadian government railways, especially the Intercolonial railway, on the same footing as the branches of the Canadian National Railways, that is, under the jurisdiction of the railway board. Previously, they had been under the jurisdiction of the minister and I wanted them put under the jurisdiction of the board. After I have finished reading this report, I desire to show that my hon. friend not only has interfered with the general policy of the Canadian National Railways but is now interfering with the policy of the railway board.

Mr. MANION: I rise to a point of order; the hon. gentleman makes a statement which is not true. I have not interfered with the policies of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, I accept the statement of my hon. friend. The report continues:

Premier étage. L'escalier du premier étage...

While reading his interesting report, Mr. Speaker, I revert to the interjection of the Minister of Railways and Canals who said that he did not interfere with the policy of the Canadian National Railways. In fact, I admit that it is not he who has refused to sanction the building of the station, and I give him credit for his absence from Ottawa on that date. The other day I asked him: Was the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) appointed Acting Minister of Railways and Canals; and I am glad to see the hon. member here now in good health after he has learned to box the compass on the Atlantic ocean. The Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, the hon. member for Argenteuil, refused to sanction a new station at Riviere du Loup; he is responsible for that, and I am very much surprised that the Minister of Railways and Canals did not have him censured for so doing, as the other day he said that the hon. member for Argenteuil had certainly not been appointed acting minister to refuse to sanction the building of a station at Riviere du Loup. That being said, I continue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. POULIOT: There is no time limit in this case. I wish to show—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member has spoken more than forty minutes, and he has not moved any motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: According to the rules of the house, the hon. member speaking immediately after a minister moving a government order is not limited as to time.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member did not speak immediately after the minister. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) spoke immediately after him.

Mr. SPEAKER: That being so, then the hon. member is limited to forty minutes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The leader of the opposition was merely asking for information; he was not making a speech.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he rises to his feet, he is making a speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: Notwithstanding the fact that the leader of the opposition may in his remarks have asked for information, he was addressing the house. He might, of course, being leader of the opposition, at any time have continued to speak without limit, that being provided for by the rules; but he having spoken, the hon. member for Temiscouata did not immediately follow the minister, and his forty minutes having expired, I rule that he is not in order in speaking now.

RUSSIAN COAL—STATEMENT OF HON. G. HOWARD FERGUSON

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to draw the attention of this house and of the government to some statements made in London by the High Commissioner, the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, because I think they merit serious notice. As is admitted by practically all hon. members, we have had for the past number of months a serious unemployment problem which has culminated to-day in an appeal at the parliament buildings. I should like to know whether the statement made by the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson in London to the effect that there was no destitution in Canada, was based on information given to him by the present government.

The other point I should like to draw to the attention of the house is this: when we met at the beginning of the session we were told in the speech from the throne that an embargo had been placed against Russia because her interests were inimical to the social and economic welfare of this country. Mr. G. Howard Ferguson, speaking in London, has, at least according to my way of thinking, quite a different story to tell.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): What is the hon. member's authority for that?

Mr. REID: The magazine Canada, of London, March 21.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it.

Mr. REID: Referring to the Russian embargo with particular reference to its effect on Russian coal, he pointed out that 3,250,000 tons of anthracite coal were imported from Wales in 1930. I would point out that his figures are inaccurate, because Canada last year imported only 900,000 tons of coal, and I suggest that a copy of the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) be sent to him. This is what the High Commissioner said the other day regarding the Russian embargo:

> He found that the Russians were invading the market in Canada, so Canada did not hesitate to put an embargo on Russian coal. That action he described as a distinct practical gesture of an imperial character which was of advantage to Britain alone, and he asked the people of the mother country to take it as an instance of the attitude of the Canadian people towards them.

An hon. MEMBER: What is wrong with that?

Mr. REID: We were told that an embargo was placed against Russia for the distinct benefit of Canada and not of Great Britain.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT moved:

> Resolved that a sum not exceeding $40,199,447.43, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted as set forth in the main estimates for the financial year ending 31st March, 1932, laid before the house at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1932.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does this interim supply bill include any part of the Canadian National Railways estimates which were distributed the day before last?

Mr. BENNETT: I have much pleasure in informing the hon. member for Rimouski that a second resolution is about to be moved covering those items.

Mr. POULIOT: So it is not included in this resolution?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. HEENAN: On perusing the book of estimates, I do not find anything pertaining to any provision towards the unemployment situation. I was wondering whether the Prime Minister could tell us now what he proposes to do in regard to the matter, because I understand the $20,000,000 that was voted at the special session of parliament has been exhausted and there is more unemployment at the present time than there was when the government took office. According to the government's own figures, the index of employment in Canada stood at 118 when the government took office last August, and according to the last report issued on March 1 by the government, the index stood at 100, or eighteen per cent less employed than in August.

Leaving aside altogether letters that I am receiving from all parts of the country, I find that in my own riding 400 men walked to the town hall of Fort Frances last week asking for some assistance. At that time they were anticipating that all the works that had been started at Fort Frances under the unemployment relief measure would be finished within a few weeks. The mayor of Kenora wrote a letter, I think to the Minister of Railways and Canals—he sent a copy to me—pointing out that in all probability there would be about 500 men unemployed all the year in Kenora. I see by the estimates that the Minister of Railways and Canals has secured a public building for Fort William. I congratulate him upon that, because it is needed. It will give employment to men around the head of the lakes. I can assure my hon. friend that I shall support that item and I shall be glad to support a few more items for public buildings or works in northern Ontario if he can get them. I think he might also use his influence to get a few thousand dollars spent in the town of Fort Frances where, for a number of years, the people have been urging that a dike be built to protect certain town property.

Mr. MANION: I might point out that a short time ago I had a letter from the town of Fort Frances. I have been working on this matter for some time, and I rather imagine that there is going to be some work done in Fort Frances shortly with the Dominion and provincial governments cooperating.

Mr. HEENAN: That is fine. Now that Fort Frances is being cared for I hope the Minister of Railways will be able to tell us something good about the town of Kenora. Furthermore, what is to be done for the rest of the unemployed throughout Canada? According to the government's own figures there is more unemployment to-day in the manufacturing industries in this country than there was when the government took office. Inasmuch as there is nothing in the estimates to indicate what the government proposes to do towards relieving that unemployment situation, I think the Prime Minister might very well inform the house at this time what his plans are.

Mr. BENNETT: I take it that the hon. ex-Minister of Labour is fully aware that there is a balance of the $20,000,000 that was appropriated still unexpended, and that the index figures to which he refers and which have been dealt with in this house on many occasions refer only to those businesses that report and not to casual employment, or unemployment, as the case may be. The figures from the index and the figures as a whole are not to be compared. You could compare index figures with index figures, but not with index and casual unemployment figures together. The hon. gentleman is comparing incomparable things.

The hon. gentleman properly observes that there is nothing in the estimates that deals with the matter he mentions. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that that is the reason why it should not be discussed at the moment. The hon. gentleman also was directing attention to the fact that his remarks were irrelevant, and I suppose that that is the reason why they were irrelevant. But as this is a supply bill I presume it is in order for any hon. gentleman to ask any question he may desire to have answered. I can only say to him, as I said at the beginning of my observations, that until the $20,000,000 has been exhausted the inquiry is premature. Such steps will be taken by the government as the necessity of the occasion demands. That is all that I can usefully say at the moment.

Mr. HEENAN: The answer of the Prime Minister furnishes a very good reason why the question should have been raised. While it is true that the seven thousand firms which have been reporting to the government for many years show less employment to-day than when the government took office, the Prime Minister's remarks with respect to casual labour are correct. There is nothing to show the exact situation, but anyone can see for himself that there is greater unemployment even among casual labourers to-day than there was when the government took office. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very appropriate question to raise when the labour estimates are before us. Even if there were no estimates before us, it would be still an appropriate question to raise because it is a national question. The Prime Minister himself made it a national one. It seems to me very pertinent therefore to ask, what is the government going to do with the many thousand of unemployed Canadian citizens? There is no question but that the $20,000,000 appropriation did provide a certain amout of work. But after all, we can hardly speak of it as work, for the report of the Labour department shows that in round figures, 228,000 men got over three million man days' work since the commencement of the Unemployment Relief Act. That averages about sixteen days' work during the winter since the commencement of the act. Will anyone tell me that that is fit work for Canadian citizens, many of whom received only 30 cents an hour, working eight hours a day, and three days a week, bringing in a maximum of $7.20 a week, out of which six dollars had to be paid per week for house rent, leaving only $1.20 to feed the man, his wife and family of four children, I do not agree that that can be really called work. If any one of those men were unfortunate enough to have a limb broken, necessitating removal to hospital, he would get a minimum of $12.50 a week under the Workmen's Compensation Act of Ontario. It takes more even to keep the prisoners in the jails of this province than the amount allotted under this Unemployment Relief Act. So I think, Mr. Chairman, that the question is a very proper one, and I do not think the Prime Minister is doing himself or his government justice in not dealing with it in a more serious vein.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since this question has been raised, and I am glad that it has, I hope the Prime Minister will not attempt in any way to rule out of discussion the unemployment question simply because no unemployment relief item appears in the estimates. It seems to me that that is a very good reason why we have a right to discuss that question at this time when we are asked to pass estimates for other matters of far less importance. If it is important that salaries be paid to civil servants, as I presume we all agree it is, it is also important that men and women not in the public service, but at present without means of subsistence should be kept alive. I do not think the Prime Minister begins to appreciate the appalling situation that prevails among tens of thousands of our fellow Canadian citizens.

He referred just now to the fact that there is a small amount of the $20,000,000 still unexpended. If I understand the situation aright, there is a certain amount still to be expended on works which have already been undertaken. That may provide work for a very small number of people. Also, if I understand the situation aright from information received from the department, there may be between one and two million dollars still unexpended that was especially earmarked for direct relief. This money is being expended under a tripartite agreement between the federal, the provincial and the municipal authorities. But we find to-day that a great many of the municipalities are almost insolvent. They have nothing whatever to offer to the unemployed, so that even though there may be $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 theoretically still available for relief, it is not possible to use that amount under the existing agreements between the Dominion government, the provincial governments and the municipalities. In the meantime thousands and tens of thousands of people are walking up and down the streets not knowing what to do. My hon. friend from Acadia has just returned from the west and corroborated information I have received through correspondents about this very matter. He said that in certain towns he found the town policeman herding men on to box cars to ship them out of town, and a little bit farther down the line the company policeman putting them off the train because they should not be travelling in that way. Last summer I saw scores of men away up towards The Pas attempting to get work on the Hudson Bay line to Churchill, and they were allowed to ride free on and in the box cars simply because the officials of the company dared not put them off. They would have been mobbed and perhaps killed if they had attempted to do so. That was last summer, but the same thing is happening to-day. In a number of our municipalities men have been definitely told—and that is why we raised the question the other day—that relief would be cut off on the 15th of March. Now two weeks have gone by, and every hon. member knows that so far as the west is concerned there is practically no farm or bush work available this year. As a result these men are on the streets, and I was not going too far the other day when I said that there were going to be riots—

Mr. MANION: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am in order.

Mr. MANION: I do not think so. Mr. Chairman, I said "order" for the reason that I think that any member who repeatedly makes a statement on the floor of the house that there are going to be riots, as my hon. friend has, is consciously or unconsciously inciting to riots.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think the hon. member is out of order in stating there may be riots. He takes his responsibility. But he is entitled to express his opinion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am expressing my opinion, Mr. Chairman, an opinion based on what I believe to be the existing factors in the situation. I think it is absurd that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) should take the position he does in calling me to order for making a statement of that kind.

Mr. MANION: It is the opinion of many.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If there is danger of an explosion, and if there is a chance in some way of drawing off steam into innocuous channels, I say it is a good thing that that should be done, and the man who refuses to allow any outlet under the circumstances is himself bringing about trouble. I submit that the Minister of Railways who objects to my remarking that there is danger of riots, and other people who take that position, are the very ones who will be responsible for the riots when they come.

An hon. MEMBER: Just like the Winnipeg strike.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Winnipeg strike! We have gotten a long way from that.

An hon. MEMBER: You have not got very far.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does anyone want to go into that? He had better not.

An hon. MEMBER: Bring it along.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think I need to go into that to-day. The Winnipeg strike had a good deal to do with putting one government out of power, and if it is necessary to do it again it can be done again. I venture to say that there are no representatives from Manitoba or the other western provinces who dare say a great deal about the Winnipeg strike if they want to be re-elected in Winnipeg to-day. I do not think it is necessary to go into that matter further. I am pleading for these men on the outside. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me a curious thing that members can come here representing interests other than labour and present the viewpoint of the banks and of the manufacturers' association, that they can come here and say the country is going to ruin unless they get higher tariffs, that they can come here and make all sorts of alarmist statements, but that when we who have been specially elected to represent the labour interests come here to try and state the viewpoint and needs of labour, immediately certain gentlemen are up in arms and would try to prevent us stating such viewpoint and needs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am simply putting forward what ought to be known throughout this country, and it ought to be a matter of concern not merely to the labour people themselves, but to every self-respecting citizen in this Dominion. I suppose a good many members do not receive the type of correspondence that I do.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, you say, "hear, hear," I have hundreds of letters from poor people on the very verge of starvation.

An hon. MEMBER: Any from Russia?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I have not any from Russia. How some people delight to bring up the Russian business. But there is no unemployment there, as my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) reminds me. According to the press 200 people are leaving Toronto for Russia in order to get jobs. I suggest that if any man does not want to have conditions here as they are in Russia, the best thing he can do is to take some constructive action at this time to prevent the further development of unemployment. It was the carelessness, the callousness, the indifference of the people who were highly placed in Russia that brought about the Russian revolution. That is how revolutions have come about in the past. I am one of those—and I think members who have been in this house for the past decade will admit it—who hope that the great economic changes which are absolutely essential can be brought about in this country without the trouble they have had in Russia and some other countries. I have always pleaded for that—that is the reason I am in this house—that we may use the best means available—parliamentary means, publicity means, educational means—to bring about these changes that are due at the present time. And yet when after ten years in this house I call attention to the exceedingly serious situation that prevails across this country from Cape Breton to Victoria there are those who would shout "Russia" and suggest that I was trying to incite to riots.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Miss MACPHAIL: That is all they have to say.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that any man in this country has a right at least to obtain a decent sort of living, and I submit that any man may very well look to whatever government is in power so to arrange the affairs of this country that he has a chance to work so he can obtain a living. I am not one of those who advocate that men get big salaries or wages without working. What we are asking to-day is that every man be given an opportunity to secure work. If a government cannot provide that opportunity—yes, I will take the responsibility of saying it—that government thereby ceases to have any claim upon the loyalty or the obedience of the people. That is a more serious statement than the other—a good deal more serious. No. Men have a right to live, they have a right to work, and there are thousands of honest, decent, self-respecting citizens to-day throughout the Dominion who have no opportunity to work, and without that they have not an opportunity of living. I did not intend to blame the government for the present conditions; I do not think they are to blame to any great extent. I differ in some ways from my friends to the right because I do not think the tariff is as important as is sometimes made out; but I do believe that we face a world situation to-day, and a most serious situation. The capitalist system, as we understand it, the system under which there is free competition between rival individuals and rival groups—that system is acknowledged by every thoughtful man to-day to be absolutely on trial. It may possibly survive for a few years; there may be such modifications introduced that it may survive indefinitely; I cannot myself see that this is likely, but it may. I say it is on trial. And the capitalist system, producing as no other system ever did, the necessities of life, if this system fails over all this continent and all over Europe to provide for even the elementary necessities of life, then I say not only is it on trial, but it may not survive for very long. I am not talking of that system to-day; I am talking rather of the parliamentary system, which also is on trial.

We have a group of people out in front of this building to-day. I did not intend to say anything about those people. I am not responsible for their being here; as a matter of fact they have been brought here very largely by a group of communists, I believe, and the communists have no use for me or for my colleagues. They have fought us during the elections again and again; they have called us all the names they can think of, but I do not care who champions the cause of the poor people; I have respect for them if, in sincerity, they are trying to provide for the needs of the people. No matter by whom these men are led to-day, I say they represent a situation which we find in the city of Ottawa, for most of the people out here are Ottawa residents. They represent a situation found not only in Ottawa but in Montreal, in Toronto, down in the steel mills in Cape Breton, in Winnipeg, in Sudbury and in every town right through to the coast. I do not think we are justified, as a House of Commons, representing not one section of the community but all sections—theoretically at least—in passing over one of the biggest questions that has faced our country.

I think the Conservatives will do me the justice to agree that last year when my colleague and I brought up this matter on the floor of the house we spoke as strongly as we could, although our speaking was not at all to the liking of the Liberal party. I am inclined to think that had something to do with the difficulties which that party experienced during the election. The Liberal party had no program and we, as Labour members, felt called upon to bring the condition of the unemployed before the country. I said to the then government that I did not think they realized the situation which prevailed, and they did not. The Conservatives took advantage of that situation; they said they would cure this unemployment. I did not think they could do so, but that is what they said. They carried out their promises to a limited extent by doing what was never done before in the history of Canada, calling a special session of parliament to deal with the question of unemployment. I give them all credit for doing so. Whether or not it was done along lines of which I approved, it was a big step in advance, because it was an assumption by the government of the responsibility for dealing with this social problem.

What, however, do we find now! Months later we learn that although the preliminary amount of $20,000,000 for direct relief is almost expended, under such arrangements that the unemployed could not really secure the direct advantage of it, nothing whatever is being done to meet the immediate needs of this present year. Last summer, when the election was going on, nearly three thousand people were being fed by the municipality of Winnipeg. Do you think any government could stand up against a situation of that kind? I do not know how many we are going to feed this summer. If I ventured to say we will have another three thousand, probably the Minister of Railways and Canals would get up and say I was trying to make paupers, but I want to predict that we are going to have a great many more unemployed this summer than we had last summer, and as my hon. friend from Labelle says, we will have more unemployed next winter than we have at present or had during the last winter.

We have to face this situation, and we shall need more than $20,000,000, in my judgment, in order to tide us over until next fall if we are going to prevent this trouble of which I spoke, if we are going to feed the people who are unemployed, to say nothing at all about the farmers who are in dire straits. I hope before long they will have a chance to tell something of the serious situation, approaching starvation, which prevails among the farmers at this time. I am speaking of industrial workers at the moment.

Then there is this further question, that even although we have provided for their immediate needs by a hand out, a dole if you like, what about the future? I think, Mr. Chairman, that early in this session we ought to have some declaration from the Prime Minister with regard to unemployment insurance or something equivalent.

Unemployment insurance is recognized as being essential in Great Britain, and all parties there say that although the so called dole has been abused, unemployment insurance in some form is absolutely necessary at the present time. What have we here? We are simply going along on this hand to mouth policy. Speaking a few days ago I said that I did not expect the government to come out with a full-fledged unemployment scheme because the contributory features cannot possibly be entered into at the present time. The people cannot lay up a reserve; they have not the money. So we will have to have a temporary scheme of some kind, and I want to see that we make a beginning. I do not hold up unemployment insurance as a cure for unemployment; what we need is work in order that the people can have in some way, an opportunity to provide for themselves. I do not want to go into the economic situation at the moment, beyond saying that what we need is not so much work as an equable distribution of the things already being produced, but the outstanding fact is that very large numbers of our people are up against it in a very serious way at the present time.

I did not intend to say more than a few words to-day, but I do urge the government to give us some indication as to how it proposes to meet the emergency which we will find coming upon us within the next few months and how it proposes to handle this unemployment situation during the next twelve months. I feel that since this question has been raised I cannot but make the strongest appeal of which I am capable in support of these men whom I know are suffering. I know very well that if the members of this house realized the situation they would back me up one hundred per cent, but unfortunately they do not realize it.

Mr. GOTT: No suggestions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No suggestions? May I add just one word. I say there sits the government across the way, the government which promised to do this thing. They are the people who should make suggestions.

Mr. BOURASSA: Mr. Chairman, I just want to emphasize if possible the importance of one aspect of the situation which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has pointed out. I want to do it as coolly as I can, with the benefit of the experience I gathered with some friends of mine in the midst of the city of Montreal last winter, when we went from house to house and found families of poor men, women and children who had been on the verge of starvation for the whole winter and who, at the present time, have hardly enough to eat. I can tell the Minister of Railways and Canals, for whom as he knows I have much personal esteem, that if he meant what he said a moment ago he utterly fails to realize what is the situation, not only in Montreal but in every large centre of Canada at the present time, and what it will be next winter.

Mr. MANION: As a matter of privilege, Mr. Chairman, and because I do not want and to not intend to be misquoted in this house, may I say that what I pointed out was this: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made the statement not only to-day but also the other day, when he was speaking, that if we did not relieve all this unemployment—which we appreciate just as much as he does—we were going to have riots in this country. He made that statement not once but many times, and I pointed out then—and I still feel as I did at the time—that the repeated statement that if we could not relieve all this unemployment we would have riots in this country was an incitement to riot. And when it comes to sympathy for the unemployed and for the hungry people in this country I take no back seat to either the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). Nor does any other hon. member on this side of the house take a back seat to those hon. gentlemen.

Mr. BOURASSA: I will not follow the hon. gentleman in the tone and kind of argument he has been using; I wish to state facts to the house.

Mr. MANION: It would be something new.

Mr. BOURASSA: No. If the hon. member would keep his cool senses—perhaps he has some remorse because of old times—he would follow better what I have to say. However, that will not affect my sentiments towards him; I am too old now to be moved in that way. The hon. gentleman twenty years hence will have gained that advantage.

Now, what I wish to say first of all is this. Canadians, whether of French or of any other origin, are human beings, with the same nature as all other human beings on earth. And the history of mankind teaches us that revolutions or riots are caused generally by two things: first is the selfishness of the enjoying classes, whether their enjoyment is political or economic, whether they are kings, aristocrats or plutocrats; and, secondly, the blindness, wilful or unintentional, of weak governments who have no courage or strength of mind to face a situation as it is.

Heaven knows I do not wish for riots either in Montreal or anywhere else, but I know that last winter we had the beginning of riots among people whom the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) knows as well as I do—I point to him because he is nearest me—good French Canadian fathers of families, the most peaceful people you could imagine, but who saw their wives and children starving all winter and who nearly broke into riot when they saw some people who had come to this country in the last twenty years were getting work while they themselves could not. There was no more reason in them. They said, "We are sons of the soil. Our wives and children are starving, and we don't want these 'Polacks,' or Scotch, or Germans to take our place." Of course the feeling was wrong, but it was a natural one.

Now what is the situation to-day? I repeat, we have gained some experience from last winter. Not having anything to do with the fate of any party, not caring very much for the destiny of either the Liberal party or the Conservative party, in our small local sphere, the humble paper of which I have the honour to be director not only started an inquiry, but began to give help to various voluntary institutions organized in the city of Montreal to come to the rescue of poor people. One of the first things we did was to organize work for the relief of the foreigner, because we realized that the instinctive, may I say the animal, reaction of the French Canadian of Montreal against the foreigner would be such, under the circumstances, that it behooved us to do something in that regard. For years we have endeavoured to create some degree of national pride among our compatriots; therefore we felt that we should not allow them to go beyond the limit. We did our best to help some Polish and German and Hungarian families, and families of various other extractions starving in Montreal, who had not yet any charitable or parochial organizations such as were serving our people, or the Irish Catholic or Protestant communities in Montreal. We did some little good, and the little we did helped us to realize the depth of the abyss. And had it not been for that special work I should not be in a position to say what I am now saying; perhaps I should fail, as the Minister of Railways fails, to understand my hon. friend to my left, and conclude that he is simply provoking popular upheaval.

When one knows what the situation is, it is one's duty to speak the truth and endeavour to open the eyes of those who hold responsible positions. During the short session last year I did not take much part in the debates, and I do not think I can be accused of having thrown obstacles in the way of the government. Even my good friend here (Mr. Woodsworth) took me to task in a friendly way because he thought I was disarming in the hands of a victorious government, pretty much in the same way as the Liberal party has disarmed in England before either the Labour government or the Conservative party. I was not doing so; but I thought we should give ample liberty to the government, freshly elected, to try its hand. Like my friend here, I believe they have done something. I trust that everyone will believe me when I say that I do not wish to introduce into this unexpected debate any thought of party success or party advantage. This government could not, any more than its predecessors, be in a position to solve the problem immediately. The greatest fault of hon. gentlemen opposite is that through their pre-election campaign and speeches, they created in the minds of the people hopes and expectations which cannot be realized. Of course we all know that. And far better would it be on their part to confess their impotence, far better would it be on the part of the Liberal party to offer a helping hand to the government in an endeavour to solve this problem, than it is for the party in office to stick to its small, ridiculous position of professing to be able to solve in six months a problem which is baffling the genius of the statesmen of all the most civilized countries on earth, and the findings and experience of the greatest economists and most practical business men. Far better also would it be, so far as the opposition is concerned, not to try to take a small, petty revenge at the expense of the men who defeated them at the polls. Let the ablest men on all sides endeavour rather to demonstrate to the people of Canada that, before looking to the success of one party or the other, we all care for the fate of the suffering masses of the nation.

Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in what I am about to say there is no spirit of boasting; I am merely trying to show that personally I am doing the best I can. Since I have learned of the condition of the poor people in my own city I have told my children that we must spare money to help other people. I have ceased travelling in Pullman cars; I travel in the common cars either on the Canadian National or on the Canadian Pacific Railway. When the common people are talking I listen to what they have to say and at times I hear things without their knowing that a fairly well dressed bourgeois is overhearing them. And there I can realize the truth of what my neighbour said a moment ago—what ferments of hatred are growing in the hearts and minds of Canadians of all races. I am not going to discuss whether farmers or labourers are suffering more. Heaven knows I am rural. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) knows it. Although I have been brought up and have lived most of my life in the city, I have always represented a rural constituency, because I have always believed and still believe that rural Canada is the mainstay of our polity and social organization. Nevertheless, when I visited my rural constituents last summer, I told them that although they might have to suffer somewhat, I did not intend to ask either the Liberal government or the Conservative government, if they should happen to be successful, to starve the people in the cities in order to help the farmers in getting better prices for their butter or meat. I told them that they at least had an inch of soil which they could call their own, they had a hovel or house above their heads, and they could obtain from their farm that with which to live, but the position of hundreds of thousands of labourers and their families in the cities was such that they did not know from day to day whether or not they had a home, or whether or not they would have something to eat and drink.

I remember reading some forty years ago the report of the commission which revealed to the British public the state of the slums in the great city of London. I can assure this house from personal experience and from that gathered by my associates during this last winter that the situation of the slum dweller in the city of London of sixty years ago was not any worse than is the situation of thousands of families to-day in the city of Montreal. Because of the blindness and carelessness of our municipal authorities, thousands of dwellings have been built, not fit to be inhabited by christian and civilized families. One room is built in the front, called the parlour, another room is built in the back, called the kitchen, and two other rooms are placed between containing no apertures whatever for light or air, other than the front and back doors. Up until the present year, one family occupied such a four-roomed apartment, but to-day thousands of these uninhabitable apartments are being used by as many as four families. In every parish of the city of Montreal, every charitable institute, every convent, every school for boys and girls, was distributing last winter hundreds of meals. The other day I was passing down Bleury street in what might be called the bourgeois and fashionable ward of the city of Montreal, and in front of St. Mary's college —I believe that is the college where the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) received his education; two of my boys are receiving their education there to-day—I saw two or three hundred labourers waiting at the door to receive free soup. Upon making inquiries I found that soup was being distributed twice a day at that college by the fathers. The same thing is being done at sixty or eighty institutions in the city. That provides just enough to keep alive those individuals who gather there, but the pregnant woman is unable to go there, the woman who has a suckling babe cannot go, the man crippled by rheumatism cannot go; they have to rely upon charitable people, clerical or lay, who are willing to go to the homes and give food to the suffering people who are not capable of going to obtain their daily ration of soup.

I can assure the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that a feeling is growing in the hearts and minds of these men and women similar to that which I heard expressed the other day on the train running between Montreal and Ottawa. Three good French-Canadians in expressing themselves said: "All right, we stood it last winter, we were able to keep the woman and the kids alive, but next winter if it does not improve we will see that we get something more." It may be provoking to say so, but I think it is better to know these things than to ignore them. It is better to prepare for them than to go on blindly and say: Oh, well, these things will adjust themselves with the working of the tariff and other measures. No tariff or fiscal policy can do it.

I have one suggestion to offer, that the government adopt a similar measure to that adopted by the government of the colony of Kenya. That government, realizing the state of the people in the cities to be more desperate than the state of the people in the rural district, sent out agents to ask the farmers if they could give food and shelter to one or two people from the cities. They were told that if they could afford to give that, the government would employ its funds in paying such people a small salary. I do not claim that that is the best remedy to be adopted, but I do say this: if urgent and practical means are not taken during this coming summer to prevent, I will not say starving people, but people in difficult circumstances in the small towns of this country where work is practically stopped, from flocking to the cities, the result will be disastrous. The more we advertise our charitable institutions and the means we take to alleviate the sufferings of the people in the large cities, the more we will have individuals from the smaller centres coming to such places as Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. They figure that because of such organizations there may be a chance for them.

While travelling in a second class smoking car a fortnight ago a man came to me who knew me by sight. He had some connection with the constituency which I represent in this house and he told me of the situation existing in the town of Hawkesbury, not very far from here. This town, like many other towns in Quebec and Ontario, has been built up and sustained by one industry, and that industry is now stagnant and no one has any work to do. The hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bertrand) can correct me if I am wrong. This man told me that half of the dwellings which had been erected by the small merchants, the professional men and even by some of the labourers were now empty, and these small capitalists found themselves to be paupers because they had no revenue. The town has a debt of $750,000 which it is unable to pay. The labourers are leaving, but where are they going? Going to another small town of the same size? No, they are going to Montreal or to Toronto.

While travelling a short time ago with a professor of Macdonald college, a man possessed of knowledge, he told me about the situation existing in the town of Granby in which he had been a few days previously. He told me of an incident which happened in a factory there. This factory is working only part time, and a girl worker collapsed about ten o'clock in the morning. The other girls gathered around and asked her if she was sick, but she replied: No, but this is my fasting morning. She then went on to explain that in her family consisting of eight children, four fasted each day, alternately, so that the other four could have a cup of tea and a piece of bread. They were not all employed; what was earned by two or three members of the family was not sufficient to give a crust of bread to all the children. Those are things which have nothing to do with politics, which have nothing to do with theories, but which are hard facts. It seems to me that the duty of parliament is to see first—and that was the only suggestion I made last fall—that some little work is given to all those men who used to work in the small towns or in the lumbering districts so as to keep them at home, and if necessary, to adopt means so that the railway companies and other agencies of transportation will not bring those people next winter to the large centres; because, if the danger pointed out by my hon. friend to my left arises, it will be on account of the rivalry between those people and the old-timers of the cities, the men who have been born and brought up, who have lived many years in the urban centres and who will see the unemployed from the outlying districts coming to the cities and competing with them either in the small amount of work that will be given or in the distribution of charities and alms which will not be sufficient to alleviate all sufferings.

I think I have presented the case without any idea of embarrassing the government or anybody else. This appeal I make as the father of a large family and as one knowing the fate of large families not only in the city of Montreal but even in the good old happy city of Quebec. The other day, passing just five minutes' walk from that great, shall I say, monstrous and scandalous castle of wealth and parvenu-ism, the Chateau Frontenac, I saw about 150 labourers who had come up from St. Malo and St. Sauveur, hanging around the door of the Salvation Army quarters on St. Louis street, waiting for a crumb of bread while American, English and French millionaires were feasting at the Chateau Frontenac, five minutes' walk away. This is another aspect of the question. I appeal to every man who has wealth or who knows men who have wealth, first, to create in their own minds, and then to endeavour to stimulate in other people's minds, a true spirit of Christian charity; or, if they cannot bring themselves to that standard of humanity, let them at least have the decency to conceal their debauchery of wealth and luxury, because in addition to the two causes that I pointed out as having produced revolutions and riots in every country, whether Teutonic or Latin, the third cause is this cynicism of the wealthy who, not content with throwing thousands of dollars on the streets, are bent on showing, on advertising their wealth and, thanks to the sensational papers, the radio and all the other means of publicity, bringing to the minds of millions of starving people the extravagances of the worldly and the selfish.

Last winter I was spending a few days of rest in the south of France, one of the happiest corners of earth with which God has blessed humanity, where most of the people have a modest but happy life. One evening, talking quietly in the resting room of a modest provincial hostelry with a good southern Frenchman, as far away from any idea of bolshevism or communism as my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals or as myself, maybe, I saw him growing red and with the quickness of a southern Frenchman he took his paper and threw it on the floor, exclaiming: "Do you not think, sir, that is enough to make decent people revolutionary?" I said: "What is it?" It was a piece of news cabled from New York, announcing that a certain magnate there, some vulgar individual, gilt-edged with millions, whether earned or stolen I do not know, had just married off his daughter, that the nuptial breakfast had cost no less than $200,000 and that each invited guest present had received an automobile as a souvenir. I give this advice to wealthy men and wealthy institutions of Canada: If you cannot bring yourself to the point of partaking with the poor, at least conceal your indecent wealth and the indecent use you are making of it.

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Mr. MULLINS: In regard to the speeches that have been made from the other side of the house, let me say that I represent in Manitoba a rural constituency. I have just travelled over that constituency, and I find that no such conditions exist as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated. I have every respect for him because he was my preacher in the early days in the province of Manitoba, but I cannot understand why he should include the rural parts of Manitoba in any such statement as he has made on the floor of the house; his statement does not apply to the rural parts.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sure the hon. member will pardon me; I was speaking of the industrial centres.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. member included the farmers.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said that a great many of the farmers were in a similar condition. That is true of large areas of Saskatchewan.

Mr. MULLINS: Why mention Manitoba? Why is he bringing in these things and knocking down the price of lands? Such statements are wrong. Our farmers are willing to come back and face the situation. I have just met with them and asked them: What is wrong? This is what they said to me: "I am wrong; I will take the responsibility; I bought three Buick cars when I should have bought Fords." Another one said: "I marketed my grain through the wrong channel and my farm is all tied up on that account. If I were out of it I would be all right." They are willing to meet the situation. These statements are doing harm to western Canada and I would ask hon. members to withdraw some and modify others. They are hurting Canada and doing more harm than good by such statements.

Mr. HOWARD: My remarks will not be such as to hurt Canada, but I consider certain measures that were passed during the short session made the situation worse than it might otherwise have been. One instance to which I wish to draw attention is this: it was brought forward by a telegram which I received about twenty minutes ago and a telephone message that I just went out to answer from one of my constituents. The telegram is as follows:

Les arbres souffrent depuis quinze jours. A moins d'avoir un permis d'en prendre livraison immédiatement nous aurons à subir un désastre. S. O. S.

Louis Gervais.

This is the translation:

The trees have been suffering for fifteen days. Unless we can get permission to take immediate delivery of them we will suffer a real disaster. S. O. S.

Louis Gervais.

At the short session of parliament legislation was passed that I do not think has been ever known of in Canada before empowering the Minister of National Revenue to fix for duty purposes the valuation of certain articles. That legislation was fought by hon. members who are in opposition at the present time, but in spite of that with the government majority it was passed through the house. Personally I am frank to say that while I realized at the time the seriousness of that legislation, it was not then brought home to me so forcibly as in the last two weeks what an injustice it might do not only to my section of the country but to all Canada. To-day I have the evidence before me, and I want to place it before the house for purposes of record so that the house and the country generally will know what hardships have been brought upon us.

Mr. Gervais for forty years has been in the business of distributing fruit trees through our section of the country. Last year from the month of May until December he went from house to house in that section and sold his trees and fruit bushes for delivery this spring. The duty upon those trees was 3 cents a tree coming from the United States. That has been the duty for the last forty-two years. There was no change made in the tariff with respect to these trees; it was never discussed on the floor of the house at all, and therefore the rank and file of our people knew nothing whatever about any change. But by an order in council in December last the value for duty purposes was raised from 3 cents to 30 cents a tree—I repeat, from 3 to 30 cents. This man's two carloads of trees arrived in Sherbrooke, and they are now in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Sherbrooke. The price he paid for two carloads was $1,179.06. I went to see the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) the other day. This man who imported these trees had come to Ottawa and had seen all the officials of the department that it was possible for him to see, with a view to getting what I would call simple justice, and something that would have been a benefit to Canadians as a whole. But he got no redress. He went to the customs at Sherbrooke to pay his duty, which last year amounted to $644.28, and the customs officer at Sherbrooke asked him this year to pay a duty of $3,472.18. The duty had been raised from $644.28 to $3,472.18—something that has never been heard of before. I have been investigating this matter for the past week. This man has not always purchased his trees on the other side of the line. He has purchased from different places. I shall not quote any names in this house because I do not want to do anybody any harm, but last year this man ordered some trees from a Canadian firm at 12 cents a tree delivered in Sherbrooke. Then this order in council was passed in December last, and the price which the Canadian nurseryman asked him for his trees this year was 23 cents, and that was the price quoted by three different Canadian firms whose names I have here. I will go further and say that a member of one of these firms is sitting in the gallery of this house at the present moment. These trees will be ruined if delivery is not given. I go further and say that one of our ordinary, honest Canadians, who has no special fund of money ahead of him, will be absolutely ruined through no fault of his own, but through this legislation, if something is not done to relieve his case. I lay the fault to the government in power at the present time, and I want the people to know it.

Mr. Gervais came to me last week and made this proposition. He said, "Mr. Howard, if the Minister of National Revenue will take all the money I have—I have about two thousand dollars in the bank—and will release the trees, I will make my distribution and pay the balance of the duty up to $3,472.18 as asked for." But the minister refused that proposition. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that there is something more for us to do than simply sit here and fill our chairs. We ought to be of real service to the people, and if conditions are such as have been pointed out by the hon. member for Labelle and others, and some of these conditions I know of personally, the government in power ought to do something to remedy the situation. Here at least is one chance for the government to do something. There is no reason under the sun why any of this man's propositions should not have been accepted by the minister, who I regret is sick to-day. I say that it is absolutely criminal for our own Canadian growers to have increased their price by almost 70 per cent during the past year, especially when prices of everything else are coming down, and when wages are coming down so low that it is hard for many a family in Canada to maintain themselves. On account of this—I was going to say, rotten—legislation that was put through during the special session last fall this man in my constituency is going to be absolutely ruined and every dollar that he has saved up in the last forty-two years will be taken from him. I charge the government with the responsibility.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would like to ask the Prime Minister one question, if I may. I do it because I am sincerely anxious to cooperate with him in dealing with the all-important matter that has been under discussion so much to-day.

Last year, when he was making his appeal to the country, speaking of this question of unemployment, my right hon. friend said over and over again, "Mr. King promises you consideration. I promise that I will end unemployment." I would like the Prime Minister to tell this house and the country exactly what he meant by that statement. What did he mean when he said "I will end unemployment." He also said, in many of his public addresses, that there was no reason at all why any man should go without work in a country such as Canada, and that if he were returned to power there would be work for everyone, not doles but work; and that so far as he and his government were concerned they would secure work for everyone or perish in the attempt. I would ask the Prime Minister to tell us what he meant when he said that there would be work for everyone.

I had expected when the estimates were presented to parliament, the annual estimates dealing with expenditures contemplated for the entire year, that one would find some indication of a labour policy, but I have looked through the estimates and I find nothing whatever different from what has appeared in the estimates of previous years with respect to any matter that has a substantial bearing on the question of unemployment. My right hon. friend will, I think, agree that, in realization of the very serious nature of the statement he has made, I have been particularly careful to give him the freest possible hand to make good the pledge which he gave in the last campaign. I have caused him no embarrassment whatever. To the extent of my ability I did what I could in the special session to see that every measure he brought forward was put through expeditiously. I have cooperated in every way in which my position would permit me to cooperate in assisting the government to remedy this unemployment situation, and I wish to say that I am prepared to continue to cooperate in every way in which I am able to cooperate. But as an assistance to this end I would like my right hon. friend to tell the house and the country what he meant when he said that if he were returned to power he would end unemployment.

Mr. BENNETT: I have to remind this committee of the fact that we are dealing with an application for interim supply. It can be done only by consent, and this is neither the time nor the place for the consideration of general questions of policy. May I further remind the committee that, under our rules, until the address has been adopted, there is never any discussion of further matters of policy. When that address has been adopted by this house there will be a declaration of the government's policy. About that there need not be any doubt in the world. Anyone who has followed parliamentary institutions knows perfectly well that until the address is adopted, in no parliament in any country in the world where British institutions prevail is any endeavour made to obtain during the course of a debate upon the address an enunciation of the policy of the administration. I intimated that the other evening. Now, by consent, supply is being sought by the government, merely as the instrument of this house to provide pay for the public services to enable them to be carried on. I have sat in my place and seen interim supply voted during the time I was leader of the opposition, some three sessions, and on every occasion, from the moment of the introduction of the motion that the house resolve itself into committee of supply until the third reading of the bill had been given, it went through in something like thirty minutes. That is what happened every time while I at least occupied that position.

An hon. MEMBER: Conditions were different then.

Mr. BENNETT: They certainly were, and responsible men were preparing for the evils that were seen, while others were not. Those of us who sat to the left of the Speaker at that time and pointed out these facts certainly did not meet with much support from the government of the day. You will find from the records of Hansard a clear indication of this. Those of us who then sat to the left of the Speaker stated what we believed would happen if the policy of the party then in power continued to be followed. And what we then pointed out has happened. I do not think this is the time to discuss questions of policy. I so intimated the other evening, and I do not propose to depart entirely from the rules that govern our parliamentary institutions. But this I will say, no good service is being done to the country by the exaggerations made by some of those who have addressed the chamber this afternoon. I say that with a due sense of responsibility.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: How about last July?

Mr. BENNETT: I am quite willing to discuss that too, and I will before I resume my seat. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins), having made a close and careful investigation of his whole constituency, has just told us exactly what he found. I have similar information from other members. I know of individual cases of hardship; of course I do. You would think, Mr. Chairman, when listening to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) this afternoon, that the only sympathy in the world for the unfortunate was manifested by the hon. gentleman when he left this country and spent his money to enjoy himself in France instead of staying at home. He has been reprimanding Canadians because they spend their money, whereas the economists of to-day are saying that rich men should spend and so put their money in circulation. Now the hon. member for Labelle says rich men are spending their money lavishly, and the people are getting the benefit of it, and they should not do so. That is one school of thought. The other is the school that says, "Save your money and put it in the bank; it will be safe there and no one will get any benefit from it." These two schools clearly indicate the differences of opinion that prevail with respect to the same matter.

I do not at this moment propose to answer hon. gentlemen opposite other than to say this. I never expected by remedial legislation to undo in a day the wrongs that had been done to this country in ten years. Neither did anybody expect it would be done, nor think it could be done. But this we do say, that within the time that has passed since accession to office no government has ever more fully implemented its preelection promises than the government now in power. I will not traverse the case made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard). The minister who dealt with it is not in his place; he is ill. But we did say that where products were being dumped upon the Canadian market to the detriment of the Canadian producer, whether he be a nurseryman or a factory producer, such dumping was giving work to people outside of Canada that could be done by Canadians at home, and we proposed that Canadians should get that work through the instrumentality of government. Certainly we have no apology to offer for having said that.

Mr. HOWARD: Did you not at the same time say that prices would not be increased?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. It is not a tariff item that the hon. gentleman is speaking of. There was no change in the tariff according to his own statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: He has stated that there was no change in duty but that the value for duty was placed at 30 cents instead of 3 cents. That is what he has said. I am not in a position to determine whether or not the figures mentioned bear some adequate relation to the dumping of goods of a similar character upon this market because I have not the facts before me and did not know the matter was to be raised. Had I known it, I would have had the file brought to my attention.

This I desire to say, Mr. Chairman. Until the address has been adopted it would be wholly foreign to our parliamentary practice for the government to declare its policy. In the present instance the government is not acting as a government, it is simply the instrument to enable the public service to be carried on. Interim supply has been sought by succeeding governments, and it has never been made the occasion to raise questions of government policy, for the very obvious reason that the government cannot then make a declaration of policy, and should not do so. As I said a few moments ago, until the address is adopted it would be wholly foreign to our parliamentary institutions for the government to declare its policy. The best indication of what the government will do is to be found in what it has already done. Hon. gentlemen opposite nod their heads. They are opposed, I suppose, to the $20,000,000 having been voted for unemployment. Let this be borne in mind, that that $20,000,000 involves an expenditure during the next few months of over $75,000,000 on undertakings that, just as soon as conditions warrant, will be carried on. You cannot expect people to yield the wages that are being demanded without getting adequate results. This morning I was waited upon by a delegation urging that all the voluntary organizations that exist in this country to do useful service to mankind, churches, charitable and social organizations, should by statute be prevented from continuing their work. That is what I was asked to do by this delegation. Their slogan was "On the streets on the 15th of April." They came here this morning to urge upon the government non-contributory unemployment insurance. I told them they would never get it from any government that I had to do with; that is what I told them; I was perfectly frank about it. Whatever else this administration may lack, there is no lack of decision as to what it will do.

In due time and in the proper place I will answer the questions propounded by the leader of the opposition, not to-day but at the beginning of the short session. He may be desirous of giving us cooperation. Well, a little cooperation of patience in these days might do something; a little cooperation to get the speech from the throne adopted to enable us to settle down to business might be a useful effort. Look at what has happened this afternoon on a pro forma motion for one-sixth supply to enable the public services to be carried on. We have listened to what from the hon. gentleman from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot)? He is one of the leading members of the Liberal party as now constituted, one of their front benchers, one of their most trusted lieutenants, one of the gentlemen in whom it reposes apparently the greatest trust, one who is accorded the heartiest applause and the loudest laughter by his colleagues beside him; he is given the cheer that always encourages further hope. This leading member of the Liberal party spent the afternoon reading upon Hansard words not spoken loud enough to be heard by the Hansard reporters, and then he handed them reams of material to be put on Hansard at the expense of the Canadian people, on the principle, I suppose, that money should be expended for the benefit of those who get out Hansard, for certainly it could serve no other purpose that anyone can suggest. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) is a student of parliamentary institutions, and he knows perfectly well that this is not the time when the matter that he brought up can be dealt with. These are not ignorant men. If this pro forma motion for interim supply cannot be adopted this afternoon, the civil servants will be without their pay to-morrow, and they will know whom to blame for it. There is one party they cannot blame for it—the government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister has just made one statement which I think is entirely correct; he has said that according to the procedure of parliament until the address is adopted any other business should not be taken up, and that if other business is taken up it can only be by consent. May I point out to my right hon. friend that if there has been any occasion to vary that rule, the fault does not lie with anyone but himself and the members of his administration. They did not call parliament until very late in the year, and surely the opposition or the country cannot be blamed for that circumstance. They brought parliament into session very late in the year, and naturally the whole public service was threatened with being inconvenienced because supply could not be voted in the regular way. Before the Easter recess my right hon. friend wished to get supply for the public service. We indicated our willingness to give him interim supply. Why did he not present the estimates to parliament before the Easter recess rather than now, on the 15th of April? The beginning of the fiscal year is April 1, not April 15, and it was only yesterday or the day before that these estimates were laid on the table of the house. That is not the fault of the opposition; that is not due to any lack of cooperation or to any discourtesy on the part of the opposition. It is entirely the fault of my right hon. friend and his colleagues in not having the business of parliament ready when parliament was called and in being so late in the calling of parliament.

Now may I say this further word. When my right hon. friend requested the passing of supplementary estimates for the last fiscal year and later the passing of interim supply for the present year, it did require unanimous consent to have the right to suspend the regular procedure to allow the house to go into committee of supply to consider the estimates and this the opposition courteously granted. But when, through the courtesy of hon. members of the opposition and in fact of all hon. members of the house, the Prime Minister moved as a result of the consent given that the house go into committee of supply to consider the estimates, that motion carried with it the right, as it always has, whenever supply is considered, to any member to discuss any and every question in the nature of a grievance requiring redress and above all the right to discuss the most important question which is before the people of the country.

The debate on the address has run on for a considerable time, but during the course of the debate how much, may I ask, have we heard from the right hon. gentleman himself, or from a single minister of the crown with respect to the question of unemployment in this country? If the records are looked through from beginning to end it will be seen that we have had no statement from the ministry on that all-important question, a question so important as to necessitate, according to the view of the government, the calling of a special session of parliament last fall to deal with it. Under those circumstances it is not only the right but the duty of the opposition to demand from the government on every proper occasion what its policy is on this all-important question, and in doing so to-day we are only discharging the first duty of an opposition in seeking to get from the government some statement of policy.

I do not wish to go further into this question at the present time. I do think it would help throughout the country, in bringing about that better understanding of the government's position, if the Prime Minister would make at once a pronouncement to this house as to what the policy of the government is with respect to the unemployment situation which is so grave in Canada at the present time. I think the best way in which that statement could be made would be for him to give to the house and to the country quite frankly the meaning of his words when he said he would end unemployment. It is all right for my right hon. friend to say now that he did not mean he was going to end in one day the wrongs of ten years. I am not going to enter into any controversy about the wrongs of ten years or even as to how any conditions arose. That question can be debated by itself. My right hon. friend was dealing with a concrete condition of affairs in Canada during last summer, a condition of unemployment. True enough he did blame the then administration for that condition. The then administration was honest in saying that the condition was part of a world condition—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Were we not right in that statement?

Mr. BENNETT: My right hon. friend said it did not exist.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, we never said anything of the kind. Over and over again I stated publicly that what we were suffering from in Canada was a world condition. I gave, as I saw them, a statement of the causes of unemployment and stressed very strongly the policy which I believed would more than anything else lead to an increase of trade. I stated that increase of trade would lead to an increase of work, and increase of work to a cessation of unemployment; that was the whole basis of the campaign, but my right hon. friend, dealing with concrete conditions, spoke of conditions of unemployment irrespective of their causes and said, "Return me to power and I will end unemployment." Now I ask him again what he meant when he said, "I will end unemployment." It is not a good enough answer to give to the unemployed in this country to-day, or to the country, that he cannot do in one day what may have been occasioned by circumstances covering many years. He has been in power now for nearly nine months, and these estimates purport to deal with the expenditures for the next twelve months. Yet there is nothing here which indicates what is the policy of the administration. I do not intend to pursue this further at the moment, but I do intend to ask my right hon. friend when we take up the estimates again what he meant by the statement which I have just quoted, and I will expect him by that time to be prepared to give the country a satisfactory answer.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, may I say that I think the attitude of the right hon. gentleman as expressed in his closing sentence is eminently fair and proper, and one which I shall endeavour to meet. I believe that to be the time and place to advance criticism and to meet criticism, and of course it is the right and duty of the opposition to criticize. I merely ventured to say I do not think that on any occasion heretofore when the government has been seeking pro forma supply in order to maintain the public service, any debate such as this has been indulged in. That was the point of my observations, and I can assure the right hon. gentleman that we shall endeavour to meet the suggestions he has made, I hope before we again have to consider any similar application such as this.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that on the records of the house there are a large number of questions and notices of motion for the production of papers, whether we might have some guarantee that these papers will be produced before we take up the main estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: I can assure my hon. friend that while a number of these returns are voluminous, all those we believe should be properly brought before the house are in the course of preparation, and as soon as the address is adopted we believe we will be able to answer the questions without further delay.

Mr. VENIOT: Then there is another point to which I should like to refer, in connection with the matter brought up by the hon. member for Sherbrooke. I refer to the matter of dumping. In discussing that point the right hon. Prime Minister said there was no increase in duty, but that these articles were being dumped on the Canadian market and therefore the dumping duty prevailed. If the matter is carefully looked into it will be found that at the very moment during the special session when parliament gave power to the Minister of National Revenue to apply the dump, so to speak, the price of the articles which would be affected in that way went up in Canada.

Mr. GOTT: Not all of them.

Mr. VENIOT: But the hon. member must admit that the prices of some articles went up.

Mr. GOTT: No.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman is always ready to interrupt, but he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. GOTT: Yes I do.

Mr. VENIOT: Let the hon. gentleman possess his soul in patience for a few moments. All he can do in the house is interrupt. Last session the hon. gentleman took up all his time in—I will not use that unparliamentary word "obstructing," but I mean that just the same. He took up the time of this house with very, very serious objections to certain ways of carrying on the administration of some of the departments. Now he has taken up the time of the house interrupting speakers on this side. Let me say to him that we on this side of the house are not looking to him for any advice as to how we should proceed in matters of this kind.

An hon. MEMBER: You are not running the country.

Mr. VENIOT: No, we are not; nor is the government running this side of the house. We are running this side to suit ourselves. Perhaps the hon. gentleman who speaks about running the government is a little offended himself, a little sore because he was not taken in to run the government. There may be something in that if current rumours have any foundation at all. Now let me come back to the question of dumping. In this case the very moment the power was given directly to the minister to apply the dump the price of nursery stock in Canada went up, and on the increase of price the Department of National Revenue fixed the figure at which the dumping clause should apply.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. VENIOT: How am I out of order?

The CHAIRMAN: Come to the item.

Mr. VENIOT: I am coming to the item. The Prime Minister spoke on this item.

The CHAIRMAN: Everyone has been out of order all afternoon.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. VENIOT: Then I am not going to be called down, surely. You are not going to make an example out of me when you allow everyone else to discuss it. I can stand on what I consider to be my rights, with all due respect to the chairman of committees. I was going to say that while the duty on nursery stock was not increased at the special session, nevertheless the fact that the minister had power to apply the dumping clause gave the producer in Canada the idea of increasing almost 80 per cent the price of nursery stock as it stood in August, 1930. That is how the injustice was done which the hon. member for Sherbrooke spoke about.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I trust I shall not be out of order inasmuch as what I am about to say affects the civil service. During the last two or three days I have been bringing up the question of the disposition of civil servants in the Department of the Interior who of necessity must either be placed in some other departments or be dismissed altogether. I wish also to correct an impression which some hon. gentlemen have, that nothing was done by the previous government to assist as far as humanly possible in transferring these civil servants. I am not going to take up the time of the house; I sympathize with the Prime Minister in his desire to get this interim supply through. But I do think that these people, some 150 or so, are entitled to know whether or not they are definitely out of the service, or whether the government is going to make some provision to place them in other departments when vacancies occur. I wish to make my position perfectly clear in this respect. I am not suggesting that the government pay salaries while these men and women are not actively engaged in the civil service, but that they simply be kept on a reserve list and given preference when vacancies occur, over both promotions and entries to the service.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that, when a vacancy occurs in a department, all subordinate officials in that department who have been waiting fifteen or twenty years for advancement should be kept back while someone is taken from another department, such as the Department of the Interior, and put into that vacancy, over the heads of those who have been working in the department, who are familiar with its duties, and who are anxious for advancement therein?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I do suggest that. If my hon. friend will look up the Civil Service Act he will see that frequently when examinations take place for promotions, they are not entirely confined to the department in question; other civil servants of similar standing may have an opportunity of competing for that position. Now I quite appreciate the difficulties that arise in departments over matters of this kind, but I say that this is an exceptional situation and one which it is likely will never occur again in the history of the service, and I see no hardship that can occur to individuals who have to wait for perhaps a year for promotion, and more particularly to entries into the service.

Mr. CAHAN: I can call attention to cases where they wait five and ten years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am quite aware of that; but my hon. friend will agree that men who have fifteen or twenty years of service to their credit—and creditable service, may I say—are surely entitled to the same chance as an individual in a department. And indeed, in my own opinion, under the circumstances—

Mr .CAHAN: The hon. gentleman suggested preference, not the same chance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I do suggest a preference.

Mr. CAHAN: I just wish to understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is my position; I wish to make it clear. And I wish also to make clear the fact that as far as possible junior members of the staff were transferred, foreseeing this difficulty. I wish only to be helpful and not critical; I have not offered one word of criticism. I know the difficulties, the serious difficulties, that arise when you undertake to transfer civil servants from one department to another. I quite appreciate that, but I do say that this is a very exceptional situation which is not likely to arise again in the course of many years.

Mr. BENNETT: I would not trespass on the time of the committee were it not for the fact that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat raised a question of very great public importance, and of much greater importance to the individuals concerned. As long ago as at least the month of March, 1926, this house was told that the resources of the western provinces would be turned over to those provinces, which of course would or should at once mean a reduction in the staff of the Department of the Interior. In order that the committee may have a clear understanding of the situation, I have asked to have prepared a memorandum showing the number of permanent and temporary employees at headquarters in this city in March, 1926, and in the same month in each succeeding year, as well as in February, 1931, which is the last year for which we have figures. The statement shows the permanent and temporary employees at headquarters and other than headquarters.

In March, 1926, which was subsequent to the date of the introduction of the Alberta agreement—because the house was told in the speech from the throne that the resources were to be turned over to the western provinces—there were employed in this city 1,194 of a permanent staff at headquarters. The figures for this and the succeeding years of permanent employees at headquarters are:

1926	1,194
1927	1,184
1928	1,215
1929	1,230
1930	1,251

My hon. friend the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) did succeed in one department of the public service. The director took the matter in hand and had a considerable number of transfers made, so that the number actually employed in February this year was 1,177. In other than headquarters, that is, outside the employees here, the figures are:

1926	667
1927	673
1928	700
1929	696
1930	717

This year the number is 670, or 3 more than in March 1926, when we were told that the resources would be turned over. The figures for the temporary employees at headquarters are:

1926	67
1927	122
1928	126
1929	194
1930	212

This year—if there is any credit to be taken for it—the number is reduced to 145. At other than headquarters the temporary employees in March, 1926, numbered 140. These are temporaries, these are political favourites seeking jobs. The figures for 1926 and succeeding years are as follows:

1926	140
1927	153
1928	188
1929	203
1930	235
1931	139

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my hon. friend including the number of casual labourers?

Mr. BENNETT: No, just the temporary employees. If the casual labour was included the number would be much larger. The total number of employees in the Department of the Interior for March, 1926, when we were told the resources would be turned over, and for the following years, is as follows:

1926	2,068
1927	2,132
1928	2,229
1929	2,323
1930	2,415
1931	2,131

It will be observed that the total number of employees in 1931 is 63 more than those employed in 1926. Some allowance must be made for increasing business and everything of that sort, but had the anxiety that is now being manifested about transfers been shown during the last six years, I have no doubt that much of the difficulty now being experienced would have disappeared.

The salary list bears the same relation to the total employees. It is as follows:

1926	$301,330 00
1927	308,947 43
1928	337,301 93
1929	351,135 16
1930	364,759 16
1931	337,093 65

Because of the very important and unhappy duty which has been cast upon this government, the resources having been transferred in October last and a large number of the staff not having been absorbed, the pay roll for this year was almost $36,000 more than it was in March, 1926.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You are speaking of this year?

Mr. BENNETT: February of this year, the last month for which we have all the figures for the outside services. I say this to the hon. gentleman, there is no person charged with responsibility but can feel, shall I say sympathy?—or even more than that, alarm—at the duty which rests upon us. I put this to the committee: can we retain several hundred people without having anything for them to do? That is the first question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I trust my hon. friend is not assuming that I have asked him to do that.

Mr. BENNETT: The second question is: what can we do to secure the transfer of these people to other branches of the public service? In my capacity as Minister of Finance I wrote to every one of my colleagues several weeks ago and stated: The last report which I have before me shows that you have on your pay list a certain number of temporary employees. I should like if you would be good enough to tell me why. In every instance they gave me a written memorandum dealing with the question whether or not it may be possible, looking to the future, to make provision for those who are engaged in, shall I say permanent places in the Department of the Interior. In the ultimate analysis the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) has been able to provide for some members of the staff, but I say to this committee and to everyone affected, a very earnest desire has been evinced and will continue to be evinced to adjust the situation in as easy a manner as it is possible for those who are vitally affected, but we cannot and we dare not keep people in positions if there is nothing for them to do. I believe it is unthinkable that it should be suggested that we adopt that action.

I know the former minister will not object to my mentioning the suggestion which he made the other evening. He said that in some instances it might be possible that parliament extend the period of service for the purpose of increasing the emolument which these civil servants would receive under the Superannuation Act. I am informed that that would involve very serious consideration of the whole actuarial question, but I would inform my hon. friend that his suggestion has not been entirely discarded.

The hon. Minister of the Interior, whose sympathies are known to every person who is familiar with him in private life, has worried—I use that word deliberately—more over this matter than he has over any other matter of public service in his department. This involves the human factor and we do not have to be reminded of the nervous strain of those who are not quite sure of their positions, who are thinking of the morrow, who have obligations to meet and who desire to be in a position to meet them; that is in the minds of all of us.

False statements have been circulated with respect to this matter, and it is in no censorious sense that I draw to the attention of the committee just what pressure, political and otherwise, will do. This committee must realize the task we have had to meet, the difficulties we have had to overcome and the situation which confronts us, and I assure the committee that any suggestions offered will be gratefully received. There is a very earnest and anxious desire on the part of the administration to deal with those who are affected as they would expect to be dealt with by those who for the moment are charged with the responsibility of the administration of this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, there was one expression used by my right hon. friend which I think must have been an inadvertence on his part; either that, or it was made in ignorance of the exact facts. He referred to the temporary employees as being political favourites seeking jobs. My right hon. friend nods his head in assent. May I say to him that any such characterization is most unfair. My recollection is that when the late Liberal administration came into office we found many hundreds, I think I am safe in saying thousands of employees who were classified as temporary. Considerable of the time spent in straightening up civil service matters was consumed in the consideration of the position of these temporary employees, and my recollection is that throughout the time we were in office a very large number of those temporary employees were, to use the technical phrase, blanketed in; that is to say, they were made permanent employees.

Mr. BENNETT: By order in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: By action of the Civil Service Commission. What has actually taken place is that many employees who are styled as temporary have been longer in the public service than many of those who are classified as permanent. My impression is that all such were dealt with quite irrespective of their political complexion. They were blanketed into the permanent service because they had served so many years. I am sure that at the present time there are still a large number of civil servants designated as "temporary employees" who have been serving in their positions not for ten years, but for fifteen or twenty years. I think it is entirely wrong to describe them as being political favourites who are seeking jobs. They are members of the public service of Canada who have been serving the country faithfully and because of a condition which I think might well be described as an injustice they have been carried along year after year as temporary employees when their services have in fact merited their being made permanent employees long ere this.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman is both correct and incorrect. In his observation as to their being long-service employees classified as temporary, he is absolutely correct. A considerable number of civil servants in the Interior department—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And other departments as well—

Mr. BENNETT: —are classified as temporary although, as the right hon. gentleman has said, they have many years of service. Those who have served but six months are in another class altogether, but they are classified also as temporary and they are the ones who for the moment are able to exercise the necessary influence to achieve the desired result.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are casual labourers?

Mr. BENNETT: No. The temporary employees at headquarters numbered sixty-seven in March, 1926. When we took office, the number was 212 and it is now 145. There are two divisions of the temporary employees. I would share to a certain extent the observations made by the right hon. gentleman. I first learned at the treasury board of the matter to which he has directed attention, and I recall one instance of a person who had served for something over thirteen years and was still classified as a temporary employee—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are some who have served twenty years.

Mr. BENNETT: My memory does not carry me beyond the case to which I am referring at the moment. This case is an instance of this class in the temporary list.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will the Prime Minister be good enough to elucidate one point? Are all these men who are being retired on superannuation at the present time being treated in exactly the same manner? Are they being given leave of absence in accordance with the Civil Service Act, or are they simply notified one day in advance that they have to quit?

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I know, they are all treated in the same way except those who did secure leave of absence. I cannot at the moment speak with absolute authority about that. My memory is that there is a class that has been given notice that their positions have been abolished; that is, there is nothing for them to do.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All the land service will be in that class.

Mr. BENNETT: Principally in that branch.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will the Prime Minister allow me to cite one case?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Sir EUGENE FISET: There is a case of the librarian of the Department of the Secretary of State, Mr. Henry Roy, who is over seventy years of age, who has had forty years of service, who, in accordance with the Civil Service Act, is entitled to at least six months' leave of absence and who, I understand, has been dismissed from the service without a single day's leave notwithstanding the fact that the recommendation went from the department to the cabinet that he be given at least six months' leave of absence.

Mr. CAHAN: If my memory serves me aright, no application was made by this librarian for leave of absence until after he had attained the age of seventy years or more, when he was bound to retire. Under the act he had to retire unless I could certify that he had some special qualifications which necessitated a continuance of his employment for another year. I do not wish to discuss the personnel of my department, but I could not give the certificate in that case. The librarian received every advantage that could be given to him under the law.

Mr. BENNETT: As the hon. member for Rimouski has raised the question, might I point out that the section of the Civil Service Act states—and I am not responsible for it any more than the other members of the house are—that civil servants shall be retirable at the age of sixty-five, but at seventy they must retire unless their immediate head certifies that because of their peculiar fitness they should be continued in their positions. I did sign such a certificate the other day, but I put this to the committee: there is a gentleman seventy-three years of age and he had had a certificate for three years. It was signed again just as a matter of form, certifying that because of his peculiar fitness he should be continued in his position. What do hon. members think his position was? He was an elevator attendant. I give that illustration to show the difficulty the government experiences in matters of this kind. We did not raise the question, but when it is raised we must deal with it, and the only way you can escape it is to make a certificate of that character. The Secretary of State recalls the instance to which the hon. member for Rimouski refers. I think the hon. member for Rimouski will realize he would not ask the Secretary of State to make such a certificate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was the man of whom the Prime Minister spoke in his office?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: This is the second resolution: I move:

Resolved that a sum not exceeding $1,887,664.67, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted for Canadian National Steamships and Maritime Freight Rates Act as set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1932, laid before the house at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1932.

Mr. POULIOT: The Prime Minister knows very well that I like him.

Mr. BENNETT: He is not flattered.

Mr. POULIOT: When he uses sarcasm about my humble self, I admit I feel very humble, but when I compare myself with any one of his ministers except the Minister of Justice who sits to his right, I feel reassured. I wish to continue to read this report.

The CHAIRMAN: The resolution does not cover the railways; it simply covers the steamships, so my hon. friend is out of order.

Mr. POULIOT: There is nothing at all about the Canadian National Railways in it?

The CHAIRMAN: Only the Canadian National steamships.

Mr. POULIOT: Everything is so mixed up in the railways that I do not know what to do about the matter.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no motion before the house just now.

Mr. POULIOT: It is the reading of the resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER: The reporting of the resolution is not debatable.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to speak to a question of privilege. When the first resolution was introduced, I asked the Prime Minister whether it had something to do with the Canadian National Railways, and he said that it had not but that he was going to bring in another one that would have something to do with them. The Chairman has just said that the second resolution included nothing in connection with the Canadian National Railways. I do not know whether the Prime Minister made a slip or not, and I would like to be posted on the matter.

Resolutions read the second time, and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1932, the sum of $42,087,112.10 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. POULIOT: Does this include something about the Canadian National Railways?

The CHAIRMAN: No, I am sorry.

Mr. POULIOT: Do not be sorry.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and concurred in. Mr. Bennett thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 25, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1932.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On Section 1—Short title.

Mr. POULIOT: Is this part of the estimates that are included in the blue book of estimates for the fiscal year?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Item 161 reads:

Canadian government railways: to provide additional car ferry and facilities for car ferry service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, $1,059,310.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, to reduce that amount to one dollar, and I will speak on the motion.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on clause 1. My hon. friend can move to amend clause 1, that the title be changed.

Mr. POULIOT: If there is an amendment that is suitable to cover an explanation of the whole thing, I shall gladly accept it. I will accept any suggestion from the chairman in that respect.

Section 1 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, April 16, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

DEBATES TRANSLATION BRANCH

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the recommendation submitted by the Civil Service Commission under section 12 and section 61 of the Civil Service Act for the classification of the position of assistant chief of the debates translation branch and laid on the table of the house on March 23, 1931, be approved.

Those who have been following the proceedings of the chamber will have observed in the journals of March 23 the report submitted by the Civil Service Commission some two years ago. That classification was made, and for the better organization of the staff now working in that branch it is regarded as essential by the Civil Service Commission, by you, Mr. Speaker, and by those in charge of the house that this classification now should be made effective. It involves an increased charge on the revenues of $260 per annum.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Who is the official?

Mr. BENNETT: He will have to be appointed by the commission. This is merely the authorization.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suppose the Prime Minister could not indicate who the appointee is likely to be.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say, Mr. Speaker, that since the advent of the new government we are never able to anticipate the actions of the commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was just about to remark to my right hon. friend that I assumed the appointee would be a Liberal.

Mr. BENNETT: If history and custom are to be followed certainly there will be no chance for a follower of any other party.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 26, respecting the Restigouche Log Driving and Boom Company—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, April 16, 1931.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that Hon. Mr. Justice Newcombe, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on April 16, at 3.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

LEGISLATION IN SASKATCHEWAN

QUESTION AS TO REPEAL OR DISALLOWANCE BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse): Before the orders of the day are called I wish to put a question to the right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) based upon statements made by followers of the government and even by ministers of the crown in relation to recent laws passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan. In those statements these laws have been condemned and the hope has been expressed that they may be repealed. My question, therefore, is this: In view of these statements is it the intention of the government to take steps to have these laws repealed, either by disallowance by the governor in council under section 90 of the British North America Act or through the enactment by this parliament of remedial legislation in accordance with section 93, paragraph 4 of the British North America Act?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intimated some days ago that I was wholly in accord with the hon. gentleman's own chief in his statement made some years ago that questions as to policy or having to do with the intentions of the government should not be put on the orders of the day. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that his representations will be given due weight. I gather that he suggests that the power of disallowance, which has been in abeyance now for half a century, should be used by this administration. I refer him to history, and he will ascertain in that way what is the correct course to be followed in a case such as he has suggested.

ASSISTANCE TO RETURNED SOLDIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I have a case I should like to submit to the government, having to do with a returned soldier who was all through the war; who was in the army of occupation in Germany and who returned home incapacitated but never applied for a pension. Lately, under the new act, he applied for pension and his case was heard, but the decision was unfavourable. The case is now in appeal, but last winter he was so incapacitated that he could not support his family, which consists of four or five children, and he was helped out by friends and relatives. Now he wishes to do a little farming, but he is not in a position financially to secure the necessary seed. Can some arrangement be made to help him out, either by the Department of Pensions and National Health or under the arrangement which has been made to provide seed to needy farmers in the west?

I do not expect an offhand reply to this request, but I would ask that the Minister of Pensions and National Health, or perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister acting in his capacity of Minister of Finance, take the matter into consideration and let me know if anything can be done in such a case. I do not wish to put on record the name of the man; I think it would be humiliating to him, but I will submit the name to the Minister of Pensions and National Health. I can assure him that I am conversant with the whole case and that it is meritorious.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The matter to which the hon. member is referring is one for correspondence rather than a subject which may be properly brought up on the orders of the day.

Mr. VENIOT: All I ask, Mr. Speaker, is whether the matter will be considered.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): If the hon. gentleman will give me the name privately I shall have the matter looked into and give all the information I can.

AIR MAIL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT OF POLICY ON BEHALF OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to ask the Prime Minister a question which I intended to raise yesterday had we reached the orders of the day. In the morning Citizen of April 15—yesterday—there appears a statement by the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauve) concerning which I should like to make an inquiry. The item reads:

A statement from the Prime Minister on the government's policy with respect to the air mails will be made in the House of Commons, probably to-day or Thursday, declared Hon. Arthur Sauvé, Postmaster General, when asked if the reduction in respect of this service in the estimates for the current fiscal year indicated that any or all of them would be discontinued. Mr. Sauvé himself would not say what action was contemplated.

Then appears in quotation a statement which the Postmaster General is alleged to have made:

"It is the function of the Prime Minister, in his capacity of Minister of Finance, to make any statement in connection with this. I have nothing to say," Mr. Sauvé observed.

The question I wish to ask my right hon. friend is, first, whether he has a statement which he will make to the house on the subject referred to; and, secondly, whether the statement of the Postmaster General, as reported, represents the theory of ministerial responsibility as entertained by the Prime Minister in agreement with his colleagues. Is it to be understood that, on matters which are departmental, as well as on matters of general policy, all information will be given to parliament through the Prime Minister and not by the minister in charge of the department concerned? To make my meaning clear, I quite understand that the Prime Minister, as Minister of Finance, would make a statement of general policy with respect to financial or other matters. But when it comes to departmental matters, the custom heretofore has been, and I believe the British custom is, that the responsible minister in charge of a department is the minister of the crown holding the portfolio, and that he should be the one to advise parliament and the country on departmental affairs.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): If the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) will allow me to see the statement he has read, I will answer in proper time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Postmaster General is very kind. Would he tell me what the proper time would be? Can he tell me that offhand without first speaking to the Prime Minister?

Mr. SAUVE: I may inform the leader of the opposition that I will give the information in proper time, on the estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On the estimates? That may be several months from now. This is a pressing matter at the moment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The item which I have just read to the house refers to a statement which it was said by the Postmaster General himself would be made in this house either yesterday or to-day. Is that correct or is it incorrect? Part is in direct quotations.

Mr. SAUVE: That is my answer to-day.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask further to that asked by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in connection with the air mail developments. The other day I put a question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) but I was declared to be out of order. I suppose that ruling was made because my question bordered somewhat too close to a request for a declaration of policy by the government. I have no desire to have that interpretation put upon my question. I was wondering whether or not the Postmaster General has any definite information with regard to these western air mail developments, and if he can give us an approximate idea as to when he will make a statement to the house and to the country.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Speaker, I desire—

Mr. McINTOSH: We ought to have something definite on this matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is that the New Postmaster General standing in his place?

Mr. SPEAKER: No question has been directed to any minister of the crown.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Speaker, my question—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. McINTOSH: —was directed to the Postmaster General and he is a minister of the crown.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member to say that he was wondering in regard to a certain matter; that requires no reply.

Mr. McINTOSH: Another excuse.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether the report in one of the Ottawa newspapers on Tuesday last, that the Imperial conference would be adjourned by reason of the adoption in England of the quota system of purchasing wheat, had any foundation in fact.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): There is no foundation for such a statement as far as the government is aware.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Will the Prime Minister say when we may expect the report of the recent Dominion-provincial conference?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I do not know that any report will have been prepared until such time as the resolution is submitted to the house for approval. I may inform the hon. gentleman that the conference was called for the purpose of considering section 7 of the Statute of Westminster. That section was not prepared in England. It was left to us to prepare, and a meeting of the representatives of the provinces and of the Dominion was called for the purpose of drawing up such clause. That clause has been prepared. The premier of one of the provinces desired, while approving of it, to submit it to his colleagues, and he expected that by the 22nd day of April they would have had an opportunity to express their opinion with respect to it. I will not say immediately, but as soon as the business of the house will permit thereafter, the resolution embodying approval of the statute as drafted will be submitted to the house for its consideration.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then no official proceedings of the conference have been recorded?

Mr. BENNETT: Except in this sense, that a secretary was appointed who kept minutes of the proceedings, the submission of a draft clause, the appointment of a committee, and the arrival of a conclusion. That is all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will that be laid on the table?

Mr. BENNETT: The secretary has not prepared any formal draft of it, because nothing was done except to consider that one clause, and that will be laid before the house.

TRACADIE, N.B., DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) to a series of resolutions which I received to-day in the mail from the board of trade of Tracadie, county of Gloucester, New Brunswick, in relation to dredging going on there. I will not read these resolutions but will pass them on to the minister if he wishes. However, I will read the first paragraph:

Having been informed that the work of dredging carried on by Dredge No. 12 in Tracadie harbour has been ordered discontinued by the Department of Public Works, this board in special meeting assembled do hereby strongly protest—

It goes on with a series of whereases. If the minister will accept this resolution from the board he may let me know later on what the intentions of the department are.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I shall be pleased to receive the communication from the hon. gentleman and have the matter investigated.

PEACE RIVER OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): I wish to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) whether he has received the report of the Peace River-Pacific outlet railway survey. I asked him the same question before the house adjourned for the Easter recess. He informed me at that time that he was in communication with Premier Tolmie of British Columbia and expected to receive an answer from him as to how the survey was progressing. If he has not yet received that report, I should like to know whether it will be tabled when he does get it.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Prior to the hon. gentleman's question I had written to Premier Tolmie and I am informed that the report is before that government. It is rather voluminous and they have not had time properly to go into it. It has not yet been tabled in the provincial house and therefore I am not in a position at the present time to table a copy of it. When I am able to do so I shall lay it on the table of the house.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Will it be presented?

Mr. MANION: When I get it. I have not yet received it.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): In his capacity as Minister of Finance, will the Prime Minister inform me whether we can get any details, if it has started to function, with respect to the financial corporation formed last winter?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The financial corporation to which I fancy the hon. gentleman refers is a credit corporation created by private enterprise and not through governmental action. The last advice I had, which was verbal, was that they had succeeded in securing subscriptions amounting to some $3,000,000 and that the corporation would function at a not distant date.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It has not functioned yet?

Mr. BENNETT: Not so far as I am aware.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): In view of the fact that it was mentioned in his speech at Regina, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is in communication with the financial corporation at all times?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer would be in the negative.

TELEPHONE DIRECTORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) if the members will be supplied shortly with new telephone directories for the House of Commons.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public works): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the hon. gentleman's request into consideration and hope to be able to meet his wishes in this respect.

