(8) The Dominion Live Stock branch will assume no financial obligations other than in connection with freight charges or other transportation charges (see clause 9), and in all cases settlement or accepted arrangements therefor will be required to be made as between purchaser and vendor before shipment is made.

(9) In addition to freight charges, the Dominion Live Stock branch will be responsible for other transportation expenses incurred in securing shipments made under this policy, as follows:—

(a) Where the purchaser personally selects a shipment of a carload or more of cattle and supervises the transportation of same to destination, he will be allowed towards his expenses an amount equivalent to the cost of a continuous single trip railway fare from point of loading to destination point.

(b) Where purchases are made through the other channels stated in clause 6, and an attendant is required to accompany and attend the stock to destination, the Dominion Live Stock branch will furnish such attendant, if required, providing that the purchaser will agree to pay the attendant a wage of $4 per diem for the round trip and to supply him with a continuous single trip railway ticket back to the final point of loading, and a refund will be made to the purchaser of the cost of such railway ticket on presentation of receipt secured from the railway agent for the purchase of the ticket.

(10) As shipments of only pure-bred cattle are eligible the purchaser must obtain from the seller, with respect to each animal, a shipping voucher such as may be detached from the registration certificate of such animal. These vouchers when properly filled in and presented to the railway agent at the time and place of making shipment will entitle the shipment to be carried at the reduced freight rates applicable to pure-bred cattle. The reduced rates, as applied to carload shipments carried in standard live stock cars, or standard box cars, will apply on all shipments made under this policy.

(11) To secure refund of freight charges or railway fares, as described, and as available under this policy, the consignee of consignees must forward to the Chief, Cattle Division, Live Stock branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, the following:—

SWIFT CURRENT EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Mr. BOTHWELL:

1. What success has been met with in seeding down with grass or sweet clover, weedy land at the Swift Current experimental farm; (a) with a nurse crop, (b) without a nurse crop?
2. What class of grass seed and what variety of sweet clover seem to thrive and stand the winter best at this experimental farm, having regard also to the quality of the fodder obtained therefrom?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Seeding down grass or sweet clover with a nurse crop on rented, weedy land has not been successful at Swift Current.

No trials were made in seeding without a nurse crop on weedy land but were undertaken on the experimental station. The yields of sweet clover over a period of the last three years, averaged ·51 of a ton per acre when sown with wheat and ·91 of a ton when sown alone. Over a period of eight years, sweet clover seeded with a nurse crop averaged ·89 of a ton per acre. Over this same period brome grass averaged ·79 of a ton and western rye an average of ·97 of a ton per acre. Owing to dry weather the yields of sweet clover, brome or western rye have not been satisfactory at Swift Current.

2. Brome grass and western rye grass stand the winter and dry weather better than other grasses in that district. Brome grass, however, is difficult to control. Arctic sweet clover seems to be the most hardy and most satisfactory.

5. On what routes is first class mail matter only carried, and what routes carry first class, second class and other mail matter?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Data is not yet available covering the entire fiscal year 1930-31. Hence the information hereunder is calculated for the calendar year 1930.

The total weight of mail carried under air mail contracts, and on special emergency air mail flights during calendar year 1930 amounted to 527,212 lbs.

Mr. RYCKMAN: This order would have to be adopted with certain reservations. The first question can be answered without difficulty; Russia is the only country affected in that way. With regard to questions 2, 3 and 5 asking for orders, regulations, bulletins and instructions issued under sections 35, 36 and 41 of the Customs Act, as the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) knows, it is not possible to give the desired information as the transactions with the department are individual transactions, and it is contrary to usage and practice to give out any information that would divulge the private business of any individual or concern. Any information obtained by our officers from exporters has to be treated as confidential and is only obtained by them on that understanding. No decisions have been given by the minister under these sections.

With regard to question 4, under the provisions of new section 37, assented to on September 22, 1930, a rate of discount from list prices of automobiles was fixed by order in council P.C. 297, dated February 19, 1931.

As to No. 6: Since new section 43 came into force the value for duty of certain products when entered under the general or intermediate tariff has been fixed under the authority of orders in council.

With this information, and such other information as can be readily given without interfering with the practice of the department in the past, great care will be taken to comply with the wishes of the hon. member.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not asking for the names of individuals; I am simply asking for the regulations and orders governing the action of the department in this connection. I am quite well aware that it is not the custom to give information regarding individual cases. If what I have asked for is furnished, that will meet my request.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ICE-BREAKERS

Mr. LACROIX:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, documents, letters, telegrams, exchanged between the International Paper Company or General J. B. Montcalm and other government ice-breakers, in clearing a channel through the ice in Baie des Chaleurs as far as Dalhousie.

Mr. CAHAN: There is no department of government which has control of correspondence between a private member of this house and some other individual outside the house who has no official capacity and performs no function whatever for the government. I object to the motion.

Mr. POWER: May I be allowed to point out that the Minister of Marine is mentioned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion in so far as it is in order and is applicable?

Motion agreed to.

MEDICAL EXAMINER OF PILOTS

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South):

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, documents, applications and memoranda, exchanged between the Minister of Marine and the Association of Pilots, and any other persons, relating to the dismissal of Dr. Joseph Vaillancourt from the position of medical examiner of pilots, and the appointment of Dr. L. A. Dussault in his stead.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This motion contains a statement of fact that we cannot admit. It refers to the dismissal of Doctor Joseph Vaillancourt from the position of medical examiner of pilots and the appointment of Doctor L. A. Dussault in his stead. Doctor Vaillancourt was never dismissed. His services were required last year for the medical examination of pilots and his services were not required this year.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): A nice way of putting it.

An hon. MEMBER: What does the minister call that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I call that no dismissal in this case. I have no objection to laying on the table any correspondence about the fact that Doctor Dussault's services were required this year, but I want to rectify the statement of fact mentioned in the motion.

Mr. POWER: If the house will permit me I will change the word "dismissal."

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution, according to its wording, is perfectly in order. There might be correspondence relating to the dismissal, but the dismissal might never have taken place. With the explanation of the minister, I declare the resolution carried.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION—DISMISSALS

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, documents and memoranda exchanged between the board of harbour commissioners of the port of Quebec, and the Prime Minister or Acting Prime Minister, Solicitor General, and Minister of Marine, relating to the dismissal, during the months of September and October, for reasons of alleged partisanship, by the said board of harbour commissioners, of over one thousand employees.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Again I want to say that we cannot admit the statement of fact that over one thousand employees were dismissed during the months of September and October. I have no objection to laying on the table any correspondence relating to dismissals made during September and October, but I cannot accept the statement of fact.

Mr. BENNETT: All the words after the word "commissioners" in the second last line should be struck out of the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the mover and his seconder will consent to the striking out of the words "over one thousand", the motion will then read "dismissal of employees."

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CANADA'S HIGH COMMISSIONER TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. FACTOR:

For a copy of all orders in council or other orders or directions, and documents prescribing and defining the duties and the responsibilities of Canada's High Commissioner to Great Britain?

Mr. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It must be observed that this motion, in the form in which it now appears, is too wide. There is no limitation as to date. There has been a high commissioner for Canada in Great Britain for many years. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that his motion stand and that it be amended to cover the years he desires to cover by his inquiry.

Mr. FACTOR: With the permission of the house and following the advice of the Prime Minister, I will add after the words "responsibilities of" the words "the recently appointed."

Mr. BENNETT: The present High Commissioner?

Mr. FACTOR: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: With that amendment the motion is all right.

Motion as amended agreed to.

11. How much the treasury of British Columbia contributed to the capital stock of the farm loan board.

12. What interest rate applies to borrowers in British Columbia in view of the fact that the interest rate to borrowers is the rate of interest obtaining on the farm loan bond issues, plus the expense of operation and reserve for losses.

Mr. BENNETT: Before this motion passes, I think it is well to direct the attention of the house to the fact that it calls for a return of information relating to details in the operation of the Canadian farm loan board which has been established not as a department of the government, but as a separate organization in which the shareholders are the participating provincial governments and the Dominion government. The bulk of the capital requirements at the moment are provided, of course, by the federal treasury. The capital non-stock holders include the provincial governments and as well the borrowers under the statute, and the scheme contemplates eventually the sale of farm loan bonds to the public. Looking at the motion as it reads, it will be observed that this government is supposed to supply the particulars of the administration of a body which it does not control, and which exists by statute. These particulars we feel we should not be asked to supply at least before first consulting the participating provincial governments who are as much interested as we are. As will be recalled, the statute provides for an audit of the business of the board, which audit is carried on by the Auditor General. Under the circumstances I think that this is a motion that should not pass. It may stand if the hon. gentleman desires to look into it further, in which case it will go to the foot of the list. Otherwise I cannot think that it is sound to go into the details—we are not able to do it ourselves—of the business of an organization set up by statute in which, for the purpose of enabling it efficiently to function, we are shareholders.

Mr. ESLING: Stands.

Motion stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. HEENAN:

For a copy of all correspondence and documents between any department of the federal government and the provincial governments, regarding the question of unemployment insurance.

[Mr. Esling.]

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the motion fix a time limit rather than leave it in the vague and uncertain way in which it now appears.

Mr. HEENAN: I shall be glad to have the correspondence since 1928, and I move to amend the motion accordingly.

Motion as amended agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. HEENAN:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the federal and provincial governments relative to the establishment of the old age pension plan.

Mr. BENNETT: Unless it is desired not to have the return furnished this year, the motion should fix a time, because as it reads it would involve searching all the files over a very long period of time. I would suggest that a time be inserted both in this motion and in the following one.

Mr. HEENAN: I move to add the words, "since 1926."

Motion as amended agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSION ACT

Mr. HEENAN:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the federal and provincial governments advocating amendments to the Old Age Pension Act.

He said: I move to amend this motion, Mr. Speaker, by adding the words, "since 1926."

Motion as amended agreed to.

ROBERT WHITESIDE CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. VALLANCE:

For a copy of all correspondence, including letters, telegrams, memoranda, etc., between the Prime Minister and Robert Whiteside, of Birsay, Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: I assume that the reference is to the present Prime Minister.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: On all subjects?

Mr. VALLANCE: There is only one subject.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman seems to have the information he wants already, then.

Motion agreed to.

ROBERT WHITESIDE CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. VALLANCE:

For a copy of all correspondence including letters, telegrams, memoranda, etc., between the Honourable Sir George Foster, while Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Robert Whiteside, of Birsay, in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. STEVENS: May I point out to the hon. member that Sir George Foster was minister between 1911 and 1921, which would mean, as the motion stands, going back over all the records which are on file goodness knows where, and some of which may have been destroyed, during all those years. Cannot the motion be limited to some specific date or event?

Mr. VALLANCE: The information I desire is related to the information that I am seeking from the Prime Minister. It was a letter from Sir George Foster regarding the sale of the 1917-18 wheat crop.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman will make the motion relative to that, there will be no trouble. He might amend it by saying, "relative to the sale of the 1917-18 wheat crop."

Mr. VALLANCE: I move accordingly, Mr. Speaker.

Motion as amended agreed to.

TEMISCOUATA RAILWAY—SALARY REDUCTIONS

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the employees of the Temiscouata railway or their representatives, and the Minister of Labour, in connection with the reduction of salaries of the employees of said railway.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would fix a time limit to which his inquiry will refer.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to amend this motion, Mr. Speaker, by including the officials of the Temiscouata railway and to make the motion applicable to this year, 1930-31. I move accordingly.

Motion as amended agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE
ADVERTISING

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

For a return showing all advertising paid by the Department of Trade and Commerce since August 7, 1930, and for copies of all communications of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, intended to further the "Buy Canadian Goods" campaign.

Mr. CAHAN: This is covered by a previous question.

Mr. STEVENS: May I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that I have no objection to complying with the desire expressed in the motion, but all the correspondence relating to this matter would be an enormous amount, and I am quite sure it would be quite unnecessary to present all such correspondence. I think there are 50,000 letters arising out of this campaign.

Mr. CAHAN: And it is covered by No. 21 in this list?

Mr. STEVENS: No, not quite; there is a slight difference.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No. 21 has already passed.

Mr. STEVENS: This request is different in some respects. I am not objecting to supplying the papers requested but I think if the hon. member will speak to me concerning the limitations of correspondence required that we can adjust the matter satisfactorily.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion seems to be covered by No. 21.

Mr. BENNETT: Not entirely, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEVENS: There is no objection to supplying the information but there are certain limitations to which I am sure my hon. friend will agree.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF JOSUÉ LEPAGE

Sir EUGENE FISET:

For a return showing: A copy of the report of the inquiry held at Rimouski, on the services of postmaster, Mr. Josué Lepage, and also a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports and other documents, exchanged between the Postmaster General or any of his officials, and Mr. H. G. Boulay, ex-defeated candidate; Mr. Gerard Simard, vice-president of the local committee on patronage, or any other persons dealing with the dismissal of Mr. Josué Lepage as postmaster of Rimouski?

Mr. BENNETT: Before that motion is passed may I suggest that the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) agree to strike out the words "Vice president of the local committee on patronage".

Sir EUGENE FISET: I have no objection whatever, provided the name remains in the motion.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, that is what I say.

Motion as amended agreed to.

DETAILS OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo):

For a return showing the details of the following expenditures appearing in the Auditor General's account Part V-137—river gauging and metering and sundry gauge readers, $765; Part V-139, vote 310, details of advertising expenditure, $997.16.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I point out that the year of the Auditor General's report is not mentioned.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): The report is that ending March 30, 1930, the one just issued.

Motion as amended agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF IN BRANTFORD

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

For a copy of all correspondence, including letters, telegrams, memoranda, and other documents, between the mayor or any other official of the city of Brantford and the Honourable Minister of Labour regarding the administration of relief.

Mr. BENNETT: The year should be stated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I refer to last year.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REVENUES

Sir EUGENE FISET:

For a return showing the revenues collected by the Canadian National Railways for their fiscal year 1929-30, 1930-31, for the following services at each station hereunder mentioned.

1. Passenger service in and outgoing.
2. Freight service in and outbound.
3. Express service in and outbound.
4. Telegraph services outbound.

For Rivière du Loup, Cacouna, Saint Arsene, Isle Verte, Saint Eloi, Tobin, Trois Pistoles, Saint Simon, Saint Fabien, Bic Sacre-coeur, Rimouski, Saint Anaclet, Luceville, Mont Joli, Priceville, Saint Octave, Petit Metis. Padone, Dufaultville, Saint Moise, Saucier, Sayabec, Val Brillant, Saint-Lawrence Lumber Company, Amqui, Lac au Saumon, Causapscal, Heppel, Sainte-Florence, Routhierville, Milnikek, Glen Emana, Millstream, Dawson, Saint Alexis, Champion, Matepedia.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this order there arises a question that was considered by parliament the session before last, that is, the differentiation between inquiries concerning the operations of the Canadian National railway system and the administration of it as such. Plainly it might serve the purpose of a competitor to have the figures asked for furnished. On the other hand, the Board of Railway Commissioners at a public hearing does require certain information to be furnished by the railway companies. If the hon. gentleman will permit the motion to pass on the understanding that if it is regarded by the management as inimical to the interests of the railway system to furnish the information it will not be furnished. I have no objection. But I think it should be distinctly understood that the government cannot ask the Canadian National Railways to furnish information that in the opinion of the executive officers is inimical to its operation.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Speaker, practically the Prime Minister is correct in his statement, but what I think he refers to is where there is competition between the Canadian National and other railways. I might pont out that in this case there is no question whatever of competition. However, if the Prime Minister will assure me that I shall be able to secure the information when the special committee on railways and shipping is sitting, I shall be quite willing to get a private memorandum then.

Mr. BENNETT: I might find it difficult to give any such undertaking, but I can assure my hon. friend that so far as the government is concerned it will not stand in the way of his securing information from the railway company. The railway company being a separate organization from the government, we must allow its executive to determine what is best to be done in the public interest.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion passes with the reservation stated by the Prime Minister.

Motion agreed to.

FRASER RIVER ELEVATOR

Mr. REID:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, communications, contracts and other documents, in the possession of the government, in connection with the building, construction, alteration and completion of the elevator on the Fraser river.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. gentleman, who I think said the other day that he was a new member, does not realize that the information he requires might involve a great deal of effort in going through the files. I apprehend he means the New Westminster elevator?

Mr. REID: I have just been in communication with the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) and he has agreed that I may look over the papers.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite right.

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution is dropped.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED

Mr. GARDINER:

For a copy of all reports made to the government as a result of the application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company, Limited, for approval of its development at Beauharnois.

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Speaker, that this motion is not quite comprehensive enough to cover what the hon. gentleman means, because the approval of the development of the Beauharnois company is not a matter with which the federal government are concerned; they only approve of certain works under the Navigable Waters Protection Act; they have no other function in the world to discharge in the matter. If the motion passes in its present form it might be taken to indicate that the federal government had something to do with approving the development.

Mr. GARDINER: The intention of the motion, Mr. Speaker, is in regard to the approval of plans for the works at Beauharnois.

Mr. BENNETT: Under the Navigable Waters Protection Act?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that cover what the hon. gentleman has in mind?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution will pass as amended.

Motion as amended agreed to.

QUEBEC CITY—STREET BOX COLLECTIONS

Mr. BOUCHARD:

For a copy of all notices for tenders, tenders, reports, contracts, and correspondence, exchanged between the Post Office Department or any of its officials and any other person or persons, and generally and without being limited by specifying the documents aforesaid, all documents, memoranda and papers of every kind and description, relating to the collection of mail from the street boxes in the City of Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT: The motion as it now stands is certainly not correct, for I apprehend that the collection of mail from street boxes has been in operation under contract for many years. Perhaps my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) will indicate just what is wanted.

Mr. POWER: For 1930-1931.

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution will be amended accordingly.

Motion as amended agreed to.

QUEBEC POST OFFICE—TRANSFER OF MAILS

Mr. BOUCHARD:

For a copy of all notices for tenders, tenders, reports, contracts, and correspondence, exchanged between the Post Office Department or any of its officials and any other person or persons, and generally and without being limited by specifying the documents aforesaid, all documents, memoranda and papers of every kind and description, relating to the transfer of mails from the Central Post Office, Quebec, to the railway stations and steamships.

Mr. BENNETT: With the same limitation.

Mr. SPEAKER: For 1930-1931.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION INVESTIGATION

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

For a copy of all documents, minutes of the board, reports, memorandums, letters and telegrams, relating to the investigation that took place in the Civil Service Commission in the year 1927, which was understood to be instituted by the direction of Commissioners Tremblay and MacTavish, and by which two junior clerks, Messrs. Kemmis and Simmons were authorized to carry on an investigation into the administration of the commission by Mr. Roche and other executive heads.

Mr. BENNETT: I think all the words after "1927" will have to be stricken out, because it is an elementary rule that you cannot contemplate the contents of correspondence by indicating what it is understood to contain.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am content, Mr. Speaker, to accept the amendment.

Motion as amended agreed to.

QUEBEC EXAMINATION—MARCH, 1931

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all correspondence, documents, certificates, reports of examination, rating and marks obtained by each competitor, recommendations in favour of any competitor by members of parliament, or others, with respect to an examination held in Quebec during the month of March, 1931, as a result of which an eligible list was established and promulgated in the Canada Gazette of March 21, 1931, for the position of stationary engineer, grade 1, Department of Public Works.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to this and the preceding motions I had intended, Mr. Speaker, when you said "carried", to make further observations. There is a question as to how far the Civil Service Commission should be compelled or asked to supply confidential information to this house under a return of this kind. Personally I have arrived at no conclusion in the matter, but I have made some few inquiries. There seems to be a well defined opinion on the part of some that if more or less confidential communications are to be brought down, it is not in the public interest. On the other hand there are those who believe there should be no communication with respect to public business that should not be brought down. At an appropriate time I think the matter will have to be considered by the house, but in connection with a motion of this kind we must either accept it or reject it; it is not a matter for debate. The duty will thus fall upon the Civil Service Commission.

With the restrictions I have mentioned the order might pass, but it should not be taken as committing those who are at present responsible for government to any policy as to what the duty of the commission should be with respect to documents such as I have mentioned, or as to how far it may be in the public interest that such papers should form part of a public return. The matter can be discussed at a later time when there is an opportunity for the house to consider it. Apparently this is not the proper time for that discussion.

Mr. POWER: I know this is not the time to discuss this matter, but I should just like to point out to the Prime Minister that to my own personal knowledge orders of this kind have been passed. I put one or two on the order paper myself last year and the year before.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true, but there was an objection raised at that time, as the hon. gentleman may recall. A discussion took place as to how far we should insist upon the production of some of those documents. It will be remembered that a file was looked at but that all the documents were not copied in that return.

As I have said, I have arrived at no definite opinion in the matter, and I think it is something the house might well take into consideration at a later date.

Mr. POWER: I think there is a well understood rule in the house that such confidential documents as are used by a minister or an official in arriving at a decision shall be produced, but no others. I think that has been the custom.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if you would think I was trespassing too much on the time of the house if I said that I think the rule laid down by the House of Lords in the Jones case, with respect to an affidavit of production, with which the lawyers of the house are more or less familiar, has been adopted in many public departments. No document, the publication of which which would be in any sense inimical to the public interest, should be published. I think that is a broad statement of the rule, without going into details.

Mr. RALSTON: That is, with regard to its production in court.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is the same rule.

Mr. RALSTON: That is within the discretion of the minister. The minister certifies that in his opinion it is contrary to the public interest to produce that paper.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not going to develop what my learned and hon. friend has said, but that is so; the minister in charge of a department of state certifies that it is inimical to the public interest that a document should be brought into court before he can claim immunity with respect to it. That is a broad and general statement. I think the time is not opportune to canvass the matter at length, but I mentioned it because some day it will have to be settled in this house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What happens meanwhile?

Mr. BENNETT: In the meantime the resolution might pass and we will find an opportunity at an appropriate time to determine just how far we should go in respect to the matter.

Motion agreed to.

DECISIONS OF PENSION APPEAL COURT

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

For a copy of all rulings, decisions or judgments of the appeal court established pursuant to Pension Act amendments, 1930.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman will realize that this question involves a matter of public policy of far-reaching importance. This tribunal which has been set up is not under the control of any department of the public service, and the statute by which it was created contemplates its absolute independence of any such department. All the government can do is to ask them for copies of their judgments, in the same way as we might ask the judges of the supreme court of Alberta or Saskatchewan to furnish copies of their judgments. As the hon. gentleman is in much the same position as the government in that regard I thought perhaps he would write and secure these judgments rather than make the matter the subject of a parliamentary order, which could only be complied with by the minister or those in the department communicating with the board and obtaining the information.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am prepared to cooperate with the minister in obtaining the information.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped?

Mr. BENNETT: Dropped on that understanding.

Motion dropped.

UNEMPLOYMENT AT OTTAWA

Mr. POWER (for Mr. St-Pere):

For a copy of all forms, memoranda and regulations issued by the Department of Labour at Ottawa, or the director of unemployment at Ottawa, in connection with the expenditure under the Unemployment Relief Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no desire to limit the return in any way but there has been laid on the table of the house information sought for in accordance with the provisions of the statute. If the hon. gentleman thinks there should be duplication, of course there is no limitation upon his right.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the hon. member (Mr. St-Pere), perhaps the motion can stand.

Motion stands.

BEAUHARNOIS POST OFFICE—CARETAKER

Mr. POWER (for Mr. Raymond):

For a copy of all notices, reports, letters, rating sheets, decisions, memorandums, telegrams or other communications, and all other documents, in the possession of the Civil Service Commission, the Department of Public Works, Postmaster General's Department, or any other federal department, in connection with the appointment of a caretaker for the Beauharnois post office.

Mr. SAUVE: I think this motion should be amended so as to fix dates and years. In view of the mover's absence, I would ask that the motion stand.

Motion stands.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION—NEW SHED

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all correspondence, including letters, telegrams, memoranda, exchanged between the Minister of Marine, the Solicitor General, or any other member of the government, relating to an alteration in the specifications providing for the use in the construction of a new shed, by the Quebec harbour commissioners at Quebec, of asbestos corrugated sheathing, a product manufactured in Canada, and the substitution therefor of asbestos sheathing made by the Philip Carey Company of Ohio, in the United States of America, together with copies of any resolutions, minutes, memoranda, of the said Quebec harbour commissioners, ordering, approving or confirming the said alteration or modification of the original specifications.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my hon. friend would desire to amend this resolution. It is faulty in so far as it states, as a matter of fact, that which it is expected the correspondence will disclose. I suggest that the allegations as to the place of manufacture of the corrugated sheathing in one case, and of asbestos sheathing in the other, be eliminated from the resolution.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection. I would move to strike out the words:

A product manufactured in Canada, and the substitution therefor of asbestos sheathing made by the Philip Carey Company of Ohio, in the United States of America.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution as amended carry?

Motion as amended agreed to.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION—PERMANENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. POWER (for Mr. Dorion):

For a return showing the names, surnames and addresses, by counties, to date, of all the permanent employees of the Quebec Harbour Commission, including the commissioners, with the date of their appointment and the monthly salary paid to each.

Mr. BENNETT: This is rather wide. What particular year is referred to?

Mr. POWER: I am moving this for the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, who sits on the opposite side. I should be glad to have all the information that could be furnished. However, I think the hon. member would be satisfied if we stipulated, since 1921, when the former administration took office.

Mr. BENNETT: I think he should be.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the addition of the words, "since 1921," shall the resolution carry?

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps it had better stand in view of the fact that the hon. member is not here. The hon. gentleman's friend might object to reflect so upon a previous administration.

Mr. POWER: I think it is perfectly clear that the hon. member intended to ask for a list of the present permanent employees of the Quebec harbour commission.

Mr. BENNETT: I think there is no reason why the motion should not pass on that understanding, except that I do not think they keep the records of counties.

Mr. POWER: I am sure that they do.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no one who should know better. Probably the old practice is not followed.

Motion agreed to.

WELLAND SHIP CANAL

Mr. BOULANGER:

For a return showing how many civil servants were appointed to work in connection with the Welland ship canal since October, 1930; their rating and qualifications; how many of these appointees were natural born Canadians; how many were naturalized Canadians, and how many were foreigners.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a clear distinction between civil servants as such and employees as such. As the motion reads, it is civil servants, with respect to whom the commission would have information as to their nationalities, but with respect to employees as such, the information would not be available. I assume that the hon. gentleman means civil servants only, since his resolution is drawn that way. I merely point that out to him.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the resolution is so drawn.

Mr. BOULANGER: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

PROPOSED PEGGING OF WHEAT PRICES

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

For a copy of all petitions, resolutions, recommendations, letters, telegrams, or synopsis of verbial representations, addressed or communicated to the Prime Minister, Minister of Agriculture or any other minister, recommending the pegging of wheat or grain prices, from any farmers organizations, pool selling agency or unit thereof, municipality, board of trade, individual, or provincial premier from each of the three prairie provinces, since August 1st last, and the individual replies thereto.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not desire unnecessarily to take up time in the preparation of a file, but communications came in by the thousand asking for the fixing of a price for wheat and it would be a very great task to prepare copies of all those communications. My memory is that they were all in the same terms and a reply was sent in practically the same terms to them all.

One other matter to which I think the hon. gentleman's attention should be directed is that he asks for a "synopsis of verbal representations." I think that is introducing a new element into a motion for papers and it will have to be stricken out, because if we had to comply with an order of parliament couched in these terms, it would be very difficult to observe the obligations of the office of privy councillor, an office which the hon. gentleman himself holds. Therefore I suggest that he be good enough to strike these words out. In view of what I have said to him, we shall be glad, if he so desires, to show him the file which consists of an enormous number of papers, and the motion can stand until this is done. My hon. friend to my left (Sir George Perley) dealt with many of them and I think literally there were many thousands.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was quite aware that this involved a pretty lengthy reply depending entirely on the number of petitions that were received, but of course the more petitions received, the more evidence we have of the importance of the question. On further consideration I think I can modify this motion very much if my right hon. friend will let it stand. With regard to the synopsis of verbal representations, what I had in mind was the interviews, by premiers of the three prairie provinces with my right hon. friend. They were not in written form. There must have been verbal representations and I would like to have some idea what they were.

Mr. BENNETT: No shorthand note was, I believe, taken and no synopsis placed on file. Those of us who have had experience with our own memories know how difficult it would be now to endeavour to summarize our recollection of what was said. I think that was tried by a very eminent psychologist and he got five different reports of the same interview from five different people who had it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With regard to that part, if my right hon. friend will agree that they were in favour of a pegged price, I will drop that portion of the resolution.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot agree to that.

Motion stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

MOTION TO REDUCE RAILWAY PASSENGER RATES FOR COLONISTS

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, in order to relieve unemployment in the cities by encouraging a movement of return to the land, the government of Canada should invite railroads to reestablish reduced passenger rates in favour of colonists, and should by means of grants from public moneys help railroads to reestablish those rates, if necessary.

He said: I do not think it is necessary for me to take up very much of the time of the house to explain the resolution which Your Honour has just read. Its meaning is quite plain; the resolution speaks for itself. Rather, I shall take a few minutes to state my reasons for submitting this resolution to the kind consideration of the house.

My only object in inviting discussion of the subject matter of the resolution is to offer a most humble suggestion for the relief of unemployment in the cities and to indicate one way of obtaining a better distribution of population in Canada, or in other words, a better equilibrium between the rural and the urban population.

Representing as I do an entirely rural county, the greater part of which has been settled for nearly three hundred years, and living in the nearby city of Quebec, I have observed many times in my own experience that the most difficult phase of the unemployment problem in the cities consists in providing relief and work for the surplus rural population which is attracted to the cities. In a county like the one which I have the honour to represent in this house, where every available place is filled, and where the land is already subdivided to excess, there is bound to be every year a surplus population since large families continue to be the general rule. Every year two or three hundred young farmers who cannot place themselves in their native parishes have to leave the county in order to seek their livelihood elsewhere. Where do they go? A few of them, the wise ones, faithful to the traditional calling of their class, and knowing that farming is the occupation in which, owing to their preparation, they have the greatest chance of succeeding, go on the land in the newer parts of the province of Quebec or in some other Canadian province. But the majority of them drift to the cities, to Quebec, which is only a few miles away from their homes, or to the great metropolis of Montreal, or to the industrial cities of New England, which are only a few hours distant. What chance of earning a decent living and of finding suitable employment have those country people, those farmers' sons in the city? They have no trade, they are unskilled labourers working by the day at casual jobs, never sure of steady employment for any length of time; they are unused to the city ways and to industrial life. When employment becomes at all scarce they are the first to suffer; they are the first recruits for the army of the unemployed and the first cases for relief by the charitable organizations or by the municipal, provincial or federal government. I think that this is a fair statement of the condition of the rural emigrants to the cities, and I venture to say that the majority of the unemployed who are to be found in our Canadian cities at the present time are former country people who abandoned their homes from one to five years ago.

What are the remedies for such a situation? There must be a few. For the moment I limit myself to suggesting one very respectfully to the government, and that is the inauguration of a back-to-the-land movement by requesting the Canadian railways to reestablish the homeseekers' excursions and the settlers' rates of a few years ago, and by assisting the railways to do so with government grants, if necessary.

In making this suggestion I am not unmindful of the present condition of agriculture. I do not forget that owing to the complete neglect of the farmers by the present government the prices of farm products are to-day the lowest they have been for twenty-five years, whereas the prices of the articles they have to buy have either gone up or have remained stationary when they should have gone down, as a result of the recent tariff manipulation. I am aware that farmers in some sections of the country do not want the competition of more farmers, that there is over-production in some branches of our agricultural activities, and that the sale of our farm products in foreign markets is jeopardized by the very peculiar attitude of this government in respect to international trade. But in spite of all these drawbacks I persist in my opinion that it would be to the advantage of Canada to assist in returning to the land the former rural people who glut the employment market of the cities. Even if these people could not get rich in producing and selling farm produce at present prices, they could at least eke out a living for themselves and their families on the farm. They could at least be sure of their bread, butter, milk, eggs, meat, fuel and so forth, instead of starving in the cities, where they have to pay for everything they need, including the water they drink.

The government, if they wanted to interest themselves in that class of needy Canadians for whom I speak, could supplement the back-to-the-land movement by assistance to farmers in the form of clearing premiums or first-ploughing premiums to be paid to farmers in certain definite sections of the country where the farms have not been developed sufficiently to support their owners adequately, and this could be done in co-operation with provincial governments, as outlined in my humble remarks during the debate on the address. The government could even study a plan of decentralization of industry whereby workers working on piece work or under some similar arrangement could be settled in villages not far from the plant, where they could own their cottage and plot of ground, raise their own vegetables, keep a cow, perhaps, a pig or two, and hens, and live cheaply and more happily than it is possible for them to do in the slums of the large city of Montreal, which have been so appallingly described by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). To my mind it is neither a normal nor a healthy condition of affairs that one-tenth of the population of Canada should be crowded into one city and one-third of the balance in the other Canadian cities. The adoption of the plan which I submit for the approval of the house would have a tendency, I believe, to remedy such a situation.

One objection which no doubt will be made to the adoption of the plan which I now have the honour of proposing is that the present financial condition of the Canadian railways might not permit the restoration of low rates for the transportation of settlers and their effects. If such is the case I hope the government will come to their rescue and will recoup them for the loss they would thus incur. I am sure that the government will not plead against the suggestion, the necessity for economy, because the money spent for the return to the land of the rurals presently unemployed in the cities would be money well spent. Probably it would relieve the government of the obligation of voting again next fall $20,000,000 for the assistance of the army of unskilled day labourers in the cities. In support of my contention that the government should assist the railways in inaugurating a back-to-the- land movement I wish to mention the precedent of the so-called assisted immigration which until very recently was practised, if it is not yet in vogue. The Canadian government did not refuse to assist the navigation and railway companies with money grants to enable them to bring immigrants from Europe to this country. The government each year spent considerable sums of money in caring for those immigrants after their arrival in Canada, and in helping them to make a beginning.

What the government did for strangers I hope they will gladly do for Canadians. If assisted immigration was good for Canada in the years of prosperity, and if the opposition blamed the then government for not promoting further immigration, the assistance of colonization by Canadians will be equally good. The obvious advantage of assisted colonization will be to improve the lot of a great number of Canadians who are now starving in the cities, to lessen unemployment, to obviate the necessity of voting another $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment and to increase the development of the country which, even in lean years, must go on. Therefore it is with great confidence that I submit for the approval of the house the resolution which was inspired by the above thoughts and which aims to effect their realization.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes of the time of the house to discuss this proposal. The primary object of the motion before us is to redistribute to a substantial extent the population of Canada, and to place people on the land. The first reaction I had when I listened to the argument of my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) was that if agriculture were successful in this country there would be no need to reduce fares in order to get people on the land. In my judgment the condition of agriculture at the present time does not warrant this house or any other public body in spending one dollar to get one more person back to the land. For many years I have objected to our immigration policy. On many occasions I have stated on the floor of the house that it would be far better for Canada to cancel its immigration policy and give our own Canadians an opportunity, if they so desire of going on the land. If I had any influence with the legislatures of the western provinces at the present time I would suggest to them that instead of opening up new areas for settlement those areas now not settled should be withdrawn. To-day in western Canada we have thousands and thousands of people who for the last twenty or thirty years have been living from twenty to sixty miles from railways. Our railways are not in a position to catch up with the requirements of those people or to provide them with reasonable transportation facilities. That being so why should we advocate a policy which would make worse a condition which already is bad. I have always objected to the plan of assisted immigration. In my judgment such a plan would not operate for the benefit of Canada. I objected even to the plan concerning the 3,000 British immigrants whereby the imperial government supplied those people with cash to pay their railway and boat fares, and an added sum with which they were to buy stock and implements in Canada. I have come across many cases where Canada has provided land at a reasonable valuation, and very few of those settlers have made good. My attitude towards the policy of immigration has been that which I am now describing. I have always felt we should first take care of our own people before we spend money to induce other people to enter Canada for the purpose of taking land.

In view of the condition of agriculture and in so far as agricultural products are concerned at the present time I believe we would be well advised to give up any settlement policy until such time as consumption catches up with production. We should not adopt such a policy until the people now on the land are in a position to make a profit from their operations. These are my main objections to the motion now before the house, and I trust the government will not consider the possibility of asking the railways to reduce fares.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I think that the two hon. gentlemen who have just addressed the house on this question have given to the house and the country the two different viewpoints involved. One has favoured the granting of special rates to those Canadians wishing to go back to the land, and the other has taken the attitude that in view of present conditions such action would not be wise. Without in any way attempting to decide which of the two hon. members is right, may I point out that certainly the railways would be embarrassed if at this time they were asked to give special consideration in the way of passenger or freight rates. Continually they are being asked for reductions of the rates in both lines of traffic.

As far as the passenger rates are concerned, it might be well at this time to give some facts in connection with the Canadian National Railways; I have not the figures for the Canadian Pacific Railway. For some years passenger returns of the Canadian National Railways have been decreasing. Not long ago I had occasion to inquire from the officers of the railway company concerning the returns derived from passenger traffic during the past five years. I had expected to learn that the passenger returns were not increasing. To my horror however I learned that not only were passenger returns of the Canadian National not increasing but they were decreasing so rapidly that between the years 1926 and 1930 the deficit had increased to a very startling extent. It has been the opinion of many that the various facilities being provided to accommodate the passenger traffic of both lines would increase the returns from that branch of the service. But, on the contrary, the passenger earnings of both railways have decreased to such an alarming extent that I do not think it would be fair to ask their respective managements to consider the adoption of the hon. member's proposal unless on the understanding that they must be remunerated by some other agency for any losses that might thereby be sustained.

May I point out at this juncture that if the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway—I think we may take them together—are to be asked, as they are being asked continually, to reduce their passenger and freight rates, it seems to me that they should not be expected to absorb, on behalf of the country as a whole, such reductions in their earnings. I say this because from all over the country requests come to me as Minister of Railways asking for reductions in freight rates, for branch line construction, and for other expenditures which would mean a capital outlay of vast proportions. Perhaps it would interest the house to know that since we came into office eight or nine months ago I have had requests for branch lines, for stations, for hotels, for freight sheds, and so on, representing a capital investment on the part of the railway company of about $200,000,000. I had the matter gone into some time ago because I wondered how much capital expenditure all these requests involved, and the itemized statements given to me show that total.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How much of that has the minister promised?

Mr. MANION: Well, my right hon. friend has promised a great deal at various times, so perhaps he can answer as to half, and I will ask my right hon. leader to answer as to the other half.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I made no promises.

Mr. MANION: I think my right hon. friend, since assuming the leadership of his party, has made more promises and redeemed fewer of them than any other political leader in this Dominion. However, I do not wish to get into a partisan controversy. I am pointing out at the moment that the national railways are being asked for many capital expenditures which in the present state of the national as well as the railway revenues could not possibly be undertaken.

To illustrate the difficulties of both railways, but particularly the national railways, in cutting down unnecessary expenditures, let me refer to the discontinuance of unnecessary and unremunerative passenger and freight services. Because of the decreased revenues of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways, their respective managements decided within the last month that they would endeavour to do away with several local freight and passenger services which were being given at a heavy loss. Within the last two weeks both railway companies gave out some information in this connection. For example, on a branch line from A to B giving daily passenger and freight service, they decided because of the very small amount of traffic to replace a daily by a tri-weekly service. They gave the figures so I would be able to deal with any protests I might receive against this and other proposed reductions of service, and the figures show that in this case—as in many others—the receipts were only 30 cents per train mile as against operating expenses of $1.50. I doubt if there has been one suggested decrease in service where letters have not been pouring in protesting against such decrease. On one branch line the management figured they were going to save $30,000 per annum by making the change from a daily to a tri-weekly service. Notwithstanding this I have received the most urgent and emphatic and repeated protests from the district affected, practically claiming that the locality will be ruined if this reduced service is put into effect.

Mr. McINTOSH: Did you get the protests from eastern or western Canada?

Mr. MANION: I got them from both, particularly east and west. I may tell my hon. friend that that is not an Irish bull. In other words, the two extremes seem to protest more vigourously than the parts in between. I say that without any disrespect to either end of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Amputations are painful.

Mr. MANION: No doubt, unless they are anaesthetized beforehand; and it is difficult to anaesthetize in these cases.

Mr. REID: The hon. minister mentions a reduction in passenger service. Can he inform me if the volume of freight traffic to the Pacific coast has increased during the past year?

Mr. MANION: I cannot give my hon. friend an intelligent answer offhand. But I may state this, I do not believe it is the duty of any government at this time to interfere in any way with the management of the national railways in their attempt to cut down unprofitable expenditures of this kind where it can be justified; it seems to me that it is our duty to give the national railways—and for that matter the Canadian Pacific company as well, because I also get protests against proposed Canadian Pacific reductions in service—I say it is our duty to give them at least a fighting chance to make ends meet when they can show that these reductions in service will result in substantial economies. Individual sections of the country directly affected will of course protest, and naturally I have to pass on the protests to the railways. But the management of both railway systems must be permitted to reduce their operating losses so far as government, and for that matter parliament too, can permit them so to do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does not the railway commission have some control over the railways?

Mr. MANION: Entirely. I do not mean to suggest that the government has any control in this respect. My right hon. friend is quite right, the railway commission has control, and if the local authorities affected protest to the commission, and can prove that the proposed reductions are unjustified, no doubt the commission will heed their protests. But it is not the part of government or parliament, for political or other reasons, to override the decisions of the railway companies in matters such as this, particularly when it is remembered that, as shown by the report recently tabled, the Canadian National Railway system's earnings are insufficient by nearly $30,000,000 to meet the interest on its public indebtedness to say nothing of the interest owing to the Dominion government for the hundreds of millions invested in the system; and it is unable to pay for the additions and betterments of various kinds which have been outlined. I say that when the system is unable to meet these obligations, it is the duty of government, parliament and people, so far as they can, to cooperate in encouraging reductions in operating expenses. Not only should the Canadian National Railways management be encouraged, but the Canadian Pacific Railway management as well, in their efforts to bring their revenues to the point where they will meet their expenditures. I mention that last matter because I thought it was a good opportunity to bring this question before the public in general in order that the public might understand that, as the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) pointed out, this is a matter for the railway commission to deal with if any locality is being unjustly treated, as sometimes may occur.

Having pointed out these facts; having shown the necessity for the railways being given an opportunity to carry on in order to earn revenues that will come somewhere near covering their expenses, I may say to my hon. friend who very fairly proposed the motion (Mr. Boulanger) that I certainly will see that it reaches the managements of the two railways for whatever consideration they may choose to give it. I shall gladly do that for him. Having said that, and the motion having been made in the house, perhaps he will feel that he has accomplished the desired purpose in bringing the matter before the government and the railways. He might feel that it has been satisfactorily concluded, and withdraw his motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the minister concludes, may I ask if it is not a fact that within the last week or two reduced passenger rates have been put into effect by the railways?

Mr. MANION: Yes, my right hon. friend is quite correct. Within the last week or two the railways have reduced the week end fares quite materially. I presume that has been done in order to encourage more passenger traffic than they are getting at present, due to the interference with that traffic of motor buses and private motor cars. I know, from the reports not only of our own railway but also of the Canadian Pacific Railway and American roads, that the inroads into railway revenues because of these private means of locomotion are so severe that the railways all over the world are feeling the situation very severely. These reduced rates, to which my right hon. friend referred, are for week end trips all over the country, in an endeavour to pick up a certain amount of the traffic which has been lost. I do not know of any other reductions which have been made.

Mr. EULER: Does the minister regard it as possible, in the interests of the country and of the revenues of the railways, to suggest to the executives of the two roads that they cooperate with a view to cutting out duplication of services?

Mr. MANION: I may answer that by saying that this suggestion already has been made to the railways. As my hon. friend knows, it has been made numbers of times through the press; I presume it was made by the late government, although I do not know anything about that, and the present government has suggested to the railways that duplication should be ended.

In that regard I may say that I have discussed the question with the heads of both railways, and it seems a particularly difficult matter for them to decide upon. Naturally the railroad, whichever it may be, which carries the greater proportion of passenger traffic on a certain train does not care to give up that traffic. In another case perhaps the other line has an advantage and does not wish to give it up. From my conversations with the heads of the railways it seems a very difficult question indeed to come to an agreement upon, though both Mr. Beatty and Sir Henry Thornton have expressed publicly, and to myself privately, the desire to do away with unnecessary duplication. I might say to my hon. friend that I believe the heavy decrease in earnings will make it necessary for the railways to come to some decision in that regard in the near future.

Mr. EULER: My thought was that perhaps the genial minister himself, with his faculty of getting people together, might have considerable success if he took more interest in pushing that suggestion.

Mr. MANION: I believe I mentioned that the suggestion has been made by the government since we came into office. It was made by myself verbally and it has been made by my right hon. leader more than once.

Mr. RINFRET: The minister indicated that he was willing to submit this motion to the railway companies. I presume he means only the first part of the motion; I suppose there would be no indication of an intention on the part of the government to make up any possible difference from public moneys. I think I understood that quite clearly from the remarks of the minister.

Mr. MANION: I meant, of course, that I would submit the first part of the motion to the companies. With regard to the government helping out, unfortunately that is being done very largely now through the heavy charges upon the government in connection with deficits and for capital advances which are necessary in regard to the national railway. Unfortunately, as I have said, the national railways are not earning enough to pay for their own capital advances, so I suppose indirectly the government pays very heavily towards such traffic of that kind as already goes on. The question of going further in that direction would be a matter of government policy, which I should not care to discuss on a motion of this kind. I might say that it would be given consideration; I suppose that is the ordinary phrase.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I think the house and the country will agree with the statement of the Minister of Railways, looking at it from the point of view of the transportation companies. In my own riding I have some branch lines which have been operating for fifteen or sixteen years. They started with a daily service but after fifteen years, in spite of all the development that has taken place, we now find the railway companies proposing to give us a tri-weekly service. I have made representations in the interests of those people, to see if it is not possible to continue the daily service. The people there cannot see the necessity for this reduction in service. If it was necessary fifteen years ago, when the tonnage amounted to a certain figure, to carry on a daily service, now when the tonnage must be vastly greater they do not see why they should have to submit to a tri-weekly service.

That is looking at the matter from a freight standpoint, but there are other considerations. There is the question of train service in the winter time, and there is the question of mail. The people of western Canada go into the larger centres for hospital accommodation. They will find it very difficult to carry on with a reduced service, and it would be hard for anyone to convince these people that the railway companies should be allowed at this time to reduce the service.

Mr. MANION: I know I am out of order in continuing the debate, but the whole discussion has been out of order in its latter stages. However, perhaps I might say that no matter how we feel in the matter, the government has not the power to interfere. This is a matter for the railway commission, and while naturally anyone who has lived in pioneer sections of the country, as I did during many of my early years, realizes the feelings of a group of people who are being partly isolated through tri-weekly service, at the same time one cannot help but have sympathy for the railways which are trying to cut down some of their unnecessary expenses.

I find in my pocket, although I did not bring it for the purposes of this discussion, a report covering one section of the country. I will not say which section; it will be either the east or the west, as my hon. friend expressed it, but I will not say which. This is a report of the national railways in regard to some of the reductions which they are making. They state for example that on one line their revenue at the present time is 11 cents per train mile, while the cost to them is 97½ cents. We cannot blame them for trying to reduce that loss, which is more or less unavoidable. In the next case they cite, the revenue per train mile is 37 cents and the cost 97½ cents, and in another instance the revenue is 15 cents per train mile as compared with a cost of 98½ cents. Going further down the list, I find that in another instance the revenue is given as 11 cents per train mile while the cost is 74 cents. And taking one more example—the worst in the way of considerable loss—the revenue is 13 cents as against a cost of 126·2 cents. In other words, the cost is nearly ten times as much as the revenue. Yet only yesterday there came to my office a deputation from the section affected by that last figure I gave. They pointed out that there were 32,000 people on that section of the line who were being served by this particular branch line, and that they were engaged in a certain form of business which they were afraid would be ruined by the cut-off of the train, notwithstanding, as I have stated, that the cost to the railway is ten times the earnings received on this branch. No one can blame the railway for endeavouring to reduce the loss, nor can anyone very well quarrel with the people in the section concerned. I suggest that, in such a case as this, or in the case of my hon. friend's section, if the people affected feel that there is an injustice the only body that can really interfere in the matter is the Board of Railway Commissioners. I fear that this is the policy which will be adhered to, and I suggest that any section that feels it is being unfairly treated will have to make its representations to the Board of Railway Commissioners, who I have no doubt will prevent the railway from discontinuing the service if such discontinuance is not justified. That is one of the functions of the board.

Mr. VALLANCE: Following up what the minister has said, I would ask this question. Supposing the railways should institute a tri-weekly instead of a daily service: we all know it is much easier to lose something than to get it back. When we lose this service, is there any understanding between the Board of Railway Commissioners and the railways that, when the tonnage or the occasion permits, it will be just as easy for us to get that service back as it had been to lose it? Perhaps I should not ask the minister that question.

Mr. MANION: There is no doubt that if the traffic on that section of the line increases, the railway affected will resume the service. The cut-off of the service is but for a period, for this year, without any intention of continuing the curtailment indefinitely. It is probably only a matter of declining revenue at the present time. I am sure that if either of the railways can be shown that traffic anywhere is not being properly taken care of, and if they can approximately pay their way, they will be only too glad to resume the service.

Mr. GERSHAW: Will the minister permit one other question? I should be glad if he would indicate in a general way what the policy of the transportation companies is as regards going into the bus or truck service It would seem, from what the minister has said, that the buses or trucks have an advantage in the short haul, and that the railway companies have to concentrate on the long-haul business to make their revenue. It sometimes happens, when the roads are good, that service can be provided by the buses and trucks; but when the roads are impassable, of course that service cannot be carried on, and merchants have great difficulty in getting their supplies, while passengers are unable to reach their destination. It has occurred to me that if there were some form of combined service or some cooperation between the railway companies and the buses, probably service might be rendered. Are the transportation companies considering these other methods of dealing with the problem?

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The house not being in committee, each hon. member has the right to make only one speech. I think we had better adhere to the rules.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): It seems to me that we have got away from the resolution, which, as I read it, is a contribution towards the relief of unemployment. The hon. member who moved the motion put up what I regard as a good argument. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) objected to that policy on the ground that there were too many people on the land at the present time. The Minister of Railways, however, presented a different argument on behalf of the railway companies —that they ought not to be expected to take any lower compensation than they are receiving at the present time. I do not see anything here that would in any way reduce the earning power of the railway companies; the resolution provides for grants from public moneys to make up any deficiency which the railways might suffer. I understood that the Conservatives, at their convention in Winnipeg in 1927, indicated in their platform that they would give special consideration and offer special privileges to anyone who wanted to settle on the land. As I understood the Minister of Railways, what he advocated would mean greater unemployment rather than the relief of the present situation, inasmuch as—if I rightly, understand him—he has been discussing with the railway companies the advisability of taking off more trains, or eliminating the duplication of trains. Every railway train you take off adds five more men to the number of unemployed, and every time you reduce a train service it similarly increases unemployment. There is, therefore, probably a great deal to be said for the resolution. If we are going to encourage people to settle on the land, if we are going to encourage citizens from other parts of the country to take up land, and if at the same time we do not want to impair the railway earnings, then we should be prepared to act in accordance with the Conservative platform of the Winnipeg convention—reimburse the railway companies from the public funds.

Mr. BOULANGER: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) will close the debate. If any hon. member wishes to speak he should do so now.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Just a word or two. While I have had no complaints from my own constituency in regard to the reduction or the elimination of railway services, I might say that since this question is, properly speaking, quite a national one at the present time, there is one point which I think might be impressed upon the Minister of Railways. It is this. Sometimes when railway services are eliminated or reduced the feeling in the community affected is that the elimination or reduction is made not on the basis of earnings but by reason of the fact that other lines are not paying. I would urge upon the minister that whenever any service is either discontinued or reduced he do his best to see that such elimination or reduction is based absolutely on the exigencies of the line in question and not on conditions existing in some other section of the railway.

Mr. MANION: Let me point out to the hon. member and to the house generally that the Minister of Railways has no power in the matter. It is a matter entirely for the railways and, after them, for the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. McINTOSH: I know that but I hope the minister will be willing to use his influence in the direction I suggest.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): I am glad to support this resolution. The unemployment in the cities is due to the fact that people from other parts of the country who find it impossible to carry on migrate to the cities. That is why there are so many people unemployed in the great cities, and it seems to me that something should be done to encourage them to return to the land. It is sad for those engaged in charitable work to find these people living in dirty tenements in the cities where they are deprived of air and of places where their children can play. When people can live in the country where they can get plenty of fresh air, they are much better situated, and the federal and provincial governments have to spend much less than they do when people are starving in hovels owing to the lack of money to pay for decent homes for themselves and their families. Therefore I believe the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) has rendered a distinct service by directing the attention of the government to this most important question.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) said that he would take the matter into consideration, but would it not be well for him to comply with the request of the hon. member for Bellechasse, not only to submit it to the railways but also to say to the management of the railways a good word in favour of it? If this is done, we shall return to normal conditions. Many of those who left the country to go to the towns had no position in sight. If one of them was asked what he was going to do in town, the answer would be: "I am going for a job," and if asked, "what kind of job?" there would be no answer. In going to the towns and cities they increase the number of the unemployed and impose a hardship on the country. It is on account of things like this occurring time and time again that the government and the country are facing such a huge problem of unemployment. As the Prime Minister himself said so ably in his Calgary speech—

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[Mr. Manion.]

POWERS OF COMMITTEES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

MINISTERS OF THE CROWN

BILL TO OBVIATE NECESSITY OF RE-ELECTION UPON ACCEPTANCE OF OFFICE

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 35, to remove the necessity of the re-election of members of the House of Commons of Canada on acceptance of office.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act whereby it will be unnecessary, if the bill becomes law, for members of the government who have been selected for cabinet preferment to submit themselves to their constituents for re-election. This bill has been before the house on several occasions but so far has gone no farther that the second reading. I may say that since 1926 it has been the law in Great Britain. Also it is the law in New Zealand and in a number of the states in Australia. I commend it to the careful consideration of the house.

Mr. STEVENS: The prayerful consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: Would the hon. member supply the house with a copy of the bill; as yet we have not seen it.

Mr. RINFRET: I may say that it is also the law in the province of Quebec.

Mr. JACOBS: It may be the law in the province of Quebec, and still be good law, nevertheless.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

4. What are the names of the postmasters dismissed after investigation on the charge of political activity?

2. If so, what questions were asked in such questionnaires?

Mr. SPEAKER: In connection with this question I should like to observe that when it was called yesterday it was allowed to stand. Notwithstanding that, it appears in Hansard to-day as having been answered, no doubt due to the fact that the answer was sent to Hansard without having been passed in the house. That is not correct procedure; questions should be answered formally in the house.

8. Is the fund in operation at the present time?

Mr. BENNETT: This is a question which can be answered only from hearsay. It is entirely too vague to be answered clearly. There are many such organizations in Canada. The hon. minister would have to have something definite to work upon.

Mr. SPEAKER: No. 9 stands.

H. J. BOULAY—PUBLIC PROMISES

Boulay, if his leader came to power, namely: (a) to reduce the salary of Sir Henry Thornton to $15,000 per annum, (b) to reduce the salaries of all vice-presidents and other high officials of the Canadian National Railways, including general managers of divisions, by 50 per cent, (c) to provide on all dining and buffet cars, pullman parlour cars, first and second class cars, being operated between Ottawa and Montreal, Montreal and Halifax, only employees who speak fluently French and English?
2. Has any request been received by the Minister of Railways and Canals, or by Sir Henry Thornton, or any other high officials of the Canadian National Railways, from Mr. H. G. Boulay, asking that a large portion, if not all, of the sub-staff and railway employees employed on trains operating between Ottawa and Montreal, Montreal and Halifax, be compelled to speak both French and English?

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Speaker, this question is not a correct one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It would be improper to make promises.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; I think the question should be dropped out.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would suggest it be allowed to stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: Question dropped.

MR. W. W. CORY

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. Is it the fact that Mr. W. W. Cory, C.M.G., Deputy Minister of the Department of the Interior for over 25 years, was retired from such position by the government on January 31, 1931?

in the federal government's employ, and accord to him the same treatment as was given to the late Sir Joseph Pope, Under Secretary of State, when he was retired under superannuation from the government service?

Mr. MURPHY:

1 to 5. Order-in-Council P.C. 19/161 dated 22nd January 1931, containing information asked for has been tabled.

FOREIGN-BORN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. How many foreign born are in the employ of the federal government in Canada?
2. What are their names, occupations and salary?

Mr. CAHAN: This question should stand as an order for return in any case because it means a very lengthy inquiry and a long return. I would ask the hon. member what is the meaning of "foreign born." Does foreign born mean born outside of Canada, or does it mean born outside the British empire? Unless the hon. gentleman amends his question and states exactly what he means, it will be impossible to obtain a return of this nature.

Mr. SPEAKER: Passed as an order for return.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. member amend his inquiry?

Mr. POWER: Look the other way.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The question is put by a member on the other side.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I imagine the hon. member means by the term "foreign born" people born outside of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Then it is perfectly obvious that the question cannot be answered; the evidence is not forthcoming.

7. Is he the same Louis Francoeur who is editor of a weekly newspaper in the city of Quebec called Le Journal?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. DUPRE:

1. Mr. Francoeur undertook the duties of assistant private secretary to the Solicitor General in September, 1930. He served without salary.
2. Answered by No. 1.

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT—DEPARTMENTAL PROCEDURE

Mr. VENIOT:

In the matter of temporary appointments to the civil service pending a permanent appointment under the certificate of the Civil Service Commission, what is the mode of procedure adopted by the various departments of government?

Mr. CAHAN: A uniform practice is authorized throughout the various departments of the government, as follows: when a vacancy occurs the department sends a requisition to the commission to fill the same. If there is an eligible list established in the commission for this class of vacancy, an assignment is made forthwith. If there is no list of eligibles, the commission advertises a competition for the purpose of establishing an eligible list, and in the meantime the department is granted local selection for temporary employment pending the filling of the position permanently as a result of the competition. A temporary certificate is then issued by the commission covering the temporary appointment until the permanent assignment is made.

In the past there has been abuse by the departments in connection with these acting appointments. The Civil Service Commissioners have reported on it in their annual reports from time to time and in the report for the calendar year 1928, at page 8, reported as follows:

"Acting appointments:

"In their last report the commissioners drew attention to the practice, which has frequently been found to exist, of placing officers in vacant positions in an acting capacity for considerable periods of time before asking the commission to take steps to fill the vacancies either by promotion or by open competition. When the competition is finally held, the temporary incumbent of the position has obviously an unfair advantage over the other competitors. The commission accordingly requests that requisitions for appointments or promotions be filed at as early a date as possible, so that when the position in question becomes vacant there will be no necessity for an acting appointment, but the new appointee will be ready to take over the duties."

In their annual report for 1929, the commissioners reported as follows on page 10:

"Certificates necessary for acting appointments:

"In previous reports, the commissioners have had occasion to call attention to the delay on the part of departments in installing in office persons who have been certified for appointment, and the practice of retaining in their places persons for whose employment no legal authority exists. This difficulty has now been overcome, to a great extent, in one department at least, a ruling having been received from the law officers of the crown to the effect that a temporary certificate from the commission was required in the case of all persons placed in charge of revenue post offices, pending a permanent appointment. Under present procedure, the department, as in the past, installs a temporary incumbent in office as soon as a postmastership becomes vacant; but application is made immediately to the Civil Service Commission for a certificate of temporary employment for the person placed in charge, and the position is immediately advertised. The result is a greatly reduced delay in the making of the permanent appointment, and the installation of the properly certified candidate as soon as may be after the issue of the permanent certificate."

In order to expedite matters in connection with the filling of such vacancies as postmasterships, lightkeeperships and so forth, an arrangement has been arrived at between some of the departments and the commission, which permits the department to advertise the vacancy as soon as it occurs and to immediately advise the commission regarding its action, furnishing a copy of the poster. This practice is not always adhered to promptly.

When the establishment of a permanent position is pending, or when the outgoing incumbent of a position is given retiring leave, the commission is advised by the department and thereupon assigns temporarily the candidate, whose name being next on the eligible list, will automatically be permanently appointed when the permanent position is established, or when the position officially becomes vacant through the expiration of the retiring leave of the late incumbent.

When the commission makes an assignment to a department, provision is made under Section 24 of the Civil Service Act for a probationary period during which time the deputy head of the department may ask for an extension of the period of probation or reject the assignee entirely. In the event of final rejection the candidate next on the list is assigned. In the absence of available eligibles a new competition is required.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, I furnish the answer as supplied by the Civil Service Commission in the exact terms in which it is drawn by that commission, but it is an answer for which I do not take personal responsibility.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not a question to be answered by the Civil Service Commission. I want to know what is the practice in each department.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood question 45 was answered.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) says he gives the answer as supplied by the Civil Service Commission, and is not responsible for it. I am not asking for an answer from the Civil Service Commission. I want to know what is the practice of each department in filling temporary positions.

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. gentleman finds the answer not sufficient for his purpose, he can put the question again.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not wish to take up the time of the house but I think we ought to know—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) has not yet had an opportunity of examining the answer; when he does so he may find it is complete; if not, the hon. Secretary of State says he can repeat the question.

Mr. VENIOT: I want an answer from the department that it should come from, not from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member gets the information he desires it does not matter where it comes from.

Mr. VENIOT: No, Mr. Speaker, it is the principle involved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is a larger question involved I think, Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt for a moment. There has to be responsibility on the part of the government for every answer given. A minister of the crown can not relieve himself of responsibility by saying that the answer he is making is that of a commission. He may not be satisfied with the answer, but he has to take responsibility for it.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, I take responsibility for giving the answer in the house; but certainly I am not responsible for all the acts and measures of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope not.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind hon. members that if they wish to discuss the government's action in answering questions they can do so on orders of the day or at some other appropriate time, but certainly the answering of questions ought not to be interrupted in this way.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not going to discuss the action of the government at all, Mr. Speaker. I rise to explain why the question should be answered by the minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member would be out of order.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION—RAILWAY BARGE

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. Did the Vancouver board of harbour commissioners recently purchase a railway barge?
2. If so, was this barge purchased in the United States?
3. Who arranged such purchase?
4. What are the dimensions of this barge?
5. When was this barge originally constructed?
6. What was the purchase price?
7. What was the cost of towing this barge to Vancouver?
8. What was the cost of insurance on the said barge?
9. From whom was the barge acquired?
10. Was the barge acquired from an American corporation or through an agency?
11. In whose name was the barge cleared through the American customs?
12. To whom was the insurance on the barge paid?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, No. 46 raised a question of some importance, with respect to which the late administration took what many thought to be the correct view. The Vancouver Board of Harbour Commissioners is an independent body over which the government of the day exercises no jurisdiction, except as to the auditing of its accounts. It will be recalled that the minister then in charge of measures dealing with harbour boards indicated that the committee on public accounts might investigate the accounts of all harbour commissions if it was thought desirable. This question involves asking for information from another source and then, as the right hon. leader of the opposition has said, passing it on to this house on the responsibility of the government. The view taken by the late administration, with respect at least to one of the harbour commissions, was that they could not be expected to make answers to questions when they had no knowledge or means of knowledge that were not open to others as well to make that answer. If the question stands in its present form the government would accordingly answer: The government is without information. That is all it could say. As I have already said, this was the view taken by my predecessors in office with respect to a similar principle relating to the Quebec harbour commission, if my memory serves me. Yesterday I mentioned it only casually.

Mr. CARDIN: If I may make an observation on what the right hon. Prime Minister has said, Mr. Speaker? I remember that several questions dealing with harbour commissions were put by hon. members when the late government was in power; we would communicate with the harbour commission concerned; and on receipt of the information we would table it as an answer to the question.

Mr. BENNETT: With the permission of the house, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) will remember that an effort was made on one occasion—I cannot fix the date—to secure certain information with respect to the Quebec harbour commission. The minister met it—I thought very fairly—by saying that with respect to the harbour commissions of Montreal, Quebec, Vancouver, and I think, Three Rivers, the accounts published by them would be audited, that the Auditor General would certify them, and that the public accounts committee, if it so desired, might deal with those accounts. I can turn up my friend's words in Hansard. That gave us a power of investigation and control that we had not previously exercised. But with reference to this question, the minister, as I have said, can write a letter to the harbour commission of Vancouver for the information, but that commission is not bound to answer. The answer I would give at the present moment would be: The government is without information. That is all I could say with respect to it.

Mr. DUFF: They can give the information voluntarily.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why not let the matter stand until a reply comes?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, it stands.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the Prime Minister answered the question.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that that was the only answer that could be given at the moment. I am quite content that the matter should stand for further investigation.

Mr. SPEAKER: Forty-six stands.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION—HASTINGS MILL SITE

Mr. REID:

1. Did the Vancouver harbour commissioners enter into an agreement with any engineer, or engineers, in regard to the cost of a new pier on part of the property known as the Hastings mill site?
2. If so, what were the names of the engineers consulted?
3. Was any agreement entered into as to the payment by percentage of estimated cost?
4. What was the total estimate of cost of the principal designs submitted by the said engineers concerned?
5. Have any amounts of money been paid these engineers on this account to March 31, 1931?
6. Have any efforts been made by the Vancouver harbour commissioners to terminate such agreement?
7. Have any attempts been made by the Vancouver harbour commissioners to settle the matter out of court?
8. What is the basis and amount of proposed settlement?
9. Are any of the engineers concerned paid for any other service by the Vancouver harbour commission?
10. If so, what are their names, service rendered, and amounts paid to each up to March 31, 1931?

Mr. BENNETT: This is in the same category as No. 46, only it is a question that, in part, was discussed in the house at a previous session when the estimates of the harbour commission of Vancouver as settled by statute, were under consideration. A partial answer could be given.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—PURCHASE OF TRUCKS

Mr. LUCAS:

1. How many trucks have been purchased for mechanization of batteries by the Department of National Defence?
2. How much did each cost?
3. Where were these trucks purchased?
4. How much has been spent on these trucks as repairs, during the one year of service?

Mr. SUTHERLAND:

1. 14 Leyland six-wheeled chassis; 14 bodies therefor; 9 Crossley war department type six-wheeled chassis with technical bodies.

2. 4 Leyland chassis, at $7,926 each; 10 Leyland chassis, at $7,368 each; 1 body, at $1,517.60 each; 3 bodies, at $650 each; 10 bodies, at $612 each; 9 Crossley war department type six-wheelers, at $4,797.27 each; f.o.b. Ottawa.

3. The Leyland chassis were purchased from Messrs. Leyland Motors, Limited, Toronto. One body was purchased from Messrs. Ottawa Car Mfg. Company, Ltd., Ottawa; three bodies were purchased from The Robert Elder Carriage Works Limited, Toronto; ten bodies were purchased from Messrs. Coady Bros., Toronto; the Crossley six-wheelers were purchased through the High Commissioner for Canada from Messrs. Crossley Motors Limited, Gorton, Manchester, England.

4. $2,829.99 during the financial year terminating March 31, 1931, or an average of $123.04 per vehicle.

CHARLES-EUGENE LEVESQUE

Mr. GAGNON:

1. Was Charles-Eugene Levesque, returned soldier, of St. Pacome, in the county of Kamouraska, Quebec, appointed by the Civil Service Commission as postmaster of St. Pacome in 1929?
2. Did the Post Office Department approve the nomination so made by the Civil Service Commission?
3. If not, for what reason?
4. Was an inspector's report favourable to Mr. Levesque made to the Post Office Department?
5. Was the inspector's recommendation in favour of Mr. Levesque not accepted by the Post Office Department, and for what reason?
6. Was the complaint made by some one against Levesque, and if so, by whom?
7. Was an inquiry held following Mr. Levesque's request to the Post Office Department to give way to the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, and if not, why?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes, on December 12, 1928.

2. No.

3. Rejected by Postmaster General as unsuitable.

4. Mr. Levesque was given a favourable rating in the inspector's report.

5. See answer to No. 3.

6. No record of any complaint.

7. No. Mr. Levesque's re-appointment could only be considered in the event of a vacancy.

Mr. REID:

1. How many firms are there throughout Canada who import glass?
2. What are their names?
3. Does one "Hobbs" control or own any patents on glass making machines?
4. How many factories manufacturing glass were in operation up to September, 1930?
5. How many factories manufacturing glass are in operation at the present time?

REPUBLIC OF SPAIN

RECOGNITION OF PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT BY HIS MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENTS IN UNITED KINGDOM AND DOMINIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the orders of the day are called perhaps it is expected that I should communicate to the house in a formal way the recognition by His Majesty's government in Canada of the provisional government in Spain. Hon. members will be aware that in the first step towards the return of constitutional government, municipal elections were held throughout Spain on April 12, being the first election since the establishment of the dictatorship in 1922. They resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Republicans in all the larger centres. A republic was proclaimed at Madrid with Senor Alcala Zamora as provisional president, and at other provincial centres. No resistance was offered by the supporters of the monarchy. The King of Spain left the country without formal abdication. The new government appears to have established its authority without disturbance. Following consultation between His Majesty's governments, recognition of the provisional government of the republic of Spain was accorded in notes delivered by His Majesty's ambassador at Madrid on April 22, on behalf of His Majesty's governments in the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and the Irish Free State. Recognition has also been accorded by some seventeen other countries, including France and the United States.

PEACE RIVER OUTLET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if he will now implement the promise he gave me during the special session in regard to announcing the government's policy in relation to the construction of the Peace River outlet?

[Mr. Sauve.]

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): While that matter very properly belongs to the Department of Railways and Canals, I am not unaware, Mr. Speaker, of the discussions which have taken place in this house since this session began. The report upon which action in any event must be predicated is not yet available to the government to enable us to determine what action should be taken or what direction it should take.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF: (Antigonish-Guysborough): I am very pleased indeed to see the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Macdonald) back in his seat after his trip to Cuba where he was sent by this government to consult with the authorities of that island in regard to the duties on fish and potatoes. I quite understand, of course, that the Prime Minister may not be in a position to-day to give either the house or the country any information with regard to the negotiations between his government and the Cuban government, but in view of the fact that a large number of people in the maritime provinces are very much interested in this important question of the excessive duties on fish and potatoes, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, at the earliest possible opportunity, he will give the country any information he is able to give with regard to that matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The very reasonable suggestion of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) will be acted upon. The hon. member for Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Macdonald) has in the course of preparation a report which will embody all the information which in the public interest, having regard to existing conditions to which the hon. gentleman referred, may be reasonably given to the house, and this report will be laid upon the table at an early date or made verbally in this chamber.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REMOVAL OF TERMINUS OF GASPE LINE FROM MATAPEDIA TO CAMPBELLTON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) if it is true that the Canadian National Railways contemplate changing the terminus of the Gaspe railway from Matapedia, Quebec, to Campbellton, New Brunswick.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I think it is the intention of the Canadian National Railways to make that change. That is among the changes which they have notified us they intend to carry out in order to cut down the expenses of the railway. I may save time by adding that I have received very many protests in regard to this action, which I have passed on to the railway. So far as I know, however, that is their intention.

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask the minister, in connection with the same matter, if the railway men of Riviere-du-Loup will be affected thereby?

Mr. MANION: I am sorry but I have not any information on that point.

Mr. MARCIL: Could the minister tell me when that change will take place? Has the date been fixed?

Mr. MANION: I understand, speaking from memory, that it will take place on the 26th of this month, which is three days from now, but I am not positive as to that. I understand most of the changes are coming into effect on that date, but I should say that to-day I received a telegram from some people there asking that a stay of ten days be granted them, which request I passed on to the president of the company. The proposition was that the town of Matapedia would like to appear before the railway company and argue the question, and they stated that if it were proved to their satisfaction that this change was necessary, they would agree to it. For that reason the change may be delayed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR

CONSTRUCTION OF WHARF AT WINDMILL POINT —FINANCIAL SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Richelieu): May I ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to authorize the Montreal harbour commission to proceed with the construction of the wharf it proposed to build at Windmill Point in the harbour of Montreal? In order to help the Prime Minister to recall the case, the construction of this wharf was part of a program which was made public several months ago, and which included the construction of a wharf in the upper Montreal harbour as well as a wharf at this point in the lower harbour. Since the first part of that undertaking has been carried on and a contract let to the Canadian Foundation Company for the construction of the wharf in the upper part of the harbour, I should like to know from the Prime Minister if he will permit the Montreal harbour commission to go on with the second part of their program, which includes the construction of this wharf at Windmill Point.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I do not understand what the hon. gentleman means by asking if the Prime Minister will permit something to be done.

Mr. CARDIN: I can explain if the right hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman may be very glib at explaining hearsay, but it might be well to confine ourselves to the facts in this case. The Montreal harbour commission is a body corporate which from time to time receives authority to borrow money, which money is secured for it by the federal government, involving the credit of Canada. At the moment, because of a bridge which was recently constructed, and for which the Montreal harbour commission pledged its credit, a situation has arisen which is reflected in the estimates for this year. I suppose the hon. gentleman realizes that the result has been to create a financial condition with respect to the harbour commission which never has arisen before, and it involves a reconsideration of the whole problem of that port, for if the Dominion of Canada is to be called upon to raise sums of money to pay deficits resultant from the building of the bridge, it changes the whole aspect of the relation of this parliament to that harbour.

I need hardly say that the matter is engaging the very serious consideration of this government, as would be the case with any government called upon to face a condition which it did not create, involving the provision of nearly $1,000,000 per annum to care for a deficit over which it has no control. Until that matter has been finally determined and some conclusion arrived at that will enable this government to deal with that staggering situation, I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman's question, further than to say that the Prime Minister does not permit; the Prime Minister, in his position as Minister of Finance, is very greatly perturbed about a situation which he inherited and with which he must deal, and about which the hon. gentleman should be the last man in this house to ask a question.

Mr. CARDIN: In view of the observations which have been made by the right hon. Prime Minister I think I am entitled to say just a word. All the reasons which have been advanced by the right hon. Prime Minister existed when the contract was given for the work in the upper part of the harbour of Montreal. If the reasons were good for delaying the work in the lower part, they were good for delaying it in the other section of the harbour of Montreal.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry to question my hon. friend's statement, but I can assure him that the government was not as fully aware of the situation that exists, until within the last few weeks when it received the reports it did from the auditors with respect to that condition. I may add, now that my hon. friend has raised the question, that the city of Montreal claims, with respect to the approaches to that bridge, that there are arrears of taxes amounting to $283,000, and they say that they propose to offset those taxes against the payment which they were to make upon the interest on the securities of the bridge. I may also add, what the hon. gentleman already knows, that even the titles to the properties have not yet been vested either in the harbour commissioners, the bridge or the crown; and that knowledge has only been brought to the attention of this administration in consequence of the audit which is now being carried on and is not yet completed.

Mr. CARDIN: That could not be the reason why the work was stopped in the lower end of the harbour, because it was stopped three months ago.

Mr. BENNETT: That was stopped at the time when it was concluded to be desirable to have a report from an eminent engineer on all harbours in this country. And I do recall that the hon. gentleman himself at one time considered this highly desirable. In view of that opinion, which certainly at that moment was my own, now that the government is in a position to do so it has employed the services of one of the most outstanding firms of engineers in London, some of whose staff are now on the ground. A very earnest effort will be made to try to secure the best possible layout in the various harbours to carry on the trade and commerce of Canada. The work that was stopped in the winter was stopped because of the necessity for ascertaining the facts before it should be resumed. But since then the further information which has come to hand as a result of the work of the auditors has introduced a much more serious question into the whole matter and one with which we must be able to deal; because a million a year is a very large sum of money in the budget of any harbour commission.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: The last reason is much better than the previous one.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad that either of them is good.

SALMON FISHERIES REGULATIONS

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING EFFECTS OF PROPOSED CHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): In the absence of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes), I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) whether it is possible for him—in view of the position of the Minister of Fisheries—to make known as soon as possible the attitude his government intends taking regarding the contemplated changes in the regulations concerning salmon fiisheries in the Baie des Chaleurs, as I have received a large number of protests from both sides of the bay respecting such change being made at the present time, which would be very detrimental to the men fishing in that section of the country.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I regret that the illness of the minister makes it impossible for him to be in his place to-day, but he did mention to me that, owing to the early season, he had under consideration the whole question of licences in connection with salmon fishing in that section of the waters of this country to which the hon. gentleman refers, and I am quite satisfied that as soon as the minister's condition will permit him to be out he will make known the changes, if any, that are contemplated and will lay the regulations on the table of the house.

CUSTOMS TARIFF CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): At the special session of parliament the Prime Minister promised that at this session an apportunity would be given to consider and discuss in detail the changes that were then made in the tariff. Could my right hon. friend indicate to the house at what time that opportunity will be given? I am asking the question now because I think it is advisable that the opportunity should not be delayed until too late in the session.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The opportunity to which the right hon. gentleman refers will be afforded when the budget is brought down.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called may I ask the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) whether the statement published by "L'Illustration" of Montreal, on the 21st is correct; whether it is the intention of the government to increase the number of the Civil Service Commissioners to five and whether the dismissal of Messrs. Tremblay and MacTavish has been discussed. I have no objection to the Secretary of State giving his answer in English.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I would ask the hon. gentleman to put his question on the order paper, when I shall provide the answer.

SURVEYS OF NATIONAL PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): In the regretted absence from the house of the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) may I ask the Prime Minister a question. The question is as follows: In the preliminary survey of the national ports situation, just what ports are to be affected by or included in that survey?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The five ports are, Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, Quebec and Vancouver.

Mr. DUFF: Not including Churchill?

Mr. BENNETT: Well, not at the moment, because that harbour—

Mr. DUFF: Is in cold storage.

Mr. BENNETT: —is being built on plans recently prepared by an engineer.

Mr. McINTOSH: That was the point I was leading up to. I understand, then, that the survey will not at present include Churchill, western Canada's ocean port.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry that the hon. gentleman should have made that observation in the sense in which he means it. Churchill was not included in the ports of which the engineers were asked to make a survey at this time, because the work is being carried on under the plans prepared by a firm of engineers doing business in London, England, as is the consulting firm at the moment, and they have not been asked to pass upon the plans of their confreres.

DOMINION CENSUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). Are returned men, who are unemployed and are fully capable, given the preference in the selection of enumerators for census work? There is a second question along the same line, that I wish to ask the minister. It is based on a letter I have received, stating that a returned soldier in my district, who has a wife and four children to support, and who has earned approximately one dollar a week since last September, having made application for a position as enumerator, was told that he was on the wrong side of the fence to obtain such work. The question is: If I supply this gentleman's name will the minister see that his application receives fair consideration?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In the first place, the question should be put on the order paper, so that I can consult the officers of the department having the matter in hand. Further than that, I may say that in all appointments, so far as we are aware, every consideration is given the returned man. But it does not follow that in every instance the returned man will be appointed. If the hon. member will place his question on the order paper I will make inquiries and give a suitable answer.

Mr. POWER: May I put a question on the same subject? Are returned men being given the preference for positions as census enumerators or are they not? I am asking now about enumerators.

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend will possess his soul in patience his question will be answered together with the question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): This is an urgent matter.

Mr. STEVENS: These appointments are not going to be made for some little time yet, so that my hon. friend need not worry in that respect.

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps when the minister is giving that information he might tell us how many defeated candidates—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BROWN: —are census commissioners.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman might put that question on the order paper.

IMMIGRATION INSPECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I want to discuss briefly a matter of concern—and I use the term literally—to a large number of people of United States and Canadian citizenship. It is a subject that I hesitate to bring up on the floor of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: If I am out of order, I will discuss the matter as a question of privilege and I will use my authority for that. Furthermore let me say that if I am out of order I think the Speaker will so rule, and if he does so rule, I will resume my seat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. GOTT: No person asked the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) to sit down. The question I propose to discuss briefly, if I am not out of order, is in regard to a system of examination of people entering Canada, an examination, I may say, bordering on the insane. I want to place on record, if I may—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: I do not want to move the adjournment of the house to get this on record. We are proud of our port, the port of Windsor.

Mr. SPEAKER: That may be so, but it does not constitute a question of privilege, nor a matter for discussion on the orders of the day.

Mr. GOTT: May I place on record a letter of complaint?

Mr. SPEAKER: Probably not.

Mr. GOTT: Then I shall discuss the question at a more opportune time and probably at greater length.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 3, to amend the Naturalization Act.

He said: In introducing this bill a few days ago, I suggested that it was not a bill which involved any partisan discussion, but was one which interested members on both sides of the house and in respect to which the government desired to have the best advice possible after careful consideration. In introducing the bill I called attention to the fact that section 13 of the Naturalization Act, chapter 138, Revised Statutes of Canada of 1927, provides that:

> The wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject, and the wife of an alien shall be deemed to be an alien.

On that occasion I pointed out that it was obviously impracticable to regard a woman as having her alien husband's nationality if, according to the law of his country, she is deemed to be an alien in his country or elsewhere.

We have at present expressed certain exceptions in section 13 of the Naturalization Act. We have provided in subsection 2 that:

> Where a man ceases during the continuance of his marriage to be a British subject, it shall be lawful for his wife to make a declaration that she desires to retain British nationality, and thereupon she shall be deemed to remain a British subject.

That exception we have still retained in subsection 3 of this bill. Subsection 3 of the existing section 13 is retained in subsection 5 of this bill with a slight change in the wording to make it conform to the terms of the proposed new amendment.

This amendment of the existing law in Canada is rendered more urgent in view of recent changes in the law of the United States of America. Until a short time ago the law of the United States was similar to the law which prevails in this country. Section 1994 of the act of the United States congress of February 10, 1855, provides that:

> Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, shall be deemed a citizen.

That was the same principle which was embodied in the English law and introduced into our own Naturalization Act as the law of Canada.

Section 3 of the act of the congress of the United States of March 2, 1907, provided that:

> Any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband.

That was the English law and the law of Canada. Those two provisions were in strict conformity with the original provisions of our law. But those two sections were repealed by sections 6 and 7 of the Cable act, which was enacted by United States congress on September 22, 1922. The Cable act enacted in section 2 thereof:

> That any woman who marries a citizen of the United States after the passage of this act, or any woman whose husband is naturalized after the passage of this act, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization, but, if eligible to citizenship, she may be naturalized upon full and complete compliance with all the requirements of the naturalization laws.

That act contains certain exceptions, to which I shall now refer, in favour of speedier naturalization, which were further provided for in a subsequent amendment by a law of the United States congress passed on July 3, 1930. The Cable act of 1922 also provided that:

A woman citizen of the United States shall not cease to be a citizen by reason of her marriage unless she makes a formal renunciation of her citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens.

A woman who was a citizen of the United States upon her marriage with a British subject, thereby attained a dual nationality. With respect to that I am not for the present concerned. A woman, on the other hand, who was a British subject, upon her marriage with a citizen of the United States, thereby became stateless. She thereby lost her status as a British subject under our law without attaining the status of a citizen of the United States under the law which prevails in that country. So intimate are the social relations existing between Canada and the United States, and so frequent are the marriages of Canadian women to United States citizens, that the enactment of the Cable act by the United States congress has rendered many Canadian women stateless. A woman, who is a Canadian national, and who marries a citizen of the United States, does not now, by reason of such marriage become a citizen of the United States, although she thereby loses her status as a British subject.

There are at present hundreds of Canadian-born women who have lost Canadian nationality and who are no longer British subjects by reason of their marriage with citizens of the United States, although by such marriage they do not acquire United States citizenship. Such a woman—there are many hundreds of them in Canada, because if you will look at the statistics of marriage for the last few years you will find that many American citizens coming into our country and taking charge of large industrial institutions or being actively employed in the industrial life of this country, have married Canadian women—such a woman can no longer leave this country. She cannot obtain a passport from the United States authorities, because she is not a United States citizen; she cannot obtain a passport to go abroad from the Department of External Affairs of Canada, because she is no longer a British subject.

This matter was considered by a select committee of the parliament of the United Kingdom which was appointed in 1923 to consider the nationality of married women who were formerly British subjects. Before that committee the representative of the British Foreign Office deprecated a change in the law which would result in varying nationalities in the same family, varying nationalities of husband and wife, varying nationalities also because the children under British law take the nationality of the father and not of the mother. The representative of the British Foreign Office before that committee expressed apprehension that such a change would inevitably lead to a demand for a change in the nationality of the children which, as I have said, now universally follows the nationality of the father. The British Foreign Office also urged the desirability of consulting and acting in concert in this matter with the self-governing dominions, and urged that no substantial change in the British law should be made without consultation with the dominions, and then only if the representatives of the dominions should concur in such change.

In order that the house may be aware of the varying arguments produced on that occasion I shall quote from the report of that committee, which by a majority vote approved of this particular section of the report, although as to the whole report there was a division of opinion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: To what committee is my hon. friend referring?

Mr. CAHAN: To the special committee of the parliament of the United Kingdom which met in 1923 to consider the effects of the enactment of the Cable act upon the nationality of women who before their marriage with Americans were British subjects. I am quoting from the report simply in order that the house may understand the arguments pro and con, because I do not regard this as a party measure; I think all measures of this kind should be generally accepted by the house. Section eleven of the report contains the following:

The committee as a result of this inquiry have come to the conclusion that a case is not made out for a complete reversal of the principle governing the present law. They recognize the growing demand of many women and of organized women's societies for equal rights with men in every respect, but they cannot overlook the fact that by marriage a woman is merged in the unit of the family, and that within the family it is at present the husband who is head, who bears its legal responsibilities such as the maintenance of the wife, the children and the home, and whose occupation in most cases is the decisive factor as to where that home is to be established, and who among other things gives his nationality to the children. It is their opinion, therefore, that in this important sphere of family life the nationality of the husband should be the governing factor and determine the nationality of the wife. If two ride a horse one must ride in front.

The committee then proceeded to deal with one particular case, and to report specially thereon as follows:

There is one special case, however, where in the opinion of the committee amendment of the law is required. It sometimes happens that through divergence in the laws of states a woman finds herself through marriage deprived of the nationality of her parent state and not invested with the nationality of the state whose national she has married, e.g., a British woman to-day who marries a citizen of the United States under British law loses her British nationality, but by virtue of the operation of the Cable act she does not acquire the nationality of the United States. This position of statelessness is undesirable and should be obviated by an amendment of the law to the effect that the woman shall not lose her original nationality if she does not acquire that of her husband under the law of his country.

In the end the special committee of the parliament of the United Kingdom were equally divided with respect to the whole draft report from which I have quoted these two sections, which fairly express the ideas which prevailed in the minds of the majority of that committee.

This question came before the Imperial conference of 1926, and that conference deferred definite consideration of the matter of nationality of married women until the expert committee on inter-imperial relations might have an opportunity to report thereon. That committee met in October, 1929, and Canada was represented on the committee by the Minister of Justice in the late administration (Mr. Lapointe). After consideration that committee took no definite action. It is suggested to me that the reason for deferring definite consideration was due to the fact that on that occasion the government of the United Kingdom recommended that the matter be considered at an international conference on the ground that it was a proper subject for international agreement. Subsequently, at the Hague conference of 1930, at which Canada was represented, all the governments of the British commonwealth signed the Nationality convention, which was considered by that conference, and which contains the following articles:

Article 8. If the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality on marriage with a foreigner, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring the nationality of the husband.

Article 9. If the national law of the wife causes her to lose her nationality upon a change in the nationality of her husband occurring during marriage, this consequence shall be conditional on her acquiring her husband's new nationality.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Article 10. Naturalization of the husband during marriage shall not involve a change in the nationality of the wife except with her consent.

These articles of the Hague international convention which met early in the year 1930 were considered at the last Imperial conference. Hon. members will have noticed that fact from the reports of that conference which have been laid upon the table of the house. The report of the Imperial conference of 1930 contains the following reference to this subject under the heading "Nationality of married women."

Careful consideration was given to the subject of the nationality of married women. All the members of the commonwealth represented at The Hague conference of 1930, signed the Nationality convention there concluded, and will, it is assumed, introduce such legislation as may be necessary to give effect to articles 8-10 of that convention. The conference was satisfied, however, that any proposals for the further modification of the principle of the existing law would fail to secure unanimous agreement. It followed that the conference was unable to make any recommendation for the substantive amendment of the law on this subject except to the extent stated above.

This bill has been introduced to amend section 13 of the Naturalization Act, so as to incorporate therein the exceptions so approved at the Imperial conference, and to conform to those three articles of the Hague convention of 1930.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will similar bills be introduced in various parliaments?

Mr. CAHAN: The governments of the dominions were requested to introduce bills to carry out those provisions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Practically the same as these.

Mr. CAHAN: I understand each government was requested to introduce a bill to carry out those provisions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Practically the same as these?

Mr. CAHAN: I may say to the hon. gentleman that the bill before this house has been considered by the law officers of the Dominions Office in England. Since it has been introduced in this house there have been a few changes of verbiage which have been suggested and which I shall bring to the attention of the house at a later date. However in England they suggested no material amendments whatever since this bill was introduced. As there is a constitutional convention or understanding that amendments to the Naturalization Act defining the status of a British subject shall be made only by common consent of the dominions, the provisions of this bill, as I repeat, have been restricted simply to carrying into effect the amendments which were agreed upon by the several dominions. I refer to such amendments as have now received approval in principle of the representatives of governments of the dominions, as well as the government of the United Kingdom. I think my predecessor in office will bear witness to the fact that when I assumed the office of Secretary of State there was a large volume of suggestions and recommendations from various women's associations throughout Canada for such an act as this. Those suggestions were not proceeded with for the reason that it was deemed advisable to have, first, an international agreement and, secondly, to have a common inter-imperial understanding with respect to the proposed amendments. These amendments are confined simply to the carrying into effect of the articles of the Hague conference which have been agreed upon by all parties. Since the bill has been introduced and distributed it has been discussed at length in many journals throughout the country. I have received a number of letters from various womens' organizations recommending that this principle, if I may so term it, be carried into effect. In their letters and resolutions they have not discussed with me the exact terminology of the bill, but there seems to be a general consensus of opinion, especially in the minds of women who take an active interest in public affairs, that such amendments should be made to the Naturalization Act of Canada. I repeat, I am simply submitting the bill for the careful consideration of members of this house. I think there might be some slight improvements made in the terminology, if the bill goes before a committee. To-day however I am merely dealing with the principle to which we have given effect in drafting the measure which is now submitted to the house.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): May I be allowed to ask the hon. gentleman one or two questions. I would like him to elucidate one or two points. As I read it subsection 2 states:

> A woman, having been a British subject, shall not be deemed to have ceased to be a British subject upon her marriage with an alien, except upon condition that in consequence of such marriage she acquire the nationality of her husband.

How would the hon. gentleman deal with the case of a woman acquiring by letters of naturalization the nationality of her husband in a foreign country? I refer to a British born woman.

Mr. CAHAN: My answer to that question is that under our law the moment a British subject acquires a certificate of naturalization under any foreign law and thereby becomes a subject or citizen of any foreign country he or she immediately thereupon ceases to be a British subject.

Mr. BOURASSA: Would not subsection 2 have the effect of precisely curtailing that right of the woman to acquire another nationality by naturalization? It says here that a woman, upon certain conditions:

> Except upon condition that in consequence of such marriage she acquires the nationality of her husband.

. . . remains a British subject. Therefore, under this section, if pleaded literally, her naturalization under the foreign law would not be acknowledged.

Mr. CAHAN: May I say to my hon. friend that I think the committee is the proper place to discuss that subject.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite true.

Mr. CAHAN: Furthermore although I drafted this bill in conjunction with permanent officials of the Department of External Affairs I intend to suggest a very slight change in the first clause. My hon. friend will understand that upon reflection one may foresee technical difficulties which might arise. In the committee however I would prefer to entertain a discussion of such details.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite true. My other question is this: In the preparation of the bill has consideration been taken of what will happen with regard to the children?

Mr. CAHAN: Under our law there is no doubt whatever that the children follow the nationality of the father. We have not interfered with that.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker I do not intend to speak at length on the second reading of this bill, but I wish to say that I fully approve of the principle involved. Without referring particularly to the bill may I be permitted, in a very courteous way, to express regret that the practice of presenting bills followed in former sessions, has been discarded. It was the custom to place explanatory notes opposite to the sections of the bill giving in a summarized way the reasons for the proposals, and when a section was repealed to reproduce the text of such section. In the case of a new bill it was the practice to underline the new words in order to distinguish them from the paragraphs retained from the former act or bill. I think that might make the discussion of such technical matters as this easier for hon.

members. I am not speaking for myself; I have the documentation on these matters. I think the ministers themselves will find when they come to discuss the bill in committee that with the information I have referred to printed on the bill the discussion will be more relevant to the subject matter; otherwise questions will be put that have no bearing on the proposed amendments. I admit that in this instance the former section is practically repealed; in fact the whole section is changed and the words retained are not very material. But my remarks apply not only to this bill but to all bills introduced by the government, and which do not contain the explanatory notes and underlined changes as was the practice under the former government. I think the whole house will bear me out in my submission that this was a good practice and that it should not have been discontinued.