DAMAGES BY FRENCH TRAWLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) to despatches which appeared in the Halifax papers to the effect that French steam trawlers operating off the coast of Nova Scotia were doing serious and wilful damage to trawls and other equipment of the Lunenburg fishing vessels. I took the trouble to telegraph to find out whether or not these reports were accurate and I have been informed that such damage is being done and apparently wilfully. I realize that this is an international matter, but I would ask the hon. minister whether any action is contemplated.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware no communication has been received either by myself or by my department from Captain Parks. I observed the reference to this matter in the press, and in addition to that I received a telegram from Mr. Mosher of North Sydney directing my attention to the situation. Communications have been sent both to Mr. Mosher and to Captain Parks asking for full details as to the vessel's names, the names of the trawlers, and if possible the location and extent of the damage. As soon as this information is at hand the necessary representations will be made through the proper channels.

Mr. DUFF: As a shareholder in the vessel in question I am very pleased to hear that answer.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D. Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. L. E. PARENT (Terrebonne) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, In resuming my remarks on the address, interrupted by the adjournment of Tuesday evening, I draw your attention once more to what the speech from the throne says concerning cooperation and unity in Canada. I repeat the quotation:

> In prosperity they were united. In adversity that union is made still stronger by the spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding which is the surest bulwark of the nation's welfare and happiness.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who is the author of the speech from the throne and who put these fine phrases into the mouth of His Excellency has not, in the past, practised what he preaches. Did the right hon. Prime Minister and his Conservative followers preach union, cooperation and mutual understanding for the safeguarding of Canada's welfare and happiness during the last campaign? They did not. Wherever they addressed public meetings, before election day, our opponents went to unbelievable lengths of crowd-baiting in their determination to uproot the people's trust in those who had governed the country for the past ten years. They showed the situation in a false light, they appealed to prejudice, they stirred up the most baneful leanings of the populace; they went so far as to twist public opinion in a very harmful way. Were they striving thus to ensure the happiness of Canada's citizens?

I state it as my sincere belief that this spirit of harmony and confidence was the result of ten years of good government under the prosperous Liberal regime.

The speech from the throne goes on:

> These attributes of Canadianism are national assets of real value, and, upon their possession I do profoundly congratulate you.

This paragraph of the speech from the throne makes His Excellency pay a well-deserved tribute to the Liberal party who endowed our people with these national assets of Canadianism.

Mr. Speaker, these "attributes of Canadianism" are in large part due to the policy of peace and harmony of the Liberal administration, unfailing in their consideration and respect towards minority groups in matters of language, of education and of creed.

Canadianism is a word pregnant with meaning, like patriotism, like "Canada First"; but it is upheld by acts, by deeds; it is not an empty cry and, mayhap, a deceitful one.

Mr. Speaker, Canadianism is to be found only among those who understand and truly observe the prerogatives handed down to us under the British flag which every Canadian subject is proud to wave beside our own national emblem.

Where is the Canadianism of our Conservative friends? Let us take as a sample these biting words, born of hate and anger, uttered by the right hon. Prime Minister on June 10th, at Calgary, and reported in the Leader Post. Speaking of the Liberals, he had this to say:

> They make a plaything of people's lives, why? Do they realize that they are playing with lives, with food for women and children, with hunger? Nine years of wasted effort before the great betrayal. Judas took less time.

Mr. Speaker, is that preaching union, cooperation and mutual understanding to the country?

Or, take what he said of the Liberal party at the outset of the election campaign:

> This group of mercenaries who hang on to power through sham and subterfuge, look upon them as traitors to your cause.

When a political leader uses such language, which is beneath his dignity, is he upholding the spirit of cooperation and mutual among the citizens of his country? Is this sort of low spell-binding the proper method for safeguarding the welfare and the happiness of a nation, does it enhance respect for authority? To excuse the author we would fain believe that he had lost control of himself when he used those regrettable words.

[Mr. Parent.]

Why all this anger, all this hatred, merely to win votes in an election? At any rate, these unfortunate words may very well unleach the passions of the masses and destroy all respect for authority; and the day when the people will have lost all respect for constituted authority, the gates will be thrown wide open to communism and to bolshevism. Such language has never before, to my knowledge, fallen from the lips of a political leader who wished to be respected; apologies are in order. I ask the presumed author of these words, the right hon. Prime Minister, to specify what members of the Liberal party deserve the opprobrious epithet of Judas. Mr. Speaker, there is no Judas in the Liberal party.

I deplore this excess of language, I consider it an insult to a great many Canadian citizens; and I repeat that the insult should be withdrawn. I trust the author will withdraw the epithet "Judas". I suggest to the right hon. Prime Minister that he seek out the Judases in our political life and that he obtain the cooperation of his colleague from Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) who has some knowledge in the matter.

One after another the Conservative candidates and the right hon. Prime Minister proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of Canada, during the last campaign, that the Liberals had ruined the country through their carelessness; that the Liberals were to blame for the economic depression, for the unemployment crisis; that our industries were going to the wall, that trade was stagnant; that foreign markets must be found for our farm produce, that an outlet for our western wheat was imperative, and they added: "Elect us to office and we will soon set matters straight, or perish in the attempt." That is what they said before the election, Mr. Speaker, to win the people's votes. But all these statements were contradicted by the hon. ministers of the crown themselves, once the elections were over. As proof of this I intend quoting to the house a paper published not in Canada but in Japan. They went quite a distance from Canada to tell the truth after the election.

I have now to revert to the English language.

I have in my hand the front page of a journal published in Japan under the title of the Japan Times and Mail. This is what it has to say under date of Monday, October 27, 1930:

> Canada's Export Trade Stands on a Firm Foundation.
> Each year it grows in the volume and in importance to every community in the Dominion.

Export business provides millions of Canadians with their livelihood. Nearly a third of Canada's annual production is shipped to other lands.

Each year the volume grows. From $740,000,000 in 1922, it has grown to $1,363,700,000 in 1929. For the first ten months of 1929 the export of manufactured and partly manufactured goods has increased by $46,500,000, while the export of raw material has decreased by $70,700,000.

In foreign lands the demand for our goods and products is at a premium.

I shall not quote further from this journal, because to do so would use up all my time, but it would be very interesting if the article could be published in the newspapers of the Dominion so that every Canadian could take cognizance of it.

(Translation) Mr. Speaker, this happened a few days after the election. And I beg you to note that this advertisement was published by the department of Trade and Commerce under the signature of the present hon. minister in the Bennett cabinet (Mr. Stevens), and that of his deputy; so that the statement is authentic, and it flatly contradicts what all the Conservatives and all the members of the government were saying all through the country during the campaign, in their efforts to mislead the people. After the election our Conservative friends discover that Canada's foreign trade is prosperous.

If this Japanese paper had been shown to the voters in different ridings, in Quebec province and elsewhere, in East Kootenay, for instance, or Chambly-Verchères, Two Mountains, Montmagny or other constituencies, would the hon. members of the government occupy a seat in this house, I wonder. But there is more to come. I am going to quote another hon. minister; not what he said on the floor of the house; so far most of the ministers have abstained from addressing parliament; one is lead to imagine that silence is enjoined upon the hon. ministers in the House of Commons. Listen to what the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) had to say in clubs and at banquets. In November 1930, speaking at a banquet given by the Sauvé club in the Mount Royal Hotel, the hon. minister, after telling of Canada's wealth, went on to say:

Canada leads the world in agricultural products. It is second in importance among the manufacturing countries of the empire; first in the export of wheat, newsprint, nickel, asbestos; first in national wealth per capita.

There you have the truth, Mr. Speaker but it flatly contradicts the assertions of his leader and of all the Conservative candidates in the course of last summer's campaign. If the hon. Minister of Marine had been as accurate with the voters of Chambly-Verchères, would he be an "honourable" to-day?

Coming back to the speech from the throne, I quote further:

The fact that in this period of universal distress Canada has been spared the same acute degree of hardship which many other nations have been called upon to bear, will not, I know, blind you to the fact that between this country as it is and as it should be, there is a gulf to be bridged by the industry and zeal of all those who have the welfare of the nation in their keeping.

The situation has changed, says His Excellency in the speech from the throne. Indeed there have been changes, Mr. Speaker, since our Conservative friends came into power! Let us glance at a few eloquent figures which go to prove this. I am speaking now of the adverse change in the export of our domestic products. In January 1930, under a Liberal government, our exports were valued at $73,000,000; in January 1931, under the Conservatives, this had fallen to $44,000,000: a reduction of 30 per cent. In February 1930, under the Liberals, $66,000,000; in February 1931 under the Conservatives, $43,000,000: 30 per cent less. We are told that the national treasury faces a deficit of $100,000,000; quite a change from the surpluses built up by the Liberal administration. The government have to borrow to make up the deficit: the Liberals were constantly reducing our national indebtedness. We may expect an increase in taxes; tax reduction was the order when the Liberals were in office. There has been a pronounced weakening in the prices the farmer receives for his produce, just the opposite of what the Conservatives promised and foretold when they were out looking for votes. Canadian products, our agricultural products in particular, have lost nearly all their foreign markets, thanks to our exorbitant tariff increases. Canada is no longer a ranking nation in the matter of export trade.

In a word the change has been much for the worse; the situation fosters foreboding and causes much more uneasiness than did the crisis at election time.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne asks us to set ourselves zealously to the task of filling this void; it says that certain factors of a domestic character were responsible for our present economic ills. I ask the honourable members on the other side to point out to us, if they can, what domestic factors contributed to this trade depression. They will try to make us believe that the Liberal administration is to blame for the sorry state of affairs brought about by the loss of our foreign markets. My reply is that it was the Liberals who opened up these markets for our Canadian products and that the markets have been lost since the Conservative party came into power. And I quote, as proof, the statement of a man whose authority and knowledge in the matter is unquestioned. The general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, speaking before the general meeting of the shareholders, in Montreal, on January 28th, 1931, said what follows:

> In ten years the proportion of Canadian products sold in foreign markets had increased from 25 to 30 per cent.

This was under the Liberal regime, since 1921. The gentlemen opposite must agree that times are changed indeed! In its monthly letter, published recently, the Bank of Montreal points out Canada's foreign trade has decreased by 36 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, we should look for the cause of all our ills in the action of the present government: they boosted the customs tariff to such a height that other countries refused to go on buying Canadian products, since we no longer bought theirs. We are isolating ourselves, that is what it amounts to; and Canada is producing a surplus of manufactured and agricultural products which we cannot sell abroad, to such an extent has our foreign trade fallen off. Prices are tumbling, factories are laying off their hands, unemployment is on the increase. There you have the fruits of a high protective policy.

The members to your right, Mr. Speaker, realizing the disastrous results of their short-sighted policy, and the terrible pass to which they have brought the country, are seemingly bent on appealing to clairvoyants.

I quote for you what was said by the honourable Minister of Marine, at that same banquet tendered by the "Club Sauvé", in Montreal, on the 27th of last November, as reported in La Presse. He had just spoken of the hardships people were undergoing in a rich country like Canada; he continued thus:

> We needed a clairvoyant mind, a man of action who would know how to give form and expression to the people's thought.

And he mentioned Mr. Bennett's name.

ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate,

And having returned,

[Mr. Parent.]

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bill:

> An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1932.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D. Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. PARENT (Translation): I ask the hon. Minister of Marine to tell us when he speaks on the floor of the house—and we are anxious to hear him—just what the present government has done for Canada since it came into power. I suppose his reply will be: protection. I maintain that the protective policy shackles foreign trade, that it has prevented the sale of our manufactured products to the detriment of the consuming public, the farmers, especially, who have to pay high prices for everything they buy, while their own products must be sold on a steadily weakening market; the farmers' candle is being burned at both ends.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that agriculture, as the basic industry of this country, should receive first consideration at the hands of our government, before any other group.

I believe that if the hon. Minister of Marine's "clairvoyant" had foretold the present condition of the farming class in Chambly-Verchères, Two Mountains, and other Quebec constituencies, we would have fewer Conservative representatives in this house to-day.

If the hon. Minister of Marine answers: "Unemployment relief," I will quote him the words spoken by the right hon. Prime Minister at Victoria on the 16th of June last ("Colonist"):

> Is there any excuse for hard times in this country, if the government does its duty?

and at Sarnia on July 16th ("Mail and Empire"):

> Someone is responsible for unemployment; not individuals but the government. Because of their majorities in parliament governments must answer for every bit of legislation passed.

I grant you that the government passed a law for the relief of unemployment. But what does it amount to? I state here and now that the government did not keep their promise to end unemployment; they did not assume the share of liability they pledged themselves to assume under the unemployment relief act. They threw all the burden on the municipalities; most of the latter were unable to negotiate loans and to contribute an equivalent amount to that put up by the federal and provincial treasuries. That is not what was promised on the campaign platform.

An hon. MEMBER: You were free to take it or leave it.

Mr. PARENT: But that is not all. What was the net result of the unemployment relief act? According to statistics, 18 days of work were furnished to 228,351 men, or an average of merely $50 or $60 to live on for six months. Is that what you promised the voters of this country?

An hon. MEMBER: It is better than nothing.

Mr .PARENT: These facts speak for themselves; they are real: statistics do not lie. Mr. Speaker, my time will soon be up; I have only a few minutes left. I wish to speak of the statement made by another member of the government, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who invokes the authority of economists:

> The chief cause of the present trade depression is not overproduction, but faulty methods fo distribution.

He adds:

> Certain countries, among others China, India, Mexico and certain parts of Latin America are in need of goods which other countries possess in abundance. The main difficulty is to reach these markets. The problem of straightening this state of affairs should receive the attention of economists.

This is the same hon. minister Mr. Speaker, who had a full-page advertisement published in a Japanese newspaper, under his own signature; in that advertisement, which I mentioned a while ago, it is said that the markets of the world are open to Canada for the export of her surplus product. During the campaign the Conservatives, were very generous with their promises. They made any number of nasty insinuations against the Liberal party; but they have never been able to charge the Liberal administration with dishonesty. They sought in vain: they could find no pretext for any such accusation. The Conservatives showed things and events in a false light. They made all sorts of statements which they contradicted themselves, once the elections were safely behind and they were in the seats of the mighty. But the Canadian people have had their eyes opened; they see now the difference between the two administrations; between the Liberal regime from 1921 to 1930 and the disastrous consequences of only six months of Conservative rule. This government has lost the confidence of the Canadian electorate.

Mr. Speaker, with a full sense of the duties and responsibilities I have assumed I am willing to cooperate with the government and with the hon. members to your right on all measures of public interest submitted to the house because as a Canadian I have the hopeful ambition of doing my share to hasten the return of our former prosperity and to help our country reach the high destiny which we all trust is hers.

Mr. EMILE FORTIN (Lévis): (Translation) Mr. Speaker, from my seat in this house, I wish to pay a tribute to my constituents in Lévis I wish to tell them how I appreciate the honour they conferred upon me when electing me as their representative, and that they can rely on my unremitted devotion at all times.

In rising to speak for the first time in this house, I do so with a deep feeling, as I happen to be the first Conservative member returned by the constituency of Lévis since 1882. This feeling is easily accountable for when I recollect that I have been called upon to succeed the Hon. Dr. Blanchet, grandfather of the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré), who is the minister from my district. As I am thus evoking the memory of my illustrious predecessor who so fittingly occupied the chair you now adorn, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed my pleasure to offer to you my congratulations for your election to that office.

I desire to extend my felicitations to my fellow countrymen who, in delivering their speeches in their mother tongue have set the example, and had I a reproach to express, it would be addressed to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and even to the hon. deputy speaker of this house (Mr. LaVergne), who could at least have delivered part of their speeches in French. However, upon further thought, I felt that the hon. deputy speaker had used the English language in order that his remarks might be understood and to defend us more efficiently. I take this opportunity to express the hope that our esteemed deputy speaker shall speedily recover from his illness. I wish to inform him that his valuable help shall still be required in our national contests. Norris was the idol of the Liberals, even of the French Canadian Liberals, but ourselves, we shall stand up against Anderson. And it is my sincere wish that the hon. prime minister of Saskatchewan may remember that we have at Rideau Hall a lady of the manor of French origin.

I was rather shocked, if I may use the term, when I was asked by several members, Liberal and Conservative, from Ontario and other provinces, where the constituency of Levis was located and other information concerning same. For a few moments, let me take you on a journey through my constituency. The county of Levis is separated from Quebec by the St. Lawrence river. It has two means of communication; first, the Quebec bridge, and in second place, the ferry service. When reaching Levis from the ferry boats the first building to be seen, and that is rather significant, is the Canada National Railway station; we also see the up-to-date customs house, and on our left, the yards from which coal is being shipped to all parts of the province of Quebec. A few steps farther, one may board a street car of the Levis Tramways Company and proceed to Lauzon where are located the famous Lorne and Champlain dry docks. You may know or may not know that the Lorne and Champlain dry docks are the most up-to-date in the world; at this same place may be seen also the shipyards where skilled workmen are now engaged in building, for the Canadian National Railways, a car ferry of some 500 feet in length. It was on behalf of these workers, that, at the first caucus held during the special session, I called the attention of the Prime Minister and of the Minister from my district (Mr. Dupré) to the opportunity of exacting a duty of 25 per cent on all foreign naval construction. Quite recently, I noticed in a newspaper that a manufacturer, more experienced than myself, had suggested that we should follow the example of the United States and apply a duty of 50 per cent. At the caucus above mentioned I was promised—and the Conservatives, as a rule, keep their promises—that action would be taken accordingly, and the matter was discussed at the interprovincial conference held recently.

Let us leave the Lorne and Champlain dry docks and proceed to the military camp at Lauzon, where the various regiments of the Quebec district hold their annual drills. This camp has been in existence for a great many years and it is surrounded with old forts that are now classified as historical sites, but which ought to be kept in a better condition by the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) for I would be ashamed to ask tourists to pay a visit to these forts.

Thence, we proceed to the armouries which are the general headquarters of the Quebec and Levis regiments. We then go to the Quarantine where is disembarked the grade live stock imported from foreign countries. A little further on, one may see the Breakeyville mills and those of the Gravel Lumber Company, and some distance away the large Canadian National Railways workshops, of great size, forsooth, but unfortunately idle. If the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) was at his seat—

Some hon. MEMBERS: He is here.

Mr. FORTIN: —I would pause to call his attention to the fact that exceptionally large sums of money are being expended by the Canadian National Railways outside of the constituency of Levis, and this because of the presence in our district of unqualified men who instead of having the necessary repairs made at Charny take the cars and locomotives to Montreal, Joliette and other places. I hope that the Minister of Railways will take up the matter and see to it that we get fair treatment in that respect.

We now have practically reached the limits of my constituency and come to the famous lighthouse of the Department of Marine at St. Nicholas. This is the point from which, after our journey through the county, we retrace our steps via the well known Quebec bridge. It is to be hoped that the mention of the famous Quebec bridge shall bring to mind the constituency of Levis and that I shall no longer meet people saying to me: Where is the county of Levis? What about that constituency of Levis?

The county of Lévis has also given the country quite a number of men of great distinction. Many of them went through the College of Lévis, from which both the hon. Solicitor General and my hon. friend, the member for L'Islet (M. Fafard), graduated. Among such famous men may be also included Sir Lomer Gouin who was prime minister of his province, Minister of Justice in the Dominion government and lieutenant-governor of the province of Quebec. One may also mention Sir François Lemieux, chief justice of the superior court of the province of Quebec, and the Hon. Adélard Turgeon who for so many years was president of the Legislative council. There are also justices Belleau, Bernier and Gelly, and we also can boast of having the first Canadian cardinal, cardinal Bégin, who was born in a small parish of my constituency. And lastly, I could not overlook our national bard, Louis Fréchette.

Speaking of my Alma Mater, I wish to bring out the fact the college of Lévis has made for itself quite a reputation in the intercollegiate contests held for some years back. Twelve students from our Alma Mater were awarded the Prince of Wales prize.

The unfortunate thing about the constituency of Lévis is its close proximity to Quebec, as well as its being included within the boundaries of Quebec harbour. When it comes to secure a construction or improvement of some kind, complications arise. Only recently, having come to the conclusion that a deep water wharf would be of great advantage, the electors for Lévis petitioned me to that end. Before applying to the place where I expected a favourable reply, I had to visit several offices. I was first asked to see the department of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) who, after a delay of three or four weeks, told me that he could not deal with the matter owing to the fact that Lévis is within the boundaries of Quebec harbour and that the Minister of Public Works has no authority to undertake any work there. A few days later, I went to the Department of Marine and there I was told by the hon. Minister (Mr. Duranleau): "Go and see the harbour commissioners and have the matter settled by the chairman and manager of that board." In other words his advice to me was that I should go and solicit from the president and manager of that board a favour which they mean to keep to themselves. I may state, Mr. Speaker, that for the last twenty-five years we have asked for deep water piers at Lévis and the matter is of the utmost importance, it being the key to the successful development of our industrial and commercial establishments.

Recently I had a conversation with the Hon. Senator Lemieux who said: "Lévis is a splendid county, Lévis is a beautiful city, but when one comes to the lower part of the town, the sight of its dilapidated wharves is disgraceful." In reply, I said to him: "I took steps in order to have this state of affairs remedied." I may be too pessimistic in my forebodings, though I have not seen anything in the estimates; otherwise I might lose the sympathy of the minister representing my district; however, I have not lost hope of succeeding for, as the hon. member for Dorchester was telling me the other day: "The supplementary estimates are yet to come."

The deep water wharves in question would only cost a trifle as compared to the $20,000,000 that have been spent in the harbour of Quebec. This work being requested not only by Lévis but by the south shore, by the constituencies of Bellechasse, Dorchester, Lotbinière and Beauce, it seems to me that the government ought to grant my request.

My predecessors, Mr. Speaker, have not neglected their duty. I am aware that they applied to the government for the very thing I am asking for this day, but always without success. If, as a member for Lévis, I must make requests and never secure anything, I say frankly that it is not my intention to act as a footstool to those who have political ambitions.

I now wish to refer briefly to the length of the speeches heard in this house. I find out, for the greater part, they are too long. I shall begin with the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) who, yesterday, after he had listened to the communistic utterances, to the revolutionary speeches delivered here, rose to his feet to say that the cause of the whole trouble lies in the fact that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) called the session too late.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. FORTIN: Yes, it is a fact, but if the opposition was not obstructing as it does since four weeks.

An hon. MEMBER: It is their duty.

Mr. FORTIN: We now have entered the fourth week of the session and we have practically done nothing! It seems to me that the hon. gentlemen on the other side may be blamed for this just as much as the government.

What has the right hon. leader of the opposition done? He delivered a splendid speech, most interesting, but which in fact was a lecture on the imperial conference and on the speech of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett during the last election, and he spoke along these lines for at least two hours or two hours and a quarter. The right hon leader of the opposition devoted at least three quarters of an hour to an essay on the word "humbug". He said he had collected all existing dictionaries in the British empire in order to find a definition of the word "humbug". Do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a waste of time?

I now turn to the hon. member for Quebec-East (Mr. Lapointe) whom I am always prone to call Minister of Justice because, indeed, a man of Mr. Lapointe's worth, cannot be belittled. What did the hon. member for Quebec-East say? He said; "There are our prophets". Well, yes, I hope we are prophets, and when we shall have restored to Canada its prosperity of former days, it will be our turn to say to the opposition: "What nice prophets you are"!

The Hon. Mr. Lapointe's mind is beset with the imperial conference and for at least a year he has given thought to nothing else. He had fancied that no one else in Canada, apart from the right hon. leader of the opposition and himself, could attend the imperial conference. Mr. Speaker, the people have given their reply and it seems to me that Mr. Lapointe should make the best of it. If his trouble is due to indigestion, he should take a laxative in order to relieve himself from his conference. The hon. member for Quebec-East wasted the valuable time of the House with an eulogy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The life story of Sir Wilfrid Laurier is known to all of us, and we all know that he was a great man, statesman of exceptional merit. But if we, on this side of the house, should start to proclaim in long speeches the virtues of all our famous public men, I dare say the session would last the twelve months of the year. As to the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) I should make no reference to him; however, since we are bound to speak even of those who are the vaudeville performers in the house, it occurs to me that he should be less prodigal of what little time we have to devote to the discussion of public affairs, instead of spending forty minutes in telling us about the station at Rivière-du-Loup. During the nine years of Liberal administration he surely had plenty of time to secure the building of that station.

I shall refer briefly to the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Fournier) who exceeded all others when he said: "Instead of being beneficial to my constituency, the $20,000,000 have done it harm."

Mr. Speaker, let an unemployed come to you and give him $100; two days later he comes back to tell you that you have done him harm. Speeches of that type are hurtful rather than helpful. You have heard the speeches, or the lectures, of the hon. members for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) and for Portneuf (Mr. Desrochers), and even the utterances —I was not in my seat at the time, but I was told about them,—of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Verville). It is said his remarks were quite interesting and that he endeavoured to help his party. I quote these instances, Mr. Speaker, and I do so designedly because I wonder if an agreement could not be entered into, a rule laid down whereby the length of the sessions would be limited to three months instead of venturing on a session without knowing how long it may last. I would be pleased to have an answer to that suggestion from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), or from some legal gentleman, in order to ascertain if what has been done in respect to the length of speeches could not also be done concerning the session.

I am somewhat reassured when I find that the right hon. leader of the opposition seems in sympathy with the idea for, in the last part of his remarks, he was saying to the Prime Minister: "We trust you; we know that you are sincere; we know that all your intentions are good; but your policies are unsound."

The policy of the right hon. Prime Minister has been accepted and endorsed by the people and I hope that the right hon. leader of the opposition shall adhere to it until further order.

Mr. FOURNIER: Would the hon. member allow me a question? Did you read the following sentence in my speech—

The DEPUTY SPEAKER: The question must be a direct one.

Mr. FOURNIER: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, and with the consent of the hon. member, I wish to point out that in my speech, as reported in Hansard of the 24th March, page 263, I said the following:

> It is said that the unemployment situation has improved, thanks to the grant of $20,000,000. I think so. Everybody will admit that it helped.

The hon. member should withdraw that part of his speech in which he states that I said that the grant caused harm.

Mr. FORTIN: The hon. member for Hull has only read one line of Hansard and I am not prepared to withdraw my words because I heard his speech.

Mr. FOURNIER: I request from the hon. member the withdrawal of that part of his remarks.

Mr. FORTIN: And I know that he inferred—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw, withdraw!

Mr. FORTIN: And I trust, as I was saying a minute ago, that the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw. Order!

The DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member for Hull having made a statement to the effect that the hon. member for Levis had misunderstood him, the hon. member for Levis cannot put a different construction on his words. He is bound to accept the statement of the hon. member for Hull.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw, withdraw!

Mr. FORTIN: In that case, I accept the explanation of the hon. member.

Mr. DORION: Hear, hear!

Mr. FORTIN: I was saying that the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King was quite in sympathy with the government and that he was endeavouring to safeguard the interests of all. I expect that the people will soon give him further proof that the Liberal party is failing fast. I mean when the elections take place in Quebec and the Hon. Taschereau is defeated and has to make way for Mr. Camillien Houde.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Never.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Count on that as you did on your wharf; it will turn out the same way.

Mr. FORTIN: In order to set a good example, and without taking too much of the time of the house, I wish to pay my respects and offer my thanks to the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) for her kind and flattering words concerning the French-Canadian. Our hon. friend stated that she admired the facility with which the French-Canadian took up English, while at the same time, I surmise, retaining their own language. I shall suggest to my hon. friend that she should set an example to her English speaking colleagues, by becoming specially proficient in the use of the French tongue, to the point of delivering a speech in French by next session.

Mr. E. C. ST-PERE (Hochelaga): (Translation) Mr. Speaker, the member for Hochelaga is glad of this opportunity to join his voice to the chorus of congratulations which have greeted your elevation to the honourable, and honoured position of Speaker of the House of Commons.

If I choose to pay my respects to you in my mother tongue, despite my ready knowledge of both languages, this choice of mine was induced by my noticing not only that you gave proof of broadmindedness and intelligence in taking up the study of French, but also that the interested attention with which you follow every speech delivered in French shows that you appreciate more and more the beauties of our tongue.

You have given to the entire country a magnificent lesson in bonne entente. You have, moreover, made it clear that the language that is dear to you will work side by side with our own mother tongue, in Canada as in the League of Nations, for peace, harmony and fraternity among the different racial groups who go to make up this Canadian nation.

I followed with very great interest also the speech of the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier). His exposition of Conservative policy was more than a profession of faith in a political doctrine: he showed the whole country that Memramcook College, an institution which numbers him among her most brilliant graduates, endows her students, as do all our French colleges in Canada, with a bilingual education. His presence here in this house is proof, moreover, of the survival of the French group who, since the great disturbance, have never ceased, from the plains of Acadia to the most remote bayous of Louisiana, to grow in numbers and in influence.

The seconder of the address also belongs to the new generation of public men who refuse to believe that parliamentary custom is something which cannot be changed. The designated mover of the address made way for the honourable member for Restigouche. This gesture, truly Canadian, is a sign of the times. There is no question of racial superiority in Canada; and I would be happy to know that in the future this rotation will be an established thing in the House of Commons.

The debate has been mild, Mr. Speaker, particularly amongst us French-Canadians from Quebec, representing the two political groups of the province. If an epithet has been dropped here and there, from one side or the other, if there has been a little teasing, it has all been couched in that genuine politeness which drew from one English governor the opinion that we were "a race of gentlemen".

There must be a debate, Mr. Speaker. Was it not the fabulist Lafontaine who wrote: "Discussion is a valuable help; without it we would sleep through life"?

Before entering into a discussion of the respective merits, or demerits, of the speech from the throne, let us glance at the conservative platform whence came all the speeches of the last election campaign.

At the last session of 1930 the two main features of the Conservative program were discussed on the floor of this house, our opponents refused to recognize that unemployment was an international problem and they claimed that the butter problem—God knows the province of Quebec was covered with butter during the last campaign—was due to the carelessness of the William Lyon Mackenzie King administration. I must frankly admit that our Conservative friends were well prepared. It is always a clever move to flood the country with propaganda, not quite truthful; be that as it may I think our opponents were well prepared and, thanks to circumstances, they, who for years had been striving to get into office, reached their goal.

The right hon. Prime Minister did me the honour of opening his campaign in a Montreal district, next to my riding. I listened attentively to his speech, over the radio, in my humble home. He appealed to the unemployed; he surely intended to kill two birds with one stone, speaking in Maisonneuve county, adjacent to Hochelaga; but the workers in these two electoral districts gave a negative answer to the Conservative party, and your humble servant and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Robitaille) won the support of the voters once more, to the cause of the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, to the cause of the Liberal party which, of all the political parties, has most often bent down to humble folk and lent them a helping hand.

The mentor of that evening was the hon. member for Maisonneuve in the provincial legislature. He asked several questions of the Conservative chieftain. He asked him, particularly, if he pledged himself to build in Canada the ships Canada needed. The Hon. Mr. Bennett replied that he saw no objection to that. But I am still wondering where those ships are, since most of the former employees of the Vickers shipyard are still without work.

Everything imaginable was promised the employees of our large textile mills; they were told that thanks to protection their wages would go up, that the waters of the Pactolus would replace those of the St. Lawrence which flow behind the mills of St. Anne and Hochelaga. I must admit that, lured by all these promises, a few of my friends deserted me for a moment, but they are looking forward to an exemplary revenge at the next federal election.

Protection was offered as a cure for all our ills. It was the hon. member from Compton (Mr. Gobeil), I believe, who recently made the statement that the province of Quebec was, in fact, protectionist.

Mr. DORION: That is true.

Mr. ST-PERE: The hon. member for Montmorency exclaims "That is true." I have no reason to change my opinion, Mr. Speaker. In a number of speeches on the floor of this house I have said that the difference between the two parties on the tariff question—I made the same statement during my last campaign—was that the Conservative party was the party of high protection while the Liberal party sought after the happy medium of moderate protection. Here are the answers the Liberals made to the arguments of our Conservative opponents: That the William Lyon Mackenzie King administration had reduced our national debt; that since 1922 the Liberal government had accumulated surplus after surplus; that the reports of our banks, etc., showed that Canada enjoyed a high degree of prosperity, and that our position in international trade was the envy of the world.

But the King government, in spite of all it had done for Canada, was defeated. Mr. Speaker, the masses are moved because their feelings are easily stirred; hence it is not difficult to swing their allegiance. The hero carried in triumph to the capital is dashed to death from the Tarpeian Rock, with the same enthusiasm. The Conservative party organizers—it is useless to blame them: that is their business—knew well how to put into practice the advice contained in their lines of Charles de la Vigne:

> Employez ces grands mots, ces phrases, ces formules,
> Dont la solennité trompe les moins crédules.

Mr. DORION: The Liberals know something about that; they made use of those words for such a long time.

Mr. ST-PERE: The hon. member for Montmorency will surely have occasion to discuss these matters again in the budget debate. If he will please remain in his seat for a few minutes I will acquaint him with certain statistics that he will find edifying.

An hon. MEMBER: The Dominion Textile.

Mr. ST-PERE: A few days after the victory the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett proceeded to appoint his army generals. But there was one missing, the general who was to lead the army of workers. During the struggle the Liberal party had retained the support of the workers in our big cities. Not a single workers' candidate was elected under the Conservative banner. But our opponents are never at a loss, apparently. The commander-in-chief sought among those who had been retired; and the hon. Minister of Labour of the Great War period, the Hon. Gideon Robertson, took up the task once more. A senator, who is not responsible to the people! The workingmen of Canada deserve better treatment than that at the hands of a government which claim it is truly democratic. I will remember how much our opponents protested in the province of Quebec because the Hon. Mr. Perron accepted a portfolio while he was a member of the upper provincial house. He yielded to the popular demand and, nothing daunted, marched into Montcalm and carried away the mandate for that county. Let our friends opposite show themselves as consistent as did the Liberal party in Mr. Perron's case in Quebec province; then our workers will be represented in this house by something better than a light under a bushel.

Mr. LAVERGNE: In 1919 you were going to reform the Senate.

Mr. ST-PERE: Many reforms put forward are never accomplished.

Right after the election, the government lost no time in calling a meeting of the national employment council. In my capacity as the representative of a large labouring constituency I was at the meeting. On the recommendation of the council, the government accepted the methods of assistance that Mr. Hoover and his advisory committees had already decided upon for the unemployed in the United States. In their accepting their recommendations the present government who, throughout the campaign, had maintained that the unemployment problem was not international, recognized that the problem was, in fact, international.

There was nothing extraordinary about the short session. Called under the pretence of relieving unemployment it was nothing but a camouflage, its real object being to satisfy the imperious demands of those who had backed the Conservative party during the campaign. The tariff must be increased, whatever the cost; the ransom must be paid. God knows if the country has found out the cost of having listened to the pleadings of certain capitalists who, to-day, form the backbone of the Conservative party.

Far be it from me to deny the usefulness of the $20,000,000 voted for unemployment relief; but between that and making the people believe that an end was to be put to unemployment, there is quite a gap.

The Imperial conference. Being myself a newspaper man, I leave to our lawyer friends the analysis of constitutional law. I confine myself to the one remark that in leaving our shores the Right Hon. Prime Minister was bound for certain failure. The "non possumus" of the Right Hon. Mr. MacDonald told the Hon. Mr. Bennett and all his friends that Great Britain has no intention of changing her fiscal policy, the policy of every British government, Liberal, Conservative and Labour alike, since the repeal of the Corn Laws.

The "humbug" of Mr. Thomas. I think there is a bit of irony in the frequent repetition of this word "humbug" used by Mr. Thomas. We have often heard of this reply of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Canadian Prime Minister's tariff proposals. The right hon. leader of the government cannot fail to know that the hon. Mr. Thomas, this one-time engineer on the Great Western Railway, is, according to one of his biographers, "rather blunt, but a good-natured soul," and that he adhered fully to the program of the Labour party that the British voter could read as follows:

> The labour vision of a well-ordered world encompasses the nations presently torn by strife and quarrelling. Hence the labour party demands a policy of international cooperation.

These two last words explain the failure of our prime minister. The British Labour party, no matter what may be said to the contrary, prefers international to imperial cooperation.

There you have it; you must admit the plain fact that John Bull will restrict his trade to no special zone; he wants the whole world for a customer. Such are the traditions, the methods and the endeavours toward international peace, that the Gladstone party embodied and applied in days gone by.

"This practical idealism"—the very words that appear in the pink manifesto—has always had a strong hold on British opinion. The British people have always been equally moved by the consideration of their own interests and by the demands of their sentimental temperament.

Let us wait for the next economic conference, the only hope left the Conservative party of succeeding in disposing of our wheat in the markets of Great Britain.

During the campaign the Hon. Mr. Bennett stated there was no excuse for unemployment in Canada, with a government who did its duty. Has there been an end of unemployment, I ask the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Dorion)? Factories are closing down everywhere. Representing as I do, the largest manufacturing section of Montreal, rubbing elbows every day with workers and foremen, I know something about the situation. Moulders, carpenters, cabinetmakers, mechanics, all are idle to-day. The Pactolus has ceased to flow. Imports and exports are falling off, which makes serious inroads into our national exchequer. Our high tariff closes the Canadian market to foreign goods and in retaliation our products find no sale abroad. Result: unemployment is rampant, ever on the increase, and the purchasing power of the Canadian consumer has fallen so low that he can no longer buy even our own Canadian made goods.

Now let us glance a moment at the textile industry, ever the spoiled child of the Conservative party. The Montreal Star, Conservative organ in the metropolis, gave its special protection to this industry. The McLeod pamphlet, addressed to all the members of parliament was, I might say, an insult to the public conscience and to the common sense of the workingmen in my riding. This paper claimed that the workers in the cotton mills earned an average salary of $20 a week. I absolutely deny that statement and since proof of the contrary is the best answer I lay here on my desk pay-envelopes from the big cotton mill of Hochelaga. These hands worked from ten to twelve hours a day in the mill in question where the bosses apply the advice once given by William Pitt to the English textile manufacturers who were complaining of the high salaries they had to pay adult men and women: "Employ children." The Dominion Textile Co, has always employed child-labour. Not one of these envelopes mentions a higher wage than $37.50 for fifteen days' work.

Several hon. MEMBERS: For shame!

Mr. ST-PERE: It is interesting to note also that on the backs of these envelopes the employees are advised: "Spend your wages for made-in-Canada goods." Worthy advice, indeed. Shameful advice, I say, when addressed to workmen whose weekly budget—according to the Labour Gazette—should not fall below a minimum of $20-$21; telling them to buy other things when their pay will barely keep body and soul together. The hon. member for Montmorency—

Mr. DORION: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? What was done by the provincial Minister of Labour in Quebec?

Mr. ST-PERE: It is not for me to deal with provincial matters. I hold no brief for the Hon. Mr. Taschereau's administration; neither is it my business to lay charges against the city administration in Montreal. I say only this: it is my duty to deny the statements made by the present administration on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. DORION: Defend Taschereau and his government.

Mr. ST-PERE: The hon. member for Montmorency—

Mr. LAVERGNE: Will the hon. member show us those envelopes?

Mr. ST-PERE: They are my private property.

[Mr. St-Pere.]

Mr. LAVERGNE: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has quoted a document which he ought to disclose.

Mr. ST-PERE: I merely said that none of these envelopes represented more than $35 in the way of salary for two weeks.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I will drop the point of order. The hon. gentleman does not want to show the document.

Mr. ST-PERE: I know that if I showed it, revealing the salaries, these fellows would be out of their jobs to-morrow.

Mr. LAVERGNE: When the hon. member says that he is not fair.

Mr. ST-PERE: The other day the hon. member from Montmorency told us that the number of workers in the mill at St. Grégoire had doubled.

Mr. DORION: Not at all. I beg your pardon, I never said that.

Mr. ST-PERE: What is it you did say? Increased?

Mr. DORION: Increased.

Mr. ST-PERE: Very well, I withdraw the word "doubled." Here are the comparative statistics of 1930 and 1931 furnished by the Department of Labour, Quebec. How many persons were employed in the Dominion Textile mills at Montmorency, at the end of July, 1930? Answer 1,347. How many employees were there at the end of February, 1931? Answer: 1,349. An increase of two workers, under the high protective policy of the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Mr. DORION: And that statement comes from the Minister of Labour at Quebec?

Mr. ST-PERE: I have every reason to believe that the hon. Minister of Labour at Quebec is just as honest as the member for Montmorency, when he submits a document. The member for Stormont (Mr. Shaver) told us that people were prosperous in the eastern part of the town of Cornwall. Unfortunately for him, my sporting activities in the past often brought me to Cornwall: I know what is going on there as well as I do what is taking place at home. Three of my good Cornwall friends have assured me this very week that the famous weekly wages of $30 was inexistent; that the only employees in the big Cornwall mill to earn any such figure were the engineer who repairs the machines, and a few other engineers. The Dominion Textile Co., in spite of the high protection which it enjoys, is never lavish with wage increases.

Mr. DORION: Just like the paper-mills in Quebec.

Mr. ST-PERE: You can keep the paper-mills.

Sir. EUGENE FISET: Especially Price Bros.

Mr. LAVERGNE: They are friends of yours.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Yours too.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Now, to listen to our Conservative friends one would think that the $20,000,000 voted at the special session would, by some process of spontaneous generation, double in value under the magic wand of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). What about the charities of our St. Vincent de Paul societies? What about the assistance given by all the large social organizations of the city of Montreal and elsewhere? What about the self-sacrifice that the Montreal property owners are making, at present? I am proud to mention, in this respect, the devotion of a number of property owners among the working class of my riding who, since unemployment is prevalent in Canada, shelter without charge those among them who suffer from this world-wide crisis. Mention is made of unemployment statistics. Have you ever read, Mr. Speaker, the articles published by certain distinguished economists who contend that it is impossible to gather reliable statistics on unemployment?

I should very much like to discuss the Russian embargo. However, I shall postpone my comments on this subject.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Sometime, somewhere.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Until I discuss the budget. Since the Deputy Speaker of the house and the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) wish to know the views of the Liberal members for Quebec in this respect, I shall ask them to wait patiently until the budget is brought down.

Mr. DORION (Translation): The fiddles are out of tune.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Much has been said about national unity. Does it truly exist? I am sorry to have to refer to it and I ask my English-speaking friends throughout this country who know me to take note, that if I refer to this subject now, it is that circumstances compel me to do so. The hon. Solicitor General spoke about appeals to prejudice. An article which appeared in "La Presse" with reference to conscription was mentioned. Who was the first to refer to conscription at the last Dominion elections, if not the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. MacNicol), he stated when he was chosen as a Conservative candidate in Ontario:

> Next time war breaks out, conscription will be resorted to "right off the bat" and it will be conscription of capital as well as that of men.

No one in our province spoke of war or conscription. It was in Toronto that they discussed it. Why should it now be a French Canadian from Quebec who should charge the Liberals with appealing to prejudice?

Mr. DORION (Translation): Name the member who made that statement.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Mr. MacNicol. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), in a well thought out and clear cut speech, reminded us of the statement which the hon. Senator de Boucherville made on February 17, 1879, as to the obligation under which the Conservative party were of fulfilling the pledges made to the Canadian people. Like in 1878 and 1879, it behooves the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett and his friends to fulfil, to-day, that duty. We Liberals, who are oppositionists, not negationists, patiently await the appearance of that midnight sun which will disperse this would-be gloom spread throughout Canada by the King regime. Once for all, let this column of fire appear, which is to lead us to this promised land of the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett, a pledge made during the last elections.

We, Liberals, are willing to help. We are quite aware that the initiative must come from the government, and since they contend not to be a one man government. Let them ponder over this line of Virgil: "Non nostrum inter vos tantas componere lites." "We are not called upon to arbitrate between you on such momentous issues."

I recognize that the right hon. Prime Minister is, at present, labouring under difficulties. I fully understand his silence. There is nothing astonishing that at times he keeps his own counsel. Racine's verses could well be applied to him, under the present circumstances:

> "Tant de coups imprévus m'accâblent à la fois, > Qu'ils m'ôtent la parole et menlèvent la voix."

Work, it behooves you.

Conservatives of Quebec who boast of having destroyed this so solid bloc which represented our province at Ottawa since 1922, it devolves on you to find not only a remedy but a complete solution to the unemployment problem which you boasted to settle three days after assuming power at Ottawa. It rests with you to persuade your large industries so highly protected, to give full satisfaction to the claims of the working classes, let the industrialists acquire wealth, but let them be careful that it does not become their master. That is they should pay better wages to their employees. Work, the people have their eyes on you, they will judge you, and should you neglect to settle those important questions which you have pledged yourself to do, four years hence the country will punish you, you will be defeated not for your sins of omission, considering that many of these pledges could not possibly be carried out, but for making those inconsiderate pledges.

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): Coming as I do from one of the older rural constituencies in western Canada, I desire to make a few observations.

I have listened with a good deal of interest to the debate so far, and particularly to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins); and without in any way reflecting on that honourable gentlemen or the constituency he represents, permit me to say that the constituency of Macdonald is quite as good a constituency as Marquette, and in many respects better. The electors are just as intelligent, and there are very few, if any, cowless, sowless, chickenless farms.

I would like to indicate briefly to this house the very definite efforts the farmers of Macdonald constituency are making towards stabilizing their agricultural business, and I think it applies equally well to the rest of Manitoba.

It may not be generally known that the first bovine tuberculosis free area to be established in the British Empire was established in the constituency of Macdonald a few years ago. This area has served as the centre from which several agricultural activities of far-reaching importance have been developed. It has gradually been extended both locally as well as in other parts of Canada. This same area has for some time been recognized as an improved sire area, and when the provincial government introduced its system of agricultural representative, it was one of the first to take advantage of it. There have for many years been established sire clubs of one kind or another, making possible the securing of the best sires in the country in a cooperative way.

Very tangible evidence of the efforts of the farmers of my constituency can be gleaned from the recent exhibition held in the city of Brandon. In looking over the list of prize-winnings in grains and grasses, fully 25 per cent have been won by farmers in Macdonald constituency; including the championship in barley, won by Mr. John Wiener of Miami,—a member of the Miami Cooperative Barley Growers Association. A similar honor was won by Mr. George Knox of the same place at the Toronto Royal last fall. The farmers of Miami district have for years paid particular attention to producing high quality barley for malting purposes as well as for seed, and have annually some 40,000, to 60,000 bushels for sale.

Looking further afield, one can note that the farmers of Manitoba have established a very enviable reputation in the larger Canadian and American exhibitions in winning more than their share of the prizes. Manitoba butter-makers have a most enviable reputation in the larger butter shows of Canada, the creameries of Macdonald constituency being well among the winners as well as the Manitoba cooperative dairies. The honey producers of Manitoba have established for Manitoba honey a reputation that is second to none in the world.

In the matter of quality hog production Manitoba stands high. Car lots of bacon hogs selected from the products of the boys' and girls' clubs, as well as of individual exhibitors, have been consistent winners at the Toronto Royal. And I venture the assertion that there is not another area in western Canada that consistently ships to the market as high a percentage of bacon type hogs as does the constituency of Macdonald.

I do not mean to imply that the farmers of Manitoba or the constituency of Macdonald have reached perfection as regards quality production, but I do say they are doing their part, and that the farmers of this older, longer established district should be in as good a position as any farmers in western Canada to withstand this period of depression.

I am setting out these facts to indicate that so far as the farmers of my constituency are concerned they are at least doing their part. They are producing high quality products which the markets of the world demand and it is only fair for them to say to the governments of this country, both provincial and dominion: "We are doing our part. What are you going to do for us?"

We have, however, areas even in Macdonald constituency quite unsuited for live stock, and one area in particular that presents a serious problem on account of drainage. Three years ago the people there could not put in a crop because of flood conditions.

The next year they got in their crop but could not take it off because of water lying in their fields. Many farmers had to bring their stock into the barns during the month of August and to keep it there until such time as the water receded. As an indication of what these flood conditions mean, I might state that the Sperling cooperative elevator handled in 1927 approximately 400,000 bushels of grain while for the following two years that mark was reduced to something in the neighbourhod of 100,000 bushels, and much of that had to be resold locally for seed and feed. This district now has drainage facilities but their installation has increased taxes to such an extent that the farmers cannot carry the load under present conditions. That problem will have to be handled by someone very soon or one of the best wheat growing areas in western Canada will be abandoned.

Strange as it may seem, so far as live stock production is concerned, even considering the flood conditions during certain seasons, this area has no permanent supply of water for stock. There are no wells, creeks or rivers; they have to depend wholly upon dug-outs for their water supply, which I think everyone will agree does not offer an adequate or reliable supply for mixed farming.

I venture the assertion that the farmers as a whole have put in a reasonably good winter. I do not suppose that very many on the farms have suffered from hunger during the past few months, nor do I suppose that many have suffered from the cold; but it has been a mild winter. One coal dealer told me that his business had been reduced some 50 per cent during this last winter. So far as the farmers in my district are concerned, they have spent very little for clothes or anything which was not absolutely necessary. In the majority of cases, any money spent for ordinary living expenses was money which should have gone to pay taxes and interest on mortgage indebtedness.

During the past six or eight months I have met many farmers, who have pioneered this country, established good homes, educated their families, and contributed much to their local communities as well as to the country as a whole. I am sorry to say that these same men, ordinarily considered as well established, successful farmers, are greatly concerned and worried at the present time. They tell me that they are unable to pay their taxes or their interest charges and that the banks are reluctant to loan them money. They inquire as to the advisability of putting in a crop; they say that in the main they can put in a crop but they cannot afford to take a loss again this year as they have for the past two years. Their greatest concern, Mr. Speaker, is their lack of security in their homes and holdings. Homes they have spent a lifetime in building up are subject to such mortgage indebtedness that they are fearful of being dispossessed. That is what is bothering the western farmer at the present time. Is it any wonder then that the farmers are asking what this government is going to do for them? They see tariffs raised to help the manufacturer, and money paid out for unemployment relief, and they naturally want to know what the government is going to do with respect to agriculture. Before Christmas I was telling these men to wait until December 30, but since that time I have been forced to say that I do not know what the government's policy is going to be. These men do not want to put in another crop under uncertain conditions and they are still waiting for an announcement from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) or from some other member of the government as to what the policy of the government is going to be in respect to agriculture.

The situation confronting the western farmer is one that requires the most serious consideration on the part of this government and something must be done immediately in order to renew his confidence—something that will have immediate effect. To that end I feel it is essential that our Dominion and provincial governments give assurance without delay that they will protect the farmer in the security of his home and holding. To that end, it may be necessary to declare some form of moratorium. Of course, that is only delaying the evil day but it may serve the purpose until something else can be done or until world conditions improve. It would give the farmer a renewal of confidence and courage and enable him to carry on.

As a second measure of relief, I wish to associate myself with those who have already contributed to this debate in urging a reduction of interest rates. It is the accumulation of debt that is bearing down the western farmer; it is interest added to principal and interest on principal and interest added to that again. The farmer has been obliged to carry the whole load of this depression without being able to pass it on. A reduction in interest charges would mean much to him and in the long run I think it would mean a good deal to those people from whom he has borrowed.

As a further suggestion, I would associate myself with those hon. members who have been urging a reduction in our domestic freight rates, particularly on the shipment of our western feed grains to eastern Canada and British Columbia as well as interprovincially, coupled with an extensive campaign on the part of this government to popularize western barley among eastern feeders. Allow me to pause to congratulate the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) on the very valuable contribution he made to this debate a few days ago with regard to the feeding value of our western barleys, as compared to corn. Our agricultural colleges are doing a great deal in an experimental way to demonstrate the value of western grains for feeding purposes, and the more information that can be gotten out, such as that given by the hon. member for Souris the other night, the better. We in the west always have been obliged to use these grains and I do not think anyone can say that they have not been reasonably satisfactory.

Mr. Beatty of the Canadian Pacific Railway has come forward with a plan for a revolving credit scheme to assist the western farmer to go into mixed farming, particularly for the purchase of live stock. An offer to reduce the domestic freight rate on feed grains within Canada would have been much more acceptable. In speaking to my constituents I find that they are not at all enamoured of this idea of a revolving credit scheme. To them it means more debt, and debt is what is worrying them at the present time. What the western farmer is looking for is lower interest rates, lower freight rates, lower tariffs and an opportunity to pay his debts and at the same time maintain a reasonable standard of living.

I would like also to urge upon the government the necessity of gathering more world statistics with regard to live stock, dairy products and poultry. We are furnished with statistics with respect to wheat and other grains but we need more information concerning other farm products. More attention should be paid to the gathering of world-wide statistics in this regard.

I would urge upon the Minister of Agriculture the necessity of doing something towards assisting the marketing of hogs next fall. The farmers of western Canada this summer have gone extensively into hog raising and there will be a tremendous increase in hog production by next fall. They have attempted to use up their low priced feed grains, and in this they have been encouraged by local institutions, including the banks, the mortgage companies, the railways and the governments. I think it is essential that our Department of Agriculture come forward with some scheme which would assist in the marketing next fall of the largely increased supply of live hogs. If the minister can offer a scheme which will assist this situation, I, for one, will lend him my wholehearted support.

Just here I should like to emphasize the remarks made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) in respect to an agricultural policy, particularly that part where she states:

> All farm or agricultural colleges should to-day teach cooperative marketing of farm products as aggressively as in the past they taught, and are still teaching, greater production. As the central idea of their programs they should have cooperative marketing of farm products, and the government should lend its full moral support to any efforts made along the lines of cooperation.

Those are exactly my sentiments. I do not think a successful agricultural policy can be established that does not take into consideration the actual producers on the land. nor do I think any agricultural policy can be successfully carried out that does not return to the producers the highest possible proportion of the price which the consumer has to pay.

The farmers of Manitoba are looking to the government to see that Fort Churchill has a fair opportunity to operate particularly in respect of rail rates to and from Churchill as well as ocean rates and marine insurance. As a further effort to develop trade at Churchill, the advisability of making it a free port might be taken into consideration. I understand that it costs from $100 to $1,200 for harbour dues at some of our larger ocean ports, and if charges like those are made to apply at Churchill, this would impose quite a heavy burden upon the boats using that port. If, on the other hand, this being a wholly government-owned port, the government could forego those charges, at least in the initial stages of the development of the port, that would go a long way toward developing trade there and perhaps have favourable effect on ocean rates to and from Churchill.

In closing, let me repeat what I said at the beginning: the farmers in my constituency, which is one of the oldest constituencies of the province, are doing their part honestly and conscientiously—and I know the same is true of the farmers of the whole of Manitoba as well as of western Canada—but they are not going to be able to carry on for very long under present conditions. In fact, some of them have not been able to carry on thus far. The government has given assistance to the manufacturers and to the unemployed. Surely the farmers are equally entitled to some consideration and assistance from the government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. T. SIMPSON (North Simcoe): I desire in the first place, Mr. Speaker, to extend my congratulations to the mover (Mr. Cormier) and the seconder (Mr. Porteous) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It has been repeatedly stated during this debate that the French-speaking members who understand and speak both official languages have a considerable advantage over the English-speaking members of the house, and that advantage was clearly demonstrated by the mover of the address who spoke very fluently in both languages. To him and to the seconder of the address, whose riding adjoins my own, and who redeemed that riding for the Conservative party, I extend my heartiest congratulations. The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Porteous) is a young and able man, very popular in his own riding, and for him I predict a long and useful representation in this house.

During this debate we have listened to many speeches and to some able speeches. Coming to this house as I do, a new member, one gets the impression that the opinions of many of the members are local and provincial. That is not to be wondered at because each of us is more concerned with his own particular riding and his own locality. However, I also gather that all the representatives in this house, are here for the common good of Canada, and I can assure the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) that so far as this side of the house is concerned, at least, he has a united and loyal party supporting him and his policies.

We have heard many complaints from hon. members opposite as to the conduct of the elections in their own ridings, and as to how they were treated by their opponents during the campaign. I myself could unfold a tale of woe, but it would not be instructive, nor do I think the members of this house would be particularly interested in it. Many of the complaints which have been made, it seems to me, come from those who tried to put something over their opponents and were disappointed at not being able to do so. They have received a chastisement at the hands of their electors and are still smarting under the sting.

Much criticism has been made of the present administration and particularly of the leader of the government himself, personally. The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) during her address took occasion to thank the Prime Minister for a certain appointment that he had made, that of the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, to be Canada's representative in Great Britain, or, as the hon. member saw fit to style him, Canada's minister plenipotentiary to the court of St. James. She thanked the Prime Minister from the bottom of her heart, she said, for having made that appointment. She said that it was a great relief to the province of Ontario, but it was very hard on the court of St. James.

I have no brief to speak for the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, nor do I think the hon. member for Southeast Grey and the members who supported her in that statement have any brief to speak for the electors of the province of Ontario. The Hon. G. Howard Ferguson was Minister of Lands and Forests in the province of Ontario from 1914 to 1919 in the government of the Hon. Sir William Hearst. At the provincial elections in 1919 Mr. Hearst's government was defeated and the United Farmers of Ontario came into power in the province of Ontario. Not only was the Hearst government defeated in that election, but Sir William Hearst himself and more than half his ministers met personal defeat at the polls. The United Farmers of Ontario had the largest group of elected members in the house, and that party was asked to form a government. No member of their own party elected at that time would undertake to form a government, and so the party called on one Mr. Drury to lead the government, which he did. Perhaps the fame of that government has reached Ottawa. Some of the members here may have heard of it. At any rate Mr. Drury formed a government, which carried on for four years. After the election of 1919, only 21 per cent of the candidates elected were Conservatives. The Conservative group was the smallest in the province. The United Farmers of Ontario had the largest group and the Liberals the second largest group, and they were therefore the official opposition. Mr. Ferguson after that election was asked to take the temporary leadership of the Conservative party. He did so reluctantly, and led the party in opposition for four years. During those four years the government in power did everything they could to blacken Mr. Ferguson and his political life before the electors of Ontario. Commissions were appointed and investigations held into Mr. Ferguson's administration of the Department of Lands and Forests under the government of Sir William Hearst, but during all these investigations and in all the reports by different commissions there were no charges proven against Mr. Ferguson's administration. In 1923 the United Farmer government of Ontario appealed to the electors of the province for a renewal of their confidence, but the result of that election was that instead of 21 per cent of the elected members being Conservative, more than 50 per cent were returned supporting the policies of the Hon. Howard Ferguson as leader of the Conservative party. The Lieutenant-Governor asked Mr. Ferguson to form a government, which he did. That government administered the affairs of the province for three years, and then appealed to the electors. At that election Mr. Ferguson was returned, not merely with 50 per cent of the elected members as Conservatives, but with over 70 per cent of the elected members supporting him and his policies. He carried on for another term of three years and again appealed to the electors of the province of Ontario. Instead of 70 per cent, 85 per cent of the elected members of the province of Ontario were elected to support the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson. During his administration his policies had been altogether at variance with those of the party to which my hon. friend from Southeast Grey and her supporters belong. No members in or out of this house have a record such as his, and considering his record I think it is not very fitting that hon. members should speak of the Hon. G. Howard Ferguson as they have spoken of him in this house. I am one of his admirers and supporters and I feel that the affairs of the Dominion of Canada in Great Britain are safe in his hands. The Prime Minister of Canada is to be congratulated on making that selection and appointment.

Many times during this debate mention has been made of the present depression in our Dominion. It has been insinuated that the present government is responsible for that condition. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) after telling the house that his was a rural riding, that the farmers in his constituency were noted for their thrift, and that the soil in South Perth was noted for its fertility, said that the farmers were very bitter towards the present administration because of the low prices they were receiving for their produce. He said that if there were an election at the present time the result would be different. I want to say to him that he and his colleagues should get down on their marrow bones and thank their Maker that the general election was held in the year 1930 and not in 1931. If the election had been postponed until 1931 there would not have been enough Liberal members elected to form a corporal's guard. They would have been banished to the shades of opposition where they would have remained for a considerable time.

Mr. SPENCE: And will remain.

Mr. SIMPSON (Simcoe): The hon. member for Southeast Grey made some comparison between the present depression and that existing between the years 1921 and 1924. In the comparison she stated that in the previous depression the high prices that the farmers received for their produce had provided them with a surplus with which they were able without serious effects to tide over the period of depression. She said that at the present time however they had no surplus and consequently they were in very bad straits indeed. On the other hand the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in his address to this house dwelt at length on the prosperity of Canada during his administration, and quoted figures to support his contention. He gave figures concerning the amount of goods exported from Canada in the year 1922, the first year of his administration. The right hon. gentleman told the house that in that year we exported $740,000,000 worth of goods. In 1923 the value of exports was $931,000,000; in 1924, $1,045,000,000; in 1925, $1,069,000,000; in 1926, $1,315,000,000; in 1927, $1,252,000,000; in 1928, $1,228,000,000; in 1929, $1,364,000,000, and in 1930, $1,120,000,000. In other words when the present leader of the opposition came into power Canada's exports amounted to $2,000,000 daily, and during the last year he was in power they amounted to $3,000,000 daily. He stated further that when the policies of his government began to become effective there had been a surplus from year to year. His first surplus, amounting to $36,000,000, occurred in the year 1924. From that he had a surplus every year until 1930 when the surplus was $47,740,000.

From this picture hon. members might think that Canada was in a very good condition financially, but the right hon. leader of the opposition did not give the house a full statement of the facts. He should have told the house the amount of goods imported into Canada during the same time. In the year 1922 the imports and exports were about the same in value. Exports were valued at $740,000,000 and imports at $748,000,000. The imports increased from year to year until the year 1930 when the goods imported into the Dominion of Canada amounting to $1,248,000,000. In other words when the present leader of the opposition came into power the imports were about $2,000,000 daily and during the last year they were about three and one-half million dollars daily. To my mind that fact has had a very pronounced effect on the conditions in Canada at the present time. During the last year of the late administration we were selling goods valued at $3,000,000 daily and paying out three and one-half million dollars daily for imports. That is the results of the policy of the late administration. To that policy is to be attributed to a great extent the conditions existing in Canada to-day. We have been buying in other countries what we should have been producing and manufacturing at home.

The late administration claimed that they reduced taxes from year to year and still had a surplus. No government, institution or individual likes to end a year with a deficit. What advantage is it to the fruit growers in British Columbia, central Canada or the maritimes if by showing a surplus at the end of the year they are robbed of their market? When the product of the fruit growers is ready for the market he finds that his home market is flooded with fruit imported from other countries. Those countries on account of their fortunate geographical locations have climates in which fruit ripen earlier than it does in Canada, and those fruits are allowed to enter our country before our product is ready for the market. Under the late government they were allowed in under a small customs duty. The same statement may be made concerning manufacturers. What advantage is a surplus to the manufacturer if when his goods are ready for the market there is no home market for them? The same could be said concerning market gardeners and labourers. Goods may have been imported into Canada so as to create a surplus, but those imported goods may have caused the labourer to be out of a job in the factory where he had previously been employed. This is the effect: If you buy an article in a foreign country, you get the article and the foreign country gets your money. If you buy the same article at home you get the article and the money is kept in circulation in your own country. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) in his address the other day mentioned that the Dominion of Canada might be self-supporting and practically live within itself. I think we could do that to a very great extent, and that fact was very clearly illustrated by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis). He told the house that a large amount of barley was for sale in western Canada, and he gave some comparisons which showed that tests made of Canadian barley and imported corn showed that barley was almost as good as the corn for feeding purposes. I would commend that point very favourably to the feeders in Canada. Our own barley might be used in almost every case where corn is used at present, and by so doing we would keep circulating in our own country the money which we pay for feed. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir) also mentioned the fact that more of our home grain might be used for feeding in our own country.

The fact that the increased tariff has been a benefit to Canada was very clearly illustrated by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson), the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Shaver) and by other members who have contributed to the debate. They cited concrete cases where factories had been opened and men were being employed at a good rate of wages because of the increases which were made in the tariff during the special session last September. I have here, sir, an article from one of our Ontario papers headed:

United States Newspaper Discusses Bennett Tariff

The article is as follows:

People in the United States are taking notice of what the Bennett tariff policy is doing for Canada. They realize that it has effectively safeguarded the Canadian market for Canadian workers without raising prices to consumers; they know that it is transferring a number of industries from their side of the international border to our side.

That is, from the United States to Canada. The article proceeds:

In neighbourly fashion the Times-Press says that it cannot regret Canada's good fortune and that it wishes the Dominion all progress and prosperity.

The article in the United States newspaper goes on to point out that every one of these new companies established in Canada is taking jobs from hard-pressed United States workmen in order to improve Canadian conditions. Then follows an appeal to the readers, many of whom are industrial workers, as follows:

Two American motor cars, formerly equipped with Akron-made tires, are to be made in Canada now. Their tires will be made in Canada and not by you. The men who earn wages by making those tires will be spending in Canadian stores and not in yours. They will be buying life insurance from Canadian agents and spending Canadian money to build and furnish homes, instead of patronizing you.

That is one of the results of the increased tariff. I would also like to read an editorial that was printed in one of our newspapers during the recent recess. It states:

> The King government was turned out of office because it lacked constructive force, because it lacked vision and vigour. There were those who predicted that Mr. King would lead a much more useful opposition than he did a government. Even they must be disillusioned. His own marathon speech of twenty-seven thousand words offered not a single constructive thought to assist the Bennett administration to successfully meet present conditions. For nearly five hours Mr. King indulged in carping criticism, but not one concrete suggestion of helpful character did he venture.
>
> It was evidently a Liberal "keynote" speech. For two weeks his supporters have entertained parliament and in all the records of Hansard their addresses show no more constructive nature than did that of their chief. They awakened to conditions in 1931 to which they had been blind for at least a year, but even with the awakening, they found no solution.
> It begins to appear that in opposition, as in government, Mr. King has nothing to offer in the way of constructive statesmanship.

The hon. member for Macdonald, in his address this afternoon, mentioned the fact that in his riding there were quite a few hogs being fed on the cheap coarse grains of Manitoba, and he asked what would happen next autumn when those hogs were ready for market. I will answer him in this way: In Great Britain there is a market for all the bacon Canada can produce for some years to come. We will have to feed a great many more hogs than we are feeding at present if we are to over-stock that market. Great Britain imports over 900,000,000 pounds of bacon annually, and two-thirds of that amount is supplied by Denmark. When the late administration came into power Canada supplied over 200,000,000 pounds of bacon annually to the English market, but during last year that export almost ceased.

We in Canada should have a great advantage over the Danish farmer in the production of bacon, because at least eighty per cent of the grain fed to the hogs in Denmark is imported, and a great deal of that grain comes from North America, from the United States and Canada. When you consider the long freight haul of those grains it is plain that we should be able to produce bacon for very much less than it can be produced in Denmark, but to do so we will have to educate ourselves to the bacon requirements of the British market. Every hog between snout and tail will not produce Wiltshire sides, the kind of bacon required for the British market. A bacon hog requires a certain depth; it must have a certain length and depth of side; it must be not too thickly fleshed and not too lean. The people of Denmark, in order to produce that type of hog, went to a great deal of trouble to educate the farmers in the right type of hog to raise and also in the art of feeding, because breed in a bacon hog is not everything. The feeder has to have a certain knowledge of feeding before he can produce the required article.

There is in Great Britain a great future for the bacon industry of Canada; there is no reason why we should not supply at least half that 900,000,000 pounds of bacon imported annually by Great Britain. This is a matter which perhaps calls for assistance by the Department of Agriculture, but it cannot be done by that department alone. The hog producers of Canada must produce the article required by the British consumer. There is a great opportunity in this regard for cooperative pork packing establishments such as are operated in Denmark.

The hon. member for Macdonald said that in catering to the consumer it was necessary to supply quality products, and that statement applies very definitely to the production of bacon. You must supply an article of the right quality.

The hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers), during his address the other evening, had something to say with reference to the production of potatoes in his province. What he said then applies also quite definitely to the potato growers in the province of Ontario. In my riding there is considerable land which is well suited to the production of potatoes. It is not every kind of land that will produce a good potato; the soil must possess certain qualities before it is possible to secure a good crop. When I was farming on my own account we did not pretend to grow potatoes in a commercial way; the soil was not suited to the purpose. But we grew enough for our own private use, and if possibly we produced them at a loss we were not, at any rate, driving on the roads consuming gas and wearing out the tires of cars. We stayed at home, and perhaps that was to our advantage.

I do not pretend to speak about the production of potatoes; I am concerned more with the market. I would ask the Department of Agriculture, in this connection, to insist upon the enforcement of the law regulating grading. I would make it an offence for anyone transporting potatoes on the highways by truck to any market if he failed, in the case of every sack of potatoes, to have a tag attached disclosing the grade of the potatoes and the name of the producer. One unscrupulous shipper from any district will do grave injury to the whole district, and there are in my riding growers who are so particular in the shipment of their potatoes as always to have their produce a little over rather than under grade. When they offer potatoes for sale there is no difficulty about their securing a market; the wholesalers accept their potatoes without question, for they know that the producers can be depended upon, and they know that the purchasers will be satisfied. For this reason the market is continuous. I repeat, I would commend to the Department of Agriculture and the minister a rigid enforcement of the regulations in this respect.

A good deal has been said during this session about old age pensions; different hon. members have had something to say about the matter. We are not particularly concerned at this time with the question whether the old age pensions act was good legislation and ought to have been put on the statute books; the fact remains that it is there. We are not discussing to-night the reasons for its having been put there. Reading the reports of the proceedings of parliament in 1930, I read that the leader of the opposition made the statement that the system was a vicious one. I could not make out precisely what he meant by its being a vicious system; I did not know whether he meant that it was a vicious principle to give pensions to old people, or that it was vicious for the Dominion of Canada to contribute a portion of the pension and allow the province to administer the act. At any rate, the act stands as we have it, and is in force in all the provinces except Quebec and the maritime provinces. Those provinces contribute to the amount paid by the Dominion government to Ontario and the western provinces, and in order to make the application of the principle general the Prime Minister in the campaign said that he would have the Dominion pay the full cost of pension. The leader of the opposition in his address stated that every old man and woman was promised full pension. The present act does not go that length, nor did I understand the Prime Minister to say that; the principle was only to be extended so as to cover the whole Dominion.

I have had something to do with the administration of the act in our county, and I think it leaves room for amendment in many respects. The old age pensions legislation is a good thing for many old people. Many of these old people were pioneers in this country; they hewed out homes for themselves, raised families, sometimes large families, and in some cases were unable to accumulate any property. The result is that now they have grown old, and can no longer earn a livelihood as they formerly did, they are without means to support themselves. I know from experience in our own county that in many cases the provisions has been of great benefit to a good many of our old people, who have done more perhaps in building up the Dominion than many of those who at the present time are driving around in expensive cars. It is making their declining days a little easier for them, so that they need not worry about where their bread and butter will come from. I might mention one case in the town of Barrie. One of the old pensioners was receiving $20 a month. He had no family; his wife was dead, and there was no one to look after him. He takes his pension, rents a room and provides his own food. He pays something like $10 a month for a heated room in winter and prepares and cooks his own meals, and he told me that in one month, doing this, he had saved $2 over and above providing for himself. He pays for his washing. He has a cleanly appearance and dresses comfortably, and he has been able to finance himself as I have stated. A man of that type should be made finance minister. But there are some things in the old age pensions act which to my mind could be amended, and when the legislation is brought down I shall have something to say with respect to certain of its provisions.

It is said that we are passing through a period of depression; and while the late government did not administer the affairs of the country in the best interests of the people, nevertheless we should not feel the pinch as we are feeling it now. There is something for the individual to do for himself: he should be given to understand that he must live within and not beyond his means. One thing which we as a people have not been doing is precisely this; we have not been living within our means. Consequently we are feeling the pinch particularly hard at the present time.

It has been said that the present government came into power at a very inopportune time. To my mind it came in at a very opportune time; for I believe that, with its policies, and taking hold of the problems of the Dominion as it is doing and managing them in a business way, we shall in due time have a prosperous, happy and contented people.

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): As a new member addressing the house for the first time I respectfully ask the indulgence of this honourable assembly. I trust, Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to voice my appreciation of the dignity and fairness with which you discharge the duties of your office, which sometimes must be a bit uncomfortable. Before proceeding, may I pause to express my deep regard for my French Canadian colleagues in this parliament. They lend much charm to the proceedings by the eloquence of their addresses.

I have the honour to represent, on this side of the house for the first time in over forty years, one of the most important agricultural, fruit-growing and industrial ridings in the province of Ontario—Northumberland county. Cobourg, the beautiful county town, is the most important deep water port between Kingston and Toronto, serving all central Ontario, and providing a year-round base for the twice-daily Canadian National car and passenger ferries between Canada and the United States. The people of Cobourg are vitally interested in the development of the St. Lawrence deep waterway and I am anxiously waiting any announcement by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) regarding this great and necessary undertaking.

I believe the people who elected me expected that I would make myself heard in this house both in the interest of my county and in the interest of this great Dominion, not as a narrow partisan but as a sincere Canadian citizen, endeavouring in his humble way to serve them and his country, to the best of his ability. This I intend to do according to my judgment.

I have followed with keen interest the proceedings of this house and the policies of this government, both here and in London. I have endeavoured at the same time to keep in touch with the people of my riding, and I can say most emphatically to this house that they are waiting for the Prime Minister to fulfil his many election promises. This, I believe he knows to his sorrow is beyond his capabilities to do. As a representative of the people, I believe it is my duty to assist if it is within my power to improve the conditions in Canada, and with this honest purpose in view, I submit for the consideration of this house my thoughts regarding our future. I believe we should have at this time definite suggestions to place before the administration for consideration and that wise counsels should prevail.

I disclaim any special knowledge of statesmanship, but with some knowledge of both business and public matters, I cannot see why the affairs of this country should not be conducted exactly as successful business is administered.

[W. A. Fraser.]

First, Mr. Speaker, I submit the greatest possibilities for trade expansion lie with Great Britain, and that the surest, safest and most logical place for us to concentrate our efforts, in peace as in war, is with the empire. Our policy should not be Canada alone, but Canada leading the way within the British commonwealth of nations for the advancement and security of all on which our welfare depends; in this way Canada can be first. A most illustrious citizen, speaking at a Canadian Club banquet in London, said that Canada was the cornerstone on which rests the great edifice of the empire. In this I fully agree. Let us live up to this position and make the edifice the greatest structure this world has ever known. In this way, and in this way alone, can we promote our Canadian interests in trade and commerce and make sure the safety of our future. In this way we develop markets with 450,000,000 people for our surplus agricultural and manufactured products; we will have our trade lanes protected by Great Britain, and we will be doing as much business as possible with the people on whom, in my opinion, will in the future depend the very existence of civilization as we know it. Canada, situated as it is, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, lying in the path of empire progress, with its great railway systems, vast natural resources, industrial centres, wonderful agricultural expansion and undaunted man power, must blaze the way.

Having had to make my living in business, I do not believe business can be done by blasting. I never blasted myself into a single order in twenty years, and never tried. Blasting only results in retaliation. I am a firm believer in the principle that business is done for mutual advantage. It is much easier to do business with friends than with strangers, and we generally do our utmost by friendly relations and the quality of our goods to increase our business with our best customers, especially when selling them twice as much as we buy from them. Business is a matter of give and take; nations are only collective individuals, and sometimes you have to give more for the present to get more in the future. It is poor business to antagonize your best customers and seldom, if ever, can you have all your own way. After all, the giving and taking must be pretty well balanced.

Never were trade relations between corporations and individuals maintained over a period of years except by cordial understandings, plus mutual profit. I would like to quote, with commendation, the words of the Acting Prime Minister of Japan, who, addressing the Canadian trade delegation at a farewell dinner in Tokyo a few months ago, said, in part:

> Friendship is a greater thing than trade. Without it the springs of trade will be frozen. Trade can thrive only in a genial atmosphere of mutual good feeling, and friendship rests on knowledge.

The Prime Minister is a very able lawyer and has much to do with big business, but I doubt if he has had anything to do with actual salesmanship.

Let us take stock of Britain, the customer who bought $281,838,000 of products from us last year and sold us $189,180,000 worth. Britain, during the period of 1914 to 1919, stood the brunt of the world war, in which she suffered more than any other country. She sacrificed the flower of her manhood; she lost most of her foreign trade; she lost a large part of her shipping; she financed her allies and she is paying her war debts. Other countries, to supply the needs of their people previously supplied by Britain, built industries, many of them not adapted to the country in normal times, and they have since endeavoured to protect them with high tariff walls. The United States, with war profits and nearly forty per cent of the world's gold, a country over-industrialized, took advantage of Britain's position to make a drive to expand her foreign trade before the motherland could recover.

Where does Britain stand to-day? Last year Britain's overseas trade amounted to nine billion dollars—greater than any country except the United States, and greater than the United States in manufactured products. She built 35 per cent of the world's ships, and carried nearly 50 per cent of the world's shipping. She increased her foreign investments by over a billion dollars and she developed at home the most efficient industrial system in the world. She has less unemployment pro rata than that high protected country the United States, and had a favourable trade balance of $195,000,000. Far from being decadent, as the Hon. Howard Ferguson will learn, she is fast regaining her pre-war position.

When Britain succeeds, Canada succeeds. Britain is a trading nation, and while we need her as a consumer she is also necessary to us as a broker to resell our surplus, manufactured or otherwise. She is a clearing house for our products on the markets of the world, and more so now than in the past.

World conditions are changing. The importance of Russia as a competitor is becoming more serious. As so well stated by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales when opening the British industrial exhibition at Buenos Aires, artificial trade barriers which are a menace to commerce to-day must be modified and the world economic system must be readjusted. Let us get together with Britain, before she is forced into further trade treaties with European and other foreign countries by our foolish Canada-alone policy, with its blasting methods which have made it more impossible for her to do business with us, and join the other dominions in working out the possibilities of increasing our trade within the empire, so there can be control for the benefit of the whole, even if it hurts in spots.