As to the bill itself, the Secretary of State has given the whole story of the change, and I think he has given it accurately. The question was raised in this house while I was in charge of the Department of State by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), who made a motion in the session of 1927, asking the house to resolve that a woman of British nationality residing in Canada should not lose, or be deemed to lose, her nationality by the mere act of marriage with an alien, but that it should be open to her to make a declaration of alienage if she so desired. At the time I intimated, speaking for the government, that this was in full accordance with the policy of the government, but gave the reason—now given by my successor—that the delay then in taking action was due to the fact that the British citizenship recognized by the Naturalization Act is not confined to Canada but is empire-wide, and consequently there must be some degree of uniformity throughout the empire in order that British citizenship should be recognized internationally. The conditions for the obtaining of British citizenship were agreed upon by the different dominion governments and the government of the United Kingdom; that is, as to the number of years of residence, the character of the applicant, knowledge of official languages in the different parts of the empire where naturalization was sought, the desire to remain permanently within this or that part; there were also other matters such as this one regarding the status of British women marrying aliens, a status which was not altogether decided at the time. There was a series of conferences bringing no definite result. In 1926 it was decided, as the hon. Secretary of State has indicated, to leave the matter over for an international conference, and later on for agreement between the different parts of the empire at the Imperial conference of 1930. I understand from what has been said this afternoon that an agreement has been finally reached, and that this bill incorporates the essentials of the agreement. I am glad to see the matter has been adjusted. I claim to be a feminist in my own province; there I am fighting the cause of feminism, and we hope that eventually success will crown our efforts. This I regard as another victory for the rights of women, and I think it will cure the very unsatisfactory condition of things that prevails where a British woman by marrying an alien loses her citizenship and does not acquire that of her husband.

But before I resume my seat I should like to direct the attention of the Secretary of State to another part of the Nauralization Act which might perhaps be amended at this time. In the interpretation section of the act will be found a definition of the word "disability", which I think is very unhappily phrased. It might have been warranted by the act as it now stands, but I do believe it should be changed if we adopt this bill. Paragraph (f) reads:

> "Disability" means the status of being a married woman, or a minor, lunatic, or idiot.

The idea, of course, was to group together without what I may term any degree of relativity the different causes for disability. I think we should do away with this definition. It does not at all appeal to my sense of gallantry, and I think with the adoption of this bill it will become superfluous.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It had better be put into two sections, anyway.

Mr. RINFRET: I have not read through the bill to the extent of seeing if there remains any such disability with respect to married women, but I do submit to my hon. friend that if the disability of married women is removed by this measure, then surely we should amend the definition.

The bill will be examined in committee, but with the principle of changing our act in order to meet the agreement arrived at in 1930 I am very fully in accord, and it was always the policy of the late government to work towards the achievement of such a position.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to delay the proceedings. I am quite in agreement with the principle of the bill, especially with regard to such Canadian women as marry American citizens, who, as the minister has stated, lose their British nationality and do not acquire that of their husbands. I can say that perhaps with great force because a condition of the kind arose in my own family; but of course that does not touch the question. My purpose in rising is to make an inquiry. I observe that under the bill a British woman marrying the citizen of a country which does not itself give her citizenship does not lose her British nationality. I wish to inquire whether, if she marries a citizen of a country in which she would acquire the national status of her husband, under this bill she might by her own act retain her British nationality?

Mr. GEARY: Look at paragraph 3.

Mr. EULER: I do not think that covers it. I understand very well that a British woman marrying an alien does not lose her British citizenship if she does not acquire the citizenship of her husband; but if she does acquire his citizenship, can she by any act of her own retain her British status?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In any case, it seems to apply to only paragraph 3, that is, when the husband ceases to be a British subject during the marriage and not when the marriage takes place.

Mr SPEAKER: May I remind hon. members that the house is not yet in committee.

Mr. RINFRET: I presume my hon. friend will give attention to the proposal I made, with regard to the definition?

Mr. CAHAN: Certainly. I may say there have been a number of suggestions made by very learned lawyers in regard to this matter, and I should like an opportunity of considering them. The house may be assured that I will present them for consideration when we go into committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that there is no explanatory note, as required by the rules of the house, in connection with this bill, and I see that the same thing occurs in connection with most of the bills which are on my file. These explanatory notes are required by the rules of the house, I understand, and they are very useful in the consideration and study of the bills.

Mr. CAHAN: That objection was raised by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret), but I do not think there is any such rule. We are providing in this bill an entirely new section. I was under the impression that the law clerks were required to prepare the explanatory notes; perhaps I was under a misapprehension. It may be my duty to do that, but I will look into it again, although in this case we are simply providing a new section.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I make this suggestion? We are not all lawyers in this chamber, and many private members who have not studied law find these explanatory notes very valuable. I know nothing about law, and if a short explanation appears I think it facilitates matters.

Mr. JACOBS: I think it is only just to my hon. friend the Secretary of State to say that his speech this afternoon upon the bill was the best explanatory note we have had for some time on these questions. I think he should be given credit for that.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 4, to amend the Copyright Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss this bill at length upon the second reading; I will merely make a few explanations. Every member of the house is well aware that in 1886 an international copyright union was established for the protection of literary and artistic property. A convention in that year was signed at Berne. This convention was revised at Paris in 1896 and again at Berlin in 1908, where the nations of Europe particularly were represented.

Then came a protocol which was signed at Berne in 1914, revising in certain particulars the anterior conventions. The original Berne convention of September 9, 1896, was signed by Great Britain on behalf of Canada and the other dominions. It was not until January 1, 1924, that the protocol signed at Berne was accepted by Canada on the initiative of the late government. The revised convention of November 13, 1908, however, was signed by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland only on its own behalf. Canada was represented on that occasion and it was ratified on behalf of Canada on April 10, 1928. This convention was again revised at Rome on June 2, 1928. Canada was represented at Rome by Hon. Philippe Roy and Mr. John Désy, another gentleman from the office of the Canadian government in Paris, who signed the Rome convention on behalf of Canada.

The present bill has for one of its objects the granting of authority to the government of Canada to procure the ratification of that convention on behalf of the Canadian government. The time in which ratifications may be deposited at Rome expires on July 1, 1931. In order that Canada may adhere finally to the Rome convention it is necessary that certain definitions of our own act should be amended so as to bring the enforcement of the Rome convention within the terms of the principal clauses of our own act.

Then another matter is dealt with. My hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret), my predecessor in office, will recollect that while he was in office he received numerous protests from the various governments of Europe, from representative societies of authors throughout the world, and even from the Dominions Office in London, suggesting that section 40 of our act requiring compulsory registration of assignments of copyright could not possibly be carried out. That section requires that assignments of copyright should be registered by producing duplicate original copies. As a matter of fact many such assignments were made in one copy only; the assignors are long since dead, and it has been impossible therefore to prove title by such registration. Section 40 came up for decision in an Ontario case, that of the Canadian Performing Right Society versus the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, which case was carried to the privy council for decision and in which final judgment was rendered in 1927.

When I was in London during October and November, various delegations called upon me insisting that section 40 of our Act could not be complied with. They stated that if it were complied with it would bankrupt the societies which attempted to comply with it, and that it was not in strict conformity with the provisions of the Berne convention. For instance, it may not be known to hon. members that we have the Canadian Performing Right Society, which is organized under the Companies' Act, and which has its head office in the city of Toronto. That company controls between 2,000,000 and 2,500,000 copyrights, in respect of the right to perform those works. The registration by that company under section 40, involving a payment of $1 for each work registered, would impose a tax, as they call it, or would involve the payment of from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000 into the copyright office, a sum which I may say we would be very pleased to receive. But two sessions ago my predecessor introduced a bill to amend section 40, which received very general approval, I think, but which was not enacted owing to press of other work at the close of the session. I propose to repeal section 40 and to abolish compulsory registration of copyright in Canada. But in doing so, there are certain conditions forced upon my attention with which I think we should deal. For instance, it is well known that Canadian authors find it advantageous to them to assign their copyright rights to American publishers. These assignments are made so as to cover not only the teritorial district of the United States, but some of them, by having sections introduced in the printed forms, as you see them sometimes on the back of an insurance policy, imply an assignment of the author's rights not only in respect of the territorial district of the United States but in respect of Canada as well. In fact, some of them which have come under my observation assign the author's rights in respect of the entire territory from the gulf of Mexico to the North Pole.

But our authors are sometimes not lawyers, sometimes not very practical business men; and in cases which have been brought to my attention they have, after making assignment of their rights for the whole continent to the American publisher, made a subsequent assignment of their rights to a Canadian publisher, which is confined to the territorial district of Canada. In that case there are conflicting assignments. It seems to me that those who wish to ascertain who has real title should be able to go to the copyright office in connection with the department of the Secretary of State and ascertain with whom they must deal with respect to such copyrights. I have therefore retained in the bill the provision that where an author assigns his right to copyright, and that assignment is registered voluntarily at the copyright office, so long as that registration is extant it shall prevail over any other unregistered assignment which he has made. If any other assignee thinks that he has prior rights, then he can go to the courts and contest the issue and have that prior registration removed. We must protect the Canadian public to this extent, that if there are divergent rights which are irreconcilable in their terms, then the one who first registers his right shall, so far as the public is concerned, be deemed to have title.

There are certain other minor amendments made in the bill to bring it into closer conformity with the Rome convention. For instance, the Berne convention, and now the Rome convention also provides that in case of a joint authorship the copyright shall extend fifty years from the date of the death of the last of the joint authors. By, I suppose, some inadvertence we provided in our act that copyright should extend for fifty years from the death of the author who died first, and very considerable technical objections have been made by foreign governments and authors in foreign countries to this provision. We are now attempting to make our law conform to the convention to which we have subscribed.

Another important feature of this bill is found in the last section. This new section is introduced for the purpose of regulating the exercise of their monopoly by associations, societies and companies which carry on in Canada the business of acquiring, assigning and licensing performing rights in which copyright subsists. I have drafted that clause in ample terms with a view to its being considered by a select committee of this house in order that both parties to the controversy may have sufficient opportunity to present their views. I am overwhelmed with petitions and complaints from one end of Canada to the other that such performing right societies should be regulated. The general tenor of these complaints is this: that an author as an author should have a complete monopoly with respect to his work; that is, a monopoly created by statute. But when a thousand authors or the authors of a million works form a society and vest in that society title to all their works, then such monopoly, which can exist only by virtue of a statute, should be regulated with respect to its fees and charges, exactly as a telephone company might be regulated.

I am simply giving the gist of the complaint. I am not saying that the Canadian Performing Right Society exacts fees and charges which are exorbitant. But their contracts must be signed by the hotel companies, because they cannot perform a musical work in any hotel, from the Atlantic to the Pacific unless they have a licence from the performing right society. And it is alleged that the contract so far pressed upon their attention is a contract, not for the right to perform a single, individual work, but a contract to perform the whole two million or two and a half million works which this society controls.

I have received protests from representatives of the Canadian Pacific Railway with respect to their radio performances, and protests from the Canadian National Railways as well. I have received protests from nearly every large radio broadcasting concern in Canada. There must be a general discussion before that select committee as to the special measures to be taken to prevent a monopoly of that character from making undue exactions from the Canadian people.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just received a protest from a parish priest with regard to presentations which are made for charitable purposes. Would it be possible to amend the act to provide that no fee shall be paid in the case of performances given for charitable purposes?

Mr. CAHAN: There is one clause dealing definitely with that aspect of the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you.

Mr. CAHAN: I am making no charge or complaint against the Canadian Performing Right Society. But it is represented to me that in many districts in Canada which are more or less isolated—for instance, in northern Ontario and in certain parts of Quebec—community centres are formed, usually about the parish church, or around the local band or community choir, and during the winter they hold three or four entertainments to provide funds for a community hall, perhaps, or to maintain some other community undertaking. They charge fifteen, or twenty, or twenty-five cents for children and sometimes as high as fifty cents for adults, and the fund so raised is used for community purposes. There is hardly one of these entertainments that does not perform through the village choir or through the village band, two or three or more of these musical works, the copyright to which is vested in a Canadian or foreign copyright society or association. I do not know about the truth of the charge, but it is suggested to me that from time to time, when such community entertainments are held, persons who are or who purport to be agents of such societies intimate to the village choir or to the village band that unless they pay performing rights fees to such a society, they will be haled under our law before a magistrate, or they will be brought up in court and compelled to pay. With that in view I have introduced a clause which may be too broad, but which is the clause to which I just referred my hon. friend. It is clause 11 which reads:

> Nothing contained in the Copyright Act nor in this act shall be construed to prohibit the performance of any musical works in which copyright subsists by churches, colleges, schools, or by philanthropic, charitable or fraternal organizations, provided the performance is given for religious, educational, benevolent or charitable purposes.

That may be too broad. It has been suggested to me by some who are interested in performing rights that I should introduce there the words "provided the performance is given gratuitously," but such matters must be dealt with by the select committee after hearing the evidence. Therefore I submit the bill for the favourable consideration of the house, and if it passes its second reading I shall move that it be referred to a select committee, of which the names of the members comprising it have been agreed upon by the whips of the several parties.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Inasmuch as this bill is going before a special committee, I shall not endeavour to discuss it to-day. I wish, however, to point out that the second reading of a bill always involves the adoption of a principle. There are two schools of thought regarding copyright and from that duality comes the whole difficulty about having the proper distinction. One school of thought, which is the European school, is that copyright is a right in itself; that whenever a writer has composed, or a painter or whoever he is has created a work, he has the full ownership of that work in using the copyright. That is the conception adopted by all European countries which formed the convention in Berne, later on confirmed in Rome, whereby in every country in that union the mere fact that a person was the composer or writer of a book gave him the fullest rights as to all the copyright privileges that might be attached to it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is the claim of the authors.

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. The other school of thought is what I shall call the United States school of thought, which says that copyright is a privilege and can be enjoyed only if it is registered. In the United States of America a copyright will not be recognized unless it has been properly registered. From that duality arises the whole difficulty to which the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) has alluded, and protests, sometimes from the north and sometimes from the south, have always accompanied any attempt to legislate in regard to this matter.

Whilst I was listening to my hon. friend I thought he was endeavouring to write my own biography. It is true that as a member, and later on as a minister, I tried to introduce and I did introduce legislation, the latest bill being I think in 1930, doing away with section 40. My hon. friend is right when he says that a whole group of societies and institutions were once elated over the fact that the government had decided to introduce a bill of that kind; but when he said that it was due to pressure of work that the bill was dropped or not proceeded with, he did not give the complete story. There were protests from innumerable societies, church societies, charitable institutions and also performers and publishers, representing that we were going too far and that it was not fair to them to grant copyright without any registration whatever.

The point I wish to make to-day is that we shall have to make our choice. We must have in this country copyright legislation which will be clear-cut. Either we shall adhere to the convention of Rome and do away with registration, or we shall withdraw from Rome and have our own registration. We have been hesitating—and I will take my share of the blame for that if parliament so desires—we have been going from one point to the other, listening to protests first on one side and then on the other. I surmise from this bill, which is somewhat more extensive than, but in principle very much along the line of the bill which I introduced last session, that the policy of the present government is to have our copyright legislation in conformity with the decisions reached in Rome. It is on that understanding that I shall agree to the second reading of the bill being passed to-day, but I know very well when we get into committee we shall hear representations from all sides and every effort will be made by the usual people who come around when copyright is being discussed, to prevent the bill from coming back from the committee and the committee from reaching a final decision. I hope the government intends to proceed with the bill to the fullest extent. It is hard to say what the Senate will do with it later on.

I wish to insist upon this point, because it has been the whole crux of the difficulty in the past; we must make up our minds whether we wish to deal with copyright as the European countries do and do away with registration, following the convention strictly without any reservation, or not. If we wish to follow the convention, I believe there are in the bill certain sections which we shall have to drop in order to put our legislation into full conformity with the decisions of Rome.

Mr. CAHAN: We do not recognize the decisions of Rome.

Mr. RINFRET: I say: If we fail to do that, then we shall have to withdraw from the convention and have our own registration, a very improper course, I think. I have been trying very hard from year to year to achieve the purpose which my hon. friend says he has in mind now. He can count upon my fullest cooperation, but I know on both sides of the house there are members who will not be with us, and we might as well make up our minds that by the first of July we must give our adherence or withdraw it.

Mr. CAHAN: I am most happy to have the cooperation of my hon. friend.

Mr. RINFRET: Then we had better get busy, have the committee sit at once and do our best to achieve this year what we have not been able to achieve in former years.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): My words will be few, but they must be words of commendation to the minister for having brought this matter before the house at the earliest opportunity. With what the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) has said, I agree, but I should like to get the assurance of the minister that it is the intention to adhere in toto to the convention as it was revised in 1928. We must either adhere to the convention or not. The terms of the convention are clear that there must be no restrictions of any kind; that registration must be done away with. The law, if it is adopted, is as simple as any piece of legislation that was ever drafted. I doubt very much that the intention is to adhere to the revised convention just as it stands. I shall take only one section, to demonstrate my meaning, section 5 of the bill. That is a vital section. Those who have followed this discussion in years gone by will know that there is "copyright," which is a translation of the words, "droits patrimoniaux," and there is also this other right, the moral right.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend. I will say at once that some societies in Europe have complained of the use of the word "publication." I think they give a meaning to "publication" different from that which I intended. As the leader of the opposition has suggested my hon. friend's name as one of the members to be appointed to the select committee, I would suggest that such details might well be left to the consideration of that committee.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am grateful. I did not anticipate such an honour. In view of that, I shall be pleased to defer my observations and to support the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. CAHAN moved:

That Bill No. 4, to amend the Copyright Act, be referred to a special committee consisting of Messrs. Bury, Cahan, Chevrier, Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay), Ernst, Irvine and Rinfret, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF DIRECTORS FROM FIFTEEN TO SEVENTEEN

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian National Railways Act.

He said: Perhaps I had better give a few words of explanation, although the bill itself is very clear. Section 1 is for the purpose of increasing the number of directors of the Canadian National Railways from fifteen to seventeen. Section 2 is merely to correct an error in the Canadian National Railways Act. Through an error the act as enacted in the revised statutes of 1927 refers to section sixty-one of the Railway Act; it should have referred to section seventy. The important clause of the bill is that increasing the directorate from fifteen to seventeen.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Why?

Mr. MANION: There are two provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, which are not represented on the directorate. This is really for the purpose of giving them representation on the board, so that all nine provinces—some represented by more members than others, it is true—will then have representation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Are the directors paid?

Mr. MANION: Yes—$2,000 a year and some travelling expenses.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Cotnam in the chair.

On section 1—Nomination of directors.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Would the minister explain to the committee not only the reason for the appointment of two additional directors, but how the directors are appointed? Is it by order in council? Are their salaries paid by the Department of Railways and Canals or out of the income of the Canadian National Railways? These are questions on which some members of the committee would like information.

There are other questions that I should like to put to the minister. What is the jurisdiction of each of these directors? Are they appointed by territorial district, provincial district, or with regard to divisional points on the railways? How far does their jurisdiction extend? Let me give a concrete example to illustrate better what I mean. Take, for instance, the appointment of Mr. Lucien Morand as a director for the Quebec district. As the minister knows, the Quebec district forms part of the central division, and the central division ends at Rivière du Loup. The section from Rivière du Loup down, including the Gaspe peninsula, forms part of the eastern division. A few years ago when the French Canadian employees of that division wanted to bring before the authorities of the Canadian National Railways some of their grievances, among them was the very question the minister mentioned to-day in answer to an inquiry made by the hon. member for Bonaventure, the question of the transfer of the terminal of that special section of the eastern division of the Canadian National which we call no man's land, which belongs to nobody and which comprises an entirely French Canadian section, and extends, including Gaspe peninsula, for nearly four hundred miles of railway. We thought that we could at least get located at Mont Joli a French Canadian superintendent who has recently been appointed to supervise the administration of that division. Last September a large deputation comprising the members of the chambers of commerce of Gaspe, Mont Joli and Rimouski interviewed Sir Henry Thornton. We presented a petition signed by thirty thousand citizens. We tried to explain to him that that French Canadian section of the Canadian National Railways was administered by officials of the eastern division residing at Campbellton. We were given the usual buttered answer, and were told that the matter would be taken into consideration. We were extremely well received, but may I assure the Minister of Railways and Canals that it will be a great disappointment to the population along the lower shore of the St. Lawrence to read in the newspapers to-morrow the policy which has just been announced. The minister says that the government cannot interfere with the administration of the Canadian National Railways. Sir, that is the very reason I am asking this question at the present time: Are the directors of the Canadian National Railways responsible to the government? Are they appointed by order in council? Are their salaries paid by the Department of Railways and Canals or by the Canadian National Railways out of income? The hon. minister realizes that the appointment of the directors by order in council and payment of their salaries by the Department of Railways and Canals constitutes them as civil employees. They have not the right to mix in politics. Lately we have seen accounts indicating that one of the new directors took an active part in the central Conservative organization of Quebec. That is a dangerous precedent to introduce in the administration of the Canadian National Railways.

There is another phase of the question to which I take exception, notwithstanding the fact that even some of my Liberal colleagues may not agree with me. I have sat for years on the special committee on railways and shipping. With many of my colleagues who have been acting on that committee I have come to the conclusion that the greatest mistake which has been made in the organization of the Canadian National Railways lies in the fact that the presidency of the board of directors has been given to the president and administrator of the railroad. It seems to me that the chairmanship of the board of directors should be entirely separated from the administration of the road. Of course in that regard I am expressing only my personal opinion. Each year estimates of capital expenditure are submitted to the house. We authorize the floating of loans, by the Canadian National system, some of which run as high as $81,000,000, $71,000,000, $60,000,000 and, as in the present year, $70,000,000. We authorize persons who are not responsible to the people to float those loans either abroad or in Canada. For one thing, those loans should be floated by the government, and the Canadian National Railways so far as expenses are concerned should be considered a department of the federal administration. I do not wish to continue my remarks at further length, but I do think the appointment of two other directors at the present time is unwarranted. In these days of stress we should not add to the expenses of the railway company, especially since in the present year we are facing a deficit of nearly $39,000,000 in the operation of the road.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend has asked so many questions that I am sure he will pardon me if I do not deal with all of them. I shall however cover as many as I can remember.

In the first place he asked how directors are appointed. May I say that they are and always have been appointed by order in council. In the second place he asked if they were paid by the railroad or by the government. In answer to that may I say that theoretically at least they are paid by the railroad.

The next question is as to whether they are geographical representatives. I assume the hon. member means to ask if they represent on the board a special section of the country or the Canadian people generally. I would say that certainly they do not and should not represent any special locality; each member of the directorate should represent the Canadian people as a whole. At the same time it is obvious that a man from the province of Quebec who happens to be on the board naturally would take a special interest in that province.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid my hon. friend is wrong. So far as their duties are concerned these directors are allotted to special districts. In Quebec there are two directors; one is allotted the Quebec and the other the Montreal jurisdiction.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is wrong in that statement; they are not allotted special districts at all. True, one is appointed from Quebec and one from the Montreal district, but that custom has been followed in the past. In that particular we are merely living up to the customs which have been established. However I must state that the men representing or coming from those districts are not supposed to represent on the board those districts alone. They are supposed to act for the whole of Canada. As an illustration Mr. Lucien Morand from the province of Quebec is supposed to represent equally the province of British Columbia or any other province; in like manner Mr. J. Fyfe Smith, although coming from the province of British Columbia, would represent equally the rest of the Dominion. They form a directorate exactly in the same way as the directors of any other company.

The next point mentioned by my hon. friend was that of the Gaspe railway; that is a large question. May I say briefly however that so far as I am concerned I can temporarily at least dispose of the question. The railway company, which after all must recommend construction before such construction can be undertaken, has not made any recommendations. In fact a recommendation has been made against the building of the Gaspe railway.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid the hon. minister has altogether misunderstood me. I said that the Gaspe railway was included in that section of the eastern division of the Canadian National Railways which extends from Riviere du Loup to Matapedia, and from Matapedia around the Gaspe peninsula. In that section there are four hundred miles of railway running through a country populated with French-Canadian people. They have used French-Canadian employees, and arising out of numerous requests addressed by deputations to Sir Henry Thornton and other railway officials they have given us a French-Canadian superintendent so that he may deal with French-Canadian employees in their own language. However instead of stationing that superintendent in the section of the country where he is needed at the present time he is being stationed at Campbellton to which place it is proposed that the headquarters of that section of the eastern division should be transferred. I have received to-day a letter from the chamber of commerce of Mont Joli stating that instructions have been given to transfer to Campbellton the staff of employees residing at Mont Joli, constituting nearly 2,200 of the local population. Those people will be compelled to abandon their homes in Mont Joli unless they wish to sacrifice nearly a quarter of their pay. I have received further the information that between fifteen and twenty employees of the local works at Mont Joli have been dismissed, and also that the terminal at Mont Joli is being transferred to Campbellton. What affects Mont Joli affects Matapedia. Notwithstanding the statement made by the minister that members of the board represent the whole of the Canadian people, the fact remains that they are appointed for and are allotted to certain jurisdictions or special districts.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No, there is no special jurisdiction.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It is all right for my hon. friend to make that statement, but I must say that is the way it has worked out in the past. There was representation for that section of the railway from Montreal to Riviere du Loup, but for the central division from Riviere du Loup to Matapedia there was no representative on the directorate.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend has stated that the directors are allotted to certain definite sections of the country. That may arise through some internal arrangement of their own. I speak merely to explain our relations with them.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I do not blame the minister at all.

Mr. MANION: We appoint them as representatives of the whole of Canada, although they naturally have to come from some portion of Canada.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Otherwise you would not ask us to appoint new directors to represent two of the provinces.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend will permit me to continue. He also complained of the location of the French-speaking superintendent at Mont Joli or Campbellton or some other section. Of course he understands that that is entirely a matter of administration. Until now I did not know where the French-speaking superintendent was located. As I say, that is entirely a matter of administration, and I have no control over it whatever. The hon. member also referred to my stating the policy of the government to-day or yesterday.

Sir EUGENE FISET: To-day.

Mr. MANION: That is not the appropriate expression.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I say the policy of the road.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member meant that, but he did not say so. I wish to say that this is the policy of the road, not the policy of the government. If we in any way interfere with the railway management we are introducing politics, as my hon. friend knows quite well, having been for some years a member of the special railway committee dealing with Canadian National Railway affairs. He also mentioned that one of the directors was on the executive of a central Conservative Association in the province of Quebec. I heard something of the sort myself. I say quite frankly that I do not believe that a director of the Canadian National Railways should be in that position. With due respect to my hon. friend, I do not think the director to whom he refers is in that position.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He still is.

Mr. POWER: He still is the most active politician we have in Quebec.

Mr. MANION: I presume hon. members will admit that the gentleman in question has a right as a citizen of this country to take some part in politics. I do not suppose that his going on the directorate of the Canadian National Railways precludes him from so doing. I am informed, after some inquiry on my part, that the gentleman to whom my hon. friend has referred is not on the executive of any Conservative association. If it turns out that he is, I will do all in my power to see that he retires from that position.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will that apply also to British Columbia?

Mr. MANION: Yes. Neither I nor the government believe that any director of the Canadian National Railways should be an active officer of any political association, whether Conservative or Liberal. If I find any of them acting on the executive of a Liberal association I will endeavour to secure their withdrawal from it. My hon. friend also expressed the opinion that the president should not be the chairman of the board of directors.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am expressing my personal opinion, of course.

Mr. MANION: Yes. As a matter of fact the late government which he supported made the arrangement with Sir Henry Thornton. I looked up the agreement when we were appointing the new board of directors, and I find it provided that Sir Henry Thornton shall be not only president of the road but chairman of the board. I am afraid my hon. friend will have to direct his criticism to the late government.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I said so.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is it the intention of the minister in any reorganization of the Canadian National board of directors to have a Labour representative on the board?

Mr. MANION: There is a Labour representative on the board in the person of Mr. Tom Moore.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, the reason given by the minister for the increase of the number of directors from 15 to 17 is that each province ought to be represented on the board. But surely there are not 17 provinces.

Mr. MANION: Quite right.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask how many members on the board have been appointed from the province of Ontario?

Mr. MANION: I will gladly give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister name them?

Mr. MANION: I think I can do so from memory. At the present time there are 15 directors. Three of them are ex-officio members. Sir Henry Thornton, naturally, is one of them; Gerard Ruel, K.C., the vice-president in charge of legal affairs has been on the board from its inception; my deputy and the deputy of my predecessor, Mr. Smart, is the third. Mr. Tom Moore has always been on the board as the representative of Labour. The other members are: Mr. Murdock Kennedy from Prince Edward Island; Mr. James T. Cumming from Nova Scotia; Mr. John D. Palmer from New Brunswick; from Quebec there are Messrs. Lucien Morand of Quebec city, J. Edouard Labelle of Montreal, and Geo. Henderson also of Montreal.

Mr. FACTOR: Five from Quebec and five from Ontario?

Mr. MANION: Three from Quebec, not including the president and the other ex-officio directors that I have mentioned. From Ontario we have Mr. W. A. Boys, K.C., of Barrie, Mr. F. K. Morrow of Toronto, and Mr. Gordon Perry, also of Toronto. From Manitoba we have Mr. S. E. Richards of Winnipeg, and from British Columbia, Mr. J. Fyfe Smith of Vancouver. With regard to the other provinces it has not been the custom in the past, I am free to admit, that they should be represented on the board. But we felt that the country as a whole was so vitally interested in the Canadian National Railways that there would be a feeling of greater satisfaction and content if each province was directly represented on the board. Therefore we thought it wise to increase the board to 17. My hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) asked how, with 15 members on the board, all the provinces were not represented. That is a very reasonable question, but the fact remains that due to the necessity of having the executive committee meet every week it was absolutely necessary to have a number of the directors within a night's run of Montreal, the headquarters of the system. We thought the matter over very seriously and tried to figure out how, without enlarging the board, we could give each of the western provinces a director, but we could not do it and have the members of the executive committee within a night's run of Montreal; this can only be accomplished by selecting its membership from Ontario and Quebec. That is the reason for the change. My friend from Rimouski opposed the idea of enlarging the board because of the additional expense entailed. As a matter of fact, the directors each receive $2,000, and under the circumstances the extra expense is not really serious.

Sir EUGENE FISET: For the last four years I have tried to ascertain what are the real duties of that famous executive, and of the board of directors. I quite understand what the minister says, that these directors have been chosen in Quebec and Ontario in order that they may meet together, but has the minister ever seen a copy of the agenda containing the questions which are ordinarily submitted to the executive of the board of directors? Is he aware of the fact that, for the most part, the policy of the railway is usually submitted to the executive and very rarely to a full meeting of the board? I fail to understand what really are the duties of these directors. Are they administrators? Do they administer, or do they simply decide on the policy to be followed by the administration?

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to reflect in any way upon the late board of directors, but I do say I do not think they took a very active part in the business affairs of the railway. The board of directors which has been appointed has been chosen largely from outstanding business men. There may be an exception to that statement, but I think the fifteen men are at least the equals—I do not want to say the superiors—of any board of directors the Canadian National Railways ever had. Personally I think they are much superior, but I am not going to argue that point. They are all reasonably outstanding business men. Their duties are to pass upon the business affairs of the company, just as the directors of any company are expected to pass upon its business affairs. If the directors happen to be of the lame duck variety; if they do not ask for or demand any information, and do not show some power or force in the management of the road, we cannot help it. I do not mind telling my hon. friend that I will be disappointed if members of this group take that attitude. Some of the individual directors already have spoken to me, and I have pointed out to them that it is their business to find out from the railway officials anything they wish to know. I have said to them, "You are directors and it is your business to demand any information you wish."

Sir EUGENE FISET: Perhaps if I put a concrete question—

Mr. MANION: Just let me finish. My hon. friend asked if I ever saw the agenda presented at any of these meetings, and it just happened that I had one laid on my desk this morning. The executive committee meets once a week. It is true that perhaps things may pass through quickly, as they sometimes pass through parliament in the latter weeks of the session, but they go through in a formal way. I spent at least half an hour this morning glancing through the agenda for the last meeting of the executive committee, and it was very well and completely done. I do not know whether the business was efficiently handled by the meeting, but the record laid before me would seem to indicate that such was the case.

With regard to the whole board of directors, they are in office from a business standpoint. I do not think they should interfere in the detailed administration of the roads that is, in regard to the working men on the road or the officers. I do not think they should do that, in a general way, but it is their business, as it is the business of directors in any other large company, to go into the organization and administration of the business affairs of the road and to protect the people of Canada if necessary.

Sir EUGENE FISET: This is the concrete question I should like the minister to answer: Do those directors, for instance, deal with the salaries of the superior staff of the Canadian National railways?

Mr. MANION: They certainly could do so.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Have they done it in the past, to the knowledge of the minister?

Mr. MANION: No, not to my knowledge.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Then let me ask another question. The minister is aware that for the last four years the special committee on railways and shipping has tried to obtain from the officials of the Canadian National railways a list of the salaries paid. I am not talking about the union wages paid the employees of the company; I mean the salaries of the officials and their staffs. We desired this information in order to try to ascertain what really were the overhead charges in the administration of the road. We have not succeeded as yet in getting that information; we did not even succeed in getting it in camera. Is the minister going to change the policy, and if he does appoint a committee this year will it be part of the duty of that committee to inquire into such questions? Of course, it may be due to the change of administration, but some of us are receiving rather queer inquiries from all over Canada. I have received them even from Vancouver, inquiring into that special phase of the organization of the Canadian National Railways. Can the minister give us any hope that we may be entitled to inquire into that matter if we desire to do so?

Mr. MANION: The attitude of the late government was that the salaries of the higher officials should not be given because it was not considered in the public interest.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid the minister is mistaken; it was not the attitude of the government but the attitude of the officials of the railway, supported by the minister.

Mr. MANION: I understand that, but it was also the attitude of the government in this way, that when questions were put on the order paper having to do with these matters, the answer was that it was not considered in the public interest to give this information. There is at present on the order paper a question along these lines proposed by an hon. member of the house. I do not mind saying quite frankly, speaking for myself only in this matter, that I see no reason why it should be hurtful to the national interest to disclose the salary of any man. I do not know what was the reason in the past; I have never gone into the matter, but I may tell my hon. friend now that I have been more successful as minister than the whole committee was in the past few years, because I have in my desk in my other office a list of the officials and their salaries.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I hope the minister will give us that information confidentially.

Mr. MANION: No, at the moment I do not intend to give it. I simply say I have it, and I think it is the intention of the government to reappoint a special committee which will have the same right to go into all questions that it had in the past. I have not discussed the matter, so I cannot say positively, but I do not imagine it would be a policy of the government to overrule the decision of the management in regard to the salaries in question. However, since my hon. friend was chairman of the committee for some time, probably he will be a member of that committee this year; he will have the opportunity of taking up some of the matters to which he is now referring, and he can push them as far as he likes.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But the committee has turned into a mutual admiration society during the last few years.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend was chairman of the committee.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Perhaps that was the reason.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to ask the minister whether, in the event of two new directors being appointed, he and the government will take into consideration the question of choosing at least one director to represent the agricultural sections and interests of this country.

Mr. MANION: Yes, certainly we are considering that matter, and have been considering it for some time. I am hoping—and I can only go that far, because we have not chosen the two new directors—that one may be representative of the agricultural interests.

Mr. HANBURY: I have here the report of the Canadian National Railways for 1930, and it shows as members of the executive committee, up to December 24, 1930, Sir Henry Thornton, Mr. Ruel, Mr. Henry, Mr. Decary,

Mr. Gardiner, Mr. Raeside and Mr. Smart. Could the minister tell me which of these gentlemen are officers of the railway and serving their full time in the employ of the company?

Mr. MANION: Sir Henry Thornton and Mr. Ruel, and Mr. Smart is my deputy; I think those are all. Mr. Ruel is vice-president in charge of legal affairs, while Mr. Smart is deputy minister of railways, and represents the minister on the board.

Mr. EULER: Is Mr. Henry on the board?

Mr. MANION: No, not at the present time.

Mr. HANBURY: Did he serve full time with the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: No, he was deputy minister at that time.

Mr. HANBURY: What was Mr. Smart's position? According to this report they were both on the board at the same time.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Henry retired as deputy minister and became associated with the Beauharnois company as an official. They left him on as one of the executives and directors and when Mr. Smart took the position of deputy minister of railways he went on the board in Mr. Henry's place, so the two of them were only on together for a short time.

Mr. SPENCER: What position did the deputy minister hold before he was appointed to that office?

Mr. MANION: I do not know exactly. He was an officer of the railway, had been in the railway business all his life, and for some years, I believe, was professor of railway engineering in McGill university.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the deputy minister, as a director of the company, receive the $2,000?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. HANBURY: I understood that the policy of the government heretofore has been that there should be the minimum of interference by either political party with the operation of the Canadian National Railways, and that with that object in view there was created an executive committee, the officers of the Canadian National Railways being practically in control.

Mr. MANION: They were only two out of seven.

Mr. HANBURY: Three out of seven.

Mr. MANION: The deputy is not an officer of the railway; he is an officer of the Department of Railways. He is not in any way an officer of the company. The deputy minister is entirely—if I may use the expression in its widest sense—the servant of the Minister of Railways.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does not the deputy minister, over and above his salary as a civil servant, receive certain emoluments as a member of the executive of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: He gets the director's fees.

Sir EUGENE FISET: And to that extent he is as much an administrator of the railway as are the other directors.

Mr. MANION: I did not say he was not as much an administrator; I said he was not an officer. My hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard said he was an officer of the road. He is not; he is a director. He is not associated with the Canadian National Railways in the sense that Sir Henry Thornton is, or Mr. Hungerford.

Mr. POWER: It has never been quite clear to me what the duties of the executive directors are. I had an idea—I may be wrong in this—that these men were largely appointed to stand between the railroad officials and the general public. Am I right in that assumption—that they stand between the railroad officials and the general public of the particular section of the country from which they come?

Mr. MANION: I rather think the Minister of Railways has to stand between the railway officials and the public. I do not intend that as a short answer, but that has been my experience. So far as the executive is concerned, it acts as any other executive does. The Canadian Pacific Railway also has an executive. The executive has to meet every week, and it would not be possible, for example, to have Mr. Fyfe Smith from Vancouver present at these weekly meetings—I do not remember the late director from British Columbia. He could not get here every week unless he remained here permanently, so that there was appointed an executive, in the case of the late directorate, of seven, and at the present time eight, to meet every week and pass upon such matters as might come before them. The directorate as a whole meets every month.

Mr. POWER: What particular advantage is it to any province to have members from that province on the board of directors?

Mr. MANION: There should be no particular local advantage inasmuch as a director is supposed to represent the whole people of Canada and should not try to obtain any advantage for his own province. But my hon. friend knows this country well enough to realize that, not only in railway directorates but in governments as well as in everything else, Canada has a sort of geographic mind whereby the people demand representation on almost all bodies that are appointed. It is rather a disadvantage to the country as a whole, but that feeling exists nevertheless. And I may tell my hon. friend that when we appointed the directorate—the fifteen that are now appointed—although Alberta and Saskatchewan had not been represented for many years, I received some very severe protests from those provinces because they had no representation. It illustrates the point I am making. Properly, the directors should not attempt to seek any advantage for the parts of the country from which they respectively come, although possibly it would afford a greater feeling of satisfaction to the different sections of the country if they felt that they were represented by a man who at least would see that they were done no injustice.

Mr. POWER: I am not speaking of the board of directors but of the executive. Is there any particular advantage derived by any province in having a representative on the executive?

Mr. MANION: As regards the executive, geography has not been taken into account. The directors themselves appointed the executive for two reasons: first, supposedly, that the men so appointed were suitable; and secondly, that they were accessible—that they could easily reach Montreal for an executive meeting.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That second reason is really the more important one. Those gentlemen who can reach Montreal more readily are selected to serve on the executive.

Mr. MANION: Naturally, if they could not reach Montreal they could not be on the executive.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I say that, because I have read in the newspapers in my own city how important a man we had to represent us on the board, inasmuch as he had been made a member of the executive. If it is merely because he can take a night train to Montreal—

Mr. MANION: I am sorry to hear my hon. friend imply that he has not much admiration for the gentleman in question. I have heard that the representative from Quebec city was an outstanding man.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, he was outstanding enough to be campaign manager of the Tory fund at the last election.

Mr. MANION: And apparently he made a pretty good job of that. I hope he makes as good a job of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Did these directors who are no longer in office resign or were they dismissed because they were not performing their duties satisfactorily? Is it necessary to change directors at every election? Were these gentlemen not performing their duties properly? If they were, why was there a change?

Mr. MANION: At least, politics had nothing to do with it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Tell it to the marines.

Mr. MANION: My right hon. friend the ex-Prime Minister and present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) would not, I think, admit that his directorate was appointed for political reasons.

Mr. HANBURY: I am sure the Minister of Railways has a sense of humour.

Mr. MANION: I am glad I have; it is an important thing to have. To answer my hon. friend's question, the directors are appointed—I believe this is the exact phraseology—"from one annual meeting to another, or until their successors are appointed." In the case of the late directorate, the annual meeting had passed and we appointed their successors. Their term had lapsed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does not the minister think—

Mr. MANION: One at a time, please.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does the minister say that these directors are appointed at every annual meeting?

Mr. MANION: No, from one annual meeting to another, or until their successors are appointed.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: By whom—the government?

Mr. MANION: By the government.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There were no delinquencies on the part of the directors who were there before?

Mr. MANION: I would not say there were. I do not know of any delinquencies, but we have appointed a better board, I think.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Was there any complaint from the public, the patrons of the Canadian National Railways, as to the manner in which the gentlemen who were discharged had performed their duties?

Mr. MANION: This is no time to go into such questions. I know of nothing of a criminal character against any of the late directors. They have been simply replaced. But suppose I had had such complaints, would it be of any particular use to disclose it in the house? I do not think it would do any good.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I ask the question because I have received letters from several persons among those whom I represent, patrons of the Canadian National Railways, who were satisfied with the service which the road was giving and who were inquiring whether these directors were dismissed for any political reason. They are asking whether these gentlemen had failed to perform their duties satisfactorily; and if they were satisfactory, why were they dismissed?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend can assure his friends that politics had nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. McINTOSH: Did the government, in making the appointments we have heard about this afternoon, receive any O.K. from the leading officers of the company before the appointments were made, if there were no politics in the matter?

Mr. MANION: I do not think we have yet reached the stage of the government letting the management of the Canadian National make our appointments; we make our own appointments and after we have made them, we get the endorsation of the Canadian National.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister does not take any suggestions from the company in that respect?

Mr. MANION: Not in the least, although, to be fair I may tell my hon. friend that I did ask Sir Henry Thornton whether he had any suggestions; and they were given consideration.

Mr. McINTOSH: That was the point about which I was inquiring.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Can the minister say how many Liberals, how many Liberal-Progressives and how many Progressives are on the board?

Mr. MANION: For all I know, they may be all Liberals. I have not the faintest idea about the politics of any of them. I learned this afternoon from the hon. member for Rimouski that one of them acts on the Conservative committee, but if that be true I am going to try to stop that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Minister of Railways has shown me that he is one of the kindest men I know if he appointed some of his old friends of the time when he himself was a Liberal.

Mr. MANION: I did not quite catch that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The minister said that they might all be Liberals. Probably he appointed some of his old friends of the time when he was a Liberal.

Mr. MANION: I hope I did.

Mr. HANBURY: For the information of the minister I would like to assure him that the appointee from British Columbia, Mr. J. Fyfe Smith of Vancouver, who is a very fine and able gentleman, is a Conservative. If I am mistaken, probably the Minister of Trade and Commerce can correct me, but I think Mr. Smith was the treasurer of the Conservative party in British Columbia.

Mr. MANION: He is not at the present time.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think he ever was.

Mr. HANBURY: I do not know; there are several treasurers, but I understand he handled some money.

Mr. MANION: Not having known anythink about their politics, I am glad to hear that some of them are Conservatives, because since we came into power we are hearing that everyone we appoint is a Liberal.

Mr. JACOBS: Speaking from this side of the house, I want to congratulate the minister on the appointments he has made. During the period the Liberal party was in power, every man who was a director of the Canadian National was a Liberal appointed by a Liberal government, and I think it is only right, now that we have gone out of power, that they should be superseded by men appointed from the Conservative party, as Conservatives, by Conservatives and for Conservatives. This is only as it should be, and in due time, when this government retires—and I hope it will do so within the time that I am still living—these men will be superseded by Liberals. This is part of the system. I recall that in 1922 after the Conservative government had gone out of power I was in Winnipeg shortly before the appointment of the new directors of the Canadian National. I made the prediction at a public meeting that every man who was to be appointed to that board would be a Liberal, regardless of his ability or his position or whether he was an outstanding man or not. I was glad to see that the gift of prophecy which my people always claim had descended upon me. Why dissemble? I am surprised that the Minister of Railways and Canals should try to sidestep the question.

These men were no doubt appointed because they were men of ability. After all, we do not claim to have in our party a monopoly of ability. There are some men of ability on the other side; some of them are on the front benches, and others, perhaps more able, are on the back benches. It is a mistake for us to endeavour to decry the appointment of these men because they happen to be Conservatives. I know some very estimable, respectable men both inside and outside of this house, who are Conservatives. This is only part of the spoils system, and as long as the government is running an enterprise of this kind, it will exist. I congratulate the Minister of Railways and the government upon their appointments. Every man who has been appointed has, I understand, rendered some service to his party, and what more do we want? We are satisfied; we went to the country; we were defeated; we know we were defeated; the thing is made more evident to us every day.

Sitting here on the opposite side of the house in the cold shades I feel very much like Marius, the conquerer of Hannibal. When he was dismissed from his own country and ostracized, he went to Carthage, the country that he had conquered. There he was found by one of his friends and he said to him: "Go back to Rome and say that you have seen Marius weeping on the walls of Carthage." I feel very much like that every day. That is why I do not like to come into the house. I am thinking of the ancient glories of the Liberal party. And see what we have come to! Sometimes, however, I am inclined to think there is a good time still coming for the Liberal party. I hope it will not be deferred too long. We ought to be glad and happy, owing to present conditions, that we are on this side of the house without responsibility, and that our friends are on the other side making these appointments and trying to convince the people of Canada that never before in our history were we as happy as now.

Mr. POULIOT: It is all right to say that there will be no politics in the national railways; this is always being said, but I cannot understand why there are so many mysteries about the railways. When we ask the Minister of Railways for some information about the Canadian National, that information is not always given to us. For this I am not altogether blaming the present minister, because under another administration I had reason to make a similar complaint in the house several years ago. This situation is sometimes very embarrassing on account of the high figures of the railway appropriations that are submitted to us for our approval. The Canadian National Railways come to the House of Commons asking members of parliament to vote large sums of money, and when we ask the minister for information about this or that, sometimes the minister answers about this, but about that he says it is not in the interests of the public or of the railway to give the information. Supposing a man goes to a friend and asks for his endorsation on a note for $500 or $1,000, the friend would be perfectly justified in asking that man to tell how he stands financially, if he has assets, and so on. How can it happen that information is refused to members of parliament who are called upon to vote these large sums, especially this year when the deficit of the Canadian National, as the Prime Minister has announced and as the Minister of Railways knows very well, will be very substantial? The Canadian National Railways will have to come to parliament again this year, as it has done in previous years, and probably ask us to vote money blindly. That is far from being satisfactory. Whenever a member of parliament asks the Minister of Railways for information about the railway the minister may not always have the information at hand, but I cannot conceive how it happens that the management of the railway refuses to give that information to the members of this house. I am quite sure that the minister himself can get all the information he wants from the railway. Why can it not be given through him to the members of this house? Surely the minister can trust hon. members of this house with information that may be of a confidential character. It may sometimes happen that the railway would not like information of a semi-private character given to the press. That is quite understandable, but it might be given to the members of this house just as well as it is given to the minister. If the management of the railway trusts the minister, why does it not trust the members of the house? I suggested the very same thing four or five years ago when the previous government was in power, but I did not receive a favourable reply. Now I address the same complaint to the present minister. I do not know what his answer will be, but it seems to me that the request I am making is only fair. How can we tell our electors that we are satisfied with the management of the railway if information about the railway is refused to us? To give you an idea, Mr. Chairman, of what happens in large companies, I know, for instance, of one lumber concern which shows a certain acreage of timber limits as security for the bondholders, whereas as a matter of fact this concern is renting about one hundred square miles of burnt timber. It is not worth very much, but it gives the impression that the company is the possessor of one hundred more square miles of timber than it really possesses.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, just before the adjournment I was speaking of the fact that sometimes information is refused members of parliament by the Minister of Railways and Canals on behalf of the Canadian National Railways. The reason is given that it is not in the interests of the country or of the railway company to give such information. I will ask the minister to be kind enough to trust the members of this house. Probably I should not suggest that he is unwilling to trust them, but there is no doubt that the Canadian National Railways do not always trust hon. members, and I would ask the minister to speak concerning that matter to the officials, and to the directors he has recently appointed. I have before me a copy of the Canadian National Railways magazine of February, 1931, in which there is a report of a dinner at which the minister was guest of honour. At that notable gathering were directors, representatives, employees and guests of Canadian National officials. The speeches were reported, and if one may judge from the article in this magazine it was what might be termed a social affair. No indication is given of the special duties of directors of the Canadian National Railways. It is stated that the hon. minister through his deputy represents the people on the board of directors. My hon. friend may correct me if I am wrong, but it is so stated in this issue of the magazine published by the Canadian National Railways. Sometimes we are in a very difficult position on account of these mysteries, but I would repeat that the minister can trust hon. members on this side of the house as well as those on the other side. If he wishes to give information of a confidential character he may be sure that the secret will be kept. On the other hand hon. members will have the satisfaction of not being required to vote blindly.

I do not wish unduly, to take up the time of the house, nor do I wish to read any lengthy report concerning proposed construction by the Canadian National Railways. I would like, however, to answer the question put to me, the other day, by the minister; I believe it bears some relation to the proposed legislation now before this committee. In that connection the directors of the railway company may have something to say; however, my hon. friend expressed the wish to be enlightened on the point, and I shall endeavour to comply with his desire. If my memory serves me correctly, he asked me why the station at Riviere du Loup had not been built while the Liberal party was in power. Mr. Chairman, the reason is very clear. The first year I was elected I sent a memorandum to Sir Henry Thornton, president and chairman of the Canadian National Railways, requesting the building of the station. At that time I was told that they had to curtail expenses to the limit. That was the reason given; yet hon. members may see in Hansard of Monday last the translation of the report made by the board of health. At that time parts of the Canadian National Railways, especially the old Canadian Government Railways and the Intercolonial Railways, were not on the same footing as other sections of the system in regard to the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. If hon. members will refer to Hansard of April 12, 1928, they will find the following:

Mr. Dunning: Under the old section, which will be seen in the explanatory note, the Canadian Government Railways were under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners with respect to their operation but not with respect to construction and maintenance. The object of the amendement is to put the Canadian Government Railways under the Board of Railway Commissioners as all other railways are under their control, especially with regard to the construction and maintenance of the lines. It is thought that there is now no reason for what might be called special privilege for the government railways, and when I speak of government railways I am distinguishing between them and the Canadian National Railways generally. It is understood that the Canadian National Railways generally are already under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. This section deals with the old Canadian Government Railways, the Intercolonial Railway and the National Transcontinental Railway, and seeks to bring them more completely under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners than is now the case.

Mr. Bennett: What necessity has arisen to demand this legislation?

Mr. Dunning: The necessity arises through the demands of people along the lines affected for improvements of one kind or another for which, in any other part of the country, they would secure an order from the Board of Railway Commissioners. With respect to these particular lines they find it necessary to come to the minister exactly as they did when the minister had direct control over the Intercolonial Railway and the National Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. Bennett: Surely this does not apply to the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. Dunning: Yes.

Mr. Cantley: Do I understand that the minister wants to be protected from the people of the maritime provinces?

Mr. Dunning: No, I have no desire to be protected from the people of any part of Canada, but I do desire to give the people of every part of this country the same right to appear before the Board of Railway Commissioners and appeal for anything they think should be done which comes within the scope of the Railway Act. Really this simply creates a standard practice on our Canadian railways, and I think the house will agree that it is desirable that all our system should be operated in a standard manner.

Section 16 of chapter 172 of the Canadian National Railways Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, reads as follows:

Notwithstanding anything in the Government Railways Act or any other act, the provisions of the Railway Act respecting the operation of a railway, as distinguished from the provisions of such act respecting the construction or maintenance of a railway, shall apply to such of the Canadian Government Railways as would but for the passing of this act be subject to the Government Railways Act, during such time as the operation and management thereof is entrusted to the company under the provisions of this act.

The provisions of the Railway Act, respecting maintenance of a railway, shall also apply to such railways during the time aforementioned in so far as such maintenance affects the safety and protection of railway employees and the passengers upon the railway.

Then follows the amendment brought forward by the then Minister of Railways and Canals as contained in chapter 13 of 18-19 George V:

Section sixteen of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter one hundred and seventy-two of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

16. (1) Notwithstanding anything in the Government Railways Act, or any other act the provisions of the Railway Act respecting the construction, maintenance and operation of a railway (excepting those relating to the location of lines of railway, the making and filing of plans and profiles—other than highway and railway crossing plans and the taking and using of lands and expropriation proceedings) shall apply to any Canadian government railway which would, but for the passing of this act, but only for the period during which the management and operation of that railway is entrusted to the company under the provisions of this act.

(2) All the provisions of the Expropriation Act and all legal procedure in matters arising under the Expropriation Act shall apply, during the said period, to such Canadian government railway in like manner as if this act had not been passed.

The intention of the amendment was to put construction and maintenance on the same footing as operation. Afterwards the chamber of commerce and the city council communicated with the railway management, and the board of health made a report on the Rivière du Loup station. In 1928 the matter was discussed with the manager of the Atlantic region, and in January, 1929, at Moncton I met Mr. Appleton and told him I intended to bring the resolutions and the report to the attention of this house. I would refer hon. members to Hansard of Monday last containing these papers, a perusal of which, I am sure, will be interesting to them. Mr. Appleton told me that the estimates of 1929 had to be reduced from $5,000,000 to $1,700,000, and that therefore the item could not be included in the budget of 1929, but that it would be placed in the budget of 1930. May I bring to the attention of hon. members a resolution passed on April 13, 1931, by the city council of Riviere du Loup. As it is very short I will read it:

At a meeting of the Riviere du Loup city council held at the city hall, on Monday, April 13, 1931, were present: His Worship the Mayor Charles Eugéne Dubé, Messrs. the Councillors, E. Laforest, pro-mayor, L. P. Lizotte, A. Dumais, J. H. Mailloux, A. Marquis, J. G. Parent, forming a quorum of said council under the chairmanship of His Worship the Mayor.

Councillor L. P. Lizotte moves, seconded by Councillor J. H. Mailloux: That this council desires to protest against the decision of the Canadian Railway Commission to repair the present station instead of building a new one, and, request them to reconsider their decision.

That copy of this resolution be transmitted to the competent authorities.

Unanimously adopted.

What was my surprise the other day to hear my right hon. friend the Prime Minister complaining of the fact that in this connection I had read to the house reports by the board of health! May I tell him that the course I took should not be treated as a joke. I regard my duty as a member of parliament very seriously and I brought the case to the attention of the house as a matter of principle. We want definite information about what is to be done by the Canadian National Railways. I understand the management is doing very well under the circumstances. But parliament is endorsing all the liabilities of the Canadian National Railways and voting public money from time to time to continue their operation We want to know what is going to happen. We know what has happened in this case, that a certain sum of money was inclued in the budget of the Canadian National Railways for a definite purpose. As my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said, and rightly said, if money is voted for a certain definite purpose, and the money is not spent, the vote lapses. As a matter of fact, the money so voted was spent for another purpose,—I do not know what. Certainly there was no economy in so doing.

An hon. MEMBER: What was the amount voted?

Mr. POULIOT: The amount voted was $77,136, of which $50,000 or $60,000 was on capital account; but there being a deficit in the Atlantic division, current expenditure other than capital had to be included in the vote.

You, Mr. Chairman, as batonnier of the Quebec bar, are familiar with the decisions given by the courts of Quebec in municipal matters, and no doubt will recall the case of Riou v. Martin which went to the Supreme Court of Canada. That case was decided in 1925 by the highest tribunal in this country. The Supreme Court of Canada held that when certain money had been appropriated by a municipal corporation for a definite purpose, and it was spent for some other purpose, the mayor and the whole council became liable personally for the full amount so diverted. I do not ask the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues personally to reimburse the vote of $77,136, although some of my hon. friends to your right, Mr. Chairman, told me they would be ready to form a "bee" and come down to Riviere du Loup and build the station.

Mr. SPOTTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: I am glad to hear my hon. friend from North Huron (Mr. Spotton) applaud my statement. I told him the other day that I would ask him to be the cornerstone of that station. Truly, he would make a wonderful cornerstone; for the ceremony would be performed by Sir Henry Thornton, and they would be a perfect match. I say this in the most friendly spirit. Although, Mr. Chairman, I would not characterize the diversion of the vote as a fraudulent conversion of funds by the government, for I am sure no member of the cabinet appropriated the money personally, still it was spent for a purpose other than that for which it had been presented to the committee on railway and shipping last session.

Mr. MANION: How does my hon. friend know that the money was spent for some other purpose? Where does he get his information?

Mr. POULIOT: I got that information from the right hon. Prime Minister the other day.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MANION: No, the Prime Minister did not give any such information.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend will allow me I will answer his question. Every hon. member who was in the house on the occasion will recall that I asked the right hon. Prime Minister if under the Audit Act any vote not spent within the financial year lapsed, and he said yes. Afterwards I spoke of vote 323 of last session, which included the special amount of $77,136 for the building of the station at Riviere du Loup, according to a letter signed by the deputy minister of Railways and Canals, which letter will be found in Hansard. I asked the right hon. gentleman if all that money had been spent, and he told me it had. The money was spent, but no station was built. In that case the money must evidently have been spent for something else, or no one can understand anything at all about it. The station was not built but the money has been spent. Where has it gone?

This is a matter of principle, and to-day we are asked to vote a certain amount of money for this, that and the other thing. Who will tell us that this money will not be spent in some other part of the country altogether and for some purpose other than that for which it has been voted? This money has gone some place, but I do not believe the minister himself knows where it has gone; he does not know any more about it than I do. All they know is that it has vanished. If I put a question on the orders of the day the government will be so embarrassed that they probably will answer that it is not in the public interest or in the interests of the railway to give the information. I wish to be fair, but I wish to be treated fairly also, and my request is very reasonable.

Mr. BENNETT: What was that request?

Mr. POULIOT: This is a very good start, at all events. If the right hon. Prime Minister had been here; if he had been in charge of the department he would not have tolerated such a thing. I know the Prime Minister well enough to be sure that he would not have taken such action; he would not have refused to sanction the building of that station. I am sure the Minister of Railways also would not have himself done such a thing; it was done when both were not here. He is a very able doctor, and I take this opportunity of saying that I will not make any disagreeable reflection on him to-night, and if he seemed offended because he lacked a sense of humour one day, I am sorry for it.

Mr. BENNETT: If he is a very able doctor I should be afraid of his diagnosis if I were the hon. member.

Mr. POULIOT: I would never offend my hon. friend the Minister of Railways as a doctor, because he is a very able doctor and if I ever feel ill I hope he will come to my rescue.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid I should send my hon. friend to the hospital.

Mr. POULIOT: I think my hon. friend would like me to be in hospital when the estimates of the Department of Railways come up, but I am here and thank God I am in good health. If my hon. friend the minister were the cleverest lawyer in Canada; if he were as good a lawyer as he is a doctor, I should nevertheless say to him that he has a very bad case. Why did he take such a bad case? He is wasting his time trying to defend it. No one can explain it, and because no satisfactory explanation is given I am fighting for an answer.

Mr. BENNETT: What was it the hon. member was asking for?

An hon. MEMBER: He wants a station.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sure the right hon. Prime Minister is very familiar with the matter. He is very quick; he understands things, and he undoubtedly knows what I am asking for.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought it was an epitaph.

Mr. POULIOT: No, it is not an epitaph, but if a new station is not built the old station will be the epitaph of the Tory party in my county. It will not be a beautiful one for them, because that mausoleum is eaten away by rats. It is in terrible condition, as my English-speaking friends in the house will see by looking up the translation in Hansard of last Monday. For the honour of this government, and to show that the policies of the right hon. gentleman are put in practice, would it not be proper for him to tell the Canadian National Railways to go ahead and put in their budget for this year the same amount that they had put in it last year, and which has been spent for other purposes unknown. Is it not a fair suggestion?

I have another question to address to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways. Since no station was built last year, would he agree to tell the house the amounts of the tenders that were put in for the construction of that station? I hear no answer from the minister, so I will put my question on the order paper and see if the minister will answer it then. Would it be against the interests of the railway or of the country to give that information to the public? I would not like to have the prices changed; I should like to get the original prices, which would prove my contention that the interference of the defeated Tory candidate in Témiscouata was the reason for the decision made by the acting Minister of Railways (Sir George Perley).

I see my friends the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works here to-night. I ask them if they had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the decision of the acting Minister of Railways in regard to this station. Did they have anything to do with the decision not to build that station? I wonder if the Postmaster General or the Minister of Public Works will tell me what was then said by the defeated Tory candidate, that it was not a proper time to build that station.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend knows very well that if we did have anything to do with it we would not be able to disclose it.

Mr. POULIOT: Because it is not in the interests of the country to know about it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend knows better than that; he knows that the oath of a privy councillor prevents him from disclosing any information such as the hon. gentleman is requesting.

Mr. POULIOT: I trust my hon. friend enough to believe him even when he is not under oath. Something mysterious happened, and a wrong was done. The Canadian National Railways wanted to build that station but were prevented from doing so by the acting minister. My friend the Minister of Railways said it was a matter of economy, but it was included in a vote of $51,600,000, which was spent; later on $11,000,000 was spent by the Canadian National Railways; $2,000,000 was spent very easily on the Welland canal, and $1,500,000 was taken from the unemployment fund to cover the interest on other railway expenditure. All that money was spent, but they could not find $7,000 to make up the difference between the amount of one tender and the amount voted by parliament.

I claim justice and fair play, Mr. Chairman, and in doing so I represent the views of my electors. They have sent me here to defend their rights, and that is what I am doing. Last winter several people suffered hunger because they could not get work, and that suffering would have been prevented if this building had been constructed at the proper time. In all fairness I ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways to be good enough to take sufficient interest in this matter, so that their manner of dealing with things in connection with the Canadian National Railways may not be a standing reproach to them. It is all very well to spend large sums of money in the big cities, but the small centres should be treated fairly; because otherwise the carpenters and other workmen who are unable to secure employment in their own places have to migrate to the larger cities, thus adding to the numbers of the unemployed. This is one of the causes of unemployment in this country, and I can assure the leader of the government and his colleagues that it is a serious matter. Indeed, if the same thing had occurred in any other part of the country I would have taken the same stand, because one has to be fair to every section, the small centres as well as the larger ones. All the money should not be spent only in big cities like Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. I am not saying this critically; I am merely emphasizing my point. The country people who cannot get work at home migrate to the big cities, and this only increases unemployment, at the same time adding to the burden which now weighs upon the shoulders of the population. For all these reasons, as we say in legal proceedings, I conclude, with the hope that in the near future the Prime Minister will put into effect the policy which he enunciated in Brandon and inform the Canadian National Railways that they have a free hand to do what they think best. Then they will resume their program and construct that building, which I am sure will be an asset to the community.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways to a situation which I pointed out to him some ten days ago, when he promised that he would have the matter looked into and give me a reply. Up to the present time I have not received that reply. I can well understand how busy the minister is, and I do not wish to blame him for the delay.

Mr. MANION: What was the subject?

Mr. VENIOT: The resolution of the board of trade of Tracadie, regarding the cutting down of railway service in the county of Gloucester. I wish to deal with that question to-night in the hope of throwing some light upon it and placing the minister in a position where he may be able to take it up, more intelligently than he can at present, with the head office at Montreal.

The Caraquet railway was taken over by the Canadian National Railways some years ago. It has become one of the most paying branches or feeders to the Canadian National Railways, if not the most paying, in the eastern section of the line. Up to this year we have had in the summer time a daily freight and passenger service. During the last two or three years we have had in winter season a regular daily freight service and passenger express service. The people of the lower section of Gloucester, through which the line runs, make up a population of about 35,000. They applied to the railway in 1928 for a daily express service in the summer. Knowing as I did that that could not be a paying undertaking, I did not approve of their application. I consulted the different interests of that section of the county and convinced them that they should confine their application to a daily express service in the winter, when it would pay. They did so and the railway granted a daily express winter service. That express is now on and will be taken off around the 26th of this month. We find no fault with the taking off of that service because in summer it will not pay, owing to the autobus and taxi service in that section of the country. But when the railway, for the sake of economy, deprives a population of 35,000 people of the daily mixed freight and passenger service it is time I raised my voice in protest.

The section of the county of Gloucester through which the railway passes has, as I have stated, a population of 35,000. We have some of the largest fisheries in the maritime provinces located along the line of this railway and if we are to have a railway service only three times a week the fishing business will be completely destroyed, because the people will not be able to ship fresh fish to the Montreal market and elsewhere. The salmon fishing industry, which is now overburdened by new regulations, will be still further hampered by want of railway communication. The large cod-fishing industry in that part of the country will be seriously affected. The lower part of this county is one of the best sections of New Brunswick for the production of pulpwood. We have the oyster fishery also, which the Department of Fisheries is doing all it can to encourage, and that industry will be affected. We have large catches of mackerel to be shipped fresh. We shall have to go out of that business, because we cannot any longer continue it under the system which they are now going to adopt. We have lumber interests in the lower sections of the county which also will be affected. There are large quantities of railway ties taken out for the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and these too will be affected. The lower section of the county will be seriously handicapped, and I would point out to the minister that retrenchments are being made for the sake of economy, in the Atlantic region of the Canadian National Railways, which should not be affected. The Canadian National railway in that part of the country has had the largest carloadings in the last year of any section in Canada, and retrenchments in the interests of economy will only throw back the railway and create a larger deficit in the earnings of that section of the Canadian National. I know I shall be told that there are other sections of the Railway in the province of New Brunswick which have been curtailed. Yes; there has been a curtailment on the Valley railway from St. John to Fredericton and Centreville. But it must not be forgotten that all along that section the people have communication with three and four trains a day, furnished by the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that the curtailing of railway service by the Canadian National Railways would not and does not affect that section of New Brunswick as seriously as it affects the section in which I am interested, which has only one railway to depend upon.

Speaking of retrenchments in the administration of the railways, if the management at Moncton wished to economize, why did they keep on a daily freight train during the winter season when there was scarcely freight enough to keep the trains moving? That was the time to retrench rather than now when business is coming up, when large shipments of fish are about to take place, and when the interests of the country are more at stake than they are in the winter season. If they had retrenched in the month of December down to a month ago, they would have saved money and they would not have seriously affected the business interests of that section of the country. To-day there are 250 carloads of potatoes waiting to be shipped from that section of the county of Gloucester, and the very moment that we are getting a market for them we are deprived of the railway facilities that we should have in order to get those potatoes readily to market.

Let me go one step further and point out the discrimination which the railway authorities have shown in connection with the transportation of potatoes in that section of New Brunswick. Up the river St. John potato dealers have been allowed to ship their potatoes in bulk in refrigerator cars, but in the counties of Gloucester and Northumberland potato dealers were refused the same privilege, and they were told that they would have to bag their potatoes before they would be allowed to put them into refrigerator cars. The matter was taken up and it took some seven or eight days to have it adjusted. Finally we were permitted to ship our potatoes in bulk in refrigerator cars the same as others were doing elsewhere in New Brunswick. I would not even hint that the railway is playing politics in this matter: I do not believe the management would do so, but it looks as if a discrimination existed against that section of New Brunswick which was the only constituency in that province to elect a Liberal in the last general election.

Let me go a step further. In the reduction in railway service the little town of Bathurst in which I live and which has a population of about 6,000—when the Minister of Railways and Canals has finished conversing with his colleague, if he will listen to my case I shall proceed.

Mr. MANION: I have listened to every word the hon. member has said, and I am ready to reply as soon as he gives me an opportunity.

Mr. VENIOT: The minister cannot catch everything that is going on and at the same time keep up a running conversation as he has been doing for the last five minutes.

Mr. MANION: Yes, he can.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member is not saying much.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister has not a single-track mind.

Mr. VENIOT: I want to say to the hon. gentleman who is interjecting, that I am endeavouring as best I can to lay the case of my people before the Minister of Railways and Canals. My arguments may not be sufficiently strong to convince hon. gentlemen opposite that the case is a good one, but I shall proceed and do the best I can.

In the little town of Bathurst, which is the junction point of the Caraquet railway with the main line of the Canadian National, I am credibly informed that within the last two months no less than twelve men have been thrown out of employment. Two train crews have been taken off, one off the shunting and one off the regular freight train. That represents a sum by way of yearly salary of $22,000 taken from that town, which is already suffering greatly from lack of employment owing to the fact that, for instance, the pulp and newsprint mill has been running only two or three days a week and was closed down entirely for several weeks during the winter months. The railway management should at least give to the 35,000 people living in the district through which that line passes, a daily freight and passenger service. If we could obtain that, it would help our business, keep our people at home and employed, and no injustice would be done to the numerous industries that are operating in that section of the province. Will the minister be kind enough to take this matter up, or if he has a reply to the question I put to him some ten days ago, will he give it to me to-night? If not, will he take the matter up with the management of the railways and see if something cannot be done to give us at least a daily mixed freight and passenger service over the Caraquet road?

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has made a plea that would convince a much harder hearted man than I am but unfortunately I am not the person who should be convinced in this regard. The persons who should be convinced are the management of the railways.

Mr. VENIOT: We submitted our case to them and we got no satisfaction.

Mr. MANION: Of course my hon. friend would be the last man in the house to believe in political interference in a case where there should not be any.

Mr. VENIOT: Certainly.

Mr. MANION: I must apologize to my hon. friend for not having told him some days ago the result of my investigation but the result was so bad that I did not like to give it to him. I have a list handed to me by the management of the Canadian National as to the changes in traffic referred to by him in one of the cases of the Bathurst-Tracadie line. The mileage is a little over seventy-seven miles. According to the statement given to me by the National Railways the revenue per train mile on that road is thirteen cents and the expenditure or cost per train mile is $1.26·2. In other words, the cost is almost ten times the revenue.

Mr. VENIOT: Is the period dealt with a year?

Mr. MANION: They do not state, but I presume so. Even if the showing were a little better in the summer than in the winter, my hon. friend will admit that it would not make a very good showing even in the summer. They show that by taking off the daily service and putting on a tri-weekly service—

Mr. VENIOT: I do not wish to interrupt, but what daily service are they cutting off? There are two daily services there.

Mr. MANION: They give the present service, number of trains daily, six days a week, as two. For the proposed service, number of trains daily, six days per week, they also give two, but they give the mixed train three days a week. That is the cut that is being made.

Mr. VENIOT: At the present time we have an express daily service and a freight daily service. The express daily service goes off, as a matter of fact, every spring, and instead of leaving us the mixed freight and passenger service on the basis of a daily service six days a week, they are going to give us the mixed freight and passenger service three times a week.

Mr. MANION: Well, whatever the cut is that they have proposed, I am not going to argue what they are going to give the hon. member's section of the country. They give the mixed train service as three days a week. My hon. friend says that they are cutting off the express. I do not so understand from this, but I will accept his statement. They claim that by changing the service the saving will be $30,479. Under these circumstances, though the hon. gentleman has made on behalf of his section of the country a very eloquent plea that would convince me, I am afraid he will find it difficult to convince the management of the railway. In fact, I may tell him—I do this with no other object than to elucidate the point—that the data I have here shows that this particular service is the greatest loser of any service in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, and the management in reducing that service are eliminating a loss of a little more than $30,000 a year.

Mr. VENIOT: Perhaps I may be allowed a further word, Mr. Chairman, as this is a vrey serious matter. The comparison is not a fair one. The comparison is made for the year. It is not made along the line of a daily mixed freight and passenger service. The passenger express which is on to-day was first put on in 1928, on the first of October, and that service caused a loss of $10,000 a month to the railway for the months of October and November and up to the 15th of December. The next year, in view of the loss incurred by that daily express, I advised the railway authorities at Moncton not to put on the service until somewhere around the 1st or the 15th of December. They looked into the matter, and acted accordingly. They were in competition with the autobus and taxi services, and that is what made them lose that amount on the passenger traffic.

It may be that they can save $30,000 in a year by cutting out all this service and counting on it being cut out during the whole year. But the express service is operated only during four or five months in the year, and therefore I say that the comparison is not a fair one. It is said that figures cannot lie, but figures can be made to misrepresent facts, and when it comes to making a comparison of that kind, it ill becomes the management at Moncton to make the comparison in that way in order to convince the minister that there should not be an increase in the service.

Let me go further. The cutting off of this service and giving us only three trains a week will disrupt the mail service not only of the county of Gloucester but of every other section of the Dominion that is doing business with the county of Gloucester. The mail to-day is carried by rural route a distance of 28 miles and by train a distance of 68 miles. There will be no daily mail service by rail, and the Post Office Department will have to enter into new contracts, cancel the old contracts they have for the side service from the railway and inaugurate either an autobus or a taxi mail service which will cost the country much more than the Canadian National Railway can save by this reduction in the service. It is simply robbing Paul to pay Peter—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VENIOT: —Or robbing Peter to pay Paul. I did not use that expression in any personal way simply because my name happens to be Peter.

The minister is quite right when he says that this case should be presented to the railway management at Moncton. It was first presented to the management at Moncton, and then to the management at Montreal; at least, that is my information. To-day a representative of the interests in the lower section of the province is waiting on Sir Henry Thornton in the hope of having the matter straightened out. So I say that we have gone to the proper authorities, and we have failed to get satisfaction. Now I come to the foot of the throne, and I am appealing to the infallible justice of the crown to see that the rights of the people be protected. Once more I ask the minister to take up this matter at Montreal and see if he cannot give that large population the service which they require. Imagine, Mr. Chairman, a population of 35,000 people getting only three trains a week. Even if there was a deficit of $30,000 a year, that is no worse than the deficits that we see throughout the country on other sections of the Canadian National Railway. Why should the maritime provinces be singled out? Why should we be told that there is a deficit of $30,000 a year on 68 miles of railway, and therefore our railway communication is to be cut down and we must put up with it? That is not a fair way of looking at the matter, simply to consider whether or not a service pays. When the service is stopped the people suffer, and the industries along the line of the railway must equally suffer. In having the railway service work detrimentally to those industries along the railway, you are increasing unemployment and you are not living up to the policy which the government has laid down of helping to relieve unemployment in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has just made a statement which I think should hardly go unchallenged, when he said that the railway management had singled out the maritime provinces. I happen to have with me a statement of the saving which the Canadian National Railway proposes to make in different sections of the country. It shows that while in the maritime provinces they expect to make a saving of something like $198,000, in the central section, comprising eastern Ontario and Quebec they expect to make a saving of nearly $500,000, and in the western region a saving of $250,000. So they are making reductions pretty generally throughout the whole country. I appreciate the hon. gentleman's plea, and more particularly because yesterday I had a deputation wait upon me in regard to this very same line of railway. The deputation was introduced by an oustanding and straightforward fine-looking chap from down there—perhaps my hon. friend remembers his name—it was Mr. Robichaud.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, my opponent.

Mr. MANION: He made an argument about on the same line as that of my hon. friend.

Mr. VENIOT: He consulted me before doing it.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister happen to know that gentleman's politics?

Mr. POULIOT: The Tories of that constituency are better than those in my constituency.

Mr. MANION: The deputation made practically the same plea as that made by my hon. friend from Gloucester. I have already taken the matter up with the railways and laid the representations of my hon. friend and his friends and of the friends of Mr. Robichaud before the railway, but I will bring the matter again to the attention of the management. My hon. friend is quite at liberty, of course, to argue the matter out himself before the management, and there is still the last resort of appealing to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The hon. member for Gloucester has presented his case very ably, and I can assure him that it will be given fair consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: This is my last word as to the comparison which the minister has placed before the house. He stated that in the eastern section, by the elimination of certain accommodation, the railway will save $198,000, while in the central section, Ontario and Quebec, it will save $500,000. Perhaps the Minister of Railways is not familiar with the territory in the maritime provinces, or if he is, he gave me no evidence of it when making such a comparison. In the maritime provinces the old Intercolonial railway is the only railway of main line dimensions that we have between Lévis and Halifax, and between Truro and Sydney, and when you are cutting out a service in that section of the country to the extent of saving $198,000, while you save only $500,000 in the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where you have the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway all giving accommodation, then I claim that the comparison is unfair and unjust, and it should not be used as an argument against the maritime provinces.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, while I do not agree with some of the remarks of the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) I must confess that many of the statements he has made on this question I am pleased to corroborate to the fullest degree. In the first place we must remember the purpose for which the Intercolonial Railway was built. Its construction was not carried out from an economic point of view but was regarded by the Fathers of Confederation as necessary to providing means of communication between the lower and upper provinces, and making Canada into one great dominion. To-day I believe we are looking upon this railway system more particularly from an economic point of view, and I think we ought not to lose sight of the London agreement, which was hidden away for so many years and upon which the British North America Act was framed. We in the maritime provinces feel that sometimes so far as railway rates are concerned, we are not treated on the same basis as other parts of Canada. Hon. members, should take into consideration the distances over which freight has to be hauled in other parts of Canada and compare them with the distance in the maritime provinces; you in western and central Canada say that the distances are much shorter, yet your rates are lower than ours. At the same time hon. members forget that the Intercolonial railway was originally built by the people of Canada for the purpose of cementing the lower with the upper and central parts.

I wish to make some futher remarks in connection with the cut in the service of the railway companies. In the constituency I represent in the province of New Brunswick we have experienced a cut in service. I am not saying that the cut was not warranted; I do not stand here to-night for the purpose of saying that the railway companies of Canada should not be operated economically so that they may serve the interests of all the people of Canada. I do say, however, that the ex-Postmaster General made a rather unhappy comparison of the treatment which had been accorded to the people of the St. John river and the people in the constituency he represents. He tried to contrast the service in my constituency with that which had been accorded to the people of the country of Gloucester. Surely he knows that the very same treatment which was accorded to his people in the county of Gloucester was accorded to the people along the St. John river, namely, that when they had restrictions placed upon them in respect to the shipment of their potatoes in bags from Gloucester county the same restriction was placed upon the people along the St. John river. That restriction was placed upon us by the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railway companies. It applied to both companies at the same time. If my hon. friend had wanted to be fair he might have said that those farmers who shipped on what was known as the Gulf Shore and Caraquet railway did not ship their potatoes in bulk last fall when they could and should have shipped them, the same as we did. They waited until this spring because they thought the price would be better. However these restrictions when they came into effect hurt them a little more than some of the other people in the province of New Brunswick. These are statements of fact which my hon. friend cannot refute; he knows they are true. There was no discrimination. So far as the railways are concerned I simply want to say the same rules were applied in connection with the St. John river district that applied to the Gloucester county section from which my hon. friend comes. At all times I shall try to say a word on behalf of the people of the maritime provinces, and on behalf not only of my own constituency but of the county represented by my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General. I would be pleased to say a word on behalf of Prince Edward Island, of Nova Scotia or any other portion of the maritime section of Canada. But, Mr. Chairman, I cannot refrain from challenging the statements which have been made by the ex-Postmaster General to the effect that there was discrimination in favour of the farmers along the St. John river against those in the county of Gloucester which he happens to represent.

Mr. VENIOT: Were you not allowed to ship potatoes in bulk in refrigerator cars?

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Yes, and you were allowed to do the same thing at the same time.

Mr. VENIOT: No, we were not.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): I beg your pardon, you were.

[Mr. B. F. Smith.]

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): There was no discrimination shown.

Mr. VENIOT: We were refused the right. We had to send a delegation to Moncton to obtain the right to ship.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): When were you refused the right?

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Hon. members must address the chair.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): We were refused the right at the same time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like to take a minute or two of the time of this committee to speak to the question of the reduction of train service in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Would you please tell me under what clause of this bill the present discussion is taking place?

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Clause 2—no, it is clause 1.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like to say—

Mr. GARDINER: Is this discussion in order?

The CHAIRMAN: Well, as yet I have not heard any point of order taken.

Mr. GARDINER: My point of order is that we are dealing with clause 2.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well, let us stay at it for a little while.

Mr. GARDINER: It is a clause concerning the appointment of a person to represent the Minister of Railways and Canals to investigate any matters pertaining to the Canadian National Railway. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the cutting off of train service does not come under this particular clause.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The question of the directors of the Canadian National Railways involves a matter of policy.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand we are dealing with clause 2.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As I understand it we are dealing with clause 1.

The CHAIRMAN: Clause 1.

Mr. GARDINER: We are not—

The CHAIRMAN: I think the discussion should be confined to the clause under consideration, but it may to a certain extent involve the policy of the government.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On that ground I would like to address a few remarks to the chair in answer to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) who has made a very eloquent plea on behalf of his constituents. I wish to speak in a general way of the situation in the province of New Brunswick. There has been no discrimination against the county represented by the hon. member for Gloucester. All of us who are within the sphere and influence of the Canadian National Railways in the province of New Brunswick are feeling the pinch of the cut in the service. I feel that the people themselves in a degree are at fault because they are not patronizing the railway companies but are using the cheaper modes of travel such as motor busses and motor cars which are operating in direct competition and conflict with railroad traffic. That is the tendency all over the American continent, and it is one to which we cannot shut our eyes.

At the same time I have something further to say with respect to the management of the railways. I do not wish to interfere with or attempt to dictate to them, but I do think that in their new-found zeal for economy—and I use those words advisedly, having regard to what we have seen in relation to the operation of both railways in days gone by—in cutting to the bare bone they are going too far. I am not familiar with the railroad which traverses the country between Bathurst and Tracadie. In days gone by I had the discomfort of travelling over it, before it became part of the national system. The district through which this railway passes is very thickly populated, and I do not see how it can be served by a tri-weekly service. It seems to me that the railway should adopt a middle course, and if I can say anything in favour of their doing so I want to say it here and now. Instead of running an express and freight service over that 77 miles of road, as they have been doing in recent months, they should run a mixed train daily up and down the entire section. By so doing they would save a very substantial sum of money. There are other portions of the province of New Brunswick served by the Canadian National Railways which are not being discriminated against by the cutting down of service that is being put in to effect in other sections, but in which the service has been reduced beyond what is reasonable in the circumstances. I think that will be the sense of members from the province representing the constituencies affected. I would suggest to my friend the Minister of Railways that in this zeal for economy they do not go too far, because if they do I believe they will defeat the very purpose they have in view.

In addition the question of postal service must be considered, only to-day I received representations from my constituency with relation to that particular matter. It is from the country lying between the city of Fredericton and the town of Woodstock, a distance of 65 miles, perhaps the oldest portion of settled country in the province of New Brunswick. To my knowledge it has been in enjoyment of a daily mail service for thirty years. That service is to be cut down to three times a week. I protest. I have suggested to the department that they put on a motor service to take care of the three days when the trains are not running; that is a consideration in connection with the reduced service, and this alternative will cost a considerable sum of money. I would suggest that instead of going to the extreme that they have gone to in relation to the operation of these branch lines in New Brunswick, they endeavour to adopt a happy medium. This, I think, could be worked out and still save a large sum of money, without starving the service as is now proposed.

Mr. HANBURY: Do I understand from the minister that the directors are solely responsible for the direction and operation of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: The directors in association with the managing officers of the railway, yes.

Mr. HANBURY: The directors are in control of the management, and they would have authority, if they wished, to make a change in the management?

Mr. MANION: No, I should hardly like to say that. They are not in control of the management; they work in association with the management. I presume that if one of the high executive officers did something illegal or something that would justify his dismissal, the directors would have a good deal to say in the matter; but they are not in a position to dictate to the officers of the system.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister suggests, then, that the management is really not subject to the government?

Mr. MANION: Absolutely; so far as the administration of the system is concerned the government has not anything whatever to do with the management. In regard to these questions which we have been discussing for the last hour, the government has nothing whatever to do with them; the reductions in train service were decided by the management. May I say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the same way has decided to cut down its services on many lines. I have had some protests in that regard also, although not so many, because naturally the people think we have more influence in dealing with the national system. The cutting down of the train service is entirely a part of the policy of the Canadian National Railways management in an endeavour to bring their expenditure somewhere near their revenue. May I point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Hanson) who a moment ago on behalf of New Brunswick dealt generally with the subject in an excellent speech, that while it is true that the mail service may be interfered with by some reduction in train service, I think it is hardly fair to say that the Canadian National Railways, with a heavy deficit, should be asked to handle at a loss the mail service. Any additional cost for such service, say $10,000, should be undertaken by the Post Office department, or, if you will, by the country generally.

Mr. HANBURY: If the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company desire to make any change in the management or the presidency they would have full authority to do so. Would the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways have similar authority?

Mr. MANION: The present president of the Canadian National Railways was appointed by the late government, under an agreement, for a period of five years from 1928 at a certain salary. So the directors, without very good cause, would not, I presume, be in a position to interfere with him; and of course, the president has control of the officers under him.

Mr. EULER: Is this not the fact, that the only authority the government exercises, so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned, is by way of appointment of a board of directors and the president of the road, exercising control, also, we will say, over capital expenditure? Is that not the extent of the authority exercised by the government?

Mr. MANION: That is absolutely correct.

Mr. EULER: The operation of the railway itself is entirely in the hands of the management.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MANION: Yes. It must be remembered that, as Minister of Railways, I receive representations such as we have heard to-night, and I find it my duty to pass those representations on to the management. I suppose that every day I send to Sir Henry Thornton some five to ten representations of one kind or another, which I feel are matters for his consideration and that of his officers. I have no control whatever over the management.

Mr. EULER: You might do that too, occasionally, so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned?

Mr. MANION: I do. I had a letter this morning from Mr. Grant Hall with regard to representations that I passed on to him in connection with the cutting down of train service in British Columbia.

Mr. SANDERSON: Many hon. members are receiving petitions and resolutions from county councils and township councils and also from farmers' clubs in regard to the freight rates on farm commodities. I have received several myself and have been asked to send them on to the Minister of Railways, and in one case to the Prime Minister; which I did. He acknowledged the petition and advised me to send a copy of it to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The Minister of Railways also acknowledged those I sent to him. Three I sent to him to-day which he will not get until to-morrow morning. He also advised me to communicate with the railway commission. I desire to read one of these petitions, Mr. Chairman; they are all in the same form. This particular one is from a township council in my constituency:

> We, the members of municipal council feeling that one of the heaviest burdens carried by agriculture to-day is that of high freight rates, wish to draw your attention to and ask your careful consideration of the following resolution:
> Whereas prices obtainable for farm products now are on the average considerably below pre-war prices, and
> Whereas the farmers of Ontario find it practically impossible to make a fair living on their farms, and
> Whereas freight charges on hauling farm products to markets are the same as they were when prices of these products were at their peak, being in some cases several times what the Ontario farmer receives net to-day for his product, and
> Whereas we believe that the keen competition which trucking services now provide for the railways can best be overcome by establishing competitive freight rates and securing a larger volume of business;
> Therefore we urge on the government, through your department, the necessity of a downward revision of freight rates on farm commodities so that at the low prices now prevailing we may be enabled to make a living which will compare favourably with that enjoyed by other classes who perform a service of no greater value.

I am quite aware that the government are correct when they say that the question of freight rates is under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, but I would request the government, and especially the Minister of Railways, to take these resolutions and petitions into very serious consideration, because they have to do with a grievance held by the farmers of Ontario and of every province in Canada. If the Minister of Railways would use his good office and the persuasive powers he has displayed at times in the house, and take up the matter seriously with the railways and if necessary with the Board of Railway Commissioners, because it is a vital matter and one of public interest, something might be done. The question of freight rates, especially as they pertain to the farming community, is really important, and I would call upon the Minister of Railways now to make some commitment to-night that he will at least consider seriously these resolutions and petitions and make some effort to right the wrong under which the farmers are labouring at the present time. Would the minister be good enough to take that into his consideration?

Mr. MANION: I suppose I have had some hundreds of resolutions of this type sent to me from various parts of the country, but I must point out what my hon. friend pointed out in his opening remarks, that freight rates are not under my control in any shape or form. Freight rates, and for that matter passenger rates as well on the railways, are entirely in the hands first of the railways themselves and then of the Board of Railway Commissioners, over which I have no control any more than my hon. friend.

Now, in regard to my taking the matter under serious consideration, I certainly consider it a serious matter, but there is another very serious matter which we cannot forget. That is the fact that the revenues of the Canadian National Railways—and the Canadian Pacific Railways as well, because what affects one affects the other in regard to rates —are to-day decreasing materially even as compared with last year, and last year's earnings were very much lower than those of the year before. For example, in 1930 the gross earnings of the Canadian National Railways amounted to $46,000,000 less than in 1929, and at the rate they have been going so far, this year they will earn about $46,000,000 less than they earned last year. That is the way it looks now, because according to statements which have been published in the press, and to which my hon. friend had access just as I did, although they were sent to me personally as well, the decrease in earnings of the Canadian National Railways for the first three months of 1931 as compared with the same period of 1930 was over $12,000,000, and last year they were down about $12,000,000 as compared with the year before.

When you take that into consideration, Mr. Chairman, and when you have regard also to the fact that last year the Canadian National Railways were nearly $30,000,000 short of paying their interest charges to the public, to say nothing at all of the $32,000,000 interest on money loaned by the government or paid by the government at various times to the national railways, their subsidiaries or their original component parts, it will be seen just how serious it is. When you consider these things, you cannot really argue very strongly that either the Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Pacific Railway is in a position to cut freight rates at all, if they are to keep their heads above water. So I must confess to my inability to argue very strongly that the railways must bring down their freight rates.

May I tell my hon. friend and the committee generally that demands are coming in from all over the country, not only for capital expenditures which I mentioned yesterday but for freight rate reductions. I suppose nearly every day I receive requests from some section of this country to move freight of one kind or another for nothing, not for just a cut in rates but for a movement free. For instance, the other day quite a well known member of this house requested that some carloads of seed grain be moved about fifteen hundred miles for nothing. On a number of occasions within the last few weeks I have had requests to move potatoes from one section of the country to another for nothing. I do not suppose I could name any commodity which I have not been requested within the last few weeks to endeavour to get one railway or the other to move for nothing, or next to nothing. In many cases the request was that the movement should cost absolutely nothing. I feel that as far as these freight rates are concerned, if the railways are to be asked to make such reductions for the good of the country, then the country as a whole must pay the bill rather than the railways. It is not fair to ask either the Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry freight for nothing. As I say, if it is in the interests of the country that freight should be carried for nothing, then the country should pay the piper.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does not my hon. friend think the country is putting up enough now?

Mr. MANION: I think the country is putting up too much now.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is not the public now paying the deficits of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: I should say the public is paying.

Mr. SANDERSON: This further reduction in freight rates would be a very small matter to the public if it were divided all over the Dominion of Canada. The question is one of vital public importance.

Mr. McDADE: It is a matter for the railway commission, is it not?

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes, but surely parliament has something to say about such a question as this, which affects the farming communities of the whole Dominion.

Mr. MANION: And may I suggest as well that parliament has a good deal to say about the financial condition of this country. That condition is not such that $100,000,000 a year can be added to the national debt in respect of the national railways without affecting our financial structure. That is the way it seems to me, and I do not think we have any right to increase the expenses of the national railways, which are already very heavy, and at the same time decrease their earning power. The Canadian Pacific Railway, in common with all other railways of this continent, is being hit just about as hard as the Canadian National, and I do not think it is the duty of parliament, of the Minister of Railways or of the government to ask the railways to absorb a greater loss than they are absorbing now. It is only fair to say that the railways in Canada claim that their freight rates are lower than freight rates for equal distances in the United States, and I think that fact has been proven many times. The railways claim that to be the case, and I think it is true. That being so, it seems fair that the people who ship the freight should pay the freight rates rather than the people generally who are not shipping freight, and I do not think it is fair to ask the railways to make any more decreases in freight rates, in a general way, such as those suggested in the resolution read by my hon. friend.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. SANDERSON: May I point out to the Minister of Railways that in this particular instance, in connection with the petition of the farmers, in the first place the product which they are shipping does not return a price sufficient to cover the cost of production. To that must be added the present freight rates, and I suggest to the minister that he put it to the railway companies in this way: that possibly by putting lower freight rates into effect they would get more business. A large proportion of farm commodities is now transported by trucks, automobiles and so on. A reduction in freight rates might mean an increase in business for the two railway companies and so bring in more revenue. To my mind this is a question which should not be lightly passed over, and I think the minister will agree with me that it is a matter of great importance. I would stress the point that the minister at least should give it serious consideration. If the Board of Railway Commissioners have full jurisdiction in the matter, a question of this importance should be brought to their attention by the Minister of Railways and by the government of the day. I would ask the minister to take it into consideration and at least get in touch with the board. I believe that in almost every case where petitions have come to members of this house they have sent copies to the secretary of the board. I repeat, the minister should give the matter his very serious consideration.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Has the matter been referred lately to the board?

Mr. MANION: Yes, these petitions have been sent to the board, and the hon. member has as much right to appear before that board as I have. The Board of Railway Commissioners is a judicial body which passes upon any changes in freight rates made by the railways, and any citizen can appear before it.

Mr. SANDERSON: Wouldn't the minister have more weight before the board?

Mr. MANION: No; it is a judicial body and I have no more weight before them than anyone else has. As regards taking the matter into consideration, this has been done; the question is before the board.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Was it a matter that applied to the whole of Canada or to a particular locality?

Mr. MANION: You cannot cut rates on one railway without affecting the other.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): It applied to Canada in general?

Mr. MANION: That is what the petition asks for.

Mr. EULER: While I have every sympathy with the pleas made by various hon. members on both sides of the house on behalf of their own constituencies in certain localities in the country, I must admit that I have also a good deal of sympathy with the views advanced by the minister with regard to rates. It appears to me that the pleas made to-night are in nearly all cases pleas to make the national railways reduce their rates. In other words, hon. members seems to think that the Canadian National Railways can be called upon to make sacrifices which ordinarily neither the Canadian Pacific Railway nor any other private railway would be asked to make. We have to make up our minds what the function of the Canadian National Railways is, and whether we are to use them only for the benefit of the country, without any reference to the rates that should be paid. If that is the case, we might as well decide to nationalize them completely and give free service just as we do in the case of canals—the wisdom of which I have questioned before—having the people pay the cost of running the railways, and allowing everyone to travel and to ship his goods free.

Mr. MANION: And having the Canadian Pacific Railway go bankrupt.

Mr. EULER: My contention always has been, inasmuch as I am a friend of public ownership, that we should give the system a fair chance, and allow the Canadian National Railways to run their business on business principles, the same as the Canadian Pacific Railway. While offhand one might have sympathy with the pleas that have been put forward, because they are sectional, and members wish to please their own constituents, nevertheless the minister should be very firm, no matter what party may make representations, and allow the national railways to manage the system with a free hand, just as a private corporation is conducted, on the merits of every case. Representations have been made to the effect that the minister should use his good offices, his genial and sunny ways, with the railways, to induce them to make reductions. I am afraid he would not have very much success. The railways know their business pretty well, and I certainly would object to the minister's attempting to use his influence with the Board of Railway Commissioners. It is entirely outside his functions as Minister of Railways to attempt to use any influence whatever with the board. There, again, I do not think he would meet with success, and he ought not to.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have been very much interested in the arguments of some hon. gentlemen respecting rates in their vicinity, where the Canadian National Railways have endeavoured to save some money by a curtailment of service. Let me cite a case in point. The minister wrote me some months ago respecting twelve miles of road in my constituency, informing me that the Canadian National Railways deemed it advisable in the interests of the system to close that road because it was not paying. I examined into the matter and told him to close it. Why is the railway not making a profit on that road? Simply because the people along the road are not using it; they are using some other system. But the people are there just the same; they have produce to ship and they are using some other system that is cheaper. If that is the case, is it any hardship to close the road or to curtail the traffic? Not at all. If the people do not use the road then they should have the traffic closed, and I told the minister to close it up. If it is not paying we have no right to keep it going. A stretch of twelve miles of road costs this country a considerable sum of money to keep open. If these pieces of road throughout the country are not being used, what is the use of keeping them open? If there are other means of transportation, why keep the road open? The people themselves are the judges whether they want it or not. All along the road in my county there are good highways and the people are using motor trucks rather than the railway line to carry their stuff into the city. More than that, they are not using the line for passenger service. I think we have a right to stand behind the management, especially when they desire to curtail expenses on the road. By curtailing expenses in sections that are not being used, you can possibly reduce rates on other lines which the people are using. You cannot do it otherwise.

Mr. POULIOT: What is the quorum of the board of directors now and what will it be after the bill is passed?

Mr. MANION: I am afraid I cannot answer that question offhand, but I believe a majority constitutes a quorum.

Mr. POULIOT: Would my hon. friend be kind enough to inform me some other time when he gets the information.

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Does not the minister regard the directors as an advisory board?

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): This section of the bill is probably wide enough to admit the discussion that has taken place, and I wish to join, on behalf of a section of the province of Nova Scotia, in the protests that have been made in the interests of New Brunswick. I have reference to one piece of railway extending from Point Tupper to St. Peters. It has been operated by the Canadian National Railways for the last fourteen or fifteen years. It was purchased from an American concern about that time and since then has given daily service, and good service too. Now it is rumoured that it will be reduced to a tri-weekly service. The people in that section of the country are entitled to a little better service. Indeed, instead of curtailing tha service and making it tri-weekly the Canadian National Railways should extend it. The fact that the service is not extensive enough is possibly one of the reasons that the road is not paying. In some cases where thirty miles of road have been built, there should have been sixty miles. If the railways extended this line to the town of Louisburg, they would have a branch that would probably pay is way; whereas the curtailment to a tri-weekly service will cause great dissatisfaction in that section, dislocate railway arrangements, and interfere with the management of the trains. The men will be transferred to Sydney, and altogether it is going to create a situation which will be very embarrassing. With reference to the daily mail service which it is stated they will have to cut, I would appeal to the Minister of Railways to see to it that at least this service is continued. If the finances of the railways are not sufficient this year, then next year or the year after, I trust we shall see the St. Peters road put through to Louisburg.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for St. Henri asked me if the board of directors is an advisory board. The board of directors is more than that; I take it it is exactly the same type of board as the Canadian Pacific board of directors. The board could, if it chose, veto an act or proposed act or proposed policy of the management. The board of directors really directs or should direct, if it is properly fulfilling its functions, and I have no doubt that the board of directors recently appointed will do that. May I emphasize in that connection that so far as we are concerned the board of directors are handling the railway? We have nothing whatever to do with the policy of the railways. That, I think, answers my hon. friend's question.

As regards the line about which the hon. member for South Cape Breton has been speaking, I have to express the same feelings as I did with respect to the others; that is, I sympathize with him in his case and I shall lay his representations before the management. But the management have decreed that many of these lines in various part of the country shall be curtailed so far as service is concerned. I have no doubt, if business picks up, they will be only too glad to restore the daily service which they previously had, but at the present time it is the intention of the management, according to the statement which they gave to me, to curtail some of the services, and I am afraid the St. Peters-Point Tupper branch is one of them. There are two lines mentioned, but I believe after a further examination they have changed their opinion in regard to one of them. Whether it is the one referred to or another in the near neighbourhood, I am not sure. The management, however, is in control, and the best I can do is to say that I shall see to it that the management receive the representations of my hon. friend in that regard.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): What about the mail service?

Mr. MANION: As regards the mail service, it is not fair that the railway, if it is losing anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000 on a branch line, should be compelled to operate it in order to provide the mail service. There are other and perhaps cheaper ways of carrying the mails than by passenger train. If the mail service be the only issue involved, the railway, unless it has a contract to that effect, will not agree to assume the heavy loss that would be entailed by maintaining the service in order to carry the mail.

Mr. MERCIER St. Henri): I thank the minister for the answer he has given. I understand the newly appointed directors have the full responsibility of the administration of the railways?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I thank the minister.

Mr. DUFF: I understood the reference made by the minister with regard to curtailment of service was entirely in connection with branch lines. If the branch lines do not pay, and consequently the service is to be curtailed, why should the same thing not apply on the main line?

Mr. MANION: I think it does.

Mr. DUFF: For instance, I do not think it is fair to people living in country districts, which have been given a daily service for a number of years, that they should now be put to the inconvenience of a tri-weekly service, while people living along the main line are subjected to no such inconvenience although the main line trains are losing more money than the branch line trains. When the hon. member for Gloucester and the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton were speaking and the minister indicated that the Tracadie-Bathurst line lost some $30,000 last year, I took my pencil and did some figuring. This line is about seventy miles in length. Assuming that there are about 22,000 miles of railway comprising the whole national system, branch lines and main lines all over Canada. I figure that a loss of $33,000,000 last year, according to the information given, would work out at $1,500 a mile. This Tracadie-Bathurst line, the service on which the management is going to cut down to three days a week, did not lose $1,500 a mile, because $1,500 a mile for seventy miles would mean a loss of $105,000. The people living along the line from Tracadie to Bathurst or from Point Tupper to St. Peters or any other branch line in the country should not be treated differently from people along the main lines.

Mr. MANION: I do not think they are. According to the intention of the railways, there are going to be cuts in connection with both of the great systems, the national and the Canadian Pacific, in regard to the transcontinental runs also. That statement applies to what my hon. friend has just said. For instance, in the maritimes there are two trains, the Ocean Limited and the Acadian. One of those, I do not remember which just now, is, I think to be discontinued this year. I am saying that subject to correction but I think I am right. As regards the transcontinental service on both railways they are modifying it to some extent. For instance, as regards the fast transcontinental trains that are put on during the summer, they are being started later and discontinued earlier than in the past. Therefore the people across the whole country are being affected in the same way. What I believe both railways have done is to pick out the lines where they are making their heaviest losses in proportion and discontinuing or curtailing the service to a certain extent. I understand the point made by my hon. friend, but so many considerations enter into the earnings on investment in the national as well as the Canadian Pacific that it would be difficult to figure the thing out as my hon. friend has done on a basis of so much loss on so many miles. The investment in the national railways is so immense to-day that the interest alone is a very large item. The question of transcontinental service has to be considered from the standpoint of absolute necessity. Across Canada there are some sections where a transcontinental service could not be discontinued because there would be no possibility of serving that section in any other way. There are certain parts of the country that could not be served by motor vehicles of any kind.

Mr. LUCAS: I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to mail service. Where the railways are giving a six-day mail service at the present time and they cut that service to tri-weekly, will they receive the same amount for carrying the mail or will there be a reduction?

Mr. MANION: There will naturally be a reduction. The matter all depends upon the contract. If the railways have a contract to carry mail six days a week and cut the service to three days, they will certainly not receive the same amount of money as for the six-day service.

Mr. LUCAS: While I quite agree with the minister that the railways cannot be expected to carry on a service where they are making a loss, it is hardly fair that the people should be deprived of the mail service. If there is going to be a cut, the government will save a certain amount on the mail service in view of the lessened train service, and therefore it is only fair that the government, through the Post Office department, should provide some other means of providing the daily mail service. I know that does not come under the Department of the Minister of Railways, but I hope he will bring it before his colleague the Postmaster General so that it may be dealt with.

Mr. MANION: I have no doubt the people affected will see to it that the matter is brought before the Post Office department. If they forget to do so, it will be the only thing that has been forgotten this year.

Mr. POULIOT: I listened to the hon. member for Lincoln, who spoke in almost extreme terms, and to the hon. member for North Waterloo, who proved to-night to be an extremist. This is the first time that I have heard the reductio ad absurdum reasoning here. The hon. member for North Waterloo says that the railway would have to carry passengers or freight free. I would point out that if the Minister of Railways has received so many requests for reductions in freight rates it has been because of the business depression. He has told us that the deficit on the Canadian National for the first three months this year averaged about $4,000,000 a month.

Mr. MANION: Pardon me—the decrease in earnings this year as compared with last year. A deficit is not the same thing.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not wish to misquote my hon. friend. I understood, however, that the business on the railway this year was not so good as in the previous year. This depression will not last forever. Business will improve in due course, and we should not forget that once again we will have business as usual. As soon as business conditions improve and people are able to make more money by selling their goods at better prices, they will not need freight rate reductions so badly, so I suggest to the minister not to advise the Canadian National management to make too many cuts in their present expenditures. It has been stated by Sir Henry Thornton and by Mr. Hungerford, the vice-president of the railway, that cordial relations between the management and the employees is the keynote of efficiency. In hard times particularly the management should have sufficient regard for the welfare of the employees to keep them on as long as they possibly can. To reduce the staff of employees would only be to impose an additional burden on the country. I ask the minister, therefore, to be kind enough not to ask for too many curtailments in the expenditures of the railway. I must confess that I felt a little jealous when he said he had been convinced by the plea of my hon. friend from Gloucester. I hope that I also have been able to convince him in my plea for the station at Rivière du Loup.

Mr. MANION: May I suggest to my hon. friend that he will have a better chance of convincing us if he does not argue so much.

Mr. POULIOT: We have made such a good start that perhaps I may speak to my hon. friend again with respect to the station at Rivière du Loup. I thank him in the meantime.

Mr. PICKEL: I would invite the attention of the committee to two roads in my county where curtailment in the service is going to cause very considerable hardship, and where the people will suffer in a way that has not been mentioned here to-night. They are two milk routes, one on the Canadian National railway from St. Johns to Noyan, and the other on the Orford Mountain branch of the Canadian Pacific railway. The farmers in that district have no other means than the railway of getting their milk and cream to market.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Does it matter very much with butter at its present price?

Mr. PICKEL: It is not butter I am speaking of. The farmers are taking their milk and cream into the cities, and the curtailment of the service will work a hardship not only on the farmers but on the city residents if the farmers are unable to get their produce to market. Milk and cream are perishable products, and a tri-weekly service will not answer very well. I have already spoken to the minister with respect to these services, and he has promised to use his influence. I have also communicated with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I have not heard from them.

Mr. BERTRAND: I notice that the hon. member for Lincoln, when speaking of a railway of twelve miles in his constituency, said that he had received a letter from the Minister of Railways. I wonder if it has been the practice of the minister to write to the different members throughout the Dominion before a cancellation of railway service is made.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member was written to simply because the railway management had told me incidentally that they were going to cancel that service. They said that that was their intention, and I wrote and advised the hon. member. So far as other members are concerned, my hon. friend may judge from the protests that are coming from behind me, from supporters of the government, that they have been hit very much heavier, particularly in the maritimes, where there are more of them, than hon. members on the other side of the house. I may say that I have had no communication with them. That is not the practice, nor would I have communicated in the case my hon. friend has mentioned, except that I happened to know what the intentions of the management were, and I advised the hon. member for Lincoln, and he took the big business attitude that if the road was not paying the service should be discontinued.

Mr. BERTRAND: The explanation of the miinster is clear, but the declaration of the hon. member for Lincoln left me under the impression that he had received an intimation from the Minister of Railways who was seeking to get his sanction of the discontinuance of that service, and that the hon. member consented to have the service withdrawn.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is only a surmise on your part.

Mr. McINTOSH: Last night when we were dealing with this question of railway service I pointed out to the Minister of Railways that I thought the people would always be fair with respect to curtailments in railway service if the facts and figures and the actual business situation of any particular piece of road were placed before them. I do not think that the people want a railway service that is not paying. It is only natural with conditions as they are to-day that the farmers should be demanding reductions in freight rates. I believe that the real reason for that demand is found in the prices which the farmers are being paid to-day for their wheat and coarse grains, and I believe that that demand will continue until better prices prevail throughout the Dominion for wheat and coarse grains.

But what I particularly rose to ask, Mr. Chairman, was a question dealing with Canadian National directors. Before the committee rose at six o'clock we were dealing with the directorate representation of the Canadian National Railways, and I understood the minister to say that there would not be what we might term geographical representation or sectional representation. That simply means that the populated and more highly developed areas of Canada will not receive greater representation than areas that are not as well populated or industrially developed. That brings me to the question I wish to ask of the minister. I understand that there are fifteen directors and that two more are to be appointed, seventeen in all. There are two provinces in Canada not represented on the board at the present moment, Alberta and Saskatchewan. When the representation is made complete, will the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, comprising the greater part of western Canada, have provincial representation on the board?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: Thank you.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What are the occupations of the directors appointed by the government?

Mr. MANION: The occupations are various. The representative from Prince Edward Island is a merchant farmer; probably he might be called a trader. The hon. member for West Algoma has suggested to me that Hansard of yesterday contains the answer to a question setting out the occupations of the directors.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Do they know something about railways before they are appointed?

Mr. MANION: Some of them did. They would know as much as directors of other companies know concerning the companies with which they are connected.

An hon. MEMBER: Or as little.

Mr. HANBURY: With regard to railway rates I would like to call to the attention of the minister one point in connection with a reduction of rates which would develop business. At the present time both railway companies have all the rails and equipment necessary to haul lumber from British Columbia to any port in Canada. On the other hand I understand the Canadian National steamships are operating a steamship line at a loss in competition with the rail service. Lumber of different kinds has been hauled at the same rate; for instance, the higher finished product, such as flooring and ceilings, enjoys the same rate as the rough sawn material used for rough purposes. There is no distinction whatever in the rate charged. On a previous occasion a suggestion was made to the railway company that they keep for the rail service the hauling of approximately 50,000,000 to 60,000,000 feet of lumber which goes annually to the St. Lawrence river by making a reduction on the rough sawn material, but not on the highly finished or manufactured article. As I see the matter at the present time the Canadian National steamships are operating a steamship line in competition with the railway line and I understand they are suffering a loss on their steamship service. Now we learn there is a loss on the rail service. I mention this fact merely as a suggestion to the minister.

Mr. MANION: What is your suggestion?

Mr. HANBURY: My suggestion is that the rate on this rough sawn lumber from British Columbia to points on the St. Lawrence river be reduced.

Mr. MANION: Via the railways?

Mr. HANBURY: Yes, by rail, but not on the highly finished article. Yesterday afternoon the minister was good enough to give us the assurance that he had no knowledge of the affiliations of the gentlemen who have been made directors of the Canadian National Railways. I am sure he expects us to accept that statement as his assurance that there will be no political interference with the Canadian National Railways and no attempt to use them in any way as a basis of patronage. I assume that he is giving the house that assurance. Supposing however that patronage did happen to creep in—although I must confess I cannot conceive how under the present directorate it could—would the country look to the board to correct the fault, or would the government take the responsibility? The minister has told us that the board have full responsibility. I am suggesting to him that it is the responsibility of the government to see that there is no political patronage in connection with the operation of the Canadian National Railways, and I would now suggest that he give the committee some assurance to that effect.

Mr. MANION: So far as I know there is no political patronage in regard to the Canadian National Railways. As to assuring my hon. friend of what will happen if in the future it should occur, in view of the fact that I have so many troubles to which I must attend at the present time I hope he will wait until such patronage occurs before he asks me to deal with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): My hon. friend's troubles have only started.

Mr. MANION: I do not think there will be any patronage. I think the national railway system is in a position to carry on without political patronage. If such a question should arise I shall deal with it; I am sure my hon. friend will trust me that far.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I suppose if there are two more directors appointed there will be no patronage shown?

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Inquiry and report regarding company or operation of government railways.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain what he has in mind with regard to this section?

Mr. MANION: This is merely a technical correction; this afternoon I explained the nature of it. The clause previously contained the figure sixty-one, the correct figure being seventy.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAYS COMPANY—SPIRIT RIVER AND GRIMSHAW LINES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to extend the time for the commencement of construction and completion of the lines of railway which the Northern Alberta Railways Company was authorized to construct by section 11 of schedule B to the Northern Alberta Railways Act, 1929—namely, an extension of the main line of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company from Spirit river, and a branch line of the Central Canada Railway from, at or near Grimshaw.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Maloney in the chair.

Mr. MANION: This is a resolution on behalf of the Northern Alberta Railways Company, a combination of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National railways, for an extension of time for the construction of a couple of branch lines authorized two years ago. As members of the committee know, under the railway act these extensions must be begun within two years and completed within five. Of the branch lines then authorized, a sufficient amount of work has been done on six to meet the statutory requirements; but the two mentioned in this resolution have not yet been begun. Requests for extension of time were much more common in the past than they are to-day. Under the circumstances I think it is a very reasonable request.

May I say that if the resolution passes a bill will be introduced based on it, and then members will have full opportunity to discuss the measure either here or before the railway committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Grimshaw is a very important extension, is it not?

Mr. MANION: I do not know much about these branch lines.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Manion thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 36, respecting the Northern Alberta Railways Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL COMPENSATION ACTS TO ALL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act to extend the benefits of the act to all employees in the service of His Majesty excepting those for whom provision is made under other statutes, and to extend the interpretation of the term "compensation" to include any benefits, expenses or allowances that are provided for under provincial compensation acts.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Maloney in the chair.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, this resolution is for the purpose of amending the Government Employees' Compensation Act so that provincial compensation acts will apply to all government employees. At the present time in the various provinces the law varies. For instance, postal employees are covered in the provinces of Quebec, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia only; customs officers are covered in Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia only; lighthouse keepers and employees on boats carrying supplies to lighthouses or attending to aids to navigation are not covered in Nova Scotia. Some of the provincial compensation acts do not apply to government employees in the various departments; they may cover those engaged in some industry, but the courts rule that the government service is not an industry. The purpose of the bill to be introduced, based on the resolution, is to bring all employees of the government under the various provincial compensation acts. It is expected that this will cost the government an additional $70,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In effect, Mr. Chairman, all the employees of the government of Canada will come under the provisions of the compensation acts in the various provinces by statute rather than, as formerly, by order in council.

Mr. MANION: No, I do not think that is correct. I think they are now under the various compensation boards by statute. The purpose of this proposed legislation is to put all government employees on the same basis. I may say that last year the government of my hon. friend introduced a bill of this kind, but due to the dissolution of parliament it could not be dealt with. In a nutshell, the purpose is simply to give the employees of the government in all the provinces the same treatment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Under the old system the government carried its own compensation, but made the provincial laws apply in the adjustment. I am very much in favour of this proposal. I think it is entirely proper that by statute all the services of the government should come under the provincial compensation acts.

An hon. MEMBER: Are the railways under it?

Mr. MANION: No, the railways are not dealt with by this measure.

Mr. HEENAN: I am very glad that my hon. friend has introduced this resolution. As he says, we had a resolution on the order paper last year, but owing to the dissolution of parliament it was held over until after the general elections. Has the minister any information of the approximate aggregate amount which the Dominion government pays to the provinces in this connection?

Mr. MANION: I have those figures under my hand. Last year we paid in round figures the following; New Brunswick, $91,000; Ontario, $106,000; Manitoba, $94,000; Alberta, $7,000; British Columbia, $14,000; Prince Edward Island, almost $4,000; Quebec, $79,000. In Ontario, in addition to the amount given before, we paid $2,600 for medical aid, and in Saskatchewan $380. The total amount paid last year to the provinces by the Dominion was $452,000. This will add another $70,000, in round figures, to the expenses of the Dominion.

Perhaps I might as well explain in a few words how this work is carried on. The provincial compensation board, in whatever province the accident occurs, looks after the government employee just as it would look after an employee of one of the railways or of an industrial plant and gives him medical attention, sixty per cent or whatever it may be of his wages, and so on. They pay the usual charges and then bill the government for the amount. At certain periods the Dominion government pays the provinces the sums disbursed, with a small addition for administration expenses.

Mr. HEENAN: I am very glad the minister gave us this very full information, and I was wondering if he would not consider going one step further. I have not considered this question sufficiently to be able to state whether or not it would be economical, but I suggest that instead of leaving it to the provinces this matter be administered by a department of the government. I think it could be done without very much extra cost. At present Dominion employees do not get equal treatment all over Canada. Compensation varies in the different provinces. In some provinces 55 per cent of the wages is paid, while in other provinces 66⅔ per cent is paid while a man is injured. There is also a difference in the maximum amounts. Some provinces pay 66⅔ per cent on a maximum of $1,200, while others have maximums of $1,500 and $2,000. There is a further difference in the allowance paid to widows of employees who are killed. That allowance may be $40 a month in one province and $30 or $35 in another. Then there is a difference in the time an employee may wait. In one province he will wait three days while in another he may wait seven days.

There are these differences all down the line, and I contend that all employees of the Dominion government, which is an institution by itself, are entitled to equal treatment. A mail carrier injured in Ontario, for instance, gets 66⅔ per cent of his wages with a maximum of $2,000, while a mail carrier in New Brunswick, if the law has not changed recently, gets 55 per cent based on a maximum of $1,200 or $1,500. That fact, together with the further fact that the administration would not cost very much more if it was placed in the hands of the Minister of Railways, would seem to justify this step being taken. I am sure the minister would not mind working another hour or two during the day in order to give Dominion employees equal treatment all over Canada.

Mr. MANION: I have not had this matter under consideration before, but I am afraid there would be a duplication of machinery if we followed my hon. friend's suggestion. I may say also that the provinces are endeavouring, as my hon. friend probably well knows, to bring about uniformity. As a matter of fact, before this bill which is to be introduced was decided upon by myself, representing the government, the representatives of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, who in turn represented all the provinces of Canada, waited upon the Minister of Labour and myself in my office and discussed the whole matter. This really was the proposal they brought forward. If, however, as my hon. friend suggests, there are still inequalities, this is a very good step in the right direction, and if those inequalities still exist, a little later we can perhaps make whatever modifications are necessary to equalize matters.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Could the minister tell me the exact number of employees affected?

Mr. MANION: It covers all government employees in the different departments. I do not know how many employees there are in the outside service, but this takes in both the inside and the outside services.

Mr. POWER: There are forty thousand, anyway.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Around forty thousand.

Mr. MANION: All the government employes will be under the act.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How many were injured last year?

Mr. MANION: There were 3,960 claims.

Mr. HEAPS: What amount was paid out?

Mr. MANION: We paid $452,000.

Mr. HEAPS: For how long a period?

Mr. MANION: For one year.

Mr. HEAPS: Was that entire amount paid out to the injured work people?

Mr. MANION: That includes about 5 per cent for administration expenses, amounting to about $21,000. Other than that, practically all this money went to work people.

Mr. HANBURY: Could the minister tell us whether all provinces have compensation boards, and whether the employees bear any portion of the cost?

Mr. MANION: I think all the provinces have compensation boards. I see payments were made to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Saskatchewan.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not think Prince Edward Island has a compensation board.

Mr. MANION: I notice that we paid about $4,000 to Prince Edward Island. Perhaps that was for railway employees. I am sorry I cannot give that information definitely.

Mr. REID: What percentage is contributed by the employee?

Mr. MANION: Each provincial act is different, but I do not think the employees make any contribution. The amount is made up by the industries and the governments.

Mr. NEILL: In British Columbia the employees pay a cent a day for medical attention.

Mr. MANION: I know something of the province of Ontario, and so far as I know in this province the employees pay nothing.

Mr. VENIOT: They do not pay anything in New Brunswick.

Mr. NEILL: I would like to direct the attention of the minister to a matter which I have taken up privately with the Minister of Marine, and I hope the minister will take this opportunity to remedy a grievance which exists in British Columbia between his department and the local provincial authorities over the interpretation of the word "employee". A very simple change in the interpretation would remedy the situation.

Here is the difficulty: Lighthouse keepers, of course, are paid by the Department of Marine, and there is an arrangement under which certain lighthouse keepers employ assistants. The department is either too economical or too mean to pay the wages of the second man, so they have an arrangement whereby the lighthouse keeper must employ an assistant, for whom he is allowed a few hundred dollars extra. They do not allow a living wage for a man but only about half that wage, and they sanction the practice, which is often followed by lighthouse keepers, of employing their wives or junior members of their families to do the work, which really is not the full work of a man. Occasionally, where there are two or three assistants, they do pay a full wage for the assistant, but here is the situation: It is held by the Workmen's Compensation Board that this assistant is an employee of this government, inasmuch as he is paid indirectly by the government. There can be no question about that, with the record of wages paid to lighthouse keepers showing that when an assistant is necessary a considerably larger amount is paid. The Workmen's Compensation Board of British Columbia have always held in that case that the assistant was the employee of the government, but the Marine department have held that he was an employee of the lighthouse keeper. The result is that if an accident of that kind happens, the lighthouse keeper is of course quite unable to meet any claim against him, and there is therefore considerable criticism of the government. It is claimed that they are cheaply avoiding at least a moral responsibility by not paying out this sum to the injured workman. The trouble could be avoided very simply by having a change in the interpretation of the word "employee" so as to cover a case of that kind. The other case to which I wish to allude is similar. In certain cases the Public Works department does work by day labour, employing teams. These teams and their drivers may be taken off a farm in the vicinity at a time when they are not busy. The Workmen's Compensation Board of British Columbia does not apply to farmers, and the department here—possibly the Justice department—have ruled that in that case a man working as a teamster by the day on some clearing, or perhaps road making for some Dominion department, is not an employee of the government but is a farmer, or an employee of a farmer, although he is at the moment working not as a farmer but as a professional teamster for the government. That also is a case in which a rather cheap argument is used to withhold compensation from the man injured in that capacity. I understand that the act that governs this provides its own interpretation of the word employee, so that if the interpretation were changed along the lines I suggest it would not conflict with the meaning of the word employee as contained in any other act such as the Civil Service Act. "Employee" could be made to cover, amongst others, the two classes I have mentioned. I trust the minister will look into this before the bill is brought down, because it would remove a very real injustice. I do not think the Marine department would like to have it said that they were purposely unjust. I know of one case where a man risked his life and suffered considerable injury from fire to save the lighthouse property; but because he was an assistant to the lighthouse keeper in that technical sense of the word he was told to look to the lighthouse keeper as his direct employer if he wished compensation. Of course, the lighthouse keeper had no funds with which to compensate him. If the change were made as I suggest, it would do justice to a class of people, particularly lighthouse keepers, who are not overpaid as it is.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member spoke to me about the case of assistant lighthouse keepers, but unfortunately the argument against it is that the assistant lighthouse keeper in the case mentioned by him is not an employee of the government.

Mr. NEILL: He is, indirectly.

Mr. MANION: He is an employee of the lighthouse keeper, by whom he is hired. There is a principle involved; the act cannot be applied to someone not in the employ of the government, when you pass legislation applicable to such employees.

Mr. NEILL: But he is being paid indirectly by the government.

Mr. MANION: He is hired by the lighthouse keeper.

An hon. MEMBER: Could you not pay the assistant directly?

Mr. MANION: I suppose the Marine department could introduce a system of paying the assistant directly, but I fancy the reason for the present method is that in many cases the lighthouse keeper, being a man with a family, and receiving a little allowance, can secure the help at home which otherwise he might have to hire outside, paying more in the way of wages. I am, of course, subject to correction, but I suppose that is the reason.

I have not heard of any labourer driving teams for the government, but in this case I assume that the provincial compensation act of British Columbia does not apply to such an employee. It seems to me that it is necessary, if possible, to get this provincial act to apply, because we are going to work under this act through the provincial compensation board.

Mr. NEILL: The provincial act does not cover farmers. But the point is that when you take a man off the farm to grade a road he is not a farmer while so engaged. All we ask is that the department shall decide that a man is not a farmer when he is grading a road for a dominion department.

Mr. HEAPS: A teamster would in all probability be working under a contract and he would not come under the provisions of the act.

Mr. POWER: As I understand the act, it is to permit the workmen's compensation boards of the various provinces to pass upon claims for compensation. If the government employee residing within the province does not happen to fall into one of the categories covered by the workmen's compensation act of the province, this act does not affect him.

Mr. MANION: That is correct.

Mr. POWER: That is to say, a man employed on an experimental farm, we will say, as an agricultural labourer, would not come under the provisions of this act because in most provinces agricultural labourers are not under these compensation boards. What will become of a claim for compensation made by a government employee who cannot obtain an award from the compensation board of his province? Am I to understand that there is a system whereby, by order in council, it is proposed to award him the amount granted to labourers in similar callings?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. MANION: The hon. member was correct in the first place when he said that it applied to the employee as defined by the provincial act. But so far as this act is concerned, it is to bring in all government employees, with the exception of military, naval and air forces which are already covered by an insurance scheme of their own, and railway employees who have already been brought under the act in all the provinces. So that this will cover all employees of the government, with possibly some individual exceptions such as have been referred to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I have not heard, however, of the case of a labourer on an experimental farm. The act will certainly cover all government employees, with, as I say, rare exceptions. If we find individual cases of an exceptional character they will have to be dealt with, but I do not know of any except those mentioned by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. POWER: The compensation acts in the various provinces specify the classes of employees who will come under the act. Other labourers do not come under the act—some because their salaries exceed certain amounts, and others by reason of the class of labour in which they are engaged. I mentioned the first example that occurred to me, that of the agricultural labourer. I speak again subject to correction, but I am under the impression that in our province, and I am quite sure in Ontario, agricultural labourers are exempt from the provisions of the workmen's compensation act.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is true of Ontario.

Mr. POWER: And Quebec has recently copied the Ontario act. Now, what becomes of a claim made by an employee of the government who does not come within one of the categories outlined in the various provincial acts?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is in the same position as he is now, and we can deal with him by order in council as a special case. But we cannot force into the provincial acts classes which those acts do not provide for.

Mr. VENIOT: You instruct the provincial board to rate the damage and they will do the rating for you.

Mr. MANION: Not necessarily. Before the treasury board there continually appear cases which are not covered and which are now going to be dealt with. The cases mentioned by the hon. member for Quebec South could be put into this category; they could be treated by order in council and recompensed by order in council as they are at the present time.

Mr. REID: Speaking in support of what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said in regard to men employed by the Department of Public Works, in British Columbia a man might be a fisherman or an agriculturist to-day and to-morrow be employed by the provincial government or by any municipality, and he immediately comes under the provisions of the British Columbia compensation act. We had a case in our municipality where a man working under the provisions of the employment relief fund was injured after only one hour's work, but there was not an official capable of determining what compensation he should get for one hour. The act in British Columbia is wide enough to include a man employed by the provincial government or a municipality. I think the hon. member's suggestion should be taken into serious consideration.

Mr. MANION: It will.

Mr. HEENAN: My reason for starting a debate on this resolution was because I was interested in the matter before it came into the house last session. I have explained to the minister the inequalities that at present exist in the treatment of disabled dominion employees. As the minister has said, that can be looked into some time later on; but inasmuch as some provinces are backward in their workmen's compensation acts, could the minister not, between now and probably the time the bill will get into committee, take this into consideration? It would be a long step toward rectifying the grievances. The minister might very well include in his bill a clause to provide that the injured workman might be paid the highest compensation that would obtain in any province. I have not given thought as to how he would do this, but I have the idea that we could provide in the bill that if a man, for instance in New Brunswick, were injured, instead of getting 55 per cent of his wages, and if he were killed, instead of his widow getting $30 a month, I think it is, for the rest of her life, the amount paid would be the same as that paid in Ontario and that will be paid now in Quebec, that is, in case of injury he would receive 66⅔ per cent of his wages, and in case of his death the widow would receive $40 a month for the rest of her life. The same board would give the award, and the Dominion government would pay out the amount.

Mr. MANION: While there may be arguments in favour of what the hon. gentleman proposes, at the same time I think we are at the present time taking a pretty long step in the right direction, and if it be found that injustices arise, amendments can be made later on. We are now taking a step that is going to cost us $70,000, and in the present state of the national finances I do not think I would like to promise to take on more expense. I think the hon. gentleman will realize that we are doing pretty well as it is.

Mr. NEILL: Is it the intention of the government to give the same rate of compensation as prevails in the provincial acts?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Manion thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 37, to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SALARIES ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE SALARY OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Salaries Act to provide that the salary of the Solicitor General shall be increased from seven thousand dollars per annum to ten thousand dollars per annum as from 7th August, 1930.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Section 5 of the Salaries Act, which is chapter 182 of the revised statutes of Canada, provides that the salary of the Solicitor General of Canada shall be $7,000 per annum. That act has never been amended, but in the year 1927 the salary of the Solicitor General was increased from $7,000 to $10,000 and it has continued at that figure ever since. But the vote under which the increase was made was peculiarly worded. It is number 445 of the votes of 1927 and it reads:

To provide increase of $3,000 per annum for Hon. Lucien Cannon, payable to him from the consolidated revenue fund, for the period during which he occupies the position of Solicitor General, the acceptance of such salary not to vacate his seat in parliament.

That was carried as a statutory vote in 1928, 1929 and 1930. On the 28th of July last the then government resigned and Mr.

Cannon was no longer Solicitor General. There will in any case have to be some amendment of the terms of the vote, and it is considered that the correct way of making the amendment is to amend section 5 of the Salaries Act, changing the figure from $7,000 to $10,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not rising to take exception to the change being made in the manner which my hon. friend has just indicated. I assume that the government intends that the Solicitor General shall be a member of the cabinet, and the idea is to have each member of the cabinet receive the same salary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is already a member of the cabinet.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend has just indicated, that was the view the previous administration also took while the Solicitor General, was a member of the cabinet, and to effect that end the difference in salary was made in the manner indicated by the Minister of Justice. The point I desire to raise—and I wish the Prime Minister were present, because I should have liked to direct my remarks to him personally—is whether this is not a good time to consider reducing the number of portfolios rather than permanently increasing the number of portfolios as is being done by this increase in the minister's salary. The government has been cutting down the staffs of the civil service; it is endeavouring to abolish some of the boards and the branches of some of the departments, and it would seem, if that same spirit of economy and retrenchment were extended to the cabinet itself, it might be possible to reduce the total number of portfolios and effect a substantial saving also in that direction.

I think this would be a very good time for the taking of such a step. I am glad to see the Prime Minister coming in, as my remarks can be directed more particularly to himself as head of the government. I may say to my right hon. friend that I have just ben referring in his absence to the skill he has exhibited in attempting to cut down some of the services, and to the effort he is making from the point of view of economy, to abolish some branches and boards connected with the public service. I was going to ask if he did not think this might not also be an appropriate time similarly to reduce the size of the cabinet. I think he will agree that a small cabinet, particularly one headed by himself, would be quite as efficient as a very large one. My right hon. friend has managed pretty well to get along without his ministers in the House of Commons, and from what I hear he has done quite a little as well in the way of administration of some of the departments other than his own. The other evening he told us there had been occasion to give a personal certificate to a member of the public service who was over seventy in order that he might be continued, and he asked us to imagine who the official might be. I thought it was a deputy minister, but he told us that it was an elevator man.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not give that certificate; he refused it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps I misunderstood. I thought that among his many other duties my hon. friend had been giving attention to the elevator men, and so it would appear from his reply. However, I do submit, in all seriousness, that the question of reducing the number of portfolios is something that is deserving of every consideration. My right hon. friend may have it in mind. He has sought to economize in the number of portfolios by taking three or four of them to himself. He might I think consider very seriously combining the functions of two or three of the ministries under one minister, and this particular resolution seems to make it appropriate to make that suggestion to him at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: The observations of the right hon. gentleman are certainly worthy of very careful consideration. The government has considered the matter. I am sure that the right hon. gentleman would say that we considered it when the government was formed, but I hasten to tell him that there is no intention to impose upon the Prime Minister the Finance department as well as others and thereby reduce the number of portfolios, although the arrangement so far has resulted in a substantial saving of money. The matter is under consideration. I think that some of the departments, in view of the change that has been brought about by reason of the resources being turned over to the western provinces, might be consolidated. The right hon. gentleman has had ten years of very considerable experience; I recall quite clearly the effort he made to reduce the number of portfolios, but in the end he found it necessary to increase them. The recommendations of the Duncan report with respect to the fisheries was responsible, not wholly, but practically, for the creation of one new department, if the administration was to give effect, as was intended, to the report.

I have had in mind for some time that this country should have a department of communications. I have thought about it a very great deal. There is the air, there is radio, wireless and cable communication—

An hon. MEMBER: Post office and railways.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, post office, railways and other forms of communication. I have given some thought to the matter but obviously, for reasons which the right hon. gentleman understands and the house appreciates, I have been only a few months in Canada since undertaking this task and I have not had as much time to consider the matter as I should like. But what has been said to-night by the right hon. gentleman I shall be very glad indeed to take in the spirit in which it is offered, as giving his benediction to the efforts we are making to improve the public service, and if the results to be obtained can best be secured by the methods suggested we shall not hesitate to apply them.

I hope within the next few days to introduce a bill mentioned in the speech from the throne, which I can anticipate to this extent, that it will make for more efficient control with respesct to our revenues and expenditures. I happen to know of my own knowledge that the right hon. gentleman himself bestowed considerable thought to the matter. I am very glad that the committee has taken the view it has in the discussion we are now having; for, after all, at the beginning of this century the revenues of Canada were only $50,000,000. When Sir John Macdonald died the revenues were $37,000,000. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier went out of office in 1911 my memory is that the total revenues of this country, just a little time before that, crossed the $100,000,000 mark. Now they approximate, at the least, $1,000,000 a day, and the extent to which consolidation of departments would improve the public service is a matter that I am not prepared to speak about at the moment because I have not arrived at a definite conclusion. In a country as vast as Canada it is very difficult to say, where you have revenues of approximately $1,000,000 a day to be dealt with, that you are making for efficiency by imposing too much detail upon him who administers. When the chief administrative officer is unable at a glance to know the state of efficiency with which the details of government are carried on by those in the departments, there is failure; and if you have too large a responsibility on the one individual the data comes before him too much in tabloid form to make possible an efficient working of the machinery. The effort that my colleagues and myself are endeavouring to make at the moment is to utilize the experience of the past in the light of the knowledge of to-day and to accomplish just what the right hon. gentleman has in mind, namely, efficiency in the conduct of the public service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish simply to correct one impression which my right hon. friend has left with the committee. It is true that, for the reason mentioned, the late administration did, in its last year of office, add one portfolio through the separation of the departments of fisheries and marine. But it is also true that when we came into office we made two or three very imporant consolidations. For instance, there was the Department of Inland Revenue, the Department of Customs, each presided over by a separate minister, and there was a separate branch of the public service dealing with the income tax. Those three were brought into the one department of National Revenue. Similarly, when we came into office, there was the Department of Militia and Defence, the Department of the Naval Service, and a separate air board. Those three were brought together into one department, that of National Defence.

Mr. BENNETT: But there was only one minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There was a separate Minister of Militia and Defence, and the naval service was under the Minister of Marine.

Mr. BENNETT: There were two deputy ministers, one for militia and defence, and one for the naval service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That consolidation was made, bringing all three into the one department. From experience I can tell my right hon. friend that he will find it much easier to make his consolidations in the first year than he will thereafter, provided he is in office any length of time. If he does not contemplate being in office any length of time, he will find avoiding consolidations a much simpler matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Because he does, he is not hurrying.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Guthrie thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 38, to amend the Salaries Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, April 24, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker now that the standing committees have been set up it becomes possible for me to move seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That the Auditor General's report for the year ending March 31, 1930, and the public accounts for the year ending March 31, 1930, be referred to the select standing committee on public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house has appointed His Honour the Speaker and Messrs. CANADIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

REPORT OF SPEECH DELIVERED TO ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, whether the government has taken steps to ascertain the accuracy of a report which appears in the papers of to-day of a speech made, or purported to have been made, in England last night by the Honourable High Commissioner of Canada in London, and whether the speech has had the authority and approval of the Prime Minister or of any member of the administration. The despatch to which I refer appears, among other papers, in the Montreal Gazette of to-day, and the Gazette's report is as follows:

Ferguson Warns British Leaders

Dominions Will Outstrip Mother Country If Cooperation Lacking, He Says

(Canadian Press Cable)

London, April 23.—"Unless you are very careful how you treat us it will be only another generation before we take your place as leaders in industry and as economic leaders of the world." With these words, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner to London, concluded an appeal to Great Britain to "take the dominions by the hands and negotiate with them." Mr.

Ferguson was speaking at the annual dinner of the Association of the British Chambers of Commerce here to-night.

He sometimes thought he declared, that owing to Great Britain's tremendous success through the centuries, when the world came to her as its financial centre and commercial leader, Britain had built up through the generations a feeling that she was more or less self-sufficient. It had not been realized that with the coming of war and destruction of the world's economic fabric, other nations had been rapidly growing in power and become powerful competitors of Britain.

"Where are you going to look for support if you do not turn to members of your own family?" he asked. "They are pressing to be permitted to sit down at the family table and work out problems on which your prosperity and happiness depend. Unless you are very careful how you treat us it will be only another generation before we take your place as leaders in industry and economic leaders of the world."

"Canada has the territory; the natural wealth and the right spirit, but we want from Great Britain to-day more capital and a helping hand. The time of depression will shorten if you will take the dominions by the hand and negotiate with them. The people of Britain and Canada want to come closer together and no government will stop them," Mr. Ferguson said.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I read the report in the press to which the right hon. gentleman has referred and which he has read to the house. I have not thought it necessary to ask for a verification, nor for a copy of the speech delivered. There was no antecedent discussion of the speech, nor was the ministry advised of the purport of the remarks that were to be made by the High Commissioner. In due course the government will be advised, and if it is desirable that the house should be informed, it will be informed.

PRIVILEGE— MR. B. M. STITT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I rise to resent, as I think every member of this house and western members in particular should resent, an imputation contained in the leading editorial of this morning's Ottawa Journal. I will read that editorial, which is as follows:

> Canadians presently engaged with pencil and paper figuring out how much they owe the treasury for income tax, and wondering what governments do with all the money, might profitably study a return tabled in parliament on Wednesday. It had to do with the Hudson Bay railway. With its cost.
> The Hudson Bay railway, as everybody knows, is not yet finished. Thus far, however, its financial story is this:

Cost of the road up to February 28, 1931	$30,997,136 44
Cost of Port Nelson terminals.	6,240,200 86
Cost of Churchill terminals	7,256,846 51
Cost of Hudson strait expedition	1,323,809 51
Cost of radio direction finding work	349,678 23
Total cost to date	$46,167,671 55

> Forty-six millions gone—and the end not yet! Even this year, when economy is vital, and when the government is harrassed to make ends meet, there is $6,000,000 more in the estimates for this craziness.
> We have two costly transcontinental railways hauling grain east and west. We have spent hundreds of millions on canals and harbours. We have spent lavishly to ship wheat through St. John and Halifax, through Montreal and Quebec, through Vancouver and Prince Rupert. We talk of the St. Lawrence deep waterway. Yet, while spending and building and talking that way, we have gone on putting $46,000,000 in a road whose steel ends with ice-floes and amid wolves and seals. It is an extraordinary study in folly.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt) shorten up the matter if possible?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I was just leading up to my point. There is an imputation here that members who are supporting this project do not know a tramp steamer from a mowing machine. That is the point in the next paragraph I am leading up to, and I resent it. That paragraph reads:

> The advocates of this route, most of whom wouldn't know a tramp ship from a mowing machine, and who probably think that the nautical term "port" is something to drink, now tell us that, ships or no ships, the road will pay for itself. Look, they tell us; look at all the wonderful minerals along the road, and the timber, and the marvellous fishing in the Hudson bay!

There is another paragraph here which is not correct, and which with your permission I will read:

> Not a pound of grain has yet gone out over the Hudson bay route. Not a pound will go out this year, or next year.

Surely that statement is incorrect, when we remember the statements made by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) to the press.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the point about which the hon. member wishes to complain to the house?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I am leading up to the point. I think this is a breach of privilege; I think it is an insult, and I will conclude by simply stating that I resent it and disagree with every word of the editorial. I sincerely hope every member of this house will rise in his place and record his disapproval of this article.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): Before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), based on a communication I received from him and for which I thank him. This question is in regard to the transportation of pure-bred live stock, and this is what the minister says:

> The Minister of Agriculture has authorized payment by the Dominion live stock branch of freight charges on a limited number of carload shipments of cattle purchased from breeders and farmers within the Dominion and shipped as follows:
> From any point of loading in the Dominion of Canada, including points in the prairie provinces, to any railway point in the prairie provinces.

Will the provisions of these regulations be extended to live stock farmers of Ontario and Quebec, and the other provinces as well?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Does the hon. gentleman want to know whether the farmers of Ontario and Quebec will be able to sell cattle for this purpose, or does he wish to have the freight paid within these provinces?

Mr. McMILLAN: The last portion of this statement is to the effect that cattle may be shipped from any point of loading in the Dominion of Canada, including points in the prairie provinces, to any railway point in the prairie provinces. My question is whether this provision of these regulations will be extended to the live stock farmers of Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces.

Mr. WEIR: I would like the hon. gentleman to put his question in writing, and I will be glad to give full information.

UNEMPLOYMENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is true that his administration intends to call a Dominion unemployment conference, and if so, how soon that conference will be held.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. member will be advised when the event happens, if it does happen.

[Mr. Stitt.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have in my hand a despatch from Alberta intimating that the premier of that province stated recently in Lethbridge that an unemployment conference would be called by the Dominion later on in the present parliamentary session. I am sorry the Prime Minister has not seen fit to vouch for the accuracy of Mr. Brownlee's statement.

MR. W. A. WILSON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) whether the services of Mr. W. A. Wilson, agricultural produce marketing agent, have been dispensed with.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Would the hon. gentleman put this question on the order paper?

SURVEY OF NATIONAL PORTS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SIR ALEXANDER GIBB

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Richelieu): I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in his capacity as Minister of Finance, or the Minister of Marine, if they would place on the table of the house a copy of the order in council appointing Sir Alexander Gibb to make an investigation into the harbours controlled by harbour commissions.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think there was no order in council passed; there was merely a direction by correspondence. I will look it up and the correspondence will be brought down.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): I desire to direct the attention of the Secretary of State to a statement which appears at page 902 of Hansard for yesterday. The hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) was speaking about the copyright matter and said:

> . . . . I believe there are in the bill certain sections which we shall have to drop in order to put our legislation into full conformity with the decisions of Rome.
> Mr. Cahan: We do not recognize the decisions of Rome.

I should like to ask the Minister if he would tell us what he meant by "the decisions of Rome", because as far as I know there is no authority in Rome to give decisions in any matters of copyright, nor is there any such authority in Berne, which is probably the place meant by the minister. Would he tell the committee what these decisions are?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I was simply replying to the hon. gentleman. There was a small committee which was, I understand, at one time sitting at Rome, and which at other times, I understand, sits at Berne. That committee, without any authority and without any jurisdiction, from time to time presumes to send out circulars in which it purports to give legal opinions upon the provisions of the Berne convention and latterly upon the provisions of the Rome conventions. I have received these opinions from time to time. They are not authoritative; they are not the findings of a judicial authority; they decide nothing. And so far as I am concerned I refuse to regard their decisions as anything else than the opinions of gentlemen who are without any jurisdiction in the matter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AGREEMENT FOR JOINT USE OF PREMISES AT REGINA

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 9, to ratify and confirm certain agreements respecting the joint use by Canadian National Railways of certain tracks and premises of Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Regina.

He said: Perhaps I should explain to the house very briefly what this bill refers to. An agreement was made in 1912 between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern Railway for the joint use of passenger and freight facilities in the city of Regina. Later, I think in 1926, that became applicable to the different subsidiaries of the Canadian National Railways. But in 1930 the agreement was supplemented by certain sub-agreements with reference to office space and various other minor details, which changed the form of the agreement. This bill is introduced on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways to ratify that agreement, making it, as was the original agreement, for a period of ninety-nine years. Both companies desire it, and so far as I know it involves nothing of a controversial nature.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL COMPENSATION ACTS TO ALL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 37, to amend the Government Employees' Compensation Act.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANION: Might I suggest to my hon. friend that we allow the bill to get into committee, where it can be more easily discussed. The principle is acceptable to the whole house.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Definitions.

Mr. HEENAN: The minister very properly requested that we should go into committee forthwith inasmuch as there is not an hon. member in this house who is opposed to the principle of the bill. Undoubtedly we can better discuss it in committee. When the resolution was before the house last night we had not the advantage of having the bill before us. Now that the bill is before the committee I find that what I feared last night is the case: the bill does not cover the points which I brought up. I trust the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) is not taking up too much of the minister's time.

Mr. MANION: I am listening to my hon. friend.

Mr. HEENAN: I am a pretty hard man to listen to.

I hope the government will take into consideration the suggestions which I made last evening. The compensation act which governs Dominion employees is not fair or equitable, as I have already pointed out. The same wages and salaries are paid to all Dominion employees in like employment all over the country, but when accidents occur and they are disabled or lose their lives, then we differentiate in the treatment accorded. For instance, if a Dominion employee is injured in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia or any of the western provinces, he receives 66⅔ per cent of his wages up to a maximum of $2,000, or, about $111 per month. If an employee similarly employed in New Brunswick is injured—I think it is the same in Nova Scotia—he would receive 55 per cent of wages up to $1,200.

Mr. MANION: Just as a matter of information, is it not 60 per cent in Ontario?

Mr. HEENAN: No, 66⅔ per cent from Quebec west. The employee injured in New Brunswick would receive 55 per cent of $1,200, or $55 per month as maximum remuneration. I contend that equal treatment is not accorded to our federal employees. If a Dominion employee should be killed in any province from Quebec west his widow would receive $40 per month, while in New Brunswick she would receive only $30—I mention New Brunswick because I have some knowledge of what is done in that province—and I believe the amount paid in Nova Scotia would be $35 per month.

There are other inequalities in the act which could be referred to, but I do not desire to take up the time of the committee in discussing them. I approve of the principle of the bill and I thank the hon. minister for bringing it before the committee. However, I would reiterate that there was some difference of opinion with respect to the bill prior to the last elections, and that is one of the reasons why it was not presented. I want to take the position now as I did then, that this bill does not give equal treatment to Dominion employees or their dependents in the event of injury or death in the course of duty. I do not know of anything more discouraging or more productive of dissatisfaction than the unequal treatment of employees working for one employer, whether that be the Dominion or provincial government or some industrial institution. It is not fair to pay the widow of a man killed in one part of the country only $30 per month, when the widow of a man killed in another part of the country receives $40, nor is it fair to pay $111 per month to one employee who has sustained injury while another receives only $55 per month. I am sure that the ingenuity of the government and especially of the Minister of Railways can conceive of some amendment to this bill which would eliminate these inequalities and which could be presented before the bill passes the committee stage.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to quarrel with the hon. member in regard to the attitude he takes on this matter; he probably has good grounds for his argument, but the fact remains that this is the same bill as his own government introduced last year and which was not proceeded with. This is the same bill as was drawn up by the representatives of the different provinces in this Dominion. I explained last evening that before this bill was presented to me for presentation to the house a meeting was held in my office at which the Minister of Labour (Senator Robertson), representatives of Ontario and Quebec, certain officials of the different departments and myself were present. The representatives from Ontario and Quebec spoke for the whole Dominion of Canada, and they agreed to the bill as it is drawn up.

While that is all true, the fact remains that there are some inequalities existing in regard to the matters referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). The passing of this bill will add at least $70,000—that is a very rough estimate—to the cost of the administration of the act, or 15 or 20 per cent, and the government feels that it is a move in the right direction. The hon. member admits that himself. We feel that it is going sufficiently far in these times without adding further to the cost. After this bill has been in force a year or so there is no doubt that we can then consider alterations or amendments to the act, but, speaking for the government, I should prefer at the present time not to offer any amendment unless it be of a technical character.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. minister give the committee the meaning of the definition of "employee" given in subsection (a) of section 2, reading as follows:

while performing duties or services by virtue of being appointed, certificated or licensed by His Majesty or by a minister of the crown acting in any capacity other than on behalf of His Majesty,

Mr. MANION: That part of the section refers to those who are not actually paid by the government. For example, a pilot would be appointed by the Dominion government but would be paid out of fees received from the ships which he pilots. There are other cases, such as harbour masters, who are paid by fees. It refers to all those who may be appointed by the Dominion of Canada but who do not receive their compensation direct from this government.

I quite understand the difficulty of following this section because it is a rather involved sentence. The part which my hon. friend read has reference to the preceding part of the section, which reads:

but does not include persons who are permanent members of the military, naval or air forces of Canada, —who have a special method of insurance of their own. Perhaps the words "it does not refer to" should have been repeated, so that the remainder of the section would read:

it does not refer to persons who are caused personal injury by or whose death results from accident while performing duties—and so on. My hon. friend will understand that it is a matter of direct payment; if they do not receive payment direct from the government, then they are not subject to the benefits of this act.

Mr. RALSTON: I read the first part of the clause, but I wanted to find out just exactly the classes referred to, and the hon. minister has been good enough to give me certain examples.

My hon. friend said something else in reply to what was said a few moments ago by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I understood him to say that the provinces agree. I do not see much difficulty in that regard. As I understand the matter, the compensation assessed is really paid by the Dominion, and the provinces have not much interest in such an agreement. The point is really whether the federal employees in the various provinces are satisfied with the arrangement which is made. My hon. friend has suggested that this is somewhat similar to or perhaps textually exactly the same—I do not know—as an amendment which was suggested last year; but what has been said by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has a good deal of force, as my hon. friend has admitted, inasmuch as these employees are all federal government employes and if there should be any inequality, it can only be on account of the differences in wages or salary, because, as I understand the matter, under the compensation acts of the different provinces the compensation is based on a percentage of the wages or salary. Would it not be advisable, while my hon. friend is doing this, to make a clean job of it and fix a certain percentage of salary for all federal government employees. If the salaries are the same, there is no reason why a man in Nova Scotia should receive one amount for compensation and a man in Ontario, another? The fact that the provinces have agreed does not help very much; neither does the fact that the representatives from Quebec and Ontario have agreed help very much, because the other provinces have a different scale of compensation. I join with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in urging the minister to consider the possibility of fixing the scale of compensation for all federal government employees on an even and uniform basis, having regard to the fact that all have a common employer.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is quite right; perhaps I should not have said that the provinces agreed inasmuch as they have not very much to say about the matter, as we are paying the bills. But when he says that the people who will not be satisfied will be the federal government employees, I am afraid, as he well knows, having been a minister for quite a long time, that we would be in difficulty if we endeavoured to satisfy all the federal government employees. The proposal, however, that my hon. friend and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River make is a little difficult of administration, and it would also cause an inequality. It is difficult of administration for this reason; if, for example, we pay in New Brunswick, using the province mentioned by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, a different scale of compensation from that which is paid by that province under its compensation act, we would have to have some machinery set up here to handle that ourselves, because otherwise we would be complicating their efforts in New Brunswick. Secondly, while it is true that under the present act as it stands there may be some inequalities due to the different rates of compensation paid by the various provinces, if we pay the same throughout the Dominion, we must have inequalities in any case, because we would be paying to Dominion government employees in New Brunswick and some of the other provinces a greater rate of compensation than is paid to provincial government or industrial employees. Therefore, either way we are going to establish inequalities. We take the attitude, I think fairly, that this is a move in the right direction; indeed we have taken the excellent example of the late government which last year introduced this bill just as it is to-day.

Mr. HEENAN: No.

Mr. MANION: I am informed that it is exactly the same bill and in the same form as that introduced last year as far as the terms are concerned.

Mr. HEENAN: The bill was not introduced.

Mr. MANION: Well, the resolution, if my hon. friend wants to argue on a technicality. As it is a move in the right direction, I think we can take a chance for a year, and if there be some inequalities that cause dissatisfaction, we can amend it next year. I do not think at the present time we should add to the liabilities of the Dominion which are heavy enough. We do not wish to assume any heavier financial responsibilities than we have taken in this bill. It must be remembered that after all we are adding to the advantages of the employees themselves; those employees who are covered in this bill had no compensation previously. They pay nothing for it; it is a gift to them, and so it is an advantage to them which they did not have in the past.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Does the federal government administer this fund, or is it administered through the provincial compensation boards?

Mr. MANION: Through the boards.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then there must be some agreement between the provinces and the Dominion. I am quite in sympathy with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. But I can see a great difficulty. For instance, in New Brunswick a royal commission is now at work considering whether the rate of compensation shall be increased from 55 per cent where it has stood since 1918. I should like to point out that the trades and labour council of New Brunswick are asking, not for 66⅔ per cent, but for 75 per cent. I do not say that they are going to get that, but I would be surprised if they did not get some increase. If the royal commission should report to the legislature or government of New Brunswick that it is desirable to grant 75 per cent, the whole scheme is going to be a lever to raise the rate of compensation throughout the Dominion to 75 per cent. I do not think employers of labour are ready to go that far. They may not think 55 per cent is large enough. But this bill is a step in the right direction, and we had better leave it alone until the provinces themselves arrive at a uniform rate of compensation. I know employees of the Dominion government welcome this bill. Those outside of the railways have not had any compensation heretofore.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is mistaken. Compensation is awarded all the time to government employees. The minister will correct me if I am wrong. This is only to correct a comparatively few cases in which there is no similar employment in civil occupations to that which can be found in federal government service.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My understanding was that the compensation applied only to the railway employees. I am glad to hear that it has a wider application. Federal government employees, however, who are at present not under the act, are going to be brought under it by this bill. The question of inequality is bound to arise and exist just as long as there are inequalities in rates of compensation paid by the various provinces. Until those are settled on an equitable and uniform basis, this bill ought to go through as it is.

Mr. DUFF: Am I right in assuming that the Dominion government does not pay this money directly to the employees, but that it goes to the different workmen's compensation boards in the provinces when they send in their bills?

Mr. MANION: That is right with the exception of Prince Edward Island. Last night I think I gave a wrong piece of information to the hon. member for Gloucester; I was not sure about Prince Edward Island having a compensation board. It has not. Every other province has. In the case of Prince Edward Island we have a referee there who handles the matter for us; in his case he sends in the accounts, medical, hospital and compensation, for the man injured, and we pay the bill directly from the Department of Railways and Canals at Ottawa. In all the other provinces the provincial compensation boards pay the bills, render us accounts plus about 5 per cent for administration, and we pay their accounts.

Mr. DUFF: Is the money paid to the workmen's compensation boards of the different provinces or to the individuals?

Mr. MANION: The workmen's compensation boards.

Mr. DUFF: If that be the case, I certainly think we should not set a standard here. Our rate should be guided by the percentage paid in each province.

Mr. MANION: That is what we are doing.

Mr. DUFF: If we establish a standard here, whether it be 65 per cent or 75 per cent, or whatever it be, every employer of labour and provincial government will get into trouble, because people will want to raise the standard in their own province.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry, but I do not agree with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. I take very strongly the ground that the governing factor is the wages paid to the employee. The governing factor in that particular case, the wages of the employee, is the same all over Canada. Why in the world should less compensation be paid in case of injury or death in the maritime provinces than if the accident had happened in British Columbia? I can assure the minister that he will have nothing but trouble until the federal government themselves fix rates of compensation and make them universally applicable throughout Canada. It would be a very simple matter to do. All the provinces have rates of compensation fixed now. The Dominion government could easily adopt a scale of its own and pay compensation to every employee throughout the Dominion according to that scale. While I am in entire sympathy with the idea that every employee should come under the provisions of this act, at the same time I can assure the minister and the government that they will have nothing but trouble until this matter is adjusted on a basis of equality from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. DUFF: The best thing for the federal government to do would be to set up a workmen's compensation board of their own.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I am not suggesting anything of the kind. The matter can be handled very simply. The boards are there, and all that is required is a scale set up by the federal government. There is no necessity at all for setting up a federal compensation board.

Mr. DUFF: In other words, if an employee of the Public Works department in Ottawa comes down to a town in Nova Scotia and works alongside a local man in that particular town, and both are injured while at work, then under the scheme proposed by the hon. member for West Edmonton one man would receive a different rate of compensation from the other. I say that until we have a federal compensation board and pay compensation direct from Ottawa, we must take the scale that prevails in the different provinces. In Nova Scotia, for instance, by an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act the fishermen of the province were brought under the act, paying their money direct to the government, and the government paying out the claims. About three years ago the government decided they could not afford to carry the fishermen any longer, at rates which the fishermen could afford to pay and the result was that the fishermen had to go to an insurance company in London and arrange for cover. The London underwriters stipulated that they would pay compensation to injured fishermen or for fatalities through the workmen's compensation board of the province of Nova Scotia, according to the rates set out in the Workmen's Compensation Act. The fishermen and the insurance company came to that agreement, with the result that while the government of Nova Scotia does not collect money direct from the fishermen, it is paid by the fishermen to the insurance company, and the fishermen are paid the rates of compensation set by the board. In the present case, if the federal government simply pays the money over to the workmen's compensation board, it would never do for employees of the government to get a different rate of compensation from the ordinary employees of any other concern in any of the provinces.

Mr. HEENAN: That is where my hon. friend and I entirely disagree. Surely we should try to treat all the employees of any particular industry in an equitable manner, and as the Dominion government is an employer of workmen in certain districts, I say that it should treat its men similarly, in the matter of compensation for injuries, throughout the whole Dominion.

What my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough suggests is that the Dominion government should agree to subscribe funds to those provinces that are backward in the matter of providing workmen's compensation. In other words, he suggests that Dominion government employees who are working at the same rate of wages in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as Dominion government employees working in Ontario, Quebec or the western provinces, should be treated differently in the matter of compensation in the event of an accident. I do not believe that this house will agree that the men should be treated differently in the matter of compensation in the case of an accident in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick as compared with an accident in any other part of the country. I do not wish to repeat myself too often but I think it is worth while for me to repeat this: If a railway mail clerk should be disabled at his work in Quebec or in any province west of Quebec he would be entitled to obtain compensation at the rate of $111 a month so long as he was disabled, while if he became disabled in the province of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia he would be entitled to draw only approximately $55 a month.

The Minister of Railways suggests that the government will be spending $70,000 or more under this act. I would point out that that amount will only be spent in the case of injuries to employees. I think there is a better way to save that money, and that is that we should refrain from disabling workmen working for the Dominion government. The labour men would rather refrain from collecting compensation because they do not wish to be injured; but in the event of their being injured I claim that they are entitled to as much compensation in one province as if the injury had occurred in another and that in the event of their being killed the widow and dependants are entitled to just as much compensation as the widows and dependants receive in other parts of the country. I appreciate the action of the government in bringing down this measure as prepared by the late government. That measure was not gone on with for reasons that I do not wish to disclose at this particular time. The resolution which was introduced last session was by no means satisfactory to me, and the amendment before us is not satisfactory, although I accept it as a step in the right direction. But I do not see the use, to borrow a phrase from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice when he was leading the opposition, of taking so many bites at a cherry. We have shown that there are inequalities in the Dominion public service, and I think that we should amend this measure. I do not want to offer an amendment; I do not even want to suggest one because I know that the ingenuity of the minister and his officers is quite equal to bringing in a suitable amendment. If I recollect aright, at the present time Prince Edward Island has no Workmen's Compensation Act, but there is an act of the Dominion parliament making provision for a referee in Prince Edward Island to base the compensation for injured Dominion employees on the basis which obtains in New Brunswick. So that precedent has already been established. I can easily conceive of a simple amendment to this bill which would provide that in cases where employees are disabled or killed in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island they or their dependants would get the same rate of compensation as they would have been entitled to had the accident happened in Ontario or Quebec. If we cannot get such an amendment from the government I am perfectly ready to support this measure, but I would still plead with the minister to take my suggestion into serious consideration and see if he cannot bring in an amendment to give equal treatment to all Dominion employees in all parts of Canada.

Mr. MacLEAN: Mr. Chairman, I desire to endorse the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) because I know from personal experience that what he has referred to is causing considerable dissatisfaction in the maritimes at the present time. Last year the legislature of Prince Edward Island enacted a compensation measure, but whether it is in operation yet I do not know. But I do know that two years ago compensation for railway employees was based on the New Brunswick Compensation Act. I know of one case where the widow of a trainman was receiving compensation under that act; after a couple of years her compensation was cut down, and the reason given for the reduction was that she had been put under the Nova Scotia act. I know this created a great deal of dissatisfaction at the time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If she was under the Nova Scotia act they could not place her under the New Brunswick act.

Mr. MacLEAN: I know they did reduce her compensation, and that was the reason given for the reduction. That is why in Prince Edward Island the legislature was asked to put through a compensation act. It seems to me only fair that the same rate of compensation should apply to all government employees, no matter what province they may be in. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. Duff) who states that the suggestion made by the hon. member from Kenora-Rainy River would interfere with the compensation acts of the various provinces.

Mr. DUFF: I am right just the same.

Mr. MacLEAN: Each province has its compensation act for local purposes, but every Dominion employee should receive the benefit of the Dominion act. May I ask the minister, does this measure apply to men in the government merchant marine?

Mr. MANION: I don't think so.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They are under a different company.

Mr. MacLEAN: I know of the case of a young man on one of the government merchant marine boats who lost his sight in the service, but is not in receipt of compensation. Is there any possibility of bringing the government merchant marine under this legislation? I repeat that I support the position taken by the former Minister of Labour, that the same rate of compensation should apply to all government employees.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, speaking, if not for, at least from British Columbia, I must support the attitude taken by the member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). The member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) says he does not want to precipitate a condition where a government employee in one province would be paid more or less compensation than a government employee in another province. As a member from British Columbia I am more concerned with this aspect—I do not want government employees in British Columbia to be paid more or less compensation, particularly less, than other men in British Columbia. I can see that British Columbia is going to be the goat if the system proposed by the member for Kenora-Rainy River were put into effect. If I remember rightly, the rate of compensation paid in British Columbia is 62½ per cent; someone on the other side has said that in New Brunswick it is 55 per cent; some other province may have a lower rate. Now, if we leave the minister to strike a percentage rate to apply to all Canada, he will be almost sure to strike an average, and that average naturally will be less than the highest rate now prevailing; consequently British Columbia, having at present the highest rate, will be at a disadvantage. Therefore I support the attitude taken in this particular instance by the minister.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman I am not impressed by the solicitude of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River for our departmental employees having regard to the fact that he was Minister of Labour in the former government from 1926 down to August last. Neither am I impressed with his repudiation of his own child. This is an attempt to do something which he failed to do when he was Minister of Labour and I would suggest to him that he had better leave well enough alone. There has been a certain amount of misrepresentation, or perhaps I should say misinformation, as to the attitude of the workmens' compensation board in New Brunswick. The rate of compensation in New Brunswick is 55 per cent, with a maximum compensation of $1,500 a year; which is somewhat different from what the hon. gentleman stated. I do not know what the rate of compensation is in Nova Scotia, but I imagine it is at about the same level as the New Brunswick rate. Any attempt under this bill to pay the Canadian National Railway employees in New Brunswick a higher rate of compensation will have the effect of immediately raising the rate of compensation payable to all employees in that province, and I tell him right now that the payrolls of New Brunswick will not stand any such increase, especially in the pulp and paper business with the companies finding it difficult to pay wages under prevailing conditions. Let me tell him something further: there is a reflex action to this question, which perhaps he appreciates, namely, that a higher rate of compensation inevitably reacts on the scale of wages paid. I do not think this is just, but I know it so works out in practice; and the men themselves know it. I suggest that the hon. gentleman had better leave well enough alone and not repudiate his own offspring.

Mr. HEENAN: I had not intended to say anything further, Mr. Chairman, but the remarks of the member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) require some answer. It is quite evident that he has not been listening to the Minister of Railways, or he would have heard him state that this bill is practically the same bill as was introduced last session by the King government.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But you were Minister of Labour six years and did not get the bill through.

Mr. HEENAN: Therefore the member for York-Sunbury is admitting that we did something.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You made a gesture.

Mr. HEENAN: For the hon. member's information I may say that one reason why the bill was not proceeded with was that inequalities were discovered in the bill by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You are just finding it out.

Mr. HEENAN: For the further information of the hon. gentleman let me say to him that I welcome the introduction of this bill and I am going to support it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): So am I.

Mr. HEENAN: But I reiterate that to treat employees in one industry in a different way in the different provinces is neither fair nor equitable. I am not going to enter into a discussion as to the position of the pulp and paper mills of Ontario or New Brunswick further than to say that I do not think the pulp and paper industry of New Brunswick is very much different from the industry in Ontario and I helped to get some of the pulp and paper mills located there. They secured from the provinces valuable timber limits and water powers in consideration of erecting and operating pulp and paper mills for so many months in each and every year and employing so many hands. No pulp and paper mill in any part of the country is performing that obligation, so I have not very much sympathy with the plea that they cannot stand any increase in wages. The way to economize in compensation is to refrain from disabling too many workmen.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I agree with that.

Mr. HEENAN: I knew my hon. friend would. He has a big heart, just like myself. One would imagine he came from Ireland instead of New Brunswick.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I came from a better place.

Mr. HEENAN: There is no better place on the face of the earth. I repeat, the pulp and paper mills might economize by not making so many widows through their eagerness to speed up the work of their employees. The compensation boards of Ontario and Quebec, I understand, have been consulted in this matter with respect to its legal aspect. Would not my hon. friend consent to leave this matter to a committee, so that the Dominion employees might have an opportunity to make their representations in that regard?

Mr. MANION: I do not think there is anything to be gained by letting it stand. The government have brought forward this measure; they had the advantage of having the previous government bring forward the same bill and while I do not know that political recriminations get one anywhere, particularly when one is in power, at the same time while my hon. friend was Minister of Labour these people who are now going to get compensation, including the widows of whom he spoke, received nothing. Now they are going to get fairly good treatment under this bill. I do not mean that any treatment can compensate for the loss of a husband—at least, some husbands—but at the same time it is some form of support. Speaking for the government, I must say that my hon. friend's proposal will simply delay the bill and delay the time when these people who require compensation will get it, because so far as the government is concerned the act is ready to go through, and unless it is held back altogether we are going to put it through. These people will receive compensation when they deserve it.

I am not satisfied at the present time to change the proposals in the act, because I have given them very serious consideration. We understood before we brought in the bill the differences which exist, but there are also the points made by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for York-Sunbury. Those points are important. I do not believe it is our duty to set up a discrimination in the province itself, and that is what we should be doing if we adopted the suggestions proposed by my hon. friend. I say, with all due respect, that we would like to pass this bill as it stands. It is our proposal and I cannot agree to any changes in it unless something is shown to be of much more importance than the points already made. I am very anxious to put through the bill, for the benefit of the people who need compensation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has the minister examined the possibility of a universal rate, to be administered by the compensation boards of the various provinces, based on the wage scale of the federal employees?

Mr. MANION: I am informed that if we tried to do that we would have to set up another organization here in Ottawa to administer it ourselves. That is the information I am given, I think we have enough departments here at Ottawa now.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I agree.

Mr. MANION: I am very glad of that, and with these compensation boards already in all the provinces it seems to me that as a trial this proposal should be adopted. After all, these people will get more this year than they ever received before, and if there is some dissatisfaction this provision can be amended later.

Mr. GERSHAW: When this bill passes employees of this government will be under the compensation boards of the various provinces. In case an employee is injured and disabled, is he bound to accept the award of the compensation board or has he any appeal in common law?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is a medical man; he knows that in Ontario at least, and I presume it is the same in the other provinces, an injured workman has no appeal under the law.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has said that he does not feel that he can accept any amendment unless something which he considers perhaps more important or more vital than the question which has been raised is brought to his attention. I just want to mention one or two matters which have been discussed already, and to point out to my hon. friend for his consideration either now or later on, when he comes to find out whether or not the trial of which he speaks has been successful, that the inequalities which he suggests exists to-day by reason of the fact that we have all over this Dominion those who are employed by the federal government and who are paid rates of wages fixed without referenec to the conditions in the provinces. That is fundamental; you have a different employer, as I said before. My hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough suggests that you cannot have a man employed by the Dominion government receiving one rate of compensation while the employee of a civilian employer receives another rate. We have that condition to-day; for example almost every Dominion government employee is entitled to superannuation, while the civilian employee does not receive that advantage. Almost every Dominion employee is entitled to a statutory increase in salary, which is not the case with a civilian employee. Almost every Dominion employee is entitled to holidays regularly, which is not the case with a civilian employee. They are working side by side, perhaps in the same town, but that inequality exists already by reason of the fact that they have different employers.

Further than that, you already have inequality in connection with workmen's compensation. Until very lately Prince Edward Island has no provision for compensation to employees of private employers. But for some years the act we are now amending has provided for compensation in Prince Edward Island to employees of the government, notwithstanding the fact that there is no such compensation to civilian employees. So the inequality does exist, I suggest, and I suggest that where we pay our employees at a level rate of wages all over the Dominion, the compensation should be at a level rate also.

I have listened carefully to what has been said, and I feel that to some extent at least it seems as if the views expressed depend on where the speakers happen to be living. The very fact that all these people are employed by the federal government would seem to indicate that there should be uniformity and not inequality as to their compensation. I may say further that while the workmen's compensation boards are used as the machines through which this compensation is disbursed, every dollar of that compensation is paid to the workmen's compensation boards by the federal government through the Minister of Finance, and my hon. friend is in charge of this bill at the moment because his own department is really the one charged with the administration of this act, and is the conduit pipe, if I may use that expression with deference, through which these cases are presented to the various boards. The provincial boards are only tribunals after all, set up for the purpose of administering the act, and I submit it does not make any difference whatever that it happens to be a local workmen's compensation board which is doing the work, because as a matter of fact it is acting as an agent of the Dominion government.

May I say further that I do not think we are perhaps altogether seized of the fact that what is being done is not something entirely new. I quite agree that it is an improvement on the condition which existed formerly, but for years, ever since this act, which is now being amended, was passed, we have had a compensation act for employees of the federal government. All we are doing now is to say that a certain class of these employees who were not receiving compensation before, because the words "under similar circumstances" contained in the old act did not apply in certain cases, shall receive compensation now. There are certain positions under the federal government which have no counterpart or corresponding employment in civilian life, and all we are doing by this act is to pick up these odd cases and put them on the same basis as the others. My hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River suggests that while we are doing that, without making any change in the resolution brought down previously, we might go a step further. He suggests that the government should not simply rely on what its predecessors did but at the same time should provide for a rate of compensation which will be uniform to all Dominion government employees throughout Canada.

I submit these observations to my hon. friend, notwithstanding his attitude regarding no amendments. This matter of trial is really not very impressive. We know exactly what the issue is; we know just as well to-day as we shall know two years hence what will happen. The question is whether federal employees will be paid a uniform percentage throughout Canada or whether the rates will be different in the different provinces. The reasons which the hon. member (Mr. Heenan) has given are, I think, impressive and might well be considered with a view to making a complete cleanup of the situation. I think the principle he has laid down should be accepted.

Mr. GEARY: What would be my hon. friend's proposal as to working it out? I do not believe that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) wishes to have set up a Dominion government tribunal, but merely to have the Dominion government continue as in the past to be a conduit pipe for the transfer of moneys. Does my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) mean to have the administration carried on by the provinces? If so, it is quite plain that there will have to be amendments to the provincial statutes. For instance, in Ontario it is definitely set out by statute that the payment shall be 66⅔ per cent, while in other provinces I believe it is different. There is at present in the Ontario act no scheme whereby regulations may be made so as to change the rate of compensation. Similarly, in Nova Scotia, I suppose there is no provision for such regulation. It seems to me, therefore, outside all points that have been taken care of this afternoon, that there is a good deal of difficulty ahead of us, even if we decide in this house to have a uniform percentage throughout the Dominion, in arranging how that should be done. In the meantime, a certain advance is being definitely made; everyone agrees with that. Why not let that advance continue? We have the word of the minister that all these representations that are being made, and made with great force, will be considered and a proper working out of the scheme undertaken. I do not believe it can be worked out at all at the present time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In my hon. friend's opinion would there be a conflict if the federal government fixed the schedules and the provincial boards administered the system in accordance therewith?

Mr. GEARY: I am not in the confidence of any one of the legislatures and I do not know what tribunals are set up. There are certain conditions upon which the percentage is fixed in the statute. I am not at all sure that the provincial board would feel at liberty under the present legislation to adjudicate upon a case, make an award ignoring the provision as to the amount payable, and come to the Dominion and say, "There is the award; if you can pay such a percentage it will be put through."

Mr. DUFF: At present the percentage which prevails in Nova Scotia is paid equally to all classes of labour. Every class is given the same; there is no differentiation. Miners are paid the same percentage as lumbermen or any other class. Now if by this statute we fixed the rate at 75 per cent would it be fair for the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Finance to say to the provincial government, "We have fixed the rate at 75 per cent and we will use you as a conduit pipe to pay the compensation. One class of labourers will be paid 75 per cent while others will receive only 65 per cent"? If I were premier of Nova Scotia I would say to the federal government, "You pay your own money." The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River no doubt has the interest of the working man at heart. If he wants a uniform schedule for federal employees throughout Canada why should he not want a uniform schedule for all labourers in the country? What he should work for is to get all the provincial governments, at the first conference they have, to try to agree to a uniform rate for all employees, including those of the federal government, making it 50, 65, 70 or 75 per cent, whatever the provincial governments might agree upon. But so long as the rate in Nova Scotia is 55 per cent, or whatever it is, the rate in British Columbia is 66½ per cent, and the rate in some other province 40 per cent, the only thing the minister can do is to say to the provinces: "We will put ourselves in your hands and pay to our employees any money which they are entitled to receive under your schedules."

Mr. HEENAN: The remarks of my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) have emphasized my argument better than I could have done it myself, because the federal government has a uniform rate of wages or salaries throughout Canada. Customs officers get the same rate; mail clerks get the same wages; mail carriers and preventive officers the same. The difference comes in when they are injured or killed. In the case of a mail clerk in Ontario or Quebec the maximum rate of $111 a month is paid in the event of injury, whereas in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia it is approximately $55 a month. I do not consider that fair or equitable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The cost of living is lower.

Mr. HEENAN: When I was in Nova Scotia the cost of living was high. I may have been living high.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The rate is $68.75 a month.

Mr. HEENAN: Well, a couple of dollars is neither here nor there; I would not argue with my hon. friend about a few cents. It may be lower than my hon. friend thinks.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have the statute right here.

Mr. HEENAN: And I have the amounts before me, so that what the statute says and what the workman gets are two different things. At any rate, I contend that hon. gentlemen who have spoken against my suggestion are only encouraging those provinces that pay a low compensation to maintain that attitude. They are not encouraging their provinces to come up to the level of other parts of the Dominion. I say to the Minister of Railways that if he does not accept the suggestion offered he is only encouraging these several provinces by the sea to continue paying a lower compensation than is paid elsewhere in Canada. The precedent has already been established that inasmuch as Prince Edward Island has no compensation act and no compensation board in the event of a Dominion employee being injured or killed in that province, a referee shall be appointed to award compensation on the basis of compensation paid in New Brunswick. It is very easy to amend this bill to provide that employees of the Dominion government in any part of Canada shall be paid a compensation based on the provisions that obtain in the province of Quebec or of Nova Scotia or of British Columbia. For the information of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), I am not so sure that British Columbia is the highest. If he says the rate there is 66½, in the province of Quebec and in Ontario also it is 66⅔—just a little bit better than even British Columbia. I still think that the minister would be doing a good thing for the public service, and I am sure it would be in accordance with the wishes of the people of Canada, if he provided that federal employees should get equal treatment not only in salaries and wages, but also in the matter of provision to meet disability or accidental death. Their dependents should receive equal treatment. The minister could very well bring in a simple amendment which would provide this equal treatment. I want to say frankly to the minister, I would prefer delaying this measure for a year rather than have the measure go through still maintaining, as it does, this principle of inequality.

The CHAIRMAN: I would remind the committee that it has been discussing clause 2, when in fact we are still on clause 1. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, before the clause carries I have an amendment to suggest to the committee. It will be remembered that I brought up last night the question of compensation to lighthouse keepers' assistants. Possibly I was misled by the glamour of his language and the hon. minister's genial manner, but I got the impression that he was going to give this matter some attention. I have more than glamour to go on, because I find that in speaking upon this matter last night the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) said:

> I think the hon. member's suggestion should be taken into serious consideration.
> Mr. Manion: It will.

Mr. MANION: I mean in the future.

Mr. NEILL: There was no qualification or modification made. Speaking as a minister of the crown he said: "It will." It reminded me of the fateful occasion when a man says: "I will." The hon. minister said it would be taken into consideration, but what do we find? The bill was introduced last night and almost in his opening sentence this afternoon the hon. minister said that he would not accept any amendment unless it were of a technical character. The consideration promised must have been of a very ephemeral character.

I will not waste the time of the committee in rehashing my argument of last night, except to say this: This is an attempt to bring under the act the assistants to lighthouse keepers. Is there any reason why these men, paid the very lowest salary imaginable, should not come within the provisions of this act? In many cases it is the wife or minor child who acts as assistant, and an added salary is paid to the lighthouse keeper himself to include their wage. There is no question about that, one has only to look at the payroll to find that where there is no assistant the keeper receives so much, while in those cases where an assistant is kept the keeper receives a few hundred dollars more per year. When the lighthouse keeper receives an injury in the service of the country he comes under this act, but when his assistant who may be his wife or child—at times it may be an old man who is hired—is injured, no compensation is paid. The government always falls back upon the technicality that such persons is not an employee of the government but is employed by the lighthouse keeper direct.

It would not cause any conflict with any other act if the word "employee" in this section were enlarged to cover these assistants. It might be said that it would conflict with the Civil Service Act but it would not because this particular act contains its own interpretation of the word "employee." Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I beg to move to add a subsection to be known as subsection (c) to read as follows:

> The word "employee" in this section shall include lighthouse keepers' assistants for whose payment allowance is made in the salary paid by the government to the lighthouse keeper.

That would not include a man who might be hired temporarily to chop wood, or for like labour; he must be a man for whom the government has provided a salary wrapped up, so to speak, in the salary paid to the lighthouse keeper.

I know the hon. minister is going to oppose this amendment, but what does he think of a case where a man might be killed —as I mentioned last night, I know of an occasion where a man risked his life and was hurt to save government properties from fire—and yet no compensation is paid. These men are told to go to the lighthouse keeper for their compensation which is impossible. I do not like to think that these men are to be deprived by some technicality from receiving that compensation which the hon. minister admits is the rightful due of all employees of the government.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, in regard to my hon. friend's comment upon my remark of last night, I meant exactly what I said, but I did not mean that this matter would be given consideration between last night and this morning. This matter will be given consideration in the future, as will also the matter brought up by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Heenan).

As the hon. member knows, this question has been thoroughly considered. He has called upon officials of the department; they discussed it with him, he discussed it with them and it has been fairly considered. But apart from that, this amendment introduces into this bill a principle which we cannot adopt. This bill is for the purpose of providing compensation for the employees of the government, and the men and women to whom the hon. member refers are not employees of the government.

Mr. NEILL: They are sub-employees.

Mr. MANION: No, not sub-employees either. They are assistants hired by the lighthouse keepers and they are not paid directly by the government.

The hon. member knows that the proper way to go about this matter is to get the Marine department to appoint an assistant, who would automatically come under the act. I think this is a matter which should be considered by that department, and I have no doubt that it will be.

Mr. NEILL: Has the minister ever attempted to get the Department of Marine to do anything?

Mr. MANION: The hon. member is speaking of the late government; we have not been in power very long and perhaps he will have better success with the present minister.

Mr. NEILL: The system still exists.

Mr. MANION: There is another reason for not allowing this amendment to pass; it is out of order because it would increase the cost of administering this act. The hon. member knows that the rules of the house do not permit of his moving an amendment which would entail the expenditure of government money.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And which would impose an additional burden.

Mr. MANION: This amendment would impose an additional burden inasmuch as it would increase the number of people to whom compensation would be paid, therefore, I submit the amendment is out of order.

Mr. NEILL: Surely the hon. minister is demonstrating the last resource of a lack of logic when he is forced to fall back upon that argument of increasing cost.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a bald fact, that is all.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member propose to speak on the point of order?

Mr. MANION: I brought up the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member (Mr. Heenan) wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr. HEENAN: No.

Mr. NEILL: On the point of order; the matter is trivial, entailing as it does such a small expense. Hardly an amendment is moved in the house that cannot be construed as involving some expense, supposing it is only a question of writing a few letters. The Workmen's Compensation Act in a province as a matter of fact is administered on the basis of the compensation being paid, not by the government at all but by the industry. The industries are classified and each industry pays a percentage of its pay-roll. A very small contribution in the way of medical attendance is made by the employee himself. Therefore, in British Columbia, and probably the other provinces, the compensation due to an injured man is not paid by the government in any sense at all. The same principle is in vogue here, but the government in their wisdom have found it more convenient, instead of paying on the basis of a percentage of their pay-roll, to pay the particular sum, whatever it may be, assessed in each case. This, I imagine, is on the same principle as that on which they do not insure their buildings, preferring, in a broader sense, to carry their own insurance. In that sense, it is not the government that is paying this; it is the industry, so to speak; but they pay it not by a percentage of the pay-roll—which would involve the argument made by the minister—but by a specific sum. This puts the matter in a somewhat different position from what it would be if I were asking the government to spend money directly. This thing might go on for years without involving any payment at all.

While I am on my feet, might I suggest, although I am going away from the point of order, that the minister, if he is determined to defeat this amendment, give an undertaking that a case of that kind will receive favourable consideration as regards compassionate allowances to these very poor people.

Mr. MANION: I do not like hon. members taking the attitude that I am raising a point of order on trivial grounds. After all, the rules of the house are for observance, and if this is out of order, that is the reason I drew it to the attention of the Chair.

In regard to the question of compassionate allowance, the government would certainly take those cases into consideration. Bills are constantly being approved for medical attendance, hospital accounts, and so on in the case of people who have been hurt outside the provisions of the compensation act. The government always takes those compassionate grounds into consideration, and if the hon. member ever brings to my attention a case of that kind I shall be glad to sponsor it if it be a just case.

Mr. NEILL: If the minister says "I will" to that, I shall withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MANION: I will.

Mr. HEENAN: As a last resort I want to make an appeal to my genial friend the Minister of Justice. I have not been able to do very much so far with the Minister of Railways except that I must admit he is willing to take into consideration the suggestions that have been made. I feel sure, if the hon. member for Quebec East were sitting on the other side in the seat of the Minister of Justice, he would listen to my suggestion. I think I can tell by the twinkle in the eye of the present Minister of Justice that he has been very sympathetic to some of the suggestions from this side. I was wondering if the Minister of Railways would not let this bill stand at least until after to-day, in order to allow the Minister of Justice to introduce an amendment along the lines suggested by the Minister of Railways, to provide that in the event of any inequality or discrepancy the government of Canada could pay out of the consolidated revenue fund to the dependents or to the injured workman, sufficient to cover the inequality or discrepancy. I am not a lawyer, but I think I could outline in a very few words an amendment to that effect. That is to say, in a glaring case of inequality or a discrepancy the governor general in council would have power to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund a sufficient amount to make up the difference.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think it would be better to put the matter in the form of an act of parliament rather than to vest discretion in the governor in council for that purpose. The facts and arguments stated by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River are worthy of consideration, but there are great difficulties in the way of carrying them out.

In regard not only to workmen's compensation but to many other questions in connection with the laws of the country, uniformity is very desirable, but we have not yet attained it. Meetings are held from time to time throughout Canada by various responsible bodies whose object is to secure greater uniformity in regard to matters of general public interest, but they have not yet succeeded to any very great extent.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Quite a little.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not to any very marked extent. This is another instance where uniformity may be desirable, but is very difficult to obtain. Different conditions exist in the various provinces. There are different modes of living in the various provinces; there are parts of the Dominion, for instance in the extreme north, where special wages have to be paid on account of living expenses being much higher than they are in other parts. We cannot get complete uniformity. The effort of the Minister of Railways in respect to this legislation is to do just as much as he can under existing conditions, for a class of people who are entitled to some relief. This proposal has gone further than any other proposal that has ever before been introduced in this chamber. It may not yet be a perfect measure. Experience will show its defects more rapidly than anything else. Let us try it out for a year or two. We are all agreed that it is a long step in advance of anything we have had heretofore. Let it have a fair trial, and if defects develop, then let us remedy them; but rather than postponing action let us give the people who are not provided for now a fair chance of getting this compensation.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Compensation to be same as under law of province where accident occurs.

Mr. REID: Paragraph 2 reads:

Provided that the benefits of this act shall apply to an employee on the government railways.—

In Port Mann, British Columbia, the railway employees have an association of their own whereby they pay compensation and sick benefits. Would this in any way conflict with or override that?

Mr. MANION: No. The railway employees are now under the compensation acts of the different provinces. This does not apply to them at all.