I submit for the consideration of this government for the adjourned Imperial economic conference the following proposal: that a non-political empire trade council be formed, comprising the following members from Britain and each dominion: one government representative, one outstanding industrialist, one outstanding financier, one prominent agriculturist, one outstanding economist, one outstanding transport man, and one outstanding labour representative, to study the foreign trade of their respective countries and the possibilities of encouraging the exchange of commodities with other parts of the empire; the council to meet in London within twelve months, to draft recommendations to be considered and acted upon by their different governments, these recommendations to include tariff readjustments, trade treaties, and other arrangements that they consider will further develop empire trade.

There is something like $14,000,000,000 of trade annually within the British Empire. Britain has the same right to determine her policy as Canada has. The Prime Minister knows we cannot dictate the course she is to follow; she knows her business better than we do, but she will welcome sane, reciprocal trade considerations as will our sister dominions. Britain protects our ocean trade lanes and the empire has a great world responsibility at this time.

I submit for the consideration of the government that a thorough investigation be made to devise ways and means of diverting a greater percentage of our overseas trade through Canadian ports. Last year $205,163,170, or 34 per cent of our overseas exports, and $9,849,889 of our imports, were handled by United States ports. Canada has excellent port facilities on both the Atlantic and the Pacific where millions of dollars have been invested. Railway rates should be so adjusted as to divert the traffic through these gateways instead of through United States ports. If this is done, it will certainly help to solve the problem of unemployment. Our railways are laying off men. They need the traffic, our terminal men require this work, and the sooner Canadian freight is handled by Canadians in Canada, the sooner will more of our people find employment. The Canadian railways should increase their proportion of through freight rates with United States railways. I submit to the Minister of Railways and Canals that is one of the most important policies in connection with the transportation problem in the Dominion of Canada. It is absolutely necessary for Canada to find markets for her products and to increase her foreign trade in order to cure unemployment. This can best be accomplished within the empire, with the assistance and cooperation of Britain. The influence and benefit of trade must be considered fairly in all its ramifications, and not only from a manufacturing viewpoint. The handling of imports as well as exports provides work and increases business, and in some cases much more labour is employed in handling imported commodities from the seaboard to the consumer than would be used to manufacture the same commodities in Canada. The use of Canadian raw materials and the amount of labour employed should be the yardstick of tariff protection.

I am going to issue on the floor of the house a warning in connection with protection. If the manufacturers of Canada seek and procure increased protection from the government, then the government—and this thought applies to every administration—should procure from the protected Canadian manufacturers the assurance that they will consider and put into practice the purchase of Canadian materials for every branch of their operation. Protected Canadian manufacturers should realize that the responsibility lies with them to protect and to give to Canadian labour every advantage of their protection. In this I mean not only the labour that is employed in turning out their own product, but the Canadian labour that is employed or that it is possible to employ in the production of every article that is used in their industry. My contention is that many Canadian manufacturers are free traders when they are purchasing the materials that enter into the products of their factories and protectionists when they are selling the products of those factories to the Canadian public. I am not making in this house statements that I am not in a position to verify and I state emphatically that the perspective of many Canadian manufacturers is narrow and selfish; it is anti-Canadian and diametrically opposed to the policy they themselves advocate. They wish to help with employment, if they can use men profitably in their own industry, but they do not give a thought to the number of Canadians who could obtain work if they purchased as much Canadian material as possible on equal terms from other Canadian manufacturers and producers.

I agree with the Prime Minister that this is a time for action; it is a time for sane, logical and consistent action. The republic to the south of us has made it harder and harder for us to get the products of our farms and factories into their country, yet the Canadian manufacturers continue to play into the hands of United States industry. Like the Prime Minister I feel that it is a time for plain speaking and clear thinking as to the economic policy of this country and its political effect, particularly as regards Great Britain and the empire of which we are proud to form a part. First let us put our own house in order, then let us strengthen the empire so that we can in part, and as a whole, formulate a policy that will promote the interests of the British commonwealth of nations, if necessary against the rest of the world.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, unemployment will cease only when our trade increases. I have endeavoured to place before this house three definite ways in which employment of labour in Canada can be increased. Within the empire we have every product and commodity that is required by the people of the empire to trade. Britain is a naturally industrial and trading country; Canada has vast resources but is immature, and will naturally be so for many years to come until our population is capable of consuming a greater proportion of the product of our industries and until our population is so distributed as to lessen the distances that exist between populated centres. Our policies will have to be worked out slowly. No one has more confidence in the future of Canada than I, but we are not quite in a position to dictate to Great Britain what she shall do, and certainly we should not attempt it as long as we rely on the British navy to protect our overseas commerce. I believe in Canada as being all-important in service and strength to the empire. Our population is made up of descendants of the two great peoples of the world, the British and the French, and we are capable of leading the way within the empire. The union of the United States on one side and the progress of soviet Russia on the other is forcing an economic alliance of the countries of Europe. A lowering of trade restrictions between the countries of Europe will mean a further decrease of Canadian trade with these countries. As a Canadian citizen and a member of this house I state emphatically that it is the essential duty of this government to have ready to submit at the economic conference to be held in Ottawa this coming summer, definite proposals that will be acceptable to Great Britain and the other parts of the empire, for the increase of trade within ourselves.

I submit that the Prime Minister will have to change the attitude he adopted at the London conference, and I suggest that he adopt the attitude of the Hon. Charles Dunning when he said, in part:

> We do not intend to meet the other countries of the British commonwealth of nations in a spirit of petty bargaining, but rather in a broad spirit of willingness to become in ever increasing measure good customers to those who treat us in like manner. This is the spirit in which we desire to meet all nations, but we believe that within the British commonwealth of nations lies the greatest measure of opportunity for development of trade, because of our common heritage, kindred institutions and a common patriotism.

A man who considers his own interest and his own interest alone, seldom succeeds; never over the long run, and it is not otherwise with nations.

With all the emphasis that I can express I desire to say that it is the bounden obligation of the present government to make sure that the economic conference to be held in Ottawa during the coming summer will be productive of ways and means whereby we can solidify the British Empire in trade as well as in sentiment.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, I am taking part in this debate in the belief that it is necessary for each member of the house to bring to the attention of the government the situation as he sees it in his own constituency so that conditions in all parts of the country may be placed before the government. Everybody realizes that we are going through difficult times. No one I think blames any particular party in Canada for that. Parties may be to some extent responsible but we have a world-wide condition that must also be considered, and we must realize that no party can solve in a few days the difficulties which confront us. During the election campaign last July many of the electors in Canada I believe supported Conservative candidates in the various provinces on account of the pledges that were given at that time by leaders of the Conservative party. The people realized that Canada was in much the same position as some of the other countries in the world, and they believed that the promises that were made by the leaders of the Conservative party throughout Canada would be carried out. Instead of going over many of the promises that were made to the electors in my constituency, I should like to give in a sentence or two some of the representations that were made by the Conservative party's candidates in appealing to the voters of that constituency.

This is an advertisement that appeared in the press: "Bennett will win on July 28. Why? He will sell Canada's wheat crop. He will solve the unemployment situation. He will build a highway across Canada. He will keep Canadian trade for Canada and make employment for your sons and daughters." Just what influence that advertisement may have had on the electors of the constituency I do not know, but I believe that it had considerable. In any event the electors there were entitled to take at their word those who were responsible for that advertisement and expect that those pledges would be carried out. I want to deal for a moment with some of those pledges and see what has been done by the government of the day to carry them out.

We have looked in vain for any move on the part of the government that will sell Canada's wheat crop. We in the west who are dependent upon wheat have not been able to see that the government of the day has done anything to assist in disposing of our wheat crop. We still have our wheat, and we have not found a market for it. There is possibly an intimation in the speech from the throne that something along that line is going to be done. The speech in one paragraph says:

> My government has explored the origins of our difficulties and is firmly of the belief that many of our problems do not arise out of world-wide depression, but are antecedent to it; and that domestic factors have also largely determined the degree of economic distress from which this country is suffering.

That may mean that the government believe that they have found a solution for some of those difficulties. The speech from the throne also says:

> My ministers have had under anxious consideration the means by which an orderly marketing of the wheat crop of western Canada may be assured, and have already taken such effective action towards that end as the circumstances appear to justify. My ministers are aware that changing conditions in the world's markets may necessitate further intervention by my government, which is prepared to render whatever additional assistance may be deemed advisable in the national interest.

That, I say, contains an intimation that something will be done to enable Canada to dispose of her wheat, but up to the present time we fail to see that anything has actually been done. Wheat is to-day at almost its lowest price. I note by the Monthly Review of the Wheat Situation, a publication which is gotten out by the Department of Trade and Commerce, the following:

> The record low price of 54½ cents a bushel for December No. 1 northern wheat established on the 18th of November was repeatedly broken in the final month of the year, and a new extreme low of 50 cents a bushel was established on the morning of December 27th. December cash closing prices were consistently and substantially under the lowest daily closing November quotations after the first ten days of the month.

I note by to-day's Toronto papers that No. 1 northern wheat is quoted on the Winnipeg grain exchange at 59¾ cents a bushel. The freight rate from my constituency is 17 cents a bushel, which would make that wheat worth to-day 42¾ cents a bushel and that is for No. 1 northern. Now there is only a small percentage of No. 1 northern that goes on to the market. Most of the farmers have to depend on No. 2 or No. 3 wheat, and those grades bring lower prices. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) in his address the other day gave a statement of the cost of producing wheat on the western prairies, and according to the figures that he put on Hansard the cost of producing wheat in western Canada to-day is around one dollar a bushel. Now it is imposible for the farmer, even if he had all No. 1 northern, to live when he gets a price of only 42¾ cents a bushel for it. No steps have been taken by this government to see that a better price shall go to the producer.

Coming closer home, one of the best farmers in my constituency of Swift Current, a man who keeps books and a record of his transactions from year to year, gave me a statement of his operations during the year 1930. This man has a farm of 1,120 acres, of which 885 acres are under cultivation. He had 250 acres under summer fallow, the balance being in crop, about 635 acres. That land cost him $24,005; that is the capital cost. He has machinery and equipment that cost him $8,982. His operations last year on that 635 acres gave him a little over 8,000 bushels of wheat. He sold that 8,000 bushels for $3,324.62. He took an actual loss on his operations, without figuring interest on his investment and excluding interest and depreciation on his equipment, of $1,047.67. He paid $490 for labour; $1,320 for household expenses, groceries, fuel; $954.30 for gasoline and oil; $687.99 for taxes and insurance; and his feed and seed cost $920. That gave him a net loss at the price that he got for his crop of $1,047.67. If we figured interest on his investment at 5 per cent and 15 per cent for depreciation of equipment he took a loss last year of $3,594.97. Farming cannot continue in that way. I say nothing has been done to help Canada sell her wheat crop or to enable the wheat producer to get into any other line of business. Yet we were told from one end of Canada to the other, and particularly throughout the west, that steps would be taken immediately to see that Canada's wheat crop was sold. We thought that something would have been done at the Imperial conference. The move that was made by the former administration when it brought down the budget last May constituted an endeavour to sell Canada's wheat. That administration realized that Canada could find a market for her wheat only in Great Britain. They endeavoured to bring down a budget that would enable Canada to dispose of it there. Everyone in Canada I believe had hopes that when the Prime Minister went to the old country he would go there in an endeavour to deal with the British people in such a way that we would find a market. What was the result, however? A number of quotations have been made in this debate as to the attitude of the Prime Minister when he was in Great Britain. Quotations have been made from English newspapers. Those publications appeared some time ago. There are however papers other than those quoted which referred to the attitude of the right hon. gentleman. For instance the Manchester Guardian argues:

> To have treated Bennett's offer as a basis for bargaining would have done more harm to good-will within the empire, than any brusque remarks by Philip Snowden or Thomas could ever do.
> "It is said that these were only Mr. Bennett's first terms, and that if the principle had been accepted we might eventually have done a deal with him, as though we were buying a horse or he selling one," the Guardian continues. "But Mr. Bennett began negotiations by declaring that he would not consider any proposal to lower Canadian tariffs on manufactured articles for the benefit of British industry."

The London Daily News contains the following:

> At great length the Canadain premier professed indignation because a British minister described the Canadian preference offer as "humbug." The Canadian press described it in much more vulgar terms than that and called it a fraud. Even Stanley Baldwin, Bennett's patron saint, as soon as he discovered the worthlessness of the offer, was reduced to silence. Mr. Bennett must be very simply constituted. If he imagines that any intelligent Englishman would be deluded by a proposal that we should tax our food in return for Canada's generosity in putting another tiny brick on her tariff wall against foreign imports and keeping the wall at the same effective height against British goods—if that proposal is not humbug, what is it? The Dominion premiers like to claim the right to speak plainly and like to exercise it. They should be able to keep a stiff upper lip when an English statesman for once in a way speaks plainly to them.

The Daily Herald contains the following:

Mr. Bennett has no call to be so angry with Mr. Thomas. He was unwise enough to put forward as a serious offer to Britain, a proposal which would have been not of the least practical value, and to ask for a heavy sacrifice. In return Thomas has bluntly called this "humbug." The language is strong but the judgment is correct. The Canadian premier, who speaks bluntly enough himself on occasions, should not mind, do not once, having been the cause of bluntness in others. He might, indeed, have been himself profitably plainer on this particular occasion.

The article continues:

He says if his proposals are contemptuously rejected, Canada will reply by embracing other means at hand of further strengthening her economic position in the world. That sounds very much like a threat. Frankly, the use of threats does not seem a very hopeful way of promoting imperial unity but if it is a threat, let it be a plain one; do not let us have Mr. Bennett stalking round darkly, muttering vague hints that unless we do as he tells us he will do something or other that Britain will not like. Not only the people of this country, but the people of Canada, are entitled to know what these thundercloudy phrases mean.

Then, several members of parliament discussed the attitude of Mr. Bennett before that conference. We know this, however, that no matter how the British people were approached by the Prime Minister, apparently nothing has been accomplished; there has been no market found for our wheat; the wheat is still on our hands and we have no more chance of disposing of it than we had on the 30th of July last.

I have quoted to the house remarks credited to English editors. Let us however come closer to our own home. We notice that during the past few months one of our Canadian publications has been most assiduously publishing biographs of present cabinet ministers. The same writer, writing in the Commonweal of New York in the issue of January 21, is quoted as follows—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask hon. members, and particularly those on my right at the present time, to refrain from loud conversation when an hon. member is addressing the house. Such action is not fair to anybody.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I quote:

Mr. Bennett, departing for Britain, expressed confidence in his mission, and up to the very end, when the failure of the conference became clear to all, faith existed that somehow he would induce the British government to purchase the bulk of the dominion's wheat surplus. Mr. Bennett within the restricted ground of his "Canada first" policy, undoubtedly did his best. His offer to the British people of a preference in Canadian markets, based upon a 10 per cent increase in the duties upon all foreign products, was sincere. The weakness of the plan, so far as the British people were concerned, was that while it involved a guarantee that the British would buy Canada's wheat, there was no corresponding guarantee that the Canadian people would buy British goods. On the contrary, the actual position was that, taking account of the tariff increases imposed by the special session of the Canadian parliament, the barriers against British goods were higher than before.

In the circumstances, Canadian opinion did not greatly blame Britain for rejecting the Bennett plan.

Then, further down in the same article I find the following:

So Mr. Bennett has returned to a Canada which has still some 250,000,000 bushels of unsold wheat, which has an acute unemployment problem, and whose declining revenues threaten an enormous deficit at the close of the fiscal year. The weakness of his position is that, like Mr. Hoover in the United States, he took office on a platform of prosperity. Mr. Bennett, electioneering told the Canadian people that failure to market the western wheat crop and prevalence of unemployment were the fruits of the Liberal ministry of Mr. King. After four months in office, and despite millions voted for unemployment relief, unemployment is still acute, and the wheat of the west remains unsold.

Even after that conference we of the west still hoped that something would be done. Towards the close of the year the newspapers throughout Canada, and particularly those of the west, heralded the visit of the Prime Minister to Regina. Through the press we were told that he was going to bring some sort of policy to the people of the west which would give us help. Everybody looked forward with hopefulness to that meeting on December 30 in the city of Regina. I believe interest was as great in all parts of the west concerning the visit of the Prime Minister as it was in my particular district. People who were not able to go to Regina to hear the speech drove miles where necessary, to hear it over the radio. We expected that we were going to hear something. I had the opportunity of listening to that address, and while it did not convey very much to me because there was nothing very definite as to the policy or plan which would be followed, nevertheless I still had hopes that the Prime Minister had something in mind which he was not in a position fully to divulge at the moment.

On January 2, I received a letter from one of my constituents, a great admirer of the right hon. Prime Minister, in which he addresses me as follows:

Beaver Flats, December 31, 1930.

Mr. C. E. Bothwell, K.C.,
Federal Member for Swift Current.

Dear Sir:

We listened with interest to Mr. R. B. Bennett last night at Regina, and we want to be among the first to take advantage of his scheme to get into diversified farming. As you will no doubt have the particulars please let us have application forms and particulars.

Also could you tell us about the federal farm loan board or what you call it.

How about a job taking 1931 census?

This ought to be a happy New Year. Let us hope so.

I replied to that letter telling him that I did not know what this proposal was that Mr. Bennett had made in Regina on December 30, any more than he did. The only information I had was what I was able to gather over the radio, but I gave him an answer in connection with the farm loan board and told him at the same time that I was writing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) to find out what this scheme was. I directed the following letter to Hon. Mr. Weir—

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, I think we might conform to parliamentary practice. It is against the rules of the house to refer to any member of the house by name; he should be referred to by his constituency.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I should have referred to the hon. gentleman as the Minister of Agriculture. However, the letter refers to Hon. Mr. Weir. It is addressed as follows:

Swift Current, Sask.,
January 2nd, 1931.

The Hon. Robert Weir,
Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:

The Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, in his address in Regina on the 30th ultimo intimated that a scheme had been worked out for enabling farmers of the west to get into diversified farming through governmental assistance.

That was the way I understood the Prime Minister's address.

I have a letter from one of my constituents to-day, Walter Smith of Beaver Flats, Saskatchewan, stating that he listened to Mr. Bennett"s address over the radio and he wants to be among the first to take advantage of the scheme. In his letter he mentions that I will, no doubt, have the particulars and he wished me to advise him just what the scheme is, and forward to him the necessary application forms.

I would be glad to have any information you can give me in this connection so that I can advise Mr. Smith.

That letter was written on January 2. On January 14, a letter was written to me by the Minister of Agriculture as follows:

[Mr. Bothwell.]

Assistance to farmers in the nature of seed grain, etc., I understand, will be made through the machinery of the provincial government as they are closer to the problem and will save the Dominion government a good deal of expense in duplicating machinery.

I hope hon. members listened to the reading of my letter and the reading of the letter in reply from the Minister of Agriculture. There is not a single word in that reply with reference to the questions which I asked. However, the minister stated that he understood that assistance in the nature of seed grain would be made through the machinery of the provincial governments. I wanted to know then what the provincial government knew about this plan which had been announced by the Prime Minister, so I wrote to Regina. The provincial legislature was then in session and a question was put on the orders of the day in order to find out what they knew about the situation. This was the question:

Have arrangements been made by the federal government with the provincial government in connection with implementing the promise made by the Hon. R. B. Bennett, in his address at Regina on December 30, 1930, of assistance to farmers in securing seed grain, etc.?

The answer was:

Discussions have taken place between members of the Dominion government and the provincial government regarding seed grain, and information is being asked for rural municipalities in order that appropriate action may be taken.

So still I had no information. To-day, Mr. Speaker, a question was asked of the Prime Minister as to how this finance company, or whatever it is to be called, was getting along, but apparently as yet it is not functioning, and we do not know whether or not it ever will function. In any event, if I understood correctly the answer given on the floor of the house to-day, there has been no relief of any kind given to any farmer at any place in Canada under the scheme announced by the Prime Minister last December. As a matter of fact, I believe that speech was made by the right hon. gentleman following a speech made by Mr. Beatty in London, Ontario, on December 5, when Mr. Beatty said:

To me, an unprejudiced and unofficial but not disinterested observer, it seems indisputable the Dominion government should not hesitate to intervene with an offer of assistance as a national public duty. In recent years assistance, as I have indicated, has been given in one way or another for the removal of disabilities of manufacturing interests, of the dairy and fruit farmers of the east and British Columbia, and of the maritime provinces. More recently direct financial aid has been provided for unemployed workers. Special provision for the farmers of the west, suffering from difficulties which they could not foresee nor avoid, should be regarded by other groups in the country as a simple act of justice.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, although we had the definite promise that the Conservatives would sell our Canadian wheat, they went to the conference and fell down. We had the announcement in Regina on December 30 of last year that some assistance would be given to the west right away, but outside of some seed grain and possibly some gasoline provided through the municipalities there has been no relief of any kind, so far as I know, given to the west other than what assistance they received under that $20,000,000 unemployment relief bill. In that connection, I do not know but what the position to-day is worse than it was before the $20,000,000 was voted. It seems to me it is going to be impossible for the municipalities of the west to carry through such unemployment schemes again. Any person who observed the public works that were being carried on last winter under the scheme must have come to the conclusion that the municipalities could have done the work just as efficiently and as well for the amount of money they themselves were spending, without the assistance which was granted by the provincial or federal governments. That added assistance was simply being used by the workmen in order, shall I say, to lie down on the job. The work did not progress as it should. I believe it would have been cheaper for Canada if the unemployed had been put on direct relief instead of working under that Unemployment Relief Act.

I did not and do not now object to the appropriation of $20,000,000; I believe it to be the duty of this government to take steps to remedy the unemployment situation in Canada. If this cannot be done by governmental policies, then it will be necessary to do it by appropriations, because we cannot allow people in Canada to starve when we have all kinds of food in the country. However, realizing the difficulty with which the west is faced; with the western premiers coming down to Ottawa; with farmer organizations from one end of the country to the other sending in resolutions and with deputations of farmers coming to Ottawa pleading with the government to fix the price of wheat, why was not something done? They did not hesitate in 1917 and 1918 to peg wheat prices. They did not hesitate then when it was in the interests possibly of other people to handle our wheat. We do not know yet whether the allies got the benefit of the reduced price or whether the government got it. None of the questions asked on the orders of the day have been answered. Ever since I have been in the house my experience has been that most of the questions asked on the orders of the day, in the course of routine proceedings, would have been answered. To-day, if you ask a minister the simplest kind of question he says, "Put it on the order paper"; and we have not been able to receive answers to important questions asked in this house, any more than I was able to get answer to the questions which I submitted on January 2. It is time that hon. members in this house brought forcibly to the attention of the government the situation which Canada is in at the present time, and demanded some action. We believe it is the duty of this government to fix the price of wheat if they cannot do anything else. Are they not in a position to enable us to sell our wheat at fair prices after we have contributed to the manufacturers from one end of the country to the other since the inception of these tariff regulations? Surely they cannot expect us after that to go down to defeat in the west and abandon that country just because, in a year or two of stress, the government will not come to our assistance and fix a price.

Last winter, organizations of various kinds throughout western Canada held meetings at different points, and I myself have a record of forty-three different meetings held in the constituency of Swift Current. Resolutions were passed at these meetings. I did not attend any of them with the exception of a board of trade meeting at Swift Current; but as I say, at all these meetings resolutions were adopted and forwarded to the government. I received copies of them—resolutions from boards of trade, village and rural councils, farmers' organizations and so on. Let me quote one resolution which was adopted at Pennant, Saskatchewan, on December 17, 1930, requesting that certain things be done:

1. That the federal government guarantee a minimum fixed price of wheat for this year's crop at one dollar ($1) per bushel f.o.b. Fort William.

2. That a board of standards be set up whose duty it will be to arrive at a proper relationship between the price which the farmer has to pay for the commodities which he purchases and the price which he receives for the commodities which he has to sell.

3. That we urge the nationalization of currency and credit.

4. That we demand a moratorium until such time as proper adjustments have been made.

5. That the legal rate of interest at 7 per cent as set out in the Bank Act be enforced, and that no one shall be allowed to charge higher than the legal rate of interest.

6. That the federal government, in conjunction with the provincial governments, institute a form of crop insurance.

7. That we ask for the nationalization of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the re-valuation of the Canadian National.

8. That we continue our efforts to secure for the growers 100 per cent control of the marketing of their products; first, by demanding that a grain marketing act, as suggested by the wheat pool, be placed on the statutes; secondly, that a primary products act be placed on the statutes.

This is the type of resolution which was passed at each of these forty-three meetings. The resolutions vary in some respects, but so far as I know there has never been received, from any member of the government, an answer to a single one of these resolutions forwarded here since December last. I cannot tell to whom the various resolutions were sent, but I have copies of them. They were directed to the attention of the government but there have been no replies.

Now, we are immersed in spring work at this season of the year and the farmers have been looking for some information from the government. They wish to know what they are to do. They do not know whether or not to seed a crop. The weather conditions are not propitious, and in any event they are taking a chance in sowing a crop. Surely, then, they are entitled to some encouragement from the government of the day in order that they may react favourably, so to speak, to the weather conditions as they are. But they can get no information. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that a number of these questions that are asked on the orders of the day should be answered without our having to wait for replies through the ordinary publications of the house. These questions should be answered on the floor of the house; they are questions that concern the farmers throughout the west. Hon. members desire to send information to their constituents but they cannot do so, and it matters not whether you go to the department or ask questions on the floor of the house, you do not seem to be able to obtain any information.

I have here a letter written on April 2, and in this connection I wish the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) were in his place to hear it. I should not like hon. members of this house to believe that the conditions throughout the west are as the hon. member for Marquette would have us understand. The letter in question is dated, at Swift Current, Saskatchewan, April 2, 1931, and is addressed thus:

[Mr. Bothwell.]

Hon. R. J. Manion,
Minister of Railways, Ottawa.

Hon. J. A. Merkley,
Minister of Railways, Regina.

C. E. Bothwell, K.C., M.P., Ottawa.
Hon. W. W. Smith, M.L.A., City.

Re-South Saskatchewan Railway and Traffic Bridge and Southwestern Saskatchewan Development

Honourable Gentlemen:

Adverting to our previous resolutions a memorandum of which is enclosed; and as the estimates will soon be up for consideration at Ottawa and in view of the continuation of present depressed condition of agriculture, labour and business, it is imperative that some projects be undertaken in this city and district to relieve the unemployment situation, augment the circulation of money, bring about needed facilities and maintain a spirit of confidence and encouragement of our people to say nothing of absolute want and poverty of a very great section of our people. Our board most urgently request that further relief of some kind be found as other relief measures are now exhausted being only temporary relief and that now larger projects must be undertaken to enable people to earn a livelihood and at the same time afford the district and city service facilities that will be of use for all time.

The letter goes on to refer to railway construction works that should be proceeded with, such as are indicated in the resolutions that were sent down and in the correspondence alluded to in the letter. I wish to bring this matter to the attention of the government in order that they may realize, if they have not already done so, that the situation in the west is indeed serious and that it is time something was done to encourage the people in that part of the country, especially at this time of the year when they feel that, if they are to have anything to live on this winter, they must put in a crop. They are entitled to the information they require if they are to realize out of their crop enough to pay expenses.

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): In discussing the speech from the throne and the amendment thereto proposed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) I am not unmindful that Canada is going through one of the severest world-wide economic depressions she has ever known—this in spite of the fact that during the last election campaign Conservative candidates in the eastern townships of Quebec claimed that this depression was due entirely to the administration of the late government. I do not wish for one moment, Mr. Speaker, that you should consider me a pessimist. I am not in the least a pessimist. I know that of all countries in the world Canada, with all its troubles, is possibly best off at the present time. With our undeveloped natural resources; with our hard-working, thrifty, kind-hearted population; with our increasing gold production and our enormous mining possibilities, to say nothing of our agricultural areas, which are second to none, we shall emerge from this crisis as we have emerged from similar situations in the past; and I am perfectly satisfied that when we get out of this depression conditions in Canada will be better than they have ever been before.

As to my own section of the country, I believe, notwithstanding the general depression that exists there also, and especially in Sherbrooke, that we are possibly better off than any place else in Canada. In my remarks, therefore, what I wish to prove is that the promises made during the last election campaign by the Conservative party have not been kept, and that the way in which the present government is handling the affairs of the country is retarding the comeback into our regular stride. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and other hon. members of this house have shown where these policies might carry us in our empire relations, but I want to show this house how the policies of the present government have affected my own constituency in southern Quebec.

I am not a protectionist Liberal, as most people say I am, nor am I a free trade Liberal, as others think I am, but I believe that free trade is just as bad for Canada as is the present high protection. The only policy which will benefit this country in the long run, or even at the present time, is one which is between the two extremes, one on a par with the old Liberal policy.

Mr. DUPRE: That is what we are doing.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. HOWARD: I think credit is due to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) for his sincerity, because I believe he is sincere in his ideas of what is best for Canada. But I do think, and I shall attempt to prove my argument in the short time at my disposal, that his policies are detrimental both to my own section and to Canada as a whole. The present government is in power for two reasons: First, because of the extraordinary unemployment situation which existed, and second, the falling prices of farm products, which prevailed at the time of the elections. I will not quote the many promises made by the Prime Minister, but I do want to refer to some remarks he made at a meeting held in my home town. The following is a quotation from the paper which supported the present government during the last elections, the Sherbrooke Daily Record, and I would particularly call the attention of the house to it:

> What is the use of advertising in the town paper that John Smith is sick, without sending for the doctor? Send for the doctor. He is the Conservative party.

The following is a remark made by the Prime Minister at that same meeting:

> Canadians want the right to work and when a government fails to correct the causes of unemployment over which it has control that government can justly be charged with negligence.

The other Sherbrooke paper, La Tribune, which supported the Liberal party, in reporting that same meeting said:

> We wish to call a special session to put an end to these conditions, because the people want work and not doles.
> Mr. Bennett: Exactly. What you want is work and not a conference. I am not making you pledges, lightly. Should I not keep them, I ask the members who you elect to withdraw from me their support.

This meeting was reported to have been attended by about 12,000 people. It was held in the 54th armouries, which is situated in the centre of the industrial section of Sherbrooke. The Prime Minister then became more brave, walked to the front of the platform, pointed in the direction of one of the industries, and said: "I know I am speaking within a stone's throw of some of the finest industries in Canada; I know that those industries are on short time, and if I am elected on July 28, within thirty days the men, women and children will be going back to those industries and getting the work they should get." Mr. Speaker, two hundred and sixty-two days have expired instead of thirty and the situation is worse than it has ever been.

In the city of Sherbrooke there are 42 industries. Without taking particular examples, I desire to give the house certain information in connection with twelve of the main industries in the city of Sherbrooke.

In 1930, one of our specialty steel companies employed 125 hands, and on February 15, 1931, their employment had dropped to 100 hands.

Our largest steel manufacturing industry employed 488 hands in July of 1930; in February of this year, their payroll had dropped to 400.

One of our cotton industries employed 363 hands in July, 1930, while to-day they are employing only 323.

Another specialty steel industry employed 150 as against 125 to-day.

Another company's payroll dropped from 70 to 58.

Another large steel company was employing 119 hands only fifteen days before the last election, and on February 15 last, they were employing only 27; from 119 to 27.

A rubber company dropped from 80 to 65 and another machinery company from 30 to 10.

A silk company employing 490 in July of last year was employing that number in February of this year but it was working on shorter hours. The same would apply to other companies.

From the date of the elections to the present day there has been a decrease in employment affecting 321 hands. Most important of all, these same industries have dropped from 149,174 weekly hours to 106,904, or a slackening off of 42,270 hours per week. Figured at the ordinary price paid for labour, that represents a shrinkage in the payroll of 12 out of a total of 42 industries, amounting to over $12,000 per week. In other words, over $12,000 per week less money is being paid out to-day in the city of Sherbrooke than was being paid when the promises were made by the present Prime Minister that the unemployment situation would be cured.

In another section, close to Sherbrooke, where is produced one of the articles of which Canada boasts of controlling a large percentage of the world's supply, the candidates stated on all the hustings that because Mr. R. B. Bennett was connected with the big business men of Canada he would supply with his friends the necessary capital to put these mines on their feet as they had never been before. I do not intend to discuss this situation because the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) will probably do so, but in Thetford Mines to-day they are producing asbestos at the lowest rate ever prevailing since the Conservatives were last in power. More than that, in the town of Black Lake, not one single mine is operating and the asbestos industry is practically ruined in that section.

If the Prime Minister were in his seat I would direct his attention to the statement he made yesterday on the floor of this house. He said that he would never consent to unemployment insurance, but I say to-night that if the manufacturers of Canada have to take on unemployment insurance in the near future they can date the cause back to the present government's attitude towards the needs of this country.

I have every respect for the hon. Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson); he is a personal friend of mine, but I say that the Minister of Labour of the government of Canada has no right to be anywhere else than in a seat on the floor of this house. In view of the present conditions prevailing he should stand up and tell us what he intends to do.

Another cause of our defeat during the last campaign was the drop in agricultural prices, and in this connection I would like to give a few comparisons. The first thing the eastern township agriculturist has to sell is stock. I do not mean paper stock; I mean live stock. The prices on the 15th day of July, 1930 and on March 1 of this year in the town of Lennoxville, the marketing centre next to Sherbrooke in the eastern townships, were as follows:

Live stock	Prices paid July 15, 1930 per pound cents	Prices paid March 1, 1931 per pound cents	Decrease per pound cents
Fat steers. .	6 to 8	4 to 5½	2 to 2½
Fat cows . .	4 to 6	2 to 3½	2 to 2½
Fat heifers .	5 to 7	3 to 4½	2 to 2½
Canners. . .	2½ to 3	1 to 1½	1½
Veal calves .	8 to 10	5 to 7	3
Drinkers . .	4 to 5	2 to 3	2
Hogs. . . .	9 to 10	5 to 6	4
Sows. . . .	7½ to 8	4 to 5	3½
Lambs. . . .	7 to 9	4½ to 6½	2½
Sheep. . . .	4½ to 5½	2 to 3	2½

Let it be remembered that this year in the month of March we should be getting a fairly decent price for these products, and I am comparing them, I think not unreasonably, with summer prices.

An hon. MEMBER: Will the hon. member say where he is quoting the prices?

Mr. HOWARD: At Lennoxville. I have the prices also at Montreal, but we are in the eastern townships and our centre is Sherbrooke.

The next thing the agriculturist has to sell is his butter. This famous article comprised one of the big arguments during the election campaign. We were told that the reason why the price of butter had fallen to the price it was on the 15th day of July last was that there was no tariff against butter and we were allowing New Zealand and Australian butter to come into the eastern townships. The farmers fell for this, but they have now changed their opinion; they have read the newspapers and they know what they are receiving to-day. The price the farmer was getting for his butter was as follows:

Per pound February, 1930	Per pound February, 1931
37 cents	28 to 30 cents

That is a decrease of nine cents per pound. Again, the winter price is the high price of butter and I am going to give you the comparison with the price last July, at the time of the election when the price was 27 cents per pound. The Sherbrooke Pure Milk Company at the present time are selling pasteurized butter of the very finest quality in Sherbrooke at 30 cents per pound. I notice in to-night's paper a drop of one cent a pound, and I hesitate to predict what the price will be in the next summer season. This is with a duty of 8 cents a pound against New Zealand and Australia and 12 cents a pound against the United States. It seems that the higher they put up the duties, the lower goes the price of butter in the eastern townships. In my section of Quebec, if it were not for the help that is being given to the farming classes by the Taschereau government, our farmers would be practically out of business. Under such conditions, I think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) should, from his place in the house, tell the people of Canada what he proposes to do, either immediately or during the session, to remedy this extraordinary situation.

I come now to the subject of eggs, that little commodity that helps to eke out the family budget. The prices paid to the farmer in the eastern townships for eggs were as follows:

February, 1929	February, 1930	February, 1931
35 to 37 cents	35 to 40 cents	15 to 16 cents

In February, 1931, after six months' administration by the present government, the price of eggs had fallen to 15 cents a dozen, the lowest price they had been for 30 years I shall not attempt to say what the price of eggs will be next summer. Recently I was at Knowlton, in the county of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel), and I met fifty-five farmers from different parts of the county. They did not know what to say when they were getting 15 cents a dozen for eggs, especially when in our part of the country the price of eggs during that time should ordinarily have been 75 cents a dozen. I should like to read this clipping from a paper:

> Brockville, Ont., March 27.—Eggs, fresh eggs, at one cent per egg. That is what one resident of this town paid for five dozen "cackleberries" at Lansdowne, near here, he declared. The retail merchant who sold the eggs said he had bought them from a farmer for ten cents a dozen.

Just a word in regard to the wheat situation. I do not pretend to know everything about the wheat situation, except what I see in the market quotations in the newspapers. The Ottawa Journal of to-day, April 16, 1931, states that the price of No. 1 wheat in Chicago is 66⅛ cents a bushel and in Winnipeg 62⅛ cents a bushel. What does that mean? Canada has the finest No. 1 hard wheat in the world and its price in Winnipeg was never before lower than the price of wheat in any other part of the world, until under the present administration it is now below the price in the United States.

Referring to another situation, I have in my hand pay envelopes from one of our manufacturers in the city of Sherbrooke. Before I place on record these few pay envelopes, I should like to say this: The other day a manufacturer came into my office and made this statement. I call him a genuinely loyal manufacturer, and I pay tribute to many like him. He said "Charlie, we have not reduced our wages yet, but if conditions continue to get worse and worse, the last thing we will do —the thing we hate most to do, but what we shall be obliged to do—is to reduce wages." I have in my hand twenty-two pay envelopes, all showing on them the number of hours' work in a week in one of the factories in Sherbrooke. For a week's work the pay envelopes are as follows:

$4.70; $5; $7.65; $12.35; $11.35; $13.10; $7.70; $9.45; $8.10; $9.20; $13.40; $10.85; $11.60; $9.85; $5.65; $11.50; $8.25; $6.90; $6.90; $10.90; $10; $1.

The total is $195.40, and if we divide this by twenty-two, the number of pay envelopes, the average weekly pay was $8.88. That shows the seriousness of the situation. I do not like to be one of those fellows who say: I told you so; but during the famous short session in which we were going to do such wonders, I made this remark:

> What assurance has the government that more employees will be taken on by the manufacturers? What promises has the government received that the men employed in the industries affected by these tariff changes will be paid at least a decent wage and that the manufacturers will not profit by the plentiful labour market to reduce the present wages?

In closing I said:

> I regret that I fail to see anything in these tariff proposals that will benefit Canadian labour or help solve the unemployment problem.

This is the situation. I should like to ask any hon. gentleman opposite how in the city of Sherbrooke a family, consisting of a husband and wife and five children, with a shrinking pay envelope, can live on $8.88 a week and meet expenses. The situation is terrible. If wages have to be reduced, I do not think it is right to advance the tariff 50, 75 or 100 per cent, and at the same time allow this manufacturer to reduce wages as he has done. I absolutely protest against such administration.

I have covered my last point and that is the reduced purchasing power. The other day I was riding on the train and went into the smoking car where there were six other men discussing that most popular question, the existing situation. They were discussing what this government was doing, what the other government had not done, and so forth, and one of them said, "Can you tell me why, with eggs at 15 cents a dozen and all other farm products at the lowest prices they have been for years, the people do not start to buy and live on these products?" I leave it to any man in this house to say how many eggs or how much lamb or pork or any other food a man with five children and a wife to support could buy with $8.88 for a week's work. Do you know what they have to do, Mr. Speaker?—and I am proud to say that they can do it. They buy a big piece of heavy meat, with the bone in the centre, a piece of extra good quality at the lowest price, and of that they make the most nourishing food, which is soup, and they buy bread and use it without butter, hoping for the time when the Liberal government will be back in power again and men will get at least a living wage.

In case some hon. gentlemen may think that these cases are overdrawn, let me say that I am not speaking of men who started to work only a few weeks ago. A man recently came to my office who had been in the service of a certain company for sixteen years. He was a sober, hard-working, industrious man, and for sixteen years, almost the best part of his life, he had been working for that same concern. He worked fifty-five hours and he drew $15 for a whole week's pay, after sixteen years of faithful service. Before the last election that same man, doing the very same job for the very same company, drew a minimum of from $23 to $25 a week, so there was a shrinkage of $10 a week in his pay since this government came into office. When the previous government was in power he was running two slubbers in a cotton mill; to-day he is running four slubbers at a reduced wage of $10 per week. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that these are things that make one wonder where we are going to get off at.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, speaking in this house the other evening, took a great deal of credit for industries which he said had recently been established in the town of Farnham. Everybody rejoices when new industries come into our towns, especially in the eastern townships; but let us have the facts as they are. One of those industries is a plush factory. It was established in the town of Farnham in 1929, under the administration of my right hon. leader who now sits on this side of the house. Another industry is the big linoleum concern. That was astablished in 1930, before the present government came into power, before it was ever dreamed that it would come into power. The other industry is the silk factory. It is true that that factory in the hon. gentleman's riding is fairly prosperous, but he did not tell this house that this silk company got an increased protection, and reduced the wages of every man 25 per cent. The men went on strike, and they only came back to work two weeks ago Monday at the reduced rate. The enamel industry, the only other industry in that part of the country, was started back in 1922, under the administration of my right hon. leader. My hon. friend had a special way of conducting his campaign. I suppose anybody can conduct his campaign as he sees fit, but speaking at Knowlton he said, "To hell with the national debt, but let us do something for the farmers." I ask him now what has this government done for the farmers of his constituency. My hon. friend stated on every platform in Mansonville, Brome, Knowlton and other places, that the King government was paying only 60 per cent compensation for cattle that had been slaughtered for tuberculosis, and he said that he had the right to say on behalf of the Right Hon. Mr. Bennett that if that gentleman came into power his government would pay the balance of 40 per cent for every cow slaughtered in his constituency. Naturally the farmers voted for him. I would like to ask him if the government have yet paid any of that balance.

Mr. PICKEL: Mr. Speaker, I deny that statement totally, and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. HOWARD: Speaking at Sherbrooke, as reported in the Sherbrooke Daily Record—

Mr. GUTHRIE: A point of order has been raised, Mr. Speaker, and we ask you to decide it.

Mr. HOWARD: I will withdraw, to save time, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HOWARD: The Sherbrooke Daily Record, which supported my hon. friend, which indeed was one of his very best friends, reported my hon. friend as follows—and I ask the members from western Canada on both sides of the house to pay particular attention to this. Speaking at a meeting of the associated boards of trade in Sherbrooke, he said:

The western farmers also came in for considerable criticism. They were termed the greatest menace that the east has to contend with at the present time, and it was the opinion of Dr. Pickel that although everything had been done for them they would never be satisfied.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Do you deny that?

Mr. MOORE (Chateauguay): May I ask a question?

Mr. HOWARD: I did not intend to make the following statement, but as my hon. friend from Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Moore) is on his feet, I will state this: The other night he compared the offices that were being held at the present time by the Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Premier of Quebec, with the offices held by the Prime Minister of Canada, and said that they were exactly the same. But there is this difference. Mr. Taschereau has been doing double work, has been acting as premier and also as provincial treasurer because in the county where he tried to elect his provincial treasurer they turned him down. But when the next election comes in that province, the same man, Mr. Gordon Scott, will run again and will be elected as provincial treasurer. Mr. Taschereau, all honour to him, has been carrying the two portfolios in order to preserve an old tradition, that the provincial treasurer should represent the English protestant minority in that province.

Mr. MOORE (Chateauguay): May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. HOWARD: Turning now to trade figures, our imports have dropped $290,000,000 and our exports have dropped $296,000,000 since this government came into power. For the past six months our trade figures were as follows and I would like to underline this in view of the publicity which the present government has received throughout Canada: The imports into Canada in the six months just ended were valued at $465,000,000 and the exports at only $449,000,000. That is the story, Mr. Speaker.

In closing let me say that the so-called "Canada first" policy of the Prime Minister has increased unemployment in Canada since the election. That same so-called Canada first policy has lowered the prices of agricultural products and in every case has caused injustice to our farmers. That same so-called Canada first policy has placed our Canadian wheat at a price lower than that of the United States. It has decreased Canada's world trade; it has lowered our standard of living and it has lost to Canada some of her very best markets. We have heard a great deal about the money which was granted by this house to help unemployment. I do not wish to be critical. I will do better than that. I promise the government of to-day my co-operation in any scheme they put forward before next spring which will remedy the situation I see coming. Of the money which has been given out at the present time the city of Sherbrooke was to receive $87,500, and two-thirds of $21,000, or $14,000 in direct relief. They have borrowed the money, and taken care of the people, but they have not received one single nickel up to the present time.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about the farmers?

Mr. HOWARD: Now I have a word to say to my hon. friend on the other side of the house, the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré). My first words are to congratulate him on the splendid sentiments he expressed in this house the other day. He said:

I regret the attitude taken recently, and even during the last eighteen months, by a coalition government in one of the western provinces.

Mr. McINTOSH: They call it a cooperative government.

Mr. HOWARD: The quotation continues:

The laws enacted against the French language—one of the two official languages—by the government of Saskatchewan are an insult to the true Canadians established here for fourteen or fifteen generations. It was in the name of God, but in the French language, that first cross was consecrated on Canadian soil. Against these laws I must protest.

As a French Canadian the Solicitor General was voicing his true, honourable sentiments. As an English Protestant Canadian I want to say to-night that those are exactly my sentiments. But then the Solicitor General added these words:

And I hope these will be repealed.

I would like to remind him that to-day he is sitting in the seats of the mighty. If he is sincere in those remarks it is within his power to accomplish his wish and to have those laws repealed. I would like also to suggest to him that one reason why his government is in power to-day may be found in the help they received from Saskatchewan, from the very man who placed that law on the statute books of that province. I want to go one step further and say that the people in Saskatchewan who are fighting the battle, not for the French Canadian but for liberty in Canada, are the Liberals in Saskatchewan.

I will go even further and say that I trust my English speaking friends in Saskatchewan or in any other province in Canada will accord to our French Canadian friends the same fair treatment as the old French province of Quebec has accorded to the English speaking minority in that province.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, since the twelfth day of last month I have listened to about ninety speeches. I am somewhat loath to address the house. My reluctance is not entirely due to diffidence, nor is it attributable to a belief that all has been said which can be usefully said. I find it more interesting to listen. It was not my intention to speak during this debate but my good intentions have yielded to the provocation—or inspiration—of the words which have fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard). He and I have the advantage of coming from a part of the country which, in common with all who have visited it, we believe to be the most beautiful part of the whole Dominion. It is interesting for reasons other than its topography. It is a thumb nail of Canada; with the possible exception of deep sea fishing there is to be found within those half dozen counties the entire range of activity of the whole Canadian people. There lumbering, farming, mining, milling, industry in factories, trade in the shops, finance, and transportation engage the attention of an active and energetic people. Moreover there is in the population a diversity of origin and outlook which makes for nicety and consideration in the relationships between man and man.

My hon. friend from Sherbrooke has spoken of this miniature Canada; he has told us his version of conditions prevailing there. My friendship for the hon. gentleman is not of yesterday, he knows that my feelings for him are both deep and sincere, but I now have for him a feeling of profound commiseration if he believes all he has said to-night, and if he believes that all he has said is all that may be said with regard to conditions in the eastern townships. Mr. Speaker, why does my hon. friend draw a veil over his remarks? Why does he refer to industries and individuals in hazy and indefinite language? For the benefit of the house, and to establish accuracy and truth, I shall endeavour to place upon the record the names of corporations and individuals who to-day are infinitely better off and whose hundreds of employees are better off as a result of the policies of the present government.

[Mr. Howard.]

My hon. friend has told us there is a tool company in Sherbrooke which is not doing much work. That is true. The Rand Drill Company specializes in mining equipment, and unfortunately, due to over-production, the mining industry is not being carried on as actively as it has been in years past. Because there is no demand for mining equipment there is no work for the Rand Drill Company. Is the government to blame for that? My hon. friend has told us there is a cotton mill in Sherbrooke not doing much work. Without doubt he refers to the Sherbrooke Cotton Mills—a large part of whose output is fabric used in the manufacture of automobile tires. Because there is slight activity in the automobile manufacturing industry.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why?

Mr. HOWARD: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HACKETT: Very well.

Mr. HOWARD: Is it not a fact that for two years they have been manufacturing no tire fabric, but are in a new product?

Mr. HACKETT: No, it is not. The Oshawa and Windsor factories are not very active at present, and because this factory specializes in a typical kind of product for which there is a limited demand, at present its employees are on short time. There is also another industry in Sherbrooke known as the Fairbanks Scale Company, whose principal product is scales used in grain elevators. Unfortunately the grain business has not been as thriving for the last year or two as it has been in the past, and the construction of grain elevators is not being carried on. In consequence there is not to-day the demand that there has been in the past for scales. Is the government to blame because the people in the west are not constructing grain elevators?

Mr. YOUNG: Because they cannot sell their grain.

Mr. HACKETT: Because they cannot sell their grain? They cannot sell their grain for the same reason that gentlemen in the east who have been producing newsprint cannot sell their product; they have both been producing for a market which is glutted; they have produced a commodity for which there is no market to-day.

However, my hon. friend was very careful, after mentioning these different industries, not to mention the oldest industry in Sherbrooke, the Paton Mills, one of the very few woollen mills which survived the regime of the government which came into power in 1896. My hon. friend well knows that in this mill, where employment a year ago stood at 40 per cent on the basis of a 55-hour week, it stands to-day at 110 per cent. Two hundred and seventy-five breadwinners of families in the constituency represented by my hon. friend thank God each night for legislation which set the looms in operation in that mill and gave to the wee children of that city the food which they were denied under legislation which obtained until this government came into power.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is the largest industry in Sherbrooke, the Kayser Company, Limited, which employs 800 hands and in which there was the slightest diminution of employment of any industry in Sherbrooke save the one in which my hon. friend is so heavily interested. That industry came back to 100 per cent employment when it got from the September session the additional 5 per cent protection which it said it required. I do not blame my hon. friend; I do not criticise him because another beneficiary of that protection was the Canadian Silk Products Company, of which my hon. friend is an honoured and esteemed shareholder and to whose success his brain and energy have contributed so largely. My hon. friend says he is not a Liberal protectionist or a protectionist Liberal. He is the kind of Liberal who enjoys protection and wanted and got it for the industries in which he has invested his money. When he speaks in Sherbrooke to his own electorate he finds it more stimulating to express the sentiments—I know he entertains them—which marked the end of his speech than to discuss economic and fiscal problems.

I ask my hon. friend to come with me to territory which is quite as familiar to him as it is to me; I ask him to come with me to the county of Stanstead, whence his forebears came. I know him too well to fear that he will deny for one moment that the legislation put on the statute books by this parliament last September gave abundant, generous and life giving employment to a large percentage of the population of that riding. He knows that in Magog, where less than 1,000 hands were employed by the Dominion Textiles Limited, 1,600 people are engaged at the present time, with over-time several nights a week. He knows that in the town of Coaticook the Belding-Corticelli Company is more busily engaged than it has been for years, and he knows why. He knows that in the same town the Neidner Company, which manufactures fire hose now gives generous employment to the inhabitants which it could not give before, and he knows why. He knows that in other towns throughout the eastern townships, including the towns referred to by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) the towns of Drummondville, Actonvale, Granby and St. Hyacinthe, this depression which, as he said, weighs upon the whole world, has brought less trouble and less suffering than it has elsewhere.

I did not intend, Mr. Speaker, and I do not wish, to indulge in a discourse at this time. I have listened to the speeches which have come from hon. gentlemen opposite; they all have been vastly interesting to me. I have found however that many of them were so flavoured with party wine that they intoxicated the speakers, if not the house.

I have listened to criticism, both candid and catholic, which in its range has gone from the meagre notes used by the hon. gentleman who moved the address—I may tell the right hon. gentleman who uttered that criticism that I envy greatly the gentleman who had the notes and I wish I were in his happy position at the present time. That criticism has extended, Mr. Speaker, from the use of notes by a novice away overseas to the members and even mannerisms of one of those who were sent to the Imperial conference. Criticism has even knocked at the door of our ministers to foreign lands. References that have been made in this house to our minister to Great Britain, to our minister to the United States, have not been suited, however intended, to enhance the repute of Canada in those countries. To those who are better versed than I in matters of this kind, such language may seem commendable; but to a neophyte, standing on the threshold of the temple and still charged wtih respect for all who wear his country's livery in a foreign land, it seemed clumsy if not intemperate.

I have listened, Mr. Speaker, to this criticism; I have listened to gentlemen set forth their points of view; I have felt, notwithstanding their sterile criticism, that they are desirous of doing something to alleviate human suffering which, possibly for purposes of debate—and it may be that all sins of that character are not on one side of the house—has been somewhat exaggerated. Just exactly what is to be done to afford employment, and just how unemployment is to be obviated in the future, is a matter which will have to be carefully studied and considered. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that unemployment must be a charge or a partial charge on industry. Just so long as municipalities, just so long as government, just so long as private charity and suffering humanity are to be made to bear the total burden of unemployment, I fear that it will persist.

I believe that we must regulate industry. I believe we must find a plan which will extend over a number of years and give steady employment: employment when there might otherwise be unemployment, and to prevent overwork when work is abundant. Long hours and night shifts are unnatural, and brutalizing. I believe a system of this kind will have to be worked out and legislation enacted to implement it. Just as this Dominion has led the way in other realms, just as it found a way to end industrial disputes, with their ravages both to labour and capital; just as it led the way in the realm of governmental improvement, growth and development—because it was Canada that pointed the way to all other dominions, even the old land itself, to autonomy within the empire—I believe Canada can find a way out of the difficulties of the present day and find a specific which will preclude a recurrence of them.

There is one other subject to which I should like to refer before taking my seat. It may be because of my lack of experience in this house that I marvel that no one has yet referred to it. We have heard much about wheat; we have heard much about the troubles that beset the west; and I may say to hon. gentlemen from the west that we sympathize with them. And I, for one, envy them that organization which makes them vocal when they suffer—equal hardship in the east is not quite so expressive. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to refer very briefly to an aspect of our national life which seems to me worthy of every consideration. I refer to our great national system of transportation. Recently there has been laid upon the table of the house a document called the Annual Report of the Canadian National Railway System. If there is one thing which has contributed more to the financial and fiscal difficulties of Canada, possibly even more than the war itself, it has been the rivalry in the construction and operation of railways. That rivalry, carried on under the smile and even the protection of government, brought about such a chaotic condition that government went into the business of transportation. I know full well that many members in this house will not agree with me; but I am of those who believe that if a government make wise laws and administer them wisely it has fulfilled the principal function of government. I believe that government should not enter competitive business, whether it be liquor, hydro-electric, transportation, or any other of a dozen ventures in which provincial governments are engaged at the present time. Be that as it may, it is well that we in this moment of depression, at a time when we are seeking for means to pay Canada's way, when our estimates have been cut, to use a very trite expression, to the bone, when all public works have been abandoned—it is well, I say, that we should take stock of this enterprise which is making such a terrible drain upon our financial resources.

I find, Mr. Speaker, that the total liabilities of the Canadian Pacific Railway are $950,000,000; I find that the total liabilities of the Dominion of Canada—I am not speaking of the net debt—are $2,544,000,000; I find that the total liabilities of the Canadian National Railway System are $2,870,000,000; I find that the funded debt of this railway, the debt upon which interest is owed to the public, is something over $1,200,000,000; I find that the interest owing to the public, interest that is to be paid annually, is $51,000,000; I find that the interest upon the debt of the Canadian National Railways is over $80,000,000 a year—something over $10,000,000 a year in excess of the total revenue from the income tax in the most abundant year of which we have records. I find from the last departmental report that this debt is forever increasing.

I pause here to lament that these reports should be so difficult to understand. There is a fiscal year for the Dominion government which ends on March 31, and there is a fiscal year for the railways which ends on December 31, and betwixt December 31 and March 31 there is a bedevilment which no ordinary man is able to disentangle or understand. I commend a form of report more simple and better suited to reveal rather than to conceal the facts of the year under review.

I find in the last report which has been laid before the house, the report of March 31, 1930, that the long term debt of the railway for which the government is responsible was increased during that year by some $163,000,000. I find that in 1914 the total debt of the Dominion of Canada amounted to $335,000,000. I find that in seven years the liability of the Dominion of Canada has been increased by nearly twice that amount by reason of the inordinate and lavish expenditure of the Canadian National Railways.

I find in the statute of 1929 authorization for the construction of a passenger station and terminals in Montreal and I find even now that that consuming rivalry which has made such demands upon the fiscal and financial life of our country is about to grab another $100,000,000 for purposes of dubious utility. We find that a passenger station and terminals are to be built in the city of Montreal for the Canadian National Railways within a stone's throw of another railway's passenger station. If Montreal needs a terminal, it needs a union terminal. We know from recent sad experiences that when undertakings of this kind are set afoot they sometimes require more than double the amount anticipated, and while the statute provides for an expenditure of $50,000,000, those who are best informed tell us that this scheme cannot be carried to completion for less than $100,000,000. When this expenditure has been made, not one car will have been added to the carrying capacity of the railways, not one additional passenger will have been found for their carriages, not a penny added to their coffers. We have shut off immigration; we know that passenger traffic is dwindling; we know that automobile and air traffic are impinging upon the erstwhile predominance of locomotive traction and conveyance. All it means is this: that a few passengers may be attracted to that glittering monument from the rival across the way, and that that rival will have to erect a similar edifice to folly to protect itself against the allurements of this child of our statute. Is it necessary?

I for one feel that this matter should be very carefully investigated. Some years ago we were told by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house that the railway committee had not the technical information or knowledge to decide matters of engineering which were essential to the good administration of the railway. That was the reason given for the creation of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and yet this, the largest railway undertaking in eastern Canada, has been embarked upon without reference to that technical organization.

We are told now that a project to girt the island of Montreal with a second and altogether unnecessary line—it may be said that I have no quality to express an opinion, but surely my qualifications are equal to those of the hon. members who passed the legislation —is to come before the Board of Railway Commissioners on the twenty-seventh of this month. To the best of my knowledge, the recently appointed chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners has not yet arrived in the city and the board has not been completed by the appointment of a member from the province of Quebec. In these scant ten days there is no time for preparation of a case against the proposed belt line or for a union station. I for one protest against this unseemly haste. I ask this house: why should we be dragooned into expenditures of ten, fifty or one hundred millions of dollars when money is not available for other purposes which are more urgent? I want to know what useful purpose is to be served by this terminal and by this second belt line. Is it going to reduce the rate on wheat from the west? Is it going to give employment to people in Toronto, in Winnipeg or in Vancouver?

An hon. MEMBER: What about Montreal?

Mr. HACKETT: It may give some employment in Montreal, but my hon. friend must remember, and I am sure that he does, that the curse of such log-rolling has been holding this land in its grip for the last sixty years. Montreal must have a terminal because Toronto has one! and the country must pay the piper. I for one protest against such action. I do not say that the terminal is not necessary, but I want to hear that it is necessary from people who know and who are disinterested and not from people who are interested in supplying materials which are to go into their construction, not from people who may achieve self-glorification from participation in a huge enterprise. It seems to me that this matter should be discussed without undue haste at this particular moment when money is so scarce and when we are taking stock of all our sins of omission as well as of commission. Before it is proceeded with I want to be told by expert opinion, by those who have had time to consider this project, that it is necessary and that a union station is impossible. I have no desire to see the Canadian National Railways subjugated to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have no desire to see the Canadian Pacific Railway subjugated to the Canadian National Railways, nor do I want Canada subjugated to either. If it is necessary, let us call into existence an operating or terminal company, a third and independent entity which would mete out equal justice to all: to the Canadian National, to the Canadian Pacific, to Montreal and to Canada.

On motion of Mr. Nicholson the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Manion the house adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

Friday, April 17, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 28, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (priority of claims).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. HACKETT: There is at present a provision in the Bankruptcy Act which prevents those to whom money is due for commissions earned more than three months before the date of a receiving order from being paid. There is a class of people who sell goods on commission. Under the terms of their engagement they may not receive their commission until the goods have been delivered, and sometimes not until they have been paid for, which is frequently six and nine months after the goods have been sold and the commissions earned. If the employer become a bankrupt before payment of the commission, the salesman has but an ordinary and unpreferred claim for his services. This amendment would enable such people to receive payment by preference of their commissions earned more than three months before the date of a receiving order but not payable until a later date provided that date be within three months of a receiving order. In other words, it puts them in the position of people who have worked for the company within three months of a winding-up order and gives them the same preference.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 29, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This proposed amendment applies only to the province of Saskatchewan. As the house will remember, an agreement was made in the year 1928 under which the administration of the police force in that province was undertaken by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and the object of this amendment is to extend the provisions of the present Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act to certain men of the Saskatchewan police who have been incorporated into the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It is for pension purposes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

CONFERENCE OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS ON INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Before the orders of the day are called, Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the government to an article which appeared in The Mail and Empire of Thursday, April 16, with reference to a riot in the streets of Winnipeg, involving 6,000 unemployed, and disturbances in other centres of Canada. There had been a request that an unemployment insurance bill be put through the legislature, and Premier Bracken replied that:

> A resolution, already passed, favoured the calling of a conference of federal and provincial governments to consider a scheme of unemployment insurance.

I was wondering, in view of this serious situation, whether or not the Prime Minister would give the country an assurance as to whether he intended calling a conference with the provincial governments with a view to putting through an unemployment insurance scheme at an early date.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): In view of the fact that nine years have passed without such a conference having been called, the hon. gentleman might ask himself whether the government should be expected to call a conference while parliament is in session and we have been in power but a few months.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to move the adjournment of the house, as I am entitled to do in view of such an answer as the Prime Minister has given. Let me point out, however, that during the time I was Minister of Labour there were no riots nor bloodshed in any period of unemployment.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: And I still think—

Mr. SPEAKER: Unless the hon. member proposes to address a question to the Prime Minister or to a minister I must rule him out of order.

Mr. HEENAN: Then I will ask for the adjournment of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: For the same reason given to the house on a recent date, I now rule this application out of order, inasmuch as the matter therein referred to has already been discussed by the house and will no doubt be again considered in the course of the debate now proceeding.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will your honour read the motion?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member wishes to move the adjournment of the house to discuss what he describes as a matter of urgent public importance, namely, a report of a riot in Winnipeg.

Mr. HEENAN: Before you give your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I would remind you, sir, that there has not been discussed in the house so far during this session the question of riots in this country. I submit, sir, that this is an entirely new question—

Mr. BENNETT: There were no riots to start with.

Mr. HEENAN: —and therefore I think I have not only a right but a duty to raise the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman may not proceed to make a speech at the moment. My ruling is that the application is not in order, inasmuch as the matter to which reference is made is not one of urgent public importance.

Mr. HEENAN: Will your honour not allow me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order

Mr. BENNETT: There is only one course for the hon. gentleman to take; he may appeal from the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. HEENAN: Will you not allow us to argue a point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman can appeal from the ruling of the chair; there is no other method I know of which he may take.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman must abide by the rules of the house.

Mr. HEENAN: Then, Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to appeal against your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Speaker having decided that the application by Mr. Heenan for leave to move the adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the reported riots of unemployed in Winnipeg and other points in Canada, to be out of order as not being a definite matter of urgent public importance, Mr. Heenan appeals from that decision.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained? And the ruling was sustained on the following division:

REPORTED EMPLOYMENT IN CANADA OF UNITED STATES WORKMEN

THREATENED DEPORTATIONS FROM UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. PARENT (Terrebonne): I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour or of the Acting Minister of Labour to a despatch which appears in the Montreal Gazette of this morning, and which reads as follows:

U.S. Workers Admitted

Rockport Unemployed Claim Unfair Treatment

Brockville, Ont., April 16.—Considerable feeling has been aroused in the Rockport area, in the Thousand Islands, through immigration officials permitting United States carpenters, painters and other tradesmen to enter the country for the purpose of carrying out renovation and improvements to summer homes in the vicinity owned by Americans while Canadian residents of the neighbourhood remained unemployed.

I also wish to draw attention to another despatch which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of yesterday, the 16th instant, and which carries the information that the United States government, in order to protect the interests of its citizens, is taking steps to deport 30,000 French Canadians from the New England states.

The question which I wish to ask is this: Will the Minister of Labour or the Acting Minister of Labour, when the opportunity presents itself, as it apparently does in this Brockville case, retaliate against the United States government by deporting to their own country those painters, carpenters and other tradesmen who appear to be doing work which should be carried on by Canadian citizens.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): This question of the interchange of labour has arisen on many occasions, and the Department of Immigration is working in harmony with the Department of Labour. Whenever a complaint is made, immediate investigation is started and deportation takes place if the evidence is sufficient to warrant deportation. I am happy to state that the relationship along the international boundary even at this time is, I believe, harmonious and the interests of the Canadian workmen are being carefully guarded by both the Labour department and the Department of Immigration.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): The hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Parent) has drawn the attention of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) to a situation that has developed along the border, and in Ontario, I believe. I wish to draw his attention to a similar situation in New Brunswick, which has not developed recently but has been in existence for some years back, and I would ask the minister, when considering the matter brought to his attention by the hon. member for Terrebonne, at the same time to consider the situation as it has developed in the towns of St. Stephen and Milltown in New Brunswick.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): The Department of Labour is always ready to consider any question that may arise at any time along the international boundary or anywhere else that affects the workers of this Dominion.

Mr. VENIOT: I take it, then, that this matter will be considered. Thank you.

BRODHAGEN, ONT., POSTMASTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I desire to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I have in my hand a clipping from the Toronto Globe under date of April 15, containing an interview given William Marchington of the Globe by the Postmaster General. I shall not read it all. It is in regard to the letters and affidavits that were sent out from the Post Office Department to postmasters charged with partisanship during the last election. I would draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the following phrase:

> The letter is addressed only to postmasters accused by sworn statements or affidavits.

I desire to ask the Postmaster General a question with regard to the case of a postmaster in my constituency which I brought up in the house on March 31 last, namely, the postmaster at Brodhagen in South Perth. I would ask the Postmaster General if the letter and affidavit were sent to the postmaster at Brodhagen before any sworn statements were made in regard to his conduct during the election of last summer. I would also ask if there have been any sworn statements made against that postmaster. I would not expect an answer offhand unless the Postmaster General is prepared to give it to me, but I desire to know—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member says that he does not expect an answer offhand. Then why not put the question on the order paper?

Mr. SANDERSON: Would it not be better for the Postmaster General to say whether or not he can answer the question now.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stenographers are supplied for the use of members, and there is no trouble in writing to the minister and getting a reply to such a question.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. SANDERSON: I have directed my question to the Postmaster General in the house, and I await his answer.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): I do not want to make a speech in answer to my hon. friend. I am glad to say, however, that the statement published by the Globe is correct.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is correct?

Mr. SAUVE: Yes, and I am ready to put the letter on the table in the regular way.

Mr. SANDERSON: Will the Postmaster General—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am going to ask another question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member has occupied enough of the time of the house at this stage. If every member present undertakes to ask half a dozen questions on the orders of the day respecting matters that are not of urgent importance, we shall never get on with any business. I must call the hon. member to order.

Mr. SANDERSON: Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that you rule that I have no right to ask another question?

Mr. SPEAKER: My ruling is that the hon. member has asked his question, and that it has been answered. I would therefore ask him to desist from asking further questions on the same subject just now.

Mr. SANDERSON: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that my question has not been answered, that only part of it has been answered.

Mr. SPEAKER: Even so, the minister is not obliged to answer at all. He has seen fit to answer as he has, and the hon. member is obliged to accept that answer.

Mr. SANDERSON: If that is the attitude of the Postmaster General, well and good.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

ORIENTALS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): In view of the fact that a census is about to be taken throughout Canada I would ask the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Manion) if he would seriously consider, in view of the great encroachment of orientals in British Columbia, the advisability of having the census takers ascertain the numbers of orientals who are illegally in the province of British Columbia?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): The question of the illegality of the residence of orientals in British Columbia is a matter for the Department of Immigration rather than for the census takers.

AIR MAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I have a question to direct to the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: Just take your time; the question is coming. And may I say there is an element of wonder in it. Psychologically, it would not be a question if there were not an element of wonder in it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Put the question.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am going to if you give me time. The question does not concern government policies. The question is simply this: Is the air mail service at present enjoyed between the cities of Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon and North Battleford to be discontinued or not? To be or not to be, that is the question.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): The question is under consideration.

Mr. McINTOSH: I want to thank the minister for his reply.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BENNETT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I very much regret being compelled to draw the attention of this house to what I conceive to be a breach of its privileges. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard), speaking in the house last evening, said, as reported at page 674 of Hansard:

> If the Prime Minister were in his seat I would direct his attention to the statement he made yesterday on the floor of this house. He said that he would never consent to unemployment insurance, but I say to-night that if the manufacturers of Canada have to take on unemployment insurance in the near future they can date the cause back to the present government's attitude towards the needs of this country.

No such statement was made by me. On the preceding day, as reported in Hansard at page 631, these words occur:

> They came here this morning to urge upon the government non-contributory unemployment insurance. I told them they would never get it from any government that I had to do with; that is what I told them; I was perfectly frank about it.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke either deliberately or otherwise left out the word "non-contributory." Either he heard what I said in the house or he did not. If he did not hear my statement he must have seen it in Hansard. Therefore either deliberately or otherwise he stated that which is not the fact.

Mr. YOUNG: Inadvertently.

Mr. BENNETT: To my mind the only evidence that it was not inadvertently done would be the fact that possibility of inadvertence has been suggested by my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young). May I say that I can conceive of no greater breach of privilege in this house than a deliberate statement of that character made by an hon. member with respect to the observations on the preceding day of another hon. member.

EMBARGO AGAINST POTATOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Question No. 19, dealing with the embargo placed against Canadian potatoes by the British government has been on the order paper for some time. I would like to ask for information regarding the removal of this embargo against Canadian potatoes.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I direct the attention of the house to the fact that the question is already on the order paper.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Speaker, there are many questions in a similar position to that of the one mentioned by my hon. friend from Prince, and they have not yet been considered.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down; and let us get at it.

Mr. VALLANCE: Hon. members on this side want to get at it.

Mr. SPEAKER: It may be somewhat inconvenient, but I must state that the subject sought to be dealt with is on the order paper and hon. members cannot anticipate such questions by asking them orally.

Mr. MacLEAN: This is a very urgent question.

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. minister wanted to answer it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Thursday, April 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D. Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the house on a resolution which has been debated for something over three weeks one naturally feels that almost everything which could profitably be said has been said. However Canada is a big country and it has many problems. I believe that with the situation now prevailing, economically and socially the most serious which has prevailed for fifty years, it is our duty to explore every phase of the situation as thoroughly as possible in an effort to learn the causes and if possible to suggest some solution.

Before proceeding further, Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate you on your almost complete restoration to health and to express the wish which is in the heart and mind of every hon. member in this house that you will be long spared to preside over its deliberations. I also wish to congratulate the mover and seconder of the resolution on the very able manner in which they dealt with the whole question now before us. I wish also to congratulate the government on the scope and character of the speech from the throne the details of which we will have ample opportunity to discuss as the session proceeds. Particularly I wish to congratulate the government on the vision and courage of which it has given evidence in the action it took at the special session of parliament to meet a situation inherited by them from their predecessors, the most difficult that any government in Canada has ever been called upon to face. They are to be congratulated equally on the success of the measures taken during that session to meet that emergent situation.

Particularly at this time I wish to refer to the action taken for the relief of unemployment. There is no use side-stepping such a question; there has been and there is serious unemployment in Canada. I state however without fear of satisfactory contradiction that there never has been a time in this country where so complete cooperative and favourable action has been taken between the federal, provincial and municipal authorities, employers of labour, and charitable institutions to meet a critical situation. As a result of the legislation passed at the special session of parliament and the action taken by the Department of Labour under that legislation some 230,000 men have been given employment. True, in many cases the work was not of a character to which many of the men had been accustomed. Men who had been employed as mechanics and railway employees were given employment in road construction, mining and railway construction; nevertheless they got employment. Knowing the situation among many of these men and having been constantly in contact with them I wish to say now that they have nothing but gratitude in their hearts for the measures taken to relieve the situation with which they were face to face.

Since the beginning of this session there has been a chorus of criticism levelled against the government, led by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in a speech which lasted four and one-half hours and in which he dealt with three main points. First there was the failure of the government in regard to unemployment; secondly, the failure of the economic conference in London and thirdly the failure to market Canada's wheat. At the moment I have dealt so far as I intend to go with the question of unemployment. I can say only this that never in the history of this country has there been such comprehensive and effective action taken to meet emergent unemployment conditions as that taken by the present government when at the special session it presented special legislation to deal with the emergency.

If I may I would like to compare that action with the action or lack of action taken by the former government. During this session of parliament I have listened to the speeches of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan), also I have read the many speeches he has delivered and the numerous newspaper interviews he has given in which he has constantly deplored the lack of action on the part of the government. I have been led to wonder who this hon. member might be. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be an excellent act if someone would kindly take the hon. member and introduce him to the gentleman who was Minister of Labour in Canada from the years 1926 to 1930 (Mr. Heenan). It would be well to have the two parts of the hon. gentleman together and have them discuss the position the hon. gentleman took in this house just about or probably a little more than a year ago when for three and one-half hours he argued against a resolution presented by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) which merely asked that the house be given the privilege of considering the conditions of unemployment in Canada. If the leader of the opposition were in his place I would ask him if he is the same right hon. gentleman who as Prime Minister stood up in this house a little over a year ago and amid the plaudits of his followers—principally his Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan)—declared positively and definitely that not one single five-cent piece would be permitted to be used by the federal authorities for the relief of unemployment in five of the provinces, including the province of Ontario, in which there is the great northern district to which the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Heenan) is constantly referring. There is unemployment in northern Ontario, and before I conclude, if you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, I will cite some of the reasons for this unemployment, and some of the efforts that have been made to relieve it.

As to the alleged failure of the Imperial economic conference, whether it fails or whether it is a success will depend on the course taken at the adjourned meeting which is to be held in this city during the present year. That the economic conference will be a success I am certain. Every man who has the interests of this country at heart, every man who has the interests of the British Empire at heart, sincerely hopes that it will be. That it may be a failure, I am equally certain is the wish of the right hon. leader of the opposition and those with him in this house and outside who have so consistently and determinedly misrepresented the position taken by the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues at the opening meeting in London last October. Should it be that the economic conference fails—and I say with all sincerity and humility, God forbid—but should it fail, then the British Empire in the aggregate and in its component parts will be face to face with an economic crisis—and this applies particularly to the United Kingdom—such as it has not been confronted with in the memory of any man now living. Before I sit down I shall endeavour to give some reasons for taking that position.

Now with regard to the question of the marketing of our wheat. I do not presume to be thoroughly familiar with the question, but I would ask: When was it that the free flow of wheat from Canada to the world-markets in which we had been selling began to back up; was it in August, 1930, or some date subsequent or previous? Anyone who has studied the question, anyone who has followed the course that our wheat marketing has taken, knows this, that from 1925 onward during eight years, as the accumulating surplus of wheat continued to grow, right up until 1929, when the jam occurred, the free flow, the free marketing of our wheat, was gradually being slowed down. In the meantime what action was being taken by the government of my right hon. friend the present leader of the opposition to relieve that situation or to find wider markets for Canadian wheat? As has been stated on the floor of this house many times, the position taken by the then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) was that it was not the business of the government to find markets for our wheat. As a matter of fact, by the then government's discouragement of general industry, by its discouragement of general agriculture, by its placing emphasis on the production of wheat and nothing but the production of wheat, a situation was developed in this country that was utterly impossible of continuance. To illustrate the position taken, may I quote from a statement made in this house in 1920 by an ex-Minister of Railways, erstwhile leader of the grain movement in western Canada, erstwhile leader of the progressive group in this country, with regard to what should be Canada's economic policy. It is interesting to note that the statement made by the hon. gentleman on that occasion was applauded and supported by the then leader of the opposition and his supporters. The statement was this: That the course Canada should follow was to take her people out of the villages, towns and cities and put them on the land growing wheat and more wheat. You will pardon a personal reference, sir. I took the liberty on that occasion to state that if the destiny of western Canada was the growing of wheat for export to the markets of the world, she had attained that position in 1915, because then she was growing as much wheat as she would ever be able to find profitable export markets for. Ninety per cent of the economic troubles of this country is due to the unbalanced character of Canadian industry, brought about very largely by the lack of constructive policies that prevailed from 1922 to 1930.

I asked a moment ago what action did the government of the day take during the time that the accumulation of wheat was constantly gaining in western Canada. If the Department of Trade and Commerce of that day had been fulfilling its function it could at least have kept the producers of wheat and the marketing organizations in western Canada advised of world conditions; it could have done something to advise those producers and marketing organizations of the misunderstandings and the hostile opinions then prevailing in the wheat importing countries of the world, because of the policy alleged to be followed by our wheat marketing organizations. Whether these misunderstandings and hostile opinions were well founded or not I shall not discuss; I am not in a position to do so. But I do know, as every member in this house knows, that these misunderstandings and hostile opinions prevailed and to a greater degree among the wheat importers and wheat distributors of Liverpool than among those located in any other part of the world. But no action was taken to remove these misunderstandings or to conciliate these hostile opinions. No, Mr. Speaker. The government of that day was too busy balancing one class and one section of Canada against another in order to maintain itself in power to give any thought whatsoever to the interests of the people as a whole, whether industrial, agricultural or wheat-producing.