Mr. REID: The employees in British Columbia have an association of their own.

Mr. MANION: This would not interfere in any way with that.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is much to be said for having the different readings on different days. Occasionally there are hon. members who desire to speak on a measure who are absent on the second reading. I happen to know that there was one member who wished to speak on this particular bill but who was not able to be present to-day.

Mr. MANION: Next sitting of the house.

NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAYS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 36, respecting Northern Alberta Railways Company.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

PROOF OF FAILURE TO TAKE OUT LICENCE REQUIRED BY LAW

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, to amend the Canada Evidence Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

On section 1—Proof of entries in Dominion books.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The object of this bill is to amend and to extend the operation of section 26 of the Canada Evidence Act. Section 26 now provides:

A copy of any entry in any book kept in any office or department of the government of Canada . . . . shall be received as evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded, if it is proved by the oath or affidavit of an officer of such department—

—that that record is so entered. All that is required is the affidavit of the proper person. The proposal is to amend that, in order to supply a sort of negative proof whereby the negative can be proved as well as the affirmative. A difficulty has arisen in this way: Many departments of the government issue licences, and those licences extend throughout the length and breadth of Canada. Cases arise where persons are carrying on various activities without the proper licence; that is the charge. We can prove the fact of a licence by the affidavit of an officer of the department based on the records in the books of the department, but we are not able to prove that the party charged has no licence unless we send the book and the officer to the court to give evidence at the trial. We have a very large number of cases where the charge is that radios are operated without licence. It is a very expensive and a very difficult thing to have officers of the government travelling from one end of Canada to the other to produce books and prove that the party charged has no licence. Now, it is proposed by this section to allow the officer of the department in charge of the books of the department to make an affidavit that the party charged has no licence according to the records of the department, and that affidavit shall be received in the court only as prima facie evidence of the fact; it can be rebutted; but it is prima facie evidence that the man charged has not a licence. That is all that is sought by this amendment. We are able to prove the licence now by an affidavit, and we desire to prove the fact that there is no licence through a similar affidavit, and thereby save a great deal of expense to the country and a great deal of trouble to the officials.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this bill, indeed I think it is an improvement, but I want to make the same complaint as I did yesterday on a bill introduced by the Secretary of State (Mr.

Cahan), that there is no explanatory note. My friend the Secretary of State yesterday said there was no rule requiring such explanatory notes. I desire to refer my hon. friend to the rule. It will be found at page 348 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. It was adopted on June 14, 1923. Not only should there be an explanatory note, but the whole section should be printed as amended by the bill which is being considered, and then the new words inserted must be put within brackets. This rule is peremptory, and it is a great help to members of the house in considering a bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was quite aware of the rule, Mr. Chairman. I noticed the omission, but this proposed subsection 2 is all new.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But I think the printing of the whole section would have helped members to understand the change.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sorry for the omission and will bring it to the attention of the official in charge of these matters.

TICKET OF LEAVE ACT

ADMINISTRATION BY SOLICITOR GENERAL OR OTHER MEMBER OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 11, to amend the Ticket of Leave Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Administration.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I see the same omission in regard to this bill; the explanatory note has been omitted for some reason, and I shall call the attention of the official in charge of these matters to the omission.

This is a very simple amendment. Under the Ticket of Leave Act, section 2, it is provided:

> It shall be the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise the Governor General upon all matters connected with or affecting the administration of this act.

For a good many years in practice this work has been done very largely by the Solicitor General. During the war while the War Measures Act was in force, and while I happened to be Solicitor General, an order in council was passed under the authority of that act, transferring the administration of the Ticket of Leave Act to the Solicitor General. In 1920, I think it was, the War Measures Act came to an end. The practice has been continued more or less to allow the Solicitor General to make recommendations in regard to the cases coming under the Ticket of Leave Act. This amendment is proposed merely for the purpose of making it definite and legal that the Solicitor General may continue to do so in future. The provision of the bill now before the committee is:

> It shall be the duty of the Minister of Justice, or of such other member of the government as may be designated by the governor in council, to advise the Governor General upon all matters connected with or affecting the administration of this act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Could not this be done under the statute to authorize rearrangement and transfer of duties in the public service? There is a statute which authorizes the governor in council to transfer duties which devolve on one minister of the crown to another minister, and I know that so far as the late Solicitor General, Mr. Cannon, was concerned it was done by order in council under that statute, which is chapter 165 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. Has my hon. friend considered that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And he came to the conclusion that it was better to take this course?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. I may say that the officers of the Department of Justice considered it and I joined with them. The difficulty is that the Solicitor General is not a minister of the crown, he is an officer of the Department of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Quite so, and I realize that as Solicitor General he could not do so; but in the case of Mr. Cannon he was a minister of the crown, as is also the present incumbent of the office.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We might have done it for the present Solicitor General, but this course was taken in order to make it clear that the duties could be transferred to any minister who happened to be a member of the government. As proposed now, any minister may be designated for the purpose. The present Solicitor General is a privy councillor; he is not what is known as a minister without portfolio, and the question has arisen as to whether he can be properly designated as a minister of the crown though he may be a member of the privy council. The privy council, of course, consists of a great many people who are not in the cabinet. The Solicitor General is in the cabinet, but in order to make the matter clear this amendment is suggested.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But is the point made clear in the amendment proposed by my hon. friend? The amendment says:

. . . . or of such other member of the government as may be designated by the governor in council.

Is the Solicitor General a member of the government?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is a member of the government, but whether he can be fairly called a minister of the crown is one of the questions as to which there may be some debate. At any rate, the law officers of the Department of Justice directed my attention to the matter and I thought a simple act would put the matter straight and avoid any conflict in the future.

SALARIES ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION FOR INCREASE OF SALARY OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 38, to amend the Salaries Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Salary of Solicitor General.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Last evening the Minister of Justice drew attention to the fact that the previous administration had, by naming him in the estimates, voted an additional amount for the Solicitor General in order to bring his salary up to the figure now suggested in this amendment. I mentioned at the time that the previous administration had sought to reduce the number of portfolios rather than to increase them, and I was going to direct the attention of my hon. friend and also that of the Prime Minister, to the fact that one reason amongst others the amount was voted in that way by the previous administration was to avoid the necessity of creating an additional portfolio. It was contemplated that the then Solicitor General would, in due course be given a portfolio in the administration, and it was the intention of the then administration at a convenient date to combine the offices of Solicitor General and Minister of Justice. It was felt that so long as the Solicitor General was in the cabinet as a member of the Privy Council he should receive the same salary as a cabinet minister, but it was not contemplated to perpetuate the office of Solicitor General as a separate ministerial office in the cabinet.

I mention the matter at the moment because this would seem to be an opportune time for some reduction in the number of ministers. I should be very sorry to see the position of the present Solicitor General affected in any way, but by continuing the former method of making payment of the difference in salary the government would not be committing itself as it seems to me it now is to increasing the number of portfolios but would leave the way open at an appropriate time to a reduction, in the manner indicated.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There may be great force in what the right hon. leader of the opposition has just said, but I have a very distinct recollection of what happened when the salary of the previous Solicitor General was increased and I think my right hon. friend will remember it if I recall it to his memory. He consulted me at the time; I happened to be leader of the opposition during 1927, and he pointed out to me that the Solicitor General was going to take a great many government briefs in the supreme court and before the privy council, which would entail an enormous amount of work and save the country an enormous amount of money. I agreed, and there was not a thought or suggestion of anything else in my mind. I approved of the proposal, and I know the former Solicitor General did a tremendous amount of work in the courts and saved the country a very large sum of money. I assume the present Solicitor General will do the same thing.

That was the only reason put to me when the increase was made. I cannot add anything to what was said by the right hon. Prime Minister last night in reply to my right hon. friend with regard to the number of cabinet portfolios. I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of a reduction, but it is not the easiest thing to bring about and I do not know that I am in a position usefully to discuss the question. It is a matter for the Prime Minister himself to consider. What my right hon. friend has said just now certainly will be brought to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The former Solicitor General was made a member of the government a couple of years, I believe, after he was appointed Solicitor General, and it was only after he became a member of the government that his salary was increased to the amount which is paid all the other members of the government, and I think properly so. The same thing would apply to the present Solicitor General, who also has been made a member of the government, and my pride certainly would not be great if the minister who represents the district of Quebec in the government was not a full member of that government. He is a full member, and as long as he has to attend all the meetings of council and act as other members of the government act, I am inclined to think he should be paid this salary.

I do think, however, that the other method was preferable. The former Solicitor General was paid the increase through an estimate every year, and I think this should be done as long as the Solicitor General is a member of the government. Under this bill, however, the Solicitor General will be paid, as such, the same ministerial salary received by other ministers, while he may be absolutely outside the cabinet and not have to attend meetings of council or come to Ottawa or be put to the same expense and the same loss of time as the other ministers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But might he not be of much greater use?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a matter of opinion; my hon. friend is entitled to his own view on the point. But as the condition will be when this bill becomes law, the Solicitor General, though not a member of the government, will be virtually a minister so far as salary is concerned. I do not really object to the bill, although I do not consider it an improvement. He might have been paid the salary by an item in the estimates so long as he remained a member of the government.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) knows that the duties now cast upon the Solicitor General are very serious, and he will in the future save the country an enormous amount of money over what has been previously paid by taking important cases for which in former days the government has had to pay heavy counsel fees to other lawyers. In the future, as in the past, we may have to employ a certain number of lawyers outside the department, but so far as we can we will utilize the services of those who are now in the department. Apart altogether from that question, however, the burden cast upon the Solicitor General to-day in respect of the Ticket of Leave Act is becoming a heavy one. There are four thousand applications a year for clemency and they have all to be carefully considered in order that the applicants may be fairly treated. It takes a great deal of the time of the Solicitor General, of the Minister of Justice, and of a considerable staff to attend to the applications of four thousand prisoners annually for relief under the Ticket of Leave Act. So that the office is by no means the sinecure it may have been in early days, and the salary of $10,000 is little enough for any man who has the capacity to be Solicitor General of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Minister of Justice has referred to conversations between himself and myself at the time it was decided to have the extra amount voted in the manner in which it has been voted. I rise just to say that his recollection is entirely correct and I am pleased that he has made mention of the circumstance. It confirms also what I have just said, that it was thought preferable to vote the additional amount to the then Solicitor General by name, because it was recognized that as an individual he possessed unusually high legal attainments and qualifications for the special class of professional service to which my hon. friend has just referred, namely, taking government briefs in the Supreme Court and before the Privy Council. But the reason that the step which is now being taken was not taken at that time was that it was by no means certain that there would always be available for the position of solicitor general an hon. member possessing like qualifications, and that for this or some other reason it might become advisable to return to the practice which had formerly existed when the solicitor general was not a member of the government. What was really contemplated at the close was that the two legal departments would be combined in one namely that of the Ministry of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Has the question been considered at all of making the Solicitor General, by legislation, a member of the government? As it is, we seem to consider money the only important thing. The solicitor general is not a member of the government by statute. We give him a salary, and that is very important indeed. But I am sure his pride would be better satisfied if, in addition to the salary, ministerial standing were added to the office.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is now a member of the government and a privy councillor.

Mr. LAPOINTE: By order in council.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But he is not a minister of any department of the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He is now a member of the government because there is a special order in council making him so. But he is not a member by statute.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not by statute, no.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Maloney in the chair.

Public buildings — Nova Scotia — Halifax naval establishment—new buildings, $30,000.

Mr. DUFF: Before we deal specifically with this item which has been called I should like for a few moments to discuss the matter of compiling the estimates. You will notice, Mr. Chairman, that every year the government lays on the table of the house what is known as the main estimates. This year, as usual, we have to consider a great many items contained in the blue book entitled, "Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932". These estimates in detail will be found from page 6 to page 108 of this book. As I say, these are known as the main estimates. On page 4 of these estimates a summary is given showing the totals of the various services, to the number of forty-two. On this page are also shown the increases and decreases as they may appear in different votes. I would call the attention of the committee to a mistake which has been made, not only in these estimates but also in the estimates for past years. I am not criticizing this government any more than I am criticizing the late Liberal government or other governments which were in power before 1922. I do not know what department is responsible for the compiling of these estimates, but I think I am justified in calling the attention of the committee to the fact that the columns are not made up properly.

For instance, on page 4 there will be found a column headed "To be voted 1931-32". The second column on that page is headed "Authorized by statute 1931-32," and the third column is supposed to give the total for 1931-32. However, these are not the total estimates for the whole year but rather the total amount of main estimates as compiled and shown in the various items from page 6 to the end of the book. The next column shows the total for 1930-1931 and is given for purposes of comparison.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

But what do we find? We find not only in these estimates but in the estimates of previous years that these particular columns are not the totals of the main estimates at all; they are all the estimates for the year and consequently, when carried out to show either increases or decreases the public is not provided with the proper information. When these estimates were tabled a few days ago by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) the following morning the newspapers all over the country came out with the information that there was a difference in these estimates as compared with the estimates of last year amounting to $37,327,754.72. I understand why the newspapers made that mistake because they took the figures as shown in this book. However, if hon. members will glance at the book published the previous year, taking the amount of the main estimates there shown, they will find that the main estimates were not as shown for this year, $423,722,163.35, but $399,358,101.87. I do not object to the department responsible for the publishing of these estimates showing the total estimates for the year including all supplementary estimates for the year previous and for this year, but if the comparison is to be correct, and if the public is to have the truth, then I say it is not right to show, as is shown in this book, that the estimates are some $24,000,000 more than they should be.

What are the real facts? Instead of showing a decrease of $37,327,754, the actual decrease in the main estimates of 1932 as compared with the estimates of 1931 amounted to only $12,963,693.

I am glad the right hon. the Prime Minister, who is also the Minister of Finance, is in his seat because I desire to ask that these estimates be compiled properly in the future. The public should be given the proper figures with regard to all the estimates.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, would it not be better to have the column headed "Total vote of 1930-31"?

Mr. DUFF: No, that would not be quite fair, because, as I said, an increase or decrease, as the case may be, is shown in the other column and it is not fair to show a decrease in the main estimates by the subtracting of the main estimates of this year from the total estimates of last year. For instance, not only do these figures include the main estimates of 1931 but they include also the supplementary estimates passed by the Liberal government before the house dissolved last year, as well as the seven million dollars voted about three weeks ago. If the total estimates for the previous year including the supplementary estimates were shown for comparison with the total estimates of this year, that would be proper accounting. The present book shows the total estimates for the year as compared to the main estimates of the previous year, or the total estimates of last year compared with the main estimates of this year, and consequently that does not give a fair comparison.

This matter should be brought to the attention of the government for reference to the statistical department or whatever department compiles this blue book, so that a change can be made in the blue book for next year and the following years. As I said before, I am not criticizing this government because the same thing has occurred for twenty years. Instead of a reduction of $37,000,000 being shown, comparing this year with last year, the proper figure of $12,963,693 should be shown.

Mr. GEARY: If there were no supplementary estimates then it would be correct.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As my hon. friend knows, the estimates are prepared and submitted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Bennett) and the same course has been adopted this year as was followed in previous years. My hon. friend is assuming that there are to be supplementary estimates presented to the house which would change the total, but up to the present moment, and upon the information which we have in the estimates submitted to the house, the statement is absolutely correct.

Mr. DUFF: No, I do not agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: I would say to my hon. friend that the form of the estimates is largely if not wholly determined by an official known as the estimate clerk in the Department of Finance. This gentleman has been in the department for some years and he follows a practice which, as the hon. gentleman has said, has been in vogue for years. I think this blue book indicates correctly what it undertakes to indicate, and the public accounts disclose clearly the exact expenditures in each year. The word "revote" in the estimates indicates that an expenditure authorized has not all been made and that a portion of the money in the estimates of another year which is unexpended is being revoted. There is no question that the figures in the estimates showing the expenditures of the past year include the supplementary as well as the main estimates and that the comparison would be complete when the supplementary estimates for this year have been tabled. The reduction of $37,000,000 is correct when the comparison is made as against the expenditures authorized last year, that is, the year ended March 31, 1931. It may well be that that sum will be reduced by supplementary estimates to be tabled later on and to that extent the amount indicated will be lessened, but there has been no change in the usual custom and this blue book correctly informs the house of the facts as they exist at the moment subject to the variations which may take place if supplementary estimates are tabled for a post office in Lisgar and other matters of that kind.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I hope the Prime Minister will not forget Dominion City. An amount of money was voted last year, but I do not see any revote in this year's estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I thought the hon. member would say.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the amount of $423,722,163.35 under the heading "total 1930-31" includes the $7,000,000 of supplementary estimates that were voted at the beginning of this session.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Three weeks ago we voted $2,000,000 for the Welland canal. If you take the amount under the heading "XIV, Railways and Canals—capital", you will find that last year the total shown is $18,279,500, whereas if you take the previous vote, you will find that the amount voted in the main estimates was $16,279,500, so that the $2,000,000 voted as supplementaries a few weeks ago is included. The same thing applies to nearly every item. My point is that to make a fair comparison we should put the main estimates for 1932 in one column and the main estimates for the year 1931 in another column. What should be done in the case of the main estimates at present before the committee is to have one column read "Main Estimates for 1930-31" and the second column read "Main Estimates for 1931-32". For instance, we can make up a true statement of all the estimates for both years now because three weeks ago we voted an additional $7,000,000 in supplementary estimates. These, however, are included in the gross totals shown in the blue book of estimates in order to indicate a greater decrease and to try to show a saving or reduction in the estimates of $37,000,000. The real saving so far as the main estimates are concerned is not $37,000,000 but $12,000,000. I cannot agree with the Minister of Public Works, because these figures are incorrect and

I certainly think it is in the interests of the country that a true statement should be given to the public. To make a proper comparison we must consider matters on their merits. We should compare this year's main estimates with the main estimates of last year, and when the supplementaries are brought down, we can compare the total both main and supplementary with those of last year. I think the Minister of Public Works practically said that this was the only estimate to be voted this year, and if so the comparison will be correct.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not say that.

Mr. DUFF: Just this afternoon we put through legislation which, according to the Minister of Railways, will involve an expenditure of $70,000. How are we to provide that money? What about old age pensions? I notice, according to the estimates, there is only $3,000,000 appropriated for the Welland canal. Last year the late government voted $7,600,000. Do you mean to tell me that the hon. member for Lincoln, with all the unemployment there is in the country, will be satisfied with a vote of $3,000,000 for the Welland canal? It is silly and idle for anybody to say here that all the estimates are before us at this moment. There are bound to be supplementary estimates, and members from Nova Scotia, both Conservatives and Liberals, are going to see that we have more public works provided for that province.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. member has put up a straw man and then knocked him down. I did not assert that there would not be any supplementary estimates.

Mr. DUFF: What did the minister say?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend must be assuming there will not be any.

Mr. DUFF: No. Hansard will bear out my statement. The minister practically said that these estimates were correct because they were all the estimates and there were not going to be any supplementaries.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All the estimates up to now.

Mr. DUFF: Unless they are changed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In regard to the item of $30,000 for new buildings for the Halifax naval establishment, this is to provide for the construction of a seamanship instructional building as requested by the Department of National Defence. It is a revote.

[Mr. Duff.]

Mr. VENIOT: If I understand aright, this amount was voted last year and not spent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is right.

Mr. VENIOT: Now the department is going to proceed with the work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: Why was the money not expended last year when there was so much unemployment in Halifax?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A very large program of work was on hand last year, and the plans and all the details were not completed in time to have the work undertaken during that period. There was also some reconsideration of the work and an outside architect was engaged to prepare plans. He was taken ill and did not get them ready in time to have the work completed last year.

Mr. VENIOT: Another outside architect could have been engaged.

Mr. DUFF: The total estimates for public buildings for Nova Scotia this year is $261,000. Last year, under the late government, $302,000 was voted in the main estimates. How much of that sum was spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend could ascertain that by just taking the total of the revotes this year and subtracting it. I have not done that.

Mr. DUFF: Will my hon. friend do that for me? If he likes I shall send a pencil across to him. He is the minister. I am asking him a question.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall try to get the information.

Mr. DUFF: If the minister wants his estimates passed he will have to answer questions when we ask them. I remember in 1921 we kept one minister from nine o'clock one night until two o'clock the following night because he refused to answer questions. If the minister wants a dose of that medicine we are willing to give it to him.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to assure my hon. friend at the outset that I am prepared to answer any questions and to give all information that is available. I did not intend to be discourteous to him. I have since ascertained that the amount is $141,500.

Mr. DUFF: Not spent, or spent?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Spent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount of $10,000 is required by the Department of Health for general improvements to the Halifax quarantine station.

Item agreed to.

Middleton—public building—under contract, $34,000.

Mr. DUFF: When was this contract awarded and who is the contractor?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount is required for the erection of a public building at the corner of Main and School streets in Middleton. The work is being performed under contract by the Gates Contracting Company, Limited, of Kentville, for the sum of $31,166.

Mr. DUFF: Were there any other tenderers?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, there were four tenderers in all, as follows:

Gates Contracting Company Limited, Kentville, $31,166.
James N. Kenney, Truro, $32,435.
Rhodes Curry Limited, Amherst, $36,500.
M. C. Denton, Digby, $41,349.

The contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer on January 30, 1931.

Mr. GARDINER: What is this public building to be used for?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): For a post office.

Item agreed to.

Shubenacadie—public building, $21,000.

Mr. DUFF: Has the contract been awarded for this building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the contract has not yet been awarded. There were ten tenderers.

Mr. DUFF: I suppose it would not be in the public interest to give the names if the contract has not been awarded.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no objection because I am of the opinion that the contract has been sent down for signature. The tenderers were:

W. Rod. McDonald, $15,124.90.
James N. Kennedy, $18,800.
M. A. Condon & Son, $19,890.
Henry J. Phillips, $19,948.
J. K. Hunter, $19,992.
Rhodes Curry Limited, $21,392.
Gates Contracting Company Limited, $21,800.
The Miller Construction Co. Ltd., $21,800.
D. K. Macaulay, $22,255.
Redden Bros., $24,700.

I recall that the lowest tenderer asked for leave to withdraw his tender, which was refused. Ultimately he wrote stating that he would accept and carry out the contract; so I presume the contract has been awarded.

Item agreed to.

THE BURRARD INLET TUNNEL AND BRIDGE COMPANY

Mr. A. E. MUNN (North Vancouver) moved the second reading of Bill No. 31 respecting the Burrard Inlet and Bridge Company.

He said: I might, Mr. Speaker, offer an explanation with reference to this bill. The special validating act which I have the honour to present to this house affects not only the city of Vancouver, but all the towns and municipalities tributary to the city of Vancouver; but it affects the city and district of North Vancouver perhaps more seriously than any other part of British Columbia, and since I have the honour to represent North Vancouver in this house, it was thought proper that I should present the bill for ratification.

On May 4, 1910, the parliament of Canada by special act gave the Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company the power to build a bridge across the second narrows of Burrard Inlet, British Columbia. Under this special act the plans of a bridge were approved by order in council and by the Board of Railway Commissioners after investigation and report by a royal commission of government engineers.

After fifteen years of effort the second narrows bridge was completed in 1925 with public moneys at a cost of $2,000,000. The Dominion government contributed $269,000, the British Columbia government $120,000, and the cities of greater Vancouver and the tributary municipalities the remainder.

The Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company is owned by the city of Vancouver, the city of North Vancouver, the district of North Vancouver and the district of West Vancouver.

Between November, 1925, and September, 1930, over ten million people and four and a half million vehicles used this bridge. In 1926 the traffic between the north and south shores of the harbour was trebled and has continued to increase each succeeding year.

The legality of the construction of the second narrows bridge was attacked in the admiralty court in September, 1928. Mr. Justice Martin gave judgment that the bridge was properly and legally constructed. Appeal was made to the exchequer court of Canada in October, 1929. The president of the exchequer court of Canada confirmed the decision of the admiralty court. A further appeal was made to the privy council in London, England, which has decided the special act of 1910 did not give sufficient power to build a bridge that in any way interferes with navigation. Therefore this privy council decision in effect says: When the parliament of Canada gave the power to build a bridge, it never intended a bridge to be built!

Five years of progressive development have now been cut off suddenly. It is within the power of the parliament of Canada to restore it and to stand behind the orders of the governor in council and of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the expert professional opinion of its own departmental engineers. Therefore this validating act for the second narrows bridge is now being placed before parliament this session.

The approval of parliament is asked on these grounds: First, that the bridge was built in good faith, with public money, by Canadian citizens; second, that it was built with the approval of all the Canadian authorities required by law; third, that it will prevent a great waste of public moneys, and finally that it will rectify what otherwise would be a gross injustice to western Canada resulting solely from ambiguity in the wording of an act of the parliament of Canada.

A detailed history of this bridge and all facts regarding it have been sent to the Minister of Marine, the Minister of Public Works and the right hon. Prime Minister. I also have a copy which is available to each hon. member for perusal. I also had the honour to present to this house the following petition:

To the Honourable
The House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada in parliament assembled

The petition of citizens of municipalities bordering on Burrard inlet in the province of British Columbia and all municipalities so bordering as signatories hereunder humbly pray:

That your honourable house may be pleased to pass an act validating the railroad and traffic bridge constructed by the Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company in accordance with plans approved by the governor in council and the board of railway commissioners.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

Dated at the city of Vancouver in the province of British Columbia the 28th day of February, 1931.

This petition has been largely signed by the people of greater Vancouver and districts. For instance, there are the endorsements and signatures of four cities representing 300,000 people; official signatures of business firms representing 45,000 people; labour unions, associations and organizations representing 22,715 and letters of endorsement from organizations representing 2,500 people. Endorsements by the corporation of the city of Vancouver and adjoining cities and municipalities have recently been forwarded to this government. I will just refer to one, the endorsement of the West Vancouver municipal council, dated April 1, which reads as follows:

West Vancouver municipal council urge every effort be made to hasten solution of problem of Burrard inlet crossing. Loss of second narrows bridge costs municipalities interested two hundred thousand dollars per annum and personal inconvenience to five and one-half million people crossing by bridge and ferries resulting in serious loss to business connections on both shores.

J. B. Leyland,
Reeve.

In support of this representation from the municipality of West Vancouver, I wish to quote an editorial which appeared in the Vancouver Province of April 6, 1931. It says:

An Appeal To Ottawa

The municipal council of West Vancouver has sent an urgent telegram to the Dominion government about the problem of the second narrows bridge. The council wants the government to hasten its decision, and to announce its policy at the earliest possible moment. The council recites the facts that the desuetude of the bridge has cost the north shore municipalities $200,000, and is causing daily inconvenience to the people who cross the inlet, at the rate of five and a half millions a year. We hasten to join our own appeal in this matter with that of the council's, and we are sure that therein we express the public opinion of greater Vancouver.

It is now six months or more since a log barge knocked down and sank one of the southern spans of the bridge, and put the whole structure out of commission. Since then there has been the decision of the privy council, declaring the bridge to be illegal and a menace to the navigation of the upper harbour. Since then, also, the Department of Marine has conducted its inquiry in this city, and has rendered its report to the government. We do not know what the exact loss has been to the north shore communities, but we should think the West Vancouver council's estimate of $200,000 must be moderate to the point of under-statement. As to the resulting inconvenience, it is the sober truth to say that the loss of the bridge cannot be described in those terms. It is much more than mere inconvenience for all the people of greater Vancouver; for the communities of the north shore it has proved a veritable disaster.

In the strongest possible terms, we desire to urge upon the Dominion government the necessity for a decision about the inlet crossing at the earliest moment, and one helpful to the clear necessities of the case. The government's responsibility is not merely the legal one which derives from its sanction for the building of the existing structure, but it is also the practical one that nothing can be done by way of relief to the present intolerable situation except with the government's consent and help.

Ottawa is not less obligated to assist in the speedy resumption of the interrupted communications between the north and south shores of Vancouver harbour than it is to protect the navigation of the harbour. It is not too much to say that this entire community has suffered far more from the loss of the second narrows bridge in the last six months than it could possibly suffer from any probable hindrance, by reason of any bridge at all, to the navigation of the upper inlet. This is not to say that the interests of navigation should be neglected, but it is to say that the interests of communication are even more important.

I wish to call the attention of hon. members of this house to one of the many requests received from greater Vancouver, which reads as follows:

Request your consideration and support for parliamentary measure validating present second narrows bridge. Many industries north shore Burrard inlet seriously affected. Several shut down completely. Present ferry system hopelessly inadequate for industry representing sixty-two companies and several millions capital seriously handicapped in transportation to north shore. Solicit your influence in procuring speedy relief. Situation urgent. Population leaving. Unemployment aggravated.

I might say to hon. members that there is a ferry system across Burrard inlet, connecting Vancouver city with North Vancouver, which is totally inadequate to take care of the traffic, although over $80,000 has been spent to improve it and an all-night service instituted to try to meet the situation. A few figures to show the importance of the bridge may be interesting. From 1926 to 1930, some 10,535,932 persons, 4,305,857 vehicles, 2,515 trains and 33,141 railway cars crossed the bridge. As many as 10,000 motor cars have crossed in a single day.

Traffic cannot be restored or efforts made to finance the repairs until the construction of the bridge is validated. An asset of about $2,000,000 lies idle, industries are crippled, with many shut down, and three municipalities are financially endangered through loss of revenue and payment of bond guarantees. Even if improvements to navigation are later required it is vital to North Vancouver and important to Vancouver that traffic be restored as speedily as possible. With proper regulations now drafted for control of shipping, a similar accident need not occur. Failure to validate now must lead to serious unemployment, heavy loss to industry and possibly bankruptcy of the north shore municipalities. I am thoroughly familiar with the situation, Mr. Speaker, and while there have been some accidents in connection with the shipping I can say without fear of contradiction that if there had been proper pilots working under proper regulations there would have been no interruptions to navigation at all. Hundreds of millions feet of logs have been towed up the inlet, perhaps at a cost of a few cents more, but as I said before with proper pilotage and regulations these accidents need not happen. I think with the cooperation of the harbour commission, if this validating act gets through we can have those repairs carried out in a short time and the bridge put in commission so that it can be used until such time as something better can be provided.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Certain telegrams have been sent to me with respect to this bill, which is designed to validate certain matters. It is requested that the validation be made subject to any existing claims, which is not an unreasonable thing with respect to legislation of that character. I assume there will be no difficulty in the committee considering, when the time comes, whatever suggestions may be made, by the representatives of those affected, before the proper committee to which the bill will be referred. I have been asked merely to mention that on the second reading of the bill, which I now do.

Mr. MUNN: It was not the intention to have it made retroactive by any means.

Mr. BARBER: As the bill stands at present, and in view of the fact that there are a number of industries located on the north arm situated in my riding that consider this a menace to shipping, I am opposed to the reconstruction of this bridge along the same lines. I will reserve any objection I have to offer until the bill is in committee. I understand that one of the departments of the government has made an investigation into the matter and I was wondering whether it would not be possible to have the report of that commission before the private bills committee when the subject is being considered. I believe it has been in the hands of the Marine department.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Munn moves, seconded by Mr. Reid, that the bill be referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. MUNN: Seconded by Mr. Mackenzie of Vancouver Centre, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEVENS: He is not in his seat. The motion cannot be seconded by a member not in his seat.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

WILFLEY PATENT

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma) for Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. 20, respecting a certain patent of A. R. Wilfley & Sons, Incorporated.

Mr. GARDINER: Explain.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the patent?

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): If any explanation is required, Mr. Speaker, the matter will have to stand. I cannot explain it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The second reading has already been declared carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

SUPERIOR CRIMINAL COURTS AND ORDER OF ADDRESSES TO JURY

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny) moved the second reading of Bill No. 7, to amend the criminal code.

He said: The object of this bill, which is very brief, is to provide that in cases tried before a jury the defence shall address the jury after the crown has done so. As the law stands to-day, unless the defence brings forward no witnesses it must address the jury first. The object of my bill is that, whether the defence produces witnesses or not, it shall speak after the crown attorney has addressed the jury. Without being in any way derogatory of British criminal practice as we have it to-day, I think it is only fair that a man should know just how to defend himself after he has heard the accusation against him. I have received letters from all parts of Canada commending the bill. I do not wish to comment unduly upon the administration of justice. As the law stands to-day, the defence addresses the jury, being followed by the crown prosecutor, and after that the judge delivers his charge. It will thus be seen that the defence has no rebuttal to offer to the address on the part of the crown attorney and the charge from the judge.

The second point in the bill is this. In his charge to the jury, I propose that the judge should be allowed to comment only upon law and not upon the facts. The jury is the master of the facts, as we all know, and there is no necessity, after the evidence has been heard, for the judge to comment upon those facts. The necessity for this amendment is demonstrated by the fact that in the province of Quebec in the last ten years about forty verdicts in criminal cases have been quashed for the reason that, in his comments to the jury, the presiding judge has gone, I will not say far, but altogether too far in discussing the facts. The theory is that if the judge comments upon the facts he shall expose both sides of the case. Unfortunately, however, it frequently happens that the moment a man appears in the dock, instead of being presumed innocent, he is presumed to be guilty, from the very fact of his appearance there on a criminal indictment, and he must prove himself innocent. Too often the presiding judge has forgotten to bring before the jury the facts in favour of the defence. The object of the bill, as I have said, is that the jury, having heard the evidence, shall alone consider the facts. They know them as well as the judge does; and an exposition of the law in the case is sufficient from the judge.

Prior to confederation the judges of the court of sessions of the peace in Quebec were permitted to preside at jury trials in the criminal assizes, and this bill is to permit a reversion to that system. Our civil judges are too busy and it is out of their province to preside at criminal trials. Civil law is different from criminal law and the judges of the sessions of the peace are deciding at all times questions of law in non-jury trials.

I have received many letters of recommendation for this bill from lawyers in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, as well as from the west and the lower provinces. My long experience in criminal work leads me to believe that this bill is necessary. I might state that the only objections against the bill have been raised by attorneys in the province of Quebec.

I trust that this information will be sufficient for the house to gain an understanding of the purposes of this bill.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am entirely opposed to this bill. It is not advisable that the judges of the sessions of the peace in the province of Quebec should be constituted superior courts with criminal jurisdiction. They have a certain criminal jurisdiction, and it is my firm conviction that their existing jurisdiction cannot be enlarged at the present time with advantage to or so as to conserve the public interest.

Section 2 of the bill would bring about a complete reversal of the procedure which has obtained in the criminal courts of England and this country from very early times. Hardships may arise under the present procedure, but I think they would be infinitely increased if that procedure were reversed. I think it is of the utmost advantage that a judge should be allowed to comment to the jury on the facts of the case. He has followed the case and he is in a position to present to the jury in clear, definite and logical sequence the facts elicited in the evidence. Within the limitations imposed by our present rules I think he should be permitted to comment upon the facts in order that the jury may be assisted in giving the proper weight to the facts which have been adduced in evidence before them.

Mr. LAVERGNE: My hon. friend, who has a large practice, knows that within the last ten years the decisions in nearly twenty murder trials in the province of Quebec have been quashed because of the comments on the facts made by the trial judges.

Mr. CAHAN: I remember one case in particular where I resented the comments upon the facts which the judge made to the jury. I thought he went to the extreme in the use of most extravagant language and I bitterly resented it, and I resent it to this day; but I still think there should be no change in the procedure of permitting a logical summing up of the facts by a fair minded judge who knows the rules of evidence and who can assist the jury in determining the weight of the evidence. It is of great assistance to the jury and is a valued help in the proper administration of criminal law.

Sometimes an incompetent judge is appointed, but in recent years in the province of Quebec, especially in connection with the Court of King's Bench at Montreal, it has been the custom to delegate certain judges who have had experience in the administration of criminal law to preside at such trials. After all, the competent judge is a sure safeguard for the accused and he should not be deprived of any powers which he now has in directing the ordinary processes of the court. He should be permitted to give a logical summary of the facts and thus assist the jury in coming to a proper determination. I am absolutely opposed to this bill.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer I am entirely in favour of this bill. As explained by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) I think it deserving of the consideration of the house. The Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) objects to the bill because he claims that a judge should be allowed to summarize the facts for the benefit of the jury. As I understand the bill, it would not prevent a judge from explaining to the jury, shall I say in a nutshell, the facts as presented to the court by the witnesses; the judge will always be allowed to do that, but he would not be permitted to comment on the facts. The twelve jurymen are there as judges and are able to come to a conclusion; if they are not, then trial by jury should exist no longer.

I believe it to be a good idea that the order of the presentation of the facts to the jury by counsel be changed. Very often the defence makes its plea to the jury and then the case is adjourned; the next day the crown prosecutor presents his case to the jury, and then follows the charge of the judge. The jury, being human beings and not accustomed to the proceedings, are bound to obtain a wrong impression which is not fair to the accused who, as was so well stated by the hon. member for Montmagny, is innocent in the eyes of the law until proven guilty. I am entirely in favour of the bill.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a change so drastic as that proposed in this bill should not be made unless it is so strongly supported by public opinion as to make it almost impossible for hon. members to vote against it. For centuries almost, the administration of criminal law in the British Empire—not only in England, but in our own Dominion—has proceeded along the line now sought to be changed by the provisions of this bill. The prosecuting or crown attorney is not a partisan; he is not one whose sole object is to secure a conviction. It is well understood that the function of a crown attorney is to bring out the facts as dispassionately and clearly as he may with perfect justice to the accused as well as to the crown. The system may have broken down in individual cases, but in the vast majority of cases it stands good to-day. Under the practice as it at present exists, the accused has his chance, which is a very good one. If the crown is to be placed in the position of having last minute appeals to passion and prejudice decide the case; if the jury are to be left open to appeals that may have little to do with the facts or the law of the case, the administration of criminal law may be more likely to go wrong than it is under the present system. We might have a crown attorney who misjudged his duty, but I repeat that in the great majority of cases the administration by the crown in regard to criminal offences is marked by fairness.

As to the other point, the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) has perhaps indicated the weakness of his own argument. He interrupted the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) to say that in some twenty cases of trials for murder in the province of Quebec, the convictions had been upset by reason of misdirection on the part of the judge. An appeal on that ground is the safeguard that obtains everywhere and a very good safeguard it is. A judge has to be very careful in his direction, not to misdirect in any respect. Appeals may be taken to the courts where they are heard promptly, and so far as my knowledge goes—not that I have had any great practice in criminal law—such appeals are invariably considered with every regard for the interests of the accused. I cannot say that in my province we experience any miscarriage of justice by reason of the matters to which attention is called and amendment asked for in this bill. It seems to me that it would be going against the result of experience of administration of criminal law in the empire for many years to put through this proposed amendment; we would be doing it without sufficient evidence that the law should be changed, and for my part, I think that in criminal cases, as it is in civil cases, it must be of the greatest assistance to the jury to have from a judge whose business it is to know evidence and the proper way of giving it, not merely a summing up but a comment on the evidence as it is adduced. Moreover, if you have in the criminal code a clause such as that which is proposed in this bill, I doubt where we would ever draw the line between mentioning fact and commenting on it, and a judge in his direction to the jury, if he touches on a question of law, must invariably touch on the question of fact. If he is forbidden to comment on the facts, I doubt if he could ever direct a jury so that his direction would be found satisfactory by the appeal court, although he tried most carefully to avoid anything that might be called comment. I do not know the experience of the hon. member for Montmagny, but my observation of the administration of criminal law in British countries is that the present system works no injustice to the accused but rather gives him every chance to which he is entitled.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): In the last eight years I have had some experience in the criminal courts of Manitoba and from my limited experience I am absolutely opposed to this proposed legislation. First, if the judge trying the case is deprived of the power to analyse the evidence or to comment upon the facts, the power is taken away from the one best qualified to exercise it. If the clause becomes law, which states that the defence should always address the jury after the prosecution, the procedure will be loaded in favour of the defence. Most of my experience has been as defence counsel, and I have no complaint whatever to make of the law or procedure as it stands. As the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr Geary) has pointed out, should the bill become law we would be very likely to lose many advantages which we now have, because if a judge is not extremely careful in his analysis of the evidence and in his comments upon the facts, there will be grounds for appeal. To pass legislation of this kind would be flying in the face of history and of the whole experience of English jurisprudence, and I oppose the bill.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): I have had some experience in murder cases before the courts. As regards the question of appeals, the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) stated that the result would be that there would be so many appeals that the purpose of my bill would be defeated. I must remind the hon. gentleman that appeals are expensive and it is the accused who has to pay the piper in appealing in order to have, if possible, the conviction quashed and his innocence reestablished. If the administration of justice could do away with appeals, that would be so much easier for both the crown and the accused. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the man in the box as a criminal. He is not a criminal just because he is accused; on the contrary, he is innocent until he is proven guilty.

I shall give to the house an instance which to my mind shows how necessary this bill is, but before giving it, may I say I think it is worth while to send this bill to a committee to be discussed. In the province of Quebec, I shall not say in what city, a man was accused of poisoning his wife. The defence, for some reason or another, were not allowed to have their witnesses heard. The defence attorney decided not to address the jury. The crown attorney, in spite of the fact that the defence had not addressed the jury, decided to do so. I pointed out to him that when the defence did not address the jury the crown generally did not do so either. The crown attorney rose, spoke for an hour and a half, and secured a verdict of guilty. The man was sentenced to death; the case went to appeal and the court of appeal decided unanimously not only that there was no necessity for granting him a new trial, but that there was no evidence against him, and they set him free. He was acquitted by the court of appeal on account of that crown attorney, who should be—and in this I agree with my hon. friend—absolutely independent and not a prosecutor, who should be there to state the facts calmly and to put them before the jury without passion, but who, being human, or prompted by an assistant attorney general, as sometimes happens in our province, is not left with that freedom of mind that we see in England. Of course under the administration of justice in England the crown attorney when he has no case will stand up and say that his case is not proven, because in England presumption is no evidence. The presiding judge will tell the crown attorney that his case is not proven. Unfortunately, judging by the letters which I have before me from the different provinces, it seems, on the contrary, that that seldom or never occurs in this country; in fact we seem to have reached the stage where presumption is evidence. In England, before Queen Victoria, the judge was not allowed to comment on the facts. Certainly the comment of judges on the facts is taking away from the jury the freedom to judge for themselves which they should not be denied. The facts belong to the jurors; they are the province of the jury; yet I have heard presiding judges, supposed to be independent, who would say, "Gentlemen of the jury, we are impartial in this affair," and yet proceed to comment on the facts not in exposition of the case, but rather in the way of an inquisition of the man in the box as to the most natural actions of his life which he may have forgotten, and imputing guilt to him because of his forgetfulness. I think it is about time that we should go back to the law as it was seventy-five or eighty years ago.

I ask the house to send this bill to a committee, where I can cite letters that I have received from different criminal lawyers and crown attorneys, and where we can discuss the facts and reports and judgments in Canadian criminal cases. After all, what we are looking for is justice, and if under this bill some guilty party should escape in the future I am quite sure it will save many an innocent person who would otherwise be condemned because the crown attorney forgot his duty or because the judge was carried away by his passion or his prejudice.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Sydney Mines public building—improvements and repairs, $8,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Since we are dealing with public buildings in Nova Scotia, Mr. Chairman, I should like to mention to the minister a communication that I received from the town council of Lockeport with regard to the necessity of providing improved accommodation for the postal service there, and particularly the erection of a public building. I know the minister is not familiar personally with the situation and with the well-known enterprise of the town. The letter is dated March 12, 1931, and reads:

[Mr. LaVergne.]

I am authorized by the town council to advise you that the following resolution was passed unanimously at the regular monthly meeting held last evening.

On motion of councillors McKay and Weddleton—

Whereas the post office in this town is housed in a small, very inconvenient and unsanitary building—

Therefore resolved that this town council petition, and does hereby petition the federal government to erect a public building in the town of Lockeport, with suitable accommodation for post office and customs department.

I was asked to take the matter up. The hon. minister may remember that I wrote to him about it, and I have his reply stating that the matter will be given consideration. I am sorry that I do not find any evidence of the consideration having been favourable, at least in the estimates which he is now presenting to the committee. I might mention many facts in regard to the town of Lockeport, but I think one only will be sufficient at this time. With all due deference to my hon. friend who lives in Lunenberg (Mr. Ernst) I can say Lockeport is undoubtedly the largest and most important fresh fish station in the maritime provinces. It is an incorporated town with a number of progressive and important industries and I urge again upon the minister favourable consideration of this request.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I thank the hon. gentleman for again drawing my attention to his request. It was duly considered, but as expenditure on public buildings of this nature is made out of revenues, and these are not what they might be, it has been found necessary to curtail such expenditure. My hon. friend may find some consolation in the fact that he is in the same position as many others on both sides of the house. I am pleased to say that the reductions on expenditures for public buildings which will be noted throughout these estimates have been received by hon. members generally in the spirit in which they were made. It is to be hoped that in the near future we shall be able to meet the wishes of my hon. friend for a public building for the important town of Lockeport when revenues have increased to the point that will warrant the expenditure.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—NEW BRUNSWICK

Atholville—public building—under contract, $2,200.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is a revote of $2,200 to provide for the installation of fittings and lock boxes in the public building at Atholville, erected during 1930.

Mr. DONNELLY: Why was the money not spent last year when it was voted?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There was some expenditure last year, but the building was not completed and the fittings were not installed. Therefore we have to revote the balance required.

Mr. VENIOT: Who got the contract for the fittings, and at what price?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Canadian Office and School Furniture Company Limited, at $1,172. There were three tenders; that was the lowest.

Item agreed to.

Dalhousie—public building, $52,000.

Mr. VENIOT: Of this amount I see $12,000 was voted last year but was not expended. I understand the reason why it was not expended. Can the minister tell me if the old building and site have been sold? I think there was an offer for them.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There has been no sale of the old site and building.

Mr. VENIOT: Tenders were asked by the late government for the purchase of the old building, and an offer of $11,000 was received from the International Paper Company. This was $3,000 above the physical valuation placed upon it by experts of the department. Is the department now considering the acceptance of that offer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The offer still stands. It was not considered advisable to dispose of the old building until we had secured provision for a new one.

Mr. VENIOT: I understand that, and I do not think it was the intention to dispose of the old building until the new one was constructed, but have any arrangements been made to have that offer still stand when the new building is finished? You will never get such an offer for that site and building in the future from anyone but the International Paper Company, and it would be regrettable if the matter were allowed to drop.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I thank my hon. friend for the information. The offer still stands, so far as I know, and it is a good offer.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the site been purchased? If so which site is it, and what price was paid?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, the site has not been secured yet. There is the usual difference of opinion in this case.

Item agreed to.

Forest City—building for immigration and customs-excise purposes, $5,000.

Mr. VENIOT: Why was not this amount expended last year? This is a revote.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The contract has been let. The work was not performed in 1930-1931 as a decision could not be reached regarding the site for the proposed structure.

Mr. GARDINER: What proportion of this building will be used for immigration purposes?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Approximately one-third.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any immigration at that point?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is close to the border between Canada and the United States and tourist and other traffic is pretty heavy.

Item agreed to.

Moncton—public building, $75,000.

Mr. VENIOT: I had hoped the hon. member for Westmorland would be here when this item went through. I am glad to see that at last he has accomplished his purpose; it will encourage the hon. member for Temiscouata to keep after his station for Riviere du Loup. I should like to know what site will be occupied by the proposed new post office at Moncton.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The site already purchased.

Mr. VENIOT: Further, may I ask, in view of the fact that Moncton is perhaps the most rapidly growing city in New Brunswick to-day, whether in the preparation of the plans provision has been made for future developments. Perhaps the deputy could give that information offhand. Has allowance been made for the future postal growth of Moncton, which, situated as it is, soon will become the central distributing point for mail in New Brunswick? No doubt also, in the very near future, with this new building Moncton will become the distributing point of supplies for post offices within the maritime provinces, as well as the centre of distribution for mail bags throughout the maritime provinces. I wonder whether, in making the plans, the Post Office Department has been consulted in order to ascertain exactly what the needs may be now and what they may be in the future.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I thank my hon. friend for suggestions of this nature in connection with postal buildings. His experience as Postmaster General qualifies him to make helpful suggestions. I am assured that consideration has been given not only to the present requirements but also to the probable requirements of the future.

Item agreed to.

St. John quarantine station—Patridge island —improvements, alterations, repairs, etc., $10,000.

Mr. VENIOT: I have no objection to this item, but I should like to know why the amount voted last year was not all spent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The expenditure was not made last year because there has been a reconsideration of the requirements, and it will be seen that the amount this year is a little larger than it was last year.

Mr. VENIOT: You spent only about $2,000 last year. Why was not the whole appropriation expended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Because some of the works that were asked for would have considerably exceeded the appropriation, and as I say there have been some changes and revisions of the plans.

Mr. VENIOT: But the amount spent was not expended under contract, so it could not have exceeded the appropriation.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I might give my hon. friend the details of the expenditure for 1930-31:

Repairs, etc.	$191 51
Smoke pipe, etc.	135 88
Couplings	429 17
Repairing above house	394 00
Pipe furnaces	229 00
Hot water front	29 58
Cast steel, etc.	89 73
Oil	101 75
Advertising	61 10
Bronze netting	24 00
Shaker bars	65 90
Hardware	107 54
Labour, paint, etc.	94 89
	$1,954 05

Mr. VENIOT: I understood the minister to say the balance was not expended because they expected the expenditure to exceed the amount voted. How did they arrive at that conclusion? They started out very well, by spending this money under day's work and without calling for a contract, but when the expenditure reached about $2,000 the work was cut off. Was it the intention to call for a contract for the remainder of the work, and of what did the remainder of the work consist?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The smaller items I have mentioned were expended under day's work. The further action taken was that public tenders were received for the various items of work, as submitted by the Department of Pensions and National Health, and these tenders stated the price for each item. The lowest tender, which amounted to $10,500, exceeded the balance of the appropriation available, which was $8,000. The Department of Pensions and National Health suggested deleting a number of items, which brought the lowest tender to $5,269. It was decided to hold it over and re-advertise the work.

Mr. VENIOT: The lowest tender amounted to $5,269, and you had $7,000 left. Why did you not go ahead?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That did not cover all the work that was required; the tenders were for only part of the work.

Mr. VENIOT: There is one other point. I am not going to complain; perhaps I should compliment the minister, but I notice that while a great deal has been said about retrenchment, in New Brunswick the expenditure is increased on public buildings by some $96,000. I am not condemning it; I am merely pointing out to the minister that he has become all at once generous to the province of New Brunswick in comparison with the other provinces. And when we are preaching retrenchment, the sum of $95,000 or $100,000 by way of increase in public buildings in one small province looks large.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I can answer that question—

Mr. VENIOT: I am not asking the hon. gentleman for an explanation; I am asking the minister for a reply. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. There is only one Minister of Public Works I recognize in the Dominion, and that is the hon. gentleman who is now handling the case. I will not be satisfied with any reply that may come from the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) caught the chairman's eye first.

Mr. VENIOT: He was going to give me the reasons which I am asking the Minister of Public Works to give, and he had no right to do that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. member may not want to get the reasons from me, but he has to take them.

Mr. VENIOT: I want to ask another question. In what county is McAdam located?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If I am correctly informed, it is in York-Sunbury.

Mr. VENIOT: I just want to have that on record. The hon. member for York-Sunbury last year was very apt at times to ask where certain expenditures were to be made, especially when they affected my own county, and now I see he has such pull with the present government I want it to go on record. He is succeeding.

Mr. DUFF: Will the minister be good enough to tell the committee how much money was voted last year for public works in New Brunswick and how much of that money was spent? I am referring to public buildings.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We will look that up.

Mr. DUFF: Perhaps the deputy can get the information for the committee when it meets again. I should like to know what money was voted last year for public buildings in each of the provinces and what money was spent in each province. I shall be satisfied if I get the information later.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall be pleased to procure the information and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Don't forget Manitoba.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Not at all.

Item agreed to.

Maritime provinces generally — Dominion public buildings — improvements and repairs, etc., $50,000.

Mr. DUFF: Will the minister get the information also with regard to this item? How much money was voted last year and how much expended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The amount appropriated for similar purposes last year for the maritime provinces generally was $55,000. The hon. member will observe that it is $5,500 less this year.

Mr. DUFF: How much was spent altogether out of that amount?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot give that information at the moment; I will get it later.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Quebec—Asbestos—public building, $30,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I have tried to ascertain what was spent last year in connection with the public building at Trois Pistoles. I see nothing here; no building was constructed. Is it the intention of the government to put up that public building? Did something happen at Trois Pistoles last year? Will the minister tell us?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Instead of constructing a public building at Trois Pistoles from the money voted last year, an arrangement was made with the municipality to erect an addition to their town hall, which provides the desired accommodation on terms that are believed to be more advantageous to the Dominion and at the same time satisfactory to the municipality.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the minister aware that that very building has been condemned by the board of health?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is the first intimation I have received of anything of that nature.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the minister say that there is nothing in the government files of previous years to the effect that that building has been condemned by the board of health?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My information is that the building is being remodelled and an addition constructed and that it is now quite satisfactory in every respect.

Mr. POULIOT: Did the minister mention, in making his arrangements with the town of Trois Pistoles, that that building should be renovated in order to comply with the requirements of the board of health?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As already intimated, the department have no knowledge or information that the building did not or does not comply with the requirements of the board of health.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister be kind enough to tell the committee what arrangements have been made with the town in that respect?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The arrangement is on the basis of rental. The premises are a portion of the ground floor of a two-storey annex to the city hall measuring twenty-five by thirty-eight, a wooden frame building, brick-lined, galvanized iron roofiing, with stone foundations and situated on the main or national road on part of cadastral lot 163 of the parish of Trois Pistoles. The area is 900 square feet and the rental $1,000 per annum; term, five years from date of occupation, with option of renewal for a further period of five years on same terms and conditions. The lessor is to pay taxes, water, heat, light, cleaning, insurance, snow removal and the cost of large and small repairs.

Mr. POULIOT: Did the hon. gentleman say that the lease was to run for five years?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, five years.

Mr. POULIOT: What was the previous rental?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I regret I cannot give my hon. friend that information.

Mr. POULIOT: Is there an increase in the rental?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would say yes because of the improved accommodation.

Mr. POULIOT: Did the department stipulate that a reduction in taxes should be made by the town authorities because of the higher rental being paid by the government?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The department did not in any way interfere in the matter of taxation; the lease provides that the owner shall pay any taxes.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand that the increased rental is being paid in order to assist the municipality in the improving of the building to provide better postal facilities.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The arrangement was one of mutual advantage, and wherever we have an opportunity to make an arrangement of that kind we are pleased to do so.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the minister have any objection to producing all the correspondence, resolutions and so on in connection with this matter?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can tell my hon. friend that the estimate was $20,000, for the building; and a rental of $1,000 per annum, with heat and other services provided, is one of advantage to the Dominion.

Mr. POULIOT: I challenge what has been said by the hon. gentleman. It was because of numerous requests on the part of the citizens of that locality that the money was voted last year. My information is that the building is absolutely unsatisfactory. I do not blame the minister for that, but I do blame those who gave him wrong information. I regret that no public building was constructed last winter, as it would have provided employment for many in this locality who were asking for work. I told them that should a building be constructed during the winter they could obtain work by applying to the man who had the patronage in that county. The minister, I say, was given wrong information in this regard, and the same applies in connection with other matters to which I shall refer as they come before the committee. I regret the action of these narrow-minded people in this community, these disgusting Tories. I do not say that in any offensive way, because there are black sheep in every family, but the ones to whom I refer are the most disgusting in all the world. They prevented the poor people of this municipality from obtaining work last winter; because of their stupidity those people have had to suffer during the severe winter months. What has happened is a shame, but it will be publicly denounced in the press so that the people who gave the wrong information will be able to obtain a different view of themselves from that reflected in their own looking-glasses.

An hon. MEMBER: A bad colour.

Mr. POULIOT: The unemployed in that community were not asking for charity, they were asking for work. During the last election the Prime Minister said: "If the people will work, I will give them work."

An hon. MEMBER: He did not specify the time.

Mr. POULIOT: The country would have been no poorer had a building been constructed as previously arranged, because it would have been the owner of a good public building and at the same time the people would have obtained employment. Whenever the minister receives recommendations from the sour-mouths in my county, he should inquire into what they say. He should get in touch with independent people who are well posted and thus obtain the correct information. I do not blame the minister, but I warn him that if he continues to listen to these people I will have to put him in the same classification.

Will the minister have any objection to producing the whole file in this matter on a motion for the production of papers?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no objection whatever; I shall be pleased to bring down all the correspondence in relation to this arrangement.

Mr. BOULANGER: Mr. Chairman, the total amount voted last year for public buildings in Quebec amounted to $1,237,300, and I was wondering if the minister would be kind enough to tell the committee—I am sure he will because he is very obliging—whether all of this amount was spent, and if not, what portion remains unspent?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can answer the hon. gentleman's question in part; the whole amount was not spent, but I cannot give him the details now. I will secure that information if he wishes it.

Mr. BOULANGER: I notice in the estimates now under consideration that there is a column headed "Revote". Does that mean that money is being revoted this year which was not spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, that is the idea.

Mr. BOULANGER: The total of that column would be that portion of the money voted last year which was not spent?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, not spent for one reason or another.

Mr. BOULANGER: The total of the revote for this year is $630,500; would that be the money voted last year which was not spent?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, that is correct.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There is a revote of $6,500 for a quarantine station at Grosse Isle; is that contract actually proceeding?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This amount is to provide for general improvements and repairs to the various buildings at Grosse Isle quarantine station. It is requested by the Minister of National Health.

Mr. LAVERGNE: All I want to know is whether this amount of $6,500 will conclude the work, or is further work going to be done this summer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We propose to spend this year the amount provided by this vote and it will take care at least of present requirements.

Mr. POWER: I gather from the answer which the minister made to the hon. member for Bellechasse that out of the total amount voted last year for public works under the head of buildings in Quebec, the sum of $630,000 was not expended. Is it not a fact that other sums of money which were voted last year were also not expended, but do not appear as revotes? For instance, in the estimates of last year there appears an item of $30,000 for Farnham public building. I am not familiar with that locality, but was the money expended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No; that work was not gone on with.

Mr. POWER: May I ask why?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not that information here, but I presume the reason is the same as that given in the case of other works: that in consideration of the revenues and the fact that these expenditures have to be made from revenues, it was deemed advisable not to proceed with the work at that time.

Mr. POWER: I do not suppose the minister would have this information, but I think he should. I wonder whether any work under the unemployment relief act was carried on in Farnham.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I might supplement the information which I gave with regard to Farnham by saying that there was a reconsideration whether there should be a new building or an addition to the existing one. As to the expenditures for unemployment relief, as my hon. friend knows, those are made, not through the Department of Public Works, but through the Department of Labour in cooperation with the provinces and the municipalities, and I have no information in that regard.

Mr. POWER: It would be of some importance, and certainly of some interest to the committee, to know whether or not in instances such as this, other works were carried on out of the unemployment relief fund and the municipalities, so to speak, taxed 50 per cent to provide for unemployment relief when the federal government with amounts such as this could have done the work itself. I have no knowledge whatsoever of the situation in Farnham; I do not know anything at all about it. This may or may not be a typical case. I know in some cases where moneys were voted by parliament to the Department of Public Works, the department did not carry on the work, but later, under the Unemployment Relief Act they forced municipalities to pay 50 per cent. We should have more information on that subject. I do not want to hold up the minister's estimates; I think they should go through; but when he comes here with his estimates he ought to be able to give the committee some information.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As I have stated, I am anxious to give all information available, and I am assured by the deputy, who is familiar with all these matters, that no public works of ours that he knows of were constructed out of the unemployment relief fund.

Mr. POWER: I am satisfied that in the ordinary course of events that would be so; but parliament voted $20,000,000 to give employment in municipalities and localities throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. We asked the municipalities to pay 25 per cent and the provinces to pay 25 per cent. If the federal government had carried on the works authorized by parliament, in many cases it would not have been necessary for the municipalities and the provinces to carry on those works. I am asking the minister whether he does not agree with me. Perhaps he will agree with me. I think the committee should have some information on this matter. The minister, when he brought down his estimates, should have been prepared to tell us something along these lines. I do not want to criticize unduly the minister, who is a new minister, and I think everyone in the house wishes him well. We are only too anxious to assist him and not to obstruct his estimates. We shall be only too glad to pass these estimates, but before the public works estimates are passed, the minister should endeavour through his deputy and the Deputy Minister of Labour or the director of unemployment to furnish some statement along these lines. Perhaps he will. I ask him now whether he will make some effort in that direction.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am not aware of any case in which employment has suffered through the fault of the Public Works department to carry out its program. The program was not curtailed in any case with a view of throwing any added burden on anyone, or of escaping any responsibility in connection with carrying on our work.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to call the minister's attention to one case, which I think he will remember, where employment suffered because the program of expending the money that was voted by parliament last year was not carried out. I instanced the case of Gloucester county, about which I have written to the minister. From the reply given to a question asking what correspondence was received in connection with a certain undertaking in Gloucester county for which money was voted last year, I see that tenders had been called for and had been received, but the work was cancelled. In that section of the country there was a great deal of unemployment. It was a fishing district and the fishing in the fall of the year had completely failed. I wrote to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Public Works in connection with the matter, urging that the money authorized by parliament to be expended should be expended, and I got no reply except that the matter was under consideration. The provincial government came to the rescue in some degree by expending a small amount of $500 or $600 in that district in cooperation with the federal government. I think the proportion was 60 per cent provincial and 40 per cent federal. In the reply that I got yesterday or the day before from the minister giving the names of those who had corresponded with the department I find three names given: Rev. Arthur Gallien, priest of that district; Mr. Albany M. Robichaud, barrister, Caraquet, the defeated Conservative candidate in the last election, and Mr. Geo. M. McDade, M.P., the present representative of the county of Northumberland, the adjoining county, which had nothing to do with the county of Gloucester. My name either inadvertently or for some reason was left out, and therefore it appears on the records of this parliament that I took no part at all in the matter, and that I never wrote to the minister or to the department in connection with it. I wish the minister would look up his file and have a correction made because he must have on his file a letter from me on behalf of the people of that district drawing attention to the absolute necessity of going on with this work. Only one tender was received, and if I am not mistaken the tender was below the estimate of the department for the building of this wharf for the fishermen. If I am not mistaken—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Maloney): I hesitate to call my hon. friend to order, but the New Brunswick estimates are passed and gone.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not dealing with the New Brunswick estimates, Mr. Chairman. I mention them only to bear out the argument of my hon. friend to my right and to strengthen my own argument.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Maloney): What about the Quebec estimates?

Mr. VENIOT: Quebec is all right and it will always be all right, no matter what the results may be. I would call the minister's attention to that particular work in New Brunswick. I shall deal with it further when we come to the estimates for harbours and rivers.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I was about to suggest to my hon. friend that that would be the appropriate place to discuss the matter, and I shall then have full information with me. I want to say in justice to my hon. friend, however, that certainly he communicated with me verbally—I do not recall whether there is any correspondence or not—during the short session and impressed upon me the urgency of these two works, one at Caraquet, and the other at Little Shippigan. When we come to the estimates for harbours and rivers for New Brunswick, I shall be glad to make a statement as to why these works were not proceeded with.

Mr. BOULANGER: Would the minister be good enough to explain why the money that was appropriated by parliament last year for public buildings in Quebec was not spent? Looking over the estimates that we are now discussing I find that in many cases we are revoting the exact amount that was voted by parliament last year. For instance, parliament voted $3,500 last year for a public building at Beauharnois, and this year we are revoting exactly the same amount. Last year parliament voted $12,000 for a public building at Beauport, and this year we are revoting exactly the same amount. Last year we voted $4,000 for a public building at Grande-Mere, and this year we are revoting exactly the same amount. Last year we voted $6,500 for improvements to a quarantine station at Grossle Isle, and this year we are revoting exactly the same amount. Last year we voted $8,000 for an addition to a public building at Jonquiere. This year we are revoting exactly the same amount. We voted $25,000 last year for a public building at Maisonneuve. I am sure that the spending of $25,000 in a working centre like Maisonneuve would have been quite a relief to the unemployment situation in that city last winter, but not a cent of that appropriation was spent, and we are revoting the exact amount again this year. Last year $500,000 was voted for a postal terminal building at Montreal. Apparently this money was not spent as we are being asked to revote the same amount this year. There again, in such a big city as Montreal where unemployment is great enough now, and was greater during the winter, it would have been quite a relief to the unemployment situation to have spent half a million dollars last winter. Last year we voted $39,500 for a public building at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. Apparently only $10,500 of that amount was spent as this year we are being asked to revote $29,000. Last year we voted $17,000 for a public building at Ste. Martine, and only $5,000 was spent. We voted money last year for a public building at Shawinigan, and apparently that money was not spent. The total amount of money which was appropriated last year for public buildings in Quebec was a little over $1,200,000. Of that amount a little more than one-half $630,000, was not spent. The money had been appropriated and could have been used to relieve unemployment in the province of Quebec. I wish to contrast that situation in Quebec with the situation in Ontario. Last year for public buildings in Ontario we voted a little over $2,000,000, of which only $179,000 was unexpended, whereas in Quebec, with a total vote of $1,200,000, a little over $630,000 was unexpended. The government is taking a lot of credit for having voted $20,000,000 at the September session for the relief of unemployment. I think they would deserve a lot more credit if they had spent in the province of Quebec the money which this parliament had authorized to be spent in the province, but which, for reasons unknown to me, was not expended. The money was there available to the government; everything was in readiness to go ahead with these works, and yet over half of the amount appropriated for the province of Quebec remained in the coffers of the government unexpended.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am afraid my hon. friend's friends did not call for tenders.

Mr. BOULANGER: I do not know, and that is why I am asking the minister. I am asking him why this $630,000 that was appropriated was not spent, and why in so many cases we are being asked to revote the exact amounts voted last year for public works in the province of Quebec.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In reply to my hon. friend I can only say that he has confused the figures in some of the columns. Our expenditure last year was $32,700,000, a very heavy program, the largest expenditure, in fact, which the Department of Public Works has ever made in any one year in its whole history. That compares with an expenditure of $29,250,000 the previous year.

Mr. BOULANGER: But that $32,000,000 was not spent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes. I am giving the figures of the actual expenditure, and I say that last year $32,700,000 was spent. Every year, of course, there is a number of items that are not expended, and for which the money has to be revoted. Hon. gentlemen will recall that the work was interrupted last year owing to the election, and then after we came in there was a delay in getting the plans completed. In fact the program was so heavy that all the plans have not yet been completed, and in some cases we have had to employ outside architects. For these and the other reasons which I have given some works were not proceeded with, but in many cases we are showing our good faith by going on with those deferred works this year.

Mr. BOULANGER: How much was voted?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Approximately $38,000,000.

Mr. VENIOT: Including supplementaries?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Including everything.

Mr. BOULANGER: The present government took charge on August 7 last. Even if the election interfered to a certain extent with the administration of national affairs, surely since that date the present government has had time to call for tenders and award contracts for the works voted last session. I wonder whether the elections interfered very much with the duties of the permanent officials of the Public Works department.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In answer to my hon. friend, I might go back to the previous year, when although $30,000,000 odd was voted only $20,000,000 was expended; the year before that again when my hon. friends were in power $27,000,000 was appropriated and only $20,000,000 spent—a larger amount carried over and unexpended than the amount this year about which he is complaining.

Mr. POWER: There was $6,000,000 less expended on public works than was voted last year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. POWER: So had we expended that money we could have saved $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 to the municipalities and to the provinces.

An hon. MEMBER: High finance.

Mr. POWER: It is very rapid finance. It is simply adding two and two together. More than that, these public works had already been provided for in the estimates, so plans of some kind must have been in the department; the engineers of the department at least must have known what they were about. Therefore these works could have been started as soon as the hon. gentleman and his friends came into office. Indeed, they might have had the prospect in some localities of ending unemployment in three days, as they promised; instead, they brought down their unemployment bill, the provisions of which could not possibly be put into operation until the winter. As a result, in many localities the municipal authorities were not able to take advantage of the fund. But here we had money voted, we had plans prepared, and the engineers and architects of the department must have known how this money could be expended. I am not blaming the minister, but for some reason or other the money was not expended. As I said before, we do not want to interfere with his estimates, but surely he should give an explanation to the house and the country with regard to this delay.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think my hon. friend is all too general in his conclusions. Some of these works were not proceeded with for a variety of reasons; for instance, disputes as to sites, requests as to change of plans, reports that the buildings were not necessary or desirable. My hon. friend is quite inaccurate in saying that plans were already prepared; in some cases they were not.

Mr. POWER: I do not wish to question my hon. friend's accuracy of statement, but surely plans must have been prepared or the proposed works would not have been put in the estimates.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Not at all. You can put in votes for public buildings before you have plans, and you can say to the house that the plans have not been prepared, that the vote is just for a beginning. This has been done in some cases before the site had been acquired. As my hon. friend knows it is done right along.

Mr. POWER: I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then I am telling him as a fact that that practice has prevailed for years.

Mr. POWER: If the minister tells me the practice is that items are inserted in the estimates without plans being prepared, I am quite willing to accept his statement; but these items were in the estimates when they were brought down last March, and surely after bringing down estimates of from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 for public buildings, the minister must have consulted the officers of his department. When at the special session we voted money for unemployment, those plans at least should have been further advanced than any plans for unemployment relief, which was not thought of until late in September. Surely the hon. minister will admit that.

Mr. VENIOT: Is it not the fact that always a skeleton, as it were, of the plans is made in order to prepare the estimates to be submitted to the house? When application is made to the department for the construction of a public building or a public wharf, the local engineer makes an examination and then reports to the department recommending or disapproving the application. On the strength of the recommendation and with the detailed information that is given to the deparment at Ottawa, a decision is taken whether the work is necessary or not. On the skeleton plan that the engineer prepares for himself he bases his estimates. If it is pretty certain that the vote will go through, an amount will appear in the estimates, the local engineers prepare their plan, at least they do for wharves and breakwaters, and those plans are sent forward to Ottawa for approval. For public buildings the procedure is somewhat different; architects have to be employed after the district architect makes his report. Generally the departmental architect is employed unless he is too busy with other work, in which case outside architects are engaged to prepare the final plans. But sufficient of the plans is known in the department to allow of a fairly accurate estimate being made of the probable cost of the proposed work. If that had been done I cannot understand why there should be delay in expending the money which was authorized by parliament, and which was so necessary to relieve unemployment. Let me point out further that between the date of the signing of this supply bill and the time the election took place there was an interval of about six weeks; that bill was signed about June 3 or June 4 and the elections took place on July 28. Within ten days after the election this government was installed in power, I think on August 7, and hon. gentlemen opposite at least will give us credit for the fact that during the election campaign we did not attempt to use this money or these public works for election purposes, since the plans, as the minister says, were not prepared. Between August 7 and the time when extreme frost strikes sections of the province of Quebec, which might prevent the carrying on of the construction of public buildings, there was an interval of some three or four months; there were the months of August, September, October, November, and up to December 15, yet we are told that the government did not have time to prepare plans, even by engaging outside architects, in order to carry on this work in the province of Quebec, whereas in the province of Ontario they spent almost the total amount voted by this house last year. I cannot understand the reason for that, and for me it needs some further explanation than the minister has given so far.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot accept my hon. friend's statement that there has been any attempt at discrimination as between the provinces, with respect to the expenditure of public moneys.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not make that statement; I merely gave the facts.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I took that interpretation of it, and I want to point out to my hon. friend that there was one very large item in the province of Quebec, with which he is perfectly familiar. I refer to the postal station at Montreal, which accounted for $500,000 in the estimates. As my hon. friend probably knows, that is only a beginning, for the construction of that building probably will cost about $2,000,000 or $2,500,000.

Mr. VENIOT: About $1,750,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We will say $2,000,000, and that does not include the site in connection with which expropriation proceedings are under way. They were carried on for a year or two by the former government.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The first amount granted was in 1929, I think, when $650,000 was included in the estimates, and that amount was reduced in 1930 to $500,000. There were some negotiations as to the purchase of the site from the time the first amount was included, but there were no negotiations before that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But $650,000 was voted, and not a dollar was spent that year.

Mr. VENIOT: That is quite true, because we found they wanted too much for the property.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That may have been a perfectly good reason, and there are perfectly good reasons this year as well. I can only come back to the fact that in the last year our expenditures were $32,758,000, as against $25,000,000 the year before.

Mr. POWER: A few moments ago the hon. gentleman said $29,000,000, did he not?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That was for another year, which I gave as a comparison, showing the next highest year of expenditure.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the item which provides for repairs to the Quebec citadel. The walls of that citadel are crumbling into absolute ruin, and I think unless something is done very soon this old historic place will be a thing of the past and will have to be abolished, because actually the walls of the citadel and the walls of the city of Quebec, which are federal property, are in a very bad state of repair. I understand that in this year of economy it would require quite a large expenditure to repair these walls, but I think in a very real sense they represent an important part of your national wealth. I see the minister who represents the district of Quebec here, and I would ask him to support my demand that the government give attention to this matter. The only steps taken so far were taken by the late administration in connection with the demolition of the old St. John's gate, which was asked for by a decided barbarian who was at that time mayor of Quebec. This historic gate was abolished, and in its place was erected a monument of horror. I do not know who allowed it. I would not blame it on any administration or minister; I would rather put the blame on the municipal authorities of the city of Quebec. I was one of those who protested, but I understand the evil is not finished. On the street which is just at the old St. John's gate there are some old powder magazines, and it is intended that these should be demolished to widen a street on which there is practically no thoroughfare and no traffic, and which is one of the finest corners of the old city, and could easily be made into a park. The same thing applies to the Esplanade, where the walls are falling to pieces. I believe this part of the city should be put under the jurisdiction and control of the National Battlefields Commission. I have nothing to say against the present chairman of the National Battlefields Commission; he is a good friend of my hon. friends on the other side—

Mr. VENIOT: He is a good man, for all that.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Certainly; he has cultivated lovely flowers in the parks without thorns, and I suggest that should be a good example to be followed by hon. gentlemen opposite at election time. I certainly ask in the name of the city of Quebec and also in the name of Canada, that prompt attention be given the old citadel and the walls of Quebec, for if matters go on in this way for not many years, probably not more than a year or two, it will cost millions to preserve the wall and the work could be done now for much less.

I commend my request to the influential minister representing Quebec, and I am sure he will share the opinion which I am expressing now. We Quebecers are supposed to be a little parochial, but we have reason to be proud of the city of Quebec. There are but five or six cities in the world which have natural beauty and at the same time historic associations, and Quebec is one of them. I hope the minister and the government will give attention to the request I make in the name not only of the citizens of Quebec but of all those who love Canada and her history.

Mr. DUPRE: I certainly concur in the remarks my hon. friend has made with regard to the desirability of preserving the historic sites of old Quebec. I was asked to support certain demands that might have had the effect of causing the disappearance of those historic sites, and as to my views on that subject I think my hon. friend and myself would be on the same side.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say so. May I cite one instance before the item carries. Quite a number of years ago the auditorium was built in Quebec and a part of the walls was used as a support for that structure. This, besides being an encroachment upon public property, served to obscure the view of the wall. I understand that it is now contemplated to use a part of the wall on the other side of St. Jean street for a public building to be known as the forum. The work has been stopped this year because the city is building a sort of public hall there, and I trust that the government will put a stop to the practice which has prevailed under the past administration of permitting encroachments upon public property just to satisfy some personal friend or partisan at the expense of what is most sacred among the public monuments of this country. Undoubtedly crimes have been committed in this respect. Just think of it, for instance: only fifty years ago the old Jesuit college was demolished by dynamite—public property—leaving a bare field for twenty-five years, to be occupied afterwards by a monumental horror called the city hall of Quebec. The old building was of beautiful architecture. This sort of thing has been going on year after year, the government allowing people to encroach upon public property with axe, shovel and pickaxe, among the most sacred stones in Canada. I am glad that the Solicitor General—who, by the way, must be in good humour seeing that his income has just been augmented—will take my request into serious consideration.

Mr. POWER: I am very glad that my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) has taken this attitude. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) will recollect that many years ago, back in 1918 or 1919 I believe, and for some years thereafter, I brought this matter to the attention of the house. In 1928 the ex-Prime Minister and present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) visited Quebec and I took him all over the walls. We climbed up and down one rainy afternoon and before he got through he was quite willing to cry quits and promise to do anything he could to have the wall repaired, because he had to walk over slippery places and so on. The then Prime Minister, who has always taken a great interest in matters historic in Canada, gave to the people of Quebec the assurance—I believe he made the statement in parliament also—that he was prepared to have a certain amount voted every year for the repair, maintenance and upkeep of the walls of Quebec. I speak subject to correction by the former Minister of National Defence, but I believe the sum of $50,000 was voted for the year 1929-30 and the year 1930-31. I see no mention of it in these estimates, but I hope that after the eloquent address of my hon. friend from Montmagny and the kindly, benevolent consideration which the Solicitor General has promised to give the matter, he will discuss the question with his colleagues in the cabinet so that we may be able to continue the good work of keeping the walls in repair. With respect to the statement of my hon. friend from Montmagny, that the repairs to Porte St. Jean are hideous, I entirely agree with him.

Mr. DUPRE: We all agree.

Mr. POWER: The ex-Minister of National Defence informs me that the plans were carried out at the suggestion of the civic authorities of Quebec. I do not wish to pose as one who has a taste in architecture, but I do entirely agree with my hon. friend from Montmagny that the first thing we should do, if any money is voted, is to restore Porte St. Jean to its former condition.

Mr. BOULANGER: Apropos of what has been said concerning the fortifications of Quebec, might I be permitted to call the attention of my hon. friend the Solicitor General and the Minister of Public Works to a similar condition that eixsts in the military works at Levis. There also the forts and military works are crumbling. These works, of course, are not as important as those of Quebec; they are not as historic or attractive. Nevertheless they have their value, and we on the south shore should be pleased if the government would look after them. Seeing that they are situated in the home town of the Solicitor General, I think our case is in good hands.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. DUPRE: This is certainly a very strong appeal to me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. members who have spoken with reference to the fortifications and walls at Quebec are all from the province of Quebec itself. I believe that quite irrespective of the provinces from which they come, the feeling of the citizens of Canada generally is that there is no more important historic site in Canada, no site more precious to the Dominion as a whole than Quebec, and that it is a national obligation to keep the walls of that old city in a proper state of repair. What the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) said a moment ago about the trip we had together over the site two years ago is quite correct except possibly in one particular: the trip was not at all necessary to convince me as to the need of what should be done. I was in entire sympathy from the outset, indeed I have been ever since I have taken an interest in public affairs, with every effort to preserve historic sites, and that of Quebec above all others. But I certainly did see on that occasion the necessity for immediate work, and whatever influence I was able to exert at the time with my colleagues and others was all in the direction of having the work gone on with at once. I believe the delay arose out of the difficulty of bringing about some sort of agreement or understanding between the city authorities, the battlefields commission and the provincial and Dominion authorities. There was an effort to have all parties make some contribution to the project, and I believe that in the endeavour to bring them together there were interminable delays. I hope that these delays may be avoided in the future, because the necessity is urgent. If I am not greatly mistaken, the acting leader of the government, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), when the matter was up in the house a couple of years ago, stressed from this side, in terms just as emphatic as those I am now using, the need for immediate expenditure in this very connection. I mention the point because I believe it is but fair to our colleagues from Quebec that they should feel that in all parts of Canada there is entire sympathy with them in their desire to see these historic walls kept in a state of adequate repair.

Mr. DUPRE: I thank my right hon. friend for his words and congratulate him on the stand he has taken. I may tell him that the Minister of Public Works, in spite of his many duties, came to Quebec to spend a few days for the purpose of examining the works, the fortifications and walls and he was impressed, very much as the right hon. gentleman was. We all concur in what my right hon. friend has said.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I would advise the government to beware of too close an alliance with the civic authorities. We have sometimes mayors and aldermen who seem to think that these old stones should be discarded. That unfortunately is what happened in the case of Porte St. Jean. The Department of National Defence was induced to accept the opinion of the then mayor of Quebec, who was not a believer in old stone, and because his good faith was misplaced this monstrosity occurred. I understand there is an historic sites commission created by the federal government which should be consulted in matters of this kind. The city of Quebec derives a large revenue from tourists, and were this plan carried out Quebec would be a city like New York, with numbered streets instead of the old crooked ones so attractive to the tourists. These tourists are interested not only in old stone but in the Quebec Liquor Commission, but they could stop off at Montreal.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I am quite satisfied that not only in this house but throughout the country there are no two opinions with regard to the propriety of doing everything possible to preserve historic sites, not only in Quebec but throughout the rest of Canada. I think it was in 1927, when I was the acting leader of the opposition, that I pledged the support of the opposition of that day to any reasonable scheme which might be brought down in this connection. I remember also in 1920 my hon. friend from Quebec—he is wrong in his dates—brought this thing very forcibly to the attention of parliament. This matter has been in abeyance a long time, but I am glad that something is to be done to preserve these historic monuments. This work will have to be continued from year to year, perhaps for all time, but the expenditure need not be very great. There are many valued sites in the city of Quebec as well as in other parts of the Dominion. There are sites in Kingston, Ontario, which should be maintained, but upon which no government money has yet been spent. We on this side of the house are just as heartily in support of a proposal of this kind as are our hon. friends opposite, and I am sure we express the view of the people of Canada as a whole.

[Mr. Dupre.]

Mr. POWER: I noticed that the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) listened most attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Montmagny, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice. I know he is sympathetic in this matter, and I am confident he will give us the assurance that at least an amount of $50,000 will be placed in the supplementary estimates. I am sure that if he does that we on this side of the house will see that the estimate passes without objection, which is perhaps more than we can say for the rest of his items.

Having turned from the glories of war and the plains of battle to the lesser glories and perhaps more heated arguments of peace, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works just why the different items providing for the expenditure of money in the estimates of 1930 and 1931 were not proceeded with. The first item to which I would refer is a vote of $11,000 for Cowansville. I can enumerate others, if the hon. minister so desires.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If the hon. member has a list perhaps he had better complete it.

Mr. POWER: The next is Farnham, and in this connection the plans must have been prepared because it was a revote last year from the year before. In this case I think the department had ample time if it so desired to have prepared all the plans, and I hardly think the minister can offer that excuse in this case.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Some time ago there was a reconsideration of the plan; a desire for change was evinced and the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. POWER: May I ask just what was that desire for change?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As I said before, the question was whether there should be a new building constructed or an addition made to the existing building. Representations have been received in support of both methods of procedure.

Mr. POWER: Were tenders called for the new building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The tenders were called but no action was taken for the reason given.

Mr. POWER: When were the tenders called?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The tenders were received on August 21, in answer to public advertisements. Four tenders were received, as follows:

K. B. Jenckes, Sherbrooke, $31,957.
Stewart Construction Company, Limited, Sherbrooke, $37,642.
Newton Construction Company, Limited, Sherbrooke, $38,900.
Paquet & Godbout, St. Hyacinthe, $47,000.

Mr. POWER: Has the site for this building been purchased?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The site was expropriated.

Mr. POWER: When?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): An order in council was passed on July 26, granting authority to expropriate.

Mr. VENIOT: What year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): 1930.

Mr. POWER: Has the money been paid as yet to the owner?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, nothing further has been done.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon. minister tell me—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Pardon me; I notice that on November 14, 1930, a notice of abandonment of expropriation was served.

Mr. POWER: In the case of La Tuque a vote of $39,000 was passed, of which $9,000 was a revote. Would the hon. minister tell me how that money was expended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That building has been completed and we are now putting in the fixtures.

Mr. POWER: As regards the additions and alterations to public building in Montmagny: I am assuming that that building was completed also.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend's assumption is correct.

Mr. POWER: I come now to the item "Quebec, accommodation for military stores." An amount of $100,000 was voted for that purpose. The Minister of Public Works will doubtless recollect that that $100,000 was to be more or less of an annual grant until such time as an amount of $3,000,000 was reached, which was to provide for the construction of a new arsenal at Little River, Quebec. In the Department of Public Works there is an order in council, which I have never seen but which I know is there, providing that with the removal of the Ross rifle factory, the cartridge factory and the Dominion arsenal, there shall be expended for the replacement of those buildings at a location at Little River, an amount of $3,000,000. Originally it was intended that this money should be spent at the rate of something like $300,000 a year; but former governments, like this one, felt the need of economy and for one or two years an amount of $100,000 was inserted in the estimates of the Department of Public Works for the purpose of providing for a building for Quebec military stores, that is, I assume, for housing stores which for many years had been located in the Ross rifle factory. The Solicitor General knows very well the need was the same last year as the year before, and is perhaps greater now, because the Ross rifle buildings have been torn down. Part of the military huts which were to be demolished have been burned, and they are still as unsightly as they ever were. The arsenal is getting more obsolete, more dangerous for those who are employed therein, and the necessity for building a new arsenal is just as great as it was five years ago. Possibly it will be easier for my hon. friend and his friends to justify a military expenditure than it would have been for hon. gentlemen leading the house at the time I was supporting a government. Under those circumstances, with a militant Prime Minister and a militant majority back of the government, perhaps the Solicitor General might look carefully into this question of expenditure to replace the Ross rifle factory.

Only this week I received a resolution which was passed by the city council of Quebec, and a copy of which was doubtless also received by the Solicitor General and the other members from Quebec city and district, calling attention to the fact that in the month of November the then Acting Prime Minister, the hon. member for Argenteuil, had, in the words of the resolution, agreed that money would be voted forthwith to proceed with the construction of a new building to replace the Ross rifle factory. Of course, since the government has changed, and long before, I have never been called, either by the present Solicitor General or by the former one, into conference with the authorities at Quebec, so that I do not know what negotiations have proceeded between the mayor of Quebec and the Solicitor General, or rather, in his absence, his deputy, the hon. member for Dorchester, or the hon. member for Argenteuil in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. But apparently the city council of Quebec are under the impression that a definite pledge was given. It may be all right to make pledges to the electorate and not to keep them, but it is a bad thing to make pledges to a city council or other corporate body. If that promise was made, I would suggest that the Solicitor General now join with me and ask the minister to insert in the estimates a substantial amount to commence construction of an arsenal in Quebec. The Solicitor General will, I am sure, assist me in this.

Mr. DUPRE: All I can say to my hon. friend is that during the last three months I have heard more about the Ross rifle factory than about any other question. I have, as a matter of fact, received a copy of the resolution passed by the city council of Quebec. Not only is the matter still under consideration, but it has been under consideration for quite a few months—

Mr. POWER: For years.

Mr. DUPRE: —and we are trying to reach a conclusion.

Mr. POWER: I shall not take any more promises, but will the Solcitor General insist upon his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, placing to the credit of the department for accommodation of military stores at Quebec at least an amount similar to that which has been voted in former years? At the present time I understand those stores have been placed in the immigration building. Surely the Department of Public Works did not pay $100,000 to the Immigration department for the lease of its building for military stores. I am not to understand that, am I?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. POWER: Has any of this money been expended?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. VENIOT: It is almost eleven o'clock I want to discuss the matter of the postal terminals at Montreal. Perhaps the minister would hear me the next time these estimates come up.

Mr. POWER: If the minister will agree that the question of the Montreal postal terminals may be discussed on some other item, I do not think anybody has any objection to the estimates for the Quebec public buildings passing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall be quite willing to do that.

Mr. VENIOT: I accept that.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

WELLAND SHIP CANAL—SALARY REDUCTIONS

Mr. BOULANGER:

Mr. BENNETT: Before No. 9 is finally disposed of, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed by the house that a number of these questions are of a legal character, with respect to which I do not think the government is called upon to express its views. The fourth asks for the opinion of the government, which it is not bound to give; the same may be said with respect to the sixth; the third is in the same category. So with the exception of the first and second, I think these questions are such as should not be answered.

Mr. GARDINER: Stands.

Mr. SPEAKER: No. 9 stands.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS—RAILWAY BARGE

11. In whose name was the barge cleared through the American customs?

12. To whom was the insurance on the barge paid?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, with reference to No. 26, I see the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie, Vancouver) is not in his place, but it is a question with respect to which the government would be glad if the house itself would determine what action should be taken, because all that could be done by us is to write a letter to the harbour commissioners asking them for the information and then transmit it to the house. The government itself is in no sense responsible for what action was taken or for the manner in which this railway barge was purchased, if it was purchased. What I know about it is what I see in the newspapers; beyond that I am not advised. Perhaps if my right hon. friend would look into the matter we could arrive at some common understanding as to how such questions should be dealt with. The tabling of information received from these harbour commissions does not in any sense pledge the government as to its accuracy; the government is bound only by the information received.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I believe the practice followed by the previous administration was that indicated at the moment by the Prime Minister. The harbour boards were written to by the minister, their attention was directed to the question, they were asked for the requisite information, and subsequently the minister gave the information to the house as coming from the harbour boards themselves. I do not think that more than that is expected.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question stands.

4. What amount was spent for electric fixtures and to whom?

5. Who did interior painting and decorating, and what amount was paid for such work?

10. What are the names, salaries and religious affiliations of such employees?

FOREIGN-BORN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

PELAGIC SEALING TREATY, 1911

Mr. BUCKLEY:

1. Has the Dominion government received any portion of the award of $473,151.26 made on or about December 17, 1897, in connection with the seizure by the United States of America, of Canadian vessels in the Behring sea?

2. What portion of this money remains undistributed?

3. Does the government intend to distribute this fund among claimants therefor, and if so, when?

4. Has the Canadian government received any money from the United States government, direct or through the British government, under the sealing treaty made December 14, 1911, between the United States of America, Great Britain, Russia or Japan, and if so, what amounts have been received?

5. Does the Canadian government contemplate action on behalf of Canadian citizens interested, similar to chapter 308 of the acts of the sixty-eighth congress of the United States of America, passed June 7, 1924, conferring jurisdiction on the United States district court of California, northern division to adjudicate claims of American citizens for restraining their actions in sealing in 1886 to 1896, under which, awards were made to American citizens?

6. Is it the intention of the Canadian government that any of the moneys referred to in connection with sealing operations, shall be distributed to Canadian citizens who sustained losses by reason of the matters referred to in the arbitration, conventions and treaties above mentioned?

7. If so, what steps are being taken to that end?

Mr. BENNETT: This question in any event would have to stand as an order for return, Mr. Speaker. The question of distribution raised in the second paragraph is rather a long story, but if just a summary is required it can be provided.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as an order for return.

Mr. PLUNKETT:

1. What amount of money has been received from the United States government under the Pelagic sealing treaty of 1911 for each calendar year up to December 31, 1930, inclusive?

2. Were there any omissions of payments in any years between 1911 and 1930, and if so, for what reasons did such omissions occur?

Mr. BENNETT: Question No. 37, Mr. Speaker, should stand as an order for return. If all the details from 1911 to 1930 are to be furnished it will be a rather lengthy document.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as an order for return.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the light of information given the house by the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Bennett), regarding this question, showing that there were many thousands of such petitions, and the impracticability of giving copies of all, it would be quite satisfactory to me to have this order discharged now. I will substitute a much less comprehensive order later on.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank the hon. gentleman.

IMPORTATION OF OIL OR OIL PRODUCTS

Mr. YOUNG:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between any or all of the Canadian oil refining companies and any department of the government in regard to the importation of oil or oil products.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, with respect to this motion, I would point out that under the statutes certain correspondence would be of a confidential nature, namely, that which passed between the inspector general and the banks. Subject to that reservation, the return will be tabled.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry with the reservation made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett)?

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. CARDIN:

For a copy of all contracts, agreements or understandings, between the Montreal harbour commission and the provincial government of the province of Quebec, and the city of Montreal, determining the contribution to the cost of the Montreal harbour bridge of the two last named.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, copies of communications, by-laws, resolutions and orders in council indicate understandings. There can be no such thing as an understanding except it be evidenced by some form of document, and I think the hon. member should strike out the words "or understandings." He not being in his place, the motion might well stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member in whose name this motion stands not being in his seat, the motion will stand.

Mr. BENNETT: The same thing might be said as to obtaining information from the Montreal harbour commission. We can only get that information from them and cannot be responsible for more than we receive.

Motion stands.

FEDERAL STATE MEDICINE

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I commenced the practice of medicine some twenty-seven years ago it was in a suburb across the river from Winnipeg. The residents of this suburb were of the labouring class and were not very well off. It may be that a few of them found no difficulty in balancing the family budget, but I fancy the vast majority had to struggle pretty hard with the essential problems of life.