Now I come to a brief review of the economic situation with which we are faced. As I said with regard to unemployment, so with regard to our economic position, it is difficult, sometimes it is virtually impossible, to see a way out. Suggestions, however, may be made and I intend to make one or two. But first, what are the actual conditions? As I said, I am not as competent to deal fully with the wheat situation as are many members who are directly and personally engaged in the business. I may say, however, that it has been a matter of disappointment to me that in all the speeches to which I have listened during this debate, speeches from men actually engaged in the wheat business, men presumed to know all about it, both from the production and the marketing end, I have failed to hear one single suggestion as to a remedy that may be applied, or a means that may be employed, to find a continuous market for Canada's wheat at a price that will make it possible for the western farmer to produce wheat and live as a Canadian citizen should live. Perhaps I can best illustrate the situation by referring to a business I am presumed to know at least a little about. There are two main industries in Canada that have been furnishing the large bulk of our exports, namely, the wheat-producing industry and the forest products industry. The forest products industry is, in proportion to its size, in a position just as difficult, and in some cases more difficult than the wheat-producing industry. One part of the forest products industry is in an utterly impossible position as conditions are at the present time. The two branches of the forest products industry are, first, the pulp and paper industry and, secondly, what is generally termed the lumbering industry. The pulp and paper industry will come back more quickly than either the wheat producing industry or the general lumbering industry, provided it is not subject to possible competition, to which the other two industries are subject, by virtue of an economic condition to which I shall refer in a moment.

The pulp and paper industry as it exists at present depends for its market very largely on the United States and Canada, and as general economic conditions improve so will the market for newsprint paper improve. In the meantime, however, many suggestions are being made. Drawing on memory, I believe I heard it stated in this house—it has been stated in the press—that delegations have waited on the governments of Quebec and Ontario asking that the paper companies be penalized because they are not operating their mills to capacity. It has been suggested that the timber lands upon which these industries are based should be taken away from them because they cannot operate their mills. It would be just as reasonable to suggest that because the western wheat producer cannot find a profitable market for his wheat, therefore the land on which he is growing, or expects to grow wheat, or on which he expects to continue in some form of agriculture should be taken from him. The newsprint men are as anxious to sell paper and operate their mills as the wheat producer is to produce and sell wheat at a profitable price; he is just as anxious to operate his mills as are the men who are now out of employment by reason of the fact that the mills are not operating.

To come to the general lumbering industry. Difficulties in this industry began in 1922 and increased through 1923 and 1924 up to 1929 and 1930, when virtual paralysis resulted from two main causes. First there was the drying-up and general paralysis of the industry due to the economic course or lack of economic course or policy followed from 1922 to 1930, killing the home market for the lumberman's product. But the principal reason for the situation is—and here may I say that the same remark applies, in my judgment, to the market for wheat—that the British market was taken away from us. The British market for all kinds and classes of Canadian lumber began to be transferred to other countries than Canada much earlier than in the case of any other product we have, because the country that was and is now supplying that market was in a position to dump lumber more quickly than they could dump anything else. The result is that whereas, prior to 1922, the lumber industry of Canada found its export market largely in the United Kingdom, in 1930 less than 4 per cent of the total requirements of the United Kingdom was purchased from Canada, or indeed, from any part of the British Empire, while 94 per cent of the total requirements of soft woods in the United Kingdom was purchased through the dumping policy of the Soviet government of Russia. Here let me say this. The lumber industry in Canada cannot live; the wheat industry in Canada cannot live; no other industry in Canada or in any other civilized country can exist and provide a standard of living—at any rate, such as the people in Canada hope to have and are entitled to—in competition with 150 million or 160 million slaves. That is the situation with which the lumber industry is brought into conflict—the situation which in my opinion bedevilled the wheat industry in 1929 and 1930, just as the lumber industry has been affected from 1922 to 1930. In this regard I would congratulate the government upon the courageous action they took in prohibiting the importation of Russian products. I will go a step further and say I sincerely trust that the government will become the crusader in this movement and will endeavour to bring behind them the British Empire, the United States and the countries of Europe in a determined effort to isolate Russia so far as this dumping is concerned.

In this connection may I just cite one instance in relation to the trade of the United Kingdom itself. In 1929-30 Great Britain purchased from Russia $40,000,000 worth of goods more than she purchased from that country in the previous year. During that same period she purchased from Canada approximately $40,000,000 less of goods than she purchased from us in the previous year. In 1929 Great Britain purchased from Russia approximately $170,000,000 worth of goods and sold to Russia $30,000,000, a balance in favour of the communist government of Russia of $140,000,000. Now it is true that we are not responsible for conditions in the United Kingdom; but as a citizen of the British Empire I will presume to make one observation in this regard. If someone suggested, in Manchester or Leeds, or some of the industrial centres of Great Britain, that they send to Russia and bring over a sufficient number of people from that country into England, to live under the conditions prevailing in Russia, to work for the wages, if they can be called wages, now prevailing in Russia, and to produce these goods for the British people, there would be a revolution in England. But what are they doing? They are taking their trade away from Canada, purchasing goods from Russia and bringing them into their own market not only in competition with the rest of the British Empire but in competition with their own people, creating the condition presently prevailing to a large degree in the United Kingdom.

I wish to put into the record a few quotations which will give the house some idea of how goods are being produced. In support of the action taken by the government of Canada in imposing an embargo upon Russian goods, and in furtherance of the hope I have expressed that this government will take the position of crusader in this movement, I wish to read an extract from the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger. Referring to the order in council of the Canadian government, this paper says:

> Their order in council frankly recognizes that the Russian Soviet is seeking to divide the world and to destroy the economic basis of western civilization. With this conviction and not from any concern about details of international trade, the Canadians have struck the most powerful blow yet aimed at Russian plans for a communized world.
> Nations, whose lives are ordered on the basis of a sane regard for the dignity of human life and the right of the individual to be master of his own destiny, cannot be blamed if they view this experiment with distrust and hatred.

Next I desire to quote from a statement handed out by the Permanent Bureau of the Entente Internationale with headquarters at Geneva. After citing conditions in Europe generally and the attitude taken by the nations of Europe in trading with Russia, the statement proceeds:

> The offensive of the Soviet government and its alter ego the Comintern is directed against contemporary civilization:
> (1) By the destruction and the disintegration of religious and moral values.
>
> 2. By the continuation of the political-social agitation.
>
> 3. By subversive action in Asia.
>
> 4. By the offensive against industry and commerce, by means of dumping.
> 5. By the constantly more intensive training of the Red army.

An extract from a statement made by Oscar Berl, an outstanding economist of Vienna, Austria, reads as follows:

> Russia is awake, and the whole world sleeps. Soviet products are being sold regardless of the cost of production, and are an important cause for unemployment. Unless the world unites for self defence, world depression will be impossible to overcome.

Commander Carlyon Bellairs, a member of Parliament in Great Britain, discussing the investigation into conditions prevailing in the lumber industry in Russia, which had been carried on continuously from July, 1929, to July, 1930, stated that the exiles are working in the camps at Solovki. He says:

> The work goes on from five in the morning until eight at night. The prisoners are fed twice a day. The food is repulsive.

A second affidavit by Commander Bellairs reads:

> It is stated in the lumber camp at Solobetsk out of 29,000 prisoners over 19,000 died from typhus.

He continues:

> The more one reads about Russia, the more evidence accumulates of what it is doing and trying to do, and the more it becomes clear what a slimy, barbarous and beastly thing the Soviet republic is.

In dealing with the same situation, a Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph states:

> More than 570,000 men, 74,000 women and 18,000 children are employed under forced labour conditions in the concentration lumber camps of the Soviet union, and more than 73,000 died from exhaustion last year.

The following is an extract from the chief officer of a boat which had brought to England a cargo of timber from Russia. It reads:

> I have just completed a second voyage to northern Russia, in both cases returning with a huge cargo of pit props. I left Archangel about a month ago, and there were then 110 vessels in port, all loading. There were berths for nine vessels at the one we loaded at, and there were 40,000 convicts allotted to that section alone. They worked twelve hour shifts and marched up and down in batches of 200 and 300 like soldiers, all in a state of extreme destitution. These men are not convicts as civilized people understand the word, nor are they of convict type. They are slaves pure and simple, and as with slaves, 95 per cent do not know why they are there. To see them hungrily watching our men going along the decks at meal times with their steaming soup, roast beef, vegetables and duff would make a stone heart bleed. We seamen often wondered what our own government was doing to allow profits to be made out of such abject misery, and why our so-called union leaders allowed decent men to handle goods produced by such means. If you could once see just one man hungrily disposing of a raw pickled herring and chunk of black, filthy bread, you would hate the sight of anything produced in Russia forever. It is a wicked, shameful and disgusting trade, and should be ruthlessly stamped out, as was the slave trade in days gone by.

The following is from an article by H. R. Knickerbocker, dealing with an interview held with Ivan Jakovlevitch, president of the lumber combine. This article appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of December 3, 1930, and reads:

> After describing the manner in which production had increased, the president stated as follows: "As to the workers in the mills, they receive an average pay of two rubles a day."

[Mr. Nicholson.]

If the ruble meant anything in Canada or any other part of the civilized world, that would be equivalent to one dollar, but from the standpoint of purchasing power, the ruble is worth six cents. I believe this article was referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I may be mistaken in this, and if so, he can correct me. The article goes on to state that the farmers or peasants are not allowed to work around the sawmills because the danger of sabotage would be too great. They are employed only for felling and transporting the lumber. Mr. Knickerbocker quotes Attorney General Krylenko as follows:

> There were 500,000 farmers forcibly dispossessed by punitive measures and sent to the woods. The total number of peasant families in the territory before March, 1930, was 14,000,000.

Mr. Knickerbocker then called attention to the fact that Krylenko meant not 500,000 individuals, but 500,000 families, which would include the women and children.

At this point I would like to read an extract from a speech delivered by an outstanding Canadian public man to the students of Toronto university. This speech was delivered a comparatively short time ago, and reads:

> Farmers that wanted nothing more than to till land they owned and sell the product of their own soil in the markets of the world were classed at once as counter-revolutionists and ordered to ignominious exile or death. The story of this tragedy does not end merely with bloodshed and despotism. The forces of Lenin set out to remould the whole Russian nation, to uproot the institutions of ages and to refashion the ways of men. One after another of those things towards which humanity has clung in every land and every age, has been taken up by the roots and destroyed.

Western civilization can no more live in competition with that kind of slavery than can the western farmers grow wheat and sell it at Fort William for fifty cents per bushel and live as the Canadian western farmer is entitled to live.

It has been stated throughout this country and it has been stated in this house that there are people who believe that the conditions in Russia are as they should be. The very foundation of existing civilization is being attacked by communistic Russia. In support of that statement I will read from the remarks of Mr. H. G. Bartholomew, an engineer from the city of Toronto who has been resident in Russia for eighteen months. Mr. Bartholomew is chief mechanical engineer of the Vato board at Moscow, a department of the supreme council which supervises the construction of tractors and agricultural machinery. In view of the fact that a quotation has been given in this house from a statement made by one of the engineers at the head of this so-called five-year plan, Mr. Bartholomew's article may be very interesting. The interview is headed: Glowing Review of Soviet Five-Year Plan. So that the house will not feel that I am quoting a biased witness as to social conditions in Russia, I might point out that after indicating the success of the five-year plan from the mechanical side without any regard whatever to the life of the people engaged in it, Mr. Bartholomew goes on to say:

A man does not even own his own soul in Russia, but they seem to be happy. The peasants are in the great majority, but the workers who support the communists are the direct rulers of the country. The peasant worker makes about fifty roubles, or approximately $25 per month. Community centres—

And this is the point to which I wish to direct particular attention:

Community centres are provided where large apartment dwelling houses house two hundred workers, male and female. All eat in a community diningroom, use community washrooms, are supposed to congregate together socially each evening. Single people have one room, married people two, but these rooms are not to be occupied except during sleeping hours. All cooking is done in a general kitchen. The cooked food is carried to a main diningroom where a general air of jollity is supposed to prevail. After the meal all are supposed to join in merrymaking or attend the community theatre.

And here is the point:

Children are placed in kindergartens or institutions controlled by the state.

How does that measure up with the Canadian idea of what the home life of the country should be? When you destroy the home life of any country; when you destroy the inviolability of womanhood; when you take away from the father or mother the child which they have brought into the world, you destroy the very foundation upon which civilization rests, and I say again the civilized world cannot afford to do so.

Just one further quotation, and this is from Mr. William Z. Foster, leader of the communist party in the United States and at one time communist candidate for the presidency of the United States. This is a question addressed to him by the chairman of the congressional committee inquiring into communist activities and propaganda in the United States:

Can members of the Communist party in Russia be married in a church and maintain religious belief?

The answer is:

A member of the Communist party of the Soviet union who would be married in a church would not be of any value to the Communist party.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I wish to compliment the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) who has just taken his seat. I look upon him, a former resident of our province, as one of the successful Islanders abroad, and we are glad to see him back in this chamber and restored, comparatively, to his usual health and strength. He has dealt with a situation, that in Russia, which is undoubtedly attracting the attention of the whole world. I believe the greatest danger which Canada is facing is not so much the importation of Russian goods as the foundation which is being laid in Canada of communist doctrine. This to my mind is far more dangerous than the importation of a few million dollars' worth of Russian goods.

The hon. member stated that during the short session the unemployment situation was dealt with by the most comprehensive legislation ever put through parliament. Speaking for our own province of Prince Edward Island, I find that the assistance given has not been of very much help to us. It came very late in the fall, and no work of any importance was carried on. Besides, many different municipalities and provincial governments have been loaded with a burden equal to the assistance given, and if the $20,000,000 had not been voted they would not likely have assumed such a large responsibility. This assistance may have been of advantage in some of the larger centres, but as regards the relief of the unemployment situation in Prince Edward Island, it was not very beneficial. This year, however, there is some money to be spent which may give employment, but in the summer months we have not much difficulty with unemployment.

I should at the start have congratulated the mover (Mr. Cormier) and the seconder (Mr. Porteous) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, especially in view of the fact that the mover is a maritime man and I understand it was considered an honour to the French Acadian people that he should move the address. If so, I wish to share in that honour, because I represent a constituency in which there is a large number of French Acadians. I wish to pay them this tribute, that they are amongst our very finest citizens; through their wonderful perseverance, their patient toil, thrift and industry, they have built up the finest homes in that province and have made a splendid contribution to the maritimes and to the Dominion as a whole. Further than that, they have made a splendid contribution to the literary development of our country.

Some of the difficulties which we are told exist in the western provinces are also experienced by the farmers of eastern Canada. Although possibly we do not get as much publicity through the press or even in the house, still we have our difficulties down by the sea, and with these I shall deal as I proceed.

The other night the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers)—and I see his smiling countenance across the floor—gave a very fine address. In fact portions of that address might very well have been delivered on this side of the house, and I was wondering whether my good friend had really had a change of heart since coming to Ottawa and was now considering becoming a real, honest-to-goodness Liberal. I have to take exception, however, to his contradiction of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) regarding some circulars which he, Mr. Veniot referred to when speaking and which my hon. friend claimed were never circulated in the province of Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend stated that he knew the province from end to end and that he was in a position to speak for it. He is something like Pat who was going to beat up everybody in the house; when he got through with that he was going to beat up everybody in the village, and when he got through with that he was going to beat up everybody in the country side. But he ran up against somebody who gave him a trimming and he said: "The only mistake I made is that I took in a little too much territory." Possibly my hon. friend can speak well for his own county, but when it comes to the other two counties and just what happened there at election time, perhaps he is not in a position to speak so authoritatively, and in this case like Pat he took in a little too much territory. Large numbers of these circulars, not only the ordinary printed ones, but also typewritten copies which had been made, were handed into my office after the election was over. So I think the ex-Postmaster General, when he spoke of these circulars the other night, was well within the facts. I will go this far, however, and say that we frown on any such tactics. Liberals and Conservatives alike do not wish to see such tactics adopted in any election. When we traced the thing down we found that it was done by a party from outside the province altogether.

My good friend (Mr. Myers) then took up the question of the current depression. He said that if the rest of the world were prosperous and the depression was confined to Canada, he would say that the fault must lie either with the Canadian government or with the Canadian people. I do not think our friends opposite were so generous at the last election. They went up and down the country saying the depression was entirely due to the policies of the King government and that conditions throughout the rest of the world were all right. They pointed to the wonderful prosperity of the United States and said that Canada was suffering from depression and unemployment just because the King government happened to be in power.

My hon. friend then went on to deal with the causes of the depression. He said: We have no answer unless it is that the country was stock crazy. During the last election even the stock market crash was blamed on the King government. It was not contended that the crash came because people were crazy to buy stocks at that time, but because the King government had put crazy policies into effect which were ruining the people.

Next, my hon. friend came to the potato industry, and referred to the high duties against our potatoes entering the United States. We all agree that this duty is entirely too high, and we would like to see it reduced. My hon. friend spoke of the countervailing duties brought down by the Dunning budget last year, and said that he approved of them. If I remember correctly, our friends were not so generous on that score in the last election either. They went up and down the country telling the people that the countervailing duties were a "made-in-Washington policy" which would enable the United States to control the situation. If the countervailing duties remained in effect, what would happen, they asked? They said that the United States would have the making of the Canadian tariff as well as their own, and that during the season from June to October, when our potatoes are off the market, the United States would take down their tariff wall and automatically ours would come down, and during that period the Canadian market would be flooded with American potatoes; then, when our potatoes were coming on the market, the United States would put up their tariff wall and we would have no sale for our potatoes in Canada or the United States. I think that that was an alarming statement to make to the farmers of Prince Edward Island, and it was made from almost every platform during the campaign. The farmers were led to believe that the countervailing duties were a very dangerous thing.

Not only does my hon. friend approve of the countervailing duties now, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) himself, in the short session last September, instead of placing a straight duty against American potatoes as he advocated during the election, moved that the countervailing duties as provided by the Dunning budget be left in effect so far as potatoes were concerned. So our friends opposite are not consistent in this matter.

Another question brought up during the campaign was that of markets. We were given to believe in the election campaign that immediately the Conservative party came into power a golden era would commence, and immediate markets would be provided in Canada—a wonderful home market which was to be built up over night, and in which we would find a sale for all our products. But conditions to-day in Prince Edward Island are just the same so far as markets are concerned. Our potatoes and other products are selling at lower prices than have prevailed in many years.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MacLEAN: We are having the greatest difficulty in selling our potatoes at the present time. So far as I can see, that home market has not materalized.

My hon. friend from Queens also referred to the price of agricultural machinery, and said that the farmers had to pay entirely too much for their agricultural implements. I agree with my hon. friend. That is good Liberal doctrine which might well be proclaimed from this side of the house. The Liberal party, in fact, did everything they could to remedy that situation. Year after year we reduced the duties on the implements of production all along the line, the implements used by the farmers and by the fishermen. But one of the first things done by the Conservative government during the short session last fall was to increase the duty on agricultural implements and make the price of agricultural machinery just that much higher for the farmers of the maritime provinces, and one of the very first acts of hon. gentlemen opposite, including my hon. friend, was to vote for that increase in duty. Everyone in the maritimes knows that the John Deere Company ship their products in, and our farmers buy them. There is no use telling the farmers down there that an increased duty is not going to increase the price when they know that on account of the new tariff they have to pay from 10 to 15 per cent more on the cost of these goods coming into Canada.

Mr. MORAND: We are making them in Canada now.

Mr. ROWE: Did the Liberal government decrease the price of agricultural implements?

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friends cannot get away with that kind of propaganda now, because everybody in this country knows that the prices of all raw products are coming down. I could cite instance after instance to show that the spread between the price of the raw product and the price of the manufactured article is a great deal higher to-day than it was under the Liberal government. You cannot satisfy the people of this country by telling them that prices are holding the same or have not increased, because they know very well that that is not the case. They know that the prices of all raw materials are coming down, and they believe that the prices of the finished products should also come down.

Mr. COTNAM: Would the hon. gentleman say that before there was a reduction in the price of raw products, the price of agricultural implements came down in this country after the Liberal government reduced the duty?

Mr. MacLEAN: I know that machinery was brought in this winter paying a 10 per cent duty, and a dealer, a strong supporter of the government's policies, came to me and said, "How in the world are we going to get our stuff in against that duty? Can we get it knocked down and brought in piece by piece to evade the duty? Can you tell me any way in which we can get it in without paying the duty?—because our farmers cannot pay an increased price." He told me that he had brought in a carload of potato graders, that he could sell a carload more at the old price, but that it was no use bringing them in against an increased duty of 10 or 12 per cent because the farmers would not buy them at an increased price.

Mr. COTNAM: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman has evaded the question.

An hon. MEMBER: Make your own speech.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: We can show you that the price of machinery has increased. I have the proof in my pocket.

Mr. MacLEAN: The hon. member for Queens also brought up the question of the improvement of transportation to and from Prince Edward Island, and said that Sir Robert Borden in 1911 gave a pledge to the people of Prince Edward Island that they would receive continuous steam communication with the mainland. That pledge, he said, was fulfilled and a new car ferry provided. While I admit that the Conservative party did improve our means of transportation, successive governments had constantly been trying to improve the service and provide a better steamer. The Liberal government gave us the Earl Grey, which improved the situation. Next came the car ferry. However my good friend was not fair enough to tell the house and the people that within the last two and one-half years the Liberal party by estimates submitted to this house provided for another car ferry, a bigger and better boat, an oil-burning, three-track boat, one that will cost when completed, along with the improvements to the piers, possibly as much as the new car ferry and the new piers did in 1911. If my hon. friend had wished to be fair he would have told the house that that was done by the Liberal party when it was in power. If one was a whale of a promise, as he has told the house, then the other is a bigger whale of a promise and has been fulfilled by the Liberal party. As yet not one dollar of Conservative money has been voted for that project. It may be that some vote may be put through at this session.

My hon. friend has said that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has perished politically, but let me tell him that so far as the Liberal party is concerned they are further from perishing to-day than they have been in a great many years. My hon. friends on this side have not perished in the matter of implementing their promises in connection with the maritime provinces. In that respect we have something to look back upon with pride. My hon. friends opposite know that one of the first things the Liberal party did in 1922 when it assumed office was to vote money for the widening of the railway gauge in Prince Edward Island. Every foot of that railway gauge has been widened, and in that province we have standard equipment and loading facilities which we never had before. In addition to that my hon. friends know we have the best shipping facilities we ever had. They know that potato warehouses have been built at every important shipping point. They know that the dredging of the harbour has been completed to such an extent that the largest ships afloat can enter and load produce for all ports of the world. They know that the Liberal party gave the province a subsidy of $125,000 per year. All those things go to prove that the Liberal party can look back with pride to its record. I can say only this to my hon. friends opposite, that I wish them the same amount of success in getting improvements for the province of Prince Edward Island that members of the Liberal party had during the last few years of the Liberal administration. If my hon. friends opposite are as successful as we were I should wish to step across the floor of the chamber and congratulate them.

Hon. members on this side have no apologies to make for the policies of the Liberal party. As I have said, the policy of that party has been one of reducing taxation and duties. It has been one of extending markets and of building up prosperity in this Dominion. So far as that policy is concerned I am prepared to stand by it and to let this country judge how the record of the Liberal party will compare in the next few years with that of the administration now in power.

I need not refer to the financial situation. Everyone knows that there is a record on the public accounts of this house which never can be equalled by any party which in the future may come into power; I believe the record of the last administration will never be duplicated in the lifetime of any member at present sitting in this house. We had a succession of surpluses, reductions in debt and reduction in interest charges which I do not think can ever be duplicated. In the last five years of the previous Conservative administration there was a deficit of $1,542,949,000. As against that we have a reduction made by the Liberal party in seven surpluses of $272,819,000. I do not think that is a record of which anybody need be ashamed —and we did not "perish in the attempt," but put our legislation through with flying colours.

May I come to the other point in favour of the previous administration? As I said it has been the policy of the Liberal government to reduce duties. We reduced the duty on motor cars; we reduced the duties on all implements of production as well as on the equipment of the fishermen and farmer. We cut down the income tax; we cut down the sales tax and on a group of 216 items we abolished it. Although last year was considered a poor year Mr. Dunning when he brought down his budget was able to show a surplus of over $44,000,000. In addition to that he was in a position to cut the sales tax to one per cent and to tell the people of Canada that if the Liberal government were in power another year the sales tax would disappear altogether. We hear rumours of increases in the sales tax; we hear rumours of a turn over tax; we hear rumours on every hand of deficits and taxation. Because of the falling off in trade I do not think our friends can balance their budget unless they resort to something of that kind. If my hon. friends opposite are going to go ahead and give to the manufacturers in respect of other commodities the protection they provided for them in the short session—no doubt they intend to continue the principle in this session—and if they compel the consuming communities to pay that increased cost, then those protected manufacturers are the people who ought to pay the increased taxation. What is going to happen? The sales tax is to be placed back on the goods the manufacturer has to sell and instead of the manufacturer absorbing the tax, as he ought to do when he receives protection, the consumer will be exploited. The consumer will have to pay the increased duties and also the increased sales tax, or whatever tax it may be. Is this fair?

The seconder of the address in reply stated that the policy of Sir John A. Macdonald had never been given a chance to operate until this government came into power. What were we led to believe in respect to that policy? I was always led to believe that the tariff was to be operative only until certain industries got on their feet and were able to take care of themselves. I understood that the moment those industries got away to a good start and were able to carry on successfully the tariff was to be withdrawn. What do we find to-day? After fifty years of tariff protection the seconder of the address in reply has said that this is the first government which has ever put into effect fully the policies of Sir John A. Macdonald. If that is so, what may we expect? There can be no use in endeavouring to help those industries by tariffs, because they are going to come back here year after year asking for further increases, while the farmer has to sell in the world's market. I do not think that under the Liberal administration we had many requests from manufacturers for increased tariffs. The Massey-Harris Company and other companies took a reduction in duty and were able to sell their machinery; it gave their business a boost. My hon. friends opposite are not dealing fairly with the public when they increase the duty on manufactured articles used by the consumers, farmers and fishermen, unless there is a very strong demand for such increases, and until those manufacturing concerns can truthfully say they are unable to carry on without such protection. We were led to believe that the duty placed on butter and eggs would increase the price to the farmer and immediately they would be put back on easy street and would have no more worry. I do not believe that improvement has taken place in the price of any of those commodities; in fact those farm commodities are to-day selling lower than ever.

Last year during the election campaign there was such a wonderful program of promises that I think it would be only fair to put some of them on record. It should be a revelation to the house to hear the inducements held out to our good friends in the province of Prince Edward Island to vote for the Conservative party. I would not be anxious to place these statements on record if our friends in the Conservative party at every meeting had not been so prolific in their promises, which were heralded not only in the press but also on the public platform. Everything in the way of inducement was held out as to why the people of Prince Edward Island should vote for the Conservative party. I have in my hand a paper published in my own town, the Summerside Journal, and this particular issue is dated July 25, 1930. I find the following:

> A vote for Arnett means a vote for Bennett.

I might explain that Mr. Arnett was the Conservative candidate. Then it continues:

> Why you should vote for Bennett. Bennett will protect the farmers' markets. Bennett will cancel countervailing tariffs and save your potato industry.

I think I have explained how those countervailing tariffs on potatoes were cancelled. My hon. friend approves of countervailing tariffs; the Prime Minister stood in his place, said he approved of them, and moved that they be left in force in the same form as they were brought down in the Dunning budget. I quote further:

> Bennett will provide employment for all men who are willing to work.
>
> Bennett will enable our manufacturers to pay higher wages.
>
> Bennett will keep Canadians in Canada.
>
> Bennett will send a fertilizing stream of new money over the country.
>
> Bennett will provide Canada with national highways and assist the construction of roads, and by so doing relieve the existing unemployment situation.
> Bennett will return to Prince Edward Island her federal highway grant which the Liberals took away.

Bennett will return to Prince Edward Island her technical educational grant which the Liberals robbed us of.

Bennett will return to Prince Edward Island her agricultural grant which the Liberals took away.

Bennett will fully implement the Duncan award, thereby enriching our province by some $700,000 annually.

I hope my good friends across the way will see that these promises are implemented.

Bennett will provide fast refrigerator freight train services for the marketing of our fish.

I hope my good friend the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes) will take this to heart, because at the present moment we have resolutions from every part of the province asking that a subsidized boat or other form of assistance be given to the fishermen in the marketing of their fish, especially live lobsters. The last paragraph I read from the Summerside Journal is a direct promise to them that a fast refrigerator freight service will be put into effect, and we hope the Minister of Fisheries will not fail them in that respect.

Bennett will get us a preferred position in the British market.

I suppose we all know how that has been accomplished, because it has been referred to on many occasions during the course of this debate. It seems to me to be utterly foolish for anyone to imagine that he can go over to Great Britain and persuade the British people overnight to change their fiscal policy that they have followed for a hundred years—to tax their foodstuffs and their raw materials. It must never be forgotten that Great Britain has under her free trade policy built up the most wonderful manufacturing industries in the world. Her ships carry her manufactured articles to every part of the globe and bring back raw materials in exchange. It is idle to imagine that Great Britain is going to change her fiscal policy over night as was suggested by the Prime Minister at the Imperial conference last September. He cannot fail to have noticed in this morning's papers that the Ramsay MacDonald government was sustained yesterday by a majority of 52, and it is significant that the vote hinged solely on the question of the taxation of food. Mr. Lloyd George, waving his hand down the Conservative front benches, asked: "Are you 'aye' men or 'no' men; are you in favour of taxing food, or are you against it?" And by a majority of 52 they voted against a tariff on food. Let me continue my quotation:

Bennett will protect farmers' markets with a tariff shield.

Bennett will see that Canada (not United States) dictates Canadian tariffs.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Here is a crackerjack:

Bennett will protect the farmer—

Of Prince Edward Island—

—who exports 1,000 bushels of potatoes from the necessity of paying a tax of $450 to Washington for the privilege of selling United States our potatoes which they cannot do without.

There was a direct promise to the farmers of Prince Edward Island who had potatoes to sell, and if on every 1,000 bushels or $1,000 worth of potatoes the farmers could save $450, I am sure they would jump at the offer and be only too willing to vote for any party that could give them so much; but judging by the results of the elections our farmers did not take these seductive promises too seriously

Bennett will stop 125,000,000 tons of Russian coal mined by bolshevist enemies of Christianity from flooding Canada's markets.

There is only a little error of over 100,000,000 tons, but that is nothing to our good friends opposite; where election promises are concerned, it is a question of win at any cost.

Bennett will revive our dairy industry.

Bennett will revive our egg and poultry industry.

Bennett will revive our hog and bacon industry.

Bennett will revive our beef and cattle industry.

Bennett will revive our fisheries.

Bennett will revive our home manufacturing industries.

Bennett will see that Canadian raw materials are manufactured in Canada.

We all know that the Liberals have tried for nine years and failed.

Bennett will relieve you from paying old age pensions to the western provinces which you cannot enjoy in Prince Edward Island owing to Mackenzie King's unfair pension scheme.

Bennett will see that each and every aged and destitute person in Canada receives a pension direct from Ottawa without any strings to it and without costing any province one cent.

That was another direct promise. Now we find our friends opposite are not quite so anxious to come right out and make these definite statements on the floor of the house. They say they will do so a little later on. Well, I hope when the time comes they will not seek to evade the issue. Last July there was nothing said about progressive stages by which their promises would be carried out, nothing about demands on the federal exchequer, nothing about the economic condition of Canada; all these things we find mentioned now in the speech from the throne. On that occasion the pledge was unequivocal and unconditional and definite. Now we shall see whether our friends opposite will redeem this pledge in regard to old age pensions.

Our people in Prince Edward Island are very much interested, and I sincerely trust the government will implement this promise. Personally, I do not think the right hon. Prime Minister need have made the definite promises he did make throughout the length and breadth of Canada with regard to old age pensions and paying all from the federal treasury. There was no complaint on the part of the various five provincial governments about contributing 50 per cent to the cost of old age pensions where they were in a position to make this contribution. But the right hon. gentleman comes along and says: "I will relieve these provinces of the payment of millions and millions of dollars by paying the money out of the federal exchequer." To my mind the better plan was that put forward by the right hon. leader of the opposition when he was in control of the government, that is to say, to pay 50 per cent out of the federal treasury towards the cost of old age pensions. He intended to assist the maritime provinces by granting them increased subsidies as recommended by the Duncan commission, and which was then being investigated by the audit board, and thus put them in a position where they could take care of their share of the cost of old age pensions. The plan of the Mackenzie King government would have saved the Dominion for all time to come at least $25,000,000 annually, and would have given the old age pension to all our people just the same.

Now I come to the question of markets. As our good friends opposite have stated, our great trouble in Prince Edward Island is markets. If we could market our products we could produce a great deal more than we are doing at the present time. But our markets are curtailed, and to-day even Cuba is threatening to shut us out. Recently the government sent a delegate to Havana to interview the Cuban government, but no report has as yet been brought down as to just what happened. For information on the point we have to rely on the press. The following is an extract from the Cuban paper Mundo:

> Commercial relations between Cuba and Canada, after expiration of the existing modus vivendi in December, were discussed at a conference between Canadian minister Macdonald, Canadian commercial attache Marmack, officials of the Departments of State, and of Agriculture, Commerce and Labour and members of the Tariff Commission. The state department is said to have indicated that Cuba will not change her tariff policy, but will consider modifications in favour of Canada provided that country makes special concessions as to Cuban sugar, rum and tobacco, and the Canadian representatives agreed to study the question.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman will permit me—why cannot the government of Canada enter into reciprocal trade relations with the Cuban government and take her sugar?

Mr. MacLEAN: If my hon. friend has any suggestion to make to the house I shall be happy to give him an opportunity to present it. The Cuban authorities say they are willing to enter into reciprocal discussion with us.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): But why cannot we do it?

Mr. MacLEAN: I do not think there is any reason why we cannot. We know the United States has a preference of 20 per cent in the Cuban market. As I say, these people are willing to discuss trade matters with us, according to their own paper. Why did the government send Mr. Macdonald down to Cuba if they knew no negotiations would be effective?

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): He went down there—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend no doubt knows the reason. One of the reasons is that in the short session the Conservative party increased the duty on Cuban sugar coming into Canada and in consequence the very first thing our representative found when he got there was that the sugar growers there were in very bad shape. Hence this duty was placed on Canadian potatoes with the idea of helping their own farmers, allowing them to go into diversified farming and the growing of potatoes. That was as much as to say to the Canadian government, "You put a duty on our sugar going into your country; why in the world should we not impose a duty on Canadian potatoes coming into our market?" There is no doubt in the world that this is what happened, and my hon. friend who is in the potato business knows it perfectly well. We hope that the delegation will have proved a success, but unless the government are prepared to give some concessions along reciprocal lines, then I do not think they can hope to accomplish very much; because after all Cuba, like every other country, is looking out for itself. The Cubans, I believe, will be willing to consider a reciprocal proposal, but I do not think they will be willing to give us free admission, because they say here definitely that they have no idea of removing the duty, though willing to consider a reciprocal arrangement.

An hon. MEMBER: Does not the hon. member know that the treaty ties our hands?

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend is not correct.

Mr. MALONEY: Just for information, may I ask my hon. friend this question: Where is sugar produced in Canada?

An hon. MEMBER: From the maple trees.

Mr. MacLEAN: Where is it produced?

Mr. MALONEY: Yes, in Canada—apart from maple sugar.

Mr. MacLEAN: Sugar is produced from sugar beets; there is a large plant at Winnipeg and there are others elsewhere. But why did my hon. friend vote for the increase in duty? We are perfectly willing to let sugar come in free.

Mr. MALONEY: I am asking my hon. friend to tell me if he can where sugar is produced in Canada, apart from maple sugar.

Mr. MacLEAN: That is not relevant to the question, because I am not arguing that there was any need of a duty to protect any sugar interests in Canada. In my opinion the sugar industry was all right, and the Liberal party in the Robb budget reduced the duty on imports of raw sugar, while our good friends were the first to go and increase that duty, thus antagonizing Cuba, with the result which we have at the present time.

This is a live question in my province, inasmuch as we have large quantities of potatoes to sell. I have a question on the order paper since March 16 asking if the government was endeavouring to get Britain to lift the embargo against Canadian potatoes, and I endeavoured to get a reply from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) to-day. I have had correspondence with Great Britain, and they are short of potatoes over there at the present time. They are perfectly willing to take our potatoes because they have to import Spanish potatoes into the British market. Our potatoes are shut out of that market for one reason alone, and that is, we have the Colorado beetle in Canada. The question for Great Britain to decide is this: Are they going to import potatoes from Spain, where there is also the Colorado beetle, or are they going to give the preference to Canada? I endeavoured to get a reply from the minister to-day and he was good enough to send a letter across the floor to me; he informed me that he had information on his desk and would give it to me. This is an important question; the matter is an urgent one. Our potatoes are not like western wheat, which can be kept for years; we must dispose of them within the next few months or we cannot sell them.

[Mr. MacLean.]

When the minister was getting up to reply to me he was stopped by the Prime Minister. That is all our friends across the way care for the farmers of Prince Edward Island. We desire to give those farmers the necessary information as soon as possible, and I submit that it was due to the members of this house, and especially to those from the maritime provinces, that they should have been given this information to-day, even if it were not in strict accordance with the rules.

Mr. J. F. BUCKLEY (Athabaska): As a new member of the house it had not been my intention to participate in this debate as I have frequently been told that it is the duty of a new member to be seen and not heard. But I think that it is incumbent upon me, by virtue of the duty I owe to my constituents, to lay their views before the house and to place on record just exactly how conditions are in the constituency of Athabaska, which I have the honour to represent. Before doing so, however, may I congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address on the very eloquent way in which they discharged their duty.

The constituency of Athabaska is one of the largest in the whole Dominion, being, roughly, 600 miles in length by about 200 in width. The southern portion is devoted to agriculture whilst the northern 400 miles is muskeg and rough country, but very rich in many natural resources. Of this I shall have something to say later.

For the moment I wish to confine my remarks to the conditions under which agriculture is suffering at the present time. I have listened with great interest to the addresses of the previous speakers and I am obliged to agree with most of them that conditions are so very bad that I doubt very much if they could be worse. I was astonished to hear the member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) state that in his part of Saskatchewan conditions were not so very bad and might be worse—that, in fact, in that district they were about to turn the corner. This prompted me to wonder whether he had ever taken the trouble to visit any portions of rural Saskatchewan, and I concluded that he had not. I imagine that had he done so he would have come to the same conclusion as did the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), who told us exactly how conditions are in Saskatchewan, to say nothing of the other members from that province who have spoken in this debate. In fact, I do not think I can do better than to refer hon. members to an article by Grant Dexter in MacLean's Magazine of April 1, 1931, entitled "Are the Banks refusing Farmers Loans?" I do not wish to quote from the article in question but I do wish to say that both sides of the question are ably set out therein, and I commend it to the attention of all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say this—that conditions are just as bad in Alberta as they are in Saskatchewan, and, in the constituency I have the honour to represent, are probably worse, owing to certain railway conditions to which I will presently refer.

Let me give the prices which farmers received for their grain at St. Paul, Alberta, on the 20th of last month:

Wheat	Cents
No. 1	34
No. 2	33
No. 3	27
No. 4	23
No. 5	21
No. 6	21
Oats
No. 2 C.W.	12
No. 3 C.W.	9
Feed
Extra No. 1	9
No. 1	7
No. 2	5
Barley
No. 2 C.W.	11
No. 3 C.W.	8

Now, sir, wheat costs, to thresh, anywhere from 8 to 10 cents per bushel, and oats and barley from 7 to 9 cents. It can be easily seen that oats to-day do not bring at the elevator the bare cost of threshing. There are also other expenses which the farmer has had to pay. Add to this cost of threshing, the cost of seed, the cost of seeding, the cost of cutting the crop, the cost of twine, the cost of stooking, the cost of hauling, and I am sure you will agree with me that every farmer last year not only lost actual money by seeding his land, but is now not in a position to pay any of his debts or to pay his taxes. Let me illustrate this point by saying that I personally shipped a carload of wheat containing 1,563 bushels to the Alberta Wheat Pool, and all I received therefor was $252. The taxes on the property upon which this grain was grown—school, municipal and supplementary revenue—amounted to $170, leaving a bare $82 in excess of the amount received. I did not pay any thresh bill and that, even at 8 cents per bushel, would have amounted to $125

I do not know what the seed cost or what would be a fair charge for putting it in or taking it off, but the above figures indicate that quite apart from what these costs are there is already a big deficit with wheat, and it can be realized how much more so it is with the coarser grains. In fact, sir, at the present time it is absolutely impossible to sell the coarser grains and get even the freight out of them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say most emphatically that in my opinion agriculture could not possibly be in a worse condition than it is to-day, and the effect of all this is that every business and professional man in the west is feeling the effects of this depression. The farmer finds it absolutely impossible to pay his debts. For many years a practice has prevailed in rural centres whereby the local storekeeper has grubstaked the farmer and every fall the farmer has come in and paid his account. To-day he cannot do so and consequently the storekeeper has been unable to pay his debts, with the result that he is liable to be closed out by his own creditors, and many of these storekeepers are liable to be made bankrupt. The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) has stated that a large percentage of his constituents are bankrupt. I will go further and say that this would be true of almost all the people in western Canada, in view of the definition of bankruptcy given in section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act. This definition reads as follows "a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy in each of the following cases"—here follows a list of cases all lettered alphabetically, until we come to the last one, which reads:

(j) If he ceases to meet his liabilities generally as they become due.

Everyone will realize that according to this definition a very large number of people in the prairie provinces could be declared bankrupt. I have a practical suggestion to make to the government, and ask that even though it comes from this side of the house it be given sympathetic consideration. It is that the Bankruptcy Act be amended either by striking out subsection (j) or alternatively suspending its operation during the present period of depression. Many local merchants are being threatened by their creditors that they will be put into bankruptcy unless they make a voluntary assignment. While these men may be bankrupt according to the strict letter of the law, they are not insolvent. I know many men who although they cannot pay their debts as they fall due, yet have a substantial surplus of assets over liabilities. Should they make a voluntary assignment or be forced into bankruptcy, all this surplus disappears. Their stock is sold for about 40 to 50 cents on the dollar and after the trustee's expenses have been paid, the creditor gets little and the debtor is broke.

The present abnormal times demand abnormal remedies. This is one way by which the government can alleviate the situation. The Alberta legislature has already taken some measures to meet this need by the passing of the Debts Adjustment Act, and I would suggest that this government fall in line by passing this proposed amendment.

In my opinion my suggested amendment would assist the local merchants, but something must be done for the farmer. I do not think I can do better at this moment than to read into Hansard a resolution which was forwarded to me by the Waskatenau local of the United Farmers of Alberta. It reads as follows:

Whereas, a fixed minimum price for wheat of 70 cents per bushel, basis No. 1 northern Fort William, would materially increase the purchasing power of the farmer, thus stimulating business, and to that extent relieving the necessity for unemployment relief;

And whereas, the government of Canada have spent millions of dollars bonusing railways, coal mines, the steel and iron industries and manufacturers, the farmer helping to pay these bonuses;

Therefore be it resolved, that the Waskatenau local No. 101 of U.F.A. do request the government of Canada to fix a minimum price for wheat at 70 cents per bushel, basis No. 1 northern Fort William for the 1930 crop and until such time as the agricultural products have been placed on a parity with manufactured goods, and that every farmer who has sold any or all of his current crop below the proposed basis be indemnified to that extent.

Francis Lunn,
President.
D. C. West,
Secretary.

A resolution passed at the last session of the Alberta legislature reads as follows:

That pending a general substantial revision downward of all tariff this assembly recommends to the Dominion government that the agricultural industry of western Canada be placed on a parity with other industries, either by stabilization of prices or by careful examination of the incidence of tariff schedule in order that the economic interest of the farmers of western Canada be adequately and justly safeguarded.

We have a situation existing in the north-eastern portion of my constituency which is peculiar to that part of the country. This district is served by a branch line of the Canadian National railways running out of Edmonton, known as the Edmonton-North Battleford line. At the present time this line has been extended out of Edmonton, only to Heinsburg and out of North Battleford to Frenchmens Butte, leaving a gap of some 38 miles. Although the completion of this line has been promised, I understand that this year the Canadian National railway will not connect up these two points. My constituents are affected in this way: the present rate on the western portion of this line is 29 cents per hundred pounds to Fort William. All wheat in less than carload lots is purchased on the basis of the Fort William freight rate.

This same situation applies also to another branch line of the Canadian National known as the Bonnyville branch line. The building of this line has been authorized by parliament but has yet to be completed. The farmers in my constituency are affected in this way: they are obliged to pay freight on a useless back haul amounting to as much as five or six cents per bushel. This affects not only grain but every single article which is imported into or exported from this district. This back haul of over 250 miles costs the farmers over $100,000 annually, which is a needless expenditure on their part. If there are any people in this Dominion entitled to preferential treatment, it is those to whom I have referred.

The building of this railway was commenced in 1911 and its early completion was promised. In 1920 when I first went to St. Paul the end of steel was some twenty miles away. We were told by the railway officials that they would be unable to complete the line because of inability to obtain the necesary labour. Our board of trade offered to lay the steel, which offer the railway accepted. It was a remarkable sight to see prominent merchants, bank managers, farmers, doctors and lawyers laying steel. Through their efforts the steel was laid into St. Paul that fall. If the farmers in this portion of my constituency are to continue to exist, it is essential that both these lines should be completed. The unemployment situation is most acute and I strongly urge the government to complete this work this year. In this connection I have received telegrams from the following:

J. M. Dechene, M.L.A.
Board of Trade, Bonnyville, Alta.
Secretary, Cold Lake Board of Trade.
Doctor S. Sabourin, Mayor of Bonnyville.
St. Paul Conservative Association.
Secretary, St. Paul Chamber of Commerce.
J. H. Bedard, Mayor of St. Paul.
Municipality of Champlain.
Municipality of Lincoln.
Municipality of Laurier.

Resolutions have been forwarded to me by every municipality along both of these lines. I cannot urge too strongly upon the government the necessity of having this work done immediately. Should this not be done, much distress will be caused to the people in this vast district.

At the commencement of my remarks I mentioned that I would have something to say with regard to the northern portion of my constituency. I believe this matter to be most important in view of the fact that the government will in all probability bring down legislation either to build a trans-Canada highway or to vote a grant to the provincial governments for this purpose. Bituminous or asphalt sands are found in the constituency of Athabaska. These sands when mixed with small gravel or crushed stone make a paving which cannot be improved upon. Excellent results have been obtained at Jasper and Banff, the first experiment being made at Jasper in 1924. Sir Henry Thornton, speaking of these sands in 1925, said:

> In our opinion the use of these tar sands has gone beyond the experimental stages and it has proved desirable material for road-making purposes. The roadway to Jasper which has been used for two winters and one summer came out in perfect condition this spring.

The Canadian National Railways have used this material extensively in the construction of platforms at Sarnia, Guelph and many other points. The Canadian Pacific Railway also have used it to a very considerable extent. It has been used on the grounds of the parliament buildings at Edmonton, and a small area has been paved in the grounds of the parliament building here. My suggestion is that when the trans-Canada highway is constructed it be stipulated that this Canadian product be used for surfacing. These tar sands are found in a natural state in my constituency and are to be found nowhere else in the Dominion.

We have also at Fort McMurray a natural salt mine which, owing to the expense of transportation, has been forced to close down. With the proper encouragement from the government this industry could be made a paying proposition and I would like to see something done along these lines.

In conclusion I would strongly endorse the views so ably expressed by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Bowman) with respect to new Canadians. I reside in a constituency where French-Canadians and new Canadians form a very substantial majority. I desire to pay my tribute to the French-Canadians and to their broadmindedness. I know there are many of my French-Canadian constituents who will endorse, as I do, the sentiments eloquently expressed by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) in his criticism of the action taken by the Saskatchewan legislature.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate in the hope and expectation that something would be said by some member of the government as to its policy with regard to agriculture. So far it has been a case of hope deferred. Although two members of the government have up to now taken part in the debate, no policy has been propounded. After the last election the people throughout western Canada expected that some program would be put forward by the government to help them to sell their crop. They were told during the last election that that would be done, and naturally they expected some action. But as month after month went by and no program was announced, they began last fall to ask what the program was. When still no program was announced and winter came on with conditions getting worse and worse, they asked again what the program was, and at the present time throughout western Canada the people are demanding more and more strenuously that they be informed as to the policy of the government with regard to agriculture. What is the government going to do for the grain growers of western Canada? As yet we have received no answer. To-night from my place in this house I again ask the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir): What is your program with regard to the grain growers, and what are you going to do to help the farmers of western Canada? Eight months have gone by; conditions have gone from bad to worse, yet we hear no voice from the government, nothing in any way, shape or form for the benefit of the farmers.

The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) said that conditions in western Canada were bad but might be worse. I do not know how much worse they could be. Speaking for my own constituency, I do not know how conditions could be worse than they are at the present time. I have seen men who were good farmers come singly and in twos, threes, fours and dozens into our municipal offices stand before the desk and say: "I want food for my family because they are hungry." I have had men come to me and say: "I want clothes for my children so that I may send them to school." The condition is not one of unemployment; it is a famine condition. If you can find conditions worse than that, I do not know what they can be. Some hon. members may say: That is all very well, but in your district they were dried out and the circumstances are exceptional. To that I reply that I have land in other parts of Saskatchewan; I have land in places where we have had crops for the last two years. I have land in those districts where the production has been as much as twenty bushels to the acre, and from those lands which I have had rented I have not received enough during the last two years to pay the taxes. That is not exceptional; the same is true with respect to many farmers in western Canada. They are not receiving enough for their crops. We have now reached the time when the farmers in western Canada should be starting to seed, and in many instances they are doubtful whether or not it is advisable to do so. They are waiting to see whether there will be rain and whether they will seed or save the seed. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, if they do seed, they will be worse off next fall than they are now. Next fall they will not receive enough to compensate them for their work and trouble, let alone pay their taxes. From present prospects conditions are bound to be worse in Canada next fall than they are now. Ninety per cent of our farmers in western Canada have not paid taxes; they have not paid interest on loans. They are living on what should be paid as interest on loans and taxes, and next fall they are bound to pay the interest and taxes so that they cannot help being worse off.

In the face of that we find the government sitting mutely here without giving any indication as to what they expect to do for the farmers of western Canada. Surely the Minister of Agriculture, who comes from western Canada, knows the conditions there. After eight months of studying the problem, he should be able to tell us what he is going to do. Are we to wait until the people revolt? Are we to wait until we see, as we saw the other day in Winnipeg, another riot before any action is taken by the government?

Let us see, on the other hand, what the record of the government has been since it took office. During the last election, what did the Conservative party do? The present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) went out west, visited the different parts of the country and told the people what he was going to do for agriculture. This is what he said at Winnipeg:

> Listen you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada, you have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade. Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

Tariffs have not been working very hard so far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned; they have been lying down on the job. If they have been doing any fighting, they have been very badly beaten because I cannot see any benefits they have conferred upon the farmers of western Canada.

On June 19 last the present Prime Minister visited Calgary and he said:

> Then comes the problem that is more important, the problem of marketing and of selling wheat. There it seems to me is a fertile field for the endeavour of a government. France, Germany and Italy have raised tariffs against Canadian wheat. We will look over the top of the hill and beyond the horizon to make provision for the Canadian agriculturist and secure for him markets. That is a question which will have to be solved. I told my audience at Winnipeg, and I tell you here and now that condition I will not permit to continue in this country.

Then when he visited Vancouver on June 18, he had this to say:

> If Mr. Mackenzie King thinks I will not so build up our agricultural and industrial life that its strength will drive our products into the markets of the world, then he is wrong. For that I will do. If he thinks I will not establish new markets for these products, strive with all my heart to retain them, drive our products with all my power into new markets, into old markets, into reluctant markets, he is wrong. For that I will do.

Those are the words of the Prime Minister as to what he was going to do for agriculture and for the agriculturists. Naturally the agriculturists of western Canada expected that something would be done, and we are still hoping. What about his followers? What did they say during the last election? They went from place to place at least in my constituency, and they said: Look at the price of butter! Look at the price of eggs! If we get into power we are going to put up the price of butter. Butter will be seventy-five cents a pound anyway; we will put it up for you. We will put up the price of eggs.

We have been disappointed at the result. At that time, in the middle of the summer, the price of creamery butter was forty-five cents a pound, and the very same people who were selling it then at that price, were selling it this winter for thirty cents a pound. At that time in the middle of the summer our dairy butter was selling at twenty-five cents a pound. What do we find now? We find dairy butter being sold by our farmers to the country stores at 12 and 15 cents a pound. Just think of it! It takes two pounds of butter to buy a pound of axle grease. And what is the price of eggs? In the middle of the summer eggs were selling for 25 cents a dozen. During the past winter we have been getting eight and ten cents a dozen for eggs. It takes a wagon box of eggs to buy a pair of shoes. Why do not hon. gentlemen opposite bring in a resolution now and talk about the Australian treaty which I have heard them talk about for two sessions in this house?

Again, they went around and said: "Look at the price of your wheat. It is only 80 cents a bushel. Where is Dunning now?" Can you blame the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, now that we are getting about 30 to 40 cents a bushel, for asking: Where is the Bennett government now, and what is it doing to put up the price of wheat? We cannot get the government over there to say even one word as to what they are going to do about it.

Mr. BRADETTE: They are not allowed to.

Mr. DONNELLY: No, they are not allowed. Even in this house we have heard some of the echoes of what was said in the last election. We heard the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks) say from his place in this house, "Why did you not sell your wheat for $1.47 a bushel which was offered by Mr. Thomas?" Did you ever hear anything more ridiculous, Mr. Speaker? Has this government any wheat for sale anywhere? It never had any wheat for sale any more than it had boots, or shoes or clothing, or any other commodity. Of course, the government could not sell wheat, and more than that Mr. Thomas never made the offer. It is wonderfully easy to look back and say that we should have taken advantage of an offer of that kind. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of western Canada at that time were out buying wheat themselves at $1.55 and $1.65 a bushel because they thought the price was going up. Now it is said that we should have sold at $1.47 a bushel. If we could only have foreseen these things—oh, the money we could have made! If we only had men like the hon. member for Rosetown to tell us what is going to happen, if only our fore-vision was as good as our hind-vision, how well off we should be.

Le us see what Mr. Thomas actually did say. If hon. gentlemen will look up the official report of the parliamentary debates in the House of Commons at Westminster, at page 1085 of the British Hansard of July 15, 1930, they will see that Mr. Lambert asked Mr. Thomas a question, and that Mr. Thomas replied:

> On the contrary I took the view that when wheat was $1.40 it was too high.

And then it is said he offered $1.47 a bushel. What a generous person he must have been! Not only that but the late prime minister and members of his government told me distinctly that this offer was never made. The pool officials have also told me the same thing, that such an offer was never made to them, and yet hon. members opposite have the audacity to say that we should have sold our wheat to Mr. Thomas. Why, it is ridiculous.

Some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house have said: The government does not make the world price of wheat. No, I admit that. But the government does regulate the price which we receive for our wheat as compared with the price received in other countries of the world. There is no doubt about that. In my constituency in the fall of 1929 we were receiving 19 and 20 cents more a bushel for our wheat than the price received in Montana, just across the line, and the Americans were hauling their wheat into Canada, paying the duty, and selling it for 19 and 20 cents a bushel more than they could get at home. That was because our wheat was receiving its due, because it had been put up to its true value and had been kept there on account of the changes made in the Grain Act by the late government. What do we find this year? We find that in the very same territory the Americans are receiving 20 and 30 cents a bushel more than we are. It is the government that has done that. Yes, the government and no one else, because the Americans fixed the price of their wheat at 81 cents, and some of our American friends are actually coming across and getting Canadian wheat and smuggling it into the United States to make the extra profit. It is the American government that is responsible for their higher price, yet our government sits over there on the opposite benches and does nothing for the farmers in western Canada.

Our Canadian wheat growers, as I have said before in this house, receive less than any other farmers in the world for their wheat. I have just spoken of the conditions in the United States. The farmers in Germany, France and Italy receive in the neighbourhood of $1.50 for their wheat because they consume more wheat than they produce, and they have a duty on wheat. Those countries are protecting their wheat growers. Not only that, but we find that in Australia, the Argentine and Russia, the farmers can put their wheat on the market for 12 and 15 cents a bushel, while it costs the farmer in western Canada, as the grain commissioners stated the other day, in the neighbourhood of 35 cents a bushel to put their wheat on the market. So I say that our wheat growers in western Canada receive less than other wheat growers in the world for their wheat.

After the election was over last July, we had a special session of the house, at which we saw our manufacturing industries protected, but not a thing was done for the wheat growers. The farmers were still expectant, still in hopes that something would be done. They hoped that something would come from the Imperial conference. The Prime Minister went over to the Imperial conference to get a market for our wheat. That is what he said he went over there for. He said that he went over there to blast and enlarge the channel through which our river of wheat would flow to the markets of the world, and that is what we thought he was there for. But as one farmer said, every time the Prime Minister put in a blast, instead of enlarging the channel he threw up a dam, and every time he threw up a dam the farmer in western Canada uttered ten thousand damns. I have sat in this house and listened to hon. gentlemen telling us about what happened in England at the conference, and what a great success our Prime Minister made over there. I have heard members quote from different papers as to what the Englishmen and the Irishmen and Canadians thought of the Prime Minister, and what he did at the Imperial conference. The Englishmen are too courteous to say anything but nice things about him anyway; they would not like to do anything else. But let us hear from some unbiased authorities or from some papers outside this country, say an American paper, and see what they say about him. I am going to read what one American newspaper said:

> The weakness of the plan, so far as the British people were concerned, was that while it involved a guarantee that the British would buy Canada's wheat there was no corresponding guarantee that the Canadian people would buy British goods. On the contrary, the actual position was that, taking account of the tariff increases imposed by the special session of the Canadian parliament, the barriers against British goods were higher than before.
> In the circumstances, Canadian opinion did not greatly blame Britain for rejecting the Bennett plan.
> The conference might have ended amicably, and with possibility for achievement when it resumes next year at Ottawa, had it not been for an unfortunate phrase used by Mr. J. H. Thomas, a leading member for the MacDonald ministry. In a debate in the British Commons, Mr. Thomas, under attack, and caught off his guard, characterized Mr. Bennett's plan as "humbug." It was one of those unfortunate lapses which often influence politics more than men of measures, and it produced a storm of criticism and recrimination between the two countries. The chief effect of the conference, indeed, so far as Canada was concerned, was that Mr. Bennett, who went to England with a high ambition for imperial economic unity based upon tariffs, left London with a veiled threat of economic separatism.
> Nor was this the end. Mr. G. Howard Ferguson, Premier of Ontario, recently appointed Canadian High Commissioner to London, committed the extraordinary indiscretion of making a vigorous attack upon the Socialist policy of the Labour government to which he has been accredited. This, not unnaturally, has added to the strained relations between Ottawa and Downing Street, has made cooperation between the two governments difficult, if not impossible. Mr. Philip Snowden, the acid-tongued Socialist Chancellor of the Exchequer, has a good memory.
> So Mr. Bennett has returned to Canada which has still some 250,000,000 bushels of unsold wheat, which has an acute unemployment problem, and whose declining revenues threaten an enormous deficit at the close of the fiscal year. The weakness of his position is that, like Mr. Hoover, in the United States, he took office on a platform of prosperity. Mr. Bennett, electioneering told the Canadian people that failure to market the western wheat crop and prevalence of unemployment were the fruits of the Liberal ministry of Mr. King..
>
> After four months in office, and despite millions voted for unemployment relief, unemployment is still acute and the wheat of the west remains unsold.

This is from the Commonweal of New York.

Mr. McMILLAN: Who is the writer?

Mr. DONNELLY: The author of this article is the man who writes the biographies of the different members of the government for publication in MacLean's magazine. I do not know what the members of the government pay him for writing these biographies, but I do know that he is the man who writes them in MacLeans—Mr. Grattan O'Leary, a Tory mouthpiece in this city. I must say that this is a Tory opinion, not a Liberal opinion. I do not hear any applause from the other side, and is it any wonder? The western farmers were discouraged because of the results of the Imperial conference. Then the Prime Minister came west and promised to leave in Regina a message of hope for the western farmers. Out in the west we were foolish enough to believe that he would tell us something which would be of benefit to us. We went to Regina to hear him, but when we arrived what did we find? The audience were waiting expectantly. The chairman, Mr. Reilly, made some opening remarks. The premier of Saskatchewan made some further remarks, and the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) stated that the Prime Minister had a great message for western Canada. These gentlemen did not know what the message was going to be, but they said it was going to be a wonderful message. We moved over to the edges of our chairs and began to follow every word. The farmers had their ears cocked and listened carefully so as not to miss anything. When the meeting was over one farmer turned to the other and said, "Is he through?" "Yes,". "Well," he said, "he has not told us anything; he talked for an hour but he did not say what he was going to do." Right then and there the farmers of western Canada realized they had been handed a gold-brick last July. That feeling has been growing and is increasing in western Canada to-day. Let me say that there are not many Tories in the west at the present time, and unless conditions improve there will be very few of them left.

Mr. ROWE: My hon. friend told us that last year.

Mr. DONNELLY: And I will tell it again. What were the proposals of the Prime Minister? There were three. First, he said: "We are going to have a market in China." We woke up next morning and found that this promise had been merely a nightmare. However, I cannot deal with that phase of the matter any further, because I must hurry on. Next he promised that we were going to sell 9,000,000 bushels of wheat to France. Following that promise the farmers in the west began to consult past records to learn what they contained. They found that in the year 1926 we sold 12,000,000 bushels of wheat to France; in 1927, 13,000,000 bushels; in 1928, 18,000,000 bushels; in 1929, 19,000,000 bushels and in 1930, 10,250,000 bushels. When they were confronted with these figures they said, "To sell 7,000,000 or 9,000,000 bushels is no use to us; this is less than we usually sell to France." It looked as if the Prime Minister had done a little blasting in France. The people in the west however, thought that France wanted something in return. In the following month, the month of January, when we should have been exporting to France about a million bushels of wheat, we exported only 440,000 bushels. The people in France got their backs up because they did not receive consideration in our markets. As they did not receive a preference in Canada, they were not disposed to deal with us. That is the record in regard to France.

The next suggestion he made was that western Canada should adopt mixed farming. Oh, yes, mixed farming was the thing! "We will help you if we get you into mixed farming." I would like to go into this matter fully, but I am afraid that it alone would take the whole of my forty minutes. In connection with mixed farming, however, I would say that there are no better, no more intelligent, or more up-to-date farmers in the world than those of western Canada. They do not have to take a back seat for anybody. They resent the idea of a man sitting down here in a financial office, or some member of parliament such as my hon. friend who interrupted some time ago, telling us in western Canada how to farm. I wonder if hon. members know that an easterner has to live a year in western Canada before he knows how to farm properly. I wonder if hon. members know that; if they do not I will tell them that it is a fact. I want to tell my hon. friends more than that. There are no two places, even on the bald prairie, where farming can be conducted in the same way. Different districts require different methods. I would like to devote more time to this point but my time is limited, and I wish to spend a minute or two on another question.

One of my hon. friends opposite, I think it was the hon. member for Regina, said that he had sat in the house and listened to the long debate but had not heard a suggestion from anybody on this side as to what might be done. One of my hon. friends interrupted me a few minutes ago and asked me the very same question. May I say to my hon. friends that if they have not heard suggestions from this side of the house they must be deaf. If they had been listening they would have heard the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) make a concrete suggestion. They would have heard the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) make a further suggestion. The hon. member for South Battleford suggested that the price of wheat should be pegged. The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) suggested that the processing of meats should be investigated. He said that $25,000 had been set aside to make this investigation, but that the Conservative government had not spent it. If hon. members had consulted the order paper they would have seen my suggestion that the domestic freight rates on grain and grain products should be the same as export rates. With that particular point I shall deal at greater length at a later time.

Why has the government not done something? Why has it not pegged the price of wheat? That is its policy. It has pegged the price of manufactured goods. If the Liberal government had been in power such action would not have been necessary. The policy of the Liberal party is for freer trade and open markets. Our policy has been to trade more freely with other countries. We in western Canada believe that if the Dunning budget had gone into effect we would be selling our wheat more freely to-day. There would be a more favourable attitude towards us in England; there is no doubt about that. We believe we would have been able to make favourable trade treaties with Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, Italy and other European countries. We might have got a preference in their markets for our wheat, and we could have given them a preference in our market for some of their manufactured goods. Some one may say, "Why didn't you do that when you were in power?"

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, "hear, hear." Why not? Because neither my hon. friend opposite nor anyone else in this house thought fifteen or ten years ago, or even a year ago, that we would ever be looking for a market for our wheat. We believed that our wheat would always find a market. It is only lately that this situation has developed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, my hon. friends opposite seem to know, they seem to believe that two or three years ago there was some fear of our losing our market. Well, let them go to the west and see if they can make people believe it.

Mr. ROWE: You know last year it was lost.

Mr. DONNELLY: I should know better than an Ontario farmer working 160 or 200 acres of land. The hon. member must know that his leader told us that he would sell our surplus wheat. I tell him right now that there is more wheat in Canada to-day than there was a year ago. I have the figures right here from their own records. This information comes from the Department of Trade and Commerce under the authority of the present minister, (Mr. Stevens). It says that at the present time there are 277,180,987 bushels of wheat in Canada, while this time last year—that is comparing 1931 with 1930—there were 228,646,367 bushels, or somewhere in the neighbourhood of 50,000,000 more this year than a year ago. Well, you have been in power marketing this crop, you have been looking after it.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Mr. ROWE: We had the 1929 crop, too, to look after.

Mr. DONNELLY: You have not sold last year's yet.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why didn't you sell the 1929 crop?

Mr. DONNELLY: The Conservative party was elected to office to find a market. You said you would find a market, you promised us you would sell our wheat. Why don't you do it? We have heard nothing but promises—promises that come from you as freely as pious statements from mealy-mouthed philanthropists who divorce the word from her mate the deed."

An hon. MEMBER: I would like to ask my hon. friend a question.

Mr. DONNELLY: Sit down; I want to finish.

Mr. ROWE: Why didn't you sell the 1928 crop?

An hon. MEMBER: Why didn't you sell the 1927 crop?

Mr. DONNELLY: I have only a few moments left and I would ask hon. gentlemen to allow me to finish. Since the government saw fit to turn down the proposition of the three prairie premiers to peg the price of wheat, why have they not applied to our wheat the Pattersen scheme which the Australian government put into effect in relation to butter? Let us look at the Paterson scheme as it could be applied to our wheat, suppose we set a price f.o.b. Fort William of $1.50 for No. 1. northern wheat to be ground into flour for home consumption; then pay to our farmers an initial price of 70 cents a bushel. We could appoint a board to look after this.

An hon. MEMBER: How much wheat do we consume in Canada?

Mr. DONNELLY: We consume here something like 50,000,000 bushels. The board would make a profit on every bushel of wheat of something like 80 cents, or on 50,000,000 bushels a total profit of $40,000,000.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: One hundred per cent profit.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is nothing to what some of our Conservative friends make. During the last five years we have been exporting from western Canada about 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 bushels of wheat. The price last year ranged from 50 cents up to $1. Suppose the average export price at Fort

William was 60 cents. Then out of the $40,000,000 the board could pay to the farmers 10 cents a bushel on this 250,000,000 or 300,000,000 bushels of wheat and have left over something in the neighbourhood of $15,000,000 or $10,000,000 for a final payment, which would net the western farmers somewhere between 70 and 75 cents a bushel. That would not cost the national revenue one cent. But even if it did, we do not feel that we need come to this government on bended knees to ask for this consideration, because in 1917 and 1918 the then Conservative government pegged the price of wheat to keep it from going too high—that is the only product of which they pegged the price; the wheat growers were the only people they penalized—and they made at that time between $70,000,000 and $100,000,000. That money has never been paid back to the farmers. So if it did cost the country a little money, this help is coming to the western farmer; they don't need to beg for it, it is their own money and it should be paid back to them. The only people who would have to pay more would be the consumers. Well, that is the policy of the Conservative party. Peg the price of wheat? Yes. Why not? They have pegged the price of manufactured goods by putting up the tariff so that those prices will not come down as otherwise they would. Why not protect the wheat grower of western Canada in the only way in which you can protect him? Peg the price for his wheat.

Mr. CAHAN: Have you convinced your colleagues of the soundness of your proposition?

Mr. DONNELLY: I have told you what the Liberal policy was.

Some hon. MEMBERS: They never had one.

Mr. VALLANCE: You boys don't like your medicine, but you had better take it.

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. member will allow me to ask him a courteous question? Has he convinced his colleagues so that they are prepared to support a pegging policy such as he has announced?

Mr. DUFF: Have you the Prime Minister's permission to ask that question?

Mr. DONNELLY: I told the house what the Liberal policy was. The Liberal policy was freer trade and open markets. I will repeat it lest he did not hear it. We would enter into trade relations with Germany, France and the other European countries so we could exchange our wheat for their commodities. But it is the policy of this government to build a tariff wall around Canada and force us to consume our own wheat. Therefore the only way to protect the farmer is to set a price for his products the same as the government has set a price for manufactured goods. I am putting this forward so the government may be consistent in their policy.

Mr. CAHAN: Is the hon. gentleman prepared to support such a policy?

Mr. DONNELLY: I would sooner have open markets, freer trade.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the hon. gentleman know that every country in continental Europe during the latter part of the Liberal regime raised its duties against Canadian wheat?

Mr. DUFF: Send for the Prime Minister, send for the Prime Minister.

Mr. VALLANCE: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) knows the answer to his question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: So do you.

Mr. VALLANCE: Do you want me to give it to you?

Mr. DONNELLY: This is one of the suggestions I make. As I say, I have listened for the last three weeks for some suggestions from the Conservative party, but I have not heard one.

An hon. MEMBER: You waited for nine years.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, I don't know whether my hon. friend and his government are going to take my suggestion now. I do not know what they have got in the back of their heads.

Mr. VENIOT: They have not got anything.

Mr. DONNELLY: They are not telling us what they will do. Well, my time is up.

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I am very much pleased that the first words of my first speech in this House of Commons are words of congratulation to you, sir, upon having been elected to the high office which you now so ably dignify, and to express further, to you and the members of the house, my appreciation of your having been called to this high office in view of the fact that you are a resident of my own city, Vancouver. I regret the absence from the house of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and I am greatly pleased to have heard recently that he will likely take his seat here in the course of the next few days. In referring to these two hon. gentlemen I would observe that not only is Vancouver fortunate in being represented by three good Liberals but that we from the city of Vancouver have also the representation of the Speaker of this house and of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think you will agree with me that the importance of Vancouver justifies this representation.

Some hon. members will no doubt remember that an election was held in July of last year, and members on this side have listened I am sure, with a great deal of patience to some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side who have been telling them quite frankly that they were beaten at the last election. You will pardon me, therefore, if for a few minutes on behalf of the citizens of Vancouver as well as on behalf of the members on this side of the house, I gloat a little over the result in greater Vancouver in the last election. As you know, there was a change in the lower mainland in British Columbia. This change, Mr. Speaker—and I believe, sir, you will realize this by reason of your residence there —was based absolutely on the trade extension policy of the Liberal government. It was based on the extension of foreign trade, on the development of foreign markets. Vancouver is a port city and is vitally interested in foreign markets; and it was that interest in foreign markets and the extension of foreign trade that brought Vancouver after a hard struggle into the Liberal fold, where we feel sure it will remain for a long time to come.

My congratulation to the mover (Mr. Cormier) and the seconder (Mr. Porteous) of the address is not only on the fact that they presented their arguments in an able manner but, as well, on the fact that they have accomplished what I am now attempting: they have finished their maiden speech At the same time I wish to congratulate the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), my chief. It was the policies of that right hon. gentleman that made me change my politics, in a fashion similar to that of the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) and, as one hon. gentleman reminds me, of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). It is the policy of foreign trade extension that is responsible for the change in my case. I am a follower of the Liberal party, because that policy of theirs brought Canada from a colony to a nation; it also raised Canada to the position of fifth trading nation in the world. That policy not only reduced taxes in Canada but at the same time materially reduced the debt of the country.

I wish also to congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Bennett) on having received an expression of confidence from the greatest people on earth, the Canadian nation; and I wish to convey to him and his followers a message from myself and, I am sure, from all members on this side of the house. We regard him as the leader of an opposing political party; but I regard him also as Prime Minister of my country, and I wish to assure him, as the Prime Minister of my country, of my full cooperation in any measure which is going to bring Canada through the present crisis.

Much has been said about conditions not only in Canada but throughout the world. Of course, we are particularly interested in the conditions that prevail in Canada. Now, conditions are not good; they are in fact the reverse—they are bad. And if we listen to some of our friends from the prairie provinces we shall be inclined to say they are even worse than that. However, it is admitted that conditions are not good. As to the causes, I fancy there are as many theories as to the reasons for the depression as there are people who attempt to think of causes at all. Over-production or under-consumption—of course, that is an obvious reason. Then shortage of gold; I do not agree with that; I believe there is sufficient gold for the requirements of the world. But there is one cause that is particularly true of Canada, and I think it is the propaganda that was either put out or permitted by the wheat pool during recent years. By that propaganda, and by their system of forcing their sale to the ultimate consumer, they also encouraged the production of wheat in other countries. By their propaganda, that wheat was to be $2 on a certain date, I am afraid that they did the Canadian producer much damage.

But, Mr. Speaker, the real question is not as to how we arrived at the stage we reached; our problem at the present time is to know where we are. Our next problem is to know where we are going and then what path we shall take to get to our destination. To show where we are as a nation to-day, I have only to say that we are one of the western nations of the world; and for the purpose of making my point, I visualize the world as a fortress of plenty. There is to-day a greater variety and volume of commodities in the world than at any time in its history. This fortress of plenty is encircled by a magic wall the component parts of which are machinery, science, transportation and communication. This wall is contracting day after day and year after year, and in the process it is forcing the nations of the world into closer contact with each other and each country into closer competition with all the others. To my mind, it is this contracting process which brought about the upheaval known as the world war. During the past fifteen years the process has been accelerated, and particularly within the past few years, aided by the restriction of exchange of commodities, until to-day the nations have contracted the disease we now call economic depression, which in turn is accompanied by a lower standard of living. That is where we are to-day. We have reached the position where this contracting process has brought us into economic competition with the other nations of the world, and Canada is being forced to accept the lower standard of living prevailing in the countries with which we compete.

Where are we going? Within this fortress the groups we call nations are beginning to realize that the only cure for the prevailing disease is to break through the wall and thus be able to move forward to the promised land of international cooperation, with its shorter working hours and higher standard of living. To my mind that is where we are going. But the cure will take years, because each nation is ineffectively attempting to bring about a cure by the erection of tariff walls to protect itself from other nations.

What can we do to bring relief to Canada? I advocate the course, peculiar as it may seem in view of the discussions we have heard in this house, of greater production and keener competition, and I hope to be able to offer a policy consistent with the Conservative policy. If we hope to cooperate with the government our suggestions must be consistent with their policies. I offer a suggestion which will make work for Canadians. This is a Conservative policy because it will permit Canada to blast her way into the markets of the world.

We must make Canada the economic Russia of the capitalistic nations of the world. We must fight for our place in the sun. We must tighten our national belt, and every individual in the nation must do his share. How are we to bring about this tightening process? The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), in the very able address he made recently, advocated a depreciated currency. Personally I cannot accept that proposition because that which a depreciated currency would do can be obtained by other means which would permit us to maintain our standard of living. We want to be one of the leading nations of the world, proud of the fact that everywhere our money is worth one hundred cents on the dollar.

How can we tighten our national belt? First, we must provide more purchasing power by more and cheaper money; second, we must reduce wages; third, we must reduce freight rates, and, fourth, as a natural consequence after the first three are accomplished, we must reduce our taxes. Only by these policies can we lower the cost of living and thereby reduce the cost of production, which would permit us to blast our way with our lower prices into the markets of the world. Once the cost of production is reduced the tariff ceases to be an issue. Our clothing and our machinery could then be manufactured in Canada cheaper than it could be imported. Lower production costs would permit the refinement and fabrication in Canada of most of our resources now being exported in a raw or semi-manufactured state. And a most important result would be that by the adoption of these policies we could return to their proper relationship to the value of primary production such fixed charges as interest, freight rates and taxes. We would then be the one nation in the world outside of Russia where every man was working. We would have an advantage over those nations which are obliged to provide for the unemployed, and we would have a job for everyone in Canada willing to work.

The first policy which I advocate, the establishment of a federal reserve system, would have the immediate effect of materially increasing money available for loans. It would enable the banks to lend to individuals and industries the money they are now unable to lend because of their frozen assets in the shape of loans to agriculturists and to industry now impossible of collection. By increasing the total amount of credit available, money would be cheaper, which would result in lower interest charges without affecting the net earnings of the banks. By increasing credit there would be an increase in capital available for the expansion of our industries. More and cheaper money would increase the purchasing power of the Canadian people.

My second suggestion is that there should be a reduction in wages, such as has already taken place in many industries. Because of the decrease in the cost of living, those who are to-day receiving a fixed income are better off than they were during the period of prosperity. My suggestion is that a reduction of 20 per cent be made in wages, but at the same time the cost of living must be reduced to the same extent.

Mr. HEAPS: How could the purchasing power be increased if wages were decreased?

Mr. HANBURY: The cost of living is relative to wages; the purchasing power of a day's work will be as great as it is to-day. This purchasing power of a day's work would increase when the worker, whose wages are to-day maintaining the unemployed—and this is a point to which I would invite the attention of hon. gentlemen in that corner of the house, that to-day the unemployed are being paid for by the employed worker—is relieved of that burden by the increased demand for man power. Wage reduction is always difficult, but I am confident that we can prove to labour that their cooperation in this national emergency would permit many thousands of their numbers to return to the higher paid positions from which they have been displaced. As an illustration of this condition, I have in mind thousands of railwaymen—and I mention railwaymen particularly because they are a strongly organized group, it is natural to expect that their consideration would not be favourable—who have been reduced in status and their earnings decreased as a result of declining railway traffic, and thousands more who are now on the spare list with no earnings at all. I know in British Columbia there are engineers who have been what they call "bumped" to a fireman's job and in fact some have been bumped right down to the roundhouse. There have been firemen bumped out of a job and shopmen bumped out of a job. Through greater production and greater traffic, those men can better afford to take a reduction in wages and get back to their proper position. I have no doubt of the cooperation of labour if labour has no reason to doubt the cooperation it will receive from industry and from government.

My next suggestion is a reduction of 20 per cent in freight rates, made possible by reduced costs, by the most improved equipment, and also by increased earnings through greater traffic. Lower wages and all other charges, with increased foreign trade and general business expansion, in addition to a reduction of 20 per cent in the pay of all government employees, can result only in lowered taxes. More and cheaper money, lower wages, lower freight, lower taxes, will bring lower production costs, but not necessarily a greatly decreased selling price for our farmers, lumbermen, fishermen and miners whose products are sold on the markets of the world.

Our object must be not crass indifference to the interests of all other nationals, not just cold blooded exploitation, but to provide work for all Canadians. We must ever keep before us the improvement in the Canadian standard of living, which our resources, education, and civilization will make a simple task if we have courage, energy and faith. To better our standard of living we must be prosperous, and Canada is not prosperous to-day. The advantage in world commerce, the place in the sun, will belong to that nation which first and best realizes the necessities of the present world economic position.

I am advocating the immediate adoption of a policy that otherwise we shall be forced into in a very short time, and if we wait for that day it is not inconceivable that our present institutions might not be then in control of the working out of that policy. Science, machinery, transportation, communications, are forcing the world forward at an ever increasing rate. The immediate future offers nothing but economic war; civilization demands a truce to regulate production through reducing the hours of work; civilization demands a world economic peace. In this new world away from the age-old distrusts of the old world, let all the nations assemble to cooperate for the benefit of mankind. A suggestion I wish to make to the Prime Minister is that there is no other place in the world to-day where the question of international economic cooperation can be so well considered as it can be right here in Canada. Until that day, when world economic peace has been proclaimed, let us Canadians, with faith and courage, set our course to make Canada the barometer of world trade.

Mr. T. M. CAYLEY (South Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of the house for only a short time to make a few observations. Since eight o'clock we have had the pleasure of listening to two excellent addresses. This recalls to my mind the words used by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) during his election campaign when he went throughout the west calling upon sinners to repent. It seems to me that those two splendid addresses are calling upon sinners to repent.

I should like in this public way to say how pleased I am at the elevation to a ministerial office of my old school friend and lifelong chum, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland), which has brought so much credit to the good old county of Oxford, half of which each of us represents. I see my friend the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore) applauding; he too is an offspring of that good old county. With regard to the criticism that has been hurled against the front benchers on the other side for being absent so much, I should like to point out that my good friend from North Oxford, the Minister of National Defence, is not among that class. He has shown a great deal of interest at all times in the affairs of the house.

I want also to pay tribute to another old chum of mine in the person of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), with whom I had the privilege of attending school for some months. He has said that he is faced with a very heavy task, and I am sure he is. I want to assure both of these hon. gentlemen that in any effort which they undertake for the improvement of conditions in Canada, I shall personally be only too happy to cooperate with them, for my love of Canada is no less than theirs.

Listening to the addresses from different members from all parts of Canada, and knowing conditions in his own locality, one must admit that the world is passing through dark days, and in spite of the attempt on the part of some to claim that conditions in Canada are only a legacy from the King administration, the consensus is that the present situation is due to world economic conditions. If the government headed by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) ever goes out of power—and it is being prophesied now that this will happen soon—let us hope that his government will not leave any worse legacy than the one they took over. The King administration saved Canada from a much more serious state than would have been the case had they not been in office prior to the accession to power of the party opposite.

In a recent article in the New York Times, Raymond B. Fosdick, a distinguished lawyer and author, describes conditions as follows:

> In a world that is bursting with goods and that has limitless capacity to produce, we are haunted by the spectre of compulsory idleness with its bony fingers upon the throat of our industrial life. Apparently the problem of the machine age is not so much a problem of producing goods as it is a problem of producing buyers. The unemployed are waiting for the flow of wages so that they can buy goods they need. The manufacturers with idle plants are waiting for consumers with sufficient money to start the wheels. All unwillingly we have slipped into the vicious circle.

The progress of science and invention has brought the world to this emergency. So must it lead us out into better times of its solution.

Some say we must do away with the machine and go back to more and more hand labour. But we cannot go back. The discoveries of modern times must carry us forever forward. There is no standing still, no going back, but ever the bringing to light of new forces and ever changing conditions, to which changing conditions the world must adapt itself.

The Right Hon. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, in his statement before the 1930 Imperial conference used these significant words:

> I would, therefore, sir, put to the conference this proposition. What we must apply ourselves to is how this conference, representative of the empire as a whole, can make a practical contribution toward the solution of the difficulties and problems we are faced with to-day, but I say a practical proposal and I say practical remedies, because we are faced with circumstances in which quack remedies and mere phrases or preorations will not lead to real results.

A quack is a pretender to medical or other skill, so the dictionary informs me. He usually has the one and only panacea for all ills. Such was the medicine man with his incantations and charms. His treatment may pacify and soothe for a time, but seldom effects a permanent cure. Industrial success to-day is due to the elimination of the quack remedies in that sphere of activity; but in the world of politics and statecraft, the charmer and medicine man still holds sway. In this connection one may recall the case of the sick Indian medicine man who was asked why he did not beat the drum for himself and take his own medicine. His reply was, "Sometime drum all right, sometime medicine all right, but me sick." Canada is sick, but this government continues the use of the old time quack medicines, incantations and charms.

The need for reconstruction on a broad basis is urgently felt, as Mr. Thomas further points out, saying, "It is hardly necessary for me to say that the world has struck an economic blizzard"; and he implored all the representatives to forget "party," and forget "election promises" in the face of the great emergency, and suggest some practical remedy. One realizes now how incriminating those words sound in the face of Canada's unpreferential legislation of the special session of last autumn, and the bold, blunt proposals of Canada's Prime Minister, in which he outlined his "Canada first" policy.

With here and there a jarring note, one, nevertheless feels that the nations are beginning to realize that our political conceptions have not caught up with our machines and that we still cling to the idea that we can maintain political isolation in a world in which economic isolation has long since gone by the board. This is our challenge.

We have the League of Nations—a world council of justice—great world conferences, material and religious—and we have our Imperial conferences, all in an endeavour to create a wider political system better able to protect the more extensive intersts of the nations they serve.

Higher and higher discriminatory tariffs are quack remedies. There seems to have developed an insatiable greed for tariffs, to build about us an insurmountable wall so that our only recreation will be that of charging each other high prices. Tariffs may be wisely applied, but in order to apply them sanely and wisely a government must have at its disposal all the data it can possibly obtain from a far-reaching investigation. For tariffs may be highly discriminatory, as was found to the dismay of the present government in the case of glass. A tariff board of well-trained impartial experts, non-political, non-partisan, is an absolutely necessary adjunct of every government, and it is with great satisfaction that one learns of the government's intention to re-establish the tariff board which they so ruthlessly exterminated on coming into power.

We should learn from the past. Canada has had extraordinary periods of growth and prosperity. In those periods sprang into being her great industrial centres, her great ports and transportation systems. Then were settled, and tilled ever-increasingly, millions of acres of fertile land. Then Canadian shipping was found in the ports of the seven seas. Foreign commerce increasingly sought our shores. Canada flourished because her world trade flourished. Canada's growth in the fifteen years of the Laurier regime was wonderful, but the golden era of her prosperity was during the nine years of the Mackenzie King administration. I might implore this government to forget its pre-election promises, but that is unnecessary, as hon. members have so often pointed out. But I would urge that they formulate their policies along those lines which brought Canada such success during the regimes of these great Canadian statesmen, and welcome the coming Imperial conference in the spirit of the Dunning budget. This parliament might well, too, study the causes of the depression with a view to preventing its repetition; and not merly accept its recurrence as an act of providence but rather as a problem for sober-thinking representatives of a great people to solve. I do not doubt for a moment the ability of the present age to solve the economic problems of such a crisis as the present, when machinery has not only captured the workshop but is invading the home and leaving its impact on social and family life. The great fact of to-day is the collapse of man power before machinery and narrow governmental policies. The solution will be found in a careful adjustment of conditions both at home and internationally. It will not be found in a wholly free trade policy, or in an exclusive high tariff policy, but in the careful adjustment of a free trade and moderately protective and mutually beneficial policy.

Foreign trade is not war but exchange. When Canada's ambassador to Tokyo seeks to sell wheat to Japan he is asked "what will Canada buy from us"? When he goes to China, China wants to know what Canada will buy from her. When the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Macdonald) seeks a market for potatoes in Cuba he will be asked the same question. When the Prime Minister endeavours to sell Canadian wheat in the motherland it is pointed out that the old land buys from Canada many more millions of dollars' worth than Canada buys from her, and the question is asked whether Canada will take more. What will Canada buy from Britain?

At present it would appear that the "Canada first" policy may have the effect of greatly reducing Canadian foreign trade. Already from one cause or another it is greatly reduced. Exports are falling off, our industries are languishing and unemployment becoming more and more a problem. It is true there is no great trek of our youth to the United States, for that country is in a worse economic condition; but a number of Canada's trained workmen and those technically trained are joining the large army going into Russia. Stephen Leacock, Professor of Economics at McGill University, speaking a few days ago under the auspices of the Montreal junior board of trade in the Windsor Hotel, is reported as saying:

> Russia is going to fail; Russia is going to break. In Russia there is none of the apparatus of democracy as we know it—nothing but a huge driven herd of millions scarcely worth while counting. But they put Russia together.

The professor does admit that they are doing things in Russia, and it will be all the more difficult for the rest of the world where things languish.

> Their political organization is on the pattern of political parties in the United States; their economy is copied from the American trusts.

Further on Mr. Leacock is reported as saying:

What are we going to do? The virus of communism is eating into the souls of the young people of Canada because we are not doing enough for the country and they know it; because we starving in a land of plenty and they know it. We must build something here which will be a bulwark against any communistic chance.

Continuing he says:

It is whether Russia will break or we will break first. In Canada we will have to be up and doing. We have the resources—more than 10,000,000 people could live here if they wanted. If Russia can build dams, pile up production, so can we. But we produce too much. Hitherto we thought of that as a kind of interesting paradox. We have to solve it. We must have a policy which will mean that there must be bread and work for all. Not the English dole system—all bread and no work—that is no good.

The greatest problem, and the one that comprehends and includes all others, is the improvement of agriculture in Canada. The future of Canada is dependent upon having a prosperous happy and contented rural population. For agriculture is the basic industry. And in view of the urgent demand, arising out of the serious condition in which Canadian farmers find themselves, parliament would do well to spend a greater part of its time during this session in committee trying to find a solution for their difficulties. I am not going to attempt to describe conditions in my own county. Perhaps they are not as bad as they are in some other counties, but meeting farmers continually and knowing them intimately I do say that many of them have made committments and find themselves wondering how they are going to get through. They are a brave class of people. They come from a noble group of people who pioneered this country, and they are not easy to discourage.

I am going to quote from what I believe to be one of the best sources from which we could draw information regarding the condition of agriculture in Canada to-day. I have in my hand a manifesto on agricultural conditions, issued by the Canadian Council of Agriculture. This information is not gleaned from any particular part of Canada, but from Canada as a whole. The council knows whereof it speaks, and issues the following statement:

The conditions now prevailing among the agricultural population of the Dominion menace the whole social and economic fabric of the country. Exhortations to optimism and statements denying the widespread suffering and impoverishment of our rural people, even when made by prominent men, do not change the facts. Farmers are being reduced to poverty; their families are being inadequately fed, clothed and educated; they are unable to meet their obligations to pay taxes, to redeem mortgages, to maintain payments of interest, to settle their debts for machinery, gas and oil, and other necessary purchases. Many lack seed for spring sowing and will be compelled to go deeper into debt in order to provide it. Even the minority who have hitherto occupied a position of financial independence have "gone behind" and are in danger of being submerged.

For many years the Canadian Council of Agriculture, speaking for the farmers' provincial organizations, has protested against the handicaps imposed on the farming industry by tariff exactions, high transportation costs, inadequate and expensive credit facilities and inequitable taxation, to name only the more outstanding of their grievances. Such protests have been unavailing and the advent of the world-wide depression, resulting from the costs and ravages of the war, aggravated by the national jealousies and economic rivalries which have succeeded it, has found the Canadian farmers totally unable to cope with the difficulties and to make the sacrifices entailed by it. The continuance of the existing conditions throughout another crop year must inevitably involve in the most serious degree the financial and industrial institutions of the Dominion. Banks, trust companies, mortgage corporations and other lending institutions will find themselves in possession of the lands and chattels which form the security for their loans, but lacking purchasers to take them off their hands. Their security will have depreciated to an extent necessitating the writing off of very heavy losses. The manufacturing concerns, together with the great army of distributing agencies, will face stagnation owing to the inability to find purchasers for the products they produce or handle. The farmers will be either dispossessed or compelled to spend long years in carrying on an uphill struggle to liquidate the debts of principal and interest pyramided upon them. Large numbers will become tenant farmers, or farm labourers, living at a standard much below that, even, which they have been able to attain in the past.

I have heard from both sides of the house different suggestions as to the reason for the unfortunate position in which the farmers find themselves. Some people blame the farmers for laziness; some allege mismanagement; some say they are buying too much and some that they are buying too little. If there is any class of people in the Dominion of Canada which receives from the arm-chair and white-collared philosophers of our land more free advice than any other class, it is the poor farmers. In the present emergency they require some one really to show them how to surmount the difficulties which confront them. Show them what? How to do all the work on a 100-acre farm without help—grow, harvest and market the crops; build the buildings and keep them in repair; be machinist, agriculturist; pay the interest on the mortgages, pay the taxes; feed and clothe his family; support the church and local institutions, and the other hundred and one things which time does not permit me to enumerate.

The farmer finds himself confronted with heavy capital commitments at a time of falling prices for his own productions. He is endeavouring to meet the payments of high-priced farms and equipment in the face of an income barely sufficient to maintain the living expenses of his own household. As I said, the betterment of the farmers' condition involves to a large extent the solution of the other great problems of industrial regeneration and unemployment. In view of the positive promises given to the country by the Prime Minister. that he would right the wrongs of the Canadian people, the farmers of Canada are awaiting with keen expectation the coming of that great day of fulfilment.

Considerable criticism has been offered by hon. members of Canadian banking institutions. Perhaps they might do more by way of assistance, but when one recalls the wholesale failures of banks in the neighbouring republic and their instability one must feel increased pride and confidence in Canadian banks.

What is most important is the adaptation of our institutions to modern conditions and needs, based on a world-wide conception. Internationally we are interdependent; we cannot live to ourselves; we all need markets and we all need each other. I say to-day is the empire's chance. For this emergency has she been preserved. Her's the chance to consolidate—to solve the great economic and social problems and preserve peace and freedom among 450,000,000 people. There is urgent need for an empire board to be working all the time, not periodically; a board, not of politicians but of experts in their particular lines. I repeat, we need world markets, more and more of them. Where are additional foreign markets to be found? It has been pointed out by leading economists and statesmen that more than a billion people throughout the world are potential consumers of our surplus products and that they could, under the right kind of governmental policies—including of course a liberal trade policy—be converted into actual consumers. All the great problems now facing the country—farm relief, agricultural surpluses, the utilization of manufacturing productivity, unemployment, maintenance of our standards of living, continued development and progress, international good will with resultant international peace—all seem to me to be bound up in the solution of this problem of the expansion of our foreign trade.

[Mr. Cayley.]

Unless the country is to abandon its high standards of living; unless our great manufacturing plants are to remain idle with accompanying unemployment; unless more and more farmers are to be driven from the land and forced to compete for a living with the surplus labour in the cities; unless progress and development are to cease and be followed by a recession, the result of which one can foretell, it seems to me we must abandon selfish and insular trade policies and set up a financial, commercial, economic policy that will be world-embracing in its aims. But the expansion of our foreign trade along the lines indicated can never be the policy of the Conservative party committed as it is to super-protection and economic isolation. It can come only by the ascendancy of the Liberal party with its broad and liberal tariff and trade policy that is a world policy. And that to my mind truly is the greatest of all Canadian policies—a Canada-first policy that means everything.

Out of the wreck of ages
We grasped that truth divine,
It fires us still,
And, by God's will,
It shall to the end of time.

It shall lead and lift us upward
To a truer strength of soul;
It shall banish fear.
And bring us near
The freeman's destined goal.

CIVIL SERVICE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) advise the house how long the dismissals of employees is to continue in the Department of the Interior, and what progress has been made, if any, in the way of reestablishing those who have been let out?

Hon. THOMAS G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, it would be manifestly impossible to answer the first part of the question put by the hon. member, but with regard to the second portion of his question, namely, as to what steps have been taken by the government to provide for these employees, I would say that that has been more or less answered already.

Possibly it might not be out of place at this time to say something in regard to this matter. The former Minister of the Interior has put certain questions to the house in regard to it and has expressed his solicitude for these employees. He feels that the government should make certain provision for these civil servants who have been retired or who have received notice of dismissal. It is not a pleasant position in which I find myself at this time. Because of the transfer of the natural resources to the prairie provinces many people have for the last eight or nine months found themselves to be without a position. However, that is not a matter for which I can accept full responsibility because these resources were returned to the western provinces before this government assumed office or before I had the honour of administering the affairs of this department. It is a little unusual to hear the ex-minister express such solicitude in view of the fact that no provision to take care of any of these employees was made in the agreements transferring the natural resources to the western provinces, or in the legislation confirming those agreements. It might well have been made the subject of more than discussion; some steps might have been taken to see that these employees were looked after. However, a search of the agreements and legislation discloses nothing providing for these people.

The services of some 591 employees formerly employed in what might be termed the outside services have been dispensed with. Some of them have been taken over by the provinces but there is nothing in the records to show that the former government attempted in any manner to provide for any of them The only thing on the files is a letter written by the former minister expressing the hope that something might be done.

Owing to this transfer there is no work for those previously employed in many of the branches of the department. Speaking on this very question on May 1, 1930, the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) said:

I might answer my hon. friend as to the reasons why the government did decide not to await the answers by the courts before transferring the resources. It was perfectly apparent to the government that the agreements with Manitoba and Alberta would pass, which would mean that so far as the Department of the Interior was concerned that department would more or less pass out of existence.

Mr. Bennett: Functus officio.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Yes, it would practically pass out of existence, two-thirds of it at any rate, and we would be keeping on a department of the government, simply for the purpose of awaiting the answer by the courts. That was one reason.

On May 2, 1930, in replying to a question asked by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley), the hon. leader of the opposition said:

I think I can promise my hon. friend that the number will not be increased. As he is aware, in this house we have passed to-day enactments under which the natural resources of the three western provinces must be transferred to those provinces, as well as certain lands to the province of British Columbia. When that transfer is effected it should be possible to do away entirely with the ministry of the interior. Some reorganization and consolidation will be effected as respects the Department of Immigration, the Department of Indian Affairs, the forestry service and allied branches of the public service.

Those remarks would show that there existed in the minds of the then government an intention to curtail to a great extent the activities of this department. As I stated before, having that in mind, they took no steps whatever to make any provision for these employees.

When the present government took office this was the first question brought to my attention. Knowing that a great many of these employees would find themselves without employment when the reorganization took place, I addressed a letter to each of my colleagues in the cabinet, asking them and their departments to take care of as many as possible of those employees of the Department of the Interior who might be retired. This letter is dated October 2, 1930, and reads as follows:

My dear colleague:

The transfer of the natural resources to the western provinces will render surplus to the future requirements of this department a large number of well-trained and highly skilled officials of extensive departmental experience.

All of these employees have confidently expected to work out their full period of service with the federal government, and have predicated their domestic arrangements on this understanding. If no place can be found for these in the federal public service, the Dominion is obligated to grant pensions or whatever other consideration has been earned under the act under which the employees have been contributing. Those affected have already filed a petition asking for consideration beyond that provided in the existing Superannuation or Retirement Acts.

From this you will see that it is distinctly good business to give precedence to those employees when assistance is required. New work is being undertaken by certain branches of the public service, and in some cases the permanent positions have not been provided in the estimates so there is no vacancy in the establishment to which permanent employees could be transferred. In order to overcome this difficulty I am prepared to authorize a loan of surplus permanent employees of the Department of the Interior up to the end of the present fiscal year, that is until the 31st of March, 1931, the date to which their salaries have been voted, provided, of course, your department undertakes to create positions for their retention after that date. The Civil Service Commission is aware of this and is ready and willing to facilitate such transfers.

If your department needs any assistance might I suggest that you nominate an official to confer with a representative of this department in order that the situation may be carefully analyzed with a view to promoting the transfer of suitably qualified employees from the Department of the Interior.

I have not had a great deal of experience in the public service of Canada, but I find that it is not easy to transfer an employee from one department of the government to another. Many things militate against this being done. First, there is the natural ambition of individuals in other departments; if a position becomes vacant and they are in line for promotion, naturally they wish to secure that position. That applies right down the line until the lowest paid position is the only one available, and an employee, say in the Department of the Interior, who has been receiving a certain salary, is a little loathe to accept so great a reduction. I am not arguing that should a vacancy occur in a department, an employee losing his position in another department should as a matter of course be put into that vacant position, but at least it might fairly be claimed that he should have an equal right to compete for that position with others in the other departments. That would put them on an equal basis, but the departments—and no government is to blame for this—are apparently run as closed institutions or, as one might say, closed competitive institutions so far as the employees are concerned. They are not willing to allow an employee from one department to transfer to another. Further, in many cases an employee in a department such as the Interior department, knowing of a vacancy in another department, prefers to remain in his own department and to take his chance, rather than to transfer to the other.

This is not a new situation. In the Department of the Interior it had been known for some four years that this reorganization was bound to occur, and the matter has been very much to the fore this year. I do not suppose any employee in any of the branches of the Department of the Interior has not been for the last year or for at least ten months, fully cognizant that this reorganization was coming.

I have given to the house the events as they have transpired until the present time. We have now entered a new fiscal year and the estimates of the department show that the appropriations are much less. Accordingly, we have to meet that situation. Certain criticisms have been levelled against the department to the effect that these employees have been dismissed in a very cruel manner. They received their notices, it is true. How else could the dismissals have been made except by giving notice to them? The Civil Service Act provides that when an employee's position is abolished or when his services are no longer required, he shall be given a certain leave of absence. Under the present situation in the Department of the Interior, that period of time will extend from two to six months. They are not cut off at a moment's notice; rather, they are given that two to six months' notice during which time their full salary will be paid. The following instructions were given to the various heads of branches of the department when this reorganization was to take place:

In effecting staff reductions to bring the salary list within the limits of the figure set by Treasury Board, the department will work in cooperation with the Civil Service Commission.

In the matter of retention on the staff, regard will then be had for preference in the following order, provided always that no employee will be retained unless efficient to perform the service required,—

That is, efficiency is the first test.

1. Those who enlisted in Canada and saw active service in any theatre of war and who have now domestic responsibilities.
2. Other employees with domestic responsibilities.
3. Those who enlisted in Canada and saw active service in any theatre of war and who have no dependents.
4. Others with no dependents.

Generally speaking it will not be possible to retain any employee who has reached the age of sixty-five years or who has put in the full thirty-five years of service unless such retention is a matter of special necessity to the department.

Following that, conferences were arranged with the heads of the various services, and the matter was fully explained to them. Further, the names of those employees who have been retired or who have received their notice of dismissal, are listed with the Civil Service Commission for reassignment to any other branch of the government when vacancies occur. This is carrying out the law as I understand it and as it is laid down in the Civil Service Act, chapter 22, section 54, which reads:

> Any employee holding a permanent position that is to be abolished, or which is no longer required, shall be laid off and his salary discontinued but his name shall be placed, in the order provided by the regulations of the commission, on the list of persons eligible for the class of positions from which he was laid off or for any other position for which he may have qualified.

That has been done in the case of each of the employees who have lost their positions. I do not think I can add anything further at the present time, but if the question should arise again I am willing to make my position as clear as possible to the house.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Will the minister allow me to ask him a question in regard to this matter?

I am glad to be interrupted at this moment by the entrance to the chamber of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) with whom I have had the honour of sitting in the house for many years. I am glad to see him restored to health and strength.

I was about to ask the minister whether it is true that in certain branches of his department which remain under the control of the Dominion, a number of officials have been dismissed.

Mr. MURPHY: I do not get the full purport of the question.

Mr. MARCIL: A morning paper states that in certain branches of the Department of the Interior which remain under the control of the Dominion government, a number of officials have been dismissed. I refer to the hydrographic survey, geodetic survey and parks survey.

Mr. MURPHY: The hydrographic survey does not come under the Department of the Interior; that is under the Department of Marine. The other surveys, such as the geodetic, topographic and international boundary surveys are still under the department, but all branches of the Department of the Interior are to a certain extent affected.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I refrained from interrupting the hon. Minister of the Interior while he was speaking, because, in common with other members of the house, I felt it was a privilege to have an opportunity to listen to him and to hear what he had to say on this important matter.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): My right hon. friend will pardon me. On the orders of the day when a question is asked and a reply made, that is the end of the incident.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the very point to which I was coming. I did not interrupt my hon. friend when he was speaking, though I might have done so on a question of privilege. My hon. friend in speaking, whether consciously or unconsciously, did not confine himself to answering the question asked but entered into an argument in answer to a question on the orders of the day. That was wholly irregular, and I am going to ask the permission of you, Mr. Speaker, to be allowed the same latitude in making reply to one contention which was made by the minister—your honour may put it on the ground of privilege, if you will—but which I think ought to be answered immediately. Out of courtesy, I did not interrupt the minister though I knew he was out of order at the time. I believe the house will take no exception to what I have to say when hon. members hear what it is.

Perhaps the acting leader of the government will not find fault if I venture at once to express our congratulations to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) upon his return to the house, and particularly upon his looking so well and strong. We all hope that he has completely recovered from the very serious illness through which he has recently passed.

The point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is this: My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) in speaking, whether unintentionally or otherwise I cannot say, did seek to leave the impression by his remarks that this present situation with respect to employees of the Interior department had arisen out of some neglect by the previous administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If that was the minister's intention I rise to a question of privilege, and I have the right to speak. I repeat, I do not say that the minister's inference was intentional. I wish to state the facts correctly, if I may be permitted so to do. What I wish to bring to the attention of the minister and of other hon. members is this: The legislation respecting the transfer of the resources to the provinces was not actually assented to until the day of dissolution of parliament itself and the time fixed for the transfer was still considerably in advance of that date. Obviously under the circumstances, no arrangement could have been made either at the time or prior thereto for the transfer of persons or their accommodation in other ways with respect to positions which were still necessary and which of necessity had to be continued for some little time to come. As a matter of fact, the resources were, I believe, not transferred finally, until the month of October, at least in the case of those of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and it was therefore absolutely necessary that clerks should be kept on until the actual transfer was made.

As to provision in advance, may I say that I recall that as early as 1926 the government of the day believed that it had made an arrangement with the province of Alberta for the transfer of its resources, but we found later on that for some reason the Alberta government did not desire to proceed with the transfer at that date, and it was some four years later that the ultimate transfer was made. We had at the last session of the last parliament reason to assume that all negotiations would work out satisfactorily so as to permit of the transfer but no guarantee that this would be effected the moment that parliament dissolved. Therefore the government of the day was restricted and very much restricted in attempting to make arrangements for the provision that might became necessary for those employees of the public service who might find themselves adversely affected by the transfer when it might actually take place. I want to make clear, that it was actually the month of October before the resources in the case at least of two provinces were transferred.

This fact also I think should be borne in mind. In the interval there was the period of a general election. In the nature of things it was inadvisable if not impossible, immediately prior to the election, for the government of the day to anticipate its result and make provision for employees in their positions as they might be after the election. I think that is quite clear. If, for example, the government of the day had provided for these civil servants prior to the general election, it would immediately have been stated that the provision thus made had been made in the light of the forthcoming election, and very strong exception would have been taken to the making of such provision by the hon. gentlemen who are now objecting to our having refrained from making every provision. What we did was to go as far in the matter as we could go at the time, intending, immediately the elections were over to proceed further, if we were returned to office, or have hon. gentlemen opposite assume that responsibility if they were returned.

The exception that is being taken at the moment is not to the fact that many of these employees cannot be continued in their present positions, but to the summary manner in which many of them have been dismissed, and to the inadequacy of the consideration which has been shown them in the matter of time and in other respects in consequence of the loss of the positions they were holding.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I say that the same reasons which actuated the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in refraining from interrupting the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) influenced the Speaker in not interrupting the hon. gentleman. Now that great latitude has been allowed to a member of the government in speaking on the orders of the day and similar latitude to the leader of the opposition, I think I cannot do better than to draw the attention of the house to the rule in that respect, which I am bound to say has to some extent been evaded at this session. I will read to the house what Bourinot says, as summarized by Beauchesne:

> When the orders of the day are called by the Speaker and before they are read by the clerk assistant, it is the practice sanctioned by usage but not by any positive rule, for members to make personal explanations or ask questions of the government, in reference to an inaccurate report of their speeches in the official records, or in the newspapers; or in denial of certain charges made against them in the public prints; or in reference to certain remarks which had been misunderstood on a previous occasion, and which they had not before had an opportunity of explaining; or in respect to delay in obtaining returns or to the incompleteness of certain returns brought down under the order of the house; or relative to the state of public business, or other matters of public interest. But these remarks should be brief as they are only tolerated, there being no question before the Chair when they are made, and no discussion should be allowed when a minister has replied to a question nor after a member has made his personal explanation. In asking a question, a member must not attack the conduct of the government. If a member wishes to make personal explanations in reference to remarks which have fallen from another member, the latter ought to be in his place.

I would also refer to standing order 45, which is explicit:

> Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given . . . . for placing a question on the order paper.

I think members will agree with me that the nature of questions asked on the orders of the day should be something altogether different from questions that might well be put on the order paper, and I would therefore ask the cooperation of the house in future in observing both the rule and custom of the house.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

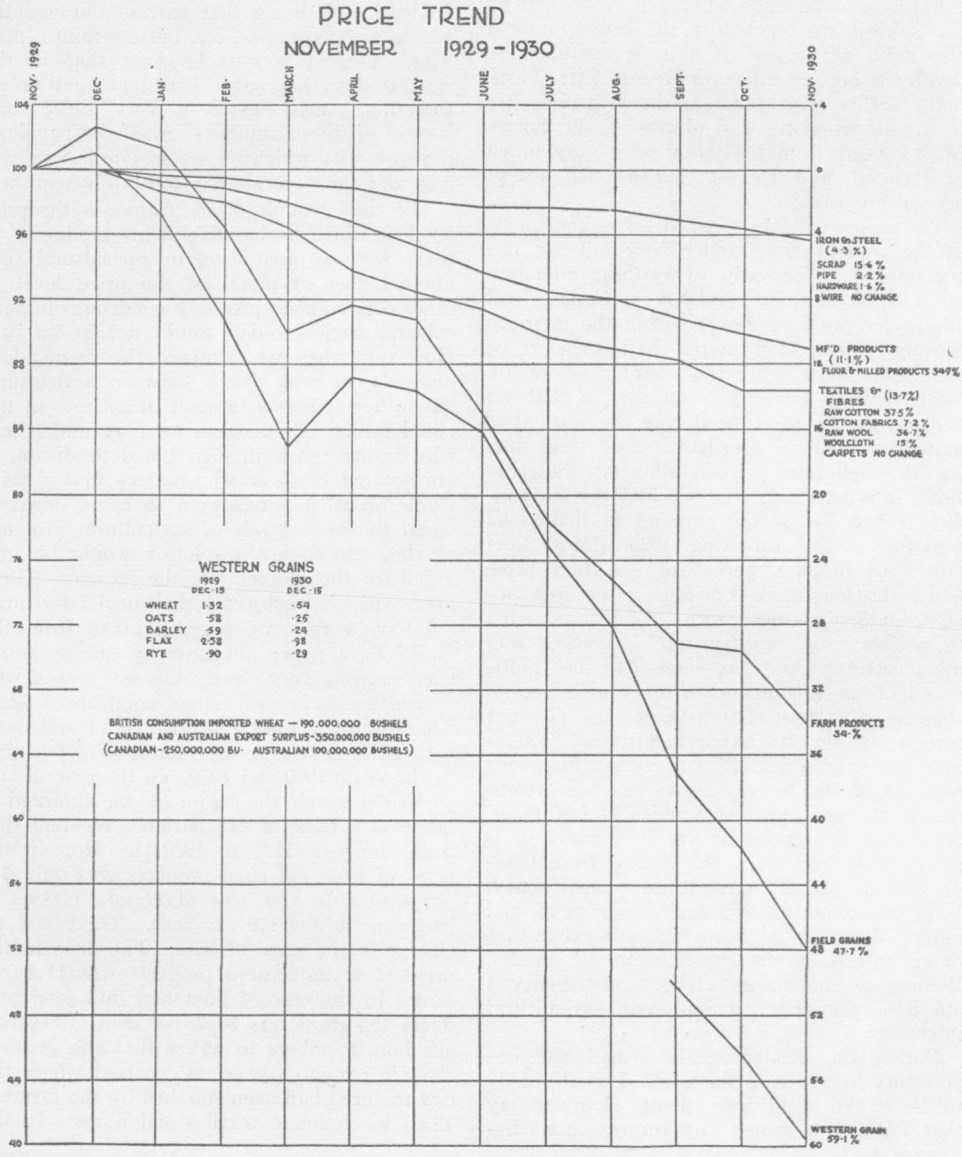
The house resumed from Friday, April 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D.

Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): May I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to express my pleasure at seeing the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) again in his seat. During the progress of the session members of the house have missed the hon. minister very much indeed. I am sure that we all trust that he has fully recovered and that he will continue in good health. It is a pleasure indeed to see him again in his seat.

Before I commence what I have to say on the subject matter before the house, may I also take advantage of this opportunity to thank the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) for his very kind remarks with reference to myself when he was addressing the house. May I assure him that they were very much appreciated, and I trust that he will accept my sincere thanks.

The House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, meets at the present time under very adverse circumstances. Not only every hon. member, but I think almost everybody in Canada will admit that we have never within the memory of any person now living had such grave conditions confronting this country as we are faced with to-day. It is quite true that we had a very serious time during the war; it is quite true that we also had a hard time during the deflation period following the year 1920; it is true also that we had certain conditions because of the war which made the deflation period following 1920 almost certain; but after a period of so-called prosperity lasting three or four years we are now suddenly met with conditions such as neither this country nor I believe any other country on the face of the globe ever had the misfortune to meet with before. Because of those circumstances we are not meeting under very happy conditions. Therefore in my judgment it is necessary for every member of the house to give his best attention to the great problems which lie before us. So far as I personally am concerned it is pretty well known in this house that I represent a purely agricultural constituency. With the exception of a small amount of coal mining there are no industries other than that of agriculture in the constituency of Acadia. Because of the nature of my constituency I am here primarily to represent agricultural interests.



During the Easter recess I had the opportunity to return to the west. I went chiefly to learn the conditions there. I must say that I did not expect any improvement because at that particular time no improvement was possible. I was very much surprised however to find that the western farmer had lost his usual optimism. I know of no class of people who during the last few months have lost their morale to such an extent as have the western farmers. The people who went out to develop our great western country were optimists and through all the hard years they have had to meet they have continued to be optimists. At the present time however I must confess they are far from being optimists; they see no lining to the cloud, no ray of hope, nothing to encourage them to expect better times. Western Canada is credited with being that part of our country which always hopes for better things next year. I must confess however that in the west to-day that spirit has gone and unless something turns up in a very short time instead of the optimistic spirit of the people in the west with which we are so familiar we will find that their morale has absolutely vanished.

The chief trouble of the farmer is the price level at which he has to sell his products. If there were a price level in agricultural products higher or equal to the price level of other commodities probably conditions in agricultural circles to-day would not be so bad. However, when we compare the tremendous disparity in price levels between agricultural and other products brought about by an unequal falling off in prices we may understand why agriculture is in such a bad condition. I am not one of those who believe that if price levels of other goods were to come down to equal the price levels of agricultural products as they are to-day a solution would be provided for the problems of the farmers. However, with that subject I shall deal later on.

I have before me a graph taken from the U. F. A., a paper publisher by our organization, showing very clearly the real reason why agriculture is in such a bad condition to-day. The graph describes the price trend and deals with price levels in the month of November in the years 1929 and 1930. In the case of this particular graph the figure of one hundred is taken as a basis of calculation. We find that from the year 1929 to 1930 the drop in the price of iron and steel products was only 4.3 per cent. In the case of certain classes of hardware it was 1.6 per cent. There was no change in the price of wire. The drop in the price of manufactured products was 11.1 per cent. In the case of flour and mill feed products the drop was 34.7 per cent. I would ask hon. members to notice that the greatest drop in commodity prices occurred where the raw material had been supplied by the farmers. Then we come to textiles and fibres. In the case of those commodities the drop has been 13.7 per cent. However, the price of raw cotton has dropped about 37.5 per cent. May I at this time interject a question? Why is it that the price of cotton goods has not dropped to a greater extent? Is it because of the emergency legislation of last session that the price of the raw material has dropped 37.5 per cent but that of the finished product has dropped only 13.7 per cent? We go down the list until we come to farm products. Farm products generally have dropped 34 per cent; field grain show a figure of 47.7 per cent. Then we come to the real problem facing the western farmer to-day. I refer to the fact that according to this graph the price of western grain has dropped 59.1 per cent.

On the other side of the graph I find a table referring to western grain. It shows the price level of western grains on December 15, 1929 and on the same date in the year 1930. In the year 1929 wheat was selling at $1.32 per bushel whereas on December of last year it sold for only 54 cents per bushel. With the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to put this graph on Hansard because it illustrates exactly the condition of agriculture at the present time.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

I have another table which strikes at the root of the situation in a somewhat different manner. This table was prepared by the executive of our organization and it was presented to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) when the hon. gentleman was touring western Canada in October last. I am going to read only one table to show the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat to-day in comparison with the purchasing power in former years of the same commodity.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that these price levels to which I shall refer are taken on the same date in succeeding years. On October 22, 1906, the cash price of a binder at the city of Calgary was $175. On October 21, of that year the cash price for No. 1 northern wheat in store at Fort William was 74¼ cents. The handling charges and elevator profits were 5 cents. The freight from Calgary to Fort William was 14.4 cents. The price to the shipper was 54.85 cents. At that time it took 319 bushels of wheat to buy an eight-foot binder complete. In the year 1913 the price of a binder was $190. On the same date in that year it took 318 bushels of wheat to buy a binder. In the year 1914 the price of the binder remained at $190 but the price of wheat had gone up and as a result it required only 194 bushels to buy an eight-foot binder. In 1926 the price of the binder was not $190 but $295. Yet the price of wheat had risen somewhat and it required in that year, despite the higher price of the binder, only 231.5 bushels of wheat to buy a binder. Now we come to last year, 1930. In that year the price of a binder had been reduced to $287. The price of wheat on that date was only 72⅝ cents. Allowing 5 cents for handling charges and elevator profit, and 15.6 cents for freight the price received by the farmer was only 52.025 cents per bushel. It required 551.5 bushels of wheat to buy an eight-foot binder last year. To my mind those figures show clearly the story of conditions in western Canada. I have in my hand other tables dealing with other classes of implements. May I point out further that the comparisons on these tables are based on No. 1 northern in store at Fort William. The average grade of wheat is not No. 1 northern; No. 3 or No. 4 is the average grade the farmers deliver. That is to say, if you take the grades from the highest down to the lowest, the average of the whole will be between No. 3 and 4 northern. This means that it takes many more bushels of wheat to buy the implements that I have quoted than the figure that has been given to me. I make this explanation because I believe it to be necessary.

Now, as I said before, the position of the western farmer is not a happy one. His liabilities are growing at a rapid rate. And many reasons can be given for this condition of affairs, but it all comes back again to the problem of the price levels of agricultural products. When we consider, for instance, the interest charges which the western farmer pays, more particularly the interest charges on overdue accounts, these are very burdensome, and consequently there is no hope of improvement, as far as I can see, unless we get some modification of the farmer's debts, or unless his interest charges generally are reduced; unless this is done I can see no hope of the liabilities of the farmers becoming substantially less in the near future. One of the weaknesses of our monetary system, or our medium of exchange, is that all governments seem to want to stabilize that medium at a certain level. Why governments should do the best in their power, in fact take the resources of the state for that particular purpose, I do not know. I am not aware of any reason why the state should put the national resources behind our dollar for stabilization purposes, any more than it should put its resources behind the stabilization of manufactured or agricultural products, as the case may be. Take the case of a farmer who in good faith buys implements or contracts a debt of any kind when the price of agricultural products is at a high level, and that of other commodities in proportion, and then try to realize what it means to the debtor during a deflation such as we are passing through at the present time. It means that the debtor's debts have increased, because through the reduction of the price level he will have to give more of his products to meet his liabilities. That practically is due to the fact that we do not permit the dollar to fluctuate the same as we permit the price levels of goods and services to fluctuate. And it is only fair to the debtor class that there should be a corresponding fluctuation of the dollar. My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) has placed before the house a proposal which I think hon. members should consider seriously, because it seems to me to be the most important proposal that has yet been submitted in an effort to remedy the conditions that we are passing through at the present time. I cannot see why we should be so fearful of the interests of the creditor class. The creditor class in this and other countries seem to be given all the privileges. No debtor class has ever been given any privilege in this country at all. Therefore I submit in all seriousness that the creditor class should be placed in exactly the same position as the debtor class, and that it should not secure any privileges by reason of the natural wealth of the country being put behind our dollar to stabilize the dollar whether it is worth stabilizing or not. I believe that is the biggest problem that confronts us to-day, and until something is done along these lines I am satisfied that we shall never begin to recover even the meagre prosperity that we have had during the last few years.

During these times of stress and trouble there is one class in this country that receives all kinds of gratuitous advice—the farming class. We are told in the speech from the throne that we must reduce production costs. I say to the government "All right." I throw out this challenge to the government: If they are sincere in stating that it is essential because of world conditions that the farmer reduce his production costs, then let the government show us how to do it. How can we do it? I submit to the house that to-day the farmer in western Canada is producing as efficiently as, and in fact more efficiently than, any other class of farmers in any other country in the world. The farmers of Canada use the most up-to-date machinery, they have the benefits of the scientific research of our experimental farms. I am satisfied of the fact that unless something drastic is done it is useless to tell them that they must reduce their production costs before they can expect to succeed. But I can see where perhaps the farmer may be able to reduce his production costs somewhat. If it is the intention of the government that in order to reduce their production costs the farmers of the west must accept a lower standard of living, then the sooner the government tells them the better it will be for the government and for the west. As far as I can see there is no hope of reducing production costs except by the western farmer reducing his standard of living. And if that standard of living is reduced, then hon. members can see what it will mean to industry in eastern Canada, because the western farmer is a good buyer when he has the funds, and his ability to purchase means a good deal to eastern industry.

If any evidence is required as to whether the western farmers is, for instance, producing grain at a cost comparative with the cost of production of similar grain in another country, I have the information before me. It is the report dated March 4, 1924, made by the United States tariff commission to the president. Hon. members may say that this is an old report and that conditions may be somewhat different to-day from what they were then. True, there may be a slight change, but it is slight only. Anyone who remembers the price levels in 1924 will recall that manufactured goods were selling at about the same level as they are to-day, maybe a little lower, but not much. This report is the result of an investigation undertaken by the United States tariff commission for the purpose of determining what duty should be placed on wheat importations. The commission realized that the greatest competitor of their wheat-producing states was Canada, because in Minnesota, South and North Dakota and Montana the quality of wheat produced is nearly as good as that produced in the Canadian prairie provinces. The commission found that the average cost of producing wheat at thirty-six points in those four states, after taking into consideration land, interest and other charges, was $1.44 a bushel. In order to ascertain the actual conditions in Canada the commission made inquiries in our three prairie provinces at forty-three points, taking evidence from eighteen to twenty farmers at each point. As a result of their inquiries the commission found that the average production cost of wheat in western Canada was 93 cents a bushel, as against the average cost of production in the four wheat-growing states of $1.44. That is why the high duty of 42 cents a bushel was imposed on grain entering the United States—to protect the United States grain-grower against his rival in western Canada. I think that shows fairly conclusively that the cost-of-production bogey has been over-worked. May I say in passing that it is useless for the government, it is useless for armchair farmers, it is useless for other wouldbe advisers to say that the only hope of the grain-grower of western Canada is in lower costs of production. In my judgment that is almost an impossibility under present conditions.

Now I am going to discuss another phase of the situation, with regard to the price levels of different commodities. I have studied this problem for some time, Mr. Speaker, and I have come to the conclusion that the most important cost, or the most important element in the cost, of producing any commodity is the labour time element. The labour time element is the most important element in the cost of producing commodities, whether they be agricultural commodities or manufactured goods. I am not going to take a back seat to any one in respect to the value of the labour time of the farmer in comparison to that of other classes of producers. The farmer is absolutely essential to the welfare of the people; we cannot get along without him, because he provides the food which is essential to life. Therefore I say that the labour time element entering into the cost of production of all goods should be given very serious consideration. In my judgment it is the most important element of all, and consequently should be given its rightful place. What is the condition to-day? If you analyze the price levels, as you may analyze them, you will find that probably the farmer will have to put in three hours or more in producing an agricultural product which, when exchanged for manufactured goods, will bring in exchange a product which only contains one hour of labour time, and this problem is being understood more and more by the western farmer. The time is coming when he will accept no other form of exchange than that which contains the absolute labour time element on the average. I think just now the western farmer is realizing this important element in the production of his goods, and as I said before as soon as he understands that principle thoroughly, and finds that it will explain to him very largely the discrepancy in price levels, I am satisfied that no government and no class of people in this country will be able to stand against the demand of the farmer that his labour time be reckoned as being just as valuable as the labour time of any other class of producer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that I have far more material on my desk than I will be able to deal with this afternoon. Permit me to take a moment to deal with the policy of the banks in western Canada, and on this point let me congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) on the very sensible thing which he did some time ago, in suggesting to the banks that they should give better credit for spring work in western Canada. The banks say the farmers of western Canada are securing all the advances to which they are legitimately entitled. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, then I take it from the banks that western Canada is insolvent; that is what the statement of the banks would indicate. Of that there is no question. I had the opportunity of going home at Easter, and I made specific inquiry on that point. I drove for two days among men in my constituency whom I knew and upon whom I could depend in order to find out whether they were getting a reasonable amount of credit. Of course we do not expect to get the same amount of credit that was handed out when we were passing through more prosperous times but, sir, I did not meet one person in my two days of driving who had been able yet to secure one bank credit for this year's spring operations. Yet the banks say they are giving to the farmers of the west all the credit to which they are entitled. Why do not the banks have the courage of their convictions and tell us that in their judgment western agriculture is insolvent, and then we will know what to do. I have no desire to see the banks place loans where they feel they have no chance of being repaid. That would not be good business either for the farmer, for the banks or for the people of this country, but I do object to this system, bonused and privileged as it is by legislation of this country, saying it is doing what it is not doing. Once more I congratulate the minister on his statement in this connection.

May I say also, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment if the farmers of western Canada to-day were forced to liquidate, eighty per cent of them would be insolvent, notwithstanding all that has been said by my good friend from Marquette (Mr. Mullins).

Mr. MULLINS: Is my hon. friend speaking for Saskatchewan only, or for the entire west?

Mr. GARDINER: I say eighty per cent of the farmers of the west would be insolvent if they were forced to liquidate. If price levels get better they may be able to get away from that condition but, sir, if this condition continues for another twelve months my advice to the western farmer will be that his only hope is to go through bankruptcy. That is a hard thing to say, but I say it in all seriousness and fully realizing the position which I occupy. There is no hope for western farmers unless conditions improve within the next twelve months. Their only hope is to get rid of their liabilities, and the only honourable course open to them, will be to do as the business man does when he is in that position, and go through bankruptcy. Bankruptcy is not a nice word to use. I never liked the sound of it, but it describes a course of action which it is sometimes necessary to follow. The word we use now to indicate that particular course of action is not so harsh as it used to be in years gone by. In the earlier years of financing through banks, instead of calling it bankruptcy the people used to call it bankrupture, or in other words ruptured by the banks. That just about describes the position of the people of this country.

I want to make one suggestion which may be of some value. Some of my colleagues have made other suggestions, but it is not my purpose to cover the ground which they have covered so well. In western Canada to-day we have a certain cooperative selling organization which does the biggest part of its business in selling the products of the farmers to outside countries. When they sell these products, such as wheat, oats, all kinds of grain and sometimes live stock, and so on, they sell them in competition with the world. We in this corner of the house have been blamed for asking for compensation because of tariff duties which have increased the prices of the goods we have to buy. The tariff does not protect agriculture; we have had a very good illustration of that since the special session. Although duties were made higher the prices of agricultural products have gone lower and lower all the time. I make what I consider to be a fair suggestion to the government: in view of the fact that these cooperative organizations are selling farm products at competitive prices in the world's markets, I suggest that these same organizations be permitted to import into this country goods of equal value to those exported without any duty being imposed. The farmer would thus be put in the same position in his buying as he is in his selling, but only to the extent that he exports on a competitive basis. I believe this suggestion to be well worth the consideration of the government.

My time will soon expire, but I desire to deal with another matter. What we are debating is the amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne, moved by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). It is not my business to criticize to any extent what this hon. gentleman does, but permit me to say this: as far as the amendment is concerned, it is wholly negative in character and does not get us anywhere. During the war we were obliged to form a coalition government in order to unite all the forces of the people. I do not suggest that we form such a government at the present time, but I do think that the parties should drop politics in order to consider the really serious condition with which we are faced at the present time. From time to time we have had a pensions committee operating in connection with this house, which committee has always operated without a display of party feeling. I would suggest that another committee should be appointed by this house to be conducted in a non-partisan manner for the purpose of examining into economic conditions and reporting or recommending to this house from time to time anything which they think would be of value.

We have in Canada a research council which deals with production. My judgment is that we should have such a council dealing with economic conditions. This council should sit all the time and be composed of men who have their finger on the economic pulse of Canada, and who would be at any and all times in position to advise the government as to the best thing to do. It is said that we are to have a new tariff commission. I have no objection to that, but I believe that an economic research council would be a thousand times more valuable to the people of this country than any tariff commission which might be set up.

Unemployment in Canada is still rife. While out west, I had a rather peculiar experience in Calgary. The city of Vancouver ceased the supplying of relief to single men. They made up a nice parcel of food and told them to get out. I am told that they even assisted in the finding of empty box cars in which they could travel as comfortably as possible. These men arrived in Alberta, and upon reaching the railway yards of such places as Calgary, the railway police boosted them off the cars. Fortunately for these men who had no place to go, as soon as they were boosted off the cars by the railway police the provincial police came along and put them on again. That is a terrible state of affairs for a country possessing the wealth of Canada. All the way from Calgary to Ottawa we saw these men strung along the line. We heard that at Fort William they had to go and beg meals from the people of that good and hospitable city. That is not fair to the unemployed men.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we believe that the time has come for cooperation in the solving of these problems, and believing that the amendment now before the house is negative in character, I move, seconded by Mr. Heaps, a subamendment as follows:

That all the words after "that" in the amendment be stricken out, and the following substituted therefor,

This house fully realizes that there exists in Canada an economic situation which constitutes a national emergency, which can only be met by extraordinary measures;

This house is of opinion that the present situation calls for the greatest possible degree of cooperation on the part of all its members, and to that end, and that this cooperation may be given in the most practical and efficient manner, Your Excellency's advisers should give consideration to the appointment of a special committee of parliament, to which committee would be assigned the duty of examining into the causes and extent of the present depression, with the view of suggesting such appropriate action as might best correct the present situation and relieve present suffering, and as might also render less probable the recurrence of such disasters in the future;

This house urges that the need is great and immediate, and that this committee should be appointed without delay, that it be given all necessary powers and authority, and that it be instructed to proceed with all expedition and to report to this house during the present session of parliament;

While the above suggested action should assist in the ultimate solution of these great national problems, this house realizes that there are conditions in this country which require more immediate consideration and to that end this house is of opinion,

(a) That the failure or inability of our banks to provide the credit which is essential to our farmers in respect to their spring operations, render it imperative that consideration be given to some system of federal assistance, whether directly, by way of bank guarantee, or otherwise;

(b) That the serious situation which still prevails in respect of unemployment demands that consideration be given to some immediate action looking toward increased employment, and a further measure of direct relief where such is found necessary.

Mr. F. R. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with others who have spoken in offering my congratulations to you upon your elevation to the Speaker's chair in this house, and also to the mover (Mr. Cormier) and the seconder (Mr Porteous) of the address.

I have noted in all of the addresses delivered by my hon. friends opposite, and more particularly by those who represent constituencies in Saskatchewan, a note of pessimism. In fact, one would almost think that the hour of death had arrived. I am not surprised at this attitude of mind of hon. members opposite—they are the party of divine right, and finding themselves in the shades of opposition, they paint pictures of blue ruin. I would remind hon. members opposite that prior to August last, the Liberal party had been the government of Canada for the past nine years, and if, as they have said, blue ruin faces our country and the province of Saskatchewan, then they must shoulder some of the responsibility for this condition of affairs. The government of the leader of the opposition has moulded the policy of this country during the past nine years, and if, as they admit, we are faced with blue ruin, whose fault is it? Let us ask ourselves that question. There can be but one answer: Out of their own mouths they condemn the policy which the Liberal government have been following during the past nine years. They go further, they condemn the leader of the late government in the policies which that government has been following.

Then again, Mr. Speaker, the late government have had as their supporters during the past twenty-five years, a Liberal administration in the province of Saskatchewan, ready to jump at any time at the crack of my right hon. friend's whip. We on this side of the house who represent constituencies in Saskatchewan know full well the ramifications of the Liberal machine in that province in both the provincial and federal fields. We know of the ramifications of the Jacques Bureau and Bronfman affair; we know that as a result of the findings of three eminent judges, provincial and mounted police were used by the Liberal party as political workers to further the cause of Liberalism in Saskatchewan. Now our hon. friends opposite come to the house, stand up in their places just eight months after the Conservative government has taken over the reins of office, and tell the country that the government of the day is responsible for the conditions that exist. Was there ever a more ridiculous statement? Hon. members opposite are fooling no one but themselves.

A great deal has been said about election promises. Permit me to quote an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on Saturday, September 27, 1930. The article goes on to say:

> However far the discussion may range on the intrinsic merits of Mr. Bennett's tariff policy, there can only be general agreement on the vigour he has displayed since he took office, and on the speed and thoroughness with which he made his ideas effective in Canada's fiscal system. In six weeks Mr. Bennett has selected his ministers, formed his government, revolutionized the tariff schedules, made a drastic upward revision of the dumping statute, created a $20,000,000 fund and scheme in aid of unemployment, and in two weeks' time pushed through the house, with the forced approval of the opposition groups, a mass of the most drastic and contentious legislation ever brought down in a Canadian parliament. There is something heroic in these accomplishments, and Mr. Bennett deserves all the credit which his political feats entitle him to receive.
> If his promise to give the country parliamentary action was perfectly sincere, his declarations of policy, it can also now be seen, were inspired by a sincerity equally deep. When Mr. Bennett was trumpeting his tariff doctrines on the compaign platforms it was natural to allow for a certain amount of exaggeration in the statements, and to assume that when they came to be reduced to practice an inevitable modification would take place. This was an entirely wrong assumption. . . . There is an intrepidity about his unqualified inauguration of his projects which commands respect entirely apart from other considerations. Whatever the future brings him it can never be said that he displayed either weakness or doubt when he became Prime Minister.

This is what the greatest Liberal organ in western Canada has to say about the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) It is a conclusive answer to the leader of the opposition when he speaks about broken promises. I would like to congratulate the government of the day on calling the house together for the short session in September last. The unemployment relief measures passed on that occasion have helped thousands of our people through the past winter, and have relieved hardship and suffering. I desire to quote some figures as to the relief work done in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. I quote from a letter written by the city engineer of Saskatoon under date of March 6, 1931. It goes on to say that as a result of the unemployment relief measures passed in the House of Commons during the short session the city of Saskatoon was able to give 287,576 men hours' work. It spent $136,895 in wages prior to the 6th day of March, and gave employment to 1,826 different married men.

I want to take this opportunity of congratulating the Prime Minister on his contribution at the Imperial and economic conference held in London last fall. As a result of these deliberations the Prime Minister succeeded in bringing about a continuance of the deliberations of the economic conference to be held in Ottawa some time during the coming summer, and I look forward with confidence to the result of these deliberations.

In western Canada we are confronted with unusual conditions and my hon. friends opposite, by their continued blue ruin talk, their whispers of death, are not contributing anything looking to a solution. This is no time for that sort of idle talk. I have heard laboured arguments trying to place the responsibility for the low price of wheat at the door of the government of the day. I am going to read an article which appeared in a British journal, and there were many such articles. The article in question is copied by the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix in an editorial under date of March 5, 1930. It reads:

Those who deny that there is hostility to the wheat pool in Great Britain would have difficulty explaining a front page article in a recent issue of The People, a popular British paper. It is headed: "Vast Gamble to Hold Prices Up At Our Expense: How Canadian Pool Stored Its Grain to Squeeze Money Out of Our Pockets." These headings are in large type and are followed by a two-column article from a special "city correspondent." The following are typical paragraphs:

Now, since Canada is the greatest wheat-producing country in the world, what the wheat pool has really been trying to do is to make a corner in wheat. And now it looks like being beaten, exactly as every private wheat gambler has been beaten in the past, by the visible supply.

For wheat is a commodity which can never be really cornered. Vast though the Canadian crops may be, wheat is growing in other countries all over the world. And last year the Argentine stepped in and sold us quite enough grain to make up for what Canada was holding back.

In this connection I am amazed at a piece of impudent "special pleading" in the pro-wheat-pool press. Let me give a quotation:—

"The Canadian farmers, through their wheat pool, declared: 'We ask a fair price in keeping with the general standard of living in Canada.'"

[Mr. F. R. MacMillan.]

I ask this question: Had the present government anything to do with such propaganda as this? These articles appeared during the term of office of the late Liberal administration. I wonder if any hon. member sitting to your left, Mr. Speaker, who is a farmer from Saskatchewan and a member of the wheat pool, took any action as a result of such articles as the one I have just read? If they did, no one ever heard about it. The country is looking for constructive criticism and not the vapourings of theorists. I am not speaking for or against the wheat pool, but it is only a waste of time to try to make out that the government of the day is in any way responsible for the low price of wheat.

A great deal has been said about the effect of the tariff changes made during the short session, and hon. members opposite have tried to establish that commodity prices are going up as a result of these tariff changes. I am going to read an article which appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix on December 11, 1930, and I do not think any hon. member will be guilty of saying this is a Conservative paper, because it is one of the Sifton string. The gentleman who gave this interview to the press is a strong Liberal supporter, and therefore his remarks in this connection should have some weight with his colleagues on the opposite side of the house. This is from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, under date of December 11, 1930:

Price cuts in many commodities, some as great as 35 per cent, will do much to bolster Christmas retail trade in Saskatoon and the province generally, in the opinion of W. L. McQuarrie, provincial secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association.

According to Mr. McQuarrie, prices in nearly all departments of the retail trade have been dropping steadily for several months. Groceries and other foodstuffs have been sold at a very close margin for some time, investigation has shown, and at the present time many varieties of canned goods are being retailed at production costs. The retail prices of all groceries have been reduced, Mr. McQuarrie points out, with the possible exception of jam. The reductions for the most part range from 10 to 15 per cent, and sugar is being retailed at a figure very close to wholesale cost.

Cuts have also been recorded in men's and women's clothing, 20 to 25 per cent; furniture, 15 to 25 per cent; hardware, 10 per cent, with a few articles down 30 per cent; meat, 20 to 35 per cent; jewelry, 10 to 15 per cent, particularly silver hollow-ware and English china. While these reductions apply particularly to retail stores in Saskatoon, it is believed that prices have taken a corresponding drop in the trade in other cities and towns of Saskatchewan.

A survey of prices showed that articles of men's and women's clothing, such as overcoats, shoes, silk and woollen dress goods, ladies' ready-to-wear and millinery had dropped 20 and 25 per cent during the past four months. In ladies' furs the reduction runs from 20 to 30 per cent, and in hosiery—

Such as my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) displayed the other day, the reductions according to the secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, have been from 15 to 20 per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the date of that?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I am quoting from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of December 11, 1930.

It is a strange picture, Mr. Speaker. We have Liberals in the House of Commons stating that these very articles are higher in price as a result of changes in the tariff, while at the same time their supporters in the field, whose business it is to know, are giving the country actual data as to the reductions in prices that have taken place on a large scale. Consistency, thou art a jewel!

I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment of a royal commission to look into the effect which trading in futures on the Winnipeg grain exchange has upon the ultimate price which the farmer receives for his grain is a move in the right direction. I am of the opinion that the commission should be able to decide this question in a satisfactory manner.

I should like also, notwithstanding the remarks of some of my hon. friends opposite, to convey my thanks to President E. W. Beatty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and those associated with him, for coming forward at this time with a constructive plan looking to the gradual diversification of farming in districts in the prairie provinces where mixed farming can be carried on successfully. Some hon. members opposite from the province of Saskatchewan have belittled the Beatty proposal to loan money to western farmers at low rates of interest in an endeavour to help solve certain aspects of our economic situation. This proposal did not in any way suggest that the farmers of Saskatchewan should all diversify their operations. Far from it, but my hon. friends opposite well know that there are great areas in Saskatchewan where more diversification is desirable. Would my hon. friends opposite be prepared to go back to Saskatchewan and tell their constituents that they do not want cheap money? Why confuse freight rates with the Beatty proposal? Perhaps something might be done towards lowering freight rates. Certainly it is desirable, if it be possible. But that has nothing whatever to do with this farm loan scheme.

Mr. DONNELLY: When shall we be able to get this money?

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): After you fellows stop barking so much.

I wish to quote a few figures in respect to the development of the live stock industry in Saskatchewan and the farm situation generally. These figures are taken from the report of the Saskatchewan Royal Commission on Immigration and Settlement, which report was submitted to the government of Saskatchewan on September 10, 1930, and therefore is the latest reliable authority available. Turning to page 95 of the report I find that the total capital value per farm in Saskatchewan is given from 1901 to 1926. I shall not read all the figures, but I find that the average value of farm property per farm in Saskatchewan in 1916 was $10,603, and in 1921, when the late government came into power, $13,814. In 1926 the value had gone down to $11,405, and it is down still further to-day. I will now give the figures of the land value per farm, as given in this report. In 1921 the land value per farm was $8,878, and in 1926, $6,951.

Let us look at the picture so far as buildings are concerned. The value in buildings per farm in 1916 was $975; in 1921, $1,812, and in 1926, $1,825. Implements and machinery had a value per farm in 1916 of $855; in 1921, $1,479, and in 1926, $1,439.

Now let us get a picture of the live stock business. The capital invested in live stock per farm in Saskatchewan was as follows:

Year	Capital invested in live stock, per farm
1901	$ 931
1911	1,218
1916	1,851
1921	1,645
1926	1,190

It will readily be seen from the figures which I have just quoted that the capital investment in buildings, implements and machinery has practically doubled since 1916, while the capital investment in live stock has decreased by $700, or nearly 40 per cent between 1916 and 1926; and if the figures were available for the year 1930, I am satisfied that the capital investment, so far as live stock is concerned, would just be half what it was in the years 1916, and would be down to the amount of capital investment in live stock for the year 1901, which was $931 per farm. Surely the Department of Agriculture of the late administration has some responsibility in this connection. These figures were readily available to the department at any time.

The capital investment in what might be termed frozen assets has doubled, and the capital investment in the productive end of the business, so far as live stock is concerned, has dwindled until it is now about the same as it was thirty years ago. In view of these figures it is amazing that some hon. members opposite speak belittlingly of a scheme advanced to right this situation.

I believe that the government should seriously consider the question of building a packing plant in western Canada. I am of the opinion that closer cooperation between the departments of Agriculture and Trade and Commerce is long past due. The operation of a government packing plant as a promotional propaganda instrument on behalf of the live stock industry looking to the opening up of the British market, and working in close cooperation with the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Trade and Commerce, would ultimately find markets for our live stock and more particularly pork products.

Some will say that such a plant would not pay. Perhaps it would not. The idea of such an innovation is to get into the British market, and once properly established in that market, with the assistance, in the field and on the farms, of the Agriculture departments, both provincial and federal, I believe our farmers would soon supply the regular flow of uniform and standard products required by the export trade. Such a plant would be in the interests of the packer as much as the farmer, and is not meant in any way to supplant the packer. Opening new markets is a costly affair and with our over-capitalized packing industry in its present condition, I do not look for much relief in that direction.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, the mover of the subamendment has this afternoon dealt with agricultural conditions. In the time at my disposal it is my intention to deal with industrial conditions as they prevail in the Dominion. Before doing so, however, I wish to make some brief comments on the speech to which we have just listened. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) has referred copiously to statistics to show how well off are the farmers in the province of Saskatchewan. Those same statistics could be utilized to show the fortunate position of the average person in the whole Dominion. According to figures which I read recently I find that the average wealth per person in Canada amounts to $2,995. On the basis of those figures my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who happens to be the father of six children, would be worth about $24,000. The greater the per capita wealth of the individuals in a province the greater is the indebtedness of those individuals who happen to live there. The per capita wealth of the farmers of Saskatchewan is represented by mortgages and loans on their property owned by the wealthy financiers of eastern Canada. The greater their debt, or the greater their per capita wealth, just that much greater will be their difficulty to meet their obligations. So far as the speech of the previous speaker is concerned, that is all I wish to say.

My purpose in seconding the subamendment to-day was, if possible, to bring home to the government the gravity of the existing industrial situation as it affects the workers of the Dominion of Canada. So far this session the attitude of the government has been somewhat disappointing. We have had very little opportunity, in fact no opportunity at all, to obtain from the government a declaration as to what its policy may be on the question of unemployment. In the special session held last September there was a great rush to finish the work in hand because representatives of the government had to go to England to attend the Imperial economic conference. Then, some months after the conclusion of the special session we met in regular session. We experienced a similar difficulty when before the Easter adjournment we tried to discuss the unemployment problem. Again we found it necessary to rush through the estimates. A few days ago we tried once more to raise the question of unemployment but something stood in the way of allowing parliament to discuss a matter which after all is the most important problem with which we have to deal.

There has been very little said by hon. members on the opposite side of the house with regard to the unemployment situation. The few hon. members who have spoken and have dealt with labour problems have at times gone out of their way to attack the small labour group in this house. If hon. members on the Conservative side of the house wish to lodge an attack I have no objection. However it is well that we should know exactly how they stand on this question of unemployment. We have been told that the party in power assumed office with a mandate to do certain things. That is perfectly true. The mandate on which they were elected was, first of all, to remedy the agricultural condition existing throughout the country and secondly the unemployment condition which prevailed last year. May I say that the party in power did not gain office because of its virtues. As a rule no party which attains office does so because of any particular virtues it possesses. As a rule a political party defeats itself. Prior to the last election the Liberal party managed to defeat itself either through lack of action or through not being cognizant of some of the problems which at that time were agitating the people. In July last when the Liberal party appealed to the people they were rejected because they had not dealt with those important problems with which the people thought they should deal. As the Conservative party was the only alternative naturally it came into office. They did so bearing a definite, fixed program. As stated from many platforms they assumed office for the purpose of ending unemployment. In the city of Winnipeg there was emblazoned on many a panel the statement "Vote for the Conservative party and banish the spectre of unemployment." Such statements as that had quite an effect upon the people of Winnipeg. As they affected the workers of the city of Winnipeg so they affected the workers throughout the length and breadth of Canada. As I have said the people of Canada rejected the Liberal party and placed the Conservative party in power. I would ask hon. members to bear in mind that human beings have elected us to parliament. However after my hon. friends opposite were elected apparently they thought that human beings did not count and the only things which counted were the moneyed interests. They have forgotten all about the human beings. Parliament should be an instrument to redress the grievances from which the people are suffering. Unless a parliament does that it must lose its hold upon the people of a country. The people of Canada look to this parliament to redress their grievances. The unemployed and the farmers look to this parliament for assistance and expect action from us in dealing with the questions which concern them at the present time. Has parliament functioned in that manner? Is there anyone in this house to-day who will say that up to the present time or during the past eight months this government has been in power it has functioned in redressing the grievances from which hundreds of thousands of Canadian people are suffering? I venture to say nobody in this house would be bold enough to assert that parliament has even attempted in a proper way to redress those grievances. We have heard it stated on many occasions by my hon. friends opposite that the government has carried out the promises which it made during the last election campaign. May I say Mr. Speaker, that up to now nothing of the kind has happened. It has attempted to deal with these questions. It called a special session of parliament and introduced legislation but that legislation has been entirely ineffective and insufficient to deal with the problems of the day. As many of our hon. friends opposite have said, it is quite true that the government of the day is a government of action. To be merely a government of action, however, is not necessarily of supreme importance. The important point is that we must have action of the right character and if we do not have such action it would be far better if we had none at all. I am inclined to think that some of the remedies suggested by the government to deal with present problems have proved to be no remedies at all. Because of that fact and because of the fact that to-day this parliament is not attempting to deal with those fundamental questions, parliament is losing its hold on the people. I am anxious to see this parliament assume its rightful place in the affairs of the nation. However we have now been in session since March 12, five weeks, and nothing has been done. There must be something wrong with our parliamentary system when we cannot get down to fundamentals and deal with problems with which we are supposed to deal.

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. member is talking too much; that is the reason.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the hon. member rise in his seat who made that statement?

Mr. COTNAM: I say that the hon. member is talking too much; he takes up the time of the house and does not allow parliament to function.

Mr. HEAPS: Now we have the reason parliament has not functioned. We met on March 12 at which time we were told, in the speech from the throne, that we were faced with a grave situation. Yet although we should have met two months earlier we are told we are talking too much. If my hon. friends opposite were sincere in their desire that this parliament should do something on behalf of those in distress, we should have met in the middle of January instead of in the middle of March. What have we been doing since we came down here? For my own part, I have been trying to get some action from the government, and every time I have risen in my place and asked for action I have been met with a blunt refusal; yet we are told that this is the government of action.

Now, I spoke for a few minutes on redressing the grievances of those who are down and out—the men who are out of work, the men on the farm who are in a desperate situation. What is the attitude of the government in redressing the grievances of those who are wealthy? When our industrialists and financiers come down to Ottawa to meet the government they are given everything they ask for, and in some cases we were told during the special session that they were given even more than they asked for. What is the attitude of the government when we ask for redress for the grievances of the great masses of the people? We are told that we are talking too much, that we are wasting time. The very fact that we have been in a position almost of stagnation has tended to discount the term "politician." When you go on the street and meet a man and say you are engaged in politics, you find that the term has almost a stigma attached to it, instead of being regarded with honour. This change in the attitude of the people towards politics is owing to the fact that we sit here day after day, week after week, month after month, and, as I said before, do not attempt in a fundamental way to deal with the pressing and urgent problems that now confront the country. When the wealthy man comes to this city and asks for redress of his grievances, we almost cringe before him; but when the poor man comes here for redress of his grievances we spurn him and tell him to go elsewhere. The other day the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) told the delegation who came to see him that he was opposed to giving the dole to the workers of Canada. Certainly we are all opposed to giving men and women something for nothing. But to-day the wealthy classes of this country are receiving doles at the hands of the government, and there seems to be no limit to their desire for more of this favourable treatment. Probably when the budget comes down we shall find that a few more doles are to be handed out to our industrialists. To-day masses of our people are unemployed and suffering abject poverty, while side by side with that abject poverty we have a tremendous accumulation of wealth. I submit there is something wrong with any economic structure that forces hundreds of thousands of our kith and kin to go into the bread line or the soup kitchen in the face of all this wealth.

Now, sir, the question is, have we under these circumstances got to admit our helplessness? So far nothing has been foreshadowed, either in the speech from the throne or by any hon. minister, as to what is going to be done to meet this emergent situation. The existing economic crisis, both as it affects the farmer and the labourer in the city, constitutes a challenge to parliament, and unless we are prepared to meet that challenge I am afraid to predict what the consequences are likely to be. Day after day we receive letters of a kind that I would hate to read to hon. members. People whom we do not know, people whom we have never seen, are sending us most pathetic appeals—appeals of a character, as I have said, that it is hardly possible for one to read to the house. Yet what are we doing under the circumstances? Very little. In fact when my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) rises in his seat and begins to deal with our economic problems and tries to state the viewpoint of his party, he is continually met with the cry, "Russia, Russia." There seems to be a holy horror of that country on the part of certain hon. members. Russia is not causing me half as much anxiety as it seems to be causing some hon. members opposite. I have never heard any of those hon. gentlemen shout, "Italy, Italy," when my hon. friend is dealing with economic quesitons. If they are opposed to a dictatorship—and I certainly am myself—then I think it would be just as logical for them to be opposed to the dictatorship now prevailing in Italy. But I have not heard suggested in this house any tariff action against Italy because she happens to be in her present political condition. I have no need to go to Russia or to Italy to find a dictatorship, for I believe we have in this country a mild form of it. During the past few months things have been done by order in council and by individuals which really constitutes a usurpation of the prerogatives of parliament. We are having far too much government by order in council. When the whole question of dealing with tariffs, both as it affects imports and exports, and, what is more important, as it affects our relations with other countries, is dealt with by order in council then I say we are really under a mild form of dictatorship. When Denmark recently sent to this country a limited amount of bacon she was told to take it away, she could not leave it here. The attitude of the Prime Minister at the Imperial conference in London last September in regard to trade relations was to make an offer to the British government and say, "You can take it or you can leave it." We tell Russia that we will not take any of her goods, nor can she leave any. All this is being done, may I remind the house, by order in council.

May I deal briefly with the Russian situation? Twelve days or so before parliament met the government promulgated an order in council barring from this country certain goods produced in Russia. For the moment I am not questioning whether that was a right or wrong action. Personally I am opposed to it, but my time will not permit me to go into the question fully. But I do say this, Mr. Speaker, that if the cabinet is going to take steps which so vitally affect our relations with another nation, such steps ought not to be taken by order in council, but by parliament. Then we are told with regard to dumping by other nations, and particularly Russia, against which this action was taken, that such action was necessary because Russia is dumping her goods into this country as well as into the other countries of the world. But before we condemn Russia I think we might as well look at our own doorstep. Comparatively speaking, probably no country is a greater dumper than Canada itself. I think we have already realized that fact. Every bushel of grain that we export is being sold on the markets of the world at less than the cost of production. In other words, we are selling it at dump prices. Do our government take any action to prevent the dumping of Canadian goods abroad? All they say is, "We will not allow other nations to dump their goods here." I am interested in the attitude the government have taken towards Russia. When they conceived the policy of no truck or trade with soviet Russia there were a great many hon. gentlemen opposite who thought it was an act of statesmanship on the part of the government, and they applauded the action of the government very loudly by speeches and in other ways. No congratulations were too extravagant to give to the government in connection with the action they took in having nothing to do with the soviet republic. I wonder what hon. gentlemen opposite thought—because they have said very little since—when within a week or two after the order in council was passed we invited these same people to be our guests in Ottawa. Should we not have some consistency in the actions of a government? One minute they say, "No trade or truck with Russia" and the next minute our representative at Rome says, "Come over to Ottawa and let us discuss together the commercial relationship between the two countries." Our action in connection with Russia has been answered in the dispatches which appeared in this morning's papers, in which it was stated that soviet Russia has determined to keep out the commodities which are produced in Canada.

If retaliation is the policy of the government let them remember that it can be used by both sides; it is a double-edged weapon. I think it was once described by the late Mr. Asquith as cutting off your nose to spite your face, that is evidently the policy of the government. They are merely cutting off their nose in order to spite their face, and the result of that action will not by any means improve the economic conditions of this country. We say we will not send machinery to Russia because the agriculturists of that country then will be able to compete with the agriculturists here in Canada. Well, if we do not send the machinery to Russia, is it not a fact that we are sending it to the Argentine, whose wheat is in competition with ours? Further, if Canada is not willing to supply machinery to Russia, are there not a dozen other nations in this world quite ready and willing to supply those articles? My hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) says that dozen includes Great Britain, but who is going to be the ultimate loser? We will lose both by reduced imports and reduced exports.