Those were the old typhoid days, this disease commencing about midsummer and running on past midwinter. There was no question about the doctors being occupied, they were kept busy from the onset of these epidemics until the disease petered out, at which time other infections occupied their attention. These epidemics were a severe test of the resources of such districts as that in which I practised. Sickness is always a deplorable matter to be faced by any household; there is always the immediate possibility of the expense of putting a patient in a hospital, there is the cost of medicine and sickroom supplies, the procuring of nursing help and one thing and another. If by any chance the patient happens to be the breadwinner, there is the double disadvantage of having no funds coming in during the time of sickness. On several occasions men have said to me after a sickness lasting from six to twelve weeks that they were not very anxious to get better, they did not see why one would want to get better when so far behind because of his illness and with no possible chance of catching up. In such circumstances when the patient himself is behind financially and is not in a state of health to take up the burdens of life, no medical man can expect him to come forward with medical fees when he is unable to purchase bread, butter and potatoes. In those days it occurred to me frequently—it may be that the wish was father to the thought—that some controlling body, be it the municipality, the city council, the province or anything you like, might very readily establish some system of public health service which would include care of and attendance on those people, thereby securing and guaranteeing an efficient medical service for such cases as those I have mentioned, and at the same time giving the medical man a living wage. At that time I little dreamed that I would ever bring such a matter as this to the attention of this honourable house. But though, as the years went by, there was not the same, shall I say consideration, for the necessity of state medicine, still I have always felt it would be a splendid thing, whether of a provincial or a federal nature, for the people of Canada. So I am happy to-day to submit this resolution and my argument in connection with it.

In order to pursue the line of my argument, I shall have to follow pretty closely the written text. I trust in so doing I shall not transgress the rules of the house. The resolution standing in my name reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

In bringing such a matter to the attention of the house, one must necessarily make certain more or less hypothetical statements, the rationality of which, however, will, I trust be evident. Thus, the wealth of any country and particularly of this country was originally purchased, not by gold or silver but by the labour of the people. Efficient labour can be the product only of a strong and healthy body. The wealth of Canada must, therefore, depend on the health and strength of her people; that is to say, Canada's health is essentially Canada's wealth. I have travelled far enough afield to have had ample opportunity to realize the deep, inherited love I have for this land of my birth, the land also of my forbears; yet, notwithstanding the vast expanse of her domain, the fertility of her soil, the beauty of her lakes, the grandeur and majesty of her mountains, and the abundance of her natural resources in fish, timber, coal and minerals, I am bound to say that Canada was never a garden of Eden. No honest person who ever came here lived without toil. From the earliest days of Canada's history to the present, men of courage, men of resource, men of faith, men of industry, men strong in body and soul—these and these only have succeeded and have wrested from this great land of possibilities the treasure which has lain in her bosom. No weakling's country this, but a country for strong men and strong women, and if Canada is to make the best of her heritage we must see to it that her people are strong in intellect, strong in purpose, strong in body and limb.

Ill health and disease are neither necessary nor inevitable. The natural germ cell is not the subject of inherent disease. I emphasize the word "natural", for nature endeavours to give us all an even start. The vital principle of health that has come down to us through the ages is an integral part of the protoplasm of each living cell which, given a fair chance, shall surely prevail. The living cell begets cells of similar order and the inherent properties of the parent cell are transmitted to the offspring. It actually happens that the characteristics of the parent are reproduced in the child. Intelligent parents beget intelligent children; musical parents beget musical children, and the issue of healthy, sturdy stock in favourable surroundings will come into life blessed with similar strength and stamina. But if an individual be the product of an unhealthy father by an invalid mother, and begotten in an atmosphere of poverty and distress, one can appreciate the unfair start with which such an offspring commences life. From the beginning of history to the comparatively recent past, survival of the fittest was the rule of life. Weakling babies seldom survived; delicate children often failed to mature, and at best fell far short of the allotted span. As late as the middle of the last century cholera claimed its victims in Canada by the hundred; smallpox wiped out whole communities; diphtheria left homes bereft of children. Each summer dozens of babies perished. Typhoid fever was more fatal in time of war than the attack of the enemy and in cases of severe scarlet fever one could but sit helplessly by and look for a certain and speedy demise. None but the strong, the sturdy, the virile, might, once taken, hope to escape death in those former fierce ravages of disease, and many of the best were carried away.

Now all this has changed. We hear no more of cholera. Smallpox now is but a mild disease, and though still seen, seldom destroys life. The same thing is true of other diseases. By the march and conquest of medical science all these formerly dread forms of disease have been shorn of their terror and tragic import. By isolation, vaccination, immunization, improved technique and methods of diagnosis, by a vastly enhanced knowledge of the cause and nature of disease, and by many wonderful curative discoveries, the human race is now highly protected from the onslaughts of disease, and the weakling, the susceptible and the predisposed find themselves almost as secure as their sturdy and more robust fellows.

Mr. BENNETT: From everything but common colds.

Mr. HOWDEN: Some day we shall prevent them too. Our social structure is now faced with a dual responsibility for having provided measures which make it possible for a class to survive which would formerly have perished. We must complete the work of transforming them into valuable, healthy citizens able to bear their share of the common responsibility, and not leave them at a point where they are a misery to themselves and a burden to those who must bear their load.

The business of living is a fairly big job for most of us. So keen is the contest, so arduous the struggle for success, or for even a mere livelihood, that a frail body or a neurasthenic mentality is a great handicap. If the greatest need of the state is health, then the greatest effort of the state should be directed towards securing the health of its people. If it has become possible for a defective portion of the population to reach maturity, to marry and produce others of like kind, it should be the object and duty of the state to adopt measures which will ensure their elimination.

Can this be done? I would say, yes without a doubt. By the adoption of a national health policy, a policy of health insurance for the nation big enough and broad enough to include all; a policy that will provide for the control, direction and care of the health of the Canadian people. The state now protects our bodies from injury and our property from damage by suitable bodies of police. The state prescribes and supervises our education to make of us reasonable citizens fit for the business of living. But of what avail is system of police to shield us from material injury if we are not protected from a more subtle and deadly enemy, the enemy of disease? Of what value is an ample education if we have not the health and strength to grapple with the daily struggle for existence?

Surely the provision of an adequate measure for the control and direction of the health of the Canadian people would be in the best interests of Canada. Provision by various governing bodies for the care of the sick and the health of the community at large is no novel idea. Some form of health control has been in vogue since the time of Moses, but a more modern, scientific development of service has now come into existence, especially in Europe and North America. The most notable examples of this are the health departments to be found in urban centres and in rural municipalities. These have developed along the regulation lines of sanitation, epidemiology, vital statistics, and laboratory facilities. In this country these departments are headed by a health officer, a duly qualified medical man, whose duties are chiefly supervisory; but where there is sickness in a community and its victims are unable to provide for their own medical attendance, it is his office to attend them or to deputize another to render that service. In Canada all the provinces have a well-appointed board of health whose sphere of activity is, of course, provincial. It applies especially in such isolated and undeveloped districts as are without regular municipal health control. In connection with these areas the county health units have come into being. Municipalities with a small and scattered population which could not of themselves support the regular health departments unite to form one of these health units. The cost is shared three ways—by the province, by the Rockefeller Foundation, and by the municipalities forming the unit. The service parallels that of the ordinary municipal health board to which has been added of late pre-school child clinics, the inspection of school children, pre-natal and post-natal advice to mothers, the detection and treatment of tuberculosis, and general health education work, chiefly carried on by public health and district nurses.

The Dominion of Canada has a Department of National Health. Its health work is coupled with the medical care of returned soldiers and with soldiers' pensions. So far as public health matters are concerned the scope of the department is along very general lines, lending itself to the institution and enforcement of effectual quarantine regulations, research along health lines, control of tuberculosis and venereal disease, the provision and enforcement of regulations controlling the sale and distribution of narcotic drugs.

Besides the foregoing, there are in this country and in some of the American states many schemes of group medical attendance and health insurance. Here we might point to the sick benefits of the fraternal societies, providing free attendance and cash benefits to their members. There are also industrial insurance, workmen's compensation boards, pay clinics, as well as several schemes of commercial health and accident insurance, sold by companies regularly organized for the purpose. One should not forget to mention the excellent work being done by organizations like the Shriners, the Rotarians, and others in providing hospital care and other forms of relief for various classes of sufferers, but whereas each and all of these bodies have done splendid service in this country, each and all of them combined fail in affording that degree of control and relief which would be in the best interests of all the people.

Schemes for national health insurance have been general throughout Europe for years, and have been under the consideration of many American states and several provinces of Canada. They vary somewhat in detail, but have their main points in common. These are: (a) The funds are raised by a three-party contribution; (b) the benefits are restricted to the wage-earning classes; (c) both medical and cash benefits are provided. I believe that they have proven to be very satisfactory, and in England one of the oldest was so reported to be by a royal commission which was appointed to inquire into the matter. But to me, sir, they are lacking notably in two respects. First, they apply to but a portion of the population, to the wage-earners. Secondly, they attack the problem from the wrong angle. I would add that in the third place that what we should actually aim at is health assurance rather than health insurance. I firmly believe that the former is the business and duty of the government of the country. That that is true of the latter I am by no means so sure. If the state were to adopt a measure of unemployment insurance, something which is being widely mooted at the present time, there would be little need for health insurance. I would say that the only satisfactory system of state medicine would be a system of health insurance which would insure, or guarantee as far as possible, the health of all of us. Efficient medical service has been much modified in recent years. Time was when the doctor would feel your pulse, look at your tongue and then prescribe. Fortunately those days are past. In the last few decades many wonderful aids to diagnosis and the treatment of disease have been devised. Many of these are elaborate and expensive.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. HOWDEN: Yes, "hear, hear." The public however, rich and poor alike, have been educated to appreciate their value and to demand their application. Unfortunately, to have the advantage of these aids to health is a costly matter which is in no way the fault of the doctor. The result is that the well to do who have ample money are not affected by the cost of medical service, and the cost is of no great importance to them. The poorer classes, those who attend the hospital out-door department and find their way into the open wards, obtain their medical attendance free of charge, and for that reason the cost is of no moment to them. There is a class, a large class which ranges between the well to do and those who cannot possibly pay for the cost of medical care, who prefer to engage their own doctor and to pay their own expenses. So greatly has the cost of this medical attention increased in recent years that it is often extremely difficult to obtain such aid, and not infrequently following a long illness those people are financially crippled, perhaps for life. This class represents a majority of our citizens. They are the people who form the basis of our society; they are our smaller business men, our tradesmen, our clerks, our railway men, our farmers and so on. They are the people who actually carry on the business and develop the wealth of the country. Surely if the state owes a service to any it cannot afford to neglect them. For these reasons I would have state medicine accessible to all so that this class might benefit from its operation. I have suggested before that the existing forms of the adminstration of state medicine failed to attack the problem from the right angle. The error however is not peculiar to them, it is general. The practice is to call a doctor only when we are sick. Often the doctor is called only when we are very sick and too often when the illness is too far advanced to mend. A system of periodic physical examination would discover early stages of disease which could often be checked and entirely removed, the person being saved from a lengthy and costly illness, and perhaps from death. These examinations would bring to light many mild defects in children such as big tonsils, bad teeth, adenoids, rickets and defective eyesight, the elimination of which would tremendously enhance the health and prospects of the individual. On the other hand the venereal menace could no longer hide behind shame or criminal indifference. Such assistance would replace and do away with all existing systems. It should be infinitely more effectual and much less costly, depending more largely on prevention than on cure, and eliminating overlapping. It should aim to direct and control the health of the whole nation; that is, it should be nation wide in its application. To be nation wide it would have to be national. It should be contributory and compulsory, requiring at least once yearly an exact enumeration and record of the people of the country who would be required by law to report for regular periodic examination. This is the first phase of the scheme, the other of course is the actual attendance on sick persons. To defray the cost of administration a regular percentage tax would be collected from the earnings or income of every wage earner, salary earner and person in receipt of income. This would entitle the contributor and his or her dependents to all the benefits of a system which would be uniform for all. The actual medical work could be carried on by the plan now obtaining with the workmen's compensation boards. Or the government could provide a list of medical men and women regularly trained and qualified for the various services. These trained people would act conjointly in the form of a loose clinic. The list should provide a wide range of choice, but any person wishing special service and attention not provided for by the system could obtain the same. Of course such service would be at his own expense. The system could be administered by specially set up governmental machinery or by a system of boards resembling the provincial compensation boards. Indeed, the two might be combined.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a rough sketch imperfectly set forth of a scheme for universal national health assurance. Doubtless it is open to grave criticism and it may not appeal to the serious consideration of many hon. members. Certain it is however there is need for improvement in the application of our most excellent science of medicine, and I can think of no better plan.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words concerning the resolution before the house. I think the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) is to be congratulated on bringing his resolution before this body. It seems to me that the subject of health insurance is as important as that of life insurance if indeed it is not more so. Throughout Canada to-day there are thousands of people trying to sell life insurance policies, but so far in the parliament of Canada the subject of public health has not been pressed as it should have been. To-day health is largely in the hands of private monopoly. I refer particularly to the care of health or cure of sickness. Although we are only too glad to pay a compliment to that large body of men, the medical profession, at the same time we place them in an invidious position, when we wait until we become sick before we seek their advice and pay them for it. It seems to me that the procedure at present followed is entirely the reverse of what it should be. Some years ago a medical practitioner in the legislature of Alberta said, "The trouble is that you are paying doctors only for making people well, and not for keeping them well. When you reverse that process you will have a lot less sickness." To-day the doctor knows full well that if all people are well and he is not called upon to make them well he will receive no pay. This being so, he would not be human if at times he felt rather relieved when there was a certain amount of sickness prevalent. As the preceding speaker has said, we should pay our medical practitioners for keeping people well rather than for making them well. Some years ago when the panel system was adopted in Great Britain there was a great outcry from the medical profession, but I am glad to say that to-day most medical practitioners are entirely in favour of it.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, health is equally as important as education, if not more important, for without health education is quite a secondary consideration. Health treatment to-day is limited to the depth of the individual's purse, and we find that during hard times the greater proportion of the people are not in a position financially to have themselves or their families medically attended. No one wishes to be a pauper, no one wishes to have recourse to charity, and yet during this economic depression more and more of our people who have the misfortune to become sick must rely on charity in one form or another. Rather than do this they will put off calling for advice from the doctor until often times it is too late. I understand that sickness costs Canada about $311,000,000 a year, 93 per cent of which is borne by the individual. I am informed by medical men that death from such diseases as diphtheria, typhoid, tuberculosis, is preventable if the patient is medically treated at an early stage of the disease.

I have under my hand some extraordinary figures showing the seriousness of sickness from a national standpoint. During the period of bringing into effect the Military Service Act there were 465,984 voluntary enlistments. Of these nearly 45,000 were stricken off the rolls as medically unfit. Of the balance, some 300,000 odd, General Sir Arthur Currie, speaking in Montreal on September 12, 1924, before the Taxation and Civil Service Convention, said:

> Something like 100,000 men went overseas who were physically unfit for service, and cost the country some $150,000,000.

Coming now to the Military Service Act period, the total number of applicants for enlistment was 264,355. Of this number only 83,355 were accepted, and 181,000, or 68 per cent, were rejected. I feel confident that had we had throughout Canada a proper public health service such a condition would not have existed. Quoting from a pamphlet published a year or so ago by the Canadian Council of Child Welfare, I read:

> Of 232,205 children born in Canada last year 7,091 were still-born; 23,671 died before their first birthday; 30,973 died before their fifth birthday; 1,314 mothers died in childbirth. The greater number of these deaths were preventible.

May I conclude these remarks by quoting a statement made by the present Prime Minister during the course of a discussion last session on the question of the necessity of full-time health units throughout Canada, a subject very similar to that covered by this resolution. He said:

> Touching the necessity for the establishment of health units, nothing need be said. I think the case is complete and almost answered before it is stated.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree, and I very heartily support the resolution brought forward by the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Mr. L. W. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton-North-Victoria): I desire, Mr. Speaker, to compliment the mover of the resolution on bringing the subject before the house, for undoubtedly it is of very great importance and deserving of very serious consideration. It is too large a question to be answered offhand, but federal state medicine is in the foreground, and I certainly think the time is coming when something along these lines will have to be undertaken federally for the benefit of our people. We have made great strides in medicine during recent years, but the advance has for the most part been in the treatment of disease by the use of serums, a treatment which does not come within the reach of the man of ordinary means. I find in practice that many of our hospitals are too expensive to be taken advantage of by many of our people. Several of our provincial governments are considering the question of health protection, and in Nova Scotia a department of health has been established. The minister in charge is organizing district boards of health, composed of medical men, to look after the health of those who are unable to pay for medical attendance. As I said before, I think the matter deserves our very serious consideration, and again I compliment the hon. member on introducing his resolution.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, the mover of this resolution (Mr. Howden) has put before us in a striking way the great importance of national health. Its importance has not been fully appreciated in the past, but to-day it is pretty generally recognized that the health of the people is a matter of first consideration, and that disease means national disaster. The education of the people in health matters is steadily advancing, and we ought not to forget what is being done in this direction. I do not suggest that everything is being done that might be done, far from it, but the fact is that persistent work is being carried on in the prevention of sickness. We must not lose sight of all the benefit societies which assist in care of sickness—the benevolent societies, corporations, companies, social workers and various other organizations whch arrange for the medical care of the people, particularly the poorer sections of the community. I am not putting that forward as a broad, comprehensive plan or as being sufficient. There it is, however. It is useful, and so we have it at the present time.

The mover in his resolution suggests that it is in the interests of this country to have federal state medicine. As we know, state medicine has been instituted and has grown in the European countries. Not so very long ago it was instituted in Great Britain—1911, I think it was. But it has not yet reached the American continent to any considerable extent. It has developed in the older countries because, there, there are such large communities among whom poverty is greater than it is in Canada. But it is coming to Canada; I believe the people are beginning to accept the idea that we shall have some plan of state or organized medicine. I do not say, with the mover, that this will include the whole population. I do not think so. But that is merely one phase of the question. There are many proposals with respect to state medicine, including or excluding many varieties that are being put forward. But with respect to the general question, I have sympathy with the idea of medical treatment being provided in some organized way for those who require it. I do not suggest that it come under the Dominion government. I am supporting and I am sympathetic with the idea that there should be a system of medical treatment in this country for those who need it. Whether it shall be provided by the provincial government or by the federal government, or by a combination of the two, is a different matter. At the present time, as we know, hospitals are under the control of the provincial governments. Similarly, nursing and medical qualifications and board of health requirements are all under provincial control. The mover of the resolution has not discussed the question why it should be placed under the federal government. We must have regard—if I may whisper the word—to the British North America Act, which I know is always suggested as the last resource. I do not think it is the last resource. There must be something laid down, recognized and accepted, as to whose responsibility it is. At the present time, I would submit, this matter is largely under the provincial governments. The federal government is concerned with certain health measures, but ordinary medical care is at present under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. There is no doubt about that, and that is a point which would need to be considered.

There is also the question of cost to be considered. Even supposing it were a federal undertaking, what would the cost be? Nothing has been said with respect to this question, although my hon. friend to my right has given some indication of the loss. Whether it was the economic loss or the actual cost of medical treatment I am not quite clear.

I may direct the attention of the house to the proceedings, in relation to this question, of two sessions of a special committee—the industrial and international relations committee, I believe—and I would commend a reading of those proceedings of 1928 and 1929, which I have myself very recently gone through. They give some important information. I believe that in many particulars very excellent evidence was given at those two sessions of the special committee. But what I do refer to is the enormous cost, not only the loss through sickness, but the consequent cost which would devolve upon the country were the federal government to undertake such a system. That, of course, is an important question of policy for the government. At the present time the matter is under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments and I do not suggest in any way making any change in that regard. I do think that we can do much in the provision of treatment for those who need it, but that does not necessarily come as a federal measure. The mover has brought the matter forward very well, although I will not say he has done so fully; the question is such a vast one that it would not be possible to present it fully on this occasion. But it is a matter that must be fully understood by the country, and I believe the hon. member would serve his purpose quite well, having brought it to the attention of the house, to withdraw his motion.

Hon. RAYMOND MORAND (East Essex): If I may be permitted just a few words on this resolution, it certainly comes as a pleasant thing to be able to compliment a fellow doctor on the other side on a non-controversial subject on which we can both agree. The question of state medicine is undoubtedly but one phase of a much larger question, that of social security, which the people to-day are asking from the state. The question of unemployment and unemployable people and the question of state medicine are bound up pretty much into one larger problem, namely, the security which the people are looking for from the government because of the general change that has taken place in industrial conditions in the country.

Probably state medicine comes forward more now because of the fact that the cost of medicine has increased very materially. That cost is in no way due to the medical men; it is rather a reflection of the advance in the sciences. With that advance the cost has increased. There can be but one basic reason why we should discuss state medicine, and that would be to carry to the people of the country the full benefit of the advance that has been made in the science of medicine. And that advance is one which undoubtedly is becoming very costly. There has been a very larg increase in the cost of mechanical equipment. The cost of X-ray apparatus, of laboratory supplies, of laboratory applications and of specialty aid in diagnosis, has become so great as to be almost beyond the means of the average individual. Consequently, the principal argument upon which state medicine can be based is that because of the inability of the people to receive the full benefit of these advances we must make some provision to give it to them.

One of the hon. members in this corner of the house made the statement that medicine was made available to the individual to the extent of his purse. To one who has practised medicine as long as I have among the labouring people, those who earn their daily bread, that remark certainly comes as a surprise because up to this time I believe a sincere effort has been made by medical practitioners to extend everything there is in medicine to the masses irrespective of whether or not they can pay for it. It is rather a strange thing that in this country, and in practically all America, we give more time and attention to the care of cattle, wheat, railroads, roads and most everything else than we do to health. The reason for that apparently is that the medical profession has up to this time made its own way and has succeeded very well in giving the attention needed by the individual. The question of the remuneration of the medical practitioner, while it may have a bearing on the matter of giving a proper return to the profession, is not the basis upon which state medicine can be argued. Considering the amount of time spent in acquiring the necessary knowledge, the amount of capital needed to enter practice and the amount of mental and mechanical effort required, the medical profession is to-day the poorest paid profession. It may be interesting to some of the legal profession, who have to listen to medical men once in a while, to know that it costs the city of Toronto just exactly five times as much to look after its legal affairs as it does to run its department of health. Of course, it will have to be left to the people to decide which is the more important.

This resolution opens up a very wide field and it certainly cannot be discussed in full in one day. The matter is being talked of in medical societies and among medical men all over Canada. There is a very general desire on the part of medical men to extend to the people generally the full benefit of the advances made in medical science and to make available all there is in medical science and in preventive medicine, which latter is by far the more important consideration, but much of this work is becoming so costly as to necessitate a complete revolution in the economics of medicine.

In industrial life to-day there is unknown ownership and distant control which does not furnish that paternal or fraternal care given to workers in the days when employers knew their employees and when they possessed that sense of responsibility which to-day is lacking. There is no doubt but that the people are looking to the state to bring about a proper organization, to evolve some way of regulating and making possible the application in a general way of all the advances of this science. To my mind, the question of cost does not enter into the matter. Once we admit the principle that the benefits of medicine must be extended to all people, whether paupers, rich or between the two, it becomes then simply a matter of transferring the cost from the individual to the state. It does not make a particle of difference what that cost is, it is a matter of distributing the cost and putting it upon those who are well able to stand it, instead of allowing it to rest upon those who cannot.

I believe it to be well worth the time of the house to discuss this matter, and personally I would like to see the question referred to a committee which could make a study of all its phases. Action should not be delayed; we must in the near future be able to extend to the people as a whole the benefits of all the advances which have been made in medicine.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden), I wish to make a few observations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is the hon. member a doctor?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I must ask the forgiveness of the house for my inability to express myself in the terms used by the medical men. If I understood him aright, I was rather surprised to hear the hon. Minister of National Health (Mr. MacLaren) say that this resolution should be withdrawn—if I did not understand him aright, then I stand corrected—in view of the fact that a resolution containing a similar principle was presented last year by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer), reading as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of making grants to the provinces equal to one-third the cost of establishing, and to cover permanently, such full time health units as may be organized.

Mr. MANION: That is a different matter.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There is not a great deal of difference between the principles contained in the two resolutions. If the federal government is not prepared to carry out this resolution to the fullest extent, probably it could offer some suggestion as to the making of grants to the different provinces which take up this matter.

As I said before, I was surprised at the hon. Minister of National Health suggesting that this resolution should be withdrawn, because in Hansard of March 3, 1930, I find some remarks of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). The motion which I have mentioned was under discussion, and in speaking as to the subsidies and grants by the federal government to the different provinces, he said:

Those subsidies were, in some instances based upon arbitrary considerations, in others on population. As time has gone on the provinces have received larger and larger grants from the federal exchequer. Why? Because the provinces are limited to direct forms of taxation, and the Dominion may raise taxes by any method or form of taxation. Therefore it follows that taxes can be raised much more readily by the Dominion taxing power, which has recourse to many sources of revenue, than by the provinces. The customs taxes in this country last year amounted to over $200,000,000. Those customs taxes were paid by all the people of Canada, and the Dominion government had the power to appropriate that sum of money to any purpose it thought to be of national interest.

Then further on he stated:

There are large sums of money appropriated to various purposes that are expended by the bodies into whose hands the moneys are entrusted without regard to the fact that they may not raise them because they have no taxing power.

This is another quotation:

Remember, it is national health, not provincial health. Keep this in mind: the province deals with the municipal situation, with smallpox and matters of that kind; the province deals with epidemics in the communities and in some cases with hospitalization. There is, however, a field in which the province may not, it seems to me, properly function, and that is the creation of national wealth by ensuring the health of the Canadian people.

Mr. BENNETT: That is about health units, a vastly different thing.

[Mr. Beaubien.]

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It was on the same principle.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I expected that the Prime Minister would say no.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the hon. member was not disappointed.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Further on the right hon. gentleman said:

To the extent to which men are able to labour, free from disease, we have added to the national wealth; to the extent which citizens by studying preventive medicine obtain knowledge, from clinics and other methods, for which the nation might well pay, we have added to the national wealth of Canada. . . . Would any appropriation that might be made by this parliament to the provinces equal one-half the money represented by the loss to this country in one year through illness and inability of Canadians to work? . . .

But no province can undertake to deal with the subject of health as a problem concerning the nation as a whole, and one affecting the creation of greater national wealth in the truest and broadest sense I have mentioned, unless they have a grant in aid from this parliament.

Further on he said:

Let us approach this problem, not as a problem of jurisdiction, not as a problem as to whether or not under the British North America Act it is a matter of provincial responsibility; let us look upon it as a national problem. This parliament has the power to appropriate any part of the national revenue for any purpose for the interest of Canada as a whole.

I offer those few observations because, when the Prime Minister was on this side of the house during the last parliament, he was always prepared to support any resolution of this character—for instance with respect to national highways—to state his reasons for so doing and to try to waive all the embarrassment which might exist in regard to the British North America Act. I was surprised—and I say this in all sincerity—to hear the Minister of National Health to-day suggest that this resolution should be withdrawn. I am pleased to second the resolution of my hon. friend and I think it should receive from the house the careful consideration which its importance justifies.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): I would like in a very few words to support the general principle of this resolution, although I believe its main purpose should be achieved in an entirely different way.

The object of the resolution will be endorsed by hon. members of the house and the people of Canada. It is to extend to every individual the very best that medical science has produced. I am glad to know that the minister has given a good deal of sympathetic consideration to the resolution. As he says, the medical men of Canada have not been asleep in bringing forward what they have learned, and that has been done in an educational way. I shall not repeat the various things that have been done in that respect because they are already on Hansard. May I mention, however, that the press of the country has done much to warn people of danger signs and to give publicity to late discoveries with respect to medical care and treatment. The various medical associations of Canada have also done much in an educational way to bring to the attention of the people those urgent problems affecting health and medical care which are of general public interest. Not only have the medical associations given free service—seldom if ever have they refused to give medical service where it was required—but they have gone into the educational field as well in a sincere effort to fight the ill-health which is prevalent in this country as in all others.

Instead of having one large new organization to bring about the desired result, I believe it should be obtained by gradual extension of present services. We should start with the institutions and methods which we now have and which have stood the test of time, and gradually extend them until our objective has been achieved. In the various provinces we have workmen's compensation boards looking after injuries to workmen. They could be extended to look after the health of workmen. We have some municipalities paying for the full time services of doctors. That might be extended to other municipalities. We have, as has been mentioned, various contracts, such as the railway contracts, which provide for medical attention to the employees in both accident and sickness. While believing that this resolution is one well worthy of the attention of the house, I suggest to the mover this way of bringing about the desired end, not by the creating of one large new organization, but rather by gradually extending the services that are already in operation.

Mr. I. D. COTNAM (North Renfrew): I listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) who moved the resolution. He deserves the gratitude of hon. members on both sides of the house for bringing this very important matter before parliament. Possibly what appealed to me most in his observations was that they were purely of an academic character; he did not advance proposals which might take definite form in the minds of hon. members. We in the medical profession are intensely interested in problems of public health. Those whose profession calls them constantly to the bedside of the sick and the suffering realize to the full what ill health means to the great mass of the people.

For the purposes of this resolution I would divide the people into those who are poor, the indigent class; the middle classes, and those who are more well-to-do, the wealthy classes of our citizens. It seems to me that under our present system the poorer class of people receive just as good medical treatment as the wealthier classes. Through our municipal organizations and public health boards, through our provincial organizations and our hospital services, through the free services that medical men give, the poorer class of citizens are receiving treatment to-day probably as cheaply in Canada as in any other country in the world. No sick man or woman in Canada to-day, no matter how poor, need fail to receive the requisite treatment at the hands of the medical fraternity and in our hospitals if they will only apply for the service. I make this statement without fear of contradiction from any part of the house, that fully forty per cent, possibly fifty per cent, of all the medical treatment supplied in hospitals to-day by our medical men is furnished gratis; the medical men ask no remuneration for it, yet in respect to such service they give to mankind the very best of which they are capable.

The class of people who are suffering most under our system of medicine are the so-called poorer middle class, those who cannot and do not and will not accept free treatment, who do not wish to be classed as charitable and indigent cases, who are endeavouring and will endeavour, in some way or other, to pay their way in the world. They are the people, it seems to me, to whom some measure of state medicine, or assistance a little different from what we have at the present time, should be given under some system such as is now proposed. For my part I should like to see this subject studied very carefully in order that this class of people may secure, at not too great cost to themselves, adequate medical treatment in times of physical suffering and illness and distress. On that account I think that the federal authorities will have to assume some share in the responsibility for dealing with this whole question.

Unfortunately sickness and disease never stop at geographical boundaries, municipal, county, provincial, or even national. They affect our whole people, and if at the present time we have not jurisdiction under the British North America Act to deal with this question, it seems to me that some way should be found, possibly by an amendment to that act, whereby parliament would be enabled to act. It would seem that in our fight against sickness and disease our attack has been more or less of a desultory character, that the efforts of the provincial and federal authorities have not been as closely coordinated as they should have been.

I would remind the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien), who spoke a moment ago, that when on the 17th of March, 1930 I introduced a resolution in this house asking for federal control over the supply and distribution of radium in the treatment of cancer, the federal Minister of Health in the government of that day crawled out from under the resolution by taking a similar attitude and saying that it was a provincial, and not a federal matter. It does seem to me that some system or method could be worked out whereby these great problems could be met by the whole Canadian people, and whereby the federal Department of Health would be enabled to cooperate with the provincial health authorities and other organizations in the fight against sickness and disease.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary) As this seems to be a field day for the medical men, Mr. Speaker, I shall offer a few comments on the resolution which has been introduced by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden).

There can be no question that the distribution of the cost of sickness is a big problem, and one which affects a large proportion of the population. In listening to the address of the mover of the resolution, one could not help but feel that the argument he made in support of the view that the whole nation should stand behind what is so important a consideration to our whole population should receive the assent of hon. members who in this house represent the people of the country generally.

It is not a question, as I understand it, of objection to the scientific progress which medicine has been making, or to the nature of the treatment being given to those who are ministered to by the medical profession. The big problem behind it all is the cost of sickness and its distribution. When we consider that in this country it is estimated that there are continuously 250,000 people in bed from sickness, and that including that 250,000 there are 400,000 disqualified from attending to their business, we can see that sickness is a big problem, and that its cost is a very serious consideration.

[Mr. Cotnam.]

The medical director of the Rosenwald foundation made a thorough investigation of the cost of sickness in the United States. To summarize his report, he estimated that about 25 per cent of the total cost of sickness is accounted for by medical fees, 30 per cent by hospital charges, 25 per cent by drugs, equipment and so forth; and then, coming to the cost of preventive measures used in the United States—and I presume about the same percentage would apply in this country—he estimates the proportion of the cost for preventive measures at one-thirteenth of the total. Taking that figure as correct for Canada, it would mean that the various preventive measures taken by the federal, provincial and municipal governments account for one-thirteenth of the total cost. Then it has also been estimated that at least one-eighth of our population are receiving, without charge, medical attendance at the hands of the medical profession. Financially speaking we have a big problem on our hands when we begin to take medical care or our population over and above the one-thirteenth which is being provided for at the present time by preventive measures.

In considering the practice of medicine generally I think we might divide the subject into two headings: first, preventive and second, curative. Under the heading of preventive medicine we may take all the measures which are undertaken by federal, provincial and municipal authorities. Let us for a few moments consider their development. Going back a few years it will be recalled that there was a time when very few measures were taken by the state in any of its various divisions. These services, however, have been growing from time to time until at present a large list of undertakings is carried on by the municipalities or the provincial or federal governments. When we summarize the quarantine measures, the preventive measures, the clinics, the medical education and the various efforts which have been enumerated by the mover of this resolution, we have the total efforts which are included in this one-thirteenth of the cost. Under the preventive heading we see that the state deals with groups. Under the curative heading exactly the opposite is the case; here the medical practitioner deals with the individual. As I understand it, state medicine can and should be continued and every effort should be made to give all the assistance within the power of the state to measures for the prevention and alleviation of disease. I am fully convinced that if the state makes the best use of its preventive measures, extends the services which are being rendered at the present time, continues to develop along the lines upon which it has been developing and takes care of the demands which are increasing from day to day upon provincial, municipal and federal governments, a great service will be rendered to the people. How quickly we shall be able to pass beyond that point, and to the stage where curative measures will be extended to the individual by a physician controlled and directed by the state, is of course another problem altogether. A great service will be rendered if state legislation is passed which in its preventive measures will enlarge and widen the scope of the state, and which will extend to the people those very costly services which it is impossible for the individual to purchase for himself or for the individual practitioner to secure. Within the time of hon. members in this house I should think the municipal, provincial and federal governments would find themselves fully occupied in undertaking a great work of that kind. The state can extend its services, as soon as the people will provide by means of taxation the funds necessary for the expensive services required in an extension of state medicine; just so soon may state medicine develop.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the resolution under consideration reads as follows: "That, in the opinion of this house, a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people." I must congratulate the mover of this resolution because it places before the house a question of the utmost importance: the medical care of the health of the Canadian people. May I just state that this resolution, like many others which have been discussed in the house, does not conform with the provisions of the British North America Act. I think that all questions referring to health come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government rather than that of the Dominion government. However, considering the precedents established in this house—and we had evidence of this in the course of the emergency session, in September last, when certain amounts were appropriated not only to assist the provinces but also to carry on road work in order to build a national highway—I think that the mover was quite justified in submitting this question to the house so as to remind hon. members and the country at large that if there be, in Canada, or everywhere else, a service which is deserving of attention, it is that of a medical service as a help toward the conservation of our national health. Notwithstanding the fact, sir, that this resolution does not conform with our constitution and consequently should not be considered by the Dominion parliament, I am still of the opinion that the government should assist the provinces in establishing—as the Quebec Prime Minister did—health units in order to provide the people of each province with the necessary means to safeguard their health; I think the Dominion government, in concert with the provincial authorities, should aid in establishing health units throughout every county in Canada.

I entirely agree with the views of the hon. members on your right, sir, who stated that the Dominion government should contribute at least one third of the cost in defraying the expenses of these health units.

The tendency shown by all classes of society to claim assistance from the state when it is a question of preserving health, pensioning people who have no need of it—such as judges who receive salaries sufficient to provide for the future—as well as other people belonging to various classes of society who could economize so as not to be obliged to fall back on the state, in order to provide for the needs of their families when they die or become old, is very deplorable.

I make this slight digression in order to remind the members of the house as well as the country at large, that it is time to cease asking for assistance from the state for various purposes which cannot be constitutionally dealt with by the federal government. The Dominion parliament should cease once for all to encroach on the rights of the provinces.

We must first teach the people to live in a healthy state, and should they be without the necessary means to obtain medical care when sickness visits them, it is the duty of the state, but especially of the province, to assist these unfortunate people by giving them the necessary medical care in order that they may later render to society all the services expected from them.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Although the resolution deals with a measure of federal state medicine, I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the discussion has somewhat widened its scope. I believe the resolution should receive the earnest consideration of all members. I hesitate to disagree with the doctors, but I cannot allow to pass unchallenged the statement made by an hon. member on the other side—a doctor, I believe—to the effect that the poor of this country are looked after with respect to their health. In my own municipality in British Columbia— a municipality that I suppose is fairly similar to other municipalities in the province in regard to the character of its population—the medical examiner visits the schools once a year and examines all the children. Any who are found to need medical attention are given notices to take home. I believe I am safe in saying that at least seventy per cent of the children are found to need dental or nasal treatment, but not five per cent of the notices are heeded by the parents, simply because they have not the means to engage the services of a doctor or dentist.

This resolution to me is the cry of the common people, and I feel it should receive the favourable attention of the house. Personally, I am heartily in accord with its purpose, and I am pleased that it has been introduced.

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (North Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty accord with the purpose of the resolution and with the views expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). I do not think our children in the country school districts are as fortunately situated as those in our cities with respect to medical treatment. I am the medical examiner in a couple of country school districts. I make my examination twice a year. I advise certain treatment, but I regret to say that all too frequently the parents do not follow this advice, simply because they have not the means to engage a doctor. I think a measure of federal state medicine would be of great advantage to Canada. I do not suggest that such a measure should provide for payment of doctors' fees, but certainly unless the rural doctor looked after about a quarter of his patients free of charge, their health would be neglected. This condition of affairs should not be allowed to continue indefinitely. We provide for the education of our children, and the parent who fails to send his children to school renders himself liable to certain penalties. I regret to say that I have seen more children neglected medically than educationally. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) has a resolution on the order paper with respect to compulsory health insurance; I think the two resolutions might very well be combined and referred to a special committee for consideration and report.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from a Manitoba constituency, I, too, wish to take exception to the remark of the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) that in this country no sick person is denied medical attention if he asks for it. In certain portions of my constituency the people are so remotely situated that there is no possibility or opportunity of their asking for medical attention, let alone receiving it. In the newer sections especially there is a very great need for the extension of medical service. At the beginning of my campaign I learned that in certain parts of the riding all the children were born without the attention of a doctor or a midwife. As a consequence infant and maternal mortality is simply appalling. I may perhaps be able more clearly to bring home the situation to the house if I refer to an incident which happened up in the Fisher Branch section of my riding. About three years ago a settler was stricken with pneumonia. The lone Red Cross nurse journed over twenty-five miles to the sick man and transported him to the nearest railway station, where she had him placed on a flat car and brought him to the nearest hospital, about fifty miles away. This was done in a temperature of thirty-five below zero, and the poor man died before he reached the hospital.

Federally assisted medical service is urgently needed in my constituency, and I desire to thank the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) for introducing the resolution. If the federal government could in some way assist any scheme to improve the health of our people, it would be a decided advance socially, and they would earn the gratitude of all those who to-day are unable financially to secure proper medical attention. It seems to me that this resolution might well be accepted by the house and referred to a special committee for consideration and report. Possibly if we could not adopt a federal scheme of state medicine we might evolve some way whereby the Red Cross services in the outlying districts might be extended and assisted so that those people in Canada who need medical aid and are without it at the present time might obtain some assistance.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I wish to say just two or three words in regard to this resolution. It seems to me that the health of the people is the primary concern of government. Our people are our greatest national asset, and there is absolutely no doubt that there are thousands of families in Canada to-day going without adequate medical and hospital attention because they know they cannot afford it, and they will not see a docor so long as they can possibly attend to their work. This is certainly something to be greatly regretted and something that could be avoided by proper action on the part of the governments of the country. I want to say simply that this resolution as submitted, asking for a measure of state medicine, would be in the very best interests of the Canadian people and therefore has my heartiest approval

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I wonder if the attention of the house and of hon. gentlemen who have spoken in this debate has been directed to the resolution. The resolution reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

How many hon. members have considered the implications of that resolution? How many have considered its effect upon the existing provincial organizations, medical and otherwise? How many realize that it means the entire disbandment of the medical associations of the country of private practitioners, and the substitution therefor of the state as employer of all the medical men of Canada? How many have considered that? Yet that is what it means.

I hardly think it worth while referring to a statement made by an hon. member from one of the constituencies of Manitoba as to what I said last year with respect to health units. I have strongly supported assistance being given the provinces in their fight for health, and hon. members will observe in the estimates for this year that there is one grant not reduced—the grant for the Health department for venereal disease work, which work has been carried on by the federal and provincial authorities. To ask suddenly, after a few minutes debate in the afternoon, to change the whole theory upon which thus far in this country the medical profession has conducted its business is rather a large order. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden), with moderation, stated his case. No one disputes for a single moment that the nation's health is the nation's wealth. I indicated last year, as I have always said, that one of the great methods by which we may add to the nation's wealth is to curtail the sickness of its people. There are grave differences of opinion throughout Canada as to whether or not the medical service of this country should be nationalized. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) pointed out that whatever is done in this country must be the result of a gradual understanding by the people of what is involved; and if this motion were to pass in the form in which it now is, it is a direction to the government of Canada to proceed to nationalize the medical services of the country. That is what it means. The hon. gentleman has certainly given no reason to warrant that action being taken. It means that the Dominion of Canada sets itself up as the employer of all the medical men in the country, in control of all medical services. That is what the resolution means in the terms in which it reads. Are hon. gentlemen prepared to say yea to that? Do any of them desire to say yea?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the hon. gentleman is one who knows nothing of it.

Mr. REID: Thank you.

Mr. BENNETT: I say that in no censorious sense because the implications are such that no man, unless he has spent years studying it, can understand what it involves. In England medicine is not nationalized. Some people think it is, but what happens is this. With respect to certain undertakings, certain portions of the population and the state make contributions and the attendance of the panel doctor, is secured. Individuals are entitled to this by reason of the payments made. The medical men retained are paid out of the moneys contributed by employees, employers and the state. Sometimes in Canada, workmen pay one dollar a month, sometimes two dollars, and sometimes fifty cents. Most doctors in Canada have been company doctors and are familiar with what is involved in that work. Have hon. members contemplated what the effect would be of setting up the Dominion as a company and the medical men of the country as company doctors? Have they thought of that? That is what is involved, and I hope the hon. member will realize the advisability at least of not pressing this resolution to a vote. For certainly I do not think that the most ardent believer in state medicine in Canada is ready to vote yea to such a proposal to-day. What will happen and is happening will be a clear and, I trust, proper understanding of the whole situation as a result of the education which is being carried on now by the schools, the universities, and other organizations in various parts of the country which are trying to impress upon men and women the value of preventive medicine.

The most powerful address I have had the pleasure of reading on the subject was made by the late Lord Moulton—I had the pleasure also of discussing it with him—at the university of Leeds; and I heard the late president of the university of Pennsylvania say that it was by all odds the most forceful statement of the case that had appeared in our language. It dealt with preventive medicine and the effect of education. The theory of medicine has changed in the lifetime of even men of my age. The understanding of the germ theory, the operation and understanding of what is involved in preventive medicine in all its branches, has so changed the outlook of men upon medicine as to make those responsible for government realize their responsibility, first of all, to induce people to think in terms of their own wellbeing, by pointing out to them that disease is the result of a cause, an effect produced by a cause. Medical men, I know, will indicate to this house, as they have so frequently done, that causes are sometimes difficult to ascertain; and to the extent to which causes can be definitely ascertained, the diagnosis of the physician might as well be given antecedently to as after the disease. If it is antecedent, it is preventive, and disease does not occur. Yet, notwithstanding all our scientific knowledge and all the attainments of the years, the fact still remains that we have not been able to discover the germ of the common cold and isolate it and provide a remedy against it. The great Carnegie institute, the Rockefeller foundation, the Rosenwald foundation and others, have spent vast sums of money and paid for years the salaries of the most patient, thoughtful men in laboratories, and have not yet isolated that germ and provided against the recurrence of common colds. We have made a great advance with relation to diphtheria. You will be told to-day that to have any person die of diphtheria is practically an indictment of the judgment of the person under whose care the patient was. And they will tell you that smallpox, as the hon. member for St. Boniface has said, should be dealt with by vaccination. Yet day after day, in more countries than this, there is being carried on propaganda against vaccination—and very powerful is that propaganda too. Pneumonia has yielded to some extent to the treatment which medical men have discovered in the laboratories, and they have a serum that may bring about very beneficial results. Yet medical men in this house will tell you that it is not always possible to discover the cause of a disease from indications which should be infallible. so that there is uncertainty in diagnosis with the resultant death rates which we have in connection with most diseases. Instead of this great effort, instead of medical men vying with one another in an ambitious desire to excel—and I apprehend that this would include surgery as well—the suggestion is that we should substitute the state as the employer of all. This would be an experiment in socialism which has been carried out in no country in the world but one, and time has not permitted the results in that country being made known to mankind. Can we in this parliament this afternoon declare that Canada is to engage in such an experiment in socialism? I fancy the hon. member for St. Boniface did not intend us to say yea to-day to this resolution. He has very frankly discharged what he conceived to be a public duty; he has made known to this house his own views—that the increased cost of medical attendance and hospital service has made it impossible for the average man to secure the services which he should be able to command. A friend of mine pointed out the other day that his nursing services alone were costing something like $100 a week. The average man cannot pay that much. However, an effort is being made to reduce these charges. One of the greatest hospitals on the American continent has been making an earnest effort to reduce its charges for the very reason mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for St. Boniface. Other hospitals have followed the practice of charging all that the traffic will bear, of making the rich who are afflicted pay for the services rendered to the poor who are afflicted also. As perhaps this house knows, most of the great hospitals of Great Britain are maintained by voluntary efforts. A constant appeal is being made for the benefactions of those who can afford to give, and the scale upon which these institutions are carried on indicates how thoroughly the problem is appreciated by those who give their money for that purpose.

Without discussing the matter at length; without going into the legal difficulties in connection with the provincial and federal positions and endeavouring to define the relation of one to the other, I would suggest that we do not undertake to make a declaration of such far-reaching consequences without realizing fully what we are doing in the light of all the knowledge that can be secured. Knowledge upon this subject can be obtained, but it involves the studying of experiments and the reading of the histories of those countries that have adopted similar proposals on a small scale in some sections of their communities.

I hope the house will accept the view suggested by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw). It must be realized that we have two jurisdictions dealing with the same problem, the health of the people of the country. The municipality maintains its clinics in the schools for the purpose of ensuring that the teeth and tonsils of the youth of the country are so tested as to prevent the toxic conditions so often produced and having disastrous effects in later life. Then we have the civic hospitals maintained by the taxes paid by the people; we have the provincial boards of health, and the courts have held that the provinces may maintain such boards of health and upon the province alone rests that jurisdiction. We have a federal parliament with power to appropriate to any purpose it may desire the moneys which it collects, and it has given liberal grants in aid of medical education in the large sense of the term, and to assist in the discharge of very onerous responsibilities, to that extent lessening the obligations of the municipalities and provinces.

These matters are not free from legal difficulty. Just a few hours ago the courts in Saskatchewan held that a statute which had been passed in connection with a one hundred per cent pool was ultra vires of the provincial legislature. By passing a statute based on this resolution we would be inviting litigation, because the people are not ready, nor are the medical men themselves ready, to adopt this proposition with all the attendant difficulties which would follow. The hon. member for St. Boniface, a medical man, stated his case with great precision this afternoon, so that we have one medical man who is convinced that the only remedy for the difficulty to which he refers is state medicine, so-called; but that is a far cry from concluding that it is the only remedy to effectuate the end he has in view, the accomplishment of that end by legislation. To pass this resolution this afternoon would be tantamount to saying to the government of the day: You must enact such legislation.

We are not at the present moment prepared to discuss completely the subject matter of the resolution and as the question will become more and more a subject for discussion I trust that every hon. member will in the meantime endeavour to make himself familiar with the points involved in the enactment of any legislation based upon a motion such as that which the hon. member has introduced.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) should have sought to dispose of an important question like this by reading into the resolution what an ordinary man could not possibly find in it. The resolution reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

I cannot understand how the Prime Minister can possibly say that that means or would involve the entire disbandment of the medical associations.

Mr. BENNETT: What else does it mean?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It does not seem to me that this resolution involves anything of that kind. It suggests only that something in the way of state medicine would be desirable, and I submit that there exists in a number of countries a measure of state medicine. It does not mean that we would be sweeping away all the private practitioners, nor does it go so far as to say that we should have a full-fledged state medical scheme; it is a tentative suggestion put forward that something should be started.

The impression has been given that the mover of this resolution (Mr. Howden) is more or less alone among medical men in suggesting what he does in his resolution. I know in my own city of Winnipeg medical men have been considering the whole field and have come to the conclusion that something of this kind is eminently desirable. It is not my intention to attempt to make a speech on the subject, but I should like to point out that those who have preceded me are in my judgment absolutely correct when they say that under modern conditions the ordinary worker as well as the lower paid salaried man is not in a position to pay the costs involved to-day in hospital treatment or in the obtaining of proper medical services. That is one of the reasons why medical men throughout the country are beginning to feel that something must be done. Superintendents of hospitals are coming to that conclusion and, speaking as one who has been in very close contact with the poorer people, I would say that to-day sickness is becoming more and more dreaded simply because the people cannot afford to look after their loved ones when sickness appears.

I know that many medical men give a great deal of free service, and I think all honour should be given to them in that regard, but there are many people who are not able even to go to the doctor in such a case. You cannot expect a medical man to give his best service indefinitely without having some financial arrangement made with regard to matters of this kind.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is not fair to expect that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, and there are to-day in the western provinces large areas where great numbers of people live in districts in which they cannot obtain medical services. There are volunteer hospitals, some of them operated under missionary societies, which are threatened with being forced to close because of the difficulty of maintaining them during this period of depression. This would mean that large numbers of people would be entirely without medical services.

The question is, however, not merely one of helping the individual man or woman back to health; there is the larger question of general prevention of disease to which the Prime Minister has referred. A few days ago there came into my hands through the mail a pamphlet from the Canadian Social Hygiene Council—other members may have received it—containing statements as to the seriousness of the present situation. Let me give just a few of these statements:

Canadian statistics dealing with sickness indicate that over half of all disabling illness could be prevented!

Again:

Of the population of Canada, 30 per cent are adult males; 30 per cent are adult females.

It is thus estimated that 54,000 adult males are continuously ill. This amount of illness would suggest that in the adult male population alone there are lost each year 16,200,000 working days.

Calculations show that, for every twenty males gainfully employed, there are approximately six females similiarly employed. This would suggest that, in addition, the female population loses 4,800,000 working days per year.

Total loss per year—21,000,000 working days, at least 50 per cent preventable.

Superfluous loss per year—10,500,000 working days.

And again:

It is important to bear in mind that the resultant cost must be reckoned not only in terms of loss of pay to employees, but also in terms of diminished output, disorganization of industry and other economic results.

Let us look at the monetary cost of sickness:

Sickness and premature death cost us $1,311,000,000 annually.

I am giving the figures as they are recorded in this pamphlet. The statement is an astonishing one which we cannot pass over without giving it serious consideration. In regard to the monetary cost of illness the pamphlet has this further to say:

Capital Investment, etc., as a result of sickness,

Total number of
General public hospital beds in Canada	36,523
Asylum beds	26,862
The sanitarium beds	5,655
Department Pensions and National Health	3,614
Others—maternity, orthopedic, private, isolation, etc.	4,391
Total hospital beds	77,045
Capital investments:
Hospitals, asylums, sanataria	$ 241,202,000
Total expenditures—yearly:
Hospitals, asylums, sanataria	51,406,000

These expenditures are merely institutional costs, they do not include private medical, nursing, or similar costs. And in addition, there are, of course, innumerable philanthropic institutions, homes, refuges, etc.

In view of the enormous cost of sickness to-day and in view of the statements that we have been receiving from medical men with regard to the difficulty of maintaining institutions and ministering to the sick, this seems to be a question which ought to receive the attention of this house. I know we can be told, as we have again been told by the Prime Minister that there are constitutional difficulties in connection with this matter—as indeed there are with so many; but in such a serious matter, surely some way can be found of overcoming these constitutional difficulties.

I should like to endorse the suggestion made by a previous speaker that even this year we might have appointed a special committee that would make a study of the question. I know we cannot immediately institute a scheme of the kind proposed, but we can do our part in the house by making inquiries as to what has been done elsewhere, as to the needs here and as to what it is possible for us to do under the circumstances. I could wish that the Prime Minister, instead of throwing cold water on the proposal, had suggested that at least something of this kind be done in order that we might take our share in carrying on the educational work which everyone realizes is necessary. I want to compliment the medical men in the house for passing outside of the narrower confines of their profession and urging that there should be more adequate provision for public health.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I would like to say just a few words, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the resolution moved by the hon. member for St.

Boniface (Mr. Howden). The resolution reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

I would take it from the reading of that resolution that the hon. member for St. Boniface would not want to go the whole way with regard to national control of medicine; that the wise method would be to begin in a small way and develop the measure he urges to national proportions. I think there are just three positions which we can take in a matter of this kind. First, we could take our municipal health units or organizations which are linked up with our provincial health organizations and find out the possibilities of those health organizations, municipally and provincially, and develop them to their full capacity. I do not believe they are being fully developed at the present time. I believe provincially and municipally more health work could be done all over Canada and could thus be very much improved and expanded. As a matter of fact I was wondering, if such work had been done more thoroughly whether the present demand for national action would have become so pronounced.

The second position we could take would be to have the closest cooperation between the municipal health organizations, the health organizations of each province and the federal department of health—an ideal stand to take.

Where we would not leave the question of health entirely to municipal and provincial organizations and where we would not have the closest cooperation between the provincial and federal departments of health, there is only one other position to take and that is full state control in connection with sickness and health. That question came up before the committee on industrial and international relations in 1929 as a complementary question to the subject of insurance against unemployment. The resolution referred to insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity. In connection with the question of insurance against sickness, this matter was gone into rather thoroughly and the report of that year dealt with it. Evidence was given before the committee by Mr. A. Grant Fleming, M.D., professor of public health and preventive medicine in McGill University, Montreal and also by J. G. Fitzgerald, professor of hygiene and preventive medicine at the university of Toronto. If I remember correctly, the viewpoint taken by both these eminent medical men was that the federal Department of Public Health should give leadership of the finest possible type to the provinces in respect to the building up of an adequate preventive health organization extending right across Canada, and that it would be well to have an interprovincial conference called at an early date at which this question of building up a new organization could be discussed with a view to caring for the health of the nation in a way that perhaps could not otherwise be done.

Mr. MacLAREN: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman for a moment, I assume he is aware that there is held at Ottawa twice a year a meeting of the health representatives of all the provinces under the auspices of and in conjunction with the Department of National Health. It is held for advisory purposes, just as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am glad to hear from the hon. Minister of National Health the statement which he has just made. I was aware that such a conference was held from time to time, but I was not aware that it took place semi-annually. That only makes the point that I was trying to bring before the house more pressing than ever, and that is, that when this conference next meets, this question should be fully discussed with a view to bringing about the greatest possible measure of cooperation between the federal Department of Public Health and the health departments of the different provinces.

Mr. MacLAREN: From the inquiries I have made I understand that this question of organized medical service has been discussed by the Dominion Council of Health on several occasions.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am glad to hear that that is so, but a great deal of information is still lacking. May I refer hon. members to part of the evidence which was given before the select standing committee on industrial and international relations by Doctor J. G. Fitzgerald, professor of hygiene and preventive medicine at the university of Toronto. Dealing with Canada, he says:

What is the situation in Canada, Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee; what is the volume of sickness and invalidity in this country, either attended or unattended? We have no exact or definite knowledge or information with which to answer this question.

That was the thought I had in mind in suggesting the calling of a conference annually or oftener, in order to secure the fullest possible data with regard to sickness and invalidity in Canada. Doctor Fitzgerald continues:

It is true that certain estimates have been made, based upon the experience in England and Wales, and in the United States, as to the volume of sickness and invalidity, and its cost. But I should like to reiterate that we have no precise and definite information, because no provision is made for the collection of morbidity figures. The volume and kind of sickness occurring in the community at all times in large part goes unreported.

Secondly, what provision have we in this country for dealing with sickness and invalidity? It is impossible to completely answer that. Some of our resources are, of course, well known at the present time, but on the side of curative medicine there are between 575 and 600 hospitals, general and special, in Canada, with between 55,000 and 65,000 beds. There are believed to be about 8,000 physicians actively engaged in the general practice of medicine, and there are perhaps one thousand in addition in other fields, such as research, teaching, public health, hospital administration and in charge of the direction of medical or lay organizations.

The third question is what is the cost of medical care, including hospitalization, dental treatment, nursing, and so on? Here again we can only resort to speculation, to arrive at any idea at all as to its amount.

Then again, the fourth question; what provision for insurance against sickness and invalidity is now available in Canada on a voluntary basis? It is practically impossible to give any satisfactory answer to that question.

So that my own view, in a word, Mr. Chairman, is that a study of the Canadian situation in respect of the need for sickness and invalidity insurance is highly desirable. In my judgment one aspect of this study could be undertaken perhaps by the Canadian Medical Association, and one of the voluntary health promoting agencies, the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, if such a request came from the Department of Pensions and National Health of this country.

Perhaps from this point on, Mr. Chairman, any service I can render to the committee can best be done by endeavouring to answer any questions the committee may wish to ask.

That was the evidence given by Doctor Fitzgerald just two years ago before the committee on industrial and international relations. Hon. gentlemen will note that one of the points which he emphasized was the lack of information with regard to sickness all over Canada and what we are losing by sickness throughout the country.

Another point which he emphasized was the importance of preventive medicine. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and Doctor Fitzgerald made it plain to the committee on that occasion that time after time when an individual knew there was something wrong with him, perhaps something seriously wrong, he did not go to a physician because he had not the money to do so, with the result that eventually his health became undermined, perhaps with fatal results. The nation, in the event of his decease, would lose the economic value of that individual, and remember that this sort of economic loss is continually taking place all across the Dominion.

In closing I would impress upon the Minister of National Health, upon the Prime Minister, and upon the government, the importance of having the fullest possible investigations made as often as possible into the health of the whole population of Canada in order that we may keep the health of our people up to normal, and thereby be enabled successfully to compete with the other nations of the world. I take it that the object of the mover of the resolution was that his proposal should be interpreted as expressing the desirability of our ever being on the alert and exercising all possible vigilance with a view to building up throughout Canada a fine type of healthy citizen ready to meet all emergencies so far as health is concerned. If that be our aim I believe the discussion we have had this afternoon from hon. members on both sides of the house will enable us to strengthen our position in any plan of national health betterment, and that the time taken in considering the resolution will by no means have been in vain.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am very greatly pleased with the discussion evoked by the resolution before the house. Most hon. members who have spoken to the motion have been in entire agreement. A number of other hon. members have partly agreed, having stated certain reservations. I think the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) agreed with the spirit of the resolution but saw some obstacles in the way of Canada adopting such a system. During the course of the discussion some points were brought up which I might briefly touch upon.

The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) stated that the medical men in this country have a monopoly. I do not believe there is a class of men in this country or in fact in the world, who have been less selfish, who have been more at the disposal of their country, or who have devoted themselves more to the interests and welfare of the people than the men of the medical profession. I am told that Socrates once charged his disciples that whatever they learned of benefit to the human race they should not keep in secret but should spread among their fellows and give to the world at large. I believe, sir, that that is the spirit which has actuated the endeavour of the medical world since the time of Socrates.

The hon. member for Battle River said also that the care of the health of the average individual was limited to the length of his purse. In some instances unfortunately that is true, but for the most part it is not true It has been my experience that any medical man who learned that his patient, though in need of certain treatment, was financially unable to procure it, usually saw to it that the treatment was given. In many cases the medical men themselves have had to pay for such treatments. The various health boards throughout the country at the present time supply the costly sera, vaccines and other medical aids which have been mentioned in the course of the debate. I think in most parts of Canada a medical man finding a case of diphtheria or any case requiring more or less costly treatment could forthwith obtain assistance from the local board of health. If in the nature of things it is possible, the board of health will collect payment for such treatment, but if not the charge will be made on the municipality, city or province affected.

The resolution I submitted to the house to-day was prompted by two main considerations. First, a great deal of the sickness by which the Canadian people are overtaken is preventable by periodic examination. The life insurance companies of this country and throughout the world have adopted a system by which from time to time the assured submit themselves for preventive examinations. If such a scheme pays an insurance company, surely it would pay this Dominion of Canada at large.

The other consideration involved in the resolution is that medical service is sometimes outside the purse of the so-called middle class. As was stated this afternoon, there is no doubt that for those individuals who wish always to pay for their own medical care there is sometimes great hardship. If a system such as I have mooted to-day could be put into force there need be no trouble of that kind. Undoubtedly people sometimes accept a degree of neglect because they feel that they have not the funds to pay for proper attention. In Europe state medicine is national. Germany adopted it in the early part of the century. France adopted it at a later time, and before a person may enter Switzerland he has to pay a poll tax. In that poll tax there is included a premium on the health of the person whereby his health is cared for if he should take ill while in that country. I consider that national health assurance is necessary in order to obtain uniform periodic examinations and to ensure proper treatment where such is needed.

Reference has been made to the excellent work done by compensation boards. Splendid results have been achieved also in connection with industrial insurance. In nearly all these instances, however, only those who are engaged in the industries concerned are insured, and in regard to compensation boards, only accidents and injuries are covered.

The right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) took exception to the resolution on the score that it would immediately involve Canada in adopting the means of bringing this idea into force. I believe that the resolution does not necessarily imply any obligation upon the government immediately to adopt such a scheme, but merely suggests to the government that it would be well for it to take the matter into serious consideration—I repeat, serious consideration—with the idea eventually of evolving a scheme which would give the people of this country the medical attention to which they are entitled.

The right hon. the Prime Minister has suggested that such a measure would be detrimental to the interests of the medical men throughout the land. I believe I can say for the majority of our medical men that they would welcome some such scheme as this. Of their own volition they have taken it up in the various provinces and have declared themselves in favour of it. The only doctors that would be opposed to it, and have to some extent actually shown themselves to be, are perhaps the leading men in the profession, the men who do very little and collect big fees. I do not see why the adoption of such a scheme would change the whole system of medicine. Nor do I see why it would necessarily do away with the supervision and control of the provincial boards. There is room for both provincial and federal boards. The provincial boards would still be enabled to exercise supervision provincially, while the federal authority would look after the whole Dominion.

The right hon. Prime Minister made reference to a common cold. This is a very frequent trouble, particularly during the winter season. He has decried the fact that the medical profession has never isolated the germ that produces a cold.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not decried it at all; I have only pointed out the fact.

Mr. HOWDEN: I stand corrected. I might point out that all the characteristics of a common cold can be produced by the use of several medicines, and by the application of any substance that will irritate the mucous membrane of the nasal passages. There was even some doubt thrown upon the value of vaccination as a preventive of smallpox.

Mr. BENNETT: Not by me. Surely the hon. gentleman is going too far. I have not interrupted him, but he should certainly give authority for some of his statements. I said there was propaganda carried on in this country against vaccination, and if he reads one of the morning papers published in this city he will find it there every now and then.

Mr. HOWDEN: Very well; but I rather gathered from the way in which the right hon. gentleman discussed the matter that he himself harboured some doubt as to the value of vaccination.

Mr. BENNETT: What nonsense!

Mr. HOWDEN: I do not think there is any doubt in the world as to the value of vaccination. There are a thousand proofs of its efficacy. One of the best proofs I know of is to be found in the countries of Germany and Austria.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, one is at least entitled to fairness in debate. Here is the exact language I used:

> And they will tell you that smallpox, as the hon. member for St. Boniface has said, should be dealt with by vaccination. Yet day after day, in more countries than this, there is being carried on propaganda against vaccination—and very powerful is that propaganda too.

Then I dealt with pneumonia. That is all I said about vaccination.

Mr. HOWDEN: There is no necessity to remind the house that the value of vaccination in the preventive treatment of smallpox is not longer open to question. Throughout the country intelligent people know the value of vaccination. The efficacy of vaccination in preventing smallpox is strikingly illustrated in Germany and Austria; in Germany vaccination is compulsory, in Austria it is optional; smallpox is virtually unknown in Germany, while in the neighbouring country the disease is rife.

I believe that the federal authorities should supervise the health of the people. It is not a difficult undertaking. When the income tax was put in force the government very readily secured a record of those who came within the provisions of the legislation. The Prime Minister also took exception to the old age pension scheme because it was optional on the part of the provinces to cooperate with the federal authorities in making the scheme operative; in other words, he objected that it was not Dominion-wide. But let us consider, sir, that unless a scheme of health insurance were adopted federally it would be useless. To have health insurance adopted by one province and not by its neighbour would be like having two adjoining fields, one dirty and the other clean. If you have one province in which the health of the people is under proper supervision, and no such supervision obtains in the neighbouring province, the health measures in force in the former will go for nothing.

I do not wish for a moment to suggest that this is a political issue. Still I cannot forget that during the years I sat to your right, Mr. Speaker, I gathered from his speeches that the then leader of the opposition, the present right hon. Prime Minister, was in favour of practically all the reforms and social proposals that came before the house. Now apparently he finds his hands to some extent tied.

Mr. BENNETT: Again I must protest, Mr. Speaker. Why should the hon. gentleman persist in making statements that are incorrect? There is no necessity for him to do so, it does not advance his case. What I said last year with respect to health units I not only repeated this afternoon, but I also referred to the provision in the current estimates of the Department of National Health. These cheap references to what did not take place, made in the expectation that they will not be denied, should cease. The hon. gentleman has some responsibility to this house, a responsibility which he should fairly discharge by not misstating what other members may have said.

Mr. HOWDEN: I was speaking from memory.

Mr. BENNETT: I know—an odd thing, is it not?

Mr. HOWDEN: My memory is not so defective as all that. If I remember rightly the Prime Minister did support all social and reform proposals that came before the house when he acted as leader of the official opposition. Now, I believe that hon. members can well afford to give this proposal their serious consideration. I am not blind to the suggestion that the resolution should be withdrawn. Well, if it is withdrawn it is thrown in the waste paper basket and consigned to oblivion. If the resolution is voted on it can die no worse than an honourable death, and, sir, I prefer that it should meet that fate.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howden) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is right.

Mr. MacLAREN: Had I any idea that there would be pairs I should not have voted, as I have a permanent pair with the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset).

Mr. SPEAKER: Pairs are not recognized in this division.

BURIAL OF EX-SERVICE MEN

PROPOSAL TO DISCONTINUE ALLEGED PRACTICE OF CALLING FOR TENDERS

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the practice of calling for tenders for burial of deceased ex-service men shall be discontinued forthwith as the practice is an indignity to ex-service men and a discredit to the honour of our country.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it will require but very few words to secure the sanction of the house or of any government to this resolution. It is quite true that the expenditure of public money is carried on by the tender system, but in this case I think it must be admitted that a number of abuses have arisen and it is time that the practice should be discontinued in relation to the burial of deceased ex-service men.

Let me note what the abuses are. When the tender is asked for from the undertakers there is always a reservation made that the undertaker may be a friend of the deceased, but difficulties have arisen in many cases in this regard. I know that in hospitals notices have been posted that the body must be handed over to the official undertaker. In addition to this, another very serious abuse has arisen which is an indignity to the returned man and to his relatives.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I desire very much to hear what the hon. member has to say, but I cannot do so because of the conversation being carried on in the chamber.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. members kindly to desist from conversing within the chamber. There is nothing to prevent their leaving the chamber should they desire to do so.

Mr. ROSS: Another serious abuse has arisen through the carrying on in certain communities of a price war by the undertakers. In my own town, and in several others, the result is that tenders have been accepted for as low as $40. I ask hon. members how a funeral can be properly conducted at a cost of only $40, when an undertaker is required to furnish:

Casket to be black cloth covered, silk lined, and to have engraved plate and six handles: or casket to be surface oak, to have engraved plate and six handles then to be metallic. (Also crucifix if required.)
Outside case to be furnished.
Body to be embalmed.
Shroud to be furnished by contractor. (When necessary.)
Hearse to be furnished by contractor.

No undertaker can conduct a decent funeral for $40 and provide all these items.

The system is very unfair. In one place the price is $100, in another it is $40, in other places it may be $50 or $60, which is most unfair to the relatives of the returned men, who should be all treated alike. Whatever price is awarded to one man's relatives should be awarded to those of another man. I grant that in exceptional cases in the large centres funerals may be more expensive, but outside of one or two of the larger places the price should be practically the same.

These are a few of the abuses which have arisen. All our talk about the glory due to the returned men and the justice we were going to mete out to them is highly inconsistent with the revolting practice of trying to get the lowest price for the decent burial of a returned ex-service man whose death has probably been hastened by his overseas service. I cannot see how this house or any government can but agree and declare that from this day on the revolting practice of asking for tenders for the burial of ex-service men shall be discontinued.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, it is not very often that I can agree entirely with the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) but I want to say that I agree with everything he has said from the commencement to the end of his remarks.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I am entirely opposed to this resolution. Undertakers should not be more favoured than rural mail carriers. The latter are governed by contracts and stipulations similar to those which govern undertakers in the burial of veterans pensioned by the State. I think, that should this resolution be adopted, it would open the door to abuses. For this reason I am strongly opposed to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In what provinces is this practice being indulged in? So far as I know it is not followed in British Columbia.

Mr. ROSS: It does not prevail universally, but tenders are being called for in different parts of the country and that practice I wish stopped.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Has the hon. member any figures as to the cost of giving a decent burial to a soldier?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member who has moved the resolution will no doubt close the debate, and at that time he can give further information.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): When I read this resolution as it appeared on the order paper, I felt heartily in sympathy with it. It seemed to me that the practice of calling for tenders had nothing to justify it, but I must confess that I should like to have heard the hon. member offer the alternative so that we might see what the alternative involved. This is only a suggestion on my part, as I have not given very much consideration to the question, but this privilege—for one might call it a privilege—that is given to the undertaker might very well become a matter of patronage. That is one of the questions we would have to consider, so that before we are called upon to vote on the matter I should like the hon. member for Kingston City to state what the alternative is. Some of us are not very familiar with the matter, and we would like information with regard to it.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): I desire to express my most hearty appreciation of the way in which the hon. member has brought this resolution before the house. The matter is one of great importance. So far as I am concerned I am heartily in accord with the sentiments expressed by the mover of the resolution and I hope the house will see its way clear to approve it.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): I hope this is one resolution that will carry unanimously without a vote. It is a surprise to me to know that this practice is being followed, and I heartily endorse every word uttered by the mover of the resolution. I did not hear whether the hon. member made an alternative suggestion or not, but I know under the workmen's compensation acts generally throughout Canada the dependents of a workman who is killed are allowed from $100 to $150 to bury the deceased man. So I suggest that if this resolution is carried, the government leave it to the relatives of the deceased to undertake the funeral expenses, the government to foot the bill up to a certain amount.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I was pleased that the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) brought before the house this proposed resolution, the essence of which is to have the practice of calling for tenders for burial of deceased ex-service men discontinued forthwith. It is an indignity to ex-service men and a discredit to the honour of our country.

In speaking to the resolution I wish to say only a word or two. I am satisfied that in supporting the hon. member in his resolution I am taking a stand that is in harmony with the sentiments of ex-service men not only in my riding, not only in Saskatchewan and indeed in western Canada, but throughout the Dominion as a whole. I would like to see the resolution carried unanimously without a vote, and also the Department of Pensions and National Health take steps to ensure that this practice be discontinued forthwith.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): One would think from some of the observations that have been made, notably by an ex-minister, that since the advent to power of the present administration, something new had been done with respect to the burial of deceased ex-service men.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I have listened enough to know exactly what was meant. Do not for a single moment, Mr. Speaker, think I am not entirely wise to these proceedings, and most of the members of the house are in the same position. What I said was that the practice that prevails to-day is a practice that has prevailed for some eight years. The Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) will state the facts, indicating what has been done and what is being done. Everything that was in existence when he succeeded to the administration of the department has been continued. But there was not any such thing as tenders in the sense in which that term is used; there never has been in this country under any government and I do not suppose there ever will be. All that was done was to ask undertakers for their fees for performing a burial service and then to select from those whose names were given the one who would perform the last sad offices for the dead. That is the story. Whether or not that constitutes tenders is for the house to say. In my judgment it does not. I do not think it can be said in any sense to be tenders and I would not have called it such.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) put a question that has been agitating my mind as I listened here this evening. How are you going to do this? Select one person, and say he is to perform the service and let him fix his own price, or how otherwise is it to be done? This of course is a sort of thing that one desires as much as possible to refrain from discussing; it is not the kind of question that should be discussed in parliament. The administration that has been carried on, is as I have said, continued and what concerns me at the moment is whether or not we can properly describe this practice as calling for tenders. I cannot think that is the proper description. If it is a matter of tenders, it should be discontinued. If, on the other hand, it is merely inviting people to indicate what is to be charged in different communties for the carrying out of the last sad offices for the dead, the situation is entirely different.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), inadvertently I am sure, injected into this debate a note that was somewhat unfortunate. I think the suggestion that was made by one of the members to my right is the only one which will meet the wishes of the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross), namely that there should be a uniform amount agreed upon consistent with the decency and dignity of these sad occasions. The amount could be determined by the ministry of pensions, and there should be no question at all of rival prices between rival undertakers. I appreciate to the fullest degree the motives that animated the hon. member for Kingston City in bringing forward this resolution. What he has in mind is that there should be no dickering or bargaining in regard to this last solemn ceremony in which Canada pays her homage to deceased returned men who served her overseas. I am sure the house is unanimous in its wishes in that respect, and I regret the note that has been injected into the debate by the Prime Minister. I think the solution is this: The Department of Pensions and those who are directing the magnificently conducted Last Post fund in Canada should agree—I will not say upon a uniform price, but upon the amount necessary to the carrying out this last ceremony in a dignified and befitting manner. Once this amount is agreed upon and due dignity is paid to the dead and due deference to the living, there should be no bargaining, no dickering and no rivalry.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has referred to the practice that was adopted by the previous administration. If I am not mistaken the hon. member who has introduced the resolution (Mr. Ross) brought up the same subject at the last session of the last parliament, and speaking from where my right hon. friend is speaking to-night, I said at that time that the government was making a contribution to the Last Post fund, and that if that contribution was not sufficient for those administering the Last Post fund to discharge their duty in all particulars in a manner that was befitting, the government would undertake to see that the necessary amount was provided. That assurance I think met with the general acceptance of all parties in the house, and I assume it is what my hon. friend would wish to have at the present time. It certainly should permit of what is most befitting.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a lack of information on this subject. I should like to tell the house what is the custom in Great Britain, New Zealand, Australia and the United States, these being the only countries as to which I have information. The mode of conducting funerals in those countries being very similar to our own, such evidence will not be out of order.

I want to avoid giving many details in connection with this matter, because I do not think the house would wish to have them. But let me say that in Great Britain the undertakers are invited to submit figures for funerals, and they are not to exceed £7. 10s. which is about $37. In New Zealand the undertakers are asked in a similar way to submit their figures, the amount not to exceed £13, or about $64. In the United States the undertakers are asked to submit figures, the amount not to exceed $100. In Australia there is a difference, there being a fixed rate of £15.

[Mr. I. A. Mackenzie.]

My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has suggested a fixed and uniform figure. That seems easy, but suppose the expenses in different parts of the country vary.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Who cares in a matter of that kind?

Mr. MacLAREN: The friends care.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No.

Mr. MacLAREN: The cost also will depend upon local conditions. I should like to say this very clearly and very distinctly, that action is not taken on the grounds of economy They are not restricted to any special sum I have mentioned three countries where a maximum amount is stipulated, but there is no restriction in Canada as to the amount that may be charged. I ask the house to bear that in mind. In reference to the amount, from the information that I have received from the department, it appears that the lowest amount is $71 odd, and the largest amount $195; so there is a considerable disparity.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the minister quoting from departmental records when he gives that figure of $71?

Mr. MacLAREN: I am quoting from the memorandum prepared for me in the department.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am afraid that figure is incorrect.

Mr. MacLAREN: The maximum is $195. There is a very considerable difference in the cost of graves in the different cemeteries throughout the country. Some are expensive, and some are without cost. There is also a considerable variation in the requirements regarding tombstones, which in certain cemeteries must conform with the regulations governing that particular cemetery.

I would like to emphasize this, that in none of the countries that I have mentioned, and so far as I know in no country of the world, are returned men buried in a more seemly and befitting manner than they are in Canada. I say that in defence of my department, which has been conducting these burials for eight or ten years; the records show that there have been extraordinarily few criticisms and objections. They show, on the contrary, satisfaction and expressions of gratitude to the department for the very reverent way in which our men have been buried. It does not make the slightest difference to the department how the matter is done provided it is done with decorum and respect. That is the policy of the department and of the government.

I object to this word "tenders" in this connection. It does not feature in the matter so far as I know. There is no haggling, to use the word of my hon. friend, and I wish the house distinctly to understand that there is no limit regarding the expense. It is not necessary to accept the lowest offer. Our one requisite is a proper, worthy funeral, and there is no reason why we should not have it. The government does not stint us in the amount. All we ask is a reasonable figure, or what they voluntarily say a funeral must cost. The department is prepared to adopt whatever course in the opinion of this house and the country will show the greatest deference and respect to our deceased ex-service men and their relatives. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, and I say it definitely, with confidence and with readiness, that I do not wish this house to have the impression that the department has been niggardly or has fallen short in its performance of this important function. It has not. I have looked over the records and have seen and gone through medical reports from Sydney to Vancouver, and with the few exceptions and criticisms which are always received and are of a very unimportant character, I have heard no objection. The impression of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) was that he had never heard of any objections.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I accept the word of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) as being accurate.

Mr. MacLAREN: No one has come to me and made any objection, written or verbal, —not one. This resolution gave the first intimation to me that there was any dissatisfaction. I have asked in the department whether any objections have been offered, I am told that there have been none. I say for my friend who immediately preceded me in the department, and his predecessor, that there is no record of complaint. I dare say the department would be prepared to make a change if a better method could be shown. I point out this fact to the house because I do not for one moment want the friends of our departed men to consider that any indignity has been shown them, or that any discredit has been cast upon this country regarding the last rites of our returned men. Knowing the care with which officials in the department deal with with these matters I am not conscious of such an indignity. I make that statement emphatically and frankly. It may be that an explanation of the proceedings does not give a fair impression of what actually happens. I would like to add that the department and all the officials connected with it are most willing that any hon. member of the house should come at any time and discuss matters of this nature, make any suggestions thought desirable and at the same time perhaps hear some of the difficulties or objections familiar to those actively engaged in the department.

Finally I would say that the departmental officials who have this matter in hand are better able to carry out funeral arrangements than individual persons or friends who would have to make their own arrangements. Hon. members are aware that friends of the men may prefer one undertaker to another. There is no rule within the department requiring that any certain person shall attend to the funeral. Great freedom is allowed in the choice of undertaker, in fact the friends of the deceased are allowed to have such undertaker as they wish.

There is one thing to which we may point with pride and satisfaction. All our returned men whose deaths have occurred in our institutions as a result of overseas disabilities are provided with either granite or marble headstones. May I say that if hon. members were to search diligently I do not think they would find a record of any country at the present time which carries out this particular duty as fully and with as much regard to dignity and fitness as Canada does.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I ask the minister a question? I cannot learn from the remarks he has made whether or not he is in favour of the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Kingston.

Mr. MANION: Everybody is.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not a proper question to ask the hon. minister until he has finished his speech.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: As to whether or not the minister is in favour of the resolution is a matter entirely for him to decide. He may vote upon it one way or the other.

Mr. SANDERSON: With all due deference to the ruling of Your Honour, surely the Minister of Pensions and National Health should give at least some lead to the house in questions of this character.

Mr. ARTHURS: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The minister has given a fair exposition of his views on the subject. The hon. member surely can interpret it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of indulgence—

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Speaker, I submit both these gentlemen are out of order, having already spoken in the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre undertook to direct a question to the minister while he was speaking.

Mr. MacLAREN: I think the hon. member intended to put a question.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I realize I am out of order, but I should like to present my question. I agree with the remarks of the minister in regard to the officials of the department; I think they are very sincere and that they are doing everything in their power in this regard. I do however have a very great belief in the—

An hon. MEMBER: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member put the question he intended to ask of the minister?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister said that it was the practice of the department to ask for figures as to cost of burial. Would it be too much to ask him to explain how this is done?

Mr. MacLAREN: I cannot give any further information on that point. I can only say that they asked undertakers for figures, and that is all I know about it. I never have seen anything in the nature of tenders.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is what I wanted to clear up.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I confess I would have risen to speak to this subject with much less reluctance had it not been for the observations of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I think under the circumstances his observations were entirely uncalled for. However I believe there is some misapprehension in the minds of hon. members, as there is in mine, with respect to this matter. As I understand it, and I speak subject to correction, pensioners who die or persons awarded a pension on account of the death of pensioners are entitled to the sum of $75 or $100. I think the correct sum is $100.

Mr. MacLAREN: I do not understand the hon. member. He says that they are entitled to so and so.

Mr. POWER: They receive at the discretion of the Board of Pension Commissioners $100 when the pensioner dies.

Mr. BENNETT: That is another thing.

[Mr. I. A. Mackenzie.]

Mr. POWER: In order that the burial and funeral expenses of the pensioner may be paid.

Mr. MacLAREN: No.

Mr. POWER: In enumerating the different classes of people who receive burial moneys from the government I endeavour to make a distinction, because as I have already pointed out there is misapprehension and misconception in the minds of some hon. members. Pensioners, or the relatives of pensioners who died, are entitled under the Pension Act of Canada to $100 for burial and funeral expenses of such pensioner. That is one thing. Then there is an institution known as the Last Post fund, which looks after the burial expenses of soldiers who die without leaving any relatives. The Canadian government makes a substantial contribution amounting to about $30,000 or $35,000 annually to this Last Post fund. Thirdly, there are the persons who I assume are to be covered by this resolution—

Mr. BENNETT: Who die in the institutions.

Mr. POWER: Yes, namely those who die in institutions under the control of the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment. Objection is taken by the hon. member for Kingston to the practice of what he refers to as "calling for tenders"—bargaining with respect to the funeral expenses of these men. I am not prepared to make the fine distinction which the right hon. Prime Minister has made as to whether this practice can be termed calling for tenders. I see no distinction between calling for prices in this matter and calling for tenders in any other matter. I think we have come generally to apply the term "calling for tenders" to the practice of asking from different persons prices for the performance of any service. Whether it be called by that or by any other term, unless it can be clearly shown to me that some other method to be substituted will be any better, I am prepared to support the stand of the minister that we had better continue to carry on the present method. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) seems to attach great importance to what he characterized as a peculiar circumstance that an undertaker was prepared to do this work for the sum of $40. Well, provided the undertaker does the work well, I do not care if he gets only $40. I am not here taking my stand on behalf of the undertakers of Canada. As a class I do not know of any body that has exploited the public more than have the undertakers.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the public.

Mr. POWER: Yes, the public.

Mr. BENNETT: The executors.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection to the undertaker receiving only $40. During the deliberations of the pensions committee on various occasions representations were made to us that the sum allotted for pensioners' funerals was not sufficient. There was a strong agitation that the amount should be raised by fifty or a hundred dollars. We found on investigation that that agitation was largely started by the undertakers, not by the soldiers. If the department sees to it that its rules and regulations, or its specifications—if I may use that term in this instance—are fully carried out, whether the work be done for $40, $50 or $100, it should make no difference to the relatives, who after all are the people most concerned, provided the funeral is conducted with seemliness and decorum, as has been stated by the minister. In my humble opinion, if the departmental officials see that this is done—and I believe they do; I have never heard anything to the contrary, and the practice seems to have been carried on for eight or ten years—I say if the departmental officials see to it that the funeral is conducted with proper dignity, proper decorum, I see no better way than to ask for tenders from the persons carrying on that line of business in the locality where the death occurs. To fix a stated price would not make the situation any better. In the first place, it would bring about some sort of political patronage—although I have my own opinion of the persons who would endeavour to play party politics in a question of this kind; but it certainly would be a temptation. Are we sure that things would not be carried on any better by some undertaker who had no competition to meet, but was simply handed a specified sum for carrying out the work? I agree with the hon. minister when he says that there is no limit to the amount. We do not, as they do in other countries, say to the undertaker who is to perform this last sad service for a man who has given up his life for his country, "You cannot charge more than £7: 10s." We say: "You are to give him a decent, proper funeral." The rules and regulations for the funeral are laid down, the specifications are furnished, and we say to the undertaker: "You are to charge a fair and reasonable price." If in competition with another undertaker the price charged is a little lower than that usually charged to the public, I think we are not any worse off; I think we shall probably find that we get better service.

Mr. CAHAN: For my information, will the hon. gentleman kindly answer this question? Do not the administrators of the Last Post fund look after the burial of soldiers who die in the institutions of the city of Montreal, for instance?

Mr. POWER: I am subject to correction, but I do not think so. There is a distinction to be made between "institutions." I was speaking of departmental institutions, that is institutions under the control of the Department of Pensions and National Health. My hon. friend has in mind, I think, institutions such as the Royal Victoria hospital.

Mr. CAHAN: And the general hospital.

Mr. POWER: Under those circumstances the department is not in control of the man at the time he dies, and therefore the Last Post fund looks after the funeral.

Mr. CAHAN: That is very satisfactory, is it not?

Mr. POWER: So far as I know it is very satisfactory. But the question under discussion refers to men dying in hospitals under the control of the Department of Pensions and National Health.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, I agree with those hon. members who say that there is a misunderstanding. The Last Post fund has no reference whatever to the subject-matter of this resolution. That fund provides for the burial of ex-service men who die in poverty, and whose bodies but for the provision of that fund would be turned over to schools of anatomy and other institutions. The amount so provided is just nominal. My resolution refers to ex-service men who have a war disability and who die while under treatment in institutions under the control of the Department of Pensions and National Health. As to whether this is calling for tenders or not, I can only refer hon. members to the regular departmental form which is sent out to various undertakers throughout the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the number of it?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): P. R. 5210. When I introduced this resolution I had no idea of partisanship. It has been the practice of previous governments, both Union and Liberal, to send out this form, and it has continued under this government. What does the form say, Mr. Speaker? It says:

Tender for furnishing funerals of ex-soldiers and sailors for period of one year.

I objected that this form set up a system of competition, with the result that there were established in various places such low rates that the proper requirements could not possibly be met. And the result, whether hon. members have heard of it or not, is that many complaints have been referred to me to the effect that whereas in one place the relatives of ex-service men were being granted the sum of $40 to assist in paying for the funeral of a deceased, in another place they were receiving $80. That is unfair. I appeal to the wisdom and the judgment of every hon. member in this house: I do not consider that fair treatment. We are setting up competition. The undertaker who received this order submitted a tender of $65. That was not accepted. I know for a fact that the amount accepted by the department was $40, and that was due to what I call local competition.

I do not want to introduce patronage into this question, but I do say that if you elminate tendering and competition you can establish a fair price, and any undertaker who is a friend of the relatives of the deceased should have the privilege of burying that deceased. Under this system I know that that has been objected to in certain places. This, I think, is due to a misinterpretation of the regulations. I believe, however, that in all cases the undertaker who is a friend of the relatives of the deceased should be the person to bury that deceased ex-service man. And that should be the practice, without partisanship and without patronage. There should be a fixed price. Someone has asked, "Why not make the renumeration $100?" I care not what it is, so long as you provide a suitable casket and a proper funeral. But I submit, notwithstanding anything that has been said, that no undertaker can provide a decent funeral for a deceased soldier for forty dollars.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member wish to have the question put?

Mr. ROSS: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

RIVIERE-DU-LOUP HARBOUR

PROPOSED WORKS TO FACILITATE TRANSPORT OF COAL BY WATER

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata) moved:

Whereas the city of Rivière-du-Loup is the most important centre in the eastern part of the province of Quebec;

[Mr. Ross.]

Whereas the harbour of said city is free from ice in winter, and navigation is possible at all times of the year;

Whereas the said city is a divisional point of the National railways and the terminus of the Témiscouata railway, which links the said city to the province of New Brunswick, and to that part of the National railways known in the past as the Transcontinental;

Whereas the National railways are still in possession of the branch line of Rivière-du-Loup station to the Rivière-du-Loup wharf;

Whereas the transport by water of coal from Nova Scotia to Rivière-du-Loup would be much more economical and would permit of its distribution at a lower cost in eastern Quebec, in the northern part of New Brunswick and the state of Maine;

He said: No doubt the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) will regard it as leaving a pleasant taste in the mouth if I quote part of a speech which he delivered in Inverness on July 8, 1930. The right hon. gentleman said:

At the Winnipeg convention of 1927, the Conservative party had pledged itself to a fuel policy and the policy of "Canadian goods through Canadian ports." Both these pledges, he declared, would be carried out by his party.

Later on the Gazette reports him as having said on February 13:

It does seem ridiculous that a country with a population of only ten million is unable to meet all its fuel demands from the very large sources of its own coal mines, from Vancouver island to Cape Breton, said Premier R. B. Bennett, replying this morning to the large deputation from Nova Scotia, headed by Premier Gordon Harrington of that province, which made a number of requests of the federal government for the improvement of the steel and coal industries of the maritime provinces.

And later on:

Premier Bennett stressed the point, in relation to the request of Nova Scotia for further federal aid in reduced freight rates on coal, that the Dominion treasury was now burdened with obligations arising out of monetary recompense to the railways for hauling freight at an unremunerative rate from and to the maritimes. Dr. Manion stated that the treasury would be obliged to pay the sum of $9,200,000 to the railways on account of the Maritime Freight Rates Act for the last year, as the sum due the railways for carrying goods at the 20 per cent reduction provided in that legislation. The Prime Minister hinted that the treasury and particularly the taxpayers were in no mood to consider any further obligation in that direction.

To be fair to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) may I add that there was a letter from himself to his colleague the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) which was published in the press on February 18, to the effect that the rate reduction alone was $3,263,000, the balance being a deficit of another character. The matter is of such great importance that my hon. friend the member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) said not long ago, on the 20th of this month:

I wish to say frankly and fearlessly to my right hon. leader and his associates in the cabinet that if, when that budget is brought down, there is nothing in it for steel and coal, I certainly, on account of the promises I have given to the miners in Nova Scotia, will not be able to vote for the budget unless it makes some provision for the steel and coal industries in my province.

There is a despatch of the Canadian Press, dated October 3, 1930, to the effect that the government has decided to extend until March 31, 1932, transportation at the special rate of $3 a ton in winter and $2.10 in summer time of the coal of Nova Scotia to the markets of Quebec and Ontario.

The matter has been discussed before the Board of Commissioners, who had it under consideration in October. The rates on coal are pretty high. For example, from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Edmundston, New Brunswick, it is $2.50 per net ton; from Pictou, Nova Scotia, to Edmundston, it is $3.10; from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Riviere du Loup, Quebec, it is $2.90; from Pictou to Riviere du Loup, $3.60. With respect to the last, under orders in council P.C. 539 and P.C. 2256, the rate will be $3 per ton until April 16, 1931. This appears in a letter I have received from the secretary of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and I understand that the reduction has been extended for some time. Now, the rate for the transportation of coal by water is entirely different. The water haul per ton on coal from Cape Breton and Nova Scotia costs at the present time around 90 cents per ton.

The county council of Temiscouata are in entire accord with the contents of this resolution. Some twenty years ago plans and surveys were made by the Department of Public Works of Canada for the development of the harbour of Riviere du Loup. This city is located about 120 miles east of Quebec on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river and would provide an ideal distributing point for coal. At the present time it is a divisional point of the Atlantic and central regions of the Canadian National Railways, as well as the terminus of the railway which runs from Riviere du Loup to Edmundston and Connor, New Brunswick, on the Maine boundary.

On January 12, 1926, Mr. J. H. Mailloux, alderman of Rivière du Loup, wrote me that the Canadian National Railways had posted a notice to the effect that the railway was prepared to sell the site of the branch line from Rivière du Loup station to Rivière du Loup point. He asked me to take this matter up with the railway company in an endeavour to induce them to retain possession of this line. With the permission of the house, I will have this letter put on Hansard. It is as follows:

Mr. J. Frs. Pouliot, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—

I have just seen in the post office here a notice posted by the Canadian National Railways, advertising for sale by tender, either by parcel or en bloc, the old Intercolonial branch line right of way which extends to La Pointe de la Rivière-du-Loup. A blue print attached to said notice indicates the route used in the past, with the names of owners whose lands were encroached upon by this branch line. This blue print bears the following description which may help you to locate it, at the Department of Railways and Canals: Wuth Plan 8098 Cor. File 3-2-347.

I believe that it is in the interest of our city and district, in general, that the government should not sell this land for which it will receive very little, because no one except the interested farmers will give it a thought. I therefore contend that the government should keep this land such as it is, the cost of the upkeep should be very little, if anything, and later should our town expand and the port be utilized, we shall need a branch line to carry wood, coal, etc., which will pass through our port. Should the government dispose of this narrow strip of land, everything will have to be done over again later in order to reestablish these means of communication with the wharf.

I therefore trust, Mr. Pouliot, that you will take the necessary steps to insure that this proposed sale will remain in abeyance for the present, and as previously stated, should this right of way be needed later, the cost will be lessened since only the sleepers and rail, so to speak, will have to be laid.

Thanking you in anticipation, I remain,

Yours truly,

J. H. Maillaux,
Manager.
St. Lawrence Furniture Co.

I received another letter under the same date from the mayor of Rivière du Loup to the same effect. He enclosed a copy of the notice, and with the permission of the house I will put the letter and the notice on Hansard. They are as follows:

Dear Sir,—

Enclosed please find copies of notices posted in public buildings here as well as in the city of Quebec. The government or the railway commission intend to sell the strip of land on the main road leading to the wharf of La Pointe de la R. du L. over which, in the past, ran the branch line of La Pointe.

My attention was called to this matter by a number of citizens. We are of the opinion that it would be preferable that this property remained in the hands of the government, first because such sale would bring in very little; then, if later on, one never knows, the question of developing a sea port here came up, the government would be in possession of the necessary land to construct the railway; while, if the land is sold, that might be brought up as an objection and perhaps as a real obstacle in realizing this scheme.

I believe that your views on this question agree with ours, it would therefore be in the interests of the town and county that you take up this matter, and, if possible, with the assistance of the proper authorities, prevent the sale of this land. I think that this letter represents the views of the entire population here, should it be of any help, you may make free use of it to foster the interests of our locality.

Believe me,

Yours truly,

C. M. E. Dubé,

Mayor.

The notice follows:

Sealed tenders will be received up to noon, Atlantic time, of Thursday, January 28, 1926, at the office of the chief engineer, Atlantic region, Canadian National Railways, Moncton, N.B., for the purchase en bloc of that portion of the old Intercolonial railway right of way known as the Rivière du Loup Wharf branch.

Sealed tenders will also be received on the same date at the said office of the chief engineer, Atlantic region, Canadian National Railways, Moncton, N.B., separately for each parcel of land included in the above right of way.

Plans of the said right of way can be seen at the office of the Canadian National Railways ticket agent at Rivière du Loup, at the post office of the town of Fraserville, and at the ticket office of the Canadian National Railways in Quebec City.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

Terms: Cash. Conveyance in the form of letters patent will issue from His Majesty the King.

Sgd. W. U. Appleton,

General Manager.

Atlantic Region, C.N.R.

Then on January 23, 1926, I received a letter from the president of the chamber of commerce of the city of Riviere du Loup. This letter was to the same effect; it asked that I discuss this matter with the Canadian National Railways in an endeavour to induce them to retain possession of that branch line. A resolution was enclosed and with the permission of the house I will put this letter and resolution on Hansard. The letter follows:

Dear Sir,—

Please find attached copy of a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Rivière-du-Loup opposing the sale of land located at the Pointe and requesting the railway management to retain possession of that property.

The resolution was transmitted to Sir Henry Thornton, and this Chamber in opposing this sale, relies on your support in regard to which you must already have received protests from the council.

Yours truly,

The Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce of Rivière-du-Loup, Horace Cimon.

This is the resolution:

Whereas the sea port of Rivière-du-Loup has never received from the government the development which its importance and economic situation should command;

Whereas this Chamber of Commerce has, on numerous occasions, earnestly requested the government to carry out this development;

Whereas the reports of engineers in the Public Works Department have justified the requests of this chamber;

Whereas to give effect to said reports, plans were prepared to give the port of Rivière-du-Loup the necessary development, and that in 1914 tenders were on the eve of being asked to carry out the proposed development;

Whereas the changed economic conditions brought on by the European war postponed indefinitely the carrying out of said work, but that this chamber intends to renew its requests to have the work executed the moment that conditions warrant its doing so again;

Whereas one of the essential factors of this development was the then existing branch line of the state railways and known as the Pointe branch line;

Whereas the management of the state railways, although having had the rails of said branch line removed a few years ago, nevertheless remained owner of the land of said branch line;

Whereas the said management now call for tenders for the purchase of said strip of land;

Whereas the sale of said land would hurt the future development of the port of Rivière-du-Loup, and would therefore be detrimental to the interests of the town of Rivière-du-Loup and the economic development of that part of the country;

That this Chamber of Commerce therefore pray the management of the state railways not to offer the land of said branch line of la Pointe for sale by tender but to retain possession of it, and this in the interest not only of the town of Rivière-du-Loup and surrounding districts but also in the interest of Canada as a whole.

I wrote to Right Hon. George P. Graham, the then Minister of Railways and under date of January 18, 1926, I received the following:

Dear Mr. Pouliot:

I have your letter of a few days ago, stating you have been advised by an alderman of Rivière du Loup, that notices have been placed in the post office there, offering for sale, by tender, the land of the branch line of the Canadian National Railways from Rivière du Loup wharf to Rivière du Loup station.

Personally, I am not familiar with this proposition and the only thing I can do is to refer your letter to the president of the board of management, Canadian National Railways, Montreal, who is conversant with the facts, and in a very much better position to deal with same than I. I shall no doubt hear from him before very long.

Yours sincerely,

Geo. P. Graham.

Under date of March 3, 1926, I received the following from Sir Henry Thornton:

Dear Mr. Pouliot:

With further reference to your letter of January 22nd.

I beg to advise you that the right of way for the branch line to which you have referred will not be sold, but will remain in the hands of the company. I trust this position will meet with your approval.

Yours sincerely,

H. W. Thornton.

Some time afterwards the Quebec & St. Lawrence Navigation Company began to operate a service between Rivière du Loup and northern points, and I think it was in 1927 that I met Sir Henry Thornton and asked him if that branch line was to be rebuilt. I received the following letter in reply under date of April 23, 1927:

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—

After you left my office this morning, the idea occurred to me that it would be preferable that I should have more details as to the traffic which would accrue to Rivière-du-Loup by the inauguration of this new service boat, and more particularly as regards the localities it will call at.

In a general way, I know what it is proposed to do, however I should like detailed information which will give me an idea of the probable traffic.

Is there any one who could furnish me with such information or would you prefer that our agent at Rivière-du-Loup should call on you to obtain it.

Sincerely yours,

H. W. Thornton.

The Quebec & St. Lawrence Navigation Company was carrying more passengers than freight and was operating only a summer service. Due to this fact, and to the fact also that the passengers went to the wharf in motor cars or buses, this matter did not receive the attention of Sir Henry Thornton for some time.

So much is being said about the importance of granting cheap rates for coal shipments that I desire to lay some facts before the house in regard to the convenience of Rivière du Loup as an all-year harbour. The tide is very strong at the point and the ice is carried away by the strong current and does not accumulate at any time to offer an impediment to navigation. The steamship Mahone, which received a subsidy from the Department of Trade and Commerce some years ago, has successfully proved the fact that navigation is possible all the year round at Rivière du Loup. That port is bound to become a very popular winter port because other steamships like the steamship Gaspesia have stopped also at Rivière du Loup during the winter time.

Mr. LAVERGNE: There are stations at Rivière du Loup, are there not?

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, but the boats do not stop there; I am speaking now of navigation, or to say in French: Je vois que mon ami veut me monter un bateau. My hon. friend is much deeper than is the water at the station, but, as my hon. friend says, we are O.K. I have tried to explain this matter so clearly that I will gain the support of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne).

The following statement will show the tonnage which could be handled at this port:

50,000 tons Nova Scotia coal for Fraser pulp mill, Edmundston, N.B.
15,000 tons Nova Scotia coal for Fraser paper mill, Madawaska, Me. via Edmundston, N.B.
10,000 tons Nova Scotia coal for Temiscouata Railway Company at Rivière du Loup, Quebec and Edmundston, N.B.
5,000 tons Nova Scotia coal and coke Rivière du Loup, Quebec, domestic use alone.
75,000 to 120,000 tons for Canadian National Railways at Rivière du Loup, Que.
155,000 tons Nova Scotia coal and 5,000 tons Sulphur from Port Sabine, Texas for Edmundston, N.B.

The house would like to know how much it would cost to take the coal from the wharf at Riviere du Loup to the station. It would not be any more than 25 cents a ton, and a reasonable rate for the Témiscouata railway to charge to carry the coal from Riviere du Loup to Edmundston, New Brunswick, or Madawaska, Maine, would be one dollar a ton. This makes a great difference in comparison with the present freight rates, which I gave a moment ago. The house will note also that there are things one cannot understand in these freight rates. For instance, from Sydney to Edmundston the present freight rate is $2.50 a ton, and from Sydney to Riviere du Loup the rate is $2.90, or 40 cents more. From Pictou, which is nearer than Sydney, the rate to Edmundston is $3.10 and to Riviere du Loup, $3.60. It is most extraordinary that it costs more to bring coal from a nearer point than from a further point. But if we take it for granted that it will cost about 90 cents a ton to bring the coal by water from either Sydney or Pictou to Riviere du Loup and 25 cents more to haul it from the wharf to the station at Riviere du Loup, this will mean $1.15 instead of $2.90 to bring it from Sydney, or a saving of $1.75, and $1.15 instead of $3.60 to bring it from Pictou, or a saving of $2.45. Thus to haul the coal by water from Pictou to Riviere du Loup and then by rail from the wharf to the station at Riviere du Loup will cost less than one-third of the present freight rate. If that rate of $1 a ton be accepted by the railway and the Board of Railway Commissioners, there will be a saving of 60 cents from Sydney to Edmundston and of $1.20 from Pictou to Edmundston. That would be a great saving on the price of the coal, because the cost of transportation is included in the price of the material. It would mean a great saving for the companies who distribute the coal, and it would also be an economy for the Canadian National; for the able lawyers of the Canadian National who have appeared before the Board of Railway Commissioners have stated again and again that the Canadian National are losing money all the time in carrying coal. Finally, it would be a great economy for the federal treasury, on account of the fact that if that coal can be hauled at such a rate, the government will have nothing to pay, in virtue of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, to indemnify the company in that respect. Therefore it will be a saving for the people concerned, for the railway, and for the Dominion government, to try out that scheme.

The matter has been discussed several times before the chamber of commerce of Riviere du Loup, and not only is it a matter of importance in connection with the transportation of coal, but I have in my hand a letter from Imperial Oil Limited showing that it is a matter of interest to them also. This letter reads:

March 6, 1931.

Mr. Jean-François Pouliot, C.R., M.P.,
Rivière-du-Loup, P.Q.

Dear Sir:—

Further re your letter of February 17 in connection with the resolution which you intend submitting to the House of Commons early next session, in reference to the developing of the harbour at Rivière-du-Loup, would say that in the absence of Mr. McKean, we have submitted your request to our general sales department, and are now in receipt of a letter from them, stating that they certainly would be interested in the development of any points by which a freight saving could be made.

It would have to be understood that in order to be of any service to us, it would be necessary for the Canadian National Railways to build and maintain, all year round, a line between their present station and the wharf.

Trusting that you will be successful in securing the passing of this resolution, and thanking you for calling our attention to same, we are,

Yours very truly,
Imperial Oil Limited,
R. G. Plaw,
Assistant Manager.

The Fraser Company, Limited, which operates mills in different places in Temiscouata county and also mills at Edumundston, New Brunswick, and Madawaska, Maine, might ship 20,000 to 30,000 tons of paper to Chicago on lake boats at Riviere du Loup via the Temiscouata railway and ex-Madawaska, Maine, from Edumundston. That paper is at present carried by the Boston, Bangor and Aroostook railway, which, as everyone knows, is a United States railway.

In conclusion, may I stress the fact that something should be done for small centres. I agree with the expenditures that are made in the big cities like Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, and so on, but the small centres should not be forgotten, because, if they are, people will migrate from them to the big cities and the unemployment situation will be worse than ever.

I informed the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) that I would amend the resolution that is now before the house. In these times of economy it would be pretty hard to ask the government to decide forthwith to construct those harbour facilities at Riviere du Loup for the unloading of coal; but as the plans were made some years ago I would ask the government kindly to see to it that experts are appointed to make a survey of the whole matter and as soon as possible to report accordingly to the government in order that we may know whether the people will receive any advantage from that scheme, whether it will be of benefit to the community, and whether it will mean a saving for the people of Canada without hurting anyone. Therefore I would ask leave to amend the resolution to read as follows:

Whereas the city of Rivière-du-Loup is the most important centre in the eastern part of the province of Quebec;

Whereas the harbour of said city is free from ice in winter, and navigation is possible at all times of the year;

Whereas the said city is a divisional point of the National railways and the terminus of the Témiscouata railway, which links the said city to the province of New Brunswick, and to that part of the National railways known in the past as the Transcontinental;

Whereas the national railways are still in possession of the branch line of Rivière-du-Loup station to the Rivière-du-Loup wharf;

Whereas the transport by water of coal from Nova Scotia to Rivière-du-Loup would be much more economical and would permit of its distribution at a lower cost in eastern Quebec, in the northern part of New Brunswick and the state of Maine;

Therefore be it resolved—that in the opinion of this house, the government should appoint experts to study the matter from every angle and report to the government as soon as possible.

The words that are changed are those last ones:

The government should appoint experts to study the matter from every angle and report to the government as soon as possible.

If the government accept this resolution, may I ask that the experts appointed be men of repute, perfectly independent of the Canadian National Railway and of all other organizations, so that the government will be well posted on the matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Has the hon. member the consent of the house to amend his resolution? It must have unanimous consent. Apparently there is no objection.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. member has not told the house what are the actual facilities in the harbour of Riviere du Loup.

Mr. POULIOT: I shall be glad to answer that question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member has the right to reply in closing the discussion on his resolution, but he cannot answer questions. Should he do so, his remarks would be considered as his reply, and would close the debate.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I wanted to put a question to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, before he concluded his remarks.

Mr. POULIOT: I shall be glad to answer if I have permission.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member may speak twice on the question. His time is up, and he has the right only to reply in closing the debate.

Mr. POULIOT: I submit that I did not speak for forty minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Then I was wrong as to that. Even so the hon. member may not speak twice. After he has taken his seat he can rise only to reply.

Mr. POULIOT: I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the information afterwards.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I desire to say only a few words on the proposed resolution of my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). First let me say that no government is better disposed than the present one to aid navigation and to facilitate the development of any of our ports. The port of Rivière du Loup, I understand, has had a decent wharf for years, and though the hon. gentleman was a member of this house for a certain number of years he never asked, if I am well informed, for any improvements to that harbour. I do not want to question his sincerity, but it is, to say the least, surprising that nothing was done in that direction when his party was in power, for the hon. member was, and still is, a very influential member of his party. I am sure he shares my views on that. It is therefore surprising that if he asked for something for the harbour at Riviere du Loup when his party was in power, nothing was done, and that to-day, now that we are in power, he is so deeply impressed with the importance of this question. How is it that nothing was done when his party was in power? Surely with his influence and with the help of his friend the premier of Quebec, his great friend, as we know, having a summer residence in the near vicinity, he could have obtained something from his party for the harbour of Riviere du Loup. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if the Liberal governments which have been in power in this country for almost the last ten years have done absolutely nothing at the request of my hon. friend from Temiscouata, it must have been because they thought the time was not opportune or that there was no emergency as to the development sought by my hon. friend.

This government, as I have already said, is willing to encourage the development of any of our ports. We believe that our maritime trade is closely connected with the development and progress of Canada. But the question of developing the port of Riviere-du-Loup is a rather difficult one. The hon. gentleman himself does not seem to be sure as to the advisability of doing certain works in that harbour. First, he proposed in the resolution which is now on the order paper that work should be immediately begun to facilitate the unloading of coal. Later on my hon. friend comes with an amendment asking that a body of experts be appointed to study every angle of that question. So he does not seem to be very sure about the matter himself.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the question of developing the port of Riviere-du-Loup should be studied, not by a board of experts, but by this government. Surely the former government studied the question, and evidently it came to the conclusion that no improvements should be made to that harbour. But now that the hon. gentleman has brought this question before the house and drawn it to the attention of the government it will be the duty of the government to study the question of developing the harbour of Riviere-du-Loup. We do not need to appoint a board of experts to study the question. It is our duty to study it. Later on, if we come to the conclusion that the matter is so important that this government is not in a position to solve it, then we will see that a body of experts is appointed. For the time being, I do not see the necessity of such a course, and I hope that my hon. friend, having brought the matter to the attention of the government, will now be satisfied to withdraw his motion.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): First of all let me give the information asked for by the Minister of Marine (Mr.Duranleau). There is a wharf at Riviere-du-Loup, running from east to west, between the mouth of the Riviere-du-Loup and the St. Lawrence river. It is quite a long wharf, extending for half to three quarters of a mile. At the head of the wharf there is a depth of from twelve to fourteen feet of water at low tide. This wharf is quite sufficient for passenger navigation, but the depth of water would be absolutely insufficient for the coal tramp steamers which draw more water.

This matter was studied a long time ago by the Department of Public Works, and I have here large development plans which I shall be glad to show to the minister even before he comes to Riviere-du-Loup, in order to give him some idea of the improvements that are to be carried on there.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Would the hon. member please tell the house how long ago the wharf which is now there was built?

Mr. POULIOT: It was built a long time ago by Baby Les Quais, before my hon. friend and myself were born. May I tell my hon. friend that when I was elected it was really falling into ruin. I had money spent on it every year in order to put it into good shape, and at one time a contract to repair the wharf was given to a firm of south shore contractors. There was a very dangerous hole in it, and it had to be repaired before the winter season set in. As the contractor was not working I interviewed the then Minister of Public Works and explained to him the whole situation. In turn he notified the contractor to proceed with the work, but his notification was not complied with. I succeeded in having that work done by day labour, and I may say to my hon. friend that it was done very successfully and to the satisfaction of the department. The people who performed the work by day labour did not use the whole amount of the appropriation set aside for the work and they were complimented by the department. That occurred either in 1926 or 1927. Each year quite a substantial item has been voted for the wharf at Riviere du Loup, and the work has been done by day labour to the full satisfaction of the Department of Public Works. The officers of the department were so much satisfied with the work done by the people I had procured that last year when an item of about $22,000 was voted for that wharf it was stipulated that the work was to be done by day labour by the same men who had given such good service, and not by contract. That is the reason this particular work, involving such a large sum of money, has been done by day labour.

But what happened? As soon as this government took office they chased these men away and replaced them by a foreman who was a thief. I notified the hon. the Minister of Public Works accordingly and he told me to substantiate my charge against the foreman and he would be prosecuted. I congratulated the minister on his readiness to act, but answered him, "I do not want the death of the sinner; I want his conversion." I consider it a matter of responsibility to recommend men who are worthy of recommendation. The point is however that those men were chased away. I said to them, "You may say you have voted for the Conservative candidate, if you wish, and keep your job; I do not mind." They were too proud to do that however. They preferred to leave their jobs and to be replaced by men who loafed. The whole amount of money was not spent, and I notice there is a revote this year. I have not the complete information, but I know that the foreman has paid—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must ask the hon. member to return to a discussion of his resolution.

Mr. POULIOT: Surely. I am merely giving some information concerning the work being done at Rivière du Loup. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine wanted to know what the Liberal party had done when it was in power, and I have attempted to tell him what was done then and what is being done now. I believe such information would be a matter of public interest. It is my intention merely to give some information to the house as to what is going on. When there is good work to be undertaken nothing is done, and when something is done it is done wrongly. That is why I take this opportunity of offering some humble suggestions to the government in order that they may improve the situation, if improvement is possible.

As a matter of fact Rivière du Loup is a natural harbour open throughout the year, and coal can be unloaded very cheaply. The use of this harbour means a saving in money to the Canadian National Railways, the big corporations and the Dominion treasury. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine was surprised that I had not made my request when the Liberal party was in power. My answer is a very simple one indeed. Wharves and public buildings had been so widely abandoned during the time the Tories were in power that it took me all my time to have them put into decent shape before beginning any new work. Like everyone who is newly elected I wanted first to do some spring cleaning by putting into order everything in my constituency. After that I wanted to try for some new improvements, such as the Rivière du Loup station and a new post office at Trois-Pistoles. Nothing is being done in connection with either of them, however.

I am very proud of my county and my constituency, and I want to replace the building which has been condemned by the board of health, and have some improvements made. I have given this government every possible chance. I do not wish to have them do this or that in a hurry, but it is well that they should think about these matters. I want to give the Minister of Marine plenty of time to think about it so that he may consult experts. If the whole matter was to be discussed from a constitutional point of view I would accept the decision of the minister, who in connection with matters of that kind is an expert. He is a very distinguished lawyer, and I sincerely hope he will be unanimously elected batonnier of the bar of Quebec. It is well known that the hon. minister is a very able lawyer. In this case, however, the expert must necessarily be a civil engineer, and I ask my hon. friend if he will be kind enough to ask an engineer to make an independent and impartial report about the building of a new wharf, about 1,650 feet from south to north, on the St. Lawrence river, and have some dredging done in order that coal tramp steamers may unload their coal. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I should be very glad if my hon. friend the minister would accept my suggestion, but unfortunately I cannot accept his—I cannot withdraw the resolution.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Will the Minister of Public Works say whether the papers asked for some time ago will be produced before we reach in supply the items relating to the improvement of harbours and rivers in the province of New Brunswick?

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I can only say that all the returns that have been ordered are prepared and are, I think, in the hands of the Secretary of State. They will be brought down any day.

INTERNATIONAL LOAD LINE CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I wish to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) two questions. First, is it the intention of the administration to introduce, during the present session of parliament, legislation implementing the findings of the International Load Line Convention held in London in May, 1930? Secondly, as a supplementary question, if this is the intention, will the minister give consideration to the suggestions received from the shipping interests of British Columbia in regard to certain exemptions in the sheltered waters adjacent to the coast of that province?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): We are at present preparing a bill to put into effect the findings of the International Load Line Convention, and we hope that we shall be able to introduce the bill during the present session.

As to the second question, although I have not studied the very lengthy report that has been submitted, involving as it does a good many technical questions, I may say that I see nothing in the report concerning exemptions in the case of sheltered waters. I do not know whether by our legislation we can alter the findings of that convention. However, the matter is under consideration at the present time and if it is possible to exempt sheltered waters we shall probably do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Thank you.

ROYAL GRAIN COMMISSION

PRINTING OF REPORT OF SIR JOSIAH STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I believe there will be a great demand for copies of the Stamp report, when it is issued, and I trust we shall have an assurance that there will be a considerable number of copies provided for distribution.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman is aware that the report has not been received,—

Mr. BROWN: I know that.

Mr. BENNETT: —but there will be as little delay as possible in presenting it when it is available. I shall bear in mind what the hon. member has said. The house will determine the number of copies to be printed when the report is laid on the table.

RADIO LICENCES

On the orders of the ddy:

Mr. W. H. TAYLOR (Norfolk-Elgin): I wish to ask the Minister of Marine a question. Is the information correct that persons permitted to issue radio licences under his department must have a recommendation from the government member or the government candidate?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must remind hon. members that questions asked on the orders of the day should concern urgent matters only. The hon. member is asking a question which he should put on the order paper.

Mr. TAYLOR: This is an urgent matter. I have had several requests from people in my riding—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member should put the question on the order paper; it is not of a character to be asked on the orders of the day. Questions, to warrant being asked at this time, should concern matters of urgency.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT

REPRESENTATION FOR ELECTORS RESIDENT IN THE DISTRICT OF PATRICIA

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River) moved the second reading of Bill No. 2, to amend the Representation Act.

He said: We have gone through the order paper so quickly to-day, Mr. Speaker, that I am hardly prepared for this. The purpose of the amendment is stated clearly in the explanatory note, which reads:

> The purpose of this amendment is to provide representation for electors resident in the district of Patricia north of the electoral district of Kenora-Rainy River.

This bill was introduced at the last regular session of 1930 and was opposed by the opposition of that time for the reason, I believe, that they did not have proper information. For the benefit of the house, I may say that the electors north of Kenora located in this district were denied the vote in 1925 and again in 1926, and the bill introduced at the last regular session of 1930, just prior to the federal election, was for the purpose of giving votes to the miners, labourers and others residing north of Kenora. I am asking this house to follow what was done by the government of Ontario. Prior to the provincial elections in 1929 the provincial government changed their representation act in order to take in this territory. At the last federal redistribution the territory was cut off on the south bank of the English river, but since that time mining developments have opened up in the Red Lake district, the Woman River district and at Pine Falls. With these mines and with the development of waterpower some 500 to 600 electors were disfranchised during the last federal elections. I am sure when the Prime Minister opposed this measure when it was last before the house he was not fully aware of the fact that there would be between 500 and 600 people disfranchised in this country. Unfortunately I had to be absent from the house when the bill was up for its second reading and I was not in position to give the required information.

I believe the Prime Minister was misinformed in the position he took when the matter was last before the house. These people were not permitted to vote during the last campaign because of a ruling given by the chief electoral officer. It is unfair and unjust to deprive citizens of this part of the country especially—if I am permitted to specialize—those hard-working pioneers who are creating new wealth in northern Ontario or in other parts of the country of the privilege of casting their ballots, and I ask that this bill be given its second reading.

On motion of Mr. Cahan the debate was adjourned.

ARMISTICE DAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CELEBRATION OF ARMISTICE DAY ON NOVEMBER 11

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of Bill No. 8, to amend the Armistice Day Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very short and simple bill. It provides that two sections of the Armistice Day Act, passed in 1921, shall be repealed and the bill of which I am now moving the second reading substituted therefor.

This bill provides that the celebration of Armistice Day shall be held on November 11 of each year and on no other day, whereas the previous act provided that it should be held on the Monday of the week in which November 11 fell. The bill says nothing about Thanksgiving day, so the procedure in that regard will revert to what it was prior to 1921. It will be at the option of the government to proclaim when Thanksgiving day shall be celebrated, not necessarily in November but perhaps in October.

The old act has been the law for ten years, and one would have supposed that what opposition there might have been to it originally would have died out, but on the contrary it has been increasing year after year. The reason why this opposition did not come to a head sooner is, I believe, that a great many soldiers did not know that that was the law. Many of them simply went ahead and celebrated Armistice day on November 11 regardless of what day was fixed by law. They are beginning to find out what is the law and there is a general feeling throughout the country that Armistice day should be celebrated on November 11 and on no other day. The only people who object to this proposal are commercial travellers who desire to be able to come home on a Friday or Saturday night and have a holiday on Monday. Perhaps there are a few others who would like to go to their homes and have a holiday on Monday, but I would point out that this day was never intended to be a public holiday in the sense of bank holidays and so on; it was intended as a remembrance day for the soldiers, and they are entitled to have it on that day. We never hear of any proposals to have Christmas day, New Year's day or the 1st of July held on the Monday of the week in which those particular days fall.

This matter is solely and entirely the concern of the returned men and we as a governing body ought to respect their wishes. It has nothing to do with what other people want, and the soldiers should surely have the right to decide.

I have no desire to take up the time of the house, but I have stacks of supporting resolutions and letters from every part of the country. I have a communication from the Dominion executive council of the Canadian Legion, and they refer also to a resolution passed at the Dominion convention held last November. I have received resolutions adopted by a large number of bodies, one from Mrs. Barnard who represents one thousand women of the British Columbia Women's provincial command. There are others from various bodies in the west and elsewhere, some representing five hundred and more returned men. In no single instance have I received objection from any soldier, let alone any representative body of soldiers.

I would repeat that this has nothing at all to do with and will not interfere with Thanksgiving day. Thanksgiving day can be celebrated on any day which the government sees fit to name, but the soldiers are asking that Armistice day be celebrated only on November 11. When it is observed on some other day they find difficulty in getting away from their occupation or business to carry on their own celebration on November 11. They regard this day not as a holiday but as a day of sacred remembrance.

I do not believe there will be any objection to this bill from any section of the country, and I trust it will receive the support of the house.

Mr. C. H. DICKIE (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I am thoroughly in accord with the remarks of the introducer of this bill, with one slight exception to which I will refer a little later. I find that it is almost the unanimous wish of the returned men and their families in British Columbia, and I presume it is the same throughout the rest of Canada, that this change be made. Thanksgiving day has always been associated in our minds with the harvest festival, which originated when the pilgrim fathers garnered their first crop in 1641. The soldiers are perfectly right in asking for this change, and I agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) that their wishes should be respected.

I received a communication from the Dominion headquarters of the Canadian Legion, one clause of which reads as follows:

> Be it therefore resolved—that we request that the parliament of Canada be requested and do hereby respectfully request it to enact legislation whereby in place of the present Thanksgiving day, November 11 in every year shall be set aside as a national holiday to be known as Remembrance day.

Those of us who gather each year before the cenotaphs throughout the country know that the thoughts associated with Thanksgiving day are forgotten. The sad memories usually connected with Armistice day take away from the joyousness which should prevail on Thanksgiving day. It is the wish of the soldier bodies that this day be known as Remembrance day, and I think we should acquiesce in their wishes.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber):

> That the word "Armistice" in the last line be struck out and the word "Remembrance" substituted therefor.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order. It is not customary on the second reading to amend the details of a bill. I suggest that the hon. member wait until we go into committee. I have no objection to the proposal.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment as suggested is not in order at this stage. The motion is for the second reading of the bill. The amendment as such would have to be proposed as an amendment to the bill when it is under consideration in committee.

Mr. ARTHURS: In view of the fact that this is not a political question, that it has aroused a great deal of feeling throughout Canada, and that there are differences of opinion on the subject, I would move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. NEILL: Looks like a stall! On the motion to adjourn the debate I would point out—

Mr. BENNETT: This motion is not debatable.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT DECLARING RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO REFRAIN FROM VOTING

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Last Thursday I gave notice that I would propose to-day that the standing orders of the house be amended by inserting the following:

9(a). Upon a division a member is not obliged to vote.

In moving this amendment I do not propose anything new. I simply desire to clarify the situation and to enable the house and yourself, sir, as guardian of the rules of this house, to avoid a repetition of the little embroilment of last week. That, however, I regard, as a matter of fact, only as an incident. What I wish to make clear is that there never has been and that there is not at the present time any standing order or set rule governing the manner in which members must vote or refrain from voting. What has been quoted in this house or outside the house as Rule 68 is not and never has been a rule; it is one of the footnotes which Mr. Beauchesne has incorporated as comments upon the very rule which I propose to discuss to-day—that is, standing order No. 9. And even at that, Mr. Beauchesne's footnote, No. 68, which my good friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) mistook for a rule of the house, is but the reproduction of a paragraph of Bourinot's fourth edition, at page 381, as any man familiar with Mr. Beauchene's book, or with the rules of the house, can easily find out; because there, after paragraph 68, you have "B-381." Besides, that paragraph in Bourinot's fourth edition of 1916, which was edited by a predecessor of our able clerk, Doctor Flint, is also a verbatim reproduction of the same words used by Sir John Bourinot in the first edition of his book in 1884, at page 389. Now, that comment of Sir John Bourinot, reproduced as it has been from time to time, was absolutely true and accurate as applied to the practices of the British and Canadian houses in 1884. I do not think I shall have any trouble in demonstrating that it is no longer applicable to the rules of this house as they were revised in 1927.

Now to give a short history of our standing orders. The first set of rules or standing orders of this house were adopted on December 20, 1867, as may be found in the Journals of the House of Commons for the year 1867-68, at pages 115 to 125. Neither in these standing orders, any more than in any other standing orders following, nor in the present standing orders, was there any disposition regarding the right of members either to vote or not to vote. But there was a general governing clause, adopted as standing order No. 116, which stated:

In all unprovided cases the Rules, Usages and Forms of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland shall be followed.

That is what I call the governing rule of all our standing orders, from that day until the present time. As it was in 1867, that general clause did not make any mention as to date with regard to the usages pursued in the House of Commons in England; they were to apply from time to time. The first time that the matter was brought up in the house—at least the first time, and I think it is sufficient, that I have discovered—was in 1879, when the house voted, if I remember rightly, on the famous legislation concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway. An hon. member having voted, his vote was challenged by one of the ministers of the crown, Mr. Caron, because he had paired; upon which the Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald, leader of the house, stood up and stated, in contradiction of his own colleague, that—

Every member in the house, if called upon, was compelled to vote, and even if a gentleman got up and stated that he had paired, the house could compel him to vote, because, if he had paired, he must leave the house before the vote was taken. This was English practice.

If the rule stood now as it was then, it would mean that every time a vote is taken, members getting up and declaring that they have not voted because they are paired, break the same rule, or rather what has been mentioned as such, but which as a matter of fact is not a rule but only a practice. Let us see, however. Upon this opinion of Sir John Macdonald, implicitly endorsed by the whole house, Sir John Bourinot based the comment which I have quoted and which Mr. Beauchesne has reproduced in his paragraph, No. 68, misquoted as a rule of this house. The only rule was the practice as defined by Sir John Macdonald in 1879, then in force in England as here; because it must be noted that Sir John Macdonald invoked it as applying to this house inasmuch as it was the English practice.

In 1906, however, the British House of Commons revised its standing orders and adopted the following rule:

No. 29. A member may vote in a division although he did not hear the question put.

And paragraph 2:

A member is not obliged to vote.

—which are the exact words that I have put in the motion I now propose to the house. Now, did this apply to Canada? No. And why not? Because in 1906, the same year, in the month of March, the House of Commons of Canada had revised its rules and in substitution for the governing rule 116 of 1867 it had introduced a new governing clause. It is called "General Rule No. 1." This, I claim, is the most important of the standing orders because it governs the whole. It reads:

In all cases not provided for hereinafter—That is, by the standing orders.

—or by sessional or other orders, the rules, usages and forms of proceeding of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in force on the first day of July 1867, shall be followed.

As Doctor Flint quotes in his posterior edition of Bourinot's work, the effect of this was to prevent the application to the House of Commons of Canada of the new standing order adopted in England in December 1906. So that when, in 1922, Mr. Beauchesne issued the first edition of his comments, he was perfectly justified in inserting this footnote. It was then under No. 69, now under No. 68. This paragraph says that an hon. member is obliged to vote. That was copied, I repeat, from Sir John Bourinot. Then paragraph 70-69 of the second edition (1927)—reads as follows:

Under ancient custom, refusal to vote was considered a serious parliamentary offence, but the practice was changed in 1906 by the British house adopting a standing order whereby a member is not obliged to vote. That standing order does not apply to the Canadian Commons. The practice has not been changed in Canada where every member who has heard the question put is bound to vote..

This is the second paragraph referred to by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Casgrain) as being another rule of the house. The hon. member was apparently under the misapprehension that Mr. Beauchesne is the parliament of Canada and that his comments are to be taken as rules of this house, just as a lawyer in consulting with a client might confuse the opinion of a commentator with the text of a statute or of a judgment delivered by the court. I do not think my hon. friend would act in that way in his capacity as a lawyer.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Not all the time.

Mr. BOURASSA: My hon. friend did not do it intentionally. I am sure that most hon. members of this house are apt to make such mistakes once in a while; and may I say for the benefit of the hon. lady member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) that many members of the press gallery seemed to be under the same misapprehension. Neither Sir John Bourinot nor Mr. Beauchesne is the parliament of Canada, nor should a private opinion expressed by even such eminent parliamentary jurists as Sir John Bourinot or Mr. Beauchesne prevail over the expressed will of parliament.

I think I can demonstrate quite easily that in 1927 this house changed its attitude with regard to this very question and adopted a new rule which put into effect the practice which for many years, even previous to 1906, had been in force in Great Britain. In 1927, as every hon. member knows, our rules were revised. Heaven knows—my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Neill) will support me in this—they were not revised with the idea of giving more freedom to independent members of this house. However, the committee which revised our rules did not think it necessary to impose upon hon. members the obligation of voting if conscientiously they did not feel like voting. What did they do? They introduced a new governing rule. While the House of Commons had, in 1906, declared that such practices, customs and usages of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom would apply here only as prior to 1867, under the rules adopted by this house in 1927 we reverted to the principle of 1867, and in fact made it much clearer. The general rule governing all such cases now is standing order No. 1, which reads as follows:

In all cases not provided for hereinafter or by sessional or other orders, the usages and customs of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as in force at the time shall be followed so far as they may be applicable to this house.

The principle of applying only those rules in force in 1867 was deleted. So that from 1927 on, we have it stated in so many words in our standing orders, which are the laws governing the proceedings in this house, that the forms and practices now in force in England are in force here to govern all cases not provided for by our own standing orders. Under this new governing rule, which was a revolution, whether right or wrong, the then Speaker, Hon. Mr. Lemieux, decided twice during the session of 1928—the first session following the adoption of these rules—that a member although present in the house was not obliged to vote.

The first occasion occurred on March 27, 1928, to be found at page 1755 of the debates of that year. Curiously enough, the challenge was issued by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), so he has good reason to know the rule which was applied at that time. The hon. member raised the point that the then Minister of Immigration, Mr. Forke, had not voted, and then followed a very picturesque and I think very true comment by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), as follows:

The minister is not the only one who did not understand what he was voting for.

I think that is one of the best comments on parliamentary government ever made. Mr. Speaker Lemieux spoke thus:

The rule is that members who are present when a motion is read must vote if they are in the house whilst the division is being taken. But when an hon. member declares that he does not know what the amendment is about, he is excused from voting. That is the practice followed in the British House of Commons.

Unfortunately, the Speaker, who had given his decision on the spur of the moment, did not quote the authorities. However, on May 26 of the same year another occasion arose on which the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Robb, challenged the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) for abstaining from voting. The decision of the Speaker, which appears on page 3420 of the debates of that year, was as follows:

Generally, under the practice of the house, an hon. member who has heard the question put must vote. However, lately, since 1906, I know, in the British parliament this time-honoured practice has been ignored; I have seen a standing order—

The one which I read a moment ago—

—to the effect that when a member does not feel justified in voting he need not do so. I decided this point some weeks ago, when the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke) was in the same position; he declared that because of conscientious reasons he did not think it wise to vote on the question.

The cause of the confusion which arose last week reduces itself to this: In publishing his book in 1927 our excellent clerk did not delete those so-called rules Nos. 68 and 69. They were not really rules, they were opinions previously expressed by Sir John Bourinot and Mr. Beauchesne. At the time they were expressed, they were quite proper but had no further application after the change of the governing rule made in 1927. In justice to our clerk, whom I consider to be one of the best parliamentary authorities, not only in Canada but in the British Empire, it must be said that this book was published a few weeks after the close of the session. He himself in his preface points out the fact that because of the changes adopted during the previous session he added some two hundred footnotes to the present edition, and struck out other footnotes which had no further application. His mistake would probably have been made by nine out of ten, if not by forty-nine out of fifty men. The clerk had to follow, and he did so with much industry and legal insight, the full effect of this new governing clause No. 1 upon all the standing orders and practices of this house. It would have taken months fully to realize what the effect of this new rule would be on the various practices and customs theretofore undefined either in the rules of our house or in those of the British house. So I repeat and I think I could end by saying that what I am moving to-day is in order to dispel a misapprehension, to put into concrete form what has been since 1927 the unwritten rule of the house and assented to by jurisprudence from the chair the year after the rules were revised.

But before I take my seat I want to go a little further, and I hope the house will acquit me of a desire simply to give a little satisfaction to my amour propre. What I want to demonstrate in my closing words is that this rule, as now written and applied in England—and it was applied in practice several years before it was enacted in their standing orders—is in strict conformity with the evolution of parliamentary government that has taken place both in England and here, not to speak of other countries. I quite realize that for the many years during which the House of Commons was divided into two strictly regulated parties, the shepherds of those two flocks, for instance my good friends the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) and the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson), were mostly concerned with bringing in all the stranded ewes and making them vote in accordance with the party whip or order. But whether they like the situation or not, in England as here, with the extension of the suffrage not only to the various classes of men but to women as well, the point has been reached that the two party system is no longer satisfactory to a growing number of men and women either in Great Britain or in Canada. I find it quite legitimate on the part of the old party leaders, their followers and their press men, to deprecate that growth, but still it is there; and so long as there are fractions of the Canadian community, as in England, who send to parliament men who are not bound to follow the dictates of the two old parties, not only must those men be allowed freedom to express their opinions in concrete motions as they present them in contradistinction to the motions presented by the government or the official opposition; but in addition we must acknowledge to those men elected by the free electorate of Canada, the same liberty of not voting for any motion presented by a Conservative or by a Liberal if they find in that motion something to which they agree and something with which they disagree. Is that not reasonable?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If this be the rule as it exists now, what is the necessity of enacting this new rule as would be done by the hon. member's motion?

Mr. BOURASSA: This is simply to clarify the matter. First of all it was evident last week that many hon. members were misinformed as to the situation. I am quite sure and I am prepared to say that every one of them was in perfect good faith. Under what circumstances are laws or regulations passed in the British house? In such matters I always rely upon British practice because, after all, the practice of parliamentary government is essentially British, and whether we agree or disagree with many things in British policy, we must agree that the British parliament, as a parliament, remains the example. Why did they adopt that rule in England? Because the point had been reached when first the Irish party, then the Labour party, and then the Independent Labour party, had cropped up; and very often they were not permitted to express their views otherwise than by abstention from voting. Very wisely here as in England we have stuck to the rule that we should not have numerous amendments. But suppose even we changed that so as to give to my friends to my left, the Progressives—and even they are now nearly divided into two groups—or my friends of the Labour group, or myself or my good neighbour, the right to express our views in subamendments. After those subamendments have been disposed of we are obliged to vote either for or against the amendment, or the motion, or to abstain from voting. I do not want to refer to a past debate, but as a matter of illustration I may say that I stated quite clearly that the amendment of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) suited me in one respect but not in another. By voting against it I would have been forced to deny something in which I believed and by voting for it I would have been forced to approve something I did not approve. It is evident it was under the weight of such considerations that the change was made in England and I ask the house to make the same change here simply to clarify the question.

May I appeal to both the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition for whom—and they know this although we may differ on many occasions,—I have the greatest respect? I appeal especially to the Prime Minister whose marvellous erudition in matters of law and of parliamentary government has many times given me wonder. He is undoubtedly one of the greatest legal minds in this country. I am quite sure he is sincerely very much concerned with the preservation of the best traditions of British government. May I remind him of this? When the change was made in England it was proposed by Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, not an upsetter of things, I believe, one of the most respected of British statesmen in the last century. Around him sat as ministers of the crown such men as Sir Edward Grey, James Bryce—I call them as they were then styled, mere commoners but men of great value—Mr. Haldane, who later on became Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Asquith. On the other side the opposition was led in the house by Mr. Arthur Balfour, surrounded by such men as the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, his son Austen, Lord Robert Cecil, and that veteran, not so well known perhaps outside of England but so much respected in England, Sir Edward Clarke, who died just a few days ago, one of the shining lights and one of the most respected men in the British parliament as well as before the British courts. All those men sat there, and whilst many other proposals which were enacted then by a majority were discussed, this disposition which I ask the Canadian House of Commons to adopt for the same obvious reason that it was adopted in England, was not only adopted unanimously but not challenged by anybody. Do hon. members think if that change had been considered as an attempt to break with the best traditions of the House of Commons, as a danger to the working of parliamentary institutions, there would not have been found amongst those that I have named a single man to protest? But no, it passed unanimously.

The other portion of the rule, the one which exempts members from hearing the question, was challenged and, indeed, rather amusingly. The Conservative member who challenged the other part of the rule and said that the members should listen to the question, gave at the same time the evidence that that rule also had been disregarded for a good while in England, especially since the adoption of the new system of registering the vote by going through the lobbies. He said that time and again, he had heard members rushing into a lobby and asking friends of theirs; "What is all this about?"—"Blowed if I know!" Thus you had two informed members of the House of Commons pushing themselves into the lobby and coming out from the lobby into the House without knowing what they were voting for. For that reason it is better to discriminate, and here I give to the hon. member for Quebec East, the former Minister of Justice, (Mr. Lapointe), my reason for proposing this change. If we left it as it is, the whole of standing order 29 and the practice founded in England upon it, would apply to us. It would exempt members of the house from listening to a question. I do not believe in that, first for the reason that was given by Mr. Rutherford in England, but mainly because our mode of voting is not that which prevails in England. I claim, sir, that I am precisely within the spirit of British institutions when I say, as was stated time and time again by Sir John A. Macdonald and others, that all those rules and practices of the British parliament which are applicable to us we should endeavour to preserve, and those that are not applicable we should not. Therefore, I think that we should discard the first part of standing order 29 as adopted in England because not yet having resorted to the lobby system of voting it seems to me only decent, were it only for the edification of the public, that a member should be in his seat when the question is put. I think that that is a conclusive reason why we should adopt that part of standing order 29 of the English house which concerns the liberty of members not to vote, but not the other part which allows them to vote without knowing upon what they are voting. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), the motion standing in my name as it is recorded in the Votes and Proceedings.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, that I voice the views of all the members of this house when I express our gratitude to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) for the toil to which he has gone in bringing to the attention of the members the history of this rule. He has done it dispassionately, and I think with precision.

May I venture, however, to remind him that the reason why we in Canada are authorized to make such rules as we might desire for the government of our own house, provided that they did not exceed the power exercised in the making of rules by the House of Commons of Great Britain is to be found in the fact that when the British North America Act was originally passed it contained in section eighteen a clause which provided as follows:

> The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members therof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by act of the parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.

That, in a very vital moment in our history, was found to stand in the way of the exercise of certain necessary powers, so in 1875, on the 19th of July, the imperial parliament amended the British North America Act by substituting a new section reading as follows:

> The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by act of the parliament of Canada, but so that any act of the parliament of Canada defining such privileges, immunities, and powers shall not confer any privileges, immunities, or powers exceeding those at the passing of such act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.

As the hon. member for Labelle has very properly pointed out, there was a rule in England until recent years compelling members to vote. That rule was abrogated in 1906 under the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and to which I shall presently make some reference. The original rule was based on the assumption that every member of the House of Commons should, if he were in his place, vote upon any given question that was submitted by the Speaker for the consideration of the house. Two factors influenced the commons in changing that rule, one was the confusion with respect to voting. The hon. gentleman has referred to that. As is well known, in England to vote a member leaves the chamber and goes into either the government or the opposition lobby. The tellers are appointed by the Speaker for the division. When several parties other than the two old parties, as the hon. gentleman has said, began to exercise authority there was first of all provision made, not by law, but by custom, for abstention from voting, and the reason that the rule was amended was because it was so wholly disregarded. That was the real reason. In other words, the confusion in voting and the difficulties in voting, by reason of there being but the two lobbies, had brought about a situation that made it incumbent that the rules should be changed in the manner indicated.

In my opinion this is a matter which every member of the house should consider from the point of view of the best interests of the house. In my opinion every member of the house, if he is in the chamber, should record his view on every question submitted to the house by the Speaker. As I was thinking of this matter this morning I remembered the words of Burke:

> I certainly have very warm wishes for the place of my birth, but the sphere of my duties is my true country.

Those of you who recall that celebrated speech of his to the electors of Bristol will recognize that he put perhaps as fairly as it has ever been put the position of a member of parliament. The duty of a member of parliament is not only to his own constituency; it is to every part of this broad Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Once we have conceded the right of any member to withdraw from the chamber, then I think by the very nature of our proceedings and the method we adopt in voting, he must vote if he is in his place. I say that for two reasons: First, because his sitting in this chamber when the question is put involves much confusion if he does not vote. You have that here in this chamber yourself, Mr. Speaker, and it is known to all of us. Secondly, I conceive that there rests upon every member who thinks it worth while to sit in the chamber the duty to express to this country what his views are with respect to the questions so submitted to him. Does not that seem to be reasonable? In a vast country such as this where we have but 245 members, with questions which affect the well-being of every part of the body politic constantly being submitted for our consideration, and having by an extension of our rules given the right to a third group to move a subamendment when going into supply, thereby securing great freedom for every individual in the expression of his opinion—is it not incumbent upon every one of us elected not only to represent a particular constituency, but to deal with problems that affect the well-being of Canada as a whole, to express his opinion in the only method known to the law in which he can express it in this house, namely, by rising in his place and recording his opinion? While pairs are not recognized by parliamentary practice and procedure, the custom or convention has grown up whereby the view of a member paired is recorded upon the journals of the house. I cannot therefore do other than in a very few words indicate that I believe it is the bounden duty of every hon. member of the Canadian House of Commons, in view of the problems with which we have to deal, to be ready and willing if he sits in this house to express an opinion. If peradventure there be those who believe that it is undesirable for particular reasons at a given moment not to express an opinion, I see no reason why an hon. member might not withdraw from the house. I very distinctly recall an occasion in which I did. I felt that for the moment I was not in accord with the view held by my friends, and another hon. gentleman and myself retired from the chamber rather than vote. I was sitting in the seat now occupied by the former Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin). In England it requires only seven or eight minutes to record a division, and in the English House of Commons there are about six hundred members. Those hon. members who have watched the clock realize how long it takes in this house. The provision for calling in the members in the Canadian House of Commons is somewhat different from the custom in England. In our house Mr. Speaker says, "Call in the members," and during the interval which elapses between the time the bell rings to call in the members and the Speaker rises to put the question there is a period given for hon. members to finally determine whether or not they will go into the lobby and not vote or be in the house and vote. I consider that interval to afford opportunity to each hon. member to consider how he will vote—such an opportunity is not afforded in the same way in England. As Burke said in one of his addresses the English do not believe that customs which violate the law should long continue and the law is repealed. And so the custom by which the law was disregarded with respect to voting in England was crystallized by the repeal of the provisions which called upon members to vote.

We are a new country, with fresh problems, large obligations and responsibilities, and I do not believe there is in this house a single member who desires to escape his obligations or be relieved of his responsibilities. His obligations are to Canada. His responsibilities are to the country as a whole and in the discharge of those obligations and responsibilities I believe it is in the best interests of this Dominion that every member of this house should, when the proper moment comes, rise in his place and express his opinion upon every question submitted from the chair. If he does not wish to do that he should withdraw from the chamber and thereby preserve his independence of mind and freedom of choice hereafter. That is my conviction in the matter.

Holding these views as strongly as I do I now move an amendment to the motion made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) seconded by Mr. Stevens as follows:

> That the motion be amended by striking out the word "not" therein before the word "obliged."— so that hereafter, whatever doubt may have been entertained in the past, it will be removed and all hon. members in this house will be obliged to vote when the question is put from the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Bennett moves in amendment, seconded by Mr. Stevens that the motion be amended by striking out the word "not" therein before the word "obliged." The original motion reads:

> That the standing orders of this house be amended by inserting the following as 9(a).
> Upon a division a member is not obliged to vote.

The effect of the amendment is to strike out from the motion the word "not". The motion would then read that the member is obliged to vote. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On a point of order, I would like to ask whether the amendment as put is in order? Is it not a negative of the original motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: My ruling is that the amendment is in order. The original motion is for an amendment of the rules, and the amendment is also for an amendment of the rules, but in a different way. I therefore hold that the amendment is in order.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I am not quite pleased with the way the Prime Minister has explained the situation, or his contention that every hon. member who is present in the house must vote. Those who are paired cannot vote.

Mr. BENNETT: I excepted them.

Mr. MARCIL: There is no record kept of pairs, except in Hansard, and Hansard is not official. It is not an official record of the proceedings of this house. Therefore if this new rule passed a member who is paired would have to leave the house because he is paired and cannot vote. He is prevented from voting because he is paired. Pairs however are not recognized by the chair and are not mentioned in the journals of the house. I would like to know what the Prime Minister means.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is no doubt that my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) is correct in his interpretation of the situation as it exists. So much is clear. From the words of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister there is no doubt a mistake has been made, and now it is proposed to correct that mistake by enacting a new rule. So far as I am concerned, although I believe it is desirable that hon. members should vote on every question submitted to them, I do not think it fair to correct that situation by enacting a rule in this way to-day. Usually rules of the house when changed or amended are so changed and amended by a special committee. There is a Speaker's committee where the whole situation may be considered and studied, and I am free to say that if I were a member of such a committee I would perhaps support the views of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. Certainly however I will not vote for his amendment in order to correct the mistake which was made the other day.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): In view of the discussion which has taken place, I have not very much to say more particularly with regard to the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). In so far as former rules are concerned he has covered the situation very clearly. The Prime Minister has moved an amendment however which is of some importance, and which probably will mean a great deal to hon. members of this house. I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), the former Minister of Justice, that this matter be referred to a special committee of the house, is a fair one. However I am not very hopeful that this will be done, because I believe the Prime Minister has made up his mind that he is going to have his way on this occasion.

Mr. BENNETT: Rather unfair, but still—

Mr. McINTOSH: What is wrong with that?

Mr. GARDINER: Both the motion and the amendment arose out of an occurrence of last Tuesday night when the amendment to the motion in regard to the reply to the speech from the throne was being voted upon. At that time certain hon. members in this corner of the house did not vote either for or against the amendment. So far as we were concerned, we felt that we were within our rights, more particularly having in mind the rulings of the former Speaker.

Let me point out clearly to the house that the amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne was purely a party amendment. That is my judgment of it. The time of this house is given to playing party politics more than to the real business of the country. In view of the proposed amendment by the Prime Minister apparently such practice is going to continue unceasingly. I wish the people of Canada could sit in this house sometimes—

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARDINER: —and listen to the debate and note the waste of time through the two political parties jockeying for political advantage; if the people knew what went on in this chamber I am satisfied they would make a change pretty quickly.

The rules of the house up to the present have been designed practically for the playing of the old two-party system. As far as we are concerned we object to this. Personally, and I think I can speak for my colleagues as well, if any question comes before the house that merits the attention of members, and consequently is a question upon which they would vote, you will always find, Mr. Speaker, that we will vote. But when questions are brought forward as a matter of party tactics, we will not take notice of them and we will not vote on them. If this amendment is adopted and we are forced to leave the house while a division is being taken, then we will leave the house as a protest against this kind of procedure.

An hon. MEMBER: And stay out.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: I am not afraid to stay out for a few minutes. Now, sir, let me come back to last Tuesday night's performance. I propose to deal with that now in view of the amendment which the Prime Minister has introduced. The vote had been taken and was being counted. The hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson) rose in his seat and stated:

> The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) have not voted.

Mr. NEILL: Which was not correct.

Mr. GARDINER: Then Your Honour said:

> My understanding of the rule is that hon. members may refrain from voting if they see fit.

That was your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Of that there is no question, for it is in Hansard, and in my judgment undoubtedly it is a correct ruling, in that you were following the precedent laid down by the former Speaker. Furthermore, the explanation which the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has given this afternoon with regard to these rules has in my view confirmed the correctness of Your Honour's first judgment. But what happened? Protests were made; for instance, the chief whip of the Conservative party (Mr. Simpson, Algoma), and the chief whip of the Liberal party (Mr. Casgrain), probably being very much exercised over party discipline and feeling that it was necessary for them to say something on the question, called Your Honour's attention to a supposed rule, No. 68. Evidently these gentlemen did not know that that was not a rule at all. At the present time we have only two rules dealing with voting. They are as follows:

> 8. When members have been called in, preparatory to a division, no further debate is to be permitted.
> 9. Upon a division, the Yeas and Nays shall not be entered upon the minutes, unless demanded by five members.

I challenge any member to point to any other rule or standing order with regard to voting. These two, I repeat, are the only rules dealing with the question whether a member must vote or not. But my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has given a very good description of how under the former practice prior to 1927 every member who was in his seat and heard the question read had to cast his vote on whatever motion was before the house. The chief whips of the two old parties again called your attention to the fact that certain members in this corner had not voted. Then the Prime Minister entered into the discussion, and I may be permitted to quote him briefly:

> Mr. Bennett: Perhaps nothing more serious has arisen since I have been in parliament. The authority of the chair is challenged, is defied openly by members of this house. The house must then do what the rules require. You will name, Mr. Speaker, the members thus in contempt.

Just imagine the Prime Minister of this country making such a statement based on an insufficient knowledge of the rules! Why Your Honour changed your mind I do not know. Probably it was because of the pressure of the Prime Minister and other members.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. GARDINER: I will withdraw the word "pressure" and substitute "suggestion." Probably it was because of the suggestion by the Prime Minister and several other members that you changed your decision. But, Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate you that you did make a right decision in the first place. If you had only followed out your first thought in the matter you would have continued to be all right.

I am going to oppose the amendment. I think it is detrimental to the best interests of the members of this house. Let me remind the house of this important point, that the day may come when certain members who are now opposed to our stand may find themselves in the same position as we were in a few days ago. Let them think of the future; that is very important for them to remember. There is no reason why we should permit the privileges of private members to be further curtailed simply for party purposes. We should see to it that instead of the private member's privileges being curtailed or destroyed, those privileges should be enlarged, because to-day the private member is a nonentity in this house.

Mr. MANION: Might I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. MANION: What is the party purpose that would be served when we are all put on the same basis?

Mr. GARDINER: It is for the purpose of disciplining party members. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment. As to the motion, I do not think it is really necessary, the rule appears to me to be plain, but if the motion is carried it will so clarify the rule that all members will have a better understanding of it.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this discussion had it not been for the remarks of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), who is a very old and experienced member of this house, who for a period of years was the first commoner, and for whose judgments and opinions I have a very high respect. With the principle involved in the amendment moved by the Prime Minister, I am in hearty accord. And I feel that all thinking members, if they dissociate themselves from certain events which occurred in this house last week, on calm reflection will agree that every man sent to the House of Commons, representing as he does not only his constituents, but the people of Canada as a whole, should have an opinion and be prepared to stand behind his opinion by his vote on every vital question that comes before the house. For that reason I intend to vote for the amendment, but I hope the Prime Minister will pause for a moment and give heed to the suggestion—it was merely a suggestion as I understand it—made by the hon. member for Bonaventure. We have a system of pairs that has been in force for many years. This system is a great convenience to all gentlemen in this house. I for one feel that I could not carry on my parliamentary duties unless I had a permanent pair for each and every session. Members who have interests outside the house are often called away at a moment's notice to fulfil other duties of an imperative nature. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he give consideration to the proposal made by my hon. friend from Bonaventure, so that a member who has a registered pair may still sit in his place and not vote, and yet have his name appear in Hansard as having been present. I understand from my reading that in England a member of parliament is judged very largely by his constituents, not by the number of speeches he makes in the House of Commons, but by the number of times he is present and records his vote. I commend this to some of those gentlemen who talk so much in this house; let them remember that actions speak louder than words. I again suggest to the Prime Minister that he give heed to the proposal of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) in order that some way may be found whereby those members who are paired and are present will not have to walk out of the house.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday night last I was very definite and outspoken in refusing to declare my vote at your request, and I presume I appeared to the members of this house as setting at naught the rules of parliament. I want merely to say now that at that time I knew what is now known by the entire house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes. We have had occasion to study the rule and we have studied it; and we knew perfectly well that the rule became obsolete in Great Britain in 1906. We knew that we were following the British practice in respect of that rule, and we knew also that we had the ruling of a previous Speaker on the matter. So that I knew when I made that declaration that I was observing the rules of the house and was the only man who was keeping them. The hon. gentlemen whom the Sergeant at Arms should have tapped on the shoulder were the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the two whips; for the Speaker had given his ruling before they spoke and they disregarded it, trying to press upon us an old and obsolete rule which had been discarded in England and ruled against by a Speaker of this house. I am glad, therefore, of the opportunity of making my position clear, and I trust that members of the press gallery, who knew as little about the rules as some hon. members of the house did, will take note of this and see that we are apologized to in the press.

With regard to the amendment, it is now seeking the authority which this house lacked on Tuesday night. That is the meaning of the amendment, and I take it, therefore, as an excellent apology to this corner. And as regards pairs, I hope that this rule, if it passes, will abolish the practice of having pairs. In that event, hon. gentlemen will be in a worse position than we are when we are compelled to walk out of the chamber.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): It seems to me that the house is attaching more importance to this question than it deserves, because whether the main motion or the amendment carries, the result is practically the same. If I believed with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that the institutions of British government and parliamentary practice were in serious danger unless the amendment carried, I should be disposed to vote with him. But surely that cannot be the case when, as is well known, and as has been stated here, in the British parliament members are not compelled to vote. And no one claims that parliamentary or representative institutions are endangered thereby.

But I have three chief reasons for being opposed to the amendment proposed by the Prime Minister. In the first place, I do not believe very much in compulsion except where it is necessary in the public interest. Secondly, I conceive that it is quite possible that a member may conscientiously refrain from voting, not having so crystallized his opinion on a question as to warrant his voting one way or the other. And in the third place —and this is as important as the other two reasons, if not more so—if the amendment carries and hon. members are compelled to vote in the event of their remaining in the chamber, it is quite easy for them to evade the question after all by simply absenting themselves from the chamber. After all, why should it be necessary for a member to leave the chamber in order to avoid being compelled to vote?

Mr. LAVERGNE: May I ask the hon. member a question for information? Suppose a member does not leave the chamber: If his vote is not recorded, how are we to know the difference between those who are absent from the chamber and those who have not voted, being present, because they lacked courage or conviction?

Mr. EULER: The argument has been advanced that a man should be compelled to vote if he stays in the chamber. But if he leaves the chamber you do not know what his views are on the question. Let me say that his constituents will know what position he takes on certain questions; and the mere fact that he is in the chamber and declines to vote makes his attitude more conspicuous than possibly it would be if he left the chamber.

Mr. LAVERGNE: But under the rules his views would not be recorded.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows very well that, with the press gallery in full operation, and with his friends listening to and observing him, his constituents through the press will soon know that such a member declined to vote. My right hon. friend has also stated that he is in favour of the amendment for the reason that, if members remain in the chamber and do not vote, it leads to confusion. I cannot see the point of that argument. If there is any confusion whatever it must be because of some difficulty in the taking of the vote by the assistant clerk. But any difficulty that he might have in that regard is certainly also present in the case of those who abstain from voting because they are paired. We do not recognize pairs, and I cannot see that there could be any possible confusion, so far as taking the vote is concerned, if certain members were absolved altogether from voting.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend—

Mr. EULER: I shall be through in a moment and then the hon. gentleman can make his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: Unless the hon. member who has the floor consents, he may not be interrupted.

Mr. LAVERGNE: If my hon. friend does not consent, I will sit down.

Mr. EULER: I have given the reasons for my attitude. I am opposed in principle to the idea of compelling members to vote; I think they should be free. My mind is open, however. I do not think that the matter need necessarily be decided here, nor do I see any reason why we should not adopt the practice that has been frequently followed in similar cases. I am going to propose a subamendment, and if it does not carry I shall certainly have to oppose the amendment moved by the Prime Minister. My proposal is that the matter be referred to a committee for report to the house. If that proposal is not adopted, I shall have to vote against the amendment and in support of the motion made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). My motion is:

That all the words after "that" in the amendment be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"all the words after 'that' in the main motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

a committee of the house be appointed to act with Mr. Speaker for the purpose of considering the question of amending the standing orders of the house by adding the following:

'9a. Upon a division, a member is not obliged to vote.'"

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I will vote against the subamendment. The issue is a clear one, and if the house cannot settle a simple question like that we had better go home. Although I was seconder of the motion proposed by my deskmate (Mr. Bourassa) I did not intend to speak upon it until there was an amendment, for the reason that my hon. friend covered the ground so thoroughly and clearly that it was not possible to say anything without repeating his arguments. But since the amendment has been moved, I should like to say a few words. The amendment compels members to vote, and the Prime Minister put forward some arguments in support of that proposal. He drew a comparison with the British House of Commons, where they vote by going into lobbies; and if I followed him rightly he said that when more than two parties arose it led to confusion because the members of the third or fourth party objected to going into one or other of the lobbies. The same condition exists here. While we do not go into a lobby, we are asked to vote yes or no, which is exactly the same proposition. I do not see any strength in that argument. Then again he told us that of late years the rules had been changed in this house and it was now possible to move an amendment and subamendment to going into supply, and upon one or two other occasions, and that, he said, afforded a full opportunity for the expression of views by the groups opposite.

I would point out to the house that there are now at least five groups on this side and the possibility of their being allowed to move one subamendment does not give them an opportunity of expressing their views. They may be peculiar views, but nevertheless they are the views of the group and there is just as much reason to allow five groups to express their views as there is to allow two or three.

On the question of pairs the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) read out of the records of the house where Sir John A. Macdonald, in dealing with this very point, said that in spite of pairs hon. members would be compelled to vote. Sir John said that the rules read that wherever an hon. member had got into the house inadvertently he would be compelled to break faith with the man with whom he was paired. Here is the situation which now exists. An hon. member on this side pairs with an hon. member opposite; he is obliging the hon. member, and when it comes to a vote, under present conditions, he stays in his place. He does not vote, but after the vote has been taken he rises in his place and says: I was paired with the hon. member for so-and-so, if I had voted I would have voted in such a way, and that remark is recorded in Hansard. That serves a double purpose, it reveals to his constituents the fact that he was in the house and paying attention to his duties on that occasion, and reveals what his intention in the matter was. That safeguards him and allows him to be courteous to his opponent.

If this rule is introduced the member who is paired will have to absent himself and there will be no record that he was even in Ottawa on the day of the vote. I have known worse things to happen in the heat of party politics than for someone to get up and say: "Why the hon. gentleman was not even in the house when the vote was taken", quite regardless of the fact that that apparent absence was only an act of courtesy to an hon.

member opposite. It would lead to the doing away with pairs and to confusion and injustice in connection therewith.

I have always voted when I was in the house, and so far as I know, I intend always to do so. I recall the remarks of some great man, I forget now who he was, who said to his opponent: "I bitterly oppose your sentiments but I will fight to the death for the right for you to utter them". That is the view I take in this matter. Whether or not I approve of abstaining from voting, I am prepared to fight to any reasonable extent in support of the views of those who wish either to vote or to abstain from voting. As the hon. member for Labelle said the other evening, the privileges of one are the privileges of all.

There is too great a disposition in this house, and there always has been ever since I have been in it, to curtail the privileges and rights of the individual private member. To-day it is almost impossible for a private member to introduce a bill and get it carried through to completion; it is possible by the very simplest intrigue to prevent its passage. Another good illustration occurred a few years ago when we agreed to cut down the time of speaking to forty minutes. During the debate on the address I have been grimly amused in observing that almost every hon. member who got up and deplored the fact that he had only forty minutes in which to speak, voted on that occasion for the passage of that rule, while I and a few other hon. members opposed it.

Why not let us follow the practice followed in Great Britain? The Prime Minister says that the other practice had been followed for three hundred years before they changed it and that we are a young country. Because we are a young country there is no reason why we should move three hundred years behind Great Britain. Why not take advantage of Great Britain's experience which has led her to change her rules after trying them out for three hundred years? Is that not a very good argument in support of the assertion that there was wisdom in their action and that we should be well advised to take a similar step? Why should not we follow in her footsteps?

Therefore, while I have no wish or intention to abstain from voting in the house, I will vote in support of those who wish so to abstain.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the hon. member who has just spoken (M. Neill), but although we have been waiting for an expression from the other side as to the reason why an hon. member present in the house should abstain from voting, I must say that I have not heard that reason expressed. We are allowed a motion, an amendment and very often a subamendment and I should think there would be opportunity afforded to hon. members whose conscience may be rather delicate to make a fair choice. I understand there may be cases where an hon. member cannot find a choice suits him either in the motion, the amendment or the subamendment, and that is why I put the question: Why should an hon. member who stays in the house abstain from voting? Another hon. member may be absent from force of circumstances, and should this motion carry the votes and proceedings would place the hon. member who abstained from voting either because his conscience had not been enlightened sufficiently or from lack of conviction or courage, upon the same footing as the hon. member who had been forced to absent himself. Unless we change our whole procès verbal, the hon. member who is in the house and who abstains from voting because he has found no motion to his choice will be absolutely in the same position as the hon. member who is forced to be absent but who would have had the courage to vote had he not been prevented from attending in the chamber. I have tried to find a reason for supporting the motion of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), but I have been unable to do so. When an hon. member is present in the house and does not desire to vote, there is only one thing to do; instead of sitting in his place, he should step out.

Mr. EULER: Why should he?

Mr. LAVERGNE: If he remains in the chamber and is not challenged, he is in the same position as though he had stepped out.

Mr. EULER: Then why go out?

Mr. LAVERGNE: The hon. member who is absent by force of circumstances and who would have voted had he been present would be placed upon a footing of equality with the hon. member who has not the conviction or courage to vote.

Mr. EULER: Should an hon. member not desiring to vote step out of the chamber, is he not in the same position as the hon. member who is unavoidably absent but who would have voted had he been here?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Unless we change our rules, especially in our proces verbal, it will mean nothing when an hon. member remains in the chamber and abstains from voting. We will have to change our rules of procedure so that the hon. member who remains in the chamber and abstains from voting will be registered as having abstained from voting, either because of conscience or other reasons. Otherwise it will mean nothing at all, as he would be on the same footing as the hon. member forced to be absent from the chamber.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend wants to propose another subamendment.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No, I am satisfied with the present rule and my hon. friend can rest assured that as long as I am in the house I will have the courage to vote.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having in mind what he had to say, I am rather surprised that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) found it necessary to introduce any motion. He made his position quite clear, and I believe he convinced the house that he is in the right in the position he takes with respect to the present rule being as he describes it. He has, however, introduced a motion, an amendment has been proposed to it, and an amendment to the amendment has also been proposed. We are now in the position that with respect to these several motions we have either to rise and make clear where we stand, or refrain from voting by abstaining, as apparently that is now permissible, in which latter event no one in the country will know just where we stand on this all important question. Inasmuch as I believe in members of the house indicating to the country where they stand on all questions that come before the house, I do not propose to avoid voting on any of these motions, but I wish to state where I stand in regard to the subamendment which is before the house and, if need be, later on with respect to the amendment and the main motion.

I would ask whether this is not the right moment to consider following to the full, the British practice and custom. As nearly as I can make out from the discussion which we have had this afternoon, such embarrassment as has arisen in different quarters of the house has arisen from the fact that in one particular we follow the British practice and in another we do not. The British practice is to record the votes by members leaving the chamber and passing to the right or to the left of the Speaker. Their votes are recorded by tellers. Only those votes are recorded which refer to the names of hon. members who have passed the chair. If any hon. member does not wish to vote, he may remain in the house. That is what my hon. friends in the far corner wish to do, I understand, on many questions; they wish to stay in the house and refrain from voting. I would suggest that the amendment to the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), proposing the reference of the whole matter to a committee of the house, be supported by the house, having in view a consideration at this time as to whether we should not adopt the British practice with respect to the recording of votes. I believe if that step were taken, it would solve the difficulties of practically all parties or groups in the house. Those who believe in members indicating to the country where they stand, will, if the British practice is followed, have their position known by passing to the right or to the left of the Speaker. Those who wish to refrain from voting, and at the same time remain in the house, will be able to abstain and to remain.

There is one other reason why I suggest that that course should be followed now and it is in reference to the subject of pairs which has been raised by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and spoken to by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson). The directing of the attention of His Honour the Speaker to hon. members who have not voted has to be taken before the announcement of the vote is made. Obviously it is impossible for one, looking on, to read in the mind of an hon. member whether he has abstained from voting because he is paired or because he does not wish to vote. If hereafter an effort is to be made to find out which of the two reasons has actuated hon. members who may have refrained from voting, there will be endless confusion. If the practice is followed whereby members pass to the right or to the left of the Speaker, then, with respect to pairs, all that would be necessary that pairs might be recorded would be for the whips to hand a list of the pairs to the tellers and have them subsequently recorded in the proceedings. That would indicate how every member who was paired had intended to vote. It would meet what the hon. member for York-Sunbury has in mind, of making sure that pairs are recorded while at the same time preserving to hon. members an honourable obligation between them to abstain, in certain circumstances, from voting.

A further point I would make is this: the time that is taken up in the house in calling and recording names is considerable. There is a great waste of time in recording votes by calling individual names and causing members to rise in their places, while the names are being recorded and then subsequently counting up the totals. I believe we would save the time of the house—and surely we need to save all the time we can—by adopting this speedier method of simply walking into the lobbies, having the vote thus recorded, and allowing the journals of the house to indicate what action the different members have taken. It is for that reason that I would strongly urge hon. members to support the amendment to the amendment. If the amendment to the amendment went the length of a general revision of the rules of the house, I would object to it. I do not think it is necessary at this time to open up the rules generally, but the concrete motion that is before the house might well be referred to a committee in language sufficiently broad to permit of its consideration in relation to the larger proposal.

Before taking my seat, may I say that I resent very strongly the imputation of the leader of the group in the far corner, the so-called Independent group, that amendments moved by one or other of the old parties in the house are moved for reasons of party politics, pure and simple. I will remind my hon. friend that long before there were any third parties or independent groups in the house, the custom in parliament was for members of a political party to express their views in the form of motions and amendments to motions. This was and is the one and only method where a vote is to be recorded. It ill becomes my hon. friend to impute a motive of that kind to any hon. member or to any political party. May I just say to him, and to those who take that view, that the fact that they do impute such a motive to others makes me feel very strongly that something of the kind is in their own minds? If there ever was a playing of party politics with respect to public questions, it will be found in relation to more than one of the subamendments which have been moved by the so-called independent groups in the house.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): This question affects not only the rights of members of parliament, which are not greatly jeopardized, but the rights of the electors of the country. The people have a right to know the views of every member of parliament on every question that comes before the house. All these subterfuges are simply methods to enable the members of the house to shirk their duties. Look at the array of talent in the press gallery. What are they there for? They are there to enlighten the people of Canada as to the views of the respective members on every question that comes before the house. I for one do not wish to shirk that responsibility. It is up to every hon. member to record his vote on every question that comes before us.

I am very much in sympathy with the amendment moved by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), with the exception that some provision should be made for pairs. But I think sometimes we forget the great past, the grave responsibilities that have come down to this house. When we study the history of parliamentary government, what does it mean? If we go back hundreds of years, what did they fight for? First it was for parliamentary government; second, for the supremacy of the House of Commons, and, third, that the House of Commons should represent the people. How are the people who send us here to know whether we represent the people of this great Dominion or not if provision is made for every hon. member to shirk the recording of his opinion upon any question that comes before the house? There are at least three ways now open to a member: one is to record his vote; a second is to pair with another member, and the third is to absent himself from the house. Every member knows that to-day a man who shirks his vote in the house has to bear the disgrace of that before his electors. They look upon it as an act of cowardice. This is only opening another door whereby a member may shirk his duty. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment of the Prime Minister should carry, so that every member of the house who is present when a vote is taken shall have to stand up and record his vote.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I had no intention of taking part in this debate, but the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) has made a statement which should not pass unchallenged. He says that any member who does not vote is showing cowardice. I should like to remind him that his own leader a short time ago said very frankly that last year he deliberately walked out of the chamber to avoid taking part in a vote. If there was a little more thinking behind some of the talking that is done in this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. COOTE: —we should not have so much confusion, and that applies to some of the things that were said by hon. members opposite last Tuesday night.

The Prime Minister in moving his amendment made some reference to the confusion that is caused in the house by members not voting. I would like to point out that last Tuesday night, when this confusion is said to have taken place, you were called upon, Mr. Speaker, at one time to get up and remonstrate with some members of the house because of their disorderly conduct. They were causing so much confusion that you remonstrated and said that after the vote was over you would send some of the pages out to play marbles with those members in the lobby. Your remarks were addressed to members who had voted, not to the members in this corner of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask hon. members to observe the rules that we have now and to keep silence in the chamber when a member is speaking.

Mr. COOTE: There is one other matter to which I wish to refer. I was under the impression, as were other hon. members, that a year ago both the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition were rather in favour of changing the method of taking the vote in this house, so I think the Prime Minister would be very well advised to accept the subamendment and allow this matter to go to a committee to see if we cannot get a better method of taking the vote. It may be that the committee would recommend the method used in the British house. I do not know whether that method is the best or not, but I certainly think that all sides of the house are agreed that we need a new method, and I would suggest to the Prime Minister that he take that into consideration before he makes up his mind to press his own amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: The subamendment is predicated, I submit, upon an entirely erroneous impression of the situation. The right hon. leader of the opposition has suggested that he was left in some doubt as to why the hon. member for Labelle moved his motion. I confess that I have had doubts as to the wisdom of it because it has precipitated this question into the house, and it must now be decided. The question to be decided is: Shall members vote or not, when they are in the house?

There is a singular misunderstanding on the part of a great many members as to what the obligation of a member is. I wonder how many have read standing order 5. It reads:

> Every member is bound to attend the service of the house, unless leave of absence has been given him by the house.

That is the rule.

Mr. VALLANCE: What about the Prime Minister?

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly; he is bound to be in his place at the opening of the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It does not say the opening.

Mr. BENNETT: Wait till I give you the rest of it. Paragraph 53 of Beauchesne's Rules and Forms comments on that standing order as follows:

> A member of the British house was expelled, in 1715, for refusing to attend the service of the house.

Paragraph 54 says:

> In case of unavoidable absence it was for several years usual, in the Canadian House of Commons, to have the reasons explained to the house and leave then given to the member to absent himself from his duties.

There is the standing order, and I fancy that is the reason why most of us try to be here at prayers.

Having had this question precipitated into the house, may I make this further observation with respect to what was said by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner). My statement the other evening and that of the leader of the opposition was based upon the defiance of the rules of the house by certain members of the house. It was not a statement as to the wisdom of the rule. The Speaker having decided as he did, it was perfectly obvious that for any member to defy his ruling was not the proper method under our institutions of dealing with the matter. If hon. members had desired to appeal from his ruling, an appeal could have been taken. But certainly it could not be done by defiance. I did say what I believed then and still believe, that nothing is better calculated to drag the whole institution of parliament into disrepute than to have members speak of it in just that way. That was my objection, and that of others who followed me, and I am sure that it is the reason why the hon. member for Labelle referred to this whole matter in the way he did. He said that that was but an incident; but what is larger than the incident is the principle involved.

The subamendment does not afford an opportunity to discuss the method of voting. Let the hon. member for Macleod have no misunderstanding as to that. By the subamendment a committee is asked to deal with a very simple question. For once I am wholly in accord with the hon. member for Comox-

Alberni (Mr. Neill) when he said, "I feel capable of dealing with this matter without asking a committee to deal with it for me." The whole question is this: Shall we be obliged to vote or not? I have given at some length the reasons that induced me to believe that we should. If the members of the house think that we should not, it will be found I think that to refer this to a committee is merely to invite a few gentlemen to meet together and discuss among themselves how you or I should determine for himself a question that is personal to himself.

Mr. EULER: Would it be competent so to enlarge the subamendment as to make it possible for the committee to canvass other methods of taking the vote?

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly would be competent to enlarge the subamendment so as to involve many things that it does not now involve. At least half a dozen members of this house have studied the different methods of voting. I recall a conversation that I had with the right hon. leader of the opposition after having watched the British House of Commons divide. I am free to say that I took considerable time one afternoon when we were waiting on a committee at Westminster to ascertain just how the voting did take place in the British House of Commons. The vote is over in seven or eight minutes, as we all know. Our lobbies seem to me to be reasonably well adapted to that purpose. But there is nothing that a committee can do with respect to it. It is well known how the voting is done in the British house. The Speaker names the tellers, the ayes go to the right and the nays to the left, and the tellers report back. I saw the changes which have been made in recent years because of difficulties in counting. The whole matter was carried on simply and effectively. I did think that we might try it here as an experiment, but I am not convinced that it would be a successful experiment at the moment. I am bound to say that I do not think that anything a committee can do can be more than has already been stated in this house so many times. If it is the opinion of the house that the method of taking the vote should be changed, I for one should be very glad to afford the opportunity for members to decide whether or not the present method should be abolished and a different method should be used, but for the moment the question is: Shall a member who is in the chamber vote or not, and upon that issue I propose, as far as it goes, to vote.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I remark that in my experience during the twenty-seven years I have been in the house the rules have never been changed or altered except—

Mr. BENNETT: By a committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, through a committee especially appointed for that purpose, with the one exception of the occasion when closure was introduced. As my hon. friend knows there was an emergency at the time to require that special procedure. Why not in this instance proceed as we have always done and follow the practice which has always been followed by the house? Surely there is no emergency in the present instance. We might very well observe the tradition that the rules of the house should not be changed except after consideration by a committee. My learned and hon. friend must realize that in the present instance there is nothing at issue with the exception of one particular question. If it were other than that, if it were a question of setting out a new rule, the circumstances would be different. Since, however, the question has been raised in the house by an hon. member, we are bound to deal with it.

Mr. DONNELLY: Will the Prime Minister please answer a question? Under the rule suggested by the Prime Minister how will pairs be affected?

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say I have not looked into the matter, but I assume the situation in regard to pairs will stand as it is. They are unofficial, having no official standing in the house.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): The answer of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) at least gives me an excuse for speaking to this matter. I am inclined to agree with him that the subamendment of the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) is rather too restrictive in its nature. As it is worded the proposed committee can decide only yes or no on the main motion of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). However the amendment of my right hon. friend the leader of the house would seem to exclude the practice of pairing. The amendment to my mind is quite fair in that it says that every hon. member in the house must vote. This is a new regulation being introduced into the rules which govern the conduct of this house. It will be in vain that we refer to the age old custom of pairing which has been followed. Mr. Speaker will say to us, and I think quite properly, that we have passed a new rule which precludes us from taking advantage of that custom. There is the broad question as to whether or not hon. members in the house shall vote. On that particular point I am in substantial and hearty agreement with the Prime Minister. It seems to me however if there is one occasion when a member might freely absent himself from the house and not vote it is when he is faced with three alternative proposals such as those we have before us to-day. Not one of them satisfies me, and I think many hon. members are in a similar position. May I suggest that if the Prime Minister would for a few minutes discuss the matter with the hon. member for North Waterloo it might be possible to evolve a subamendment which would refer to a committee on rules the question of the method of voting.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. POWER: The Prime Minister says "no". Very well, but I think there should be consideration of the matter of drafting an amendment to our rule which would meet the views of the Prime Minister and those of the vast majority of hon. members in the house who wish every member to vote but who wish also to retain the privilege of pairing which we have enjoyed in the past.

Mr. BENNETT: With the consent of the house I should like to add one word further. I suggest that the house permit one of the hon. gentlemen to my right to move the adjournment of this debate, and instead of having a committee we could talk this matter over and see if some provision of a satisfactory nature cannot be made.

Mr. STEVENS: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Before the debate is adjourned I desire to say a few words, in the spirit in which I introduced the motion. First I thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) for the absolute vindication he has given of my attitude. There cannot be any better evidence that hon. members in this corner of the house were observing the rules as they have been interpreted by yourself and your predecessors, sir, than the amendment of the Prime Minister to-day providing that, in the future, we must not do what the other day was pointed to as constituting a violation of the rules. The action of the Prime Minister answers the objection of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and that of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) that I was wrong in introducing my motion. If the rules of the house were and are as outlined in my proposal, then it follows that hon. members in this corner of the house were right the other day when they refused to vote, and that Mr. Speaker was right when he sustained them in their attitude. However, I shall not insist upon that.

There are one or two points to which I wish to refer before the debate is closed, because evidently it will be closed for this year. I introduced the motion in the first place because it was the only way of rectifying the wrong impression which has been created by the press of nearly all parties all over the country that a certain number of hon. members in this house, with whom I was counted, gave an awful example of rebellion against the rules of the house and the decision of Mr. Speaker. By choosing the only means at my disposal to have the house settle the question the press may now be informed, and I hope will inform the public, that those hon. gentlemen and the hon. lady who refused the other day to vote acted strictly in accordance with the rules of the house and the jurisprudence established by two speakers of the House of Commons. After all, the honour of all members in this house is dear to them, and it is their right to have such honour vindicated. I think every member, whatever his party differences may be, has no desire to have any of his fellow members, regardless of party, bandied all over the country as unruly persons and fit to be expelled from the house. And why? Because, forsooth, they observed the rules of the house.

Next I should like to refer to the question of pairs. In the event of the amendment moved by the leader of the government carrying there could be no doubt left that any hon. member sitting in this house would either have to vote, regardless of the fact that he was paired, or step out of the house. How are we going to lay down the rule which the leader of the government says—mind you, I am not entirely opposed to his views—would oblige every hon. member sitting in the house to vote? Are we to impose that rule upon men who, rightly or wrongly, but in the fulness of their conviction and their conscience, believe that they cannot or must not vote? Are we going to apply the rule to them and not apply it to hon. members who, for their own personal convenience or to suit their business interests or professional callings, make arrangement through the whips to exempt themselves from that duty which, according to the Prime Minister, is the bounden duty of every member of parliament? If the rule applies to members of parliament who do not seek refuge behind the practice of pairing in order to attend to their private affairs in preference to their public duties, then is the rule to remain inapplicable in cases of pairs?

Various hon. members whose names I will not give, because I wish to keep this debate on a friendly basis, have insinuated that hon. members who remained in the house and did not vote lacked courage. It may be that at times such action would amount to lack of courage. Also it may be a lack of courage when some hon. members vote against their personal convictions, because their party has voted that way. We are all subject to such weaknesses. Let no party or no hon. member of any party in this house pose as a Pharisee. We are all human and subject to mistakes. I confess I am subject to them in a retail and wholesale way. I beg however of the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition not to pose as the sole caretakers of the virtues of parliament; they also make their mistakes. My friends to the left, from my point of view, make their mistakes. From the point of view of all, I make mistakes, I admit. But I repeat, whether we belong to one party or the other, we are all here because we have been elected by the people of Canada to vote or not to vote according to our conscience and our convictions.

The Prime Minister has repeated the well-known argument that the right of any member to move a subamendment offers him ample freedom. I say no. I repeat, and I insist upon it, that once the subamendment has been disposed of, you must vote for or against what is before you, the unamended motion or amendment. If that contains things of which you approve and things of which you disapprove, I ask again: How then can you justify the iron rule which you desire to impose upon the inherent right of a member of parliament, to vote for something of which he disapproves, if the motion necessarily contains something against his conscience or his convictions? With regard to the right of the electors to see whether we vote or not, that is a matter to be arranged between each member of parliament and his electors when he appeals to the final judgment of the people. But so long as we remain in this house, until the next time the people pass judgment upon the government, upon the opposition, upon the second opposition and upon the free-for-alls or the independent members, so long as we are here, I claim there should be one rule or none. So far as I am concerned, I prefer the rule proposed by the Prime Minister to no rule at all. If it is to be the rule, very well, I am prepared to accept it. I will vote against it; but suppose it is adopted, I think it better to have it rather than to be in the absurd position in which we found ourselves when members were threatened with expulsion from the house because they chose to exercise a right which on all sides is now acknowledged to be incontestable. I claim that this should not happen again, therefore I would rather have the amendment moved by the Prime Minister than no rule at all. But may I respectfully tell the right hon. Prime Minister that in moving that amendment he is resorting to another part of himself which is not the result of his study of British law, or of British practice, which is not the result of his British spirit; but that in this as in some other instances he is letting himself follow his autocratic instinct and his stand for an iron rule instead of the broad interpretation which has been followed for over thirty years in the British house and which has been followed in this house from 1927 until 1931.

Just one further word. The Prime Minister has quoted rule 5, which makes it an obligation on all members to attend to all sittings of the house. That is quite true. It is an old rule and was in effect all along previous to 1867. Any student of the old records could find therein that at any session of parliament no member could absent himself without having the leave of the house, and that leave was recorded in the journals. Are the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition prepared every day to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the absence of their various followers, whether they are paired or not? That rule does not acknowledge pairs. If that rule applies, no member has the right to go to Montreal or to Toronto to plead a case; nor, although paired with the member for Muskoka-Ontario or for some other constituency, can a member stay in his seat mum and for the time being suspend his functions as a member in order to enable another gentleman to go to Montreal or to Toronto to attend to his private business. If that is to be the rule, then let it be applied to all; let it be applied to pleading lawyers, let it be applied to bankers, let it be applied to merchants, let it be applied to members for near constituencies while our colleagues from the far distant western and eastern provinces have to stay here, Sundays included. That is my sole answer, and I think it ought to be sufficient.

I thank the house, Mr. Speaker, for the manner in which it has received my humble suggestion. I do not think the time spent on this debate has been lost, because it has shown the necessity of clarifying a situation which in the future, as last week, could have given birth to disagreeable incidents. As far as that is concerned, I thank again the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition for their timely suggestion. I hope it will materialize sooner than other pious intentions that have been expressed many times to have a complete revision of the manner in which votes are recorded in this house; and also dealing with the question of pairs, not from the viewpoint of individual convenience, but from the viewpoint of public trust and interest, which has been so eloquently pointed out this afternoon by the leader of the house.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was out of order in speaking to a motion to adjourn the debate. I was choked off last night under similar circumstances, and I hope that in the future Your Honour will accord me as much latitude as you have just allowed my hon. friend.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) had moved the adjournment of the debate. I humbly suggest that having already seconded the amendment of the Prime Minister, he cannot now move the motion for adjournment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion before the house is the amendment to the amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: There is a motion to adjourn the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have heard no motion to adjourn the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: If there is no such motion, I now move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by Mr. Black (Halifax), that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

ARMS AND AMMUNITION

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR SUPERVISION OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table a copy of the international convention for the supervision of international trade in arms and ammunition, with declaration regarding the territory Ifni, dated Geneva, June 17, 1925.

UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

REPORTED STATEMENTS OF MINISTER OF LABOUR AS TO PROBABLE CONDITIONS NEXT WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) which of two reports that appear in the press to-day from the Canadian Press is correct, if either. One is dated Hamilton, Ontario, April 27. The other, Montreal, of the same date. I am quoting from the report as it appears in the Ottawa Citizen:

> Sees Unemployment Problem Diminishing
> Senator Gideon Robertson Speaks at Hamilton
> Hamilton, Ont., April 27.—"In Canada the unemployment problem is diminishing," declared Senator Gideon Robertson, federal minister of labour, addressing the Hamilton Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting here to-night.
> "We have experienced the most distressing winter in many years, but we emerge into the sunlight of hope at the beginning of another season, and it is within the realm of reason to say that, before the snow falls again, our worries will have largely disappeared," he declared.

In the same paper there is a despatch from Montreal:

> Thinks Relief Plan To Be Repeated By Government Next Winter
> Montreal, April 27.—A conversation he had with Senator Gideon Robertson, Dominion Minister of Labour, led him to believe the Dominion authorities would repeat for next winter their unemployment relief, Alderman W. H. Biggar, leader of the Montreal city council, stated to-day.
> By this he meant that the Dominion government would again vote twenty million dollars for relief work, the provinces paying twenty millions and municipalities 40 millions.

I wish my hon. friend would advise the house as to which of these reports, if either, is correct.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Of course, it is obvious that it is not within my knowledge as to whether or not the Minister of Labour was correctly reported. But if I understand correctly the coordinated efforts that are being put forward by all agencies, both governmental and industrial, and by every other force in this country at the present time, then I am sure that the Minister of Labour was not far out when he said he could look forward—I am stating it in substance—with a great deal of hope to relief, in a large measure at least, from the difficulties in which we are now placed before the coming of next winter. With respect to the alleged interview in Montreal, I have no information concerning it. But if events do not materialize as we hope they will, then this government, I am sure, will take whatever steps are necessary to see that there will be no undue suffering among the people of this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What my hon. friend says hardly answers my question. I wish he would ask the Minister of Labour whether he made such representations in Hamilton or Montreal, and advise the house definitely after he has had an opportunity of communicating with his colleague.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Before the orders of the day are called may I ask the Prime Minister a question which is of very great importance to the province of Manitoba. In a press despatch which appears in the Citizen of April 28, I find this:

Government unlikely pay 95 per cent this year.