However, perhaps the most interesting as well as the most amusing thing in this whole procedure was the fact that a certain gentleman residing in the city of Montreal came out as an upholder of the action of the government. This gentleman was very much elated over the action taken by the government. He thought the government had done the proper thing; he was opposed to cheap labour, to slave labour, and he thought the action of the government should be commended. I am referring now to one of our great financiers, a gentleman who may be a very great altruist, Sir Herbert Holt, who supported the action of the government. Of course he naturally thought it was wrong to allow the cheap labour of Russia to come into competition with the well paid labour of Quebec, of which evidently he knows a great deal. But the other day the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) and one of the members from the Montreal district dealt with labour conditions affecting one or two industries, and apparently the labourers are not so well paid as one might suppose. However, in view of the attitude which has been taken by the hon. gentleman who is now occupying the Speaker's chair (Mr. LaVergne) and in view of the fact that so much has been said about slave conditions in Russia I propose to confine myself to conditions in Canada. As I said before and as I want to say again, I am far more interested in the conditions which exist in Canada than in conditions in soviet Russia, and if we are to improve conditions anywhere I want to see them improved here in Canada.

I have in my hand a little booklet which was sent to me by a well known gentleman who belongs to the Conservative party and who is a supporter of the Prime Minister, and of the Deputy Speaker as well. This gentleman spoke in the Quebec legislature and evidently thought his speech was sufficiently important to be reprinted and sent out to those who might be interested. This speech was delivered in the Quebec legislature on April 2, 1930, and one of the subheadings is, Economic Slavery in Quebec. The author of this pamphlet is Mr. Aimé Guertin, member of the legislative assembly for the city of Hull. I think before we start pointing the finger of scorn at other nations who may be accused of having conditions bordering on slavery in their countries, first of all we should look into our own affairs in this country and should see that our own house is in order. This is what Mr. Guertin says:

When I speak of economic slavery in our own province I am in a position to prove its existence. . . . May I say that much has been claimed in favour of the industrialization of Drummondville; yet, if my information is right, in Riviere du Loup the average is 20 cents and in Lake St. John district, it appears to be 25 per cent, including the lumber camps. . . . Right here in the city of Quebec I have made my own inquiry and questioned the men employed in the streets. To my great surprise I have learned that the prevailing rate is also 25 cents an hour; while in the city of Hull the International Paper Company has taken advantage of the unemployment situation this winter to lower the rate of pay to 20 cents per hour and, on March 6th, the central executive of the Syndicats Nationaux Catholiques of that city deemed it its duty to protest publicly against the prevailing wage rate of 25 and 30 cents per hour. This winter, in Montreal, certain companies are paying as low as 15 cents an hour in certain cases, with the result that the unfortunate workers, driven by hunger and privation, are compelled to accept such a treatment lest their families will be ruined.

Then he goes on to say:

What about the wages paid by our own government; the Department of Highways, of Colonization, of Public Works? The average rate paid is 15, 20, 25 and 30 cents for labourers working on roads and bridges as well as at the Quebec City court house construction.

Then he goes on to point out the condition at Sorel, in the shipyards:

I have yet a word to say, having kept in mind a very typical case, that of the city of Sorel where the most scandalous slavery is flourishing; yes, Sorel, the kingdom of misery and the paradise of speculators, as I have had occasion to say. Do you know that in a city of such importance, and in a regular way during the winter, a rate of $1.50 for unskilled labour and $1.75 for carpenters is paid for a ten hour day?

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and give you some facts in connection with the textile industry in the city of Hamilton. I have in my hand communications from men employed there and from people who are in a position to know, and this is what they tell me: Since the new tariff has gone into effect there have been great reductions in wages in those industries. We in this corner who belong to the Labour group certainly are not satisfied with the conditions which exist in Canada at present. So far we have not been satisfied with the actions taken by the government. They started off as a government of action; then they went to reaction, and from reaction they have gone to inaction. We are now trying to force the government to take such action as will meet the existing situation.

I could have gone on at greater length and dealt with conditions existing to-day. I would have liked to show how the policies of this government, instead of improving the unemployment situation have in reality affected it most adversely. It may be true that some industries have benefited as a result of tariff changes, but probably for every one which has benefited two or three could be found which have suffered as a result of these changes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Why not give them to the house?

Mr. HEAPS: I would be quite willing to do so if I had the time at my disposal.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member should take part of his time.

Mr. HEAPS: I am forced to curtail considerably my remarks because of the limitations imposed upon us by the forty-minute rule.

Mr. McGIBBON: The house might have been more interested in that part of the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. HEAPS: I have been accused by hon. members opposite of speaking too much and thus wasting the time of the house but now the hon. member wishes me to speak at greater length. I do not know which course I am to follow although I would have liked to satisfy both sides.

We find to-day a change of feeling. We find that throughout this country men and women in all walks of life are beginning to consider seriously the economic situation facing us at the present time. A great many people believe that it is time for a change. I do not refer to a change of government, although I believe there are many people who voting as they did last year feel to-day that a change is needed. I find it so in my constituency, and I suppose what prevails in my constituency will be symptomatic of other constituencies.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do they want the hon. member to move over to this side?

Mr. HEAPS: Yes, they do; they want our party to be the party in power.

Many people think that something is wrong with our whole economic structure; they believe that it has become top heavy and is unable to function properly. They believe the people of the country are not receiving that to which they are entitled. They find that amidst the ever-increasing wealth produced by the toil of the workers in the cities and on the farms, they are daily becoming more poverty stricken. The poverty from which the people in this country are suffering at the present time does not come about because of any shortage of commodities; it is because we happen to have too much of everything. The problem confronting us to-day is that of so adjusting our economic system as to give to every man or woman that to which he or she is entitled, that is, food, clothing, shelter and security of life. To-day they have neither clothing nor shelter, nor have they that security of life.

Unemployment now is considerably worse than it was twelve months ago, and, goodness knows, it was bad then. The seasonal employment which usually offers at this time of the year has not manifested itself. People who usually find employment in the month of April or May are still out of work. Men and women of western and eastern Canada who usually go to the farms at this season and are able to secure their livelihood, still have no work. The men on the farms will not have sufficient work and will be coming into the industrial centres and thus helping to aggravate an already difficult situation.

With the enormous wealth which we have, surely no one will deny that there is sufficient for all. If we are suffering to-day because we have too much of everything, is it beyond the possibilities of the intellect of this parliament that we should get down to business and find ways and means of overcoming the existing economic situation and thus prevent a continuance or recurrence of the conditions which exist to-day?

That is what we ask for and the government will be tested on that basis. The mere fact that it has attempted to put into effect certain changes in our tariff or has prevented the dumping of commodities into this country means very little in so far as the labourer is concerned. The real test of any government is the condition under which the people happen to be living. The test of any government is the contentment, the happiness and well being of the great masses of the people. Here in Canada the great masses of the people are to-day worse off than they have been for many years. We ask that the men, women and children of this country be given an opportunity to live a happy, decent and honourable life. I would like to see this parliament drop some of the petty, party warfare which has been carried on at times and attempt to grapple with this situation in such a way as to permit us to say that parliament has not been deaf to the pleadings of the poor people. When we leave this house at the end of the session I trust that something will have been done to remedy the existing economic conditions.

Mr. J. EARL LAWSON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I was indeed surprised to hear the confession made by the hon. member who has just preceded me (Mr. Heaps). He stated that he has ascertained from a survey of his constituency that many of that majority which sent him to this house have since the last election changed their minds and would now vote otherwise. I listened very carefully to the speech which the hon. member delivered, but like most of the speeches emanating from the group of which he is a member, I find that it contains not one practical suggestion upon which legislation might be based for the relief of the unfortunate conditions with which this country is now confronted.

The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) said: We have had no opportunity to ascertain from the government its policy with respect to unemployment. If by "we" he meant those hon. gentlemen who sit to the left of you, Mr. Speaker, I think he would have made a more accurate statement had he said: We have given no opportunity during this session to the government to outline or define any policy with respect to unemployment. I am not criticizing any of those hon. gentlemen in opposition who have spoken during this debate because of the fact that they have spoken; this is the time and the place to express the views which they may have with respect to the problems confronting either their respective constituencies or this country. However, I do say that it does not lie in their mouths to complain because this government has not brought down those measures which they allege they desire to see brought down. Since the opening of this session, they have made on an average of four or five speeches to each one delivered from this side of the chamber. I was indeed surprised to hear the hon. gentlemen say that Conservative speakers have not discussed unemployment but have attacked the Labour group in the house. I have listened to most of the speeches delivered; those to which I have not listened, I have read, but I have not observed in any of them an attack upon the hon. member for North Winnipeg or his colleagues. I would like the hon. gentlemen to remember that they cannot expect to rise in their places and make attacks upon the government and at the same time to remain immune, because they represent some particular class in the house.

Mr. HEAPS: I would refer the hon. member to the speech made in the house by the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. LAWSON: If time permitted I should be glad to enter into a discussion with my hon. friend concerning the excellent speech made by the Deputy Speaker, but at the moment, particularly in view of the speech just delivered by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, I should like to have something to say with respect to labour and labour men in this country.

Before doing so, however, may I digress for a moment to take the opportunity of congratulating my former classmate, the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor), upon his maiden speech in this house. He gave ample evidence of intellectual capacity and fluency of speech. I was indeed surprised when I heard him, in referring to the address of the right hon. leader of the official opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) use such adjectives as "inspiring" and "masterly", while in that of the right hon. Prime Minister of this country he found only "activity" and "capacity". I was indeed surprised to ascertain that since those happy days of scholastic association he had entitrely lost his sense of humour. I hope, however, if he perseveres in listening to some of the speeches of his colleagues, he may again acquire that sense of humour, even though it be only for the incongruous and the absurd.

For example, when the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) was speaking, I could not help noting that he went out of his way to make an odious comparison between a little animal called the gopher which is found in western Canada, and what he called a good Tory. He said:

> For the benefit of those hon. gentlemen from the east who might not be particularly acquainted with the little animal, I may say that in many respects there is similarity between a gopher and a good Tory. The gopher is a sleek little animal and he pilfers the farmers' grain. In the day of his greatest pilfering he develops a paunch and I would say that gopherism and Toryism might be synonymous terms. They are synonymous because both are pests and humbugs.
> [Mr. Lawson.]

As I sat in my place and gazed at the hon. gentleman as he uttered those words, there came back to my mind two lines from Bobby Burns' "Ode to a Louse":

> Ah wad some Power the giftie gie us
> To see oursels as ithers see us!
> It wad frae mony a blunder free us
> And foolish notion.

The hon. member for South Vancouver (Mr. MacInnis), early after his entry into the house, spoke in condemnation of the procedure adopted by the house. He condemned both the right hon. leader of the official opposition and the right hon. Prime Minister because they failed to agree within a very short time upon a panacea for Canada's ills. Yet I noted that the hon. member took forty minutes to convince us that he disagreed with both, and so we were not advanced by that contribution. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman who comes here as a new member, that the standing orders and rules of the house are the result of the collective wisdom of statesmen through centuries of responsible government for the purpose of giving free but orderly expression to all phases of political thought.

The hon. member for North Winnipeg today has reiterated what has been said by some of his colleagues previously, namely, that we of the Conservative party now take a different position with respect to unemployment in this country from what we did when we sat in opposition in 1930. I believe my hon. friend fails to distinguish between the issue before parliament in 1930 and the issue as it is to-day when he seconds the subamendment. Let me ask him to go back for a moment to the session of 1930. At that time unemployment was developing and had developed in Canada to an alarming extent. That development was apparent to all of us in the house except the then government who could not or would not realize the condition which then prevailed. We of the other side believed there was a national emergency, and with a view to procuring some action during that national emergency, the hon. member for North Winnipeg moved:

> "That in the opinion of this house the government should take immediate action to deal with the question of unemployment."

Every Conservative member voted in favour of that resolution. What was the situation at that time? Liberal speakers, one after another, then on the government side, endeavoured to minimize the national emergency which then prevailed in this country. The then Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) spoke on that resolution, but he proposed not a single measure to relieve the situation. He told us that the then government was proceeding with public works and was encouraging the railways to go on with further construction. Our friends the Liberal government were always strong on encouraging somebody else to do something. I well remember the speech of the present leader of the official opposition. He took some pains to tell us the extent to which the government desired to encourage the provinces and municipalities to deal with the then emergent situation, not by a contribution, oh, no, but by cooperation in any discussions they might desire to have upon the question. I was reading just the other day the speech made at that time by the leader of the official opposition in order if possible to extract therefrom a definite pronouncement, if he made one, on that occasion with respect to this problem. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I found it a very difficult task. The right hon. gentleman seldom if ever made a definite pronouncement. The most definite one that I remember during my short time in this house was the famous, "not a five cent piece to a Tory government," and that has become the epitaph on the tombstone of the late Liberal government. I did find, however, that the right hon. gentleman made this statement:

I can see nothing arising out of a recognition of this problem—

That is, of unemployment:

—as a national problem which obliges this federal government, having regard to our constitution and the division of powers under it, to collect taxes from the people generally in order to meet a situation which affects only a certain group of people in some municipalities in this country, but which does not adversely affect the country as a whole.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, at that time the federal government failed to recognize that there was a national emergency in this country, and, equally obviously, from that statement, it was not their intention to take any useful action with respect to the emergency. Under those conditions we of the Conservative party voted unanimously in favour of the Heaps resolution.

Let us consider for a moment the situation in 1931. Within six weeks after being elected to power this government called a special session. We voted $20,000,000, resulting, with the provincial and municipal contributions, in the expenditure of $60,000,000 in this country. We made some tariff changes for which we were condemned, but will any hon. gentleman attempt to prove that by reason of those tariff changes we have not created more jobs in the textile industries and in some others which I could mention? In view of that record of quick action, in view of the intimations in the speech from the throne of further action on the part of this government, do those hon. gentlemen who represent labour in this house, and who have accused us of changing our attitude, expect us of the Conservative party to vote against that government which has done so much to relieve the conditions with which we were confronted in this country?

The hon. member for South Vancouver like the hon. member for North Winnipeg, when he made a speech with reference to the unemployment situation in this country, told us at the outset that he was going to deal with the extent and seriousness of the present conditions; what steps should be taken to meet the situation; the desirability of federal investigation as to the causes, and lastly, what permanent steps should be taken to meet the situation and to provide against these ever-recurring periods of depression. I also re-read the speech of that hon. gentleman to see if I could find therein any constructive suggestion for relief of the situation. I find that he spent a great deal of time telling us of the seriousness and extent of the unemployment situation in Canada, of which the members on this side of the house are fully aware, but I could not find one practical legislative suggestion. His speech was filled with innocuous generalities. It is very easy in times such as these to be a crusader and ride the fiery steed of socialism, clad in the glistening armour of glittering generalities, but when we examine that speech we find that he made only one specific proposal, and that was when he said that the cause of unemployment was the private ownership of the means of production. To prove his case, he asked us to assume that we had all the people in the world assembled in this chamber, which by the way according to his own statement he found such a very dreary place. Then he asked us to imagine if any would go cold and hungry if we had the wealth of the world herein contained with us.

My hon. friend from North Winnipeg today has referred to Russia. Might I suggest to my hon. friend from Vancouver South that he need not take a hypothetical case, which never conclusively proves anything. He has a concrete case of the very doctrine he is proposing in that country which he has compared so frequently in this house with Canada, namely, in Russia. There you have all the means of production owned entirely by the state. Russia is the world's most gigantic corporation and monopoly. True, the individual there may own his boots or his underwear, if he is lucky enough to be able to procure any, but all the means of production are owned by the state, and yet let me remind my hon. friend that in Russia to-day both the labour man and the agriculturist go cold and hungry, and if the labour man is not hungry, it is because he has partaken of that limited diet of black bread and a sour pickle which would not be tolerated by the labour man of this country.

I am frequently amused, and sometimes I must confess made impatient, by some of my hon. friends who represent a particular class in this house, and who seem to think that none of us in the Conservative party, simply because we were elected to represent the citizens as a whole, have the interests of the working men of this country at heart. There are many of us on this side of the house who have laboured in many activities of life. So far as I am concerned, I was born in the labouring classes. My father was an iron moulder and at one time president of the local union of the city of Ottawa. I, as a boy, have known what it was for the family to endeavour to exist on the then strike pay of seven dollars a week. I have pounded sand in the foundry. I have swung a sledge on steel in the mica mines of the Gatineau valley. I have worked in several fields of activity and endeavour, and I think I know something of the problems of labour and of the labouring people in this country. I want to say to my hon. friends who purport to represent labour in this house that if they will but advocate in this house measures which are practicable, measures which are within our legislative competence, they will receive a tremendous support from the ranks of the Conservative party. But if they merely persist, as they sometimes do, in making inflammatory speeches devoid of practical suggestion, they will not advance the cause which they purport to espouse.

The hon. member for Vancouver South, who purports to represent labour, during his speech asked a question of the labouring men of this country. The hon. member for North Winnipeg has stated in his speech that we constantly talk of Russia. I would remind him that it was in dealing with Russia and comparing it with Canada that the hon. member for Vancouver South, after detailing the unfortunate emergent conditions prevailing in this country at the present time, asked a question of labour in this country. I cannot quote the exact wording of the question, but it was to this effect: "Would not the labour men of Canada prefer the enforced labour of Russia to the enforced idleness of this country?"

Mr. MacINNIS: May I rise to a point of order? My hon. friend has paid a good deal of attention to what I said, but I would ask him to quote me correctly, if he is going to quote me at all.

Mr. LAWSON: Does my hon. friend deny that during the course of his speech he put the question: Would not the labour men of Canada prefer the enforced labour of Russia to the enforced idleness of this country?

Mr. MacINNIS: Evidently the hon. member does not know what I said. I said that in Russia there was enforced labour and that in Canada we had enforced idleness. Does my hon. friend deny that?

Mr. LAWSON: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not deny it because I did not make the statement. At my leisure, I shall consult Hansard on the point, but my recollection is that my hon. friend from Vancouver South put such a question to the labour men of Canada. I say that the question in the form in which it was put by the hon. member was not a fair one to be placed before the working men of this country nor was it one that the working men could answer. The putting of it does not in the least benefit the cause the hon. gentleman professes to espouse. A fairer question to have asked labour in this country would have been whether they desired the enforced labour of Russia at the prevailing average rate of wage of $31 per month for unskilled labour and $41 for skilled labour, or the opportunity of collective bargaining which they have in Canada. It would have been fairer to ask if they preferred the standard of living in this country with its varied diet or the black bread and sour pickle of Russia. To my mind even the varied diet of the soup kitchen in times of emergency is preferable to the conditions under which labouring men in the country to which my hon. friend referred must work. Lastly I would ask labour if they preferred the living quarters, limited as they are to some sixteen square feet and treble the rental for each extra square foot, of Russia or the opportunities for home and family ties which they have in Canada. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I want for the working men of this country the maintenance of the system of collective bargaining, the maintenance of family life and our fairly high standards of living. I want for them an opportunity to rear their children in the belief of a Creator and in the immortality of the soul. I want for them the maintenance of free clinics, hospitals and homes for the infirm, even though I must have them at the hands of the alleged much despised capitalistic system. I want for the labouring men in this country a continuation of progressive and practical legislation which will give labour a larger share of the profits of production to which my hon. friends so frequently refer.

In conclusion I would like to say to my hon. friends that as one who sprang from and still considers himself as part of the labouring class I regret exceedingly the suggestion by hon. members opposite that because some measure is not brought down and passed before we have the opportunity of taking the ordinary parliamentary procedure labour in this country or the unemployed in the ranks of labour will proceed to riot and insurrection. I have great faith in the common sense of the Anglo-Saxon—and that most patient of men, the French-Canadian-worker. I do not believe that they will be in favour of conditions of riot in this country unless they do so under a momentary spell of emotion resulting from speeches delivered by some demagogic leader who is more anxious to express his own views than to advance measures which are most in the interest of labour. If hon. members would content themselves for a short time and give this Conservative government an opportunity to work out the problems of Canada, as our brilliant and honoured leader indicated prior to the last election he would do, we will make, as requested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North at the conclusion of his speech, this Canada a happier place in which to live.

May I say that I believe the labour men of Canada will express their will and their views, as they have in the past, not by riot and insurrection, but by ballot. When the time comes that they determine by their ballots that this Conservative government has outlived its usefulness, we shall bow gracefully to their decision but will carry on, in an united effort, whether it be in government or in opposition, to enact legislation not beneficial solely to one particular class but in the interest of all our citizens.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) in his speech this afternoon outlined conditions in our western country so ably and so fully that it is scarcely necessary for me to dwell at any extended length upon those conditions. True, he might have gone further than he did and not enlarged upon the truth in any particular. He might have described the terrible dust storms that that country has experienced this spring; he might have stated the conditions existing there under the present trying weather, and he might perhaps have made his description a little more dramatic. I also had the privilege of being home for the Easter recess, and for two days out of the nine I experienced the worst dust storms that I have ever seen in that western country, and I have been there for a period of some twenty-six years. If hon. members can imagine houses being dark in the middle of the afternoon, automobile drivers having to turn on their lights in the middle of the day and even then not able to see the road, and the impossibility of one who was walking along the street seeing very large buildings more than 150 yards ahead, they will have some idea of the extraordinary weather.

In my immediate district during the past year we had a good crop so far as yield was concerned, and yet the farmers after paying their threshing expenses and their hired help had nothing for their store bills, their garage and other accounts, they had nothing left to pay their indebtedness to the banks and mortgage companies, they had nothing left to pay their taxes. Indeed, in my own municipality there was but 38 per cent of the taxes paid during the past year. And what did the agriculturists have to live on during the winter and meet their operating expenses during the ensuing year? They had nothing left, not even in the districts where there was a comparatively good crop. From what I have said hon. members will readily understand what the conditions are like in other parts of the west where they have had little or nothing in the way of crops.

Last fall the farmers out there in their dire extremity looked to Ottawa to do something. There was an almost universal demand for a pegged price of wheat. Municipalities, wheat pool committees, united farmers' locals, farmers' conventions, and even our three western premiers, were unanimous in asking Ottawa to do something towards helping the struggling farmers. Their idea of what should be done to meet the situation was to peg the price of wheat at a minimum of 70 cents a bushel. Ottawa in its wisdom did not see fit to grant that request. Others thought we should have a set price on our wheat consumed in Canada of at least $1 a bushel. That did look like a reasonable request, it did look as though we had control of the wheat used in our own country, and that it would not be asking too much to set a minimum price on such wheat. But no price was set. Some wise thinkers in my own district got it into their heads that a reasonable request would be to have a bonus paid by the government based on the number of acres that had been seeded in 1930, and that this would be a fairer method than to set a price on wheat milled for domestic consumption, inasmuch as it would give something to those who had no crop. But nothing came of that proposal. The latest request that I have received from my district is that a bounty should be paid on all grain exported; that is, so much per bushel on wheat, barley and oats. But up to the present time nothing has resulted from that request either.

Thus we have to look to the speech from the throne for any intimation of how these unsatisfactory conditions may be remedied. There is one short passage in that speech which may contain considerable hopes for us or it may not contain very much. It is this:

> It will be your privilege to consider certain measures designed by my ministers to ameliorate existing conditions, to provide further means by which our people may go forward to achieve a prosperity heretofore unattained and to furnish them with all possible safeguards against a recurrence of the present subordination to world forces.

This may mean that the government intends to do something to remedy the conditions to which I have referred. We hope so. But, as I have already intimated, it may be merely a statement with nothing to follow in the way of action.

The amendment to the speech from the throne, as has already been stated in the course of this debate, contains not much more than a negative statement. In fact, if the amendment were condensed to read: "We regret that we are not sitting over where you are," I think this would represent its sum and substance.

In the subamendment—in which I am particularly interested, and to which I wish to address the main portion of my remarks—we have outlined to the house three major requests. First, a committee of this house to investigate conditions and report; second, to consider further agricultural relief; third, a further measure of dealing with unemployment. I choose to take the latter point first, then the middle point and the first point last.

It is true that at the special session last fall by the Unemployment Relief Act we did provide a measure of relief for unemployment. No person can say that the putting into circulation of millions of dollars towards carrying on public works is not going to help unemployment. It does in a measure. Then to further assist unemployment the date for the expiry of payments from the federal treasury was extended from March 31 to, I believe, June 30. That, too, does help. But, Mr. Speaker, the portions of our country that are chiefly helped by that measure are those larger centres of population, the urban municipalities, so far as western Canada is concerned. During the Easter recess I found my own small town, with a population of a little over a thousand, was scarcely able financially to avail itself of the measure of relief afforded under that legislation, for the simple reason that municipalities are required to put up 25 per cent of the cost of the labour on any public improvement, and in addition to that, if a waterwork or sewage system is undertaken, which would require considerable piping, seventy per cent at least of the cost of such piping or equipment must be borne by the local municipality, and not more than 30 per cent can be charged to the federal or provincial government. This simply meant that a small town or village or rural municipality was practically precluded from taking any advantage under the relief legislation of the special session. They could not put up the 25 per cent of the labour plus the 70 per cent or more of the cost of the material.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, as a further measure of relief, that we continue Dominion public works in the way of Dominion public buildings. We need public buildings throughout our western country, although possibly in our eastern provinces we are very well supplied. I know that that is not the case in the west. We need post office buildings in our large towns out there, and the undertaking of public buildings or public works by the Dominion government, in conjunction with provincial governments, still would keep money in circulation and give employment to those who are out of work. Then, as another suggestion, I would remind hon. gentlemen that the Conservative party of Canada is committed to a trans-Canada highway, by a vote in this house and by a preelection pledge given last summer. They are definitely committed to a trans-Canada highway, so why not undertake that scheme now? I know finances are low; I know it is difficult to make ends meet in our federal budget, but I also know a few other things in regard to conditions in this country. I know that if a war were to break out we would find money for that purpose, so why not find it for conditions which now exist in our country, for which something really must be done? As far as Saskatchewan is concerned, we have room for the expenditure of considerable public funds on the trans-Canada highway, if it were directed through the middle portion of the province. That would give a large measure of relief to agriculturists, who need it at this time.

Now I will leave that point and take up the question of agricultural relief. This is something which the federal government also has undertaken to remedy. So far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, some action has been taken to give some agricultural relief. I am not sure it is all that should be done, but something has been done. The provincial government have passed what is called the Rural Municipalities Relief Act of Saskatchewan. By that act municipalities are enabled to borrow from the banks, at a rate of interest not exceeding 7 per cent, sufficient funds to grant relief to their ratepayers for the purchase of flour, coal, wood, fodder, gasoline and motor oil. The provincial government may guarantee the loan and may reimburse the municipality, and the borrowing for these purposes does not curtail the borrowing power of the municipality for any other purpose. That looks very good; it looks as though the onus is placed upon the municipalities, and if they take action relief should be forthcoming. While I was at home I learned that some municipalities did take action and are granting this relief, but other municipalities have not taken action. Their councils met and, after consideration, they decided that the scheme was not a good one for them to undertake at the present time, and they turned it down.

Perhaps if we knew all the conditions that are imposed upon a municipality undertaking to pass a by-law for such relief we would not question the wisdom of the councils in what they have done. First, the municipality must pass a by-law; second, they must have the by-law approved by the provincial government; third, the municipality must issue a note to the provincial government for the full amount of the seed grain, due in the fall of 1931; fourth, the municipality must purchase the seed; fifth, the grain must be inspected by a government seed inspector, who will come around at his leisure and make his inspection before it can be purchased and used; sixth, the price is to be the price of grain at Forth William, less the freight, plus five cents a bushel for cleaning; seventh, the seller of the seed must wait for payment from the provincial government; eighth, a caveat is registered against the farmer's land and a promissory note is taken from him by the municipality, and ninth, the municipality must collect the accounts and bear 25 per cent of the ultimate loss. When all these conditions are imposed upon a municipality, with the time almost upon them for seeding operations, I do not wonder that some of them have turned down the scheme, when you bear in mind the further fact that they carry liabilities running into many thousands of dollars in the way of outstanding taxes and other accounts which they are unable to pay. Schools are dependent upon them for further operations; telephone companies are dependent upon them as well, and there are other schemes which have been undertaken and which are dependent upon the municipal councils for their maintenance and upkeep. So we can hardly question the wisdom of a municipal council in turning down this scheme. It is unfortunate, however, for the poor farmers residing in any municipalities where the scheme has been turned down by the council. They have no hope; they are left stranded financially. I have here a letter from the secretary of the United Farmers' lodge in my own constituency. In part it reads as follows:

> The farmers in this part of Saskatchewan are in very bad circumstances this spring. Our municipal council decided not to extend relief for gas, and so forth to farmers, and I know of two cases within five miles of my place that I do not know how they can seed. One man has an engine and only four horses with about 600 acres of wheat to seed; the other man has one section of land with an engine and only two old horses. Neither one of these men has any money and cannot get any and cannot get gas for their engines without money. Both these men have large families and it is quite apparent that unless conditions change quickly the country will have to feed these families.

That is just an illustration of conditions which exist in communities where the municipalities have refused or failed to grant relief.

Then as a further measure of agricultural relief I would suggest that something be done in connection with the price of gasoline out in our western country. I am going to mention in a few moments something that has been done already with regard to the price of gasoline, but it has not been for the benefit of the struggling agriculturists. First, however, I have here a letter from my municipal council protesting against the price of gasoline and the high freight rates. They say in part:

> We find upon examination of freight bills of tank cars of gasoline coming to this point that they are billed with the rate figured on the basis of eight pounds to the gallon, and when a gallon is weighed out it turns the scale at seven pounds. The average car will run over 6,000 gallons so that the consumer pays freight as a rule on 3 tons of gasoline which is not carried by the company and never received by the dealer, which turns out roughly at $50 per car.

Then further on:

> In the present depressed condition of agriculture we are requesting the government of the province and of the Dominion to give consideration and relief in the form of a half freight rate.

That is a suggestion which I pass on to the government, and here is another suggestion in the same connection, sent me by the secretary of a cooperative association:

We have to request that you protest in parliament against the difference in gasoline prices here and in Oklahoma where gas is reported to be selling as low as 1¾ cents per gallon in the field. In view of general conditions here it is held that gasoline prices should be much lower than they are.

I have in my hand a Canadian Press despatch clipped from a newspaper under date of March 26 of this year, which outlines the action taken by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman). I wish he were here to listen to what I am going to say. In part the clipping reads as follows:

Values for duty purposes have been fixed by Hon. E. B. Ryckman, Minister of National Revenue, on refined gasoline entering Canada from the United States. In a bulletin issued to-day to customs and excise officers values for import purposes were placed on gasoline for various refining areas across the border. The new regulations come into effect immediately.

The next paragraph gives the values fixed by the minister, and the following paragraph reads:

The effect of the new regulations is that if gasoline is brought into Canada at lower than these figures, the dumping duty automatically applies. Price cutting in some parts of the United States, which in some quarters has been described as a "gasoline war," is understood to have impelled the Minister of National Revenue to take action to prevent Canadian refiners suffering from unfair competition.

It is too bad about our Canadian refiners. They might not be able to declare as large dividends if gasoline came in from the United States where a price war is in progress, but what about our struggling agriculturists who have no money with which to buy gasoline; what about the ones of whom we heard this afternoon, eighty per cent of whom are on the verge of bankruptcy? I wish the hon. Minister of National Revenue would put on a pair of agricultural goggles for a few days through which to look; he has been looking through the manufacturer's glasses so long that he has lost sight of the farmer's viewpoint. I am sure that the government has no desire to see this condition continue. Surely the agricultural industry is of as much, if not more, importance to Canada than that of a few refiners who are trying to make all the money they can. Let them make all the money they can, but they have no right to penalize the agricultural industry by means of protection received from this government. If there is price slashing going on in the United States we should have the benefit.

I have another suggestion to make in regard to agricultural relief, which is embodied in a resolution passed at a farmers' meeting in my constituency. The secretary advised me that there were 150 ratepayers present, and the resolution reads as follows:

Whereas both our provincial and federal governments have recommended an extension of live stock production on western farms, which has resulted in an enormous increase in the number of hogs in the breeding pens in Saskatchewan, conservatively estimated at two to three times the number of a year ago and which can be still further extended,

And whereas the present high cost of processing and transportation prevents competition with Danish pork products on the British market.

Therefore be it resolved that we urge the federal government to give immediate consideration to—

1st. The construction of two or more processing plants at western points.

2nd. Establishment of an outlet for quality pork products on the British market.

3rd. Strict grading of the finished product under governmental supervision to insure that a market once established may be held.

4th. Adjustment of freight rates to reduce the heavy charges now obtaining.

The matter of interest rates has been discussed quite extensively and it is not necessary for me to enlarge upon this question. My own personal experience with the banks is that they are willing to lend money whenever there is a possibility of its being returned. One bank manager told me that he could not see any possibility of the farmer repaying even the smallest loan out of his farming operations of 1931. That is the reason the banks are not lending money to farmers. However, they are not the only sinners in western Canada in connection with the rates of interest. While I was home during the Easter recess I interviewed the manager of a mortgage company in the city of Saskatoon in connection with a mortgage which had been placed upon a farm in my home district. The amount of the mortgage was $1,500 and it had been in force some eight or ten years. I approached the manager with a view to having an adjustment made on the interest rate of 8½ per cent, and the only concession I was able to obtain was that if the mortgage could be put in good shape through the payment of last year's interest, and a further payment of $7.50 made for the writing of a new mortgage, the manager would recommend to the board that the interest rate be reduced to 8 per cent. This mortgage is being carried by a widow with four young children. She is finding it almost impossible to make ends meet, and yet she is being forced to pay an interest rate of 8½ per cent. I could go on and enlarge in regard to land agreements, and the interest being charged. Many farmers have found it impossible to pay the interest. In some cases they have asked for a rebate and that they be allowed to continue the agreement for two or three years without the payment of interest. I hope that some redress will be made along these lines.

The next point raised in the subamendment is the formation of a committee to inquire into the economic condition. A few years ago many complaints were being received in regard to immigration. This matter was brought before the house and the government of the day very wisely referred the matter to the committee on agriculture and colonization. This committee was given a wide scope to investigate the matter; it was empowered to call witnesses, form a judgment and make a report to the house. That is what is asked for under this subamendment, that a committee of the house be formed and that this matter be turned over to it for investigation. It should have the power to call witnesses and to investigate and discuss the matter from every angle. Expert economists could be called in order that the committee might have the benefit of their knowledge.

Man's genius is great. He is able to travel on and under the water; he can travel at great speed upon the land in railway trains and motor cars, and under the land in underground trains. He is able to travel through the air at tremendous speed. He has girdled the earth with his voice by means of radio. He is able to telephone over thousands of miles and hear the voice of the person being spoken to. He is able to accomplish wonderful things through his God-given wisdom, but when it comes to a situation where there is an abundance of food—our granaries in many cases bursting with grain—and at the same time thousands of people are face to face with starvation, man seems impotent to solve the problem. We see men riding the freight trains from town to town, begging for something to eat and hunting for jobs. With an abundance of food, with vast numbers of people seeking work, we cannot bring the two together. What is the matter with us? Are the brains in this House of Commons not functioning properly? We come here from all parts of this Dominion and seek to do the best we can for those who have need of help, and surely at this time when people are actually starving, something can be done. I have seen men drop off the freight trains at my own home town and go from door to door begging a meal. I believe the majority of these men are willing to work if they can get something to do. The farmers cannot employ them to any great extent, or if they could they cannot afford to pay very much because they would be unable to get it back from the land.

I noticed when returning to Ottawa that every freight train that passed contained its quota of men taking a ride. When these men get hungry they jump off and try to beg a meal. How long are such conditions going to continue? Surely a committee should be appointed by this house to investgiate these things. If there is any remedy we should know of it. Such a condition is nothing less than a national evil. Surely we do not expect to sit here for three or four months and pass only estimates and a few amendments to acts and then go home and shut our eyes to what is going on. Surely there is some way to get around it. In my opinion a committee of this house would be the best means of inquiring into this question and I hope the government will see its way clear to adopt the suggestion.

The other suggestions that have been made as to assistance to agriculture and further unemployment relief are important, but they are not of as great importance as the appointment of a committee of the house to try to solve the problem now confronting us. Such a committee could suggest a remedy to parliament and we could then act upon it. Suggestions have been made in the house by different members. One hon. member suggested that deflation of currency would be a cure; another suggested that bringing down wages and the cost of living and tightening our national belt would be a cure. A number of splendid suggestions have been made. I hope some of them will be taken into consideration, and that we shall be able to act upon them. Therefore I strongly urge upon the government the idea of having a committee appointed by the house to take action at and report during this session. Such a committee could inquire into the cost of producing farm products, the selling price of the same, and the spread between the two. They could also inquire into the cost of manufacturing articles, the selling price of the same and the spread between the two. I notice from a report and I am informed by the Bureau of Statistics that the drop in the price level of agricultural products is much greater than that in the price level of manufactured articles. I have in my hand a statement showing that for the month of March, 1931, in comparison with the month of March, 1930, the drop in the price level of manufactured articles was 14 per cent, whereas the drop in the price of agricultural products was 35 per cent. Why is that? Are we as agriculturists to be forced to pay more than we should? A committee could inquire into that and get at the facts of the case. There are many other matters concerning which they could form a judgment and report to the house.

As a last thought to leave with the house I am going to read a quotation from a statement made by a man who is considered an authority on finance. It represents very largely my own thought, but if I gave my own thought it might not be accepted quite so readily. This is a statement by Roger Babson, of the Babson Institute, who is an authority on finance. He has this to say in regard to present economic conditions:

> Apparently people to-day are not only tired out physically, but are discouraged. They lack the faith which is essential to personal or national progress. Accompanying this lack of faith is a disrespect for law, order, and experience. Faith, to be effective, must be backed up by righteousness. Faith cannot be bought and quickly obtained when in trouble—like medicine. Faith must be acquired slowly before it is needed—like education. Faith comes through patient devotion, right living, and service to others.
> A great mass of wage earners, executives, and young business people have never before witnessed a severe business depression. Ever since Germany declared war in 1914—with the exception of a very short readjustment period after the war ended—there has been a constant demand for labour.
>
> In view of the steady work and easy profits. . . . this new generation has felt sufficient in itself. Sabbath schools and churches have been neglected; family prayers have been given up, and Sunday has been made a common holiday. Hence, unlike previous generations, a large percentage of the people now unemployed, or losing money in business, have no faith upon which to fall back. When employed or making money, they did nothing to store up spiritual reserves, and hence have none to draw upon now that employment and profits have vanished. As a result great masses of people are discouraged and know not where to turn. The material wealth upon which they solely depended has gone. They have no spiritual wealth upon which to draw, and they are tired out physically. What is true of individuals is also true of nations.

He goes on to say:

> More religion—rather than more legislation—is the need of the hour.

I agree with Roger Babson. By legislative enactments we can cure some of our ills, but as this economist has pointed out, we can perhaps help ourselves also to cure some of our individual and national ills.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to avail myself of this opportunity to make a few observations before the debate closes. First I should like to say how glad I am that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has returned from Great Britain safely and in good health and that he is now engaged in administering the affairs of Canada in a manner at least pleasing to himself. Some people are very hard to please. I recall that the present Prime Minister, when he was leader of the opposition, advocated the repeal of the New Zealand treaty, a higher tariff against the United States, and a greater trade preference to Great Britain. When the King government put the whole three into effect, he then took the position that the then government had forsaken the country. From that it will be seen that it is very hard to please the hon. gentleman.

The Prime Minister, before he returned to Canada, took the time to visit old Ireland. I know he would be received with the greatest respect in the emerald isle, both in the north and in the south, because the Irish people have always shown the greatest respect to Canadian public men. So I hope that when the Prime Minister met the President of the Irish Free State, he assured that gentleman that the Hon. Howard Ferguson, who was then Premier of Ontario, was not representing the views of the majority of the Canadian people when, during the last federal election, he referred to that gentleman in such a contemptible manner. I hope the Prime Minister assured the Irish people that it was not because of that contemptuous reference that Mr. Ferguson was afterwards appointed to the high position of the representative of Canada in London. I mention this because, when I read the statement in the press, I thought at the time it was a peculiar position for a gentleman who was contemplating that in the event of a change of government he would go over to England to unify, or "cement," as he himself said, all the countries which comprises the British commonwealth of nations.

During the last election, however, Mr. Ferguson made many statements which were not in accordance with facts. Hon. members will all have read how, for instance, he said that three of the Ontario Federal cabinet ministers would be defeated. Everyone knows now that they were all elected. He repeated time and again that the then Minister of Labour was bound to be defeated, and hon. members all know now that that was not in accordance with the facts. He also stated that he had seen train loads of immigrants being brought to this country from Europe at the public expense, and he said that he had protested to Ottawa with regard to the matter.

When he was challenged from the public platform, he said that a station agent had told him so and his protest to Ottawa had been to Sir William Clark, British representative in Canada. It is a peculiar incident that just at the time Mr. Ferguson was complaining about too many immigrants coming to this country, I had sent to me an English newspaper showing the Ontario government advertising for more immigrants and, indeed, guaranteeing them free passage to Ontario. I am sure hon. members will not forget, when Mr. Ferguson returned from Europe in 1928, the criticism that he levelled against the Immigration department. Hon. members will not forget, I am sure, how he pointed out that as long as the Immigration department used red tape, denying, as he said, the entrance of men with cauliflower ears, bow legs and squint eyes, Canada was not going to get the full complement of immigrants she was entitled to receive. I mention that just to show that Mr. Ferguson is given to misrepresentation, and those who know him best do not take all he says seriously.

I have not time, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the whole speech from the throne in forty minutes, but I can, however, agree wholeheartedly with its first sentence, which says:

> I welcome you to your duties at a time when the nations of the world are passing through a period of great economic depression.

I would like hon. members of the government to explain how it is that economic conditions have changed so rapidly and have now become world-wide, because both before and during the election the Conservatives emphatically stated throughout the country that it was only Canada that was passing through a period of depression, and that because of the fiscal policy of the late administration. I am sure that the people of Canada will accept this confession of misrepresentation, and at the proper time deal with it.

Many hon. members who have spoken have already shown very clearly that the government has failed to fulfil its election promises, especially with respect to unemployment, and as yet there has been no answer from the government benches. I think I am safe in saying, Mr. Speaker, that the views of the members of the opposition have so far been treated with an indifference which I feel sure has not been equalled in any parliament since constitutional government has been established.

I listened with a good deal of interest this afternoon to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) and was struck with the ability of that young gentleman in presenting his views to the house. I was sorry, however, to see him devote so much of his time to a criticism of the three Labour members in the far corner of the chamber. He seemed, as I listened to him, to leave the impression that the three labour members had not offered any constructive suggestions with respect to the unemployment situation. I would remind him that the government of which he is a supporter was elected to end unemployment, without any suggestions from other members of the house. I would also remind him that when the members on this side of the house asked what was the policy of the government with regard to ending unemployment or for unemployment relief, they received no definite answer. The hon. member for West York sought to leave the impression that about all the three Labour members of the house did was to indulge in inflammatory speeches. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have listened to these three members representing labour both inside the house and outside, and I can safely say that for violence, and any inflammatory tendency, their speeches do not begin to compare in the slightest degree with those that were made by leading Conservatives throughout the country during the last election campaign

I fear that the hon. member for West York this afternoon did not correctly represent the position of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis). The hon. member for Vancouver South, as I heard him speak the other day, was simply answering the arguments that had been made by the deputy speaker (Mr. LaVergne) as to conditions in Russia. He pointed out that it had been stated that there was forced labour in Russia, and he went on to show that while there was forced labour in Russia, there was enforced idleness in Canada, and I think every hon. member will agree that that is true. Anyone can read the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South as they appear at page 187 of Hansard, and I am sure that the hon. member for West York, if he will read them, will agree that he did not correctly represent the position taken by the hon. member.

The hon. member for West York also complained of the lack of constructive suggestions from the Labour members of the house. Let me remind him that the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) has made many suggestions in this house which have been of a constructive nature. If hon. members will look at the order paper they will find a constructive suggestion standing there in his name. At the last regular session of 1930 the hon. member for North Winnipeg made a constructive suggestion which was supported by the Conservative party generally. But I must confess that the hon. member for West York lightened my heart somewhat this afternoon when he said that if any constructive suggestion did emanate from this side of the house, it would find hearty support in the ranks of the Conservative party. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that when the votes are taken on the amendment and the subamendment, which contain many constructive suggestions, these amendments will receive many supporters on the other side of the house.

There is one paragraph in the speech from the throne to which I wish to refer, and that is with regard to old age pensions. That paragraph reads as follows:

> The broad outline of the general scheme of national development undertaken by my government, including provision for old age pensions, aid to agriculture, technical education and highway construction, has already been made known. My ministers are persuaded that this general scheme cannot advantageously be altered. Careful consideration has therefore been given to the progressive stages by which it will be carried out, and you will be asked to consider measures sanctioning such action as the current economic situation warrants, and such as can be undertaken without undue demands upon the national exchequer.

In that connection I would point out that when my hon. friends opposite were appealing to the electors and making definite promises to them, there was no qualification whatever no mention with regard to the economic situation or the condition of the national exchequer, but a definite promise was given to the electors of this country that these things would be done immediately the Conservatives were elected to power. The Liberals knew that there was a general world-wide depression. They knew what effect it would have on the national exchequer, and they were honest and fair with the electors. But the people of Canada were promised these things in a very definite way by the Conservatives, and we of His Majesty's loyal opposition now want to see these pledges fulfilled. But no matter what steps are taken by the Conservative government with regard to old age pensions the people of Canada will not forget that it was a Liberal government that first placed this scheme on the statute books of Canada. Through this action of a Liberal government about 60,000 aged Canadian Citizens are receiving pensions to-day, and this in spite of Conservative opposition.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Although the unemployment question was one of the main issues during the election, and the present Prime Minister, with his supporters, made definite promises to end unemployment, no mention whatever is made in the speech from the throne which would indicate the end of unemployment in this country, nor is there an indication that the government intends to relieve unemployment.

I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to be here with you having been elected again for the constituency of Kenora and Rainy River. It is generally known that my friends in that riding were given a hard time during the election; as most people know the whole resources and influence of the Ontario government were used in an effort to defeat me. You will note I said my friends in that riding were given a hard time, because it was they, and not I, who won the election. I happened to be away in other parts of Canada during most of the election campaign. However the electors in that part of Ontario were prepared. They knew every known device would be used by a few would-be politicians. The people knew that there was nothing too low for a few, a very few it is true, who were behind the Conservative candidate, and in that they were not disappointed.

What were the tactics used by a few of our opponents in that riding? Their tactics had been well considered and studied since 1923. After the provincial election in 1923 when a Conservative government was elected, road and highway work was practically closed down. The discrimination and persecution of the settlers began. That went on until 1926 when there was another provincial election, and then the gentleman chiefly responsible for advising the government had his opportunity. He was elected to represent the district promising highways, byways and roads. However, in the next general election, three years later, in 1929, he was defeated because of his neglect of the district and his failure to carry out the promises he had made during 1926 campaign. As the federal election approached, the unemployment situation was blazoned out with front page articles in the local paper, and an effort made to create the impression that it was the then Minister of Labour who was responsible for the conditions. However, although the unemployment situation is much worse since then, the same paper very seldom mentions the fact, showing quite conclusively that it was not the unfortunate unemployed about which they were concerned but rather their desire to make political capital out of the situation.

We feel certain that it was from this source the then leader of the opposition was advised at the end of the last regular session to oppose the extending of the ballot to between five and six hundred citizens located in the Patricia district north of Kenora, the reason being, as was quite evident from the words of the then leader of the opposition, at the time he opposed the measure, because the people up there did not vote right in the last provincial election. At page 2818 of Hansard, when the bill to extend the vote to the people in Patricia district was before the house, Mr. Bennett is reported as follows:

> The object of this legislation is to take from one electoral district a small area and give it to another for the benefit of the Minister of Labour because there were a few votes given in favour of the candidates whom he supported at the last provincial election.

This is but another example of the persecution and punishment meted out to people by a few politicians in that part of the country to those who do not vote for the Conservative candidate.

In connection with the paper industry in northern Ontario it was evident that members of the Ontario government who intended taking a leading part in the federal election in our particular end of northern Ontario, knew that the people expected the provincial government to press the newsprint industries to carry out their agreement with the crown, and operate the pulp and paper mills in accordance with agreements. I need not tell you the newsprint mills are not carrying out their agreements so far as operating is concerned. Generally speaking, these agreements provide that in default of the grantee keeping said pulp and paper mills in operation after the erection thereof, or keeping the required number of persons employed, the crown may revoke the right, licence, or permit to cut the forest products, and upon revocation, all rights of the grantee shall become ipso facto null and void, and all securities or moneys paid as a deposit or bonus shall be forfeited to the crown. The members of the Ontario government knew that the people in northern Ontario were fairly well acquainted with these agreements, and knew that during the election they would be asked why they were not forcing these concerns to live up to the agreements. So the Ontario authorities sat still while the strike which was pending in the mills at Fort Frances, Fort William, and Kenora, took on a serious aspect.

The employees were entitled to an increase in wages in accordance with an old arrangement, because of larger and faster machines. The men were denied this increase, and they voted to strike, and it was thought that if the men went on strike it might kill two birds with one stone. It would give an excuse to the management of the plants and to the provincial government to say that the plants were closed down because of the action of the employees, and at the same time serve as a good opportunity of breaking up the labour unions. However, that did not materialize. The men settled for less than was coming to them. The fact is that the plants have practically been closed down since that time. The Ontario government has failed to compel the companies to operate these mills in accordance with the agreement, but the settlement of the labour dispute put the responsibility where it belonged —on the Ontario government instead of on the workers.

The Minister of Lands and Forests of the province of Ontario got into a very tight corner when he was in the constituency of East Algoma. He is reported to have said that the reason the paper mills had not been operating was because of the policy of the King government. He is reported to have said that the King government permitted the exportation of pulpwood from this country and the manufacture of it in the United States rather than in Canada. Everyone knows that that argument was absurd. Supposing we were to take the word of the Minister of Lands and Forests, let me ask this government what they have done since that time to open and to operate the pulp and paper mills in northern Ontario. What have they done in regard to the exportation of pulpwood?

There was one other political trick which was attempted in my riding during the last federal election. As is known, there were many men out of employment during that time. Unemployed strangers were brought into our district on railroad trains by Conservative workers. Some of these were British trainees sent out by the British government. They had letters from the British Ministry of Labour. They were lodged in a Kenora hotel, and were used to show the letterheads on those letters of the British Ministry of Labour, and to tell workmen that the letters were from the Canadian Minister of Labour, who had promised them jobs if they came to Canada. Some of what I am telling you now, can I am sure be found on the records of the Department of Immigration, as I had an officer of that department investigate the affair at that time. Anyway, when the fraud was exposed these men were taken out and given jobs on Ontario government highway construction while many of our own settlers in that district were denied work. This mind you, was done in the name of the Conservative party, and I ask, is it any wonder there were many decent minded Conservatives who expressed contempt with such tactics, and I am sure voted accordingly?

I could go on and tell of other tactics equally as contemptible, but I will only refer to one other. A leaflet was circulated in parts of my riding with reference to a certain fraternal society. It is so base, so vile and indecent that I will not take up the time or insult the intelligence of hon. members by dealing further with the matter at this time. The good citizens of my riding, characterized it for what it was—an infamous falsehood.

Propaganda such as this cannot help but fail in a country such as Canada, where we have broadminded, sensible, intelligent and tolerant people. It failed in my riding during the recent election. It failed because the people have known me for the past twenty-nine years. The business men knew that I had fought for the rights of that district in regard to its industrial development against great odds. The farmers did not forget that while I was a member of the legislature, I secured for them many miles of roads and highways, financial assistance for schools, and community halls, and therefore they accepted this propaganda with the usual grain of salt. The workers know me because I represented them for many years in the industrial field before I entered public life, and they did not forget that I had a hand in securing valuable legislation in their interests.

On Friday last the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) referring to the member for Kenora-Rainy River, suggested it would be an excellent act if some one introduced me to the Minister of Labour from 1926 to 1930. He sought to leave the impression that I was not consistent in my attitude towards certain reforms. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am ready for the introduction, because the workers know (1) that I had a hand in securing increase in wages for settlers and workers on Ontario government work in my riding; (2) I had a hand in securing valuable amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act; (3) in securing the establishing of the Mothers' Allowance Act; (4) in securing the establishment of the minimum wage for women and girls; (5) that I secured an undertaking from the railway companies to place men in positions after being injured in their employ, when they could not follow their former positions; (6) that I moved and had passed in the legislature on April 14, 1924, a resolution to provide fair wages in industries using the natural resources of the province; (7) that I advocated in the Ontario legislature the establishing of a system of unemployment insurance; (8) that on April 14, 1924, I moved a motion in the Ontario legislature to provide an eight-hour day on all public and private industrial undertakings.

(9) The workers also remembered that after the change of government in 1923 the Conservative government introduced a measure in 1924, designed to destroy the Workmen's Compensation Act, and they knew that I, as their watchdog, raised the whole Labour forces of Ontario to protest against this measure, resulting in having the bill withdrawn on its second reading. I happen to have a copy of the Toronto Evening Telegram, of July 22, 1924, which comments upon this action at that particular time. It says:

> The bill was withdrawn, although the government was, even at the time it withdrew the measure, mystified at the sudden manifestation of opposition. Then it was learned that Peter Heenan, who is a member of the railway brotherhoods had sent out frantic wires to the various lodges within his reach, asking them to oppose the bill.

The Toronto Telegram stated further,

> There is little doubt but that the provincial government will at the next session of the legislature again bring in its bill to reconstruct the Workmen's Compensation board by creating a board of review.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, let me point out that although the Toronto Telegram, which paper is very close to the Ontario government, prophesied that the measure would be introduced at the next session, seven years have passed, and I am glad to say the measure has not been reintroduced since, and I doubt if it ever will be.

Now, coming to federal affairs, I want to introduce the member for Kenora-Rainy River to the Minister of Labour from 1926 to 1930 for the benefit of the member for East Algoma. It will be found that during that period there was passed, in the interests of the workers, such legislation as (1) the Union Label Act; (2) the extension of fair wages policy to the industries using our natural resources and coming within the jurisdiction of the federal government; (3) the passing of an order in council to prohibit the bringing into Canada of labour under contract; (4) the establishing of the eight-hour day for government employees who were required to work longer than eight hours, without any reduction in wages; (5) the inauguration of a national council for the Civil Service; (6) the passage of an act to give a measure of justice to postal workers in western Canada; (7) the passage of a bill to provide pensions for all Canadian National Railway employees; (8) an act to provide an eight-hour day and fair wages on public works and on all public contracts; (9) and the passage of what I consider the most humane of all measures, an act to provide an old age pension system for Canada; an act, by the way, which, although declared by many Conservatives as unworkable, is to-day paying out pensions to approximately 60,000 Canadian aged citizens.

(10) The workers also know that the King government referred the question of unemployment insurance to the provinces and that some provinces have declared in favour of legislation to this end.

The workers knew also that during the four years I was Minister of Labour I endeavoured to the best of my ability to give them a square deal, and a square deal is all the workers of Canada ask for. They also knew that during that period the wages of the workers increased on an average of over 15 per cent; and by the way, although the Conservatives promised during the election higher wages, the wages of the Canadian workers to-day are being reduced. Yes, Mr. Speaker, let me tell the member for East Algoma, I consistently advocated a permanent system to deal with unemployment before I was a member of the cabinet, and while I was a member of the cabinet, and that I intend to persist in advocating the establishment of such a scheme.

The members of the Ontario government who were opposing me during the last election, and their henchmen, knew that the workers in my constituency would not forget those things, and so they attempted to misrepresent my position with respect to the national highway. In order that the house may understand the matter I propose to give a brief history of this proposed highway. My first official connection with it was at the formation at Dryden, Ontario, in the month of November, 1919, of an organization known as the Central Canada Colonization and Highway Association. Let me say that at the formation of this organization, with representatives from Manitoba to east of the head of the lakes, no suggestion was made that the federal government should contribute towards its construction. In March, 1920, the executives of this organization, with a prominent Conservative as its president, presented a memorial to the Ontario government, requesting the construction of the highway, and not one word or suggestion was made as to a contribution of one cent from the federal government. I was the Member for the Kenora district in the Ontario legislature. I urged the government to send surveyors out, which was done, and in 1921 contracts were let to stump and grub the section from Kenora to the Manitoba boundary line, and some grading was done between then and 1923.

The government changed in 1923 and the work was practically closed down. I urged the new government to continue the work which had been started. In 1921 Hon. James Lyons, then Minister of Lands and Forests, made a statement at a public meeting at the head of the lakes which can be found in the Fort William Times Journal of May 30, 1924. He definitely promised that the highway to the Manitoba boundary would be completed within three years and that the road eastward to the Sault would be undertaken at once and completed within the next seven years. Again there was not a word of suggestion that the federal government should contribute anything towards the cost. The work was not proceeded with, except in a very small way, notwithstanding the fact that the promise was repeated many times afterwards. During the 1926 provincial election the Ontario government again promised the highway, but after the election the people were again disappointed.

In 1926 I had the honour to be taken into the federal cabinet, and it was after that that a few politicians thought it would be a good political move to raise the cry of federal contribution. They thought that this would serve two purposes; it might have the effect of embarrassing the King government, and at the same time of making the citizens in that part of the country forget the definite promise made many times, and it would serve as an excuse for not fulfilling of those promises. We find that in the Kenora Miner and News of June 4, 1930, the Minister of Lands and Forests is reported to have said at Sault Ste. Marie, on June 3, 1930, that the prosecution of this work depended to a large extent on the attitude of the Dominion government. He said that the Dominion government had not yet accepted the proposal of the province to undertake the work on a 50-50 basis. The citizens of my part of the country have been hoodwinked, betrayed and disappointed by these political gentlemen, but in spite of all this I was elected again.

I want now to make these gentlemen swallow their deliberate misstatements. I hold in my hands sessional paper No. 96, which was brought down upon my motion for the return of all correspondence between the two governments in connection with the highway. I have here the answers from all departments of the government, showing there was not one line or one word of correspondence from these departments making such an offer as Mr. Finlayson stated, or even a request for any assistance. However, I am glad the question has been raised, because it is quite evident that the Ontario government never intended to do much but play politics in connection with this highway, but now we have a definite promise, made by the present Prime Minister during the last election, that the federal government would construct a national highway, and I am glad to have been elected to remind the government of that pledge.

The people in northern Ontario want action, Mr. Speaker; we want a highway built. We do not want any more political trickery, and let me say that no matter how much money is asked for this highway, it will have my support and vote. No matter how much a Conservative government spends on this highway it will not compensate the people of northern Ontario for the many years they have been deprived of it, because of the political manoeuvring of a few politicians.

Mr. I. D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): Mr. Speaker, we have had rather an unduly protracted debate, and were it not for the fact that I made certain specific promises to certain of my people in the province of Nova Scotia I would not for one single instant prolong this debate.

It is customary on an occasion of this kind, Mr. Speaker, to convey congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address. May I mingle my felicitations with those already offered by hon. gentlemen on all sides of the house on the very high degree of excellence to which each of these speakers attained in his maiden speech in the House of Commons. To those of us in whose veins pulsates French blood it was a matter of great satisfaction that the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Bennett) should have selected to move the address in reply a French speaking member of the House of Commons. He has thus exemplified his high regard for the language of that cultured race and his determination to see that language given its proper position at all times in the parliament of Canada. To those of us who come from the maritime provinces it was particularly gratifying that the French speaking member who moved the address was a member of the French Acadian race. The achievements and sacrifices of that splendid race are written large upon the pages of maritime history. They constitute to-day a very large percentage of our population, and they make a notable contribution to all that is best in our economic, social and intellectual life in the maritime provinces. Coming as I do from a constituency which is thirty-five per cent French Acadian I wish to thank publicly the right hon. Prime Minister for the signal honour which he has done to this great race by selecting for the first time a French Acadian to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

As I listened to the marathon effort of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), there was brought to me as never before the full realization and significance of that ancient but pithy expression, "The mountain laboured and brought forth a mouse." In extenuation of his four and a half hour speech my right hon. friend said that for months he had maintained a stoical silence, that he had locked himself up in the fastnesses of Kingsmere in order that he might not embarrass the government. Well, Mr. Speaker, does my right hon. friend suppose that at a time of economic necessity like this, the sole function of a leader of an opposition is to embarrass a government which is trying to carry on the business of a country? Surely he would not suggest that for a moment. In regard to the stoical silence that he maintained, may I say that the right hon. gentleman is leader of a certain section of public opinion in this country. He is the leader of what was once a great political party, and the people of Canada had a right to expect a constructive contribution from him. If there was anything of constructive nature that he could offer as a solution for the problems which confront the Canadian people at this time, I think he did not do well to remain silent during those months.

My right hon. friend's speech dealt first with the record of his administration. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no need to take up the time of parliament in following my right hon. friend there. That record was discussed in every constituency in the Dominion of Canada from Cape Breton to Vancouver, and on that record my right hon. friend and his administration were judged by the people. A great majority of the people of Canada judged that as a result of that record my right hon. friend henceforth should sit over there rather than over here. So there is no necessity to follow my right hon. friend when he talks about legacies, though I did notice that when he spoke about the legacies left by his administration he rather conveniently forgot to mention that during the time his administration were in power they brought about an increase of $500,000,000 in the funded debt of the Canadian National Railways. That was one legacy which his administration left to the taxpayers of the Dominion of Canada, but he did not mention it. However, after all, as I have said, my right hon. friend has been tried upon the record which he paraded in that four and one half hour speech, and on that record he has been condemned, so why resurrect a political corpse? Why should we flog a dead horse?

Now I wish to take up some of the other points in the speech of my right hon. friend. He then proceeded—I make this statement very candidly— in a manner which I think was unworthy of his culture and his high intellectual attainments, unworthy of the very important position which he holds in the public life of this country. He tried by subterranean methods to create in this country the impression that the right hon. gentleman who is leading the government is a czar or a dictator, that in him the ego is exaggerated. I think that was very unworthy of my right hon. friend. It offers nothing of a constructive nature either to the people of Canada or to this parliament. The leader of a great political party should not in this house stoop to the use of what cannot be otherwise described than as cheap, demagogic language.

Continuing as to the use of the personal pronoun, he attributed autocratic tendencies to my right hon. leader, but may I suggest that if any hon. member of this house will take the trouble to read the speech made by my right hon. friend he will find that the personal pronoun "I" is used in such statements as, "on such and such a date I said this," or "on such and such a date I argued this" exactly 797 times. When my right hon. friend accuses the Prime Minister of egotism I would suggest that he first "cast the beam from his own eye."

My right hon. friend had something to say about the embargo which has been placed against importations from Russia, forgetting, with that lack of consistency which has ever been the dominating feature of his public life, that in 1927 he did exactly the same thing. One of the reasons why we have a disturbed economic condition throughout the world is because of the tactics adopted by Russia. What is the philosophy behind the Russian five-year plan? Some hon. gentlemen may not like my saying so, but the philosophy behind that plan is to depress wages in Russia to a point where production can be carried on at the cheapest possible rate and to dump the products thus produced on the markets of other countries so that they in turn will have to depress wages, thus causing industrial stress and turmoil leading to revolution in other parts of the world. Let me read a statement made by the right hon. gentleman when he was far removed from the passion and prejudice of politics. I quote from Industry and Humanity, where he says:

> Where consumers extend their patronage to unscrupulous competitors, a handicap is immediately placed upon those who are preserving peace in industry and securing the welfare of working people.

That is what motivated the action of the right hon. the Prime Minister. He was trying to preserve peace in industry in Canada and other countries of the world when he placed an embargo upon importations from Russia. However, there is another phase to this Russian question, and I think the house and the country are indebted to the hon. deputy speaker (Mr. LaVergne) for bringing it to their attention. Some people may not wish to speak about it, but there is a philosophy behind bolshevism. It is not only an economic theory. The churches in Russia which were built to render adoration to an eternal God have been turned into places of amusement. The marriage contract is no longer recognized. The sanctity has been taken from that which has been the very bulwark of western civilization. What is the position of woman to-day in Russia? She is used merely as an instrument to satisfy the worst animal passions of man. That system which strives to drive out of the human heart the love for an adoration of an infinite God, R. B. Bennett says shall not prevail in Canada, in spite of what the leader of any other party in this house says.

I notice that my right hon. friend did not spend very much time in discussing unemployment. That is a very delicate question with him. He attempted to criticize my right hon. leader because he had made available to the unemployed people of this country a sum of $20,000,000, which in turn permitted of an expenditure of some $80,000,000 by the different provinces and municipalities. What is the record of my right hon. friend on this question of unemployment, and what is the record of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Heenan)? I remember standing in my place here before the dissolution of parliament and asking the hon. gentleman, who at that time was the Minister of Labour, how many unemployed there were in Canada, and as I asked that question I knew that at that time there were 200,000 Canadians out of work. My hon. friend would not reply to that question because he said that it was not a gentlemanly question to ask in parliament. That was his contribution to the unemployment problem. Then we have the famous speech of my right hon. friend, which speech has gone down in political history and will remain there as perhaps one of the most shameful public utterances ever made by a public man in a high place in the parliament of Canada.

My right hon. friend then dealt at great length with the Imperial economic conference. As I said before, my right hon. friend has not the greatest reputation for consistency, and when one makes a speech of that length it must be very hard to be consistent. It is said that the devil gets into a long prayer; he certainly gets into a long speech. As an example of the inconsistency of my right hon. friend, I would mention his criticism of the Prime Minister for not making known at the special session what he was going to say at the Imperial conference. The words of the right hon. gentlemen appear on page 29 of Hansard, as follows:

> I want to say to my right hon. friend that he did not treat parliament fairly in his attitude with respect to the Imperial conference. I asked him politely at the beginning of the special session to give us a statement of what he intended to do at the Imperial conference, to make known his policies. He was also asked by, I think, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) to advise parliament along those lines. He spoke on the Imperial conference two or three times, but he never told this house what he had in mind. I say that was not fair to parliament and it was not fair to the country.

Then on page 31 he said:

> I say he should tell us very plainly what his particular policies are going to be, and his attitude with respect to the questions which may come up at the Imperial conference.

The house then rose for dinner, and after recess my right hon. friend took up again the question of the Imperial conference. He spoke about the atmosphere that should be created, the method of approach that should be followed and said, as appears on page 33:

> It is important to keep in mind that conferences are exactly what they are termed to be —they are conferences. They are neither cabinets laying down imperial policies, nor are they parliaments in which members meet to discuss in public matters of mutual concern. Unless it were understood there was to be a certain method of approach and a certain amount of privacy thrown around the proceedings at the outset, it would be impossible to get governments to go into conference with each other. If my right hon. friend says that all that is to be discussed at a conference ought to be proclaimed from the rooftops right from the outset, that all should be made known, I would say that if that is to be the known procedure, governments will refuse to go into conference with each other. They must be secure to a certain extent at least until all positions are known against having their positions publicly criticized.

Yet for half an hour he criticised my right hon. leader because he did not tell, at the special session of the House of Commons, just exactly what he was going to say at the Imperial conference.

There appears to be in some quarters an impression that the Prime Minister of Canada should have gone to the Imperial conference bearing in one hand an olive branch and in the other alms for the British people. Why should any prime minister of Canada have to go to England bearing an olive branch? In 1914, 500,000 Canadians went overseas each bearing an olive branch of good-will towards the empire, and in bearing it aloft, 50,000 of them died. Why should there be any estrangement between Canada and Breat Britain? To talk about estrangement and strained relations is the merest nonsence. No matter what government may be in power, whether it be Liberal or Conservative, the heart of Canada is British to the core, and there will never be strained relations between Canada and our great motherland. As regards going overseas, offering alms such as my right hon. friend was going to offer in the Dunning budget, may I say that the honour, glory and reputation of the British people, the British spirit itself, were never built up on the basis of special privilege or on the receipt of alms. The British people do not want anything of that kind.

I fear there is a motive behind all this talk about strained relations with the motherland. At the Imperial conference the Prime Minister achieved a personal triumph never achieved there before by any other prime minister in the history of Canada, a fact attested to by the better press of England. Another thing that I believe never happened before in an Imperial conference is that the Prime Minister gave a lead to all the other British dominions and was followed 100 per cent by the premiers of those other dominions. But apart from all this, the central point to remember about the Imperial conference is that it is not over. No one on that side or this side of the house or out of it can say that the Imperial conference has been a failure. Why all this talk by my hon. friends opposite about strained relations with England? Because they know the Imperial conference is meeting in August for the first time in Ottawa, the capital city of our country, and they are trying to create an atmosphere of prejudice, because they are afraid, not that the Imperial conference will fail, but that it will be a success. I say to the representatives of the once great Liberal party: if that be their attitude—and no other explanation of their conduct is possible—in regard to this matter—

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): We want to prevent further mistakes.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The hon. member ought to repeat that to the people of his constituency. I think they will prevent any further mistakes.

That is the position with regard to the Imperial conference, and I say to the leader of what was once and may yet again be a great party in Canada, the Liberal party, that to take an attitude of trying to create a prejudice about the conference before it sits in Ottawa, is doing poor justice to himself and none at all to the great party which he leads and the great Dominion to which he belongs.

There are a few matters of a provincial nature to which I wish to make reference. Some time ago—and this is why I have participated at all in this debate—I gave a promise to the representatives of 13,000 coal miners in Nova Scotia that I would try to see that in the budget to be brought down something would be done for steel and coal in that province. My right hon. leader (Mr. Bennett) is not in his place to-night, but I want to convey this message to him now, that the people of Nova Scotia are intensely sincere and in earnest about this question. There is no need to elaborate it. The arguments in favour of a national fuel policy were presented to my right hon. leader and the members of his cabinet by a man whom I consider to be the ablest man who ever entered public life in Nova Scotia since the days of Sir John S. D. Thompson. I refer to the present Premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Gordon S. Harrington. Nothing can be added to that case. The arguments were presented and the cabinet have the matter before them. I wish to say frankly and fearlessly to my right hon. leader and his associates in the cabinet that if, when that budget is brought down, there is nothing in it for steel and coal, I certainly, on account of the promises I have given to the miners in Nova Scotia, will not be able to vote for the budget unless it makes some provision for the steel and coal industries in my province.

Another question of great importance to the province of Nova Scotia is one that has been much discussed by our people; it is one upon which there is practical unanimity, and it is that the people of Nova Scotia feel that they should have the Canadian Pacific railway extend into that province. They feel that they ought not be the only province in Canada to be denied the public service that can be rendered by this great Canadian institution. I make that statement not to deprecate in any way the splendid work being done by the Canadian National Railways in Nova Scotia and throughout Canada. We feel it would be of great economic benefit to Nova Scotia if the Canadian Pacific Railway could be induced to enter that territory. Nova Scotia needs the Canadian Pacific Railway; the port of Halifax needs its ships, and I suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) that he should take under advisement the question of calling a conference between Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific, all the members of parliament from Nova Scotia, Liberals and Conservatives alike—for this is not a political matter—and representatives of the city of Halifax, to see if satisfactory terms cannot be arranged for the entry of the Canadian Pacific into Nova Scotia.

One other question in which we in Nova Scotia are all interested is that referred to by the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), the matter of old age pensions. Certain specific and definite promises have been made in that regard, and the people of Nova Scotia, who were unable to participate under the old act, because it would cost them $2,000,000, and the drain on the treasury would have been too great, expect that this government will substantially increase the federal contribution for that purpose. I hope that will be done. I know how difficult the financial situation is, but I hope the people of Nova Scotia will be enabled to take advantage of an old age pension scheme under which the federal government will pay the major portion, because the finances of the province do not permit them to take advantage of the act as it stands at present on the statute books of Canada. Those for the moment are the matters in which we are particularly interested in the province from which I come.

Canada to-day is passing through a period of depression. We have been caught in the backwash of a world-wide depression. There may be a disposition on the part of certain sections of our population to be pessimistic, to think that the future of Canada lies behind us, to think that we cannot emerge from the difficulties that confront us. Let me say, sir, that this is no time for a spirit of pessimism, this is no time to peddle pessimism or to spread gloom. This is a time in our country's history for courage and vision and for constructive statesmanship such as is being offered by my right hon. leader. It is a time for cooperation between political parties, and if we do cooperate, if we have confidence in ourselves and in our country, confidence in our resources and in our illimitable possibilities, Canada will emerge triumphantly from this period of depression, and emerge sooner than any other country in the world. To those who are gloomy about the outlook may I quote, in closing, the words of the poet Lowell, applied in a different direction but I think equally applicable to Canada to-day, "Her mirror is turned forward to reflect the promise of the future, not the past."

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, in the short time at my proposal to enter into any attempt to analyze the statements that have been made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Macdougall). I congratulate him upon his eloquence and upon the extraordinary ability he has displayed for debate, even if it be debate of a political character. I would submit, however, that in his latter sentences he discussed the necessity of abandoning what he called pessimism. I agree with him. He offered as his substitute for realism that amazing outworn, useless trash and balderdash known as having faith that we will somehow or other in the future because of our inherent resources, and so forth, pull out of the present depression. We have heard that in every depression; but it has not prevented their recurrence. A thing which this house and all members even like my hon. friend should be interested in is rather the permanent solution of the situation such as has recurred now for at least the fifth or sixth time in the history of this country.

Before I get down to the material that I wish to discuss to-night, may I felicitate His Honour the Speaker upon his elevation to that position and convey my congratulations to all those—I include them all—who have taken part so earnestly and so sincerely in this debate.

I also wish to tender my heartiest welcome to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) on his return not only to health but to us in this house. I have sat with him for some time, and I have always found him to be a very fair but a very vigorous political debater.

Much has been said about agricultural conditions and the depression in agriculture. I intend to refer to this later, but first I feel it my duty to deal with another problem which is also of interest to my constituency. We have thousands of miners who are dependent on the coal industry. The conditions in those districts this year were positively deplorable. I could if I would, but I have no desire to do so, harrow the very heart of every man and woman in this house, with actual stories of the misery and suffering that these people have had to endure as a result of the conditions under which they are now placed because of unemployment. I could tell them of children fainting in school for lack of food, of men who dropped over on the streets because they had given everything they had to their families. I could tell them of men without a day's employment for months on end, and without a cent of income. I could also point out that these municipalities in many cases are so poverty-stricken as the result of long-continued depression in the industry that they are not even in a position to cooperate with the federal and provincial governments in providing the direct relief necessary. I have in my hand a letter from one of those districts, the Rosedale district, in which there was temporary employment this year. I am informed that this letter was written following a meeting of the Rosedale local of the United Mine Workers of America, in full session of 310 members. They respectfully wish to bring to my attention the fact that they have had only twenty six day's work in three months. Only twenty-six day's work in three months, and only a part of the population actually working. The letter continues:

> We are sadly in need of work of such a nature as will enable us to carry on. Partial relief together with the odd day's work in the mines would keep us going. This of course does not include the Star mine of about 150 miners, who are in a similar position.

I have other letters here much to the same effect, pointing out that even in the town of Drumheller where an attempt has been made to meet the situation, on March 17th last provision had been made for only $3.25 per week per family of five persons. In all humanity and decency, how can we expect a family of five to maintain themselves even in food alone on a sum of $3.25 per week? Fortunately that did not endure too long. I find by a subsequent letter that the married man on unemployment relief is now allowed $6.40 a week. No provision has been made for the single men; the municipality apparently is not in a position to make provision for them. In inviting the attention of the house to these facts, I would urge the government to make some real effort to solve the problem of the coal miners in my province. It is a problem that has been enormously hampered by the over-capitalization and overdevelopment of the mining industry. This ministry is not itself directly responsible for the problem. Previous ministries have helped to create it. I remember that my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) and others of this group visited the ex-Minister of the Interior

(Mr. Stewart) time and again and suggested that all leases should be cancelled that were in arrears, that no new leases should be given to others, that the entire industry should be limited to the then existing development. Our representations were apparently in vain. The transfer of the resources has now taken place, and cooperation between the two governments may be necessary. Legal aspects will be involved which may complicate the situation further. But irrespective of all that, I do urge upon the ministry with all the strength I have that they make some effort to solve the problem of many thousands of miners in my province who are without a future.

We heard much during the last election campaign of a fuel policy. I have waited patiently for some pronouncement from the ministry, either during the recess since September or during this session, with respect to that matter. None is forthcoming. I do not know what the government is going to offer to the coal industry in Canada, but I am almost despairing of any action because the right hon. the Prime Minister on his return from England gave an interview to the press, which I find reported in the Morning Albertan of January 23rd last, as follows:

> The working out of a national fuel policy is an easier matter on paper than in actual practice. His own view was that the fuel problem would probably be solved by chemists and scientists.

What a ghastly come-down from the brave words spoken at the time of the election! Then all that was necessary was to elect the right hon. gentleman and his party, whereupon at once some mysterious and magic fuel policy would emerge that would rehabilitate the industry, give it full working time and ensure its progressive growth. On top of that my hon. friend the Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon) quite intelligently but quite depressingly made a speech in Toronto on February 16 in which he intimated, by implication at least, that because of the tremendous cost of moving coal from the west down to the central provinces where it is required—$53,000,000 annually—the difficulty was apparent. I agree with the hon. minister, but that does not absolve the administration from the responsibility placed upon it in connection with the opening up of all these mines and permitting the over-capitalization and over-expansion of the industry without regard for markets. However that is a problem this government has inherited; I wish them well and will give them all the cooperation I can in its solution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one further remark in connection with the local situation. Hon. gentlemen opposite are sometimes inclined to discount some of the descriptions of conditions recounted by hon. members in this corner of the house. Particularly do I notice their interjections and expressions of disgust, at least of disapproval, of the utterances of my hon. friends in the Labour group. It is claimed that even I exaggerate at times.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not see how anybody could exaggerate existing conditions. The English language does not provide words which could exaggerate them. I would recommend that hon. members go down to the Union mission some evening when they have nothing else to do and see the men lying around on the floor with vermin crawling from one to the other. They could see the conditions under which those men live, and they are not all men who do not want work either. Many of them are very decent Canadians. Probably hon. members would prefer to go down to the veterans' shelter. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the veterans' shelter—think of it! The present administration assumed office on the strength of promises it had made to solve unemployment, and yet the situation is so bad in this city that the members of the Canadian Legion, finding that the returned men were walking the streets or lying on the floor in the Union mission, of their own volition created a little institution down on Wellington street that has been a life saver for many veterans. The institution subsists chiefly through voluntary contributions from friends among the legionaires. A newspaper item published recently, describing what this institution had done, stated that during the winter they had given 450 unemployed veterans shelter. They had given 35,000 meals and 10,000 beds. Think of it, four hundred and fifty returned men, veterans, of the city of Ottawa, subject to the charity of their fellow veterans under an administration that was going to cure or remove all these difficulties. Yes, Mr. Speaker, to such a state have conditions come. When the men who served overseas cannot find employment and are forced to walk the streets or take shelter in missions of welfare societies it is most unfortunate. I visited the shelter and I want to pay tribute to the splendid work being done by the committee in charge.

I have no hesitation in mentioning the names of those men. They are Lieutenant Colonel Girouard, Captain Wayling and P. R. Cronsbery. These men not only have tendered their services unselfishly and generously but from time to time in order to keep the work going have undertaken to make collections from among their friends. Also they have secured some assistance from the city council. The men aided in that institution are not floaters or drifters or non-workers; they are decent self-respecting Canadians who served their country overseas. Is it not a disgrace that in a country where we have an abundance of everything, our returned soldiers should be forced to walk the streets or be subjected to the charity of their fellow soldiers? Is it not enough to make one believe that there might be some truth in the lines scratched on the rock at Gibraltar about one hundred years ago by a sentry on duty—words that may still be found there:

> God and the soldier all men adore
> When danger threatens in time of war;
> But when war is over and peace is plighted
> God is forgotten and the old soldier slighted.

We have a situation in industry and throughout the nation to-day that is the nemesis of a competitive, commercial, capitalistic system based on profits and interest rather than on human needs and requirements.

My hon. friend who has just taken his seat may declaim as he will against Russia. With much that he has said I agree. I come to him however and ask a question: Show us how the capitalistic system has justified his optimism. Mr. Speaker, I say to you that as surely as I am standing in my place to-night this system under which we have suffered so long is undergoing a drastic and rapid change. The change may be imperceptible to many of you; but it is changing, it must change. There is no use for the lotus eaters either opposite me or to my right to console themselves with the pleasant drug of fatuous optimism and say that things will right themselves in time. Things will right themselves under the existing intelligence and education of our people only when a greater measure of justice is done to them than has been done in the past. If you wish, I could give corroborative evidence of the condition of affairs. Let us take for example the president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. The president of that great capitalistic concern, making a speech not long ago in the city of Philadelphia, had the temerity to say in an open meeting that he would steal before he would starve. When a man in that position would make such a statement what can we expect of the unfortunate who have not anything to keep themselves or their families, who go home to their crying children and weeping, depressed underfed wives? My hon. friend who has just taken his seat may not like to hear these things, but they are inevitable. The government must take the necessary steps to assist in the modification of the system, in so far as we can as a nation, to prevent any crack and break which must come. I would presume that a Presbyterian minister would be a respectable witness, would he not? A Presbyterian minister, Rev. Jesse H. Baird, has said:

> Within a month a discouraged man stood in my study and wept out those words, applying them to himself. "I am one of the men the world doesn't need. It has decided that a lot of us must either beg, steal or starve."
> The criticism hurled by the radicals is just, that our civilization is organized for the protection of property rather than for the protection of life.
>
> If a group of hungry people should attack property in our city and try to appropriate it for their needs you and I would have policemen there to kill them if necessary rather than allow them to take the property.
>
> But if one of these cold mornings some family should be set out on the sidewalk without shelter, food or raiment, because they cannot get work in order to get money to pay their rent, there would be no officer of the law present, as your representative or mine, to stop the process in the interest of human life.
> In fact, it would be our officer of the law who would be throwing the people out on the sidewalk, for the protection of the property rights of the landlord.

Yes, kick them out on the street. There is as keen an indictment as can be made of the system under which we operate. The day is past when interest, dividends and poverty should take priority over human rights. Every man or woman in this country is entitled to a living and entitled to an opportunity to work at a wage which will supply not only him or her with the necessities of life but will give a measure of that culture to which he or she might aspire.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I approach the biggest problem in Canada at the moment, the problem of our wheat. Probably my remarks should embrace all forms of agriculture, because we are all more or less affected in some degree. Here we have this great industry, the first source of Canada's wealth, the first occupation of our people, 33 per cent of all the population of Canada directly employed or directly sustained by it, producing 51 per cent of our exports in normal periods and 38 per cent of the annual production of the country. To what a pass has it come! You have heard the speech of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) this afternoon, you have heard other speeches from members in this corner of the house, also from members to my right, you have heard even from hon. members opposite, western Conservatives, who have come down here and painted a dismal and gloomy, but truthful picture of western conditions, and no one has overpainted the actual conditions. Yet we find that Mr. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, admits "it is axiomatic that Canada cannot achieve prosperity until the western situation is relieved." True. We turn to a memorandum presented to the Minister of Agriculture by the organized farmers of Ontario, in which they say:

Agriculture in Ontario may be said from the economic standpoint to be in a deplorable state.

So we are not alone in our misery in the west.

Of course some of our urban friends are not yet persuaded that this is true. The farmer to them is surrounded on every side with the necessities of life; they do not see him standing in the breadline with the unemployed and penniless. Yet, if immediate settlement were demanded for all loans, mortgages and current liabilities, all that keeps him from the breadline would vanish.

That is the opinion of the officially organized farmers of Ontario. I could give other quotations indicating the importance of this industry to the country, but I need not go further than cite a speech made in this house by the right hon. leader of the government himself. On September 16, at page 243 of Hansard, hon. members will find that he said:

It is within the mind of every hon. member of this house that the greatest industry in this country is the farming industry and that the greatest part of that industry is the growing and marketing of grain which has to do with the annual production of a vast amount of our national wealth. The reason we are so dependent upon the grain industry for our purchasing power is largely because it is the quickest way by which new wealth can be created year after year, and because of that this country in days gone by—as I trust will be the case for many years in the future—has looked to that as the great basis of our purchasing power. The difficulties which have been experienced during the past year or two by the producers of grain are known to every member of this house.

Those difficulties have not lessened any since September last.

Last year I did think, and I have not changed my opinion since, that some action might have been taken at the critical moment last fall—

Referring to the fall of 1919.

—by the national government to have been of some assistance to the grain trade and the grain producers of this country.

The right hon. gentleman did not elucidate his meaning further, and to this day I am at a loss to know what he meant. He continues:

Those who had to administer the grain act and who were charged with the responsibility for promoting the trade and commerce of the country thought otherwise and so no action was taken, with what I believe to be more or less unfortunate consequences.

The election took place, promises were freely given and freely accepted, and in September the house sat. Let me quote what the leader of the government said in this house in September last. He knew the conditions, they had been pointed out by members in this corner of the house in realistic language; he knew of the poverty-stricken and almost destitute situation of the average farmer in western Canada. What was his response to the needs of the situation?

But, I may add, that the particular and urgent problem of the marketing of Canadian wheat is receiving the further attention of the ministry, which is giving consideration to the most effective means of meeting the difficulties which now confront the basic wheat industry.

Now, what has been the result? The administration was giving consideration to it. We have not heard one word of result; we do not know what they have done; there is no appearance of their having done anything I continue the quotation; the right hon gentleman then says:

At this moment I will not detail the steps that have been taken—

And they have not been detailed at all yet, Mr. Speaker.

—but I am hopeful that at least they will be of some benefit to our grain producers.

Well, may I tell the right hon. gentleman that we have not felt the benefit?

A review of the causes underlying the present unsatisfactory situation is being carried out—

A review is being carried out.

—and it will be the purpose of the government to take whatever action it properly may take to ensure the prosperity of that industry upon which the welfare of the country is dependent to such a large extent.

Now, what has been done I ask any hon. member of the ministry what has been done? We have not a word from them either in public or private. The fact is that they find themselves impotent; they cannot do anything apparently, or at least they are unwilling to. What, on the other hand, is the position of almost every other civilized grain-growing country in the world? There is hardly one of them that has not taken some direct means to relieve the condition of its grain growers and wheat trade. Let me just run over a few in passing. Germany directs the grain marketing activities of that country through government regulation. France regulates grain imports and exports. Switzerland exercises a vitual government grain monopoly. In Norway the grain trade has been in the hands of a government monopoly since 1929; and in that country, by the way, a committee of seven members control the entire import and export of grain, and their annual budget provides for $32,000,000 a year. Imagine it, Mr. Speaker, in a small country where the business in grain is as nothing to the business we do, nor is it as vital to their economic life as it is to ours. Yet they plan and establish a government monopoly and create a fund of $32,000,000 a year to look after the necessities of their grain farmers. In Poland the government distributes bounties on export grain, paying the bounties through a monopoly known as the Grain Exporters Company. In Latvia the government purchases all wheat and rye at prices well above the market price, accepts the loss, and sells the grain to the millers and dealers and consumers of the country. In Esthonia there has been a government grain monopoly since July 19, 1930. In Lithuania the same. In Austria a government monopoly has been under consideration, and quite probably it has been put into effect by this time. In South Africa legislation has been introduced for a compulsory wheat pool as soon as 75 per cent of the growers signify their desire for it. In Hungary, Yugoslavia, Roumania and Bulgaria they are likely to have national and international control. In Bulgaria the most interesting experiment of all has been carried out, and a similar plan is receiving a great deal of consideration in western Canada at the present time. Following a wheat crisis in Bulgaria late in 1930, caused by low prices and the impossibility of selling to advantage on world markets, the Bulgarian government instituted a scheme for buying grain at prices somewhat higher than world levels and paying for it with special currency, which was receivable for taxes on agricultural land. This scheme amounts almost to a virtual remission of taxes to the farmers producing grain in that country. The other day the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) pointed out very clearly to the house the distinct handicap under which agriculture suffered as a result of tariff protection, and he submitted that if, as appeared to be the case, both political parties in this house likely to control government for some time were inseparably wedded to the principle of protection as a policy, then the time had come for the present administration, unequivocally and determinedly tied to that policy, to provide some compensation to agriculture for the losses entailed as a result of the benefits and special privileges given to our manufacturing industries. No better method could be adopted than the Bulgarian method, which has also been applied in modified form by Hungary. And so we pass on from Hungary to Roumania and Jugoslavia, and then into Russia itself where you have complete control. Canada is the only major wheat-producing country that I know of, with the exception of the Argentine, where a measure of government control and modification in the interests of agriculture has not taken place. Why, even in the United States of America the much condemned federal farm marketing board which now has been abolished did succeed in holding up the price of wheat to the growers last year by at least fifteen or twenty cents per bushel. That was of enormous benefit to the farmers; it helped them carry through an almost desperate and hopeless condition, but in spite of its pledges and promises, in spite of the knowledge on the part of the Prime Minister of conditions in western Canada, coming himself from the city of Calgary in the province of Alberta, this government have been utterly inept in this matter. They have done nothing. What are they going to do? They have not said; they are leaving us to drift at the mercy of a merciless banking system and a demoralized market.

Now we come to the next point: What do I suggest in regard to this? Quite recently Mr. Speaker, we had news despatches to the effect that Hon. Howard Ferguson had moved the adjournment to London of the international wheat conference, then being conducted in Rome, and that he had moved that the London meeting should consist solely of exporting countries. I agree with those who have been criticizing the separation of the exporting from the importing wheat nations; I submit that such action in itself, whilst it may have been inevitable and impossible of avoidance, does indicate or should indicate to every thoughtful person the immense difficulties involved in this question. I think it does; I think everyone who studied the meeting at Geneva or the subsequent meeting at Rome is convinced of the immense problem of welding into a united whole the general opinions of the importing and exporting wheat growing countries. Yet every authority on the subject realizes now that there must be a measure of international control if the future market for wheat is to be sustained on a stable basis. The point is this: Mr. Ferguson adjourns that meeting to London, and what does he say? This statement is corroborated by the right hon. Prime Minister, in answer to a question in this house. This is what he says:

That it is desirable that delegates of countries exporting wheat, namely: Argentine Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Hungary, India, Poland, the Union of Soviet Republics—

By the way, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat should send a copy of his speech to Mr. Ferguson.

—Roumania and Jugoslavia should meet together as soon as possible to organize—

To organize what?

—to organize on an international basis the exportation of the crop year of 1931-32.

That is well and good, but how can this government, through the right hon. Prime Minister or through the London high commissioner, Mr. Ferguson, adjourn a meeting of this kind for the purpose of narrowing the discussion down to the international organization of the export of the wheat crop of 1931-1932 without committing themselves to a national control of the wheat crop of this country? How can you effect international control until you have national control? I agree with the idea; I think it is essential, and I urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce and anybody else interested on the other side of the house to do everything they can to induce the Prime Minister to establish forthwith a Canada wheat board to take control of a crop which is almost worthless to the farmer at the present time. It is worse than worthless to him; most of the crop, as other hon. members have said, was harvested this year at a loss to every farmer on every bushel and every acre. Now we have the pitiful picture of these poor chaps out there who have nothing else to which they can turn their hands, who have machinery rusting and land lying fallow, who have no other hope whatever than to take a chance on another seeding. They are going ahead, miserably and despairingly taking a chance, looking vainly to this administration for some guidance or some ray of hope.

I ask what hope there is. Where is the future for the market next fall? Is any extension of the market probable? Is there any possibility that the market price of wheat will rise? There is not a possibility on the horizon at the present time. I ask any hon. member who may follow me in this debate to tell me of one economic fact that offers any encouragement to farming or any other industry. Take any authority you will, from the Chase National City Bank of New York to the Bank of Nova Scotia. Take the Bank of Montreal; take the Investor's Review of London, England. Every one of them points out time and again that the whole future, whether for industry or for agriculture, is hopeless until something is done which they themselves admit will not be done. That is, they say it is hopeless unless we have international control of the monetary system.

There is much one could say in connection with these matters, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to impress upon the ministry that at the present time the men in the west are going ahead and seeding what they can. They have very little money,—practically nothing in cash. Any they may have is something they have retained instead of paying their debts. If they were wise they anticipated the situation and did not meet all their liabilities last fall. They have not paid their taxes; the indebtedness to municipalities and individuals is simply gigantic. There is outstanding $43,000,000 or more in farmer debts to the rural stores in the province of Alberta alone, and the only thing we are offered now, as the hon. member for Acadia said, is advice. We have had lots of advice from different people. We have had advice from Mr. Beatty with regard to live stock. Yes, he was going to float a marvellous revolving fund of $5,000,000 to put western Canada into the live stock business on a decent basis. As a long distance plan that may have some merit, but as an immediate relief it is hopeless. In addition, it is interesting to note that, so far as my information goes, the whole scheme has collapsed through lack of financial support. Private financial interests are too wise; they know the condition of agriculture just as the banks know it, and they are not prepared to lend money with the present productive value of the average farm in western Canada. You cannot get them to put up the money. Why has not that $5,000,000 fund, about which the right hon. Prime Minister waxed eloquent in his speech at Regina, developed? We cannot even get cattle from the Department of Agriculture under the agreement made last September; apparently there was not enough of the proper type. Whatever the reason, there is the situation.

Then we have been offered another solution for the western farmer; we have been told to find a market in China. The total imports into Canada from China in the year 1928 amounted to $2,572,000, and our total exports amounted to $5,040,000. The greatest single item of importation into Canada from China, one of the products which we must accept in exchange for wheat, was nuts, which amounted to $900,000. That may account for a lot of the advice we are getting.

Then we are advised to go into diversified farming. The farmers of Ontario have pointed out that this would seriously affect the eastern markets. The only single arm of agriculture in my province that paid last fall was hog production. What was the ultimate effect? Before any advice had come from the abattoir controllers and the private packers of this country, the farmers themselves had plunged into hog production to such an extent that the provincial minister of agriculture rose in his place in the legislature and, almost with tears in his eyes and in a trembling voice, expressed the fear that the coming spring market would show a surplus of over 300 per cent. Where are the hogs to be marketed? They will be marketed down in Ontario, of course, smashing the market for the producers here, May I ask if diversified farming has made the farmers of the province of Ontario well-to-do? Read their own manifesto to the government, and discover the truth.

We cannot minimize the situation. Canada's wheat income declined by nearly $350,000,000 in two years. In 1928 we had a crop of 550,000,000 bushels, in round figures, for which we received good, fair prices. The next year we had a crop of only 309,000,000 bushels, with falling prices. Then in 1930 the crop amounted to some 340,000,000 or 350,000,000 bushels, with prices much lower than prevailed in 1928. The decline, both in volume and in price, meant a loss in two years of $350,000,000 in national income. You cannot take that amount out of the people of this country and not materially affect the welfare of Canada. Take all field crops alone; the field crops in Canada this year declined in value, as compared with last year, by some $318,000,000. Yet we find on the other hand the price of those things which we have to buy stabilized or pegged by artificial methods of special privilege at a figure but slightly below that of their highest peak. It is nothing else but scandalous, a coldblooded method of defrauding and swindling the farmer. We have the hypocritical advice: cut your costs of production, yet the price of everything we have to buy has been held up to the limit.

I wish I had the time to enter into a discussion on the international aspect of this matter. I hope the government will establish a federal wheat board, as it offers the only hope for those who are now sowing their crops. It is the only thing which would justify Mr. Ferguson's adjournment of the international wheat conference, and it is the only thing which will enable Canada to undertake in an organized manner the carrying of the western producers over this period of depression until the better times of which we hear so much have arrived.

It is claimed internationally that this depression should be laid at the doors of a wrong monetary system. Mr. Neill of the Royal bank says so; Sir Herbert Holt admits that there is something wrong in that direction. The great bankers are to-day realizing the crime of the uncontrolled, unregulated and stupid financial system to which the world is now subjected. These men say that this condition of affairs will continue if we do not take international action. Then along comes a gentleman who says that the first thing we have to do is to cancel the war debts. Mr. Beatty said that in Toronto and Sir Herbert Holt echoed it; Mr. Wiggins and Mr. Warburg in the United States made a similar announcement. I shall never forget that occasion back in 1923 when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) rose in his place and moved, as a gesture of the action that should be taken by the nations of the world towards economic stability, the cancellation of Germany's war reparations to Canada. I had the honour of supporting him at that time, and the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) did likewise. But what was the attitude of the house? The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the then Minister of Labour, Mr. Murdock, assailed the proposal in language as vituperative, abusive and unjustifiable as any I have ever heard. They condemned the proposal utterly and abjectly. But what happens eight years afterwards? Sir Herbert Holt recommends it, Mr. Beatty recommends it, and other financiers and international economists are recommending it. It will have to come. You are eight years behind, as are most administrations. One of the primary requisites of the solution of the present situation is the cancellation of international debts and the calling of an international meeting to deal with this question of international currency. It has been proposed that there should be a distribution of gold equitably throughout the countries of the world, a reestablishment of currency on a new basis. Well, if this comes to pass let us have plenty of it. Even Mr. Neill admits the need for an effective supply, because he says:

> It would seem that if the effective supply of money is kept in the right relation to production of commodities the phenomenon of a declining average price level will not occur.

He is quite right. I regret that time will not permit my continuing this discussion, but other opportunities will present themselves.

On motion of Mr. Simpson (West Algoma) the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Guthrie the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

Tuesday, April 21, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 32, respecting the Montreal Central Terminal Company.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 33, to amend the Companies Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. HACKETT: By an amendment passed last year, auditors of companies were precluded from being or becoming directors of those companies. This amendment would make an exception to that law in the case of small private companies to the shares of which the public is not invited to subscribe.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 34, to amend the criminal code (Trade marks).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GEARY: The amendments to the criminal code proposed by this bill are designed to cover what are apparently omissions in the code and to implement generally the purpose for which those provisions were originally placed in the code. The matter is one that can be explained more fully in committee, but that is the general purpose of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

PROTEST OF TORONTO BOARD OF CONTROL AGAINST ALIENATION OF POWER RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SAMUEL FACTOR (Toronto West Centre): May I be permitted to direct a question to the Prime Minister on a matter of public interest? Following Your Honour's injunction of yesterday I shall be as brief as possible. The question is based on a letter which I have received from the Board of Control of the city of Toronto and which reads:

> I have been directed by the board of control to bring to your official notice as the elective representative from this city that, whereas the city of Toronto has made a very considerable investment in respect to harbour and hydro developments, therefore the said city of Toronto does vigorously protest against the passing of any legislation by the government of the Dominion of Canada which would prejudicially affect the ultimate deepening and use of the St. Lawrence river as an ocean-going waterway.
> This city of Toronto most strenuously objects to the further disposal of any hydro power rights to private corporations, being of the opinion that the great power water courses are the natural heritage of the citizens of Canada and should be preserved for all time to come for the benefit of the people at large.
> The board would therefore request that you be good enough to advise them as to what progress has been made in reference to the plan for the deepening of the St. Lawrence river waterway and to notify them immediately of any proposed legislation either in this regard or in reference to any application of private corporations for the further diversion of power water rights.

Mr. SPEAKER: In view of what was said at yesterday's sitting, I think the hon. member must realize that the question he is now undertaking to ask is one that should appear on the order paper. The matter is not urgent. It is a matter to be dealt with by the house in the future, by legislation, if at all, and it is not at the present moment being considered. I would ask the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. FACTOR: May I be excused as a new member? I have not put the question yet. May I put it?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is laying the foundation for a question which, on the face of it, is one which should go on the order paper.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Is the hon. member not allowed to put a direct question without any foundation?

Mr. SPEAKER: That depends entirely upon the nature of the question.

Mr. FACTOR: The question is: Has the government received any application from private corporations for further diversion of water-power rights in the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion that is a question which should be placed on the order paper.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the press despatch this morning stating that the Imperial economic conference will be held in Ottawa next August, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to indicate before prorogation what their trade proposals will be?

Mr. SPEAKER: It seems to me that is certainly a matter of governmental policy to be disclosed by the action of the government.

Mr. DONNELLY: I am simply asking whether the Prime Minister will indicate before prorogation what their trade proposals will be.

Mr. SPEAKER: That also is a matter of policy, whether the Prime Minister chooses to indicate or not.

SALE OF GASOLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I have in my hand two letters, parts of which I shall read in order that the question may be made clear. The first letter is dated Sedley, Saskatchewan, April 6, 1931, and reads:

> We had an interesting meeting Saturday night at Riceton comprising farmers over a large area (most of Lajord municipality), and formed an association chiefly to purchase gasoline.
> This is a big question. There is now apparently seven cents spread between wholesale and retail in this district and we can probably get back about five cents in patronage dividends.

That is the first letter. That is to say, the farmers at this meeting formed a cooperative association.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member directing a question to the government or to a member of the government?

Mr. YOUNG: I am directing it to the Prime Minister.

[Mr Paul Mercier.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Well, proceed to do so. The time of the house at this stage must not be taken up with reading long letters or extracts. If the hon. member wishes to direct a question to the government on a matter of public importance or urgency, well and good. He knows the rules as well as any other hon. member.

Mr. YOUNG: I will accept your ruling Mr. Speaker. The question is this: I have here evidence that the Imperial Oil Company at Regina—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: Ask the question.

Mr. YOUNG:—is refusing to sell gasoline to cooperative associations organized to buy gasoline for their own use. In view of the fact Canadian refiners of gasoline are thus refusing, I ask the Prime Minister: Will he remove the duty from gasoline and allow the farmers to bring it in from the United States?

An hon. MEMBER: Who says that is a fact?

Mr. BENNETT: Put the question on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Prime Minister is under no obligation to answer the question.

Mr. YOUNG: The Prime Minister may not be compelled to answer the question, but—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may put his question on the order paper; the Prime Minister has not answered it.

Mr. YOUNG: The Prime Minister can if he likes refuse to answer, but the people of the country will form their own conclusions as to why.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST LOCAL LABOUR ON VANGUARD—MEYRONNE BRANCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): I wish to ask the question of the Acting Minister of Labour. The Canadian Pacific railway are building a branch line from Vanguard to Meyronne, Saskatchewan, in my constituency, and they are receiving some assistance from the $20,000,000 grant from this government. I understand that local men in that district are being discriminated against and that outside men are being brought in, even Americans, who are being hired to work on this railway at from fifty cents to one dollar per day. I would ask the Minister of Labour to have this matter investigated and to see that heads of families who are at present obtaining direct relief from the municipalities receive first consideration, and that the fair wage be paid.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): A number of instances have arisen where complaints have been made with respect to the rate of wages paid on works in respect to which the federal government is contributing under the unemployment relief scheme. In all cases the Department of Labour promptly sends out an investigator, and if it is found that the proper rate of wages is not being paid, advances by the federal government are withheld until the matter is adjusted. That will be done in this case if it is found that such a situation as the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) indicates is in fact in evidence. Whenever such a situation is brought to the attention of the department from a dependable source, investigation is promptly made.

Mr. DONNELLY: Will the minister assure the house that he will have this matter investigated?

RAILWAY COMMISSION VACANCY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Would the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) be good enough to intimate when the government intends to fill the vacancy on the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The matter is under consideration; the appointment will be made in due time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Monday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Max D. Cormier for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session, the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie King, and the proposed subamendment of Mr. Gardiner.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Since this debate began nearly a month ago, there have been a great many developments both inside this house and in the country at large. I should like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to make a few remarks with regard to the subamendment which has been proposed from this corner of the house. The particular form which the subamendment has taken represents somewhat of a compromise between the various groups in this corner of the house. We have found that in a great many ways the farmer and labour groups can work in close cooperation, but I must say that in some respects labour would state its case just a little bit differently from the case stated by the farmers—possibly because the needs of the agricultural workers are somewhat different from those of the industrial workers. Had we of the labour group been proposing our own amendment, impossible under the circumstances, we would like to have expressed ourselves somewhat in these terms:

> We are of the opinion that there exists in Canada an economic condition that constitutes a national emergency which can be met only by extraordinary measures.
> We regret that there is no indication in the speech from the throne of any provision which will adequately meet the pressing needs of hundreds of thousands of industrial workers and agricultural producers.
> We believe that present conditions demand the mobilization of our natural resources, technical equipment and financial machinery, to provide a decent livelihood for the people of the Dominion. In our opinion this involves the abandonment of the present wasteful and inefficient competitive system and the adoption of cooperative principles both in our domestic and international relations.

We agree in the forepart of our resolution that in Canada to-day we do face a national emergency. We in the labour group would like to go so far as to say that under those conditions we should mobilize the entire resources of this country. When the war was on we found it necessary to call upon various industries to contribute. Those in authority introduced conscription. It was felt that the emergency was so great that the entire resources of the country should be mobilized. Finances were forthcoming for the very great effort which the nations of the world had to put forward at that time. Whilst we would not say that the emergency at the present time is so acute as that which prevailed in 1914, we do say that the emergency is great enough to call for the mobilization of all the resources of this country.

I should like to remind the house that the bankers owe their position very largely to special privileges granted by this house. I would like to remind the house that the railway people owe their franchises to special privileges granted by the Dominion of Canada, and so on right along the line, and there seems to be no reason why, when hundreds of thousands of people are on the verge of starvation, the financial and industrial resources of this country should not be used to the limit in trying to provide for these special needs.

Of course, in the statement which I have just read, we go a little bit further and suggest that the present competitive system is hopelessly bankrupt. We suggest that the only real solution is by the adoption of co-operative methods, rather than by the maintenance of the present competitive system. I am quite aware that that doctrine would not be acceptable to the majority of the members of this house, but I should like to put it forward as the ultimate objective of this little group and of the people we in this corner of the house represent.

I would claim, Mr. Speaker, that the sub-amendment which has been evolved by the different groups in this corner of the house is preeminently a practical and sensible proposal. We first of all call attention to the fact that there is a national emergency that calls for extraordinary measures. I think that after the speeches which have been made here during the last few weeks no one can very well deny that we do face a national emergency. That is not, I would say, the fault of the existing government. I believe that the conditions which we face are world-wide in character, and that would suggest some world-wide causes. I would not lay the whole blame upon the present government. I would not expect the present government, at least, if they are wise, to assume the responsibility of undertaking to correct the great social evils which face us at the present time. I think that the government would be well advised to afford an opportunity to this house and to all parties in it to cooperate in trying to find a solution. I am not here suggesting merely a means of letting the government out of a tight corner. I think that the Conservative party made promises which they ought to try to implement, but which I do not believe it is possible for them to implement. In view, however, of the difficulties of the situation I think that we on this side of the house, whether of the official opposition or sitting as independent members—we ought to be sitting on cross-benches rather than strictly in opposition—should be willing in the face of this emergency to do what we can at the present time to help in solving the problem. I do not think that the problems which face the farmers and the industrial workers of the cities to-day should be made a football for the party game that is played in this house. It seems to me that for a time at least we should rise above that.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

I would join with the other hon. members in this corner of the house in urging that at this session of parliament one of the best things for us to do would be to appoint a strong committee in which there would be representatives, as on all committees, from the different parties of the house. It should be a committee on which the best men in the house would be placed, and such a committee should seriously consider the whole economic situation. This is not a matter for the next few weeks or the next few months; we should consider the entire economic problem in Canada which forms part of a world condition. Unless we allow this situation to drift from bad to worse, and if we are to use our brains at all, it seems to me that something should be done. The public is looking to parliament to study this situation and to give a lead as to what policy might best be adopted. Those of us who have sat in the house for any length of time know perfectly well the dangers of committees; matters under consideration are apt to be shelved. The fact that a matter has been referred to a committee could be taken by the government as an excuse to defer further consideration. To obviate anything of that kind we have urged two very practical and immediate steps. The first is:

> That the failure or inability of our banks to provide the credit which is essential to our farmers in respect to their spring operations, render it imperative that consideration be given to some system of federal assistance, whether directly, by way of bank guarantee, or otherwise.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that it is not for those of us who are outside the government in any way to dictate the particular form that this assistance should take. We are here to point out the needs of the people, and some of us to point out particularly the needs of the people in the west. Even after this long debate I think perhaps hon. members from eastern Canada do not realize the special difficulties which confront the western farmer. Those of us who come from the east know more about eastern agricultural conditions. Years ago if a man had no fuel on the back lot of his own farm he could go to his neighbour and cut down fuel to supply him for the winter. He could always call upon some of the other people around him to give him some assistance. In the west however, conditions are absolutely different. The great transcontinental systems were pushed through ahead of settlement, and when agricultural operations were begun up-to-date machinery was used. Life in the west has been built up on the basis of the use of modern agricultural machinery capable of producing large quantities of grain for export trade. Now that export trade has been cut off we find ourselves at a loss to know what to do next. Take for example the question of gasoline which already has been raised several times in the house. I know there are some people in the east who say that if the farmers cannot buy gasoline for the machinery required to put in their crop they should use horses. That may sound very well in theory but in many parts of western Canada the farmers dispensed with their horses several years ago. They believed that motor machinery was the best, the most economical and the most efficient and with those reasons in mind they let their horses go and invested in tractors, combines and other up-to-date machinery. They require gasoline to operate that machinery. Now they face the situation where they cannot go to the bank and get $40 or $50 in order to buy gasoline. What are they to do? They cannot go back to the use of horses in a short time, and they cannot get them from their neighbours. Further it would take some years to breed the horses necessary to carry on their work. Those farmers find themselves absolutely handicapped and I am assured by correspondents, especially by those in the province of Saskatchewan, that a great many farmers will not be able in the next week or two to sow their crop unless they receive outside assistance. If for their own reasons the banks refuse to give help it sems to me we are within our rights when we put forward the eminently reasonable proposition that the government should step in at this stage and help the farmers in their immediate and present difficulties.

There is a second request or suggestion to which I shall refer.

That the serious situation which still prevails in respect of unemployment demands that consideration be given to some immediate action looking toward increased employment and a further measure of direct relief where such is found necessary.

A few days ago the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) attempted to introduce a discussion of the riots which had taken place in Winnipeg and elsewhere, but he was prevented from doing so. The ground was taken that the subject he placed before the house did not represent a matter of urgent public importance. I think the question might naturally arise: What will be a matter of urgent public importance? If a riot in the city of Winnipeg in which according to the papers some 6,000 unemployed men were engaged and where a number of people had to be taken to the hospital on account of injuries received, does not represent a matter of sufficient public importance, how big a riot must be staged so that it may be termed a matter of public importance and we may be given an opportunity to discuss it. I think that is a question which might very well be asked. In fact, it is already being asked. I admit, Mr. Speaker, that those who took charge of these demonstrations the other day belonged to the communist party. In order that the house may be very clear and that I may be permitted more freely to discuss this matter let me reiterate that I do not belong to the communist party. It has directed its energies more largely against the Labour group than against the other political parties in this house. The official organ of the communist party of Canada, The Worker, which is to be found in the reading room, where I occasionally read it, on March 21, 1931, published the following:

The treacherous labour parties of Woodsworth, Heaps and Company.

And again:

In Winnipeg, as everywhere, the I.L.P. fakers are the righthand men of the fascist police administration.

On March 7, this same official organ of the communist party published this statement:

The Abramoviches, the MacDonalds, the Blums and the Crespiens of Europe have their counterparts in Canada in the persons of the Woodsworths, the Heapses, the Moores and the Moshers.

Referring to a speech which I had given before a service club in Brantford the paper contains the following item:

The labour-hating bourgeoisie of the Kiwanis club had the pleasure of listening to a social fascist address them at one of their blowouts.

Referring to myself I find the following:

This slimy pacifist bleated out a lot of vague (but dangerous) banalities of a general character but when he got down to cases he soon showed his hand. . . . He (Woodsworth) is either a fool or a liar . . . . the faker.

Mr. GEARY: That is nasty of them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is the attitude of the communist party towards myself and the group with which I am associated. After the pilgrimage the other day of the group of unemployed led by communists I find this:

The demonstrations of February 25 and April 15 were but dress rehearsals of the demonstrations yet to come. The demonstration of May 1, international labour day will be a continuation of them and will surpass them all.

That article is contained in The Worker of April 18. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is too serious a matter simply to be off by the suggestion which has been made in this house that any man who introduces a question of this kind is promoting riots. I would urge that if the situation is so serious that statements may be made in newspapers to the effect that such demonstrations are going to take place in the future it is high time that this parliament discussed the matter. I would point out further that comparatively speaking there are but few communists in this country. But if there is dissatisfaction and if there is want, there is bound to arise a group who will champion the cause of the needy and perhaps play upon the emotions of those who are suffering so much. Passing from Winnipeg to the east—I find in the Montreal Herald this paragraph with regard to the riots that took place last Wednesday in Montreal:

> The cops, particularly the plainclothes men, were none too gentle. It was no uncommon sight yesterday afternoon to see some mild-eyed and sheep-like appearing pedestrian propelled half way across the road by the toe of a constable's boot. Many times the whack of fist on face resounded through the streets.

Well, I call that brutal treatment, whether by constituted authority or not, and I would suggest that the way to solve unemployment is not by increasing our police force and encouraging their brutality, but rather by attempting to get at the underlying economic causes.

Let me say that the position even of the communistic group so far has been quite correct. The communists headed the unemployed men in their march to the city halls and there pleaded their case. Further than that they went to the provincial governments—at least they did in my own city of Winnipeg on Wednesday last—begging that something be done for the unemployed. The unemployed have been put off by vague promises ever since last summer. When the elections were being held last July in Winnipeg the municipal authorities were feeding nearly 3,000 people. We were told that the summer would solve the situation. Summer came but there was no marked improvement and all these people have been on the unemployed list day after day, week after week, month after month. During the winter they were told that as soon as spring opened up all the unemployed would be able to find work. It is only a few days ago since I received a letter containing four or five closely written sheets of names of the Swedish unemployed of my home city, asking me if I could not do something to get them jobs on the new Hudson Bay railway or up at Churchill. These Swedish people we all know are among our finest immigrants. They were brought out here under representations that they were to get jobs. They have done good work in the past. Hundreds of them—I am not exaggerating—in my home city alone during the winter were fed at first by their own mission churches, and later by the municipal authorities; now with another summer opening up they do not know what to do. Let me say again that recently at one of the meetings of this Swedish group a communist tried to interfere and break up the proceedings, but he was thrown out. That, however, does not solve the problem of these hundreds of Swedish unemployed, who are among the very best of our citizens. What are we going to do about the matter? We have this situation right across the country.

Yesterday the member for West York (Mr. Lawson) in the course of his speech—a speech for which I have to compliment him; it was a very fine effort indeed, and I think every one was impressed with the wonderful parliamentary ability shown by the hon. gentleman—made one or two statements to which I must take exception. He suggested that we in this corner represented a particular group of people, while he represented all the citizens of his constituency. Now, I do not like that attitude at all so far as I myself am concerned. I take it that since I was elected by a very considerable majority I can very well claim to represent all the citizens of my constituency just as much as he claims to represent every one in West York. At the last election I was not opposed either by the Liberals or the Conservatives, so the two old parties must take their responsibility for having allowed me to come back again. But we of the Labour group do represent a particular group which up to recent years has not had a chance to voice its needs on the floor of this house. And I would urge it is extremely difficult for any one but a lawyer to represent everybody in his constituency. For instance, I have the grain exchange in my constituency, but I do not think any of my farmer friends throughout the west will accuse me of representing the grain exchange and at the same time pleading for the farmers of the prairies. I have also a large number of bankers in my constituency, at least the offices of several of the banks are there, but I do not think the bankers themselves would say that I represent them at the same time as I am representing the needs of the common people of this country. I have nothing against the bankers individually, they are a decent enough lot of men, but I do say I am not representing the policies of the banks when I come here and plead for the needs of the common people of the west. So I would suggest that this statement of the member for West York is altogether a misleading way of stating the position. I contend that we stand here, not representing this, that and the other interest in our constituency; we represent a certain group that hitherto has been almost without a champion. We come out flatfooted on that point. Again, the member for West York suggests that we "purport" to represent labour, Well, when labour has returned some of us to this house for the past ten years I do not think that that word is in very good taste. Surely we represent labour because the labour men have as much right to be a party as have the farmers or the Liberals or the Conservatives. He suggests that we persist in making inflammatory speeches devoid of practical suggestions. Again, I say that is a purely gratuitous remark to make. I do not think any of us can be successfully charged with making inflammatory speeches; we are simply pointing out the facts in the situation. Further, it cannot be said that we have failed to put forward certain suggestions. If you, Mr. Speaker, will look at the order paper you will find it contains motion after motion, put forward by members of this group; and that has been the case ever since I have been in the house for the past decade. If any suggestions of a practical nature have been put forward, they have come largely from the members in this corner. We have made these suggestions during the present debate, and if I had the time I should be glad to attempt to make them again before I sit down. We have put forward what we regard as practical suggestions. Of course, they are rejected by hon. members on the other side, by the government powers, as being impractical. Well, in that case I suggest that it is distinctly the part of the government to make suggestions. In fact I think we are all sufficiently familiar with parliamentary procedure and British traditions to recognize that fundamentally it is the government that is responsible for policies. It is our part to show the need for certain legislation; it is the government's to work out the policies. If the government wants suggestions, right in our subamendment will be found a few practical suggestions, and it is for the government now to say whether it will accept these in the spirit in which they are proffered or whether it will arrogantly brush them aside and say that in its own way it will solve the problems now confronting the country.

The member for West York states that all he wants for the working people of the Dominion is the maintenance of the system of collective bargaining. Let me say to him that to-day there are very few workers who are allowed to bargain collectively. The vast majority of our working people are outside the trade unions altogether, and when they are members of such unions they usually have to go on strike in order to maintain the principle of collective bargaining. The hon. member for West York says all he wants is the maintenance of a family life and fairly high standard of living. That is all we want, but those standards do not exist to-day. You have only to turn to the official records of the Department of Labour to find that statement amply corroborated; you have only to refer to the evidence given before our committee on industrial and international relations to find ample corroboration, and you have only to turn to the pages of Hansard for the last few weeks to find how much below those standards our people are at the present time. That kind of thing is simply an attempt to divert public attention from the real issue.

I noticed that the hon. member for West York, posed—I was about to say—but since I objected to his use of a word of that kind I will withdraw that word and put it this way. His name appears on the letterhead of the Canadian Workers' Association as legal adviser. I hold in my hand a communication from the secretary of that organization stating that their association is running a series of three mass meetings in the interests of unemployment insurance. The first of these meetings will be held on a certain date, and one of our group is asked to be present. I would suggest that this question of unemployment insurance is one of the things we have been bringing forward year after year, and it is on the order paper again this year in the name of my colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). If the hon. member for West York is really serious in his interest in the working people I would urge that he use his influence with the Prime Minister to see that there is enacted at this session of parliament a measure of unemployment insurance. The hon. member for West York, unfortunately, in having a fling at labour is really more or less following in the lead of the Prime Minister himself. The Prime Minister said the other day:

> No good service is being done to the country by the exaggerations made by some of those who have addressed the chamber this afternoon.

I object to that form of statement. I do not know whether the Prime Minister was referring to me, whether he was referring to my colleague or whether he was referring to some of the farmer members who had spoken. It seems to me that if we have exaggerated or if we have misstated the case it ought to be clearly understood what man has made the exaggeration or the misstatement, and then we would be in a position to answer. The Prime Minister then went on to discuss the academic question as to whether the rich man should put his money in the bank or should spend it lavishly. The Prime Minister was rather of the opinion, I gathered, that it would be better to spend his money lavishly than to put it in the bank. I always imagined that he had such a high regard for the banks that he would have thought that putting it into the banks would be the surest way to put it into the channels of industry.

The Prime Minister suggests that the rich man should spend his money lavishly. Our contention in this house is altogether aside from that. Really we are not very particular as to whether the rich man saves or spends. What we are trying to say is that to-day, under the existing conditions, no man has a right to millions and no corporation has a right to the power which millions give. It is not with us the particular question as to how this or that man spends his wealth; the point is that wealth comes to-day because of the social privileges which are being given by governmental authority, and if there are those to whom wealth comes almost automatically while there are those who have so little of it that they are on the streets to-day, our contention is that there should be a readjustment in our regulations, in our forms of administration and in our laws themselves so that there may be a more equitable distribution of that wealth, which I think every thoughtful man will concede is produced not through the efforts of any individual or any particular group of individuals but which is produced as the result of the efforts of thousands and tens of thousands of people working to-day, as we work, collectively.

That is the position we take, and that is the situation to which I would like to direct the attention of the house. The other day my good friend the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) undertook to question some of my statements. He was good enough to say that he did not think I would mislead the house, because he said I had been the minister in a church years ago which he had attended. I am very thankful to him for the very great kindness that underlay his statement and which has persisted during the last twenty-five or thirty years, but when he proceeds to make this statement I feel that I must take exception to it. Referring to myself, he asked:

> Why is he bringing in these things and knocking down the price of lands?

That, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of statement which I think should be challenged. I recall twenty-five years ago, when I was connected with the church, when a man told me that I ought not to talk about certain things because I was "knocking" the price of real estate. At that time I was living down in the northern part of my city of Winnipeg among the foreign born, and an epidemic was sweeping the country that summer, a child's disease, of which nearly 200 children in my district died within a fortnight. They were dying in North Winnipeg almost three times as quickly as they were dying in the other parts of the city which had better opportunities for caring for the children, and when I put this statement in a diagram and wanted to show it at a public health exhibition which was then being presented in my city—and this was twenty-five years ago—one gentleman belonging to the real estate board objected and said, "Oh, no, you must not exhibit that chart. It would knock real estate."

I had one of my own children lying ill at that time, Mr. Speaker. We had a good doctor and good nurses; the child had good care and we pulled the little chap through. The children of my neighbours, however, were dying by the score, and I remember one day being called to conduct a funeral service over the body of one of these children. We went out to the grave side; there were twenty little fresh made graves all in a row. There was the grave into which we were to lower the tiny body, and behind that were half a dozen graves half dug. The children were not dead yet, but the grave diggers were getting ahead with their work. I was supposed to read the funeral service so familiar to many of us here; "For as much as it has pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence to take out of the world the soul of the deceased." I said in my heart, "That is not true." I knew the reasons for the death of those children. Those reasons were bad milk, bad housing and bad social arrangements, and I was not going to blame any God with being responsible for it.

That was one of the big events in my life, Mr. Speaker, and when I was blamed for trying to get better health conditions, and when they said it would knock the price of real estate, the situation presented itself to me in this way: if it was my duty to read the funeral service over the body of a dead child it was much more my duty to save the children then living. I would urge upon this house that the welfare of the men, the women and the children of this country is worth much more than the price of real estate in the constituency of Marquette. I know my hon. friend does not really believe the contrary; he did not think of the implications. I would not dare to say that he was hardhearted; the hon. members of this house are not hardhearted but they do not realize the conditions which prevail in many parts of this country.

When the unemployed interviewed the Premier of Manitoba at Winnipeg the other day he called their attention to the fact that that province had passed a resolution about a year ago urging the Dominion government to call a Dominion-provincial conference to which all provinces would send representatives to consider the advisability of amending the British North America Act so that the Dominion government could establish a Dominion-wide system of unemployment insurance. This is what we are urging upon the government. I find that requests of this sort are beginning to come in from other parts of Canada, even from eastern Canada. Only to-day I received in my mail a resolution passed by the township of East York, to this effect:

. . . . realizing the appalling situation existing in the township of East York and throughout this country in general through unemployment. and further realizing that unemployment is getting beyond the control of the local municipalities,

We hereby demand that the federal government pass legislation as soon as possible to bring into force unemployment insurance, on the same principle as exists in Great Britain.

I do not believe the ratepayers of East York are communists even though they use the words "we demand."

I have received many letters from many parts of the country. These letters are sent to me particularly because I represent a distinct labour group in this house, and because I have spoken on unemployment. As all hon. members know, when one speaks on any subject of general interest many people send him letters and resolutions. The following was received from Calgary—I select this one because that is the city of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). It reads:

Yesterday the Calgary employment bureau here had registered 2,848 men for whom no work was available. This number will shortly be augmented by the closing of the relief camps. Housewives report that increasing numbers of men are asking for food at their doors. Private citizens are continually giving meal tickets and orders for beds, as well as cash donations, to unemployed men. Small grocers and rooming house keepers are burdened through extending credit to men on part time relief work or without work. We feel it would be fairer to the citizens and better for the men who are unemployed if they could be supported by relief or relief work of which the cost is borne by all taxpayers.

I will not take the time of the house to refer to other resolutions, but these are typical examples. A despatch, dated April 9, from Sudbury, to the Toronto Star, reads as follows:

Sudbury's unemployed has reached 3,438, of which 450 are married men with families. The soup kitchen is still serving an average of 450 meals a day. The city is also supplying 170 families with bread, clothing and fuel.

The papers are full of such stories. Only yesterday I noticed the following in the press as coming from Sturgeon Falls:

A pathetic climax to the period of destitution which has left many citizens of this northern community starving and ragged was enacted yesterday afternoon at the little town hall when a band of citizens, men and women, asked permission to send their children barefooted to school.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take up a few minutes' time to bring to the attention of the government a matter which I would have brought up on the orders of the day were it possibe to get satisfaction at that time. I refer particularly to the conditions existing in one of the towns in the coal district of the Crowsnest pass, and I do not think I could do better than to read a letter which I received from the secretary of the Mine Workers' Union. This letter is sent from Bellevue, dated April 8, 1931, and reads:

I was instructed to write you and let you know of the conditions in Bellevue at the present time. The mine at Bellevue is only working one or two days per week and has only worked twenty-two days for the three months of the present year.

We have now about forty men laid off and taking the manager at Bellevue at his word, there will be 180 men laid off by the 15th of April. Blairmore will no doubt be in the same position as we are.

At our regular meeting last Sunday we passed a motion to the effect that we are in favour of everyone getting a share of the work that is going with no men laid off. This motion was passed unanimously with around 120 present.

I would draw the attention of the house to the following sentence:

It was the general opinion of the members present that if we must starve then let us all starve together.

Our committee will meet the general manager on Friday and in the event of the manager failing to comply with our request for a fair share-up of the work, I will immediately write you.

I have another letter from the same man, dated April 16, which reads:

About a week ago I wrote you in regard to the awful conditions that prevail in the mining camp at Bellevue. As I stated in my last letter to you I would write you as soon as we had our interview with Mr. Vissac.

We passed a motion at our last regular meeting which was passed unanimously by a well attended meeting. Our motion was to the effect that we want a fair share-up of the work that is to be had with no men laid off.

Our committee met Mr. Vissac on the morning of the 14th April and the general manager of the West Canadian Collieries made it plain to us that there would be 100 men laid off and in the near future, if things do not pick up then there will be some more men laid off. The same number of men will be laid off at Blairmore.

Our proposition which you yourself must admit is very fair was turned down by Mr. Vissac and we feel that the general manager's attitude is anything but fair.

You must readily understand if this laying-off of men is carried through it is going to cause much trouble in the Pass as no doubt the other companies will follow the lead of Mr. Vissac.

It seems that the mines here are not being operated in the best interests of either the worker or the country and we appeal to you to intervene on our behalf and use all the influence you have to get for us the very fair proposition we put to our general manager Vissac. To throw a few hundred men on an already overstocked unemployment market at the present time appears to be very bad policy.

This letter is signed by the secretary of the Bellevue Miners' Union.

As there is no Minister of Labour in the house I would appeal to the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon) to take this matter up and endeavour to arrive at a satisfactory solution. I would again draw the attention of the house to the words, "It was the general opinion of the members present that if we must starve then let us all starve together." I do not think that resolution exaggerates the true condition of affairs. These men worked only 126 days last year. Some of the outside men draw only $4.40 per day and hon. members who are good at mental arithmetic can figure out just how far that will go towards providing the decent standard of living to which the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) referred yesterday as being a desirable condition for Canada. These men and their families are in absolute want. I know of one case where a man had $3,000 in the Home bank when it failed and he still has $1,500 coming to him in theory. He is forced to draw relief in order to keep from starvation, his family consisting of a wife and six children. He was a very thrifty man and he did the best he could, but he is forced to draw relief from the town of Blairmore.

The condition at Bellevue is particularly serious. This is a small community and I am sure there is no possibility of relief, either direct or indirect, being given to the miners out of the $20,000,000 voted for unemployment relief as the town of Bellevue would be unable to pay their share of the expenditure necessary. No wonder the secretary of the Miners' Union says that if all these men are laid off, there will be trouble. There are five big mines in this area. If the other five mines follow the same policy that has been inaugurated at Bellevue, it means that about 1,000 men will be laid off within the next week or two. What are these 1,000 men to do? This mining area is located in the mountains; there is no farming country around it where these people can go, and they have not the money to move out in any case. I have examined the pay slips of some of the miners at Bellevue; I have noted one case where a man worked every day the mine was open during the months of January and February, and for those two months he averaged $26.65 per month. Those are the net wages he received. He endeavoured to keep himself, his wife and four children on that. Now the proposal of the management is to lay off a large number of these men and to divide up the work amongst the men whom they retain on the pay-roll. I again ask the government to send a man from the Department of Labour into that camp to try to arrange a satisfactory solution of the difficulty between the company and the men. If those men have to be laid off, this should not be done until some provision is made for them and their families when that lay-off occurs, because the day their names are removed from the pay list, that day their credit will be stopped at the stores. What, then, are they going to live on? The community cannot give them direct relief and it will be a crime if this action is allowed to be taken by the management unless some provision is made to take care of them.

May I say that I am glad the subamendment has been moved by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). I could not honestly vote for the motion. I took the trouble this morning to look up the motion, the words of which are rather striking. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Cormier) moved:

> That a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Administrator of Canada, to thank His Excellency for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both houses of parliament, at the opening of this session.

Those are very grateful and humble words. I thought: What is in the speech from the throne that we should be so very grateful for? I read over the speech from the throne and I could find in it very little to make me really thankful. Of course in this case His Excellency means the Prime Minister and it does not seem possible that the speech from the throne could have been written by the same man who delivered such eloquent speeches during the election campaign. If this speech from the throne were in line with the speech, for instance, delivered at Winnipeg with which the campaign was opened, we might thank His Excellency for it. I have in my hand a clipping taken from a United States publication reading:

> The contrast between the Republican campaign assurances and the present reality is pretty vivid.

By the change of one word that fits the case here very nicely. Then it would read:

> The contrast between Conservative campaign assurances and the present reality is pretty vivid.

I can find no reason why I should vote for the motion for the address. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) does not suit me very well; it is entirely negative in character, and at a time as serious as this we certainly require some very constructive proposals. I am pleased that the subamendment has been moved, because it suggests something constructive to the house. It contains three very definite proposals: the appointment of a committee to examine into the causes and extent of the present depression and to suggest action to relieve present suffering, correct the present situation and render less probable the recurrence of such disasters in the future. That is surely a worthy suggestion to make to the house. Already in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne some suggestions have been made, and I think they should be considered by this committee. This is surely so reasonable that the government will accept it.

The second suggestion which we make is federal action to secure the granting of sufficient credit to enable the western farmers to put in their crops. The government must be convinced of the necessity for that. Speeches delivered by some of their own supporters from western Canada should be quite ample to convince them in that regard.

I want to read just one paragraph from a letter which I hold in my hand, because I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the house. This is a letter which I received this morning from a very reliable gentleman in my constituency. He says:

> We have been encouraged in the use of credit and the present is no time for its withdrawal. The banks have almost closed down entirely on credit and farmers who have turned over to tractors are finding it almost impossible to finance seeding operations.

I cannot refrain from reading the last paragraph of the letter, because it deals with the question of unemployment which we have emphasized in our subamendment.

> It looks to me as though the situation was getting worse, unemployment increasing, wages coming down and no opening at all for those completing their educational training and looking for positions. I believe the situation is worse in this class than any other. Numbers of trained boys coming on and large numbers being let out of salaried positions every day. The Canadian Pacific Railway has let most of their employees out here, men with years of training and service. Speak of communism and socialism as you will, at least it can show nothing worse than the present situation in capitalistic countries.

I do not think I can do better than close with that quotation. Surely in the face of the conditions which have been so fully set before the house, the government should be willing to accept the subamendment which has been moved from this corner.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): It is a matter for regret that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the government assume the attitude they do towards questions directed to them on the orders of the day. If information is asked for in the house, especially at a time like this, it is in the interest of the government to furnish it as far as possible. Though I cannot agree with the Prime Minister in any of his policies, I have a certain personal regard for him, and I do not like to see him adopting in this chamber a practice that will tend more and more to shake the confidence of the people in his sincerity and integrity.

This afternoon I tried to ask him a question and I endeavoured to lay a foundation to explain what the question would involve in order that he might intelligently comprehend and answer it, but I was denied the privilege so I shall take this opportunity of explaining to the house exactly what I had in mind. In a portion of my constituency there is a considerable stretch of what we call heavy land. It is very productive land, level, of uniform quality and texture, and it lends itself to tractor farming. Practically all the farmers on this land have gone in for tractor farming, many of them having entirely done away with their horses. Economic conditions of late have made it necessary for those farmers to look closely at every cent which they have to pay out. They must cut costs wherever possible, and they find that the price which they have to pay for gasoline is seven cents higher than the wholesale price. On the 6th April of this year, the farmers of one of those districts held a meeting at the village of Riceton and formed a cooperative association to buy their own gasoline. They figured that by so doing they could save five of the seven cent spread between the wholesale and the retail prices. I did not intend to read as much of this letter as I am going to read now, but as I have time I shall read a little more of it to let the house appreciate exactly what was in the minds of these farmers. The letter reads:

We had an interesting meeting Saturday night at Riceton comprising farmers over a large area (most of Lajord municipality) and formed an association chiefly to purchase gasoline.

This is a big question. There is now apparently seven cent spread between wholesale and retail in this district and we can probably get back about five cents in patronage dividends and I have been prodding our boys in Saskatchewan house re gas price during session but little has been done. Mr. Stewart gave notice of a bill but withdrew the bill. I understand from Dr. Urich that the reason given was an agreement with the Dominion government. I asked Mr. Patterson (Milestone) Saturday night about it and he practically admitted that the oil companies bluffed the government out of it and that the government learned that the price would probably go up instead of down if an investigation was started into prices.

These farmers formed a co-operative organization to buy their own gasoline. They were located in the village of Riceton, where there were three storage plants for gasoline owned by three different private oil companies. The farmers went to one company and said, "We will buy your plant if you care to sell it, and if you do not, we will build another one." So the company decided to sell their plant to the farmers and the following letter, of which I shall read a part, is the sequel to that deal. It is written by Mr. W. S. Kirkpatrick, managing director of the Puritan Oil Company Limited, which is the company that sold its plant to the farmers. It is dated Regina, April 14, 1931, and reads in part as follows:

On April 10th we disposed of one of our bulk plants, located at Riceton, Saskatchewan to the Riceton Co-operative Association, an association membership composed of farmers throughout that district. At Riceton in addition to our former plant there were also the Imperial and B. A. located at this point with bulk storage. On Saturady morning I interviewed the manager of the Imperial Oil Company in regard to shipping a carload of gasoline to this Association at Riceton. Their manager apparently was very much put out with the thought that this association was formed at that particular point. I might state had we not sold our plant to them, it was their intention to erect a fourth set of tanks, and there was no business in that particular community for four sets of tanks, in fact there is not sufficient for three.

At the time of ordering this car their manager informed me that it would be impossible to get a shipment out on prompt shipment as they were some forty tank cars behind in shipping. In less than five minutes, without any further information he increased this to fifty cars back ordered. A few moments later he called the refinery superintendent on the phone and while he did not repeat any figures which were given him by the refinery superintendent, the amount was increased to seventy-five cars back ordered, and that he did not know when a shipment could be made, although they were desirous of the business. The writer called him this morning to see if the shipment had actually been made as yet, and he informed me that it had not and did not know when it could be made on account of the shortage of cars and back orders.

I got in my car this morning and drove by their plant to see how many cars actually were available, as we are very positive it was nothing but a stall to keep these people from receiving gasoline. I found in actual count the following on trackage west of the refinery, 38 empty tank cars stored. Sixteen of them were Imperial Marvelube red cars and green cars, the balance T.C.L.X. Quite a few of the T.C.L.X. cars I might state are used for the Imperial and B. A. shipping. I then drove to the back of the refinery loading rack, and counted 22 cars stored back there. I might state it was impossible to see all the cars that were stored on account of tankage, but would judge there were possibly six or eight that were not visible.

We might also state that the refinery at Regina on account of storage being full and their country storage being full have been laying off men continuously and are only operating the refinery on a skeleton crew endeavouring to reduce their stocks previous to operating on full capacity.

We are absolutely positive that this is simply a stall to keep this co-operative association from having supplies, and thought at this time this information might be valuable to the organization.

There is a postscript which reads as follows:

P.S.—This morning we offered to furnish the Imperial Oil an empty tank car if they were still short to handle this shipment, and their local manager refused to accept this offer.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the situation. The Imperial Oil Company at Regina, having the only refinery in Saskatchewan, have deliberately set out to deny to the people of that country the right to buy oil or gas from anyone except themselves and at their own prices. When the farmers undertook to form a cooperative association to buy their own oil and gas, this company refused to furnish them with gasoline on the pretext that it had no cars, when about eighty empty tank cars were standing on their siding. I asked the minister a few moments ago if he would remove the duty on gasoline to allow the farmers to bring it in from the United States free of duty. If he will not, I would ask the government to make an investigation into this case and to see to it that effective measures are taken to compel the Canadian oil refineries to furnish gasoline to whomsoever wants to buy it and has the money to pay for it. That is the least which the government can do in view of what it has done to increase the price of gasoline and other articles to the farmer.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Now that my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) has introduced the question of the gasoline tax I would like to mention a condition that obtains in the west. At the session last September a duty of 2½ cents was imposed on gasoline, which previously came in free. I protested at the time and suggested to the government that they should allow the same exemption as obtains in the province. The province imposes a tax of 5 cents a gallon on gasoline, but exempts farmers and fishermen from paying the tax when the gasoline is used in their operations, and machinery is provided by which they can get a rebate. But the government last September imposed a tax of 2½ cents and made it apply on gasoline used by fishermen. They also made a change in the customs tariff and in the Customs Act, and it is in connection with the operation of the latter act, I fancy, that the trouble of which I now wish to speak has arisen more particularly. The fishermen on the west coast engaged in trolling compete with the United States fishermen in the open ocean beyond the three-mile limit, where, of course, the ocean is as open to the American fishermen as it is to our Canadian fishermen, but the market for the class of fish which our Canadian fishermen on the west coast catch at this season of the year is almost entirely in the United States. The United States has a duty of 2 cents a pound on fish entering that country shipped by Canadians. That alone gives the American fisherman an enormous advantage over his Canadian competitor. If we are going to increase that handicap by a tax on gasoline—the Canadian fisherman has to pay 24 cents a gallon for the class of gasoline he uses in his little fishing boat as compared with 8 cents a gallon—the Imperial gallon in both cases—which the American fisherman pays in Seattle—it will be readily understood what a great handicap is imposed on our citizen fishermen. I am told by those in a position to know that the cost of gasoline amounts to from 30 to 35 per cent of the operating costs, so it can be seen at a glance under what a serious handicap our Canadian fishermen operate.

It is not so much that American gasoline is being dumped into this country. It is not being dumped. It is being offered for sale in Canada at the same price as it is offered for sale in the United States, but the customs officials out there are now seeking to impose the dumping duty, not on its merits as we know the dumping duty, but in a roundabout way. To be applied on its merits the dumping duty must be applied to an article which is sold in Canada cheaper than in the country of origin. But the customs officials are seeking to impose it by way of a fictitious condition which they create by resorting to subsection 2, I think it is, of section 36 of the Customs Act, under which they say that the value for duty purposes—I am quoting the act from memory—shall in no case be less than the cost of production in the country of origin, plus a fair profit, plus freight. In that way they will be entitled to fix the value so as to allow the dumping duty to be put on and bring the cost of the American gasoline up from 8 cents to 24 cents a gallon. I would ask the minister in charge of this matter, when he is taking steps to guarantee cost of production plus a reasonable profit, whatever that may be, plus the cost of freight for the American manufacturer of gasoline, would it not be better first to guarantee to our Canadian fishermen the cost of production plus a reasonable profit, plus freight to where his product is sold. It is going to make enormous and untenable difficulties for our Canadian fishermen and I would suggest that in this particular matter the provisions of section 36 of subsection 2 might be waived or at least ignored.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the subamendment.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Before the amendment to the amendment is put, Mr Speaker, I should like to say a word with reference to its nature and to what has been said of it by way of comparison with the original amendment moved by myself.

The amendment of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), which, as has been said this afternoon, represents the collective thought of the independent group in this house, is in the nature of an addition and expansion of my amendment. It is in no sense contradictory of it. It in fact corroborates the representations of the amendment. The subamendment is more comprehensive; it is more suitable as an addition to the amendment I have moved than as a substitution for it. Had I been moving my amendment at this stage of the debate I would probably have made it more comprehensive. The subamendment, it is true, as it stands is an alternative to the amendment I have moved. I am prepared to admit that as an alternative in certain of its features there is much to commend it. I believe hon. gentlemen at the far end of this chamber equally believe that my amendment has also very much to commend it.

When I moved the original amendment the house had before it only the speech from the throne. In that speech there were indications that in the course of time the house would be favoured with some concrete evidences of the intentions of the government to meet existing conditions which, according to the speech itself, were regarded as exceptional and serious. For example the speech from the throne contained the following words:

> It will be your privilege to consider certain measures designed by my ministers to ameliorate existing conditions—

Also the following:

> My ministers are aware that changing conditions in the world's markets may necessitate further intervention by my government, which is prepared to render whatever additional assistance may be deemed advisable in the national interest.

The presence of this statement in the speech from the throne would indicate that to meet the existing situation, the government had had in mind the enactment of additional measures.

It is usual, Mr. Speaker, in a debate which lasts for a considerable period of time and in the course of which the administration is questioned with respect to proposed legislation that some member of the ministry on behalf of the government gives to parliament at least an intimation of what may be expected. Although this debate has run on for more than five weeks we have had from the ministry in that length of time no expression whatever of its intention in regard to legislation of any kind to meet existing conditions which admittedly are of a most serious nature. The two features which have been stressed by all hon. members who have spoken on this side of the house, regardless of the group or party to which they may belong, were first the seriousness of the agricultural distress and secondly the extent and seriousness of unemployment in urban centres. With regard to these all important matters hon. gentlemen opposite have sat as dumb as oysters. We have had no expression whatever from the ministry as to what they intend doing to meet existing difficulties.

May I mention a further circumstance. We are differently situated with respect to this debate on the speech from the throne than we have been in respect of others which have taken place in parliament. Owing to the lateness at which the session was called there have been on two or three occasions motions to suspend the rules of the house in order that the ministry might proceed a stage further with necessary business. Such action was essential in order to vote the salaries of civil employees. The estimates for the present fiscal year were placed upon the table of the house and are now before us. Ordinarily they would not have been available to hon. members until after the completion of the debate on the speech from the throne. However they are now in our possession and we have had an opportunity to peruse them. I venture to say there is not an hon. member of the house who can point to a single proposed expenditure which in any way is intended expressly to meet either the acute agricultural distress or the unfortunate situation existing with regard to unemployment. That very materially alters the position from what it was at the time I proposed the amendment which appears in my name. Hon. gentlemen in the far corner of the house have had the benefit of a discussion stressing immediate needs which has lasted over five weeks. They have knowledge of two very important facts, one positive in its nature, the other negative which I had not at the time I moved my amendment. The first of these is the positive evidence as shown by the estimates that no special provision is being made to meet agricultural distress in the rural districts or the extensive unemployment in the cities and towns. Evidence of the same thing, negative perhaps in its character, is to be found in the complete silence of the ministry, notwithstanding the representations which from time to time have been made to them during this debate. For those reasons I feel that hon. members in the far corner of the house are at this stage entirely right when they come forward with a subamendment which urges upon the administration immediate action in regard to those two all important phases of our national economic life.

I wish to direct a further remark particularly to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister.

Owing to the serious conditions of the country at the present time, I think he owed it to the people's representatives in parliament to have been present in this house, and to have listened to the speeches which have been made during the course of this debate. I know he has many onerous duties to perform which of necessity demand much of his time. As Prime Minister of Canada and as leader of the House of Commons his place while the house is in session is in parliament. Had he chosen to absent himself occasionally during or for an afternoon or evening, I would not have raised my voice in criticism, but I venture to say that with the exception of listening to me, during my very long speech, he did not extend a similar courtesy to a single hon. member on this side of the house. It is true he was in his seat while one or two of his own members spoke, but those instances were few indeed. The right hon. gentleman invariably chose to leave his seat immediately following the order to proceed with this debate, and throughout the whole of the five weeks and more he has been in the house for only a very short time. If he had remained here I have no doubt he would have been very much impressed by what has been said by hon. members on this side of the house as to the need of immediate attention and the need of going with greater care into the causes contributing to existing conditions.

Not only has the Prime Minister paid no attention to the debate but his ministers likewise have contributed nothing in the way of an expression of view on the part of the government, and nothing to indicate its attitude. It is true the house was favoured by a contribution to the debate from the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré), but there was not a word in the speeches they delivered with reference to government policy. Notwithstanding the fact that on the treasury benches are many hon. gentlemen who have had wide parliamentary experience, we have not heard in the course of this debate a single word from one of them. I affirm, Mr. Speaker, that in this attitude the government is not carrying on the business of the country in a parliamentary way. It is not fulfilling its function as a government when, in a debate as important as this one, no member of the administration has chosen to make or been permitted to make a single contribution with respect to the all-important matters under discussion. I am forced to the conclusion that in the matter of its own views the ministry feels insecure; it must feel that its policies are not as mature as they should be. It would certainly appear that there is need for something in the nature of counsel and advice to be secured perhaps by further investigation. Holding that view, I confess to a very real sympathy with the major proposal of the subamendment which has been moved and which suggests that:

> Your Excellency's advisers should give consideration to the appointment of a special committee of parliament, to which committee would be assigned the duty of examining into the causes and extent of the present depression.

That is very moderately and very carefully worded. It places nothing in the way of compulsion upon the administration. It is a mere suggestion that the ministry give consideration to the appointing of a parliamentary committee. I agree with one hon. member who spoke this afternoon in his view as to the limitations of parliamentary committees to achieve anything in a short time; but in a situation such as now exists I certainly think that a committee, which would have upon it members of all parties in this house, and would have the privilege of bringing before it representative individuals from all parts of the country, might do very much in the way of bringing about that cooperative spirit which has been referred to as being so desirable between all parties in the house at a time such as the present and with respect to a great public emergency such as is to be found in more than one phase of the existing economic depression. With that part of the subamendment, I feel myself in entire accord.

The subamendment continues with respect to what is desirable in the interval, between the appointing of a committee and its findings and makes in this connection two concrete suggestions. One is that the administration should give consideration to some scheme of federal assistance to the farmers with respect to their spring operations. When I first heard that clause being discussed I felt it might be taken as a reflection upon the banks that in some way they had failed to discharge their full duty. From a perusal of the clause, however, I do not think that such could have been the intention and such is certainly not its meaning. The wording as a matter of fact makes it clear that the situation is such that the banks would not be doing their duty were they to attempt to make certain loans in the existing circumstances. At least it seems to me that the clause is capable of that interpretation. It reads:

> (a) That the failure or inability of our banks to provide the credit which is essential to our farmers in respect to their spring operations, render it imperative that consideration be given to some system of federal assistance, whether directly, by way of bank guarantee, or otherwise.

The member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) will correct me if I am wrong, but I take this to mean that the banks find conditions in the farming areas throughout western Canada are such that they would not be justified in making loans on the security which they are able to obtain. That being the case, and this being spring, and spring operations being impeded through the dire necessity of many of those in the rural parts of the country, the subamendment suggests that the federal government should consider some form of assistance to meet the emergency. My recollection is that over and over again the government has at times of distress given substantial assistance to farmers in connection with their seeding and other agricultural operations; and if there ever was a time when something of the sort would seem to be necessary, that time it would seem is the present.

The other clause of the subamendment is:

(b) That the serious situation which still prevails in respect of unemployment demands that consideration be given to some immediate action looking toward increased employment, and a further measure of direct relief where such is found necessary.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the necessity of some such step must appeal to every hon. member. The need for immediate assistance being granted to meet the existing situation of unemployment has been made more obvious than ever, and the ministry, if it agrees to that particular request, will only be carrving out what at one time or another it has stated was its policy.

In these circumstances I feel that I should like to support the subamendment, and I intend to do so. If the subamendment carries, a special committee will be appointed which will go into all phases of the present industrial situation. That special committee will not proceed very far in its investigation before it will discover the truth of what is alleged in the amendment I have moved. The amendment which I moved some five weeks ago expresses the opinion that if certain proposals——and certain other of the policies of the government are persisted in, as would appear to be the intention of the government as outlined in the speech from the throne, the very serious condition which exists at the present time will be intensified rather than relieved.

I believe it to be true that every hon. member on this side of the house who has spoken, no matter to which group or party he belongs, has given expression to the view that the tariff increases made at the special session have tended to make conditions in Canada worse rather than better. If a policy of further tariff increase is going to be persisted in, we may look for the economic condition of this country being made even more difficult then it is at present.

Just this word in conclusion. In reference to the amendment which I have moved certain hon. members have said that it is largely negative in character. They have so characterized it because in their view it does not propose some concrete measure such as they have proposed in their subamendment. May I say that what is preventive in its nature may be much more positive in character than anything that may be remedial. The measures which hon. members in the far corner are suggesting are largely remedial in character. If there had been preventive measures adopted at the outset then there might not be any necessity for the remedial legislation they are seeking at the present time. We have before us a clear demonstration of legislation which was enacted at the special session working a positive injury to the agricultural and indeed to other interests in this country. My amendment states that to persist in that policy, as the speech from the throne implies the government intends to do, will only serve to make matters worse. I submit that I am making a positive, not a negative contribution to the relief of the existing situation when I ask this house to declare that the government should discontinue a policy which has already proven inimical to the best interests of the country. If the subamendment does carry, we will have the opportunity for a fuller discussion. If it does not carry, I hope the amendment which I have moved, and which is in the nature of an alternative, will receive substantial support, and that between the two we shall get from hon. gentlemen opposite at least something in the nature of definite action.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, most hon. members of this chamber have seen exhibitions of vacillation on more than one occasion by the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Mackenzie King), but he has never done himself quite as much justice as he has to-day. He has never made it more clearly apparent to the people of this country than he has this afternoon, that he has no fixed opinions beyond getting a few votes to support any amendment that may be in opposition to the government.

Behold the spectacle. On the 16th day of March, 1931, the right hon. gentleman moved, as an amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne, an amendment reading as follows:

We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that this house, while recognizing the serious economic conditions prevailing throughout the world, regrets that the policies of His Majesty's government have not only failed to afford a remedy for employment and agricultural distress, as pledged by the Prime Minister and his colleagues, but have served further to prejudice the deplorable position of the agricultural interests, thereby causing additional unemployment and substantially reducing the national revenue.

The house believes that the proposals made to the Imperial economic conference and the manner in which they were submitted and discussed by the Prime Minister of Canada were responsible for the failure of the conference to accomplish its purpose in London, and that the successful development of Canada's trade relations with Great Britain has been adversely affected thereby.

The house is further of the opinion that, if these proposals and certain other of the policies of the government are persisted in, as would appear to be the intention of the government as outlined in the speech from the throne, the very serious condition which exists at the present time will be intensified rather than relieved.

Last evening a subamendment was moved in this chamber by a representative of the group opposite to my right to strike out of that amendment all the words after the word "That," and to substitute for it a demand for a committee. In other words, the right hon. gentleman has now seen fit to abandon his censorious attitude of the past five weeks. He is no longer condemning the attitude of the government in respect to the Imperial economic conference; he is no longer denouncing the attitude of the government in respect to its policies. Now he says, "I am content now to accept a little amendment that comes from the group in the corner. Peradventure we will all vote solidly against the government, and all we want is a committee."

That is the spectacle which has been placed before the people of this country. That is the exhibition which has been given. Let the people of Canada know that the Liberal opposition in parliament has no policy and no position, and never had a policy or position except one of destruction. When they find something a little milder than the destruction which they endeavoured to promote and could not secure, they accept it because they say it will let them all vote against the government. That is the position. Is it any wonder that numbers of them hung their heads when they heard the right hon. gentleman say, "I accept this subamendment"?

Mr. BOURASSA: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it any wonder the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) can no longer contain himself from laughter? Imagine the spectacle in this house of an opposition which day after day and week after week thundered and pounded their desks in opposition to the government, decrying its policies, denouncing the economic conference and all its works, now saying "We take all that back; we would like to have all those words struck out. All we want now is a little committee to inquire into the matter."

That is the position. Oh, could anything be more insincere? Could anything be more ridiculous or could anything be better calculated to make the Canadian people glad and proud to think they put the proper value upon the government that was, the party which is now in opposition, on the 28th day of July last?

The right hon. gentleman has suggested that I should have been more in my place during the progress of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the evidence that has now been given indicates that I should not have been here at all. The evidence now given indicates that I should not have been here at least until last night, and that all this time has been wasted, because the right hon. gentleman has abandoned everything that has been said during that time. That is his position.

I would like to say this word in addition. The right hon. gentleman knows that at one time he was leader of the government, and he knew then what were the demands upon his time and how little time he was in the house during such a debate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He sat in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not. I happened to be in London a short time ago, and I know that the leader of the government there was not in his place all the time. He left the house in competent hands, and this house and this government always have been in competent hands when I was absent from the chamber. I was always within the precincts of the chamber; I was only a few feet away discharging duties somewhat more onerous than listening to the observations made by hon. gentlemen opposite, which would not have been a very difficult task. They know perfectly well that the year before, when they heard the opposition complaining that the Minister of Finance was not in his place when the debate was proceeding but was receiving delegations instead, which the opposition of that time thought was taking up too much time, the government of the day said he had to see delegations and to meet people who came to call about public business. I assure this house that I have not been shirking my duties in any sense by not being in this chamber, and now I can see no good, whatever doubt I ever might have entertained, which would have resulted from my being in the chamber, in view of the attitude of the right hon. gentleman that all this discussion has been mere piffle and a waste of time, and that the really important thing is to appoint a committee and waste no further time in these denunciations of policies, economic conferences and so on.

I do stand here to-day to express, as far as it is possible for any member of this house to express, regret that the exaggerated statements that have been made with respect to conditions in the west should have been circulated broadcast through this country. I am here to say further that I regret deeply that hon. gentlemen have lent themselves to policies to which, in days gone by, they said they would never be a party. Who does not recall, in 1927, 1928 and 1929, when we ventured to criticize the government, the observations which they then made to the effect that we were injuring the country, that we were pessimists, that we were doing a harm to Canada? Now, broadcast throughout this country and in other countries, have gone statements that cannot be substantiated in any manner or form. It is true that in a few isolated cases you may be able to find hardship; of course you may. There never has been a time when you could not do so, but there are the same people in western Canada to-day as have been there in years gone by. It is the same country; the people have the same high courage and the same determination, except to the extent that the lowering of prices by world conditions, to which I shall presently refer, may have made them less optimistic of the immediate future than they have been in the past.