Under this heading I wish to read a short article:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, April 27.—Likelihood that the Dominion government will not undertake this year to pay 95 per cent of old age pensions, an election campaign promise of Premier R. B. Bennett, was expressed here to-day by Hon. D. L. McLeod, municipal commissioner for Manitoba, in making public a telegram received from the Dominion Prime Minister.

In reply to a wire from Premier John Bracken of Manitoba, Mr. Bennett advised the provincial government to make provisions for paying old age pensions this year on the same basis as it has in the past. There remained a possibility, the wire intimated, that the Dominion government would have the legislation necessary for transfer of the pensions burden passed at the present session of parliament.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The question I wish to ask is this: In view of the fact that the province of Manitoba, in its budget, has made no provisions to pay old age pensions this year, will the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to introduce old age pensions legislation and pay 95 per cent, as I understand it was promised the three western provinces during the conference last fall.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): (1) No such promise was made. (2) This government is not responsible for the conduct of the business of the government of Manitoba.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Was this wire sent—

Mr. BENNETT: That is all I propose to say.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Thank you.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do I understand my right hon. friend to say that no promises were made?

Mr. BENNETT: I said, no such promise.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No such promises were made.

Mr. BENNETT: No; no such promise was made.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I again direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) to the fact that the papers I have asked for have not yet been tabled. We are going to take up the estimates and no doubt to-day, or at the next sitting of the committee, we shall reach harbours and rivers in the province of New Brunswick. I do not wish to delay the estimates at all, but I desire to have these papers that I have asked for, and to which I am entitled, before we get to that stage.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): I assure the hon. member for Gloucester that he will have ample opportunity when the estimates of the Public Works department are under consideration, to discuss all matters in connection with harbours and rivers in the province of New Brunswick. The return has been prepared and has been forwarded to the Secretary of State, and will be down before we reach that item.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to say that while that may be satisfactory to a certain extent, if they are not down I shall have to press for them. I will not say I shall adopt the method of obstruction, but I want the information before we go on.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I assure my hon. friend that he will have every opportunity, and we will leave one or two items open if necessary to enable him to discuss anything he thinks proper with respect to his province.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES COMPENSATION

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL COMPENSATION ACTS TO ALL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the third reading of Bill No. 37, to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) (for the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Ryckman), moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Customs Act in respect to discounts or deductions to be allowed in estimating the value for duty; to provide for power to examine witnesses on oath, and to pay their reasonable travelling expenses; and for the imposition of penalties and prevention of smuggling operations.

He said: The bill which will be introduced upon the passage of this resolution deals with departmental amendments for the purpose of carrying out efficiently the terms of the present Customs Act. The resolution in its first two lines would seem to signify some serious amendment in respect of deductions to be allowed in estimating the value of duty, but in fact it simply deals with a difficulty which has arisen in the preparation of invoices submitted by importers which have been prepared by merchants and salesmen in foreign countries. A difficulty has arisen in the department and a slight change is requested.

Mr. EULER: Would the hon. minister tell the house just what sections of the act are to be amended?

Mr. CAHAN: The section of the act which is to be amended is section 3 of chapter 2 of the statutes of 1930, second session. That section will be amended by the insertion of the words "and deducted" in a certain part of the section, which will make it more clear and facilitate the administration of the act. The amendment does not deal with any principle or policy, but with a difficulty which has arisen in its administration by the department.

The other amendments suggested are almost exclusively amendments which were previously suggested during the regime of the former Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler). The hon. gentleman had a bill drawn up by the department dealing with certain difficulties which had arisen, but owing to the time which elapsed before the prorogation of parliament, I am informed by the departmental officers that no opportunity was afforded for its introduction. The present minister has adopted it almost word for word, with the addition of one or two suggestions. One suggestion is that certain affidavits may now be taken by trade commissioners abroad as well as by other persons authorized to administer oaths in affidavits for use in this country.

Another amendment which my hon. friend had prepared provides that the assistant commissioner of customs may exercise certain powers of the minister as well as of the commissioner of customs. Owing to a vast increase in the business of the department during recent years, of which no one is better informed than is my hon. friend, it has been deemed wise that in certain matters the assistant commissioner of customs may act when the commissioner of customs is otherwise engaged.

Another suggestion deals with inquiries to be held by officers of the department. That suggestion is new to this parliament, but I understand it was previously made by the hon. gentleman in connection with the draft bill of 1930.

I am sure I could explain these matters to better advantage after the bill is introduced. As I understand it, no question of principle or policy is involved, the amendments being suggestions were made by departmental officers and had, in large measure, been accepted by the former Minister of National Revenue. They have been accepted almost word for word by the present minister for whom, owing to his temporary absence on account of illness, I am acting to-day.

Mr. EULER: Has the bill been printed?

Mr. CAHAN: The bill has been printed and is ready to be introduced. I have a draft copy before me.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, before this resolution carries I would like to draw the attention of the house to the peculiar method of procedure with which we are faced. I expressed the other day in a most courteous way my regret that a bill introduced by the government did not contain the usual explanatory note to enable hon. members on this side of the house to realize the meaning of the changes suggested.

Mr. CAHAN: I will tell my hon. friend that I learned my lesson the other day when the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) pointed out to me a rule which I had not observed. That rule has been observed in connection with the proposed bill.

Mr. RINFRET: I surmise that that was the result of our remark. There is another matter of procedure to which I would refer. I think it is most unusual for an hon. minister to introduce a resolution from a department other than his own.

Mr. CAHAN: May I suggest to the hon. member that I am now the Acting Minister of National Revenue and I am authorized to introduce this bill.

Mr. RINFRET: Then I withdraw that part of my remarks. I am glad to see that the worth of the Secretary of State is recognized and that he is now given work outside of the rather narrow borders of his department.

Mr. CAHAN: I can assure my hon. friend that I have found sufficient to do in the State department.

Mr. RINFRET: I will admit that that point has no bearing on this particular instance, but we should not allow any minister other than the official or acting minister of a department to introduce in this house any matter affecting that department, even though it be to facilitate progress.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the hon. acting Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cahan) in the course of his remarks seemed to leave the impression that the bill to be introduced was a bill which he found in the Department of National Revenue at the time the present government came into office. The public, which understands very little about these matters, might assume from the minister's statement, that this measure was one which had come before the previous administration. If it was still in the department I think that would be prima facie evidence that if it had been before the cabinet for consideration it had been rejected by the previous administration.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

When the bill is before us we will be better able to indicate whether or not we on this side of the house will be in favour of its provisions. There are many bills prepared by departmental officials which do not meet with the approval of the ministry of the day. Whether or not that was a bill of that character we will only be able to ascertain when it is before the house.

I wish it to be quite clear that the hon. minister should not seek to leave the impression and I do not think he would wittingly do so, that the measure he is introducing is one which was favourably considered by the previous administration.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my memory is not as good as it might be or as I would wish it to be, and in the absence of the bill itself I am unable to say whether or not it is of the nature indicated by my hon. friend. However, I will take his word for it. I have a more or less faint recollection that a bill was prepared to which I had given my own consent or approval but which, according to my recollection, had never been considered by the preceding government. I think, also, as the acting minister says, the bill in itself is rather an innocuous one. It deals very largely with the administration of the department itself and no great departure from any existing principle is taken in it. I have of course to wait until the bill comes down to see its exact terms.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cahan thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 39 to amend the Customs Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention before you leave the chair to bring to the notice of the house a question that we deem to be of prime importance, namely the position of agriculture in this country. I may say that before I sit down I shall move an amendment to the motion to go into supply.

If any apology were necessary for bringing this question to the attention of the house at this time, it would be found in the speech made a few days ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). But no such apology is necessary; indeed that speech, in which he sought to give to the people of Canada the impression that there were no serious conditions existing in relation to agriculture, has made it incumbent upon us to bring this matter to the attention of the house. Members who are in touch with agricultural conditions not only on the prairies but throughout Canada, members who really know what the position of the farmer is, heard with amazement the statement made by the Prime Minister, and I can well believe that that speech caused not only amazement but consternation among his supporters in the house and outside of it. If I correctly estimate the way in which that speech has been received by the people of the country, I can say that they view it, not only with amazement and consternation, but with the utmost indignation. It is true that we heard similar statements made by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan), the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan), and hon. members from other parts of the west, but we did not attach a great deal of importance to the statements made by those hon. gentlemen. When, however, the Prime Minister of Canada, from his place in the house, makes an effort to show that there are no serious conditions confronting agriculture; that agriculture is not in a precarious state, and when he undertakes to show that whatever may be wrong is entirely the fault of the farmer himself for having indulged too freely in speculation, then it is time for us to take notice.

But when we see the evidence upon which the Prime Minister bases his conclusions, we see how hopelessly he has failed to appreciate the true condition of agriculture. The Prime Minister pointed to the fact that in years past the west has produced immense crops. That is true, and it is still capable of producing immense crops. We have a fertile soil; we have with here and there, it is true, a few exceptions, favourable weather conditions. We have an industrious population. We have men and women who for fifty years past have borne the burden and the heat of the day; they have produced immense crops, and we can produce them again. The Prime Minister, if I read correctly an account of a statement he made some time during last winter, intimated that he could not understand why with all these favourable conditions there were among the farmers no reserves upon which they could fall back. I think the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) the other day clearly demonstrated why it was that there were no reserves. It is true that we have produced an immense amount of wealth, but far too small a proportion of that wealth has remained on the farm. The conditions have always been that too large a proportion of the wealth that we produce has been absorbed in its passage from the producer to the consumer. While it may be that those conditions are worse to-day than they have ever been before, nevertheless it is only the emphasis of a condition that has always prevailed. Therefore to point to the great wealth that has been produced on the prairie provinces during past years is not dealing with the situation at all.

The Prime Minister also referred to the fact that $300,000,000 were invested in automobiles and tractors. If he meant that as a further proof of the great prosperity of the west, I simply say that he has failed to take into consideration the fact that a very large proportion of that money has not yet been paid and that the farmers are still in debt for those vehicles. If he referred to that as proving that the farmers have been improvident; that they have invested where they should not have invested; that they have bought automobiles and tractors which they had no right to buy, let me say again to the Prime Minister that the privilege of using automobiles is not to be confined to the people who live in the great cities. If any class of people in the world is entitled to the use of automobiles, it is the farmer who lives out in the prairies. I might further point out that the very fact that we have spent such large sums of money on automobiles is a proof that the farmer is a good buyer and a good spender. Upon his ability to buy and spend depends the automobile industry and the living of the men who are making automobiles in this country. With regard to tractors, it is still an open question in the minds of many, and perhaps it has not yet been definitely decided whether the tractor can be used economically on the farm. Undoubtedly under certain conditions it can be. When oats were selling at 75 and 80 cents a bushel it did seem possible to save on oats and buy gasoline. But when oats are selling at 10 and 11 cents and barley at 15 cents a bushel, and gasoline still remains at the old high price, with tractors at their present high prices, and with the price likely to be still further increased if the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite prevail, it may well be questioned whether the tractor can be used economically.

The Prime Minister also referred to the fact, if it be a fact—I presume it is; I shall not dispute it—that large numbers of farmers still have money in the bank. It would surely be a deplorable condition if after all these years there were no farmers with some money in the bank; but let me say that those reserves are being very rapidly depleted. Certainly nothing has been added to the bank accounts of the farmers during the last year or two. So the fact that there are still some of them with money in the bank means nothing at all. Even the farmers who do have a small current account in a bank are not necessarily solvent. It is the practice of men who wish to do business in a business-like way to carry on their business through a bank. But money in a bank by no means proves that agriculture is solvent.

Does the Prime Minister see no significance in certain other facts? Does he see no significance in the fact that the banks have ceased to lend money to farmers? I know that that statement will be disputed, as it has been disputed by the banks; but is absolutely true that the banks will not lend money to farmers on the prospects of next year's crop. I went into a bank, not in my own town but in a neighboring town, and as I had some former acquaintance with the bank manager I had a half hour's conversation with him. I said to him, "I am not wanting to borrow any money, but I want to know if you are lending money to farmers." "Well," he said, "it depends upon circumstances. If a farmer can show good security or that he will be able to repay the loan within a little time, we will consider a loan; but if it is on the prospect of next year's crop, no." That, Mr. Speaker, is the condition which I believe is general throughout Canada. So we need not take very seriously the statements of bank managers that they are lending money to farmers. They may say so, but it is with the mental reservation that they will lend only what the farmer is entitled to. It is quite possible that neither the Prime Minister himself—nor you, Mr. Speaker, nor any of us would lend money to a man who had no prospects of repaying it. That may be good business, I am not saying that it is not; but the fact remains as it is—the banks are not lending money to farmers, and it goes to prove the statement that agriculture is practically insolvent.

Does the Prime Minister also see no significance in the fact that a limited moratorium is now in existence in each of the three prairie provinces? Surely there is some significance in that fact. Does he see no significance in the fact that the Manitoba Debts Adjustment Act came into force only a few days ago? All these things indicate that the conditions are not as the Prime Minister described them to be. Conditions are infinitely more serious than the Prime Minister seems to think they are. Do not these facts which I have cited prove that agriculture is practically insolvent?

It is, I believe, absolutely true that the present depression has wiped out all the equity that many farmers had in their homes. It is no small thing, Mr. Speaker, for a farmer to lose the equity in his home. Remember that a farm is not merely a place of business. It is far more than that. It is the farmer's home around which many sentiments and associations have gathered for, it may be, fifty years or more, and when a farmer through force of circumstances loses the equity in his home that means infinitely more to him than it does for a business man to have to change his place of business or even to have to move from one house in the city to another. Those are the conditions that confront the farmer in this country to-day, and they are conditions that cannot be minimized.

Perhaps it may not be amiss to refer to the opinions of others who are in touch with the actual conditions. The press of the west has certainly taken notice of what the Prime Minister said. I am going to quote a few extracts:

> W. J. Ward of Dauphin, president of the United Farmers of Manitoba, Wednesday, spoke briefly of the statement made in the House of Commons Tuesday by Premier Bennett to the effect that the prairie provinces were not suffering undue hard times.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Bennett did not say that at all. That is the other side of it.

Mr. BROWN: The quotation may not be strictly accurate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BROWN: That is immaterial for the Prime Minister certainly gave the impression to this house and to the country that in his judgment agriculture was not passing through very serious times.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. BROWN: Perhaps we do not understand the English language. Perhaps we do not interpret hon. gentlemen opposite correctly, but certainly that was the impression given to the house and the country.

Mr. MATTHEWS: By whom?

Mr. BROWN: By the Prime Minister.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Oh, no.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Ward goes on to say:

I have been a resident of the province for more than a third of a century, and have been in the closest touch especially with rural Manitoba for that entire period. For the past three or four months I have been engaged in making a tour of the province, holding meetings and discussing current conditions with the most representative farmers, merchants and others, one of my objects being to ascertain present conditions and the outlook for the future.

For Saskatchewan and Alberta I am unable to speak from personal knowledge, but so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, I am quite able to say that Mr. Bennett does not know what he is talking about, and has not the slightest conception of the circumstances which exist here. I visited one of the rural areas of Manitoba Tuesday, not one of the worst, but one that in former years was considered among the best.

In that district I was told by the leaders, who know local conditions accurately, that in one area ten miles square, there was but one solvent farmer left, and the country merchant is naturally, along with the farmer, in a poor position too.

I am thinking of wiring Mr. Bennett to-day, and congratulating him, so far as the west is concerned, on writing his own obituary notice. What he has said indicates a total and complete failure to appreciate a situation worse by far than was ever experienced, even in the hard early days.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope the hon. member knows something of Mr. Ward's agricultural history.

Mr. BROWN: I have no doubt hon. gentlemen will make speeches which will seek entirely to explain away the speeches they have previously made. There is not the slightest doubt about it. However the words of the right hon. gentleman are on Hansard, and any reasonable man will give to them the interpretation I am now giving to them.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he consider Mr. Ward an agricultural authority?

Mr. VALLANCE: He is president of a farmer's society.

Mr. BROWN: The question is asked to throw reflection upon one who was an hon. member of this house.

Mr. BENNETT: I simply have asked: As an agriculturist does the hon. member consider Mr. Ward to be an authority on agriculture?

Mr. BROWN: I will answer in my own way, please.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely.

Mr. BROWN: We are not now on the orders of the day and I am going to answer the question as I wish. The question asked by the right hon. the Prime Minister is one which seeks to throw a reflection upon a gentleman who was an esteemed member of this house and who for five years was my room mate. I consider that Mr. Ward is a man thoroughly acquainted with agriculture in a way in which many hon. members opposite are not.

Mr. VALLANCE: Including the Prime Minister.

Mr. BROWN: Yes, because Mr. Ward made his way as a working man. It is no discredit to him to say that he climbed with his working clothes on to the position he holds to-day.

Mr. MANION: And so did the Prime Minister.

Mr. BROWN: And Mr. Ward is a farmer. He has been directly in contact with farmers of the province of Manitoba. Carrying out the duties of the office to which he was elected he made trips throughout the province of Manitoba and I consider he is just as able correctly to estimate the condition of things among the farmers in Manitoba as any hon. member opposite. In fact I have no hesitation in saying that he is better able to do it than nine-tenths of the hon. members opposite, and when I choose that figure I am allowing a large proportion?

I have before me another extract from a Canadian Press despatch from the city of Saskatoon. It is as follows:

Need of clothing relief on thousands of farms in Saskatchewan is stressed by the United Farmers of Canada in a reply to the statement of Premier R. B. Bennett that the west is not suffering from depression.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not say that, either.

Mr. BROWN: No, he did not say it was not; we know—

Mr. BENNETT: No, he did not say the west was not suffering from depression; on the contrary he said it was.

Mr. BROWN: I do not say the Prime Minister said the west was not suffering from depression, but what we are saying is that he minimized that depression.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it from Hansard.

Mr. BROWN: Very well.

It ill becomes—

Oh, but we are not allowed to read from a former debate. If I might be allowed, Mr.

Speaker, to violate the rules of parliament by reading from a former debate, I will do so. I did put the book back on the desk because I knew that in reading the extract I would be proceeding contrary to the rules of the house. However, if I may be allowed by hon. members opposite I will read from Hansard as follows:

It ill becomes hon. gentlemen here, who know of an isolated case here and another there, to draw a general conclusion in respect to conditions in western Canada. I can say that in western Canada there are tens of thousands of farmers who have deposits of money in the banks. It is true that there has been great hardship encounterd by many farmers, for two reasons. The first reason is because of crop failure, and the second reason is because of low prices for the crops they did produce. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) himself lost his crop . . . .

That particular section is not the right one—

Mr. MANION: The hon. member has chosen the wrong page.

An hon. MEMBER: Be careful.

Mr. VALLANCE: Order.

Mr. BROWN: I do not purpose to be howled down in that way. I am going to repeat the statement that if the Prime Minister did not say there was no depression in western Canada he unduly minimized it.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not say it.

Mr. BROWN: To continue with the extract from the Canadian Press despatch from Saskatoon:

During the past winter, says U.F.C. statement, clothing has been sent out by the red cross to 2,600 families; by the United Farmers of Canada to 670 families, and by the Wheat Pool to 350 families.

In addition the U.F.C. has on file applications for relief from over 100 families. Relief operations, it is pointed out, have also been carried on by the press of the province, the Salvation army, the Canadian Legion, the churches, the Jewish community and by other organizations.

"Since last fall about 500 members of the U.F.C. have appealed to the legal adviser of the association for assistance in their financial difficulties. Retail stores and business organizations in Saskatoon are experiencing the greatest difficulty in carrying on business and are making drastic reductions in staffs."

"These are facts," says the statement, "and facts will not give place to statements even though made by prime ministers."

In reply to Mr. Bennett's remark that tens of thousands of farmers have substantial bank accounts, it is pointed out that farmers are losing money on every bushel of wheat they grow and in these circumstances the bank balances are not likely to last very long. Many of the bank balances, it is urged, are from sources other than agriculture.

[Mr. Brown.]

"Mr. Bennett states," says the U.F.C., "that $300,000,000 are invested in automobiles and tractors, and that this bespeaks the solvency and economic well-being of the people of the west. Even farmers must have some means of getting about the country and must have some means of carrying on work," continued the statement.

"Has Mr. Bennett considered how much time would be lost in the summer time if farmers were to depend on the antiquated buggy? Has he considered that if they did not possess tractors they would at least have to keep large teams of horses to do the necessary work? And, by the way, economists have not yet been able to advise us which method is the most economical. Again, it would be pertinent to ask why Mr. Bennett omitted to state how many millions of dollars are owing on these automobiles and tractors. Farmers may have been, in many cases, injudicious in incurring the expense associated with these machines, but we have got to deal with conditions as they exist."

I think it would have been more to the point—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member but I must remind him that it is against rule 306 to read in debate extracts from newpapers on the remarks of any other hon. member in the house.

Mr. BROWN: That is an interpretation of the rule which I do not think has been followed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The rule is very plain.

Mr. BROWN: It has not been followed before in this house.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have never heard it followed.

Mr. BROWN: It may have been ruled upon by you, sir.

Mr. GARDINER: Will Mr. Speaker quote the rule?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Rule 306.

Mr. GARDINER: But that is not a rule.

Mr. RINFRET: Is it a rule or a comment?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It has been held by previous Speakers, my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend from Lisgar will allow me, I should like to point out to Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the hon. member rise to a point of order?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. Paragraph 306 is not a rule of the house. It is a case similar to that cited this afternoon—merely a comment by Mr. Beauchesne on some standing orders.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: But the hon. gentleman should know that those comments are based on decisions of Speakers in the past and have the force of rules.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: That is my decision.

Mr. BENNETT: This rule has been often enforced.

Mr. RINFRET: My experience is just to the contrary. Former Speakers have always allowed the reading of newspaper extracts.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: But the comment in Beauchesne is very clear on the point, and that is my decision. If the hon. member is not satisfied with it, he can appeal to the house.

Mr. BROWN: Well, I have read the extract.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Ever since I came into this house in 1925 the Speaker has allowed members to read extracts from newspapers. That latitude has been allowed to members on both sides of the house. You are the first individual who has occupied—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): —the chair who has ever taken advantage of the rule in the way in which you have on this occasion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman knows the rule, and he ought to know that that has been the decision in the past. The reason for the decision is very clear, that no outside influence should be brought to bear on members. Members are here to express their own opinions. I can only refer the house to former decisions, and repeat that that is my ruling.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely, Mr. Speaker, in the course of an address a member has the right to quote the papers of the country in support of his arguments. It has always been allowed. I recall, Mr. Speaker, that you gave a similar ruling last session, but on a subsequent occasion the Prime Minister intervened and you reversed your ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: No, I did not reverse it; I permitted the extract to be read with the unanimous consent of the house. I did not want to be discourteous and I let the hon. gentleman read his extract. All hon. members know the reason for the ruling, namely that this house may be free and independent of outside opinion. That is my ruling, but if the house decides against me, I shall have to abide by its decision.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order: The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is correct in pointing out that on one occasion I thought the rule which as Deputy Speaker Your Honour was enforcing was being too narrowly interpreted. But in this particular case Your Honour has directed attention to the fact that the member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) has been reading from a newspaper commenting upon a speech made in this house in a previous debate upon which the house had recorded its opinion. That is, there was a division on the address; the speech was made on the address; the matter was thus disposed of. There is a rule against the reading of newspaper comment under such circumstances. If every time the opinion of the house as recorded and reviewed in the newspapers and the attitude taken by various members reflected upon, those reviews are to be read into Hansard, where will we get to? If that is done page after page of Hansard will be filled with extracts from newspapers. Undoubtedly during the currency of a debate frequently arguments have been enforced by newspaper extracts with respect to figures and matters of that kind; but when the debate is ended, if the comments of newspapers reflecting on the conduct of members in the debate were to be quoted, there would be no end to our discussions and Hansard would be filled up with newspaper extracts. That is my view of the rule, apart from the pressure which the hon. member for Lisgar would thus zealously endeavour to exercise against me.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT

REPRESENTATION FOR ELECTORS RESIDENT IN THE DISTRICT OF PATRICIA

The house resumed, from Monday, April 27, the debate on the motion of Mr. Heenan for the second reading of Bill No. 2, to amend the Representation Act.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Before the question is put I should say it is very unusual to introduce a representation bill during the middle of a parliamentary term. The census will be taken this year and redistribution follows, and no good purpose could be served unless there were a possibility of a by-election—and the present excellent condition of health of the hon. gentleman would seem to ensure against that. I do not think the bill ought to be accepted at this time. It has never been the rule to introduce a bill of this kind at this stage, and there is more reason why it should not be introduced now than at any other time, for re-distribution is made by a committee and not by the house. The considerations that influence the hon. gentleman in introducing the bill are considerations that should influence him in desiring to drop it, for it would, from what he has said, disturb the balance of population with respect to other constituencies in the country. The government could hardly accept the bill and I trust it will be dropped.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Speaker, I would move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Veniot moves, seconded by Mr. Brown, that the debate be adjourned. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

ARMISTICE DAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CELEBRATION OF ARMISTICE DAY ON NOVEMBER 11

The house resumed, from Monday, April 27, the debate on the motion of Mr. Neill for the second reading of Bill No. 8, to amend the Armistice Day Act.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): The mover of this bill has been good enough to speak to me about it on different occasions, and largely, I think, one is disposed to agree with the general idea of it. However, the bill as I read it leaves the question of Thanksgiving day pretty much as it is, and incorporates with that a day called Armistice day. The objection I have to the proposal is that the celebration or remembrance of Armistice day, if it occurs on a public holiday, is likely to lose its full significance.

Mr. NEILL: I am sure the hon. member does not wish to be unfair. It does not say a public holiday; it says legal holiday.

Mr. GEARY: The bill reads:

Shall be a legal holiday, and shall be kept and observed as such under the name of Armistice day.

[Mr. Speaker.]

If that does not mean a public holiday, I am not sure that I know what it means or what the advantage is in declaring it a holiday at all. I am quite in accord with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) that November 11th should be devoted primarily or exclusively, so far as the celebration goes, to a commemoration of those men who lost their lives in the war. The 11th of November is an appropriate day for that purpose. Thus far we have celebrated Armistice day on November 11 throughout the country. I cannot speak of other parts of Canada than my own home, but there, at eleven o'clock on the morning of November 11, we have a service which is attended by thousands upon thousands of people. Not only is that service attended by these thousands of people, all apparently devout, all very lovingly commemorating the men who lost their lives in the war, but at eleven o'clock, as if by common consent, throughout the whole city, in transportation activities, in industrial enterprises, in the shops, on the street, in the courts, everywhere, all activities cease for the short space of two minutes. Men go about their business afterwards but they do not lose the refreshment of memory which they have derived from that one simple act. If this day, through being made a holiday, degenerate into something that has not as its foremost and practically exclusive function this perpetuation of the memories of these men, I think we should be losing all that is sweet, all that is fine in the observances of the occasion.

Mr. NEILL: But it has always been a legal holiday since 1921.

Mr. GEARY: I am not objecting to that, and the hon. member must not think I am trying to argue with him at all. My hon. friend seems disposed to make this a matter of dispute; it is not that by any manner of means. If the hon. gentleman can convince the house that this is the proper way to observe the day, well and good; I make no opposition to it. I seek only to impress upon the house what views I have of my own. I claim no special right to take part in this discussion: I do not think it is the right of one who has served any more than it is the right of anyone else. But this I do know. Perhaps some of us who have served have, more than others, just a little bit of personal recollection, a memory, whatever you may call it, that makes us feel very sincerely anxious that the day shall be observed in the proper way.

You are going to have, apparently, two holidays in the same season of the year; Thanksgiving day is not disposed of. My fear is that this day of Armistice, this day of remembrance, as the legion has called it, will come to be just such another day as Thanksgiving is with us now. Thanksgiving day has lost its original significance, and I am not so optimistic as to suppose that, as the years and decades pass, there is going to be the same special interest in the celebration of Armistice day, or Remembrance day made into a legal holiday as there is at this moment.

Now that my hon. friend has had the opportunity of bringing this matter up again, I should have liked to have him let it lie in abeyance for a short time until all hon. members have had an opportunity of making up their minds as to whether or not we would be doing the best thing in connection with this celebration by passing this bill. I say again, with the danger of being accused of repetition: the appreciation of what Armistice day means may disappear as the years go by and be lost, submerged and drowned in the idea of a mere public holiday. That, at all costs, I do not want to see happen, and I believe we would be encouraging that very thing by entering on a hasty disposal of this bill. Let us allow it to stand for a time. Autumn is far away and there will be time to discuss the matter in the house during this session.

I am quite sure that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, as well as the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw), who took such an interest in the matter last year, are desirous of reaching the end I desire to reach, and that which I think it is the desire of the people of this country should be reached in connection with this proposal. The legion has written to me and I have letters from different people, some expressing one view and some another. This proposal does not altogether meet the views of the legion executive and I have written to them asking for their considered views in connection with the phase which I have presented to the house.

It is the farthest thing from my mind, and I believe it is the farthest thing from the mind of any hon. member in this house, to have this matter dealt with at arm's length. It is our idea to hold in some way a celebration which will be truly the celebration it is intended to be, one that will enable the men, women and children of this country to take from their busy lives some time in which to give a loving thought to the men we lost.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): Mr. Speaker, this matter, being one of the fixing of holidays, comes under the Department of the Secretary of State, and I may say that in my capacity as such during past years I received considerable correspondence concerning the matter. There are two questions involved in this bill, as have been involved in similar motions which have been placed before the house at other times. One is as to whether Armistice day should be celebrated on November 11 or on the Monday of the week in which that day happens to fall, and the other is as to whether or not we should celebrate Thanksgiving day on the same day as Armistice day. Basing my opinion on the correspondence to which I have just alluded, I may say that it is my recollection and experience that the general desire of public opinion is, in the first place, to dissociate Thanksgiving day from Armistice day and, in the second place, although I have not the authority of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) to speak for the veterans—

Mr. GEARY: I have no official authority to speak for anyone.

Mr. RINFRET: Then I will say "connection" or any other word that will suit my hon. friend. I meant to be complimentary to him when I said that.

Mr. GEARY: I understand that.

Mr. RINFRET: Judging from the letters received from veterans, I should think that they would rather celebrate Armistice day on November 11, on the actual anniversary of the armistice. The reason for its being fixed on the Monday of the week in which November 11 falls was not because of the armistice, but rather to meet a situation existing in connection with Thanksgiving day. A number of representations had been received from trade and commercial institutions in favour of having Thanksgiving day celebrated on a Monday in order to give three days in which tradesmen and others could enjoy that holiday.

My reason for supporting this bill, not only as a private member but with the added experience derived from my connection with these matters, is that both difficulties may be overcome. If hon. members will read the explanatory note on the bill as printed they will find that the purpose is to repeal two sections of the act. The bill will repeal the section under which Armistice day was always celebrated on a Monday, and in that respect I think it will meet the demands of the veteran and of those most closely interested in that particular anniversary. It does away also with another section whereby the government was asked to fix Thanksgiving day on the same day as Armistice day. I think the bill meets both purposes very well, and I would commend it very strongly to the support of the house. Should this bill pass,

Armistice day will be celebrated on November 11 and the government may fix Thanksgiving day on any other day it thinks proper, perhaps in October so as to permit a certain lapse of time between the two holidays.

The hon. member who preceded me thought that this bill might be left over for further consideration, but it is the experience of every hon. member that when public bills are not dealt with as they come before the house they are likely to be forgotten and left over for the rest of the session. This is not a new question; it was raised some two or three years ago by my hon. friend in the form of a motion, and I think every hon. member understands fully what is involved.

I repeat, as emphatically as I can, that inasmuch as we are desirous of meeting public opinion, expressed as it is by a volume of correspondence, the proper thing to do would be to adopt this bill which would permit of Armistice day being celebrated on November 11, and to allow the government to fix Thanksgiving day on whatever date it chooses.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on two previous occasions I have had the pleasure of speaking on a bill similar to this one, and I just wish to add a few words to what has already been said. A general desire has been expressed by hon. members who have spoken to have Armistice day fittingly observed; the only difference of opinion seems to be as to the exact procedure of the celebration. No one desires to see Armistice day degenerate into an ordinary public holiday, stripped of all its sad memories. Yet we must realize that almost twelve years have passed since the armistice was signed, and that a considerable number of those who took part will not have very many years more to live. Much can be done to educate school children and the younger and rising generation regarding the serious lessons of the war if Armistice day is suitably celebrated every year on the 11th of November, with the idea not of glorifying war, but rather of pointing out the sad, serious, sacred side of the war. I believe Armistice day should be observed at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month, because it will then have that special significance which we wish it always to have.

Mr. J. L. BOWMAN (Dauphin): May I say a word in favour of this bill? The views I wish to express are very ably set forth in a memorial which I received within the last day or two from the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League. This communication, which is addressed to myself as a member of the house, was sent to me under date of April 24, 1931. It is as follows:

Re Observation Of Armistice Day

At a recent meeting of the Dominion executive council of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League held in Ottawa, I was directed to invite your kind attention to the following resolution which was unanimously passed by the Dominion convention of the Canadian Legion, held at Regina, Saskatchewan in November, 1929, and reaffirmed at the meeting above referred to:—

"Whereas November the eleventh is the anniversary of the cessation of hostilities in the great war and is a day sacred to all ex-service men and women and which should be sacred to the people of Canada.

And whereas the day now set apart for the observance of this anniversary does not generally coincide with the actual day.

And whereas by reason of this, the observance of this anniversary loses much of its significance, and its sacred character is thereby much impaired.

Be it therefore resolved that we request that the parliament of Canada be requested and we do hereby respectfully request it, to enact legislation whereby in place of the present Thanksgiving day, November the eleventh in every year shall be set aside as a national holiday to be known as Remembrance day."

I also wish to bring to the attention of the house a resolution passed by the returned men at Dauphin, Manitoba, under date of November 11, 1929. The resolution reads:

Whereas this gathering of returned men of Dauphin and district is of the opinion that the day which marked the end of hostilities in the great war should be fittingly and thankfully observed by all of the citizens of Canada in perpetuity.

And whereas we believe that the maintaining of Armistice day as a day of national import would be of inestimable value in the furtherance of ideals of peace among the nations.

And whereas in our opinion the identity of Armistice day as being the eleventh day of November is in grave danger of being lost by reason of the extent in which Armistice day has been and is being confused with Thanksgiving day in the minds of the people of Canada.

Now therefore this gathering of returned soldiers, sailors and airmen of Dauphin district, met together for the purpose of observing Armistice day, hereby records its conviction that in order that the significance of Armistice day may ever be preserved, November eleventh in each year should be set aside as a national day of observance and as a public holiday, and further that Thanksgiving day should not be permitted in any way to detract from the memories and ideals which Armistice day should inspire in Canadians.

In accordance with the sentiments so ably and clearly set forth in these two resolutions, I have much pleasure in supporting the bill which has been introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill).

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): This bill, if it were adopted, would have the effect of making Armistice day a fixed day, the 11th of November in each year. It would be a day of observance, apart altogether from any day celebrating or commemorating any other occasion. There is in my judgment no necessity of its interfering in the slightest degree with the celebration of Thanksgiving. Coming as it does in November, it will allow ample time in October for Thanksgiving, if fixed in that month, thus avoiding the difficulties that might arise from two of these public holidays occurring within a short period of time, and more especially avoiding what I think would be an unfortunate feature, namely, that of both being celebrated on the same day. These commemorative occasions are distinct and different, and it would be unfortunate longer to try to couple the two together. Therefore I favour the passing of the bill.

What is of importance is not one's personal views, but how the proposed measure will be regarded in the country. One can judge only from personal observation, from meeting people and from general information. My view is that it will be most acceptable; that it will meet with the approval of a very large number of people. I believe its adoption will be a source of gratification and comfort to the returned men, their families, their dependents and their descendants. I therefore support the object of this bill and strongly favour its passage.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I certainly desire to congratulate the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren), who is doubtless speaking for the government—

Mr. MacLAREN: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):—in supporting the request which has long been made by the organized veterans of Canada.

Mr. MacLAREN: I was speaking personally.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. member's support is equally welcome in either case. I certainly desire to congratulate the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) upon facing eventually the triumphant consummation of his very consistent and persistent efforts to have the request of the organized veterans of Canada granted.

I suggest that apart altogether from the present and vital issue which confronts the house in regard to the matter now before us, we have in Canada far too many public holidays, and it might be well for the administration to consider doing away with some of them. In my opinion—and I believe I am in the judgment of the house—far greater than even the birthday of our beloved sovereign, His Majesty the King; far greater than the twenty-fourth of May, which is Empire day, should be the solemn commemoration in Canada of the eleventh day of November in each year, when all the people of this Dominion, all the people throughout the British Empire, and all the people of all the allies, are at eleven o'clock in the morning hushed in one great moment of solemn remembrance of our glorious dead.

I am in hearty accord with those hon. members who have already given their support to the bill introduced by my good friend the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill).

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my approval of this proposal. On a number of occasions during the last ten years I have expressed the opinion that Armistice day and Thanksgiving day should be kept entirely separate and distinct, as they serve altogether different purposes. It does seem to me that as the years go by this country is apt to forget altogether too quickly the sacrifices made by those who had the honour and the privilege of serving overseas during the great war from 1914 to 1918. If for no other reason than that this measure is largely desired by the returned men of this country, I think that the house, in deference to them and to their request, should pass this bill. The great events of those memorable days are fading too quickly into history. We sometimes forget that England journeyed to the battlefield for one of its unknown warriors and buried him in that great sepulchre of kings and princes in the old land. Similarly the United States buried one of their unknown warriors at the national cemetery at Arlington. Italy has not been behind. From the maritime Alps they have taken an unknown warrior, and his last resting place is now by the side of that great hero and liberator of their country.

It is now some twelve years since the close of the war, and I think the question should be settled now, once and for all. The stirring deeds of those trying years are surely worth our setting aside at least one day in three hundred and sixty-five upon which to commemorate the achievements and the sacrifices not only of our own brave soldiers, but of those of our allies. It is the least we can do, and I urge upon the house that this question be settled now an in keeping with the wishes of the returned men, regardless of the feelings of the rest of the people of this country.

Mr. J. E. LAWSON (West York): To my mind it is unfortunate that the proposed bill of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) attempts to make a dual change in the law as it now stands. If I correctly interpret the purport of the legislation contemplated by the bill, section 2 of the act which it is proposed to repeal originally provided that the Monday of the week in which November 11 fell should be observed as Armistice day, and section 3 provided for the celebration of Thanksgiving day on the same day as Armistice day. By this proposed amendment you change not only the holding of both celebrations on the one day, that of remembrance and that of thanksgiving, but in addition you adopt the principle that the day of remembrance shall be the calendar day, the 11th of November, instead of the Monday of the week in which that day falls.

Like many hon. members of this house I have received a copy of the circular containing the resolution passed by the executive of the Dominion command of the Canadian Legion. There are many legion branches and many returned soldiers in the riding which I represent, and although it may be said that the returned men are unanimous with respect to the desirability of the observance of Armistice day as a day of remembrance separate and distinct from Thanksgiving day, there does not appear to be unanimity of opinion as to whether or not Armistice day should be observed on the Monday of the week in which the 11th of November falls or on the calendar day, the 11th of November. I would therefore suggest, if I may, to my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni that he allow the bill to stand for a short time until we have had an opportunity of determining just what the majority of the returned men desire.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There is no doubt about it.

Mr. LAWSON: My hon. friend feels sure there is no doubt about it. I only wish I were in that fortunate position, but judging from the communications I have received I must confess there is a great deal of doubt on that one point—whether the observance should be on the 11th of November or on the Monday of the week in which November 11 falls.

Mr. NEILL: I challenge the hon. member to produce a resolution or report from any one recognized body of soldiers saying that they want the day of remembrance to be on the Monday. They want it on November the 11th.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. LAWSON: I wonder if my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni has yet grasped the significance of the statement which I have been trying to make.

Mr. NEILL: No, because there is nothing in it.

Mr. LAWSON: There is no question that the returned men are unanimously in favour of a separate day of remembrance. That much is clear, but I say to my hon. friend that there are returned men who are members of the legion in the riding which I represent—it so happens that I am myself a member of that body—who have a preference for Monday rather than the 11th of November. If I am not mistaken, Armistice day itself, November 11, 1918, fell on a Monday, consequently it has sentimental associations, if you will. Monday is given a preference in the minds of a great many. If my hon. friend will read the circular which has been forwarded to the members by the Dominion executive of the Canadian Legion, I think he will agree with me that it is not clearly set out in that resolution whether the legion is desirous as a body of having the day of remembrance on the 11th of November, or whether in the main the object of the resolution is to separate the two celebrations we are now discussing. I suggest therefore, that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni allow the bill to stand until it is next reached on the order paper.

Mr. W. D. COWAN (Long Lake): I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lawson) in his desire to have action on the proposal of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) delayed. It has been my experience that when matters of this sort are delayed they do not further develop. So far as I am concerned I stand pledged to my comrades in the city of Regina and the province of Saskatchewan to support the eleventh of November as Armistice day, and no other day. In that part of the country the day of the week has never once entered into our discussions. Both in the local branch and in the provincial command we have taken the view that the eleventh is the eleventh, and the ninth cannot be made into the eleventh. In my locality the people interested want the eleventh and will not be satisfied with anything else.

I wish to make one or two statements in regard to the resolution passed by the Dominion command when they met in Regina. As president of the local branch it was my duty to welcome to Regina the Dominion branch. The meeting in Regina constituted the largest convention in Canada of its kind. We passed that resolution in favour of the eleventh and never for one moment thought of any other day. I do not know what the wording is, because I have not read it, but I do remember that the eleventh of November was the day asked for by the Dominion command, a body which represents between 80,000 and 100,000 people in Canada. I suggest that we should settle this matter now, get through with it, get it out of the way and turn our minds to other business. Let us make the eleventh of November Armistice day. The members of the legion will never be content with the present arrangement. Annually the question comes up, "Why celebrate this day? It is not our day". On November 11th they visit our cenotaph and a celebration is held there and then. No matter what happens the eleventh is the day on which we hold the celebration, and the day on which we will continue to hold it.

Mr. R. K. SMITH (Cumberland): I wish to express my approval of the principle of this bill. I do hope however that when we reach the committee stage the suggestion made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr Dickie) and the recommendation of the executive of the legion respecting the change of the name from Armistice day to Remembrance day will be kept in mind. In my humble judgment, in order to have this day fittingly observed there should be some statutory enactments with respect to it similar to those under the Lord's Day Act. In recent years this holiday has been one not of commemoration but of celebration, and in my judgment we all should frown upon the practice which has been followed in that respect. Armistice day is the one day in the year which should be observed and commemorated more than any other. I do hope that the comments which have been made during the discussion of this bill will be kept in mind so that when it reaches the committee stage suggestions may be offered whereby the day may be fittingly observed and provision made for its proper commemoration in the future.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): I wish to place myself on record as heartily endorsing this bill. I think the legislation is long overdue. I agree in every detail with the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan). The commemoration of Armistice day should be held on November 11th, not the ninth, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth or any other day. It was on the eleventh of November that the Armistice was signed, and I am satisfied as a returned soldier and a member of the legion that the returned soldiers throughout Canada want the commemoration to be held on November 11th, whether it be called Remembrance day or otherwise. That is the day which should be celebrated; that is the day the returned soldiers want to celebrate, and I am pleased to support a bill which will make such commemoration possible. I congratulate the hon. member who introduced the bill.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): At this stage I shall not delay the house because it is more important to have the bill passed than to make speeches.

The feeling of the house has been generous, and I have only one comment to make. One hon. member suggested that it would be desirable to delay, to let the matter lie a little longer.

> Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep.

This matter has been before the country and before the house for years, and there is no need for further postponement. For six weeks the bill has been before the house, and if hon. members cannot grasp the meaning of a bill of only three sentences in that time they should be able to do so.

The same hon. member said that he did not speak for the soldiers; I think I can say in all good faith that I can. Here is one of the many communications I received.

> Britannia branch Canadian Legion, Victoria with nearly five hundred members strongly supports your efforts to have Armistice day observed November eleventh and no other. Wish you every success in your endeavours to have an objective of Canadian Legion of British Empire Service League for many years attained at this session.

I hope Mr. Speaker, that the vote will be unanimous and will show that, regardless of party or sect or any other consideration, we in this house are united to grant to the soldiers this measure of consideration. They have asked for it and I think after all they are entitled to get it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1.

Mr. DICKIE: In deference to the wishes of the headquarters of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League I wish to introduce an amendment. I think it has been thoroughly conceded by the house that Armistice day should be separate from Thanksgiving day. To my mind it is a day not of joy or cheerfulness, but of sacred memory on the part of those who lost relatives or friends, as well as those to whom such losses did not come in the late war. It is a sacred day, and I thoroughly agree with the recommendation of the Dominion headquarters with respect to a change of the name. When we gather round the war memorials throughout the country we are all thankful for the anniversary of the cessation of hostilities, but still the prevalent feeling is not with respect to Armistice day at all, it is a feeling of sadness for those who fell in the war, and in my opinion the Dominion headquarters of the Canadian Legion are well advised in advocating that this day be called Remembrance day. I have had many letters from men of the legion in the west suggesting the same thing. I am simply taking this course out of deference to the wishes of that great body of men. And surely if there is any true index to the views of what is best for the returned men of Canada, that index is to be found in the Canadian legion of the empire. They represent the soldiers themselves; this is a soldiers' bill pure and simple; so why should we not accede to the wishes of that great body and call the day Remembrance day? Remembrance day sounds very well, and implies all that we wish to remember and perpetuate. We know it commemorates the cessation of hostilities, but, as I say, the word "armistice" will be forgotten when the sad memories associated with the day still live among those who on that day foregather in sacred remembrance of those who gave of their best for this empire of ours.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber):

That the word "Armistice" in the last line be struck out and the word "Remembrance" be substituted therefor.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE INCREASED PENALTIES FOR VIOLATION

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton) moved the second reading of Bill No. 16, to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members may have noticed this bill aims at increasing the penalties against butter adulterators. I suppose that there has always existed people who have made it a practice to transgress the laws enacted by their country, and the dairy industry has not escaped this practice. For the information of hon. members of the house who might inquire why I introduced this amendment, I shall state that this adulteration of dairy products and more particularly butter, has greatly increased within the last years. I admit that it has more or less been carried on; however, within the last two years, especially, adulteration has been practised on a large scale. Last autumn I met a butter and cheese merchant who informed me that this adulteration had greatly hurt the butter industry of Quebec and that even a number of manufacturers in our large cities were found guilty of such a practice and had been fined; that directors of such organizations had stated that they would willingly pay a fine of $200 per week, if allowed to carry on this adulteration. The latter has been so openly and extensively resorted to—

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): May I ask the hon. member a question? How is this adulteration, which is being spoken of for the last few minutes, practised? I should very much like to know how butter can be adulterated?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): In answer to the hon. member for St. Henri, may I read the act which I wish to have amended. As I have not the French version of this bill, I shall necessarily read it in English. I am sorry not to be able to quote this clause in French.

Section 5 reads as follows:

No person shall—

(a) manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream;—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private and public bills having passed, the house will resume consideration of government orders.

SUPPLY—AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bennett for committee of supply.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): When the house rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, a point of order had been raised as to the propriety of my reading certain newspaper extracts. The hon. gentleman then in the chair (Mr. LaVergne) ruled that the reading of these extracts was not in order. While it is not my purpose at the present time to appeal from that ruling,—I would not seek to put Your Honour in the position which that would involve,—I think the time has come when we should have a clear and definite understanding as to just what may and may not be read in the course of a debate such as this. I have been pointing out, and have used the extracts to point out, that the country at large had put the same interpretation upon the speech of the right hon. Prime Minister as I have. I used them to show also that the conditions of agriculture which we on this side of the house have been depicting were the conditions which prevailed, according to those whose opinions I was quoting at that time. I have no more newspaper extracts to read at the moment, but I do wish to cite another opinion that came to me in regard to this matter. I may say it came to me in the course of a letter I received some weeks ago, the writer of which said something to this effect:

Even in this most favoured district—

He was speaking of one of the best districts of Manitoba.

—we have many families that would have starved this winter were it not for neighbours giving them food. One family close to town lived on nothing but potatoes for a month. and—

My correspondent adds:

—this man voted for Bennett to blast a market for his grain.

Complaints have been made from the other side of the house that we on this side are unfair in holding the government responsible entirely for the present condition. That objection, of course, would come with much better grace had not hon. gentlemen opposite, during the last session of parliament and throughout the campaign, insisted upon placing all the blame for Canada's position upon the former administration. I would not hold that the present government is responsible for the whole of the depression that exists to-day. Indeed, I believe there is a limit to the power for evil even of this government. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to discuss at any great length the fiscal policy of the present government in its effect either upon our own conditions or upon the conditions abroad, either as regards the cost of production or as regards the effect which that policy has upon export markets. That possibly may be done by certain members before we get through. I do wish to say, however, that I am profoundly convinced that the fiscal policy of the present government, if not responsible for all the evils from which we suffer, has certainly done much to aggravate the conditions that prevailed last fall.

I wish now to refer to another extract by way of laying a foundation for some further remarks which I shall make. I have here an extract from the Canadian Annual Review of 1929-30, page 99. I think I shall be perfectly in order in reading it.

At Woodstock, New Brunswick, he (Mr. Bennett) disputed Mr. Mackenzie King's claim that he had reduced taxation and stated that the reduction had only taken away part of a previous increase made by the same administration. He again emphasized his determination to protect Canadian agriculture and said that he would regard it as a great responsibility if elected "to see that the collective weight and power of the Dominion is placed behind agriculture."

I wish to call attention particularly to that last statement:

To see that the collective weight and power of the Dominion is placed behind agriculture.

That is a big promise, and up to the present we have not seen any indication of its being fulfilled. We have had, it is true, what is called a new agricultural policy issued by the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). It appeared in MacLean's Magazine and is, I believe, in the literature which is furnished in the library of the Department of Agriculture over in the west block. So that to that extent it is authoritative. To that extent it represents what is spoken of here as the collective weight and power of the Dominion being placed behind agriculture.

Let us consider them in order. First, we have a national marketing board. What that means we do not know. Then we have lower costs of production obtained by increased yield per acre. That is very good; it is the old idea of making two blades of grass grow where one formerly grew. That policy is as old as agriculture; it is not at all new, and takes no consideration whatever of marketing.

We have been told that the Minister of Agriculture is a very fine type of man, and those of us who have not had the privilege of a previous acquaintance with him have not yet had an opportunity of forming an opinion for ourselves. The sooner we get that opportunity the better we shall be pleased. Now let me say to the Minister of Agriculture that while it is very good to make two blades grow where one grew before, that in itself is not sufficient to reduce the cost of production. We must go further than that. We must not only reduce the cost of production by increased production, but we must reduce the actual expenses which the farmer has to incur in the cultivation of the land. And although it is contended that there is no difference in policy between the party opposite and the party on this side, I have no hesitation in saying that the one thing in the policy of the last administration that appealed to me was the consistent emphasis they laid upon reduction in duties, and consequently in the prices of the implements that are used in the primary industries of the country. I would commend that to the Minister of Agriculture as something that would go much further than what he proposes here in reducing the cost of production.

Thirdly, we have the proposal of sowing the land to crops best suited. That is absolutely sound, of course; but if anyone can see anything new in it I should like to know what it is. It, also, is as old as agriculture.

Next is research work to discover a fertilizer required for different soils. Very good as far as it goes, but it does not meet the emergency. Then we have the proposal of an immediate survey with respect to seed grain, seed vegetables and fodder crops. That, too, is commendable. Then the creation of bull clubs, the revival of an old policy to which we take no objection. Also the immediate improvement in the quality of swine. No one can take any objection to that, but we would not think of putting it forward as a startling innovation. Next is the eradication of disease among poultry—very good too; and research work on feeds. Well, this is exactly the work that is being done at the present time. It has been going on without any let-up; the agricultural colleges and the experimental farms are doing it and will continue to do it, no matter what government is in power. For that reason, therefore, it is not worth emphasizing. Then we have a proposal for eliminating parasites. I think one might commend to the house the observation made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). Then we have the transformation of experimental farms into local educational centres, which, of course, they have always been. Next is a request for cooperation on the part of the provincial governments in the carrying out of the policy. I do not take serious exception to any of these things—no person can; but the idea of stating that the collective weight and power of the Dominion is being placed behind agriculture is a pure farce. What would be thought of a doctor who would prescribe a bread and milk poultice for a broken leg? There are one or two things to which I intend to refer that might be considered to be of a more constructive nature.

Unfortunately the house has been given a certain impression, not from anything said here but from what has been published in the press. The following sentence indicates that certain members on this side of the house have been giving serious consideration to a certain phase of this question: It reads:

> From Ottawa comes the news that the office of agricultural representative in Great Britain is to be abandoned, or rather that expenditure on it is to be reduced to $2,500, and the agricultural representative, W. A. Wilson, B.S.A. is to be superannuated with a small retiring allowance.

I think it was the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) who asked a question along these lines the other day. We thought we would receive an answer, but evidently the Prime Minister gave an intimation to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that he should not answer it. We are not at the present moment perfectly informed as to what the policy of the department is in that connection and we can only go on the supposition that the newspaper report is correct. I desire to protest against any economy in that particular direction. Those who are acquainted with and have taken any account of what Mr. Wilson has done overseas must admit that that work was a good work; he performed it efficiently and brought Canadian products to the notice of the British people in a way never before accomplished through the advice which he gave with regard to the grading and the raising of the quality of our products. He has been of untold service to the cause of agriculture, and in my judgment this is not the time to dispense with that kind of service. Indeed, if the ideals of the Minister of Agriculture are to be realized and the quality of our products is to be increased, there is need more than ever for a man such as Mr. Wilson to keep these matters persistently before the people of Great Britain.

There is another question which is very seriously concerning the minds of our people at the present time, that of internal freight rates. If the cause of agriculture would be helped it seems to me some consideration must be given before long to this question. I know it is not the general policy of this house definitely to establish freight rates, although an exception was made to that general rule when it dealt with the Crowsnest pass rates. I do not desire to advocate rates that are not profitable to the railway companies, although I do not believe there was any foundation to the claims made on previous occasions by the railway companies that they were carrying grain at a loss under the rates provided for export. I do not think that claim can be sustained, because the railway companies are not carrying grain at a loss under the rates provided for in the Crowsnest pass agreement. It has been made abundantly clear that the chief cause of the present unsatisfactory position of railway finances is the smaller amount of grain which has been moving during the last few years. In urging that the internal freight rates be reduced we are not advocating that grain should be carried at a loss. A principle has been laid down, I believe, in regard to freight rates based upon what the traffic will bear. I do not intend to interpret that as meaning all the traffic will bear, but I believe it is the accepted principle to charge what the traffic will bear. That means that there are certain classes of freight which from their very nature must be carried at a cheap rate. Otherwise they will simply remain where they are and people will have to do without them because the freight rates charged will not permit them to be moved. We are now faced with a condition under which some of our commodities will not move freely. I refer particularly to the rates on grain to the Pacific coast and to the maritime provinces. The situation is this: the people of British Columbia who want to use the grain from the prairie provinces cannot purchase it at a price they can afford to pay, because of the high freight rates prevailing; the same is true with regard to the maritime provinces. Much emphasis has been laid, and properly so, upon the question of eastern Canada using the feed grains of the west. This is a question to which consideration must be given and a revision of these rates should be made in order to make it possible to carry that grain to eastern Canada and put it in the hands of the feeders in that part of the country. That would be of benefit not only to the producers of western Canada, but also to the consumers in British Columbia and the maritime provinces, and I do not believe any loss would result to the railway companies.

Since I have spoken for some time I will not attempt to deal with the question of wheat markets. I will leave that phase of the matter to the hon. members who will undoubtedly follow me in this debate.

There is another problem which to me seems to be of prime importance, and one to which the government should give consideration; I refer to the question of our meat products. The statement has been made again and again that western Canada—I am speaking now only for the west, but the same probably would apply to the east—is capable of producing immense quantities of beef and pork. There is simply no limit to the amount of pork which could be produced were marketing conditions more satisfactory. I say this advisedly; there is no limit to the amount of pork that could be produced. We have the land, we have the climate, we have the grain; we have everything necessary to produce bacon of the best type in unlimited quantities. But what happens? The very moment more than the regular supply appears upon the market, down goes the price. I once had the privilege of going through the Harris abattoir plant in Toronto and I saw the character of work which was being carried on there. One of the gentlemen in charge of that institution told me that they had a plant in Winnipeg which was idle at the time because they were unable to get sufficient live hogs. I told him what was the trouble, namely that the farmers had no encouragement to enter into production of hogs, because, as soon as a little extra supply came on the market, down went the price at which the farmers had to sell them, even less than the cost of raising them. If I may be excused for giving a personal experience, I think it was about four or five years ago I started in the spring with fifty young pigs. I would have been better off, as I found out at the close of the season, if in the spring I had knocked every one of them on the head. That is absolutely true. Of course it has to be taken into account that at that time barley was fetching a good price, and we do not want to feed pigs simply for the sake of the company; we want to raise stock so that no matter what the relative prices of pork and grain may be, we shall receive at least something for our work.

Mr. BENNETT: When was it that this happened?

Mr. BROWN: I am speaking of something that happened four or five years ago, when I said that we were often compelled to raise live stock at a loss. Such an experience discourages one from repeating it the following year. I am quite well aware that taking one year with another, farmers may some years have to carry on with a little less profit than others, but at the present time and under present conditions we are bearing the whole burden. As I said in a former speech in the house this year, just about two weeks before we came east, the price of hogs on the Winnipeg market went down to 5¼ cents a pound one day just because the packers were sitting in their offices and would not come out to buy hogs. It is true that in a week or two the price went back to about 7 cents a pound, but the condition of things is simply that the farmers have no encouragement to continue the raising of hogs. We are told by those who go to the old country that there is a tremendous market there for our bacon. I believe that is true. I know we have to compete with Danish bacon.

Mr. BENNETT: Danish bacon was sold in Canada this year.

Mr. BROWN: I believe the Danish people are so favourably situated that they can continue to supply the British market. As I was speaking one day with a former Minister of Immigration, Senator Forke, he told me that he had been in communication with the manager of a packing plant in Denmark, and the packer informed him they did not fear Canadian competition in Great Britain; they had what they called a green cure which could be sent to Britain and the British people could finish the processing to suit themselves. That is, of course, an advantage that they have, but none the less I believe it is possible for us to furnish Britain with bacon of a fine grade at a price that will be profitable to the producer if we can just correct the situation that to-day seems to exist between the producer and the consumer.

Mr. BENNETT: Our bacon commands a premium in England.

Mr. BROWN: I have no doubt of that, because it is good bacon. But there is the situation that confronts us, and it is worthy of the consideration of any government. A year ago at a meeting of live stock men, held I think under the auspices of the then Minister of Agriculture, this problem was considered and the suggestion made that the government build abattoirs, one east and one west, make experiments along that line, and see what could be done. Nothing of course was done in that direction. I believe the sum of $25,000 was granted to make such an investigation, and some attention might be given by the government to that question, which to my mind is the most important live stock question that confronts us to-day—how to get over that piece of rocky ground, if I may so describe it, between the producer in Canada and the consumer in Great Britain.

I think it would not be becoming to me to occupy the attention of the house any longer. I have placed before hon. members some of the considerations that have appealed to me. Returning again, however, to the attitude of the Prime Minister towards this question—he seems to feel that we have not been correctly representing him in this matter—

[Mr. Brown.]

I do not know whether I would be privileged to read this one sentence:

> If hon. members will take the trouble to investigate they will find that wherever men have had regard for economic laws and have kept free from speculation and wild dreams of sudden wealth, they are happy and contented and have provided a good livelihood for themselves and their families.

Then follows a statement of the amount of money that has been spent on cars in the various provinces, and the amounts that have been received by the different provinces by way of gasoline taxes. The Prime Minister made those statements either with a purpose or with no purpose, one or the other. If he made them with no purpose—well, I do not need to make any comment upon them. If he made them with a purpose, there can have been only one, and that must of necessity have been to show that statements made on this side of the house in regard to agricultural conditions in the west were not accurate. So I just want to emphasize again the statement I have made that the speech delivered by the Prime Minister is, whether deliberately or otherwise, an entire misrepresentation of conditions as they actually exist on the farms of the west to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. member point to a single statement in what I said the other day that is inaccurate?

Mr. BROWN: I do not say the statement is inaccurate. It is not an inaccurate statement to say that western Canada has raised so many billion dollars of wealth out of the ground in a given number of years. I do not know the figures, but it may be accurate to say that an amount of $300,000,000 was invested in automobiles. It may be accurate to say that there are some farmers who have money in the bank. My objection is not to the statements he made, but to the inferences he drew from those statements.

Mr. YOUNG: What about the statement that no person who had not speculated or bought on instalments had suffered?

Mr. BENNETT: That statement was not made.

Mr. BROWN: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie):

> That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be left out and the following words be inserted instead thereof:
> 1. The house regrets that the administration has failed to implement its definite promises with respect to agriculture and to this moment it has failed to announce any agriculture policy to this house.

2. That the policies of the present administration operate to restrict, rather than to expand Canadian trade.

3. That without the development of international trade Canadian agriculture will become increasingly paralyzed.

And further, in the opinion of the house, any policy with respect to agriculture should include emergency measures to meet the present agricultural crisis and adequate provision for the processing of meats and the marketing of live stock, wheat, dairy and of all other agricultural products.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Minister of Finance): In order that there may be ample opportunity for attack, I think it is desirable that the government should make a statement at once. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) has moved an amendment. That amendment deals with everything with which agriculture has to do, from grain to chickens, and with every phase of these agricultural products from growth to consumption.

The amendment regrets that the government in the few months it has been in power has not taken measures to meet the views of the mover. If that amendment reflects the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite, may I point out to them that there is not much satisfaction to be derived from listening to the speech of the hon. member for Lisgar, because early in his observations he said that the conditions about which he complained have always prevailed. It is an odd thing that he should discover in the few months during which this government has been in power something which he knew had existed for nine years and about which he had said nothing during all that time. If he knew that these conditions had always prevailed, why did he not tell the house something about them before? Why did he not tell the house before about the fifty pigs which he should have knocked on the head and did not? Those things were in the days of the other government. He said that he did not find it satisfactory to raise pigs for company. Why did he not tell us before that he had discovered that? Why did he wait until to-night? I am surprised that he reveals all these things only to-night, after all the years that have gone by during which he made no complaint.

My statement in the house the other day, about which complaint has been made, can be summarized in a single word, the word used by the hon. member for Lisgar with respect to Mr. Ward. Mr. Ward, I understand from the hon. gentleman, had a good mind to telegraph me that in making that statement I was writing my own obituary. Yes, Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen are much more concerned with that than they are with the condition of the farmer. They are much more concerned about exploitation than they are about the progress of the farmers and about remedies for the present conditions. That I say to them without any question. All you have to do to see it is to read the record. I ask any hon. gentleman opposite to point to a single statement I made the other day which is not supported by the record.

Why did I make that statement? Because for weeks these hon. gentlemen opposite had been trying to hold up western Canada as a country in which courage had given way to despair; had been leading the people of eastern Canada and of other parts of the world to believe that western Canada was bankrupt and insolvent, that the men of that country had no longer the courage and persistence and perseverance of old. These calamity-howlers have been going to and fro in the country—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Last July.

Mr. BENNETT: —forgetting that Canada is the same country and the same people that it has been since 1867 and before, with the same courage and enterprise, the same desire and hope and determination to make this a country of homes.

I say that whoever administers the government of the country at this time, whoever administers the national finances, has a great and difficult task; and whoever goes about Canada crying that the farmers cannot receive credit has no right to make it appear that they are not worth credit. That is what is being done. Men are going to and fro crying against what? Against the country, against the position of the farmers. They say that the country is bankrupt, and that the banks will not give the farmers credit. Who is it that says the farmers are unfit for credit and that the country is bankrupt and insolvent? Day after day and week after week hon. gentlemen opposite have been saying it; they complain that the farmers cannot get credit, although for weeks they have been telling us that the farmers are insolvent. I ask how much credit you would expect a banker to give you if all your neighbours went to him and said: "This man is insolvent; he is unworthy of credit; you should not give him credit, because he is broke." Yet these same gentlemen opposite complain because the farmers cannot get credit on what they say is a creditless foundation. That is the story.

The hon. member for Lisgar said that a banker whom he saw was not prepared to give credit. Why? He would not give credit, he said, on account of a crop that was not grown. And the hon. gentleman says that because the farmers are broke, insolvent, bankrupt, they cannot grow a crop. Then he complains because the farmers cannot get credit on that. That is the amusing part of it.

This country is inhabited, as I said the other day, by the same people who lived in it before—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Last July.

Mr. BENNETT: —this world depression came. The difficulty is that hon. gentlemen opposite are always smarting under their defeat. It is July with them always. All the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) says, apparently, is the one word, July—July—July. That is all he keeps on crying. He has not recovered from it yet.

The hon. member for Lisgar says that the farming population is practically insolvent. He says further that the depression has wiped out all the equity of the farmer.

Mr. VALLANCE: You know it too.

Mr. BENNETT: If I had the pontifical manner of the hon. gentleman I might know it, but there is no evidence of it at the moment. The hon. member for Lisgar, I repeat, says that the equity of the farmer is wiped out. That is a rather serious statement to come from a western farmer. Is it any wonder that you cannot expect the banks to give credit when a representative of the farmers says that their equity is all wiped out?

Mr. VALLANCE: They do not give credit when the farmers say so.

Mr. BENNETT: I know this, that one of the largest banks in Canada has increased its agricultural credits by 16 per cent in the last twelve months, and what is more, during the last six months the banks have been giving credit to all those on the prairies who have been able to show that they had the least hope of the future; but certainly they were not giving credit where the people were doing just what the hon. member for Lisgar has been doing here this afternoon. I ask any hon. member of this house, whoever he may be: Would you ask any banker to lend the savings of the people of Canada on such security as was mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Lisgar? Would you do it? Is there one of you who would? Could you do it and be true to your trust? Is it not about time—

Mr. BROWN: We are not blaming them for that. We are simply complaining that the right hon. member is not drawing the proper inference from that fact.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. member was not drawing any inference at all. He was endeavouring to point out to this country that in the midst of a great depression it is poor business to magnify your losses and minimize your courage and determination. I shall say more; no greater harm could be done to Canada than to adopt the course being pursued with respect to these very things. When we were in opposition and merely suggested that the matter should be looked into, it was considered pessimism. Now when the actuality is here, to say that you should meet it with courage is the truth. That is what hon. gentlemen say.

Supposing for a moment that the house look at the situation fairly. I am sorry the hon. member for Lisgar did not bring this matter up when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) was here.

Mr. BROWN: We never know when the hon. member will be here.

Mr. BENNETT: He is confined to his bed by illness, and I very much regret he is unable to be here. However, he has a practical knowledge of agriculture. Following his return from the war he went upon the land and made a success of his operations. He had no more capital than that possessed by many gentlemen about whom the hon. member for Lisgar talked this afternoon. Why is it that he had some measure of success?

Mr. FACTOR: Nine years of prosperity brought about by the former administration.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, on that point I will of course take the opinion of the hon. member for Lisgar, who says he is a practical farmer, as against that of a lawyer from Toronto. The hon. member for Lisgar states that conditions during the last few years have been so bad that the farmer never had a chance. He was going to hit the pigs on the head rather than keep them.

I just put this to you—it is one instance, but the country is filled with such instances. The other day I mentioned what I believed to be one of the evils which has in part brought about the conditions which prevail. Shortly after I made that statement, Mr. Priestly, the vice-president of the United Farmers of Alberta, appearing before the Stamp commission in the city of Calgary, used these words:

> While on occasions farmers had been borne to the crest of prosperity on the wave of the system—

Speculation.

> —they found on looking back that they had spent more time in the "trough of poverty" than in the joy of prosperity. Dirt farmers now believed that "paper wheat" had too much influence on the price of the real wheat.

Dealing with the money side of the question, Mr. Priestly quoted the results of his survey which showed the losses in excess of one hundred million dollars.

An hon. MEMBER: By whom?

Mr. BENNETT: The farmers. The extract from the newspaper continues:

Individual losses, he declared, were all the way from a few hundred dollars to $168,000.

"In some instances it was shown that farmers lost everything—land, crop and equipment," said Mr. Priestly. "Local bankers have stated that in many instances losses in their communities have ranged above $100,000. An estimate of the losses in the district tributary to one of our best southern Alberta towns exceeds a million and a quarter dollars. In one section of railway less than 90 miles, the losses in a very sparsely settled district amounted to $300,000."

All lost by speculation. That is stated by the vice-president of the United Farmers of Alberta. There is his story. Does it support what I said the other day, or does it not?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, it does.

Mr. BENNETT: There is the position taken in evidence given publicly before the Stamp commisison in the city of Calgary on Saturday, April 18 last. They are not my words; I leave them for the consideration of the house. It may be that one pronounces one's obituary in directing attention to these evils. It would be far better, it seems to me, for hon. gentlemen to confine their efforts to really constructive concern about how the difficulty is to be overcome than to shut their eyes and refuse to see the facts.

The Minister of Agriculture has some very well-defined ideas with respect to that industry.

An hon. MEMBER: We have not heard them yet.

Mr. BENNETT: He has not yet presented them to the house.

An hon. MEMBER: And the season will soon be over.

Mr. BENNETT: He will, in due course. By his estimates he has indicated how he purposes to give effect to some of his proposals. What struck me as passing strange was that the hon. member for Lisgar should complain that someone in England was no longer to be continued in his position, although the estimates for agriculture contain a much larger sum than had been used heretofore for the very purposes he mentioned. Did he look at the estimates himself? Did he see what the provisions are for agriculture? Did he compare them with last year or the year before? Did he see evidences of the very earnest desire of the minister to put into effect the policy he advocates?

The hon. member complains of the price of bacon. I recall that once I was a director of a large packing house in this country, and I recall also the fact that Canadian bacon commanded a premium in Great Britain. Bacon prepared in Calgary in the factory of P. Burns and Company commanded a premium; at one time it was as high as £5. I have seen farmers grow hogs and wax rich on them; then I have seen the price go down, and instead of that steadiness of purpose which usually governs, there arose an atmosphere of speculation which lent its influence to all walks of life. There was speculation in town lots and real estate, in oil stocks and mining claims, in farming, in everything. The very atmosphere breathed it. The farmers said, "We cannot make money fast enough." That idea was abroad throughout the country, and we are reaping the result of it. I did point out that I believed it would bring about the result it has brought about. I said that in this house in 1928; I firmly believed it then, and I know it now. Does the hon. member suggest how from one season to another we are to overcome the difference in the price of hogs. Great enterprises in this country have continued during the last twelve months and have not made one per cent on millions and millions of dollars. Does he realize that in the last few months the lot of other men has been as bad as the lot of the farmer? Let us consider the price of newsprint. A few months ago it was one of our largest exports; look at it to-day. We are still sending out the tonnage, but what is the price? Great American economists state that the price is fifty per cent less than the economic value of the newsprint itself. Take asbestos; take pulp, if you like, aside from the newsprint itself. Take any of our commodities. Look at the great business concerns. Look at our railroad operations. Read what you see in your papers concerning railway earnings. These are things calculated to arouse in the minds of thoughtful Canadians not the desire to make it more difficult for those who have to toil and pay taxes, but rather to help them in an earnest endeavour to improve conditions. But what have we from hon. gentlemen opposite? Nothing but the Jeremiah wail of despair. No hope, no courage, no zeal for the future.

I am not going to deal further with agriculture, but one thing more I desire to say. In Woodstock, New Brunswick, I said:

> The collective weight of the resources of this country would be put behind agriculture.

I ask hon. members to name any government which has saved a situation by deliberate effort as this one has in view of the condition of the wheat market. What would the price of wheat have been in this country had it not been for the action of the government?

An hon. MEMBER: What has it done?

Mr. BENNETT: Ask any thoughtful man about that.

An hon. MEMBER: Tell us what you did.

Mr. BENNETT: I tried to indicate the other day that I think it is very much better that these things should speak for themselves. We put the collective credit of this country behind the wheat market.

Mr. VALLANCE: It was security only to the banks which you gave, not to the wheat pool at all, or to the farmer. The help was given to the banks.

An hon. MEMBER: It was the banks you saved.

Mr. BENNETT: I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Canadian people, to judge whether anything could better illustrate the line of thought indulged in by some hon. members than the two observations to which we have just listened.

An hon. MEMBER: God help the farmer anyway.

Mr. BENNETT: Could anything be better calculated to bring—shall I say?—despair on the part of those farmers who are struggling with adversity than this counsel of desperation to which we have been listening? The banks have money belonging to their depositors, and they owe it to them. The banks have no right to lend that money upon security which will hazard the deposit. The banks have lent the money to the farmers, to the pool—which was a voluntary organization created by the farmers themselves and not by the country. The banks were called upon to do one of two things; support that market by continuing to advance money; or stop doing so and let wheat drop 40 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: Would wheat have dropped 40 cents if you had not taken the action you did?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say. I can only say that that is the judgment of those well able to express an opinion on the subject.

Mr. YOUNG: That is 40 cents more than it actually did drop.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it would have dropped to 40 cents a bushel.

Mr. VALLANCE: It went to 41 cents to the grower at the shipping point.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not talking of that, I am talking of the market price. Let us go one step further. We did that. The pool controlled over 50 per cent of the wheat of this country, and the support given to the pool wheat protected and supported the non-pool wheat. That was well known by everybody. At a given day on the Winnipeg exchange it is a fact, known to those who take the trouble to investigate, that but for the action taken by the government the bottom would have entirely dropped out of the market.

Now, 50 cents wheat is no new thing in Canada. Have any hon. gentleman read the life of Sir William Van Horne? Do you recall the days of 50-cent wheat as reported by his biographer?

Mr. BROWN: I recall it.

Mr. BENNETT: Then my friend from Lisgar has had experience of what 50 cent wheat means.

Mr. BROWN: Overalls were 75 cents then; to-day they are $3.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; everyone knows perfectly well that the prices of commodities generally have not fallen as rapidly as the prices of agricultural products. That is a fact in every part of the world. Let me go a step further. Some hon. members say we talk about what we did for the farmers. We did not talk about it, we just simply did it; that is all. And what about their seed grain? I was appalled by statements made the other day in this house because I have letters thanking us for what we did in this regard.

Mr. DONNELLY: Has any government ever refused to give seed grain to the farmers?

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the hon. gentleman would blame them if they did not, and find fault with them if they did.

Mr. DONNELLY: This government did no more than any other government in that regard.

Mr. BENNETT: This government was under no obligation because, as the hon. gentleman said, we had no crown lands. In January last, not waiting until the crop was to be put in, we got ready to do this work, but for reasons that must appeal to anyone the government does not want to advertise Canada by going around talking about the distribution of seed grain.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The provinces and the municipalities had to take the responsibility for it.

Mr. BENNETT: But it does not add to the greatness of our country to advertise what we do in that regard. You compel me now to do it. We supported the farmer with seed grain to an extent and in a manner that has not been done since confederation.

Mr. DONNELLY: You took a first lien on his land.

Mr. BENNETT: We did no such thing.

Mr. DONNELLY: The municipalities are taking it.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot help that; we have nothing to do with the municipalities. We took those steps because we believed they were in the national interest.

Now, may I say one word about freight rates? Since I first went to western Canada, over thirty-five years ago, it has always been something to talk about. Go and look at the condition of the railways to-day, or last year, or the year before. Canada has a 20 per cent lower freight rate than any other country in the world over the same sort of territory. In the great republic to the south their rates on an average are 20 per cent higher than ours.

An hon. MEMBER: Domestic or export?

Mr. BENNETT: I am talking of export.

An hon. MEMBER: We are talking of domestic.

Mr. BENNETT: That, I fancy, is fairly well-known to everyone here. The Crowsnest pass rates were established by contract and perpetuated by legislation. May I say to my friends from the west: Do you realize how difficult you are making it for the west by the attitude that some of you continue to take? Do you realize, in your denunciation of what some of you call "St. James Street," and some of you call "the banks," and others of you call "the moneyed interests," that it is upon them we have to rely largely for our taxes? To the extent that incomes are increased, income taxes are increased; and to the extent that companies earn money, 8½ or 10 per cent, increased revenue is produced. You cry aloud for the spending of money, and then complain that the people earn it that they may pay taxes. Is it not time that you took stock of some of these things? What good on earth can any member accomplish by pursuing the course that my hon. friend has pursued to-night, and that some other hon. gentlemen are pursuing here, crying aloud, calling upon high heaven in denunciation of wealth, money and means, and then in the same breath crying aloud to tax it. I met a delegation the other day, as some of you know, and their proposal was to get money for unemployment insurance on a non-contributory basis by a steeply graded income tax. Where is the income coming from? Where there is no income there is no tax.

Sir, is it not time that a House of Commons of such high intelligence as this should be thinking in terms not of our sorrows, but of our causes for gladness; not of our weaknesses, but of our strength; not that we are caught in a great world depression, but that we have the courage and the enterprise and the skill to get out of it? Is it not time to do that? I say this because I believe in Canada, because I am carrying—as most of you know—a very considerable responsibility with respect to the financial burden of this country. And I say he is no friend of Canada who endeavours to decry it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why did not my hon. friend think of all this last year?

Mr. BENNETT: He said the very same things last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: In no speech I made anywhere in Canada last year did I fail to speak of the greatness of my country, and of my faith and belief in her destiny. I defy any member to lay his hand upon a single speech in which I did not refer to the future of this country in terms of faith and of earnest and honest belief. I believe, sir, as I have said on several occasions, that failure by my hon. friends opposite to take elementary precautions for the future of Canada is partly responsible for the position we now occupy. I know what at that time other men did in their business. I know what I myself was doing, I know the advice I gave; and I know that common discretion should at least have induced men to see what was on the horizon.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask my right hon. friend this question: Did he not say from every platform that if he were put in a position of responsibility he would cure all these difficulties at once?

Mr. BENNETT: And I say that, given my health and strength and a term of office, I will. What is more, I will not be going around crying about what somebody else did against my country because I am displaced by someone else. The time has come, it seems to me, for very plain speaking. You either believe in Canada or you do not. You either believe in the future of this country or you do not. You either believe that the same people who wrought miracles in the past are capable of doing great things in the future, or you do not so believe. You either believe that this is a potentially rich country or you do not. And if you believe these things, and have faith and courage enough, you will not do what people in the olden days described as crying "stinking fish." I speak with some feeling about this. And why should I not? Why should not any man, who loves his country and belives in it, speak with feeling when he hears this sort of thing—attempts day after day to blacken the character of his country and to lessen its resources, making it more difficult to govern it and maintain its growth. A gentleman returning from London the other day said to me, among other things, "At all hazards, maintain the high credit of Canada." What have hon. gentlemen done during five weeks to help in that direction? What have they done to-night in that regard?

An hon. MEMBER: Told the truth, that is all.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, that would be such a surprise. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It might be strange, but still we told it.

Mr. BENNETT: Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, is the basic industry of this country, and upon every platform in Canada I have so stated. I have made that statement east and west. I had not one policy for the east and another for the west. I had no story to tell in the west, such as I could repeat to this house, as was told in days gone by by my hon. friends opposite. We have said the same thing in every part of the country. And now that we have been entrusted with responsibility we propose to go steadily forward with what we promised to do. There will be no turning back so long as we are here, but there will be a steady forward march; and when the time comes and this great depression lifts, it will be found that we at least have done our duty by every class and every citizen in Canada. But you will not do this by trying to minimize the greatness of your country, the richness of its resources, and the high character and persistence of its people.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): After listening to this second lecture from the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) we members from the west, who have spent the greater part of our lives there and are closely connected with agriculture, are more than ever convinced that the right hon. gentleman knows little or nothing of actual conditions as they exist in the western provinces. We wonder why he did not express some of these high sentiments which he has uttered to-night during his lecture—

Mr. BENNETT: So he did.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): We did not hear them.

Mr. BENNETT: You weren't there.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I read a few of the right hon. gentleman's speeches and there was nothing of that nature in them. If the condition of the country is as he states, why is it necessary for this government to send so much money out there in guarantees and assistance of one kind and another? I say, as one who knows—and I was in the west a few weeks ago—that conditions are gradually becoming worse instead of better in that country, and I will prove that assertion from some other expressions besides my own opinion.

The Prime Minister made the statement that one bank in particular had loaned more money this year than last year. I have no doubt that if the banks are lending a little money here and there to farmers—and it is little they lend—they can very well lend more this year than they did last year; because I venture to say that in many instances 100 per cent of the money loaned last year has to be renewed this year, and that will be counted as a fresh loan.

The Prime Minister has lectured us, complaining that we are ruining the credit of the country. Mr. Speaker, our one desire is to see the west prosperous. We all have interests in the west, not so much it is true as the Prime Minister; but all that we have in the world is out in that western country, and it would not be wisdom for us to decry western Canada. We are not decrying the country. All we are trying to do is to have the Prime Minister change the attitude he has adopted since coming into power. We want him to abandon some of his high tariff proposals, because high tariffs in this country can have but one effect so far as our producers are concerned, and that is the most detrimental effect possible.

As a seconder of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), I wish to say something about the conditions that actually exist in the part of the country from which I come. I was home for the Easter holidays and I found nothing but the most distressing conditions in that country. The farmers hardly know which way to turn. If the banks are not loaning money it is not because of any expressions of ours in this house; it is because the banks know, from the statement which the farmer himself gives, whether or not he is entitled to credit. And the great bulk of our farmers to-day are not in a financial position, their holdings are not of sufficient value, to warrant the banks lending them money. I have no right to speak for the banks, but I would direct the attention of the Prime Minister to utterances of his own Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) in Montreal and Toronto, with regard to the banks, and then he will know whether or not it is we who are decrying the condition of the country.

Just a week ago to-day the Prime Minister gave us his first lecture, wherein he made some statements to which I desire to take exception. He said that the members on this side of the house were making exaggerated statements. After visiting the province of Saskatchewan recently I can say, and say truthfully, that it would be difficult indeed to exaggerate the conditions that exist in some parts of that country, particularly in the southwestern part of our province. Just imagine: the farmers can sell their barley for only one or two cents per bushel more than it costs them for threshing. How, then, can you expect anything else than depression among them? The price of wheat is the lowest in years, and everything else accordingly. The right hon. gentleman has said that we from the west take an isolated case here and there and represent it as a general condition. That statement proves to us that the Prime Minister does not know the actual conditions. It is quite evident from that statement that he does not know the conditions. If he wishes to know what the actual conditions are, let him write to ten or twelve secretaries of municipalities in widely scattered parts of the province and ask them for an unprejudiced opinion as to the actual conditions as they exist in those municipalties. I venture to say it would not be a very optimistic statement he would receive in reply.

The right hon. gentleman mentioned the $2,000,000,000, of new wealth which had been created in western Canada during the last three years. I do not doubt that statement, but I do object, as I have on previous occasions, to so little of that remaining with the primary producers. What we object to to-day is that the effect of the policies of this government has made it harder for the farmers to retain any substantial part of the new wealth they have created. The price of everything the farmer has to buy has been pegged, and we are faced with the refusal of the Prime Minister to peg the price of wheat or of other farm products. Whether or not it is a good policy to peg the price of wheat I will not say, but I do say that if it is a good policy to peg the price of everything the farmer has to buy, it certainly is good business to peg the price of what the farmer has to sell. If it is good in one way, it must be good in the other, and, therefore, I am in favour of pegging the price of wheat under present circumstances.

The Prime Minister spoke of the tens of thousands of farmers in western Canada who had bank accounts. If that was true a year ago, six months or even three months ago, those bank accounts are diminishing very rapidly, and I doubt if he could find to-day anything approximating the number he spoke of as having bank accounts. He said there were people who would try to make it appear that western Canada was bankrupt. That is not our idea; we want to lay the facts before the house and before the people and endeavour to get this government to realize the actual conditions existing and to change its policies accordingly. He said that we should not mention these things, that we are decrying the country and injuring its credit. He said a friend of his had written to him and wanted him to stop the hon. members from decrying the country because, forsooth, that friend of his had some agreements of sale which he wanted to dispose of.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a friend of mine, a friend of the gentleman who wrote the letter.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): He evidently wanted to sell some agreements of sale.

Mr. BENNETT: He had purchased some.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Why should we be worrying about these financial institutions selling their agreements of sale when the farmers find it impossible to sell their products?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot permit the hon. gentleman to make a misstatement. I said an individual had written to another who had some agreements for sale. No mention was made of financial institutions.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I understood the hon. gentleman to say it was a letter he had received.

Mr. BENNETT: So it was; why be so inaccurate about these things?

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I would like to quote a few expressions of opinion by others than members of parliament, who have expressed their views with regard to the actual conditions existing in western Canada. I have here an address delivered in Winnipeg on December 9, by Premier Bracken of Manitoba, in which he stated:

> Times in Canada are worse than they would otherwise have been, because of the extreme nature of the Bennett policies.

Then with regard to the tariff, he said:

> All past tariffs, initiated by federal governments have tended to restrict international trade. In this respect Mr. Bennett's plan is more extreme than any of the policies of the past few years. It is an axiom that when a tariff is put on goods it increases the price to consumers. It is equally true that a tariff which restricts trade works to the disadvantage of the farmer, who is dependent, as western Canada now is, upon foreign nations for a market.

That to my mind is the crux of the whole situation. We are endeavouring to make the government realize that what western Canada needs more than any other single thing is markets for its products. We cannot get those markets by restrictive trade measures and tariff increases. We cannot sell to other countries unless we are willing to buy from them, and that is one thing, more than any other, that we want to impress upon this government.

I have here what appears to be a memorandum got out by the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, in December last and sent to the right hon. the Prime Minister. This memorandum is signed by G. H. Williams, president of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan Section Limited, who states that he is the head of an organization having over 30,000 direct members. I will quote one or two clauses just to show what his opinion is as the head of that organization. He says:

> The conditions of the farmers of the west are nothing short of deplorable, and these conditions, unless rectified, sir, are bound to be reflected first by corresponding distress among urban dwellers of these prairies, and latterly, in the city dwellers of eastern Canada.
> There is an erroneous impression that portions of the province are in a fairly safe and secure position because they have had very few crop failures in past years. This, sir, is wrong.

Then he continues:

> These are the conditions, sir, and you and your supporters pledged themselves to give equalization of opportunity to the people of Canada, and—"farmers are people."

[Mr. McKenzie.]

> In an endeavour to protect the manufacturing interests of Canada, you have imposed certain tariffs. These tariffs, rather than lowering the prices of the goods the farmer has to purchase, have in some instances caused a raise in price. Now the government of Canada has some responsibility to its primary industry—agriculture.

Hon. members opposite, especially those coming from city constituencies, have endeavoured to show that there has been no increase in the price of agricultural implements since the increase in the tariff. Whether or not that is true I am not prepared to say, as I have not gone into the matter, but when I was home during the Easter vacation an implement dealer told me that while there had been no increase in the price of agricultural implements there had been an increase in the price of certain repair parts. That statement is borne out by a letter which appeared in the Farmers' Sun of Toronto, of April 23. This letter is signed by Mr. Harold Currie of Strathroy, and would seem to demonstrate that the same applies to Ontario. It reads in part:

> Last week the writer got a practical demonstration of Mr. Bennett's "humbug" when he went to the machinery agent to get some needed cultivator repairs. The teeth that were last year 90 cents are now one dollar; the bill hook for the binder, last year $1.50, is this year $1.65. The increase in price applies only to the parts for which there is the greatest demand.

During the special session the right hon. the Prime Minister told us that he had received guarantees from the manufacturers that there would be no increase in the price of their product to the farmers. It will make very little difference to the farmers of the west whether or not the prices of implements are raised this year, but it will make a very material difference if an increase is made in the price of repairs and repair parts. If the price of repair parts has increased 10 per cent that will affect the farmer; it is those repair parts that he needs this year, because he will not be buying new machinery. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister will look into that question and see whether or not the manufacturing concerns are increasing the price of the repair parts that the farmers are most likely to need.

With regard to conditions in the west, the other day, just the day after the people of my constituency had an opportunity of reading the lecture that was delivered to us by the Prime Minister a week ago to-day, I received this telegram from the overseer of one of the important villages of my constituency. He states:

> Less than 20 per cent of the farmers of this district have paid their last year's indebtedness to the banks or business houses. Depression acute all over your constituency. Very evident that Premier Bennett knows nothing of conditions in prairie provinces.

I have another expression of opinion voiced by the secretary of the Home Mission Board of the United Church of Canada, speaking in Toronto in January last. This clipping which is from the Toronto Star of January 13, 1931, reads:

> Claiming that in Saskatchewan alone more than 150,000 families were in acute distress with little food, no fodder and no fuel, Doctor R. B. Cochran, general secretary of the Home Missions Board of the United Church, addressed the meeting of the ministers and laymen at the Metropolitan church to-day.
> Dr. Cochran returned recently from a visit to Regina where he attended a conference of the western leaders of the church to deal with this problem.

That is an unbiased opinion. He is not saying this, as the Prime Minister would have the people believe we are saying what we are, for political purposes. This gentleman, the general secretary of the Home Missions Board of the United Church, had no political axe to grind. He was telling the facts as he saw them when he was out in that western country, and conditions to-day are no better than they were last December. Just as an evidence of what the situation really is, let us take the March report of the Department of National Revenue, as follows:

Recapitulation

	Month of March
	1930	1931	Decrease
Merchandise entered for consumption..	$112,991,460	$75,347,854	$37,643,606
Merchandise, domestic, exported..	89,595,317	55,048,197	34,547,120

That does not look as though the country were prosperous, as though there were tens of thousands of our farmers in the west with bank accounts. If they had bank accounts they would be buying. The fact that imports have fallen to the extent they have is evidence that the people are not able to buy.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the goods are being manufactured at home.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I believe the Prime Minister himself and one or two other hon. gentlemen opposite have drawn attention to the fact that this year we have sold a great deal more wheat than we did last year. The wheat exports in the month of February of 1930 and 1931 were as follows:

	Bushels
1930..	6,732,826
1931..	10,296,608

Thus it is true that in the month of February of this year we exported something over 3,500,000 bushels more than we did a year ago, but this year the wheat sold at 58 cents a bushel, whereas in 1930 it sold at $1.29 a bushel. I would like to know when hon. members expect we are going to sell wheat if we cannot sell it at about 20 cents a bushel below the cost of production. It is now below the cost of production, and yet our hon. friends opposite gloat over the fact that we are selling a few bushels more this year than we did last year when wheat was worth fully double the present price.

Last year, although we exported 3,500,000 bushels less, we received $2,500,000 more than we did the previous year. Should we keep these things quiet? Is there no connection between the figures I have quoted showing that although selling three and half million bushels more we are receiving $2,500,000 less, and the fact that our farmers are in the position in which they find themselves to-day?

There is no gainsaying the fact that the government is not making the best endeavour it can to relieve agricultural distress. If the Prime Minister would give us some favourable indication of things becoming better, he would be better employed than in lecturing us when we try to present conditions as they actually exist to our certain knowledge. I have much pleasure in seconding the amendment.

Mr. H. A. MULLINS (Marquette): I have listened very attentively to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. McKenzie), and I cannot understand them. In a time of depression they need a little more iron in their blood. The trouble with them is that they have pernicious anaemia. They are doing more harm to western Canada than ever was done to it in all the time I have lived in that part of the country. All I can call them is "calamity howlers". They are preying on the weaknesses of those who are suffering on account of lack of proper farming in western Canada and depressed prices. I want to read a clipping to show the hon. member for Assiniboia, who has just taken his seat, that there is not very much wrong in the constituency of Marquette, which is one of the most outstanding agricutural constituencies in western Canada and takes second place to none. There cannot be much wrong with it. This is a clipping from the Minnedosa Tribune, under date of March 2:

> Who says times are hard and money scarce? Up at the little town of Shoal Lake,—

The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) knows where it is, because he and I had the pleasure of addressing a meeting there.

> —no less than $500 has been spent already for 1931 auto licences, as against about $40 this time last year. The amount spent in Minnedosa so far for 1931 auto licences, if you knew it, would cause you to laugh at the preacher of hard times.

That is what the Minnedosa Tribune says. Let me read this clipping from the Shoal Lake Star under date of March 26, 1931:

> Payments going out by way of cream cheques have averaged around $2,500 per week, a large percentage of which has gone to the farmers of this district, the balance to outside points.