It ill becomes hon. gentlemen here, who know of an isolated case here and another there, to draw a general conclusion in respect to conditions in western Canada. I can say that in western Canada there are tens of thousands of farmers who have deposits of money in the banks. It is true that there has been great hardship encountered by many farmers, for two reasons, first because of crop failure, and second because of low prices for the crops they did produce. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) himself lost his crop during two succeeding years through no fault of his own but through the action of the elements, through drought or hail, and last year, when there was a larger crop, the price —for reasons which I shall presently indicate— was such as did not leave any profit in return for the labour and money expended.

But because you happen to be in opposition is that a good reason to say that you shall at once decry your country? Is it a good reason to say that the people who a few short years ago gave you support are now people who have lost their courage and initiative and power of development? Is that the attitude to take? Is it the right attitude, to say all is lost because you happen to be for the moment defeated? Is it right to take an attitude of pessimism because the people were optimistic and got rid of you? Are those reasons that should govern men in the conduct of the serious business of this country? Then we hear them prattle about cooperation, after they have denounced the country in every way in which they can think, endeavouring to embarrass the administration.

If hon. gentlemen opposite want to know why there has been no declaration of policy during the progress of this debate, they need not do more than look up the rules governing parliamentary practice and procedure. They will find that in Great Britain the speech from the throne is not given precedence over all other business of the house. The business of the house is transacted; bills are introduced; second readings are given; discussions go on, and the ordinary business proceeds, but here we see fit, for reasons best known to ourselves, to give precedence to the address in reply to the speech from the throne over all other business, and in that way we preclude the possibility of measures being introduced or policies declared. Every member of this house who is familiar with parliamentary practice and procedure knows that is so, and in the days of Macdonald and Laurier one day or two days finished the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. BOURASSA: Not always.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is quite right; that was not always the case, but happened very frequently. Over a long term of years, one day finished the debate, then two days, and sometimes a week. Now we have been discussing the speech from the throne for five weeks, and during all that time hon. gentlemen opposite have been waiting for a minister to make a statement, they say, or for the Prime Minister to make a declaration of policy. But in either case the minister or Prime Minister would be doing wrong; it would not be in accordance with his obligations to this house.

Let us see if the west is as badly off as some hon. gentlemen would have us believe. I took the trouble to obtain from the Bureau of Statistics some information with respect to the conditions prevailing in western Canada. I had first-hand information, but the figures disclose that during the years 1928, 1929 and 1930 the gross agricultural revenue—it is estimated partly for this year—from the three prairie provinces amounted to the enormous sum of $1,900,000,000. This was new wealth produced in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta from field and farm crops, farm animals, wool, dairy products, fruits, vegetables, poultry, eggs, fur farming, clover and grass seed and honey. During the same period there was produced a vast quantity of mineral wealth. It must be remembered that the application of capital and labour to these natural resources is responsible for this new wealth. The great mining areas in the three western provinces produced during the last three years the vast sum of over $100,000,000. Thus we have the gigantic total of over two billion dollars of new wealth produced in three years by less than two million people in the three western provinces of Canada. That is something of which any people might well be proud and it ill behooves the representatives of these people to have it sent abroad to other parts of the world that this country is worn out and in a bankrupt condition. Not only has this vast aggregate of over two billion dollars of new wealth been produced, but other sums for manufactures which I could mention if added would make a much larger total. It cannot be said that this new wealth has disappeared and the people have nothing to show for it; they are not bankrupt and insolvent as has been claimed.

The bank reports show that tens of thousands of farmers in western Canada have money in the bank. If hon. members will take the trouble to investigate they will find that wherever men have had regard for economic laws and have kept free from speculation and wild dreams of sudden wealth, they are happy and contented and have provided a good livelihood for themselves and their families.

But there is something more to this. I took the trouble to-day to ask for a return covering the number of automobiles registered in 1930 in the three western provinces. What does this house think those automobiles are worth? What does it think they cost those two millions of people in western Canada? They cost them approximately $300,000,000. The number of motor vehicles registered in Canada for 1930 was 1,239,889, an increase over the 1929 registration of 44,295 or 3·7 per cent. The increase in 1929 amounted to 118,775 or 11 per cent, and in 1928 it was 131,147 or 13·9 per cent. The registration of passenger cars in the western provinces was as follows:

Manitoba	68,550
Saskatchewan	108,161
Alberta	85,067

The total registration of all forms of motor-operated vehicles was:

Manitoba	79,308
Saskatchewan	129,861
Alberta	102,651

The pro rata ownership was as follows:

Manitoba	1 for every 8·5 people
Saskatchewan	1 for every 6·8 people
Alberta	1 for every 6·4 people

Similar figures for the other provinces are as follows:

Prince Edward Island	1 for every 11·6 people
Nova Scotia	1 for every 12·9 people
New Brunswick	1 for every 12·2 people
Quebec	1 for every 15·3 people
Ontario	1 for every 5·9 people

These figures present the situation as shown by the total number of automobiles registered in the different provinces, and costing approximately, as I have said, $300,000,000. Does the house realize just how much money was collected in the three prairie provinces last year for gasoline and registration fees? The amounts were as follows:

Manitoba	$2,179,672
Saskatchewan	3,493,105
Alberta	3,953,975
Total	$9,626,752

The 5 cent per gallon gasoline tax produced the following revenue:

Alberta	$1,939,048
Saskatchewan	1,538,556
Manitoba	1,099,778

Hon. gentlemen opposite who come from these provinces have been talking about their insolvency and bankruptcy. Can that be said of a people who can afford to invest in the purchase and maintenance of automobiles the large sums which I have mentioned?

What is the cause of the great depression in western Canada? Hon. gentlemen opposite know that the most important cause is speculation. Not speculation in wheat options or in oil or mining stocks, but speculation in the large sense in which that term is used.

It has been said by one of the foremost authorities on the American continent that the cause of this great depression is speculation—not the narrow speculation to which some hon. gentlemen refer, but speculation in a larger sense. This has brought disaster in its wake. Although the exact figures cannot be ascertained, it is known that over $400,000,000 of Canadian money was lost last year by speculation in Wall street. However, speculation has not been confined to the stock exchanges of New York, Chicago, Montreal and Toronto; it has been spread over every part of this Dominion and of this continent. Think of the speculation in instalment buying, the gambling or staking of one's ability to pay instalments against a wage that might not continue. What is the result? Articles so purchased are taken back by the sellers, which prevents the sale of new articles, thus bringing about overproduction with all its resultant difficulties.

In 1928 I ventured to point out what would happen in Canada by reason of the speculative mania with which the Canadian people were then being attacked. In reply to the Minister of Finance, my words, which appear on page 4044 of Hansard of June 9, 1928, were as follows:

> Let him consult the financial heads of great institutions to the south of us. It is true that we have a vast, untouched estate, and that new wealth may be produced much more readily from that than from an old and cultivated estate. But it is also true that where we cultivate, it is necessary that we should sell, and if we find a curtailment and shrinkage of trade among the nations of the world, we find a limitation placed upon our ability to dispose of that which we produce. The minister knows that. He has been told time and time again by the great heads of financial institutions to be cautious, to look ahead. Every thoughtful business man is doing it; everybody is shortening sail except the speculators. Do you realize, sir, that this great speculative era that we now have on the American continent is one fraught with possibilities of the gravest disaster for this country? The brokers' loans alone in New York last week were over $5,000,000,000, an unheard of figure. In this country speculation is rampant. Some people imagine that trading in pieces of paper upon which there are engraved words and figures constitutes the creation of new wealth. It is not so. The new wealth of the country is being created by the application of labour and capital to the natural resources of the country, and this trading in stock certificates, this great era of speculation in this country and on this continent, is one fraught with possibilities of the gravest danger to Canada, because we have not as they have in the United States a vast accumulation of wealth that will enable us to meet the approaching conditions with ease.
> Look at the movement of securities; look at the movement of gold; look at every indication there is with respect to speculation in this country. I know great brokers' houses that have declined to take new accounts in this country for over twelve months, one perhaps the greatest brokerage house in this country, because they fear what they see in the distance. But no one in the government seems to care, and if we point out the conditions we are "pessimists", if we venture to direct attention to the conditions we are "decrying our country". That is the talk that hon. gentlemen opposite hurl at us and before the country. But I recall the language of one who was regarded in after years as one of the very greatest of British statesmen, who observed that when their orgy was through, when they had at last recovered from the debauch in which they were then enjoying themselves, possibly then in their sober and quiet moments they would look back and recall the warning that had been given by those who, looking into the future as best they could, guided by those economic signs that were apparent, and by beacon lights, warning of the future, had pointed out the conditions as they also had come to pass. You perhaps will look back upon our warnings, and perhaps remember with at least some degree of fairminded justice the observations that were made by those of us who have pointed out the national disaster that is inevitable if this orgy of mad expenditure continues.

Those were my words in June, 1928. I profess to no special knowledge; I had only the advice that any other hon. member might have had. Anyone who is any student at all of economic conditions, who could not foresee the result, must have been blind to the signs of the times. I know how difficult it is to induce people to realize what is about to happen. Only last week I was looking through certain proceedings in the courts, and I found one brokerage firm $15,000,000 short in a single day. Do hon. members realize what all this means? Did they notice what the courts of Alberta showed as to the number of farmers who had wheat accounts with firms that were before the courts? Have they had the experience I did the other day of a man seventy years of age coming into my office from a remote town in Ontario: he had been well to do, but he went to the little brokerage office in that town, and now he is absolutely without a dollar. That is speculation, and many of the difficulties that confront us in this country to-day arise from that very sort of thing, using the word "speculation" in the large and broad sense in which that term should be employed.

There are some people who try to make it appear that the western country is a country that is bankrupt. I repeat, those gentlemen are entirely wrong. Western Canada is the country it always has been; the people are the people they have ever been. If for a reason that I shall mention, and that I think it is only fair to mention, the sudden drop in prices, their ardour may have been dampened for a moment, this will not retard them in their advance. It will set them back temporarily, but it will strengthen their courage. But hon. members opposite are not helping to encourage them by decrying their country. They are not doing it by making people abroad believe what they say is true. The other day I had a letter from a gentleman saying: Cannot something be done to stop Mr. So-and-So from talking so about his country? Agreements for sale are being offered abroad, and people overseas say that these have no value because members of parliament say the country is bankrupt. Members of parliament are sometimes accepted as being more important individuals than they are, and their opinion has attached to it an importance that is not warranted. But that is the situation when these things go abroad from Canada's capital city.

How well do I remember in days gone by the present leader of the opposition lecturing me for my pessimism and lack of faith and courage with respect to this Canada of ours, and his saying that to take such an attitude was almost treason to the country. I suggest that hon. gentlemen opposite who, during the last five weeks, have been making the speeches they have, go now and read their leader's observations in days gone by and ask themselves what they think of themselves.

It is true that there was a great diminution in the price of grain. What brought it about? There are hon. gentlemen opposite who scoff and scorn at our mentioning the word "Russia." Every man knows that the wheat debacle of 1929-30 arose from causes that it is not difficult now to explain but which it might not have then been easy to foresee, although there were many who did foresee them. The world crop of 1929 was known. Some took no account whatever of the Russian crop. The crop of 1930 was known. The price went up beyond one dollar; it went to $1.25 and more, and the farmers of western Canada were told that it would go much higher. They were told that all they had to do was simply to watch and the price would become greater and greater still. I recall farmers who were holding their crops for $2 a bushel, sincerely believing that they were going to get it. They heard of higher prices on the radio; they read of them in the press. What happened? The importing countries, first of all, were increasing their production to a maximum; in the second place, Russia produced a crop of approximately 1,000,000,000 bushels. In other words, Russia had to be reckoned with as an exporting country. I had a friend in the grain business go up to Liverpool from London last fall for the purpose of ascertaining just what was involved in this Russian wheat. He saw wheat which he said was quite the equal of our Canadian wheat of the same grade being sold for sixty cents a bushel, delivered in Liverpool, and the price subsequently went lower. There being an overproduction of wheat, there was a producer willing to sell it at any price he could obtain, a price lower than that of his competitor. Canadian wheat had also to find a lower price level. Practically one-half of that wheat was held by the pools of the country, and unless something were done to steady the financial situation with respect to the pools that held that one-half, then there would be chaos and disaster. This government got behind those pools and said it would assist the orderly marketing of the wheat crop of western Canada. That assistance and support had, of course, the same effect upon non-pool wheat. That was what the government did. It did not peg the price; no government of which I am the head ever will. I have seen artificial prices placed upon commodities and whether that commodity be wheat or anything else, it matters not, I know the inevitable result. It cannot advantageously be done; it will not succeed. It may cause a temporary advantage, but that disappears. Look at the situation in the United States to-day. Mr. Legge, with all his vast experience, with all the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars that he had behind him, declared that the principle of artificial price-fixing was unsound, and it has been abandoned. We did not adopt it, so we did not have to abandon it, but we did give our assistance as I have mentioned.

At this point let me make another observation: some hon. gentlemen have been saying in the house that the attitude taken by Canada at the Imperial conference had the effect of doing what?—lessening the sale of Canadian grain in Great Britain. They thought they would deceive the people of this country by making statements such as that. We have sat in silence while they made those statements, but the time has come to speak, and here are the facts. The total exports to the United Kingdom of wheat in the month of March 1930 were 4,000,000 odd bushels, and in the month of March 1931, 5,000,000 odd bushels. The total exports to the United Kingdom for the eight months of the crop year since August—what think you the figures were?—69,398,672 bushels in 1930, and 96,170,518 in 1931. While the former Minister of Trade and Commerce said that nothing could be done to stimulate or assist the sale of wheat, this government at least was doing its level best by every means within its power to stimulate the sale of Canadian grain, not only in the United Kingdom but in other parts of Europe as well, and there is the result in the United Kingdom. Oh, if my hon. friends opposite had only had such a result to talk about, what they would not say! But we have sat silent, content to believe that the people of this country wanted action, which they have secured, and not words which they have been receiving during the last five weeks from the benches opposite.

We might have been content with that; but we went to France. France had been buying but little of our wheat. We explained to them the situation and said that if they were to continue receiving the benefits they were receiving under our trade treaty, they must buy larger quantities of our wheat. Listen to the figures. The total of Canadian wheat entering France in January, February and March, 1930, was 1,213,789 bushels. Those were the days of hon. gentlemen opposite. Those were the days when nothing could be done. Here are the figures for the three months after something has been done. For January, February and March, 1931, the figures were 7,538,860 bushels, and those figures came from the French government themselves, because it frequently happens that cargoes are shipped to France and then deflected to another country after they are afloat, and so we secured these figures from the French government, through Mr. Roy, by cable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has my hon. friend the money values?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I hope not. I have already said to the right hon. gentleman that there has been a decrease in the values for the reasons I have indicated. Mr. Tardieu, the Premier of France, explained to me that no government could live in France that did not care for the agriculturist; that must be his primary concern. Then he explained what the situation was with respect to wheat. They were growing wheat in their country on every little corner of the soil that could be made available for the purpose, and they put on a duty against foreign wheat which at one time was over $1.50 a bushel, in order that they might stimulate the activities of the domestic growers. When they found that great floods had occurred in the southern parts of France affecting a part of their grain crop, they gave us the benefits which I have indicated, and they have lived up entirely to their obligation and undertaking in that regard. They said they would buy larger quantities from us, and they have done so and will. We think that that is a fairly creditable performance under the circumstances, but we have not blazoned it from the housetops. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that by our attitude abroad we have hurt the market for Canadian wheat. All I can say in reply is this: If as a result of our attitude abroad twelve has become seventy-two, and sixty-nine, ninety-five, let us have more of that attitude.

I have one observation to make with respect to another matter, and that is the agricultural credit corporation in which, while we do not direct it, we have a deep interest. The president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to-day released to the press a statement which can be read by all. It just shows how little importance can be attached to the summary kind of statement made in this house by those who either are woefully ignorant or wilfully desire to mislead—one or the other—because a line of inquiry would have elicited the information. But that did not serve the purpose. It sounded well to make an incorrect statement. It might make discontent a little greater, might make people a little more suspicious, might make the unrest a little deeper. That is all that was wanted.

The right hon. gentleman opposite has made some reference to the necessity of action being taken as suggested by the sub-amendment for the purpose of ensuring that crops would be planted this year. As I have already said, while the amendment was being cogitated over, we were acting. We made an arrangement with the governments of the three western provinces. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) went west, met the representatives of the three prairie governments at Winnipeg, and made arrangements satisfactory to them with respect to the seed grain for the crop of 1931. I wonder if this house realizes that except in 1892, 1916, 1923 and 1924, the Dominion of Canada has advanced money for seed grain to the prairie provinces from 1876 to 1926. That is not generally known.

Mr. VALLANCE: On crown farm land.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, and if that logic is sound, no longer having crown lands, we should no longer have any interest in the matter. But not being content with such logic, and realizing our national obligations, what did we do?

Mr. VALLANCE: Might I ask a question? I know the right hon. gentleman wants to be fair. He knows and the Minister of Agriculture knows that there are hundreds of farmers—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: A question can be put only with the permission of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask a question?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman may ask a question, but not make an allegation.

Mr. VALLANCE: I wish to make a statement on which to base a question. The right hon. gentleman said that western agriculture last year created two billion dollars of wealth. The question I wish to ask is this: Did it not cost western agriculture more to create that new wealth than they got for it? How much has agriculture left to-day of that two billion dollars?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has asked a question that he has already answered himself. He knows perfectly well that of the two billion dollars of new wealth created last year, the whole was not expended in its creation. We all know that. There are tens of thousands of farmers with money in the bank to-day.

Mr. VALLANCE: I do not know where they are.

Mr. BENNETT: I do, and I will take you to them if you will come with me.

Mr. VALLANCE: You did not meet them in Regina.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is becoming, one might almost say, not to be offensive, a nuisance. If he would possess himself in patience, and not with that dogmatic shake of his head arrogate to himself an importance that he does not possess, it would be very much better.

Now I shall go a step further. I ask this house just what importance can be attached to an opposition that takes the attitude that is now being taken by the opposition with respect to the subamendment asking for a committee. Is this opposition one that might be trusted to see anything at any time affecting the welfare of Canada? Did hon. gentlemen ever look at the speech from the throne of 1930? Bear in mind what I ventured to predict in this house in 1928. In 1929 I duplicated the statement in slightly different terms. On February 20, 1930, the right hon. gentleman placed a speech from the throne in the hands of the representative of the sovereign and in that speech he referred to the great prosperity of Canada. The right hon. gentleman could not see what was coming; he was blind to the signs, he could not read the stars, he could not observe the beacon lights warning of danger and disaster. He was thinking only of power of a budget which possibly might give him a few votes; and of expenditures which might embarrass the treasury if another party succeeded to power. There is the speech from the throne in which the right hon. gentleman talks of prosperity. Let us see what he said about wheat.

An hon. MEMBER: The wheat was not sold.

Mr. BENNETT: Listen to the language of the right hon. gentleman which he used a year ago last February.

An hon. MEMBER: Wonderful.

Mr. BENNETT: These are the words of the right hon. gentleman:

> The Dominion is already recovering from the seasonal slackness evident at the end of the year, and it is not to be forgotten that the bulk of the 1929 wheat crop still remains in Canadian hands for final disposition.

That represents the prescience with which the then Prime Minister looked into the future of Canada. If hon. gentlemen opposite would speak so that they could be heard I would be greatly obliged, but their mutterings remind one of a summer storm. There are rumblings and mutterings and thunder but there is no lightning, and it never strikes anybody.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The lightning is all from the other side of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. Then, let us go a step further and examine one of the great causes of conditions in this country. How many people do hon. members think were brought into Canada from continental Europe, in the year 1929 and seven months of 1930, preceding the time we assumed power?

An hon. MEMBER: Probably 300,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. gentlemen seem to think themselves clever. Probably on reflection they will realize they are mistaken. I ask them if the then government had any true realization or appreciation of conditions existing in Canada in 1930 when in February of that year they placed in the hands of His Excellency the speech from the throne to which I have referred. On that occasion they stated there had been a little slackness at the end of 1929 but that all was now well. They said that the 1929 crop was in storage and that things would be much better. Would you entrust your business to a general manager of that kind? Would you?

An hon. MEMBER: No, they took it away.

Mr. BENNETT: Would anybody?

An hon. MEMBER: Some of the people did.

Mr. BENNETT: And my hon. friends opposite to the right said, "We will get them solid; they will abandon everything they had before, we will ask for a little committee, and all will be well." That is the story. Let me place before the house one statement shown by figures I have in my possession. Do hon. members realize that during that period of time 104,556 people came into this country from central Europe? They came here, and they are now largely being kept by Canadians.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Most of them are being kept—not all of them—by Canadians, with our taxes. The howl that is heard in some quarters about direct relief arises from the fact that the government of 1929 and the early part of 1930 could not foresee what was coming. They brought them here in increasing numbers for us to feed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Now they have the hardihood to complain because they say we do not feed them fast enough or give them enough to eat.

Miss MACPHAIL: Were they not assisted by the official opposition of that day?

Mr. BENNETT: That is hardly correct. If the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) would take the trouble to look she would find she is not correct.

Miss MACPHAIL: I heard the debate.

Mr. BENNETT: But the hon. member did not hear that from the official opposition; that is all I can say.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does the right hon. gentleman not remember the speech by General McRae?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly do, but that was not the official opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any doubt as to who is the leader of the official opposition in this house? I will admit the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) is indeed competing with my right hon. friend for leadership, but at the present time the official leader of the opposition is the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Mackenzie King) and not the hon. member for Temiscouata.

One step further. A complaint has been made as to what has been done by the government of the day. What has been done by the government of the day? I put this question to the house and to the country: If the government of the day had been less determined and less decisive in what it did, what would now be the position in Canada? Was the $20,000,000 voted for nothing? Has it been properly expended? Has any hon. member suggested that a single dollar of it has been spent for purposes other than proper ones; has anybody suggested that it was not properly used? What has been the result so far as that vote of money is concerned? Some 248,000 individuals have been given employment with that money, and they have worked 4,857,000 man-days. Some people have a similar opinion to that held by hon. gentlemen opposite, that when relief is being given and employment provided for relief purposes workmen should be provided with kid gloves and automobiles to take them to their jobs. All I can say is that there is a duty upon this country to endeavour to find employment for those who can be employed, but it is not a duty that hon. gentlemen would have some of the people think it is. We cannot have it both ways; the people of this country must pay for it. Taxes must be imposed upon them; taxes must be paid and the people of Canada will pay them. It is important that since the people have to pay taxes for that purpose we observe a most rigid rule of economy and decency in administration. That is what this government has done.

In connection with part of the subamendment of my hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) the right hon. leader of the opposition endeavoured to split hairs and attempted to salve his conscience by saying that the hon. member for Acadia did not mean to find fault with the banks. No, he said he was finding fault with the government. Let us look at the language of the subamendment; just listen to the language, Mr. Speaker:

That the failure or inability of our banks to provide the credit which is essential to our farmers in respect to their spring operations, render it imperative that consideration be given to some system of federal assistance, whether directly, by way of bank guarantee, or otherwise;

I ask hon. members to note the expression "the failure or inability of our banks to provide the credit". My right hon. friend has said that that expression does not mean what it would seem to imply. Probably he can interpret the expression of the hon. member for Acadia better than that hon. member can interpret his own expression.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I have said that it means exactly what it says.

Mr. BENNETT: It refers to the failure of banks to provide credit.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And it also uses the word "inability".

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, "or inability".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why did not my right hon. friend say that?

Mr. BENNETT: I did. I read the expression "failure or inability." The hon. member for Acadia I think was not endeavouring at the moment to seek from the official leader of the official opposition an interpretation of his very plain language. If that is so, however, we have a much clearer appreciation of what the situation really is. All I can say is that some weeks ago a very definite, clear and sound understanding was arrived at between the provincial governments and ourselves. We did not wait until the time arrived when the crops should be put in; no, we did not wait for that at all. The Minister of Agriculture journeyed to Winnipeg and met the provincial premiers. Having met them an arrangement was made which the premiers thought undesirable to publish to the world. The reasons I think are apparent to everyone. Relief is being given in the manner and form hon. members might expect it to be given, namely by those who know best how it should be given and how the distribution of seed grain should be administered.

Now, sir, I have concluded all I desire to say with respect to this matter. Committees of this house will presently be struck. These committees have power in trade and commerce, in agriculture, in industrial relations, to determine whatever it may be necessary to know in order that we may be able to deal with the situation that lies before us. This government is not in any way, shape or form seeking to escape responsibility. This government seeks no quarter so far as criticism of its actions is concerned. This government realizes that it has come into power at a very, very serious moment in the life of the body politic. It will to the very best of the ability of the members who constitute it discharge its duties as befits Canadians who are trustees for all their fellow citizens. Unswerved from their course by abuse, undeterred by vilification or misrepresentation from any quarter, they will go forward to discharge the duties that the people have placed upon them. If it becomes necessary to ascertain facts, the standing committees of this house are always available. But the government will never palter with its principles in order to retain power. No, if the moment ever comes when the majority of this house conclude it to be desirable that this government should go out, it will go out, but there will be no vacillation, no paltering with the opinions of others to secure support in order that it may continue in power.

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to tell my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) how pleased we are that he is back in the house. He has always proved to be a brilliant debater, and I hope that he will help the government to formulate policies that will meet the pressing needs of the people. I like the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) as a man, I admire him as a speaker, but I am sorry that I cannot approve his policies. Like all members to your left, Mr. Speaker, I was expecting a declaration of policy by the head of the government. But what has he given the house? He has given us a lecture on gambling and speculation, that is all. We were treated by the right hon. gentleman as though we were school children. I would remind him that we on this side of the house are full grown men. Sometimes the right hon. gentleman makes gibes about the ignorance and lack of ideas of young members. I think he should acknowledge that we on this side have on several occasions offered him constructive suggestions. For my part, I made a constructive suggestion with reference to the Riviere du Loup station, and on three or four other occasions already this session I have presented constructive suggestions. Apparently the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Fortin) did not understand the purpose of any of those suggestions. Well, I would have been very much surprised if he had understood.

I am in favour, Mr. Speaker, of the subamendment moved by the leader of the Progressive group (Mr. Gardiner), for the reason that it contains constructive proposals. I am always in favour of such proposals. I do not always agree with what my hon. friends in the far corner say, but whenever they present proposals so constructive in character as those contained in their subamendment I am glad to support them.

The amendment moved by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) contains this clause):

—this house, while recognizing the serious economic conditions prevailing throughout the world, regrets that the policies of His Majesty's government have not only failed to afford a remedy for unemployment and agricultural distress, as pledged by the Prime Minister and his colleagues, but have served further to prejudice the deplorable position of the agricultural interests, thereby causing additional unemployment and substantially reducing the national revenue.

That is absolutely true, Mr. Speaker. During the special session last September, a month or two after my right hon. friend had attained power, the number of unemployed in the Dominion was in round figures 100,000; the other day the hon. Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson) stated that at the present time the number is 260,000. In other words, under the brief and wonderful administration of my right hon. friend unemployment has increased by 160,000. This, I regret to say, means acute distress for a large number of Canadian families. The amendment continues:

The house believes that the proposals made to the Imperial economic conference and the manner in which they were submitted and discussed by the Prime Minister of Canada were responsible for the failure of the conference to accomplish its purpose in London, and that the successful development of Canada's trade relations with Great Britain has been adversely affected thereby.

With regard to this paragraph, I understand that a very large portion of our surplus wheat still remains unsold. Recently the right hon. Prime Minister characterized a member who had complained of an expenditure of $25 as not being very clever. Apparently a member's ability is to be measured by the magnitude of the figures he deals with, and I suppose that a reference to billions and billions of dollars must be taken as the hallmark of cleverness. It may be very interesting to quote substantial figures representing expenditures for gasoline and other commodities, but it must not be forgotten that gasoline is the motive power for tractors, and if people are able to buy gasoline there should be no occasion for them to complain of unemployment. I do not live in the west, but however much the people out there are suffering I know that the people in my part of the country, especially those engaged in the lumber trade, are very much embarrassed at the present time. The building of skyscrapers in the cities no doubt provides employment, but it affords very little help to the lumber trade, these buildings for the most part being constructed of cement, iron, steel, stone and brick; but in the small country parishes expenditure for lumber enters very very largely into the cost of enlarging their stores or houses or building barns. But for several years while the Liberals were in power the people there listened to the blue ruin talk of hon. members opposite. At that time conditions were very much better than they are now; was it in order to gain power that my hon. friends were so pessimistic about the future of this country? Because of the pessimism preached by hon. gentlemen opposite many people living in the country did not spend money for lumber in order to carry on construction. They said to themselves, "The leader of the Conservative party is a great financier and business man, and he must know something about the future of this country. It will be better if we save our money."

Mr. SPEAKER: Order: It is very difficult indeed for any hon. member to address the house with a continual buzz of conversation going on, as is the case just now from both sides of the house. I would ask hon. members to observe the rule in that respect.

Mr. POULIOT: That was the reason why more money was not spent for lumber, with the result that the lumber yards were left full of material which has remained there for a year or more. Hon. gentlemen opposite, as they themselves fully realize are responsible for that situation, and the consequences have been very serious. The lumber remains in the yards unsold; there are no more shanties in the woods in the winter, and the carpenters and workmen of the small parishes go to the cities because they cannot find employment in their own villages. This is what has happened, and hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible.

I heard the Prime Minister say, "I have never said anything to hurt the future of this country", and he read what he had said last June in answer to the Minister of Finance of that time. It is all very well to say that conditions throughout the country are good, but the other day in that Tory paper, the Montreal Gazette, it was pointed out that within the last few months there had been a slump in trade amounting to some $600,000,000.

I should like to say a word about the banks. I believe our banking system is very good, but often the bank clerks and employees are insufficiently paid. That is a shame; there are young men in the banks who handle thousands of dollars every day and who are not paid a wage commensurate with the importance or responsibility of their services. The Minister of Finance should confer with the heads of the banker's association to see if those salaries cannot be increased.

During the last campaign the government told the people, in my contituency at least, that the Mackenzie King government was doing too much for the west. This statement was made repeatedly in my county by Tory speakers; they said the Liberal government was tied up with the west in political matters and that the east was suffering therefrom.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we on this side of the house are proud to support our leader. We are ready also to give full support to proper government measures if the Prime Minister will do something more than lecture the hon. members of the house.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Gardiner), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. GOULET: I was paired with the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Garland). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is now on the amendment.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you call in the members, because some hon. members may not have been in the chamber when the first vote was taken.

Mr. SPEAKER: Call in the members.

Mr. BENNETT: This must not be regarded as a precedent. Once the doors are closed, they are closed for an entire division.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This is a separate division. When the doors were closed at a quarter past eight, members were here for the vote that was then called. It is very likely that some hon. members have come in since that time, and they are entitled to their votes.

Mr. BENNETT: The question was put, including the two amendments. The amendments were read. The question on the amendment to the amendment has been decided, and the question is now on the amendment.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The Speaker has decided to call in the members.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not know he had.

Mr. DUFF: The rule is quite clear with regard to divisions. When the amendment to the amendment is put and voted upon, then Your Honour is supposed to put the amendment. After that Your Honour asks for the yeas and nays, and if a sufficient number rise, you must ring for a division. Every vote is a separate one, and the bell must be rung so that the members may come in.

Mr. LAVERGNE: May I call attention to the fact that nobody on the other side rose?

Mr. SPEAKER: It might be that some members who did not wish to vote on the amendment to the amendment would expect a call for the vote on the amendment and the main motion. I think in this instance the fair way would be to treat each motion separately.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Mackenzie King).

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): Before the vote is declared, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that there are some members of the house present who have not voted.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Name them.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill)—

Mr. SPEAKER: My understanding of the rule is that hon. members may refrain from voting if they see fit.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I would draw the attention of Your Honour to rule 68, which says:

If a member who has heard the question put does not vote, and the attention of the Speaker is directed to the fact, the latter will call upon him to declare on which side he votes; and his name will be recorded accordingly.

That will be found on page 25 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms.

Mr. SPEAKER: If he does not choose to vote, what then?

Mr. CASGRAIN: We will see then, but we should ask him first.

Mr. GARDINER: Arising out of the point of order, may I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the ruling of the former Speaker? The former Speaker ruled—he ruled several times to this effect—that a member, even if he had heard the question put, was not forced to vote. There is no rule of the house that I know of by which a member can be forced to vote.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker. There is a rule at page 25, No. 68, and it is there for a purpose. Even if in one or two cases a former Speaker ruled differently, there is no reason why we should depart from the rule generally. The rule, I repeat, is there for a certain purpose; it is part of the rules and forms by which we in this house are governed. Rule No. 68, which I have cited, is there for the purpose of enabling the house to ascertain how each individual member will vote on a particular question. I ask for your ruling on the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOURASSA: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, as this is a matter of privilege for members of the house, and as the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) has thought fit to make it a question of order, I would respectfully remind you that rules are from time to time interpreted by Speakers in the House of Commons, both in England and here, and that usages sometimes become rules. For example, pairs are not recognized under the rules of the House of Commons in England or here. Several times to my knowledge members have availed themselves of their natural right and privilege, when they did not feel like voting either for or against a question, not to vote at all, which is more courageous than going behind the curtain and concealing oneself. I shall not vote, and it will take a squad of police to force me to do so against my will and my liberty.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): I think probably the difference, Mr. Speaker, between this occasion and the other occasions to which my hon. friends have referred is the fact that on this occasion the attention of the Speaker was drawn to the occurrence before the vote was declared. On the other occasions it was after the declaration of the vote.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I omitted to quote another paragraph on the same page 25 of Beauchesne's Rules and Forms, paragraph 69, which reads as follows:

Under ancient custom, refusal to vote was considered a serious parliamentary offence, but the practice was changed in 1906 by the British house adopting a standing order whereby a member is not obliged to vote. That standing order does not apply to the Canadian commons. The practice has not been changed in Canada, where every member who has heard the question put is bound to vote.

Mr. SPEAKER: Rule 68 is as follows:

If a member who has heard the question put does not vote, and the attention of the Speaker is directed to the fact, the latter will call upon him to declare on which side he votes; and his name will be recorded accordingly.

Up to the present the Speaker's attention has not been called to the fact that any member in particular did not vote.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the statement to be a general one.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): I mentioned the hon. member for Labelle, the hon. member for Acadia, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the rule of this Canadian House of Commons, the Speaker's attention having been drawn specifically to the fact that the hon. members having heard the question have not voted, I now call upon them respectively to declare on which side they vote.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Respect the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: My attention having been drawn to the fact that the hon. member for Acadia, having heard the question, did not vote, I call upon him to declare on which side he votes.

Mr. GARDINER: I am paired with the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer).

Mr. VENIOT: I would call the attention of Your Honour to the fact that the following members who were present in the house when the question was put have not voted: the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael), the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich). I submit, Mr. Speaker, that they all should be asked to declare how they would vote.

Mr. SPEAKER: My attention has been called by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) to the fact that the hon. member for Kindersley, having heard the question put, has not voted. I call upon the hon. member for Kindersley to declare on which side he votes.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am paired with the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell).

Mr. CASGRAIN: How would you have voted?

Mr. SPEAKER: My attention has been called by the hon. member for Gloucester to the fact that the hon. members for Wetaskiwin, Vegreville, Macleod, Bow River, Peace River, and Southeast Grey, have not voted, having heard the question put. I call upon any of these hon. members who are not paired to declare on which side they vote. I commence with the hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

I call next upon the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich).

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I was paired with the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr Irvine).

Mr. IRVINE: I am not paired, and I am not declaring.

Mr. SPEAKER: I call upon the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member for Southeast Grey and the hon. member for Macleod, having heard the question put and not being paired, to declare on which side they vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. member for Kindersley has said that he was paired with myself. I am paired with him.

Mr. DUFF: There can be no pair when both members are in the house.

Mr. MALONEY: This vote is a climax to a debate which has kept us here for forty days.

Mr. DUFF: And forty nights.

Mr. MALONEY: If certain hon. members who have taken up a very large part of the time of the house see fit to refrain from voting and to treat the matter as a joke, as many on this side have treated the debate since the commencement, I believe we should let the matter pass.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The rule which my hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay has quoted from Beauchesne is a regulation of this house. If we do not respect our own rules, how can we expect the people of Canada to respect our laws?

Mr. SPEAKER: The Speaker has now discharged his duty with respect to the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps nothing more serious has arisen since I have been in parliament. The authority of the Chair is challenged, is defied openly by members of this house. The house must then do what the rules require. You will name, Mr. Speaker, the members thus in contempt. The Sergeant-at-Arms will touch each of them on the shoulder and they will be retired from this house. I was sitting in the Imperial conference when the Prime Minister of England left the conference and went into the chamber of the House of Commons and moved the suspension of a member of his own party; for there are matters that transcend party and the rules of this house is one of them. We can have no House of Commons worthy of the name, we cannot maintain its traditions, if for a moment we allow any consideration other than the well-being of this chamber and the authority of its rules to govern our conduct on this occasion. I appeal to the fairness of the hon. gentlemen. They knew there could be no such thing as two hon. members pairing with one another when they are both in the chamber. My hon. friends knew that. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is an old and valued member of this house and familiar with its procedure as few men are. In the name of the great traditions of the House of Commons, its fair name and fame, I appeal to the members concerned that they do not thus openly disregard the rules and established procedure of the House of Commons.

Mr. BOURASSA: The appeal made by the Prime Minister I think entitles me as a matter of privilege quietly but firmly to state the reason for the position I took.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes, it is a question of privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: A similar situation may confront any member of this house one of these days. I would ask my hon. friends to remember the old proverb that a threat to the liberty of one is a threat to the liberty of all.

An hon. MEMBER: Retire.

Mr. BOURASSA: Mr. Speaker, since I have been a member of this house I have myself witnessed at least two occasions that I can recall on which members refused to vote—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes. The attention of Mr. Speaker was called to the matter and he stated from the chair that although the rule was there, no sanction had ever been given to it and therefore it could not be enforced. I therefore came to the conclusion that it was considered by hon. members as one of those rules which are not strictly applied. If the incident had not occurred in my presence what I would have done in this instance is what I have done in other instances; I would have stepped out into the hall. I would not have done so, however, to shirk the vote, because when I addressed the house after the leader of the opposition moved the amendment I gave the reasons why I could not support or oppose such an amendment. I made my reasons clear, and in the attitude I have taken to-night I have done what I saw done in this house during the session of 1926. I shall not name any hon. member, but there are in this house to-night hon. members who then did exactly as we have done on this occasion. The attention of your predecessor, Mr. Speaker, was invited to the fact that certain hon. members had not voted and he made the statement I have just referred to. Some hon. members may not have heard it, but I heard it positively. His ruling surprised me, and for that reason I went to his chambers the next day and talked the matter over with him. He told me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BOURASSA: He told me that it was one of those rules which was not strictly applied. Otherwise I would not have taken the attitude I took to-night. I think generally speaking I have been respectful of all rules of the house which have been observed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BOURASSA: If you please, Mr. Speaker, I have the right to appeal to you. If Mr. Speaker tells us he does not regard—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BOURASSA: If he tells us—

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member for Labelle kindly to desist. If hon. members are going to put the Speaker into the position of naming them, no matter how distasteful it may be to him, I must proceed to carry out that duty. Under the rules when a member is named he has the privilege of making an explanation. I should like to think that the hon. members who have refrained from voting would see their way clear now to declare to the Speaker on which side they vote rather than to force the house to take action under the rules. If hon. members persist in refraining from voting and from declaring on which side they vote, I am obliged to hold that those hon. members are transgressing the rules of the house and are out of order. If they persist in remaining out of order there is nothing left for me to do but to name them, with the consequences as set out by the rules of the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I am one of those—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre states he is rising to a point of order. He will be given an opportunity to state his point.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In this particular instance I declared myself but I do believe that on previous occasions the Speaker has ruled—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do believe that on previous occasions the Speaker has ruled as indicated by the hon. member for Labelle. In the past there have been hon. members who have taken advantage of his ruling and have abstained from voting. Under those circumstances I think Mr. Speaker should carefully consider the precedent set up by his predecessor before taking the drastic action of naming the hon. members. It often happens that certain of our laws lapse and become inoperative, and this appears to be one of them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has raised no point of order. As I understand it there is no point of order before the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that your decision with regard to the rule that has been called to your attention is a point of order. I think the interpretation given to this rule by previous Speakers ought to have some weight as well as the letter of the law. I would urge that that be taken into consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. During the tenure of office of your predecessor I remember two occasions, as stated by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), when members present did not vote, and the fact being called to the attention of His Honour he ruled that they need not vote unless they so desired. It was on that occasion that the members in this corner refused to vote on the amendment then before the house. To-night, on the basis of that ruling, as they were not interested in the amendment they did not vote either for or against it. Now, sir, before you put the question on the amendment we could have withdrawn if we did not want to vote, but relying upon the ruling to which I have referred we remained in our seats and abstained from voting. We do not wish to transgress the rules; on the contrary, we feel that we should be amenable to them; but in view of the misconception which has arisen because of the ruling of the former Speaker, I think our abstention from voting on this occasion might very well be overlooked. Then if your ruling is that in the future we must vote if we hear the question put, we shall know how to govern ourselves.

Mr. SPEAKER: No record of the ruling referred to has as yet been produced to me. I remember the occasion last session when my attention was called to the fact that a member had not voted, but that was after the vote had been announced and the count made. This is the first occasion to my knowledge on which the rule has been invoked at the proper time.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Speaker, I remember the occasion referred to by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: Just a minute please. May I make a suggestion to end this deadlock? It may perhaps prevent us from being placed in a position in which we will appear ridiculous. I suggest that we follow the practice that obtains in the British Columbia legislature. There when a man does not vote he is counted as having voted in the affirmative.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As every hon. member knows, His Honour the Speaker has, above all other duties, the duty of enforcing the rules of the house, and in the discharge of that duty the speaker has the right to expect the support of every hon. member. I wish on this occasion very strongly to support Your Honour in any decision which will serve to enforce the rules of the house and the procedure as they appear in printed form. May I, however, mention this circumstance? Some hon. members appear to have been under a misapprehension as to what the rules were owing to a practice which they allege was followed in previous parliaments. We are at the beginning of a new parliament, and on that account it is advisable that regardless of what may have occurred in the past we should begin in the right way. It is all important therefore that the decision of His Honour the Speaker, if it is right, should be upheld at this time. If hon. members are prepared to say that they themselves conscientiously believed they were in the right when on this particular vote, they abstained from voting, so far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I should be satisfied were they exempted with respect to this vote, but not with respect to any future vote. I do think it would be a mistake to fall into the practice, which unfortunately some hon. members seem prepared to do, of having the exception govern in more cases than the rule itself; to have a rule honoured mainly in the breach. It is an advantage to the House of Commons and to the country to know how every member feels and where every member stands, on every question that comes to a division in the house, and on division his vote should be recorded. If a member does not wish to declare where he stands, it is his privilege to absent himself and take the consequences that follow upon abstention; but if he is in the house he should record his vote. I will support you, Mr. Speaker, in enforcing that rule, but if hon. members state they would not have remained in the house had they known that they would be obliged to vote, I hope, Your Honour, will feel that on this particular occasion they might be exempted and that you will not find it necessary to go to the length of naming them.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has taken a position which I fully expected he would take and which I think is wholly in accordance with the obligations which both he and I owe to this parliament. Section 286 of the rules deals with the result of a member being named, and the unpleasant duty then would fall upon the leader of the House of Commons, whoever he might be at the moment, to make the motion which would suspend the hon. member so named. Since this incident occurred I have been turning over in my mind what should be done to mete out justice to everyone. I cannot quite agree with what the right hon. leader of the opposition has said, but I suggest that this house adopt, in part, the principle of what he proposed. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and others have said that but for a previous ruling they would have absented themselves during this division, I would suggest that by unanimous consent Your Honour permit them to retire, which would in a sense meet the proposal of my right hon. friend opposite.

Mr. DUFF: Some of them said they were paired.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; but as has already been pointed out, being both in the house they could not be paired.

Mr. DUFF: Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT: I attribute that to the excitement of the moment.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They wanted to get under cover.

Mr. BENNETT: I think by unanimous consent those hon. gentlemen may be allowed to withdraw from the chamber. If my right hon. friend thinks it would be a reasonable vindication of the rules and of the rights and privileges of this house, which are as dear to my right hon. friend and to everyone as to myself, I think such action as I propose would meet the situation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I would formally ask, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members who have abstained from voting be permitted, by the unanimous consent of this house, to retire before the vote is announced.

Mr. POWER: So long as that is not taken as a precedent.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: I thank my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) for that suggestion. I adopt the language of the right hon. leader of the opposition in saying that in future we must treat the rules as they are, and as they should be administered, but I think it would be found that in one of the cases to which reference was made, the attention of the Speaker was drawn to the fact, after the division had been declared that an hon. member had not voted. That is my memory of the occasion.

Mr. BOURASSA: Not in the first instance.

Mr. SPEAKER: Notwithstanding the fact that hon. members refrained from voting after the question was put, and were out of order in so doing, I hesitated to call them out of order and to name them because of the very serious consequences to any member so named. Some of those hon. members have explained that by a former ruling they believed themselves to be in order in remaining in the chamber while the vote was taken, without declaring on which side they voted and without voting, otherwise they would not have been in the chamber when the vote was taken. By the suggestion of the right hon. leader of the opposition and the right hon. Prime Minister they now have an opportunity of withdrawing if they do not wish to take part in the vote, and I suggest that they take advantage of that opportunity now.

And the members having withdrawn:

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I declare the amendment lost, yeas: 73; nays, 116.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question now is on the main motion.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, before this vote is proceeded with, contrary to my habit and very much contrary to my inclination, I desire to take part for a second time in this debate. Owing to some statements that have been made and owing to the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) I feel it incumbent upon me to offer a few comments and to make a brief statement. I may remind the house that the amendment having been disposed of, it is fully in accord with the rules that I should now speak to the main motion.

I think I can characterize some of the statements made by the Prime Minister in respect of this corner of the house as being in the first place rather unjustifiable and in respect of a part of his attitude at least, almost one might say deliberately or gratuitously offensive to some of the members here. I am not now making any comment upon the utterances of the Prime Minister as addressed to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), I am taking no part, and I intend to take no part, in any exchange of political animosities. However, I may remind the house that during the entire debate every hon. member in this corner of the chamber who spoke refrained most assiduously and most meticulously from making any statement of a condemnatory character. They have refrained from taking an attitude of partisanship. They have outlined conditions as they knew them to exist; they have offered certain suggestions, as they thought, tending towards their amelioration, and to-day—I am sorry to say it—when at last the Prime Minister takes part in the debate he throws back in our faces our offer of friendly cooperation. He repudiates the assistance we sought to give in meeting the conditions which prevail, and he characterizes our statements as exaggerated, as being not according to facts, as tending not towards the betterment but towards the imperilling of the future of this country. He characterizes our statements in regard to conditions with which we are absolutely familiar as not only exaggerated but as carrying weight throughout this country and throughout the world only in virtue of the position which we occupy and not by virtue of either the common sense, the knowledge or I might say the accuracy of statement on the part of the members themselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wonder just what solace it will bring to the hearts of men and women at home who, whatever the Prime Minister may say, are looking to this parliament for help. They are suffering, and I wonder what comfort it will bring them to have it stated that except in those districts in western Canada where for years there have been crop failures, there is no farmer who has not been guilty of wild speculation in the widest sense but is to-day comfortable and prosperous and happy.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman is referring to anything I said this afternoon, I direct attention to the fact that that is not what was said.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am speaking from memory, and I am very glad to accept the correction, because certainly that was the interpretation I put upon what the Prime Minister said this afternoon. If it is a wrong interpretation I am very glad indeed to withdraw the statement. I will put it as carefully as possible, and my right hon. friend knows I am not often guilty of wild statements. I did understand the Prime Minister to say that except for the results of speculation, using the word in the widest sense, farmers who had not suffered from repeated crop failures were, as a class, in prosperous and happy circumstances. I think I am doing no injustice to the Prime Minister when I say that, because I think I am using almost his exact words.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to bring forward any individual cases. I agree with the right hon. Prime Minister in that one may bring individual cases which are exceptions to the rule and which may prove anything. One may bring individual cases of intense hardship in times of wide prosperity. One may bring individual cases of comparative affluence in times of general penury, and these cases will prove nothing. I do say, however, from the intimate knowledge which I possess of that part of Alberta in which I have resided for forty years, that as a general rule and taking the great majority of the citizens there, they are not in a position either of comfort, of happiness or of affluence, nor have any great percentage of them been guilty of speculation even in the widest sense of the term. They are men who have been working and are working to-day, men who have done their best, but owing to the conditions which we know exist, conditions in relation to low prices, which have not returned the cost of production during the last year or two, they find themselves at the moment without the necessary funds with which to carry on their farming operations.

May I say this further, Mr. Speaker, that when I listened to the Prime Minister, in reference to the enormous wealth which has been created in those provinces during the last three years, I wondered if they were the same three provinces which I heard described not so many months ago as being in a state of distress owing to the misgovernment of the ten years preceding. Conditions have not changed since then except for the worse—not because of any fault of the government, but rather because of the operation of natural forces and the continual lowering of prices.

I have stated and re-stated the facts which I know to be true. I have expressed the disappointment—I shall not say the regret—which I felt at the refusal of the offer made in good part by hon. members in this house of cooperation and assistance rather than a threat of partisan warfare. We regret that, because we had intended so to conduct ourselves in the house during this session that we would have demonstrated the fact that we place the welfare of the country above party warfare, and we had hoped that that would be the attitude adopted at least for this session. If that is not to be the attitude adopted, it seems to me that little hope is offered. If we are to be told that no need exists, then in the opinion of the government no policy is necessary to relieve that distress, and, that being the case, how can I look upon the speech from the throne? It has become what I refused to call it five weeks ago, a hollow, watery grave. I voted against the amendment because I believed that it offered nothing of value to my people or to Canada, and I must stand in my place and vote against the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne because I feel no gratitude or can see no hope as I read its terms or as I listen to the speeches delivered thereon.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention again to address the house on the subject matter now under discussion, but I feel it my duty to do so because of the statements made this afternoon by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). One has only to go back twelve months or so to the time when the present Prime Minister was the leader of the opposition and when those now supporting him were in opposition to the then Liberal government to recall the debates staged on going into supply for the purpose of trying to make the government of the day take cognizance of the distress then prevailing in many parts of Canada. It is a curious thing that the conditions which existed while a party was in opposition suddenly and for some unaccountable reason, change when they come into office and assume the responsibility of government.

When speaking this afternoon the Prime Minister directed some of his remarks to this corner of the house. He said: The exaggerated statements of conditions in the west are not true in any way, shape or form. I do not know where the Prime Minister obtains his information, unless it be from the secretary of the Canadian Bankers' Association. If he believes that such information is absolutely correct then I can understand the position he adopted this afternoon. I say without fear of contradiction that those who have recently had the opportunity of visiting the west and meeting the people actually living on the land ought to know more about conditions than those who have not had such an opportunity. It is unfortunate that important or so-called important persons from eastern Canada seem to obtain their information with regard to conditions in western Canada from such places as the lobby of the Palliser hotel in Calgary. They do not seem to be given the opportunity of getting out among the people and finding out just how they are being affected by present conditions. Under these circumstances perhaps they may be excused if they make certain rash statements, because they probably believe that the information which they have obtained is correct.

I made a statement yesterday which I intend to discuss for a moment or two. It was as follows:

> May I say also, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment if the farmers of western Canada to-day were forced to liquidate, eighty per cent of them would be insolvent, notwithstanding all that has been said by my good friend from Marquette (Mr. Mullins).

I sincerely believed that statement to be true, but further on in my remarks I made this reservation:

> If price levels get better they may be able to get away from that condition but, sir, if this condition continues for another twelve months my advice to the western farmer will be that his only hope is to go through bankruptcy.

I made that statement in all sincerity and I do not appreciate the Prime Minister questioning my veracity.

The Prime Minister called the attention of the house this afternoon to the tremendous volume of wealth produced by the western farmer. He quoted figures to the effect that during the last three years there had been produced new wealth to the tune of $1,900,000,000, and that new mineral wealth had been produced to the extent of $100,000,000, or a total of $2,000,000,000. He asked the question: Where has all this wealth gone to? May I say that as far as the farmer is concerned, the man who really produced this wealth, it did not go into the purchase of expensive automobiles. In my opinion there is no person in Canada more entitled to an automobile than the man living on a farm, ten, twenty, thirty or forty miles away from a town. I know something about what an automobile means to a man on a farm, and I say this, if I were to farm some distance from town and could not afford an old tin Lizzie of some description, I would not farm very long. An automobile has become one of the necessities of farm life. The farmer appreciates the convenience it offers, and in view of the fact that he is the producer of new wealth I say that it ill behooves the Prime Minister to point to the farmer as having squandered his wealth on the purchase of automobiles.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not at any time say that he had squandered his wealth. I did not even suggest that. I merely said that men possessing $300,000,000 worth of cars were not poor.

Mr. GARDINER: I accept the Prime Minister's correction, and I gladly take back the words which I used in that regard.

The Prime Minister, I believe, also made the statement, not this afternoon but when he was speaking earlier in the session, that he wondered why the western farmer, after having produced so much wealth, did not save. If the Prime Minister had an opportunity of going out to that western country and homesteading, opening up a new farm and going through all the trials and troubles which that entails: if he had had that experience, I am satisfied he never would have asked such a foolish question. It is only about twenty-five years since the opening up of western Canada began. Prior to that time we had a fringe of settlement along the main line of the Canadian Pacific, along the line from Regina to Prince Albert and also along the line from Calgary to Edmonton, so that the west is practically a new country. Indeed, it is being developed every day.

What is the position of the man who goes on new land in western Canada? He has the hope that he is going to make a home for himself and his family. It is true that we had a few speculators, but the primary hope of the person who goes on a homestead or takes up new land in the west is to create a home for himself and his family. During the first few years they are on those farms, they do not spend much money. I know how some of those people have lived in order to develop the property which they had under their control at that particular time. I know the aspirations of those people; I know the moment they made any money on those new farms they put it back into new developments, such as breaking up more land, clearing bush, fencing, or adding to their homes or barns or granaries as the case might be. Why? Because the only money they had to develop the property was what they earned from it. That is the spirit of the west. We are not yet old enough in the west to have accumulated great wealth. Therefore when the farmers of the west have a good year, if after having met their liabilities in full or in part, they have any money left, that money is reinvested in their property for the purpose of further developing it. If that had not been so, western Canada would not have been half as well developed as it is to-day, nor would the business from western Canada for goods of eastern manufacture be more than 50 per cent of what it has been in the past.

Let us see where this great volume of new wealth has gone. I am willing to admit that we can pass through western Canada and find possibly quite a few farmers with bank accounts. The Prime Minister this afternoon spoke of tens of thousands. In Alberta we have about 90,000 farmers; in Saskatchewan we have more; in Manitoba we have not quite as many; but even if we assume that 25 per cent of those farmers have bank accounts, that does not signify that conditions in the west are as they should be. Nevertheless, I am not satisfied that even 25 per cent of the farmers have bank accounts. Where has this great volume of wealth gone? I will try to tell the house. It has gone to uphold what I term a debt-creating system. We have to-day what we term a debt-creating system. At some future date, when I have more time, I propose to discuss this particular matter, but at present I merely make the reference to it. That debt-creating system is a system which, whether we like it or not, creates debts we cannot help ourselves. The big bulk of the products of the western farms has gone to support this debt-creating system instead of supporting the farmers and their families. A great deal of it has gone in high interest rates. When you ask farmers to pay 8, 9 or 10 per cent for long-term money and when the profits of the farm are not large at any time, you can understand that even a profitable year does not mean very much if the farmer happens to have many debts. A great deal of it goes also in bank interest, not at the legal rate set out in the Bank Act, namely, 7 per cent, but at the rate of 8, 9 or 10 per cent or sometimes even higher. May I call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the bankers of Canada are the greatest law breakers we have? They break the law oftener and with greater impunity than any other class I know of. If the Prime Minister wishes to do something really worth while for Canada, I suggest to him that he put a penalty clause in the interest section of the Bank Act. Up to the present the bankers have been the greatest law breakers I know of; they break the law with impunity and forethought, but that does not excuse them. When a farmer goes into a bank to secure credit for spring work, Mr. Banker will hand him a note with interest at 8 per cent, 9 per cent, 10 per cent or sometimes even a higher rate. That is where another substantial proportion of this great new wealth goes that the farmer creates.

Let us take the cities—for instance—that lovely city, the home of the Prime Minister, one of the most beautiful cities in western Canada. Look at the palatial buildings, the magnificent homes that one can find in any part of the city of Calgary if one has the opportunity to take a short drive. The same applies to Edmonton, Saskatoon and all those western cities. How does the Prime Minister imagine that all those fine buildings were built? Where does the wealth come from to build those beautiful cities? Where does the wealth come from to uphold the institutions and the municipal governments of those great cities? It comes from the wealth which the people of western Canada produce, and nowhere else. True, in the first place loans may have been made for the purpose of erecting the buildings, but all the interest charges against them, all the taxes, all the city improvements and everything else in connection with them, are maintained by the real wealth which is produced in western Canada. That is where the greatest proportion of the wealth goes that the farmers create. This being the case, perhaps the Prime Minister will begin to realize that some of his remarks this afternoon were at least very ill-advised. I hope he will. That, however, is only by the way.

The Prime Minister also tells us that one of the great troubles of the west is due to speculation. I do not at all favour speculation; indeed, I am very much opposed to it because financial manipulation produces no new wealth. But the Prime Minister intimates that the farmers of western Canada have been guilty of speculation. There is, of course, no question that some of the farmers have been guilty of speculation, but only to a very slight extent, because within my memory since I have been in the west—and I have been farming for twenty-nine years—I know very few farmers who have had sufficient money even to put up a margin.

I come to another point in this speculation proposition. There has grown up in western Canada in recent years a different method from that which formerly prevailed by which the farmer handles his wheat. During the early years of my residence in the west we sometimes did hold our wheat over, putting it in the terminal elevators at the head of the lakes and paying storage on it in the hope that the price would be higher in the spring; in fact that was the usual method of procedure in those days. But after a little while the Winnipeg grain exchange taught us a better way of doing things. They taught us to sell our wheat in the fall, take a small portion of the proceeds from the sale of it and buy enough margins to cover the volume of wheat that we had sold, so that if wheat rose in the spring we would get the spring price without paying storage and insurance charges. If the Prime Minister calls that speculation, I admit that quite a good deal of it has been done in western Canada in recent years. But if the Prime Minister does not like that form of speculation, all he has to do is to see to it that trading in grain futures in this country is eliminated, and eliminated as early as possible; and as far as I am concerned if he takes that view and adopts that policy, I shall be one of the first to congratulate him and help him on his way.

The Prime Minister this afternoon dealt with the position of the former government in regard to immigration. When it was pointed out to him that some of his own supporters had been in the habit of advocating more and more immigration he took refuge behind this statement, that the official opposition never advocated more immigration.

Mr. BENNETT: No, no. The hon. gentleman must certainly know that that is not what was said. It was directed to the observations of General McRae. He was named as such. The hon. member will be good enough to remember that.

Mr. GARDINER: I understood that the Prime Minister pointed out this afternoon that in a previous year a substantial amount of immigration had come from central Europe, and he gave the figure I think of 130,000.

Mr. BENNETT: No, 104,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Thank you. He stated that most of those people to-day were being fed by the country or by charitable organizations. So far as immigration is concerned, I think that the immigration policy of this country for the last few years has been rotten. I use that term because of the fact that immigration has brought upon this country a greater burden than we should have had to carry. But I do not think that the Prime Minister should try to get away from the responsibility that properly falls upon his shoulders because of the fact that very many members of his own party were continually calling for more and more immigration.

The only other point with which I wish to deal is with regard to the assistance which the government has given to western Canada. It is quite true that this government has devised a policy, and I congratulate them upon it, for assistance in the way of seed, feed and so forth. I think that the government has done very well in that regard. But may I point out to the Prime Minister this great weakness in that proposal. In order to secure seed relief or feed, and so forth, it is necessary for the individual to make an application to the municipal council, and I know that many municipal councils feel that because of the unpaid taxes due to their municipalities and the obligations which are now upon them they are not justified in even risking being called upon to pay 25 per cent of any ultimate loss that may occur. Consequently, under these circumstances, I believe that many of the farmers of the west will be denied the seed and feed that they require; but of course that probably is not the fault of the present government.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose my hon. friend knows that the municipalities are not at the moment asked to pay anything.

Mr. GARDINER: I quite appreciate that. I said 25 per cent of the ultimate losses. The great problem at the present time, however, is not so much the question of seed and feed. The great problem to-day is bank credit. The farmers require credit to-day more than feed and seed to put a crop in. I know that from actual experience. If you do not happen to be one of the fortunate ones possessing a bank account, it is necessary to go to the bank and secure a loan. That is the greatest immediate problem that I see before western Canada, and my judgment is this: If the people of Canada think that the western wheat crop is of any great value to this country, then it will be necessary for the government to take action along whatever lines they deem expedient to see that reasonable credit is afforded to those who put in crops. That is very important, and it should be done immediately, otherwise it will be of no value.

The Prime Minister this afternoon, in twitting the right hon. leader of the opposition in regard to markets for wheat, pointed with pride to the greater amount of wheat which had been exported by Canada during the last eight months as compared with the previous eight months, and took credit to his government for being able to assist the grain trade and the pools in selling that wheat. But does the house realize that every bushel of wheat shipped out of this country means a dead loss of from 30 to 40 cents a bushel? Yet the Prime Minister prides himself on the attitude which his government has taken in assisting to send wheat out of this country—at a loss of from 30 to 40 cents a bushel. It is always easier to sell a larger amount of wheat when it is cheap, particularly when the price falls below the cost of production, than to sell it at the cost of production or at cost plus a profit.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much profit is there in keeping it ?

Mr. GARDINER: I wish I knew. If my hon. friend could tell me that, he and I might be able to make a little money on the side.

I merely wish to say in closing that I take exception to some of the remarks made by the Prime Minister this afternoon. I believe that they were unwarranted by the actual conditions such as we know them to exist in western Canada.

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I listened with amazement to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Bennett) speaking this afternoon. I wondered could it be just one year ago that we heard the unemployment debate in this house, a debate in which the government of that day showed a complete lack of understanding of conditions in the country. At that time the right hon. gentleman who is now Prime Minister was the leader of the opposition, and he and his colleagues told the house, and in many instances told very well, what the conditions were. Then we went through an election last July. We heard the moaning of the then opposition from coast to coast. The conditions were terrible. They were such that only God's anointed could save the country. There is no use in the Prime Minister now getting up as he did to-day and assuming the air of lecturing this house, particularly this corner of the house. I think the Prime Minister will find as time goes on that the speech which he made this afternoon was an exceedingly unwise one, and one which he will bitterly regret.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Miss MACPHAIL: He may not—he ought. The conditions since the unemployment debate last session and since the election held in July last year have not improved. On the contrary they have steadily become worse. Had the Prime Minister risen in his place to-day in the house and admitted that such was the case and that present conditions required the best efforts of every hon. member of the house he would have won the hearts of hon. members, because even this house has a heart. However he did not do that; he would not admit that serious conditions prevail, conditions with which all working people are familiar. It might do the Prime Minister some good if he went out and became acquainted with the facts. I think it is most unfortunate and ridiculous that the Prime Minister has not seen fit to admit the present condition in Canada. I would think that during the next two or three weeks editorials in our newspapers would make the blunder abundantly clear, even to the ministry who now grace the treasury benches.

During the Easter vacation I happened to be out west. During my visit I had occasion to speak with an alderman of the city of Regina, and he told me that he had attended a council meeting and a meeting of the relief committee which had been working all winter. They were very desirous of closing up their relief measures but they still had 2,300 married men who were without relief or employment. He said the difficulty was that the men were determined not to work for $10 or $15 a month, and that that was all the farmers surrounding the city of Regina were in a position to pay. This gentleman was in a position to view both sides of the question, both from the standpoint of the unemployed and that of the farmer. He said that under the circumstances the farmers could not pay the high wages they had paid in former years. In the spring of the year it is expected that unemployment should ease up. The unemployed men are absorbed in the new spring work on the farms. I was not surprised to read in the newspapers about the riot in Winnipeg. When I was in that city walking along Portage avenue and Main street I saw badly dressed men with nothing to do, just milling around, moving up and down. They were going nowhere, they were not walking fast, but just killing time. They walked one way and then the other. By law they are required to keep moving and that is the way they did it. I am not blaming the Prime Minister for the unemployment and stress, but I am blaming him for not admitting that such a condition exists. Why does he not admit that there are such conditions? It is true that the farmers are not unemployed; they are unpaid. They have plenty of work to do. There has been talk about new wealth which was created in western Canada. Where did it go? It went to provide profits to the people who benefited from the tariff. It went to provide bankers with their large dividends. Hon. members laugh! It may sound amusing, but it really is not a matter to be treated lightly. The wealth of western Canada has gone to provide bankers with dividends, to build fine office buildings such as we see in the cities of Toronto, Montreal, Regina and Calgary. It has gone to provide a better living for other classes in Canada. When the farmer had paid out all these profits he had nothing left for himself.

For a moment or two I want to touch on the subject of immigration. This afternoon I directed a question to the Prime Minister when he was intimating—I hope I am quoting him correctly—

An hon. MEMBER: Be careful.

Miss MACPHAIL: —intimating that the excessive immigration into this country was the fault of the Liberal government. May I say to him that the Liberals have enough to bear without alone carrying that responsibility. I can recall, as can the veterans of this house, that for ten years the hon. members in this corner of the house have said, and never more clearly than in the year 1922, that it was a very foolish policy constantly to bring in immigrants to this country. Let me quote from a speech by the present Prime Minister delivered in the House of Commons on Monday, February 11, 1929. At that time he was making comment on the speech from the throne and complaining there was not enough money spent on immigration. He said:

> We have here one of the largest undeveloped areas of the world; we have a very pressing necessity for more people. There need be no misapprehension about that, notwithstanding what has been said from time to time to the contrary. It will be found that the increase of population in this country, brought about through bringing additional people in, will not only lessen unemployment for those who are now in it, but will increase all employment.

The quotation is much longer, but that is sufficient.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it again; that is good.

Miss MACPHAIL: Look it up—I gave the date, but it is certainly interesting. The date is February 11, 1929. The statement is to be found on page 22.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is my birthday.

Miss MACPHAIL: In the same debate the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) said at page 2746:

> My complaint is not so much that the number of British immigrants is not larger, as that our immigration of all classes is much too small. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we could take many times the numbers of people of all kinds than we are getting at the present time.

It would seem that the government learned. Its immigration policy of to-day is a good one, since it is not one at all. It is too bad hon. members opposite did not take the same attitude ten years ago, and the Liberal government also. For the Prime Minister to intimate as he did to-day that his party had no responsibility in regard to immigration simply means that he does not think that hon. members in this house are intelligent. Strange as it may seem, we are. I seem to have been directing the most of my remarks to the Prime Minister, but may I add something further. It may be true that because of membership in this house the words of hon. members are given more prominence and weight than the wisdom of their utterances merits; that statement applies also to prime ministers.

The house divided on the main motion (Mr. Cormier) which was agreed to on the following division:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Administrator by such members of the house as are of the honourable the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SPIRIT RIVER AND GRIMSHAW BRANCH LINES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That, it is expedient to extend the time for the commencement of construction and completion of the lines of railway which the Northern Alberta Railways Company was authorized to construct by section 11 of Schedule B to the Northern Alberta Railways Act, 1929—namely, an extension of the main line of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company from Spirit River, and a branch line of the Central Canada Railway from, at or near Grimshaw.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEEES COMPENSATION

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act to extend the benefits of the act to all employees in the service of His Majesty excepting those for whom provision is made under other statutes, and to extend the interpretation of the term "compensation" to include any benefits, expenses or allowances that are provided for under provincial compensation acts.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

SALARIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Salaries Act to provide that the salary of the Solicitor General shall be increased from seven thousand dollars per annum to ten thousand dollars per annum as from 7th August, 1930.

He said: His Excellency the Administrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to favourable consideration of the house.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the members of the government are referring to His Excellency the Administrator. Should they not say His Excellency the Governor General?

Mr. GUTHRIE: At the time these resolutions were submitted they were submitted to the Administrator. His Excellency had not then been sworn in.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Customs Act in respect to discounts or deductions to be allowed in estimating the value for duty; to provide for power to examine witnesses on oath, and to pay their reasonable travelling expenses; and for the imposition of penalties and prevention of smuggling operations.

He said: His Excellency the Adminstrator, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I do not wish to raise mere technicalities, Mr. Speaker, but I do submit that there is no Administrator at the present time; His Excellency the Governor General is in office. These resolutions ought to be approved and recommended to the house by His Excellency the Governor General since there is no Administrator at the present time.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): These resolutions were approved by the Administrator on the dates they bear; therefore they were recommended to the house by him and are so marked. The resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Immigration was recommended by His Excellency the Governor General. Any resolution presented prior to April 4 was submitted to the Administrator and recommended by him.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The ministers have stated that His Excellency the Administrator recommended the resolutions. There is no Administrator at the present time. His Excellency the Governor General assumed all obligations that had been taken by the Administrator, and I should think, as a first act of His Excellency, this should be so recognized.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid the right hon. gentleman has not quite followed. His Excellency the Administrator approved and recommended the resolutions on the dates appearing on the order paper. The Governor General then had not been sworn in. The Governor General cannot now go back; the recommendations have been made. If we had finished the debate on the address prior to April 4, they would have been thus dealt with. The fact that we did not so conclude the debate does not change the further fact that these recommendations were made by the then representative of the sovereign. The last resolution appearing on the order paper was recommended by the Governor General.

Motion agreed to.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the Soldier Settlement Act be amended to abolish the soldier settlement board and provide for the transfer of its powers, functions and privileges to an officer to be called the director of soldier settlement, who shall be paid such salary and at such rate per annum as the governor in council shall fix and allow.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving that you do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply I do so in order to enable the house to go on with its business on Thursday or Friday. When I was in the position now occupied by my right hon. friend opposite I suggested on many occasions that we should take up the estimates as early as possible in order to give ample opportunity for discussion. For that purpose Public Works estimates will be considered first, and if Mr. Speaker now leaves the chair and we discuss an item we will be in a position to go on Thursday or Friday with the estimates of the Department of Public Works. Accordingly I move that the house do now go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Public Works—salaries, $698,925; contingencies, $90,000.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett, the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Wednesday, April 22, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

SEQUESTRATED GERMAN PROPERTY

AGREEENT PROVIDING FOR RELEASE OR RE-TRANSFER TO ORIGINAL OWNERS

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I desire to lay on the table of the house an agreement which was executed at The Hague on the 14th of January, 1930, during the regime of the late government, providing for the release and, if necessary, the re-transfer to the original owners or to the persons deriving title from them of the property, rights and interests originally belonging to them and then subject to the charge created pursuant to the treaty of Versailles, where such property, rights or interests were not already liquid or liquidated, or finally disposed of on June 7, 1929. I have been unable to find that that agreement executed at The Hague was ever produced and laid on the table of the house by the late government.

I also desire to lay upon the table a copy of the protocol to the Hague agreement between the government of the Dominion of Canada and the German Reich dated October 16, 1930, regarding the return of unliquidated, sequestrated German property to which I have just referred.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT RELIEVING MEMBER OF OBLIGATION TO VOTE

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): I desire to give notice to the house that on Tuesday next I shall move that the standing orders of this house be amended by inserting the following as 9 (a):

Upon a division a member is not obliged to vote.

I have given a copy of the notice to the Clerk.

CORRECTION

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma): I notice in the Hansard of yesterday that I am reported as having mentioned the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) as one of those who refrained from voting on the amendment. This was an error. The hon. gentleman voted, and I think it is only fair to him that I should make this explanation.

PRIVILEGE—MR. GARDINER

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Last evening when the vote was being taken there was what we may term an unfortunate occurrence, and some reflection was cast upon members in this corner of the house during the proceedings. I made the statement last evening that members in this corner who sat in the house while the vote on the amendment was being taken did so because of rulings of the former Speaker, the Hon. Mr. Lemieux. I am going to take the opportunity this afternoon to place upon Hansard the rulings upon which we based our action last evening.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member for Acadia wishes to make an explanation of his vote or with regard to something that was imputed to him, that would properly be a question of privilege, but to quote at this stage precedents as to the correctness or incorrectness of the Speaker's ruling is going beyond a question of privilege.

Mr. GARDINER: I am not questioning your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I accept it, and very heartily. I am simply giving the reasons for my conduct last evening, and for that purpose I desire to place on record the rulings of the former Speaker.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. gentleman is out of order. The opportunity was afforded last evening very distinctly and very generously by Your Honour for hon. members to make any statements which they might desire to make. In view also of the notice of motion which has just been given by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), it is perfectly obvious that an ample opportunity will be afforded to the hon. gentleman to make any statement he desires in that connection.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member for Acadia now wishes to quote authorities to explain why his conduct was as it was last evening. If I am correct in my surmise, that is not a question of privilege, and I must rule that he is out of order.

Mr. GARDINER: Then may I call the attention of Your Honour to what I would call the scurrilous attack of a certain newspaper on certain members in this corner of the house because of the proceedings in the house last evening. Is that sufficient to be a question of privilege?

Mr. SPEAKER: The attitude of the hon. members referred to as comprising the group in that corner of the house was thoroughly explained last evening. The hon. member for Labelle, for instance, has said that there were plenty of precedents for what was done last night in the rulings of the former Speaker. All that the hon. member for Acadia is seeking to do now is to repeat that statement and possibly quote from the rulings or give the page numbers where they are to be found in Hansard. I submit that that is not a question of privilege.

Mr. GARDINER: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I can assure the house that at the first opportunity I shall put on Hansard the ruling of the former Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall be very glad indeed if the hon. member will avail himself of the first proper opportunity to do so.

PRIVILEGE—MISS MACPHAIL

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): In the Ottawa Citizen of this morning there is an article by Mr. Charles Bishop, whom I think one might fairly call the czar of the press gallery.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Miss MACPHAIL: Perhaps I should have said the prime minister of the press gallery. In this article, discussing the vote of last night, and speaking of our group, he says:

> They fell back on some precedent that a former Speaker who was a very indulgent man had created when he allowed certain members not to vote.

In case Mr. Bishop does not know the name of the former Speaker, it was the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux. He goes on to say that he is no authority on the rules that I shall read in a moment. He also says that we—> —withdrew amid a noisy demonstration. The galleries could not make out exactly whether it was with cheers or jeers. They came back when the vote was announced.

He concludes this very elevating article with the following paragraph:

> At the end of the day, members filed out into the lobbies discussing the exhilarating episodes of the sitting—the speech of the Prime Minister and the return back-fire, but perhaps even more this most peculiar exhibition of abstention from voting.
> It was considered the more remarkable as being that of supposedly fearless people ordinarily most assertive in their own opinions, and some of whom are inclined to be contemptuous of other opinions.

If that includes Mr. Bishop's, I plead guilty. He goes on:

> While it was condoned in a spirit of tolerance and perhaps excusable on grounds of a precedent justified by no authority on parliamentary usage, it seemed to the onlookers on the floor and in the galleries to suggest certain symptoms of spinal or intestinal deficiency.

I would like to know if Mr. Bishop is a special judge of integrity, that is if the parts of the anatomy to which he referred have anything to do with integrity. Does the fact that he writes for Conservative, Liberal and Independent papers at the same time require a peculiar brand of integrity?

An hon. MEMBER: You ought to know; you do it.

Miss MACPHAIL: I say to hon. members that the report which appeared in the paper this morning is obviously unfair. To have voted for the amendment required no courage. The amendment itself was negatived; our amendment was a substitute and we took our position of abstention because it was the logical position to take. The question of courage did not enter into the matter at all, except that it required more courage not to vote than it did to vote. Any hon. member who does not think that is so ought to try it some time. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, who yesterday got themselves very much excited about the dignity of this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Miss MACPHAIL: That is so. I say it, and I do not take it back.

Mr. BOURASSA: It takes a woman to have courage.

Miss MACPHAIL: Here is a case where the dignity of parliament is being reflected upon by a member of the press gallery who enjoys the privileges of the house. I think if the representatives of the press are granted privileges they should shoulder the responsibilities which go with them. They should use decent language and be fair, or at least make some attempt to be fair to hon. members in the house. Having spent ten years in the House of Commons I care very little what the newspapers say, but this report by Mr. Bishop seemed to me to be going too far. I deeply resent it, and I have risen to say so. Courage is not the thing which this Independent group lack. It might be said that to a far greater extent members of the two older parties lack that quality.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Miss MACPHAIL: It cannot be said of us, however. It may be said that we are foolish and do not stand for the right thing, but we have courage.

PRIVILEGE—MR. HOWARD

On the orders of the day.

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. My attention has been drawn to an item which appears on page 687 of Hansard. I refer to a remark made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) wherein he said that I had misquoted him. I would like to say to the right hon. gentleman that at no time did I intentionally misquote him. I was referring to the question of unemployment insurance, but I was not qualifying it as either contributory or non-contributory. I shall be pleased to insert the word "non-contributory" before those remarks. I regret that my right hon. friend imputed to me any motive such as expressed on that page of Hansard.

On page 679 of Hansard the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) referring to myself, is reported as having said:

He is the kind of Liberal who enjoys protection and wanted and got it for the industries in which he has invested his money.

I say that is not so, Mr. Speaker. I have never asked for protection of any kind, nor has protection ever been granted to me.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am greatly obliged to the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) for his very frank statement, which I accept in the sense in which it is given.