If hon. members continue to preach "blue ruin," and "hard times," they will have me feeling that I am going with them. I heard of a professor at Oxford who carried out a psychological experiment on a certain individual. About fifteen persons were to meet this man and each one was to tell him how badly he looked. This they did, and they kept it up continually until the man actually began to feel that he was ill. My hon. friends opposite will continue to cry "blue ruin" until they will have me feeling that way. I cannot stand it any longer. They are doing it for political purposes. I belong to the same organization that my hon. friend from Lisgar and my hon. friend from Assiniboia belong to—the United Farmers.

Mr. BROWN: Never a very active member, though.

Mr. MULLINS: I was a very active member. I have sat in the organization with you. You remember quite well that in Calgary I took exception to things that you did in those organizations. You have played politics to the limit. You cannot play them any longer. You cannot work on the weakness of western people. You are political agitators.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member must address the Chair.

Mr. MULLINS: I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that I was annoyed at the blue ruin talk that has been going on. Hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to work up political material for their associate, Mr. Ward, so that he can go round the country and talk secession and mild revolution and things of that sort. I do not wonder at the Prime Minister giving them a dressing down, for they deserve every word of it; all he said to them was absolutely true. The hon. member for Assiniboia probably lives in a district where the men buy canned milk, where they go to the general store and buy their butter. They are not farmers. They are mostly all soil robbers, Mr. Speaker; they are causing all the trouble in western Canada.

I shall not take up any more time now; I shall defer my remarks until the budget comes before the house, when these gentlemen will probably hear more from me on the possibilities of our great west.

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. Johns-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, as I represent a riding which is partly agricultural, I wish to take this opportunity to express my views on this subject. Since the election of July last, on every occasion that ministers or hon. members on the right addressed political banquets, they always stated that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had not failed in his task. The only pledge carried out, up to date, is that of the emergency session; yet the ministers contend that they have fulfilled all their pledges.

The right hon. Prime Minister, during the elections of 1930, travelled over the whole country telling the farmers:

> Agriculturists, you believe in low tariff, you have been taught to applaud free trade, when did free trade fight for you? I will make protection fight for you.

Protection began in September last. I wonder how much farmers have benefited from this protection, with an increase in duties of 200 to 250 per cent on farming implements. Did this increase help the workmen? No, it favoured the manufacturers and capitalists.

The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), in his speech, on March 26 last, stated that the Prime Minister had negotiated treaties favourable to farmers. This statement amazed me greatly—and I am not the only one among the Quebec members which it did amaze. When in the legislature, at Quebec, the hon. Postmaster General always championed the interests of the farming class, however, in his speech the other day no reference was made to farmers. He has done nothing to help them, up to this day. Like the other Conservative members of Quebec who represent agricultural ridings, he took his cue from the Prime Minister who specially favours the capitalist and manufacturer.

The hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance), on March 19 last—almost forty days ago—inquired from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) whether he had a policy to announce. The hon. minister answered that he had nothing definite so far. The minister's answer, sir, was not of a nature to encourage the farming class.

The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Duguay) who spoke on April 13, stated that he was ready to make suggestions but that circumstances prevented him doing so because he expected the hon. Minister of Agriculture would bring down measures which would be very helpful to the farmers. In the meantime, the hon. Minister of Agriculture is conspicuous by his absence.

Assisting the farmers is an excellent way to relieve unemployment, because many of them crowd the cities when they can no more find their livelihood on the farm. After nine months of Conservative administration the government has not yet announced a program to assist agriculture, notwithstanding all the fine pledges given by Conservative speakers who, in Quebec, insisted that they would especially help the farming class and city labour.

The workman is willing to pay a reasonable price for farm products, for when the farmer has money he is able to purchase the manufacturer's goods. The worker's motto is "live and let live". The Conservative candidates travelled throughout Quebec, especially in the eastern townships, promising that if the Conservatives assumed office, butter imports would be prohibited. I wonder how the hon. members for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel), for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) and Compton (Mr. Gobeil), could to-day face their electors, after having promised that butter imports to this country would be prohibited? Under the Liberal regime Australia paid a duty of 1·70 cent per pound. Since the advent of the Conservative administration this duty was decreased to 1 cent, and the butter imports from Australia have been 836,000 pounds more than in 1930. I wonder whether those are the pledges or guarantees given to the electorate by the hon. members on the right.

According to the report brought down by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), there were 6,000,000 pounds of butter imported into Canada from August 1, 1930, to March 1, 1931. As to New Zealand butter, it served its purpose in fooling the farmers, especially those of Quebec, it was stated that not a pound would enter Canada after the Conservatives assumed office, yet I find that more than 5,000,000 pounds were imported into Canada since August 1, 1930. In 1930 we imported 408,000 pounds of butter from Australia, while in 1931, 1,244,000 pounds were imported. With these figures staring them in the face I wonder whether the hon. members on the right are fulfilling their pledges towards the electorate. It is but fair that the farmer should know what interest the government takes in his welfare.

In an answer given by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to a question put by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge), the following figures were given: butter imports to Canada in November, 1930, 117,600 pounds, while in March, 1931, it was 862,904, that is seven times more than in November, 1930. Well, sir, confronted with such facts, what are we to think of the Conservative members of Quebec who pledged themselves to protect the interests of the farmers

I fail to see what the government has done for the farmers; I fail to see what it has accomplished on behalf of the worker. However, I realize that the increases in the tariff, enacted at the emergency session, aimed at favouring the manufacturer and capitalist instead of relieving unemployment and assisting the workman and farmer.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): I wish, Mr. Speaker, to take a minute or two in this debate. I am one of those who believe that it is not everybody who is in a position either to give advice to or to lecture the farmer.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not the farmer, it was hon. members.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not profess to have any intimate knowledge of farming conditions, but I do rise to point out to the house and to my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that we have heard from his lips to-night a very different story from what we heard less than a year ago. I do not know that I have ever heard a more vehement lecture to hon. members in this house than was delivered to-night by my right hon. friend concerning the matter of talking blue ruin and running down the credit of the country. I rise simply in order that he and the people may not forget some of the statements made by him within the last year with regard to the country whose credit he now desires to be upheld, concerning existing conditions as he described them throughout the country. These statements to which I shall refer were made at a time when he was not averse to running down the country or crying blue ruin, and at a time when on every platform he seemed to have one desire at least, and that was to let not only this country but the world at large know exactly how badly off we were.

I shall quote to the house some of the expression used by my right hon. friend during the election campaign with regard to conditions in this country, and then let us see if this is the same gentleman who to-night has condemned everybody who has attempted to tell the truth with regard to conditions as they exist in Canada to-day. Speaking at Toronto he said:

> To-day we have unemployment on a scale never before known.

Speaking at Inverness he said:

> Canada's national resources are being depleted.

Again speaking at Toronto he said:

> Canadian industries are dying.

Speaking of trade generally, he said:

> Thus Canada is becoming more and more a dependent, and less and less independent economically. . . .

Mr. BENNETT: That is true.

Mr. RALSTON: The Ottawa Citizen carried the statement from him that "industry was languishing." Speaking at Regina, he said:

> Now we have unemployment, people walking our streets, men and women hungry,—we have all these things in this great rich country.

Speaking of the then Prime Minister he said:

> How ever blind he may be to your future, and deaf to your present needs, surely he cannot stop his ears with smug complacence and self esteem to the cry that carries across the nation, the cry of the destitute and hungry, the cry of mothers and fathers and little children who call to us as Christians and as Canadians to heal their pain.

And he spoke of "this time of national distress."

Mr. BENNETT: And we voted the $20,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Those are statements made at that time by my right hon. friend in regard to conditions in this country. Speaking of the west, as reported in a speech at Winnipeg:

> After stressing the economic ills of western Canada, showing that the prairies could not sell "wheat, foodstuffs, cattle and dairy products" . . . .

[Mr. Ralston.]

I ask hon. members if there could be any statements which would be less likely to obtain credit for the farmers than a statement of that kind made on a platform by the hon. gentleman who to-night condemned anybody who attempts to say that the farmer is not at the present time in a prosperous condition. Speaking at Sydney he said:

> Now my fellow Canadians are out of a job, children hungry, mothers hungry, men willing to work but unable to get work . . . .

Those are pictures which were painted last July by my right hon. friend. While it may be good politics for him to rise in his place at this time and lecture hon. gentlemen for having dared to come here and state conditions as they exist, I do not believe it adds anything to the debate, or that the country will be at all misled by the attitude which he takes.

He endeavours to salve his conscience, if I may use that term without disrespect, by saying that he has faith in this country. I want to state to him that he has not a monopoly on faith. All of us believe in the future of Canada, but we believe that its highest development in the future can best be attained by knowing all the conditions which require attention at any particular period and by endeavouring to remedy those conditions. Particularly I would call upon my right hon. friend, who was so lavish in his promises, to bring out his remedy and have the changes brought about. To-night my right hon. friend, amid loud cheers and applause from his followers, said that given health and strength and a term of office he would bring this country through its difficulties. May I say to my right hon. friend that there is always a time when a note falls due, and he already has had nine months in which to fulfil his promises. Considering the conditions which have been pointed out and which are said to exist in this country one would not be led to think that so far he had been very successful in his efforts; and one can be excused if he has considerable doubt as to whether the term of office for which he asks will be very fruitful of results. He is no doubt entitled to a reasonable time to bring about changes, but he must remember that the promises he made when he painted these conditions were promises for immediate action, and there was no suggestion that we would have to await the turn of a cycle of depression and for economic readjustment; the change was going to be made out of the air and in some way entirely unknown to those who were not "in the secret" when he sat on this side of the house he refused to disclose to this house and country what his policy was. He said, "I am like the great statesmen in England; when I am called in, then I will prescribe." He has been called in, and for nine months he has had the opportunity of prescribing. We know how this country really stands at the present time, and I do not think that so far he can look with a great deal of pride upon the patient he has been attending.

To-night, referring to the statements made by my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) the Prime Minister said "What good on earth can come from such statements as these?" Those words might well have been used at a time when he was travelling throughout the length and breadth of this land. The answer he would probably have made in private would have been, "At least it may do this; it may assist me and my party to get into power." They had that effect, and he is in power. He has the opportunity and the responsibility. I say to him that hon. members on this side of the house, and I think on the other side, notwithstanding the scolding, will continue to present to him conditions as they exist in various constituencies so that he may apply the remedies which he says he has. It is to be hoped that they will not continue to be met with lectures or with the suggestion he makes that a man who presents difficulties is not true to his country. Loyalty to our country is in all of us. Faith in our country and in its resources is in all of us. At the same time we cannot make that faith known and effective, and cannot make our country grow unless we have before us the true state of conditions. There is no use of my right hon. friend figuratively putting his head in the sand and refusing to see conditions as they are. He knows what they are as well as anybody else, and my right hon. friend may as well make up his mind to it that he will be held to his pledges, to remedy those conditions in order that the new era of which he talked and the promises he made may materialize.

As I say, I do not propose, nor do I feel qualified, to make any extended contribution to the debate in regard to agricultural conditions. But with all deference to my right hon. friend I submit that he himself made no contribution in this particular; rather he attempted to draw a red herring across the trail by blaming hon. gentlemen on this side for referring to the conditions existing in their several constituencies. I rose, Mr. Speaker, only for the purpose of reminding my right hon. friend of the attitude he took not very long ago, and of assuring him that we will continue to present the situation as it really is, regardless of whether he approves or disapproves of that course.

Mr. L. E. PARENT (Terrebonne) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very attentively to this discussion on agriculture. I noticed that the speeches bore mostly on conditions existing in the west, such as the sale price of wheat and the financial difficulties of many western farmers. The west is not the only place where there are farmers and where farming suffers from present conditions. I have the privilege of representing a riding where there are a large number of farmers as well as industrialists, manufacturers and merchants, and it is on their behalf that I wish to point out to the house what the farming community of Terrebonne thinks of the present agricultural situation. The farmers of my riding suffer like all farmers in this country from the failure to sell their products and the greatly decreased prices offered for them.

The present government, on many occasions during the last elections made pledges as regards this situation. Many pledges, but nothing has been done so far. I shall quote, among many, the pledges made by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) as reported by the Ottawa Journal on July 2, 1930:

> I state that I shall regard as my great responsibility if elected on July 28, to see that the collective weight and power of the Dominion of Canada is placed behind agriculture.
> I would be lacking in qualification entitling me to head a government if I failed to do so.

Speaking in Quebec, according to the Ottawa Citizen, on July 14, he stated:

> I do not want place and power over broken promises.

Well, I wonder what the government has done to help agriculture? I have no idea. I am not aware of any measure introduced in the house this session or at the September session, which would improve the farming situation. In the statements made by members of the government, I find nothing relating to agriculture. May I quote certain extracts from a speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) and reported by the newspaper La Presse, on February 23. In this speech delivered before the Conservative Women's Association, of Montreal, the hon. minister spoke quite at length on the pledges made by the right hon. Mr. Bennett, when he took office, and the way in which he had fulfilled those pledges, he then added:

> The pledge to increase the duties on about 200 articles which flood the local market to the detriment of the manufacturer and Canadian farmer was carried out at the emergency session. What was the result? The factories of Quebec, to mention these only, are undertaking millions of dollars worth of development. A market valued at $32,000,000 is opened to the cotton manufacturers; one of $42,000,000 for woollens and another of $13,000,000 for silk goods.

Is there, sir, in this extract one word to help the farmers? No. The first act of the government was to favour the manufacturers and industrialists. I have no objection to the government favouring to a certain extent important industrial groups, however, I state that agriculture should have preference. Both classes might have been simultaneously favoured by the government. I shall equally quote the words of another minister who seemed to reflect the views of the present government. The speech was made by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) on March 23, at a meeting of the Conservative Women's Association of Montreal. . . .

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, April 29, 1931

The house met at three o'clock.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT DECLARING RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO REFRAIN FROM VOTING

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 28, consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Bourassa, the amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Euler.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the motion now pending with regard to hon. members voting or not voting on motions before the house, as this matter is subject to a conference now being initiated with a view to arriving at some compromise, I ask the unanimous consent of the house that the motion stand until after such conference is held.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, before the consent of the house is given, may I ask the hon. minister who has just taken his seat (Mr. Cahan) the nature of the conference, and who will be members thereof?

Mr. CAHAN: The conference was suggested near the close of the debate on the motion of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and the amendments which were moved thereto. I understand that the conference is to take place between the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), the right hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Clerk of the House, and is being held with a view to drafting a compromise amendment to be submitted to the house.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think a conference of that nature would fill the bill at all; I am afraid it would be wholly unfair to the hon. members in this corner of the house. This debate originated as a result of certain action which we took and which was completely in accordance with the rules of the house, although utterly misunderstood by both the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition. A motion having been introduced to remedy the rules to cover a mistake made by these hon. gentlemen and to prevent its recurrence, the hon. members responsible for the initiation of the debate are apparently to be left out of the conference. I am sure that after due reflection the hon. minister will see the fairness and justice of taking into consideration the requirements of this group and that at least one of our members should be a representative at that conference.

Mr. CAHAN: I think it would meet with the approval of the house to include the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the leader of the third party.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): And also the mover of the motion (Mr. Bourassa).

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, they both might be added to that committee.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for Acadia informs me that with that understanding our group will be satisfied. I thank the Prime Minister for having included the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, it may further serve to relieve the minds of my hon. friends in the other corner if I tell them that I knew nothing of the proposed conference until this moment. I am pleased to know I am to be invited to participate, and I am very happy to accept.

Mr. JACOBS: May I suggest that the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) be included also in that conference? I do not know whether the word "Waterloo" signifies anything to the hon. member for Labelle, but I think we ought to have a Waterloo in it.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that the conference will be complete if it includes the hon. member for Labelle, as he has very definite views with regard to the nature of the amendment which should be proposed to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the unanimous wish of the house that the motion stand?

Motion stands.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

*WATER POWERS OF NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. BERTRAND:

Has the Dominion government come to an understanding with the provinces in connection with their respective rights as to water-powers of navigable waters between the provinces, if so, when?

Mr. BENNETT: If I may answer the question verbally, the answer is, no.

ASSISTANCE TO AGRICULTURE

Mr MacLEAN:

1. Has an organization been formed to assist agriculture in Canada with an amount of money available for assistance to farms?

2. If so, what amount of money is available for this fund?

3. By whom is the money advanced for this fund?

4. Is this assistance available to all sections and provinces in Canada?

5. If not, why?

6. What amount is to be given to each applicant?

7. How is the fund to be handled and what constitutes a legitimate applicant?

8. Is the fund in operation at the present time?

Mr. BENNETT: This question is rather vague in its terms. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say exactly what he means, because there are many organizations which assist agriculture in Canada. It is difficult to answer the question as it stands.

Mr. MacLEAN: The question refers to the organization proposed as a means of assisting agriculture in western Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: There are many such organizations.

Mr. MacLEAN: I have in mind the organization referred to by the Prime Minister in his speech in Regina.

Question stands.

BEAUHARNOIS LIGHT, HEAT & POWER COMPANY

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Has the government received any notice to the effect that the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company has applied to the government of the province of Quebec for permission and has been granted the right to divert an additional 30,000 cubic feet of water per second through the Beauharnois canal?

2. Do the plans already filed by the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company and approved by the government, enable the company to divert the above mentioned 30,000 cubic feet of water per second through its canal?

3. If it is necessary for the government to approve of the plans of the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company to allow them to divert this additional 30,000 cubic feet of water per second, is it the intention of the government to approve of such plans without giving the house an opportunity of considering the said application?

4. Does the government approve and concur in the granting by the province of Quebec to the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company of the right to divert the said 30,000 cubic feet of water per second through the Beauharnois canal?

5. In whom is the legal title to this 30,000 cubic feet of water vested?

6. Is the government of the opinion that P.C. No. 442, dated March 8, 1929, is legal and valid in so far as it purports to grant the rights and privileges therein contained to the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company?

Mr. GARDINER: When this question was last called, the Prime Minister took exception to some of the questions involved in it because of the fact that they were legal in character. For that reason he said they could not be answered. With the permission of the house, I would ask that numbers 4, 5 and 6 be dropped and that the others be allowed to stand.

Mr. BENNETT: 4, 5 and 6?

Mr. SPEAKER: Paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of question 6 are withdrawn.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: The remainder of question 6 stands.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say that question 3 was the worst of the lot:

Is it the intention of the government to approve of such plans without giving the house an opportunity of considering the said application?

That is a question which is governed by law and one that does not call for an answer. Intentions are not matters of question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Question stands.

Mr. BENNETT: No, Mr. Speaker; I submit that number 3 must be stricken out.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, if you will allow the question to stand as submitted by myself, I will reconsider number 3; but I cannot see the argument of the Prime Minister at the moment.

Mr. SPEAKER: Paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 dropped; the remainder of the question stands.

Question as amended stands.

MR. H. G. BOULAY

Sir EUGENE FISET:

1. Is it the intention of the government to implement the following public promises made by its candidate in the county of Rimouski, Mr. H. G. Boulay, if his leader came to power, namely: (a) to reduce the salary of Sir Henry Thornton to $15,000 per annum; (b) to reduce the salaries of all vice-presidents and other high officials of the Canadian National Railways, including general managers of divisions, by 50 per cent; (c) to provide on all dining and buffet cars, pullman parlour cars, first and second class cars, being operated between Ottawa and Montreal, Montreal and Halifax, only employees who speak fluently French and English?

2. Has any request been received by the Minister of Railways and Canals, or by Sir Henry Thornton, or any other high officials of the Canadian National Railways, from Mr. H. G. Boulay, asking that a large portion, if not all, of the sub-staff and railway employees employed on trains operating between Ottawa and Montreal, Montreal and Halifax, be compelled to speak both French and English?

3. If so, what action does the honourable minister or the executive of the Canadian National Railways intend to take?

Mr. MANION: In regard to question number 12, the Prime Minister pointed out some days ago what I think was correct, namely, that this is not a proper question for the order paper; and you yourself, Mr. Speaker, said that the question should be dropped. It is still, however, on the order paper. It is not one that we can answer, nor is it a proper question for the order paper.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I understand that during my absence the minister asked that the question be dropped. In view of his request, and as this is about the best answer I could possibly obtain to my question, I have no objection to the question being dropped.

Question dropped.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION—PURCHASE OF BARGE

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. Did the Vancouver Board of Harbour Commissioners recently purchase a railway barge?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. If so, was this barge purchased in the United States?

3. Who arranged such purchase?

4. What are the dimensions of this barge?

5. When was this barge originally constructed?

6. What was the purchase price?

7. What was the cost of towing this barge to Vancouver?

8. What was the cost of insurance on the said barge?

9. From whom was the barge acquired?

10. Was the barge acquired from an American corporation or through an agency?

11. In whose name was the barge cleared through the American customs?

12. To whom was the insurance on the barge paid?

Mr. BENNETT: As I have explained, this question can be answered only in the manner indicated yesterday, by sending a letter to the harbour commissioners and presenting their reply to the house. The government has no direct control over the commission in the sense implied by these questions. If the hon. gentleman desires that we should write a letter, sending a copy of the questions and submitting an answer to the house, we will do so.

Mr. POWER: In the meanwhile, if I may suggest it, why not make it an order for return?

Mr. BENNETT: If that is acceptable, it may stand as an order for return.

Question stands as order for return.

WRECKING PLANTS

Mr. PLUNKETT:

1. How much money by way of subsidies has been voted yearly from 1921 to 1930, inclusive, for wrecking plants in the province of British Columbia?

2. How much money by way of subsidies has been voted yearly from 1921 to 1930, inclusive, for wrecking plants in the province of Quebec?

3. What is the tonnage of the ships of the wrecking plant and total amount of investment exclusive of subsidies from federal government for the province of British Columbia?

4. What is the tonnage of the ships of the wrecking plant and total amount of investment exclusive of subsidies from federal government for the province of Quebec?

5. What is the total amount of money lost in wrecks by shipping interests from 1921 to 1930, inclusive, upon which the subsidized wrecking plant of the province of British Columbia was engaged?

6. What is the total amount of money lost in wrecks by shipping interests from 1921 to 1930, inclusive, upon which the subsidized wrecking plant of the province of Quebec was engaged?

Mr. BENNETT: This must stand as an order for return, as I said the other day, in view of the number of questions and the years covered.

Question stands as order for return.

PROVINCIAL LIQUOR COMMISSIONS, CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

Mr. DUFF:

1. What was the total amount paid, by way of customs and excise levy, during the fiscal year of 1930-1931, by each of the various provinces of Canada, through their liquor commissions?
2. What was the gallonage upon which said payments were made?
3. Has the total amount payable by each province been received?

Mr. BENNETT: It has not been the custom in times past—certainly not without the consent of the provinces—to disclose the business of the various provinces with departments in relation to the moneys they pay to the Dominion. General information of course is available from the provinces themselves at some time or other. There is no reason why the hon. member should not be able to obtain the information, but as I say it has long been the custom not to make public the affairs of the provinces in the conduct of business with the various departments of the public service.

Mr. DUFF: That applies to individuals and not to the provinces. The province is a public body, and I think the question should be answered.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is perhaps aware that the matter was the subject of litigation by the province of British Columbia, and the case finally went to the privy council. It is not the province that carried on the business, but the various commissions, and they stand exactly in the same position as individuals. If it is the opinion of the house that the custom should be departed from in the case of provinces or commissions, an effort will be made to get the information; but I am only indicating what the rule has been in days past.

Mr. DUFF: I will drop the question.

Mr. BENNETT: Thank you.

Question dropped.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED FEDERAL SYSTEM OF ASSURANCE AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT, SICKNESS AND INVALIDITY

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (Winnipeg North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the immediate establishment of a federal system of assurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity.

He said: Of all the primary and important problems which come before this house there is not one of greater importance than that of unemployment. During four of the past six regular sessions of parliament it has been my privilege to have introduced a motion dealing with unemployment, sickness and invalidity insurance. On innumerable other occasions during the last six years the same question has been raised both by my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and myself. I believe at the present time there is in this house a preponderance of opinion in favour of taking action to deal with unemployment by means of some form of insurance. The labourer who happens to find himself out of work is in no way responsible for being in that position. He is merely a victim of circumstances. However at this juncture I do not wish to deal with the causes which lead to unemployment. I am now dealing with the effects, and further with the duty of this parliament as the supreme governing body in the land to see that where there is involuntary poverty, hardship and suffering action is taken to mitigate if not altogether to eliminate such a condition. I am sure that the humane sentiments of all hon. members irrespective of party, predispose them toward measures for the relief of human suffering. That is a natural instinct and characteristic of us all. I believe also that if human suffering, unemployment and all that the term implies could be eradicated from our existing economic structure hon. gentlemen in this house would be happy in the attempt to bring about such a condition.

We in the Labour group make the claim that within the confines of capitalism unemployment cannot be eradicated. It is not because the industrialist desires unemployment, but because unemployment is an inherent defect of the economic structure. Cycles of so-called prosperity are always followed by periods of depression and in those periods there are wholesale dismissals in our factories, our workshops and our warehouses with the result that vast numbers of men and women all of a sudden are deprived of their livelihood. During recent years the unemployment problem has been considerably aggravated. Statistics prove that the ever increasing use of machinery and the process of speeding up has tended to reduce the labour factor in industry. Therefore it is quite obvious that if the productive element in industry is receiving a lesser return the non-productive element is receiving an ever increasing return. In other words, profit in industry is taking a larger toll whilst wages represent a relatively diminishing factor. In this category I must include finance, because in this age the two factors of finance and industry are inseparably interlocked and the profits of the former naturally spring from those of the latter. To-day many people are of the opinion that present conditions cannot continue indefinitely.

Our economic structure has become so one-sided that it is on the verge of toppling over. The enormous aggregation of wealth in a few hands resulting from the conditions just referred to has created a problem demanding the immediate attention of this parliament. After all, wealth has not been created by the few but by the many. To allow wealth to be concentrated in the hands of a few to the detriment of the many is a task for parliament and statesmen to remedy. The concentration of wealth has given to some an undreamed of power. I believe the time has arrived when the owners of this wealth should realize that it must be used for the common weal. Instead of wealth being a blessing to mankind in many instances it has become a curse. Therefore if unemployment, sickness and invalidity insurance takes some small toll from those who own or control the wealth, in reality it is only returning a meagre portion to those who have produced it.

No scheme of insurance can be regarded as a remedy for unemployment; it is merely a palliative. In my opinion a far more satisfactory way of dealing with unemployment would be the curtailment of the hours of labour without a corresponding reduction in pay. Naturally this proposition presents so many obstacles in its enactment that as an immediate measure it is not altogether feasible. A few generations ago when the eight hour day was first proposed its advocates were looked upon as dangerous doctrinaires, a characterization which to-day has its counterparts in such terms as "red", "radical", "bolshevik" and so on. The persons who find themselves without employment ought to be the first consideration of parliament. At the present time those who are in that unfortunate position find it more difficult than ever to secure employment. The search for the elusive job is one of the most tragic occurrences in life. Days, weeks, months go by and the individual begins to lose his morale. He sees nothing before him but poverty, and no immediate hope of redress. Probably as a last resort the man may be compelled to apply for public relief. I have known of hundreds of cases where men in utter despair and agony, after a hopeless quest for work, were compelled to apply for relief. Many people do not realize the tremendous strain upon such men. The average man hesitates when for the first time in his life he makes a request to receive public relief. It requires courage for the ordinary person to steel himself for the ordeal. The average worker hates to take anything without giving something in return. After he has steeled himself to apply, with considerable misgiving and trepidation he accepts for the first time. The second time proves to be less difficult than the first. The third is not as difficult as the second and so on. If he continues to make application for relief he might be said to be in receipt of what might properly be termed a dole, which often saps the manhood of many of our finest citizens who themselves are in no way responsible for the unfortunate circumstances in which they happen to find themselves. During the past winter we have been handing our relief in one form or another because we have no other way of taking care of the men and women who find themselves in straitened circumstances on account of being out of work. This at best is a most unsatisfactory way of dealing with an ever-recurring trouble.

I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, as an alternative to this form of dole that we institute a system of insurance against unemployment. It is certainly a far more effective way of dealing with the problem than by handing out relief as we are now doing. Our industrialists generally make provision for replacement, depreciation, and reserve. The fund set aside for replacement and depreciation is to take care of machinery and equipment. The reserve is for the purpose of tiding over the industry in times of industrial depression. But what of the human element in industry? The working man is hired and fired at will, without any regard for his well-being. Usually he is employed at wages which are barely at the subsistence level, and in no way sufficient to allow of his setting aside a reserve for unforeseen expenditures such as medical care, sickness and disability. Under these circumstances it is quite obvious that according to the present ethics of industry capital is looked upon as having a claim prior to the human element—the working men and women. We of the Labour party believe that the human element in industry should have first claim, and that the favoured position now enjoyed by financiers and industrialists should be superseded by a system under which the employees shall be reasonably provided for during the life of themselves and their dependents.

May I point out that the man, who, for instance, invests his money in the bonds of an industrial company is assured of an annual return at a very reasonable rate of interest. Suppose he invests $15,000 in 7 per cent industrial bonds, he receives in return an annual income of $1,050, which is more than the average wage earned by a man engaged in industrial pursuits in this country. Is it unreasonable to suggest that the man so engaged should be as well safeguarded in respect to the annual return on his labour as is the investor on his capital? If I could have my way, I would insist that the owners of industry should regard every employee as being at least as valuable to the industry as the man who invests $15,000 in its bonds, and who, without any effort on his part, abstracts from the industry more than the man who is giving of his best to the industry directly and indirectly to the nation. An illustration in point comes to my mind in the town of Sudbury. At the present time according to the information I have received, thousands of men there are out of work. The main local industry is carried on by the International Nickel Company, a very wealthy corporation, which in past years has made enormous profits. Immediately there is a shrinkage in the demand for their output, and consequently a shrinkage in their profits, the management reduce the working staff and these men are thrown on the street indiscriminately, and no one seems to care what becomes of them. Those men have to walk the streets and have in some way to be maintained by the local authorities, while the profits of the industry which they have helped to build up go to others. During all their years of labour they have been in receipt of but a low wage, a wage which is not sufficient to enable them to save one cent for a rainy day. This condition of affairs in Sudbury is symptomatic of what is happening in many other industrial centres throughout the Dominion, and I submit that these industrial corporations ought to be compelled by law to do their share in looking after the men whom they have discharged, and whom they will have to look to as a reserve force when the present industrial depression ends.

Recently the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in speaking to a delegation referred to evils of the dole in Great Britain. I took the precaution to look up his remarks in order to make sure that I might not misquote him. I think he certainly was unjust to the people of the old country. As a matter of fact those workers of Great Britain who are the beneficiaries under various schemes of social insurance, are not in receipt of a dole; they are just as much entitled to what they receive as those who take out fire insurance and ultimately receive compensation in the event of their property being destroyed. The effects in Great Britain of the unemployment insurance scheme are not what I believe the Prime Minister had in mind when he spoke to the delegation that he received a couple of weeks ago. Would Great Britain to-day be better off if she did not have any unemployment insurance at all? It has been in operation for about 20 years, and we find that during that time crime has diminished so rapidly that to-day many of her prisons are empty and for sale. Contrast that with the condition prevaling in this country where we leave our unemployed to take care of themselves. Our statistics show an increase of crime, and this year we are going to enlarge our penal institutions to take care of those delinquents who probably if they had been assisted under a federal scheme of unemployment insurance would not to-day be inmates of such institutions.

I would remind the house that in addition to insurance against unemployment I have in mind also the question of provision against sickness and invalidity. In view of the salutary effect of such social legislation in Great Britain, I think we can make no mistake if we follow what has been in effect there for the past twenty years. I realize perhaps as well as any other member the constitutional difficulties which are inherent in a scheme of unemployment insurance. But just as we overcame the question of conflicting federal and provincial jurisdiction in dealing with the problem of old age pensions, so can we overcome it in adopting a system of social insurance. I think if this parliament would give a lead we could obtain the sympathetic cooperation of practically all the provinces, because unemployment is not a provincial, it is not a municipal, it is a federal problem. Unemployment is not due to what is being done municipally or provincially, it is largely the result of policies for which this parliament is more or less responsible. Consequently I am anxious that any scheme of unemployment insurance that we may institute should be federal in scope. To illustrate the difficulty of leaving this question to the provinces, let me take the city of Ottawa. Supposing there was unemployment insurance in force in the province of Quebec, but not in this province, and a man residing in Hull moved to the city of Ottawa, by so doing he would lose the advantage he enjoyed in Quebec

Therefore, I think it must be obvious to every hon. member that any scheme to be effective must be federal in scope.

I also realize how easy it may be for any hon. member to point out the difficulties standing in the way of any scheme of social insurances. It is the easiest thing in the world to criticize adversely, but if there is any hon. member of this house who is opposed to such a scheme of social insurance I hope he will come forward with an alternative to the proposition I am putting before the house this afternoon. Our small Labour group here has been reproved on several occasions because it has been said that usually we have been destructive in our criticism. To a certain extent I may admit that in many of my talks I have been destructive in my criticism of things as they are, but at the same time we have always brought forward some proposals for the attention of this house. I only regret that as yet we have not been able to convert the majority of hon. members to our way of thinking.

To-day we are bringing forward a scheme of insurances which is constructive in its character. We say that in view of conditions as they are, and as they have been for a number of years, it is time the government of the day did something to remedy those conditions, and one way of partially remedying them is to inaugurate a system of unemployment, sickness and invalidity insurance. The government may come along and tell us that at the present time they are going through financial difficulties which make it hard to make ends meet. I realize the difficulty of the government, and I extend to them my sympathy for what it may be worth. However, is it fair that we in parliament should ask the men, women and children who are out of work to bear the whole burden of this depression? I do not think it is. When times are hard we are told that we cannot afford to have a scheme of social insurance, but when times are more normal we are told it is not necessary. So the workers of this country are caught between these two excuses; in good times it is not necessary, and in hard times we cannot afford it. If such a scheme of insurance as I am asking the house to adopt is approved, it will give to men, women and the young children who depend upon them, a certain limited security in life which they do not now possess. It will remove from many that stigma of the dole which they are now compelled to accept, through no fault of their own.

[Mr. Heaps.]

As a parliament we cannot afford to ignore this fact. At the last special session we took out of the federal treasury—or raised by borrowing, I am not sure which—the sum of $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment throughout the Dominion of Canada. That is a method of dealing with the question of which I do not approve. There is no system about it; it is spasmodic in its efforts and temporary in its benefits, and no doubt next winter we will be compelled to do the same thing. I would far sooner deal with the problem in a definite manner as best we can. To-day we find right across this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, organizations of men and women who have given study to this problem and who are demanding that these forms of insurance be put into effect by the federal parliament. Labour to-day, irrespective of the part of the country it finds itself in, also is demanding that some form of insurance be enacted by parliament. It is rather remarkable, Mr. Speaker, that of all the nations which have adopted schemes of insurance, not one nation has done away with that legislation; in many cases the original legislation has been enlarged in its scope and benefits. Only a few years ago in England, under the regime of the former prime minister, Mr. Stanley Baldwin, the unemployment insurance scheme was enlarged to a considerable extent until now the number of beneficiaries under some form of insurance in the British Isles is greater than the population of this Dominion.

I should like to point out the difference between this motion and motions which have been made along these lines in previous years. Formerly the motion has been to refer the matter to a committee for investigation, but this time I am not asking for a committee; I am opposed to any further investigation of this question. What I want now is action. A previous committee which investigated this question in 1928 reported to the house in favour of a contributory system of unemployment insurance, and I believe the house unanimously approved that report. To-day my motion asks for the immediate establishment of a federal system of insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity. There is a difference between that which I asked for in previous years and that for which I am asking on the present occasion. If there are those, as I said before, who are opposed to this parliament dealing with this matter in this way, then I am anxious to know what their alternative may be.

We have a great responsibility in this question and we cannot shirk that responsibility, even if we want to do so. I know we have many other responsibilities in addition. If anyone in this house should stand up in his place and suggest that we should repudiate our national debt or the interest charges thereon, I know there would be protests from every corner of the house. Hon. members would rise in their places and talk about our obligations, our duties and our responsibilities, and they would refer to the honour of this Dominion. I think we have no greater duty and no greater responsibility than taking care of the poor in our midst, and I think as a parliament we should look upon that as our first duty. Although the time which we may devote to this very important question is limited, I hope the government to-day will not disappoint the hundreds of thousands of people who are expecting us to give some attention to this matter.

On former occasions both parties have committed themselves to the principle of unemployment, sickness and invalidity insurance. In a speech delivered by the present Prime Minister during the session of 1928 he came out openly in favour of a scheme of this character, and the leader of the opposition has done the same thing. We have the leaders of both parties in favour of some such scheme, so why should there be such difficulty in our getting together and finding ways and means of doing something this session for those who are at present unemployed, and for men over whom unemployment hangs like a dark cloud. There are hundred of thousands of people out of work to-day, and many more are working on short time. The labour movement of this country is looking to parliament on this occasion in the hope that it will do something at least along the lines of the action taken a few years ago when it passed the Old Age Pensions Act.

I hope the government will stand behind the pledges it has made, the pledges which were incorporated in its platform and the pledges which many of its supporters gave to their constituents, as well as the statements made by the right hon. the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition during the session of 1928.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker I do not propose this afternoon to traverse at length the ground covered by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Heaps). I desire only to point out two or three problems which must be dealt with before this question can be determined.

First, there is the question of the respective jurisdiction of the federal parliament and the provincial legislatures, which has to some extent been determined by the law officers of the crown. As has been pointed out by the provincial premiers, there is no reason to doubt that with the joint action of the provinces and the Dominion some satisfactory solution of this problem can be found. It has been suggested that a conference should be called between the provinces and the Dominion for the purpose of discussing this problem and if possible finding a solution. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) suggested the other day that this matter might have been discussed at the recent Dominion-provincial conference. I can only say that the question could not be dealt with at any such conference in one or two days, or in half a dozen days; there are questions which involve consequences of the most far-reaching effect in every possible way so far as the body politic is concerned. There is not only the setting up of the machinery but there is the question of the ways and means by which that machinery is to be maintained.

At the present time a large number of corporations that have thousands of employees make provision for their future after they have reached a certain age. Provision is made in some cases for invalidity through sickness, and in others for the payment of a small sum while unemployed and still in the service of the company.

This resolution proposes two things, to which I will direct attention. First, it suggests that the government should take into consideration the immediate establishment of a federal system of insurance. I do not think my hon. friend is well advised in leaving the word "immediate" in his motion for the simple and obvious reason that it must be known to him and to every hon. gentleman who has read any book upon the subject or who has given time and consideration to the problems involved that it cannot be dealt with in three weeks, six weeks, one month or several months. So far as that feature is concerned, I would suggest that he delete the word "immediate" from his resolution. I suggest also that after the word "federal" and before the word "system" he add the word "contributory," thus making it a federal contributory system. Then I would suggest that the words "after satisfactory arrangements have been made with the provinces" be added at the end of the resolution. As has been so clearly stated by the hon. gentleman, insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity can never be successful if each province has a different system or if one province has a system and another has not.

Moreover, it has been said by some of the premiers in days gone by, provinces do not feel competent to carry on and discharge all their constitutional obligations; therefore there must be a combined effort on the part of the provinces and the Dominion in order to attain any success. I do not think I am violating any confidence when I say that in a conversation which I had with a former minister of Great Britain who had this matter in hand, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, he indicated after travelling over Canada that in his opinion a system to be successful must be one representing the combined efforts of the provinces and the Dominion. Whatever else might be said about it, he was clearly of that opinion because of the data which he had in his possession and the information which he had gleaned by travelling over this country and from other sources. When the hon. gentleman talks about setting up immediately a system of insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity I am sure he cannot possibly realize the magnitude of the problem or he would not make that suggestion and seriously expect it to be acted upon.

He must realize the amount of actuarial work which must be done. We are now taking a new census and after that has been completed we believe we will have in our possession sufficient data to enable us to apprehend and appreciate the extent of the obligation we must incur. It will not be a small obligation, it will be measured by millions of dollars, and it involves the question of ensuring beyond peradventure that the system will succeed. When any hon. member of this house uses the word "insurance" he is using a word with a well-defined meaning. An insurance contract is one of indemnity; it is a contract whereby for the payment of a given sum the insurer agrees and covenants that the insured will receive certain sums therein specified. In order to arrive at what premium shall be paid it is necessary to understand the character of the risk. To-day Great Britain is considered the greatest authority upon marine insurance because for centuries the underwriters in that country have been able to appreciate from the experience gained at Lloyds and from other sources the exact character of the risk involved. In every case where insurance is granted there is a risk taken and the contract is to compensate on the basis of the risk involved. Knowledge of the character of the risk as well as of the extent to which compensation is to be paid must be at the very bottom of all insurance.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Unfortunately in the matter of unemployment a great mistake was made in England in appreciating the character of the risk, and I suppose it is known to every hon. member of this house that at this moment the unemployment insurance fund owes the government of Great Britain the enormous sum of nearly one hundred million pounds sterling.

Mr. HEAPS: Were not the general conditions in 1911 different from what they were in 1919?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am trying to prove, and I thank my hon. friend for doing it for me. There must be a clear appreciation of the character of the risk involved. What underwriter, for instance, could maintain his solvency if he assumed risks without having any appreciation of the character of the peril which may be encountered and therefore not being in a position to arrive at a premium sufficient under actuarial determinations to meet the risk involved? This house is a thoughtful body dealing with a matter of tremendous magnitude, and the first problem which must be met whenever you use the word "insurance" is that of determining what the premium shall be.

In life insurance the premium is fixed by known standards—age, expectation of life, the value of money over a long period of years; and when you insure a man of twenty-five years of age you know that by the payment of the premium which you accept from him you will be in a position, on the basis of the expectation of life, to meet that risk when it falls in, and to discharge your liability.

There is always a perceptible surplus on the part of life insurance companies because they load their premiums, as it is technically known, for the purpose of enabling them to make sure that the sum derived as premium shall always be equal to the risk involved and taken by the insurer. Take fire insurance. A great many of us I suppose, who have not taken the trouble to look into the matter carefully, think that fire insurance rates are arbitrarily fixed and that, to quote the language of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown), the companies charge all that the traffic will bear. The oldest insurance company in the world, in our world at least, is doing business in Great Britain. I once had the pleasure of visiting that company's head office in London and seeing something of its records, extending now over centuries. They are able, with almost mathematical precision and certainty, to determine the premium that should be charged for the purpose of enabling them adequately to meet the risk involved. That sounds very strange. But you have all classes of risks; you have marine hazards, to which I referred a moment ago; you have fire risks; you have burglary insurance; you have insurance granted by Lloyds for almost anything in the world—for example, the result of elections, a very hazardous thing upon which to calculate. The great insurance companies, with all their branches, have determined by experience in a broad and general way what premium having regard to human experience, will meet satisfactorily the risk that is involved. As to unemployment insurance, I said a moment ago that in England, they established it in 1911, and later, on its present basis—because there was a consolidation of the statutes under Mr. Chamberlain, as the house will remember, when the whole matter was dealt with afresh—it will be recalled that the weekly premium to be paid by the employee is supplemented by payment on the part of the employer as well as the government.

Unfortunately no provision was made for those great cycles which every country has experienced and which we call periods of depression, with the result that the premium collected was wholly unequal to the burden imposed upon the fund when that cycle made its effect apparent. What is the result? The result is that the fund, being unequal to the demands made upon it, has to be supplemented, not by contributions by the employed or by the employer, but by the third party to the contract, namely, the state. And the fund, being insolvent, either had to discontinue paying the insured or the money had to be provided by the state. And so the fund borrowed from the state. In December last, these borrowings amounted to the enormous sum of 90,000,000 pounds sterling. My information to-day—I give this subject to correction—is that the fund now owes the state over 100,000,000 pounds sterling, and that the deficit amounts to approximately 800,000 pounds per week. I mention the last two figures without being absolutely certain as to their accuracy. That is unemployment.

Now you come to the basis upon which we must fix the premium. What are the factors that must be considered? Here are some of them. First, starting at the top, there is the cost of administration. That divides itself into further questions. Shall there be an administration by the state direct, or shall a commission be set up for purposes of administration? These two problems must be dealt with. That is as to cost of administration. Secondly, what premium shall be paid? That involves, (a) determination of the average employment of those affected, and (b) the amount required per week to meet the weekly claim that must be paid under the policy against unemployment.

These problems have not yet been determined. One is actuarial; it depends upon results which must be carefully collected and collated, which must be fully studied and analyzed, which must be looked into with a care that only an actuary can give. Then, when these figures have been analyzed, it becomes necessary to determine what sum is required in order to ensure, in the light of general experience and expectations providing for cycles of unemployment, the payment of the weekly claim which has to be met.

Need I remind this house that on one occasion an election in one of the great overseas dominions of the British Empire was conducted on the basis of increasing the weekly compensation. That is one of the dangers that must be considered in connection with placing the administration of the system in the hands of government as a political matter. I mention this only as an argument with respect to the form which the administration should take. All hon. members will recall what Prince Bismarck said when he introduced insurance, medical and unemployment, as well as other forms into Germany, as to the reasons therefor, and what the results have been.

Now go a step further. The next matter to consider is this: Who shall be insured? That should come second, but I put the question here: who shall be insured? Is it intended to cover everybody, all those engaged in industry, or only a part of those engaged in industry? Is it to cover agriculture? Is the farmer also to have the right to have insurance against unemployment, or is it to apply only to men engaged in industry, the industrial workers? Is it to cover only certain classes of industrial workers? Take the different risks involved in the character of employment against which you insure. I could give illustrations, but I will not trouble the house to mention more than two. Take seasonal occupations—carpenters, for instance. Do you mean to tell me for a single moment that you could place the same premium for the benefits of unemployment insurance on a carpenter in a cold country, north of the 49th parallel of latitude, as you could against an office man who finds employment the year round? These are some of the problems to be considered.

I reversed the order a moment ago, but take now the question of premium. That must be determined in the light of experience and the application of well-defined actuarial rules; and one of the principal rules with respect to actuarial computations is that which is roughly referred to as the interest which money will earn; that is to say, what sum can we with certainty say the money will earn—the accumulated funds of the Fund itself. What sum will they earn during a period of years? Life insurance companies used to reserve on a 4 per cent basis; later on it was 3½ per cent and then 3 per cent. And as is well known by this house, many of them reserve on a 2½ per cent basis; because, looking over a long period of years into the distant future, it cannot be said that you can have stability and certainty with respect to a matter like insurance unless you reserve on the lowest possible rate which you believe money will earn over a long term of years. Hence it is that an attack has been made against the annuity system of this country, the 4 per cent basis upon which annuity payments have been predicated. Personally, may I interject here the observation that when Sir Richard Cartwright pressed annuities upon the attention of this country with a skill and power which one would expect from a man who had so wide a knowledge of finance and so complete and thorough a grasp of all that is involved in questions of insurance, whether insurance pure and simple, or annuities, he had in mind a limited annuity. We increased it the maximum, for reasons that were apparent, to $5,000, and the result of increasing the annuity that might be secured has been, of course, to make the 4 per cent rate a somewhat difficult one to maintain. In my private opinion, speaking in no sense as indicating an intention or a view of the matter that may hereafter be taken, some limit upon annuities granted by our annuity branch, to from $1,000 to $1,200, would more nearly meet the view of those who created it. And it is more in keeping with the purposes for which the system was devised. All these are matters that have to be considered in dealing with social insurance.

Then there is another factor which must always enter into the question of unemployment insurance. Mortality at once enters into the question, because, if you are going to provide insurance against unemployment, the next demand that will be made is that there be attached to it some provision for the survivors, the wife and children. I only point out to you what the inevitable result will be. It is inevitable, and it involves a further consideration of the problem of mortality.

Now I come to the question of sickness. Health insurance has grown up on this American continent until it has assumed very great proportions. There is one great company, the largest in the world, which will issue a policy against unemployment, against sickness and invalidity. For a proper premium it will also provide for a pension. That is a modern development of insurance companies. In England, of course, for many years some such provisions have been made by private enterprises. That is a matter, however, that must be considered in the light of two important factors: (a) what has been the average experience with respect to the sickness of the individual insured; (b) group insurance, as it is sometimes called, with respect to industry, and which has now been extended to deal with sickness as well. Group insurance requires no medical examination of the individual, for that would not be possible under the scheme, but rather the grouping of not less than fifty individuals for the purpose of issuing a policy on the whole group, and taking the risk that is incident to it. I wonder if my hon. friend has studied the experience of the companies, brief though it may be, with respect to sickness insurance and various forms of invalidity—that is, invalidity, I take it, arising from accidents during the course of employment, and with which workmens' compensation boards deal in part, which accidents involve the determination of the legal question as to what is "in the course of employment." Happily, however, in most instances these questions are now being dealt with by commissions operating under the provincial governments whereby nice technical, legal questions no longer have any place in the administration of such an act.

Sickness insurance involves the payment of a premium. What shall the premium be in amount? What contribution shall be made by the insured? What contribution shall be made by the employer, and how much by the state itself? Does my hon. friend suggest that this house is now immediately seized of such information as would enable us with the very best ability we have in this Dominion to prepare a measure upon any basis that would commend itself to the judgment of the thinking people of this country.

I shall not deal with invalidity, but there are old age pensions in this country, which are very closely associated and allied with this particular branch of social legislation. I have, I think, sufficiently indicated the thought that must be in the mind of any hon. member who is interested in this matter, and that is that we are here dealing not with something that we can do to-day and undo to-morrow, but with a problem of the first magnitude, the results of the working out of which must be foreseen for at least half a century hence; for remember that we are but ten millions of people, and that the taxes for civic, provincial and federal purposes are paid by the same people. One of the things that contributes to our solvency is that a large part of the taxes keeps revolving around amongst the people who pay them. That I think is a well-known fact.

Now what are we to do at the moment with respect to this matter? The hon. gentleman is quite right when he says that the time for taking some action has arrived. I can say to him and to this chamber, with great frankness, that at least one member of the government has given a great deal of thought to the matter, and that a very considerable amount of valuable information has been obtained. The Department of Finance is advised that under existing conditions, to make a leap in the dark, to jump into the abyss without having knowledge of what is involved, would spell disaster to the very purpose which the hon. gentleman has in mind and would bring great suffering instead of great relief to those most concerned. I believe that any system involving legislative action should be based upon a consideration of many factors—and they are not political factors; for as hon. gentlemen will have observed, I have endeavoured to eliminate from my mind every political thought in discussing this problem. Those factors can be determined only after the next census is completed because upon a just and true appreciation of them depend the success and the solvency of the fund. There can be no doubt about that.

Then there arises the still larger question, what contribution shall the state make to take up the slack in the fund? I wonder how many hon. gentlemen have been studying the figures in connection with old age pensions in the province of Nova Scotia, for instance, and what those figures indicate. I wonder if hon. gentlemen have studied the surveys which have been made in many of the provinces in connection with those matters. Most of us who have ministerial responsibility realize that you cannot jump in the dark, but that you must have beside you at least sufficient information to warrant your asking the house to act upon any proposals you bring down. The great problem as to the amount which the state should contribute cannot be determined by guesswork. It is a much more serious matter than that. It involves, in my judgment, a study of the figures of the census which is about to be taken, and the application to those figures of the expert knowledge of actuaries. The actuarial department of the insurance branch of the Dominion of Canada is one of the very best in any part of the world. I am very happy to say that the greatest concerns employing actuaries have indicated time and time again that a Canadian-trained actuary is one of the most foremost men in his profession.

Under those circumstances, with a census about to be taken and the necessary figures to become available, with our actuarial force willing and ready to tackle the problem from the angles that I have suggested, does any hon. gentleman think that we would be doing justice to the Dominion of Canada or to ourselves if we now passed a resolution asking the government immediately to do something which it is not equipped to do? I propose, if we are spared as a government and as individuals, that the information we will have before our term of office is ended shall be crystallized into the form of legislative proposals to be submitted to this house. I have never had any illusions as to what is involved; I have none now. I have never had any desire other than that the legislation placed upon the statute book, whether by this government or by some other, shall be legislation based upon knowledge, and not upon mere guesswork.

I do know this, that this country would not be in a position to stand the demands which the fund in England has had to make by borrowings from the exchequer of that country. We are all aware of those demands. I believe this house is a unit in its desire to serve the interests which the hon. gentleman has at heart, but it must not be forgotten that there is a vast number of people in this country who, unfortunately—I repeat it—because of the conditions which have prevailed throughout the world, conditions which it is difficult to ascertain the reasons for, but the results of which are apparent—are getting more and more into the habit of saying: Let the government do it. There is one class in the community which has in the main been free from that attitude of mind, and that is the agricultural class, because there is so little that the government can do for them along such lines, on account of the fact that the agricultural class must toil upon the land and reap the fruits of the labour of their hands under climatic conditions over which man cannot exercise control. Man can and has exercised control in industry. In other branches he has not been able to exercise the same control. I need hardly mention hail insurance, which no longer is guess-work but in which the risk is only fairly understood, because two or three companies have become almost bankrupt during the past few years by reason of not being able sufficiently to predict the future from experiences of the past.

I suggest therefore that the hon. member will best serve his purpose by dropping the word "immediate" from his motion and adding thereto the word "contributory" and other words which will make the fact clear that whatever is done must be done with the cooperation of the provinces. That involves the answer to the last question I submitted concerning what the contribution of the state should be. In this case the state would be not only the Dominion of Canada but the provinces as well, because some of these matters are, as we have been advised by the law officers of the crown, solely within provincial jurisdiction. I repeat that we have the power to appropriate the money we collect to any useful purpose this parliament may determine. The parliament of Canada may determine what shall be done with the moneys collected from the taxpayers. I repeat now a statement which I made as leader of the opposition—a much less difficult position, as my right hon. friend will agree, than the one I now occupy. This government is anxious and willing to promote in every possible way the advancement of social legislation along the lines suggested. I refer not to non-contributory insurance or to non-contributory social legislation, but to legislation which will encourage the habit of thrift and care on the part of every man who benefits therefrom. Although I have been criticized, I say once more that this country will not produce men of the character it has had until men and women begin to realize that life means responsibilities and that one of those responsibilities is to help themselves. That is the only method by which social legislation can effectively and efficiently be enacted. Of that I feel quite certain. Whatever my reading and inquiries may be worth, I have satisfied myself quite clearly that in whatever we do in this regard we must recognize and realize that insurance involves premiums and premiums should be paid by the joint action alike of the insurer and the insured themselves and with the assistance of the state. In that sense, if the hon. gentleman is prepared to accept the suggestions I make, I say to him on behalf of the administration that, at the earliest possible moment consistent with obtaining information that is essential to make any measure of social insurance worth while, we will use that information for the purpose of preparing and submitting to this house a measure embodying the views I have expressed.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) is considering the suggestions made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), I should like to make a few observations concerning this motion. The Prime Minister dealt with a great many obstacles and difficulties in the way of adopting a system of unemployment insurance. It is true there are difficulties, but I believe they are such as can be overcome. I thought when the Prime Minister rose to speak his remarks would be very brief. It was my belief that he would say that inasmuch as he had been elected to end unemployment there would be no need for further unemployment insurance.

An hon. MEMBER: Let us do something for labour.

An hon. MEMBER: Politics.

Mr. HEENAN: My hon. friends do not like that.

An hon. MEMBER: Politics.

Mr. GOTT: Senseless.

Mr. HEENAN: I am inclined to accept the word suggested by the hon. member who has just interrupted. I do not know anyone in this house who is more capable of telling what is senseless than is he.

I think the hon. member for North Winnipeg is to be congratulated upon again bringing this matter to the attention of the house. He and his colleagues have been consistent in advocating a permanent system to deal with the unemployment problem. I heartily agree with the resolution before the house. In 1928 the hon. member for North Winnipeg placed a resolution before this house asking the committee on industrial and international relations to investigate this problem, with the result that the provinces were communicated with and asked to express their views on the matter. Again in 1929 we see by the records of the house that the hon. member for North Winnipeg once more asked that the matter be discussed before the industrial and international relations committee. The subject of unemployment insurance was brought before the house and hon. members endorsed the principle. On the last occasion, however, the judgment of the house was that the government of the day should bring the matter before the first Dominion-provincial conference. As hon. members are aware, up to the present time, there has not been an opportunity to do that.

The resolution before the house is not to investigate further but to take immediate action with a view to the establishment of a system of unemployment, sickness and invalidity insurance. As I said, after consideration, the government of that day referred the matter to the provinces. As a result of that reference, combined with the knowledge of the depression throughout the world, four provinces have placed themselves on record to the effect that they are willing to enter into a scheme of unemployment insurance, and have asked the government of Canada to call a conference in that connection.

This afternoon the Prime Minister, dealing very exhaustively with this matter, told of the burdens of the ratepayers in Great Britain to-day. He forgot, however, to point out that unemployment insurance was self-sustaining when it was first instituted in Great Britain. It was not until after the war, when there was a great influx of unemployment who received the benefit of that insurance scheme but had not contributed to it, that the insurance became known as a dole. In that regard Canada would not suffer.

It would be much better if we could get along without unemployment insurance; the workers in Canada will agree to that. If every man in Canada who is able and willing to work could secure employment it would be much better than a system of unemployment insurance. No one I have ever met or heard, however, will deny that we will always have seasonal unemployment in this country. We will have men who work only eight or nine months a year and are idle for the remaining period. Many of these men are not paid high wages, and I contend they have as much right to be protected during their off period as any other class of people. There are those who say that unemployment insurance would be demoralizing in its effects. From my experience I do not see that this would necessarily follow; for instance, our business and professional men do not hesitate to insure against risks to life and property, and as yet I have failed to see that in any way they have become demoralized through collecting compensation under their policies. The maintenance and education of the children of our working people depend upon the wages of the breadwinner, and I see no reason why some system cannot be evolved to protect them in the event of his unemployment, sickness or disability.

Some years ago I remember a gentleman in the Ontario legislature stated:

> For a great many years, Mr. Speaker, society stood aghast at the annual toll in deaths and injuries caused by industrial accidents; it had attempted to decrease these accidents by passing legislation, which was designed to safeguard the wage earner against death and injuries, while employed. Notwithstanding that various kinds of safety devices have been installed in industrial plants, there are still more than half of the industrial accidents which occur annually, for which neither the employer nor the workman can be held responsible or blamed.

In support of unemployment insurance he used these words:

> A great majority of the people of to-day, Mr. Speaker, are standing aghast at the sight of thousands of human beings in destitute circumstances and I feel sure that public opinion will press for some permanent system which will ensure all human beings proper nourishment, shelter and clothing.

I repeat, I believe that some system can be and must be evolved to take care of our unemployed. Unemployment insurance has been recommended in various quarters. Let me refer to the report of the Royal Commission on Industrial Relations of 1919, where at page 8 will be found the following:

> Unemployment may arise from other causes than the loss of his job. He may be incapacitated by sickness, invalidity or old age. Very few labourers are able, out of their earnings, to make provision for these contingencies. We recommend to your government—

I ask the house to mark that this is a recommendation by the royal commission.

> We recommend to your government the question of making some provision by a system of state social insurance for those who through no fault of their own are unable to work, whether the inability arises from lack of opportunity, sickness, invalidity or old age. Such insurance would remove the spectre of fear which now haunts the wage earner and make him a more contented and better citizen.

In 1915 the Ontario government appointed a royal commission headed by Sir John Willison, to investigate the question. The report was presented in 1916, and at page 80 I find the following recommendation:

> To meet the conditions referred to, your commissioners are of the opinion that some form of unemployment insurance is desirable, in the interest alike of the working man and the municipality affected.

Then the four provincial governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are already on record as favourable to unemployment insurance, and they recommend a conference with the federal government with a view to putting such a system into operation. Then we have a conference which met in Winnipeg as late as January, 1930, which was attended by representatives of all the western provinces, and I think of some of the eastern provinces. This conference recommended a system of unemployment insurance.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is altogether a provincial matter.

Mr. HEENAN: They suggest a conference with the federal authorities. The Trades and Labour Congress has consistently advocated such a scheme for years. It has also been advocated by various national unions of working men. Recently a royal commission has been appointed by the government of Quebec, and having regard to the attitude of that province towards workmen's compensation and its activity in dealing with other social ills, I am satisfied that before very many years Quebec will lead Canada in social legislation.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Their compensation act is not a success.

Mr. HEENAN: Then we have no less a person than the hon. Senator Robertson, the Minister of Labour, in the course of a speech at Haileybury on January 13, 1930, advocating a system of unemployment insurance. We have had other gentlemen taking pretty much the same stand, and I want to say that I, too, have advocated this form of insurance. I advocated it before I was Minister of Labour, I advocated it while I was Minister of Labour, and I am still advocating it to-day. A system of unemployment insurance has also been endorsed by many city and town councils throughout Canada.

To-day there are about twenty-seven schemes of unemployment insurance in existence. Of these about one-half are of a contributory nature while the balance vary in certain particulars to meet the different needs and circumstances.

Those opposed to unemployment insurance point to the British system as a warning and misrepresent its operation. For instance, they point to the fact that there may be 2,000,000 unemployed receiving what is termed the "dole." This is a misleading picture. I had occasion to look into the matter personally one year, and while I found there were 1,000,000 people registered as unemployed, this did not mean that they were all receiving unemployment benefits; as many as 150,000 went off the register each week, and another 150,000 came on. In other words, there was a turnover weekly of 300,000 on and off the list, showing that the receipt of unemployment insurance did not demoralize the recipients and encourage them to remain out of work. Many of these men received from the fund only two or three weeks' benefit. Many others who registered did not receive any benefit whatever, because they had not been on the unemployed register for the required number of days. So to point to the unemployment insurance scheme in Great Britain and call it the dole is not a proper representation of the English system. I am sure that in this country we can devise a scheme which will meet the needs of Canada much better than we are doing at present. As the hon. member for North Winnipeg said, we have a haphazard system, rushing to the governments to seek relief; we have overlapping, and because of that overlapping our large expenditures of money do not bring about the proper results. In my opinion it would be far better if we could evolve a scheme whereby the different parties and the state could contribute towards unemployment insurance so that men, when out of work, would know they were receiving benefits to which they had contributed.

There is another aspect of unemployment insurance for Canada which I should like to bring to the attention of the house. I believe a young country can begin a scheme of that kind with much better results than would be the case in an older country. In Canada we have a large area; our people follow various occupations and, as hon. members know, we have men who are reluctant to go from one part of the country to another. If we could have an insurance scheme whereby every man out of work would be registered and would have to report at certain periods and register as being still out of employment, we might be able to develop a method whereby a great many of these men could be placed in employment. At the present time we have about sixty-six employment offices located all over the country. We could increase the number of offices and find out where there was work for a man of a particular trade or calling who was registered as being out of employment; we could see to it that the man would get the job, and he would know there would be a job waiting for him when he arrived. In that way we could greatly cut down the cost of unemployment insurance.

I do not want to go into this matter at any great length at this time, but with the hon. member for North Winnipeg I believe the time for investigation is at an end. We ought to take some steps now, and take them quickly; we must take some immediate action —and by that I do not mean we must act to-day—to evolve and establish some scheme to take care of the unemployed. The Prime Minister dwells on the fact that we are now collecting data in connection with the census, and the Minister of Labour has mentioned the same thing. While it is true this will give us more information than we have at present, I have looked into the questions and I am satisfied that the information may be out of date one year from now. Industry has been speeded up to such an extent, and competition all over the world is at such a pitch, that the information we get next year probably will not agree with the information which is obtained this year. So I believe the government, in conformity with the decision of this house, should call a provincial conference immediately with a view to establishing an unemployment insurance scheme at the very earliest date, to take care of the workers of this country.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thought the former Prime Minister was a past master at showing why things could not be done, but I am afraid he must yield the palm to the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who has undoubtedly shown how impossible it is for the government to do anything at all with regard to the pressing emergency with which we find ourselves faced. The Prime Minister says he has no delusions whatever as to what unemployment insurance involves. Obviously he is thinking of the heavy financial burden entailed, but I would suggest that the Prime Minister has a great many delusions as to what refusal to enact legislation along this line may involve, not only politically but also as it may affect the welfare of large masses of people throughout this country.

I must express our gratitude to the Prime Minister for making certain suggestions, but from our standpoint those suggestions involve the emasculation of the resolution to a point where it would be almost meaningless. Already the Prime Minister and his party are committed to the principle of unemployment insurance; already the opposition is committed to the principle of unemployment insurance; already Canada herself officially, as a signatory of the League of Nations, is committed to the principle of unemployment insurance, but a long time has passed since the Versailles treaty was signed and practically nothing has been done to advance this measure. We are anxious to get something started. We are not proposing, nor do I think the Prime Minister can imagine that we propose, that a scheme should be started to-morrow. The point we had in view in putting in the word "immediate" was that something should be done in the near future, that the promises of the government should be carried out and not indefinitely postponed. I fancy we can take it from the statement of the Prime Minister that no legislative enactment will be brought down until prior to the next election.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Would my hon. friend allow me a question, because I am very much interested? Is it not a fact that under section 92 of the British North America Act subparagraph 13, this is a purely provincial matter, because insurance is a civil contract?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will come to that point in a moment, and I am glad my hon. friend brought it up. However, on this point with which I am dealing, I say we can only take it that this means an indefinite postponement and that this measure possibly may become a political football at the time of the next election. We are not in any way guaranteed that anything will take place in the near future.

The Prime Minister suggests that we add the word "contributory." We did not add that word simply because we did not want to narrow the scope of our resolution. We did not want to be thought to be dictating in any way the exact form any social insurance scheme should take. Several years ago there was a report presented by a committee of this house dealing with this question, and that report stated very definitely that a measure of this kind should be Dominion-wide in character. The committee suggested that any scheme should be contributory in character and also admitted that according to the legal evidence brought forward, this was not within the competence of the Dominion government. I think perhaps that answers the question raised by the hon. member for Montmagny. While the Prime Minister suggested that there should be a satisfactory arrangement with the provinces, I submit there is not necessarily any reason why a Dominion-wide insurance scheme could not be worked out. If it were non-contributory it could be carried forward. I think the hon. member who has just asked me a question will appreciate that fact, because then it would not be a contract. The scheme, would be on the same basis as the existing old age pensions which are not contributory.

That could be done. I do not want to discuss this question at the moment, but I would point out that we have had legal advice from the very highest authorities on this point, and we are told that the clauses in our constitution which delimit the powers of the Dominion government may be readily construed as admitting the contention that unemployment insurance is ancillary to the unemployment bureaus we have established and that, as such, it may come within the purview of the Dominion. I am not a lawyer and I do not want to argue the legal point to-day, but I would point out that in our motion we sought to avoid those technical difficulties by laying upon the government the responsibility of introducing in some form a federal unemployment scheme.

We always meet with our old friend the constitution, and we are told that it is impossible to do this, that and the other under the constitution. I hope within a week or two to have a resolution before this house suggesting that we be given the right to alter our constitution, and that, possibly some sort of conference might be called to work out needed amendments. I trust that all who are troubled at the present time with the constitutional question will heartily support a proposal which would clear up these technical difficulties.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Until then we are bound by the present law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister said that many people were coming to the government asking for this, that and the other thing. I would point out to him that the people who have done the most of that are the Canadian manufacturers. When they found that they could not conduct their business in a profitable manner they came immediately to the government and asked to be helped out to the extent of twenty, thirty, forty or fifty per cent. If there is anyone who has asked for special consideration, it has been the manufacturer. I do not think I need to go into the help given to the transportation companies. It is well known that the railways would never have been built across this country had the government not assisted. Almost everyone can come and expect some help from the government except the labouring people, and more recently the farmer, who has been driven to take that position.

The Prime Minister suggested that there are already certain industries which have voluntary arrangements for meeting the needs of the unemployed. There are very few industries which have that arrangement, but even if there were it would not hinder a general state scheme. A large number of trade unions and other organizations in Great Britain had adopted this provision before the state scheme was undertaken.

Then the right hon. gentleman made the point that we were not possessed of sufficient information to know how such a scheme would work out. I would point out that most of the civilized countries in the world, outside of the United States, have some such scheme. We could go to Great Britain, France, Germany or a great many European countries and obtain the fullest information as to what is involved. The League of Nations has published many volumes representing the most careful investigation on this question. There should be no difficulty for the government to outline a scheme in the very near future.

The Prime Minister adopted his usual practice of reading us a lecture or giving us a treatise on the subject under review. The house is under great obligation to him for the very valuable treatise on insurance and all that insurance involves, but I would point out that the parallels which he draws are not worth very much when we come to practical matters. He said that we must know the risks, and then he told us that the trouble with England had been that she undertook a scheme before she had learned all that was involved. I submit that England could not possibly have known all the economic consequences of the war. If she had waited until she knew that the war was coming and that a great many other things would happen after the war, she would still be without unemployment insurance. It may be true that the actuaries can tell us in connection with life insurance what is the expectation of life and what the risks involved will be, but I do not think that is true in this matter. Economic laws are not nearly as constant or at least as well known as are the laws of public health, when not merely great political movements but great economic movements of to-day have to be considered, I would urge it would be impossible for any government to know all the risks which would be involved and to base a scheme entirely upon pre-knowledge of the risks involved. In fact, I take it that the Prime Minister's statement might be regarded as a sort of reductio ad absurdum. If his argument were carried out to its logical conclusion, it would mean that we would never get any scheme of this kind whatever. The completion of our great enterprises would have never been brought about had we waited until we foresaw all the possible risks. The west would never have been opened up if the pioneers and the railways and settlers had waited until they had foreseen and had provided against all the risks. We do not act that way in ordinary life. In our private affairs we cannot wait until everything is foreseen.

The right hon. gentleman went on to warn us about taxes. I quite appreciate his problem in having to raise the taxes necessary and I know this would be a heavy burden, but at the same time we are told that Canada is fairly prosperous, that the banks have not been doing so badly and that certain enterprises are getting along fairly well. We are told also that there is a good deal of money available for investment, and in reply we simply say this: If it is a choice between the needs of the people and the interests of the big investors of this country, the needs of the people should come first. I think we must adopt that attitude when we consider a proposal of this character.

Mr. YOUNG: In view of the fact that the farmer will have to pay most of this insurance, how does the hon. member propose to compensate the farmer for the adidtional burden which he proposes to place on his back?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not accept the statement that the farmer would have to pay most of it; I do not think that is true.

Mr. YOUNG: A large portion of it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I might remark that the farmer does not pay any income tax, so that he need not be worried a great deal. I think the scheme might be worked out as a charge on the incomes of those people who are most able to pay.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Who will pay the premium for the insurance and who will be the insurer? Is the state going to be the insurer and will the workmen pay the premiums?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As the hon. member knows very well, we are not going into the details of this scheme to-day. If there is any interest in that particular matter, I might say that the scheme which most of us have had more or less in view is the British scheme. Possibly I might take a few minutes to outline just what that scheme means.

Persons between the ages of 16 and 65 must take out unemployment insurance. There are a number of classes excepted, among which are farm labourers and domestic servants, who can take out insurance if they so desire. The insurable persons are divided into various classes, as follows:

Men between the ages of 21 and 65 pay, in Canadian money, 14 cents per week; the employers pay 16 cents per week and the state pays 15 cents per week.

Men between the ages of 18 and 21 years pay 12 cents per week, the employer 14 cents and the state 13 cents.

Boys under the age of 18 years pay 7 cents per week; the employers 8 cents and the state 7 cents.

Women between the ages of 21 and 65 years pay 12 cents per week, the employer 14 cents and the state 13 cents, and so on with various other groups.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is state insurance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The British scheme further provides that whenever the insured person is unemployed he draws a weekly rate of benefits as follows:

Men between the ages of 21 and 65 years, $4.25 per week; women between 21 and 65 years of age, $4.25 per week, and so on with different classes. In addition to this, any insured person who has an adult dependent draws $2.25 per week. Married people receive an additional benefit of 50 cents per week for each wholly dependent child, or one who is mainly supported by the parents. Under the British scheme, in order to come within the period of insurance, the insured person must have paid in not less than 30 weeks' contributions in the two years immediately preceding the date on which he or she applies for the benefits.

We have not gone into these details here because we shall have to work out our scheme in Canada along our own lines. Further, I may as well say frankly that, so far as I can see, it would be impossible immediately to set up a contributory scheme because a large number of unemployed are absolutely unable to pay anything at the present time, and that would make it impossible for a reserve to be built up. That is one reason for our not suggesting an immediately contributory scheme.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It applies as well to a lawyer who has no cases, or to a doctor who has no patients.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The lawyer makes so much money while he is in practice that he has a sufficient reserve laid up. The average wage of our labouring classes is very low.

There is another aspect of this question which I think should perhaps be mentioned in this connection. The Prime Minister has almost entirely overlooked the seriousness of the actual problems that confront the workers to-day. According to his statement, they will have to wait probably four years before this government can do anything for them, except by way of the dole. That is too serious a contingency to contemplate. I wish to bring before the house the situation existing in my own city as typical more or less of what prevails in a great many places.

I have before me a statement of a survey of unemployment conditions in Winnipeg and in greater Winnipeg. This is signed by H. B. Shaw, chairman of the Winnipeg citizens committee on unemployment; by Ralph Maybank, chairman of the joint unemployment committee of the city of Winnipeg; and by A. MacNamara, assistant deputy minister, administrator of unemployment relief in Manitoba. It is dated April 10, 1931. Mr. H. B. Shaw is a former banker and is chairman of the mayor's committee, as it is known, in Winnipeg. This memorandum gives a statement of applications received for direct relief in the following places: Winnipeg, St. Boniface, Brooklands, Fort Garry, East Kildonan, North Kildonan, West Kildonan, St. James, Transcona, Charleswood, and St. Vital. These municipalities are essentially urban in character. The single men number 8,307, the married men 5,398, the single women 458, the total units 14,163, and the total persons represented, taking families into account, 35,968.

The statement adds:

This shows those who applied for relief. For various reasons, in about half the cases no relief was given. There is no doubt, however, that the men and women applying were badly in need of work.

I am merely giving the headings, but I have in the memorandum the whole situation set out in tabular detail. Next there appears a statement of persons and families given direct relief during March, 1931, in the same municipalities: single men, 3,849; married men, 3,150; single women, 115; total units, 7,114; and total persons including children, 31,799. Further than that, the total unemployed in greater Winnipeg, according to this survey, are: men, 16,394, and women, 2,499, or a total of 18,893. And with families added it amounts to 56,682 persons. This statement goes on to discuss the prospects for the future, the jobs which will be started as soon as weather permits. It reads:

The jobs which are in sight are very few and consist, to a large extent, of government work, and are outlined hereunder.

Then follow several of the schemes which have been proposed by the federal government and concurred in by the provinces and municipalities. In Winnipeg itself and in these municipalities mentioned they will take care of 950 persons. The statement goes on, with regard to conditions in the country and the possibilities of securing employment:

The Winnipeg Citizens Committee on Unemployment, under the chairmanship of Mr. H. B. Shaw, addressed a letter to prominent persons at country points, inquiring as to the possibility of absorbing in agricultural pursuits the surplus labour in Winnipeg. Replies received were very pessimistic, and were generally to the effect that farmers would not be hiring men this season because of the general depression in the agricultural field, that farmers were satisfied that they would be unable to pay the wages of any men employed, and consequently that any crops put in would be put in by the farmer and his family.

These replies from country points are substantiated by the fact that applications to the employment office for farm workers during the last six weeks have totalled less than one-half of what they were last year during the same period, in spite of the fact that there is every prospect of a much earlier spring.

Railways

The vice-presidents of the two railways advise the committee that there will be no increase on their roads of employment during the coming summer, and that during the winter 1931-32 there will be a curtailment, in all probability, the explanation being given that betterments had been pretty well taken care of, and that there would be very little work of this nature going on.

Bush Work

In a normal season there are from eight to ten thousand men taken out of the labour market in Winnipeg by firms operating lumber camps in northern Ontario, eastern Manitoba and northern Manitoba. Last winter there were fewer than eight hundred men employed for this purpose, only part of which number were taken from Winnipeg.

The committee has written a letter to every lumber firm that ordinarily operates in this vicinity, inquiring as to the employment prospects for the winter 1931-32, and the replies received would indicate that fewer men will be employed during the coming winter than were employed during the past winter. In other words, instead of eight or ten thousand men, it may be expected that there will be fewer than eight hundred taken from Winnipeg's surplus labour market.

We are told that there are at the present time 16,394 men, and according to the prospects indicated by this committee, there will be only 1,700 men required. This leaves a balance of about 14,700 not taken care of this spring. What is to be done with this large volume of unemployment? We have been helping men by means of what is rightly called the dole. That is to say, certain amounts have been simply given out by charities and by authorities of various kinds and these amounts have been supplemented by grants from the government. I contend that this is a most haphazard and demoralizing way of giving relief, and we have placed this motion on the order paper in the hope that the government will substitute for it a better scheme.

I know that the old country scheme has been condemned, but I would like to say this: Several years ago I had the opportunity of travelling for some day with the Empire Parliamentary Association delegation which toured this country. I was very much interested in the unemployment scheme of Great Britain, and inquiries were made privately from these men, and the question was also raised publicly. Every member of that delegation who spoke with regard to the matter said that Great Britain to-day simply could not get along without unemployment insurance. Lord Peel, the head of the delegation, said that he was heartily in favour of it, and Liberal members and Labour members all agreed. In fact, several of the most prominent members of the delegation confessed that had there not been unemployment insurance in Great Britain following the war, Great Britain would have had a revolution on her hands, that it was only their unemployment insurance that had saved Great Britain from the revolution that had taken place on the continent. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) suggests that the members of the delegation should have been charged with inciting to riot for having made such statements as that.

Yesterday there was considerable discussion in this house of Remembrance day. I did not participate in that debate, but I could not but recall having received a few days ago a letter from one of the returned men. I should like to put a portion of his letter before the house, as it indicates the appalling position in which a great many men in this country find themselves to-day. My correspondent says—I shall quote only the pertinent extracts:

> I was in France and Belgium in the Canadian Expeditionary Force infantry. . . . Born in England 1895. . . . Came to Canada 1906. . . . Thirty-seven years of age. . . . Married. . . . I sleep in a box car to save rent.

He refers to his experience at the front:

> The horror of the flash of steel . . . the baying of maddened men . . . the blood-curdling roars of bayonetted men . . . the hideous faces upon the doomed, cut-off from any back up. . . . the mania to murder and the mania to survive . . . silence which men keep after the bloody slaughter . . . the wading over dead and wounded bodies . . . . the standing up to the waists in cold water in winter . . . . vermin . . . . hunger and thirst . . . . this is the remembrance of one who heard the call in 1914.
> It is nothing to the grim struggle of to-day against hunger, unemployment, fear, and police terrors. One or two gentlemen laugh, but I think most men here will not feel like laughing at that. It comes out of the heart of a man who to-day is simply desperate.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Why not give his name?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the house will recognize that the hon. gentleman who interjects that question is so far removed from the spirit in which I have brought this forward that they will pay very little attention to his interruptions.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Is he in favour of an equal distribution of health as well as of wealth? I would support him in that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not discussing what this man may do. He is desperate, and his is not an isolated case. That is the position in which thousands of men find themselves to-day—returned men, as well as men who stayed in this country and worked along during the war, men who constitute the basis of society to-day. I cannot see how we can ignore the plight in which they find themselves. As my colleague said, we are sometimes accused of not bringing forward constructive suggestions. This suggestion of unemployment insurance to meet the present needs is an eminently constructive suggestion. I do not say that it is going to cure unemployment. I admit that it is only a palliative. I am not sure that we are not almost beyond the stage where we can enact this unemployment insurance, because the situation has become so desperate, but I am pointing out some of the things that might yet possibly save the situation.

I would urge that unemployment is not simply temporary in character. We have had it, as the Prime Minister himself admits, in times past during cycles of depression. I believe that it is inherent in the present economic system. The Prime Minister might not agree to that, but we all agree that we have had these periods of unemployment throughout the years. This suggestion that we are putting forward is that some method should be adopted so that we would distribute somewhat the hardships and the risks of unemployment, so that the poor, labouring people would not have to bear the whole deadweight of the load.

The workers themselves do not at the present time earn enough to provide for themselves reserves. I have not time to demonstrate that, but it was amply shown in the evidence brought forward before our committee on industrial and international relations when this question was investigated.

Mr. LAVERGNE: They made a lot of money during the war.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, a great many others made a great deal more, and to-day it takes almost half the entire revenues of this country to pay the interest on the war bonds, some of them tax-free, which some people were fortunate or unfortunate enough to secure.

I would also point out that the working men are not to blame for these periods of depression. They cannot be expected to find employment for themselves when the whole machinery of the state is unable to do it. I take it that, primarily, industry itself must bear the responsibility for unemployment. It may be that the state as a state should make some contribution. In some countries it has perhaps contributed too much. It may be well that the labour people should contribute something, but about the only good reason for their contributing is that they might have some definite share in the administration. Aside from that, I cannot see any good reason why they should contribute. They are not responsible for depressions. It is industry, the whole chaotic system of to-day, this cut-throat system of competition that leads inevitably to periods of depression, and as long as this economic order exists the individual workman will be periodically thrown out on the streets. It seems to me that we as a state should step in at least to a limited degree to iron out some of the inequalities.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What does the hon. member propose as a substitute?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not want at the moment to offer any substitute. I have already said that we have the dole to-day. I have in my hand a copy of the Canadian Forum, which has just come to hand, and which contains an article on the case for unemployment insurance by Harry M. Cassidy. He points out that from a careful study of the figures of the Bureau of Statistics it is estimated that probably between 350,000 and 450,000 people are unemployed in Canada at the present time. The extract from the Canadian Forum continues as follows:

> If these estimates are reasonably correct it follows that at no time since December of 1929 have less than 10 per cent of Canada's 2,500,000 wage-earners been out of jobs and that during the present winter the percentage has risen to 20 or more. Last winter the percentage of unemployment was actually higher in Canada than in Great Britain and it is probably about as high this winter, although it was considerably lower during the past summer and autumn.

Then, farther on I find the following:

> For the last ten years our annual average of unemployment from all causes, seasonal, business depression, technological change, market friction, et cetera, has probably been from six to eight per cent of our total working force. In a word, we have had the equivalent of any army of 150,000 workers, a greater number than the Canadian corps ever mustered in France during the war, standing idle during the whole of the post-war decade.

I do not think I need add more to what has been said. It seems to me that my colleague has made an admirable and reasoned statement of the case. We have put our position clearly before the government. I am still hoping that there may be a change of mind and attitude on the part of the government and that they will really face the situation and bring forward definite legislation at an early date.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The resolution before the house reads as follows:

> That in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the immediate establishment of a federal system of insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity.

It will be observed that the resolution deals primarily with the question of unemployment. True, in previous years in this house similar resolutions have been discussed, but I doubt if ever a resolution came before the house in reference to an existing condition where its applicability was as apparent as in the present instance. The government of the day has recognized a national obligation in the matter of unemployment. When at the last session of parliament we were asked to vote $20,000,000 for unemployment relief we were sanctioning a course of procedure through which the federal parliament recognized its obligation in the matter of unemployment relief. Yesterday I read a statement alleged to have been made by the Minister of Labour

(Mr. Robertson) two days ago in the city of Montreal. In that statement the minister is reported to have said that if necessary the government of the day would again be prepared at the approach of the winter to vote another $20,000,000 for the purpose of unemployment relief.

Mr. MANION: May I say Mr. Speaker that this morning I read an article in the paper containing a contradiction of that statement by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says that the minister has contradicted the statement and denies that the government will give unemployment relief.

Mr. MANION: He denies he made any such statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Of course I shall not stress the point. I was stating that the Prime Minister and the government of the day have recognized a national obligation in the matter of unemployment. I think I am right in that statement and that is the material point. They recognized an obligation at the last session of parliament by asking the house to vote $20,000,000 for unemployment relief. I stated that it appeared the ministry were prepared to take similar steps next winter, but I am now told by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) that the statement attributed to the Minister of Labour is denied. However the fact does not alter what is fundamental in the statement I have made namely that this government and this parliament have recognized a national obligation in the matter of unemployment. The essential point now is whether this national obligation may best be recognized as something to be met by relief measures or whether it is an ever-recurring condition which should be met in advance by some system of unemployment insurance. At the moment that is the essence of the point at issue.

In effect the resolution before the house says, that inasmuch as there is certain to be unemployment from time to time throughout the country and inasmuch as the federal government has recognized a national obligation in the matter of unemployment, it is desirable that there should be an immediate federal system to deal with this economic condition. That is my understanding of the resolution.

Mr. BENNETT: But that is not what it says.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister has said that that is not what it says. That is my impression of what it signifies and that is what I think it amounts to. The resolution states that the government should take into consideration immediately the establishment of a federal system of insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity. Surely that means that the government should consider the immediate establishment of some system of insurance against unemployment. Frankly, as between meeting the problem of unemployment by relief measures, voting millions of dollars as occasion arises, and meeting it by anticipating unemployment and its consequences through a system of insurance, I favour strongly the system of insurance.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As unemployment is incidental to industry as it is carried on to-day, I believe some system of insurance against unemployment is absolutely necessary and should be provided.

May I say to my right hon. friend that I admired very much the skill with which he made his presentation to the house. Had he been speaking as a director of an insurance company to his board, I could think of nothing more admirable or better calculated to serve the interests of a board of directors concerned primarily with insurance as a financial matter. May I say to him, however, that speaking as the Prime Minister of a country in regard to a great social problem it seemed to me that the right hon. gentleman did not sufficiently take into account the human side of the great problem with which unemployment insurance is concerned, or the nature of industry and some of the present-day problems it presents.

In view of what my right hon. friend said concerning the many considerations that had to be taken into account before public moneys could be voted in connection with any schemes of insurance, I was surprised that he found it so easy when he was making his speeches during the course of the last election campaign to pledge the country to a system of old age pensions to be met in whole by the federal treasury. During the course of the campaign, I was surprised that he was prepared to make the pledge he did as one of the means of meeting an immediate situation. At the time he did not stress the unfortunate use of the word "immediate." He left the impression that whatever was going to be done would be done immediately. I think that is the impression which at the present time is still abroad throughout the country. May I say that the considerations urged this afternoon as matters of such great concern in connection with the matter of unemployment insurance before an immediate scheme can be adopted are no different from the considerations which apply in the case of old age pensions. In connection with old age pensions he had to consider from where the money was coming, what it would involve in the way of taxation. He had to consider the question of the constitutionality of the federal government taking action in that particular. He has to-day considered the constitutional and financial aspect, but throughout the course of his remarks last year, he found no difficulty whatever in giving an assurance to the public that the present government would take over the whole system of old age pensions and assume all obligations in relation thereto. Well, if he was able to do that with respect to old age pensions, I fail to see why, with equal alacrity, he should not be able to do likewise with respect to unemployment insurance.

May I say to my right hon. friend that I do not think the word "immediate" would carry in the mind of any other hon. gentleman the significance he sought to attribute to it this afternoon. If for a moment I thought it was anticipated that the government should present a bill to the house without due consideration of the many matters that will have to be considered, I would certainly agree with him that anything of the kind would be unwise on the part of the administration. On the other hand, I take it that what is meant is that having regard to the problem of unemployment before us at the moment, a problem that we know is going to recur from time to time, the government should immediately consider how a system of unemployment insurance can be made applicable to help meet such a situation. Perhaps it would have been better had the word "immediate" in the resolution been transposed, and placed before the word "consideration" which would make the resolution read:

> That the government should take into immediate consideration the establishment of a federal system of insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Personally I feel that that is what primarily was in the mind of the introducer of the resolution.

Mr. BENNETT: Not in view of his speech, if I may say so to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I come to a consideration of the immediate establishment of a system of unemployment insurance. In the first place, unemployment insurance is but one form of social insurance.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that my right hon. friend will agree that annuities are a form of insurance.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend agrees. Well, we have at the present time a federal system of annuities. I see no reason why the administration should not consider whether some advantage might not be taken of the annuity system already in existence as a federal system so to extend it as to make the moneys paid in as premiums available at times of unemployment, as unemployment insurance to those who make contributions towards it. It might be so extended as to make the system available to its contributors as insurance against sickness or invalidity. There is an opportunity for an immediate step to be taken by the federal government to provide a measure of unemployment insurance. No question of constitutionality can be raised with respect to it. I submit the government might well consider whether the system of providing annuities which now for many years has been administered by the federal government, might not be so extended in its bearing upon social problems, as to make it available to meet other risks that arise from industry.

Mr. BENNETT: May I interrupt the right hon. gentleman?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps he has not been informed of this, but the truth is the annuity fund is not segregated and invested as is the case with an insurance company. I looked into it, and I may say I considered the very matter that the right hon. gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The fact that the fund is not segregated and invested is purely a business phase of the matter which the government would have to take into account. It does not affect the basic principle of the federal government taking immediate action with respect to any form of contributory insurance.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the trouble.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But that does not in any way preclude the fund being so arranged or organized as to meet these situations as they may arise.

May I draw attention to this? There are two ways in which industry may be viewed.

We may view industry primarily as a means whereby profits are made as the result of investment, in other words as a profit-making enterprise; or industry may be viewed as being in the nature of social service. When one analyses the nature of industry one discovers it to be nothing other than the transformation of natural resources through human effort into services or commodities available for use; in other words, it is a great social service to which capital, labour, management and the community each make a contribution.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All these four factors are essential in the carrying on of industry. The development of industry that has taken place throughout the years has resulted in an industrial system which is world-wide in its scope, and the problems to which it gives rise are also world-wide. Those who are engaged in industry run certain inevitable risks. Industry, first of all, through the fact that it has assumed its present proportions, is subdivided first by way of employment; and within the individual employments there are further subdivisions of labour, which result in the worker being reduced pretty much in the last analysis to an atom,—an individual whose time and labour in large part, is spent in industry on a particular process or some operation within a particular process very small in itself. With industry developed as it is to-day, it so happens that, through no fault of anyone connected with a particular industry, a particular branch of industry itself may be terminated. World conditions may be such in one country that labour becomes unemployed in another. The failure of the cotton crop in one part of the world may throw out of employment thousands of workers engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods in another part. One might mention endless examples of this kind. That is a condition of unemployment for which no employer can be held responsible; it arises simply because of industry having assumed its present proportions and character. Labour may also find itself displaced through some invention. All industry is subject to the play of discovery and invention, and for the most part discovery and invention enable those who are fortunate enough to possess capital to find means whereby it can be more profitably invested and its rewards thereby increased; but to labour for the most part the play of discovery and invention is in the opposite direction, it tends to throw out of employment large numbers of workers through the substitution of machines for labour.

If that is a true picture of industry, then we must realize that throughout the world to-day and hereafter, as a normal condition, there will always be a large number of men and women who through no fault of their own will find themselves because of new inventions and discoveries unemployed. If I have given a true indication of the problems of industry arising from its world-wide scope, it is equally true that we shall have these recurring periods of prolonged depression whereby again large numbers will for considerable periods be thrown out of employment. Knowing there is bound to be recurring unemployment to a very considerable extent, it does become part of the obligation of the state to meet such a situation with respect to the workers; and the only way in which it can be met is through the alternative of relief to meet unemployment when it comes and no provision has been made in advance, or through insurance against unemployment whereby provision is made in advance for inevitable unemployment. I think it will be generally agreed that of the two methods of the State's coping with unemployment, the insurance method is the preferable.

That being the case, the next question is as to the reason for a federal system of unemployment insurance. Under our constitution, without question, obligations as between employer and employed are primarily the concern of the provinces. Property and civil rights have been assigned to the provinces, and necessarily the provinces as matters stand must deal with questions to which they give rise. But there is a law which applies in industrial relations as it does in other fields, whereby if competing standards differ, the lower standard in the course of time, tends to drive out the higher. That law was first enunciated by Gresham with respect to the precious metals. Gresham pointed out that where two metals were in circulation, the one base and the other pure, the baser metal tended to drive the purer metal out of circulation. That same law, I believe, is applicable to competing standards in industry. Where you have high standards of industry in one province, with lower standards in another province, the lower standards, if permitted to compete with the higher standards, will drive the higher standards out of existence and in time bring industrial standards to the level of the lower.

For that reason it becomes necessary in a country such as ours to devise some means whereby the standards of industry as between the different provinces may be brought to and kept at the same level. I doubt if that is possible in any other way than by some system of federal cooperation or control. But the problem is more far-reaching than that. What I have said with regard to industries in the different provinces is equally true of industry as between different countries. The League of Nations has recognized that fact as fundamental, and the effort of the League of Nations to-day is directed towards bringing about similar standards in industry among the different countries of the world. We, as a country, are pledged to further to the best of our ability the various obligations of the Labour conventions of the League of Nations, and I hold that this federal parliament has an obligation in this matter to seek to bring about a condition whereby in the first instance the standards in industry as between the different provinces will be at one and the same level.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.
